RESOLUTION 2657(xxv), as recommended by Second Committee, A/8195, adopted by Assembly on 7 December 1970, meeting 1918, by 86 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2398(XXIII) of 3 December 1968 and 2581(XXIV) of 15 December 1969,

Noting with appreciation the steps that have been taken by a number of specialized agencies and of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist in the preparatory work for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment,

THE USE AND DEVELOPMENT OF NATURAL (NON-AGRICULTURAL) RESOURCES

OPERATIONAL ACTIVITIES

Assistance for the development of non-agricultural natural resources continued to be provided by the United Nations during 1970.

Projects carried out under the Special Fund component of the United Nations Development Programme operated in the fields of mineral exploration, energy and water resources development and cartography, in the following countries: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chile, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Costa Rica, Dahomey, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Gabon,

In addition, inter-regional projects in Africa, Europe and Latin America were being executed.

Technical assistance was also provided in the form of advisory services of experts. Under this programme 24 experts were provided in energy development, 37 in geology and mining and 27 in water resources development.

These assignments were carried out in the following countries: Argentina, Bolivia, Burma, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, the Gambia, Ghana, Guyana, Haiti, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Morocco, Nepal, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Western Samoa and Zambia.

The following seminars and meetings of experts were convened in 1970: (1) Panel of Experts on Water Resources Policies (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 8-13 June); (2) United Nations Symposium on the Development and Utilization of Geothermal Resources (Pisa, Italy, 22 September-1 October); (3) United Nations Inter-regional Seminar on Mineral Economics (Ankara, Turkey, 12-24 October).

PERMANENT SOVEREIGNTY OVER NATURAL RESOURCES

In 1970, the question of permanent sovereignty over natural resources was a matter taken up by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session which opened on 15 September. Before the Assembly was a report prepared by the Secretary-General on the exercise of permanent sovereignty over natural resources and the use of foreign capital and technology for their exploitation.

In the report, the problem was analysed in terms of such questions as the case for using foreign capital and technology, the political and economic significance of old concession agreements, and the capital requirements for exploitation of natural resources.

The legal framework for foreign participation in the exploitation of natural resources, the control of natural resources enterprises, profit-sharing, training of national personnel, and placement on the world market of non-commercial reserves of primary commodities were discussed in the report. In addition, the report listed, by country, contractual arrangements between developing countries and foreign investors for the exploitation of natural resources and for the marketing of natural resources products.

By a resolution adopted on 11 December 1970, the Assembly recognized the necessity for all countries to exercise fully their rights so as to secure the optimal use of their natural resources, both land and marine, for the benefit and welfare of their peoples and for the protection of their environment.

The financing of the development plans of the developing countries, it was noted, depended to a considerable degree upon the conditions under which those countries' natural resources were exploited and upon their share in the profits of foreign investments undertaken in their countries.

The Assembly also reaffirmed the right of peoples and nations to sovereignty over natural resources and recognized that the exercise of that sovereignty by developing countries was indispensable for speeding industrial development.

The Assembly also invited the Economic and Social Council to instruct its Committee on Natural Resources (see pp. 454-56) to include in its work programme a periodic report on the advantages derived from the exercise by developing countries of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources—with particular reference to the impact of such exercise on the increased mobilization of resources, especially of domestic resources, on the outflow of capital therefrom as well as on the transfer of technology.

United Nations Member States were invited to inform the Committee on Natural Resources on the progress achieved to safeguard the exercise of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources, including the measures taken to control the outflow of capital in a manner compatible with the exercise of their sovereignty and international co-operation.

These decisions were among those embodied in resolution 2692 (XXV), adopted by the Assembly on 11 December 1970, by a vote of 100 to 6, with 3 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had approved the text on 4 December 1970—by 80 votes to 5, with 4 abstentions—on the basis of a text submitted by the following 24 Members: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bolivia, Chad, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Guinea, Guyana, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, the People's Republic of the Congo, the Philippines, Poland, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Swaziland, Syria, Tunisia, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Incorporated in the Second Committee's text was an amendment submitted by Ecuador, Peru and Yugoslavia, as further amended by the USSR, whereby the Assembly, in a preambular paragraph to the text, would recognize the necessity for all countries to exercise fully their rights so as to secure optimal use of their natural resources, both land and marine, in accordance with international law, for the benefit and welfare of their peoples and the protection of their environment. The text to this effect was approved by a recorded vote of 81 to 3, with 5 abstentions.

The phrase "in accordance with international law," as cited above, was added on the proposal of the USSR. This change was approved in the Second Committee by a vote of 33 to 26, with 29 abstentions. However, when the Assembly took up the Second Committee's text at a plenary meeting on 11 December, it deleted the reference to international law by a vote of 65 to 23, with 18 abstentions. The proposal to delete the phrase concerned was made by 28 Members, namely: Brazil, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Mali, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru, the Philippines, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Upper Volta and Yugoslavia.

DEVELOPMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Discussion of the survey programme for the development of natural resources continued in 1970.<sup>1</sup>

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Survey Programme for the Development of Natural Resources held its second session during February and March of 1970. (Its first session had been held in 1967.) In the course of the discussion, the Committee recognized that it was unlikely that the survey programme could be financed as was originally envisaged and that it would be necessary to proceed on a modest basis, that is, on the basis of a series of regional, inter-regional and country projects.

The Committee recommended that the Economic and Social Council urge the Governing Council and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to give the fullest consideration to the financing of the formulation and execution of the survey programme on the basis of country and/or regional project requests and to the waiving of counterpart funds and local cost contributions, in appropriate cases.

At its March-April 1970 meetings, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General among other things to continue the preparatory work relating to the implementation of the survey programme and urged UNDP to contribute to the implementation of the survey programme in the manner recommended by the Ad Hoc Committee.

In taking this decision, the Council expressed the view that early implementation of the survey programme could make a significant contribution to the accelerated economic and social progress of the developing countries, and that insufficient progress had been made in the implementation of the programme, owing mainly to the lack of financial resources.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1481(XLVIII), adopted by the Council on 2 April 1970 by 24 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal submitted by Ceylon, India, Indonesia and Sudan, and orally amended by the United Kingdom.

In the discussion of the development of natural resources at its March-April 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a proposal submitted by Brazil, Ceylon, Chad, Kenya, the People's Republic of the Congo, Sudan, Upper Volta and Yugoslavia, which recommended, among other things, the establishment of a standing committee on natural resources.

It was felt, however, that the proposal merited further discussion, so the Council decided to take up the matter of setting up such a body at its July 1970 session.

The decision to postpone consideration was taken by the adoption of resolution 1482 (XLVIII), on 3 April 1970, by 25 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Tunisia.

When the matter was taken up again by the Council, it decided, on 27 July 1970, to dissolve the Ad Hoc Committee on the Survey Programme for the Development of Natural Resources and to establish a standing Committee on Natural Resources composed of 27 Member States of the United Nations to be elected by the Council on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, the representatives being, as far as possible, experts in this field.

The Council also decided that the term of office for members of the Committee should be four years, that for the initial period 13 members should serve for two years and the remaining 14 for four years (the term of each member to be determined by lot), and that retiring members should be eligible for re-election.

The Council decided further that the terms of reference of the Committee on Natural Resources should include, with due respect for the concept of the sovereignty of every nation, responsibilities for:

(a) assistance to the Council in providing guidance in the programming and implementation of activities in the United Nations system for the development of natural resources;

(b) the establishment of guidelines with regard to advisory services to Member States;

(c) the review and reformulation of the survey programme as originally planned;

(d) the analysis of resolutions concerning natural resources, with a view to recommending the consolidation and streamlining of their legislative basis;

(e) the selection and follow-up of priority questions concerning long-term problems and trends in the field of natural resources;

(f) the examination of reports in this connexion;

(g) attention to the problems of research promotion in this field;

(h) recommendations to bodies in the United Nations system on appropriate priorities, programme emphasis and other relevant matters concerning the exploration and exploitation of natural resources;

(i) assistance to the Council and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in maintaining liaison between the activities of various United Nations bodies, with a view to ensuring the utmost efficiency and co-operation; and

(j) such other relevant functions as the Council might assign.

The Committee on Natural Resources was to give priority in its initial work to its responsibilities with regard to analysing resolutions.

Finally, the Council requested the Secretary-General to make arrangements for convening the Committee on Natural Resources so as to enable it to submit its first report to the Council in 1971.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1535 (XLIX), adopted by the Council on 27 July 1970, by a roll-call vote of 20 to 2, with 3 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee. The Economic Committee had approved the text on 13 July 1970, by a roll-call vote of 16 to 1, with 4 abstentions, on the basis of a text submitted by Brazil, Ceylon, Chad, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Kenya, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Sudan, Tunisia, Upper Volta and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In a subsequent decision taken (without adopting a resolution) on 13 November 1970, the Economic and Social Council amended the resolution it had adopted on 27 July. The Council decided that the Committee on Natural Resources would be composed of 38 members (rather than 27), and it decided that for the initial period 19 members (rather than 13) should serve for two years, and the remaining 19 (rather than 14) should serve for four years.

The decision to amend the resolution was taken by a vote of 18 to 6, with 3 abstentions, on a proposal by Italy, Pakistan and Peru.

After the adoption of the decision to amend, the Council did not find it necessary to vote on another proposal that had been before it. By that text, sponsored by France, Ghana, Greece,

Kenya and the United States, the Council would have reaffirmed its decision of 27 July 1970 on the development of natural resources and would have decided to review the composition of the Committee on Natural Resources after an appropriate experimental period.

NATURAL RESOURCES SATELLITES

At its March-April 1970 meetings, the Economic and Social Council considered a report of the Secretary-General on the potential contribution of earth-orbiting satellites to the survey of natural resources (including mapping) and the role that the United Nations might play in the organization and utilization of pertinent data obtained from such satellites.

On 2 April 1970, the Council recognized the need for international co-operation for the reception, storage, interpretation and dissemination of resources-satellite data and requested the Secretary-General to bring his report to the attention of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development and other interested organizations of the United Nations system.

The Council further decided to consider at its next session a suggestion of the Secretary-General on the arrangements to be made for refining and elaborating the tentative recommendations contained in the annex to the report.

The Council took these decisions by adopting, unanimously, resolution 1480(XLVIII), on a proposal of India, Italy and the United Kingdom, as orally amended by France and the USSR.

At its July 1970 meetings, the Council again considered the question of natural resources satellites. On 27 July 1970, the Council decided to request the Committee on Natural Resources—established by its decision of the same day (see above)—to examine the recommendations contained in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General on natural resources satellites.

This decision was taken without adopting a resolution, on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which had approved the text without objection on 14 July 1970, on the basis of a proposal by India.

RESOURCES OF THE SEA

The General Assembly, by a decision of 15 December 1969,<sup>2</sup> had noted that the use of the marine environment by States was rapidly becoming intensified and diversified, and it had accordingly requested the Economic and Social Council and the Council's Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to examine the need for a comprehensive review of existing activities of the United Nations system relating to seas and oceans. This the Council and its Committee for Programme and Co-ordination did during 1970.

During its May-June 1970 session, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination took up the question. While no definite conclusion was reached on a proposal by Malta to establish an Office for the Seas within the United Nations Secretariat, the Committee decided that a comprehensive review of existing activities relating to the seas would be useful, and it recommended action to that effect.

On 27 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council took a number of decisions concerning marine co-operation, bearing in mind the importance of increasing international co-operation in the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the seas, having regard to the special needs and interests of developing countries.

The Council requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with organizations of the United Nations system and also with other sources of scientific and technical advice, to prepare a background review on: (a) trends in the traditional uses of the seas; (b) foreseeable new uses; (c) the likely effect of these uses and of other technological advances on the marine environment; and (d) conflicts likely to arise over technical use.

The Secretary-General was further requested to communicate this review to Member States and to invite them to communicate to him any proposals they might wish to make for strengthening international co-operation in the marine environment. The Council also requested the

Secretary-General, after obtaining these views and taking into account the results of the Conference on the Human Environment (scheduled for 1972; see pp. 449-52), to submit a brief report to the Council on the manner in which international co-operation relating to the seas might be strengthened in areas where this appeared to be required.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1537 (XLIX), adopted without vote on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text on 14 July 1970 by a vote of 22 to 0, with 1 abstention, on the basis of a text proposed by Malta and amended by India. The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 626 (VII) of 21 December 1952, 1803 (XVII) of 14 December 1962, 2158 (XXI) of 25 November 1966 and 2386 (XXIII) of 19 November 1968 concerning permanent sovereignty over natural resources,

Recalling the pertinent provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Reaffirming the necessity for the General Assembly to examine this problem further,

Noting with appreciation the efforts of the developing countries in mobilizing and effectively utilizing their domestic resources,

Taking into account that the financing of the development plans of the developing countries depends, to a considerable degree, upon the conditions under which their natural resources are exploited and, in a number of developing countries, upon their share in the profits of foreign investments undertaken in their countries,

Recognizing in this connexion the importance of the positive experience gained by the developing countries in the exercise of their sovereignty over their natural resources for the purpose of increased mobilization of domestic resources for development and of drawing up and implementing their national development plans, and recognizing also that such experience would be conducive to revitalizing the efforts being undertaken at the national level for the economic development of the developing countries,

Recognizing also the necessity for all countries to exercise fully their rights so as to secure the optimal utilization of their natural resources, both land and marine, for the benefit and welfare of their peoples and for the protection of their environment,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General entitled "Permanent sovereignty over natural resources";

2. Reaffirms the right of peoples and nations to permanent sovereignty over their natural wealth and resources, which must be exercised in the interest of their national development and of the well-being of the people of the State concerned;

3. Recognizes that the exercise of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources by developing countries is indispensable in order that they may, inter alia, accelerate their industrial development, and in this connexion stresses the important role of the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system in the promotion of specific industrial projects dealing with the natural resources of developing countries;

4. Calls upon Governments to continue their efforts aimed at the complete implementation of the principles and recommendations contained in the aforementioned resolutions of the General Assembly;

5. Invites the Economic and Social Council to instruct the Committee on Natural Resources to include in its work programme a periodic report on the advantages derived from the exercise by developing countries of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources, with particular reference to the impact of such exercise on the increased mobilization of resources, especially of domestic resources, for their economic and social development, on the outflow of capital therefrom as well as on the transfer of technology;

6. Further invites Member States to inform the Committee on Natural Resources, through the Secretary-General, on the progress achieved to safeguard the exercise of permanent sovereignty over their natural resources, including the measures taken to control the outflow of capital in a manner compatible with the exercise of their sovereignty and international co-operation;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue with the study requested in section III of General Assembly resolution 1803(XVII) and the submission of the report called for in resolutions 2158(XXI) and 2386(XXIII), taking into account also the provisions of the present resolution;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the report mentioned in paragraph 7 above, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its twenty-seventh session.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1287 (XLIII) of 18 December 1967, 1316 (XLIV) of 31 May 1968 and 1426 (XLVI) of 6 June 1969, including its conviction that international co-operation through the United Nations should continue to play an important role in assisting the efforts of Governments in the investigation, development and utilization of natural resources and related developments in infrastructure,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 626 (VII) of 21 December 1952 concerning the right of each country to exploit freely its own natural wealth and resources,

Having considered the report of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Survey Programme for the Development of Natural Resources on its second session and the report of the Secretary-General to that Committee,

Appreciating the growing and productive activities of the United Nations in connexion with the development of natural resources,

Convinced that the activities of the United Nations in this field should be widened, accelerated and given more adequate intergovernmental leadership and guidance in the Second United Nations Development Decade,

1. Decides to dissolve the Ad Hoc Committee on the Survey Programme for the Development of Natural Resources;

2. Further decides to establish a standing committee on natural resources composed of twenty-seven States Members of the United Nations, to be elected by the Council on the basis of equitable geographical distribution at its resumed forty-ninth session in the autumn of 1970, the representatives of States Members on the standing Committee being, as far as possible, experts in the field of natural resources;

3. Decides also that the term of office for members of the Committee shall be four years, that for the initial period thirteen members shall serve for two years and the remaining fourteen for four years, the term of each member to be determined by lot, and that retiring members shall be eligible for re-election;

4. Decides further that the terms of reference of the Committee on Natural Resources shall include, with due respect for the concept of the sovereignty of every nation, responsibilities for:

(a) Assistance to the Council in providing guidance in the programming and implementation of activities in the United Nations system for the development of natural resources, particularly with regard to the development of water, energy and mineral resources, keeping in mind requirements for planning for the Second United Nations Development Decade and for the protection of the human environment, and new technological developments in the field of natural resources;

(b) The establishment of guidelines for the provision and for the improvement and strengthening of advisory services to the Governments of Member States, to be made available at their request, for the planning, development and utilization of their natural resources within the framework of their over-all development plans;

(c) The substantive review and reformulation of the survey programme as originally planned;

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2580(XXIV) of 15 December 1969 and the Council's decision at its forty-eighth session, to instruct its Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to examine the need for a comprehensive review of existing activities of the United Nations system relating to the seas and oceans in the light of present and emerging needs of Member States,

Noting the part of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its sixth session concerning this subject,

Recalling previous reports submitted to it on the exploitation of the sea, including in particular the Secretary-General's reports entitled "Resources of the sea beyond the continental shelf," and "Marine Science and Technology,"

Bearing in mind the importance of increasing international co-operation in the exploration and exploitation of the resources of the sea, having regard to the special needs and interests of developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with organizations of the United Nations system, and also with other recognized sources of scientific and technical advice outside the United Nations system, to prepare a general but concise background review of about fifty pages on:

(a) Trends in the various traditional uses of the seas, under such headings as fisheries, shipping, mineral exploitation;

(b) Foreseeable new uses, as well as the likely growth in intensity of existing uses, by the second half of the 1970s;

(c) The likely effect of these uses and of other technological advances on the marine environment;

(d) Conflicts likely to arise over technical use; this background review to be prepared by making full use of material already available in the United Nations and the specialized agencies (including material being prepared for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment) and also from other sources, such as the International Council of Scientific Unions;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General, on completion of this background review, to communicate it to the Governments of Member States;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General, at that time, to invite the Governments of Member States to communicate to him any proposals they may wish to make for strengthening international co-operation in the marine environment;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, after obtaining the views of the Governments of Member States in accordance with paragraph 3 above and the comments of the other organizations of the United Nations system, and taking into account the results of the Conference on the Human Environment, to submit a brief report to the Council on the manner in which international co-operation relating to the seas might be strengthened in areas where this appears to be required.

CHAPTER XIV

POPULATION QUESTIONS

The United Nations and interested specialized agencies substantially increased their activities in the population field during 1970. The provision of additional financial support through the United Nations Fund for Population Activities made it possible for the Organization to pursue the work programme recommended by the Population Commission at its fifteenth session (November 1969)<sup>1</sup> and endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in 1970 (see below).

During 1970, the administration of the Population Fund was transferred to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in order to utilize the field establishment and machinery of the United Nations and of agencies concerned with various aspects of population programmes, including family planning. The scope of the Fund was widened to allow the specialized agencies and other inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations to draw on the Fund's resources.

Both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly took a number of decisions in the population field during 1970, including designating the year 1974 as World Population Year.

FUND FOR POPULATION ACTIVITIES

The United Nations Fund for Population Activities completed its first full year of operation in 1970. The year was marked by a sharp rise in financial support from interested Governments and a rapid increase in the amount of assistance provided to low-income countries for population programmes.

The target figure of $15 million that had been set to cover operational costs during 1970 was surpassed when 24 Governments pledged a total of $15.4 million in support of the Fund's programmes. Thirteen of these donations were made by developing nations, some of which were at the same time receiving assistance from the Fund.

By the end of 1970, some 200 projects in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Near and Middle East were being supported by the Fund, at a cost of $6.7 million. Agreements signed with the Governments of Mauritius and Pakistan involved allocations of a further $2.3 million for assistance to comprehensive family planning programmes.

In almost all cases, projects were executed by one or more of the following organizations in the United Nations system: the United Nations, the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization (WHO).

Grants were also made to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, to support activities in population and family planning, and to the Population Council, a non-governmental organization in the United States, to augment its information programme.

Projects in preparation or under implementation in 1970 (some of which are discussed below) covered a wide range of activities, including: the collection and analysis of basic demographic data; the provision of demographic research and training facilities; demonstration programmes in maternal and child welfare services; courses on population questions; the provision of fellowships in population statistics, census taking, demography, health education, human reproduction, communications and public administration; and, if requested, the provision of contraceptive supplies and manufacturing materials.

In determining the programmes and directions of the Fund, the UNDP Administrator and the Fund's Executive Director drew on the advice and guidance of three consultative bodies: an Advisory Board composed of 21 persons appointed by the Secretary-General; a United Nations Inter-Agency Consultative Committee, representing members of the United Nations system participating in the Fund; and the Programme Consultative Committee, bringing together governmental donor agencies and non-governmental organizations engaged in population activities.

The Advisory Board met for the first time in January 1970 and again in May. The Inter-Agency Consultative Committee met in January, June and December, and the Programme Consultative Committee was convened in May.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

During 1970, the United Nations provided substantive advice and technical evaluation from an over-all policy point of view with respect to programme development in population, as well as substantive support for projects financed under the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, UNDP and the regular programme of technical co-operation.

Projects financed in 1970 from the Population Fund included provision of population programme officers and experts, fellowships, inter-agency missions, meetings and support for national population programmes.

By the end of 1970, the number of United Nations population programme officers had risen to 12; these officers were assigned to more than 70 developing countries to assist in the identification of population problems and in the preparation of projects for technical co-operation.

In addition, the services of 13 population experts were provided by the United Nations to 12 countries and territories: Ceylon, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Honduras, Iraq, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, the Philippines, the United Arab Republic, Western Samoa and Zambia.

Twenty-four experts were provided to the three regional demographic training and research centres supported by the United Nations in Santiago, (Chile), Bombay (India) and Cairo (United Arab Republic). Other regional demographic centres were being organized in Cameroon and Ghana.

About 100 fellowships were granted by the United Nations during 1970 for attendance at the regional demographic centres, and 42 fellowships were awarded for study at other institutes.

Advisory services and expert assistance continued to be furnished on request through regional advisers in Africa, Asia and the Far East, and the Middle East, and through the staff of the regional demographic centre in Chile.

Following the 1968 visit to Pakistan of a United Nations/WHO advisory mission on family planning, the Government of Pakistan requested large-scale assistance for its family planning programme—a part of its five-year plan for development (1970-1975)—from the United Nations and other organizations in the United Nations system. In August 1970, an agreement was signed by Pakistan and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

An inter-agency mission (the United Nations, UNESCO and WHO) visited Costa Rica for six weeks in August-September 1970 to evaluate the Costa Rican programme in the field of family planning.

PROPOSALS FOR WORLD

POPULATION INSTITUTE

A study group sponsored by the United Nations, in co-operation with UNESCO and WHO, and with the support of the Population Fund, explored the need for an international population institute. The proposed institute would focus on multidisciplinary aspects of training, research and dissemination of information with regard to population policy and family planning programmes. Following a three-month study (August-November 1970), the group submitted recommendations to the Secretary-General.

MEETINGS

AND SEMINARS

The Ad Hoc Committee of Experts on Programmes in Demographic Aspects of Economic Development was convened from 29 June to 3 July 1970, to advise the Secretary-General on the formulation of specific programmes of research and technical work on this subject. In citing population as one of the key factors in the Second United Nations Development Decade, the Committee stressed the importance of mobilizing all available resources for carrying out research at the international, regional and national levels. The recommendations of the Committee and of the Secretary-General were to be considered by the Population Commission at its sixteenth (November 1971) session.

An Inter-regional Seminar on Demographic Aspects of Manpower was held in Moscow, USSR, from 31 August to 11 September 1970. It was organized by the United Nations with the assistance of the USSR Government and ILO.

The expanding mandate and activities of United Nations agencies in the population field intensified the need for inter-agency co-ordination of programmes; in this connexion the Sub-Committee on Population of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination held two meetings in 1970.

Various meetings on population questions were also convened by the regional economic commissions. (For further information, see pp. 425 and 432.)

PUBLICATIONS

Studies on population questions published during 1970 included Methods of Measuring Internal Migration, the sixth in a series of manuals on methods of estimating population, prepared on the recommendation of the Population Commission.

Also published was Variables and Questionnaire for Comparative Fertility Surveys, which contained lists of variables and a model questionnaire to serve as a basis for internationally comparable surveys on fertility and family planning.

The Demographic Yearbook, 1969, published in 1970, included a special chapter on recent changes in world fertility.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Various aspects of the population question were considered by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly during 1970.

Serving as a basis for discussion in both the Council and the Assembly were the report of the Population Commission on its fifteenth session (3-14 November 1969)<sup>2</sup> and the report of the Secretary-General on the world population situation, the first of the biennial reports requested by the Economic and Social Council on 30 July 1968.<sup>3</sup>

The Secretary-General, in his report, noted that current population projections suggested that the Second United Nations Development Decade (1970s) might witness the fastest growth of human numbers in all of mankind's history.

Among other things, the report noted that the gap between the birth rates of the more developed and of the less developed regions had widened enormously, to the extent that the level of the birth rate could serve as well as any other social or economic indicator to distinguish between more developed and less developed countries. It was also noted that in the world as a whole there was a marked shift of opinion towards the development of Government policies emphasizing the limitation of family size. By 1969, the Governments of about 30 developing countries, comprising almost two thirds of the combined population of the developing world, had adopted national family planning programmes as integral parts of their development policies.

By a decision of 11 December 1970, taken without vote, the General Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the world population situation. This step was taken on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

Action was also taken by the Assembly or by the Economic and Social Council on the following population matters: (a) population policies and the Second United Nations Development Decade; (b) the designation of a World Population Year; (c) the convening of a third World Population Conference; and (d) work programmes and priorities in the field of population. These actions are described below.

POPULATION POLICIES AND SECOND DEVELOPMENT DECADE

On 3 April 1970, the Economic and Social Council took the following action with regard to population policies and the Second United Nations Development Decade:

(1) it called upon the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade and the Committee for Development Planning to give full consideration to the recommendations of the Population Commission at its fifteenth (1969) session, with special reference to the report of the Secretary-General on the world population situation;

(2) it called on the Preparatory Committee to give full consideration to including in its development strategy a statement to the effect that, as appropriate, national policies aimed at achieving more desirable rates of population growth and at the acceptance by parents on a voluntary basis of smaller families should be regarded as essential aspects of development strategy for the eventual achievement of satisfactory per capita economic growth to promote human welfare and dignity;

(3) it requested the Secretary-General to continue to study, in consultation with relevant agencies, the relationship of population growth to economic and social development with special reference to the increase of gross national product and to improving national per capita income and standards of living, and to disseminate widely the major results of such studies.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1483(XLVIII), which was adopted, on the recommendation of the Economic Committee, by a vote of 11 to 1, with 2 abstentions. The text was based on a proposal by the Population Commission, as orally amended by India, Pakistan, Tunisia and Yugoslavia, and was approved by the Economic Committee on 1 April 1970 by a vote of 16 to 1, with 2 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

factor into account in formulating the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which was adopted on 24 October 1970. (See pp. 319-29, text of resolution 2626(XXV).)

Among the Strategy's goals and objectives was one which called for an average annual rate of growth in per capita income in developing countries of 3.5 per cent. This target, it was noted, was calculated on the basis of an average annual increase of 2.5 per cent in the population of developing countries, which was less than the average rate forecast for the 1970s. In this context, the Assembly noted, each developing country should formulate its own demographic objectives within the framework of its national development plan.

In implementing this goal, the Assembly called on those countries which considered that their rate of population growth hampered their development to adopt measures which they deemed necessary, in accordance with their concept of development. Developed countries, consistent with their national policies, were upon request to provide support through the supply of means for family planning and further research, and international organizations concerned were requested to continue to provide, when appropriate, the assistance that might be requested by interested Governments. Such support or assistance would not be a substitute for other forms of development assistance, the Assembly noted.

WORLD POPULATION YEAR

On 3 April 1970, the Economic and Social Council recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution whereby the Assembly would designate 1974 as World Population Year. Such an action, the Council felt, would encourage the intensification of national and international efforts and undertakings in the field of population during the intervening years in order to show the maximum possible progress by that time.

The Assembly would, among other things, (a) authorize the Secretary-General to undertake a programme of measures and activities by the United Nations, by Member States and by the interested organizations of the United Nations system during the year 1974, and (b) invite all Member States to intensify their efforts in the field of population in order to achieve long-range aims and immediate targets which each Government might wish to set for carrying out its own programme of work in the field of population.

These proposals were embodied in resolution 1485(XLVIII), which the Council adopted by a vote of 17 to 2, with 4 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Economic Committee. The text was based on a proposal by the Population Commission, as orally amended by the Committee Chairman, and was approved by the Economic Committee on 1 April 1970, by a vote of 14 to 2, with 3 abstentions. (For text, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The recommendation of the Economic and Social Council that 1974 be designated as World Population Year was discussed by the General Assembly at its 1970 session, mainly in its Second Committee.

During the discussion, a number of Members raised objections to the text as proposed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1485 (XLVIII). In particular, the text was criticized for failing to recognize that there were underpopulated as well as overpopulated countries, and that the determination of population policy was the responsibility of each Government.

Amendments to the text, aimed at meeting these objections, were submitted by Canada and Madagascar.

By the two-power amendments, the Assembly—instead of authorizing the Secretary-General to undertake a programme of measures and activities by the United Nations, Member States and interested organizations in the United Nations system—would, among other things, have requested the Secretary-General to prepare a detailed programme of proposed measures to be undertaken by Member States and by the interested organizations of the United Nations system during 1974, taking into account the population policies of Member States and his own proposals on the question.

Amendments to the Economic and Social Council resolution were also offered by the Philippines; by these, the Assembly would have recognized the important role played by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and raised the question of holding a pledging conference for the Fund before or during World Population Year.

Six States—India, Indonesia, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines and the United Arab Republic—then introduced an alternative text to the one recommended by the Economic and Social Council. By this, the Assembly would, among other things, acknowledge that the formulation and implementation of population policies and programmes were matters falling under the internal competence of each country and that, consequently, international action in the population sphere should be responsive to the varied needs and requests of individual Member States. The Secretary-General would be asked to prepare a detailed programme of proposed measures and activities to be undertaken during 1974.

On 25 November 1970, the Second Committee voted on the draft resolution and approved it by a roll-call vote of 53 to 9, with 33 abstentions.

As a result of this decision, no action was taken on the text recommended by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1485(XLVIII).

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted the resolution as recommended by the Second Committee. The Assembly thereby, among other things: (a) noted that the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade provided for action at the national and international levels to deal with the problem of population growth in those countries which considered that their rate of population growth hampered their development; (b) recognized that, in spite of the progress made so far by Member States in coping with aspects of the population problem relevant to their respective economic, social, humanistic and cultural development, and the progress in this regard by international organizations, varied aspects of the population problem required further attention from Member States and international organizations; and (c) expressed its confidence that the designation of the year 1974 for focusing international attention on different aspects of the population problem and for encouraging appropriate co-operative activities in the population field would make a significant contribution to the realization of the objectives in this field.

The Assembly then designated the year 1974 as World Population Year.

It also took the following steps. It acknowledged that the formulation and implementation of population policies and programmes were matters within the internal competence of each country, and that consequently international action should be responsive to the varied needs and requests of individual Member States. It requested the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with interested Member States, a detailed programme of proposed measures and activities to be undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system during 1974, taking into account the different character of population problems in each country and region, the population policies of Member States, and proposals by the Secretary-General, and to submit the programme to the Economic and Social Council in 1972, through the Population Commission.

The Assembly also stressed that assistance from United Nations organizations and interested Member States should continue to be available upon request for evolving and implementing a dynamic population policy to cope with all the problems emanating from different population levels, characteristics and trends, including assistance in developing a comprehensive demographic research and studies programme and in providing training programmes and advisory services in this field.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2683 (XXV), which was adopted by 71 votes to 8, with 31 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

THIRD WORLD POPULATION CONFERENCE

In recommending the designation of the year 1974 as World Population Year, the Economic and Social Council had in mind the fact that it was also approving the convening of a third World Population Conference in that year, under the auspices of the United Nations. (The first World Population Conference was held in Rome, Italy, in 1954; the second was held in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, in 1965.)

In approving, on 3 April 1970, the holding of the World Population Conference, the Economic and Social Council also decided: (1) that the Conference participants would consist of representatives of Member States of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies, their technical advisers and other selected specialists; and (2) that the Conference would be devoted to the consideration of basic demographic problems, their relationship with economic and social development, and population policies and action programmes needed to promote human welfare and development.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of obtaining contributions from external sources so as to reduce the expenses incurred by the United Nations in financing the Conference. It also authorized the Secretary-General to establish a small preparatory committee to assist him in formulating an agenda, based on the suggestions of the Population Commission, and in making arrangements for the Conference.

The Conference was requested to report to the Council and the Assembly in 1975 on its findings and recommendations. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1484(XLVIII), which was adopted by a vote of 19 to 3, with 1 abstention, on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee. The text was based on a proposal by the Population Commission, as orally amended by Pakistan, and was approved by the Committee on 1 April 1970 by a vote of 16 to 3.

WORK PROGRAMMES AND PRIORITIES

The five-year and two-year programmes of work recommended by the Population Commission at its fifteenth session<sup>4</sup> were endorsed by the Economic and Social Council on 3 April 1970. In endorsing the programmes, the Council drew the attention of the specialized agencies, the General Assembly, the regional economic commissions and the United Nations Economic and Social Office at Beirut to the various aspects involved in implementing the programmes.

The Council also, among other things: (a) invited the United Nations organizations concerned to strengthen their collaboration and co-ordination in the population field; (b) urged interested Governments to give full attention to population programmes in their development planning and policy-making and to utilize the available resources to this end; and (c) requested the Secretary-General, in pursuing the work programme and in responding to requests from Governments, to observe the priorities indicated by the Commission and the Council; to pay special attention to technical co-operation at country and regional levels; to promote the 1970 round of population censuses and to assist, with all available resources, the requesting Governments in implementing them as an aid to development planning and policy-making; to undertake demographic studies needed for development planning and policy-making in developing countries; and to conduct a second inquiry among Governments concerning population trends, economic and social development, and their policies and action programmes.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1486(XLVIII), which was adopted by a vote of 18 to 1, with 4 abstentions.

This action was taken on the recommendation of the Council's Economic Committee, which approved the text of the resolution on 1 April 1970 by a vote of 14 to 1, with 4 abstentions. The text was based on a proposal by the Population Commission, as amended by Kenya and by the United Kingdom. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 3 April 1970, the Council also took note of the report of the Population Commission on its fifteenth session by adopting, without objection, resolution 1487(XLVIII), as recommended by the Economic Committee, which had approved the text without vote on 1 April.

Noting with appreciation the consideration of population policies for the Second United Nations Development Decade by the Committee for Development Planning,

Taking note of the deliberations of the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade on a list of key areas in international co-operation for development during the Second Decade, including population, designed to fulfil the objectives for the Decade,

Recognizing the responsibility of the Population Commission to advise the Economic and Social Council on the interplay of demographic, economic and social factors and on any other population matters to which the organs of the United Nations or the specialized agencies may direct their attention,

1. Calls upon the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade and the Committee for Development Planning to give full consideration to the deliberations and recommendations of the Population Commission at its fifteenth session, with special reference to the report on the world population situation, and to the population projections for 1965-1985;

2. Calls upon the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade to give, as far as possible and if necessary, consideration to including in its development strategy the following text:

"In parts of the world, efforts during the Second United Nations Development Decade to promote long-term economic and social development adequate to improve the quality of life could be frustrated by the continuance of present high rates of population growth. In such cases, for countries which consider it appropriate and in accordance with the special needs of each country, national policies aimed at the achievement of more desirable rates of population growth and at the acceptance by parents on a voluntary basis of smaller families should be regarded as among the essential aspects of development strategy for the eventual achievement of satisfactory per capita economic growth, which would promote human welfare and dignity.";

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to study, in consultation with relevant agencies, the relationship of population growth to economic and social development with special reference to the increase of gross national product and to improving national per capita income and standards of living, and to disseminate widely the major results of such studies.

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolution 2211 (XXI) of 17 December 1966 on population growth and economic development,

"Noting resolution 1484 (XLVIII) of the Economic and Social Council of 3 April 1970 on the Third World Population Conference,

"Taking into account the progress made by the Member States to cope with all aspects of the population problems within economic, social, humanistic and cultural development,

"Recognizing that in spite of such progress the effective realization of programmes of work in the field of population carried out by Member States and international and other organizations remains yet to be achieved in some parts of the world and also in some aspects of the population problems,

"Convinced that an appropriate way of intensifying the activities of lasting nature is to devote the year 1974 to extensive national and international efforts and undertakings in the field of population, and also to an international review of the achievements in the field,

"Confident that the designation of the year 1974 as such a year of international review will encourage all Member States and interested organizations to intensify their efforts in the intervening years, so as to show the maximum possible progress by that time,

"1. Designates the year 1974 as World Population Year;

"2. Authorizes the Secretary-General to undertake a programme of measures and activities by the United Nations, by Member States and by the interested organizations in the United Nations system during the year 1974, as contained in the Secretary-General's proposals;

"3. Invites the interested organizations in the United Nations system to render all assistance to the Population Commission in the undertaking of the programme of measures and activities for the World Population Year;

"4. Invites all Member States to intensify their efforts in the field of population with the assistance of their appropriate organizations, in order that long-range aims as well as immediate targets which each Government may wish to set for carrying out its own programme of work in the field of population might be achieved during the World Population Year and thereafter;

"5. Requests the Secretary-General to report on preparatory work to the General Assembly through the Population Commission and the Economic and Social Council, and to prepare a final report on the World Population Year to be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council in 1975."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2211 (XXI) of 17 December 1966 on population growth and economic development,

Noting Economic and Social Council resolution 1484(XLVIII) of 3 April 1970 on the Third World Population Conference,

Noting also that the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade provides for action, both at the national and international levels, to deal with the problem of population growth in those countries which, in accordance with their concept of development, consider that their rate of population growth hampers their development,

Taking into account the progress made by Member States in coping with those aspects of the population problem which are relevant to their respective economic, social, humanistic and cultural development,

Recognizing that, in spite of the progress made so far in this regard by Member States and international organizations, and particularly the important role being played in the population field by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, varied aspects of the population problem require further attention from Member States and international organizations,

Recognizing further that a way of focusing international attention on different aspects of the population problem would be for Member States and international organizations to devote the year 1974 especially to appropriate efforts and undertakings in the field of population in the context of their respective needs and areas of competence,

Confident that the designation of the year 1974 for encouraging appropriate and relevant co-operative activity in the field of population would make a significant contribution to the realization of the objectives in this field,

1. Designates the year 1974 as World Population Year;

2. Acknowledges that the formulation and implementation of population policies and programmes are matters falling under the internal competence of each country and, consequently, that international action in the population sphere should be responsive to the varied needs and requests of individual Member States;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with interested Member States, a detailed programme of proposed measures and activities to be undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system during the year 1974, taking into account the different character of population problems in each country and region, the population policies of Member States, as well as the proposals contained in the Secretary-General's report on the question of holding a Third World Population Conference, and to submit the programme to the Economic and Social Council in 1972 through the Population Commission at its sixteenth session;

4. Invites interested organizations of the United Nations system to render the necessary assistance to the Secretary-General in preparing the programme of measures and activities for the World Population Year;

5. Invites Member States to participate fully in the World Population Year in the context of their capacities and policies;

6. Stresses that assistance from organizations of the United Nations system and interested Member States should continue to be available upon request for evolving and implementing a dynamic population policy to cope with all the problems emanating from different population levels, characteristics and trends, including assistance in developing a comprehensive demographic research and studies programme as well as training programmes and in providing advisory services in this field;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and submit to the General Assembly in 1975, through the Economic and Social Council, a final report on the World Population Year.

Plenary Meeting 1673.

THIRD WORLD POPULATION CONFERENCE

E/4768, Chapter XII. Draft resolution 2, submitted by Population Commission, as orally amended by Pakistan, approved by Economic Committee on 1 April 1970, meeting 507, by 16 votes to 3.

E/4813 and Corr.1. Report of Economic Committee, draft resolution II.

RESOLUTION 1484(XLVIII), as recommended by Economic Committee, E/4813, adopted by Council on 3 April 1970, meeting 1673, by 19 votes to 3, with 1 abstention.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2211 (XXI) of 17 December 1966 on population growth and economic development and its own resolutions 1048 (XXXVII) of 15 August 1964, 1084(XXXIX) of 30 July 1965, 1277 B (XLIII) and 1279(XLIII) of 4 August 1967 and 1347(XLV) of 30 July 1968,

Recalling resolution IV of the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation, of 29 June 1967, resolution 1/67 of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of 23 November 1967, resolutions 1.241, 3.251, 3.252 and 4.241 of the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of 29 November 1966, resolutions WHA18.49 of 21 May 1965, WHA19.43 of 20 May 1966, WHA 20.41 of 25 May 1967, WHA21.43 of 23 May 1968 and WHA22.32 of 23 July 1969 of the World Health Assembly, and the decision taken by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund in 1967,

Taking note of resolution XVIII of the International Conference on Human Rights of 12 May 1968 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1326 (XLIV) of 31 May 1968,

Being aware of its resolutions 435 (XIV) of 10 June 1952, 471 (XV) of 14 April 1953, 820 C (XXXI) of 28 April 1961 and 933(XXXV) of 5 April 1963, all of which determined the terms of reference of the first and second World Population Conferences,

Considering that issues centring on population trends and structures are relevant to all countries, if in varying degrees—in some in so far as high rates of growth may be intensifying pressures of population on resources and in others in so far as rates of growth may fall short of those deemed to be consistent with economic and social development—and that the global review of population policies and exchange of knowledge and experience in actions will become more urgently needed with the advent of the 1970 census rounds and other sources which will become available from studies and operations carried out in the field of population,

Having regard to General Assembly resolution 2361 (XXII) of 19 December 1967 on major special conferences,

1. Approves the proposal that a World Population Conference of representatives of Member States of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies be held under the auspices of the United Nations in 1974, and that participants consist of representatives of Member States of the United Nations and members of specialized agencies and their technical advisers as well as of other selected specialists;

2. Decides that the Conference shall be devoted to consideration of basic demographic problems, their relationship with economic and social development, and population policies and action programmes needed to promote human welfare and development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General in connexion with his plans for financing the World Population Conference:

- (a) To seek provision in his 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974 budget estimates for United Nations participation with the hope that adequate resources will be provided by the General Assembly;

- (b) To explore the possibility of obtaining contributions from external sources so as to reduce the expenses incurred by the United Nations;

4. Authorizes the Secretary-General, in association with the executive heads of interested specialized agencies, and the non-governmental organizations involved in the study of population and of population problems to establish a small preparatory committee to assist in formulating an agenda based on the suggestions of the Population Commission as set forth in its report of the fifteenth session and making necessary arrangements for the Conference;

5. Requests the Conference to report to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in 1975 on findings and recommendations of the deliberations at the Conference.

CHAPTER XV

MATTERS PERTAINING TO FOOD PROBLEMS

MULTILATERAL FOOD AID

During 1970, both the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council considered the eighth annual report of the Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). The report covered the period from May 1969 to April 1970. It incorporated a special report on food aid and related issues for the period of the Second United Nations Development Decade (1971-1980).

It was recommended in the special report that the General Assembly draw the attention of Member States to the advantages of directing a greater proportion of food aid through multilateral channels, as well as to the fact that experience had demonstrated that the World Food Programme could effectively utilize resources up to (or more than) double the $300 million agreed on as a pledging target for 1971-1972. (For further information on the World Food Programme, see pp. 369-75.)

On 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Intergovernmental Committee and transmitted to the General Assembly the special report on food aid and related issues during the Second Development Decade. It took this action on the recommendation of its Economic Committee, without adopting a resolution.

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly, recognizing that the world food problem was an inseparable part of the broader problem of development, invited Member States, while considering the implementation of the policy measures set out in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, to take account of the relevant recommendations and observations in the report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee.

The Assembly reaffirmed that the ultimate solution to the food problem of the developing countries lay in increased production in the developing countries, with a food deficit, with the co-operation of the developed countries.

The Assembly then recommended to Member States: (a) that food supplies in excess of commercial demand be used to an increasing extent to meet the unsatisfied food needs of people in developing countries and to assist in their economic and social development; (b) that full consideration be given to the advantages of directing a greater proportion of food aid through multilateral channels; and (c) that special emphasis be placed on using the World Food Programme when expanding multilateral food aid.

Governments were requested to endeavour to raise their cash contribution to the World Food Programme above the amounts required for transport, insurance and other operational services of the Programme to enable it to increase its purchases from food-exporting developing countries at world market prices.

The Secretary-General and the Director-General of FAO were requested to report as soon as possible to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, on the evolution of the food problem in developing countries and progress made towards its solution, in accordance with a General Assembly request of 20 December 1968.<sup>1</sup>

The Assembly also noted that, pursuant to that same resolution, the Director-General of FAO had reported to the FAO Council on ways of appraising prospective food deficits and food aid needs and of ensuring that sufficient food-stuffs were available to cope with unforeseen urgent situations, through, among other things, the establishment of food reserves. The Assembly invited the FAO Director-General to report on this subject to the Economic and Social Council as soon as possible.

These decisions were embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2682 (XXV), which was adopted, by 101 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was based on a proposal by Canada, Ireland, Jamaica, Madagascar, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Turkey, as amended by Argentina and France, and was approved by the Second Committee on 27 November 1970 by a vote of 82 to 0, with 9 abstentions.

At the request of the United States, the Committee took a separate vote on the final provision of the resolution, which dealt with ways of appraising prospective food deficits and food aid needs. This provision was approved by 81 votes to 1, with 10 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2096 (XX) of 20 December 1965 and 2300 (XXII) of 12 December 1967 on the programme of studies on multilateral food aid and resolution 2462 (XXIII) of 20 December 1968,

Recognizing that the world food problem is an inseparable part of the broader problem of development,

Having examined the report entitled "Food aid and related issues during the Second Development Decade," prepared by the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, as well as the comments of the Economic and Social Council in its report,

Taking note of the recommendations and observations contained in the report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, in particular those concerning the direction of food aid through multilateral channels, the doubling or more of the target level of the World Food Programme and the improvement of the procedures of the Programme,

1. Notes with appreciation the report of the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme and invites member States to take account of the relevant recommendations and observations therein while considering the implementation of the policy measures set out in the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade;

2. Reaffirms that the ultimate solution to the food problem of the developing countries lies in increased production in the developing countries with a food deficit, in the context of their general economic development, with the co-operation of the developed countries;

3. Recommends to member States that:

(a) Such food supplies as are in excess of commercial demand should be used to an increasing extent constructively to meet the unsatisfied food needs of people in the developing countries and to assist in their economic and social development, particularly through a project-oriented approach;

(b) They give full consideration to the advantages of directing a greater proportion of food aid through multilateral channels;

(c) When expanding multilateral food aid, they should place special emphasis on using the World Food Programme in order to take advantage of the experience already gained by the Programme and of its access to the experience of both donor and recipient countries with bilateral aid and the expertise and co-ordinating facilities of the United Nations system of organizations;

4. Draws the attention of member States to the fact that recent experience demonstrates that the World Food Programme could effectively utilize resources up to double or more than double the target level agreed for pledges in 1971 and 1972 without basic changes in the existing procedures of the Programme;

5. Requests Governments of member States to endeavour, wherever possible and without prejudice to the obligations arising from existing international agreements, to raise their cash contribution to the World Food Programme above the amounts required for transport, insurance and other services for operations of the Programme so as to enable it to increase its purchases from exporting developing countries at world market prices;

6. Requests the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme and the Executive Director of the World Food Programme to take appropriate action on the suggestions contained in the report of the Committee concerning the improvement of the Programme's procedures and administration;

7. Requests the United Nations/FAO Intergovernmental Committee of the World Food Programme, drawing on assistance as appropriate from the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and other interested organizations within the United Nations system, to review at its twenty-third session the progress made on the proposals contained in the report of the Committee and to submit its findings to the Economic and Social Council for transmission to the General Assembly at its twenty-eighth session;

8. Reminds the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations of the contents of paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 2462 (XXIII) and requests them, in consultation with the executive heads of other interested agencies and programmes, to report on this subject, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly as soon as possible;

9. Notes that, in pursuance of paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 2462 (XXIII), the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations has given active consideration to, and has consulted with member States on, possible ways of making appraisals of prospective food deficits and food aid needs and of ensuring that sufficient food-stuffs are available to cope with unforeseen urgent situations, including the establishment of food reserves; further notes that the Director-General has submitted his conclusions to the Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and invites him to report to the Economic and Social Council as soon as possible.

INCREASING THE PRODUCTION AND USE OF EDIBLE PROTEIN

The first progress report of the Secretary-General dealing with the problem of the increase and use of edible protein was considered in 1970 by the General Assembly and by the Economic and Social Council.

The report, prepared in response to a General Assembly request of 17 December 1968,<sup>2</sup> was based on information supplied by organizations of the United Nations system. It analysed developments during the previous two years which had had a bearing on the protein problem and set out a number of observations and proposals made by the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development concerning the United Nations machinery available for dealing with the protein problem confronting the developing countries.

On 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council, without adopting a resolution, decided to transmit the progress report to the General Assembly and to draw the Assembly's attention to the necessity of intensifying efforts in this field by the organizations of the United Nations system.

The Council also decided to state that, during its discussions of the protein problem, a certain number of member States had expressed the opinion that the remarkable results already obtained allowed the United Nations to dispense with special institutional and financial measures to reach those ends, while other member States had been in favour of the suggestions made with regard to such measures.

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly, recognizing the importance of assuring adequate levels of protein production and consumption in the context of economic and social development and the well-being of present and future generations in all countries, expressed its concern at the lack of a coherent plan of international action and a framework for stimulating action and concern at the governmental level with reference to protein, and its concern at the insufficient impact of current efforts to achieve better levels of protein production and consumption, especially in developing countries.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to prepare a concise report on possible elements of a strategy statement, as contemplated by the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, suggesting the role of Governments and organizations of the United Nations system in closing the protein gap. The report was also to include recommendations concerning the feasibility and the possible means of implementation of proposals already made in this respect, and it was to be submitted to the 1971 Assembly session.

In the meantime, the Secretary-General and the United Nations Development Programme were to give increased attention to projects related to the protein problems.

These were among the decisions embodied in resolution 2684 (XXV), adopted by the Assembly, by 101 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. The Committee had approved the text on 18 November 1970, by 87 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, Canada, Finland, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Peru, Uruguay and Zambia. The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2416 (XXIII) of 17 December 1968,

Recognizing the importance of assuring adequate levels of protein production and consumption in the context of economic and social development and the well-being of present and future generations in all countries,

Cognizant of the fact that the protein problem, because of its interdisciplinary implications, requires the concerted action of all sectors, at both the national and international levels, and an integrated approach, involving economic, managerial, social and scientific considerations,

Welcoming the increased level of activities and greater attention being given to this subject by the various agencies and organizations of the United Nations system as well as the growing interest being shown in the subject by Governments,

Expressing its appreciation for the activities undertaken at the technical and interagency levels by the Protein Advisory Group,

Recognizing, however, that the efforts being made fall far short of meeting the urgent requirements of the problem,

Concerned at the lack of a coherent plan of international action and a framework for stimulating action and concern at the governmental level in the field of protein, as called for by the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development and by the Secretary-General, and at the insufficient impact of current efforts to achieve better levels of protein production and consumption, especially in developing countries,

Reaffirming that, in order to deal effectively with the protein problem, further and fresh efforts are necessary and the maximum co-ordination of these efforts by all agencies and organizations of the United Nations system is essential,

1. Takes note of the Secretary-General's progress report on the protein problem;

2. Takes note also of the comments on the subject made at the forty-ninth session of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the statements made at the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, to prepare, with the assistance of independent experts and in close consultation with the agencies and organizations of the United Nations system, a concise report on the possible elements of a broad statement of strategy, as contemplated by the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, suggesting the role of Governments and the contribution of the United Nations system in closing the protein gap and including recommendations regarding those proposals already put forward which are found to be both desirable and feasible, together with an indication of the possible means of their implementation;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit the report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session;

5. Recommends, in the meantime, that the Secretary-General should take all possible steps in pursuance of paragraphs 3 and 5 of General Assembly resolution 2416 (XXIII), that the United Nations Development Programme should give increased attention to projects directly related to the protein problem and that the Protein Advisory Group, the specialized agencies and other United Nations organizations should continue and intensify their current activities in this field.

CHAPTER XVI

THE UNITED NATIONS CHILDREN'S FUND

EXECUTIVE BOARD SESSION

The Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) met at United Nations Headquarters from 20 April to 1 May 1970.

The Executive Board reviewed main developments affecting the situation of children and youth in the past decade, and considered general lines of action for the Second United Nations Development Decade (1970s). Addressing the Board, the United Nations Secretary-General pointed out that children and youth under 15 years of age accounted for more than 40 per cent of the total population in the less developed regions of the world; their better health, education and training were among the vital elements that would determine the future quality of human resources. The Secretary-General was encouraged by the initial positive reaction of many Governments to the $100 million annual income target which the Executive Director had proposed should be attained by UNICEF by 1975.

Other topics discussed by the Board included: the implications for UNICEF of a study of the capacity of the United Nations development system (prepared by Sir Robert Jackson for the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) (see pp. 344-47); an assessment of UNICEF-assisted projects for the education and training of women and girls for family and community life; criteria for the allocation of UNICEF aid; programme and project assessment; and accommodation for UNICEF headquarters in the proposed new United Nations building in New York.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING OF WOMEN AND GIRLS FOR FAMILY AND COMMUNITY LIFE

The Executive Board considered an assessment of projects for the education and training of women and girls for family and community life which were jointly assisted by UNICEF, the United Nations Social Development Division and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). The "education" reviewed by the assessment was mainly concerned with offering opportunities to mothers and out-of-school girls to acquire new knowledge, skills and attitudes in informal settings—through women's clubs, community centres, and various community self-help and income-producing activities. The "training" was mainly for volunteer community leaders and middle-level staff who worked with the women and girls, primarily in groups.

One of the main conclusions of the assessment was that investment in the programmes would yield greater results if they were closely associated with, and an integral part of, larger programmes which aimed at raising levels of family and community living, and were set in the context of national development plans.

CRITERIA FOR ALLOCATING UNICEF AID

In 1970, the Executive Board considered criteria for the equitable allocation of assistance among countries at various stages of development. The two main problems involved in developing such criteria were: (a) how to give relatively more aid to countries at early stages of development; and (b) how to adjust aid to countries that were relatively well advanced and approaching the point of take-off. The Board gave informal consent to the proposal of the Executive Director that UNICEF's field representatives should continue to use "orders of magnitude" or "indicative planning figures" in discussing with countries the amounts of aid they could reasonably expect during the planning period.

Child population would continue to be the basic statistical criterion. However, gross national product (GNP) per capita and other relevant factors should also be taken into account in determining the amount of aid for programming purposes. It was noted that 85 per cent of UNICEF aid was going currently to countries with a GNP of between $80 and $400 per inhabitant. For countries within that GNP range, the Executive Director proposed that, while child population should be the main statistical indicator, a graduated scale should be employed so that countries in the lower part of the range would receive more aid than those in the upper part.

MAJOR TYPES OF AID

The fields of health and education continued to be the two chief areas of concentration of UNICEF resources, the former constituting 45.11 per cent of 1970 Executive Board allocations, and the latter, 28.46 per cent. Total allocations for 1970 totalled $54,492,403. Nutrition allocations accounted for 13.97 per cent and family and child welfare, 4.91 per cent.

The Board approved commitments totalling $63.9 million. That sum included assistance for a number of projects for which aid would be required over a period of several years. With the taking of these Board decisions, outstanding commitments totalled $52 million. To fulfil those commitments, allocations of $27.8 million would be required in 1971 and the remaining allocations in the course of the next several years.

The Board also took note of 21 potential projects, or extensions of projects, as worthy of support if financing through special contributions became available. The total of potential UNICEF commitments for these projects amounted to $14.3 million, of which a total of $5.9 million would be required in allocations for the first year of their operation.

The trend towards planning projects on a longer-term basis was reflected in the fact that less than one third of the recommendations approved were for one year, and more than two thirds of the recommendations were for longer periods, mostly two and three years. The close relations developing between UNICEF and those responsible for national planning in the countries concerned was evidenced in the new recommendations; most of them were related to national development goals and were within the framework of the development plans.

BASIC HEALTH SERVICES

Allocations made for health at the 1970 session of the UNICEF Executive Board amounted to $19.4 million. Over four fifths of that amount was for building up basic health services that emphasized maternal and child health networks. The rest was mainly for malaria eradication.

The country-wide coverage of basic health services was felt to be still quite inadequate. In some 90 countries, UNICEF was assisting basic health programmes; and it had helped equip more than 45,600 rural health centres and sub-centres, and about 3,100 urban maternal and child health centres and maternity homes. It was still the case, however, that in most of the countries only a small fraction of the population had any access to even the simplest form of basic health services.

Since it would take many years for most countries to achieve a network of organized maternal and child health services on a national scale, there was a growing interest in exploring other means of supplementing the traditional health services. Suggested means were: simple training in child care; women's education and training programmes; programmes for school children; and introduction of health education in teacher training and school curricula.

FAMILY PLANNING

In his report to the Board, the Executive Director of UNICEF pointed out that an increasing number of countries were adopting policies relating to population, and these required wider provision for family planning services as an extension of maternal and child health services. Since the decision by the Board in 1967 that UNICEF should support family planning aspects of maternal and child health services, UNICEF aid for family planning had taken the same form as that given for health services generally, i. e. transport for family planning workers, stipends for special training of nurses and midwives, teaching manuals, teaching aids and equipment for the production of teaching aids, mainly for countries in Asia and the Eastern Mediterranean region.

The Executive Director first recommended that UNICEF assist family planning in 1966. At that time he did not recommend the provision of contraceptives as a form of aid in order to avoid controversy, and also because it then appeared that contraceptives were adequately available from other sources. He now considered that the situation had changed. Contraceptives were not available from other sources in sufficient quantity, and some Governments were indicating their preference for receiving them from UNICEF as part of the overall aid to their maternal and child health/family planning projects; they attached high priority to these requests. The Executive Director, therefore, recommended that UNICEF be prepared to give contraceptives as part of its aid to comprehensive health programmes.

The Board agreed that UNICEF should be able to include contraceptives, or equipment to make contraceptives, in the supplies which it furnished for the family and child welfare aspects of maternal and child health programmes, at the request of Governments, and with the technical approval of the World Health Organization (WHO).

MALARIA ERADICATION

At its 1970 session, the Executive Board discussed the implications for UNICEF of the World Health Assembly's decision on the review it had made of the global strategy of malaria eradication.

The UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy, after reviewing WHO decisions, made certain recommendations as to future UNICEF participation in anti-malaria activities. These were approved by the UNICEF Executive Board. The recommendations provided that the status of each anti-malaria campaign was to undergo a serious and realistic appraisal, not only of the technical aspects but also of administrative, operational and financial factors, and that UNICEF was to be associated with these reviews. This should provide a basis for determining whether any given campaign had a good prospect of achieving eradication and, if not, what alternative control measures might be adopted. For campaigns having a good prospect of success, the Joint Committee recommended that UNICEF continue its assistance for a further limited period.

For other campaigns, the approved recommendation was that UNICEF, in agreement with the Governments, should phase out its assistance; in some cases, limited aid to malaria control through rural health services might be provided, especially in areas of high endemicity. As for countries where malaria eradication was currently not feasible, and where malaria was a major health hazard for mothers and children (as in most of Africa), the Joint Committee proposed that limited assistance to malaria control through rural health services might also be provided. The Joint Committee also recommended that the door be kept open to considering UNICEF aid to new malaria eradication programmes, provided that all the conditions existed which would make eradication an attainable goal, including an adequate network of rural health services.

NUTRITION

The UNICEF Executive Board noted at its 1970 session, that there was an increased interest by some Governments in undertaking programmes for improving child nutrition, as was evidenced in: an upward trend in allocations for nutrition for the Eastern Mediterranean region; an increasing emphasis on food and nutrition aspects included as an integral part of other projects, such as for community or rural development, education, social services and integrated services; and progress in the education of mothers for better child food habits.

Allocations for projects in the nutrition category totalled $6 million at the 1970 session, or 14 per cent of programme allocations.

EMERGENCY AID

Requests for UNICEF emergency relief for children reached a new high during 1970. While emergency needs in Nigeria continued to dominate UNICEF funds and staff time in size and in demands, emergency aid was also provided to Algeria, Iraq, the Republic of Vietnam, Syria, Southern Yemen, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. Aid by UNICEF in those situations was financed from: regular allocations for currently assisted projects, special mail polls, and the Emergency Relief Fund which the Executive Director could draw upon at his discretion up to $100,000 (with authority to provide additional aid, if necessary, up to $200,000).

INCOME AND EXPENDITURE, 1970

INCOME IN 1970

Total income in 1970 amounted to $59.4 million. This was an increase of $12.4 million over the 1969 income of $47 million, or an increase of 26.4 per cent—the largest increase in absolute terms since 1948, and in percentage terms since 1953. However, the increase in regular governmental contributions amounted to only $1.8 million, or 6 per cent.

The over-all increase in 1970 was accounted for largely by the excellent response by Governments and the public to UNICEF'S appeals for special contributions to finance emergency relief and rehabilitation operations ($9 million). In some cases, these contributions took the form of funds-in-trust; in others, they were simply designated as special contributions for a particular purpose.

GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS

The number of Government contributors was 124 in 1970. This compared with 128 in 1969. Forty-four Governments increased their regular contributions in 1970 over 1969.

The gross increase of regular Government contributions in 1970 over 1969 was $2.5 million. This was partially offset by decreases in the contributions of some Governments, totalling $700,000. In several instances, the decreases were due to currency devaluations and to exchange-rate fluctuation. The net increase in regular Government contributions was, therefore, $1.8 million.

Special contributions (including funds-in-trust) for long-range programmes were received in the amount of $1.5 million, slightly above the total of $1.2 million in 1969. During the year, four Governments participated in this special financing of long-term programmes.

In addition, 15 Governments made special contributions (including funds-in-trust) towards UNICEF'S emergency relief and rehabilitation operations in Nigeria, Pakistan and Peru. The total of these contributions was $7.2 million.

Other funds-in-trust contributions were made by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities. In 1970, for the first time, it allocated $600,000 to the family planning aspects of UNICEF-assisted projects for maternal and child health.

NON-GOVERNMENTAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Income from fund-raising campaigns and individual donations rose to the record level of $9.6 million, exceeding the 1969 income from this source ($7.7 million). As in the case of Governmental contributions, the response of the public to the various appeals for emergency relief was an important factor in this increase.

Halloween collections in the United States and Canada went up by $1 million. Returns from a television appeal in Europe amounted to $900,000; of this sum, approximately $200,000 was earmarked for the Pakistan emergency. There were also other successful fund-raising activities in Europe, Australia and New Zealand for the major disasters which occurred in 1970.

GREETING CARDS AND CALENDARS

The net income from the greeting card operations increased from $3.9 million in 1969 (campaign 1968/69) to $4.3 million in 1970 (campaign 1969/70), representing a normal increase of about 9 per cent.

EXPENDITURES IN 1970

Income in 1970 exceeded expenditures by $8.9 million. The expenditure level of $50.5 million was approximately the same as forecast a year ago in the financial plan. It was kept to that level as a result of the earlier deliberate holding down of commitments and allocations in order to restore funds-in-hand to a more satisfactory level. This was achieved.

In the future, the level of commitments and expenditures would depend directly on the level of income.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council examined the report of the UNICEF Executive Board and adopted a resolution endorsing the policies of UNICEF and asking it to strengthen its programme providing aid for countries in the protection of members of the younger generation and in their preparation for future responsibilities. The Council also appealed to Governments and other donors to increase contributions to UNICEF so that it might more effectively meet the growing needs of children and adolescents during the Second United Nations Development Decade (1970s).

In adopting this resolution, the Council noted with approval UNICEF'S intention to co-operate in the proposed "country programming" of all inputs of the United Nations system. It also noted the considerable assistance that UNICEF had given to meet urgent needs of mothers and children in emergency situations.

These decisions were contained in resolution 1528 (XLIX) adopted unanimously on 20 July

1970 on the proposal of India, Indonesia, Ireland, Norway, Pakistan, Peru and Upper Volta. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The General Assembly was not scheduled to consider the report of the UNICEF Executive Board in 1970.

E/L.1341. India, Indonesia, Ireland, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Upper Volta: draft resolution.

RESOLUTION 1528(xLix), as proposed by 7 powers, E/L.1341, adopted unanimously by Council on 20 July 1970, meeting 1711.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund on its session held in New York in April-May 1970,

Recognizing the important role that the Fund is in a position to play in helping to achieve the objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade, particularly through assisting Governments in their national policies for involving children and youth in the development process and for ensuring that their needs are met in an integrated manner including the provision of augmented material support,

Welcoming the support in the Executive Board for the proposal to seek to reach an annual income of $100 million by 1975, which would enable the Fund substantially to increase its assistance to children and adolescents and thus contribute materially more to the realization of the objectives of the Second Development Decade,

Noting with approval the intention of the Fund, in keeping with its "country approach," which has been several times commended by the Council, to co-operate in the proposed "country programming" of all inputs of the United Nations system, while Fund projects would continue to be approved by its Executive Board,

Noting the prompt and considerable assistance being provided to meet the urgent needs of mothers and children in emergency situations and the Fund's close co-operation in this field, as well as in all its other activities, with other members of the United Nations system, Governments and non-governmental organizations,

Welcoming also the steadily increasing emphasis which the Fund is placing on the training of individuals in the developing countries within their own country or region,

1. Endorses the policies of the United Nations Children's Fund;

2. Requests the Fund to strengthen its programme aimed at providing aid for countries in the protection of the members of the younger generation and in their preparation for future responsibilities;

3. Appeals to the Governments of Member States and other donors to make every effort to increase their contributions to the Fund in its endeavours to achieve the financial support required to meet more effectively the growing needs of children and adolescents during the Second United Nations Development Decade.

CHAPTER XVII

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES

The Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued to provide protection and assistance to refugees during 1970 and to seek to achieve, in co-operation with other members of the United Nations system, a speedy and satisfactory solution to refugee problems.

INTERNATIONAL PROTECTION

The number of parties to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees rose from 59 to 60 in 1970, and the number of parties to the 1967 Protocol rose from 40 to 43. (This Protocol extended the scope of the 1951 Convention and made it applicable to new groups of refugees.)

The questions of asylum and of non-refoulement continued to receive the close attention of UNHCR. As these principles have gained wider recognition among States, there has been a decrease in the number of cases in which persons likely to qualify as refugees were declared prohibited immigrants, and of those in which refugees were expelled without due process of law and without being given a reasonable opportunity to find a country of asylum.

The Office continued its efforts to help refugees acquire the nationality of their country of residence. A number of Governments have adopted favourable legal and administrative measures in this respect. The number of refugees naturalized in European countries for which statistical data were available amounted to some 10,000 by the end of 1970. The Office also continued its efforts to promote accession to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.

The question of access to employment received increasing attention, particularly in Africa, where a growing number of individual refugees were seeking urban employment.

The Office of the High Commissioner continued to administer indemnification funds made available by the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany for the benefit of refugees who suffered persecution under the national socialist regime by reason of their nationality. Also, the Office helped to implement certain terms of an Agreement of October 1960 by which the Federal Republic authorities indemnified refugees who suffered persecution by reason of their nationality and who incurred damage to body and health.

As at 31 December 1970, payments out of three funds had been made by UNHCR in the amount of some US$15,280,000 to 14,615 qualified applicants, while under the Agreement of October 1960 the Federal Republic of Germany had paid out the equivalent of US$37,700,000.

MATERIAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAMMES

In 1970, some 270,000 refugees received material assistance under the UNHCR programme. The great majority of these were in Africa, but refugees in a number of countries in Asia, Europe and Latin America also received aid.

A total of $5,340,236 was committed under the UNHCR programme for 1970, and $532,160 under the UNHCR Emergency Fund. In addition, special trust funds totalling $1,498,684 were donated for the implementation of special projects, including $644,352 for local settlement, $361,536 for education and $285,258 to facilitate voluntary repatriation.

Supporting contributions, valued at some $3,480,000, as well as land and public services, were provided by the countries of reception. The World Food Programme continued to make available food supplies, and bilateral aid provided by Governments indirectly benefited refugees in certain countries.

The Office continued to facilitate the repatriation of refugees who expressed the wish to return to their own country. Approximately 9,000 refugees, mainly Congolese, Rwandese, Sudanese and Zambians, returned to their homelands during 1970. Of these, some 1,000 received financial assistance from UNHCR, mainly towards travel costs. The Office also used its good offices to facilitate the return of some 4,500 Nigerian children from Gabon and the Ivory Coast to their homes in Nigeria.

In co-operation with Governments, the Inter-governmental Committee for European Migration and non-governmental organizations, UNHCR assisted some 10,180 refugees—most of them in Europe and Latin America—in their resettlement in 1970. In Africa, UNHCR maintained close contact with the Bureau for the Placement and Education of African Refugees of the Organization of African Unity.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN AFRICA

The number of refugees benefiting from UNHCR assistance in Africa decreased from some 250,000 in 1969 to some 241,600 at the end of 1970, as an increasing number of refugees already in settlements became self-supporting. However, it was necessary to distribute food rations to a larger number of refugees as a result of the influx of some 55,000 new refugees into several countries—particularly into Sudan, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania—and the severe droughts which affected several areas.

Of the refugees in Africa being assisted by UNHCR towards rural settlement, some 200,000 were establishing themselves on the land in organized settlements while others were settling among the local population. The main rural settlement projects were in the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Senegal, Sudan, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

During 1970, further measures were taken to improve the infrastructure in the rural settlements, including the establishment of water supplies, the building of roads and the improvement of methods of agriculture. Health and education facilities were also expanded.

A serious problem was developing with regard to the growing number of individual refugees in the larger cities in Africa, many of whom could not find employment. Most of these refugees were of urban background and could not easily establish themselves in the agricultural settlements. Various measures, including counselling, were being taken to help them.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN ASIA AND IN THE MIDDLE EAST

In Asia, UNHCR continued to assist Tibetan refugees in India and Nepal, where $300,000 and $44,000 respectively, were committed under the UNHCR programme, mainly for the consolidation of settlements, vocational training and the provision of medical facilities. Special assistance was also provided to refugees living in scattered groups in northern Nepal.

Assistance was also given to refugees in Macao, mainly through the provision of housing, the care and rehabilitation of handicapped refugees and the promotion of vocational training.

In the Middle East, where there were some 10,000 refugees within the competence of UNHCR, $135,879 was committed in 1970 for the promotion of resettlement by emigration, local settlement and supplementary aid.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN EUROPE

The majority of the approximately 650,000 refugees within the mandate of UNHCR in Europe have become economically and socially integrated into their countries of asylum. The assistance provided in 1970, at a cost of some $530,000 was therefore intended primarily to supplement the aid made available to the refugees by the countries concerned.

Some 6,700 refugees in Europe were resettled in other countries, mainly Australia, Canada, New Zealand and the United States. Special schemes for the admission of handicapped refugees were continued by a number of countries, notably Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries.

ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES IN LATIN AMERICA

During 1970, some 400 refugees in Latin America, mostly aged or handicapped, were assisted by UNHCR, which found living quarters for them in homes and institutions and provided vocational training facilities. This programme was carried out in Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Uruguay and Venezuela, at a cost to UNHCR of $327,000.

In addition, some 2,000 refugees from the Caribbean area were assisted while in transit in Latin America, pending their resettlement.

SUPPLEMENTARY AID

As in previous years, supplementary aid was provided to individual refugees to enable them to obtain basic necessities pending their settlement. A total of $186,654 was committed for this purpose and benefited some 25,000 refugees. In addition, legal aid was provided to some 3,600 individuals, at a cost of $64,500.

Educational assistance again played an important role, especially in Africa. Under the UNHCR education account, about 2,500 refugees received aid for secondary education and vocational training in various countries in Africa, as well as in Asia, Latin America and the Middle East, at a cost of $390,000. Close co-operation was also continued with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and with the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

The annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was submitted to the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1970 session. On 31 July, the Council decided, without debate or adoption of a resolution, to transmit the report to the General Assembly at its 1970 session.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees at its twenty-fifth session in 1970.

With regard to the report, on 30 November the Assembly: (a) noted with appreciation the results obtained by the High Commissioner in the accomplishment of his humanitarian task and the constant efforts being made by him in co-operation with United Nations bodies and voluntary agencies to promote the voluntary repatriation, integration in countries of asylum or resettlement of refugees who were his concern, whose problems were causing increasing concern, especially in Africa; (b) commended the encouraging progress obtained in the field of inter-agency co-operation, which was essential in order to achieve durable solutions that were closely linked with the economic and social development of the countries concerned; (c) noted with satisfaction the increasing number of Governments contributing to the High Commissioner's assistance programme and the substantial increase in some of these contributions; and (d) expressed its appreciation of the growing number of accessions to the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees of 1951 and the Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees of 1967 and expressed the hope that this trend would continue.

The Assembly then: (1) requested the High Commissioner to continue to provide international protection and assistance to refugees who were his concern, in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions—in particular those relating to the new groups of refugees in Africa—and with the directives of the Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme; (2) requested the High Commissioner to continue his efforts to achieve—in co-operation with the Governments concerned, the specialized agencies and other members of the United Nations system—speedy and satisfactory solutions to the problems of refugees; and (3) urged Governments to continue to lend their support to the High Commissioner's humanitarian task by facilitating his efforts in the field of international protection, by continuing to co-operate in the promotion of permanent solutions for refugees, including in particular individual cases in Africa, and by providing the necessary means to enable the financial targets to be reached.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2650 (XXV), adopted unanimously on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The Committee approved the text by acclamation on 17 November 1970.

The text was based on a proposal by Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Cyprus, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Iran, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Senegal, Sudan, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Yugoslavia and Zambia. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Other aspects of the refugee situation on which the Assembly acted at its 1970 session included a request to specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations to increase the scope of their assistance to refugees from colonial territories.

This request was contained in resolution 2704 (XXV), adopted on 14 December 1970. (For text, see pp. 711-13.)

Also on 14 December with the adoption of resolution 2706 (XXV), the Assembly provided funds for 1971 to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, with which UNHCR co-operated. This action was taken pending the receipt of voluntary contributions. (For text of resolution, see p. 715.)

CONTRIBUTION PLEDGES

Pledges towards the 1971 programme of UNHCR were announced at a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the Programme of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, held on 20 November 1970.

These pledges, as well as pledges made subsequent to the meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee, are shown in the table below.

CHAPTER XVIII

NARCOTIC DRUGS

The aim of international control of narcotic drugs is to restrict the use of such drugs to medical and scientific purposes through the co-operation of Governments. This co-operation takes place within the framework of international narcotics treaties, the most recent being the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, which, with some exception of detail, replaced the earlier treaties.

The United Nations Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs formulate United Nations policies and co-ordinate the efforts of the international community in this field. The World Health Organization (WHO) recommends to the Commission the drugs that should be put under control, and generally advises on medical questions in the field of narcotics.

The International Narcotics Control Board (which replaced, as of 2 March 1968, the Permanent Central Narcotics Board and the Drug Supervisory Body) ensures the supervising of the production and manufacture of and trade in narcotic drugs, and also ensures that the aims of the international treaties are not endangered by reason of the failure of Governments to carry out the provisions of these treaties.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, which had been put on a biennial cycle of sessions with effect from 1969, held no regular session in 1970. It was, however, convened twice during the year for special sessions: the first was held in Geneva, Switzerland, from 12 to 30 January 1970, to prepare a revised draft protocol on psychotropic substances; the second was held in Geneva from 28 September to 3 October 1970, to discuss short- and long-term action against drug abuse.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

A five-year plan of technical co-operation based on the requests of 81 Governments was launched during 1970.

Three regional projects were completed during the year: the Regional Training and Consultative Mission to Africa (Kenya, Somalia, Sudan and Uganda); the Regional Training and Consultative Mission to Asia (Ceylon, Malaysia, Singapore and Thailand); and the Project Preparation Mission to Thailand. The resultant plan of this last mission, which was submitted to the Government for consideration, was concerned with a pilot scheme for the replacement of opium poppy cultivation; an expansion of facilities for the treatment, rehabilitation and social reintegration of drug addicts; the strengthening of law enforcement measures; and the development of narcotics educational programmes.

Thirty-two fellowships were awarded during the year to officials from Algeria, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, the Cook Islands, Ecuador, Ghana, Greece, Honduras, Korea, Liberia, Mexico, Southern Yemen, Syria, Turkey, Thailand, the United Arab Republic and Yemen for training in various aspects of narcotics control.

An officer of the United Nations Secretariat was posted to Bangkok, Thailand, to advise Governments in South-East Asia on narcotics questions. In addition, an expert was assigned to the Government of Iran as a general narcotics adviser; this appointment was financed under the United Nations Development Programme.

PUBLICATIONS

In 1970, the quarterly Bulletin on Narcotics, published in English and French, included articles on: drug addiction, in particular its medical and social aspects; psychotropic substances; national and international aspects of narcotics control; and on scientific research on narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. Russian and Spanish editions containing selected articles, and a summary in Chinese, were prepared.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

International collaboration was expanded in the United Nations research programme on narcotic drugs. Scientists from many countries participated in the programme and nominations of collaborating scientists were made by Canada, Dahomey, France, India, New Zealand, Sweden and the United Kingdom. Samples of cannabis, opium and heroin were received and analysed and were made available to collaborating scientists for research purposes.

Technical assistance, in the form of training in laboratory methods for the analysis of narcotic and psychotropic substances, was provided for fellowship holders from Algeria, Bolivia, Cambodia, Colombia, Ecuador, Ghana, Greece, India, Jordan and Madagascar. (The awards to fellows from Cambodia, Jordan and Madagascar were made in 1969 and implemented in 1970.)

DRUGS TO BE PLACED

UNDER INTERNATIONAL CONTROL

On 19 October 1970, the Secretary-General transmitted a notification of WHO to all States parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, indicating that the substance Algeril (the proposed international name of which is Propiram) be included in Schedule II of the Convention. The Secretary-General requested the members of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to express their views on the WHO recommendation; in the absence of unanimity, the question was postponed until the next regular session of the Commission in 1971.

IMPLEMENTATION OF TREATIES

RATIFICATIONS, ACCESSIONS TO AND ACCEPTANCE OF TREATIES

During 1970, the following States became parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1953: Costa Rica, the Holy See, Switzerland and the Republic of Viet-Nam. As at 31 December 1970, the number of accessions to and ratifications of the 1953 Convention was 79.

The Government of Spain deposited with the Secretary-General on 5 June 1970 the instrument of ratification of the 1936 Convention for the Suppression of the Illicit Traffic in Dangerous Drugs as amended by the 1946 Protocol.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENTS

Governments submit annual reports to the Secretary-General on the implementation of their obligations under the international narcotics treaties. In 1970, 115 countries and territories submitted annual reports for 1969.

In the course of the year, 36 Governments communicated to the Secretary-General the text of 98 national laws and regulations in the narcotics field.

QUESTIONS CONCERNING TREATY ON PSYCHOTROPIC SUBSTANCES

At its first special session in 1970, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reached agreement on a treaty text for the international control of psychotropic substances (i.e. depressants of the central nervous system, such as sleeping pills and tranquillizers, stimulants of the central nervous system, such as amphetamines, and hallucinogens, such as LSD).

The Commission based its work on the text of the draft protocol on psychotropic substances, which had been prepared by the United Nations Secretariat in the light of the Commission's discussion at its 1969 session. The text of the revised draft protocol, as adopted by the Commission at the special session, was included in the Commission's report to the Economic and Social Council at its March-April 1970 session. The Council took note of the report by unanimously adopting resolution 1473 (XLVIII) of 24 March 1970. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also included in the report was the text of a draft resolution, for adoption by the Council, requesting the Secretary-General to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of a protocol on psychotropic substances.

The Council adopted this draft on 24 March 1970. Reiterating its conviction that the problem of the widespread abuse of psychotropic substances not under international control urgently required regulation by international agreement in the form of a treaty, the Council requested the Secretary-General to transmit the revised draft protocol to all States Members of the United Nations, members of the specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) or parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and also to WHO, other specialized agencies, IAEA, the International Narcotics Control Board, and to the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL).

It further decided to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of a protocol on psychotropic substances, and requested the Secretary-General to call such a conference early in 1971, and invite to it the States and bodies mentioned above and interested specialized agencies.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1474(XLVIII), adopted by the Council on 24 March 1970, by 18 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions, on the proposal of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as orally amended by the USSR. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A communication of 27 March 1970 from the USSR, addressed to the Secretary-General, was circulated to Economic and Social Council members. It transmitted a statement of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the German Democratic Republic in which it was stated that the German Democratic Republic had had success in the prevention of the misuse of psychotropic substances and that it expected the Economic and Social Council to make it possible for all States interested to attend such a plenipotentiary conference.

Subsequently, the Government of Austria invited the conference to meet in Vienna for five or six weeks in January-February 1971.

In another decision of 24 March 1970, the Economic and Social Council recommended that, pending entry into force of an international protocol on the subject, Governments should give consideration to the adoption of additional measures for the national as well as international control of psychotropic substances and take measures to prevent the abuse of these substances.

This action was taken by the adoption of resolution 1475(XLVIII), by a vote of 23 to 0, with 3 abstentions, on the proposal of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, as orally amended by Norway. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

ACTION AGAINST DRUG ABUSE

On 24 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council called for a special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to be convened to consider short- and long-term policy recommendations for integrated international action against drug abuse, with particular reference to the need for more effective measures: to suppress the illicit drug traffic by strengthening national and international means of enforcement; to put an end to the illegal and uncontrolled production of narcotic raw materials by all means, including the development of alternative economic programmes and activities such as the substitution of crops; and to reduce the illicit demand for drugs by means of educational and social programmes and by means of the treatment and rehabilitation of addicts.

In calling for this action, the Council noted its deep concern about the epidemic spread of drug addiction in developed and developing countries and its conviction that prompt and decisive action by the United Nations family of organizations was imperative if this ominous situation was to be brought under control.

These decisions were taken by the unanimous adoption of resolution 1532(XLIX), on the proposal of Argentina, Brazil, France, Ghana, Greece, Indonesia, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States, as amended by Jamaica and Turkey. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At its special session on this subject, held in September 1970, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs had before it a study prepared by the Secretary-General suggesting short- and long-term measures against drug abuse and illicit traffic.

The Secretary-General's study indicated that it would not be feasible to finance the proposed measures from existing United Nations resources, and suggested that a fund be established which would be built up by voluntary contributions from Governments and from private sources.

In its report to the Council, the Commission included the text of a resolution it had adopted, recommending inter alia that the Council invite the Secretary-General to establish a fund for drug control.

On 11 November 1970, the Council, having considered the Commission's report, requested the Secretary-General to establish, as an initial measure and as a matter of urgency, a United Nations fund for drug abuse control to be made up from voluntary contributions. In this connexion, the Council recognized the need for immediate action as well as for the establishment of a plan for concerted long-term action by the United Nations system to deal with the problem of the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances simultaneously at its critical points: supply, demand and illicit traffic.

The Council invited the appropriate United Nations bodies to co-operate in the planning and execution of such measures and requested the Secretary-General to report to it in 1972 on the implementation of these decisions.

Finally, the Council transmitted its decisions, together with the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to the General Assembly for any further action it might deem appropriate.

These decisions were embodied in Council resolution 1559(XLIX), adopted by 22 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, Greece, Indonesia, Norway, the United States and Uruguay. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly, noting with grave concern the spread of drug abuse, strongly endorsed the establishment of a programme to implement the Commission's recommendations for dealing with drug abuse and welcomed the establishment, as an initial measure and as a matter of urgency, of a United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, to be made up of voluntary contributions.

The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to proceed immediately towards the implementation of the relevant decisions of the Economic and Social Council and appealed to Governments and organizations of the United Nations system, as well as to foundations and the public in general, to lend their full support to the efforts.

These decisions were taken by the adoption of resolution 2719(XXV), by a vote of 106 to 0, with 8 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The Committee had approved the text on 11 December 1970 by 84 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions, on a proposal of Afghanistan, Algeria, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Greece, Guyana, Honduras, Iran, Liberia, Morocco, Niger and Uruguay. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During 1970, the Secretary-General sent a questionnaire to elicit the views of Governments on the extent of the abuse of the various psychotropic substances and data related to such abuse. Seventy-two replies were received giving statistics on the trends in and the forms of the abuse of stimulant, depressant and hallucinogenic drugs.

ILLICIT TRAFFIC

During 1970, the Secretary-General received 1,770 seizure reports covering a total of 1,795 individual seizures in respect of 28 countries. Information on illicit traffic in drugs was submitted by 113 countries and territories in their annual reports for 1969, 18 of which gave details of 295 cases of seizures.

The main drugs involved continued to be opium and the opiates (morphine and heroin), cocaine, coca leaf and, in particular, cannabis. The flow of illicit traffic remained at a very high level and there was an increasing number of reports of seizures of synthetic and psychotropic drugs, such as amphetamines and hallucinogens.

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly called upon Member States and appealed to non-member States to consider seriously the enacting of legislation to provide severe penalties for those engaged in illicit trade and trafficking of narcotic drugs.

In calling for this action, the Assembly took into consideration that addiction to narcotic drugs was becoming an alarming problem in many countries and that the measures taken against illicit trade in narcotic drugs had not been successful in arresting widespread addiction, which constituted a danger to society at large.

These decisions were taken by the unanimous adoption of resolution 2720(XXV), recommended to the Assembly by its Third Committee, which had unanimously approved the text on 11 December 1970, on a proposal sponsored by Afghanistan and Saudi Arabia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

OTHER DECISIONS

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

On 24 March 1970, the Economic and Social Council took note (without adopting a resolution) of the interim report of the Secretary-General on technical assistance in the narcotics field, and decided to transmit the report to the General Assembly. The report had been prepared in response to an Assembly decision of 19 December 1968<sup>1</sup> which, among other things, had called upon the Secretary-General to develop plans for putting an end to the illegal or uncontrolled production of narcotic raw materials.

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL NARCOTICS CONTROL BOARD

The report of the International Narcotics Control Board on its work in 1969 was published in 1970. The Board's annual report, like that of its predecessor body—the Permanent Central Narcotics Board—reviews the functioning of the international system of narcotics control. It can thus bring to the attention of Governments particular weaknesses in international control, or any failures of individual Governments to comply with their treaty obligations. In its report, the Board makes recommendations and proposals for remedial measures.

On 24 March 1970, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Board's report by adopting, unanimously, resolution 1476 (XLVIII), the text of which was suggested by the Council President.

The Economic and Social Council,

Reiterating its conviction that the problem of the widespread abuse of psychotropic substances not under international control urgently requires to be regulated by international agreement in the form of a treaty,

Recalling its resolutions 1293 (XLIV) and 1294 (XLIV) of 23 May 1968 and 1401 (XLVI) of 5 June 1969, and World Health Assembly resolutions WHA 18.47 of 20 May 1965, WHA 20.42 and WHA 20.43 of 25 May 1967 and WHA 21.42 of 23 May 1968, and also General Assembly resolution 2433 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, which refer to this problem.

Convinced that the objectives and aim of this Protocol are of interest to the international community as a whole,

Recalling also its resolution 1402(XLVI) of 5 June 1969 in which it had noted the progress made by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in elaborating a draft Protocol for the control of the psychotropic substances and had authorized the Commission to meet as early as possible in 1970 to prepare a revised draft Protocol for submission to the Council,

Recalling also that the General Assembly, by resolution 2584(XXIV) of 15 December 1969, had requested the Council to call upon the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its special session to proceed without delay to complete the draft Protocol for the control of the psychotropic substances,

Having received the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its first special session,

Noting that this report contains the text of the revised draft Protocol referred to in Council resolution 1402 (XLVI) and General Assembly resolution 2584 (XXIV),

1. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the revised draft Protocol on Psychotropic Substances adopted by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its first special session, the report and the summary records of that session, and such background documentation as he considers pertinent, to all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency or parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice, and also to the World Health Organization, other specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the International Narcotics Control Board and to the International Criminal Police Organization;

2. Decides to convene, in accordance with Article 62, paragraph 4, of the Charter of the United Nations and with the provisions of General Assembly resolution 366(IV) of 3 December 1949, a conference of plenipotentiaries for the adoption of the Protocol on Psychotropic Substances;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

- (a) To call such a conference early in 1971;
- (b) To invite to the Conference:
  - (i) The States mentioned in paragraph 1 above;
  - (ii) The World Health Organization and other specialized agencies interested in the matter, with the same rights they have at sessions of the Economic and Social Council;
  - (iii) The International Narcotics Control Board, with the same rights it has at sessions of the Economic and Social Council;
  - (iv) The International Criminal Police Organization, with the same rights it has at sessions of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;
- (c) To prepare provisional rules of procedure for the conference;
- (d) To provide summary records for the Conference and its Committees.

INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF PSYCHOTROPIC SUBSTANCES

E/4785, Chapter IV. Draft resolution C, proposed by Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

RESOLUTION 1475 (XLVIII), as proposed by Commission on Narcotic Drugs, E/4785, as orally amended by Norway, adopted by Council on 24 March 1970, meeting 1660, by 23 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having decided by its resolution 1474(XLVIII) of 24 March 1970 to convene a conference of plenipotentiaries to adopt an international agreement on the control of psychotropic substances,

Convinced that the general adoption of effective control measures in regard to psychotropic substances is essential to the fight against the abuse of these substances,

Believing that the existence of such control measures would also help bring about the early entry into force of an international agreement by making it easier for Governments to ratify or accede to the agreement,

Convinced that all feasible steps should be taken by Governments to prepare for the bringing into effect as soon as possible of a widely accepted system of international control of psychotropic substances,

Recalling its resolution 1401 (XLVI) of 5 June 1969 in which Governments, pending the entry into force of an international instrument, were recommended to apply urgent control measures to certain stimulant drugs, Recommends that Governments should give consideration to the adoption at the earliest possible date of additional measures for the national as well as international control of psychotropic substances and take measures to prevent the abuse of these substances.

amended by Turkey (E/L.1350 as orally amended) and as orally amended by Jamaica, adopted unanimously by Council on 24 July 1970, meeting 1717.

The Economic and Social Council,

Deeply concerned by the epidemic spread of drug addiction in developed and developing countries which continues unabated, as noted at its forty-eighth session,

Recognizing that this problem includes the abuse of traditional narcotic drugs as well as psychotropic substances,

Convinced that prompt and decisive action by the United Nations family is imperative if this ominous situation is to be brought under control,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2434(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, by which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the International Narcotics Control Board and in consultation with interested Governments, to develop plans for putting an end to the illegal or uncontrolled production of narcotic raw materials and to submit those plans, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session,

Recalling further the interim report of the Secretary-General to the Council at its forty-eighth session noting the unanimous agreement at an interagency meeting convened by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination that measures must be adopted to control both the illicit supply of and demand for narcotic drugs, taking into consideration the relevant economic, social, technical and institutional aspects, involving the co-operation of the various United Nations agencies and Governments concerned,

Recalling further that a conference of plenipotentiaries has been convened for January 1971 to adopt an international convention on the control of psychotropic substances,

Convinced that it is essential that the General Assembly should have recommendations from the competent organ in the field in order to deal effectively with this issue,

1. Decides that a special one-week session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs be held in Geneva beginning 28 September 1970 to consider short- and long-term policy recommendations for integrated international action against drug abuse with particular reference to the need for more effective measures to suppress the illicit drug traffic by strengthening national and international means of enforcement, to put an end to the illegal and uncontrolled production of narcotic raw material by all means including the development of alternative economic programmes and activities such as the substitution of crops, as envisaged by General Assembly resolution 2434(XXIII), and to reduce the illicit demand for drugs by means of educational and social programmes and by means of the treatment and rehabilitation of addicts;

2. Invites interested specialized agencies, other competent United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations concerned to participate as appropriate in the special session;

3. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to submit the report of its special session to the Council by 1 November 1970 for consideration and transmission to the General Assembly for action at its twenty-fifth session.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1532(XLIX) of 24 July 1970 by which the Council convened a special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to consider short-term and long-term policy recommendations for integrated international action against drug abuse,

Having considered the report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on its second special session, and the resolution contained therein calling for (a) immediate action to expand the research and information facilities of United Nations drug-control bodies, to plan and implement programmes of technical assistance in the establishment and improvement of national drug-control administrations and enforcement machinery and the training of needed personnel, and to enlarge the capabilities and extend the operations of United Nations drug-control bodies and their secretariats; (b) the establishment of a United Nations fund for drug-abuse control; and (c) the elaboration by the Secretary-General of a plan for long-term action against drug abuse involving the entire United Nations system of organizations as appropriate,

1. Recognizes the need for immediate action on an urgent basis as well as for the establishment of a plan for concerted long-term action by the United Nations family of organizations to deal with the problem of the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances simultaneously at its three critical points: supply, demand and illicit traffic;

2. Endorses the resolution of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as a basis for achieving these ends;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in keeping with the recommendation of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to establish, as an initial measure and as a matter of urgency, a United Nations fund for drug-abuse control to be made up from voluntary contributions, such fund to be initially used for the purposes which were approved by the Commission and administered by the Secretary-General pending the development and consideration by the Council of the proposed long-term plan of action, including permanent arrangements for administration and financing;

4. Invites the appropriate United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other competent international organizations, with such assistance as may be appropriate from the United Nations fund for drug-abuse control, to co-operate fully in the planning and execution of short-term and long-term measures and programmes pertinent to the drug-abuse problem in all its aspects;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its fifty-second session through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs on the implementation of the present resolution;

The General Assembly,

Noting with grave concern the spread of drug abuse in many parts of the world and its disastrous impact on individuals and nations,

1. Strongly endorses the decisions taken by the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 1532 (XLIX) of 24 July 1970 and 1559 (XLIX) of 11 November 1970, which provide, inter alia, for the establishment of a programme of action aiming at the implementation of short-term and long-term policy recommendations to deal with drug abuse, as proposed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

2. Welcomes the establishment, as an initial measure and as a matter of urgency, of a United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, to be made up of voluntary contributions;

CHAPTER XIX

HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS

During 1970, United Nations bodies continued their efforts aimed at furthering the objectives—set forth in the United Nations Charter—of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. The General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its subsidiary bodies, as well as the Commission on the Status of Women, again dealt with questions relating to: the prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities; violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms; apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa; human rights in occupied territories; human rights in armed conflicts; the status of women; advisory services in human rights; and such other matters as the punishment of war criminals, trade union rights, education of youth in the respect for human rights, the creation of the post of High Commissioner for Human Rights, and slavery and the slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism.

Decisions on these matters taken by United Nations bodies during 1970 are described in the sections that follow.

In its Declaration on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations, adopted on 24 October 1970, the General Assembly, among other things, stated that the United Nations had endeavoured in its first 25 years to further the Charter objectives of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

The Assembly declared that the international conventions and declarations concluded under its auspices gave expression to the moral conscience of mankind and represented humanitarian standards for all members of the international community. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide constituted a landmark in international co-operation and in the recognition and protection of the rights of every individual without any distinction.

Although some progress had been achieved, the Declaration said, serious violations of human rights were still being committed against individuals and groups in several regions of the world.

In the Declaration, States Members of the United Nations pledged themselves to a continued and determined struggle against all violations of the rights and fundamental freedoms of human beings, by eliminating the basic causes of such violations, by promoting universal respect for the dignity of all people without regard to race, colour, sex, language or religion, and in particular through greater use of the facilities provided by the United Nations in accordance with the Charter. (See also pp. 116-17.)

PREVENTION OF DISCRIMINATION AND PROTECTION OF MINORITIES

In 1970, the question of the prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities was again considered in the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

During the year, preparations for the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination—to be observed in 1971—were discussed in the various United Nations organs concerned.

At the end of 1970, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination<sup>1</sup>—which had come into force early in 1969—had been ratified or acceded to by 46 States. The 18-member Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under the terms of the Convention, held its first and second sessions during the year.

The International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination was observed on 21 March 1970.

The General Assembly adopted two resolutions at its twenty-fifth session in 1970 on the question of the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination. The Commission on Human Rights and the Assembly also took decisions during the year on measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance.

Also in 1970, the Special Study on Racial Discrimination in the Political, Economic, Social and Cultural Spheres—the seventh of a series of studies undertaken by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities—was completed by the Special Rapporteur, Hernán Santa Cruz.

These and other matters connected with the prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities are discussed in further detail in the sections below.

International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

On 11 December 1969, the General Assembly designated the year 1971 as the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. It also approved a programme for the observance of the International Year prepared by the Secretary-General and called on all States to co-operate in its implementation. The Secretary-General was asked to report in

During 1970, preparations for the International Year and questions relating to its observance were discussed in the various United Nations organs concerned.

Thus, the Commission on Human Rights, at its session in February and March 1970, considered the part that it could play in the observance of the International Year, and on 26 February adopted a resolution concerning international action against racial discrimination.

Among other things, the Commission declared that the policy of apartheid was the most reprehensible manifestation of racial discrimination and urged all Governments, as part of their observance of the International Year in 1971, to proclaim and reaffirm their abhorrence and condemnation of apartheid and racial discrimination, in southern Africa in particular.

All Governments were urged by the Commission to intensify their efforts to establish concrete national programmes aimed at preventing and eliminating all forms of racial discrimination. They were also invited to establish programmes in their national educational systems tracing the history of the various forms of racial discrimination and the efforts made by the United Nations, and by peoples in opposition to racial discrimination, to promote the dignity and worth of the human person.

The Commission also asked States which had not yet done so to sign or ratify—if possible by 1971—international treaties or conventions aimed at the elimination of apartheid, nazism and colonialism. States were further asked to use all their resources to bring as much effective pressure as possible to bear, in accordance with the United Nations Charter, on those States which violated the relevant resolutions of the United Nations dealing with the elimination of racism in all its forms.

The specialized agencies concerned were invited to embark on a world-wide educational campaign against the evils of apartheid, colonialism and racial discrimination, especially in southern Africa. The Commission also recalled and renewed an earlier appeal made by the Economic and Social Council to universities, scientific institutes and establishments to contribute as widely as possible in the fields of science and education to the cause of human rights and, in particular, to the fight against racial discrimination.

The Commission decided to undertake in 1971 a comprehensive review of measures and decisions taken to eliminate racial discrimination and determine the need for further measures to achieve rapid and total elimination of racial discrimination. It also decided to review further in 1971 the detailed programme of the International Year.

Later in 1970, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly adopted various resolutions relating to the question of racial discrimination. In one of these, among other things it welcomed the observance of 1971 as the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and urged all Governments, specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to take effective and practical measures in connexion with it.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to print and disseminate widely during the International Year the Special Study on Racial Discrimination in the Political, Economic, Social and Cultural Spheres prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. It also urged the mass media of information, particularly during the International Year, to publicize the evils of apartheid and of all other forms of discrimination.

The Secretary-General was invited by the Assembly to submit a further progress report in 1971, based on information received from Governments, the specialized agencies and other international organizations, on the observance of the International Year.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 2646(XXV) on 30 November. (See also pp. 506-7.)

In another resolution on the elimination of racial discrimination, the Assembly among other things expressed its conviction that the International Year would not achieve its objective unless effective measures were taken in all fields to combat attitudes and laws contrary to the principles of the United Nations Charter and the norms of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It invited countries not yet parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to ratify or accede to it if possible in 1971, on the occasion of the International Year.

The Assembly also reaffirmed its intention to take the opportunity of the International Year to promote, throughout the world, social justice based on absolute respect for the dignity of the individual.

These decisions were among others taken by the Assembly when it adopted resolution 2647 (XXV) on 30 November. (See also pp. 507-8.)

In another resolution (2713 (XXV)), on measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance, the Assembly on 15 December called on States during 1971—the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination—to take all effective measures to combat contemporary manifestations of nazism and other forms of racial intolerance. (See also pp. 510-11.)

Among the resolutions adopted by the Assembly at its 1970 session on the apartheid policies of the South African Government was one (2671D (XXV)) in which, among other things, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps—in consultation with the Special Committee on Apartheid—to promote the widest possible campaign against apartheid during the International Year. It also authorized the Special Committee among other things to send representatives to a seminar and conferences on apartheid during the International Year and urged all States and organizations to observe the International Year in solidarity with the legitimate struggle of the oppressed people of South Africa. ### Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

At the end of 1970, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, which had come into force early in 1969, had been ratified or acceded to by 46 States.

The 18-member Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under the terms of the Convention, held its first and second sessions during the year.

Also in 1970, the question of elimination of all forms of racial discrimination was the subject of decisions taken by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session.

The International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination was observed on 21 March 1970.

Details of these developments are given in the following pages.

STATUS OF INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION ON ELIMINATION OF ALL FORMS OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination entered into force on 4 January 1969, on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the twenty-seventh instrument of ratification or accession, as provided for in the Convention.

By the terms of the Convention, States parties, among other things, condemn "racial discrimination and undertake to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating racial discrimination in all its forms and promoting understanding among all races."

As at 31 December 1970, the following 46 States had expressed their intention to be bound by the Convention:

Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, the Federal Republic of Germany, Finland, Ghana, Greece, the Holy See, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Madagascar, Mongolia, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Spain, Swaziland, Syria, Tunisia, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Measures of implementation contained in the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination provided for the establishment of a Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. During meetings held in 1969, the States parties to the Convention elected the 18 members of the Committee in accordance with the procedure laid down in article 8 of the Convention.<sup>3</sup>

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination held its first session at United Nations Headquarters from 19 to 30 January 1970, at which it elected its officers and considered organizational and procedural aspects of its work.

It adopted a communication addressed to States parties to the Convention providing guidelines for the preparation of reports by the States parties on the legislative, judicial, administrative or other measures which they have adopted and which give effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also adopted a statement of its responsibilities under article 15 of the Convention, by which the Committee was to receive copies of petitions and reports from United Nations bodies dealing with matters relating to the inhabitants of Trust, Non-Self-Governing and other Territories.

The Committee was also to submit to those bodies expressions of opinion and recommendations on matters relating to the principles and objectives of the Convention.

At its second session, held from 31 August to 18 September, the Committee held a preliminary examination of the reports received, and approved its report to the General Assembly. The preliminary examination revealed that few, if any, of the reports provided all the information which the States parties had undertaken to furnish, and that not all the reports had been prepared along the lines suggested by the Committee at its first session.

On 30 November, the General Assembly took note with appreciation of the Committee's report and stressed the significance—for the fulfilment of the objectives of the United Nations in the human rights field—of the coming into force of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the creation of the Committee which was brought into being by that Convention and which should play an effective role in the achievement of its purposes. The Assembly requested all States parties to co-operate fully with the Committee so that it might fulfil its mandate.

The Assembly took these decisions in unanimously adopting resolution 2648 (XXV) on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, where it was approved unanimously on 4 November on a proposal by Finland.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY DECISIONS ON ELIMINATING ALL FORMS OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

On 30 November 1970, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions having to do with the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination.

By the first of these, the Assembly said it was convinced as ever before that apartheid constituted a crime against humanity and expressed its awareness that racism and apartheid continued to be instruments of colonialism, imperialism and economic exploitation and a total negation of the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter.

The Assembly expressed its concern that numerous resolutions had been adopted with but little or no effect on the evils of racism and all other forms of racial discrimination. It was alarmed that South Africa blatantly continued to pursue its policy of racial discrimination and apartheid in flagrant violation of the Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and relevant United Nations resolutions, and considered that the extensive arms build-up of the military forces in southern Africa posed a real threat to the security and sovereignty of independent African States opposed to racial discrimination and to the maintenance of international peace and security.

Also by this text, the Assembly noted with grave concern that the white racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia continued to operate illegally and that the measures so far taken by the United Kingdom—the administering power—to bring down the rebellion had proved insufficient and ineffective. It was convinced that the Security Council's sanctions against the illegal minority regime of Southern Rhodesia had failed owing mainly to the obstinate non-compliance of South Africa, Portugal and other States, contrary to their Charter obligations.

The Assembly went on to state its awareness that many States, in flagrant disregard of previous Assembly and Security Council resolutions, continued to maintain political, commercial, military, economic, social and other relations with South Africa and the illegal white racist minority regimes in southern Africa.

It welcomed the entry into force of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and reiterated its firm determination to bring about the complete elimination of racial discrimination and racism, abhorrent to the conscience and sense of justice of mankind.

By the operative parts of the text, the Assembly:

(1) reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of all oppressed peoples everywhere, and in particular those of South Africa, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and territories under Portuguese colonial domination, to obtain racial equality by all possible means;

(2) called for increased and continued moral, and in particular material, support to all peoples under colonial and alien domination struggling for the realization of their right to self-determination and for the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination;

(3) condemned the unholy alliance between South Africa, Portugal and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, designed to suppress the struggle of the peoples of southern Africa against racism, apartheid, economic exploitation and colonial domination;

(4) declared that any State whose official policy or practice was based on racial discrimination, such as apartheid, contravened the purposes and principles of the Charter and should therefore have no place in the United Nations;

(5) condemned the activities of those States which, by political, economic and military collaboration with the racist regimes of southern Africa, enabled and encouraged those regimes in the enforcement and perpetuation of their policy of apartheid and other forms of racial discrimination;

(6) called upon all those Governments which still maintained diplomatic, consular, commercial, military, social and other relations with South Africa and other racist regimes in southern Africa to terminate such relations immediately in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the Assembly and the Security Council;

(7) condemned the United Kingdom for its reluctance to bring down the illegal white minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, and called upon that Government to take all the necessary steps to bring to an end the usurpation of the lawful rights of the people of Southern Rhodesia by the illegal regime currently in Salisbury and to restore to them their political, social and economic rights in accordance with the fundamental principles of international law and of the Charter;

(8) welcomed the observance of 1971 as the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and urged all Governments, the specialized agencies and all other organizations concerned to make renewed efforts to take effective and practical measures to this end;

(9) asked the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to continue to undertake programmes and projects designed to combat apartheid and all forms of racial discrimination and to publicize the evils of those policies;

(10) asked the Secretary-General to print and disseminate as widely as possible, for use during the International Year, the Special Study on Racial Discrimination in the Political, Economic, Social and Cultural Spheres prepared by the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities;

(11) urged States not yet parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to take steps to accede to or ratify it;

(12) urged all progressive forces within southern Africa, especially the youth, to intensify their struggle against the policy of apartheid and all other forms of racial discrimination;

(13) urged the mass media of information, particularly during the International Year, to publicize, independently and in co-operation with the Secretary-General, the evils of apartheid and all other forms of racial discrimination,, thus contributing to the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms; and

(14) decided to consider the item at its 1971 session and asked the Secretary-General to report on the observance of the International Year and on the activities of United Nations organs to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination.

The General Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 2646(XXV) on 30 November by 71 votes to 10, with 11 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

The Third Committee approved it on 4 November by a roll-call vote of 75 to 12, with 22 abstentions, on a proposal sponsored eventually by Afghanistan, Algeria, Burundi, Cameroon, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, India, Kenya, Libya, Mali, Mauritania, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia, and revised during the debate.

There were ten separate votes taken in the Third Committee on various paragraphs of the text, of which two were by roll call. Thus, the sixth operative paragraph (by which the Assembly would call upon those Governments still maintaining diplomatic and other relations with South Africa and other racist regimes in southern Africa to terminate such relations immediately in accordance with relevant Assembly and Security Council resolutions) was adopted by a roll-call vote of 65 to 22, with 20 abstentions.

The seventh operative paragraph was adopted by a roll-call vote of 62 to 27, with 17 abstentions. By this paragraph the Assembly would condemn the United Kingdom for its reluctance to bring down the illegal white minority regime in Southern Rhodesia and call upon that Government to take all necessary steps to bring to an end the usurpation of the lawful rights of the people of Southern Rhodesia by the illegal regime in Salisbury and to restore to them their political, social and economic rights in accordance with the fundamental principles of international law and the Charter.

Also on 30 November 1970, the General Assembly adopted another resolution on the question of the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination.

By this text, the Assembly among other things recalled that Member States pledged themselves solemnly under Article 1 of the United Nations Charter to promote and encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.<sup>4</sup> It expressed its grave concern at the persistence of apartheid and other forms of racial discrimination, which were an intolerable affront to the dignity of the individual.

The Assembly also noted that disregard for fundamental human rights and manifestations of hostility or intolerance towards any race or distinct group of persons might create lasting antagonisms and deep unrest in society, aggravated by the existence of economic and social inequality; it expressed its awareness that discriminatory prejudices must be combated and eliminated by means of education and information, as well as by the adoption of positive legislation or other measures designed to bring about a climate of understanding and co-operation among the various ethnic and cultural groups of society.

The Assembly expressed its conviction that the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination—proclaimed for the year 1971—would not achieve its objective unless effective measures were taken in all fields to combat attitudes and laws contrary to the principles of the Charter and the norms of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. It welcomed the entry into force of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and noted with satisfaction the first report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

By the operative parts of the text, the Assembly:

(1) solemnly reiterated its condemnation of all forms of racial discrimination wherever they might occur, and particularly of apartheid, as a flagrant contradiction of the spirit and letter of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and deplored the persistence of such practices;

(2) appealed to the Governments of countries where forms of racial discrimination still persisted and to the Governments which officially applied such policies as apartheid to take without delay all the legislative, educational and social measures necessary to end them and to ensure respect for human rights in accordance with the Charter;

(3) vehemently affirmed the need for all men to be given an equal chance and to be enabled to live and work together in an atmosphere of mutual trust and tolerance, without discrimination and with full respect for the national and cultural identity of peoples or distinct ethnic groups;

(4) urged Member States to do their utmost to eliminate all racial discrimination in education, employment, housing and other fields of community life, and to encourage the development of multiracial activities with a view to removing obstacles to understanding among the various racial groups;

(5) invited all peoples of the world and all men of goodwill to condemn unrelentingly the evils of racial policies and to disseminate all information calculated to combat such policies;

(6) invited countries not yet parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to take steps to ratify or accede to it if possible in 1971, on the occasion of the International Year for Action to Combat Racial Discrimination;

(7) emphasized the importance of the work being done by the United Nations, in particular the Human Rights Commission and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and by the specialized agencies, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation, and the non-governmental organizations associated with their efforts, towards the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination; and, also,

(8) reaffirmed its intention to take the opportunity of the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to promote, throughout the world, social justice based on absolute respect for the dignity of the individual.

The General Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 2647 (XXV) on 30 November by a recorded vote of 49 to 33, with 10 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, where it was approved on 4 November by a roll-call vote of 49 to 47, with 16 abstentions, on a proposal by Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Costa Rica, France, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, the United Kingdom and Uruguay, as revised and amended by the sponsors.

INTERNATIONAL DAY FOR THE ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

On 21 March 1970, the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination—proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1966—was commemorated for the fourth time. The Assembly in 1969<sup>5</sup> had invited all States and organizations to observe the International Day with appropriate ceremonies on 21 March—the tenth anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre—in solidarity with the oppressed people of South Africa, and to make special contributions on that day in support of the struggle against apartheid.

A solemn meeting to commemorate the International Day was held by the Special Committee on Apartheid. Statements were made by the Secretary-General, the Chairman of the Special Committee on Apartheid, the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights and the Chairman of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa. A message by the President of the General Assembly was read. Messages marking the International Day were received from several Governments and specialized agencies. A register for contributions for the victims of apartheid was opened and contributions accepted for the

The General Assembly,

Recalling that Member States pledged themselves solemnly under Article 1 of the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Gravely concerned at the persistence of apartheid and other forms of racial discrimination, which are an intolerable affront to the dignity of the individual,

Noting that disregard for fundamental human rights and manifestations of hostility or intolerance towards any race or distinct group of persons may create lasting antagonisms and deep unrest in society, aggravated by the existence of conditions of economic and social inequality,

Aware that discriminatory prejudices must be combated and eliminated by means of education and information as well as by the adoption of positive legislative or other measures designed to bring about a climate of understanding and co-operation among the various ethnic and cultural groups of society,

Convinced that the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, which the General Assembly has proclaimed for the year 1971, will not achieve its objective unless effective measures are taken in all fields to combat attitudes and laws contrary to the principles of the Charter and the norms of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Welcoming the entry into force of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and noting with satisfaction the first report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination,

1. Solemnly reiterates its condemnation of all forms of racial discrimination wherever they may occur, and particularly of apartheid, as a flagrant contradiction of the spirit and the letter of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and deplors the persistence of such practices;

2. Appeals to the Governments of countries where forms of racial discrimination still persist and to the Governments which officially apply such policies as apartheid to take without delay all the legislative, educational and social measures necessary to end them and to ensure respect for human rights in accordance with the Charter;

3. Vehemently affirms the need for all men to be given an equal chance and to be enabled to live and work together in an atmosphere of mutual trust and tolerance, without discrimination and with full respect for the national and cultural identity of peoples or distinct ethnic groups;

4. Urges Member States to do their utmost to eliminate all racial discrimination in education, employment, housing and other fields of community life, and to encourage the development of multiracial activities with a view to removing obstacles to understanding among the various racial groups;

5. Invites all peoples of the world and all men of goodwill to condemn unrelentingly the evils of racial policies and to disseminate all information calculated to combat such policies;

6. Invites countries which are not yet parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination to take any steps necessary to ratify it or accede to it if possible in 1971, on the occasion of the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

7. Emphasizes the importance of the work being done by the United Nations, in particular the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, and by the specialized agencies, including the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation, and the non-governmental organizations associated with their efforts towards the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination;

8. Reaffirms its intention to take the opportunity of the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination to promote throughout the world social justice based on absolute respect for the dignity of the individual.

Measures Against Nazism and Racial Intolerance

The question of measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance was again considered in 1970, by the Commission on Human Rights at its session in February-March and later in the year by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session. The decisions taken by these bodies are described below.

ACTION BY HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

On 4 March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights adopted a resolution in which it noted among other things that the General Assembly, at its three preceding sessions, had condemned nazism, racism, apartheid and similar totalitarian ideologies and practices based on incitement to hatred and racial intolerance or any other form of group hatred as a gross violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It also noted that not all States concerned had taken the measures indicated by the General Assembly for the purpose of the speedy and final eradication of such ideologies and practices, and noted that the Assembly was to consider later in the year the question of measures against nazism and racial intolerance.

The Commission welcomed any contribution which the relevant competent specialized agencies might take—and the measures already undertaken by many of them—to prevent nazism, activities of a nazi character and racial discrimination.

The Commission also noted that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in connexion with its special study on racial discrimination in the political, economic, social and cultural spheres, was to consider the question of the danger of the revival of nazism in present-day conditions.

The Commission then noted the tentative nature of the Sub-Commission's findings on this subject and asked it to continue its study, placing special emphasis on measures to be taken to detect and effectively to prevent contemporary activities that might be inspired by nazism or any other totalitarian ideology based on incitement to hatred and racial intolerance, and to submit its recommendations to the Commission on Human Rights at its session to be held in 1971.

The States concerned were urgently called upon by the Commission to implement the General Assembly's decisions without delay and in particular to take legislative and other effective measures for the speedy and final eradication of nazism, including its present-day manifestations, racism and similar ideologies and practices.

The Commission asked the specialized agencies concerned to consider within their terms of reference the question of measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance and to inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the decisions and practical action taken by them. The Commission decided to retain the item on its agenda.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly took up the question of measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance at its twenty-fifth session later in 1970 and had before it a report by the Secretary-General containing information received from Governments on measures they had adopted or were adopting in implementation of an Assembly resolution of 11 December 1969.<sup>6</sup>

On 15 December 1970, the Assembly adopted a resolution by the preambular part of which, among other things, it expressed its concern that, 25 years after the founding of the United Nations, the activities of groups and organizations which were proponents of the ideologies of nazism, racism and apartheid were still continuing, and that not all the States concerned had taken the measures specified by the Assembly for the complete prohibition of nazi and racist organizations and groups and for their prosecution in the courts.

By the operative parts of the text, the Assembly:

(1) again resolutely condemned nazism, racism, apartheid and other totalitarian and colonial ideologies and practices based on terror and racial intolerance;

(2) urged the States concerned to implement without delay the Assembly's resolutions on the question and, in particular, to take legislative and other effective measures with a view to the speedy and final eradication of nazism, including its contemporary forms, of racism and of other similar ideologies and practices based on terror and racial intolerance;

(3) called on States during 1971—the International Year for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination—to take all effective measures to combat contemporary manifestations of nazism and other forms of racial intolerance; and

(4) decided to retain on its agenda the item concerning measures to be taken against nazism and other totalitarian ideologies and practices based on incitement to hatred and racial intolerance.

The Assembly took these decisions when it adopted resolution 2713 (XXV) by a vote of 108 to 0, with 6 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved it on 10 December by a vote of 76 to 0, with 17 abstentions. The proposal, which was sponsored in the Third Committee by Iraq, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, was amended during the discussion by France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, and orally amended by Bulgaria, by Gabon, by Dahomey and by the sponsors.

The draft resolution approved by the Third Committee contained paragraphs by which the Secretary-General would be requested: (a) to prepare and publish a brochure on the measures taken and envisaged for combating the resurgence of any forms of nazism and racial intolerance; and (b) to explore the possibility of holding in 1972 or 1973, as part of the United Nations programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, an international seminar on questions relating to the combating of nazism and racial intolerance. Proposed amendments by France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom to delete these two paragraphs were rejected in the Committee by votes of 40 against to 40 in favour, with 14 abstentions, and by 42 against to 36 in favour, with 18 abstentions, respectively.

The amendments seeking to delete the two paragraphs were re-introduced in a plenary meeting of the General Assembly and were approved, by recorded votes of 55 to 35, with 24 abstentions, and by 51 to 35, with 29 abstentions, respectively, and the paragraphs were thus deleted.

An objection was expressed in the Third Committee—and again in a plenary meeting of the Assembly—to the word "neo-nazi" which had originally appeared in the preambular paragraph by which the Assembly expressed concern that not all States concerned had taken the measures specified by the Assembly for the complete prohibition of "nazi, neo-nazi and racist organizations and groups and for their prosecution in the courts." In a separate vote on whether or not to retain the word "neo-nazi" in the paragraph, the Assembly decided—by a recorded vote of 47 against to 41 in favour, with 27 abstentions—to delete the word. Costa Rica explained that in its view the term "neo-nazi" did not correspond to any present-day ideology but only to a specific political situation and thus should not be included in the resolution.

(For text of resolution 2713 (XXV) as a whole, as amended, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the debate in the Third Committee, an exchange took place between the representatives of the United States and the USSR on the question of the treatment of Jews in the USSR.

A letter dated 25 November 1970 to the President of the General Assembly from the Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of Bulgaria contained a message from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the German Democratic Republic in connexion with the item on measures to be taken against nazism and racial intolerance.

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its faith in the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and abiding by them,

Recalling its resolutions 2331 (XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2438 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and 2545 (XXIV) of 11 December 1969,

Noting that nazism, racism, apartheid and other similar ideologies and practices have in the past repeatedly led to barbarous acts that trouble the conscience of mankind, and ultimately to war, and still have the power to threaten universal peace and the security of nations,

Deeply concerned by the fact that, twenty-five years after the foundation of the United Nations, the activities of groups and organizations which are proponents of the ideologies and practices of nazism, racism and apartheid are still continuing,

Expressing its deep concern at the fact that not all the States concerned have taken the measures specified in the aforementioned resolutions for the complete prohibition of Nazi and racist organizations and groups and for their prosecution in the courts, special emphasis on measures to be taken to detect and effectively to prevent contemporary activities that might be inspired by nazism or any other totalitarian ideology based on incitement to hatred and racial intolerance,

4. Decides to retain on its agenda the item concerning measures to be taken against nazism and other totalitarian ideologies and practices based on incitement to hatred and racial intolerance.

Other Matters Concerning Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

ELIMINATION OF ALL FORMS OF RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly decided without objection to defer consideration—owing to lack of time—of the question of the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance to its twenty-sixth (1971) session. It took this decision on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

STUDIES ON DISCRIMINATION

STUDY OF EQUALITY IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

In 1969, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities considered the final report on the study of equality in the administration of justice submitted by its Special Rapporteur, Mohammed Ahmed Abu Rannat, and decided to complete at its 1970 session its consideration of the draft principles contained in the study.

At its session in February-March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a resolution asking the Secretary-General to make arrangements for the Special Rapporteur, Mr. Abu Rannat, to attend the meetings of the Commission when it considered his report.

On 27 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, endorsed the Commission's request when it unanimously adopted resolution 1499 (XLVIII). (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At its 1970 session, held from 10 to 28 August, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities completed its consideration of the draft principles on equality in the administration of justice submitted by the Special Rapporteur and decided to adopt them, as revised, and to transmit them to the Human Rights Commission for examination with regard to the advisability of preparing a convention or a declaration, or both, on equality in the administration of justice, or of preparing several instruments dealing with various aspects of the problem.

The Sub-Commission also requested the Human Rights Commission to recommend that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretary-General to print the Special Rapporteur's study, together with the general principles adopted by the Sub-Commission, and to circulate them as widely as possible.

SPECIAL STUDY ON RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE POLITICAL, ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND CULTURAL SPHERES

At its 1970 session, held from 10 to 28 August, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities examined the final report on the special study on racial discrimination in the political, economic, social and cultural spheres prepared by its Special Rapporteur, Hernán Santa Cruz. It congratulated him on his final report and expressed appreciation to all those who had collaborated with him in its preparation.

The Special Study on Racial Discrimination in the Political, Economic, Social and Cultural Spheres—the seventh of a series of studies undertaken by the Sub-Commission—contained chapters on: the historical background; meaning and causes of racial discrimination; international and national action to eliminate racial discrimination; racial discrimination in the political, economic, social and cultural spheres; measures taken in connexion with the protection of indigenous peoples; the racial policy of the Republic of South Africa; characteristics and manifestations of the policy of segregation elsewhere in southern Africa; the danger of the revival of nazism and racial intolerance; and conclusions and proposals.

The Sub-Commission transmitted the report to the Commission on Human Rights for its earliest consideration and adopted proposals for action in 1971 by the Commission and the Economic and Social Council on: racial discrimination in the political, economic, social and cultural spheres; the problems of indigenous populations; policies of apartheid and racial discrimination; and the danger of a revival of nazism and racial intolerance.

The Sub-Commission further requested the Human Rights Commission to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that arrangements be made for Mr. Santa Cruz to attend the meetings of the Human Rights Commission when it considered his report.

STUDY OF DISCRIMINATION IN MATTER OF POLITICAL RIGHTS

The Commission on Human Rights at its 1970 session was unable to consider the study of discrimination in the matter of political rights and the draft principles on freedom and non-discrimination in the matter of political rights, and decided to postpone consideration of the item until its session in 1971.

VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

During 1970, various questions concerning violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms were again considered by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, the Commission on Human Rights and certain of its subsidiary bodies. Among the questions they considered were: apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa; the question of human rights in occupied territories; procedures for dealing with communications relating to human rights; and a preliminary draft of model rules of procedure for United Nations bodies dealing with human rights violations. Decisions taken on these and related matters by the various bodies concerned are described in the sections that follow.

Apartheid and Racial Discrimination in Southern Africa

DECISIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

At its session held from 24 February to 24 March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights considered the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts which, in 1969, had conducted an investigation of the following matters, among others: the question of capital punishment in southern Africa; the treatment of political prisoners and captured freedom fighters in southern Africa; the condition of Africans in the so-called native reserves and transit camps in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia; grave manifestations of apartheid in the Republic of South Africa; and grave manifestations of colonialism and racial discrimination in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese administration.

In a resolution adopted on 18 March, the Human Rights Commission among other things recognized the contribution made by the Working Group's report to the continuing efforts of the United Nations to investigate and thus expose the gross and flagrant violation of human rights in southern Africa, and endorsed the Group's observations, conclusions and recommendations.

The Commission asked the Group to study, from the point of view of international penal law, the question of apartheid, which had been declared a crime against humanity. It also asked the Economic and Social Council to recommend to the General Assembly for adoption a draft resolution containing detailed recommendations based on the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts (see below).

In a letter dated 19 March to the Chairman of the Human Rights Commission, Portugal said, among other things, that the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts prejudged the situation in the Portuguese Provinces in Africa and that its report was based on extravagant allegations regarding conditions said to be prevailing there. Portugal deplored the fact that the question of human rights had been debased to the level of opportunistic political propaganda in a report which should have been impartial and objective.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

By a vote of 17 to 0, with 10 abstentions, the Economic and Social Council, on 27 May 1970, adopted a resolution (1501 (XLVIII)) by which it recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of the draft text proposed by the Human Rights Commission. (For text as adopted by the General Assembly, see below.)

The resolution was adopted on the recommendation of the Council's Social Committee, which approved it on 20 May by 16 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions.

Also on 27 May, by 12 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (1505 (XLVIII)) on the financial implications of resolutions adopted by the Human Rights Commission at its 1970 session, by which, among other things, it: (1) decided that the activities arising out of the decisions taken by the Human Rights Commission at its twenty-sixth (1970) session should be undertaken in 1970, bearing in mind the necessity to effect the maximum savings when allocating funds; and (2) authorized the Secretary-General to inform the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the Council considered the relevant programmes and expenditures to be of an urgent nature.

On the same date, the Council took note of a report by the Secretary-General—which the Council, on 6 June 1969,<sup>7</sup> had asked him to prepare—on co-ordination activities with regard to policies of apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa.

DECISIONS BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Later in 1970, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly adopted the text recommended by the Human Rights Commission, and by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1501 (XLVIII), based on the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts. It did so on 15 December 1970 in adopting resolution 2714 (XXV) by a roll-call vote of 79 to 1, with 34 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved it on 11 December by 66 votes to 1, with 29 abstentions, as amended by Saudi Arabia.

By the preambular parts of this text, the General Assembly among other things recalled its resolution of 19 December 1968<sup>8</sup> in which it condemned any and every practice of torture, inhuman and degrading treatment of detainees and prisoners in South African prisons and in South African police custody during interrogation and detention. It also recalled its resolution of 20 November 1969<sup>9</sup> in which it expressed the firm intention of the United Nations, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to intensify its efforts to find a solution to the grave situation in southern Africa.

The Assembly also recalled resolutions of the Security Council relating to Namibia, and its own resolution of 11 December 1969<sup>10</sup> relating to the inhuman and degrading treatment and torture of political prisoners, detainees and captured freedom fighters in the territories ruled by Governments and regimes wedded to the policies of apartheid, racial discrimination and colonialism in southern Africa.

The Assembly then declared itself determined to promote immediate and urgent action to restore the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the oppressed peoples of southern Africa.

By the operative parts of the text, the Assembly commended the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts for its valuable report. After reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggles of the peoples of southern Africa to oppose the policies of apartheid, racial discrimination and colonialism and to assert their right to self-determination, it condemned any and every practice of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners, detainees and captured freedom fighters in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination, as well as of persons in police custody in those territories.

Any and every practice of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners and detainees in prisons and in police custody in South Africa was again condemned by the Assembly, which reaffirmed that the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners—of 30 August 1955—applied to all political prisoners or detainees, in prison or police custody throughout South Africa, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination. The Assembly condemned the trial in South Africa of the 22 Africans held under the Suppression of Communism Act, and further condemned their subsequent re-arrest under the notorious Terrorism Act of 1967.

The Assembly then reaffirmed that:

(a) the condition of political prisoners in South Africa continued to cause alarm;

(b) the increasing co-operation between South Africa and the illegal racist regime in Southern Rhodesia posed a further and continuing threat to the opponents of the two regimes and to captured freedom fighters;

(c) Sections 10 and 29 of the General Law Amendment Act, 1969—concerning the Bureau of State Security—not only constituted one of the most sinister pieces of legislation in recent years, but also contributed decisively towards making South Africa a complete police State, and the working of that law was also contrary to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in that it prevented the accused from proving his innocence;

(d) many political prisoners and detainees had died in South African prisons during 1969, in conditions which warranted a full inquiry;

(e) James Lenkoe, a political prisoner in South Africa, did not commit suicide as reported, but died as a result of electric shocks which were administered to various parts of his body;

(f) the practice of compelling prisoners to testify against their erstwhile comrades was reprehensible;

(g) in the Caprivi Strip, Namibian villages had been shelled by the occupying South African security forces and indiscriminate firing had been resorted to in villages suspected of harbouring freedom fighters;

(h) the system of "Bantustans" established in South Africa was being gradually extended to the occupied territory of Namibia;

(i) in the absence of intervention by the United Nations, the occupation of Namibia by South Africa was resulting in ever increasing hardship to the non-white population, as well as a total suppression of human rights there;

(j) the so-called Constitution of Rhodesia of 1969 was an illegal as well as a pernicious document and the "Declaration of Rights" contained in it conferred few, if any, rights on non-whites;

(k) section 84 of the 1969 "Constitution of Rhodesia"—providing that no court could inquire into or pronounce upon the validity of any law on the ground that it was inconsistent with the "Declaration of Rights"—established a clear inconsistency in the illegal "legislation" itself and, further, brought out the authoritarian and racist character of the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia;

(m) the condition of Africans in the reserves was appalling and nothing was being done to improve their conditions of hygiene, diet, nutrition, sanitation, health and their educational standards;

(n) in the Portuguese territories, the mass killing of suspected opponents of the regime continued unabated; and

(o) the most inhuman form of forced labour prevailed in the African territories under Portuguese domination.

The General Assembly then called upon the South African Government to implement the recommendations contained in earlier reports of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts and to take the following measures: disband immediately the Bureau of State Security; discontinue the practice by which political detainees were compelled to testify against their former colleagues; release immediately and unconditionally the 22 Africans re-arrested on 16 February 1970 under the Terrorism Act; grant full access at all trials of political opponents of the regime to independent outside observers; and permit a full and impartial investigation into the deaths of political prisoners and detainees in its gaols, as well as indemnify fully the families of the deceased.

With regard to Namibia, the Assembly condemned the trial of the eight Namibians under the Terrorism Act, which took place at Windhoek between July and November 1969, and further called upon South Africa to release immediately and unconditionally those tried under that Act and to desist forthwith from the extension of the "Bantustans" system into Namibia. South Africa was called upon once again to terminate its illegal occupation of the territory of Namibia in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions.

The Assembly then called upon the United Kingdom to intervene more effectively than theretofore in its rebellious colony of Southern Rhodesia, with a view to: implementing the action proposed by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts in its report; liberating the Africans from the reserves in which they were concentrated in conditions of near captivity and bondage; and repealing the entire so-called Constitution of Rhodesia of 1969.

The United Kingdom was asked by the Assembly to report to the Assembly's twenty-sixth session in 1971 the results of the effective measures it was called upon to take.

With regard to the African territories administered by Portugal, the General Assembly called on Portugal: to observe immediately the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949; to eradicate the practice of xibalo, or forced labour, in its African colonies; and to introduce a system in which the products of the African farmers could be freely bought and sold in normal market conditions.

Next, the General Assembly condemned once again the actions of those Governments continuing to maintain diplomatic, economic, cultural and other relations with South Africa and with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in violation of United Nations resolutions. Those Governments were urgently called upon to consider breaking off such relations and, if they had not already done so, to report to the Assembly at its twenty-sixth (1971) session the reasons therefor.

Finally, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to report to it at its 1971 session on the implementation of the present resolution and also to report to the Human Rights Commission at its 1971 session on the measures taken to publicize the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts.

During the Third Committee's consideration of the text, several amendments put forward by Saudi Arabia were approved. One of these would have the General Assembly call upon the United Kingdom "to intervene more effectively than heretofore" in its rebellious colony of Southern Rhodesia, rather than simply "to intervene." Saudi Arabia said it was not advocating the use of force; in fact, any United Kingdom Government which used force to bring down the Ian Smith regime would itself fall overnight. Nevertheless, Saudi Arabia was confident that, since United Kingdom interests were threatened by the continued existence of that regime, the United Kingdom would find other ways of intervening more effectively.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Third Committee, Australia said it could not support the resolution because it considered much of the subject-matter to be outside the Committee's competence.

Argentina could not support the text because it felt that the rupture of diplomatic relations would not be conducive to the success of the common cause, and that failure to recognize the importance of political dialogue could do grave harm to that cause.

Portugal said it had voted against the resolution because of the grave, unfounded charges it contained, including charges of mass killing and the practice of forced labour. Portugal categorically rejected such allegations. With regard to the sale of agricultural products of African farmers, Portuguese African farmers already benefited from the free-market system, as did those in metropolitan Portugal; all Portuguese citizens, irrespective of race or colour, were equal before the law.

The representative of Swaziland said he had had to vote against the paragraphs condemning the actions of Governments which maintained diplomatic and other relations with South Africa and calling on them to consider breaking off such relations. Although Swaziland maintained no diplomatic relations with South Africa, its currency was based on that of South Africa and it shared a customs union with that country. The United Kingdom said it had voted against the same paragraphs because it was opposed to calling on Governments to break off relations with South Africa. The United Kingdom wished to make it clear, however, that the same objection did not apply in the case of relations with the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

Study of Violations

QUESTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN OCCUPIED TERRITORIES

During 1970, two United Nations bodies reported on aspects of the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East.

One of these was the Special Working Group of Experts established by the Commission on Human Rights in March 1969<sup>11</sup> to investigate allegations concerning Israel's violations of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (the fourth Geneva Convention) in territories militarily occupied by Israel.

The other was the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly on 19 December 1968.<sup>12</sup>

The reports of these groups were considered variously in 1970 by the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly (see below).

(Also during 1970, the Security Council received a number of communications from Arab countries concerning the treatment of civilian populations and prisoners of war in territories occupied by Israel, and Israel's replies to these. See pp. 244-46.)

REPORT OF SPECIAL WORKING GROUP

DECISIONS BY HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION AND BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its session in February-March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights considered the report of the Special Working Group of Experts which it had established in 1969 to investigate allegations concerning Israel's violations of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949 (the fourth Geneva Convention), in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the hostilities in the Middle East. It had also authorized the Special Working Group to receive communications and to hear witnesses, and to report, with its conclusions and recommendations, to the Commission in 1970.

At its meetings in July and August 1969, the Special Working Group—having met in New York, Geneva (Switzerland), Beirut (Lebanon), Damascus (Syria), Amman (Jordan) and Cairo (United Arab Republic)—heard a total of 103 witnesses. It reported that it was unable to conduct its investigation in the occupied territories because of the refusal of Israel to recognize it or to co-operate with it. It met in New York from 5 January to 11 February 1970 to consider and adopt its report to the Human Rights Commission.

On 23 March 1970, the Human Rights Commission adopted a resolution based on the recommendations and conclusions in the report.

Among other things, the Commission noted with dismay Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Special Working Group and endorsed the Group's conclusions concerning the applicability of the fourth Geneva Convention to all the occupied areas, including occupied Jerusalem, and the existence of violations of that Convention in the Israeli-occupied territories.

The Commission condemned Israel's refusal to apply the Convention and Israel's violations thereof, in particular: (a) the total or partial destruction of villages and cities in the occupied territories; (b) the establishment of Israeli settlements in the militarily occupied Arab territories; (c) the unlawful deportation and expulsion of civilian population; (d) the coercive acts to compel the civilian population under Israeli military occupation to collaborate with the occupying power against its will; (e) the abrogation of the national laws in the occupied territories contrary to the Convention and the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly; and (f) all policies and measures of collective punishment.

The Commission deplored all policies and actions aiming at the deportation of the Palestine refugees from the occupied Gaza Strip. It expressed grave concern over: the use of coercive means to extract information and confessions in violation of the relevant provisions of the Convention; the ill-treatment and killing of civilians without provocation; the detention of people by virtue of administrative orders for periods that were automatically renewed ad infinitum; the denial to such detainees of any guarantee concerning the length of detention or fair trial; the refusal to allow accused persons to have counsel of their choice and, in cases where a counsel was chosen, the prevention of such counsel from discharging his duties satisfactorily; and, finally, the destruction and usurpation of movable and immovable property.

Next, the Commission called upon Israel once more to observe strictly the fourth Geneva Convention in the occupied territories and called upon it immediately to: (a) rescind all measures and refrain from taking any action prejudicial to the national laws, systems and practices in the occupied territories; (b) refrain from establishing settlements in the occupied territories; (c) cease immediately from compelling the inhabitants of the occupied territories to collaborate with the Israeli occupying authorities; (d) ensure the immediate return of deported and transferred persons to their homes without any formalities which might render their return impossible; (e) refrain from demolishing houses in contravention of the Convention; and (f) to restore the property confiscated or otherwise taken from its owners, also in contravention of the Convention.

The Commission also called upon Israel to desist forthwith from deporting the Palestinian civilians from the Gaza Strip.

The Special Working Group was commended for its work and the Commission decided that it should continue to investigate and report on the Israeli violations of the Convention which occurred in the militarily occupied Arab territories since the outbreak of hostilities. It was to examine in particular: (a) the evidence concerning the cases of torture taking place against prisoners in Israeli prisons in the occupied territories; (b) other cases of violations of the Convention in the occupied territories which it had not yet investigated, including those that took place during the period investigated by the Special Working Group; and (c) the establishment of settlements in the occupied territories in contravention of the provisions of the Convention.

The Commission called upon Israel to receive the Special Working Group, to co-operate with it and to facilitate its task in carrying out its mandate.

The Commission further decided to continue to include the question of the violation of human rights in the territories occupied as a result of hostilities in the Middle East as a separate item of priority on the agenda of its 1971 session.

The Secretary-General was asked to give the widest publicity to the entire report of the Special Working Group and to report to the Commission in 1971 on that publicity. He was also asked to bring the report to the attention of the General Assembly, the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.

On 27 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council decided, among other things, that the investigation decided upon by the Human Rights Commission should be undertaken in 1970, bearing in mind the need to effect maximum savings when allocating funds. (See p. 577.)

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE ISRAELI PRACTICES IN OCCUPIED TERRITORIES

The Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories, established by the General Assembly in 1968<sup>13</sup> and guided further by the Assembly in its resolution of 11 December 1969,<sup>14</sup> carried out its investigations from 25 March to 15 June 1970. In accordance with its mandate, it heard witnesses and received written evidence. At meetings in Amman, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Geneva, London (United Kingdom) and New York, it heard a total of 146 persons.

In its report, dated 5 October 1970, the Special Committee concluded, among other things, that Israel was pursuing policies and practices in the occupied territories which were in violation of the human rights of the population of those territories, and that in this case the fundamental violation of human rights lay in the very fact of occupation. The Committee found it almost impossible to separate the specific policies and practices applied to individuals, groups or areas from the broad context of the occupation itself. While the occupation lasted, Israel, as the occupying power, had, in the Committee's view, both a legal and a moral obligation—an obligation which it had voluntarily assumed—to implement the third and fourth Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 (the third Convention having to do with the treatment of prisoners of war, the fourth Convention with the treatment of civilian persons in time of war).

Specifically, the Special Committee proposed that Israel be asked by the General Assembly:

(a) to permit, unconditionally, all persons who fled the occupied territories, or who were deported or expelled therefrom, to return to their homes;

(b) to cease immediately, and to prevent, all policies and practices of collective punishment, such as the destruction of property, imposition of excessively harsh curfews and mass arrests;

(c) to make full compensation for property destroyed, and to effect restitution of property confiscated in violation of the fourth Geneva Convention;

(d) to cease immediately and to prevent the torture and ill-treatment of prisoners of war and of persons imprisoned or detained under the laws and regulations relating to the occupation, and to apply to all such categories of persons the provisions of the third and fourth Geneva Conventions and of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners;

(e) to bring to an end the indefinite and prolonged detention without trial of all persons, including those detained under security regulations and those under administrative detention, by releasing them or affording them a fair trial in accordance with the provisions of the Geneva Conventions;

(f) to reform the procedures and conditions of administrative detention in conformity with those Conventions;

(g) to refrain from attempts at compelling the inhabitants of the occupied territories to collaborate with the occupation authorities;

(h) to discontinue the policy of establishing Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, and to withdraw all Israeli settlers from settlements already established;

(i) to eliminate, and refrain from the creation of, social and economic conditions resulting in the departure of the inhabitants of the occupied territories from their established homes and communities;

(j) to refrain from the harassment of leaders and intellectuals and their arbitrary deportation from among the inhabitants of the occupied territories;

(k) to rescind Israeli legislation in force in the occupied territories, which was repugnant to provisions of the third and fourth Geneva Conventions;

(l) to repeal all measures taken to alter the status of occupied Jerusalem and to restore it to the status subsisting before the outbreak of hostilities;

(m) to restore the judicial system in the occupied territories to the status it enjoyed before the occupation, and in particular to return the Court of Appeal of Jerusalem to its seat in Jerusalem; and

(n) to investigate all the allegations brought to the notice of the Special Committee concerning ill-treatment of civilians and detainees, particularly those persons detained under security regulations—access to whom was denied to officials of the International Red Cross—and those purportedly held under administrative detention, and to take appropriate remedial measures.

The Special Committee then proposed, as a temporary practical measure, that the General Assembly recommend to the States whose territory was occupied by Israel that they appoint immediately either a neutral State or States, or an international organization offering all guarantees of impartiality and effectiveness, to safeguard the human rights of the population of the occupied territories. In the special circumstances prevailing in the occupied territories, where there was a large population not yet given the opportunity of exercising its right of self-determination, it was necessary, in the Special Committee's view, to make suitable arrangements for the proper representation of their interests. The Special Committee proposed that a neutral State or organization, nominated by Israel, be associated in the arrangement, and that Israel be called upon to accept such an arrangement and to provide all the facilities necessary for its effective functioning consistent with the provisions of the third and fourth Geneva Conventions.

The Special Committee went on to suggest that the State (or States) or international organization duly nominated under the arrangement be authorized to undertake the following:

(a) to secure the scrupulous implementation of the provisions relating to human rights contained in the third and fourth Geneva Conventions, and in particular to investigate and determine the facts in the case of allegations of the violation of the human rights provisions of those Conventions or of other applicable international instruments;

(b) to ensure that the population of the occupied territories was treated in accordance with the applicable law; and

(c) to report on its work to the States concerned and to the General Assembly.

The Special Committee felt that until such an arrangement was made, it should continue its work.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Later in the year, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly on 15 December 1970 noted with regret that the provisions of relevant resolutions—among them the resolution of 23 March 1970 of the Human Rights Commission on the report of its Special Working Group of Experts (see above)—had not been implemented by the Israeli authorities, and it expressed grave concern for the safety, welfare and security of the inhabitants of the Arab territories under military occupation by Israel.

The Assembly expressed appreciation to the Special Committee and its members for their efforts in performing the task assigned to them and called upon Israel immediately to implement the Special Committee's recommendations and to comply with its obligations under the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the relevant resolutions adopted by the various international organizations.

The Assembly then asked the Special Committee, pending the early termination of the Israeli occupation of Arab territories, to continue its work and to consult, as appropriate, with the International Committee of the Red Cross in order to ensure the safeguarding of the human rights of the population of the occupied territories. Israel was urged to receive the Special Committee, to co-operate with it and to facilitate its work.

The Assembly asked the Special Committee to report to the Secretary-General as soon as possible and whenever the need arose thereafter and asked the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with all the necessary facilities for the continued performance of its tasks.

Finally, the Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its twenty-sixth (1971) session an item on the report (or reports) of the Special Committee.

The Assembly took these decisions in adopting resolution 2727(XXV)—by a roll-call vote of 52 to 20, with 43 abstentions—on the recommendation of its Special Political Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December by a roll-call vote of 49 to 14, with 37 abstentions.

During the debate in the Special Political Committee, a number of Members—including Algeria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, India, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Poland, Syria, Tunisia, the USSR, the United Arab Republic and Yemen—commended the Special Committee on the objectivity and impartiality with which it had carried out its task and criticized Israel for its refusal to co-operate with the Committee. Israel was condemned for the practices and policies carried out by it in violation of the human rights of the population of the occupied territories.

Many of these speakers held the view that the only solution to the problem was the withdrawal of Israel from the territories occupied by it; pending that withdrawal, the Special Committee should be authorized to pursue its investigation.

Lebanon, Libya, Senegal and Syria were among those noting that the Special Working Group of Experts established by the Commission on Human Rights had also been investigating allegations concerning Israel's violations of the fourth Geneva Convention and had heard much the same evidence as had the Special Committee. Senegal deplored Israel's refusal to give those United Nations bodies access to the occupied territories and could only presume that it had something to conceal. Syria observed that the United Nations had attempted to ensure the protection of the civilian population in the occupied territories and to enforce implementation of the Geneva Conventions through the use of such impartial fact-finding bodies. Israel, however, still refused to honour its commitments under the Conventions. The time had come, in Syria's view, for the international community to act by imposing sanctions against Israel as punishment for its continued defiance of world public opinion and its refusal to implement United Nations resolutions.

Israel's representative maintained that the composition of the Special Committee was biased and partial, that its procedure would be unacceptable in any court of law and that any resolution embodying its politically biased recommendations was unacceptable. The Special Committee's report was nothing but a vehicle of Arab propaganda, which ignored the real plight of Jews in certain Arab countries and which falsified and distorted the real situation in the areas under Israeli control. He outlined what he described as constructive developments in Israel's policy in the territories and said that these had taken place against a background of violent hostility from neighbouring countries, with the constant threat of terrorist activities in the territories and in Israel—activities whose aim was to prevent co-operation between Jew and Arab and to disrupt normal life.

The United States, explaining its negative vote on the resolution, said it considered that the text was unbalanced and would not achieve the purposes intended by its sponsors. The United States agreed with the Special Committee's recommendation that, as envisaged in the fourth Geneva Convention, a protecting power should be appointed to ensure respect for the provisions of the Convention relating to the civilian population.

Canada—which voted against the text—said it could take no position on the conditions prevailing in the territories occupied by Israel because the information available was neither reliable nor complete. It also considered that the circumstances surrounding the establishment of the Special Committee had been irregular and that the conditions limiting the scope of the Special Committee's inquiries had precluded the preparation of a report based on evidence. Moreover, the resolution contained no reference to the balance of obligations which both sides should fulfil if an equitable settlement was to be reached.

Chad said it had no intention of condemning any of the parties concerned, with which it maintained friendly relations. It considered that the resolution—which Chad supported—would not harm the countries concerned but might, on the contrary, promote a reconciliation between them.

Uruguay said it could not support the resolution because neither the manner in which the Special Committee had been established nor the procedure governing the investigation that Committee had undertaken offered sufficient guarantees of impartiality.

Explaining its abstention in the vote on the resolution, the United Kingdom said it considered that the General Assembly should not adopt measures based on circumstantial evidence. The United Kingdom had had doubts at the time of the Special Committee's establishment because its activities appeared to be prejudged by the terms of its mandate; those doubts had not been dispelled by a consideration of the Special Committee's report.

During the debate, the Special Political Committee, at the request of Afghanistan, Indonesia, Pakistan and Saudi Arabia, and in accordance with the practice established at previous sessions, heard a statement by a representative of the "Palestine Arab delegation."

Other Matters Relating to Violations of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms

QUESTIONS CONCERNING PROCEDURES

PROCEDURE FOR DEALING WITH COMMUNICATIONS RELATING TO VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

In 1969, the Commission on Human Rights recommended the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of a resolution on the establishment of a procedure for dealing with communications relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms. The draft had originally been prepared by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The Council decided to transmit the draft resolution and relevant documents to Member States of the United Nations for consideration and comment. It also invited the Human Rights Commission to consider the replies at its 1970 session and report to the Council.<sup>15</sup>

At its session in February-March 1970, the Human Rights Commission—having again considered the question in the light of its former discussions, of the debates in the Economic and Social Council and of the replies and observations of Member States—decided that no inquiries pursuant to the proposed new procedure might be undertaken until the remedies available at the national, regional and international levels had been exhausted, and that such inquiries must be carried out in co-operation with the Government concerned. The Commission also decided, without prejudice to the final decision of the Council, that the composition of any body responsible for making inquiries and the procedure for making inquiries must be such as to provide a reliable guarantee of competence and impartiality. The Commission also decided to resubmit to the Council the draft resolution it had recommended in 1969.

The Economic and Social Council, on 27 May 1970, endorsed, with some amendments, the text submitted by the Human Rights Commission.

By this text, the Council among other things: authorized the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to appoint a working group of not more than five of its members—with due regard to geographical distribution—to meet in private each year immediately before sessions of the Sub-Commission. The working group was to consider all communications, including the replies of Governments thereon, received by the Secretary-General under a 1959 Council resolution.<sup>16</sup> The group would bring to the Sub-Commission's attention those communications, together with replies of Governments, if any, which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms within the Sub-Commission's terms of reference.

The Council decided that the Sub-Commission should, as a first stage, devise appropriate procedures for dealing with the question of admissibility of communications, and asked the Secretary-General to prepare a document on the question for the Sub-Commission's consideration. It further asked him: (a) to furnish to the members of the Sub-Commission a monthly list of communications, together with a brief description of them and any replies received from Governments; (b) to make available to the members of the working group the originals of such communications as they might request, having due regard to the provisions of the 1959 Council resolution concerning the divulging of the identity of the authors of the communications; and (c) to circulate to the members of the Sub-Commission such originals as were referred to the Sub-Commission by the working group.

By the resolution, the Council then requested the Sub-Commission to consider in private meetings the communications brought before it in accordance with the decision of a majority of the members of the working group—and any replies of Governments—to determine whether to refer to the Human Rights Commission particular situations which appeared to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights requiring consideration by the Commission.

The Human Rights Commission was asked by the Council then to determine: (a) whether a situation referred to it by the Sub-Commission required a thorough study by the Commission and a report and recommendations to the Council; and (b) whether it might be the subject of an investigation by an ad hoc committee appointed by the Commission. The investigation would be undertaken only with the express consent of the State concerned and conducted in constant co-operation with that State and under conditions determined by agreement with it. In any event, the investigation might be undertaken only if all available means at the national level had been resorted to and exhausted, and only if the situation did not relate to a matter being dealt with under other procedures. The composition and organization of such an ad hoc committee were then set forth.

the resolution by the Sub-Commission or the Commission would remain confidential until such time as the Commission decided to make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council.

The Secretary-General was authorized by the Council to provide all necessary facilities for carrying out the resolution.

The Council, finally, decided that the procedure set out in the resolution for dealing with communications relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms should be reviewed if any new organ entitled to deal with such communications were to be established within the United Nations or by international agreement.

The Economic and Social Council took these decisions on 27 May 1970, when it adopted resolution 1503(XLVIII) by a vote of 14 to 7, with 6 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, which approved it on 21 May — as amended by France, by Italy, by the USSR and by Uruguay — by 14 votes to 7, with 5 abstentions. Prior to this vote, the Council rejected — by a vote of 14 to 10, with 3 abstentions — a Bulgarian motion to postpone consideration of the draft resolution to the Council's fiftieth session in 1971.

The Social Committee rejected, by a vote of 12 to 12, with 3 abstentions, a proposal by Bulgaria and Sudan by which the Council would have: recommended that the Human Rights Commission should work out criteria of admissibility of communications; requested the Secretary-General to ask Member States that had not yet sent comments on the proposed procedures to do so; and recommended that the Commission consider the matter again in 1971.

In accordance with the Council's resolution, the Secretary-General prepared a document on the question of admissibility of communications for consideration by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its session in August 1970. The Sub-Commission, in view of the impossibility of reaching a decision on the matter at that session, decided to transmit the relevant documentation to the Human Rights Commission for its consideration in 1971.

At the General Assembly's twenty-fifth session later in 1970, during consideration of the Economic and Social Council's report, the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee was not able, because of lack of time, to consider that part of the report relating to procedures for dealing with communications on human rights violations. A proposal by the USSR—by which the General Assembly would, among other things, request the Economic and Social Council and the Human Rights Commission to re-examine and reconsider the question—was not pressed to a vote.

RULES OF PROCEDURE FOR BODIES

DEALING WITH HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS

At its session in February-March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights examined a preliminary draft of model rules of procedure prepared by the Secretary-General for United Nations bodies dealing with violations of human rights. The Secretary-General pointed out that the draft, which had been requested by the Commission at its 1969 session,<sup>17</sup> took into account as appropriate the rules of procedure of United Nations organs and in particular those of ad hoc bodies which had conducted investigations in the past.

The Commission began discussion of the preliminary draft and, on 19 March, decided to resume consideration of the question at its 1971 session.

DECISION BY HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION ON SOUTHERN RHODESIA

On 3 March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights, on the proposal of the United Arab Republic, adopted a consensus condemning the illegal declaration of a "republic" in Southern Rhodesia. It emphasized the danger which that act posed for the human rights of the vast majority of the population in Southern Rhodesia, called upon the United Kingdom to intervene and restore constitutionality in Zimbabwe (Southern Rhodesia) and asked all States to refrain from extending recognition to the illegal regime or establishing any relations with it. The Economic and Social Council,

Noting resolutions 7(XXVI) and 17(XXV) of the Commission on Human Rights and resolution 2 (XXI) of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

1. Authorizes the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to appoint a working group consisting of not more than five of its members, with due regard to geographical distribution, to meet once a year in private meetings for a period not exceeding ten days immediately before the sessions of the Sub-Commission to consider all communications, including replies of Governments thereon, received by the Secretary-General under Council resolution 728F(XXVIII) of 30 July 1959 with a view to bringing to the attention of the Sub-Commission those communications, together with replies of Governments, if any, which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms within the terms of reference of the Sub-Commission;

2. Decides that the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities should, as the first stage in the implementation of the present resolution, devise at its twenty-third session appropriate procedures for dealing with the question of admissibility of communications received by the Secretary-General under Council resolution 728F(XXVIII) and in accordance with Council resolution 1235 (XLII) of 6 June 1967;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a document on the question of admissibility of communications for the Sub-Commission's consideration at its twenty-third session;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To furnish to the members of the Sub-Commission every month a list of communications prepared by him in accordance with Council resolution 728F(XXVIII) and a brief description of them, together with the text of any replies received from Governments;

(b) To make available to the members of the working group at their meetings the originals of such communications listed as they may request, having due regard to the provisions of paragraph 2 (b) of Council resolution 728F(XXVIII) concerning the divulging of the identity of the authors of communications;

(c) To circulate to the members of the Sub-Commission, in the working languages, the originals of such communications as are referred to the Sub-Commission by the working group;

5. Requests the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to consider in private meetings, in accordance with paragraph 1 above, the communications brought before it in accordance with the decision of a majority of the members of the working group and any replies of Governments relating thereto and other relevant information, with a view to determining whether to refer to the Commission on Human Rights particular situations which appear to reveal a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights requiring consideration by the Commission;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights after it has examined any situation referred to it by the Sub-Commission to determine:

(a) Whether it requires a thorough study by the Commission and a report and recommendations thereon to the Council in accordance with paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1235(XLII);

(b) Whether it may be a subject of an investigation by an ad hoc committee to be appointed by the Commission which shall be undertaken only with the express consent of the State concerned and shall be conducted in constant co-operation with that State and under conditions determined by agreement with it. In any event, the investigation may be undertaken only if:

- (i) All available means at the national level have been resorted to and exhausted;
- (ii) The situation does not relate to a matter which is being dealt with under other procedures prescribed in the constituent instruments of, or conventions adopted by, the United Nations and the specialized agencies, or in regional conventions, or which the State concerned wishes to submit to other procedures in accordance with general or special international agreements to which it is a party;

7. Decides that if the Commission on Human Rights appoints an ad hoc committee to carry on an investigation with the consent of the State concerned:

(a) The composition of the committee shall be determined by the Commission. The members of the committee shall be independent persons whose competence and impartiality is beyond question. Their appointment shall be subject to the consent of the Government concerned;

(b) The committee shall establish its own rules of procedure. It shall be subject to the quorum rule. It shall have authority to receive communications and hear witnesses, as necessary. The investigation shall be conducted in co-operation with the Government concerned;

(c) The committee's procedure shall be confidential, its proceedings shall be conducted in private meetings and its communications shall not be publicized in any way;

(d) The committee shall strive for friendly solutions before, during and even after the investigation;

(e) The committee shall report to the Commission on Human Rights with such observations and suggestions as it may deem appropriate;

8. Decides that all actions envisaged in the implementation of the present resolution by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities or the Commission on Human Rights shall remain confidential until such time as the Commission may decide to make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council;

9. Decides to authorize the Secretary-General to provide all facilities which may be required to carry out the present resolution, making use of the existing staff of the Division of Human Rights of the United Nations Secretariat;

10. Decides that the procedure set out in the present resolution for dealing with communications relating to violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms should be reviewed if any new organ entitled to deal with such communications should be established within the United Nations or by international agreement.

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON HUMAN RIGHTS

The International Conference on Human Rights, held at Teheran, Iran, in 1968, adopted resolutions on a wide range of human rights questions. One of these—resolution VIII—dealt with the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights.<sup>18</sup>

In 1969, the General Assembly reaffirmed the principles contained in that resolution and decided to review in 1970 the progress made in the implementation of that resolution and of the relevant Assembly resolutions on the subject.<sup>19</sup>

On 30 November 1970, the General Assembly expressed concern that many peoples were still denied the right to self-determination and were still subject to colonial and alien domination, and considered it necessary to continue to study ways and means of ensuring international respect for the right of peoples to self-determination. After recalling its resolution of 12 October 1970 (see pp. 706-8) on the programme of action for full implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,<sup>20</sup> the General Assembly:

(1) affirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination recognized as being entitled to the right to self-determination to restore to themselves that right by any means at their disposal;

(2) recognized the right of peoples under colonial and alien domination, in the legitimate exercise of their right to self-determination, to seek and receive all kinds of moral and material assistance, in accordance with United Nations resolutions and the spirit of the United Nations Charter;

(3) called upon all Governments that denied the right of peoples under colonial and alien domination to self-determination to recognize and observe that right in accordance with the relevant international instruments and the principles and spirit of the Charter;

(4) considered that the acquisition and retention of territory in contravention of the right of the people of that territory to self-determination was inadmissible and a gross violation of the Charter;

(5) condemned those Governments that denied the right to self-determination of peoples recognized as being entitled to it, especially the peoples of southern Africa and Palestine; and

(6) requested the Commission on Human Rights to study, at its 1971 session, the implementation of the United Nations resolutions relating to the right of peoples under colonial and alien domination to self-determination, and to submit its conclusions and recommendations to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, as soon as possible.

The Assembly took these decisions when it adopted resolution 2649 (XXV) on 30 November—by 71 votes to 12, with 28 abstentions—on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The text, which was revised and amended in the Committee, was eventually sponsored by Algeria, Ceylon, Guinea, Kuwait, Libya, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia and Syria—Bolivia and Peru having withdrawn as sponsors. It was approved by the Third Committee on 4 November by a roll-call vote of 67 to 12, with 28 abstentions, after a series of separate votes on individual paragraphs.

Among the amendments proposed in the Third Committee was one by Israel to delete the words "and Palestine" from the paragraph condemning those Governments which denied the right to self-determination of peoples recognized by international instruments as being entitled to it, especially of the peoples of southern Africa and Palestine. The Israeli amendment was withdrawn in consideration of a request by Costa Rica for a separate vote on the whole phrase "especially of the peoples of southern Africa and Palestine." The phrase was retained by a roll-call vote of 49 to 22, with 35 abstentions.

Concerned that many peoples are still denied the right to self-determination and are still subject to colonial and alien domination,

RESPECT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS IN ARMED CONFLICTS

In accordance with a request by the General Assembly, the Secretary-General in 1969 submitted an interim report on respect for human rights in armed conflicts. In this, among other things, he pointed out that the views which the General Assembly and Member States might express on the matters raised would assist him in the continuation of his study, which would be pursued in close co-operation with the International Committee of the Red Cross and other appropriate international organizations. The Assembly asked him to continue his study and to submit a further report to it at its session in 1970.<sup>21</sup>

DECISIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION AND ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

The Commission on Human Rights, at its session in February-March 1970, and the Economic and Social Council, at its session in May 1970, considered the interim report of the Secretary-General on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, and the Council requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly the observations of the Commission and of the Council's Social Committee on the report.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The second report of the Secretary-General on respect for human rights in armed conflicts was submitted on 18 September 1970 and considered by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session. On 9 December, the Assembly adopted five resolutions on the question. Three of these concerned general aspects of the question. The fourth was concerned with the protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions in areas of armed conflict. The fifth affirmed certain basic principles for the protection of civilian populations in armed conflicts. The Secretary-General's report and the five resolutions adopted are described below.

REPORT OF SECRETARY-GENERAL

The Secretary-General's 1970 report on respect for human rights in armed conflicts dealt with the following aspects of the question: (a) protection of human rights in armed conflicts derived from the general international instruments on human rights adopted under United Nations auspices; (b) protection of civilians; (c) protection of combatants in international armed conflicts; (d) protection of prisoners; (e) prohibition and limitation of certain methods and means of warfare; (f) internal armed conflicts; (g) guerrilla warfare; (h) protection of civilians and combatants in conflicts arising from the struggles of peoples under colonial and foreign rule for liberation and self-determination; (i) international assistance in, and supervision of, the application of humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts; (j) better application and reaffirmation of humanitarian international conventions and rules; and (k) concluding observations.

GENERAL ASPECTS

By one of the resolutions (2674(XXV)) adopted on 9 December 1970, the General Assembly expressed its deep concern over the fact that wars unleashed in violation of the United Nations Charter in several parts of the world led to incalculable disasters and suffering among civilians. Having considered with appreciation the Secretary-General's report on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the Assembly then:

(1) solemnly reaffirmed that, in order effectively to guarantee human rights, all States should devote their efforts to averting the unleashing of aggressive wars and armed conflicts that violated the Charter and the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations (see pp. 788-92);

(2) condemned the actions of countries which, in flagrant violation of the Charter, continued to conduct aggressive wars and defy accepted principles of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

(3) considered that the principles contained in those instruments should be strictly observed by all States and that States violating those instruments should be condemned and held responsible to the world community;

(4) affirmed that the participants in resistance movements and the freedom fighters in southern Africa and territories under colonial and alien domination and foreign occupation—struggling for their liberation and self-determination—should be treated, in case of their arrest, as prisoners of war in accordance with the Hague Convention of 1907 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

(5) considered that air bombardments of civilian populations and the use of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases and of all analogous liquids, materials and devices—as well as bac-

teriological (biological) weapons—constituted a flagrant violation of the Hague Convention of 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949; and

(6) recognized the necessity of developing additional international instruments providing for the protection of civilian populations and freedom fighters against colonial and foreign domination, as well as against racist regimes.

The Assembly adopted this text—by a recorded vote of 77 to 2, with 36 abstentions—on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, where it was approved on 1 December, on a proposal by Ceylon, India, Sudan and the USSR, as revised, and as amended by Pakistan. The vote, by roll call, was 68 to 1, with 42 abstentions.

(For text of resolution 2674(XXV), see

Another text adopted by the General Assembly on general aspects of the question of respect for human rights in armed conflicts was first approved in the Third Committee on 1 December by a roll-call vote of 60 to 16, with 34 abstentions, as sponsored eventually by Belgium, Dahomey, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Haiti, Italy, Madagascar, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand, Togo and the United States. The text was revised twice, amended by Hungary and sub-amended by the United Kingdom and the United States. The Assembly adopted it as resolution 2676(XXV) on 9 December by a recorded vote of 67 to 30, with 20 abstentions.

By the preambular parts of the text, the Assembly, among other things, noted resolution XI on the humane treatment of prisoners of war adopted by the twenty-first International Conference of the Red Cross held in 1969 in Istanbul, Turkey. It also took into consideration that the direct repatriation of seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war, and the repatriation or internment in a neutral country of prisoners of war who had undergone a long period of captivity, constituted important aspects of human rights as advanced and preserved under the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War (the third Geneva Convention, of 12 August 1949) and under the United Nations Charter.

By the operative parts of this text, the Assembly:

(1) called upon all parties to any armed conflict to comply with the provisions of the third 1949 Geneva Convention so as to ensure the humane treatment of all persons entitled to the protection of the Convention and, among other things, to permit regular inspection—in accordance with the Convention—of all places of detention of prisoners of war by a protecting power or humanitarian organization, such as the International Committee of the Red Cross;

(2) endorsed the continuing efforts of the International Committee to secure the effective application of the 1949 Geneva Convention;

(3) asked the Secretary-General to exert all efforts to obtain humane treatment for prisoners of war, especially for the victims of armed aggression and colonial suppression;

(4) urged compliance with article 109 of the third 1949 Geneva Convention, which required the repatriation of seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war and which provided for agreements with a view to the direct repatriation or internment in a neutral country of able-bodied prisoners of war who had undergone a long period of captivity;

(5) urged that combatants in all armed conflicts not covered by article 4 of the Geneva Convention be accorded the same humane treatment defined by the principles of international law applied to prisoners of war;

(6) urged strict compliance with the provisions of the existing international instruments concerning human rights in armed conflicts, and urged those States which had not yet done so to ratify or accede to the relevant instruments in order to facilitate in all aspects the protection of the victims of armed conflicts.

By the third text it adopted on general aspects of the question of respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the General Assembly, after, among other things, emphasizing the importance of continued close collaboration between the United Nations and the International Committee of the Red Cross:

(1) called upon all parties to any armed conflict to observe the rules laid down in the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and other humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts, and invited those states which had not yet done so to adhere to those instruments;

(2) expressed the hope that the conference of government experts to be convened in 1971 by the International Committee of the Red Cross would consider further what development was required in existing humanitarian laws applicable to armed conflicts, and that the conference would make specific recommendations in this respect for consideration;

(3) asked the Secretary-General to: invite early comments by Governments on his reports; transmit his reports—together with Governments' comments thereon and the records of relevant discussions and resolutions of the Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Human Rights Commission—to the International Committee of the Red Cross for consideration, as appropriate, by the conference of government experts; and present the comments received by him to the Assembly at its twenty-sixth (1971) session, and report at that session on the results of the conference of government experts and on any other relevant developments;

(4) decided to consider this question again, in all its aspects, at its 1971 session.

The General Assembly took these decisions when it adopted resolution 2677 (XXV) on 9 December—by 111 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions—on the recommendation of its Third Committee, which approved it on 1 December by 104 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions. The text, revised twice, was eventually sponsored by Australia, Belgium, Ceylon, Greece, Ireland, Japan, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines, Singapore, Spain and the United Kingdom. A draft resolution submitted by Greece was withdrawn when some of the ideas it contained were taken into account in the draft resolution approved by the Committee, and Greece joined the sponsors of that text.

PROTECTION OF JOURNALISTS ENGAGED IN DANGEROUS MISSIONS IN AREAS OF ARMED CONFLICT

Among the resolutions adopted by the General Assembly on respect for human rights in armed conflicts was one having to do with the protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions in areas of armed conflict. The text was recommended by the Assembly's Third Committee, where it was approved on 1 December by a roll-call vote of 81 to 0, with 31 abstentions. It was sponsored by Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Colombia, Finland, France, Iran, Japan, Madagascar and Senegal, and revised three times during the course of the discussion. The Assembly adopted the text on 9 December by a recorded vote of 85 to 0, with 32 abstentions, as resolution 2673 (XXV).

By the preambular parts of this text, the Assembly among other things recalled the fundamental principle that a distinction must be made at all times between combatants and persons not taking part in hostilities. It considered it essential for the United Nations to obtain complete information about armed conflicts and that journalists, whatever their nationality, had an important part to play in that regard. It noted with regret that journalists engaged in missions in areas where an armed conflict was taking place sometimes suffered as a result of their professional duty, which was to inform the public objectively.

The Assembly also noted the appeal made by the Secretary-General on 30 September 1970 on behalf of missing journalists. It recognized that certain types of protection could be granted to journalists under various provisions of the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, but noted that such provisions did not cover some categories of journalists engaged in dangerous missions and did not correspond to their current needs. It also expressed its conviction of the need for an additional humanitarian international instrument to ensure the better protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions, particularly in areas where an armed conflict was taking place.

(1) expressed its grave concern about the fate of press correspondents carrying out dangerous missions;

(2) expressed its deepest regret that some of those correspondents had paid with their lives for their conscientious approach to their missions;

(3) invited all States and all authorities who were parties to an armed conflict to respect and apply in all circumstances the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions in so far as they were applicable—in particular, to war correspondents who accompanied armed forces but were not actually a part of them;

(4) invited the Economic and Social Council to request the Human Rights Commission to consider at its 1971 session the possibility of preparing a draft international agreement ensuring the protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions and providing, among other things, for the creation of a universally recognized and guaranteed identification document;

(5) invited the Human Rights Commission to consider the question as a matter of priority at its 1971 session so that a draft international agreement might be adopted as soon as possible by the Assembly or by some other appropriate international body;

(6) asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross and other appropriate international organizations, to report on this question to the Assembly in 1971; and

(7) decided to give the highest priority to the question at its 1971 session.

BASIC PRINCIPLES FOR THE PROTECTION OF CIVILIAN POPULATIONS IN ARMED CONFLICTS

The fifth resolution adopted by the General Assembly in 1970 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts was based on a Norwegian proposal setting forth certain basic principles for the protection of civilians in armed conflicts.

Among other things, the General Assembly thereby: noted that in the present century the international community had accepted an increased role and new responsibilities for the alleviation of human suffering in any form and in particular during armed conflicts; recalled that to this end a series of international instruments had been adopted, including the four Geneva Conventions of 1949; and recognized the importance of the strict application of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949.

The Assembly then affirmed the following basic principles for the protection of civilian populations in armed conflicts, without prejudice to their future elaboration within the framework of progressive development of the international law of armed conflict:

(1) Fundamental human rights, as accepted in international law and laid down in international instruments, continue to apply fully in situations of armed conflicts.

(2) In the conduct of military operations during armed conflicts, a distinction must be made at all times between persons actively taking part in the hostilities and civilian populations.

(3) In the conduct of military operations, every effort should be made to spare civilian populations from the ravages of war, and all necessary precautions should be taken to avoid injury, loss or damage to civilian populations.

(4) Civilian populations as such should not be the object of military operations.

(5) Dwellings and other installations that are used only by civilian populations should not be the object of military operations.

(6) Places or areas designated for the sole protection of civilians, such as hospital zones or similar refuges, should not be the object of military operations.

(7) Civilian populations, or individual members thereof, should not be the object of reprisals, forcible transfers or other assaults on their integrity.

(8) The provisions of international relief to civilian populations is in conformity with the humanitarian principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international instruments in the field of human rights. The Declaration of Principles for International Humanitarian Relief to the Civilian Population in Disaster Situations, as laid down in resolution XXVI adopted by the twenty-first International Conference of the Red Cross, shall apply in situations of armed conflict, and all parties to a conflict should make every effort to facilitate this application.

The General Assembly took these decisions when it adopted resolution 2675 (XXV) on 9 December 1970, by 109 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions. It was approved in the Third Committee on 1 December by 98 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, as proposed by Norway and revised twice by the sponsor.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2444 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and 2597 (XXIV) of 16 December 1969 and noting resolution XXIII adopted by the International Conference on Human Rights held at Teheran in 1968,

Referring to resolution XIII and to the other pertinent resolutions on human rights in armed conflicts adopted by the twenty-first International Conference of the Red Cross held at Istanbul in 1969,

Expressing its deep concern in connexion with the fact that wars unleashed in violation of the Charter of the United Nations in several parts of the world lead to incalculable disasters and suffering among civilians,

Having considered with appreciation the Secretary-General's report on respect for human rights in armed conflicts,

1. Solemnly reaffirms that, in order effectively to guarantee human rights, all States should devote their efforts to averting the unleashing of aggressive wars and armed conflicts that violate the Charter of the United Nations and the provisions of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Condemns the actions of countries which, in flagrant violation of the Charter, continue to conduct aggressive wars and defy the generally accepted principles of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

3. Considers that the principles of the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949 should be strictly observed by all States and that States violating these international instruments should be condemned and held responsible to the world community;

4. Affirms that the participants in resistance movements and the freedom fighters in southern Africa and territories under colonial and alien domination and foreign occupation, struggling for their liberation and self-determination, should be treated, in case of their arrest, as prisoners of war in accordance with the principles of the Hague Convention of 1907 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

5. Considers that air bombardments of civilian populations and the use of asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases and of all analogous liquids, materials and devices, as well as bacteriological (biological) weapons, constitute a flagrant violation of the Hague Convention of 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949;

6. Recognizes the necessity of developing additional international instruments providing for the protection of civilian populations and freedom fighters against colonial and foreign domination as well as against racist regimes.

The General Assembly,

Recalling that the Preamble of the Charter of the United Nations affirms faith in the dignity and worth of the human person,

Recalling that the United Nations has as one of its purposes the achievement of international co-operation in solving international problems of a humanitarian character and the promotion of respect for human rights,

Reiterating the obligation of Member States for the urgent termination of all armed aggression, as envisaged in Articles 1 and 2 of the Charter and in other relevant documents of the United Nations,

Noting the obligation of Member States under the Charter to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights,

Recalling its resolutions 2444(XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and 2597(XXIV) of 16 December 1969, in which it invited the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross, to study, inter alia:

(a) Steps which could be taken to secure the better application of existing humanitarian international conventions and rules in all armed conflicts,

(b) The need for additional humanitarian international conventions or for other appropriate legal instruments to ensure the better protection of civilians, prisoners and combatants in all armed conflicts,

Believing, therefore, that the treatment accorded to victims of war and armed aggression is a concern of the United Nations,

Noting resolution XI, adopted by the twenty-first International Conference of the Red Cross held at Istanbul in 1969, calling upon all parties to the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949, to ensure that all persons entitled to prisoner-of-war status are treated humanely and given the fullest measure of protection prescribed by the Convention, and that all parties involved in an armed conflict, no matter how it is characterized, provide free access to prisoners of war and to all places of their detention by a protecting Power or by the International Committee of the Red Cross,

Considering that the direct repatriation of seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war and the repatriation or internment in a neutral country of prisoners of war who have undergone a long period of captivity constitute important aspects of human rights as advanced and preserved under the Geneva Convention of 1949 and the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Calls upon all parties to any armed conflict to comply with the terms and provisions of the Geneva (Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949, so as to ensure the humane treatment of all persons entitled to the protection of the Convention and, inter alia, to permit regular inspection, in accordance with the Convention, of all places of detention of prisoners of war by a protecting Power or humanitarian organization such as the International Committee of the Red Cross;

2. Endorses the continuing efforts of the International Committee of the Red Cross to secure the effective application of the Geneva Convention of 1949;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to exert all efforts to obtain humane treatment for prisoners of war, especially for the victims of armed aggression and colonial suppression;

4. Urges compliance with article 109 of the Geneva Convention of 1949, which requires the repatriation of seriously wounded and seriously sick prisoners of war and which provides for agreements with a view to the direct repatriation or internment in a neutral country of able-bodied prisoners of war who have undergone a long period of captivity;

5. Urges that combatants in all armed conflicts not covered by article 4 of the Geneva Convention of 1949 be accorded the same humane treatment defined by the principles of international law applied to prisoners of war;

6. Urges strict compliance with the provisions of the existing international instruments concerning human rights in armed conflicts, and urges those States which have not yet done so to ratify or accede to the relevant instruments in order to facilitate in all aspects the protection of the victims of armed conflicts.

A/8178. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution V.

RESOLUTION 2677(xv), as recommended by Third Committee, A/8178, adopted by Assembly on 9 December 1970, meeting 1922, by 111 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Determined to continue all efforts to eliminate the threat or use of force in international relations, in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations, and to bring about general and complete disarmament under effective international control,

Reaffirming its desire to secure the full observance of human rights applicable in all armed conflicts pending the earliest possible termination of such conflicts,

Convinced of the continuing value of existing humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts, in particular the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the

Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949,

Realizing, however, that because existing humanitarian rules do not adequately meet all contemporary situations of armed conflict it is necessary to develop the substance of these rules and procedures for their implementation,

Reaffirming the principles contained in resolution XXIII adopted by the International Conference on Human Rights held at Teheran in 1968, and in General Assembly resolutions 2444(XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and 2597(XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Aware of the importance and complexity of the tasks undertaken in pursuance of these resolutions, which require the continuing attention and concern of the United Nations, the International Committee of the Red Cross and the international community as a whole,

Noting with appreciation the two reports of the Secretary-General on respect for human rights in armed conflicts,

Recalling resolution XIII adopted unanimously by the twenty-first International Conference of the Red Cross held at Istanbul in 1969, concerning the reaffirmation and development of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts,

Welcoming the decision of the International Committee of the Red Cross to convene at Geneva, from 24 May to 12 June 1971, a conference on the reaffirmation and development of international humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts, to be attended by government experts,

Believing that one or more plenipotentiary diplomatic conferences of States parties to the Geneva Conventions and other interested States might be convened at an appropriate time, after due preparation, in order to adopt international legal instruments for the reaffirmation and development of humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts,

Considering that the effective implementation of humanitarian rules relating to armed conflicts can best be attained if those rules are laid down in widely accepted agreements,

Emphasizing the importance of continued close collaboration between the United Nations and the International Committee of the Red Cross,

1. Calls upon all parties to any armed conflict to observe the rules laid down in the Hague Conventions of 1899 and 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925, the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and other humanitarian rules applicable in armed conflicts, and invites those States which have not yet done so to adhere to those instruments;

2. Expresses the hope that the conference of government experts to be convened in 1971 by the International Committee of the Red Cross will consider further what development is required in existing humanitarian laws applicable to armed conflicts, and that it will make specific recommendations in this respect for consideration by Governments;

3. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To invite early comments by Governments on his reports;

(b) To transmit his reports and the comments of Governments thereon, together with the records of relevant discussions and resolutions of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, to the International Committee of the Red Cross for consideration, as appropriate, by the conference of government experts;

(c) To present the comments received to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session and to report at that session on the results of the conference of government experts to be convened by the International Committee of the Red Cross and on any other relevant developments;

4. Decides to consider this question again, in all its aspects, at the twenty-sixth session.

RESOLUTION 2673(XXV), as recommended by Third Committee, A/8178, adopted by Assembly on 9 December 1970, meeting 1922, by recorded vote of 85 to 0, with 32 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Democratic Republic of Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dahomey, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gabon, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Khmer Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, United Arab Republic, United Kingdom, United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2444 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, in which it invited the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross and other appropriate international organizations, to study:

(a) Steps which could be taken to secure the better application of existing humanitarian international conventions and rules in all armed conflicts,

(b) The need for additional humanitarian international conventions or for other appropriate legal instruments to ensure the better protection of civilians, prisoners and combatants in all armed conflicts,

Recalling also the fundamental principle that a distinction must be made at all times between combatants and persons not taking part in the hostilities,

Considering that it is essential for the United Nations to obtain complete information concerning armed conflicts and that journalists, whatever their nationality, have an important role to play in that regard,

Noting with regret that journalists engaged in missions in areas where an armed conflict is taking place sometimes suffer as a result of their professional duty, which is to inform world public opinion objectively,

Bearing in mind the appeal made by the Secretary-General on 30 September 1970 on behalf of missing journalists,

Recognizing that certain types of protection can be granted to journalists under:

(a) Article 4 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949,

(b) Article 13 of the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded and Sick in Armed Forces in the Field, of 12 August 1949,

(c) Article 13 of the Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of Wounded, Sick and Shipwrecked Members of Armed Forces at Sea, of 12 August 1949,

(d) Article 4 of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Being aware, however, that these provisions do not cover some categories of journalists engaged in dangerous missions and do not correspond to their present needs,

Convinced of the need for an additional humanitarian international instrument to ensure the better protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions, particularly in areas where an armed conflict is taking place,

1. Expresses its grave concern about the fate of press correspondents carrying out dangerous missions;

2. Expresses its deepest regret that some of those correspondents have paid with their lives for their conscientious approach to their missions;

3. Invites all States and all authorities parties to an armed conflict to respect and apply in all circumstances the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 in so far as they are applicable, in particular, to war correspondents who accompany armed forces but are not actually a part of them;

4. Invites the Economic and Social Council to request the Commission on Human Rights to consider at its twenty-seventh session the possibility of preparing a draft international agreement ensuring the protection of journalists engaged in dangerous missions and providing, inter alia, for the creation of a universally recognized and guaranteed identification document;

5. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to consider this question as a matter of priority at its twenty-seventh session in order that a draft international agreement may be adopted as soon as possible by the General Assembly or by some other appropriate international body;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross and other appropriate international organizations, to submit a report on this question to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session;

7. Decides to give the highest priority to the consideration of this question at its twenty-sixth session.

BASIC PRINCIPLES FOR THE PROTECTION OF CIVILIAN POPULATIONS IN ARMED CONFLICTS

A/C.3/L.1806 and Rev.1,2. Norway: draft resolution and revisions, approved by Third Committee on 1 December 1970, meeting 1803, by 98 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

A/8178. Report of Third Committee, draft resolution III.

RESOLUTION 2675 (xxv), as recommended by Third Committee, A/8178, adopted by Assembly on 9 December 1970, meeting 1922, by 109 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Noting that in the present century the international community has accepted an increased role and new responsibilities for the alleviation of human suffering in any form and in particular during armed conflicts,

Recalling that to this end a series of international instruments has been adopted, including the four Geneva Conventions of 1949,

Recalling further its resolution 2444(XXIII) of 19 December 1968 on respect for human rights in armed conflicts,

Bearing in mind the need for measures to ensure the better protection of human rights in armed conflicts of all types,

Noting with appreciation the work that is being undertaken in this respect by the International Committee of the Red Cross,

Noting with appreciation the reports of the Secretary-General on respect for human rights in armed conflicts,

Convinced that civilian populations are in special need of increased protection in time of armed conflicts,

Recognizing the importance of the strict application of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Affirms the following basic principles for the protection of civilian populations in armed conflicts, without prejudice to their future elaboration within the framework of progressive development of the international law of armed conflict:

1. Fundamental human rights, as accepted in international law and laid down in international instruments, continue to apply fully in situations of armed conflict.

2. In the conduct of military operations during armed conflicts, a distinction must be made at all times between persons actively taking part in the hostilities and civilian populations.

3. In the conduct of military operations, every effort should be made to spare civilian populations from the ravages of war, and all necessary precautions should be taken to avoid injury, loss or damage to civilian populations.

4. Civilian populations as such should not be the object of military operations.

5. Dwellings and other installations that are used only by civilian populations should not be the object of military operations.

6. Places or areas designated for the sole protection of civilians, such as hospital zones or similar refuges, should not be the object of military operations.

7. Civilian populations, or individual members thereof, should not be the object of reprisals, forcible transfers or other assaults on their integrity.

8. The provision of international relief to civilian populations is in conformity with the humanitarian principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and other international instruments in the field of human rights. The Declaration of Principles for International Humanitarian Relief to the Civilian Population in Disaster Situations, as laid down in resolution XXVI adopted by the twenty-first International Conference of the Red Cross, shall apply in situations of armed conflict, and all parties to a conflict should make every effort to facilitate this application.

THE STATUS OF WOMEN

During 1970, various questions relating to the status of women were discussed in the Commission on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

At its twenty-third session, held from 23 March to 10 April 1970, the Commission on the Status of Women discussed the following topics: the implementation of international instruments and national standards for the rights of women; the development of women's role in society; the role of women in the family; the protection of women and children in emergency or war-time, fighting for peace, national liberation and independence; a review of the Commission's programme and periodicity of its sessions; regional activities relating to the status of women; the influence of activities of foreign economic and other interests on the living conditions of women in dependent territories; and advisory services in the field of human rights.

A description of these and related matters is given in the sections that follow.

IMPLEMENTATION OF INTERNATIONAL INSTRUMENTS FOR RIGHTS OF WOMEN

DECLARATION ON ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

In 1968, the Economic and Social Council instituted a system of reporting<sup>22</sup> on the implementation of the 1967 Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.<sup>23</sup>

In accordance with that procedure, and a resolution adopted by it at its 1969 session,<sup>24</sup>

the Commission on the Status of Women at its session in March-April 1970 considered a report of the Secretary-General—based on replies received up to 10 January 1970 from 47 Governments, two specialized agencies and 12 non-governmental organizations—relating to the publicity they had given to the Declaration and action taken to comply with its provisions.

The Commission also had before it a report on the publicity given to the Declaration by the United Nations.

POLITICAL RIGHTS OF WOMEN

With regard to implementation of the Convention on the Political Rights of Women, adopted by the General Assembly in 1952,<sup>25</sup> the Commission on the Status of Women had before it at its 1970 session a report by the Secretary-General which showed that relevant provisions of constitutions, electoral laws and other legal instruments of most countries guaranteed women equal political rights with men. The report also indicated, however, that in some countries women still did not have the right to vote or that right was restricted in some way.

A further report, including information furnished by Member States on the implementation of the Convention, was prepared for the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session later in 1970.

PERIODIC REPORTS ON HUMAN RIGHTS

On 6 April 1970, the Commission on the Status of Women asked the Secretary-General to prepare for the Commission's information at each of its sessions a summary of those parts of the periodic reports on human rights which related to the status of women. It decided to consider at future sessions any relevant information in the Secretary-General's summary in connexion with the implementation of international instruments relating to the status of women, including the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women. (See also pp. 568-69.)

THE DEVELOPMENT OF WOMEN'S ROLE IN SOCIETY

UNIFIED LONG-TERM PROGRAMME FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF WOMEN

At its 1970 session, the Commission on the Status of Women considered two reports of the Secretary-General concerning the unified long-term programme for the advancement of women and United Nations assistance in that field. The first contained an analysis of the replies of 77 Governments and 35 non-governmental organizations to a questionnaire on the role of women in the economic and social development of their countries. In the second report, the Secretary-General reviewed the action taken relating to the long-term programme and presented a number of suggestions for the Commission's consideration.

The Commission adopted five resolutions within the framework of the unified long-term programme. Two of these dealt specifically with the programme, two with the employment of women by the organizations of the United Nations system, and one with family responsibilities of working women.

By the first of the resolutions dealing with the long-term programme, the Commission among other things asked the Secretary-General to forward his second report to United Nations Member States, members of the specialized agencies concerned, the United Nations Children's Fund and other organizations, together with the resolutions adopted by the Commission and comments and suggestions of its members, and to present an analysis of replies received, if possible to the Commission's next session. He was also asked to examine the possibility of rendering to Member States—under the human rights advisory services programme—new types of assistance in the field of the status of women, and to establish and maintain a list of experts and consultants who would be available to Governments on request.

The Commission also asked the Secretary-General to undertake a study showing the extent to which existing international conventions already contained provisions relating to rights covered by the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the measures of implementation provided under such conventions, and the status of ratifications and accessions to them. The Secretary-General, Member States and organizations concerned were asked to increase their efforts to publicize the Commission's work, especially in connexion with the celebration in 1970 of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations.

The second resolution on the long-term programme recommended a text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly and was directed primarily towards encouraging the expansion of technical co-operation activities to assist women. It also set forth in an annex a number of general objectives and targets which it was hoped might be achieved during the Second United Nations Development Decade (the 1970s).

The Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's proposal, with some minor changes, as its resolution 1511(XLVIII), which it adopted on 28 May 1970, by 25 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

At its twenty-fifth session later in 1970, the General Assembly adopted the text unanimously on 15 December as its resolution 2716(XXV) on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved it unanimously, as amended, on 11 December.

By this, the General Assembly among other things recommended that certain objectives and targets—set forth in an annex—should be achieved as widely as possible during the Second United Nations Development Decade. States Members of the United Nations, members of the specialized agencies and all organs and agencies within the United Nations system were invited to co-operate in achieving these objectives and targets.

The Assembly also recommended that concerted efforts be made to increase the resources available for technical co-operation projects that advanced the status of women, and that consideration be given to allocating a specific percentage of the available funds for that purpose. The Secretary-General was asked to make available to the Commission on the Status of Women information on the extent to which women were participating in, and benefiting from, technical co-operation projects.

The Assembly also recommended that conferences, seminars and similar meetings at the regional and international levels should be organized with the participation, wherever possible, of ministers, of high government officials and specialists concerned with problems of development, and of representatives of non-governmental organizations concerned, to consider ways and means of promoting the status of women within the framework of over-all development.

It was also suggested by the Assembly that the continuous education of adults be encouraged with a view to changing their attitudes towards the roles to be played by men and women in order to help them to assume their responsibilities in society. Notwithstanding these provisions, the Assembly noted that the family, as the corner-stone of society, must be protected.

In the annex to the resolution, nine general objectives were formulated in which special emphasis was placed on the need to develop effective large-scale educational and informational programmes, using all types of mass media and other available means to make the population aware of the norms established by the United Nations and the specialized agencies in conventions, recommendations, declarations and resolutions adopted under their auspices; and on the need for assessing women's contribution to national development so that realistic targets could be established by 1980 and for elaborating programmes conducive to the advancement of the status of women within the framework of over-all national development plans.

Minimum targets to be achieved during the Second United Nations Development Decade were also set forth in the annex to the resolution and included measures relating to: education; training and employment; health and maternity protection; and administration and public life.

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM

In another resolution adopted at its 1970 session, the Commission on the Status of Women among other things recommended to the Secretary-General, to the Directors-General of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization (WHO), and to the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), that they make a special effort to appoint qualified women to fill future vacancies in the highest ranks of the international civil service. The Secretary-General was asked to transmit the Commission's resolution to Member States so that they could in due course publicize vacancies and encourage the candidatures of their most qualified women nationals for such posts.

The Economic and Social Council, acting on another, related, recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women, adopted on 28 May resolution 1510(XLVIII), which was endorsed by the General Assembly later in 1970 when it adopted resolution 2715 (XXV) on 15 December.

By this, among other things the Assembly: expressed the hope that the United Nations, including its special bodies and all inter-governmental agencies in the United Nations system, would set an example with regard to opportunities they afforded for the employment of women at senior and other professional levels; urged them to take or continue to take appropriate measures to ensure equal opportunities for the employment of women at these levels; and asked the Secretary-General to include in his report to the Assembly on the composition of the Secretariat data on the employment of women at senior and other professional levels by the secretariats of the above-mentioned bodies, including their numbers and the positions they occupied.

(For details and texts of resolutions 1510 (XLVIII) and 2715 (XXV), see pp. 831-33.)

FAMILY RESPONSIBILITIES OF WORKING WOMEN

Also within the framework of the unified long-term programme, on 8 April 1970 the Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution which, among other things, called on the Secretary-General to suggest to Governments that they organize—in collaboration with the specialized agencies concerned and non-governmental organizations interested in the problem—surveys in their respective countries with a view to obtaining direct information and opinions from working women concerning their family responsibilities. The results of the surveys were to be brought to the Commission's attention by the Secretary-General.

The Commission also decided to carry out relevant studies, in the light of the surveys, to consider the need for an educational campaign to provide guidance on the sharing of responsibilities within the family, bearing in mind the rapid changes taking place in the structure of labour in human society owing to the growth of women's participation in paid work.

WOMEN'S SERVICE AS MEANS OF ENABLING WOMEN TO WORK WITHOUT PAY FOR BENEFIT OF THE COMMUNITY

During its 1970 session, the Commission on the Status of Women considered a report by the Secretary-General containing a summary of replies from 15 Governments on their experience relating to women's service as a means of enabling women to work without pay for the benefit of the community. It adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it expressed the hope that regional seminars on women's civic service would be organized within the framework of the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights; and invited the Secretary-General to transmit to the Commission any subsequent information, together with reports on any seminars that might be held on women's civic service.

ACCESS OF WOMEN TO EDUCATION

At its 1970 session, the Commission on the Status of Women considered two reports by UNESCO—the first containing an analysis of replies received from Governments on co-education and a synthesis of information furnished by non-governmental organizations on the same question. The second report dealt with the equal access of women to literacy and was also accompanied by a report from non-governmental organizations.

In a resolution on co-education, the Commission among other things expressed the hope that United Nations Member States would give girls and women access in co-educational establishments to the same curricula and instruction at all levels as were offered to boys and men, and that they would undertake studies on the results of co-education and its psychological effects on boys and girls. It recommended that scholarships, loans and adequate facilities be provided to ensure the enrolment of girls and women in co-educational establishments and that a public education campaign in favour of equal access to education be undertaken. The Commission asked UNESCO and other specialized agencies concerned to include in their reports to the Commission information on the development of co-education, and the access of girls and women to education, training and careers corresponding to their aptitudes and qualifications.

With respect to the elimination of illiteracy among women, the Commission on the Status of Women proposed a text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, which the Council adopted unanimously on 28 May 1970 as its resolution 1512(XLVIII), as recommended by its Social Committee.

By this, the Council among other things appealed to Member States, non-governmental organizations and other voluntary organizations to intensify their efforts to enable women in both rural and urban regions to start or continue their education, making full use of all the available adult education programmes. The Council requested UNESCO to assign an important place in its functional literacy programmes to women who were still illiterate and to assist all governmental and non-governmental literacy undertakings by acquainting them with modern techniques for overcoming illiteracy.

The Council also suggested certain activities which non-governmental organizations should undertake or continue, aimed at public opinion, national parliaments and public authorities.

ECONOMIC RIGHTS AND OPPORTUNITIES

The Commission on the Status of Women at its 1970 session considered reports by ILO which had a bearing on the employment of women and on repercussions of scientific and technological progress on the conditions of work and employment of women. It also had before it the report of the seminar on the effects of scientific and technological developments on the status of women, held at Iasi, Romania, in August 1969.<sup>26</sup>

The Commission on 3 April adopted a draft resolution which the Economic and Social Council endorsed unanimously on 28 May as its resolution 1513(XLVIII), as recommended by its Social Committee.

By this, the Council among other things noted with satisfaction the attention being given by the United Nations to examining the effects of scientific and technological progress on the status of women in contemporary society. It also drew the attention of Member States and interested international organizations to the conclusions of the seminar on that topic held at Iasi, Romania, in 1969.

The Council then requested Member States to: (a) make available, for boys and girls equally, appropriate general education that would prepare the ground for flexible vocational training; (b) ensure equal access to continuing adult education, accelerated vocational and other training and re-training; (c) see to it that new opportunities for employment were accorded on the basis of individual ability and aptitudes, irrespective of sex and without division of work into men's and women's work; (d) see to it that no reduction was permitted in the employment of women, in particular in skilled work; and (e) pay special attention to the problems of environment, social installations, hygiene and occupational safety associated with scientific and technological progress.

The Council asked the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies concerned—particularly ILO—as well as Member States, to continue to study the repercussions of scientific and technological progress on the conditions of work and employment of women and to report periodically on the question to the Commission on the Status of Women.

The Council also requested ILO to study ways of evaluating work which would permit the efficient implementation of the principle of real equality of pay for women and men for equal work, and to continue its review of international conventions in the light of the changes brought about by scientific and technological progress.

ROLE OF WOMEN IN THE FAMILY

STATUS OF WOMEN AND FAMILY PLANNING

The Commission on the Status of Women considered the question of the status of women and family planning on the basis of a progress report by its Special Rapporteur, who had been appointed by the Economic and Social Council in 1968 to undertake the study of the relationship between the status of women and family planning.<sup>27</sup> The study was initially to be based on national surveys or case studies, but the Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Helvi Sipilä, said that few Governments had been able to undertake such studies and she suggested that the preparation of detailed guidelines might be an aid.

The Commission invited the Special Rapporteur to continue the study as outlined in her progress report and asked her to prepare guidelines—in collaboration with the Secretary-General—that would assist Governments in undertaking national surveys and aid United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations in further work on the subject.

The Commission also asked Member States to furnish the necessary information in accordance with such guidelines and invited the Special Rapporteur to consider, as a means of assisting her and within the resources available, holding consultations at the regional and national levels with appropriate national and international officials, experts and women leaders.

STATUS OF THE UNMARRIED MOTHER

When the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1970 session considered the question of the status of the unmarried mother, it had before it a study prepared for the Commission by the Secretary-General, based in large part on a study prepared for the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights on discrimination against persons born out of wedlock, and on the series of regional seminars on the status of women in family law organized under the human rights advisory services programme during 1961-1964. The Secretary-General's study dealt primarily with law and practice relating to the unmarried mother.

The Commission on the Status of Women expressed the hope that the Secretary-General's study would be given wide dissemination in an appropriate form, and proposed two draft resolutions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

One of these set forth a number of general principles designed to eliminate any prevailing legal and social discrimination against the unmarried mother. The Economic and Social Council decided on 28 May 1970 to take no action on the draft resolution and asked the Secretary-General to forward it to Governments for their comments in order that the Commission might reconsider the draft in the light of replies received.

The other text proposed by the Commission was adopted unanimously by the Economic and Social Council on 28 May as its resolution 1514 (XLVIII), on the recommendation of its Social Committee.

By this, the Council among other things urged United Nations Members and members of the specialized agencies that had not yet done so to take adequate measures of social assistance in favour of the unmarried mother and the child born out of wedlock, and invited study by Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations of the problems posed by the integration of the unmarried mother and her child in all spheres of society.

The Council also invited Member States to elaborate for adolescents of both sexes educational programmes aimed at making them aware of their future family responsibilities. It invited the Secretary-General to devote a part of the report on the implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women to the study of the problems posed by the integration of the unmarried mother and her child in all spheres of society on the basis of information furnished by Member States and by specialized agencies.

PROTECTION OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN EMERGENCY AND OTHER SITUATIONS

At its 1970 session, the Commission on the Status of Women had before it a report by the

Secretary-General on the protection of women and children in emergency or war-time, fighting for peace, national liberation and independence. The Commission submitted a draft resolution for consideration by the Economic and Social Council, which endorsed it as resolution 1515(XLVIII) on 28 May 1970—by 22 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions—on the Social Committee's recommendation.

By this, the Council among other things renewed its appeal to women throughout the world to contribute, in their families and communities, to the establishment of peace and justice and towards finding a just solution to armed conflict.

It called upon States to abide fully by their obligations under the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and other rules of international law concerning respect for human rights in armed conflicts.

The Council then asked the Secretary-General: (a) to give particular attention—in his study on respect for human rights in armed conflicts—to the question of protection of women and children in emergency or war-time; (b) to consider further measures of promoting throughout the world a wider knowledge of the plight of women and children victims of armed conflicts, and of the existing international rules providing protection for women and children in armed conflicts; and (c) to submit to the Commission on the Status of Women at its next session a report containing information available from the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and other appropriate United Nations bodies and the International Committee of the Red Cross, on the conditions of women and children in emergency and armed conflicts in the struggle for peace, self-determination, national liberation and independence.

The Council then requested the General Assembly to consider the possibility of drafting a declaration on the protection of women and children in emergency or war-time. It also decided that the question should again be considered by the Commission on the Status of Women at its next session.

At the General Assembly's twenty-fifth session later in 1970, a draft resolution on the subject, proposed by Algeria, Kenya, Mali, Mongolia, Morocco, Niger, Syria and the USSR in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee), was not pressed to a vote.

By this text, the Assembly would, among other things, have expressed its concern with the tragic situation of women and children in the occupied territories of the Middle East, in southern Africa and in other parts of the world. It would have asked the Secretary-General—making use of the services of UNRWA, UNICEF, the International Red Cross and other appropriate organizations—to submit in 1971 a report on the situation of women and children in conditions of war in the Middle East, and also in southern Africa, and in emergency or fighting for peace, national liberation and independence in other parts of the world.

The Assembly would also have requested the Commission on the Status of Women to prepare a draft declaration on this question for submission to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council.

PERIODICITY OF COMMISSION SESSIONS AND WORK PROGRAMME

The Commission on the Status of Women on 9 April 1970 asked the Economic and Social Council—when it considered the question of the calendar of conferences at its session in July 1970—to accede to a 1969 request of the General Assembly<sup>28</sup> and reconsider its decision of 8 August 1969<sup>29</sup> that the Commission should meet biennially, so that the Commission might continue to meet annually, preferably three to four months after the General Assembly.

In this connexion, the Council's Committee for Programme and Co-ordination recommended, at its session in April-May 1970, that the Commission should meet biennially.

On 31 July 1970, without the adoption of a formal resolution, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed its decision of 8 August 1969 that the Commission on the Status of Women should meet biennially, with effect from 1 January 1971.

On 28 May 1970, the Council, in unanimously adopting resolution 1517(XLVIII) as recommended by its Social Committee, approved the programme of work of the Commission on the Status of Women.

INCREASED ACTIVITIES RELATING TO STATUS OF WOMEN AT REGIONAL LEVEL

On 9 April 1970, the Commission on the Status of Women approved a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council on the question of increased activities relating to the status of women at the regional level.

By this text, the Economic and Social Council would, among other things, express the belief that the Commission on the Status of Women would benefit greatly in its work by the establishment of regional inter-governmental commissions in parts of the world where they did not yet exist. It would recommend the establishment of such commissions to make more effective the resolutions and measures adopted in favour of women and to promote wider integration of women into all spheres of development of their countries.

The Council would also ask the Secretary-General to assist, within the limits of the resources available to him, in establishing preparatory bodies which would consider the steps necessary to create the recommended regional commissions for the status of women. He would also be requested by the Council to invite the regional economic commissions to take whatever action might be necessary to incorporate programmes that would increase the participation of women in their regional activities, to send observers on economic and social development to meetings of the Commission on the Status of Women, and to include in their reports to the Council information on steps taken to integrate women in the economic and social development of their countries.

The Council's Social Committee approved this text on 25 May by 12 votes to 2, with 11 abstentions. The Council, however, decided on 28 May to refer the draft resolution back to the Commission on the Status of Women for more detailed consideration. The Council further decided to transmit the draft to Governments represented on the Commission in order to ascertain their views on it.

Also considered by the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1970 session was the report of the Inter-American Commission of Women.

INFLUENCE OF FOREIGN INTERESTS ON LIVING CONDITIONS OF WOMEN IN DEPENDENT TERRITORIES

At its 1970 session, the Commission on the Status of Women again considered the question of the influence of activities of foreign economic and other interests on the living conditions of women in dependent territories.<sup>30</sup> On 9 April, it adopted a text for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, which was endorsed by the Council—as its resolution 1516 (XLVIII)—on 28 May by 16 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Council's Social Committee, where it was approved on 25 May by 18 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions.

By this text, the Council among other things requested the General Assembly to invite the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the question of the influence of activities of foreign economic and other interests on the living conditions of women in dependent territories, in order that the study might be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its next session.

ADVISORY SERVICES

Two of the resolutions which were adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women at its 1970 session, and which are described above, had a bearing on the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights.

In connexion with the unified long-term programme for the advancement of women, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of rendering to Member States, under the advisory services programme, new types of assistance in the field of the status of women.

In its resolution relating to women's service as a means of enabling women to work without pay for the benefit of the community, the Commission expressed the hope that regional seminars on women's civic service would be organized within the framework of the advisory services programme.

The Commission also had before it at its 1970 session a report of the Secretary-General describing the current programme of advisory services in the human rights field and the report of the 1969 seminar on the effects of scientific and technological developments on the status of women held at Iasi, Romania.<sup>31</sup>

ernment of Gabon had extended an invitation to hold a seminar on the status of women in 1971.

A seminar on the participation of women in the economic life of their countries (with reference to article 10 of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women) was held at Moscow, USSR, from 8 to 21 September 1970. It was attended by representatives of 29 Governments, observers from three Governments and observers from non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

(For further details about the advisory services programme, see pp. 559-61.)

The Economic and Social Council

Invites the General Assembly to adopt the following draft resolution:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolution 1777(XVII) of 7 December 1962 initiating the study of a unified, long-term United Nations programme for the advancement of women,

"Recalling also the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women adopted on 7 November 1967, and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development adopted on 11 December 1969,

"Noting resolution IX of the International Conference on Human Rights, held in Teheran in 1968, on measures to promote women's rights in the modern world, including a unified, long-term United Nations programme for the advancement of women which established guidelines for such a programme,

"Noting also that in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2571 (XXIV) of 13 December 1969 arrangements should be made 'to keep under systematic scrutiny the progress towards achieving the goals and objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade, to identify shortfalls in their achievement and the policies that are not consistent with the attainment of those objectives and to recommend positive measures, including new goals and policies as needed.'

"Expressing the hope that general and complete disarmament will allow for the use of the resources released progressively for purposes of economic and social progress of all peoples and in particular elaboration of programmes designed to advance the status of women,

"Believing that a programme of concerted international action, planned on a long-term basis, will advance the status of women and increase their effective participation in all sectors,

"Considering that the success of such a programme will require intensified action on the part of Member States at the national and regional levels, as well as maximum use of the methods and techniques available through the United Nations system of organizations,

"Believing that an important step in the further development of such a programme would be the establishment of concrete objectives and minimum targets,

"1. Recommends that the objectives and targets set forth in the annex to the present resolution should be achieved as widely as possible during the Second United Nations Development Decade;

"2. Invites States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies and all organs and agencies within the United Nations system to co-operate in achieving these objectives and targets, and hopes that adequate staff and resources will be made available for this purpose;

"3. Recommends that concerted efforts be made to increase the resources available for technical co-operation projects which advance the status of women and that consideration be given to allocating a specific percentage of the available funds for this purpose;

"4. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission on the Status of Women, if possible at its twenty-fourth session, information on the extent to which women are participating in, and benefiting from, technical co-operation projects;

"5. Recommends that conferences, seminars and similar meetings at the regional and international levels be organized with the participation, wherever possible, of ministers, high government officials and specialists concerned with problems of development, and of representatives of non-governmental organizations concerned with this problem to consider ways and means of promoting the status of women within the framework of over-all development;

"6. Draws attention to the important role that may also be played in this respect by the regional training and research institutes for social development, to be established pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1406(XLVI) of 5 June 1969;

"7. Suggests that the continuous education of adults be encouraged in order to help to change in particular their attitude of mind towards the roles to be played by men and women in order to help them to assume their responsibilities in society.

Recalling its resolution 1777(XVII) of 7 December 1962 initiating the study of a unified, long-term United Nations programme for the advancement of women,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, adopted on 7 November 1967, and the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, adopted on 11 December 1969,

Noting resolution IX of the International Conference on Human Rights held at Teheran in 1968, on measures to promote women's rights in the modern world, including a unified, long-term United Nations programme for the advancement of women, which established guidelines for such a programme,

Noting also that, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2571(XXIV) of 13 December 1969 and with paragraph 79 of Assembly resolution 2626(XXV) of 24 October 1970, concerning the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, arrangements should be made to keep under systematic scrutiny the progress towards achieving the goals and objectives of the Decade, to identify shortfalls in their achievement and the policies that are not consistent with the attainment of those objectives and to recommend positive measures, including new goals and policies as needed.

Expressing the hope that general and complete disarmament under effective international control will allow for the use of the resources released progressively for purposes of economic and social progress of all peoples, including the elaboration of programmes designed to advance the status of women,

Believing that a programme of concerted international action, planned on a long-term basis, will advance the status of women and increase their effective participation in all sectors,

Considering that the success of such a programme will require intensified action on the part of Member States, at the national and regional levels, as well as maximum use of the methods and techniques available through the United Nations system of organizations,

Believing that an important step in the further development of such a programme would be the establishment of concrete objectives and minimum targets,

1. Recommends that the objectives and targets set forth in the annex to the present resolution should be achieved as widely as possible during the Second United Nations Development Decade;

2. Invites States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies and all organs and agencies within the United Nations system to co-operate in achieving these objectives and targets, and hopes that adequate staff and resources will be made available for this purpose;

3. Recommends that concerted efforts should be made to increase the resources available for technical co-operation projects which advance the status of women and that consideration be given to allocating a specific percentage of the available funds for this purpose;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission on the Status of Women, if possible at its twenty-fourth session, information on the extent to which women are participating in, and benefiting from, technical co-operation projects;

5. Recommends that conferences, seminars and similar meetings at the regional and international levels should be organized with the participation, wherever possible, of ministers, high government officials and specialists concerned with problems of development, and of representatives of non-governmental organizations concerned with this problem, to consider ways and means of promoting the status of women within the framework of over-all development;

6. Draws attention to the important role that may also be played in this respect by the regional training and research centres for social development to be established pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1406 (XLVI) of 5 June 1969;

7. Suggests that the continuous education of adults be encouraged with a view to changing in particular their attitude of mind towards the roles to be played by men and women in order to help them to assume their responsibilities in society;

8. Notes, notwithstanding the provisions of all the preceding paragraphs, that the family, as the cornerstone of society, must be protected.

ACCESS OF WOMEN TO EDUCATION

E/4831. Report of Commission on Status of Women on its 23rd session, 23 March-10 April 1970, Chapters III C and XII (resolution 6(XXIII)).

E/4831, Chapter XIII. Draft resolution III, as submitted by Commission, approved unanimously by Social Committee on 25 May 1970, meeting 647.

RESOLUTION 1512(XLVIII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/4870, adopted unanimously by Council on 28 May 1970, meeting 1694.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report prepared by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on equal access of women to literacy,

Considering that illiteracy is one of the main obstacles to the progress of women in general and to the effective exercise of their rights and responsibilities in particular,

Considering also that progress in eliminating illiteracy and in raising the standard of general education at all levels would not fail to bring about an improvement whereby all citizens, and more particularly women, would contribute more fully to the development of their countries,

1. Appeals to Member States, non-governmental organizations and other voluntary organizations to intensify their efforts to ensure that all the necessary steps are taken and every facility provided to enable women in both rural and urban regions to start or continue their education, making full use of all the available adult education programmes;

2. Requests the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to assign an important place in its functional literacy programmes to women who are still illiterate and to give assistance to all governmental and non-governmental literacy undertakings, inter alia, by acquainting them with modern techniques and methods for overcoming illiteracy;

3. Suggests that non-governmental organizations should undertake or continue activities aimed at public opinion, national parliaments and public authorities, with the express aim of:

(a) Securing the signing and ratification of the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in 1960;

RESOLUTION 1513 (XLVIII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/4870, adopted unanimously by Council on 28 May 1970, meeting 1694.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1328(XLIV) of 31 May 1968 and 1394(XLVI) of 5 June 1969 concerning the repercussions of scientific and technological progress on the status of women workers,

Considering that the progress of science and its technological applications opens up wide prospects of economic, social and cultural progress and of improving the standard of living,

Noting that modern scientific and technological progress requires the highest level of vocational training of workers,

Bearing in mind that the introduction of the latest techniques, mechanization and automation of production processes give women access to many new vocations,

Considering that general education and vocational training acquire exceptional importance under conditions of scientific and technological progress,

Considering that scientific and technological progress gives rise to numerous and complex problems, according to the regions, categories of workers, occupational sectors and individuals,

Noting that some unfavourable consequences of scientific and technological progress weigh more heavily upon the status of women workers,

Noting in that connexion the low degree of skill of most women workers and the difficulty of changing occupations resulting therefrom,

Noting also women's limited geographical mobility, due usually to their family responsibilities,

Aware of the need for preparation, guidance and vocational training constantly adjusted to scientific and technological progress and to the requirements of economic development,

1. Notes with satisfaction the attention being given by the United Nations to examining the effects of scientific and technological developments on the status of women in contemporary society;

2. Draws the attention of Member States and of interested international organizations to the conclusions of the European Seminar on that topic, held at Iasi, Romania, from 5 to 18 August 1969 by the United Nations in co-operation with the Romanian Government;

3. Requests Member States:

(a) To make provision in school programmes for appropriate general education that prepares the ground for a flexible vocational training which can be adjusted at all times to the structure of employment, and to which girls and boys have equal access under the same conditions;

(b) To ensure that lifelong adult education, accelerated vocational training and vocational and other retraining are available to men and women under the same conditions;

(c) To see to it that new opportunities for employment are accorded on the basis of individual ability and aptitudes, irrespective of sex and without division of work into men's and women's work;

(d) To see to it that no reduction is permitted in the employment of women, in particular in skilled work;

(e) To pay special attention to the problems of environment, social installations, hygiene and occupational safety associated with scientific and technological progress;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the specialized agencies concerned, in particular the International Labour Organisation, as well as Member States, to continue to study the repercussions of scientific and technological progress on the conditions of work and employment of women and to submit periodic reports on that question to the Commission on the Status of Women;

5. Requests the International Labour Organisation to study ways of evaluating work which would permit the efficient implementation of the principle of real equality of pay for women and men for equal work;

6. Requests the International Labour Organisation to continue its review of international conventions from the point of view of the changes that occur as a result of scientific and technological progress.

RESOLUTION 1514 (XLVIII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/4870, adopted unanimously by Council on 28 May 1970, meeting 1694.

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that the number of unmarried mothers is still increasing in some countries,

Noting further that owing to her status and the inadequacy of measures of social protection in her favour, the unmarried mother and her child are still the subject of discrimination in many countries,

Considering that as a human being the unmarried mother is entitled to respect for her dignity and for her well-being and that of her child,

Mindful that there can be no satisfactory progress for humanity as a whole without more rapid progress as regards the status of all women,

Considering that the integration of the unmarried mother and her child in society is a complex problem which calls for thorough study,

1. Urges the States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies that have not yet done so to take adequate measures of social assistance in favour of the unmarried mother and the child born out of wedlock;

2. Invites Member States, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned to study the problems posed by the integration of the unmarried mother and her child in all spheres of society;

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 4 (XXII) adopted by the Commission on the Status of Women on protection of women and children in emergency or wartime, fighting for peace, national liberation and independence,

Bearing in mind resolutions I and XXIII adopted by the International Conference on Human Rights and the fact that the General Assembly has taken concrete steps towards the implementation of those resolutions,

Noting that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of 12 August 1949 which provides for important safeguards for the protection of women and children, is not fully implemented in the course of armed conflicts and in occupied territories,

Taking note of the report of the Special Working Group of Experts established under resolution 6 (XXV) of the Commission on Human Rights,

Fully convinced that the protection of women and children during emergency and wartime is contemplated by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,

Noting that the General Assembly, in its resolution 2597 (XXIV) of 16 December 1969, has requested the Secretary-General, in pursuance of his study on respect for human rights in armed conflicts, to give special attention to the need for better application of existing humanitarian international conventions and rules to such conflicts,

Having received the Secretary-General's report on protection of women and children in emergency or wartime, fighting for peace, national liberation and independence, concerning the conditions of women and children in the occupied territories in the Middle East and the steps taken by the United Nations with respect to human rights in armed conflicts,

1. Renews its solemn appeal to all women throughout the world to make every effort to contribute, in their families and in their communities, to the establishment of peace and justice and towards finding a just solution to armed conflicts;

2. Calls upon States to abide fully by their obligations under the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of

4. Requests the General Assembly to consider the possibility of drafting a declaration on the protection of women and children in emergency or wartime;

ADVISORY SERVICES IN HUMAN RIGHTS

Under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, established by the General Assembly in 1955,<sup>32</sup> the United Nations organizes, at the request of Governments, seminars for the exchange of experience concerning human rights problems, and also provides the services of experts and fellowships.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

During 1970, two international seminars, one on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, the other on the participation of women in the economic life of their countries, as well as a regional seminar on the realization of economic and social rights with particular reference to developing countries, were organized as a part of the advisory services programme. The programme for 1970 also included the holding of an international seminar relating to legal aid which had to be postponed until a later date.

The international seminar on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human

Among the topics discussed were: aspirations of youth concerning the standards that should prevail in the accomplishment of present-day humanitarian demands; the role of youth in the implementation of human rights standards; education of youth with regard to human rights and fundamental freedoms; participation of youth in national development; and involvement of youth in international co-operation for the protection and promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The second international seminar, on the participation of women in the economic life of their countries (with reference to the implementation of article 10 of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women), took place in Moscow, USSR, from 8 to 21 September 1970.

The seminar discussed the following topics: the extent of women's participation in the economic life of their countries; preparation of women for participation in economic life; conditions and measures required to enable women to combine work, family and civic responsibilities; and the role of Governments, non-governmental organizations and society as a whole in the implementation of article 10 of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women.

The regional seminar on the realization of economic and social rights, with particular reference to developing countries, was held in Lusaka, Zambia, from 23 June to 4 July 1970.

Among the topics discussed were: consideration of the material and other conditions necessary for the progressive realization of economic, social and cultural rights at the national level; review of steps and measures, including constitutional provisions, legislation, administrative regulations and procedures and court decisions, taken at the national level; and the role of international action for the achievement of economic, social and cultural rights in developing countries.

A total of 46 fellowship awards were granted in 1970 to recipients from the following 30 countries: Afghanistan, Australia, Bolivia, Burundi, Canada, China, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guy-ana, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Madagascar, Nepal, New Zealand, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Syria, Thailand, Togo, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, and the United Arab Republic. The programme for 1970 included several awards on questions relating to the status of women, the administration of justice in family courts and the rights of the child, and on two new topics—the functions of the Procurer-General's office in the promotion of human rights, and respect for human rights in armed conflicts.

In 1970, at the request of Cameroon, the Secretary-General continued to provide the services of an expert to advise on the promotion in that country of the participation of women in national affairs and national development, with particular emphasis on community development.

ACTION BY UNITED NATIONS BODIES

During 1970, attention was given to the advisory services programme by various United Nations bodies, including the Commissions on Human Rights and on the Status of Women, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

In connexion with the possibility of establishing a regional commission on human rights for Africa, the Human Rights Commission, at its 1970 session, among other things asked the Secretary-General to extend all appropriate assistance under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights. (See also page 570.)

The Commission on the Status of Women, at its session in March-April 1970, asked the Secretary-General, in connexion with the unified long-term programme for the advancement of women, to examine the possibility of rendering to Member States—under the advisory services programme—new types of assistance in the field of the status of women.

In a resolution relating to women's service as a means of enabling women to work gratuitously for the benefit of the community, the Commission expressed the hope that regional seminars on women's civic service would be organized within the framework of the advisory services programme. (See also pp. 544 and 546.)

The Economic and Social Council, at its session in July 1970, endorsed the action of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme which, at its session in January 1970, had taken note of the programme of technical co-operation for 1971 set out in the Secretary-General's report, including an appropriation of $250,000 for advisory services in the field of human rights.

At its twenty-fifth session later in the year, the General Assembly, in resolution 2738 A (XXV) on the 1971 United Nations budget, appropriated funds for technical programmes, including $250,000 for the 1971 programme of advisory services in the field of human rights.

OTHER HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS

PUNISHMENT OF WAR CRIMINALS AND PERSONS COMMITTING CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY

In 1970, various United Nations organs again considered the question of the punishment of war criminals and persons committing crimes against humanity, which had been under consideration since 1965.

During the year, replies and comments were received from Governments on matters dealt with in a 1969 study prepared by the Secretary-General on ensuring the arrest, extradition and punishment of persons responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity,<sup>33</sup> and in response to a General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1969.<sup>34</sup>

At its session in February-March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights considered the question and adopted a draft resolution for consideration by the Economic and Social Council. It also decided to keep the item on its agenda. In another decision the Commission among other things called upon all States to observe strictly the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and considered that "grave breaches" of the Conventions, as defined by those Conventions, constituted war crimes and were an affront to humanity in addition to being crimes.

On 27 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the draft resolution recommended by the Human Rights Commission as its resolution 1500(XLVIII). It adopted the text by a vote of 16 to 2, with 9 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Social Committee, where it was approved on 19 May by 8 votes to 2, with 12 abstentions. On a proposal by the USSR, the text was recommended to the General Assembly for adoption.

The General Assembly, at its twenty-fifth session later in 1970, adopted the text on 15 December—as amended in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee—as resolution 2712(XXV), by 55 votes to 4, with 33 abstentions.

By this text, the General Assembly among other things welcomed the fact that the 1968 Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity<sup>35</sup> entered into force on 11 November 1970, and noted with regret that numerous United Nations decisions on the question of the punishment of war criminals were not being fully complied with.

The Assembly expressed its concern that in present-day conditions—as a result of aggressive wars and policies and practices of racism, apartheid and colonialism—war crimes and crimes against humanity were being committed in various parts of the world.

By the operative parts of the text, the Assembly:

(1) drew attention to the fact that many war criminals and persons who had committed crimes against humanity were continuing to take refuge in the territories of certain States and were enjoying protection;

(2) called upon all States to take measures to arrest such persons and extradite them to the countries where they had committed the crimes, so that they could be brought to trial and punished in accordance with the laws of those countries;

(3) condemned the war crimes and crimes against humanity being committed as a result of aggressive wars and the policies of racism, apartheid and colonialism, and called upon the States concerned to bring to trial persons guilty of such crimes;

(4) also called upon all States concerned to intensify their co-operation in the collection and exchange of information which would contribute to the detection, arrest, extradition, trial and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity;

(5) again requested the States concerned which had not already done so to take the necessary measures for the thorough investigation of war crimes and crimes against humanity and for the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of all war criminals and persons guilty of crimes against humanity who had not yet been brought to trial or punished;

(6) asked States which had not yet done so to become parties to the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity as soon as possible;

(7) appealed to Governments to inform the Secretary-General as to the measures they had taken or were taking in that regard;

(8) also appealed to States which had not yet become parties to the Convention strictly to observe the provisions of the Assembly's resolution of 15 December 1969 (2583 (XXIV))<sup>36</sup> to the effect that they should refrain from action running counter to the main purposes of the Convention; and

(9) asked the Secretary-General to continue, in the light of the comments submitted by Governments, the study of the question of war crimes and crimes against humanity and criteria for determining compensation to the victims of such crimes, in order to report to the Assembly at its twenty-sixth (1971) session.

This text reflected amendments put forward in the Third Committee to the draft resolution recommended by the Economic and Social Council. Thus, Poland proposed the addition of the preambular paragraph by which the Assembly welcomed the entry into force of the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, and the operative paragraph by which the General Assembly requested States which had not done so to become parties to the Convention as soon as possible. The preambular paragraph was adopted by a vote of 50 to 4, with 34 abstentions; the operative paragraph by a vote of 37 to 4, with 50 abstentions.

The Byelorussian SSR proposed the addition of two operative paragraphs by which the Assembly appealed to all States to supply the Secretary-General with information on measures they had taken or were taking to become parties to the Convention, and by which the Assembly appealed to States not already parties to the Convention strictly to observe the provisions of General Assembly resolution 2583 (XXIV) to the effect that they should refrain from action running counter to the main purposes of the Convention. The first paragraph was adopted by a vote of 41 to 5, with 46 abstentions, after a suggestion by the United States—to replace the words "all States" by the word "Governments"—had been adopted by 32 votes to 24, with 26 abstentions. The second paragraph proposed by the Byelorussian SSR was adopted by 40 votes to 4, with 46 abstentions. Separate votes were taken on certain parts of the text, and the draft resolution as a whole, as amended, was approved by the Third Committee on 8 December 1970 by a roll-call vote of 47 to 4, with 41 abstentions.

A draft resolution put forward by Saudi Arabia in the Third Committee was not pressed to a vote. By it, the General Assembly among other things would have decided to call on the Sixth (Legal) Committee or any other appropriate organ of the United Nations to study as soon as possible the draft optional protocol<sup>37</sup> (to the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity) and to report the results of its deliberations to the General Assembly.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS

In response to a request by the General Assembly in 1968,<sup>38</sup> the Secretary-General in 1970 submitted a preliminary report on human rights problems arising from developments in science and technology.

In preparing the report—which comprised a summary account of studies on the question already made or in progress—the Secretary-General consulted Governments, the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development, the specialized agencies, regional organizations, other inter-governmental bodies, non-governmental organizations, national academies, institutes of learning and other institutions, and individual scholars.

The report discussed the problem under the following main headings: (a) respect for the privacy of individuals and the integrity and sovereignty of nations in the light of advances in recording and other techniques; (b) protection of the human personality and its physical and intellectual integrity in the light of the advances in biology, medicine and biochemistry; (c) uses of electronics which might affect the rights of the person and the limits which should be placed on such uses in a democratic society; (d) other problems in connexion with human rights arising from developments in science and technology; and (e) the balance which should be established between scientific and technological progress and the intellectual, spiritual, cultural and moral advancement of humanity.

A preliminary memorandum by the World Health Organization (WHO) was submitted later in the year by the Secretary-General. It concerned health aspects of human rights and scientific and technological developments.

At its session in February-March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights, lacking time to study the substantial documentation involved, transmitted the report through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly. It decided to examine the report at its 1971 session, in the light of decisions by the General Assembly and as supplemented by such information as might be collected in the meantime, particularly that submitted by Governments and the competent specialized agencies.

The Economic and Social Council decided on 27 May 1970 to transmit the preliminary report to the General Assembly.

Later in 1970, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly among other things asked the Secretary-General to continue to study the problems relating to human rights arising from developments in science and technology. The Human Rights Commission was asked to give priority at its 1971 session to the examination of the preliminary report—as supplemented by available further information, including WHO'S preliminary memorandum—and to transmit to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, its suggestions and recommendations.

The Assembly also decided to give priority to the item at its 1971 session.

The Assembly took these decisions on 15 December when it unanimously adopted resolution 2721 (XXV) on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee. The Committee approved it unanimously on 11 December, as orally amended by Sierra Leone and by its sponsors, which were Finland, France, Iran, Japan, the Philippines and Sweden.

TRADE UNION RIGHTS

In 1970, in accordance with a request by the Economic and Social Council in 1969,<sup>39</sup> the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts established by the Commission on Human Rights continued its investigations into infringements of trade union rights in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia.

In its report to the Economic and Social Council's session in May 1970, the Ad Hoc Working Group reiterated the conclusions contained in its 1969 report.<sup>40</sup>

With regard to South Africa, the Working Group said, among other things, that the Bantu Laws Amendment Bill submitted to the South African House of Assembly in 1969 was a further attempt at suppressing the rights of African workers. Normal safety measures for African miners did not exist and the compensation paid to the families of African workers who died in mine accidents was totally inadequate.

The Working Group further condemned the migratory labour system and the "Bantustan" system, whose purpose was to restrict freedom of employment for African workers and to provide a pool of cheap labour for white employers.

With regard to the situation in Namibia, the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts concluded that the South West Africa Affairs Act of 1969 had, illegally, further extended the direct control of the South African Government over various mining and labour matters in the territory. The Working Group denounced the system of reserves or "native areas" which were intended by the South African authorities to be reservoirs of cheap labour for industrial areas in Namibia and South Africa. Furthermore, the African workers had no say in the preparation or implementation of "labour contracts," under which they were recruited in native reserves.

With regard to Southern Rhodesia, the Ad Hoc Working Group said it had every reason to believe that repression against African trade unionists continued unabated. Africans were denied the educational opportunities available to Europeans, and employment opportunities for Africans—even in unskilled and low-paying jobs—were decreasing. The condition of African agricultural workers, who had no right of collective bargaining, was found to be deplorable.

The Working Group once again drew the attention of the Economic and Social Council to the responsibility of the United Kingdom Government in the evolution of the present unhappy situation with regard to trade union rights in Southern Rhodesia, and it stressed the need for urgent intervention by that Government in Southern Rhodesia.

At its session in May 1970, the Economic and Social Council had before it—in addition to the report of the Ad Hoc Working Group—a report concerning infringements of trade union rights in the Portuguese colonies in Africa, prepared by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) at the request of the Council.

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council among other things endorsed the conclusions of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts and thanked ILO for its report. It condemned the continuing suppression of trade union rights in southern Africa and called for an end to such suppression and for the immediate and unconditional release of all persons imprisoned for their trade union activities.

The Council also authorized the Ad Hoc Working Group to investigate the conditions of: (a) the African producers of primary products in the Portuguese colonies in Africa; (b) the sector of unorganized labour, such as farm labour, in those colonies; and (c) workers from Mozambique and Angola who were or had been employed in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia. The Working Group was further authorized to investigate the factors leading to discrimination in these sectors.

cil to make these inquiries in co-operation with ILO, other specialized agencies concerned and the major international trade union organizations.

The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Working Group and to give maximum publicity to its report.

The Council took these decisions when it adopted—by a roll-call vote of 17 to 0, with 9 abstentions—resolution 1509(XLVIII), as proposed by Ghana, India, Kenya, the People's Republic of the Congo and Yugoslavia, and as orally amended by them.

Between 16 June and 2 September, the Ad Hoc Working Group heard a number of witnesses, with a view to submitting a further report to the Economic and Social Council in 1971.

EDUCATION OF YOUTH IN THE RESPECT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

At its 1970 session, the Commission on Human Rights, in response to a 1968 request by the General Assembly,<sup>41</sup> again considered the question of the education of youth all over the world with a view to the development of its personality and the strengthening of its respect for the rights of man and fundamental freedoms.

At its 1969 session,<sup>42</sup> the Commission had asked the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) for a report on the question, to be supplemented by the Secretary-General with other pertinent data. These reports were before the Commission in 1970.

The UNESCO report described the agency's methods and programmes used in educating youth in the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. The Secretary-General's report contained information submitted by United Nations Member States, by UNESCO and other interested specialized agencies or their members, by four regional economic commissions, by the United Nations Children's Fund and by inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations.

On 25 March the Commission decided to resume consideration of the question as a matter of priority at its 1971 session, and asked the Secretary-General and the Director-General of UNESCO to bring to the Commission's attention such supplementary documentation as would facilitate its consideration of the question.

At its twenty-fifth session later in 1970, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (2633 (XXV)) on the question of youth, its education in the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, its problems and needs, and its participation in national development.

Among other things, the Assembly stressed the major role, contribution and participation of youth in the promotion of world peace and justice, social and economic progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms, self-determination and the emancipation of all peoples in building a better future. It called upon Governments, all institutions of learning, the United Nations organs and the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned to act so as to ensure the education of young people in the spirit of the ideas of peace based on justice, co-operation among peoples, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and the principles of international law, and also to take effective steps to combat propaganda in favour of unjust wars, as well as to combat racist, nazi and similar ideologies.

The Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Government of Yugoslavia, organized, on a world-wide basis, a seminar on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights, which was held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, from 2 to 12 June 1970. (See also pp. 559-61.)

QUESTION OF CREATION OF POST OF UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

The question of the creation of the post of a United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, which had been before the General Assembly and other United Nations organs since 1965, was again before the Assembly at its twenty-fifth session in 1970. In response to an

Assembly request in 1969,<sup>43</sup> the Secretary-General in 1970 submitted an analytical study relating to two 1967 resolutions of the Economic and Social Council on the question.<sup>44</sup>

Debate in the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee on the question revealed a wide divergence of views on the desirability of establishing the proposed office.

Supporters of the proposal—among them Costa Rica, France and the United States—maintained that the consistently heavy agenda of existing United Nations bodies dealing with human rights showed that the programme and activities of the United Nations in that field needed to be rationalized and stimulated.

Those opposed to creation of the new office—including Ceylon, Saudi Arabia and the USSR—argued that its activities would duplicate the work of existing machinery and would lead to unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of sovereign States.

During its consideration of the question, the Third Committee had before it the text of the draft resolution on establishing the office of High Commissioner recommended by the Economic and Social Council in 1967 (1237(XLII))<sup>45</sup> and amendments thereto submitted by the USSR and by India; a draft resolution submitted by Ceylon and amendments thereto submitted by Afghanistan, Canada, Costa Rica, France, the Netherlands, the United States and Uruguay and sub-amendments to these by Saudi Arabia and by the USSR; and two draft resolutions submitted by Saudi Arabia.

The Third Committee eventually decided to recommend to the General Assembly that debate on the item be adjourned to the next session of the Assembly. This action, taken on a proposal by Ceylon, was adopted on 7 December by a roll-call vote of 54 to 38, with 15 abstentions.

On 14 December, by a recorded vote of 80 to 1, with 11 abstentions, the General Assembly decided to defer consideration of the item to its twenty-sixth session in 1971.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

As in previous years, the General Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee had before it in 1970 a draft Convention and a draft Declaration on Freedom of Information. The draft Declaration had been completed and adopted by the Economic and Social Council in 1960; the draft Convention had been before the General Assembly since 1959. In 1959, 1960 and 1961, the Third Committee had adopted the preamble and articles 1 through 4 of the draft Convention.<sup>46</sup> In 1969, the General Assembly, again unable to take any substantive action on freedom of information because of its heavy programme of work, decided to give priority to the question at its twenty-fifth session in 1970.<sup>47</sup>

However, in 1970 the Assembly was again unable to consider the draft Declaration or draft Convention on Freedom of Information. On 15 December, by 98 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions, it decided to give priority to this item at its twenty-sixth (1971) session, taking into account that consideration of the draft Declaration had been deferred for a decade, and that the draft Convention on Freedom of Information had been before the Assembly for 18 years.

The Assembly took this decision in adopting resolution 2722 (XXV), as recommended by the Third Committee, where it was adopted on 11 December by 67 votes to 0, with 15 abstentions, on a proposal by Afghanistan, the Philippines and Saudi Arabia.

Other communications concerning human rights—largely complaints alleging denial or violation of such rights—are summarized in a confidential list furnished every year to the members of the Commission in private meeting. The identity of the writers is not disclosed unless they have indicated that there is no objection to disclosure. Copies of the communications summarized in the confidential list are sent to any United Nations Member State referred to in the communications, and any reply which a Government might send is submitted to the Commission, together with the confidential list.

By a Council resolution of 1967,<sup>49</sup> the Commission and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities were authorized to examine information relevant to: gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, as exemplified by the policy of apartheid as practised in the Republic of South Africa and in Namibia (South West Africa), a territory under the direct responsibility of the United Nations and illegally occupied by South Africa; and to racial discrimination as practised in Southern Rhodesia.

The Human Rights Commission was also authorized, in appropriate cases, to make a thorough study of situations which revealed a consistent pattern of such violations and to report, with recommendations, to the Economic and Social Council.

The Council established additional procedures for dealing with alleged infringements of trade union rights (1950 and 1953) and with information relating to forced labour (1956), notwithstanding the provisions referred to above. Such communications are also included in the confidential list.

A confidential document of a statistical nature, based on the confidential lists of communications without disclosing either the names of the writers or the countries to which they relate, is also presented to the Commission.

In 1970, the Secretary-General submitted a non-confidential list of communications and a confidential list of communications to the Commission's 1970 session, together with a statistical summary of the confidential list.

STUDY OF REALIZATION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL RIGHTS

At its 1970 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered the question of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the study of special problems relating to human rights in developing countries.<sup>50</sup>

The Commission had before it a note by the Secretary-General containing replies from 23 Governments to a request for information with a view to exchanging experience among States on the effectiveness of the methods and means used by them in the realization of economic, social and cultural rights.

The Special Rapporteur, Manouchehr Ganji, submitted a preliminary report in which he outlined the framework of a comprehensive report on the question. Commission members described efforts of their Governments to ensure to their nationals the enjoyment and protection of the rights in question, and made suggestions about matters which the Special Rapporteur should take into account in preparing the comprehensive report.

These included: (a) the effectiveness of the norms and principles contained in international instruments; (b) the degree of co-ordination between United Nations bodies which contributed to the realization of the rights under study; (c) conditions regarding the realization of economic, social and cultural rights in countries having different social systems; (d) problems encountered in the process of realization of economic, social and cultural rights and measures applied by Governments in order to overcome those problems; (e) the respective role and responsibility, with respect to the creation of real guarantees and material conditions, of State organs, semi-State organs and private institutions in the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights; (f) the practical influence of the enjoyment of those rights in enhancing the dignity of the individual; and (g) the significance of effecting basic socio-economic transformations in countries for the realization of economic, social and cultural rights.

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1502 (XLVIII)—by 26 votes to 0, with 1 abstention—on the recommendation of the Human Rights Commission, and as approved by the Council's Social Committee on 19 May by 21 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

By this text, the Council asked the Special Rapporteur to complete his study as soon as possible, taking into account the views expressed by the Human Rights Commission, and to submit his final report to the Commission if possible at its 1971 session, but not later than at its 1972 session.

The Council also asked the Secretary-General to continue providing the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance and urged all Governments that had not already done so to submit information on the effectiveness of methods and means used by them in the realization of economic, social and cultural rights.

The Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Government of Zambia, organized in 1970 a regional seminar on the realization of economic and social rights, with particular reference to developing countries. The seminar was held at Lusaka, Zambia, from 23 June to 4 July. (See also pp. 559-61.)

PERIODIC REPORTS ON HUMAN RIGHTS

At its 1970 session, the Commission on Human Rights considered periodic reports submitted by Governments and specialized agencies on economic, social and cultural rights, as well as additional reports on civil and political rights received during the latter part of 1969.

In accordance with a schedule established by the Economic and Social Council in 1965,<sup>51</sup> reports are submitted for consideration in 2 continuing three-year cycle: in the first year, on civil and political rights; in the second year, on economic, social and cultural rights; and in the third year, on freedom of information.

Reports on economic, social and cultural rights were submitted by 33 States for the period from 1 July 1966 to 30 June 1969—together with reports submitted by the International Labour Organisation; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the World Health Organization; the Universal Postal Union; the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization; and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—as well as comments from non-governmental organizations. They were considered by the Ad Hoc Committee on Periodic Reports on Human Rights and by the Commission on the Status of Women (see page 544) during their 1970 sessions, as well as by the Human Rights Commission.

On the recommendation of its Ad Hoc Committee, the Commission among other things expressed the belief that the reports on economic, social and cultural rights and the information available from other United Nations sources revealed the following trends, characteristics and problems of special importance and common interest:

(a) the positive influence on some Member States of United Nations instruments to promote and protect the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and guarantee their application;

(b) the growing importance attributed to those rights in law and in practice in States having different economic and social systems and at different stages of development, and particularly the interest shown by them in the study of problems relating to employment, to the improvement of living standards and to the environment, as well as the place accorded to problems of youth in the priorities of those States;

(c) the emphasis placed by many States on the need to combat discrimination in all its forms and on the role of education as a means of achieving progress in that field;

(d) the efforts made to devise legal and administrative procedures to facilitate the implementation of those rights and the application of systems for the verification of such implementation and to ensure fuller participation by the population;

(e) the realization on the part of many States that the difficulties which they were encounter-

ing derived from the inadequacy of economic resources that could be allocated for the attainment of those rights, as well as from circumstances not within their own control; and

(f) the fact that the realization of those rights in the developing countries depended not on the developing countries alone but also on international action by the United Nations, by the specialized agencies and by the international community, especially in the field of development.

The Commission affirmed the need for increasing the resources available to the various bodies of the United Nations system concerned with technical and financial assistance, with a view to promoting international co-operation required in the realization of economic, social and cultural rights so that those bodies might be in a better position to provide Member States—and particularly the developing countries—with the assistance they might require in reaching solutions to the problems and difficulties experienced in that field.

The Human Rights Commission invited States to participate in a spirit of international co-operation in the periodic reporting system, which represented a source of information on the exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms and was a valuable incentive to Governments to promote those rights. It asked Governments to give precedence in their reports to comments concerning the specific application of measures for the promotion of human rights and, if they so wished, to give detailed consideration to aspects of such application in which they had special experience.

Governments were also asked by the Commission to include in their reports a review of the status of their ratification of, or accession to, the relevant international human rights treaties adopted by the United Nations.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the procedure for dealing with periodic reports again be altered to allow Governments more time in which to prepare their reports, to give the Secretariat sufficient time to issue the necessary documentation and to permit members of the Ad Hoc Committee to study and evaluate the material carefully.

The Economic and Social Council, at its session in May 1970, gave effect to this recommendation when it unanimously adopted resolution 1506(XLVIII) on 27 May, as approved without vote by its Social Committee on 20 May.

By this text, the Council authorized the Ad Hoc Committee to submit its report to the Commission within one year following the receipt of reports, notwithstanding the provisions of its resolution 1074 C (XXXIX) of 28 July 1965.<sup>52</sup>

STATUS OF INTERNATIONAL COVENANTS ON HUMAN RIGHTS

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights were adopted by the General Assembly on 16 December 1966 and opened for signature, ratification and accession.<sup>53</sup>

The Assembly expressed the hope, when it adopted these instruments, that they would be signed and ratified or acceded to without delay and would come into force at an early date. The Secretary-General was asked to submit to the Assembly, at its future sessions, reports concerning the state of ratifications of the three instruments.

As at 31 December 1970, both Covenants had been ratified or acceded to by nine States and the Optional Protocol by four States. Also at the end of 1970, 46 States had signed the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 45 had signed the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and 17 had signed the Optional Protocol. The Covenants each require 35 ratifications or accessions before they enter into force, while the Optional Protocol requires 10 ratifications or accessions.

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly decided, without objection, on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, to take note of the Secretary-General's 1970 report on the question and to request him to submit another report to the Assembly's 1971 session.

SLAVERY AND PRACTICES OF APARTHEID AND COLONIALISM

At its session in August 1970, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, of the Commission on Human Rights, considered a progress report on the question of slavery and the slave trade in all their practices and manifestations, including the practices of apartheid and colonialism, submitted by the Special Rapporteur on the question, Mohamed Awad, in accordance with a 1968 resolution of the Economic and Social Council.<sup>54</sup>

The Sub-Commission asked the Special Rapporteur to complete his task and to submit a final report to the Sub-Commission at its 1971 session. It also asked the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Special Rapporteur with the necessary assistance for the completion of his task, and asked him once again to urge those States which had not yet ratified the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, to expedite their ratification procedures.

The Sub-Commission also asked the Commission on Human Rights to recommend a draft resolution on the question for consideration by the Economic and Social Council in 1971.

ESTABLISHMENT OF REGIONAL COMMISSIONS ON HUMAN RIGHTS

When it adopted the International Covenants on Human Rights in 1966,<sup>55</sup> the General Assembly considered the advisability of proposals made for the establishment of national commissions on human rights or the designation of other appropriate institutions to perform certain functions pertaining to the observance of the Covenants.<sup>56</sup> The Commission on Human Rights, which was asked to examine the question in all its aspects, was not able to consider the substance of the question until its session in 1970.

The Commission did, however, decide at its 1967 session to set up an ad hoc study group to examine a proposal made at that session to establish regional commissions on human rights within the United Nations family. After studying the report of that group, the Commission in 1968 asked the Secretary-General to transmit the report to Member States and regional inter-governmental organizations for their comments and to consider the possibility of arranging suitable regional seminars under the human rights advisory services programme to discuss the usefulness and advisability of the establishment of such commissions.

At its 1969 session, the Commission deferred consideration of the question until the results of a seminar to be held in Cairo, United Arab Republic, could be made available. The seminar was held from 2 to 15 September 1969 for participants from African countries to consider the establishment of regional commissions on human rights, with special reference to Africa.

At its 1969 session, the Commission deferred Commission, noting the report and conclusions of the Cairo seminar on the possibility of establishing a regional commission on human rights for Africa, asked the Secretary-General to extend all appropriate assistance under the advisory services programme and to arrange for appropriate consultation and exchange of information between the Commission and the Organization of African Unity in connexion with the possible establishment of the proposed commission.

The Commission also agreed that the question of whether or not to establish national commissions on human rights should be decided by each Government in the light of the traditions and institutions of its own country, and decided to ask the Secretary-General to forward the records of its debate on the question through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly.

The Economic and Social Council approved this decision on 27 May.

ACTIVITIES ARISING OUT OF DECISIONS TAKEN BY THE COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

At its 1970 session, the Commission on Human Rights decided to authorize continuation of investigations of human rights violations in southern Africa (see pp. 513-21) and in the territories under military occupation in the Middle East (see pp. 521-27).

Inasmuch as these decisions entailed financial implications, the Economic and Social Council on 27 May 1970 decided that the activities arising out of these Human Rights Commission decisions should be undertaken in 1970, bearing in mind the necessity to effect the maximum savings when allocating funds.

The Council also authorized the Secretary-General to inform the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the Council, taking into account the above provisions, considered the relevant programmes and expenditures to be of an urgent nature.

The Council took these decisions when it adopted—by a vote of 12 to 0, with 14 abstentions—resolution 1505(XLVIII), on the recommendation of its Social Committee, which approved it on 22 May by 12 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions, on a proposal by India, Pakistan and Sudan.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2081 (XX) of 20 December 1965 in which, inter alia, it decided to hasten the conclusion, among other instruments, of a convention on freedom of information,

Recalling further its resolution 2448 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968 by which it decided, pending the completion of the draft Convention on Freedom of Information, to give priority at its twenty-fourth session to the consideration and adoption of the draft Declaration on Freedom of Information,

CHAPTER XX

QUESTIONS RELATING TO YOUTH

During 1970, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights took decisions concerning youth, its education in the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, its problems and needs, and its participation in national development.

Activities involving youth were carried on by a number of organizations of the United Nations system during 1970. The Economic and Social Council and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, for example, studied the feasibility of creating an international corps of volunteers for development (see pp. 347-48). Programmes involving youth were also included in the work of the specialized agencies and the regional economic commissions.

DECISIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

At its February-March 1970 session, held in New York, the Commission on Human Rights studied the question of the education of youth all over the world for the development of its personality and the strengthening of its respect for the rights of man and fundamental freedoms.

After considering a report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) on the subject, and a supplementary report of the Secretary-General, the Commission decided to resume consideration of the question at its 1971 session (see page 565). The Economic and Social Council was informed accordingly of the Commission's decision.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Later in the year, the General Assembly examined the subject of youth, its education in the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, its problems and needs, and its participation in national development. It did so on the basis of a report by the Secretary-General. The report summarized the action taken by Member States and by the Commission on Human Rights with regard to the education of youth.

The report noted that a seminar on the role of youth in the promotion and protection of human rights had been held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, in June 1970.

Included in an annex to the report was information from Greece, Guatemala, Iceland, Israel, Jamaica, Madagascar, Syria and the United Arab Republic on the specific action they had taken in their efforts to ensure that young people were educated in a spirit of respect for human rights.

On 11 November 1970, the Assembly, in adopting a resolution on questions relating to youth, expressed its awareness of the fact that slow progress in the realization of the principles and objectives of the United Nations Charter and the usurpation of the inalienable rights of peoples gave rise to restlessness among youth. The Assembly expressed concern at the fact that armed conflicts were continuing and acts of aggression were being committed in various parts of the world, bringing death, injury and suffering to various segments of the population, particularly young people.

The Assembly also noted positive attitudes expressed by youth towards the principles embodied in the Charter, their support for peace, justice and international security, and their stand against, among other things, the continuance of colonialism and apartheid, foreign rule or occupation, and wars of aggression. It noted, further, the discontent of youth with the slow progress made in the development of the developing countries, with the economic and technological gap and the widening disparities in the levels of living between the developed and developing countries, and with unemployment.

The Assembly recognized the important role of the family in the education of youth in respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms. The expressed desire of youth to have the United Nations become a truly universal organization in order to achieve better international relations and to end the arms race and power politics was recognized by the Assembly. The efforts of young people, the Assembly considered, should be directed towards strengthening peace based on justice and friendship among peoples, against the threat of war, against all forms of oppression and exploitation, and towards the development of fruitful economic, scientific and cultural co-operation among all countries.

Stressing the efforts of the World Youth Assembly, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to consult Governments and the specialized agencies concerned on the possibility of convening world youth assemblies in the light of the experience gained during the organization of the first World Youth Assembly, especially keeping in mind the need for rules of procedure that ensured fair treatment and the full participation of all youth representatives. The valuable contribution to international understanding made by youth organizations, both national and international, was recognized.

Emphasizing that youth's participation in the social, economic, political, cultural and other domains of human activities was urgent, and that it was necessary that young people should be fully aware of the positive and specific role they should play in the development of their countries, the Assembly called upon Governments, all institutions of learning, the United Nations organs and specialized agencies concerned and all other organizations concerned to act in such a way as to ensure the education of young people in the spirit of the ideas of peace based on justice, co-operation among peoples, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and for the principles of international law.

The Assembly welcomed the generous contribution to voluntary services that youth was already making. It considered it important that young people should resolutely oppose military and other action designed to suppress the liberation movements of peoples still under colonial, racist or alien domination and under military occupation, and should support those peoples in every way possible in conformity with the principles of the Charter and the decisions of the United Nations organs recognizing the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples for their freedom and independence, in their efforts to attain independence in accordance with the inalienable right of self-determination.

Governments were urged to respond to the aspirations of youth and, in the case of developed countries, to the appeal of young people to provide financial and other assistance to the developing countries in their efforts to carry out their development policies. It was recommended that youth be fully involved in efforts to accelerate the over-all growth of developing countries, bearing in mind the special social and economic situation of youth in these countries.

Governments were requested to take into account the relevant recommendations of UNESCO and to encourage closer association of young people in the planning and management of education programmes. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies concerned to continue to undertake programmes related to the problems and needs of youth and to co-operate closely, as appropriate, with youth organizations.

These were among the decisions taken by the Assembly in adopting resolution 2633 (XXV), by a vote of 110 to 0, with 3 abstentions. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved a revised text on 14 October 1970, by 98 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Afghanistan, Algeria, Bolivia, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chile, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guyana, India, Kenya, Kuwait, Libya, Mali, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Somalia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, Upper Volta, Yugoslavia and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the Third Committee's discussion of the text, many amendments were proposed, some of which were incorporated into the revised text recommended to the Assembly.

When the Third Committee's text came before a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 11 November 1970, it was further amended on the basis of proposals submitted by the Byelorussian SSR, by Canada and the United States and by Tunisia.

Also on 11 November 1970, the Assembly approved without objection a recommendation by the Third Committee that a document submitted by Saudi Arabia dealing with youth's participation in activities related to war be transmitted through the Economic and Social Council to the Commission on Human Rights. In addition, it approved a recommendation of the Third Committee that the Committee's report on youth, its education in respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, its problems and needs, and its participation in national development be transmitted to the youth organizations that had been invited to the World Youth Assembly and to certain scientific associations drawn from lists available to the United Nations Secretariat.

ASSISTANCE ACTIVITIES

In 1970, an adviser on youth work to the Hong Kong Government was assigned by the United Nations for an initial one-year period. At the end of 1970, the United Nations adviser on youth work to the Government of Guyana completed his assignment.

Short-term missions were undertaken by the United Nations Inter-regional Adviser on Youth Policies and Programmes in the following countries: Burundi, Cameroon, Chile, Madagascar, Peru, Togo and Upper Volta. Advice was also given to Afghanistan and Nigeria on national youth policies and programmes.

During 1970, the United Nations provided technical appraisals of youth programmes and projects undertaken by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Programme and the World Food Programme.

In December 1970, an inter-agency mission made up of representatives of the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the International Labour Organisation, UNESCO, and UNICEF visited Zambia at the request of the Government to advise on national youth policy and programmes.

With the assistance of the United Nations, the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) conducted regional youth seminars during 1970. The ECAFE seminar, on the role of youth in national development, was held in Bangkok, Thailand, in September-October 1970. The ECA seminar on national youth service programmes was held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in November-December 1970.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination's Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Youth held its sixth session in July 1970. The Meeting focused on inter-agency co-operation in field programmes related to youth, with a view to strengthening co-operation with youth and international youth organizations by establishing effective channels of communication and devising a strategy for rural youth work in the developing countries.

- The General Assembly,
- Conscious of the major role, contribution and participation of youth in the promotion of world peace and justice, social and economic progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms, self-determination and the emancipation of all peoples in building a better future,
- Recognizing the positive influence of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on the ideas, needs and aspirations of youth and its awareness of the serious problems confronting the world today,
- Expressing concern at the fact that armed conflicts are continuing and acts of aggression are being committed in various parts of the world, bringing death, injury and suffering to various segments of the population, particularly young people,

Aware of the fact that the present slow progress in the realization of the principles and objectives of the Charter and the usurpation of the inalienable rights of peoples give rise to restlessness among youth,

Taking into account that at their gatherings young people have expressed their positive attitudes towards the principles embodied in the Charter, their strong support for peace, justice and international security, their firm stand against the continuance of colonialism and subjugation of peoples to alien domination, foreign rule or occupation, wars of aggression, apartheid and all racist ideologies and policies which constitute a major source of the present unrest and dissatisfaction among young people,

Noting the discontent of youth with the slow progress made in the development of the developing countries, with the ever growing economic and technological gap and the widening disparities in the levels of living between the developed and the developing countries, and with unemployment,

Noting further that young people are aware of the need for many developed countries to make greater efforts to contribute to the development of the developing countries,

Recognizing the important role of the family in the education of youth in the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recognizing the expressed desire of youth to have the United Nations become a truly universal organization in order to achieve better international relations and to end the arms race and power politics,

Welcoming the fact that the World Youth Assembly, convened by the General Assembly as a part of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, provided a platform for fruitful exchanges among its participants and a forum through which youth could support the activities of the United Nations and its system of organizations,

Taking note of the activities and the message of the World Youth Assembly, held at United Nations Headquarters from 9 to 17 July 1970,

Taking note further of the report of the Seminar on the Role of Youth in the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, held at Belgrade from 2 to 12 June 1970,

1. Reaffirms the provisions of its resolutions 2037 (XX) of 7 December 1965, 2445 (XXIII) and 2447 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and 2497 (XXIV) of 28 October 1969;

2. Considers that the efforts of young people should be directed towards strengthening peace based on justice and friendship among peoples, against the threat of war, against all forms of oppression and exploitation and towards the development of fruitful economic, scientific and cultural co-operation among all countries;

3. Emphasizes the efforts of the World Youth Assembly;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to consult Governments and the specialized agencies concerned on the possibility of convening, in the future, world youth assemblies in the light of the experience gained during the organization of the first World Youth Assembly, especially keeping in mind the need for rules of procedure that ensure fair treatment and the full participation of all youth representatives, for a truly universal representation and for the strict observance of freedom of speech, as well as the financial implications and other relevant aspects, and to submit, when appropriate, a report to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council;

CHAPTER XXI

SOCIAL QUESTIONS

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT AND POLICY

Social Aspects of the Second United Nations Development Decade

During 1970, the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly considered various aspects of social policy and planning in national development and in the Second United Nations Development Decade.

Serving as a basis for discussion in all three bodies was a report of the Meeting of Experts on Social Policy and Planning in National Development, held in Stockholm, Sweden, from 1 to 10 September 1969. The report stressed the need for a unified approach to development which would take into account both economic and social aspects.

The Commission for Social Development, meeting in March 1970, felt that while social policies were the responsibility of the country concerned, it was necessary at the international level to elaborate guidelines which would help each country to examine its own situation, define its objectives and targets and develop its policies and programmes. The Commission also felt that research was needed to develop indicators which could signal dangerous tendencies in the national social situation, and serve as a basis for evaluating social progress and for developing plans for social action in both the public and private sectors.

The Commission set forth its views and recommendations in a draft resolution which it proposed for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

On 26 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council, adopting the text recommended by the Commission, endorsed the views of the Meeting of Experts regarding, among other things, the need for a unified approach to development analysis and planning, which would include components designed: to leave no section of the population outside the scope of change and development; to effect structural change which favoured national development; to aim at social equity; and to give high priority to the development of human potentials. The Council also endorsed the need for improved social data and research and for training programmes in the unified approach to development.

The Council recommended that Governments, in their development planning, take into account the unified approach to development. It endorsed the unified approach envisaged by the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (see pp. 319-29) and requested those United Nations bodies charged with implementing the strategy to give serious consideration to the role of the Commission for Social Development in the continuing appraisal of the progress of the implementation of the strategy.

The Secretary-General was requested, in co-operation with other members of the United Nations family, to undertake further work on the unified approach to development and to submit an initial report on the subject to the Commission for Social Development at its 1971 session.

The Council also stressed the need for additional bilateral and multilateral aid for development, including aid for social purposes.

These decisions were among those embodied in resolution 1494 (XLVIII), which was adopted, unanimously, as recommended by the Social Committee. The text was based on a proposal by the Commission for Social Development, as amended in the Social Committee by Pakistan, Uruguay and Yugoslavia. It was unanimously approved by the Social Committee on 15 May 1970. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly, endorsing the above Economic and Social Council resolution, confirmed the need for a unified approach to development analysis and planning which would fully integrate economic and social components in the formulation of policies and programmes at the national and international levels.

In particular, the Assembly supported the views of the Meeting of Experts on Social Policy and Planning in National Development concerning the need for a unified approach to development which would: leave no sector of the population outside the scope of change and development; effect the necessary structural change to involve all sectors of the population in development; aim at social equity, including the equitable distribution of income and wealth in the nation; and give high priority to the development of human potentials, including providing vocational and technical training and employment opportunities and meeting the needs of children.

The Assembly requested those bodies responsible for implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade to aim at the most effective integration of policy measures across the different sectors. It further requested the Economic and Social Council to ensure the contribution of the Commission for Social Development to the International Development Strategy.

The Secretary-General was requested to study measures for unifying methods of collecting and evaluating social data and to evolve methods and techniques for the application of a unified approach, to be put at the disposal of Governments at their request.

Finally, the Assembly stressed the need for financial and technical assistance to support initiatives leading to a unified approach to development within the context of the Second Development Decade.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2681 (XXV), which was adopted by a vote of 100 to 0, with 10 abstentions. The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, where the text was approved on 30 October 1970 by a vote of 68 to 0, with 8 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was based on a proposal by Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, Jamaica, Kenya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Malta, the Netherlands, Norway, the Philippines, Sudan, Sweden, Syria and the United Republic of Tanzania, as amended by Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia.

An oral amendment submitted by the USSR was rejected by the Second Committee by a vote of 44 to 9, with 18 abstentions. By the amendment, the Assembly would have stressed the need, in the context of the Second United Nations Development Decade, for financial and technical assistance "provided from funds of the United Nations Development Programme and from the funds of the international financial institutions in the United Nations system, as well as from sources of bilateral assistance," to support initiatives leading to the achievement of a unified approach to development.

Following rejection of the amendment, the USSR requested a separate vote on the provision as it stood; it was approved by a vote of 63 to 8, with 2 abstentions.

In another 1970 development, the Commission for Social Development took decisions on the social aspects of the Second United Nations Development Decade.

In response to a General Assembly request of 17 December 1968 to prepare conclusions and proposals for a draft international development strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,<sup>1</sup> the Commission formulated (a) a set of social objectives in fields such as nutrition, health, education, housing, employment and conditions of work; and (b) a set of policy measures concerning the reform of agrarian structures, incomes policy, regional development policy and popular participation in development. The Commission requested the Economic and Social Council to invite the relevant United Nations bodies to take those objectives and policies into account in preparing the strategy for the Second Development Decade.

These recommendations were embodied in Commission resolution 5 (XXI).

By a decision of 26 May 1970, taken without vote, the Economic and Social Council drew the attention of the bodies responsible for preparing the Second United Nations Development Decade to the above resolution.

Other Aspects of Social Development and Policy

SOCIAL FACTORS IN IMPROVING NUTRITION

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a report on nutrition prepared by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). The report drew attention to the current low levels of nutrition in developing countries, and to the fact that malnutrition would continue until 1985, due mainly to inequalities in the distribution of staple foods. The problem would be aggravated by a serious gap between the demand and the supply of protein, the report noted.

On 26 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council reaffirmed that the elimination of hunger and malnutrition should be a primary social objective, particularly in relation to the Second United Nations Development Decade, and expressed its conviction that the situation called for urgent and concerted action at the national, regional and international levels.

The Council recommended that Governments adopt—as an integral part of their national development plans and in the context of the Second Development Decade—adequate food and nutrition policies, based on studies of social and cultural factors in relation to consumption, with the aim of making the benefits of proper nutrition available to all sectors of the population, particularly children and other vulnerable groups.

The Council requested FAO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Development Programme and other agencies concerned to strengthen United Nations assistance to Governments in the formulation and implementation of sound food and nutrition policies, and to strengthen programmes aimed at augmenting the development of national food resources and improving the quality and distribution of food in developing countries, particularly the extensive production of protein foods of marine origin. Appropriate organizations in the United Nations system, including FAO, WHO and UNICEF, were also requested to intensify research on malnutrition.

The Council's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 1492(XLVIII), which was adopted, unanimously, on the recommendation of the Council's Social Committee. The text was based on a proposal by the Commission for Social Development, approved unanimously by the Social Committee on 14 May 1970, and amended in the plenary meeting by the United Kingdom. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

TRENDS IN THE SOCIAL SITUATION OF CHILDREN

Also at its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered a report by the Secretary-General on trends in the social situation of children. The report emphasized the right of the child to adequate protection and effective preparation for a useful life.

On 26 May 1970, the Council reaffirmed its belief that the observance of the rights of the child as they had been proclaimed by the United Nations, for example in its Declaration of the Rights of the Child,<sup>2</sup> called for a greater effort on the part of the international community and Governments. The Council expressed its awareness that the social situation of children remained disturbing, particularly in developing countries, and that the number of sick, under-nourished and uneducated children in the world was increasing.

The Council invited the Secretary-General and the competent organizations in the United Nations system, particularly UNICEF, to increase their efforts to learn more about the needs of children and youth and to intensify their assistance to Governments in enabling them to meet these needs, especially in the fields of health, nutrition, education and social welfare.

The Council drew the attention of Member States and organs of the United Nations system to the need to increase their efforts: to prevent and eliminate suffering among children, including those who were victims of wars and of injustice emanating from existing colonial regimes; to meet the needs of the physically and mentally handicapped; and to provide protection for children born out of wedlock, who came from broken homes, or whose work was exploited for material gain, without prejudice to continuing efforts to abolish child labour in all countries.

The Council further recommended to the international community, and in particular to UNESCO, that it devote special attention to the psycho-sociological problems involved in the transition from adolescence to adulthood, with a view to preparing the young for their future role in society. The Secretary-General was requested to prepare, at appropriate intervals, further reports on various aspects of the subject.

These decisions by the Economic and Social Council were embodied in resolution 1493

(XLVIII), which was adopted, unanimously, on the recommendation of the Social Committee. The text was based on a proposal by the Commission for Social Development, as amended by France, Uruguay and Yugoslavia. It was approved by the Social Committee on 15 May 1970, by a vote of 22 to 0, with 1 abstention. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

PERIODICITY OF REPORTS ON WORLD SOCIAL SITUATION

On 5 June 1969, the Economic and Social Council had asked the Commission for Social Development to examine the question of how often the Secretary-General's periodic reports on the world social situation, which were then being issued every three years, should be prepared.<sup>3</sup>

At its 1970 session, the Commission agreed to a proposal by the Secretary-General that, in view of the new cycle of biennial sessions of the Commission, the reports be published at four-year intervals, beginning with the 1974 report.

On 26 May 1970, without vote, the Economic and Social Council approved the agreement by the Commission for Social Development that the Report on the World Social Situation should, in future, be issued every four years.

WORK PROGRAMME OF COMMISSION FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

At its 1970 session, the Commission for Social Development reviewed the progress being made towards the implementation of its five-year programme of work for 1969-1973. The Commission stressed the importance it attached to those aspects of the programme dealing with the social components of over-all development policies and social planning. It also emphasized the central importance of policies concerned with the advancement of youth and youth participation in economic and social development.

The Commission decided to undertake a review of its current work programme at its 1971 session, and requested the Secretariat to formulate relevant proposals for its consideration in the light of developments since 1969 and the requirements of the Second United Nations Development Decade.

RESOLUTION 1492 (XLVIII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/4864, and as orally amended by United Kingdom, adopted unanimously by Council on 26 May 1970, meeting 1690.

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling the mandate to the Commission for Social Development in Council resolution 1139(XLI) of 29 July 1966 to give priority attention to programmes furthering, inter alia, the aim of eliminating hunger and raising the levels of health and nutrition,

Reaffirming the statement in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development that the elimination of hunger and malnutrition should be a primary social objective, particularly in relation to the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Noting with appreciation the report by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on social questions in the improvement of the nutrition status in developing countries which draws attention to: (a) the present low levels of food consumption and nutrition in developing countries and their adverse effects on the health and productivity of the population; (b) the conclusion of the study on the Indicative World Plan for Agricultural Development that, despite the attainment of food production objectives, malnutrition would continue until 1985 mainly due to inequalities in the distribution of staple foods; and (c) the possibility of a serious gap between effective demand and supply of protein by 1985 that would aggravate the problem of unequal distribution of protein foods in most developing countries,

versible physical and mental harm inflicted by malnutrition on over 300 million children, and on other vulnerable groups, in the developing countries,

Realizing that adequate nutrition is essential to the health and social well-being of the family and nation and is a vital factor in national development,

Recognizing the importance of improving social and economic structures, based on social justice, in bringing about conditions conducive to adequate nutrition in the framework of a better life for all groups of the population,

Convinced that the situation calls for urgent and concerted action by Governments and the organizations of the United Nations system concerned, at the national, regional and international levels,

1. Recommends that Governments, in consonance with the principle of balanced, integrated economic and social development, should adopt, in the context of the Second United Nations Development Decade, adequate food and nutrition policies based on adequate studies of social and cultural factors in relation to consumption, as an integral part of their national development plans, with the aim of eliminating hunger and malnutrition and making available the benefits of proper nutrition to all sectors of the population, particularly the children and other vulnerable groups;

2. Recommends that Governments participating in regional bodies or associations, within or outside the United Nations, should give due importance to co-operation for the attainment of adequate nutrition for their peoples;

3. Requests the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, in co-operation as appropriate with the United Nations and the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and other agencies concerned, to strengthen further United Nations assistance to Governments in the formulation and implementation of sound food and nutrition policies. Such assistance should take due account of the importance of education and research, the necessity for effective inter-disciplinary and inter-agency collaboration, and the key role of women and the family as a whole. But above all, such assistance should be action-oriented, in view of the urgent need for improving the nutritional situation of the developing countries;

4. Requests the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to strengthen programmes aimed at augmenting the development of national food resources and improving the quality and distribution of food in the developing countries, particularly the extensive production of protein foods of marine origin in view of their promising potential;

5. Requests the World Health Organization in co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Children's Fund and other appropriate organizations in the United Nations system to intensify action and research on the health aspects of malnutrition in order

RESOLUTION 1493 (XLVIII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/4864, adopted unanimously by Council on 26 May 1970, meeting 1690.

The Economic and Social Council.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on trends in the social situation of children,

Considering that, in accordance with the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, the child should grow up in an atmosphere of affection and of moral and material security such as is normally provided by the family, that he should be protected by law and by other means against the risks inherent in the physical and social environment, against disease and against malnutrition and that he should be prepared for an active life through suitable education and training.

Believing that the achievement of these aims is vital for rapid and sustained social progress and development and for an effective participation of the young generation in the developmental processes and in community life,

Reaffirming its belief that observance of the rights of the child as they have been proclaimed by the United Nations calls for a greater effort on the part of the international community and Governments.

Aware that the social situation of children, particularly in the developing countries, remains disturbing and that the number of sick, under-nourished and uneducated children in the world is increasing,

Recalling its resolution 1445(XLVII) of 1 August 1969 and General Assembly resolution 2582(XXIV) of 15 December 1969, which mention the contribution that the present generation of children and young people could make towards the achievement of economic, social and cultural progress,

Recalling the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

1. Invites the Secretary-General and the competent organizations in the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Children's Fund because of the importance of the part it plays in developing services for children, to increase their efforts to learn more about the needs of children and youth and to assist Governments in carrying out co-ordinated and intersectoral measures designed to satisfy these needs;

2. Further invites the Secretary-General and the competent organizations in the United Nations system to intensify their assistance to Governments during the Second United Nations Development Decade with a view to enabling them to meet such needs, particularly in the fields of health, nutrition, education and social welfare, without losing sight of the over-all aspect of the problems and laying particular emphasis on the training of personnel;

3. Draws the attention of Member States and organizations in the United Nations system to the need to increase their efforts to prevent and eliminate suffering among children, including those who are the victims of wars and of injustice emanating from existing colonial regimes, to meet the needs of physically and mentally handicapped children, and to provide protection for children born out of wedlock, for those who have not found an appropriate social and emotional environment, because their families were incomplete or broken, or for any other reason, and for those whose work is exploited for material gain, without prejudice to the continuation of efforts to achieve the abolition of child labour in all countries;

4. Stresses the importance of the transition from adolescence to adulthood and recommends to the international community and particularly to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization that they devote special attention to the psychosociological problems involved, with a view to ensuring a progressive and satisfactory participation of young people in society and preparing them for their future role therein;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the present report on trends in the social situation of children to the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session and to prepare, at appropriate intervals, further reports on particular aspects of the subject, especially on the implementation of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, for submission to the General Assembly through the Commission for Social Development.

HOUSING, BUILDING AND PLANNING

TECHNICAL AID IN 1970

During 1970, the services of 167 experts and 31 associate experts on various aspects of housing, building and planning were provided to the following 54 countries and territories: Afghanistan, the Bahamas, Barbados, Botswana, Brazil, the British Virgin Islands, Burundi, the Cayman Islands, Ceylon, China, Colombia, Dominica, the Gambia, Ghana, Grenada, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jamaica, Jordan, the Khmer Republic, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Malta, Mauritius, Montserrat, Morocco, Nepal, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, the Republic of Korea, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Vincent, Singapore, Somalia, Syria, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

Short-term missions were carried out by three inter-regional advisers of the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning and by consultants to 10 countries, namely, Cyprus, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Lebanon, Mauritius, Nigeria, Peru, Sudan, Turkey and Zambia.

Eighty-six fellowships were awarded for participation in the following inter-regional seminars during 1970: (1) on the improvement of slums and uncontrolled settlements, Medellin, Colombia, 15 February-1 March; (2) on the financing of housing and urban development, Copenhagen, Denmark, 25 May-10 June; (3) on the impact of urbanization on man's environment, Onaway, Michigan, United States, 14-20 June; and (4) on physical planning for tourism development, Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, 19 October-3 November.

In addition, 47 individual fellowships were awarded for study abroad to nationals of Afghanistan, Chile, China, India, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Nepal, Pakistan, Peru, the Philippines, Singapore and Venezuela.

Two projects in housing, building and planning were approved during 1970 for financing under the Special Fund component of the United Nations Development Programme: assistance to the Bandama Valley Authority of the Ivory Coast in its construction programme, and to the Government of Peru in the reconstruction and development of Chimbote following the earthquake.

Among the publications issued in 1970 were: Social Aspects and Management of Housing Projects: Selected Case Studies; Trends in the Industrialization of Building; Urbanization in the Second United Nations Development Decade; and Modular Co-ordination of Low-cost Housing.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

In its consideration of questions concerning housing, building and planning at its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report of the Secretary-General on a campaign to focus world-wide attention on housing, as well as the report of the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning on its September 1969 session. The Council also considered views expressed by the Commission for Social Development at its March 1970 session and by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its April-May 1970 session.

NEED FOR HOUSING, BUILDING AND PLANNING PROGRAMME

On 28 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council recognized the urgent need—on a continuing basis within the framework of the Second United Nations Development Decade—to accord higher priority to housing, building and planning programmes, to allocate increased financial resources to these programmes and to promote the role of this sector in economic and social development. In taking this decision, the Council observed that, in spite of some progress in other fields, progress in housing, building and planning had lagged in most countries during the First United Nations Development Decade and this could retard over-all progress in the Second Development Decade.

The Council among other things asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the specialized agencies concerned, to submit to it in 1971 reformulated proposals for the campaign to focus world-wide attention on and mobilize public and Government support for housing, building and planning. The Secretary-General was also asked to comment on a proposed new international institution to support domestic savings and credit facilities in housing and urban development.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1507(XLVIII), adopted by 21 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, on a proposal by 10 Council members, namely: Ceylon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Sudan, Uruguay and Yugoslavia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In its report to the Council, the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning had proposed the text of a draft resolution on the crisis of human settlements during the Second United Nations Development Decade, in which attention was called to the increasing gravity of world housing and urbanization problems. When this draft text was taken up by the Council's Social Committee, a number of Council members expressed sympathy with its intent but felt that its form was not acceptable.

There was then put before the Social Committee another draft resolution. This was on the need for a housing, building and planning programme and was sponsored by seven members: Ceylon, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Norway, Pakistan and Yugoslavia. On 25 May 1970, the Committee recommended, by a vote of 11 to 9, with 5 abstentions, that the Council defer until 1971 its consideration of the seven-power draft resolution. The Council did not accept the Committee's recommendation, but adopted the 10-power text (resolution 1507 (XLVIII) above) which was proposed to it in plenary session.

As first proposed, the 10-power text was divided into two parts. By the first part (which, for the most part, was retained as the final text), the Council would have requested the Secretary-General to undertake certain actions relating to earlier resolutions, with regard to a campaign to focus world attention on housing and the financing of housing. By the second part (which was withdrawn by the sponsors), the Council would have recommended a draft resolution to the General Assembly.

METHOD OF REPORTING

The Economic and Social Council, during its May 1970 session, was informed that because of the timing of biennial sessions of both the Commission for Social Development and the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning, the Commission had recommended that the Committee report directly to the Council (and not through the Commission, as required by a Council decision of 2 August 1962),<sup>4</sup> on the understanding that the Committee would continue to report to the Commission as well.

By the unanimous adoption of resolution 1497(XLVIII) on 27 May 1970, the Council approved this arrangement. The Council did so on the recommendation of its Social Committee, which had approved on 12 May 1970, without vote, a text suggested by the Social Committee's Chairman. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

At its twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970, the General Assembly had before it the report of the Economic and Social Council on its May 1970 session and a report of the Secretary-General on problems and priorities in human settlement, which included an over-all review of problems and priorities confronting Member States in the field of housing, building and planning, together with specific recommendations for national and international action. In this document it was recommended that the questions of human settlements and the environment play an integral part in national development planning.

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly took a number of decisions pertaining to housing, building and planning. In so doing, the Assembly noted that it was mindful of the dedication of Governments, on the threshold of the 1970s, to create conditions of social justice, stability and well-being for all and to ensure a minimum standard of living consistent with human dignity through economic and social progress and development.

The Assembly also noted that a greater effort needed to be made to provide effective international assistance for the improvement of the situation with regard to housing and human settlements in most of the developing countries.

The Assembly recommended that Member States formulate definite and long-term housing, building and planning policies and programmes for the improvement of human settlements, devoting particular attention to:

(a) comprehensive measures to solve the problems of rapid urbanization, housing and uncontrolled human settlements, thereby achieving more rational urban growth patterns;

(b) steps for a rapid and significant improvement of housing, community facilities and environmental sanitation in rural areas;

(c) the application of comprehensive planning approaches to integrate the physical, economic, social and administrative aspects for improvement of human settlements in both rural and urban areas;

(d) the evolution and application of regional planning for balanced rural and urban development, especially in developing countries;

(e) the development of the building industry and building technology, including research and training; and

(f) the review, if necessary, of the legislative framework governing land tenure, the transfer of land and buildings in urban and rural areas, and the planning of over-all patterns of land use and appropriate infrastructural facilities.

It was further recommended that Member States undertake the following measures to ameliorate conditions in the field of housing and human settlements:

(a) the elaboration of national policies and programmes for the development of housing and of a network of human settlements during the 1970s, fully integrated into national development plans;

(b) the establishment of national and regional centres for studies in relevant subjects;

(c) the development of national institutions for training in those subjects;

(d) the acceleration of domestic savings through the establishment of appropriate financial practices and specialized institutions, including co-operatives, for financing the housing and construction sector;

(e) measures for environmental improvements;

(f) the expansion of low-cost housing and the advancement of pilot and demonstration projects on such housing.

Developed countries were invited by the Assembly to provide increased assistance to the developing countries for the purposes enumerated above, and the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning were invited to consider additional innovative approaches for the improvement of housing and human settlements.

The Assembly recommended that, in the elaboration of the work programmes in the field of housing, building and planning within the United Nations and its specialized agencies, particular attention should be paid to programmes and projects of interest to the developing countries. The Assembly also considered it desirable to strengthen regional co-operation in housing, building and planning.

These were among the decisions embodied in resolution 2718 (XXV), adopted—by 106 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions—on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970, by 79 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions. The draft text was proposed by the following 35 Members: Afghanistan, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Greece, Guyana, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, Libya, Mali, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

A series of amendments proposed in the Third Committee by Australia, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States were rejected.

RESOLUTION 2718(xxv), as recommended by Third Committee, A/8251, adopted by Assembly on 15 December 1970, meeting 1930, by 106 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2036(XX) of 7 December 1965 and 2598(XXIV) of 16 December 1969,

Mindful of the dedication of the Governments, on the threshold of the 1970s, to create conditions of social justice, stability and well-being for all and to ensure a minimum standard of living consistent with human dignity through economic and social progress and development,

Further recalling paragraph 71 of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade relating to the policy measures in the housing sector,

Considering that a greater effort needs to be made to provide effective international assistance for the improvement of the situation with regard to housing and human settlements in most developing countries,

Bearing in mind that the interregional seminar on the improvement of slums and uncontrolled settlements, held at Medellin, Colombia, from 15 February to 1 March 1970, identified the problem of human settlements as one which requires national and international solutions through the adoption of a global strategy,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the problems and priorities in human settlements,

1. Recommends that Member States, with the assistance, upon request, of the United Nations bodies concerned and in the context of their over-all economic and social development planning, should formulate definite and long-term housing, building and planning policies and programmes for the improvement of human settlements, devoting particular attention to:

(a) Comprehensive measures to solve the problems of rapid urbanization, housing and uncontrolled human settlements, thereby achieving more rational urban growth patterns;

(b) Steps for a rapid and significant improvement of housing, community facilities and environmental sanitation in rural areas;

(c) The application of comprehensive planning approaches to integrate the physical, economic, social and administrative aspects for improvement of human settlements in both rural and urban areas;

(d) The evolution and application of regional planning for balanced rural and urban development, especially in developing countries;

(e) The development of the building industry and building technology, including research and training;

(f) The review, if necessary, of the legislative framework governing land tenure, the transfer of land and buildings in urban and rural areas, and the planning of over-all patterns of land use and appropriate infrastructural facilities;

2. Further recommends that Member States and the United Nations organizations concerned should undertake the following measures for the amelioration of conditions in the field of housing and human settlements:

(a) The elaboration by each country of its national policies and programmes for the development of housing and of a network of human settlements during the 1970s, fully integrated into national development plans, including, if necessary, the elaboration of legal, institutional and physical arrangements relating to urban and rural land use;

(b) The establishment of national and regional centres for studies in planning, designing, social and administrative aspects and experiments in low-cost housing techniques and activities, including increasing use and application of indigenous and, as appropriate, new building materials and local skills;

(c) The development of national institutions for training in regional and physical planning, housing and building;

(d) The acceleration of domestic savings through the establishment of appropriate financial practices and specialized institutions, including co-operatives, for financing the housing and construction sector;

(e) Measures for environmental improvement, particularly those that shape the future structure of human settlements;

(f) The expansion of low-cost housing, through both public and private programmes and on a self-help basis, including co-operatives, and the advancement of pilot and demonstration projects on such housing;

3. Invites developed countries and the international organizations concerned, especially the financial institutions, to provide during the 1970s increased assistance—technical as well as financial—to the developing countries for the purposes enumerated in paragraph 2 above, in accordance with the priorities they have determined for their development;

4. Further invites the Economic and Social Council and the Committee on Housing, Building and Planning to consider additional innovative approaches for the improvement of housing and human settlements;

5. Recommends that, in the elaboration of the work programmes in the field of housing, building and planning within the United Nations and its specialized agencies, particular attention should be paid to programmes and projects of interest to the developing countries;

6. Requests the Secretary-General also to make available to the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment his report on the problems and priorities in human settlements;

7. Considers that the Centre for Housing, Building and Planning should play a major role in the formulation and co-ordination of the United Nations programmes and projects relating to the problems of housing and human settlements as well as a catalytic role in their implementation and that, as such, it should be strengthened as a matter of high priority both by a greater allocation of resources and by additional personnel;

8. Further considers that it is desirable to strengthen regional co-operation in the field of housing, building and planning;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to submit as soon as possible to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, an analytical review and progress report on the implementation of the present resolution, taking full advantage of the preparatory work for the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment.

SOCIAL SERVICES

United Nations technical activities in social welfare during 1970 focused on implementing the major recommendations of the International Conference of Ministers Responsible for Social Welfare, held in September 1968.<sup>5</sup> Particular emphasis was put on the developmental and preventive functions of social welfare and promotion of advanced training and research.

During 1970, the services of 38 social welfare experts were made available to 31 countries under the United Nations technical co-operation programmes. In addition, the services of five regional and inter-regional advisers were available. Thirty-five fellowships were awarded to nationals of 19 United Nations Member States.

PLANNING, ORGANIZATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF SOCIAL WELFARE SERVICES

Advisers on the planning, organization and administration of social welfare services were assigned to Cyprus, Guyana, Haiti, Indonesia, Jordan, Liberia, Mali, the Republic of Korea and Togo.

A regional conference of ministers responsible for social welfare was held in Manila, Philippines, in September 1970. Representatives from 18 countries considered a number of suggestions for strengthening regional co-operation in social welfare.

A regional seminar on the problems and methods of social welfare planning was held at Rennes, France, in September 1970, and a study on social welfare planning in the context of national development plans was published. Asia, case studies relating to the integration of social welfare planning in national development planning were carried out in India, Pakistan and the Philippines.

During 1970, a study of the role of voluntary agencies in social welfare programmes was prepared.

An inter-regional adviser on family planning and on human resources development within the context of population and family planning programmes was appointed in 1970.

Within the framework of the European social development programme, an expert meeting on family planning and social policy was held at Karlovy-Vary, Czechoslovakia, in October 1970.

A report on industrial social welfare services was completed with the support and co-operation of the regional economic commissions. The report was based on studies of Brazil, India, Poland, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom and Zambia.

FAMILY AND CHILD WELFARE

The services of advisers on family and child welfare were provided to Ghana and the Republic of Viet-Nam during 1970.

The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) continued to give assistance to Governments in the fields of family, youth and child welfare services, with the technical support of the United Nations Secretariat. In 1970, 54 countries received such aid from UNICEF.

A seminar on problems of children and youth in national planning and development in Arab States was held in Beirut, Lebanon, in February 1970. Another seminar on socially deprived families was organized at Bienne, Switzerland, in August 1970.

TRAINING OF SOCIAL WELFARE PERSONNEL

The services of 15 advisers on training for social welfare were made available to the following countries in 1970: China, Ethiopia, Guyana, Honduras, Mali, Nicaragua, the Republic of Korea, the Republic of Viet-Nam, Thailand, Uganda and Zambia.

Assistance in social welfare training continued to be a part of UNICEF-aided social welfare projects.

In March 1970, the Economic Commission for Africa convened the Third Expert Group Meeting on Social Welfare Training and Administration, in which special emphasis was given to the promotion of indigenous training materials.

The Fifth International Survey of Training for Social Welfare, which was devoted to new approaches in meeting manpower needs, was completed during the year.

The Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East and UNICEF jointly organized a workshop in social welfare in-service training, at Bangkok, Thailand, in February and March 1970.

REHABILITATION OF THE DISABLED

An ad hoc inter-agency meeting on rehabilitation of the disabled, convened in September 1970 in Geneva, Switzerland, was attended by representatives of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Health Organization (WHO), UNICEF, and the Council of World Organizations Interested in the Handicapped, which represented a number of non-governmental organizations. The meeting reviewed current rehabilitation projects of the participating agencies and discussed future plans involving inter-agency co-operation.

A new co-operative effort to assist developing countries in the field of rehabilitation of the disabled was launched jointly by ILO, UNESCO, WHO, UNICEF, the United Nations Development Programme and the World Rehabilitation Fund. This effort, designated as the Rehabilitation Liaison Programme, aimed at increasing the funds available for technical assistance projects in the field of rehabilitation and at improving the effectiveness of such projects.

United Nations experts in the field of rehabilitation of the disabled were assigned to the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Iran, Israel, Laos and Spain; short survey missions went to Kuwait. Turkey and the United Arab Republic.

Twenty United Nations fellowship holders from 10 different countries were studying abroad during the year.

A monograph entitled "Occupational Therapy Department in a Mental Hospital," in the series on Basic Services and Equipment for Rehabilitation Centres, was published during the year,

SOCIAL DEFENCE

The technical assistance activities of the United Nations during 1970 in the field of social defence were devoted to the development of policies and programmes for the prevention and control of crime and delinquency in the context of national development planning. A major part of these activities involved devising methods and techniques to assist Governments in defining their needs in terms of development objectives and priorities.

In this connexion, two inter-regional advisers on social defence matters were appointed in 1970 to provide short-term advisory services.

The United Nations continued to provide the services of a director for the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in Fuchu, Japan, until September 1970, at which time the Institute became the full responsibility of the Government of Japan. During the period under review, the Institute conducted three training courses for personnel of the region; 52 trainees from 14 countries participated.

Technical assistance support was extended by the United Nations to the National Centre for Social and Criminological Research in Cairo, United Arab Republic, during 1970. The services of a senior adviser in social defence were provided for four months in 1970 to assist in the Centre's further development.

During 1970, Somalia was also provided with the services of an adviser in police organization.

Eight United Nations fellowships in social defence were awarded in 1970 to Iran, Japan, Pakistan and Thailand.

In collaboration with the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute in Rome, Italy, a workshop on the utilization of research in social defence policy was conducted in India in 1970.

The Fourth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in Kyoto, Japan, in August 1970, was attended by over 1,000 delegates and participants from 85 countries. The Congress adopted a declaration calling for broader and more extensive international action to fight crime and delinquency.

Among the recommendations and conclusions of the Congress were: that there was a need to provide for an effective coverage and integration of planning for social defence both Sectorally and inter-sectorally; that regional and inter-regional meetings of experts, workshops and seminars should be held with a view to advancing crime prevention and to increasing international communication to promote the inclusion of social defence issues in national planning; that efforts should be made to secure the endorsement of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners by the General Assembly at its 1971 session; and that the United Nations should assume a greater role in promoting national research and encouraging cross-national comparative studies in social defence.

Two special issues of the International Review of Criminal Policy containing articles designed as background material for the Fourth Congress were published during 1970.

The Advisory Committee of Experts on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was convened at Kyoto, Japan, in August 1970, immediately following the Congress, to review its conclusions and to make recommendations on the future work programme of the United Nations in the field of social defence.

REGIONAL AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

During 1970, United Nations community development experts were assigned to Kenya, Niger, Nigeria, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

A seminar was held in Ghana in July 1970 on the development of rural life and institutions in West Africa. The seminar was attended by 18 participants from eight United Nations Member States of the West Africa sub-region, and by 28 observers, including representatives from the United Nations Secretariat and from specialized agencies. Thirty participants attended a rural development course for senior personnel from Africa, in Holte, Denmark.

A project manager was assigned to a training project in Saudi Arabia funded by the Special Fund component of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). A community development expert was also provided to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen.

In Asia, a project manager and two experts were assigned to a UNDP project in China; experts in community development were provided to Laos, Nepal and the Philippines. Fellowships were awarded to persons in Indonesia, Laos, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Viet-Nam and Thailand.

In Latin America, there were three community development experts in Mexico, five in Venezuela in a Special Fund project for training in community development, one in Paraguay, one in Peru, and a regional adviser in the Caribbean. In addition, there was one technical adviser stationed at United Nations Headquarters to follow up UNDP projects in the field of community development.

The Ad Hoc Advisory Committee for the Research and Training Programme in Regional Development met in September 1970 to review the progress made in the programme and make recommendations for future activities.

In the field of training and research, seven fellowships were awarded to the Settlement Study Centre in Rehovot, Israel. Eight fellowships, one resident adviser and a number of short-term lecturers were made available to the Chubu Centre in Japan.

A Latin American course in regional and local development planning, held in Chile from August to October 1970, was attended by 30 participants.

The Secretariat of the United Nations received a grant of $100,000 from the Government of the Netherlands to establish a documentation and information service in regional development and to provide consultant services to complement regular technical assistance resources.

A report entitled Selected Experiences in Regional Development was published within the framework of the regional development programme.

CHAPTER XXII

CO-ORDINATION AND ORGANIZATIONAL QUESTIONS

DEVELOPMENT AND CO-ORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES OF UNITED NATIONS FAMILY OF ORGANIZATIONS

At its mid-1970 session the Economic and Social Council undertook a review of major developments within the United Nations system concerning inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation. This review was based in particular on the report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), the report of the newly reconstituted Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and that of the annual Joint Meetings of ACC and CPC.

The report of ACC (which is composed of the executive heads of the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, and the Under-Secretary-General for Economic and Social Affairs, under the chairmanship of the Secretary-General) contained the results of a comprehensive review of the functioning of inter-secretariat machinery for co-ordination. The machinery had been streamlined by merging or discontinuing a number of existing consultative bodies, and ACC had decided to set up functional groups, consisting of ACC members most directly concerned, to study key issues in depth. The first panel was to study the implications of the so-called "green revolution" in agriculture for the policies and programme initiatives of the organizations of the United Nations system. The report of ACC also dealt with co-ordination of activities relating to decolonization, as well as with a large number of programme areas where all or many of the organizations of the United Nations system had an interest.

The other major report before the Council was that of the inter-governmental Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, which had been reconstituted by the Economic and Social Council as a 21-member committee with new terms of reference. The Committee had assisted the Council by preparing the ground for its review of the co-ordination of activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. In its report, the Committee commented on the functioning of the machinery of ACC and the measures being taken by ACC for improving co-ordination in programme areas of inter-agency concern, and it made a number of recommendations concerning reporting and other procedures in the field of co-ordination. Particular attention was devoted to questions relating to prior consultations on work programmes and the format of the agencies' reports to the Council.

The report on the ACC/CPC Joint Meetings held in July immediately before the Council's session dealt with: the Second United Nations Development Decade; arrangements for prior consultations on work programmes; institutional arrangements for science and technology; regional structures of the organizations of the United Nations system; and implementation by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>1</sup>

Also before the Council were the annual reports of the specialized agencies, a report on co-ordination at the national level, a special report by ACC on inter-agency co-operation in the use of computers and the annual report of ACC on the expenditures of the United Nations system in relation to programmes.

These questions and others are dealt with

below in sections on the functioning and organization of the co-ordination machinery, on co-ordination of programme activities, and on administrative co-ordination in a number of selected areas of inter-agency concern. The section on programme co-ordination is limited to an account of developments in ACC and CPC; action by the Economic and Social Council is described in other chapters of this volume dealing with the substantive aspects of the various programmes concerned. The account of developments in administrative co-ordination, however, also covers action by the Council, since the Council is mainly concerned with the promotion of co-ordinated arrangements within the system.

Developments Regarding Co-ordination Machinery

ROLE OF ACC

At its mid-1970 session the Economic and Social Council, after discussing the reports of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), adopted a resolution by which it reaffirmed that the policy-making role in the United Nations system was the prerogative of member States in the competent organs of the system. It instructed CPC to review the sphere of activities and competence of ACC in the light of the relevant discussion in the Council, so that the Council might achieve more effective co-ordination of the social, economic and technical activities of the United Nations system.

The Council further asked CPC to submit recommendations thereon to it at its mid-1971 session. It also, among other things, invited the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the executive heads of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and the executive officers of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the regional economic commissions to pay special attention to the need to eliminate overlapping and duplication in their work.

The Council's decisions to this effect were contained in resolution 1547 (XLIX), adopted unanimously on 30 July 1970 on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee. The text, sponsored by Bulgaria, France, Greece, Italy, Tunisia, the USSR, the United States and Uruguay and amended by Argentina and by Jamaica, was unanimously approved by the Committee on 24 July.

PRIOR CONSULTATIONS ON WORK PROGRAMMES

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination considered the question of prior consultations on work programmes—which are carried out by circulating work programmes among the various organizations in order to avoid duplication of work—in May and June 1970, on the basis of recommendations of the Enlarged Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, which had been endorsed by the General Assembly on 15 December 1969,<sup>2</sup> and of a statement by ACC.

The Enlarged Committee had recommended that all members of the United Nations system with substantial programmes should send these programmes in draft form for comments to organizations having programmes in related areas, and that those comments should then be transmitted with the observations of the executive heads concerned to the inter-governmental programme-reviewing organ. The Enlarged Committee had felt that such a procedure would both reduce overlapping and contribute towards joint planning of work.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination had pointed out that inter-secretariat consultations on the framing of future programmes already took place on a broad basis in areas where there were programmes of mutual concern, including joint activities and the operation of joint machinery. It agreed that those informal practices would henceforth be supplemented by a procedure along the lines of that recommended by the Enlarged Committee, although there might be problems of timing or problems in cases where there was no unified work programme or programme budget. It had also indicated that organizations that did not operate on a programme basis would continue to exchange information regularly with other organizations likely to be concerned regarding new activities being planned.

When it reviewed ACC'S plans, CPC expressed concern over the procedures the agencies intended to follow, and particularly over the additional step of informal consultations that had been introduced by ACC, feeling, among other things, that it should be informed of the outcome of such inter-secretariat consultations.

The question of prior consultations was then discussed at the joint meetings of CPC and ACC in July 1970, when representatives of Governments generally welcomed the steps taken by ACC to ensure that each organization should have an opportunity to comment on the work programmes of others. They also recognized the importance of informal inter-secretariat consultations at the programme formulation stage and felt that establishment of functional groups to review key issues before programmes were formulated was a step forward.

Following discussion of this matter, the Economic and Social Council welcomed the general agreement among the secretariats to carry out prior consultations on work programmes by circulating their draft work programmes to other United Nations organizations with a request for comments, and transmitting the comments to inter-governmental bodies responsible for preliminary and final consideration of the work programmes.

The Council attached equal importance to prior consultations among the secretariats before proposals of interest to other organizations were presented to inter-governmental bodies, and also before changes were made in approved programmes during the execution phase.

It requested the Secretary-General to ensure that the procedures were fully carried out in all parts of the United Nations Secretariat, and invited all organizations of the United Nations system to observe the spirit as well as the letter of these arrangements in the interest of better planning of international action.

The Council also asked CPC to pay particular attention to the observance of these arrangements for prior consultations.

Finally, the Council called upon ACC to ensure close control over all inter-agency meetings called for purposes of consultation and co-ordination and requested it to notify the Council in its annual report of the meetings held—or to be held—for such purposes.

The Council's decisions to this effect were contained in resolution 1549(XLIX), adopted unanimously on 30 July 1970 on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text unanimously on 24 July 1970 on the basis of a joint Indonesian-United States proposal. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

REPORTS OF AGENCIES: REPORTING ARRANGEMENTS

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it analytical summaries of the reports of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), having decided the previous year to dispense with the circulation of the full reports. Council members considered that the practice of presenting the summaries, instead of the full reports, was satisfactory. It was agreed that the content and format could be improved if the guidelines for their preparation were modified as recommended by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC). The changes would, it was suggested, assist the Council in exercising its co-ordinating function.

The Council—on 27 July 1970—took note with appreciation of the analytical summaries and requested the organizations concerned to continue to submit them. Then, with the unanimous adoption of resolution 1548(XLIX) on 30 July, which was based on the recommendations of CPC, the Council invited the specialized agencies and IAEA in future to include in their analytical summaries specific additional information, including: an organizational chart; sections concerned with achievements and with any outstanding co-ordination problems and difficulties encountered in solving them; information on expenditures for major programmes; fuller information on the steps taken by organizations to carry out recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on questions of duplication or lack of co-ordination; and recommendations for specific action by the Council.

This resolution was recommended to the Council by its Co-ordination Committee, which approved the text unanimously on 24 July 1970 on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, Indonesia and the United States. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

CO-ORDINATION ARRANGEMENTS AT THE NATIONAL LEVEL

In accordance with a Council decision of 2 August 1968,<sup>3</sup> the Council had before it at its mid-1970 session a report by the Secretary-General on co-ordination at the national level. The report, which was based on information submitted by Governments, described, first, the means and methods currently employed by those Governments for co-ordinating their national policies in respect of the activities of the United Nations, and secondly, the main difficulties encountered in co-ordinating policy in different bodies. Finally, the report contained suggestions as to how the United Nations might assist Governments to overcome these difficulties.

On 28 July 1970, the Council decided, without adopting a resolution, to take note with interest of the report and to express the hope that the information contained in it might be of value to Governments of Member States in connexion with their national co-ordination arrangements. It also decided to take no further action on the matter at the present stage.

RECONSTITUTION OF COMMITTEE FOR PROGRAMME AND CO-ORDINATION

In its final report, the Enlarged Committee for Programme and Co-ordination had recommended to the General Assembly that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should be reconstituted as a committee of 21 members with new terms of reference. The General Assembly on 15 December 1969<sup>4</sup> then requested the Council to reconstitute the Committee in accordance with the Enlarged Committee's recommendation.

Accordingly, on 13 January 1970, the Council unanimously decided so to reconstitute the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination. It invited the Governments of Member States, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the executive heads of the specialized agencies, IAEA, the United Nations Development Programme and all other autonomous organizations and research institutions within the United Nations family to extend to the Committee full co-operation and assistance. It also confirmed its decision to have joint meetings of CPC and ACC at which Committee members should, if possible, be represented by the heads of their delegations, and invited the President and Vice-Presidents of the Council to continue to take part in those joint meetings. It further decided to examine and to keep under continuing review the machinery for co-ordination and programme review and to introduce improvements or modifications which might appear necessary in the light of the experience gained and relevant developments within the United Nations system.

These Council decisions were set forth in resolution 1472(XLVIII), which was sponsored by Ghana, India and Pakistan and amended by Greece and the United Kingdom. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Under its new terms of reference, CPC was responsible to the Economic and Social Council and through it to the General Assembly. It was to advise and assist the Council in discharging its co-ordination functions under Articles 58, 63 and 64 of the Charter of the United Nations<sup>5</sup> and, in particular, it was to keep under review the activities of the United Nations and its related agencies and programmes, study the present procedures for co-ordination and co-operation, and submit its conclusions to the Council on the issues and problems arising thereon. It was to prepare and submit to the Council recommendations to the specialized agencies, the General Assembly, and Members of the United Nations; it had continuing authority from the Council to review programmes and procedures in particular sectors on a system-wide basis, as well as the interaction of different sectors in order to ensure that programmes in a particular sector responded to the objectives set forth by the General Assembly on 13 December 1966.<sup>6</sup>

In particular, the Committee would be concerned with the review of programme planning, implementation of programmes, their evaluation, and the effectiveness of co-ordination machinery. It would also develop processes for carrying out long-term planning and programme formulation. It was authorized to select from among its members special rapporteurs to prepare detailed studies and to submit recommendations on topics designated by it.

Finally, it would carry out functions relating to the United Nations work programme in the economic, social and human rights fields, including both an annual general review of the whole work programme and reviews in depth of selected sectors.

ANNEX

"RECOMMENDATION A: THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A RECONSTITUTED COMMITTEE FOR PROGRAMME AND CO-ORDINATION

"Nature of the future Committee

"20. After discussing the advantages and disadvantages of various alternatives, including the possibility of transforming the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination into a smaller and more nearly full-time and professional expert committee on programmes' with members acting in their personal capacity as experts, the Enlarged Committee for Programme and Co-ordination recommends that the present intergovernmental character of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should be retained.

"21. The Enlarged Committee recommends that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination be reconstituted as follows: The Committee should be composed of twenty-one States Members of the United Nations to be elected by the Economic and Social Council from among all Member States of the Organization with due regard to equitable geographical distribution and to the necessary balance between the claims of continuity and of rotation, i.e., one third of the members should be elected annually for three-year terms. Member States so elected should choose representatives to serve on the Committee, bearing in mind the desiderata set forth in paragraph 3 of Council resolution 1187(XLI).* If a Member State no longer wishes to participate in the Committee's work, it would be free to withdraw from it on the understanding that another Member State from the same geographic region would be elected to replace it.

"22. The Enlarged Committee considers that the amount of time and the frequency and place of meetings of the reconstituted Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should be adjusted, if necessary, to enable it to carry out effectively its proposed functions.

"23. When necessary, the Committee may select from among its members special rapporteurs to prepare detailed studies and to submit recommendations on topics designated by the Committee. The Committee may find it necessary to request the rapporteurs to travel to various offices of the United Nations, and, accordingly, a modest financial provision may have to be made within the budget for these expenses. It is recognized that the selection of studies to be undertaken by the special rapporteurs will have to be made in the light of the reports prepared, or being prepared, by the Joint Inspection Unit, the specialized agencies and other bodies in the United Nations system.

"24. If, in exceptional cases, special expertise were not available from amongst the membership of the Committee, the Committee might request the Secretary-General to engage outside consultants. Financial arrangements would have to be made for this purpose. The Committee should also bear in mind the possibilities of enlisting the assistance of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research in respect of research that may be required in matters of programme or of evaluation and co-ordination.

"25. The Enlarged Committee proposes that arrangements be made to provide appropriate assistance to the reconstituted Committee and its rapporteurs and suggests that professional officers at the appropriate level of seniority be appointed to assist the Committee in its work on a continuous and exclusive basis.

"26. The Enlarged Committee emphasizes that the effective discharge of the duties of the reconstituted Committee is dependent upon the existence of the closest working relationship between the various units of the Secretariat dealing, respectively, with inter-agency affairs and economic and social affairs. The Committee would also have to work in close collaboration with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

"27. The Enlarged Committee proposed that arrangements for joint consultations and collaboration between the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Joint Inspection Unit should be established and it recommends accordingly that the General Assembly should amend the existing procedures for handling reports of the Joint Inspection Unit to provide that:

"(a) Reports of the Joint Inspection Unit concerning the economic, social and human rights programmes of the United Nations, under the general responsibility of the Economic and Social Council, together with the comments of the Secretary-General, should be submitted through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, as well as to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

"(b) Reports dealing with the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research should be submitted without any delay, and with executive comments, to the governing organs of the programmes concerned, as well as to the organs referred to under sub-paragraph (a) above;

"(c) The comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions should be transmitted to the Council and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, and to the governing organs of United Nations programmes, in time for them to be taken into account before final consideration of the reports;

* In accordance with these desiderata, persons serving on the Committee should have "a high degree of experience and competence in: (a) The United Nations and related organizations in the economic, financial and social areas; (b) The governing bodies of the specialized agencies and subsidiary bodies of the United Nations."

"(d) The Committee should be kept informed constantly of the action taken on the recommendations of the reports of the Joint Inspection Unit;

"(e) The Joint Inspection Unit should be informed of problems of special interest to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination with the aim of enlisting its co-operation in undertaking studies of interest to the Committee. The Joint Inspection Unit would naturally be free to accept or reject any such suggestions;

"(f) The Joint Inspection Unit should be invited to bring to the attention of the Committee any problem which it considers important within the scope of the Committee's responsibilities;

"(g) Representatives of the Joint Inspection Unit should be free to participate in meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, and arrangements should be made for periodic joint consultations.

"28. With respect to the reports dealing with more than one agency and with system-wide problems, the Enlarged Committee wishes to support the following arrangements agreed on at the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination held in July 1969 and endorsed by the Council: the reports should be transmitted to the Council through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the basis that:

"(a) The executive heads should have the opportunity to comment on all inspection reports involving their organizations before the reports are made public, such comments to be made available to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination as well as to the governing organs concerned, within a period of not more than three months after the reports are submitted;

"(b) In cases where reports involve issues that require consideration by governing bodies, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination should postpone final action until the governing bodies concerned have had an opportunity to formulate and present their own comments thereon. However, the delay should not in any case exceed one year from the time the report was originally submitted.

"Terms of reference

"29. The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination would be responsible to the Economic and Social Council and through it to the General Assembly. It would advise and assist the Council in discharging its co-ordination functions under Articles 58, 63 and 64 of the Charter of the United Nations and, in particular, it would keep under review the activities of the United Nations and its related agencies and programmes, study the present procedures for co-ordination and co-operation and submit its conclusions to the Council on the issues and problems arising thereon.

"30. The Committee could prepare and submit to the Council recommendations to the specialized agencies, the General Assembly and to Members of the United Nations as envisaged under Article 63, paragraph 2, of the Charter.

"31. The Committee would receive continuing authority from the Council to review programmes and procedures in particular sectors on a system-wide basis as well as the interaction of different sectors in order to ensure that programmes in a particular sector respond to the objectives set forth in General Assembly resolution 2188(XXI). In particular, the Committee would be concerned with the review of programme planning, implementation of programmes, their evaluation and the effectiveness of co-ordination machinery.

"32. The Committee, in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2 of General Assembly resolution 2370(XXII), would develop, in consultation with the Secretary-General, its own processes for carrying out the envisaged system of long-term planning and programme formulation; and, in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1275(XLIII), section III, paragraph 2, the Committee would keep under continuous review further steps required to implement within the United Nations the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies concerning the development of an integrated system of long-term planning, programming and budgeting.

"33. In the light of Council resolutions 1093(XXXIX), 1171(XLI), 1177(XLI), 1275(XLIII), 1367(XLV) and 1378(XLV) in relation to the work programme of the United Nations in the economic, social and human rights fields, the Committee would carry out the following programme functions:

"(a) An annual general review of the totality of the Secretary-General's work programme in the economic, social and human rights fields, and in the light of its budgetary implications, covering the various units of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs including those of the regional economic commissions, the Division of Human Rights, the Division of Narcotic Drugs, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, giving particular attention to programme changes arising out of the decisions by intergovernmental organs and conferences or suggested by the Secretary-General;

"(b) A review in depth of selected sectors of the work programme phased over a period of time in accordance with the recommendations set forth in the reports of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its second session and the first part of its third session, as endorsed in Council resolutions 1367(XLV) and 1456(XLVII), respectively. This review would concern itself in particular with long-term plans formulated for these sectors and an assessment of results achieved from current activities, the continuing validity of legislative decisions of more than five years' standing, and the effectiveness of co-ordination with other units of the Secretariat and members of the United Nations family;

"(c) Assist the Council and the General Assembly in the establishment of programme priorities within the United Nations and the formulation of programmes clearly responsive to such priorities as specified in paragraphs 8 to 17 of the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its second session;

"(d) Assist the Council in meeting its responsibilities under rule 34 of the Council's rules of procedure.

"34. Subject to the Council's authorization, the Committee would communicate its views directly to the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and to United Nations programmes with respect of any matters coming within its terms of reference.

"Other recommendations

"35. The Secretary-General should provide whatever Secretariat assistance may be needed by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and should keep the Committee informed of relevant developments within the United Nations and the system, such as the Capacity Study undertaken by the United Nations Development Programme and the results thereof, and the results of inquiries such as the continuing Manpower Utilization Survey and the Management Auditing Studies of the Auditors.

"36. The Council should invite the appropriate bodies of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency and other United Nations organs to increase their existing co-operation with it by:

"(a) Ensuring that the Committee and its rapporteurs receive the information they might require concerning their programmes and the results of any evaluation carried out by them;

"(b) Consulting the Committee, at their discretion, on matters that might not need to be referred to the Council, or on matters on which it would be useful for the Committee's views to be obtained in preparation for discussion in the Council."

Co-ordination of Programme Activities

SECOND UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENT DECADE

Reporting to the Economic and Social Council, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) stated that the organizations of the United Nations system had participated actively in the work of the Preparatory Committee for the Second United Nations Development Decade as well as that of the Committee for Development Planning, and had contributed material for the preparation of the draft international strategy for the Decade. There had been inter-agency consultations which had facilitated the task of working out quantitative targets, within a common framework, relating to such fields as agriculture, industry and trade. Arrangements had also been made to assist in the mobilization of public opinion for the Decade.

The question of the multinational, interdisciplinary development advisory teams which the United Nations was proposing to organize was also considered by ACC and by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC), which noted with satisfaction that these teams were to operate under the regional economic commissions.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

The Economic and Social Council's decision of 8 August 1969<sup>7</sup> to review the institutional machinery for science and technology was welcomed by ACC, which suggested that a centralized advisory expert body concerned with global policy issues and so constituted as to include a balanced representation to cover areas of activity involving more than one organization, might be desirable. The importance of science and technology, particularly the transfer of science and technology, for development was emphasized by CPC, whose members expressed various views as to the type of institutional machinery that should be created.

At the Joint Meeting of ACC and CPC in July 1970, it was agreed that changes in the institutional machinery for science and technology were necessary, so that both Governments and the organizations of the United Nations system could fully utilize the enormous potential of science and technology for the benefit of developing countries. There was general agreement on the need for a central advisory body which would provide guidance on policy issues and assist in identifying priorities. Members of both Committees emphasized that the importance of the subject called for a dynamic approach by the international community as a whole. (See also pp. 441-48.)

SOCIAL ASPECTS OF DEVELOPMENT

Noting that the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council had redefined the objectives and methods of concerted action in the social field, ACC stated in its report to the Council at its mid-1970 session that the United Nations system of organizations had paid increasing attention to the social aspects of development and to the need to develop an integrated and unified approach to development. Considerable progress had been made within the ACC framework to translate this new approach into concrete action—particularly in the development and utilization of human resources.

HUMAN ENVIRONMENT

Interested organizations in the United Nations family were combining their expertise in

preparations for the 1972 Conference on the Human Environment, ACC reported to the Economic and Social Council. An ad hoc inter-agency working group had been set up to co-ordinate activities, and staff were to be seconded to the Conference secretariat. (See also pp. 449-52.)

NATURAL RESOURCES

MINERAL RESOURCES

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council clarified the division of responsibility between the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) and the United Nations for projects involving prospecting for nuclear metals. The Council reaffirmed the primary role and responsibility of the United Nations for the conduct, on the request of Governments, of multi-mineral or single mineral surveys; it also recognized IAEA's special competence and responsibility to conduct surveys for nuclear metals, and the need for the Agency to continue to co-operate with the United Nations in multi-mineral surveys by making available to it, on request, experts for such surveys. Finally, the Council requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of IAEA to consult together in order to avoid any duplication between their respective organizations, to foster co-operation in survey programming, and to report to the Council as appropriate.

These Council decisions were embodied in resolution 1550(XLIX), adopted unanimously on 30 July 1970. The text, recommended unanimously to the Council by its Co-ordination Committee on 29 July, was amended by Jamaica at the plenary meeting. The sponsors of the text as revised in the Co-ordination Committee were Greece, Kenya, Sudan, the United States and Yugoslavia. The revised text took account of earlier proposals submitted separately by some of the above sponsors. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

WATER RESOURCES

Recalling that problems had arisen the previous year regarding responsibilities for water management, administration, law and policy, ACC reported that it had concluded that the United Nations system must find ways of co-ordination most beneficial to countries receiving technical aid, particularly by taking into full account their stages of and priorities for economic development, and by utilizing the expertise available in all the organizations concerned. Accordingly, while the special role of the United Nations with regard to water management, administration, law and policy as related to total water resources had been recognized, working arrangements had been concluded which ensured consultations on all sectoral aspects with the technically competent organizations. Arrangements had also been made regarding responsibilities for work relating to surveys and development activities.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination emphasized that the development and utilization of water resources was a matter of vast consequence, not only to the countries of the arid zone but also to all developing countries, particularly in view of the growing water shortage throughout the world. It expressed the hope that greater attention would be paid to alerting and advising Governments about global problems and water policies, especially regarding the use of water for new purposes, conservation and recycling water use.

THE SEA

As a result of growing attention being devoted to the sea in its many diverse aspects by the inter-governmental bodies concerned, the scope of inter-agency co-operation in fields such as marine science had increased, ACC reported in 1970 to the Economic and Social Council. Working relations among the organizations involved had been close and ACC felt that the existing inter-secretariat arrangements were satisfactory and flexible enough to meet changing needs. Two developments were noted, namely: the establishment of the Inter-secretariat Committee on Scientific Programmes Relating to Oceanography, composed of the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO), and operating in connexion with the work of the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission; and the formation and subsequent expansion of the Group of Experts on Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution, sponsored by the United Nations, FAO, UNESCO, the World Health Organization (WHO), WMO, IMCO and IAEA.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination considered the need for a comprehensive review of existing activities of the United Nations system relating to the seas and oceans in the light of present and emerging needs of Member States, as requested by the General Assembly on 15 December 1969.<sup>8</sup> The Committee decided that such a comprehensive review would be useful and recommended that it should be undertaken at an early date. It was also of the opinion that further improvements in inter-agency co-ordination and formulation of policy in marine activities throughout the United Nations system were necessary and recommended that ACC should give increased attention to those problems. (See also pp. 456-57.)

NARCOTICS CONTROL

Reporting to the Economic and Social Council, ACC stated that while the United Nations and WHO had long co-operated on interrelated aspects of narcotics control, it was now recognized that in view of the sharp increase in the abuse of narcotic drugs, wider co-operation among a number of organizations was urgently needed. Members of the United Nations system concerned were assisting the Secretary-General in drawing up suitable plans for the eradication of uncontrolled or illicit cultivation of narcotic raw materials, and procedures for inter-agency co-operation had been reinforced. The Committee had arranged an inter-agency meeting to examine possible ways of taking co-ordinated action.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on its sixth session and the thirty-sixth report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination,

Desirous of clarifying the division of responsibility between the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations for projects involving prospecting for nuclear metals,

Considering that nuclear metals may be found either through multi-mineral surveys or through specific prospecting for them, and that the choice between these two methods depends on the individual circumstances,

Recalling the interest of the Agency in having a sufficient supply of nuclear metals,

1. Reaffirms the primary role and responsibility of the United Nations for the conduct, at the request of the Governments of Member States, of multi-mineral or single mineral surveys;

2. Recognizes the special competence and responsibility of the International Atomic Energy Agency to conduct surveys for nuclear metals as requested by Governments of Member States and the need for the Agency to continue to co-operate with the United Nations in multi-mineral surveys by making available to the United Nations, on request, experts for such surveys;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the Agency to consult together in order to avoid any duplication between their respective organizations, to foster co-

Co-ordination of Administrative Activities

JOINT INSPECTION UNIT REPORTS

Both the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) discussed the question of the handling of Joint Inspection Unit reports during the early part of 1970. The Economic and Social Council, then, at its mid-1970 session adopted a resolution by which it emphasized the need to handle inspection reports with all possible speed, to give them a prominent place in the agenda of sessions of governing organs, and to do everything possible to ensure that maximum benefit was gained from the Inspectors' recommendations. It welcomed ACC's assurance that its members would continue to give the fullest possible co-operation to the Joint Inspection Unit and urged the agencies' governing organs to give the inspection reports and the comments of the executive heads an important place on their agendas when they became available and to ensure that appropriate follow-up action was taken.

The Council also requested CPC: to give prompt consideration to inspection reports, together with the comments of the executive heads; to highlight recommendations that should receive the Council's special attention; and to suggest appropriate action. The Council also suggested that the Inspectors should prepare summaries of lengthy or technical studies, continue to provide summaries of their recommendations and consider the possibility of separating recommendations that could be implemented by the executive heads from those that required approval by one or more governing organs.

The Council's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 1554(XLIX), adopted unanimously 30 July 1970 on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text unanimously on 29 July on the basis of a proposal sponsored by Argentina, France, Italy, the United States and Upper Volta.

On 30 July, without adopting a resolution, the Council requested the Secretary-General to prepare a short paper which would facilitate its consideration of Joint Inspection Unit reports, whenever it had an item on inspection reports on its agenda. The paper should include suggestions as to how the reports might best be considered, a brief statement of the action taken on them, and a summary of any conclusions reached by CPC together with an indication of those recommendations which CPC or the Joint Inspection Unit considered should receive the Council's special attention.

COMPUTERS

The Economic and Social Council, at its mid-1970 session, considered the question of inter-agency co-operation in the use of computers on the basis of a special report by ACC. In response to a General Assembly request, ACC had commissioned the Auditor-General of Canada to study the electronic data-processing facilities and needs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, including the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), within technically and economically feasible computer-linking distance of Geneva, Switzerland. The Auditor-General had completed his report late in May 1970 and ACC had accepted the primary proposal set forth in the report, namely, the creation of a separate centre in Europe for the United Nations system of organizations, providing data-processing, systems and information services on an inter-organizational basis. It had also agreed to the establishment of an inter-organizational board for information systems and related activities and had decided to discontinue the Computer Users' Committee. The board, on which all organizations of the United Nations system would be represented, would be directly responsible for determining the programmes of work to be carried out. The Secretary-General, in agreement with ACC, would appoint a director, who would be responsible to the board and would be assisted by a number of staff. Staff costs would be shared among the organizations members of the board, subject, where necessary, to the agreement of the respective governing bodies. The staff would be supplemented by ad hoc task forces, including representatives of substantive users and suppliers of information in the areas under study, to facilitate the development and adoption of common systems.

An agreement reached by the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Health Organization (WHO), subject when necessary to the decisions of their respective legislative authorities, to participate fully in the creation of such a common data-processing facility had been welcomed by ACC. The facility would be installed initially on the premises of WHO, and other organizations of the United Nations system would be welcome as participants in, or users of, the common facility. The World Health Organization had agreed to the use of its premises for the common facility only as a service to the United Nations system and implementation of that decision would have certain financial implications for the organizations that participated fully in the common facility. Other organizations were expected to be able to use the common facility to an increasing extent as time went on for overflow and special work that could not be handled by their own facilities. In some cases, however, especially for organizations some distance from Geneva, technical and other limitations would have to be taken into account.

Finally, ACC had welcomed the intention of the United Nations, UNDP and WHO to establish a management committee of the centre which would be responsible for the over-all policy and operating direction of the common facility with the advice of, and in consultation with, the inter-organizational board.

On 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council noted that ACC had accepted, at the secretariat level, the proposal to create a separate facility in Europe for the United Nations system of organizations, to provide data-processing, systems and information services on an inter-organizational basis. It welcomed the measures on which ACC had agreed for the establishment of an inter-organizational board, directly responsible for the formulation of programmes of data processing, and it endorsed in principle, subject to further consideration later in 1970, the idea of creating a common system of data processing at Geneva, and of transferring from New York the services directly necessary for its operation.

Further, the Council expressed the opinion that the establishment of the common system would make it possible for the specialized agencies concerned to stabilize their computer equipment at current levels. It also welcomed the fact that, subject to the decisions of their respective legislative authorities, the United Nations, UNDP and WHO intended to participate fully in the creation of the common system; it thanked WHO for agreeing to the use of its premises, and urged all specialized agencies to participate in such a system.

Finally, the Council invited the executive heads of the specialized agencies to communicate without delay to the members of their governing bodies the full report of the Auditor-General of Canada, the special report of ACC to the Council, and the relevant observations of the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, together with the text of the Council's decision.

This decision of the Council was embodied in resolution 1551(XLIX) adopted by 20 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee, which had approved a joint French-Italian draft text on 29 July 1970 by a vote of 18 to 0, with 4 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In November 1970, the Council had before it a note by the Secretary-General containing proposals for a co-ordinated approach to the data-processing work of the organizations on the basis of the report of the Auditor-General of Canada, the report of the Secretary-General on electronic data-processing in the United Nations system of organizations and the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the Secretary-General's report.

The Council, without adopting a resolution, decided to transmit the Secretary-General's note to the General Assembly, together with the record of its own discussions on this question, and it commended the proposals for the establishment of the International Computing Centre as an effective form of co-ordination that would bring to the co-operating agencies the advantages of a large-scale computer installation and the greater efficiency of modern computer methods.

The Council recommended that all organizations represented in ACC should review their electronic data-processing work with a view to co-ordinating it with that of the International Computing Centre and should consider the desirability of participating in the work of the Centre.

The General Assembly, on 17 December 1970, adopted a resolution (2741(XXV)) taking note of the various actions in connexion with electronic data-processing and inviting the agencies to join with the United Nations, WHO and UNDP as partners in the International Computing Centre. (See pp. 869-70 for further details and pp. 872-73 for text of resolution 2741(XXV).)

MAXIMUM UTILIZATION OF STAFF

In taking decisions on the sphere of activities and competence of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council considered that the question of the maximum utilization of the headquarters and field staff of the organizations in the United Nations system was a matter of growing concern. It invited the organizations of the United Nations system to carry out more precisely and effectively the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies, and further, whenever obstacles or problems occurred, to mention these in their reports and make recommendations to overcome them.

It also invited the governing bodies of the specialized agencies and IAEA to consider making arrangements for studies on the use of the staffs of their secretariats, and recommended that the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the specialized agencies and IAEA take every possible action, including reassignment of present personnel in the light of priority programmes, in order to ensure the maximum utilization of the said personnel.

These decisions concerning the maximum utilization of staff were embodied in resolution 1547(XLIX). (For text of resolution, see pp. 605-6 above.)

OTHER ADMINISTRATIVE CO-ORDINATION

The General Assembly, with the adoption of resolutions 2731(XXV) on 16 December 1970 and 2748(XXV) on 17 December, took additional decisions on various aspects of administrative co-ordination.

By the first resolution—2731(XXV)—the Assembly among other things referred to the agencies the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on general co-ordination matters. (See pp.

867-68 for further details and page 871 for text of resolution.)

By the second resolution—2748(XXV)—the Assembly took further decisions on the question of the harmonization and the growth of budgets in the United Nations system. (See pp. 868-69 for further details and pp. 871-72 for text of resolution.)

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering its resolutions 1365(XLV) and 1368(XLV) of 2 August 1968 and 1455(XLVII) of 8 August 1969 and General Assembly resolution 2579 (XXIV) of 15 December 1969, which deal with data processing,

Taking account of the information placed before the Council on the views of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and also of the intention of the Secretary-General, who has not been able to submit a report to the forty-ninth session, to submit a detailed report on the whole question to the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session,

UNITED NATIONS WORK PROGRAMME IN THE ECONOMIC, SOCIAL AND HUMAN RIGHTS FIELDS AND ITS BUDGETARY REQUIREMENTS

REPORTS TO ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

The Economic and Social Council considered the work programme of the United Nations in the economic, social and human rights fields and related questions at both of its sessions in 1970. The comments of the Council's Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) on the work programme were before the Council at these meetings.

Among other things, CPC recommended that its report on the United Nations work programme be transmitted to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee when that body was considering the regular budget and planning estimates.

On 1 April 1970, the Council took note of the conclusions and recommendations of CPC and endorsed recommendations regarding: an exchange of views between CPC and the General Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ); and transmittal of CPC'S comments to the Fifth Committee. This decision was embodied in resolution 1479(XLVIII), adopted unanimously on the proposal of the Council President. (For text, see p. 610.)

The Secretary-General's report on the work programme stated that the achievement of the aims of the international development strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade would be given the highest priority in work in the economic and social fields. In giving an indication of the impact of the Decade on the work programme and its resource requirements, the report reviewed medium- and long-term planning within the context of the Decade and pointed to changes in the organizational pattern which might be necessary to enable the units concerned to provide substantive services for the implementation of the objectives of the Decade.

The report referred to the role of the proposed interdisciplinary advisory teams (see p. 348). It described other segments of the work programme which would be involved in the implementation of the strategy of the Second United Nations Development Decade, partly because of their inherent importance and partly because they had been independently elaborated by legislative bodies. These included, inter alia: population; housing, building and planning; science and technology; international trade; and industrial development.

On the question of determining priorities and the related matter of allocation of resources, the report emphasized that a consideration of appropriate means of action to achieve programme objectives was perhaps of equal importance to that of selecting priorities. What was called for

was a rational process of resource allocation to obtain an optimum division of available resources. In the case of activities for which initiative rested basically with the legislative organs—as distinct from activities undertaken in response to specific requests from Governments—the report stated that the legislative organs concerned should ensure that first priority was given to projects of interest to most United Nations Member States, and that allocation of resources between broad programmes and determination of the main thrust of activities might be one of the principal functions of CPC.

The report stated that the experience of an internal budget review confirmed the need for further improvement in the internal machinery of management and for other reforms directed towards the development of an integrated system of planning, programming and budgeting, as indicated in certain recent studies, including the report of Maurice Bertrand of the Joint Inspection Unit on programming and budgets in the United Nations family of organizations and a study of the capacity of the United Nations development system by Sir Robert Jackson.

The Secretary-General's report provided detailed information on work proposals and manpower requirements.

The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination recommended approval of the Secretary-General's work programme; it noted the budgetary implications of that programme for 1971 and recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to review his programme projections for 1972 and their budgetary implications in the light of the objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade and the results of the manpower utilization survey, then under way.

Commenting on sectors of the programme, CPC recommended that there be greater selectivity of projects in the fields of social development, human rights and the status of women. It expressed concern about the adequacy of resources available for programmes in natural resources and in housing, building and planning and it endorsed the proposal for the establishment of a standing committee on natural resources. The Committee also expressed the belief that activities of the United Nations system in the field of transport should be intensified and increased and that the work programme in trade should have the highest priority.

By a resolution adopted on 26 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council commended CPC for its efforts in reviewing the United Nations work programme; approved the Secretary-General's work programme for 1971, having considered it in the light of its budgetary implications; and endorsed in general the Committee's observations on the various sectoral programmes (see above).

The Council requested the Secretary-General to review his programme projections for 1972, bearing in mind the increased role the United Nations system was likely to play in the Second Development Decade. It called upon all concerned to implement fully the recommendations of the General Assembly, the Council and CPC with regard to the formulation of long-term plans, and recommended that subsidiary organs and programme managers should state the main objectives to be realized as well as the relationship of individual projects to those objectives.

Also, the Council asked the Secretary-General and invited ACABQ to take into account its comments and observations and those of CPC on the work programme.

The Council adopted this resolution—1489 (XLVIII)—by 25 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, on a proposal by Brazil, India and Norway. Prior to voting on the text as a whole, the Council adopted several of the paragraphs by separate votes. An amendment by Greece which would have had the Council approve the work programme "in principle" was withdrawn.

Later in 1970, the Economic and Social Council again took up a report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the United Nations work programme.

This report covered CPC'S consideration of the question of developing for the United Nations a system of programming and budgeting that would provide a rational basis for decision-making. The Committee concluded that the technique for programming and budgeting in itself was a neutral tool and had no connexion with the level of total resources that Governments might make to the United Nations.

The Committee also set out its conclusions on the major proposals of the Bertrand report (on programming and budgets in the United Nations family of organizations). Further, CPC reported that it had decided to appoint two special rapporteurs to deal with a survey of reports and studies in the economic and social fields and with the calendar of conferences in those fields.

On 19 October 1970, the Economic and Social Council among other things endorsed the recommendations made by CPC and transmitted CPC'S report to the General Assembly.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1588 (XLIX), adopted unanimously on a proposal of the Council President.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work programme of the United Nations in the economic, social and human rights fields and its budgetary requirements and the report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on the work programme,

Reaffirming the importance it attaches to an exhaustive annual review of the United Nations work programme in the economic, social and human rights fields in the light of the budgetary implications of that programme,

Recalling its resolutions 1046(XXXVII) of 15 August 1964, 1093(XXXIX) of 31 July 1965, 1177(XLI) of 5 August 1966, 1275(XLIII) of 4 August 1967, 1367(XLV) of 2 August 1968 and 1456(XLVII) of 8 August 1969,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 2370 (XXII) of 19 December 1967,

Believing that the Secretary-General should formulate the United Nations work programme in the economic, social and human rights fields in the context of the development strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Believing further that programme formulation should represent a meaningful translation of legislative decisions and that the implementation of this programme should not be impeded by unnecessary limitations on budgetary levels,

Bearing in mind that the General Assembly and the Council in numerous resolutions adopted over the past eight years have called for the development of an integrated approach to the work programme and budget of the Organization,

Noting with regret that only limited progress has been made in this direction,

1. Commends the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination for its efforts in reviewing meaningfully the work programme of the United Nations in the economic, social and human rights fields;

2. Approves the Secretary-General's work programme for 1971, having considered it in the light of its budgetary implications, as contained in his report;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to review his programme projections for 1972 bearing in mind the goals, objectives and policy measures to be set for the Second United Nations Development Decade and the increased role the United Nations system is likely to play in the attainment of those objectives;

4. Endorses, in general, the observations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination with respect to the various sectors of the work programme of the United Nations in economic, social and human rights fields;

5. Takes note of the comments and observations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination regarding the proposed interdisciplinary planning advisory teams and endorses the recommendation of the Committee in this regard as contained in paragraph 22 of its report;

6. Expresses its appreciation of the fact that some progress has been made regarding the formulation of long-term plans; however, calls upon all concerned to make every effort to implement fully the relevant recommendations of the General Assembly, the Council and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on this matter;

7. Recommends that, when drawing up their work programmes, subsidiary organs and programme managers should state the main objectives to be realized from such programmes as well as the relationship between individual projects and these objectives;

8. Expresses its satisfaction over the improvement in the documentary presentation of the work programme and calls upon all concerned to continue to strive for greater improvements and particularly draws attention to the observations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination in this regard in order to further the process of assignment of priorities;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the comments and observations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination with respect to the work programme as well as the comments of members in the Council;

10. Invites the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to take into account the comments and observations of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination with respect to the work programme as well as the comments of members in the Council;

CHAPTER XXIII

CONSULTATIVE ARRANGEMENTS WITH NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

During 1970, the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations of the Economic and Social Council continued to review the activities of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) granted consultative status by the Council.

The Council, at its May 1970 session, considered the report of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, which contained recommendations concerning the category of consultative status to be granted to various NGOs, in accordance with criteria set forth in a Council resolution of 23 May 1968.<sup>1</sup>

mendations concerning the Co-ordinating Board of Jewish Organizations (CBJO), the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL), a proposal on the grouping of NGOs, and another concerning organizations placed on the Roster at the request of the Secretary-General.

At the end of 1970, there were 419 NGOs which the Economic and Social Council could consult on questions with which they were concerned.

These organizations were divided into three groups. In Category I were organizations concerned with most of the activities of the Council which could demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Council: that they had marked and sustained contributions to make to the achievements of the United Nations in the social, cultural, educational, health, scientific, technological and human rights fields; that they were closely involved with the economic and social life of the peoples of the areas they represented; and that their membership was broadly representative of major segments of population in a large number of countries.

In Category II were organizations that had a special competence in, and were concerned specifically with, only a few of the fields of activity covered by the Council, and that were known internationally within the fields for which they had consultative status.

On the Roster were those that the Council, or the Secretary-General of the United Nations—in consultation with the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations—considered could make occasional and useful contributions to the work of the Council or other United Nations bodies, within their competence.

At the end of 1970, there were 16 NGOs with Category I status, 137 with Category II status and 266 on the Roster.

Organizations in Categories I and II may send observers to public meetings of the Council and its subsidiary bodies. Those on the Roster may have representatives present at meetings concerned with matters within their field of competence.

Those in Categories I and II may submit for circulation written statements relevant to the work of the Council on subjects in which those organizations have a special competence. The Secretary-General, in consultation with the President of the Council, or the Council or its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, may invite organizations on the Roster to submit written statements.

Organizations in Category I may present their views orally and also propose items for possible inclusion in the Council's provisional agenda. Such proposals must first be submitted to the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations for subsequent action by the Secretary-General. Category I organizations may, however, propose items directly for the provisional agenda of Council commissions.

In addition, all three groups of NGOs may consult with the United Nations Secretariat on matters of mutual concern.

REVIEW OF NGOS GRANTED CONSULTATIVE STATUS

At its May 1970 session, the Council had before it the report of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations containing recommendations on the granting of consultative status to NGOs. It took a series of decisions on these recommendations and on proposals by Council members, without adopting resolutions.

The Council took note of the Secretary-General's advice of his intention to place on the Roster the Association for the Advancement of Agricultural Sciences in Africa, the Organisation internationale pour le développement rural and the World Society of Ekistics.

During the Council's consideration of the report of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, the USSR requested separate votes on the Committee's recommendations to grant Category II consultative status to the International Association of Ports and Harbours (IAPH), the International Christian Union of Business Executives (UNIAPAC) and the International Organization—Justice and Development. As a result of the votes taken on these organizations (18 to 2, with 4 abstentions, 20 to 2, with 3 abstentions, and 17 to 2, with 4 abstentions, respectively), the Council endorsed the Committee's recommendations and placed all three in Category II.

At the request of the representative of the United Kingdom, a separate vote was taken to place the International College of Surgeons on the Roster. This proposal was rejected (by a vote of 14 to 3, with 5 abstentions): as a result the Council decided to place this organization in Category II, thereby endorsing the Committee's recommendation.

The Council also decided to place the following 17 organizations in Category II:

All African Women's Conference Anti-apartheid Movement, The Baha'i International Community
Centro de Investigación para el Desarrollo Económico y Social

Co-ordinating Board of Jewish Organizations (CBJO)
 Co-ordinating Committee for International Voluntary Service
 International Cargo Handling Co-ordination Association International Organization of Journalists (IOJ)
 International Organization of Supreme Audit Institutions (INTOSAI)
 International Society of Social Defence
 Movement for Colonial Freedom
 Permanent International Association of Road Congresses (PIARC)
 Studies and Expansion Society—International Scientific Association (SES)
 Universal Federation of Travel Agents Association
 World Association of World Federalists
 World Federation of Democratic Youth
 World Student Christian Federation

The Council decided to place the following 19 organizations on the Roster:

Committee for Economic Development
 Confederation of Asian Chambers of Commerce
 Federation of International Furniture Removers
 International Bureau for the Suppression of Traffic in Persons International Committee of Outer Space Onomastics (ICOSO)
 International Container Bureau
 International Council of Commerce Employers
 International Council of Voluntary Agencies (ICVA)
 International Federation of Forwarding Agents Associations
 International Federation of Surveyors International Hotel Association International League of Surveillance Societies, The International Olive Growers Federation
 International Schools Association International Senior Citizens' Association, Inc.. The International Society for the Protection of Animals
 Society for International Development
 Vienna Institute for Development
 World Union for Progressive Judaism

The Council decided to reject the application of the European Union of Coachbuilders and to refer it instead to the possibilities of consultative status with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and perhaps other organizations within the United Nations system.

The Council also found that, in accordance with a Council resolution of 23 May 1968<sup>2</sup> which set a time-limit of two years for requests for reclassification, it was prohibited from considering the requests for reclassification to Category II status of the Boy Scouts World Bureau, the International Council of Social Democratic Women and the International Prisoners' Aid Association.

On the basis of a recommendation contained in the report of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, the Council also decided that the Secretariat should advise NGOs which had been retained on the Roster upon the recommendation of the Secretary-General (until they had had time to make a direct application to the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and the Council had acted on the Committee's recommendations) that their status might cease at the fiftieth session of the Council—to be held early in 1971—if they took no action by the time the Committee convened in 1971.

On 26 May 1970, the Council began consideration of the part of its Committee's report relating to the Co-ordinating Board of Jewish Organizations (CBJO), which the Committee had recommended for Category II consultative status in February 1970.

During the debate, Bulgaria, Pakistan, Sudan, and the USSR were among those that said CBJO should not be granted consultative status, since it did not fulfil the requirements which would qualify it for such status. They held that the activities of CBJO were not international but appeared to be restricted to the interests of a single State. Also, CBJO, they thought, had abused its consultative status by unwarranted criticism of Member States of the United Nations.

The representative of Uruguay expressed the opinion that CBJO was in no way linked to the interests of a particular State, since it was financed by the contributions of its affiliates. He felt that it had made a positive contribution to the work of the United Nations in the field of human rights and should therefore be placed in Category II, as the Committee had recommended. France and the United States supported this view.

Sudan proposed formally that the Council should decide, by a roll-call vote, to take no decision on its Committee's recommendation to grant Category II status to CBJO.

By a roll-call vote of 10 in favour to 10

against, with 7 abstentions, the proposal of the representative of Sudan was rejected.

A proposal by Pakistan, supported by Sudan, to postpone to the next day a final decision on the matter was adopted by 10 votes to 7, with 8 abstentions.

The next day, 27 May 1970, Pakistan, supported by Sudan, suggested that the Council request its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to investigate the charges levelled at CBJO; Sudan formally so proposed. The Council, by a roll-call vote requested by the representative of Pakistan, rejected the Sudanese proposal by 12 votes to 10, with 5 abstentions.

By 14 votes to 10, with 3 abstentions, the Council adopted a United States proposal, amended by Pakistan, to approve the recommendation of the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations to grant Category II consultative status to CBJO. The Pakistan amendment added the idea that the granting of such status would be subject to the right of the Council to invoke the provisions of its decision of 28 May 1968<sup>3</sup> if at any time the Council were convinced that the organization was engaged in any of the activities alleged against it in the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations and in the Council.

On 27 May 1970, the Council also decided to endorse the recommendation of its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations that the Secretariat, in consultation with the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL), submit to the Committee at its 1971 session the draft text of a special arrangement between INTERPOL and the Council.

The request for a special arrangement with INTERPOL resulted from debates in the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations in 1969, during which the USSR and the United Republic of Tanzania held that INTERPOL was inter-governmental in character, since its membership consisted of official police agencies designated by appropriate governmental agencies in their respective countries.

The representatives of France, Indonesia, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States thought that although INTERPOL was not an inter-governmental body in the strictest sense, it was not entirely non-governmental in nature. They therefore favoured a special arrange ment between INTERPOL and the Council.

In addition, the Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations had received a communication from INTERPOL in April 1969, referring to its "special legal status" and indicating that it was not non-governmental in character. INTERPOL further stated that it would welcome some kind of co-operation agreement with the United Nations bodies.

The Council also approved a text recommended by its Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations on the question of the grouping of NGOS. By this text the Council emphasized the possible value of grouping certain organizations on a voluntary and temporary basis for the purpose of consultation on specific questions and urged the Conference of Non-Governmental Organizations in Consultative Status with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations to give this question its immediate attention with a view to submitting comments on the matter to the Committee.

OPERATING CONSULTATIVE ARRANGEMENTS

WRITTEN STATEMENTS FROM NGOS

Fifty-four statements by 48 individual non-governmental organizations were submitted during 1970, under the arrangements for consultation. In addition, four joint statements were made by 60 organizations.

Written statements were submitted not only to the Economic and Social Council but to the following: the Commission for Social Development; the Commission on Human Rights; the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities; the Commission on the Status of Women; the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. Part VIII of resolution 1296(XLIV) provides for the suspension or withdrawal of consultative status if, among other things, there exists substantiated evidence of secret governmental financial influence to induce an organization to undertake acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter, or if the organization clearly abuses its consultative status by systematically engaging in unsubstantiated or politically motivated acts against Members of the United Nations contrary to and incompatible with the principles of the Charter.

HEARINGS OF NGOS

ternational Confederation of Free Trade Unions, on the general discussion of international economic and social policy, on the Second United Nations Development Decade, and on questions relating to science and technology; the League of Red Cross Societies, on assistance in cases of natural disaster; the United Towns Organization, on the Second United Nations Development Decade; the Women's International Democratic Federation, on the general discussion of international economic and social policy; the World Federation of Trade Unions, on the general discussion of international economic and social policy, on the Second United Nations Development Decade and on the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries; and the World Federation of United Nations Associations, on the Second United Nations Development Decade, on regional co-operation, and on the feasibility of an international university.

During the Council's July 1970 session, two NGOs in Category II were heard by the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations as follows: the International Association of Penal Law, on the Second United Nations Development Decade; and the World Young Women's Christian Association, on the general discussion of international economic and social policy and on the Second United Nations Development Decade.

At the Council's session itself, the International Student Movement for the United Nations, a Category II NGO, was heard on the question of the feasibility of an international university.

The Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations also heard brief statements by representatives of the five organizations in Category I on agenda items on which they were later heard by the Council or its other Committees.

ASSISTANCE IN CASES OF NATURAL DISASTER

ASSISTANCE IN 1970

During 1970 the Secretary-General, under the authority granted to him by the General Assembly, made a number of advances from the Working Capital Fund for emergency aid in connexion with natural disasters.

The advances included assistance to the following countries: to Madagascar, for the purchase of farming tools and vehicles for reconstruction work following a cyclone in March; to Turkey, for the purchase of water purification units following an earthquake in March; to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen,<sup>1</sup> for the purchase of diesel pumps to provide drinking water following floods during April; to Peru, for the purchase of public sanitation equipment following an earthquake in May; to Romania, for the purchase of communication equipment following floods during May; to Hungary, for the purchase of cement following floods during May; to Pakistan, for the purchase of edible oils following floods in September and a cyclone in November; and to the Philippines, for the purchase of canned meat, canned vegetables, canned fish, milk, milk biscuits and medical supplies following three typhoons during October.

Under his authority to make advances from the Working Capital Fund to countries for the elaboration of national plans to meet disasters, the Secretary-General approved advances to Argentina, for the services of dam construction experts on flood prevention; to Syria, for the services of experts on reconstruction and flood prevention; to Iceland, for the services of experts in pre-disaster planning; and to Mauritania, for the services of experts in the construction of underground grain-storage facilities.

AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

During 1970, the Economic and Social Council recommended measures to be taken by the international community following disasters in five countries: earthquakes in Peru and Turkey, floods in Hungary and Romania, and a famine in Yemen.

On 31 March 1970, the Council, noting the tragic consequences of an earthquake in Turkey, invited Member States and non-governmental organizations to consider ways and means of rendering assistance to the Government of Turkey in providing relief for the victims of the earthquake; and requested the Secretary-General, the heads of the specialized agencies, the Executive Directors of the World Food Programme (WFP) and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)—when deciding on services to be provided to Member States—to bear in mind the needs of the Turkish Government in connexion with its plans for reconstruction of the devastated areas.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 1478(XLVIII), adopted unanimously by the Council. The text was based on a proposal by the following 14 powers: Brazil, Bulgaria, Ceylon, Greece, Japan, Kenya, India, Indonesia, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Sudan, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 28 May 1970, the Council, noting the suffering inflicted on the people of Hungary and Romania by disastrous floods, invited Member States and non-governmental organizations to consider ways and means of rendering assistance to the Governments of Hungary and Romania; and requested the Secretary-General, the Directors-General of the specialized agencies, the Executive Directors of WFP and UNICEF and the Administrator of UNDP, in the light of the funds available, to render urgent assistance to the people of the two countries in order to alleviate their suffering and to help restore normal living conditions.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 1508(XLVIII), adopted unanimously, on the proposal of Bulgaria, India, Ireland, Norway, Tunisia and Yugoslavia. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By a decision of 10 July 1970, the Council took note of the earthquake which struck the northern region of Peru, causing immense loss of human life and property and massive disruption of the country's economy.

After noting the assistance being provided to Peru by Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and other international organizations, the Council among other things: urged Governments of States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to continue their co-operation for the purposes of relief and reconstruction; invited international credit institutions to give urgent consideration to emergency measures to assist Peru in the task of reconstruction; invited creditor countries to take into account the disaster suffered by Peru and its reconstruction needs, in relation to restructuring its external debt; requested the Secretary-General to ask the organizations of the United Nations system to do their utmost within their respective programmes to meet requests for assistance in reconstruction; requested the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Development Association (IDA) to study the possibility of special machinery which would permit the total financing of programmes of rehabilitation and reconstruction in Peru; and invited the Bank and IDA to give special attention to Peru's need for resources, bearing in mind the principle underlying the Bank's policy, namely, that problems of reconstruction were inseparable from problems of economic development.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1518(XLIX), which was adopted unanimously. The text was based on a proposal by Argentina, Brazil, France, Ghana, Indonesia, Jamaica, Pakistan, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay and Yugoslavia, as amended by France and Italy. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At the request of the USSR, a separate vote was taken on the provision which urged Governments of States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies and IAEA to continue their co-operation for the purposes of relief and reconstruction. The provision was approved by 16 votes to 2, with 4 abstentions. Earlier, the Council had rejected, by a vote of 10 to 6, with 8 abstentions, an amendment by the USSR by which that provision would have been deleted and, instead, Governments of all States would have been urged to continue their efforts for the purposes of relief and reconstruction.

On 15 July 1970, the Council, considering that persistent drought conditions had resulted in widespread famine in Yemen, urged Member States and non-governmental organizations to render relief assistance to the people of Yemen. It also requested the Secretary-General to give particular attention to Yemen's urgent needs and to facilitate accelerated action by the specialized agencies, especially the Food and Agriculture Organization, the World Health Organization, WFP and UNICEF.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1519(XLIX), which was adopted unanimously. The text was based on a proposal by Bulgaria, Sudan and Tunisia, as amended by Kenya and the United States. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

In response to the severe cyclone and tidal wave which struck East Pakistan in early November 1970, the General Assembly adopted a resolution whereby it expressed its awareness that the extent of assistance in cases of natural disaster it had envisaged in adopting its resolution of 19 December 1968<sup>2</sup> was inadequate for relief in calamities of major magnitude, and stated its belief that assistance to a Member State which had suffered a natural disaster of such magnitude was an expression of international solidarity.

and to governmental and non-governmental organizations to make generous contributions to the victims of the disaster through the United Nations system or other channels for emergency relief. The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General, Member States, members of the United Nations system, and governmental and non-governmental organizations to provide the largest possible volume of resources to assist the Government of Pakistan in implementing its programmes of reconstruction, rehabilitation and development. The Assembly invited the Secretary-General to ensure the fullest possible co-ordination of the assistance to be provided through the United Nations, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations, and to co-operate with other international sources of such assistance.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2643 (XXV), which was adopted unanimously on 20 November 1970 on the recommendation of the Assembly's Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee.

The text, which was approved unanimously by the Third Committee on 17 November 1970, was based on a proposal sponsored by the following 43 States: Afghanistan, Algeria, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Ceylon, Costa Rica, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Morocco, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United States, Yemen and Yugoslavia. ## PROCEDURES FOR ASSISTANCE

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council considered the general question of international assistance in cases of natural disaster.

The Council had before it an interim report on the subject, prepared by the Secretary-General in accordance with a General Assembly request of 19 December 1968.<sup>3</sup> The Council also took into account a resolution adopted by the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America at its extraordinary (June 1970) session, which recommended the establishment of an emergency fund for cases of natural disaster; as well as a resolution adopted by the Governing Council of UNDP at its June 1970 session, also recommending the establishment of a natural disaster emergency fund, the first task of which would be to assist Peru in its reconstruction programme following a major earthquake.

The interim report of the Secretary-General noted the importance of scientific studies, national preparedness and international assistance, and emphasized the value of pre-disaster planning. The report recognized that since Governments would look to the international community and the organizations of the United Nations system for assistance in cases of natural disaster, it was essential that these organizations be able to respond quickly and effectively.

The Council adopted two resolutions concerning assistance in cases of natural disaster.

On 23 July 1970, the Council, taking into particular account the earthquake disaster in Peru, recommended the establishment of an emergency fund for disasters, to be made up of voluntary contributions by all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies. The first task of the fund would be to provide Peru with resources of all kinds—including technical assistance—needed for the reconstruction of the areas devastated by the recent earthquake. The Assembly requested the Secretary-General to undertake to promote the fund among member States.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1533 (XLIX), which was adopted by 17 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee. The text was based on a proposal by India, Indonesia, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru and Yugoslavia, as amended by Jamaica. It was approved by the Co-ordination Committee on 17 July 1970, by a roll-call vote of 17 to 5, with 5 abstentions.

An amendment by the USSR—by which an emergency fund would have been established made up of voluntary contributions by all States (rather than by United Nations and specialized agency member States)—was rejected by the Co-ordination Committee by a vote of 13 to 7, with 7 abstentions.

In a further action, the Economic and Social Council, on 30 July 1970, took a number of steps aimed at strengthening and making more effective the capacity of the United Nations system to assist countries stricken by natural disasters.

The Council among other things: commended the Secretary-General for his intention to entrust one of his senior officials with the responsibility of developing and co-ordinating assistance from the United Nations system and ensuring co-operation with Governments, the Red Cross and other voluntary agencies, and requested him to make the staff arrangements necessary to this end; reaffirmed the importance of pre-disaster plans at the national level and drew attention to the contribution UNDP could make towards preparation of such plans; stressed the importance of stand-by relief units and stockpiling of supplies at the national level; appealed to States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies to offer emergency assistance on an increasing scale, including stand-by relief units and the earmarking of such units; recognized the role of Resident Representatives of UNDP in making preliminary assessments of the extent of natural disasters, including consultation with the Government concerned on the question of the need for a special resident Co-ordinator to deal with international disaster relief; reaffirmed the need for scientific research into the causes of disasters and the development of warning systems; invited the Secretary-General to continue the studies called for by the General Assembly on 19 December 1968; further invited the Secretary-General, in pursuing his studies, to consider the role of the emergency fund for disasters recommended by Council resolution 1533(XLIX) of 23 July 1970 (see above); and decided to review the question of assistance in cases of natural disaster at its mid-1971 session, on the basis of a comprehensive report to be submitted by the Secretary-General.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1546(XLIX) adopted, unanimously, on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee, which unanimously approved the text on 27 July 1970. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was based on a proposal by Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States, as amended by the sponsors and jointly by 10 powers: Chad, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Peru, Sudan, Tunisia, Upper Volta and Yugoslavia.

At the request of the USSR, two separate votes were taken in the Co-ordination Committee on the provision recognizing the role of the Resident Representatives of UNDP in undertaking a preliminary assessment of the extent of a natural disaster, including consultation with the Government concerned on the question of the need for a special resident co-ordinator to deal with disaster relief. The first half of the provision was approved by a vote of 21 to 0, with 2 abstentions; the second part was approved by a vote of 13 to 4, with 5 abstentions.

Rejected in the Co-ordination Committee—by 11 votes to 6, with 6 abstentions—was a USSR amendment by which an appeal would have been made to all States (rather than to United Nations and specialized agency member States) to offer emergency aid on an increasing scale.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

At its 1970 session, the General Assembly also considered the question of strengthening United Nations efforts to provide assistance in cases of natural disaster.

On 15 December 1970 the Assembly, expressing its concern about the grave human and material losses suffered by countries which had been stricken by natural disasters and its awareness of the serious consequences of such disasters on economic and social development, particularly of developing countries, renewed its appeal to United Nations and specialized agency member States to offer emergency assistance to meet natural disasters, through the United Nations, or other organizations, or through bilateral arrangements. Such assistance should include stand-by disaster relief units and ve-hides or other means of delivering supplies to disaster areas.

The Assembly invited the Secretary-General to include in his comprehensive report on the implementation of its resolution of 19 December 1968, to be submitted to its 1971 session, conclusions and recommendations regarding various aspects of disaster assistance, including: the improvement of the capacity of the different organizations of the United Nations system to contribute assistance in cases of natural disaster; the strengthening of the capacity of the United Nations itself, including organizational arrangements for the permanent office responsible for the co-ordination of action relating to natural disasters; ways of ensuring better mobilization and co-ordination of the assistance provided through the United Nations system, the League of Red Cross Societies and non-governmental organizations; pre-disaster planning at the national and international levels as well as technical assistance to meet governmental requests in that regard; the stockpiling of emergency supplies; the application of technology to, and scientific research for, the prevention and control of natural disasters, or a mitigation of their effects; programmes for the training of relief personnel; measures directed at immediate relief operations and short-term, low-cost rehabilitation as well as long-term plans for reconstruction and development.

The Assembly urged that requests for emergency assistance be given prompt and appropriate response. It invited UNDP, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and other international credit institutions and development agencies to give consideration within their respective spheres of competence to the possibility of meeting requests for assistance which countries stricken by natural disasters might submit for the purpose of rehabilitation, reconstruction and development.

These decisions were embodied in resolution

2717 (XXV), which was adopted, unanimously, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, which had approved the text by acclamation on 11 December 1970.

The text was based on a proposal by the following 70 States: Afghanistan, Algeria, Austria, Belgium, Burma, Burundi, Canada, Ceylon, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, France, Greece, Guinea, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, Peru, the Philippines, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

In a related action, the General Assembly by a resolution (2733 D (XXV)) adopted on 16 December 1970, expressed its concern over the devastating and harmful effects of typhoons and storms in various parts of the world, particularly in Asia, and its belief that man's current scientific and technical capabilities could help conquer that environmental scourge. The Assembly recommended that the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) take further action with a view to obtaining basic meteorological data and discovering ways and means of mitigating the harmful effects of typhoons and similar storms and removing or minimizing their destructive potentials, and asked WMO to submit a report to the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space at its 1971 session. (For text of resolution, see pp. 54-55.)

Deeply grieved over the immense loss of human life and destruction of property as a result of the recent severe cyclone and tidal bore in East Pakistan,

Recalling its resolution 2435 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1533 (XLIX) and 1546 (XLIX) of 23 and 30 July 1970,

Aware of the immediate and effective measures taken by the Government of Pakistan to provide relief for the victims of the disaster and to restore satisfactory living conditions in the devastated areas,

Aware also that the assistance envisaged in cases of natural disaster in resolution 2435 (XXIII) is inadequate for relief in calamities of major magnitude,

Believing that assistance to a Member State which has suffered a natural disaster of such magnitude is an expression of international solidarity,

Bearing in mind that immediate relief assistance at the international level should be followed by concerted action for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the disaster areas,

1. Expresses its deep sympathy to the people and the Government of Pakistan on the loss of life and the devastation caused by the recent disaster;

2. Appeals to the Governments of States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies and to governmental and non-governmental organizations to make generous contributions through the United Nations system or other channels for emergency relief to the victims of the disaster;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General, Member States, specialized agencies and other members of the United Nations system, especially the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, the World Food Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund and the International Atomic Energy Agency, and also governmental and non-governmental organizations, to provide the largest possible volume of resources in order to assist the Government of Pakistan in implementing the programmes it envisages for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development in the afflicted area;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, in exercising his functions relating to natural disasters, to take steps to ensure the fullest possible co-ordination of the assistance to be provided through the United Nations, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations, and to co-operate with other international sources of such assistance.

RESOLUTION 1533 (XLIX), as recommended by Co-ordination Committee, E/4908, adopted by Council on 23 July 1970, meeting 1716, by 17 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the interim report of the Secretary-General on assistance in cases of natural disaster,

Taking into consideration that the United Nations lacks the adequate machinery and resources to undertake commitments of the magnitude necessary for the reconstruction of the devastated regions of Peru,

Bearing in mind the distress felt by all mankind at the news of the earthquake that resulted in the loss of over 60,000 lives and the devastation of an area of almost 100,000 square kilometres in Peru, leaving tremendous material damage in its wake,

Taking into account that this catastrophe befell

Peru at a time when it was carrying out a major development effort and has obliged the Peruvian Government and people to concentrate all their energies on the reconstruction of the destroyed areas,

Considering that the international community must find the means for Peru to receive the necessary aid, in keeping with the sympathy expressed by all the peoples of the world on the occasion of the Peruvian tragedy and the desire of those peoples to help as best they can in the rehabilitation of that country,

Considering resolution 298(AC.63) adopted by the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America at its sixth special session and the resolution approved by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme at its tenth session,

Considering its own resolution 1518(XLIX) of 10 July 1970 on measures to be taken following the earthquake in Peru,

1. Recommends the States Members of the United Nations to establish an emergency fund for disasters to be made up of voluntary contributions by all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies. The first task of this fund would be to provide Peru, through the Secretary-General, and up to the limit of what is available, with resources of all kinds—including technical assistance—which are needed for the reconstruction of the devastated area, in accordance with such projects as the Government of Peru and the United Nations Development Programme may prepare. The fund, which would be made available to Peru on a non-reimbursable basis, would consist of contributions both in freely convertible currency and in local currency to be used for the acquisition and transport of equipment and raw materials and for other services needed for the reconstruction projects. It would also include payment by the contributing countries of the cost of sending the necessary experts for the above-mentioned technical assistance. Contributions may also include other types of assistance, such as supplies, equipment and technical personnel for emergency situations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake to promote this fund among States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies.

RESOLUTION 1546(XLIX), as recommended by Co-ordination Committee, E/4908/Add.1, as orally corrected, adopted unanimously by Council on 30 July 1970, meeting 1721.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2034(XX) of 7 December 1965 and 2435(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, on assistance in cases of natural disaster,

Noting its resolution 1518(XLIX) of 10 July 1970 concerning measures to be taken following the earthquake in Peru,

Having in mind its resolution 1533(XLIX) of 23 July 1970, in which it recommended that the States Members of the United Nations establish an emergency fund for disasters, to be made up of voluntary contributions from all States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies,

Having considered with interest the interim report of the Secretary-General on assistance in cases of natural disaster,

Aware not only of the cost in human life and suffering but also of the serious implications for social and economic development of natural disasters, especially in the developing countries,

Noting with appreciation the important contributions to disaster relief and rehabilitation made by Governments, the many United Nations organizations concerned, and by the League of Red Cross Societies and other voluntary agencies,

Mindful of the need to strengthen and make more effective the capacity of the United Nations system to assist countries stricken by natural disasters as stressed by experience in connexion with the natural catastrophes of recent years,

1. Commends the Secretary-General on his intention to entrust one of his senior officials with the responsibility of acting for him on a regular basis in developing and co-ordinating assistance from the United Nations system and in ensuring continual and close co-operation with the Governments concerned, the League of Red Cross Societies and other voluntary agencies;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make the staff arrangements necessary to this end, in implementation of operative paragraph 4 of General Assembly resolution 2435(XXIII);

3. Reaffirms the importance of the preparation of pre-disaster plans at the national level to meet natural disasters, including the establishment of co-ordination machinery capable of immediate action in cases of disaster;

4. Draws attention to the contribution that the United Nations Development Programme can make in providing technical assistance towards such preparations;

5. Stresses the importance of stand-by relief units at the national level and of the stockpiling of supplies for use in emergency situations;

6. Appeals to States Members of the United Nations and members of the specialized agencies to offer on an increasing scale, through bilateral arrangements, the United Nations system, or other appropriate organizations, emergency assistance to meet natural disasters, including stand-by relief units or the earmarking of similar units for service in foreign countries;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to consult the Governments of States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies on this matter;

8. Recognizes the role of the resident representative of the United Nations Development Programme in undertaking a preliminary assessment of the extent of a natural disaster, including consultation with the Government concerned on the question of the need for a special resident Co-ordinator to deal with international disaster relief;

9. Reaffirms also the need to promote scientific research into the causes and early manifestations of impending disasters and to develop and improve early warning systems;

10. Invites the Secretary-General, in continuing his studies in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2435(XXIII), to pay special regard to the following points:

(a) That a clear distinction should be maintained between special arrangements for the co-ordination of assistance during the emergency phase of natural disasters, and the subsequent co-ordination of further assistance for reconstruction and rehabilitation;

(b) That possible improvements should be explored in co-ordination at the national and international level of prior arrangements both for the giving and the receipt of emergency assistance, and for the channelling of such assistance to disaster-affected areas, in order to help the initiatives of relief organizations;

(c) That there should be full consultation with the League of Red Cross Societies and other voluntary agencies concerned, and also with the Governments of States Members of the United Nations or members of the specialized agencies and other appropriate organizations, in the formulation of his eventual recommendations to the Council at its fifty-first session;

11. Further invites the Secretary-General, in pursuing his studies, to consider the role within the United Nations system of the Emergency Fund for Disasters, recommended in Council resolution 1533 (XLIV), in providing assistance to countries stricken by natural disasters;

12. Decides to review at its fifty-first session the question of assistance in cases of natural disaster, on the basis of the comprehensive report which the Secretary-General has been asked to submit to the Council at that session, with a view to the formulation of recommendations for the consideration of the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session, in keeping with General Assembly resolution 2435 (XXIII).

RESOLUTION 2717 (xxv), as recommended by Third Committee, A/8173/Add.1, adopted unanimously by Assembly on 15 December 1970, meeting 1930.

The General Assembly,

Concerned about the grave human and material losses suffered by countries which have recently been stricken by natural disasters,

Aware also of the serious consequences of such disasters on the economic and social development of countries, particularly the developing countries,

Expressing its appreciation of the assistance rendered by the Red Cross, other voluntary organizations, the United Nations system and bilateral aid, and once again emphasizing the necessity of strengthening the international machinery for providing adequate assistance in cases of natural disaster,

Mindful of the principles laid down in the Declaration of Principles for International Humanitarian Relief to the Civilian Population in Disaster Situations, contained in resolution XXVI adopted by the twenty-first International Conference of the Red Cross held at Istanbul in 1969,

Recalling its resolutions 2034 (XX) of 7 December 1965, 2435 (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2608 (XXIV) of 16 December 1969 and 2643 (XXV) of 20 November 1970 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1533 (XLIX) of 23 July 1970 and 1546 (XLIX) of 30 July 1970 concerning assistance in cases of natural disaster,

Aware that the assistance envisaged in cases of natural disaster in resolution 2435 (XXIII) is inadequate for relief in calamities of major magnitude,

Having considered with interest and appreciation the interim report of the Secretary-General on assistance in cases of natural disaster and the report of the Secretary-General's personal representative on United Nations assistance to Peru,

Noting the request made by the Economic and Social Council at its forty-ninth session to the Secretary-General to give early consideration to the strengthening of staff arrangements within the United Nations Secretariat to deal with natural disasters, and the steps already taken towards the implementation of this request, including the designation of a focal point in the Secretariat,

Bearing in mind the need to strengthen and co-ordinate effectively the efforts of the United Nations family of organizations in disaster relief as well as other assistance directed through the United Nations system,

Considering that additional measures are necessary to enable the United Nations system to play an effective and more significant role in meeting the needs of States, especially the developing countries, in relation to natural disasters, epidemics, famines and similar emergency situations,

Also bearing in mind that immediate relief assistance at the international level should be followed by concerted action for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the disaster areas,

Recalling the request made to the Secretary-General by the General Assembly in its resolution 2435 (XXIII) to submit a comprehensive report on the implementation of that resolution to the Economic and Social Council at its fifty-first session and to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session,

1. Renews its appeals to States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies to consider and to continue offering on a wider basis, through the United Nations, bilateral arrangements or other appropriate organizations, emergency assistance to meet natural disasters, including stand-by disaster relief units or the earmarking of similar units for service in foreign countries;

2. Invites States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies to communicate information to the Secretary-General on the kind of facilities and services they might be in a position to provide immediately, if they so decided, in response to a request from him to participate in emergency relief operations, including, where possible, the number and type of vehicles or other means of delivering supplies to disaster areas by air, sea and land;

3. Urges the Secretary-General to submit in his comprehensive report the study called for in paragraph 6 of General Assembly resolution 2435 (XXIII) concerning the legal status of disaster relief units made available through the United Nations;

4. Invites the Secretary-General to include in his comprehensive report, in addition to those studies and reports he has been invited to submit by the General Assembly in resolution 2435 (XXIII) and by the Economic and Social Council in paragraphs 10 and 11 of resolution 1546 (XLIX), his conclusions and recommendations on:

(a) The capacity of the different organizations of the United Nations system to contribute assistance in connexion with natural disasters;

(b) The areas where this assistance might be increased or made more effective;

(c) The most appropriate means to strengthen further the capacity of the United Nations relating to natural disasters, including organizational arrangements for the permanent office in the United Nations Secretariat responsible for the co-ordination of action relating to natural disasters, epidemics, famines and similar emergency situations and the resources required therefor;

5. Further invites the Secretary-General, in pursuance of paragraphs 1, 2 and 4 above, to submit recommendations in particular on:

(a) Ways and means of ensuring better mobilization and co-ordination of the assistance to be provided through the United Nations, the organizations of the United Nations system, as well as the League of Red Cross Societies and other non-governmental organizations;

(b) Pre-disaster planning at the national and international levels, including the definition of machinery and contingency arrangements capable of coping immediately with disaster situations;

(d) The application of technology to, and scientific research for, the prevention and control of natural disasters, or a mitigation of the effects of such disasters, including arrangements to disseminate effectively to all countries the fruits of research from satellites and other sophisticated technology with a view to strengthening international co-operation to determine the causes and early manifestation of impending disasters, and the development and improvement of early warning systems;

(e) National and international programmes designed to train relief personnel;

(f) Measures to be taken in the initial emergency or post-disaster phase directed at immediate relief operations and short-term low-cost rehabilitation measures, including the deployment of mobile transportation units and the means to assess the extent of damage and the amount of assistance needed in this first phase;

(g) The study of long-term plans for the reconstruction and development of disaster areas, and the affected countries as a whole, bearing in mind the principle that the problems of reconstruction are inseparable from the problems of economic development;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Red Cross Societies, where appropriate, to study and recommend in his comprehensive report, taking into account past practices, the most effective measures and means to meet requests for technical assistance by States members of the United Nations system in elaboration of their planning of national preparations to meet natural disasters, epidemics, famines and similar emergency situations;

7. Urges that requests submitted by Governments for assistance under General Assembly resolutions 2435 (XXIII) and 2608 (XXIV) be given prompt and appropriate response in regard to the amount and type of assistance requested;

8. Also invites the United Nations Development Programme to give serious consideration to the possibility of meeting requests for assistance which countries stricken by natural disasters may submit for the express purpose of the rehabilitation and development of the stricken areas without prejudice to the utilization of funds already earmarked for projects of the Programme;

9. Further invites the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and other international credit organizations and development agencies to give serious consideration to requests for assistance from the Governments of countries affected by natural disasters relating to their programmes for reconstruction and development and without prejudice to the requests submitted by them prior to the natural disaster that are still under consideration.

THE UNITED NATIONS INSTITUTE FOR TRAINING AND RESEARCH

TRAINING

A new activity of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) was the introduction in 1970 of weekend meetings, at which diplomats, civil servants and scholars met together informally to exchange views. Two such "UNITAR Weekends" were held during the year: one on the subject of the United Nations 25 years hence, and another on the social-psychological aspects of the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

During 1970, two panels were set up to review the training programmes in diplomacy and technical co-operation.

A regional seminar for Latin America on techniques and procedures of United Nations technical assistance was held in Santiago, Chile, in May 1970. A similar seminar for Europe and the Middle East took place in Geneva, Switzerland, in June.

A study conference seminar on technical and financial co-operation opened at Geneva in August 1970, visited various cities in Europe and the United States, and ended in New York in November.

Seminars in international organization and multilateral diplomacy were held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from February to April 1970.

A series of six special lectures were organized in honour of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, the Second United Nations Development Decade, International Education Year, and the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

A seminar on international law took place in The Hague, Netherlands, in July and August 1970. In Turin, Italy, a colloquium on decision-making for senior officials in the United Nations system was held at the beginning of July. Also in July, in Geneva, a meeting of directors of institutes within the United Nations family discussed the dissemination, use and influence of research.

In June 1970, a new programme—the Attachment Programme—was begun, by which UNITAR annually would offer internships to outstanding graduate students to enable them to participate in a UNITAR project. Post-doctoral researchers would also be accepted as visiting scholars to carry out research related to the interests of UNITAR. No stipends would be paid, and travel and living expenses would be the responsibility of the individual. Candidates would be sponsored either by Governments or by a university or similar institution.

RESEARCH

During 1970, UNITAR carried out studies on the setting up of a staff college for the United Nations system and on the feasibility of an international university (see pp. 648-49).

Research continued on the following subjects: the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries; relations between the United Nations and regional inter-governmental organizations; the transfer of technology from developed to developing countries; youth and international society; problems of the human environment; techniques and methods of training; the functioning of the Economic and Social Council; the use by news media of public information on the United Nations; and the verification of international treaties, in particular the safeguards machinery of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

With a grant from the Government of Argentina, a comparative study of the financial, legal and administrative aspects of major international navigation systems was undertaken, concluding with a seminar held in Buenos Aires, Argentina.

An international research conference on race relations was organized in co-operation with the Center on Race Relations of the University of Denver, United States. A paper on the meetings was issued by UNITAR.

An on-going UNITAR project on the peaceful settlement of international disputes was the subject of a workshop on perception and communication, on which a booklet was issued. Another booklet, entitled Peaceful Settlement of Disputes: Ideas and Proposals for Research, by Sydney D. Bailey, was issued by UNITAR in 1970.

Other UNITAR publications issued in 1970 were: Emigration of Highly Skilled Manpower from the Developing Countries, by Gregory Henderson; Marine Pollution Problems and Remedies, by Oscar Schachter and Daniel Server; Manual of External Financing; The United Nations Charter and the Challenge of the 70s, by Kenneth Younger; and Towards a Better International Economic Order, by Jan Tinbergen.

DECISION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

When the work of UNITAR was discussed by the General Assembly in 1970, the Executive Director of the Institute presented his report. He noted that the number of financial contributors to UNITAR had increased. An allocation had been made from a special fund administered by the Secretary-General towards UNITAR'S peace research activities, and grants had been received from foundations and Governments for special projects.

On 19 November 1970, the General Assembly noted with satisfaction the increasing effectiveness of the Institute in the discharge of its responsibilities and expressed the hope that it would have greater and wider financial support.

This Assembly decision was embodied in resolution 2640(XXV), adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which had unanimously approved the text on 9 November 1970, on the basis of a proposal by Canada, Ceylon, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Ghana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Iran, Jamaica, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Nigeria, Pakistan, Singapore, Southern Yemen,<sup>4</sup> Turkey, the United States and Venezuela. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DEVELOPMENT AND USE OF HUMAN RESOURCES

OUTFLOW OF TRAINED PERSONNEL

The Economic and Social Council at its mid-1970 session gave preliminary consideration to a report of the Secretary-General on the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries and to a progress report on the same subject by the Executive Director of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR).

The Secretary-General's report, which was based on studies of five developing countries selected on a regional basis (Cameroon, Colombia, Lebanon, the Philippines and Trinidad and Tobago), was concerned with the general pattern, causes and motivation for emigration, the migration of students and high- and middle-level manpower, the losses in investment in education and training and in potential output, the role of the private sector, and the gains from the outflow. A number of policy-directed suggestions and conclusions of possible use to Member States concerned with the problem were included.

The UNITAR report briefly described a multinational comparative research project based on extensive questionnaire surveys being undertaken by UNITAR in about 20 countries. The surveys included questions about personnel motivation, economic incentives and social influences that govern the decisions of the professionals themselves when emigrating or returning.

After preliminary discussions of the Secretary-General's report, the Economic and Social Council on 30 July 1970 decided to defer consideration of it and of the UNITAR report until 1971 and to request the General Assembly to defer its consideration of this question until its 1971 session. It took these decisions without adopting a formal resolution.

At the same time, the Council deferred consideration of a draft resolution that had been submitted by the USSR. By this text, the Council would have taken note of the Secretary-General's report and would have requested the Secretary-General to prepare a study on the effect of the influx of foreign specialists on the economies of countries such as Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, and to devise methods of assessing the loss suffered by the developing countries as a result of the "brain drain" and means of compensating them for this loss. The Council would also have considered that every developing country that suffered loss through the outflow of trained personnel was entitled to compensation from the developed countries concerned, and it would have called upon the developed countries concerned to refund the expenditure by the developing countries on the training of specialists who left to work abroad.

The Council's action was taken on the recommendation of its Economic Committee which acted on the matter on 24 July 1970.

On 11 December 1970., the General Assembly took note of the recommendation of the Council and agreed to defer consideration of the item on the outflow of trained personnel from developing to developed countries until its 1971 session. This decision was also taken without the adoption of a formal resolution.

The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, which dealt with the question on 21 October 1970.

QUESTIONS RELATING TO EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIVERSITY

During 1970, the question of an international university was discussed by both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

The Economic and Social Council had before it the report of the Secretary-General on the feasibility of an international university, prepared in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and in consultation with the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). Also before the Council were extracts from a decision taken by UNESCO and from the report of the Commission on Education of the World Youth Assembly.

The report of the Secretary-General dealt with questions relating to the goals and objectives, the organization and the financing of an international university.

Under goals and objectives, the Secretary-

General's report discussed the rationale for an international university and the educational tasks—specifically in terms of suggested curricula—to be performed by an institution whose aim would be to project the goals of the Charter of the United Nations.

In terms of organization, the Secretary-General discussed, among other things, the relationship an international university would have with national universities, the United Nations and its agencies and organizations, and other institutions of higher learning, scholarship and research. The report also discussed the possible size, location and number of campuses, the size and qualifications of the student body and faculty, as well as matters concerning the administration of the university and its relationship to the General Assembly.

The Secretary-General's report then estimated the capital and recurring costs of a campus of the university, and suggested ways by which those costs could be met.

Finally, the Secretary-General suggested that the General Assembly might create a working group, to report to the Assembly in 1971, which might add comments and observations to the feasibility study and draft the statute of the international university.

On 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council invited the General Conference of UNESCO to make available to the General Assembly at its 1970 session its views on the goals and objectives and also optional models of an international university, and to offer proposals on how UNESCO might participate in such a university.

The Council also invited UNESCO and other interested agencies and organizations within the United Nations system to provide the Council with their detailed recommendations on the organization and financing of such a university.

Finally, the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly in 1970 on the basis of such views as might be available at the time.

These decisions of the Council were embodied in its resolution 1542(XLIX), which was adopted by 22 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions. The Council's resolution was based on a proposal submitted by Argentina, France, Greece, Japan, India, Jamaica, Tunisia, Peru and Sudan, orally amended by the USSR. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The report of the Secretary-General on the establishment of an international university, prepared in response to the Economic and Social Council's request of 30 July 1970, was discussed later in the year at the General Assembly's session which opened on 15 September 1970. In his report, the Secretary-General among other things expressed the hope that the Assembly would authorize him to proceed further with his consultations and studies, to be carried out in close co-operation with UNESCO and UNITAR. It would be of the greatest value, he concluded, if he could be assisted in this task by a small panel of experts.

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly, stating its belief that the establishment of a university truly international in character could contribute to the achievement of the objectives of the Charter of the United Nations, invited UNESCO to undertake studies of the educational, financial and organizational aspects of an international university.

The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General to continue his consultations and studies, and authorized him to set up in due course a Panel of Experts on the Establishment of an International University, to consist of 10 experts nominated by the Governments of Member States to be designated by the President of the General Assembly, and five experts to be designated by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

The Assembly, in addition, invited Governments of Member States to submit to the Secretary-General, by the end of May 1971, their preliminary views and proposals on an international university, including their possible contribution to such a university.

These decisions of the General Assembly were embodied in resolution 2691 (XXV), adopted by 94 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions. The text was adopted on the recommendation of the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, on the basis of a proposal—as amended on suggestions by France and the Netherlands—submitted by Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Colombia, Cyprus, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia and Yemen. The text was approved by the Second Committee on 4 December 1970, by 81 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions.

TEACHING ABOUT THE UNITED NATIONS AND RELATED AGENCIES

Trends and developments in teaching about the United Nations and its related agencies during the period 1964-1969 were discussed by the Economic and Social Council at its May 1970 session.

The Council had before it a report on the subject prepared by the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). This report, the sixth in a series of periodic reports and covering the period from January 1964 to December 1969, summarized information provided by 81 Governments, including 77 States Members of the United Nations and four States members of UNESCO not Members of the United Nations.

The report also reviewed the programmes and services in this field provided by the United Nations and UNESCO, and by the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Finance Corporation, the International Development Association, the Universal Postal Union, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

According to the report, notable progress had been made in many countries to extend and improve teaching about the United Nations as part of the regular curriculum in secondary schools and, increasingly, in primary schools. In a growing number of countries, school programmes at all levels had been more and more oriented towards education for international understanding, aided by UNESCO'S associated schools project.

However, many problems still remained to be solved. A major difficulty, stressed in the 1964 report to the Council on this subject,<sup>5</sup> continued to be the inadequate preparation of teachers in this field, particularly those in service in primary schools.

Another obstacle not yet overcome in many countries was the widespread lack of suitable materials for use in teaching about the United Nations. Needs were particularly acute in the developing countries, especially in the matter of providing basic information on the United Nations family in the language of instruction and adapted to the needs and interests of the country concerned.

In the debate on the subject, members of the Council stressed that the basic orientation of teaching about the United Nations should be related directly to the specific political, cultural and social traditions of each country. Several members said that United Nations information services in developing countries should be expanded and provided with printed and audio-visual material in local languages.

It was recognized that attention needed to be focused on improving the training of prospective teachers and organizing more short courses and seminars for teachers already in service. The view was expressed that, as university graduates tended to assume leadership roles in national and world affairs, universities should take action to reach many more students in their programmes of teaching and research on United Nations subjects.

On 14 May 1970, the Council took note of the report and requested the United Nations and UNESCO to prepare a further report on the subject for submission to the Council in 1975. It also requested the two organizations to continue their co-operation in this field. These decisions were taken without the adoption of a formal resolution.

SCIENCE EDUCATION

During its mid-1970 session, the Economic and Social Council took note of the second report on science education prepared by the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development and stressed the importance of science education in relation to development.

The report of the Advisory Committee, among other things, discussed in detail the subject of the learning process, particularly in young children, and the urgent problem of the supply of teachers in the field of science education. It also commented on the extent of the implementation of the recommendations contained in the first report of the Advisory Committee, which had been submitted in 1968.<sup>6</sup> progress in the implementation of those recommendations, the Council requested the organizations concerned to take the necessary steps for further implementation.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1545(XLIX), adopted unanimously by the Council on the recommendation of its Co-ordination Committee, which had approved the text unanimously on 29 July 1970, on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, India, Pakistan, Sudan and Yugoslavia. (See also pp. 442-43. For text of resolution, see p. 446.)

QUESTION OF THE ELDERLY AND THE AGED

At its twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970, the General Assembly considered a preliminary report by the Secretary-General on the question of the elderly and the aged.

The Secretary-General stated that his report was an attempt to identify some emerging social phenomena relating to the aged, with particular stress on the major needs of the elderly and the effects of technical and scientific advances on their well-being.

The report stressed the increasing proportion of the old-age group in developed and developing countries, as well as the fundamental socio-cultural changes resulting from industrialization and their impact on the position of the aged in society. A paradoxical situation was thus noted in that society was making every effort to extend life expectancy but at the same time neglecting the socio-economic problems threatening physical and psycho-social adjustment of the aged.

The Secretary-General suggested that studies be conducted both by Governments and by international organizations on various aspects of the question, including employment of older workers, their pre-retirement and post-retirement programmes, the income security of the aged in the context of industrial and non-industrial economies, social problems related to mental health, the use of leisure time and the participation and integration of the aged in community life.

On the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee—made on 11 December 1970—the Assembly decided to defer to its 1971 session consideration of the question of the elderly and the aged, and decided to give it priority at that session so as to ensure adequate time for its consideration. These decisions were taken on 15 December 1970, without the adoption of a formal resolution.

LAND REFORM

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council took a number of decisions concerning agrarian reform and its relationship to development. It did so having considered a summary of a report on progress in land reform prepared by the Secretary-General in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the International Labour Organisation, and an additional note by the Secretary-General on the implications of the introduction of new high-yielding varieties of grains—referred to as the "green revolution"—for small farmers, tenants and the landless.

The report on progress in land reform, which was issued in 1969,<sup>7</sup> sought to appraise policy goals and to evaluate measures to transform the agrarian structure.

The Secretary-General's note pointed out the possible social effects of the green revolution on small farmers, tenants, farm labourers and the landless; the trend of the relationship between land reform and the green revolution; areas for further investigation; and problems concerning implementation of land reform in various countries of Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America.

On 26 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council noted its recognition of the need to ensure that the small-farm owner, tenant and landless worker should share fully in the benefits of the technological breakthrough in productivity through the green revolution. It also recognized the part played by co-operation in using modern techniques to increase the productivity of labour and the well-being of the rural worker.

The Secretary-General was urged to take fully into account, in the preparations for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the role of comprehensive agrarian reform, which was essential not only for rural development but also for balanced development as a whole. It was recommended that the Secretary-General and the heads of the interested agencies of the United Nations system give higher priority to financial and technical assistance to member countries in undertaking projects for land reform, rural institutional development, including co-operatives, and integrated land-use planning.

The Council recommended that Governments: take fully into account the need for agrarian reform in the preparation and implementation of their national development plans; take measures not only to promote agricultural co-operation and the use of modern techniques in agriculture but also to abolish social inequalities to bring about a better distribution of incomes and raise the level of living of the rural populations; support all efforts that may help to improve the situation of the rural workers; ensure and protect the right of agricultural workers, small-farm owners and tenants to form their own organizations and ensure that such organizations should be consulted in the process of implementing decisions on land reform.

In welcoming the initiative taken at the 1969 Conference of FAO concerning the appointment of a special committee on agrarian reform, the Council recommended that the Secretary-General appoint a specialist in the social aspects and over-all planning of land reform to participate in the work of the committee.

A proposal of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development to undertake an intensive programme of studies into the implications of the green revolution was supported by the Council.

The Council recommended that the Secretary-General submit to it a summary of the report of the special committee on agrarian reform, together with recommendations for policies and action programmes for the Second United Nations Development Decade. It was also recommended that he report to the Council on progress made in the proposed studies on the implications of the green revolution and on the implementation of any recommendations arising from them.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1495(XLVIII), adopted by 25 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, on the recommendation of the Council's Social Committee. The Committee had approved the text on 15 May 1970, by 22 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, on the basis of a proposal submitted by the Commission for Social Development, as amended by Bulgaria. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

By the Bulgarian amendment, which was adopted in the Committee by a vote of 22 to 0, with 2 abstentions, a paragraph was added recommending to Governments that they ensure and protect the right of agricultural workers, small-farm owners and tenants to form their own organizations and ensure that such organizations should be consulted in the process of implementing decisions on land reform. A drafting amendment proposed by Yugoslavia was withdrawn.

RESOLUTION 1495 (XLVIII), as recommended by Social Committee, E/4864, adopted by Council on 26 May 1970, meeting 1690, by 25 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the summary of the fifth report on progress in land reform as well as the note by the Secretary-General on land reform,

Having taken note of resolution 5/69 of 27 November 1969 on agrarian reform adopted by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations at its fifteenth session calling upon the Director-General of that organization to appoint, after consultations with the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation, a special committee on agrarian reform,

Recognizing the need to ensure that the small farm owner, tenant and landless workers should share fully in the benefits of the technological breakthrough in productivity through the introduction of new high-yielding varieties of grains, referred to as the "green revolution."

Recognizing the part played by co-operation in general, and in particular by co-operation in agriculture, in using modern techniques to increase the productivity of labour and the well-being of the rural worker,

1. Urges the Secretary-General, in the preparations for the Second United Nations Development Decade, bearing in mind the objectives of the Indicative World Plan for Agricultural Development of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Employment Programme of the International Labour Organisation, to take fully into account the role of comprehensive agrarian reform, which is essential not only for rural development, but also for balanced development as a whole;

2. Recommends that the Secretary-General and the heads of the interested agencies of the United Nations system, particularly the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the World Food Programme as well as the United Nations Development Programme, give higher priority than heretofore to financial and technical assistance to member countries in undertaking projects for land reform, rural institutional development, including co-operatives, and integrated land-use planning;

3. Recommends that Governments of Member States:

(a) Take fully into account the need for agrarian reform in the preparation and implementation of their national development plans and that Governments of developing countries make effective use, within their own priorities, of the development assistance resources of the United Nations agencies;

(b) Take measures to promote agricultural co-operation and the use of modern techniques in agriculture;

(c) Take measures that may abolish social inequalities to bring about a better distribution of incomes and raise the living level of the rural populations;

(d) Support all efforts that may help to improve the situation of the rural workers;

(e) Ensure and protect the right of agricultural workers, small farm owners and tenants to form their own organizations and ensure that such organizations shall be consulted in the process of implementing decisions on land reform;

4. Welcomes the initiative taken at the fifteenth session of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations regarding the appointment of a special committee on agrarian reform and recommends that the Secretary-General appoint a highly qualified specialist in the social aspects and over-all planning of land reform to participate in the work of the committee;

5. Recommends that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation, submit to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission for Social Development as appropriate, a summary of the report of the special committee on agrarian reform together with recommendations for policies and action programmes for the Second United Nations Development Decade;

6. Supports the proposal of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development to undertake, in consultation with the Social Development Division of the United Nations Secretariat, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation, an intensive programme of studies into the implications of the "green revolution";

7. Further recommends that the Secretary-General report to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission for Social Development, on progress made in these studies and, as part of the concerted programme of the United Nations system for comprehensive agrarian reform, on the implementation of any recommendations arising from them.

THE ROLE OF THE CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT IN ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council discussed the role of co-operatives in economic and social development and took a number of decisions on the subject.

Before the Council was a report by the Secretary-General which referred particularly to the role of the co-operative movement in the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade. The paper reviewed briefly what could be accomplished in developing countries through the co-operative movement in the following fields:

agricultural development, credit and savings, marketing, supply, production, co-operatives and land use, industrialization, mobilization of financial resources for development, international trade, the transfer of scientific knowledge and technology, and human and social development.

The report also discussed the kind of measures required to enable the co-operative movement to make an effective contribution to the Second Development Decade, and the sort of international co-operation that was possible to promote and strengthen the co-operative movement. It referred also to the activities of the United Nations, the specialized agencies—in particular the International Labour Organisation and the Food and Agriculture Organization—and the International Co-operative Alliance.

On 26 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council noted that an essential prerequisite of equitable sharing in the fruits of economic and social development by the people was their direct involvement at all stages in the development process. The Council also recognized that co-operatives had an important role to play in the promotion of economic and social development, particularly by providing a suitable institutional framework for facilitating the mobilization of human, financial as well as other resources.

Among other decisions on the subject were the Council's affirmation that the promotion of the co-operative movement should be an important element of the strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, and the Council's request that the Secretary-General work closely with the directors of organizations of the United Nations family and of non-governmental organizations in preparing and implementing a programme of concerted practical action for co-operative development.

Developed countries were urged to give their full support and assistance to developing countries to foster the contribution that the co-operative movement could provide to the economic and social development process. Developing countries with experience and knowledge in the field were invited to provide advisory assistance to other developing countries for the promotion of the co-operative movement. Governments were invited to review their co-operative policies and programmes with a view to maximizing the participation of the people in the co-operative endeavour.

The Council also recommended that the United Nations system give special attention to requests from developing countries for assistance to develop co-operatives.

Finally, the Secretary-General was requested to report to the Council by 1972 on steps taken to implement these decisions.

This series of decisions was embodied in Council resolution 1491 (XL VIII), adopted unanimously on the proposal of Brazil, Bulgaria, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, Peru and Sudan. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

RESOLUTION 1491 (XLVIII), as proposed by 8 powers, E/L.1314/Rev.1, as orally amended by sponsors, adopted unanimously by Council on 26 May 1970, meeting 1690.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2459 (XXIII) of 20 December 1968 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1413 (XLVI) of 6 June 1969 concerning the role of the co-operative movement in economic and social development, which called for full account to be taken of the potential role of the co-operative movement in the preparatory work for the Second United Nations Development Decade,

Taking note of recommendation No. 127 concerning the role of co-operatives in the economic and social development of developing countries adopted by the International Labour Conference at its fiftieth session at Geneva in 1966,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General prepared in accordance with Economic and Social Council resolution 1413 (XLVI), Bearing in mind that an essential prerequisite of equitable sharing in the fruits of economic and social development by the people is their direct involvement at all stages in the development process,

Recognizing that co-operatives have an important role to play in the promotion of economic and social development, particularly by providing a suitable institutional framework for facilitating the mobilization of human, financial and other resources.

1. Affirms that the promotion of the co-operative movement should be an important element of the strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, as a means of broadening the basis for popular participation in the development effort and for the equitable sharing in the benefits of development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to collaborate closely with the Directors-General of the International Labour Organisation and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, other organizations in the United Nations system, the International Co-operative Alliance as well as other appropriate non-governmental organizations in their efforts in preparing and implementing a programme of concerted practical action in the field of co-operative development that would be of significant assistance to developing countries during the Second United Nations Development Decade in utilizing the full potentialities of the co-operative movement in economic and social development;

3. Urges developed countries to give their full support and assistance to developing countries in collaboration with the interested international organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and appropriate non-governmental organizations in order to foster the contribution which the co-operative movement can provide to the economic and social development process;

4. Invites developing countries which have experience and knowledge in the field of co-operatives to provide advisory assistance to other developing countries for the promotion of the co-operative movement;

5. Invites the Governments concerned, particularly those of the developing countries, to review, as appropriate, their co-operative policies and programmes in relation to national economic and social development policies and with a view to maximizing the participation of the people in the co-operative endeavour, and to intensify their efforts to develop the co-operative movement;

6. Recommends that the United Nations system should give special attention to requests from developing countries for assistance to develop co-operatives;

7. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the organizations mentioned above and bearing in mind the comments made at the forty-eighth session, to report to the Council by 1972 on steps taken to implement the present resolution.

ECONOMIC PLANNING AND PROJECTIONS

COMMITTEE FOR DEVELOPMENT PLANNING

The Economic and Social Council's Committee for Development Planning, which held its sixth session from 5 to 15 January 1970, discussed the preparation of guidelines and proposals for the Second United Nations Development Decade and the implementation of special measures to be taken in favour of the least developed among the developing countries.

In its report, the Committee for Development Planning proposed that a general declaration of intent and commitments, with the object of furthering the development process, be adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970. This the General Assembly did on 24 October 1970, when it adopted the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade.

Following a discussion of the question of identifying the least developed countries, the Committee for Development Planning suggested a set of criteria for this purpose. When the General Assembly took up the question, it noted with appreciation the Committee's efforts.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

In 1970, technical assistance in the field of transport and communications was provided by 79 experts to Afghanistan, Argentina, Barbados,

Bolivia, British Honduras, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Colombia, Costa Rica, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Dominican Republic, Gabon, Guatemala, Guinea, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Madagascar, Malta, Mauritania, Nepal, Niger, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Syria, Togo, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Venezuela and Western Samoa.

Transport projects were under way in Afghanistan, China, Fiji, Madagascar and Nepal. In Africa, a number of regional road and port studies were being carried out.

Fellowships were awarded to 51 nationals of developing countries for studies connected with transport development. The problems dealt with included transport planning, operation, administration, organization and management, as well as the extension, improvement and maintenance of transport infrastructure and equipment.

TRANSPORT ACTIVITIES AND PROPOSAL FOR TRANSPORT CENTRE

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council reviewed the activities of the United Nations system of organizations in the transport field. Before the Council were reports by the Secretary-General on the work of the United Nations in the transport field and on the major transport problems of developing countries, as well as a report of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination on transport questions.

In particular, the Council discussed proposals for the creation of a United Nations centre for transport development and for the convening of a meeting of ministers responsible for transport and its development.

On 26 May 1970, the Council, recognizing that transport development played a vital role in the economic and social conditions of developing countries, noted that the devising of sound solutions for the transport problems of developing countries should be based on the appraisal of the possibilities offered by the new advances in transport technology as well as on economic research and exchange of information and experience.

The Council also noted its belief that the activities of the United Nations system in the transport field should be intensified and increased, particularly as part of the efforts to be made towards achieving the goals of the Second United Nations Development Decade.

After noting with satisfaction the reports mentioned above, the Council requested the Secretary-General to make available in 1971 additional and detailed information on the precise role, functions, responsibilities, terms of reference and organization of the proposed transport centre. It also decided to defer consideration of the proposal to create a centre until 1971.

A decision on the proposed meeting of ministers responsible for transport was also postponed until developments relating to programming in the field of inland transport by the regional economic commissions made possible further consideration of the matter.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 1490(XLVIII), adopted unanimously by the Council on the basis of a proposal by India, Jamaica, Sudan and Yugoslavia, as amended by the sponsors and the United States. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

During the discussion in the Council of the proposed transport centre, several speakers expressed concern about the possible overlapping of responsibilities between the suggested centre and some of the existing United Nations bodies involved in transport.

TRANSPORT OF DANGEROUS GOODS

The Economic and Social Council, at its May 1970 session, considered a note by the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and its Group of Experts on Explosives and Group of Rapporteurs on the Packing of Dangerous Goods.

In his note, the Secretary-General reported on the work completed by the Committee and its two subsidiary bodies and on the projects planned by the experts for the future.

The work already completed included the classification and enumeration of dangerous goods, particularly those which had come on the market as a result of scientific and technical development, and the packing of dangerous goods. A series of general provisions were offered concerning the current specifications for packing.

The planned programme of work covered the steps to be taken in case of accident during transport and a study of recommendations on tanks designed to transport dangerous goods.

The Secretary-General also brought to the attention of the Council the progress the Committee had made on the question of the standardization of the laws and statutes on the transport of dangerous goods.

On 22 May 1970, the Council noted the work carried out by the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and asked the Secretary-General to change the recommendations of the Committee in accordance with the Committee's proposals, and to distribute the revised recommendations to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international organizations.

The Council invited the Governments of Member States and the organizations referred to above to submit to the Secretary-General any comments they might wish to make and to inform him on how the recommendations would be applied in either national or international regulations.

With regard to the future work of the Committee, the Council enlarged the Committee's mandate to include the study of questions relating to the construction, testing and use of tanks other than those permanently installed in sea-going ships or in vessels used for inland waterways, or forming part of the structure of such ships or vessels.

The Council also suggested that the Committee should consider enlarging the list of dangerous goods, grouping them according to type and the degree of danger in transporting them, and allotting a number to each type to show its compatibility with other types of dangerous goods; the list should show the characteristics of the dangerous goods, the kind of danger involved, the means of extinguishing fires in each case and any other safety measures connected with the goods and their packing.

Finally, in view of the major role played by the Committee of Experts in ensuring co-ordination on the question of the transport of dangerous goods, the Council decided that the membership of the Committee should be increased to ten if other Governments of Member States—on the request of the Secretary-General and at their own expense—wished to lend the services of experts to participate in the work of the Committee. The Council also decided that the Group of Experts on Explosives should continue to function as a subsidiary body of the Committee.

These decisions were among those embodied in resolution 1488(XLVIII), adopted unanimously by the Council on a proposal of Norway and the United Kingdom, amended by the USSR and sub-amended by Upper Volta. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The USSR amendment, sub-amended by Upper Volta, added the operative paragraph in the resolution by which the Council suggested that the Committee should consider enlarging and grouping the list of dangerous goods.

An Italian drafting amendment was withdrawn.

In August 1970, the Group of Rapporteurs on the Packing of Dangerous Goods held a session at which it considered the procedures and methods of work to be followed in the study of tanks for the transport of dangerous goods.

By the end of 1970, the Secretary-General had prepared and published the revised recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, as requested by the Council.

CONTAINERIZATION MEETING

Before the Economic and Social Council during its May 1970 session was a report by the Secretary-General on the administrative, technical and legal problems requiring attention at the global level in the field of international container transport.

On 22 May 1970, the Council decided that a conference on international container traffic should be convened jointly by the United Nations and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO). It should cover the topics and areas of action outlined in the Secretary-General's report on the problems in the field, and should be held as early as practicable, preferably in 1972.

The Council also requested the Secretary-General to undertake the necessary preparations in collaboration with IMCO and in co-operation with other appropriate inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations.

These decisions were taken without the adoption of a resolution.

DEVELOPMENT OF INTERNATIONAL TOURISM

TECHNICAL AID IN 1970

In 1970, assistance in tourism development was provided by the United Nations to Afghanistan, India, Iran, Jamaica, Kenya, Madagascar, Malta, Mauritius, the Philippines and Senegal. At the request of the South Pacific Commission, preparations began for a survey of the tourism potentialities of the countries and territories within the South Pacific area.

In addition, 1970 saw the completion of a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) project on the physical development of the south Adriatic region. As a follow-up activity, the United Nations, in co-operation with the Government of Yugoslavia, convened an inter-regional seminar on physical planning for tourism development, at which were discussed the role and techniques of physical planning for tourism development, with special reference to developing countries. The seminar was held in October-November 1970 in Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A WORLD TOURISM ORGANIZATION

A report by the Secretary-General on co-operation and relationships between the United Nations and the International Union of Official Travel Organizations (IUOTO) was before the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1970 session.

The report, which was drafted in co-operation with UNDP and IUOTO, reflected the views of the organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations involved in work on tourism.

On 28 July 1970 the Council decided to postpone consideration of the report until 1971, having in mind that an Extraordinary General Assembly of IUOTO was scheduled to meet in September 1970 in order to revise the statutes of IUOTO to enable it to acquire an inter-governmental character, and considering that the United Nations could conclude an agreement with the transformed Union, establishing an operational link only after the statutes had been revised.

This decision was embodied in resolution 1540(XLIX), adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of the Council's Co-ordination Committee, which had approved a draft text on 24 July 1970, by 20 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, on a proposal of Ceylon, Greece, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Pakistan and Yugoslavia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

At the invitation of IUOTO, representatives of the Secretary-General attended the Extraordinary General Assembly, which was held in Mexico City, Mexico, in September 1970. That Assembly adopted the statutes of the World Tourism Organization on 28 September 1970. The statutes would enter into force 120 days after 51 States had deposited with the Government of Switzerland their declaration of acceptance of the statutes.

REPORTS ON INTERNATIONAL TOURISM

At its March-April 1970 session the Economic and Social Council took note of three reports that had been submitted to it at earlier sessions but had not been considered: a report by IUOTO on International Tourist Year (1967); a periodic report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on International Travel and Tourism, held in Rome, Italy, in 1963; and a report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Inter-regional Seminar on Tourism Development, which was convened by the United Nations in co-operation with the Government of Switzerland in Berne, Switzerland, in October-November 1968.

The Council noted the reports on 3 April 1970 without adopting a formal resolution. This Council action was recommended by the Economic Committee, which acted on the question on 25 March 1970.

Consideration of a fourth report, namely, a review of activities and programmes of the United Nations system of organizations for the development of tourism, was deferred to the Council's mid-1970 session, so that it could be taken up in conjunction with the report by the Secretary-General on co-operation and relationships between the United Nations and IUOTO (see above). The Council deferred consideration of that report to 1971.

Recalling General Assembly resolution 2529(XXIV) of 5 December 1969,

Having in mind that the Extraordinary General Assembly of the International Union of Official Travel Organizations will meet from 17 to 25 September 1970 in Mexico City in order to revise the statutes of the Union, thus enabling it to acquire an intergovernmental character,

Considering that the United Nations can conclude an agreement with the transformed Union establishing an operational link only after the statutes of the Union have been revised,

1. Invites, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2529(XXIV), the Governments of States whose national tourist organizations are members of the Union to give the necessary instructions and powers to their representatives at the forthcoming Extraordinary General Assembly of the Union so that the statutes by which the Union shall be transformed into an international tourism organization of intergovernmental character may be duly approved and adopted;

2. Recognizes that consideration by the Council of proposals on co-operation and relations between the United Nations and the transformed Union must await the revision of the statutes of the Union;

3. Decides to postpone until its fiftieth session consideration of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation and relations between the United Nations and the Union.

FISCAL AND FINANCIAL QUESTIONS

TECHNICAL ACTIVITIES

Technical co-operation activities in fiscal and financial matters expanded during 1970 to include inter-regional advisory services in government budgeting and accounting, taxation and foreign investment, and related subjects.

A newly appointed inter-regional adviser assisted the Trade, Fiscal and Monetary Affairs Division of the Economic Commission for Africa with the preparation of a training course in budget harmonization which was designed to train officers from African countries in programme budgeting and performance evaluation for the improvement of revenue forecasting techniques.

Technical assistance in accounting, auditing, budgeting and other areas of financial administration was provided through the sending of experts to Ceylon, Chile, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Costa Rica, Dahomey, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Guinea, Madagascar, Malaysia, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Rwanda, Somalia, Sudan, Togo and the United Republic of Tanzania.

The inter-regional adviser in taxation undertook several short-term programming missions to Latin America which were followed by requests for technical assistance. The Governments of El Salvador and Honduras asked for advice on tax administration reform. British Honduras was advised on recommended changes in its fiscal situation. Barbados and Trinidad and Tobago received assistance in land taxation. Training advice in various fields of tax administration was also provided at conferences on income tax administration in the Caribbean, held in April and November-December 1970.

A mission to prepare for the establishment and operation of a regional financial corporation of north-eastern Argentina made recommendations concerning a possible financial structure, an organizational framework and the mobilization of funds.

MEETINGS

At the first Inter-regional Seminar on Export Credit Insurance and Export Credit Financing, held at Belgrade, Yugoslavia, in September-

October 1970, a number of recommendations for technical co-operation were made. It was suggested that: a study be prepared of the possibility of introducing a risk-sharing mechanism among the developing countries on a regional or sub-regional basis; a regional or sub-regional clearing-house be established to collect and maintain vital information; conventions or guidelines be formulated in respect of the terms of suppliers' and buyers' credits for exports of engineering and capital goods and related services, with a view to avoiding a credit race; and sub-regional and regional fiscal and financial expert teams be set up in selected areas.

A meeting of the Expert Group on Tax Reform Planning was held in September 1970, in accordance with an Economic and Social Council decision of 4 August 1967.<sup>8</sup>

The topics discussed were the nature of tax planning, administration and policy aspects of individual taxes, and the organization of tax planning.

The Group of Experts made recommendations in a number of areas, but the greatest stress was placed on the need for training in tax services. In this area, the Experts recommended that the United Nations play a key role in the establishment of regional and sub-regional training centres, in preparing training materials and disseminating them to all interested bodies, and in providing assistance to governmental tax-planning organizations when requested.

The Group also pointed out a number of areas in need of further study, including financing of urban government, agricultural and urban land taxation, taxation of mineral resources and the development and improvement of techniques for taxing capital gains and foreign income.

PUBLICATIONS AND STUDIES

During 1970, the Secretariat published a Manual for Government Accounting in English, French and Spanish. The Manual of Land Tax Administration., which was published in English and Spanish in 1968, was issued in French during 1970.

A study on United States Income Taxation of Private Investments in Developing Countries was also issued in 1970.

As a part of the preparations for a comprehensive study of tax systems in developing countries (with a view to evaluating their effects on the mobilization of resources and their contribution to income distribution), the Secretariat undertook during 1970 a number of country studies on tax reform planning, and also several functional cross-sectional studies on subjects such as taxation of agriculture, income distribution and sales taxes. These were to be submitted to the Economic and Social Council in 1971.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION IN CARTOGRAPHY

During 1970, 18 experts were assigned to provide technical assistance in such branches of cartography as hydrographic surveying, land surveying and geodetic surveying, photogrammetry, topography and reproduction, as well as administering of survey departments. Such assistance was given to Afghanistan, Argentina, Barbados, Burundi, Laos, Libya, Madagascar, Nepal, the People's Republic of the Congo, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia and Somalia.

Assistance continued to be extended: to the Survey Department of India to establish a pilot production centre for surveying and mapping, and a training programme for survey technicians; to the Dacca branch of the Survey Department of Pakistan; to the Survey Department of Jamaica; for the establishment of an Institute of Surveying and Mapping in Diyatalawa, Ceylon; and to the Geographic Institute of the Ivory Coast.

Sixteen fellowships were awarded to candidates from Ceylon, India, the Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Madagascar and the United Republic of Tanzania in cartography, geodesy and hydrography, Photogrammetry, and survey techniques.

The second session of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Geographical Names was held in March 1970, and an Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Hydrographic Surveying and Bathymetric Charting was convened in March-April.

The results of both these meetings were considered by the Sixth United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for Asia and the Far East, which convened at Teheran, Iran, from 24 October to 7 November 1970.

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report by the Secretary-General on the results of the second session of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on Geographical Names. In his report, the Secretary-General recommended convening a second United Nations Conference on the Standardization of Geographical Names in 1972. He also recommended that United Nations conferences on the subject be convened at intervals of no less than four years.

On 13 May 1970, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and endorsed his recommendations. It did so without adopting a formal resolution.

RELATIONS WITH THE WORLD INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY ORGANIZATION

Before the Economic and Social Council at its mid-1970 session was a note by the Secretary-General on relations with the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), which is the successor organization to the United International Bureaux for the Protection of Intellectual Property (BIRPI).

The Secretary-General reported that he proposed to establish arrangements with the International Bureau of WIPO for reciprocal exchange of information and documentation and reciprocal representation at meetings, similar to arrangements made in 1964 with BIRPI concerning another of the United International Bureaux—the International Union for the Protection of Industrial Property.

The Secretary-General's actions with regard to these organizations was taken in terms of a Council decision of 27 July 1964,<sup>9</sup> which had to do with the role of patents in the transfer of technology to developing countries.

By that decision, the Secretary-General had been requested to explore possibilities for adaptation of legislation concerning the transfer of industrial technology to developing countries, Union for the Protection of Industrial Property generally and in co-operation with the competent international bodies, including United Nations bodies and the Bureau of the International Property). # Questions Relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories and the Declaration on Granting Independence

CHAPTER I

THE INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

GENERAL ASPECTS

TERRITORIES UNDER THE SYSTEM

Under the International Trusteeship System established by the Charter of the United Nations, Member States administering Trust Territories are accountable to the United Nations for the discharge of their responsibilities and obligations in the administration of the Territories.

In 1970, there remained two of the 11 Trust Territories originally placed under the International Trusteeship System. These Territories, situated in the Pacific, were: the Trust Territory of New Guinea, administered by Australia; and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the United Nations Charter<sup>1</sup>) administered by the United States.

EXAMINATION OF ANNUAL REPORTS

The Trusteeship Council, in supervising the administration of the Trust Territories on behalf of the General Assembly or, in the case of the strategic area, on behalf of the Security Council, examines the annual reports submitted by the Administering Authorities. At the same time it also examines, among other things, petitions affecting the Trust Territories, reports of visiting missions, and observations that may have been submitted by specialized agencies on conditions in the Territories within their spheres of competence.

Under the procedures followed, the Special Representative of the Administering Authority makes an opening statement in which he brings the Trusteeship Council up to date on events in the Territory concerned. This statement is supplemented by the comments of indigenous representatives attached to the delegation of the Administering Authority. The Administering Authority's representative on the Council and its Special Representative then reply to questions put to them by members of the Council. After a general debate in which each Council member gives his opinion on conditions in the particular Territory, a draft report (drawn up by a drafting committee) is submitted to the Council, which votes on the report's various conclusions and recommendations. A summary of observations made by individual members representing their individual opinions only is also contained in the report.

The reports on conditions in the Trust Territories form part of the Council's annual report to the General Assembly (or to the Security Council in the case of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands).

At the Trusteeship Council's thirty-seventh regular session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 26 May to 19 June

1970, the Council examined the annual reports submitted by the Administering Authorities on the two Trust Territories and adopted conclusions and recommendations on each of them.

In accordance with its normal practice, the Council adopted two reports: one to the General Assembly, which included a chapter on conditions in the Trust Territory of New Guinea; and one to the Security Council, which contained a chapter on conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

COMPOSITION OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

In 1970, the Trusteeship Council was composed of two Administering Authorities, namely, Australia (Trust Territory of New Guinea) and the United States (Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands), and of four non-administering members—China, France, the USSR and the United Kingdom—which were members by virtue of their being permanent members of the Security Council.

PETITIONS AND ORAL HEARINGS

The examination of petitions concerning Trust Territories derives from Article 87 of the United Nations Charter, which provides that the General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, may accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the Administering Authority. Petitions relating to a strategic area are governed by Article 83 of the United Nations Charter and the terms of the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.<sup>2</sup> Petitions may concern the affairs of one or more Trust Territories or the operation of the International Trusteeship System.

In 1970, the Trusteeship Council considered 42 written petitions and communications—nine concerning the Trust Territory of New Guinea, and 33 concerning the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. In addition, it heard two petitioners with regard to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

VISITING MISSIONS

TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS

By a decision of 19 June 1969,<sup>3</sup> the Trusteeship Council decided to dispatch in 1970 a periodic visiting mission to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and to invite the Governments of Australia, China, France and the United Kingdom to submit nominations for membership. The Council decided that the nominations of members would be automatically approved when received from the Governments concerned, and it set forth the Visiting Mission's terms of reference.

The Visiting Mission, which was composed of Kenneth Rogers (Australia), Chairman; Meng-Hsien Wang (China); Alain Deschamps (France); and David Lane (United Kingdom), visited the Territory from 12 February to 19 March 1970. Before its departure, it had preliminary discussions in Washington, D. C., United States, with representatives of the United States Departments of State, the Interior and Defense.

The Trusteeship Council considered the report of the Visiting Mission concurrently with the annual report of the Administering Authority.

On 19 June 1970, the Council drew attention to the fact that in formulating its own conclusions and recommendations on conditions in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, it had taken into account the recommendations and observations of the Visiting Mission and the observations of the Administering Authority thereon. The Council also invited the Administering Authority to take into account the Mission's recommendations and conclusions, as well as the comments thereon by Council members.

These were among the decisions embodied in the Council's resolution 2153(XXXVII) adopted by 5 votes to 1, on a proposal by the United Kingdom. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

TRUST TERRITORY OF NEW GUINEA

At its 1970 session, the Trusteeship Council considered the question of the dispatch of a periodic visiting mission to the Trust Territory of New Guinea. The Council took up this question in conjunction with its consideration of a General Assembly decision of 16 December 1969,<sup>4</sup> which, among other things, requested the Trusteeship Council to include non-members of the Council in its periodic visiting missions to the Territory, in consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and with the Administering Authority, and in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

The consultations requested by the General Assembly were carried out, and the Council decided to dispatch a periodic visiting mission to the Trust Territory of New Guinea at the beginning of 1971 and to invite the Governments of France, Iraq, Sierra Leone and the United Kingdom to nominate members to compose the Visiting Mission. The Council further decided that the nominations of members would be automatically approved when the nominations were received from the Governments concerned.

Among other things, the Council directed the Visiting Mission to investigate and report as fully as possible on the steps taken in the Trust Territory of New Guinea towards the realization of the objectives set forth in Article 76b of the United Nations Charter<sup>5</sup> and to pay special attention to the question of the future of the Territory, in the light of the relevant Articles of the Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement, bearing in mind the provisions of relevant Trusteeship Council and General Assembly resolutions. The Mission was further directed to receive and investigate petitions on the spot.

The Council took these actions by adopting, by 4 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, resolution 2154(XXXVII) of 19 June 1970. The text was proposed by the Council members. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Subsequently, Paul Blanc (France), Adnan Raouf (Iraq), Charles E. Wyse (Sierra Leone) and Sir Denis Alien (United Kingdom) were nominated as members of the Visiting Mission. Sir Denis Alien was elected Chairman of the Visiting Mission.

ATTAINMENT OF SELF-GOVERNMENT OR INDEPENDENCE

During the examination of conditions in the Trust Territories at its 1970 session, the Trusteeship Council considered the question of the attainment of self-government or independence by the Trust Territories. Special attention was paid to the measures and steps being taken to transfer all powers to the peoples of those Territories in accordance with their freely expressed will and desire, in order to enable them to enjoy self-government or complete independence within the shortest time practicable.

The Council's conclusions and recommendations on the subject and a brief summary of the observations made by members are set out below in the separate sections dealing with each of the Territories. (See pp. 673-81 and 681-88.)

On 27 November 1961, the General Assembly, in establishing its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, requested the Trusteeship Council to assist that Committee in its work.<sup>6</sup>

In accordance with this request and following a decision taken by the Trusteeship Council, the Council President informed the Chairman of the Special Committee that the Council, in 1970, had examined conditions in the Trust Territories of the Pacific Islands and of New Guinea, and that the conclusions and recommendations of the Council, as well as the observations of the Council members representing their individual opinions only, were contained in the report to the Security Council relating to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and in the report to the General Assembly with regard to the Trust Territory of New Guinea.

<sup>5</sup>Article 76b of the Charter states that the basic objectives of the trusteeship system shall be: "to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement."

The Council President also expressed willingness to discuss with the Chairman of the Special Committee any further assistance that the Special Committee might require from the Council.

The Trusteeship Council further decided to draw the attention of the General Assembly to the fruitful co-operation that had taken place during the year between the Special Committee and the Trusteeship Council, which had led to the inclusion for the first time of non-members of the Council in a visiting mission to a Trust Territory.

OFFERS OF STUDY AND TRAINING FACILITIES

A programme of scholarships and fellowships for inhabitants of Trust Territories was initiated by the General Assembly on 18 January 1952.<sup>7</sup> Under the procedure adopted by the Trusteeship Council for the administration of the programme, the Secretary-General submits an annual report to the Council, giving appropriate information on the programme.

The report of the Secretary-General submitted to the Council in 1970 covered the period from 1 June 1969 to 31 May 1970. Scholarships and training facilities had been offered by 11 Member States: Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Indonesia, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Tunisia, the USSR and Yugoslavia. According to information made available to the Secretary-General, no applications for scholarships offered by these Member States were received from the two Trust Territories during 1970.

On 10 June 1970, the Trusteeship Council considered the report of the Secretary-General and decided, without adopting a formal resolution, to take note of it.

DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

In accordance with decisions by the Trusteeship Council and the General Assembly, the Secretary-General reports annually to the Trusteeship Council on arrangements undertaken in co-operation with the Administering Authorities for distributing official records of the United Nations and for disseminating information concerning the aims and activities of the United Nations and the International Trusteeship System in the Trust Territories.

The report submitted to the Council's 1970 session by the Secretary-General, covering the period from 1 June 1969 to 31 May 1970, contained information about the number and titles of United Nations publications and about films and radio programmes that had been distributed. It also indicated that special care had been taken to distribute in the Trust Territories publications and press releases relating to the work of the General Assembly, the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

During the discussion in the Council, the representative of Australia said that in New Guinea, the Government departments concerned with education and information made extensive use of material disseminated by the United Nations Information Centre in Port Moresby. The radio stations of the Administration regularly broadcast programmes on the work of the United Nations and an Administration publication produced in simple, clear English, entitled Our News, regularly included a page devoted to the United Nations.

The representative of the United Kingdom, although impressed by the continuing efforts being made in the two Trust Territories to disseminate information about the work of the United Nations, was concerned about the particular publications that were being distributed. He drew attention to a publication dealing with the United Nations and decolonization since 1945, and was concerned to note the lack of information about the two remaining Trust Territories and about the work of the Trusteeship Council.

He pointed out that the publication gave prominence to conclusions and recommendations about those Territories, which had been adopted by the Special Committee. These conclusions and recommendations related to military activities and the question of foreign economic interests, and they often misrepresented the real position in the Territories.

It was the view of the United Kingdom that the information disseminated should reflect the work currently being done by the Trusteeship Council through its regular visiting missions and other procedures. The Council's conclusions and recommendations relating to the two Trust Territories ought to be adequately reflected in the material disseminated in those Territories, he thought.

The representative of the United States supported the points made by the United Kingdom's representative.

The representative of the USSR was of the opinion that the main purpose of disseminating information in the Trust Territories should be to encourage the people to move towards self-determination and independence. He thought it was right to include material concerning such aspects of the process of decolonization as, for example, military activities in colonial Territories and the part played by the foreign monopolies in the colonies.

The Trusteeship Council decided, without adopting a formal resolution, to take note of the report of the Secretary-General.

CONDITIONS IN INDIVIDUAL TRUST TERRITORIES

Trust Territory of New Guinea

The Trust Territory of New Guinea includes part of the island of New Guinea north of the Papuan border and east of the 141st meridian of longitude, the islands of the Bismarck Archipelago, and the two northernmost islands of the Solomon group, namely Buka and Bougainville. The total land area covers 92,160 square miles.

As at 30 June 1969, the indigenous population of the Trust Territory totalled 1,692,095. At the census of June 1966, the non-indigenous population numbered 20,265.

The Trust Territory and the neighbouring territory of Papua are administered jointly by Australia under the Papua and New Guinea Act, 1949-1968.<sup>8</sup>

Conditions in the Trust Territory were considered at the thirty-seventh session of the Trusteeship Council, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 26 May to 19 June 1970. Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea were considered by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples between 18 June and 3 November 1970, and by the General Assembly in November and December 1970.

CONSIDERATION BY TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

At its 1970 session, the Trusteeship Council was pleased to note that a select committee on constitutional development had been established by the House of Assembly in the Trust Territory of New Guinea, and that it was studying various alternative forms of constitutional government and their possible suitability for the Territory in order to make its recommendations to the House of Assembly.

The Council noted that increased responsibilities were being given to ministerial members, that ministerial members had become fully responsible to the Administrator's Executive Council for the day-to-day running of their departments, and that within the framework of broader Government policy they made policy decisions. The Council was also pleased that the Administrator's Executive Council was being consulted on all significant issues. It hoped the Administering Authority would continue its policy of expanding both the responsibilities and the decision-making role of the Administrator's Executive Council.

The Council was pleased that the House of Assembly had agreed to the introduction of urban local government councils in the main towns, and that these councils assumed responsibility for the provision of municipal services within their areas. It also hoped that local government councils would be introduced as soon as possible into other areas.

The Council favoured the emphasis on meeting local expenditures with local revenues to the extent possible and on having grants from the Administering Authority matched by local funds and efforts. The stress on self-help would significantly enhance the value of the local government councils and the development of self-reliance among the people of the Territory.

The Trusteeship Council was further pleased to note that in the field of public service the Administering Authority had made major efforts to meet suggestions made by the Council at its 1969 session.<sup>9</sup> Among other things, the Council noted the marked increase in the number of indigenous employees in the public service, the system of cadetships to prepare local officers with potential for senior positions and the actions taken concerning salaries.

The Council continued to believe that the already substantial effort to replace expatriate officers with properly trained local personnel must be increased and accelerated. In this regard, it was hoped that the five-year development plan's emphasis on education and training would produce significant results in the localization of the public service.

During the debate in the Trusteeship Council, the representative of the United States said that the Administrator's Executive Council had increasingly been consulting with the Administering Authority on a wider range of issues. Of primary importance was the greater voice given to this Executive Council in fiscal matters. He fully realized that the system of ministerial members was experimental, and he was certain that the Administering Authority would continue to give careful consideration to the recommendations of the Select Committee on Constitutional Development.

The representative of the USSR said that since its establishment in 1964 the House of Assembly had not been invested with full legislative powers and was still not entitled to take decisions on certain vital questions, to approve the budget of the Territory or to adopt independently any bills or legislative enactments. The Administrator and the Governor-General of Australia were entitled to veto any decisions of the Assembly.

Moreover, he said, the Administering Authority had set up an Administrator's Executive Council, and had stated that this was an effective instrument for governing the Territory. However, the Administrator was not bound to act in conformity with the advice of that Council. The USSR representative could therefore see no recognizable progress which affected the activities of the higher legislative bodies.

The representative of the United Kingdom said he had noted in particular the changes introduced in March 1970, by which the ministerial members had been given greater responsibility and the collective responsibility of the Administrator's Executive Council had been increased. The increased responsibility of ministerial members, both individually and collectively, reflected a progressive transfer of power to the elected representatives of the people, he felt.

The representative of France observed that political evolution had accelerated sharply since the establishment of the House of Assembly; a change of tempo had first been noticed less than four years later, when the Administrator's Executive Council had been set up. The ministerial members appointed in 1969 to co-operate with the departmental heads in the day-to-day conduct of affairs had assumed, within a few months, full responsibility for management of the departments and could make budgetary proposals.

Furthermore, the French representative said, the Select Committee of the House of Assembly was preparing to set out for the Pacific, Asia and Africa in search of the ideal constitution to meet the requirements of the territory. The special problems associated with the acceleration of the process of emancipation of Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories should be kept in mind when the new fundamental law of the Territory was being drafted, he said.

The representative of China stated that the people of Papua New Guinea, through their elected representatives, had not only participated significantly in the administration of their day-to-day affairs, but had also embarked on the task of designing their political future. He welcomed the constitutional changes introduced by the Administering Authority, which he considered to be another important step towards self-government, and he was interested in the current activities of the Select Committee which he thought would lead to further constitutional proposals.

The Special Representative of the Administering Authority said that the powers exercised by the ministerial members and by the Administrator's Executive Council had already evolved beyond those recommendations of the first House of Assembly. Further constitutional changes to be put into effect later in 1970 were under examination. The Administering Authority awaited with interest the recommendations of the new Select Committee on Constitutional Development.

Contrary to the assertion of the USSR representative, he said, the House of Assembly did approve the budget of the Territory, if it agreed with it. The House of Assembly most certainly had the power to reject the budget. It could and did pass bills put forward by private members or groups of members. It could and did pass or reject or amend bills put forward by Administration initiatives. It was true that disallowance power existed but it had been used so sparingly as to exclude it as an instrument of control.

He said that the people of Papua New Guinea certainly had no apprehension about the shape of their political future and were confident that they could determine it when they wished. The Administering Authority supported them in this.

ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

In 1969-1970, primary production, mainly agriculture, formed the basis of the Territory's economy, with agricultural products making up approximately 85 per cent of the total value of exports. The economy is largely dependent on copra and copra products. The timber industry was being developed, and manufacturing industries, which were being fostered, were of growing significance. Increasing interest was shown in 1969-1970 by major mining companies in exploration for minerals, particularly base metals, but gold production continued to decline in importance.

The Trusteeship Council noted that the launching of the large Bougainville mining project had required adjustments in the five-year development plan. It expressed the hope that the necessary adjustments would be made in the plan to restore its balance and to enable the population of the whole Territory to derive the greatest advantage from capital investment in the island of Bougainville.

The Council expressed the hope that an increasing proportion of total loan funds from the Development Bank would go to indigenous borrowers. It had noted the explanations given by the Administering Authority concerning the small amount of the loans received by the local population.

Further, the Council noted with satisfaction that the Administration intended to propose to the House of Assembly a bill to establish an investment corporation, which, in co-operation with the Development Bank, would acquire equity in certain enterprises for future disposal to the people of the Territory under terms to be specified.

The Council welcomed the increase in the budgetary grant from the Administering Authority, which had reached A$87 million in 1968-1969. It noted with interest the role played by the Estimates Committee, composed of ministerial members, and the Budget Committee of the House of Assembly in preparing the budget. It recommended that, subject to the report of the Select Committee on Constitutional Development, the Administering Authority should improve the machinery for the progressive transfer of further financial responsibility to the elected representatives of the people.

The Council welcomed the progress in implementing the project to exploit the Bougainville copper deposits which would place New Guinea among the world's leading copper producers. It noted with satisfaction that the agreement with the mining company had been debated and then approved unanimously by the House of Assembly. The Council was concerned, however, about the obvious unsettling effect on the local community of the establishment of such a large enterprise and invited the Administering Authority to do everything possible to ensure that the whole population benefited from the launching of the project.

During the Council's discussions, the United States representative said that, while recognizing the efforts to increase indigenous participation in primary production and the necessity to supplement budget allocations with private foreign investments, he felt that the projected control of primary agricultural production by indigenous persons should be increased. The United States was gratified that measures were being taken to ensure that the Bougainville mining project would offer both sound economic advantages for the Territory as a whole and just compensation for the residents of the area immediately affected by the project.

The representative of the USSR stated that the economic policy pursued by the Administering Authority was, as statistical and other data showed, by no means intended to encourage the development of an independent economy which could stand on its own feet. As before, its policy was primarily aimed at strengthening Australian and other foreign capital in the economy, to the detriment of the vital interests of the indigenous population. The deleterious consequences for the future of the Territory resulting from the predominance of foreign monopolies were not difficult to foresee.

He said that by the time the Territory achieved independence, if the Administering Authority continued to pursue its current economic policies, all the key positions and the entire economic structure would be in the hands of the Australian and foreign monopolies, which would thus be the de facto owners of the Territory.

Considering further the situation in the Territory, the USSR could not but note the almost complete inactivity and impotence of the Administering Authority in the face of the ever-growing social and economic problems in the Territory.

The United Kingdom noted the expansion of production in 1969-1970 and the considerable increase in export income. The Bougainville copper scheme would be of great benefit to the Territory and the United Kingdom welcomed the assurance given by the Administering Authority that it was endeavouring to ensure the fullest protection for both the social and the economic rights of the people.

The representative of France said that the copper mining project, which would transform the economy of New Guinea and necessitate a reappraisal of the data for the five-year development plan, was taking shape with a speed that could not have been foreseen in 1969. The influx of capital goods in large quantities distorted the pattern of imports and the balance of payments, while at the local level the preparation of sites, access roads and housing was causing turmoil in the area. Nevertheless, the Territory was advancing by several years the time when its economic take-off would be possible.

China's representative felt that the high growth rates in the manufacturing sector and in power generation were particularly noteworthy. The five-year development programme would be greatly boosted by the Bougainville copper mining project. Although outside investment could accelerate the economic development of the Territory, it was still essential, in China's view, to emphasize the promotion of indigenous economic advancement.

The Special Representative stated that the Administering Authority recognized that the part played by Papuans and New Guineans in the economic development of their own country must be increased and accelerated. That role was currently not adequate, and was a potential source of future problems. This had been a problem to which the solutions had not been easy.

The Special Representative recalled that he had outlined to the Council the steps being taken to overcome the problem; these included the provision of business advice, finance by the Development Bank, the construction of special centres for the use of indigenous entrepreneurs, and the engagement of a United Nations Development Programme consultant to advise indigenous people on business careers.

SOCIAL AND EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

The Administering Authority stated that all elements of the population were secure in the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms with no discrimination on grounds of language, race, religion or sex. It was still considered necessary, however, to retain certain legislative provisions in order to protect the interests of the indigenous people in such fields as land acquisition and employment.

During the year 1968-1969, expenditure on health services amounted to A$9,033,866. Capital expenditure on hospital buildings and facilities totalled A$1,330,000, while grants to missions for health services amounted to A$473,690.

The Trusteeship Council noted with interest the increase in the number of indigenous people engaged in wage employment and the parallel increase in trade-union membership, which included slightly less than one quarter of the salaried earners in 1969. The Council was anxious to ascertain whether the annual increase in the number of people in wage employment was really helping to improve living standards and wished to be informed of the conclusions of the Board of Inquiry on the level, composition and regional variations of the rural minimum wage. It expressed concern about the large number of urban wage earners who appeared to be paid less than A$6.50 a week and said it would welcome a fuller explanation.

In the field of education, it was reported that in 1969 a total of 149,026 pupils were enrolled in 1,281 primary schools; 14,772 pupils in 89 post-primary schools; 140 students in the Institute of Higher Technical Education at Lae; and 268 students in the University of Papua and New Guinea. During 1968-1969, expenditure on education amounted to A$9,347,000. Grants-in-aid provided for mission schools totalled A$1,909,000.

The Trusteeship Council noted that recommendations made at its session in 1969 had led the Administering Authority to draft legislation establishing a Territory education board and a Territory teaching service to co-ordinate public and private education and provide a single education system. It invited the Administering Authority to pursue its plan to merge various types of schools, making any necessary adjustments in the curriculum.

The Council noted that although only six Papuan and New Guinean students were attending Australian universities, the number of students at the University of Papua and New Guinea was increasing rapidly and the University was about to award its first diploma. It also noted that the first qualified surveyors had graduated from the Institute of Higher Technical Education and that the first secondary school teachers to graduate from Goroka Teachers' College were available for service in the Department of Education.

ATTAINMENT OF SELF-GOVERNMENT OR INDEPENDENCE

The Trusteeship Council noted with satisfaction the successful operation to date of a system of ministerial members and the recent changes arising from discussions between the Administering Authority and the House of Assembly Select Committee on Constitutional Development. It also noted that the Select Committee had undertaken a study of further steps that might be taken towards self-determination. Nevertheless, mindful of its mandate under the United Nations Charter and of the provisions of the Trusteeship Agreement, and bearing in mind the provisions of relevant General Assembly resolutions, the Council sought to ensure that the people were brought to self-determination as swiftly as feasible.

In this connexion, the Council welcomed the declaration by the Administering Authority which expressed anew the latter's commitment to self-government and eventual independence and its belief in constant advancement towards self-government while reiterating its belief that an arbitrary date should not be set for independence. The Council noted with satisfaction that in pursuance of this belief, and after discussion with the House of Assembly Select Committee, the Administering Authority had taken steps to increase the powers of the ministerial members and the Administrator's Executive Council.

The United States considered correct the Australian Government's position that no arbitrary date for self-determination and eventual independence would be set against the wishes of the people of the Territory and that consideration of major changes in constitutional arrangements for self-government should await presentation to the Territorial House of Assembly of the report of the Select Committee on Constitutional Development. This position had been expressed by the Governor-General on 3 March 1970 to the Parliament.

The representative of the USSR said that the negative position of the Administering Authority concerning the granting of independence to the Territory, in accordance with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>10</sup> and the Trusteeship Agreement, remained unchanged. It had in point of fact done very little for the political, economic and social progress of the people and once again remained silent on the question of the time-table according to which independence was to be granted to New Guinea.

The USSR believed, its representative stated, that the Administering Authority should immediately fulfil the provisions of the Declaration on granting independence and should take steps to transfer full and complete authority to the indigenous population of New Guinea. Inadequate political, economic, social and educational preparedness should not be used as a pretext for delaying independence, he said.

The United Kingdom representative stated that the timing or the form for completing the process of self-determination could only be decided in the light of clearly formulated views on the part of the elected representatives of the people of the Territory and in conformity with the Charter. Through the deliberate policies of the Administering Authority, the conditions for self-government were being steadily brought into being in all fields and were bringing nearer the day when the people of the Territory would feel freely able to decide on their future and on the full control of their own affairs.

The French representative said recent statements by the Administering Authority showed that the most important proposal made by the Council in 1969 had been borne in mind—that the people of New Guinea would be led towards self-determination as rapidly as was practical.<sup>11</sup>

The Special Representative of the Administering Authority said that the people of Papua and New Guinea certainly had no apprehension about the shape of their political future and were confident that they could determine it when they wished. The Administering Authority supported them in this.

He said that the Australian Government's attitude had been clearly stated by its Governor-General on 3 March 1970. Social change could not be avoided and perhaps the associated stresses stimulated the creative nature of a people, but the Administering Authority would like to accomplish changes while preserving tradition. There were many other tasks, too, in this shared responsibility, but it was a responsibility where final decisions and final allocations of finance and of manpower were increasingly in the hands of the people who would benefit from those decisions.

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The situation in Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea was discussed in November 1970 by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>12</sup>

In its conclusions and recommendations concerning these Territories, which it adopted on 3 November 1970 on the basis of a report submitted to it by its Sub-Committee II, the Special Committee noted the statement of the representative of the administering power that recent constitutional changes based on the reports of the Select Committee on Constitutional Development to the House of Assembly had resulted in the expansion of the powers of the House's ministerial members and of the responsibilities of the Administrator's Executive Council.

It considered, however, that the inhabitants of the Territory were not yet fully participating in the management of their own affairs and that progress towards the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence continued to be slow. The Special Committee therefore urged the administering power to establish a specific time-table to guide Papua and the Trust Territory to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration.

The Special Committee also noted the administering power's policy of localization of the public service and urged the administering power to accelerate its efforts in this direction.

Mindful that it had previously expressed the view that diversification and industrialization should be so directed as to eliminate the economic dependence of the Territory on the administering power, the Special Committee indicated it would welcome further information on the progress made under the economic development programme in operation since 1968, as well as steps that had been taken to ensure the fullest protection of the economic rights of the indigenous population.

Further, the Special Committee noted the statement of the administering power on the preparation of legislation necessary to implement proposed reforms concerning land tenure and said it would welcome further information on this subject. It also noted the long-term objective of the educational programme of the administering power and expressed the hope that a comprehensive system covering Papua and the Trust Territory, making primary education available to all, would be established in the shortest possible time.

The Special Committee, recalling that by a decision of 16 December 1969<sup>13</sup> the General Assembly had requested the Trusteeship Council to include in its periodic visiting missions to the Trust Territory of New Guinea non-members of the Council, noted that the forthcoming Visiting Mission to the Trust Territory would include non-members of the Council who were members of the Special Committee. It went on to note that it would have appreciated it if the Visiting Mission, in the discharge of its duties, could have taken into consideration previous recommendations and resolutions on the Territory adopted by the Special Committee.

The United States reserved its position with regard to the reference made in connexion with the establishment of a time-table for independence. It also recorded its general reservation concerning the report of the Special Committee as a whole.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The 1969-1970 report of the Trusteeship Council and also the chapter of the report of the Special Committee concerning Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea were considered by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session, which opened on 15 September 1970.

On 25 November 1970, the General Assembly's Fourth Committee—in which the subject was mainly discussed—heard two petitioners from the area.

On 14 December 1970, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on granting independence and with the Trusteeship Agreement of 13 December 1946. It also reaffirmed its previous resolutions on Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea.

The arrangements made by the Trusteeship Council in consultation with the Special Committee concerning the composition of its forthcoming periodic Visiting Mission to the Trust Territory of New Guinea in 1971 were noted, and the administering power was invited to co-operate fully with the Visiting Mission and to provide it with all the necessary facilities and assistance in the performance of its tasks.

The Assembly called upon the administering power to prescribe, in consultation with freely elected representatives of the people, a specific time-table for the free exercise by the people of Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea of their right to self-determination and independence, and to report to the Trusteeship Council and to the Special Committee on the action taken in that regard. It also requested the administering power to intensify and accelerate the education and technical and administrative training of the indigenous peoples of the territories and the localization of the public service.

Finally, the General Assembly requested the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee to continue to examine this question and to report thereon to the Assembly in 1971.

These decisions were embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2700 (XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 98 to 0, with 5 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970 by 86 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions. The sponsors of the draft text were Ghana, Mali, Mauritania, Senegal, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Republic of

During the discussion in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, the Australian representative assured the Committee that the Administering Authority would co-operate fully with the 1971 Visiting Mission to New Guinea. Australia had reservations about the paragraph in the resolution that reaffirmed previous resolutions regarding the Territory, since it had opposed some of them at the time of their adoption.

With regard to the paragraph that called on the administering power to prescribe a specific time-table for the exercise of the people's right to self-determination, the Australian spokesman stated that it was for the people themselves to decide when they wanted to exercise that right. Australia abstained in the vote for this reason.

The United Kingdom stated that changes in the political field were made in March 1970 which gave ministerial members full authority to make policy decisions in their respective departments. Advances had also been made in economic, educational and social matters. The United Kingdom would have preferred that the text had noted that the composition of the Visiting Mission was to be determined in consultation not only with the Special Committee but with the Administering Authority. On the paragraph which called for a specific time-table, the United Kingdom said the timing should be decided in the light of the clearly formulated views of the elected representatives of the people.

The representative of the United States said that he had abstained in the vote because the decision on the form and timing of the act of self-determination should be decided by the people themselves and not imposed from without. The United States had every confidence that Australia would fulfil its trusteeship responsibilities with or without a time-table.

The representative of Norway voted for the resolution but maintained a reservation because of the paragraph that referred to previous resolutions on which Norway had not cast affirmative votes.

Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, administered by the United States, covers some 3 million square miles of the western Pacific Ocean, north of the Equator. It embraces more than 2,000 islands and atolls, which have a combined area of 700 square miles. Collectively known as Micronesia, these islands and atolls form three major archipelagos—the Marianas, the Carolines and the Marshalls. (Guam, the largest island in the Marianas, is not part of the Trust Territory.) In June 1969, the population totalled 98,000. Saipan, in the Mariana Islands, is the provisional headquarters of the Administration.

Conditions in the Trust Territory were considered by the Trusteeship Council at its thirty-seventh session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 26 May to 19 June 1970. The situation in the Trust Territory was also considered in 1970 by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

A visiting mission of the Trusteeship Council travelled in the Trust Territory in 1970. (See below and p. 668 above.)

CONSIDERATION BY TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The Trusteeship Council's conclusions and recommendations concerning the Pacific Islands were embodied in its annual report to the Security Council. (The Trusteeship Council reports to the Security Council on this Territory, a strategic area in accordance with Article 83 of the United Nations Charter.)<sup>14</sup>

The Trusteeship Council welcomed the statement of the Administering Authority that Bikini Atoll had been officially returned by the United States Government to the Trust Territory, that full legal title would later be formally transferred to the people of the atoll, and that rehabilitation programmes for the atoll were under way.

The Council's other main conclusions and recommendations are described below.

WAR DAMAGE CLAIMS

The Trusteeship Council noted that in the 1970 Visiting Mission's report, concern was expressed over delays in the settlement of damage claims arising from the Second World War suffered by the inhabitants of the Trust Territory.

The Council also noted the statement made by the representative of the Administering Authority that there was legislation before the United States Congress to create a Micronesian war claims commission, which would receive, adjudicate and authorize payment of Micronesian war damage claims up to the amount of $10 million. The Council, agreeing with the Visiting Mission's view, expressed the hope that the legislation before the United States Congress would meet with early approval, and that the commission to be established thereby would complete its assigned task as soon as possible.

With regard to certain claims against the United States, the Council noted once more that no settlement had yet been made, and it expressed the hope that a definite solution to this question would be reached quickly. It took note of the statement of the Special Representative of the Administering Authority that legislation for expediting payment of such claims had been proposed, but had not yet been acted upon by either house of the United States Congress.

POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

The Trusteeship Council, adopting conclusions and recommendations on the Territory, stated it was glad to note the opinion of the 1970 Visiting Mission that the Congress of Micronesia was gaining confidence, authority and expertise in the discharge of its duties; that the work of the Congress had been improved by lengthening the period of regular sessions and by the creation of standing and ad hoc committees; and that members of the Congress were doing more in the way of initiating legislation.

The Council noted that the Administration had made a greater effort to associate the Congress of Micronesia with the planning of the budget and that the Administration intended to expand and deepen these consultations between the Executive and the Congress of Micronesia and between district administrators and district legislatures.

The hope was expressed by the Council that steps would be taken to enlarge the financial responsibility of the Congress of Micronesia by progressively extending its powers to include appropriation of United States financial subsidies.

The Administering Authority was commended for the number of appointments of Micronesians to senior positions in the Executive. The Council reiterated its belief that Micronesians should gain experience in the framing of policy and the exercise of political responsibility at cabinet level.

The attention of the Administering Authority was drawn to the comments of the Visiting Mission on the possibility of creating a form of cabinet government in Micronesia.

The Council noted that a single pay schedule for the Trust Territory government was being prepared and welcomed the steps taken towards the equalization of United States and Micronesian pay scales.

Further, the Council noted with approval the statement of the Special Representative that there had been greater progress in the policy of decentralization through giving more authority to the district administrators, of whom five out of six were Micronesian.

During the discussions in the Council, the representative of Australia pointed out, among other things, that the 1970 Visiting Mission had reported its impression that because most decisions, since they had financial implications, were expected to be made by the Administration, legislatures tended to be thought of largely in terms of the influence that could be brought to bear on the Administration. The Visiting Mission had said that the question of financial responsibility was one to which more attention had to be given by legislators and the Administration. The Australian representative observed in this connexion that popular control of government did not mean what it should unless those in positions of power were seen to be truly responsible to those in whose name they were governing.

The representative of France, welcoming the fact that Micronesian officials had been assigned to important and responsible posts, still believed that the Administering Authority should not lose sight of the suggestions formulated by the 1967 and the 1970 Visiting Missions on the desirability of creating a true cabinet or executive council which would include representatives elected by the people.

The representative of the USSR said it was important to consider certain conclusions which appeared in the report of the Future Political Status Commission of the Congress of Micronesia to the effect that the United States had been slow to take effective action to bring the Micronesians towards self-government or independence. He also said that, as was shown in the 1970 Visiting Mission's report, the powers of the Congress of Micronesia were severely restricted; the High Commissioner had a power of veto which he had frequently exercised, and the expenditure of federal funds was withheld from congressional control.

The representative of the United Kingdom recognized that strides had been made in placing qualified Micronesians in responsible positions in government, but he noted that it was reported by the Visiting Mission that the Trust Territory Administration tended to be regarded throughout the Territory as an American rather than a Micronesian institution. In his view, statements made to the Trusteeship Council by the Special Advisers strengthened the case for including popularly elected Micronesians, as soon as possible, in the most senior councils of the Executive.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The Trusteeship Council noted the assessment of the 1970 Visiting Mission that while the standards of living of the population of the Territory compared favourably with those in many developing countries, the situation might deteriorate unless vigorous steps were taken to remedy economic stagnation.

The Visiting Mission drew attention to serious obstacles to the economic development in the Territory, including its remoteness, the limitations of its natural resources and the deficiencies in the systems of transport and communications. The Council also took note of some encouraging developments in the past 12 months, particularly improvements in air transport and in fisheries.

The Council recommended again that greater priority be given to development of basic transport and communication services and other improvements in the economic infrastructure.

It commended to the attention of the Administering Authority the Visiting Mission's recommendations concerning the need for action to stimulate economic development, including development of local financial resources and the important question of the attitudes and motivation of the people of Micronesia.

The Council welcomed the increase in the annual grants from the Administering Authority, and noted the comment of the Visiting Mission that the total amount allocated for economic development in the budget appeared to have shown a percentage increase. The Council recalled its recommendations that the Congress of Micronesia should consider the adoption of a suitable system of direct taxation applicable to all residents of the Territory.

The comments of the Visiting Mission on the questions of land tenure and land utilization in the Trust Territory, on the Congress of Micronesia's Land Commission Act, 1966, and on the operation of the land title survey and registration project were noted. It was recommended that the Administering Authority make every effort to complete the land title survey as soon as possible. The Council continued to hope that more public land not required for government use would be made available to the people of the Territory for productive use.

Further, the Council took note of the comment of the Visiting Mission that agriculture seemed to be in a state of stagnation. It also noted the statement of the Administration that during the next financial year one of the largest increases in proposed spending would be to encourage expansion in the fields of agriculture and marine resources. The Council drew particular attention to the recommendations of the Visiting Mission concerning improvements in the agricultural extension services, the marketing and export of agricultural products and the training and guidance of agricultural workers. It was also noted by the Council that the Visiting Mission had been impressed by work in fisheries development, boat building and related research and training. In connexion with tourism, which the Administering Authority felt was a major hope for the economic future of Micronesia, the Council noted the opinion of the Visiting Mission that although there had been spectacular progress, some problems could be expected to arise. The Mission felt that tourism development should not divert attention from efforts towards balanced economic and social advancement.

During the discussion, the representative of Australia reiterated the Visiting Mission's feeling that in the planning and execution of development programmes, more attention should be given to agriculture, which for centuries had been the basis of economic activity and thus largely the basis of the social framework. He also noted the recommendations of the Mission concerning improvements in transport and communications, more efficient raising of local revenues and better use of local financial resources.

The representative of France observed that the grant from the Administering Authority had reached $50 million, a figure which might be exceeded in the future. To avoid an increased financial dependency of the Territory, these considerable budgetary subventions should be accompanied by efforts to increase local revenue. He observed that transport deficiencies remained a major obstacle to the Territory's economic development and hoped that the study of the problem of maritime transport would result in remedial measures.

The representative of the USSR stated that an examination of the economic policy pursued in the Trust Territory had led him to the conclusion that the Administering Authority was attempting to use the economic dependence of the Territory as a means of exerting political pressure.

He further stated that in the view of the Future Political Status Commission of the Congress of Micronesia, the United States had failed to realize the potential for economic development in the Territory in order to bring it to a stage where it could become an economically viable country. The report pointed out, he said, that for the United States it was easier to increase the federal subsidies from year to year than to pursue an active policy of economic advancement in the Territory, a policy which was essential for the future independence of the Territory.

The representative of the United Kingdom said the decline of agriculture was perhaps foremost among the shortcomings to be noted in the economic field. He was glad to learn that expansion in the field of agriculture and marine resources was to be encouraged.

Drawing attention to the observation of the Visiting Mission that the excessive financial dependence of the Trust Territory upon the Administering Authority was one of the most serious of the Territory's current political problems, he felt that the amount of revenue raised in the Territory itself should be substantially and progressively increased. He shared the view of the Special Adviser that the abrupt imposition of a typical American tax system on a people culturally so different from the people of the United States might not appear advisable. Other tax systems in the Western Pacific could at least be examined as possible models for a system in the Trust Territory.

The representative of China noted that the Visiting Mission, although it had noticed certain encouraging features, such as the rapid development of tourism and air transport, had to conclude that it did not see signs of significant progress in the economy of the Territory as a whole.

SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

The Trusteeship Council noted the construction of one new hospital, the extensions to others in other district centres, and the plans of the Administering Authority for the expansion of hospital facilities.

The Council endorsed the recommendation of the Visiting Mission that the Administration should give top priority to the improvement of services provided by the dispensaries. In this connexion, the Council noted the statement of the Special Representative of the Administering Authority that 25 new dispensaries were being built out of current funds.

During the discussion, the representative of France, observing that the sanitary and health infrastructure in the rural areas were still below required standards, noted with satisfaction that the Administering Authority intended to accelerate the construction of rural dispensaries.

EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

The Trusteeship Council noted with interest the attention given by the Congress of Micronesia to the objectives and operation of the educational system. It noted in particular the report of the Congress's Committee on Education, and the adoption of a public law that defined the educational framework of the Territory, and that, when fully implemented, would ensure participation by Micronesians in the formulation of educational policy at all levels.

It was also noted by the Council that an occupational center was in operation and that the Micronesian Teacher Education Center on Ponape had been officially designated the Community College of Micronesia, thus becoming the first institute for higher education in the Trust Territory.

The Council drew the attention of the Administering Authority to the view of the Visiting Mission that the main educational requirements for the next few years were: to ensure that all children attended elementary school; to improve teaching standards; to improve and expand vocational and technical education, especially at the high-school level; to create one or two selective high schools as a preparation for students proceeding to higher education; and to reform the curricula in elementary and secondary schools so as to give more attention to subjects of more relevance to Micronesian society and to the economy.

ATTAINMENT OF SELF-GOVERNMENT OR INDEPENDENCE

The Trusteeship Council noted with great interest the report of the Future Political Status Commission of the Congress of Micronesia, which was summarized in the Visiting Mission's report. It also noted that the Political Status Delegation of the Congress of Micronesia had held two series of discussions with officials of the Administering Authority concerning the future of the Territory, and that it would be reporting to the Congress of Micronesia on the results of those discussions in July 1970.

The Future Political Status Commission was commended by the Council for the thorough examination it had made of the issues facing the Micronesian people and their elected representatives.

The Council, taking account of the responsibility of the Congress of Micronesia to acquaint the people of the Territory with the nature and consequences of the choice before them, and the responsibility of the Administration in this matter, and taking further account of the unique difficulties of the Territory, including its geographical situation, endorsed the opinion expressed by the Visiting Mission that it would be desirable for the people of Micronesia to determine their future status sooner rather than later.

In this connexion, the Council urged the Administering Authority to pursue vigorously its efforts, in co-operation with the Congress of Micronesia, to prepare the people of the Territory to exercise their right to determine their own future.

During the debate, the representative of Australia observed that the Trusteeship Council had been informed that the discussions between the Political Status Delegation of the Congress of Micronesia and officials of the Administering Authority were regarded as confidential by the two parties, and therefore no report on them could be made at the current session of the Council. No responsible person would suggest that the process be rushed. He shared the view of the Visiting Mission that the United Nations should, at an appropriate stage, be formally requested to play its part in the fulfilment of the Trusteeship Agreement.

The representative of France said that the time was not far distant when the population of the Territory would have to decide its own future. France would study with the greatest interest the report of the Micronesian Political Status Delegation to the Congress of the Territory. The members of the Status Commission and all members of the Congress of Micronesia were quite aware of the duty of the United Nations to follow this evolution attentively, and he noted that they had asked the Visiting Mission how the United Nations could assist Micronesia in determining its constitutional future.

The representative of the USSR, saying that the Administering Authority was pursuing a dual policy designed to perpetuate the presence of the United States in the Territory, supported the demand of the House of Representatives of the Congress of Micronesia that there should be an immediate cessation of any activity connected with the acquisition or development of military bases in the Trust Territory without the approval of the Congress of Micronesia. The USSR was in favour of the unreserved and immediate implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>15</sup> in the case of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The representative of the United Kingdom said it was clear from the report of the Visiting Mission that there were differing feelings on the question of the timing of self-determination in the Trust Territory.

On the one hand, there was a feeling that it would be too risky for the people of Micronesia to determine their future status while, in spite of the extensive progress that had been made, their economy remained uncertain, their trained personnel limited, their communications tenuous and their basic problems, such as land rights, still unsettled.

On the other hand was the fear, which was no less evident to the Visiting Mission during its visit, that unless the people of Micronesia decided forthwith on their future status, the size and disproportionate extent of the powers of the Administering Authority would irreversibly and permanently change the cast of their society, and that even in spite of the hopes and intentions of the Administering Authority to prevent that from happening, the qualities of their unique Oceanian way of life might vanish by default.

It was of fundamental importance that the Mission had felt it would be desirable for the people of Micronesia to determine their future status sooner rather than later, the United Kingdom representative said, and he had no doubt that the negotiations in progress would lead to agreement between the two parties.

The representative of China observed that the Visiting Mission had noted a general reluctance on the part of Micronesians to contemplate an early change of the status of the Territory. Nevertheless, he fully agreed with the view of the Visiting Mission that it would be desirable for the people of Micronesia to determine their future status sooner rather than later.

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples adopted a number of general conclusions and recommendations on Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories on 3 November 1970.

Among other things, the Special Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of all Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories in Asia and the Pacific Ocean areas to self-determination in conformity with the Declaration<sup>16</sup> and reiterated its view that the question of their size, isolation and limited resources should in no way delay the speedy implementation of the Declaration in the Territories.

In conclusions relating specifically to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, adopted on 2 November 1970, the Special Committee took note of the statement of the representative of the Administering Authority on the latter's responsibility to the Security Council concerning the administration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and of his invitation to consult the report of the Trusteeship Council to the Security Council covering its 1970 session.

The Committee considered that it had insufficient information at its disposal, especially concerning the views of the Micronesians on the future status of their Territory, and reiterated its previous conclusions and recommendations concerning the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, especially those concerning the future status of the Territory and its economic dependence on the Administering Authority.<sup>17</sup>

During the discussion, the representative of the USSR said that the administering power had refused to submit to the Special Committee information on the Territory, particularly with respect to the views of the Micronesians themselves on the future status of the Territory. He stated, further, that trying to avoid a discussion of the question of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands in the General Assembly and its bodies ran counter to the United Nations Charter and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

The representative of the United States said that the Trusteeship Council was the body principally concerned with the Trust Territory, and any information concerning its future status or the views expressed by the Micronesians would first be submitted to the Council. He observed that the Territory was a strategic area and that, consequently, the Security Council had the ultimate responsibility over its future. He reserved the United States position on the Special Committee's conclusions and recommendations.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that, without prejudice to the propriety of renewing discussion in the Special Committee of the situation in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, he wished to point out that voluminous information about the Territory, produced in connexion with the examination of the Territory's affairs by the Trusteeship Council at its 1970 session and including the full and detailed information contained in the 1970 Visiting Mission's report, was at the disposal of the Special Committee and its Sub-Committees.

In his view, there could be few individual territories of those examined by the Committee during the year on which such copious and up-to-date information was available.

CHAPTER II

THE SITUATION WITH REGARD TO THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DECLARATION ON THE GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE TO COLONIAL COUNTRIES AND PEOPLES

During 1970, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples continued to discharge its mandate as set forth by the General Assembly and to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration in territories to which it applied.

The Special Committee held 66 plenary meetings between 6 March and 3 December 1970, during which it examined and made recommendations on the individual territories and studied general questions related to those territories.

In this chapter, an account is given of the Special Committee's work during 1970, consideration of its report by the General Assembly, and related action by other United Nations bodies. Details of the action taken in 1970 by the General Assembly, the Special Committee and other bodies concerning Southern Rhodesia, Namibia, the territories under Portuguese administration and Oman will be found in other chapters (see pp. 157-86, 733-58, 760-72 and 287-90.)

GENERAL QUESTIONS

SYSTEM OF EXAMINATION

In 1970, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>1</sup> continued to use the methods of work developed in preceding years and endorsed by the General Assembly. Thus, the Special Committee decided on a work programme for the year which took into account the various tasks assigned to it by the General Assembly, and included special questions relating to implementation of the Declaration, as well as its implementation in individual territories.

The Special Committee had before it information papers prepared by the United Nations Secretariat describing recent political and constitutional developments and current economic, social and educational conditions. This information is derived from various published sources and from information transmitted by administering powers under Article 73e of the United Nations Charter.<sup>2</sup> Also, the Committee had itself requested the administering powers to submit information on political and constitutional developments in the territories.

The Special Committee heard statements from the administering powers, and it invited non-members of the Committee to participate in its examination of the territories concerned.

Petitions were circulated and the Committee decided to hear petitioners at its meetings. Reservations concerning these proceedings were expressed by the United Kingdom and the United States.

At the conclusion of its examination of the situation in a particular territory, the Special Committee adopted its recommendations through a consensus formulated by its Chairman or a resolution adopted by vote. The Committee was empowered by the General Assembly to send visiting groups to territories in co-operation with administering powers. (This procedure had also been the subject of reservations expressed by the United Kingdom and the United States.) The Committee established sub-committees whenever necessary.

Each year, the Special Committee prepares a report for the General Assembly on the situation in each territory or group of territories which it has considered. On the basis of this report, the Assembly considers the implementation of the Declaration in general and with respect to individual territories.

In 1970, the Special Committee considered the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples with respect to the following territories:

Southern Rhodesia, Namibia, territories under Portuguese administration, Spanish Sahara, French Somaliland, British Honduras, Hong Kong, Gibraltar, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Fiji, Oman, the Seychelles, St. Helena, the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, Pitcairn, the Solomon Islands, American Samoa, Guam, Niue, the Tokelau Islands, the New Hebrides, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Bermuda, Montserrat, the Bahamas, the British Virgin Islands, the United States Virgin Islands, the Cayman Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands, Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent.

FUTURE PROGRAMME OF ACTION FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION

On 4 December 1969,<sup>3</sup> the General Assembly decided there should be a special programme of activities in connexion with the tenth anniversary in 1970 of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>4</sup> Among other things, the Assembly decided there should be a special commemorative meeting at which it would adopt a declaration or programme of action for the implementation of the Declaration. The preparation of this document was entrusted by the Assembly to its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

The Special Committee was also asked to prepare a succinct analytical study on decolonization with a view to mobilizing public opinion and the international community towards the full implementation of the Declaration.

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The Special Committee considered the special programme of activities at meetings held between 11 March and 2 October 1970. It assigned the drafting of a programme to its Working Group and it also decided to send an ad hoc group to Africa to establish contact with leaders of national liberation movements from colonial territories in Africa in order to take into account their views in preparing documentation for the tenth anniversary of the Declaration. The ad hoc group visited Africa between 24 May and 5 June 1970 (Algiers, Algeria; Addis Ababa, Ethiopia; Dar es Salaam, United Republic of Tanzania; and Lusaka, Zambia).

On 25 September 1970, the Working Group submitted a draft programme of action which, after extensive debate, the Special Committee approved on 2 October with some amendments. The programme was in the form of a draft resolution recommended to the General Assembly for its adoption.

By the preambular part of this text, the Assembly would:

(a) consider that by arousing world public opinion and promoting practical action for the speedy liquidation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples had played and would continue to play an important role;

(b) express its consciousness of the fact that, although many colonial countries and peoples had achieved freedom and independence in the previous 10 years, the system of colonialism continued to exist in many areas;

(c) reaffirm that all peoples had the right to self-determination and independence and that the subjection of the peoples to alien domination constituted a serious impediment to the maintenance of international peace and security and the development of peaceful relations among nations;

By the operative paragraphs of the text, the Assembly would:

(1) declare the further continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations a crime that constituted a violation of the United Nations Charter, the Declaration on granting independence and the principles of international law;

(2) reaffirm the inherent right of colonial peoples to struggle by all necessary means at their disposal against colonial powers that suppressed their aspiration for freedom and independence;

(3) adopt a programme of action to assist in the full implementation of the Declaration on granting independence.

This proposed programme of action provided for the following measures:

Member States should do their utmost to promote, in the United Nations and within its system of organizations, effective measures for the full implementation of the Declaration on granting of independence in all territories, large or small, including the adoption by the Security Council of effective measures against Governments and regimes which engaged in any form of repression of colonial peoples, which would seriously impede the maintenance of international peace and security.

Member States should render all necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial territories in their struggle to attain freedom and independence.

Member States should intensify their efforts to promote the implementation of General Assembly and Security Council resolutions relating to colonial territories.

In this connexion, the General Assembly would draw the attention of the Security Council to the need to continue to give special attention to the problems of southern Africa by adopting measures to ensure full implementation of the Assembly resolution on granting independence<sup>5</sup> and of the Council's own resolutions, and in particular: to widen the scope of sanctions against the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia by declaring mandatory all the measures laid down in Article 41 of the United Nations Charter;<sup>6</sup> to consider imposing sanctions on South Africa and Portugal in view of their refusal to carry out the relevant Security Council decisions; to consider imposing a full and unconditional embargo on arms to the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia; and to consider urgently measures to prevent the supply of arms to Portugal.

Member States should also intensify their efforts to oppose collaboration for the preservation of colonialism between South Africa, Portugal and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia and to end the political, military, economic and other forms of aid received by the above regimes.

Further, Member States should wage a vigorous and sustained campaign against the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial territories for the benefit of colonial powers and their allies and also take steps to prevent the systematic influx of foreign immigrants into colonial territories.

Member States should carry out a similar campaign against all military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in the territories.

All freedom fighters under detention should be treated in accordance with relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of 12 August 1949.

Specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations should intensify their activities related to implementation of the Declaration on granting independence.

Representatives of liberation movements should be invited, whenever necessary, to participate in proceedings of United Nations organs relating to their countries.

Efforts should be intensified to provide increased educational opportunities for inhabitants of non-self-governing territories.

All States should take measures to enhance public awareness of the need for active assistance in the achievement of complete decolonization.

The United Nations also should intensify efforts in public information for decolonization.

The Special Committee should continue to examine the full compliance of all States with the Declaration on granting independence and other relevant resolutions. Territorial size, geographical isolation and limited resources should in no way delay the implementation of the Declaration. The Assembly should continue to bear responsibility for a territory until such time as the people concerned had had an opportunity to exercise freely its right to self-determination.

The Special Committee was to be directed: to continue to assist the General Assembly in finding the best ways and means for the final liquidation of colonialism; to continue to give special consideration to the views of representatives of the peoples in colonial territories; to continue to send visiting missions to the territories and to meet at such places where it could best obtain first-hand information; to assist the General Assembly in making arrangements for a United Nations presence in colonial territories to participate in elaborating procedural measures for implementing the Declaration and to observe the final stages of decolonization; and to prepare draft rules and regulations for visiting missions for General Assembly approval.

When the Special Committee discussed the draft text submitted by its Working Group, five amendments were submitted by Iraq and 17 by the United States, a new text and programme of action were submitted by Italy, two amendments were submitted by India and one each by Ecuador, the United Republic of Tanzania, and the United Kingdom.

All of the Iraqi amendments were adopted. Among other things, they included substitutions for paragraphs proposed by the Working Group as follows:

Whereas a proposed preambular paragraph expressed conviction that the existence of colonialism constituted a serious impediment to the maintenance of international peace and security, the substituted paragraph reaffirmed that all peoples had the right to self-determination and independence, and that the subjection of the peoples to alien domination constituted a serious impediment to the maintenance of international peace and security.

Whereas the text (with alternate phrasing) of an operative paragraph reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence and recognized their right to struggle—including armed struggle—against colonial powers which suppressed their aspiration for freedom and independence, the new paragraph reaffirmed the inherent right of colonial peoples to struggle by all necessary means at their disposal against colonial powers which suppressed that aspiration.

Another Iraqi amendment had the General Assembly drawing to the attention of the Security Council the need to give careful consideration to the question of imposing sanctions on South Africa and Portugal, whereas the Working Group text had called on the Security Council to impose such sanctions.

Also adopted were a drafting amendment by the United Republic of Tanzania; an Ecuadorian amendment which deleted the words "against humanity" from the description of the further continuation of colonialism as a crime against humanity; and Indian amendments changing the language of phrases in a preambular paragraph (the phrase to the effect that colonialism continued to plague vast areas in the world was revised to state that colonialism continued to exist in many areas of the world), and in an operative paragraph (the phrase referring to efforts to "combat" collaboration was revised to refer to efforts to "oppose" collaboration).

Of the amendments submitted by the United States, one was not pressed to the vote, another was withdrawn and the remainder were rejected by the Special Committee. Among those rejected by the Committee were the following:

A proposal that would have had the Assembly declare that the continued suppression of the legitimate aspirations of colonial peoples represented a denial of fundamental human rights and was in conflict with principles of the Charter and the Declaration (rather than have it declare that the continuation of colonialism was a crime that constituted a violation of the Charter and the Declaration);

A proposal that would have had the effect of deleting the call for the Security Council to adopt effective measures against Governments repressing colonial peoples, contained in the first provision of the programme of action calling on States to promote full implementation of the Declaration;

A proposal stating that colonial peoples resisting actions depriving them of their right to self-determination were entitled to seek and receive support in accordance with Charter principles (rather than a call on Member States to give such peoples all necessary moral and material assistance);

A proposal to delete the specific actions proposed to the Security Council;

A proposal to delete the call on Member States to end the aid to South Africa, Portugal and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia which enabled them to persist in their policy of colonial domination;

A proposal to ask Member States to discourage and limit activities of foreign economic interests which were prejudicial to interests of the people of the territories (rather than a call for a vigorous and sustained campaign against foreign economic, financial and other interests and prevention of the systematic influx of foreign immigrants);

A proposal to delete the call for a sustained and vigorous campaign against all military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration.

The draft text of a resolution and a programme of action submitted by Italy was not pressed to a vote. The draft resolution would have had the Assembly, in welcoming the programme of action, recognize that in the previous 10 years millions of peoples formerly under colonial rule had achieved freedom and independence, yet be gravely concerned that in various regions, especially in large areas of southern Africa, the peoples had yet to exercise their right to self-determination; that the suppression of the legitimate aspirations of the colonial peoples constituted an affront to human dignity and a violation of fundamental human rights; and acknowledge that all peoples denied their legitimate aspirations and fulfilment of the goals set out in the Declaration on granting independence were entitled to assert their right to self-determination, freedom and independence by every means at their disposal consistent with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

The programme would, among other things, have had the Assembly declare that Member States should make every effort to enable the peoples of non-self-governing territories to exercise their right to self-determination and in this connexion should refrain from any forcible action contrary to the purposes and principles of the Charter. Further, Member States should promote the economic, social and cultural advancement of the peoples of the territories and discourage and limit the activities of foreign economic interests which were prejudicial to the interests of those peoples.

Also, Member States would recognize the urgent need to give special attention to the problems of territories in southern Africa and to this end would give appropriate moral and material support to those peoples, ensure that the Security Council kept the situation there under review and condemn the use of military force in repression of the attainment of those objectives, as well as prevent the sale or supply of arms for such repression.

Also, a proposal—later withdrawn—was made by the United Kingdom to insert a provision whereby the Assembly would take into account the fact that in appropriate cases of small territories outside Africa the exercise of the right to self-determination and independence might be attained by various means, namely, by full independence as a separate State, by free association with, or by integration with, another sovereign State.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

When the General Assembly discussed the Special Committee's report on the programme of activities for the tenth anniversary of the Declaration on the granting of independence, the majority of speakers supported the Committee's proposals. Those Members noted that 10 years had elapsed since the adoption of the Declaration, but that as many as 44 territories with a population of over 28 million still remained under colonial rule. Acknowledging that the Declaration had had a salutary effect in accelerating the pace of decolonization, they nevertheless felt it was a matter of regret that certain countries clung to their colonial possessions.

The representatives of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Hungary, India, Iran, Mongolia, Pakistan, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Venezuela and Zambia believed that the General Assembly's adoption of the programme proposed by the Special Committee would be a milestone in United Nations activities to eliminate colonialism.

A number of Members, on the other hand, said that the Special Committee's report was unacceptable because of its generalizations, oversimplifications and the strong language used.

The United Kingdom, for example, found that certain provisions of the proposed programme—for instance, those calling for the Security Council to take certain actions or calling for participation by representatives of liberation movements in those proceedings of United Nations organizations relating to their countries—raised serious constitutional issues in relation to the United Nations Charter and in particular to those Charter provisions which stipulated the relationship between the General Assembly and the Security Council, which recognized the inherent right of self-defence and which regulated the membership of the Assembly and other major organs.

The United Kingdom also said that the provision declaring the further continuation of colonialism a crime in violation of the Charter and principles of international law made the programme of action wholly unacceptable.

Australia, France, New Zealand and the United States said that the Special Committee's proposals did not give an accurate picture of the situation in the respective territories for which they were responsible.

The United States representative expressed his regret that despite the long association of his country as a member of the Special Committee not a single one of its suggested amendments to the programme of action had been adopted.

A number of Members said they supported the Special Committee's proposed programme of action because it sought to implement the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Nevertheless they had reservations regarding certain points.

Also, Argentina, Greece, Ireland, Israel and Turkey stated that they disagreed with some wording of the programme, although they would vote in favour of its adoption.

On 12 October 1970, the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples as proposed by the Special Committee was adopted by a recorded vote of 86 to 5, with 15 abstentions, at a plenary meeting of the General Assembly. The programme was set forth in resolution 2621 (XXV). (For summary of resolution, see above; for text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

SPECIAL CEREMONY TO MARK TENTH ANNIVERSARY

On 14 October 1970, the General Assembly held a special ceremony to mark the tenth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Statements were made by the President of the twenty-fifth session of the Assembly, Edvard Hambro (Norway), by the Chairman of the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration, Davidson S. H. W. Nicol (Sierra Leone), and by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

The Chairman of the Special Committee observed that the day of commemoration should symbolize the solidarity of Member States in their determination to accelerate the attainment of freedom and national independence by all territories still under foreign rule. Although the United Nations had done a great deal to encourage and assist the peoples of the colonial territories in their progress towards freedom from alien domination, he said, 10 years after the adoption of the Declaration millions of people were still subject to colonial rule and most lived under regimes that offered them little hope of early or peaceful emancipation.

Noting that 1970 marked not only the tenth anniversary of the Declaration but also the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, the Chairman called for renewed dedication to eradication of the last vestiges of colonialism in all its manifestations.

The Secretary-General said that the adoption of the Declaration on the granting of independence in 1960 would be remembered as one of the historic moments in the annals of the United Nations. When the General Assembly adopted that Declaration, he said, it made clear that the conscience of the international community could no longer be satisfied with slow progress towards decolonization, and that the continued denial of the fundamental right of self-determination to dependent peoples throughout the world was contrary to the United Nations Charter and an impediment to the promotion of world peace and co-operation. Although 53 million people, inhabiting 26 territories, had emerged from dependent status over the previous 10 years, there were still some 28 million people in 44 territories who lived under alien rule.

The President of the General Assembly noted that since 1960, the Declaration on granting independence had formed the basis for United Nations action to accelerate the process of decolonization; that movement towards national liberation had surpassed the hopes and predictions expressed in 1945; and that its successes had changed the nature of the international community and brought it new value.

The Assembly President said that the United Nations had made it quite clear that the colonial peoples of southern Africa shared fully in the right to self-determination and freedom and that peoples in territories in other parts of the world equally shared in the right to make their wishes known. He urged the Assembly to concentrate on working for full implementation of the Declaration and realization of the hope for "freedom and progress," which was the theme for the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations.

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

In addition to preparing a future programme of action for implementation of the Declaration on granting independence and to considering the situation in a number of territories, the Special Committee continued to examine the general questions described below.

With regard to its review of the activities of foreign economic and other interests, the Committee reiterated the view that these interests were operating in such a way as to constitute a major obstacle to the attainment of political independence, as well as of social and economic justice in colonial territories. (See pp. 700-5 below for further details.)

Continuing its examination of military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration, the Special Committee reported that on the basis of information available, it was believed that the main characteristics, objectives and purposes of these activities had remained unchanged. The Committee drew particular attention to the situation in southern Africa where colonial and racist regimes continued to strengthen their military hold.

In this connexion, the Special Committee expressed grave concern at the information that the Portuguese Government, in its colonial war against the freedom fighters of the African population, was employing various chemical and bacteriological weapons in flagrant violation of international conventions.

By its recommendations on this subject, the Special Committee among other things once again requested all States having responsibility for the administration of colonial territories to discontinue military activities impeding implementation of the Declaration and to withdraw foreign armed forces from those territories. It deplored the alienation of land for military installations and the utilization of local economic and manpower resources to service such bases and called for an end to those practices.

The Special Committee also requested that the practice of drafting men from among the indigenous population of the territories for service in the armed forces of the administering powers be terminated. In this connexion, it noted that the manner in which the United States had been drafting Virgin Islanders into United States armed forces had led to demonstrations against conscription in the Islands and that 22 Virgin Islanders had died in action in Viet-Nam.

On the question of implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations, the Committee made a number of recommendations. In particular, it recommended that the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system should render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples struggling for their liberation from colonial rule. (See pp. 697-99 below for further details.)

Concerning the sending of visiting missions, the Special Committee adopted a resolution noting with regret that the unco-operative attitude of the administering powers had continued to impede the implementation of the Declaration. The Committee reiterated its appeal to those powers to permit such missions access to the territories under their administration.

The Special Committee again examined the question of publicity to be given to the work of the United Nations in decolonization. It was agreed that a sustained effort must be made to keep world public opinion adequately acquainted with the situation in the colonial territories and the continuing struggle for liberation being waged by colonial peoples, so as to mobilize the international community more effectively in favour of the implementation of the Declaration.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The general aspects of the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples were considered by the General Assembly at plenary meetings held between 8 and 14 December 1970.

Most Members who took part in the discussion supported the conclusions and recommendations set forth in the report of the Assembly's Special Committee. These Members noted with concern that there had been no appreciable acceleration in the process of decolonization; 10 years after the adoption of the Declaration, 44 dependent territories with some 28 million inhabitants were still under colonial domination.

Several speakers felt there had been a deterioration in the situation in colonial territories. They considered it imperative for the international community to take effective action to assist the dependent peoples to translate into reality their legitimate aspirations to freedom and independence. In southern Africa, they said, the authorities concerned, acting in collaboration with one another and with the assistance of certain foreign interests, had intensified their domination and repression of the indigenous peoples of the territories. The deteriorating situation, in their view, constituted a blatant defiance of the authority of the United Nations.

Among those expressing views to this effect were the representatives of Burma, Chile, Czechoslovakia, India, Indonesia, Romania and Somalia.

The representative of Somalia declared that the situation in Southern Rhodesia had deteriorated dreadfully and that the so-called sanctions had failed. He said that Portugal, one of the most backward countries in Europe, was able to maintain over 120,000 military personnel and to sustain an expensive war in Africa thanks to the complicity of and assistance from the Western powers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). Further, he said, the United Kingdom, with its declared intention of resuming the sale of arms to South Africa, was aggravating an explosive situation in Southern Africa.

The Indian representative stated that the operations of the foreign economic interests were one of the prime causes for the maintenance of unrepresentative regimes in the colonial territories of southern Africa. Working for the benefit of the illegal regimes of those regions those economic interests continued to prosper.

On 14 December 1970, the Assembly adopted a resolution (2708 (XXV)) embodying its decisions on the question of implementation of the Declaration on granting independence.

Among other things, by the preambular part of this resolution, the Assembly deplored the refusal of the colonial powers, especially Portugal and South Africa, to implement the Declaration and other relevant resolutions on decolonization. It reiterated its conviction that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations and the attempts to suppress national liberation movements were incompatible with the United Nations Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on granting independence and posed a threat to international peace and security.

The Assembly also deplored the attitude of those States that continued to co-operate with the Governments of Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed its resolution of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on granting independence<sup>7</sup> and all its other resolutions on decolonization. It approved the report of the Special Committee covering its work during 1970 and the programme of work envisaged for 1971.

The Assembly then urged all States—in particular the administering powers—and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations contained in the Special Committee's report for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and the relevant United Nations resolutions. It reaffirmed its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the colonial peoples and peoples under alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal and noted with satisfaction the progress made in the colonial territories by the national liberation movements, both through their struggle and through reconstruction programmes; and it urged all States and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to provide, in consultation, as appropriate, with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), moral and material assistance to national liberation movements in the territories.

Also, the Assembly asked all States, as well as the specialized agencies and international institutions, to withhold assistance of any kind from Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia until they renounced their policy of colonial domination and racial discrimination. It reiterated its declaration that the practice of using mercenaries against national liberation movements in the colonial territories constituted a criminal act, and it called on all States to take measures to prevent recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territory and to prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries.

Further, the Assembly requested the colonial powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

The Assembly condemned the policies pursued by certain colonial powers of imposing non-representative regimes and constitutions, strengthening the position of foreign economic and other interests, misleading world public opinion and encouraging the systematic influx of foreign immigrants while evicting, displacing and transferring indigenous inhabitants. It called on those powers to desist forthwith.

In a series of provisions concerning the work of the Special Committee, the Assembly asked the Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration on granting independence and to make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter regarding developments in colonial territories likely to threaten international peace and security. The Assembly then recommended that the Council take such suggestions fully into consideration.

The Assembly also asked the Special Committee to continue to examine the compliance of Member States with the Declaration, especially as it concerned Portuguese-dominated territories, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia; and to pay particular attention to the small territories, recommending to the Assembly methods to enable the populations of those territories to exercise fully and without delay their right to self-determination.

The Assembly called upon administering powers to permit the access of visiting groups to the colonial territories to secure first-hand information and to ascertain the wishes of the inhabitants.

Also, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in decolonization, to the situation in the colonial territories, and to the continuing struggle for liberation being waged by the colonial peoples; it asked Member States to co-operate with him in promoting large-scale dissemination of such information.

The Assembly adopted resolution 2708 (XXV) by a roll-call vote of 93 to 5, with 22 abstentions having first approved an amendment by Afghanistan by a recorded vote of 65 to 2, with 39 abstentions. The amendment added the words "and peoples under alien domination" to the operative provision reaffirming the Assembly's recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the colonial peoples and peoples under alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination.

The sponsors of the resolution were: Algeria, Burundi, the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Liberia, Libya, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen,<sup>8</sup> Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, <sup>8</sup> On 30 November 1970, Southern Yemen changed its name to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen.

Syria, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

At its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly took decisions on several other matters which also related to the general aspects of implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

One of these decisions was embodied in resolution 2649(XXV) which dealt with the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights. The Assembly, by this resolution, affirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial and alien domination recognized as being entitled to the right of self-determination to restore to themselves that right by any means at their disposal, and to seek and receive all kinds of moral and material assistance. It called on Governments to recognize and observe those rights, and condemned Governments that denied them. The Assembly also considered that the acquisition and retention of territory in contravention of the right of a people to self-determination was inadmissible and a gross violation of the Charter.

The Assembly adopted resolution 2649(XXV) on 30 November 1970 on the recommendation of its Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee.

By another Assembly resolution—2646(XXV)—which was concerned with the elimination of racial discrimination, the Assembly among other things called for increased and continued moral, and in particular material, support to all peoples under colonial and alien domination struggling for the realization of their right to self-determination and for the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination.

This resolution was also adopted on 30 November 1970, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Third Committee.

IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION BY SPECIALIZED AGENCIES AND INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTIONS

The question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations was again considered in 1970 by the Assembly's Special Committee on the situation with regard to implementation of the Declaration, by the Economic and Social Council and by the General Assembly.

CONSIDERATION BY ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

When the Economic and Social Council took up the question at its mid-1970 session of implementation of the Declaration by the agencies and organizations associated with the United Nations, it had before it a report by the Council President on his consultations with the Chairman of the Assembly's Special Committee. Among the topics covered in the report were the provision of assistance by the agencies to refugees from colonial territories and the question of moral and material assistance, through OAU, to national liberation movements in colonial territories. Mentioned were the assistance given by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the need for flexible procedures, and the limited role to date of certain organizations.

The President and the Chairman had emphasized, it was also reported, that the efforts of the agencies to meet the intent of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in this matter would be greatly facilitated if States members of the governing bodies and deliberative organs of the organizations of the United Nations system, bearing in mind the need to co-ordinate and ensure consistency in the positions of their respective delegations to different bodies concerned with related matters, took effective action to implement the Assembly's decisions on this question.

Also, the President and the Chairman had agreed that it would be desirable for the Council to request the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Council's Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) to continue to give consideration to this matter.

On 24 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Council President, endorsed the conclusions and suggestions contained therein and recommended them for action by the specialized agencies and other international institutions. The Council drew the attention of the Special Committee concerned with implementation of the Declaration to the discussions that had taken place in the Council, in CPC and in joint ACC/CPC meetings.

The Council's decisions were contained in resolution 1534(XLIX), adopted without vote on an oral proposal by Tunisia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

At meetings held between 20 July and 27 August 1970, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of implementation of that Declaration by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations. The Committee had before it a report by the Secretary-General and one by its Chairman, being appraised thereby of the Chairman's consultations with the President of the Economic and Social Council and the Council's action of 24 July 1970 (see immediately above).

On 27 August, the Special Committee adopted a resolution on the question by a roll-call vote of 17 to 2 (the United Kingdom and the United States), with 2 abstentions (Italy and Norway).

The Special Committee thereby, among other things, expressed its appreciation to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and to the agencies and organizations which had co-operated in carrying out relevant Assembly resolutions. It expressed deep regret that several of those bodies had not implemented provisions of those resolutions concerning assistance to national liberation movements and to discontinuance of all collaboration with Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

The Special Committee affirmed that recognition by the General Assembly and the Security Council of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve independence entailed, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all necessary moral and material assistance to national liberation movements in the territories concerned. It then urged the agencies and organizations to render such assistance, working out concrete programmes through OAU. It also called for increased assistance to refugees from colonial territories and effective implementation of various resolutions on the question adopted by the Security Council in 1970.

Further, the Special Committee recommended that the Assembly urge the bodies in the United Nations system to discontinue collaboration with Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, and that these bodies, in particular the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, withhold financial, economic, technical and other assistance from those same regimes until they renounced their policy of racial discrimination and colonial domination.

In addition, the Special Committee asked the Assembly to invite the agencies to examine, in consultation with OAU, the possibility of providing for participation, in regional meetings, of leaders of liberation movements.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly's discussion in 1970 of the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence by the specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations was held mainly in the Assembly's Fourth Committee.

On the recommendation of the Committee, the Assembly, on 14 December 1970, adopted a resolution setting forth its decisions on this question.

Thus, the Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and to those other agencies and organizations which had co-operated in carrying out relevant resolutions, and it urged the agencies and organizations which had not yet done so to implement Assembly decisions relating to aid to national liberation movements and to discontinuance of collaboration with Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia.

The Assembly affirmed that recognition by the Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations bodies of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entailed, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all necessary moral and material assistance to the national liberation movements in those territories, including especially assistance to the liberated areas of the territories.

The Assembly urgently appealed to those agencies and organizations to render such assistance and, in particular, to work out, with the co-operation of OAU and through it, of the national liberation movements, concrete programmes for assisting the peoples of Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and the territories under Portuguese administration, including peoples in liberated areas.

The Assembly recommended that these agencies and organizations, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, (UNDP) and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development should increase assistance to refugees from colonial territories and introduce the greatest possible measure of flexibility in their relevant procedures. It also asked the same bodies, in particular in this instance, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunication Union and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, urgently to consider measures to implement relevant provisions of the Security Council's resolution of 18 March 1970 concerning the situation in Southern Rhodesia (resolution 277(1970), see pp.181-83 for text) and of 29 July 1970 concerning the situation in Namibia (resolution 283(1970), see pp. 733-58 for the text).

The Assembly then urged the agencies and other organizations to discontinue all collaboration with Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia in accordance with relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council; and also urged them, particularly the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund, to take steps to withhold financial, economic, technical and other assistance from Portugal and South Africa until they renounced their policies of racial discrimination and colonial domination.

Further, the Assembly invited the specialized agencies to examine, in consultation with OAU, the possibility of providing for participation, where necessary and appropriate, in conferences, seminars and other regional meetings convened by them, of leaders of liberation movements in colonial territories in Africa, in an appropriate capacity.

The Assembly asked all Governments to intensify their actions in the specialized agencies and other organizations to ensure implementation of resolutions relating to this question, and it noted with appreciation action in this respect by States members of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

It recommended that agencies and organizations continue to examine the problems encountered in implementing Assembly resolutions on the question, asked the Economic and Social Council to consider appropriate co-ordination measures in this respect, and asked the Secretary-General to submit a comprehensive report on implementation and to continue to assist the agencies and other organizations in the United Nations system in working out implementation measures.

The Assembly's resolution—2704 (XXV)—was adopted by a recorded vote of 83 to 4, with 21 abstentions. The Fourth Committee approved the text on 11 December 1970 by a roll-call vote of 71 to 4, with 18 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text of the resolution was sponsored in the Fourth Committee by: Afghanistan, Algeria, Bulgaria, Chile, Ecuador, Ghana, Guinea, India, Iraq, Kenya, Mali, Nigeria, the People's Republic of the Congo, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC AND OTHER INTERESTS

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

In October 1970, the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered a report by its Sub-Committee I concerning the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence, in the territories under Portuguese administration, in Southern Rhodesia and in other colonial territories. The report contained conclusions and recommendations which the Sub-Committee had made on the basis of its study of the information concerning economic conditions prepared by the United Nations Secretariat at the request of the Sub-Committee.

On 22 October 1970, the Special Committee—by a vote of 14 in favour to 2 against (United Kingdom, United States), with 2 abstentions (Italy, Norway)—adopted the Sub-Committee's report and endorsed the conclusions and recommendations contained therein.

The Special Committee drew the following conclusions, among others.

With the encouragement of the administering powers, further penetration, consolidation and expansion of foreign economic and other interests had taken place in some of the territories during the year under review. The monopolies of the States possessing major interests in colonial territories—in particular, those of southern Africa—had helped to maintain and strengthen the colonial regimes and the absolute domination of whites over the vast and fertile area of southern Africa, making possible unhampered exploitation of great national riches and cheap labour.

The foreign monopolies continued to follow economic and financial policies detrimental to the genuine interests of the territories. They continued to develop only those economic sectors yielding the highest profits and to manipulate agricultural production with emphasis on export crops, thus reducing the territories to the role of supplier of agricultural products and raw material to the metropolitan or other countries. High profits were earned because of special privileges granted by the colonial administrations and the pursuance of a policy of racial discrimination.

African labourers continued to receive wages several times lower than those of non-indigenous workers, and had no social security benefits. The monopolies, in collaboration with the colonial powers, continued to stifle trade union activities and labour movements. The high profits earned by the foreign monopolies continued to be taken out of the territories, or to remain in the hands of the exploitative minority of foreign settlers, and were not used for improvement of the economic and social conditions of the colonial peoples. In return, the monopolies supplied the colonial regimes with funds and other forms of assistance, including military assistance, with the aim of crushing national liberation movements.

The Special Committee considered it necessary to draw a clear distinction between foreign investment in independent States and in non-self-governing territories. In the former case, the decision to accept or refuse the introduction of foreign capital was taken by legally constituted authorities and it was not for the Special Committee to consider whether the action was desirable or not. It was foreign capital investment in territories which deserved censure, since, as had been repeatedly demonstrated, such investment was impeding the progress of the territories towards independence; in addition, the decision concerning foreign investments was taken by the administering power and not by the peoples of the territories concerned. The Special Committee noted that investments in Mozambique, Angola, Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and other colonial territories had done immense harm to colonial peoples and had been instrumental in prolonging the struggle for liberation being waged in colonial countries in southern Africa.

The Special Committee further noted that representatives of the national liberation movements were unanimous in their bitter criticism of foreign economic investments in Guinea (Bissau), Angola, Mozambique, Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and South Africa. Several of the big companies operating in that region had been specifically mentioned by name as profiting from the misery of the peoples of those territories by taking advantage of the discriminatory labour conditions, and, at the same time, impeding the struggle of the colonial peoples by providing revenues to the Portuguese Government, the Government of South Africa and the Ian Smith regime in Southern Rhodesia, which enabled them to sustain their war against those peoples.

Most of the representatives of the liberation movements had sharply criticized the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) for the military and political support given to Portugal, enabling it to conduct an expensive colonial war against the peoples of Mozambique, Angola and Guinea (Bissau). Portugal, in return, had given its allies "licence to plunder the riches and exploit the human resources" of those territories, those representatives had declared.

The Special Committee also noted that the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of the Portuguese Colonies, held in Rome, Italy, in June 1970, stressed that the colonialists of Lisbon were facilitating penetration of powerful economic interests of the imperialist powers to ensure that those interests should consider their fate as linked to that of Portuguese domination. They became defenders of Portugal's colonialism, expressing themselves through the policies of their Governments, and thus created conditions for an increasing internationalization of the conflict.

The Special Committee said there was information to the effect that, in some cases, foreign troops were introduced into colonial territories in the wake of foreign capital under the pretext of safeguarding that capital.

With regard to the Cabora Bassa dam project, the largest single internationally financed scheme in southern Africa, the Special Committee noted that further developments had taken place: the Portuguese Government had concluded an agreement with South Africa to guarantee the purchase of a large amount of electric power, with a supply contract as an integral part of that agreement; in September 1969, Portugal awarded the contract for the construction of the Cabora Bassa dam to the Zamco-Zambezi Consortium Hydroelectrico (ZAMCO), a consortium headed by South African interests and comprising 17 companies, mostly from the Federal Republic of Germany, France and South Africa. Work on the project was expected to involve a large number of other foreign firms not part of ZAMCO. Southern Rhodesia expected to participate in the provision of various supplies needed in connexion with the project and stood to benefit from new sources of electrical power.

The Special Committee then stated its conclusions concerning the Cabora Bassa project:

(a) The aim of Portugal and the minority racist regimes in southern Africa in undertaking the project with the help of some foreign monopolies was to oppress even more the indigenous inhabitants and to bring to a halt the national liberation struggle of the people not only of Mozambique but of Angola, Zimbabwe [Southern Rhodesia] and Namibia.

(b) The project was designed to enable Portugal and the other minority racist regimes in southern Africa to bring more than a million settlers to the area, who would contribute directly to the war against the peoples of the territories.

(c) The project would strengthen the economic base of the minority racist regimes in southern Africa, as well as white supremacy in that region.

(d) The project would have grave negative political implications not only for the independent and colonial countries of southern Africa but for the continent as a whole, and would lead to international tensions and discord.

(e) The Special Committee found that any foreign participation in the scheme was tantamount to the strengthening of the oppressive minority racist regimes in southern Africa. It noted with appreciation the decision of Sweden and Italy to withdraw support from the scheme.

The Special Committee concluded with deep regret that the colonial powers had not implemented, even in a preliminary way, the General Assembly's resolutions of 7 December 1967, 18 December 1968 and 12 December 1969.<sup>9</sup> They had thus added further to the obstacles standing in the way of the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

The Special Committee approved the following as its recommendations:

(1) It reaffirmed that foreign economic, financial and other interests, as they were operating currently in colonial territories, constituted a major obstacle to political independence and to social and economic justice.

(2) It condemned the current activities and operating methods of those foreign and other interests in the territories under colonial domination which were designed to perpetuate colonial rule.

(3) It condemned the Portuguese Government's plan to build a dam on the Zambezi River, at Cabora Bassa, which constituted a grave threat to the rights and progress of the African peoples of colonial territories in southern Africa, and which would lead to international tensions and discord.

(4) It requested the colonial powers and States concerned, whose companies were participants in the construction of the Cabora Bassa dam, to withdraw their support from the scheme and put an end to the participation of their companies in it.

(5) It requested the colonial powers and States concerned to take legislative, administrative and other measures in respect of their nationals who owned and operated enterprises in colonial territories, particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese administration, to put a stop to their activities which were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants.

(6) It requested all States to take effective measures to stop the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military equipment, to colonial regimes that used such assistance to repress national liberation movements.

(7) It requested the colonial powers and States concerned to comply fully with the provisions of the General Assembly resolutions mentioned above, and to adopt effective measures to prevent new investments, particularly in southern Africa, which ran counter to those resolutions.

(8) It decided, in preparing its programme of work for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, to include a provision to the effect that United Nations Member States should conduct an energetic and continuous campaign against the activities of economic, financial and other circles operating in the colonial territories on behalf and in the name of the colonial powers and their allies, inasmuch as such activities constituted a serious and significant impediment to the achievement of the objectives set forth in the General Assembly's resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960.<sup>10</sup> Member States should study the question of adopting the necessary measures to ensure that their nationals and companies coming under their jurisdiction ceased such activities and practices.

The United Kingdom, in dissociating itself from the report, said that it had always welcomed outside investment in the dependent territories within its responsibility, subject to the controls and safeguards necessary to protect the interests of their peoples.

The United States, which voted against the report, regretted that the Special Committee persisted in repeating time-worn slogans, without giving adequate consideration to other views that should be taken into account when dealing with the question of foreign private investment in the territories.

DECISION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

On 9 April, at its 1970 session, the Commission on the Status of Women, after considering the question of the influence of activities of foreign economic and other interests on the living conditions of women in dependent territories, proposed a draft resolution for adoption by the Economic and Social Council, which the Council endorsed on 28 May as its resolution 1516(XLVIII).

requested the General Assembly to invite the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the question of the influence of activities of foreign economic and other interests on the living conditions of women in dependent territories, in order that the study might be submitted to the Commission on the Status of Women at its next session. (For text of resolution 1516 (XLVIII), see p. 559.)

On 22 October 1970, the Special Committee took note of the Council's action, it being understood that the Committee would take appropriate action in the light of any decision taken by the General Assembly.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The question of the activities of foreign economic and other interests in colonial territories was discussed during the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly later in 1970, mainly in the Assembly's Fourth Committee.

On 14 December 1970, the General Assembly adopted a resolution incorporating many of the recommendations of its Special Committee on the granting of independence. By this text, among other things the Assembly:

(1) approved the report of the Special Committee;

(2) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent territories to self-determination and independence and to the natural resources of their territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

(3) affirmed that foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial territories constituted a major obstacle to political independence and to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

(4) declared that any administering power, by depriving the colonial peoples of the exercise of their rights or by subordinating them to foreign economic and financial interests, violated its obligations under Chapters XI and XII of the United Nations Charter<sup>11</sup>;

(5) condemned the current activities and operating methods of foreign economic and other interests in the territories under colonial domination;

(6) condemned in particular the construction of the Cabora Bassa project, which was contrary to the vital interests of the people of Mozambique and represented a plot designed to perpetuate the domination, exploitation and oppression of the peoples of that part of Africa by Portugal and the minority regimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, and which would lead to international tensions;

(7) requested the colonial powers and States concerned, whose companies were participants in the construction of the project, to withdraw and to end their companies' participation;

(8) called on the administering powers to abolish the discriminatory and unjust system of wages in their territories and to apply one system of wages to all inhabitants without discrimination;

(9) requested the colonial powers and States concerned to take legislative, administrative and other measures in respect of their nationals who owned and operated enterprises in colonial territories, particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese administration, in order to put a stop to their activities which were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants;

(10) requested all States to take effective measures to stop the supply of funds and other assistance, including military equipment, to colonial regimes that used such assistance to repress national liberation movements;

(11) requested colonial powers and States whose companies and nationals were engaged in such activities to comply fully with the provisions of the General Assembly's resolutions of 7 December 1967, 18 December 1968 and 12 December 1969,<sup>12</sup> and also to adopt effective measures to prevent new investments, particularly in southern Africa, which ran counter to those resolutions;

(12) deplored the attitude of the colonial powers and States concerned which had not taken any action to implement the relevant resolutions of the Assembly;

(13) requested the Special Committee to continue to study the question and report to the Assembly at its 1971 session; and

(14) requested the Secretary-General to render all necessary assistance to the Special Committee in the pursuit of the study.

The Assembly took these decisions when it adopted resolution 2703 (XXV) on 14 December 1970, by a recorded vote of 85 to 11, with 12 abstentions. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which approved the text on 11 December by a roll-call vote of 71 to 10, with 12 abstentions. The text was proposed by Bulgaria, Burundi, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Libya, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, the People's Republic of the Congo, Sudan, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The majority of those taking part in the Fourth Committee's debate supported the Special Committee's report. The USSR said that the activities of foreign monopolies in the colonial territories, the aid that the Western countries belonging to NATO were giving to the racist colonialist regimes in southern Africa and the military activities of the colonial powers in the non-self-governing territories were the main obstacles to the final elimination of colonialism and the liberation of the oppressed peoples. The foreign monopolies were shamelessly plundering the natural resources of the peoples concerned, crushing the national liberation movements and holding up the peoples' development and their attainment of independence.

The USSR held that the function of the foreign monopolies was to perpetuate the presence of the administering powers, which used the bait of high profits to attract the monopolies to the territories; in South Africa, for example, capital investment brought a return of more than 27 per cent—three or four times the average yield. The foreign monopolies exploited not only the natural wealth of the territories but also their workers, who were badly paid and deprived of social and trade union rights.

Others—including Algeria, Afghanistan, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Cuba, Mongolia, Poland, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR and Zambia—also denounced the role played by foreign monopolies in supporting the colonial system. They stressed the fact that the activities of foreign monopolies were developing only those economic sectors that yielded the highest profits; the territories were being reduced to the status of mere suppliers of raw materials for the developed countries. The manufactured products were then sold by those countries at a high profit. In that economic cycle, it was pointed out, the indigenous worker supplied his services at a ridiculously low wage; he was denied vocational training and thus could not compete with labour from the metropolitan country.

These speakers condemned the activities of the foreign monopolies and the collusion between them and the colonial regimes.

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania pointed out that when the General Assembly had adopted the Declaration on granting independence, people had believed that the colonial powers would change their attitude and that the process of independence would be accelerated. That had not happened however, mainly because of the foreign interests operating in the colonial territories—interests on which, in many cases, the economic well-being of the metropolitan countries depended. Some of the large companies operating in Angola and Mozambique had their own armies, which co-operated with the colonial Governments in the repression of national liberation movements, he added.

Australia, the United Kingdom and the United States criticized the Special Committee's report. The United Kingdom rejected the unqualified affirmation that foreign economic interests in colonial territories formed a major obstacle to independence and prevented the development of the natural resources of those territories in the interests of the inhabitants; the smooth transition to independence of many former non-self-governing territories provided irrefutable evidence to the contrary.

With regard to the development of the territories' natural resources, the United Kingdom representative considered that in most cases that was made possible only by the attraction of outside capital investment on a scale that could not be provided from purely local sources. He wondered whether those who so glibly condemned the activities of foreign economic interests in colonial territories really thought that the colonial powers should neglect the economic development of the territories and disregard the potentialities of their natural resources. It was ironic that a resolution carrying that clear implication should go out of its way to recall the obligation accepted by the administering power under Chapter XI of the Charter to promote the economic advancement of the territories under its administration. All the wealthiest former colonies of the United Kingdom, those in which the activities of foreign interests had been most substantial, had long since become independent.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL AND TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR SOUTHERN AFRICA

Under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, scholarships are awarded, for education and training outside their countries, to persons from Namibia, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia and territories under Portuguese administration.

The Programme is mainly supported by voluntary contributions. During the period 1 October 1969 to 31 October 1970, 23 States pledged $465,645 to the Programme's Trust Fund. (For details, see table of contributions below.)

Seven States—Canada, India, Israel, Pakistan, Romania, Sudan and the USSR—had also offered assistance in the form of scholarships for study in their respective countries.

Reporting to the 1970 session of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General noted that the total contribution for the three-year period 1968-1970 had amounted to $1,307,622, which was far short of the target of $3 million envisaged by the Assembly when it established the Programme in 1967.

During 1969-1970, 622 applications for training were received, 210 awards were granted and 295 were renewed. Of the 505 scholarship-holders, 56 were from Namibia, 179 from South Africa, 92 from Southern Rhodesia and 178 from the territories under Portuguese administration. The scholarships were given for a wide variety of studies, and the majority of students were studying in educational institutions in Africa.

The Programme's Advisory Committee met three times during 1970 and discussed ways of expanding and strengthening the Programme, including, in particular, the promoting of contributions and the question of granting subventions to educational institutions in Africa to enable them to provide places for persons coming under the Programme. Representatives of the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Assembly's Special Committee on Apartheid participated in the Advisory Committee's work in an observer capacity.

The Secretary-General reported also on consultations held between the Programme and other United Nations bodies, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and the specialized agencies. In particular, he reported on an agreement reached in April 1970 with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees whereby the latter would, in future, provide assistance to bona fide refugees from southern Africa up to the first level of secondary education, while the Programme would remain responsible for providing assistance at the higher levels.

The report of the Secretary-General was considered by the General Assembly's Fourth Committee.

On the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly, noting that available funds were still far from adequate to meet the objectives of the Programme, expressed appreciation to all contributors and strongly appealed to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions.

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Advisory Committee, to take all possible measures for the promotion of adequate contributions, and decided that, as a further transitional measure, provision should be made, under the regular budget for the financial year 1971, for an amount of $100,000 to ensure the continuity of the Programme pending the receipt of adequate voluntary contributions.

Also, the Assembly noted with approval that co-operation between the Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees had been further strengthened, and that the Secretary-General intended to strengthen co-operation also with OAU, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation.

These Assembly decisions were embodied in resolution 2706(XXV), adopted on 14 December 1970 by a recorded vote of 111 to 2. The Fourth Committee approved the text on 8 December by 88 votes to 2, with 1 abstention. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The sponsors of the text in the Fourth Committee were: Afghanistan, Cameroon, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Finland, Gabon, Ghana, India, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritius, Nigeria, the People's Republic of the Congo, Norway, Sweden, Sudan, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The General Assembly,

Having decided to hold a special commemorative session on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Considering that, by arousing world public opinion and promoting practical action for the speedy liquidation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations, the Declaration has played and will continue to play an important role in assisting the peoples under colonial domination in their struggle for freedom and independence,

Conscious of the fact that, although many colonial countries and peoples have achieved freedom and independence in the last ten years, the system of colonialism continues to exist in many areas of the world,

Reaffirming that all peoples have the right to self-determination and independence and that the subjection of the peoples to alien domination constitutes a serious impediment to the maintenance of international peace and security and the development of peaceful relations among nations,

1. Declares the further continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations a crime which constitutes a violation of the Charter of the United Nations, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the principles of international law;

2. Reaffirms the inherent right of colonial peoples to struggle by all necessary means at their disposal against colonial Powers which suppress their aspiration for freedom and independence;

3. Adopts the following programme of action to assist in the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples:

(1) Member States shall do their utmost to promote, in the United Nations and the international institutions and organizations within the United Nations system, effective measures for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in all Trust Territories, Non-Self-Governing Territories and other colonial Territories, large and small, including the adoption by the Security Council of effective measures against Governments and regimes which engage in any form of repression of colonial peoples, which would seriously impede the maintenance of international peace and security.

(2) Member States shall render all necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial Territories in their struggle to attain freedom and independence.

(3) (a) Member States shall intensify their efforts to promote the implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council relating to Territories under colonial domination.

(b) In this connexion, the General Assembly draws the attention of the Security Council to the need to continue to give special attention to the problems of southern Africa by adopting measures to ensure the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and its own resolutions, and in particular:

(i) To widen the scope of the sanctions against the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia by declaring mandatory all the measures laid down in Article 41 of the Charter of the United Nations;

(ii) To give careful consideration to the question of imposing sanctions upon South Africa and Portugal, in view of their refusal to carry out the relevant decisions of the Security Council;

(iii) To give urgent consideration, with a view to promoting the speedy elimination of colonialism, to the question of imposing fully and unconditionally, under international supervision, an embargo on arms of all kinds to the Government of South Africa and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia;

(iv) To consider urgently the adoption of measures to prevent the supply of arms of all kinds to Portugal, as such arms enable that country to deny the right of self-determination and independence to the peoples of the Territories under its domination.

(c) Member States shall also intensify their efforts to oppose collaboration between the regimes of South Africa and Portugal and the illegal racist regime of Southern Rhodesia for the preservation of colonialism in southern Africa and to end the political, military, economic and other forms of aid received by the above-mentioned regimes, which enables them to persist in their policy of colonial domination.

(4) Member States shall wage a vigorous and sustained campaign against activities and practices of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial Territories for the benefit and on behalf of colonial Powers and their allies, as these constitute a major obstacle to the achievement of the goals embodied in resolution 1514(XV). Member States shall consider the adoption of necessary steps to have their nationals and companies under their jurisdiction discontinue such activities and practices; these steps should also aim at preventing the systematic influx of foreign immigrants into colonial Territories, which disrupts the integrity and social, political and cultural unity of the peoples under colonial domination.

(5) Member States shall carry out a sustained and vigorous campaign against all military activities and arrangements by colonial Powers in Territories under their administration, as such activities and arrangements constitute an obstacle to the full implementation of resolution 1514(XV).

(6) (a) All freedom fighters under detention shall be treated in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949.

(b) The specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations shall intensify their activities related to the implementation of resolution 1514(XV).

(c) Representatives of liberation movements shall be invited, whenever necessary, by the United Nations and other international organizations within the United Nations system to participate in an appropriate capacity in the proceedings of those organs relating to their countries.

(d) Efforts shall be intensified to provide increased educational opportunities for the inhabitants of Non-Self-Governing Territories. All States shall render greater assistance in this field, both individually through programmes in the countries concerned and collectively by contributions through the United Nations.

(7) All States shall undertake measures aimed at enhancing public awareness of the need for active assistance in the achievement of complete decolonization and, in particular, creating satisfactory conditions for activities by national and international non-governmental organizations in support of the peoples under colonial domination.

(8) The United Nations as well as all States shall intensify their efforts in the field of public information in the area of decolonization through all media, including publications, radio and television. Of special importance will be programmes relating to United Nations activities on decolonization, the situation in colonial Territories and the struggle being waged by colonial peoples and the national liberation movements.

(9) The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples shall continue to examine the full compliance of all States with the Declaration and with other relevant resolutions on the question of decolonization. The question of territorial size, geographical isolation and limited resources should in no way delay the implementation of the Declaration. Where resolution 1514 (XV) has not been fully implemented with regard to a given Territory, the General Assembly shall continue to bear responsibility for that Territory until such time as the people concerned has had an opportunity to exercise freely its right to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration. The Special Committee is hereby directed:

(a) To continue to assist the General Assembly in finding the best ways and means for the final liquidation of colonialism;

(b) To continue to give special consideration to the views expressed orally or in written communications by representatives of the peoples in the colonial Territories;

(c) To continue to send visiting missions to the colonial Territories and to hold meetings at places where it can best obtain first-hand information on the situation in colonial Territories, as well as to continue to hold meetings away from Headquarters as appropriate;

(d) To assist the General Assembly in making arrangements, in co-operation with the administering Powers, for securing a United Nations presence in the colonial Territories to participate in the elaboration of the procedural measures for the implementation of the Declaration and to observe the final stages of the process of decolonization in the Territories;

(e) To prepare draft rules and regulations for visiting missions for approval by the General Assembly.

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, contained in its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970,

Recalling all its previous resolutions concerning the implementation of the Declaration, in particular resolutions 2548 (XXIV) of 11 December 1969 and 2554 (XXIV) and 2555 (XXIV) of 12 December 1969,

Noting with grave concern that ten years after the adoption of the Declaration many Territories are still under colonial domination and racist regimes,

Deploping the continued refusal of the colonial Powers, especially Portugal and South Africa, to implement the Declaration and other relevant resolutions on the question of decolonization, particularly those relating to the Territories under Portuguese domination, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia,

Reiterating its conviction that the continuation of colonialism in all its forms and manifestations—including racism, apartheid and activities of foreign economic and other interests which exploit colonial peoples—and the attempts of some colonial Powers to suppress national liberation movements by repressive activities against colonial peoples are incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and pose a threat to international peace and security,

Strongly deploring the attitude of those States, which, in defiance of the relevant resolutions of the Security Council, the General Assembly and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, continue to co-operate with the Governments of Portugal and South Africa and with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 1514(XV) and all its other resolutions on the question of decolonization;

2. Notes with satisfaction the work accomplished by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and expresses its appreciation to the Special Committee for its efforts to secure the complete and effective implementation of the Declaration;

3. Approves the report of the Special Committee covering its work during 1970, including the programme of work envisaged for 1971;

4. Urges all States, in particular the administering Powers, and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to give effect to the recommendations contained in the report of the Special Committee for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Reaffirms its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of the colonial peoples and peoples under alien domination to exercise their right to self-determination and independence by all the necessary means at their disposal and notes with satisfaction the progress made in the colonial Territories by the national liberation movements, both through their struggle and through reconstruction programmes;

6. Urges all States and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system to provide, in consultation, as appropriate, with the Organization of African Unity, moral and material assistance to national liberation movements in the colonial Territories;

7. Requests all States, as well as the specialized agencies and international institutions, to withhold assistance of any kind from the Governments of Portugal and South Africa and from the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until they renounce their policy of colonial domination and racial discrimination;

8. Reiterates its declaration that the practice of using mercenaries against national liberation movements in the colonial Territories constitutes a criminal act and calls upon all States to take the necessary measures to prevent the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territory and to prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries;

9. Requests the colonial Powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial Territories and to refrain from establishing new ones;

10. Condemns the policies, pursued by certain colonial Powers in the Territories under their domination, of imposing non-representative regimes and constitutions, strengthening the position of foreign economic and other interests, misleading world public opinion and encouraging the systematic influx of foreign immigrants while evicting, displacing and transferring the indigenous inhabitants to other areas, and calls upon those Powers to desist forthwith from such policies;

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue to seek suitable means for the immediate and full implementation of the Declaration in all Territories which have not yet attained independence and, in particular, to formulate specific proposals for the elimination of the remaining manifestations of colonialism, taking fully into account the relevant provisions of the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration;

12. Requests the Special Committee to make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter of the United Nations with regard to developments in colonial Territories which are likely to threaten international peace and security, and recommends that the Security Council take such suggestions fully into consideration;

13. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the compliance of Member States with the Declaration and with other relevant resolutions on the question of decolonization, particularly those relating to the Territories under Portuguese domination, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session;

14. Requests the Special Committee to continue to pay particular attention to the small Territories, and to recommend to the General Assembly the most appropriate methods and also the steps to be taken to enable the populations of those Territories to exercise fully and without delay their right to self-determination and independence;

15. Calls upon the administering Powers to co-operate fully with the Special Committee by permitting the access of visiting groups to the colonial Territories in order to secure first-hand information concerning the Territories and to ascertain the wishes and aspirations of the inhabitants of those Territories under their administration;

16. Requests the Secretary-General, having regard to the suggestions of the Special Committee, to continue to take concrete measures through all the media at his disposal, including publications, radio and television, to give widespread and continuous publicity to the work of the United Nations in the field of decolonization, to the situation in the colonial Territories and to the continuing struggle for liberation being waged by the colonial peoples;

17. Requests Member States, in particular the administering Powers, to co-operate with the Secretary-General in promoting the large-scale dissemination of information on the work of the United Nations in the implementation of the Declaration;

18. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the facilities and personnel necessary for the implementation of the present resolution as well as the various resolutions relating to the question of decolonization adopted by the General Assembly and the Special Committee.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations,"

Recalling the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, contained in its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, and the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, contained in its resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970,

Recalling its resolutions 2311 (XXII) of 14 December 1967, 2426 (XXIII) of 18 December 1968 and 2555 (XXIV) of 12 December 1969, and its other relevant resolutions,

Taking into account the relevant resolutions of the Security Council on southern Africa, in particular resolution 277(1970) of 18 March 1970 on the question of Southern Rhodesia and resolution 283(1970) of 29 July 1970 on the question of Namibia,

Taking into account the relevant reports submitted by the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples concerning the implementation of the Declaration by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations, Noting that, while several of the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system have rendered considerable assistance to refugees from the colonial Territories in Africa, many have not extended their full co-operation to the United Nations in the implementation of other aspects of the relevant resolutions.

Conscious of the urgent need of the peoples and the national liberation movements of several colonial Territories, particularly in the liberated areas of some of these Territories, for assistance from the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system, especially in the fields of education, training, health and nutrition,

Recognizing the need for further and more effective measures to be taken for the speedy implementation of the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council by all the organizations of the United Nations system within their respective spheres of competence,

Mindful of the need to keep under continuous review the activities of the organizations within the United Nations system in the implementation of the various United Nations resolutions relating to decolonization,

1. Approves the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the item;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and to those specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system which have co-operated in varying degrees with the United Nations in the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

3. Urges the specialized agencies and the organizations concerned which have not yet done so to take the steps required for the full implementation of those provisions of the relevant resolutions relating to assistance to the national liberation movements and to the discontinuance of all collaboration with the Governments of Portugal and South Africa, as well as with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia;

4. Affirms that the recognition by the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations bodies of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entails, as a corollary, the extension, by the United Nations system of organizations, of all the necessary moral and material assistance to the national liberation movements in those Territories, including especially the liberated areas of the Territories;

5. Reiterates its urgent appeal to the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples struggling for their liberation from colonial rule and, in particular, to work out, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity and, through it, of the national liberation movements, concrete programmes for assisting the peoples of Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and the Territories under Portuguese administration, including in particular the populations in the liberated areas of those Territories;

6. Recommends that, taking into consideration the suggestions contained in the report of the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system, including in particular the United Nations Development Programme and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, should take measures, within their respective spheres of competence, to increase the scope of their assistance to refugees from the colonial Territories, including assistance to the Governments concerned in the preparation and execution of projects beneficial to these refugees, and to introduce the greatest possible measure of flexibility in the relevant procedures;

7. Invites all the specialized agencies and the other international institutions concerned, in particular the International Civil Aviation Organization, the Universal Postal Union, the International Telecommunication Union and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, to proceed to the urgent consideration of measures aimed at facilitating the effective implementation of the relevant provisions of the various Security Council resolutions on colonial Territories in southern Africa, especially paragraphs 9(b), 11 and 23 of resolution 277(1970) and paragraph 14 of resolution 283(1970);

8. Urges the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system to discontinue all collaboration with the Governments of Portugal and South Africa as well as with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and those of the Security Council relating to the colonial Territories in southern Africa;

9. Urges again the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system, in particular the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, to take all the necessary steps to withhold financial, economic, technical and other assistance from the Governments of Portugal and South Africa until they renounce their policies of racial discrimination and colonial domination;

10. Invites the specialized agencies to examine, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, the possibility of providing for participation where necessary and appropriate, in conferences, seminars and other regional meetings convened by them, of the leaders of the liberation movements in the colonial Territories in Africa, in an appropriate capacity;

11. Notes with appreciation the action recently initiated by States members of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the implementation of the Declaration and other relevant United Nations resolutions, and requests all Governments to intensify their actions in the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members to ensure the full and effective implementation of those resolutions;

12. Recommends that, in order to facilitate the efforts of member States to comply fully with paragraph 11 above, the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system should continue to examine, on the basis of reports to be submitted by their respective secretariats, all the problems which they might encounter in their efforts to give effect to the present resolution and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

13. Requests the Economic and Social Council to continue to consider, is. consultation with the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, appropriate measures for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system in implementing the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

14. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To prepare for submission to the relevant bodies concerned with related aspects of the present item, with the assistance of the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system, a comprehensive report describing the activities hitherto undertaken by the specialized agencies and the organizations concerned in regard to the implementation of the various resolutions of the General Assembly relating to the present item;

(b) To continue to assist the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system in working out appropriate measures for implementing the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session;

15. Requests the Special Committee to continue to examine the question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session.

The General Assembly,,

Having considered the item entitled "Activities of foreign economic and other interests which are impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and Territories under Portuguese domination and in all other Territories under colonial domination and efforts to eliminate colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa."

Having examined the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to this question,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in particular the eighth preambular paragraph thereof, and its resolution 2425(XXIII) of 18 December 1968,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of its resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration,

Convinced that any economic or other activity which impedes the implementation of resolution 1514(XV) and obstructs efforts aimed at the elimination of colonialism, apartheid and racial discrimination in southern Africa and other colonial Territories violates the political, economic and social rights and interests of the people in those Territories and is therefore incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling that the administering Powers have the obligation to ensure the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and to protect the population and the natural resources of those Territories against abuses, in accordance with Chapters XI and XII of the Charter,

1. Approves the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to this question;

2. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent Territories to self-determination and independence and to the natural resources of their Territories, as well as their right to dispose of those resources in their best interests;

3. Affirms that foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial Territories constitute a major obstacle to political independence as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those Territories by the indigenous inhabitants;

4. Declares that any administering Power, by depriving the colonial peoples of the exercise of their rights or by subordinating them to foreign economic and financial interests, violates the obligations it has assumed under Chapters XI and XII of the Charter of the United Nations;

5. Condemns the present activities and operating methods of foreign economic and other interests in the Territories under colonial domination;

6. Condemns in particular the construction of the Cabora Bassa project, which is contrary to the vital interests of the people of Mozambique and represents a plot designed to perpetuate the domination, exploitation and oppression of the peoples of this part of Africa by the Government of Portugal and the minority racist regimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, and which would lead to international tensions;

7. Requests the colonial Powers and States concerned, whose companies are participants in the construction of the Cabora Bassa project to withdraw their support from the scheme and put an end to the participation of their companies in the project;

8. Calls upon the administering Powers to abolish the discriminatory and unjust system of wages applied to the inhabitants of the Territories under their administration and in all other Territories under colonial and racist régimes, notably in southern Africa, and to apply one system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination;

9. Requests the colonial Powers and States concerned to take legislative, administrative and other measures in respect of their nationals who own and operate enterprises in colonial Territories, particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the Territories under Portuguese administration, in order to put a stop to their activities which are detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants of the Territories;

10. Requests all States to take effective measures to stop the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military equipment, to colonial régimes that use such assistance to repress the national liberation movements;

11. Requests the colonial Powers and States concerned, whose companies and nationals are engaged in such activities, to comply fully with the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 2288(XXII) of 7 December 1967, 2425(XXIII) of 18 December 1968 and 2554(XXIV) of 12 December 1969, and also to adopt effective measures to prevent new investments, particularly in southern Africa, which run counter to the above-mentioned resolutions;

12. Deplores the attitude of the colonial Powers and States concerned which have not taken any action to implement the relevant provisions of the resolutions of the General Assembly;

13. Requests the Special Committee to continue to study this question and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to use all the facilities at his disposal to render assistance to the Special Committee in the pursuit of this study.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2349 (XXII) of 19 December 1967, 2431 (XXIII) of 18 December 1968 and 2557 (XXIV) of 12 December 1969 concerning the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Referring to paragraph 14 of its resolution 2707 (XXV) of 14 December 1970 concerning the question of Territories under Portuguese administration, in which the Secretary-General is invited to develop and expand training programmes for the inhabitants of those Territories,

Recalling its resolution 2679 (XXV) of 9 December 1970 by which it decided to establish a comprehensive United Nations Fund for Namibia,

Noting that the financial situation has improved only slightly during 1970 and that available funds are therefore still far from adequate to meet the objectives of the Programme,

Welcoming the information that the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established in accordance with paragraph 2 of resolution 2431 (XXIII), has commenced its work during 1970,

Strongly convinced that the provision of assistance for the education and training of persons from the Territories concerned is as essential as ever and that it is therefore highly desirable further to strengthen and expand the Programme,

1. Expresses its appreciation to all those who have contributed to the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa;

2. Strongly appeals to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to the Programme;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and within the terms of paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 2431 (XXIII), to take all possible measures for the promotion of adequate contributions to the Programme;

4. Decides that, as a further transitional measure, provision shall be made, under section 12 of the regular budget of the United Nations for the financial year 1971, for an amount of $100,000 to ensure the continuity of the Programme pending the receipt of adequate voluntary contributions;

5. Notes with approval that co-operation between the Programme and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has been further strengthened and that it is the intention of the Secretary-General to undertake consultations with the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organisation with a view to further strengthening co-operation with them;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on the progress of the Programme.

QUESTIONS CONCERNING INDIVIDUAL TERRITORIES

The following pages give brief accounts of decisions concerning various individual territories taken in 1970 by the General Assembly and by its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>13</sup> (See also pages 157-86, 733-58, 760-72 and 667-88 for details on questions concerning Southern Rhodesia, Namibia, territories under Portuguese administration, Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.)

Falkland Islands (Malvinas)

The Falkland Islands (Malvinas) are situated in the South Atlantic, some 480 miles north-east of Cape Horn. The population of the territory, estimated at 2,098 at 31 December 1969, is with few exceptions European and primarily of British origin. The territory is administered by the United Kingdom and claimed by Argentina as part of its territory.

The economy of the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) depends on sheep-farming and the wool industry.

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in its consideration of the situation in the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), had before it a working paper prepared by the Secretariat containing information on action previously taken by the Special Committee, as well as by the General Assembly, and on the latest developments concerning the territory. It also had before it three written petitions from individuals claiming that the territory should be returned to Argentina.

On 29 October 1970, the Special Committee decided to transmit the working paper to the Assembly, and, subject to any directives the Assembly might give, to take up the items at its 1971 session.

By letters dated 11 December 1970, the Permanent Representatives of Argentina and the United Kingdom informed the Secretary-General that, in 1970 and in accordance with letters sent on 21 November 1969, special talks on communications and movement in both directions, i. e. between the mainland of Argentina and the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), were held. Thus, they said, the two Governments were continuing their efforts towards an amicable settlement of the dispute concerning the islands.

In reply to a statement of the Foreign Minister of Argentina before the General Assembly on 30 September 1970, in which the Foreign Minister referred to the sovereignty over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), the Permanent Representative of the United Kingdom, by a letter dated 15 October 1970, requested the Secretary-General to circulate as a General Assembly document a letter addressed to him on 26 September 1969 stating the position of the United Kingdom Government on this question, which was that it had no doubt about its sovereignty over the territory.

On the recommendation of its Fourth Committee (made on 11 December 1970), the General Assembly decided on 12 December 1970 to postpone consideration of the item to its 1971 session. It did so without adopting a formal resolution.

Fiji

Fiji, a group of 844 islands and islets situated in the south-west Pacific, was administered by the United Kingdom until 10 October 1970, when it became independent.

A Constitutional Conference, concluded in London on 5 May 1970, called upon the Government of Fiji immediately to complete the extension of the common vote to all towns and townships. The Conference also agreed that the Prime Minister, in consultation with the Leader of the Opposition, should arrange for a Royal Commission to be set up to study and make recommendations for the most appropriate method of election and representation for Fiji. In addition, the Conference agreed on an interim solution to provide for the first House of Representatives elected after independence.

At a meeting of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples on 12 May 1970, the Chief Minister of Fiji., Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara, and the Leader of the Opposition, S. M. Koya, made statements and replied to questions concerning the agreements concluded in London between 20 April and 5 May affecting the future status of Fiji.

On 6 October 1970, it was recommended that the Special Committee dissolve its Sub-Committee on Fiji. The Special Committee noted with satisfaction that Fiji was to achieve the goals laid down for colonial territories in the United Nations Charter and in the Declaration on granting independence.

On 13 October 1970, the General Assembly, without adopting a formal resolution, took note of a letter from the Chairman of the Fourth Committee, dated 8 October 1970, which informed the Assembly that the Committee had on that day noted with satisfaction that Fiji was about to achieve the goals laid down by the Charter and the Declaration on granting independence and had extended to the people of Fiji congratulations and best wishes for peace and prosperity in the future.

Fiji was admitted as a Member of the United Nations on 13 October 1970. (See pp. 299-300.)

French Territory of the Afars and the Issas<sup>14</sup>

The French Territory of the Afars and the Issas, administered by France as an overseas territory, is situated on the eastern coast of Africa and is bounded by Ethiopia and Somalia.

The territory, which covers an area of 8,900 square miles, had in 1967 a population estimated at 125,050, comprising 58,240 Issas and other Somalis, 48,270 Afars, 8,285 Arabs and 10,255 Europeans and assimilés.

Following a referendum held on 19 March 1967, in which a majority of the voters of the territory favoured the idea of the area remaining part of the French Republic, the French <sup>14</sup> The name of the territory formerly known as French Somaliland is "French Territory of the Afars and the Issas." This designation was introduced in United Nations terminology as from 15 April 1968, at the request of the administering power.

National Assembly promulgated a new statute for the territory on 3 July 1967. The law, which provided for the establishment of an elected Chamber of Deputies, which in turn elected a Government Council, had as one of its declared purposes to grant a large measure of autonomy in the administration of the territory's affairs.

By this same law, the official name of the territory was changed.

The General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples decided on 29 October 1970 to transmit to the General Assembly the working paper on the territory prepared by the Secretariat, and, subject to any directives the General Assembly might give, to consider the item in 1971.

At a meeting of the General Assembly's Fourth Committee on 7 December 1970, the representative of Somalia declared that, since the administering power did not submit information on the territory, it was particularly important that the United Nations should supplement the working papers prepared by the Secretariat with the views of the parties directly involved, and that it should take account of the position adopted by the Organization of African Unity on this territory since the OAU was particularly concerned with problems of decolonization of the African continent.

The position of the Somali Government on the question, he said, could be summarized as follows: the people of the territory must be given an opportunity to exercise their right to self-determination in a free and democratic manner, without any pressure or interference from any quarter, no matter what foreign interests were at stake; and the political framework of the country should be adjusted so as to enable all the inhabitants to participate freely and equally in the political life of the territory.

The Somali spokesman urged that the United Nations should endeavour to arrange with the administering power for a special mission to make periodic visits to the territory before independence in order to obtain full and objective reports on the situation. Arrangements should also be made for a United Nations mission to be present when the final elections were held before independence.

Also on 7 December, the representative of Ethiopia stated that the policy of his Government on decolonization was unequivocally and strongly to support the right of self-determination and to provide moral and material assistance to those who were fighting for freedom and independence. He was fully convinced that only the inhabitants of a territory were qualified to decide where their interests lay, and that a decision of that type must be scrupulously respected.

During its consideration of the question, the Fourth Committee heard, as a petitioner, the General Secretary of the Liberation Front of the Somali Coast, who declared that France was opposing the independence of the Somali Coast in every possible way, as witnessed by the presence in the territory of an important expeditionary force which enabled the administration to curb and suppress the aspirations of the local population. For the same reasons, he said, the French Government applied a discriminatory social policy and legal system designed to provoke tribal warfare between the two main ethnic groups in the territory.

He urged that the Assembly's Special Committee send a visiting mission to the territory to investigate the political, social and economic situation.

On 14 December, the General Assembly endorsed a recommendation of its Fourth Committee, made on 8 December, to postpone consideration of the question to its 1971 session. It did so without adopting a formal resolution.

Gibraltar

Gibraltar, administered by the United Kingdom, covers an area of 2¼ square miles and had a population at the end of 1968 estimated at 26,007, of whom 19,357 were Gibraltarians, 4,685 other British and 1,965 aliens. The estimated civilian population at the end of 1969 was 28,407.

On 18 December 1968, the General Assembly, declaring that the continuation of the colonial situation in Gibraltar was incompatible with the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter and with the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,<sup>15</sup> requested the administering power to terminate the colonial situation in Gibraltar no later than 1 October 1969.<sup>16</sup> It also called upon the Government of the United Kingdom to begin without delay the negotiations with the Government of Spain provided for by its resolution of 19 December 1967.<sup>17</sup>

The question of Gibraltar was considered by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples at a meeting on 29 October 1970. On that day, the Special Committee decided without objection to transmit to the Assembly the working paper on the territory, prepared by the Secretariat, in order to facilitate the consideration of the item by the Assembly, and, subject to any directives the Assembly might give, to consider the item at its 1971 session.

In a statement made at a plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 15 October 1970, the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Spain stated that his country endorsed the doctrine formulated in the United Nations as a peaceful and adequate means of integrating with its homeland a territory that no Spaniard could ever renounce. The Spanish Government was prepared to negotiate with the United Kingdom Government at any time to that end.

He added that Spain hoped that the realism of the British people and its representatives would lead them to realize the requirements of the present and make it possible to deal with the problem of Gibraltar in serenity and calm, and that the two countries would reach an honourable and satisfactory agreement that would fully safeguard the interests of the civilian population of Gibraltar.

On 14 December, the General Assembly endorsed a recommendation of its Fourth Committee, made on 8 December, that consideration of the item be postponed to its 1971 session. It did so without adopting a resolution.

Spanish Sahara

Spanish Sahara, situated on the Atlantic coast of Africa, covers an area of 108,108 square miles and is bounded on the north by Morocco and on the east and south by Mauritania (except for a few miles in the east, where it is bounded by Algeria). At the end of 1970, its indigenous population was officially estimated at 56,000.

On 16 December 1969, the General Assembly had invited the administering power to determine at the earliest possible date, in conformity with the aspirations of the indigenous people of the so-called Spanish Sahara and in consultation with the Governments of Mauritania and Morocco and any other interested party, the procedures for holding a referendum under United Nations auspices with a view to enabling the indigenous population of the territory to exercise freely its right to self-determination.<sup>18</sup>

At the same time, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General to appoint immediately the special mission provided for by its resolution of 20 December 1966<sup>19</sup> and to expedite its dispatch to the so-called Spanish Sahara. In particular, the Mission was to determine the extent of United Nations participation in the preparation and supervision of the referendum.

In 1970, the question of Spanish Sahara was considered by the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples at meetings held in October and November.

The Special Committee had before it two communications consisting of an exchange of correspondence between the Secretary-General and the Permanent Representative of Spain, which had been referred to the Special Committee by the Secretary-General. In a letter dated 15 October 1970, which contained the Spanish Government's reply to the Secretary-General's letter of 22 January 1970 concerning the appointment of the mission, the Permanent Representative reiterated his Government's support for the implementation of the principle of self-determination for Spanish Sahara and added that, during the current year, the preparations for a census of the population of the territory had entered their final stage.

In these circumstances, and since it was Spain's intention that the true population of the territory should express its genuine aspirations, the Spanish Government was prepared, as soon as the population so wished, to fix a date to enable the people to determine their future freely and without external pressures of any kind. The attainment of these aims, the Spanish letter pointed out, would be impeded if elements alien to the population continued to create an atmosphere of tension and confusion.

The letter concluded by stating that the territory looked towards the future with confidence born of the knowledge that it could at any time request self-determination. At the appropriate time and in order to facilitate this step, the Spanish Government would notify the United Nations so that the Organization could be present.

At a meeting on 29 October 1970, the Special Committee decided to take note of the information contained in the above communications. The Committee also decided to transmit to the Assembly the working paper prepared by the Secretariat in order to facilitate the consideration of the item by the Assembly's Fourth Committee, and to give consideration to the question at its 1971 session, subject to any directives the Assembly might give.

Later, on 20 November 1970, the Chairman of the Special Committee, at the request of the representative of Morocco, drew attention to a letter dated 14 July 1970 from Morocco to the Secretary-General. In the letter, it was stated that, in deciding to strengthen its military potential and intensify its repression of the population of the territory, the Spanish Government had deliberately chosen the path of intimidation and terror; the Moroccan Government feared that this might develop into a serious threat to the peace and security of the region.

Consequently, Morocco considered it necessary and urgent for the Spanish Government to implement without delay the relevant General Assembly resolutions and it hoped that, in consultation with the Governments of Morocco and Mauritania, the Spanish Government would take the necessary steps to ensure the organization of a free referendum. Such steps included, in particular, facilitating the dispatch of a United Nations mission to the territory and the return of refugees and exiles to their homes.

The Moroccan letter also referred to the possibility that Spain might endeavour to undertake consultations unilaterally. It stated that Morocco supported any just and peaceful solution that would enable the indigenous population to determine its own future freely and democratically.

The question of Spanish Sahara was considered by the General Assembly at its 1970 session, which opened on 15 September.

On 14 December 1970, the Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the Sahara to self-determination in accordance with the Declaration on granting independence.<sup>20</sup>

The Assembly expressed its regret that it had not yet been possible for the consultations to take place which the administering power was to conduct with the Governments concerned on the holding of a referendum in the territory, and it declared that the continued existence of a colonial situation in the territory retarded stability and harmony in north-west Africa.

It regretted the incidents of bloodshed which had occurred in the territory in June 1970, and called upon the Spanish Government to take effective measures to create the atmosphere of detente required for the orderly holding of the referendum.

The Assembly repeated its invitation to the administering power to determine at the earliest possible date, in conformity with the aspirations of the indigenous people of the territory and in consultation with the Governments of Mauritania and Morocco and any other interested party, the procedures for holding a referendum under United Nations auspices with a view to enabling the indigenous population of the Sahara to exercise freely its right to self-determination.

To this end, the administering power was invited: to create a favourable climate for the referendum to be conducted on an entirely free, democratic and impartial basis by permitting, inter alia, the return of all exiles to the territory; to take all the necessary steps to ensure that only the indigenous people of the territory participated in the referendum; to comply with the resolutions of the Assembly on the activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial countries and territories and to refrain from any action likely to delay the process of decolonization of the territory; and to receive a United Nations mission and provide it with all necessary facilities so that it might be able to participate actively in the organization and holding of the referendum.

All States were invited to refrain from making investments in the territory in order to speed the achievement of self-determination by the people of the Sahara.

The Secretary-General was again asked to appoint immediately, in consultation with the administering power and the Special Committee, a special mission and to expedite its dispatch to the territory.

The Assembly reaffirmed that it recognized the legitimacy of the struggle being waged by the colonial peoples for the exercise of their right to self-determination and to freedom of choice, and called upon all States to provide them with all necessary assistance.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2711 (XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 103 to 0, with 11 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Fourth Committee. The Committee had approved the text on 10 December 1970, by a roll-call vote of 86 to 0, with 12 abstentions, on a proposal by Ghana, Guinea, Iraq, Mali, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

During the discussion, which took place mainly in the Fourth Committee, Mali, Sudan, the United Arab Republic, the USSR, Yemen and Zambia expressed the opinion that the question of self-determination and independence for the people of Spanish Sahara was as urgent as in the case of any other territory. The United Nations, they recalled, had reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of the territory to self-determination, and it was to be hoped that the Spanish Government would soon take the necessary measures, in consultation with all the parties concerned, to ensure that the wishes of the people of the territory were respected. The representative of Mali pointed out that the persistence of colonial rule in the territory had been a cause of unrest.

The representative of Morocco said that the situation in the territory was a matter of grave concern to his Government and recalled that several resolutions accepted by the administering power had called for a process of decolonization based on co-operation between the United Nations, Spain and the Governments concerned so that an agreement could be reached as soon as possible on the procedures for the holding of a referendum under United Nations auspices.

In view of the goodwill of the Spanish Government, he said, it was to be hoped that the people of the territory would soon be given an opportunity to exercise freely their right to self-determination, but no measures had yet been taken to show that Spain intended to organize a referendum in the appropriate conditions. Furthermore, incidents leading to bloodshed had occurred in the territory in June 1970. While deploring the current situation in the territory, Morocco nevertheless retained its confidence in Spain.

The representative of Spain said that his Government considered it extremely important to maintain good relations with Algeria, Mauritania and Morocco.

He added that the incidents mentioned by the representative of Morocco had not been really serious. Those incidents had taken place on 17 June, and, on 22 June, the necessary explanations had been given to the Secretary-General by the representative of Spain.

The events had shown that the people of Spanish Sahara wished Spain to maintain its presence in their territory, he said. They had no reason to fear that Spain would abandon them, since the Spanish Government was keenly aware of its responsibilities and of the need to implement the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, as was clearly demonstrated by the fact that it had solemnly undertaken to allow the people of the Sahara to decide their own future as soon as they chose.

Even Spaniards who had been born in the territory and were settlers of several generations' standing would not be allowed to take part in the referendum, he said, for that was the only way of ensuring that the wishes and aspirations of the indigenous inhabitants were precisely ascertained.

The representative of Algeria stated there was no longer any reason to delay the decolonization of the territory and added that any delay in implementing the United Nations resolutions on the question could only lead to further violent incidents of the kind that had occurred in June 1970. Algeria hoped that Spain would abandon its attitude and comply with the relevant decisions of the General Assembly.

Although Venezuela recognized the unsatisfactory character of any colonial presence and was thus in favour of the resolution before the Assembly, it could not agree with certain ideas expressed in the text, lacking sufficient information on the situation.

Reservations about the resolution were also expressed by the representatives of Argentina and Guatemala, who stated that their vote in favour of it should not be construed as an endorsement of all its paragraphs.

Similar positions were taken by Japan and the Netherlands who said they would have abstained on certain paragraphs had those been voted upon separately.

11. Requests the Special Committee to continue its consideration of the situation in the Territory and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session.

Other Territories

In 1970, the General Assembly and its Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered, in addition to the territories covered in the preceding sections, the situations in the following territories: American Samoa, Antigua, the Bahamas, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Brunei, the Cayman Islands, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Dominica, the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, Grenada, Guam, Montserrat, the New Hebrides, Niue, Pitcairn, St. Helena, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, the Seychelles, the Solomon Islands, the Tokelau Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands.

The Special Committee referred these 25 territories to its Sub-Committees I, II and III for consideration and report. It adopted the Sub-Committees' reports on all but one of the territories and endorsed their conclusions and recommendations, in some instances on the understanding that any reservations made by members or administering powers invited by the Chairman to participate in the discussion would be reflected in the records of the meetings.

Sub-Committee II decided that owing to lack of time it would be unable to consider Brunei during 1970. The Special Committee, in noting its Sub-Committee's decision, decided to transmit to the General Assembly the working paper on the territory in order to facilitate consideration of the item by the Assembly, and, subject to any directives the Assembly might give, to consider the territory in 1971.

The Special Committee took up the questions of Hong Kong and British Honduras in plenary sessions and decided to transmit to the General Assembly the working papers on these territories. Subject to any directives the Assembly might give, the Committee decided to consider the territories in 1971.

In addition, the Special Committee considered the situations in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and in Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea.

(For details on these Territories, see pp. 673-81 and 681-88.)

ANTIGUA, DOMINICA, GRENADA, ST. KITTS-NEVIS-ANGUILLA, ST. LUCIA AND ST. VINCENT

The Special Committee decided to take note of the report of Sub-Committee III on the territories of Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent, and, subject to any directives the General Assembly might give, to continue consideration of them in 1971, taking into account the various statements made in 1970 by members of the Committee as well as the results of consultations being held concerning the territories.

SEYCHELLES AND ST. HELENA

On 18 August 1970, the Special Committee adopted the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of Sub-Committee I concerning the Seychelles and St. Helena.

It noted that after the introduction of the new constitutional arrangements for the Seychelles, agreed upon at the Constitutional Conference held in London in March 1970, key powers would continue to be concentrated in the hands of the Governor, and that the administering power (the United Kingdom), through the Governor, would retain control of political, economic and other fields. It regretted to note that the administering power had failed to consult the people of the Seychelles directly on the new constitutional arrangements.

It also noted that in the year under review there had not been any favourable change in the situation in St. Helena.

The Special Committee therefore urged the administering power to make the necessary arrangements in the territories for the acceleration of the transfer of powers to representative organs to be elected on the basis of universal suffrage.

It reiterated its position that the detachment of a number of islands from the Seychelles by the administering power, and the setting up of the so-called "British Indian Ocean Territory" with the purpose of establishing a military base in that territory jointly with the United States, were not in keeping with either the interests of the inhabitants or with those of the African continent, or with international peace and security. It again called upon the administering power to respect the territorial integrity of the Seychelles and to return immediately to that territory the islands detached from it in 1965.

Noting that no progress had been made in preventing the exploitation of the economy of the territories by foreign interests, especially South African interests, the Special Committee called upon the administering power to safeguard the right of the peoples of the territories to dispose of their natural resources and to take effective steps to prevent infiltration by foreign economic interests and the introduction of foreign settlers into the territories, particularly foreign settlers from South Africa.

Finally, it again urged the administering power to co-operate with the Special Committee in making arrangements for a visiting mission to the territories.

Reservations concerning these conclusions and recommendations were expressed by the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States.

BAHAMAS, BERMUDA, BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS,
CAYMAN ISLANDS, MONTSERRAT,
TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS, AND UNITED STATES VIRGIN ISLANDS

On 29 October 1970, the Special Committee adopted conclusions and recommendations concerning several Caribbean territories on the basis of a report submitted by its Sub-Committee III.

The Committee reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of the territories to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration on granting independence.<sup>21</sup>

It reiterated its view that the question of size, limited population and restricted resources should in no way delay a speedy implementation of the Declaration with respect to these territories. It again requested the administering powers to take immediate measures to transfer all powers to the peoples of the territories without any conditions or reservations, in accordance with their freely expressed will and desire, and repeated its belief that a United Nations presence during the procedures for the exercise of the right of self-determination would be essential.

The Special Committee once again urged the administering powers to enable the United Nations to send visiting missions to the territories, and to extend to them full co-operation and assistance.

Taking note of the number of projects that continued to be carried out in some of the territories under the auspices of the United Nations and its specialized agencies, the Special Committee maintained that such assistance was useful and expressed the hope that it would be sought and increased.

Finally, it requested the administering powers concerned to take measures to safeguard the rights of the peoples of the territories to dispose of their resources and to maintain control over their future development.

Specifically, the Special Committee took note of the new Constitution introduced in the Bahamas in 1969 and expressed the hope that that would be followed by a speedy granting of independence to the territory. The Committee again expressed its concern over what it described as "the continuing racial inequalities" prevailing in Bermuda and called upon the administering power (the United Kingdom) to take effective measures to ensure that the people of the territory were given equal opportunities without any distinction.

It further urged the administering power to take immediate steps for the full implementation of the Declaration with respect to the territory. It also expressed the hope that the present process of consultations in the British Virgin Islands would bring about a substantive constitutional advancement and would open the way towards a speedy implementation of the provisions of the Declaration.

With regard to the Cayman Islands, the Special Committee noted that a committee consisting of all the elected members of the Legislative Assembly had been established to make recommendations for constitutional advancement. Recalling that the elected members of the Legislative Assembly had felt in 1967 that they had no clear mandate from the people at that time to recommend a move forward, the Special Committee strongly urged that, in the forthcoming elections, the people be given an opportunity to express their views on their future.

With respect to Montserrat, the Special Committee welcomed the willingness of the Government of this territory to receive a visiting mission.

It noted the statement of the representative of the United Kingdom that the United Kingdom could not encourage the belief that, in general, proposals for visiting missions would be acceptable, although there was no question of categorically excluding the possibility of a visiting mission to any given territory for all time. The Special Committee hoped that this statement would be followed by more definite undertakings to admit a visiting mission to Montserrat, and that such a mission would, inter alia, promote further United Nations assistance to the territory.

In noting the new Constitution for the Turks and Caicos Islands, the Special Committee urged the administering power (the United Kingdom) to take further immediate measures for the realization of the objectives of the Declaration.

Finally, with regard to the United States Virgin Islands, the Special Committee expressed its concern over what it described as "the unsatisfactory and even critical conditions" of the alien population of the territory and urged the administering power to take further measures towards immediate solution of the most pressing problems in the fields of housing, welfare, economics and education.

The Committee further appealed to the administering power (the United States) to take, without delay, the necessary measures towards full implementation of the objectives of the Declaration on granting independence.

Reservations concerning these conclusions and recommendations were expressed by the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States.

GILBERT AND ELLICE ISLANDS, PITCAIRN, AND SOLOMON ISLANDS

On 7 October 1970, the Special Committee adopted its conclusions and recommendations concerning the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, Pitcairn and the Solomon Islands, all of which are administered by the United Kingdom. The Committee acted on the basis of a report submitted by its Sub-Committee II.

It considered that even with the revision of the 1967 Constitution of the Gilbert and Ellice Islands and the introduction of a new Constitution on 10 April 1970 in the Solomon Islands, the constitutional systems in those territories fell short of goals outlined in earlier recommendations. The Special Committee therefore reiterated its recommendations that the administering power should transfer full responsibility of government to the representatives of the peoples in accordance with the Declaration on granting independence.<sup>22</sup>

It once again expressed the hope that all those concerned would co-operate fully with the Secretary-General to permit him to report on all aspects of the extraction and marketing of phosphate on Ocean Island (Gilbert and Ellice Islands) at the earliest possible time.

The Special Committee wished to be kept informed of the conversion of the Wholesale Society in the Gilbert and Ellice Islands into a development authority. It welcomed the co-operation initiated between the administering power and the specialized agencies of the United Nations concerning the promotion of social and economic development, and expressed the hope that such co-operation would continue to grow in the future.

Further, the Special Committee urged the administering power to keep in view the legitimate interests of the people of the Solomon Islands when granting prospecting licences to foreign countries and to take account of the relevant General Assembly resolutions concerning foreign economic interests in colonial territories.

Finally, the Special Committee requested the administering power to take appropriate steps towards rapid educational development and to make education compulsory and free of charge at the elementary level.

NIUE AND TOKELAU ISLANDS

Also on 7 October 1970, the Special Committee adopted the report of Sub-Committee II on Niue and the Tokelau Islands (administered by New Zealand) and endorsed its conclusions and recommendations.

It again welcomed the establishment of a full-member system of Government in Niue and noted that the principle of one man, one vote was in force in that territory. It considered, however, that the chairmanship of the Executive Committee, which was constitutionally filled by the Resident Commissioner, should be entrusted to an elected indigenous member. The Special Committee wished to see an accelerated pace of constitutional development in Niue and expected similar steps to be taken in the Tokelau Islands, to help advance the people of the territories to the stage of determining their own future as soon as possible.

It further noted that the basic policy of the public service training scheme was to diminish the need for New Zealand officials in the territories and that a majority of positions in the Niue Public Service were held by Niueans.

The Special Committee also took note of the development programme for 1968-1971 and of the composition and powers of the Niue Development Board and its relationship to the New Zealand Government.

Finally, the Special Committee noted that New Zealand had undertaken unconditionally to receive United Nations visiting missions in Niue and the Tokelau Islands when those territories reached the stage of a decisive act of self-determination. The Special Committee, however, was of the view that it was necessary to send a mission to assess the stage for such an act. It urged the administering power to comply with its request and allow a visit to the territories without further delay.

NEW HEBRIDES

The Special Committee, also on 7 October 1970, adopted conclusions and recommendations concerning the New Hebrides, on the basis of a report by Sub-Committee II.

Expressing serious concern that France, one of the administering powers of the New Hebrides condominium (the other being the United Kingdom), continued to find it not possible to co-operate with the Special Committee concerning the territory, the Committee reiterated its appeal to France to reconsider its position.

Also, it noted that there was a majority of New Hebrideans among the elected members of the Advisory Council; however, they were still in a minority in that body. In addition, the powers vested in the Resident Commissioner were so broad and sweeping as to virtually reduce the effectiveness of the Advisory Council. Bearing this in mind, the Committee expressed the hope that constitutional development would take place so as to transfer full governmental authority to an elected body.

Further, it considered that certain administrative measures should be taken to restore land to indigenous ownership and ensure that this was not violated.

The Special Committee continued to be concerned about the slow pace of economic, social and educational development and therefore reiterated its recommendations that advancement in these fields should be intensified through a concerted effort and that the active participation of representatives of the people in this process be secure.

AMERICAN SAMOA AND GUAM

The Special Committee, on 7 October 1970, also endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of Sub-Committee II concerning American Samoa and Guam.

It noted that the economic development of Guam, although to some extent attributable to the growth of tourism, the establishment of industries and the territory's development as a communications centre, still revolved around the existence of military installations. The Special Committee reiterated its view that the dependence of Guam on military activities, and particularly the presence of military bases, should be brought to an end as soon as possible.

Also, it took note of a constitutional convention in Guam, which was held to change the territory's Organic Act, and of the popular election for the first time of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor. It noted further that a Political Status Commission had been consulting on the future of American Samoa.

The Special Committee expressed the hope that these measures would lead to a lessening of the dependence of the two territories on the administering power (the United States) and to further steps that would allow the peoples of American Samoa and Guam to participate fully and freely in the act of self-determination in conformity with the Declaration on granting independence.

The Special Committee urged the administering power not to prejudge and prejudice the future of the territories. It was concerned about the increasing presence and activities in the territories of United States citizens who were able to affect the political process and the future of the islands, and it urged the administering power to provide detailed information on this question.

Further, the Special Committee took note of the public service policy in American Samoa and wished to be kept informed on the training of American Samoans to take over key positions in the Administration.

Finally, it expressed the hope that the results of a land survey in American Samoa would be made known to it in due course.

Statements concerning the conclusions and recommendations were made by the representatives of the USSR, the United Kingdom and Venezuela.

COCOS (KEELING) ISLANDS

The situation in the Cocos (Keeling) Islands (administered by Australia) was referred to in general recommendations adopted by the Special Committee on 3 November 1970.

The Committee reaffirmed the inalienable rights of the people of the territory to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Declaration on granting independence. It also reiterated its view that the question of the territory's size, isolation and limited resources should in no way delay the speedy implementation of the Declaration.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

At the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, which opened on 15 September 1970, the Special Committee's report on the above territories was considered, and the Assembly took a number of decisions concerning them.

DECISIONS

On 14 December 1970, the Assembly, by the adoption of a resolution, took action with regard to American Samoa, Antigua, the Bahamas, Bermuda, the British Virgin Islands, Brunei, the Cayman Islands, the Cocos (Keeling) Islands, Dominica, the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, Grenada, Guam, Montserrat, the New Hebrides, Niue, Pitcairn, St. Helena, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, the Seychelles, the Solomon Islands, the Tokelau Islands, the Turks and Caicos Islands and the United States Virgin Islands.

By the preamble to the resolution, the Assembly expressed its deep concern at the policy of some administering powers in establishing and maintaining military bases in some of the territories under their administration. It deplored the attitude of those administering powers that continued to refuse to allow United Nations visiting missions to visit the territories under their administration, and reaffirmed the vital importance of visiting missions as a means of securing first-hand information.

The Assembly said it was conscious that these territories required the continued attention and assistance of the United Nations in the achievement of the objectives embodied in the Charter and in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>23</sup> It was also aware of the special circumstances of the geographical location and economic conditions of these territories.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of these territories to self-determination and independence in accordance with the Declaration, and called upon the administering powers to implement the Declaration and other relevant resolutions of the Assembly without delay.

The Assembly expressed its conviction that the questions of territorial size, geographical isolation and limited resources should in no way delay the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence. It also reiterated its declaration that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of colonial territories and the establishment of military bases and installations in these territories was incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter and the Declaration on granting of independence.

Also, the Assembly strongly urged the administering powers to reconsider their attitude towards the receiving of visiting missions.

Finally, the Assembly decided that the United Nations should render all help to the peoples of these territories in their efforts freely to decide their future status, and it requested the Special Committee on the situation with regard to implementation of the Declaration to report to the Assembly in 1971 on the implementation of this resolution.

These Assembly decisions were embodied in resolution 2709 (XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 94 to 1, with 20 abstentions. The Assembly acted on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 10 December 1970, by 72 votes to 1, with 17 abstentions, on a proposal by India, Iraq, Mali, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia. (For text, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In the Fourth Committee, a proposal by the United Kingdom for a separate vote on the words "Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent" in the title of the draft text of resolution 2709 (XXV) and in the first preambular paragraph was rejected by 52 votes to 18, with 16 abstentions.

In the Assembly plenary, on a request by the United Kingdom, a separate vote was taken on those words in the title and in the first preambular paragraph. The words were adopted by 82 to 15, with 18 abstentions.

Also on 14 December, the Assembly took further decisions concerning Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent. It took note of the report of the Special Committee on the situation with regard to implementation of the Declaration on granting independence relating to these territories, and it requested the Special Committee to give urgent consideration to all aspects of this question in accordance with the decision the Assembly had taken on 16 December 1969,<sup>24</sup> and to report thereon to the Assembly in 1971.

These decisions were embodied in Assembly resolution 2710(XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 107 to 0, with 6 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 10 December 1970 by 86 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, on a proposal by Barbados, Ghana, Mali, Nigeria and Sierra Leone. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DISCUSSION

During the discussion of these texts, which took place in the Assembly's Fourth Committee, a number of representatives reiterated that little progress had been achieved in the process of decolonization, owing to the opposition of the administering powers, and that small territories should be allowed to exercise their right of independence and self-determination, irrespective of size or of demographic, economic, geographical or other factors.

The United Kingdom spokesman, whose views were shared by New Zealand's representative, said that individual small territories demanded individual solutions. For the third consecutive year, the General Assembly, in 1969, had invited the Special Committee to continue to pay particular attention to the small territories, but the debate in the Committee had not been resumed in 1970. His Government would be pleased to co-operate in any constructive study on the question of self-determination for small territories.

The representative of Poland disagreed, saying that three Sub-Committees of the Special Committee had dealt with small territories. Progress was slow, since it depended on the positions and political will of the administering powers and their willingness to take account of the views of the United Nations.

The representative of Iraq said that all colonial territories suffered from the same evil, the difference being only a matter of degree and of form.

The problems confronting the small territories, in the view of Trinidad and Tobago, stemmed mainly from lack of human and natural resources and, in some cases, from geographical isolation. The United Nations must therefore direct its efforts towards integration rather than fragmentation, its representative said.

Ceylon linked the question of the small territories with the transmission of information under Article 73e of the United Nations Charter.<sup>25</sup> Its spokesman considered that States having the obligation to transmit such information should not evade it.

Agreeing with this view, Iraq and Zambia, among others, specifically criticized the United Kingdom for not transmitting information concerning the Associated States in the eastern Caribbean.

Replying, the United Kingdom representative said that his Government had not done so because the States in question were completely self-governing.

The representatives of Iraq and Zambia said that this explanation was unacceptable in that only after the United Nations was satisfied that those States had become fully self-governing could the United Kingdom's obligation cease.

Several Members, including Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Libya, Mongolia, the United Arab Republic and the USSR, referred to the establishment or continued existence of military bases maintained by certain administering powers in small territories, and called for their removal. The representative of the Ukrainian SSR considered that military bases in small territories formed part of a network of strategic plans of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries for their own purposes. The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Mongolia and the United Arab Republic cited military bases on Guam in this connexion.

Some Members, including Bulgaria, India, Iran, Iraq, Liberia and Poland, reiterated that the United Nations had always stressed the importance and usefulness of sending visiting missions to the territories to obtain first-hand information on the situation and on the views of the inhabitants concerning their future. Poland stated that despite repeated appeals by the Secretary-General and the Special Committee, the administering powers had either totally rejected the idea or, in a few cases, had imposed conditions that made it almost impossible to send missions.

CHAPTER III

THE QUESTION OF NAMIBIA

The question of Namibia was again considered by United Nations bodies during 1970. Decisions on the territory were taken by the Security Council, the General Assembly and the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. The United Nations Council for Namibia also reported to the Assembly on its activities, and various aspects of the problem were taken up by the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights.

The Security Council adopted three resolutions on the question in 1970, one (276(1970)) on 30 January, the other two (283 (1970) and 284(1970)) on 29 July.

By the first of these resolutions, the Council called upon all States—particularly those having economic and other interests in Namibia—to refrain from any dealings with South Africa which were inconsistent with the Council's declaration in the same resolution that the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia was illegal and that consequently all acts taken by that Government concerning Namibia after the termination of the Mandate [for South West Africa] were illegal and invalid. The Council also decided to set up an ad hoc sub-committee of the Council to study, in consultation with the Secretary-General, ways and means by which relevant Council resolutions could be effectively implemented in the light of South Africa's refusal to withdraw from Namibia, and to submit its recommendations by 30 April 1970.

The Ad Hoc Sub-Committee, after submitting an interim report on 30 April, submitted, on 7 July, a series of recommendations on political, economic, legal, military and other aspects of the question.

The first of the two resolutions adopted by the Security Council on 29 July was based on the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee; the second sought an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice as to the legal consequences for States of the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia, notwithstanding the Council's resolution of 30 January.

The Chairman of the Special Committee on the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence, in a statement on 11 August, among other things drew attention to the increasing use of armed force by South Africa in the territory; the intensification of racial segregation through the forcible relocation of Africans; and the continuing series of trials of freedom fighters.

The Chairman's statement also drew the Security Council's attention to the dangerous situation prevailing in Namibia and expressed the hope that the Council would take effective steps to end the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and to enable the people of the territory to exercise their fundamental rights.

The United Nations Council for Namibia

submitted on 12 October its fifth report to the General Assembly, in which it stated that the critical situation in Namibia had further deteriorated and the danger of racial war had increased. More effective measures to ensure the removal of South Africa from the territory were called for, and it recommended that the Security Council's attention be drawn to the need for such measures. It also recommended, among other things, that the General Assembly finance from the regular budget of the United Nations a comprehensive educational and training programme for Namibians and establish a United Nations Fund to assist Namibians who suffered persecution.

At its twenty-fifth (1970) session, the General Assembly on 9 December adopted three resolutions on the question.

By the first of these resolutions (2678 (XXV)), the Assembly among other things condemned South Africa for its refusal to withdraw from the territory; called on States to co-operate with the Council for Namibia and act to obtain the withdrawal of South Africa from Namibia; and invited the Security Council to consider effective measures to that end.

By the second resolution (2679(XXV)), the Assembly decided that a comprehensive United Nations Fund for Namibia should be established and asked the Secretary-General to study and report on the matter in 1971; in the meantime, the Secretary-General was authorized to make interim grants from the regular budget to enable existing United Nations programmes to provide greater assistance, as necessary, to Namibians.

The third resolution (2680(XXV)) had to do with the question of petitions concerning Namibia.

Various other resolutions of the Assembly adopted during its 1970 session had a bearing on the question of Namibia, including, among other things, decisions on: the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples; the activities of foreign economic interests impeding implementation of the Declaration; and measures to deal with racial discrimination, apartheid and other violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in southern Africa.

Details about the decisions taken during 1970 by United Nations organs are described in the sections below.

POLITICAL AND RELATED DEVELOPMENTS

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL (28-30 JANUARY 1970)

In a letter dated 26 January 1970 to the President of the Security Council, the representatives of 48 Member States requested an urgent meeting of the Council to examine the failure of the South African Government to comply with the letter and spirit of the Security Council's resolution of 12 August 1969 (269 (1969)), and in particular the paragraph by which the Council recognized the legitimacy of the struggle of the people of Namibia against the illegal presence of South African authorities in the territory.<sup>1</sup> Nine other Member States subsequently joined in the request.

On 28 January, the Security Council met to consider the question and invited, in accordance with his request, the representative of Turkey, who was also President of the United Nations Council for Namibia for that month, to participate without vote in the discussion. The representatives of India and Pakistan were similarly invited.

At the same meeting, the representative of Finland introduced a draft resolution, co-sponsored by Burundi, Nepal, Sierra Leone and Zambia, whereby the Council would among other things:

(1) strongly condemn the refusal of the Government of South Africa to comply with General Assembly and Security Council resolutions concerning Namibia;

(2) declare that the continued presence of the South African authorities in Namibia was illegal and that consequently all acts taken by South Africa on behalf of or concerning Namibia after the termination of the Mandate

[for South West Africa] were illegal and invalid;

(3) declare further that the defiant attitude of South Africa towards the Council's decisions undermined the authority of the United Nations;

(4) consider that the continued occupation of Namibia by South Africa in defiance of the relevant United Nations resolutions and of the United Nations Charter had grave consequences for the rights and interests of the people of Namibia;

(5) call upon all States, particularly those with economic and other interests in Namibia, to refrain—in any dealings with respect to Namibia—from recognizing any right of South Africa to act on behalf of the territory of Namibia;

(6) request the Secretary-General to set up an ad hoc committee of experts, to be appointed in consultation with Security Council members, to study ways and means by which States could effectively carry out the provisions of the preceding paragraph and to submit, not later than 1 June 1970, its recommendations for such effective and appropriate steps as might be taken by the Council to enable the United Nations to discharge its special responsibility towards the people of Namibia;

(7) request all States, as well as the specialized agencies, to give the committee of experts all the information and other assistance it might need;

(8) further request the Secretary-General to give every assistance to the expert committee in the performance of its task; and

(9) decide to resume consideration of the question of Namibia as soon as the recommendations of the expert committee were made available.

Introducing the draft resolution, the Finnish representative said that the proposed ad hoc committee, although it would have a broad mandate, was not intended to become another United Nations organ or to replace or detract from any existing body. The proposed committee would not delay or postpone action on the question of Namibia, as there was a time-limit for the submission of its report. The draft was an interim resolution, he said, designed to help the Security Council make more substantive decisions in the months to come.

The proposal to establish an ad hoc committee was favourably received by all representatives, including those of France and the United Kingdom, who added that they could not, however, support the draft resolution as it stood because it was based on earlier resolutions whose legal framework their Governments had never accepted.

The representative of Zambia expressed support for the draft resolution and suggested that the proposed ad hoc committee should examine, among other things, the possibility of fully or partially applying the relevant provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter<sup>2</sup> against South Africa, and the possibility of setting up a special United Nations fund to which all taxes of foreign economic concerns in Namibia would be paid.

He said that campaigns were current in Europe and the United States to lift the embargo imposed by the United Nations on the sale of arms to South Africa; certain Governments had refused to observe the embargo and had continued to supply military equipment and spare parts to South Africa. South Africa and its Western allies, the Zambian representative asserted, had deliberately exaggerated the threat to peace in the Indian Ocean region as an excuse to build up South Africa's military capability, which would be used not in defence of Western interests but against black Namibians, black South Africans and all the independent African countries which were determined to make the whole of Africa truly independent. Consequently, he said, a situation was being created in which the Western world must, in its own interest, choose between South Africa and the rest of Africa.

The United States representative said that the draft resolution accurately represented and reaffirmed the basic attitude of the United Nations to the problem. The United States did not recognize, or intend to recognize, the claim of South Africa to have a right to act on behalf of the people of Namibia. He hoped that the ad hoc committee would provide a complete and impartial analysis of all the implications of South Africa's presence in Namibia and permit an intelligent judgement as to what other peaceful and practical steps the United Nations might be able to take to discharge its obligations towards the people of Namibia more effectively.

On 29 January, Finland introduced a revised version of the five-power draft resolution so that, among other things, the Security Council would: call upon all States, particularly those which had economic and other interests in Namibia, to refrain from any dealings with the Government of South Africa which were inconsistent with the second operative paragraph of the resolution (by which the Council would declare that the continued presence of the South African authorities in Namibia was illegal and that consequently all acts by South Africa on behalf of or concerning Namibia after the termination of the Mandate were illegal and invalid).

The Council would also, by another revision, decide to establish, in accordance with its provisional rules of procedure, an ad hoc sub-committee of the Council (instead of an ad hoc committee of experts to be set up by the Secretary-General) to study, in consultation with the Secretary-General, ways and means by which the relevant resolutions of the Council, including this resolution, could be effectively implemented in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter in the light of the flagrant refusal of South Africa to withdraw from Namibia, and to submit its recommendations by 30 April 1970. The Council would request all States, as well as the specialized agencies and other relevant United Nations organs, to give the sub-committee all the information and other assistance that it might require in pursuance of the resolution.

The representative of Turkey, President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, said that the Council for Namibia was interested in any steps that might be taken to expedite solution of the situation in Namibia. He hoped that the ad hoc group envisaged in the draft resolution would work as quickly as possible and submit recommendations that would complement the work of the Council for Namibia and effectively assist the Security Council to discharge its responsibilities towards Namibia.

The USSR representative said that press reports indicated that the United Kingdom and other Western countries were not respecting the arms embargo against South Africa. In order to exert true pressure on South Africa, it was essential that the Security Council demand of all States complete cessation of all economic, trade, transport and other links with that Government and apply the measures provided for in Article 41 of the Charter.<sup>3</sup>

The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States, in reply, insisted that their Governments were faithfully living up to the arms embargo and would continue to do so.

The representative of Poland said that, in his view, Articles 41 and 42<sup>4</sup> were applicable to the present situation in Namibia. The Council's deliberation should proceed in one direction only—that of reaching prompt decisions on ways to ensure the implementation of its previous resolutions, to make South Africa withdraw from Namibia and to ensure the right of its people to shape their destiny.

The spokesman for the United Kingdom said his Government could not support the draft resolution since it was based on earlier resolutions on which the United Kingdom had abstained. However, the United Kingdom would welcome any study of the legal, economic and other implications of the presence of the South African authorities in Namibia and recommendations for effective and practical steps.

France said that, although successive United Nations resolutions on Namibia had not fully achieved their objective, it was not impossible that new solutions to the problem would come from the work of the proposed ad hoc sub-committee. Although France had never accepted the legal framework in which the draft resolution was formulated and therefore could not support it, France viewed with sympathy the spirit of moderation in which the resolution was couched.

India proposed that the Security Council should, among other things, call on Member States to take effective steps to prevent the flow of arms and other military hardware to South Africa directly or through third countries. All States must take suitable measures to stop investment in Namibia by their nationals or private companies registered under their laws, as long as South Africa continued its illegal occupation of Namibia.

Pakistan believed that the Council should give priority to developing a suitable procedure for keeping under constant review the problem of South Africa's removal from Namibia, so that it would no longer be necessary for the African and Asian Member States to request Council consideration of the matter. The programme of action visualized by Pakistan was, first, for the Council—especially its permanent members—to identify the steps that would be not only feasible but also effective in bringing about compliance by South Africa with Council resolutions; and, second, to arrive at firm conclusions as early as possible with regard to a sequence of such steps.

On 30 January, the revised five-power draft resolution was adopted by a vote of 13 in favour to 0 against, with 2 abstentions (France and the United Kingdom), as resolution 276 (1970). (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The President of the Security Council announced, after consultations, that the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee would be composed of all members of the Council.

INTERIM REPORT OF

Ad Hoc SUB-COMMITTEE

On 30 April, the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee, established in pursuance of the Security Council's resolution of 30 January (276(1970)), reported that it had undertaken preliminary consideration of various questions concerning the implementation of the relevant Council resolutions concerning Namibia but was not yet in a position to formulate specific recommendations by 30 April, as provided for in the resolution. The Sub-Committee intended to continue its work in accordance with its terms of reference and hoped to submit its report by the end of June 1970.

In a note dated 15 May, the President of the Security Council stated that all members of the Council had taken note of the interim report of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee and had agreed that the Sub-Committee should continue its work in accordance with its terms of reference in order to be in a position to formulate its recommendations to the Council by the end of June 1970.

The Ad Hoc Sub-Committee's report, submitted on 7 July 1970, described the Sub-Committee's activities at 17 meetings held between 4 February and 7 July, at which it had studied ways and means by which the relevant Security Council resolutions could be effectively implemented, had heard petitioners and had addressed requests for information relevant to its work to all Member States, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies concerned with the Namibian question. Annexed to the report were the substantive parts of replies received from 51 Member States and from United Nations bodies which the Sub-Committee had addressed. An addendum to the report issued on 23 September contained the substantive parts of two additional replies from Member States.

The Sub-Committee considered that it could best serve the Security Council by drawing attention to such proposals as would be likely to command sufficiently broad support to ensure effective implementation. It therefore decided that its report would contain any conclusions on which it had been able to reach agreement, while also reflecting the views of members on questions where such unanimity had not been reached. Accordingly, the report contained a series of recommendations on political, economic, legal, military and other aspects of the question of Namibia, together with the texts of reservations thereon expressed by France, Poland, Syria, the USSR and the United Kingdom.

The Sub-Committee suggested that the Security Council might request it to study further effective ways and means of implementing the relevant Council resolutions, in accordance with the appropriate Charter provisions, in the light of South Africa's flagrant refusal to withdraw from Namibia.

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL (29 JULY 1970)

In a letter dated 22 July 1970, Burundi, Finland, Nepal, Sierra Leone and Zambia requested an early meeting of the Security Council to consider the report of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee.

The Security Council met on 29 July to consider the report and two draft resolutions on the question of Namibia, the first sponsored by Burundi, Finland, Nepal, Sierra Leone and Zambia, and the second by Finland.

By the preambular part of the five-power draft, the Security Council would, among other things, express deep concern that the enforcement of South African laws and juridical procedures in Namibian territory had continued in violation of the international status of that territory. By the operative parts of the text, the Council would:

(1) request all States to refrain from diplomatic, consular or other relations with South Africa which implied recognition of its authority over the territory of Namibia;

(2) call upon all States maintaining diplomatic or consular relations with South Africa to issue a formal declaration to the Government of South Africa to the effect that they did not recognize its authority over Namibia and that they considered its continued presence in Namibia illegal;

(3) call upon all States maintaining such relations to terminate existing diplomatic and consular representation as far as they extended to Namibia and to withdraw any diplomatic or consular mission or representative residing in the territory;

(4) call upon all States to ensure that companies and other commercial and industrial enterprises owned by, or under direct control of, the State cease all dealings in Namibia;

(5) call upon all States to withhold from their nationals or national companies not under direct government control, government loans, credit guarantees and other forms of financial support that would be used to facilitate trade or commerce with Namibia;

(6) call upon all States to ensure that State-controlled companies ceased all further investment activities in Namibia;

(7) call upon all States to discourage their nationals or national companies not under direct governmental control from investing or obtaining concessions in Namibia, and to this end withhold protection of such investment against claims of a future lawful government of Namibia;

(8) ask all States to undertake without delay a detailed study and review of the provisions of all bilateral treaties between themselves and South Africa which applied to Namibia;

(9) ask the Secretary-General to undertake without delay a detailed study and review of all multilateral treaties to which South Africa was a party, and which might be considered applicable to Namibia;

(10) ask the United Nations Council for Namibia to make available to the Security Council the results of its study and proposals on the issuance of passports and visas for Namibians, and to undertake a study and make proposals with regard to special passport and visa regulations to be adopted by States concerning travel of their citizens to Namibia;

(11) call upon all States to discourage the promotion of tourism and emigration to Namibia;

(12) ask the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth (1970) session to set up a United Nations Fund for Namibia to provide assistance to Namibians who had suffered from persecution and to finance a comprehensive education and training programme for Namibians with particular regard to their future administrative responsibilities in the territory;

(13) ask all States to report to the Secretary-General on measures they had taken to give effect to the provisions set forth in the resolution;

(14) decide to re-establish the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee on Namibia and ask it to study further effective recommendations on ways and means by which the relevant Security Council resolutions could be effectively implemented;

(15) ask the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee to study the replies submitted by Governments to the Secretary-General and to report on them to the Council;

(16) ask the Secretary-General to give every assistance to the Sub-Committee in the performance of its tasks; and

(17) decide to remain actively seized of the matter.

By the operative parts of the draft resolution sponsored by Finland, the Security Council would:

(1) decide to submit, in accordance with

Article 96(1) of the Charter<sup>5</sup> the following question to the International Court of Justice with the request for an advisory opinion to be transmitted to the Council at an early date: "What are the legal consequences for States of the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia notwithstanding Security Council resolution 276(1970)?"<sup>6</sup>; and

(2) ask the Secretary-General to transmit this resolution to the International Court of Justice, accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

The representative of Burundi introduced the five-power draft resolution which, he said, was based on the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee. He went on to state that the military expansion of South Africa had reached enormous proportions and was a certain source of a future world conflagration. The fate of Namibians could not be discussed without taking into account the military machinery assembled by South Africa to frustrate the self-determination of Africans in the territory.

The main targets of South Africa's massive war preparations were the indigenous people of the area; South Africa and Namibia had been turned into a base for aggression against the liberation movements in southern and central Africa and against the independent African States within immediate reach of South Africa. Surely, he said, South Africa's trading partners could not fail to recognize its aggressive objectives.

The representative of Finland, introducing his draft resolution, said that an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice would assist considerably in defining and spelling out in legal terms the implications for States of South Africa's continued illegal presence in Namibia. It would also be of value in defining more precisely the rights of Namibians either in Namibia or abroad. It was important, he stressed, to expose the false front of legality that South African authorities attempted to present to the world. An advisory opinion by the International Court could underline that South Africa had, by its conduct, forfeited its mandate.

The two draft resolutions together, in Finland's view, constituted a programme of action for the United Nations in its efforts to help the Namibian people achieve self-determination and independence.

Most Council members supported the two draft resolutions, although some expressed reservations.

The representative of Sierra Leone, a co-sponsor of the five-power draft, urged members to support the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee, which would contribute towards a solution of the problem. He also considered that the Council should not be discouraged from proceeding further on the matter to the International Court of Justice. He felt, too, that countries that had participated in the economic development of the territory could bring pressure to bear on South Africa to change its policy and also could divert some of the earnings of the companies involved into funds for the development and training of Namibians.

Nepal, another co-sponsor of the five-power draft, said that the report of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee had been weakened by reservations and the need to reduce its conclusions to the lowest common denominator. Nevertheless, it represented some progress and the five-power draft was based on its recommendations and was designed to secure the widest possible support. Certain provisions of the draft relating to commercial and industrial enterprises in Namibia were based on steps taken recently by the United States Government and he urged other States, particularly South Africa's main trading partners, to take similar steps. He said he would support the Finnish draft resolution on the understanding that the International Court of Justice would limit its opinion strictly to the question presented and not undertake a review of the legality or validity of United Nations resolutions on Namibia.

Syria supported both draft resolutions: the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee's recommendations were designed to put material and moral pressure on the South African Government and the five-power draft resolution gave effect to them; the Finnish draft resolution was a valuable device for determining the legal means available to States to oppose South Africa's occupation of Namibia.

Zambia asserted, among other things, that the time had now come for the Security Council to make a direct appeal to all trade unions throughout the world to refuse to handle shipments of arms of all types to South Africa.

Colombia, in supporting the two draft resolutions, stressed the need for close co-operation between the United Nations Council for Namibia and the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee.

Spain supported the five-power draft resolution, with certain reservations, and also supported the request for an advisory opinion in the hope that it would provide a definition of the international legal consequences of failure to comply with resolutions of a United Nations body and thus help achieve United Nations objectives in Namibia.

The USSR representative maintained that Namibia could achieve its independence only after South Africa had withdrawn its administration and armed forces from the territory and only after the Western powers had terminated their assistance to South Africa. He supported the five-power draft resolution with some reservations. The USSR, he said, supported the aims of the proposed fund for Namibia but thought that it should be supported by special taxes on foreign companies operating in African countries, including Namibia and South Africa. The Finnish draft resolution, he felt, would merely delay settlement of the question by creating the illusion that legal measures could replace political action.

The Polish representative questioned the effectiveness of measures limited to Namibia and held that the realization of United Nations objectives with respect to Namibia depended on effective measures taken against South Africa—the occupier of the territory.

The Security Council then adopted—on 29 July—the five-power draft resolution, by 13 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (France and the United Kingdom), as resolution 283(1970).

In a separate vote requested by France, the last part of the first operative paragraph of the Finnish draft resolution, referring to the Council's resolution of 30 January 1970 (276 (1970)), was retained by a vote of 11 to 0, with 4 abstentions (France, Poland, USSR, United Kingdom). The Finnish draft resolution was then adopted by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (Poland, USSR and United Kingdom), as resolution 284(1970).

(For texts of these resolutions, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In explanation of vote, the United States representative said his Government had recently announced measures that sought to discourage investment by its citizens in Namibia. United States support for the five-power draft resolution did not, however, constitute an undertaking to contribute to a special fund for Namibia. The United States, he said, would continue its efforts to persuade South Africa to acknowledge United Nations responsibility for Namibia.

The French representative said his Government had consistently opposed the extension of a discriminatory and repressive policy to a territory with international status. For that reason, it had opposed any move by South Africa to divide Namibia or incorporate it in the Republic of South Africa. At the same time, it was doubtful that the United Nations had greater powers than had the League of Nations, which did not seem to have been empowered to deprive a country of its Mandate. In view of such doubts, France had supported the Finnish draft resolution because it provided an opportunity for the International Court of Justice to clarify the legality of the revocation of the Mandate.

The United Kingdom representative said his Government's basic position on both the legal and political aspects of the question had in no way changed. While believing that the people of the territory had an undisputed right to self-determination, the United Kingdom could hardly support the five-power draft resolution, whose basis lay in earlier resolutions on which the United Kingdom had abstained. His Government had abstained on the Finnish draft resolution because it believed that the proposed submission to the International Court of Justice was based on certain assumptions which should themselves be examined by the Court.

SUBSEQUENT COMMUNICATIONS

By a letter dated 11 August 1970, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Chairman of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration of the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples<sup>6</sup> transmitted the text of a statement drawing the Council's attention to the dangerous situation prevailing in Namibia and expressing the hope that in the light of its resolution 283(1970), of 29 July, the Council would take effective steps to achieve the objective of ending the illegal occupation of Namibia by South Africa and to enable the people of that territory to exercise their fundamental rights. (See below.)

On 18 August, the President of the Security Council issued a note stating that, after consultations among members of the Council, it had been agreed that the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee on Namibia, re-established by the Council's resolution 283(1970), should be composed of all members of the Security Council.

In a letter dated 3 November, the President of the United Nations Council for Namibia, in accordance with the request contained in Council resolution 283(1970), drew the Security Council's attention to the fifth report of the United Nations Council for Namibia to the General Assembly containing, inter alia, an account of the action taken by the Council for Namibia with regard to the issuance of travel documents to Namibians; he further informed the Security Council that the Council for Namibia proposed to undertake a study of the question of special passport and visa regulations to be adopted by States concerning the travel of their citizens to Namibia and to report to the Security Council in due course. (See below.)

DECISIONS OF COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS AND ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its meetings in February and March 1970, the Commission on Human Rights took certain decisions having a bearing on the question of Namibia.

On 18 March, the Commission approved the text of a resolution on the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and apartheid, in all countries, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories. This resolution, which included specific provisions concerning Namibia, was proposed for adoption by the Economic and Social Council; it set forth the text of a resolution which the Council would ask the General Assembly to adopt.

On 27 May 1970, in adopting resolution 1501 (XLVIII), the Economic and Social Council asked the General Assembly to adopt the above-mentioned resolution. (See below for summary of General Assembly action, and pp. 513-21 for further details.)

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1509(XLVIII) concerning allegations of infringements of trade union rights, in which, among other things, it condemned the continuing suppression of trade union rights in southern Africa and called for an immediate end to that suppression and the immediate and unconditional release of all persons imprisoned for their trade union activities. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts was authorized to investigate, among other things, the conditions of workers from Mozambique and Angola who were or had been employed in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia. (For details, see pp. 564-65, and for text of resolution 1509(XLVIII), see p. 574.)

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

At meetings held in New York from May to September 1970, the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples resumed its consideration of the question of Namibia. It had before it written petitions from: John A. F. Ennals, Director-General, United Nations Association of Great Britain and Northern Ireland; the Reverend James A. Trimble; and the International Association of Democratic Lawyers.

The petitioners stated that, in defiance of United Nations resolutions and the United Nations Charter, the South African Government still refused to recognize the right of the

Namibian people to self-determination and independence, had invoked the so-called "180 days" act, under which anyone displeasing to the Government could be imprisoned for six months, and had continued with the establishment of Bantustans [the so-called homelands] in the territory.

The Special Committee also had before it the report of its Ad Hoc Group—established on 21 April 1970—that visited Africa during May and June for the purpose of establishing contact with representatives of national liberation movements from colonial territories in Africa and preparing an analytical study in connexion with the suggested programme of action called for by the General Assembly in its resolution of 4 December 1969<sup>7</sup> relating to the tenth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

The Ad Hoc Group's report included, among other things, the views expressed by the following representatives of national liberation movements concerned with Namibia: Ewald Katjivena, P. Katjavivi, Andrew Shipanga and Ban Amathila of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO); J. Makatini, Alfred Nzo and Duma Nokwe of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANC); P. K. Leballo and T. M. Ntantala of the Pan Africanist Congress (PAC); and Wycliffe M. Tsotsi of the Unity Movement of South Africa (UM-SA).

The petitioners said they felt a sense of deep frustration with United Nations efforts thus far with regard to colonial problems in Africa. They stated that it was on account of the intransigence of certain powers that United Nations resolutions had not been implemented, and were unanimous in their criticism of foreign economic investments in Namibia. Several big companies operating in the region were, they said, profiting from the misery of the Namibian people by taking advantage of the discriminatory labour conditions in the territory, and at the same time providing revenues to the South African Government.

On 18 September 1970, the Special Committee decided to recommend to the General Assembly the adoption of a resolution on the petitions on Namibia examined by the Committee in 1970 (See below, p. 747.)

On 11 August 1970, at the request of the Special Committee, its Chairman made a statement expressing the Committee's position with regard to the question of Namibia. In the statement, the Special Committee noted that, in open defiance of numerous resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, the South African Government had not only refused to withdraw from the territory but had persisted in the application of the policies of apartheid and other measures aimed at destroying the unity and territorial integrity of Namibia and at consolidating South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia.

In particular, the Special Committee drew attention to: the increasing use of armed force by South Africa in the territory; the persistent application to the territory of measures under the so-called Development of Self-Government for Native Nations in South West Africa Act, 1968, and the South West Africa Affairs Act, 1969; the intensification of racial segregation through the forcible relocation of Africans; and the continuing series of trials of freedom fighters.

The Special Committee again called on all States to co-operate fully with the United Nations in finding an early solution to the situation in Namibia, reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of the Namibian people to attain freedom and independence and expressed the hope that the Security Council would take effective steps to end the illegal occupation of the territory by South Africa and to ensure the Namibian people enjoyment of their fundamental rights.

REPORT OF UNITED NATIONS COUNCIL FOR NAMIBIA

In its fifth report to the General Assembly, the United Nations Council for Namibia gave an account of its activities during the period from 25 October 1969 to 12 October 1970 and described the progress it had made towards discharging the tasks entrusted to it by the General Assembly. These related, among other things, to the issuance of travel documents for Namibians, the establishment of a co-ordinated emergency programme of financial and technical assistance, the organization of an educational and training programme for Namibians, and to the review of laws and practices established in the territory by the South African Government contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter.

The Council for Namibia reported that a mission it had sent to Africa in July 1970 had witnessed the signing of agreements by the Governments of Uganda and Zambia concerning the issuance of travel documents for Namibians and had pursued negotiations for similar agreements with the Governments of Botswana, Ethiopia, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania. The mission also consulted with Namibian representatives and representatives of the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

In its conclusions, the Council stated that during the year under review South Africa's continued defiance of the United Nations with regard to Namibia had assumed new and disquieting dimensions. The situation had further deteriorated, and the danger of racial war, with all its implications for international peace and security, had increased.

The Council remained convinced that the critical situation in Namibia called for more effective measures to ensure the removal of South Africa from the territory, and it recommended that the General Assembly draw the attention of the Security Council to the need for such measures, including those provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter.

The Council for Namibia further recommended that the General Assembly: call on all States, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to lend full support to the implementation of the two resolutions on Namibia adopted by the Security Council in 1970; take appropriate steps at meetings of the specialized agencies to obtain the suspension of all rights enjoyed by South Africa; and reaffirm solidarity with the people of Namibia and provide them with moral and material assistance.

It was also recommended by the Council for Namibia that the General Assembly again call on South Africa to respect the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War in dealing with the Namibian freedom fighters. The Assembly should endorse the action taken by the Council for Namibia concerning the issuance of travel and identity documents, and appeal to all States which had not already done so to communicate to the Secretary-General their willingness to recognize and accept such documents.

The General Assembly was also asked by the Council to finance a comprehensive educational and training programme for Namibians with particular reference to their future administrative responsibility for the territory, and establish a United Nations Fund for Namibia to assist Namibians who had suffered from persecution.

GENERAL ASPECTS

At its twenty-fifth session, in 1970, the General Assembly referred the question of Namibia to its Fourth Committee for consideration. The Committee, which discussed the question at meetings held between 5 October and 27 November 1970, had before it the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia.

During its consideration of the question, the Fourth Committee heard statements by the following five petitioners: George M. Houser of the American Committee on Africa; Mburumba Kerima and Veiue N. Mbaeva of the South West Africa National United Front (SWANUF); Sam Nujoma of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO); and the Reverend Michael Scott of the International League for the Rights of Man.

The representative of SWAPO said that no dialogue with South Africa could alleviate the suffering of the African inhabitants of Namibia; the United Nations must decide whether to remain passive or to discharge its responsibilities towards Namibia. Specifically, he proposed that the United Nations enhance the administrative authority of the Council for Namibia by appointing a permanent commissioner to initiate new and practical plans for fulfilling the Council's mandate of establishing immediately a United Nations administrative presence in Namibia. The Council for Namibia should initiate a special educational programme, to be funded directly from the United Nations budget. The Council should also work out a specific procedure for levying taxes on all foreign companies operating in Namibia, and sponsor an international conference on Namibia with a view to promoting support for the Namibian people's legitimate struggle. Effective measures should be taken to secure the immediate and unconditional release of all Namibian political prisoners and to ensure that SWAPO freedom fighters captured in the heroic armed resistance to the South African colonial occupation were treated as prisoners of war in accordance with the Geneva Convention of 1949. Finally, all States should sever diplomatic, economic, military and other ties with South Africa.

The Reverend Mr. Scott maintained that no progress was being made on the Namibian question because the great powers did not consider it important; he particularly singled out the United Kingdom, which, he said, was abetting South Africa in its policies. The great and the powerful were silent about the misdeeds committed in their names, he added, and about the travesties of law directed against justice and civilization in Africa. The petitioner put forward a number of proposals similar to those of SWAPO.

The representative of the American Committee on Africa stated that his organization had engaged in research and public education regarding the extent of United States public and private involvement in support of the southern African regimes. The Committee had just published two special issues of the journal Africa Today, he added, and had recently protested against the Nixon administration's "shift in policy" to allow the licensing of the sale of light aircraft to South Africa. A campaign to get foreign economic interests out of minority-ruled southern Africa could have great impact, he suggested, and he urged that specific visible and limited targets for action be chosen. Possible targets, he said, included Barclay's Bank, the Cabora Bassa project (in Mozambique), the air service to and from South Africa and the Holiday Inns in South Africa.

The representatives of SWANUF emphasized the privations that were forced upon the Namibian people. They asked for United Nations support for their organization, and called for a United Nations study of the activities of the Federal Republic of Germany in Namibia.

The majority of Members participating in the debate in the Fourth Committee condemned the South African Government for its persistent refusal to comply with the numerous resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, in particular the Council's resolution of 12 August 1969<sup>8</sup> calling on South Africa to withdraw its administration from Namibia immediately. They further condemned South Africa for intensifying its discriminatory and repressive measures aimed at destroying the unity and territorial integrity of Namibia mainly through the creation of separate racial "homelands" or Bantustans, the transfer of governmental powers to South Africa and the expansion of military operations against the liberation movements in the territory.

Many Members stressed the exceptional nature of the Namibian problem, that is, the length of time it had been under consideration by the United Nations, and the fact, emphasized by Sweden, that South Africa had not even lived up to its responsibilities under the League of Nations Mandate. Many speakers also criticized the lack of interest in the question by certain powers with economic interests in Namibia, and pointed to the failure of resolutions that had called on States to reduce their economic links with South Africa.

Cyprus welcomed the current role of the International Court of Justice in the matter, while Canada and Iran emphasized the importance of the Security Council in finding a solution; Yemen said that South Africa, by its conduct in Namibia, had disqualified itself as a Member of the United Nations. Yemen was joined in this view by Sudan and Syria, both of which called for the suspension of South Africa from the United Nations. Bulgaria

Senegal and the Ukrainian SSR stressed the "unholy alliance" of South Africa, Portugal and Southern Rhodesia which was developing in southern Africa; the USSR and others linked this alliance to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the Western powers.

Cuba pointed to the fact that, despite United Nations actions, the economy of Namibia was expanding, and numerous new concessions had been granted to foreign companies. Albania said it was cynical for the "imperialist powers and modern revisionists" to urge Africans to achieve their liberation by listening to speeches and appeals. The People's Republic of the Congo added that ineffective speeches and resolutions would only serve to discredit the United Nations.

Opinion was divided as to what action should be taken to solve the problem of Namibia. The Netherlands said that the isolation of South Africa served simply to increase the rigidity of that country's policies; it called for the renunciation of force, and the search for a peaceful settlement. Algeria stressed the need to strengthen the liberation movement. In Guinea's view, there should be recourse to armed force if previous United Nations resolutions were not strictly complied with. Hungary and Romania also supported the use of force; Hungary emphasized the special character of the struggle—namely, that it was not only against a metropolitan country but also against a group of racist settlers. Senegal said that armed force was the only solution; Yugoslavia, after welcoming the decision of the United States to discourage investment by its companies in Namibia, stated that the situation justified the use of armed force.

The USSR deplored the involvement in Namibia of foreign monopolies and members of NATO, the quantity of foreign investment in Namibia, the proposed sale of arms by the United Kingdom to South Africa and the duplicity of the Western powers. The problem, it said, would be solved only by the victory of the national liberation movements. Liberia called for unity among those movements.

On 16 November 1970, the Fourth Committee, by a roll-call vote of 90 to 5, with 14 abstentions, approved a draft resolution dealing with general aspects of the question of Namibia, which was eventually sponsored by the following 33 Member States: Afghanistan, Burma, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dahomey, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Jamaica, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Libya, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, the Philippines, Rwanda, Singapore, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The General Assembly adopted the text on 9 December by a roll-call vote of 95 to 5, with 14 abstentions, as its resolution 2678 (XXV).

By the operative paragraphs of this text, the General Assembly:

(1) reaffirmed the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence in conformity with the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960,<sup>9</sup> and the legitimacy of their struggle against foreign occupation;

(2) recommended the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia to all States and to the Assembly's subsidiary organs and other competent organs of the United Nations, as well as to the specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned, for appropriate action in conformity with relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

(3) condemned South Africa for its persistent refusal to comply with the decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly and to withdraw from the territory;

(4) further condemned South Africa for the extension to the territory of the internationally condemned policies of apartheid, and for its policies aimed at destroying the unity of the people and the territorial integrity of Namibia through the creation of the so-called separate homelands;

(5) condemned the support given to South Africa in the pursuit of its repressive policies in Namibia by the allies of South Africa and, in particular, by its major trading partners and financial, economic and other interests operating in the territory;

(6) called upon the Governments concerned to cease immediately any assistance to, and co-operation with, South Africa;

(7) invited the Security Council to consider taking effective measures, including those provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter, in view of the continued refusal by South Africa to comply with the Council's resolutions of 20 March 1969<sup>10</sup> and 12 August 1969;<sup>11</sup>

(8) called upon all States, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to lend their full support to the Council in the application and implementation of all measures which the Council had decided or might decide upon to obtain the withdrawal of South Africa from the territory;

(9) appealed to all States to take appropriate steps, through action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they were members, with a view to discontinuing any collaboration with South Africa;

(10) reaffirmed its solidarity with the people of Namibia in their legitimate struggle against foreign occupation and called upon all States, in consultation with OAU, to provide increased moral and material assistance to the Namibian people in their struggle;

(11) called again on South Africa to treat the Namibian people, captured during their struggle for freedom, as prisoners of war in accordance with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, and to comply with the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War;

(12) endorsed the measures taken by the Council for Namibia with a view to the issuance of identity certificates and travel documents to Namibians, and appealed to all States which had not already done so to communicate to the Secretary-General their willingness to recognize and accept such documents for purposes of travel to their countries;

(13) requested the Council for Namibia to continue to perform the functions entrusted to it in the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, including consultation—in Africa or at United Nations Headquarters—with the representatives of the Namibian people and of OAU;

(14) requested the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary assistance and facilities to the Council for Namibia for the discharge of its duties and functions; and

(15) called upon all States to co-operate fully with the Council for Namibia in its efforts to discharge its responsibilities.

UNITED NATIONS FUND FOR NAMIBIA

On 9 December 1970, the General Assembly—in resolution 2679(XXV)—decided to establish a comprehensive United Nations Fund for Namibia. It did so after having considered the request made by the Security Council on 29 July (see above) that such a fund be established to provide assistance to Namibians who had suffered from persecution and to finance a comprehensive educational and training programme for Namibians, with particular regard to their future administrative responsibilities. The Assembly also took into account the assistance currently provided to Namibians from United Nations agencies and funds.

By the operative paragraphs of this text, the Assembly:

(1) decided that a comprehensive United Nations Fund for Namibia would be established;

(2) requested the Secretary-General to make a detailed study and report to the Assembly in 1971 on the development, planning, execution and administration of a comprehensive programme of assistance to Namibians in various fields;

(3) further requested the Secretary-General to take into account the observations made during the current session of the Assembly with regard to the establishment of such a programme;

(4) invited the specialized agencies, the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa, the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee established in pursuance of Security Council resolution 276(1970) of 30 January 1970 (see above), the United Nations

Council for Namibia, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the Organization of African Unity to provide advice and assistance as might be required by the Secretary-General in preparing the study;

(5) decided that, in anticipation of the Secretary-General's report on the matter, a decision on the extent of the financial implications of the programme should be deferred to the twenty-sixth (1971) session of the Assembly; and

(6) authorized the Secretary-General, in the meantime, in consultation with the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, the Chairman of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to make interim grants from the regular budget of the United Nations for 1971, not exceeding a total amount of $50,000 over and above the assistance currently provided, in order to enable the existing United Nations programmes to provide greater assistance, as necessary, to Namibians.

The Assembly adopted the text by a recorded vote of 104 to 2, with 8 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee, which had approved it on 18 November by a roll-call vote of 101 to 2, with 7 abstentions. The text was proposed by Burundi, Finland, Nepal, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Singapore and Zambia and revised by them during the discussion.

Introducing the draft text in the Fourth Committee, the representative of Finland said the United Nations now had the "sacred" trust of preparing the territory for independence, which meant developing among the people a feeling of nationhood and national responsibility. In Finland's view, a United Nations Fund for Namibia should serve to finance: (1) refugee relief for all Namibians; (2) legal and other assistance to victims of persecution; (3) relief for the families of prisoners and other detainees; (4) the education and training of refugees in farming and other related occupations; (5) primary and secondary education for young Namibians and subsequent education at the university level; and (6) the setting up of a Namibian institute in some African country, possibly Zambia, if that Government agreed.

PETITIONS

On 9 December 1970, the General Assembly adopted without objection a resolution relating to petitions concerning Namibia, submitted by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

By this text, the Assembly noted that the matters raised in the petitions had been taken into consideration by the Special Committee and the Council for Namibia, and drew the attention of the petitioners to the relevant reports concerning the territory and to the resolutions on the question of Namibia adopted by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session.

The General Assembly adopted this text as resolution 2680(XXV), on the recommendation of the Fourth Committee, which had approved the text without objection on 16 November.

OTHER GENERAL ASSEMBLY DECISIONS

At its twenty-fifth session in 1970, the General Assembly took a number of decisions that bore upon general and specific aspects of the question of Namibia. These are described briefly below.

PROGRAMME OF ACTION FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION ON GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

On the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, the General Assembly on 12 October 1970 adopted a programme of action to assist in the full implementation of that Declaration. The programme included the following provisions, among others:

Member States would do their utmost to promote effective measures for the full implementation of the Declaration in all Trust, non-self-governing and other colonial territories, large and small, including the adoption by the Security Council of effective measures against Governments and regimes engaging in any form of repression of colonial peoples, which would seriously impede the maintenance of international peace and security.

Member States would render all necessary moral and material assistance to the peoples of colonial territories in their struggle to attain freedom and independence.

The General Assembly drew the Security Council's attention to the need to continue to give special attention to the problems of southern Africa by adopting measures to ensure the full implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 (containing the Declaration on granting independence) and the Council's own resolutions, and, in particular, among other things, to give urgent consideration, with a view to promoting the speedy elimination of colonialism, to the question of imposing fully and unconditionally, under international supervision, an embargo on arms of all kinds to South Africa and the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia.

Other provisions were that Member States would also intensify their efforts to oppose collaboration between the regimes of South Africa and Portugal and the illegal racist regime of Southern Rhodesia for the preservation of colonialism in southern Africa and to end the political, military, economic, and other forms of aid received by these régimes, which enabled them to persist in policies of colonial domination.

Further, Member States would wage a vigorous and sustained campaign against activities and practices of foreign economic and financial and other interests operating in colonial territories for the benefit and on behalf of colonial powers and their allies, as these constituted a major obstacle to the achievement of the goals embodied in the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960. Member States would consider the adoption of necessary steps to have their nationals and companies under their jurisdiction discontinue such activities and practices; these steps should also aim at preventing the systematic influx of foreign immigrants into colonial territories, which disrupted the integrity and social, political and cultural unity of the peoples under colonial domination.

By the terms of the programme, Member States would also carry out a sustained and vigorous campaign against all military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration. All freedom fighters under detention would be treated in accordance with the relevant provisions of the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War. Representatives of liberation movements would be invited, whenever necessary, by the United Nations and other international organizations within the United Nations system to participate in an appropriate capacity in the proceedings of those organs relating to their countries. Efforts were to be intensified to provide increased educational opportunities for the inhabitants of non-self-governing territories and all States were called upon to render greater assistance in this field, both individually through programmes in the countries concerned and collectively by contributions through the United Nations.

(For further details about the programme of action, see pp. 689-93. For text of resolution 2621 (XXV), see pp. 706-8.)

WORK OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON IMPLEMENTATION OF DECLARATION ON GRANTING OF INDEPENDENCE

Another decision relating to the work of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples was set out in resolution 2708 (XXV), adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1970.

By this, the Assembly, among other things, asked all States, as well as the specialized agencies and international institutions, to withhold assistance of any kind from Portugal, South Africa and the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia until they renounced their policy of colonial domination and racial discrimination. The Assembly reiterated its declaration that the practice of using mercenaries against national liberation movements in the colonial territories constituted a criminal act, and it called upon all States to take the necessary measures to prevent the recruitment, financing and training of mercenaries in their territory and to prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries.

By this resolution, the Assembly condemned the policies, pursued by certain colonial powers in the territories under their domination, of imposing non-representative regimes and constitutions, strengthening the position of foreign economic and other interests, misleading world public opinion and encouraging the systematic influx of foreign immigrants while evicting, displacing and transferring the indigenous inhabitants to other areas, and it called upon those powers to desist from such policies.

The Special Committee was asked by the Assembly to make concrete suggestions which could assist the Security Council in considering appropriate measures under the Charter with regard to developments in colonial territories which were likely to threaten international peace and security; the Assembly recommended that the Security Council take such suggestions fully into consideration.

The Special Committee was also asked, among other things, to continue to examine the compliance of Member States with the Declaration and with other relevant resolutions on the question of decolonization, particularly those relating to the territories under Portuguese domination and to Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and to report thereon to the Assembly at its 1971 session.

(For further details, see pp. 694-97. For text of resolution 2708 (XXV), see pp. 709-10.)

UNIVERSAL REALIZATION OF RIGHT TO SELF-DETERMINATION

In another decision—on the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence for the effective guarantee of human rights—the General Assembly on 30 November 1970 adopted resolution 2649 (XXV).

Among other things, by this resolution the Assembly: affirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of peoples under colonial and alien domination recognized as being entitled to the right of self-determination to restore to themselves that right by any means at their disposal; recognized the right of such peoples to seek and receive all kinds of moral and material assistance, in accordance with United Nations resolutions and the spirit of the United Nations Charter; and called upon all Governments denying the right of self-determination to recognize and observe that right in accordance with relevant international instruments and the principles and spirit of the Charter.

The Assembly also condemned Governments that denied the right to self-determination of peoples recognized as being entitled to it, especially of the peoples of southern Africa and Palestine.

(For text of resolution 2649 (XXV), see p. 533.)

FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

Following its consideration of the activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on the granting of independence in Southern Rhodesia, Namibia, territories under Portuguese domination and all other territories under colonial domination, the General Assembly adopted resolution 2703 (XXV) on 14 December 1970.

By this text, the Assembly among other things affirmed that foreign economic, financial and other interests operating in colonial territories constituted a major obstacle to political independence as well as to the enjoyment of the natural resources of those territories by the indigenous inhabitants.

The Assembly called upon the administering powers to abolish the discriminatory and unjust system of wages applied to the inhabitants of the territories under their administration and to apply one system of wages to all the inhabitants without any discrimination.

The Assembly also asked the colonial powers and States concerned to take legislative, administrative and other measures in respect of their nationals who owned and operated enterprises in colonial territories—particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese administration—in order to put a stop to their activities which were detrimental to the interests of the inhabitants. All States were asked to take effective measures to stop the supply of funds and other forms of assistance, including military equipment, to colonial regimes that used such assistance to suppress movements of national liberation. Colonial powers and States concerned were also asked to adopt effective measures to prevent new investments, particularly in southern Africa, which ran counter to relevant Assembly resolutions.

ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

By a resolution (2646(XXV)) on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, adopted on 30 November 1970, the General Assembly among other things noted that many States, in flagrant disregard of previous resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, continued to maintain political, commercial, military, economic, social and other relations with South Africa and with the illegal white racist minority regimes in southern Africa.

Reiterating its determination to bring about the complete elimination of racial discrimination, the Assembly reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of all oppressed peoples everywhere, and in particular those of South Africa, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese domination, to obtain racial equality by all possible means, and called for increased and continuing moral and material support to all peoples under colonial and alien domination, struggling for self-determination and the elimination of racial discrimination.

The Assembly condemned the unholy alliance between South Africa, Portugal and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, designed to suppress the struggle of the peoples of southern Africa against racism, apartheid, economic exploitation and colonial domination. It condemned the activities of those States which, by political, economic and military collaboration with the racist regimes of southern Africa, enabled and encouraged those regimes in the enforcement and perpetuation of their racial policies, and it called for the termination of all relations with the racist regimes. (For text of resolution 2646(XXV), see pp. 506-7.)

VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly adopted resolution 2714(XXV) on the question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and segregation in all countries, particularly colonial and other dependent countries and territories. The Assembly acted in adopting the text proposed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 1501 (XLVIII) of 27 May 1970, as recommended by the Human Rights Commission (see above, p.741.)

By this, the Assembly among other things reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of the peoples of southern Africa to oppose the policies of apartheid, racial discrimination and colonialism and to assert their right to self-determination; condemned every practice of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners, detainees and freedom fighters in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination, as well as of persons in police custody in those territories; and reaffirmed that the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, of 30 August 1955, applied to all political prisoners or detainees, in prison or police custody throughout South Africa, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination.

The Assembly went on to reaffirm, among other things, that: in the Caprivi Strip, Namibian villages had been shelled by the occupying South African security forces, and indiscriminate firing had been resorted to in villages that were suspected of harbouring freedom fighters; the system of Bantustans established in South Africa was being gradually extended to the occupied territory of Namibia; and that in the absence of United Nations intervention, South Africa's occupation of Namibia was resulting in ever-increasing hardship to the non-white population, as well as a total suppression of human rights there.

The Assembly also condemned the trial of the eight Namibians under the Terrorism Act, which took place at Windhoek between July and November 1969, and called on South Africa to release immediately those tried under that Act and to desist forthwith from the extension of the Bantustan system into Namibia.

By this text, the Assembly once again called upon the South African Government to terminate its illegal occupation of the territory of Namibia in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions.

(For further details and text of resolution 2714(XXV), see pp. 513-21.)

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY DECLARATION

On 24 October 1970, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations in which, among other things, Member States acclaimed the role of the United Nations in the past 25 years in the process of the liberation of peoples of colonial, Trust and other non-self-governing territories. The number of Member States had been greatly increased and colonial empires had virtually disappeared.

Despite these achievements, the Declaration continued, many territories and peoples continued to be denied their rights to self-determination and independence—particularly in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia, Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau)—in deliberate and deplorable defiance of the United Nations and world public opinion by certain recalcitrant States and by the illegal regime of Southern Rhodesia.

Members reaffirmed in the Declaration the inalienable right of all colonial peoples to self-determination, freedom and independence, and condemned all actions which deprived any people of these rights. In recognizing the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples for their freedom by all appropriate means at their disposal, Members called upon all Governments to comply in this respect with the provisions of the United Nations Charter taking into account the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. It was re-emphasized that those countries and peoples were entitled, in their just struggle, to seek and to receive all necessary moral and material help in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

The General Assembly adopted the Declaration as its resolution 2627 (XXV). (For text, see pp. 116-17.)

HUMAN RIGHTS

IN ARMED CONFLICTS

On the question of respect for human rights in armed conflicts, the General Assembly on 9 December 1970 adopted resolution 2674 (XXV) by which, among other things, it affirmed that the participants in resistance movements and the freedom fighters in southern Africa and territories under colonial and alien domination and foreign occupation, struggling for their liberation and self-determination, should be treated, in case of their arrest, as prisoners of war in accordance with the principles of the Hague Convention of 1907 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949. (See pp. 538-39 for text of resolution 2674(XXV).)

CO-OPERATION OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

In connexion with the question of the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples by the specialized agencies and the international institutions associated with the United Nations, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (2704(XXV)) on 14 December 1970. Among other things, it reiterated its urgent appeal to these bodies to render all possible moral and material assistance to the peoples struggling for their liberation from colonial rule and to work out, with the active co-operation of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) and, through it, of the national liberation movements, concrete programmes for assisting the peoples of Southern Rhodesia, Namibia and the territories under Portuguese administration, including in particular the populations in the liberated areas of those territories.

The Assembly also urged the specialized agencies and the other organizations within the United Nations system to discontinue all collaboration with Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council.

(See pp. 711-13 for text of resolution 2704 (XXV).)

UNITED NATIONS TRUST FUND FOR SOUTH AFRICA

Among a series of decisions taken by the General Assembly in 1970 on South Africa's policies of apartheid was one authorizing the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa to decide on grants from the Fund to voluntary organizations engaged in providing relief and assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in Namibia and Southern Rhodesia and to their families, to the extent that additional voluntary contributions were received for this purpose.

The Assembly appealed for generous direct contributions to voluntary organizations engaged in providing relief and assistance to persons persecuted under repressive and discriminatory legislation in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and again appealed to all States, organizations and individuals for generous contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa.

These decisions were contained in the Assembly's resolution 2671 E (XXV), adopted on 8 December. (See pp. 154-56 for details and for text of resolution.)

EDUCATIONAL AND TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR SOUTHERN AFRICA

Under the consolidated United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, established by the General Assembly in 1967, 47 applications from Namibia were received during the period from 1 October 1969 to 31 October 1970. Twenty-five new awards were made and 31 were extended. There were 56 Namibians studying abroad in 10 countries. (For additional information about the Programme, see pp. 705-6. See also above, section on United Nations Fund for Namibia.)

The Security Council,

Reaffirming once more the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to freedom and independence recognized in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Reaffirming Security Council resolutions 264(1969) of 20 March 1969 and 276(1970) of 30 January 1970 in which the Council recognized the decision of the General Assembly to terminate the Mandate for South West Africa and assume direct responsibility for the Territory until its independence and in which the continued presence of the South African authorities in Namibia, as well as all acts taken by that Government on behalf of or concerning Namibia after the termination of the Mandate, were declared illegal and invalid,

Recalling its resolution 269(1969) of 12 August 1969,

Noting with great concern the continued flagrant refusal of the Government of South Africa to comply with the decisions of the Security Council demanding the immediate withdrawal of South Africa from the Territory,

Deeply concerned that the enforcement of South African laws and juridical procedures in the Territory have continued in violation of the international status of the Territory,

Reaffirming its resolution 282(1970) of 23 July 1970 on the arms embargo against the Government of South Africa and the significance of that resolution with regard to the Territory and people of Namibia,

Recalling the decision taken by the Security Council on 30 January 1970 to establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, an Ad Hoc Sub-Committee of the Council to study, in consultation with the Secretary-General, ways and means by which the relevant resolutions of the Council, including resolution 276(1970), could be effectively implemented in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in the light of the flagrant refusal of South Africa to withdraw from Namibia, and to submit its recommendations to the Council,

Having examined the report submitted by the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee and the recommendations contained in that report,

Bearing in mind the special responsibility of the United Nations with regard to the Territory of Namibia and its people,

1. Requests all States to refrain from any relations—diplomatic, consular or otherwise—with South Africa implying recognition of the authority of the Government of South Africa over the Territory of Namibia;

2. Calls upon all States maintaining diplomatic or consular relations with South Africa to issue a formal declaration to the Government of South Africa to the effect that they do not recognize any authority of South Africa with regard to Namibia and that they consider South Africa's continued presence in Namibia illegal;

3. Calls upon all States maintaining such relations to terminate existing diplomatic and consular representation as far as they extend to Namibia, and to withdraw any diplomatic or consular mission or representative residing in the Territory;

4. Calls upon all States to ensure that companies and other commercial and industrial enterprises owned by, or under direct control of, the State cease all dealings with respect to commercial or industrial enterprises or concessions in Namibia;

5. Calls upon all States to withhold from their nationals or companies of their nationality not under direct governmental control, government loans, credit guarantees and other forms of financial support that would be used to facilitate trade or commerce with Namibia;

6. Calls upon all States to ensure that companies and other commercial enterprises owned by, or under direct control of, the State cease all further investment activities, including concessions in Namibia;

7. Calls upon all States to discourage their nationals or companies of their nationality not under direct governmental control from investing or obtaining concessions in Namibia, and to this end to withhold protection of such investment against claims of a future lawful government of Namibia;

8. Requests all States to undertake without delay a detailed study and review of all bilateral treaties between themselves and South Africa in so far as these treaties contain provisions by which they apply to the Territory of Namibia;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to undertake without delay a detailed study and review of all multilateral treaties to which South Africa is a party and which, either by direct reference or on the basis of relevant provisions of international law, might be considered to apply to the Territory of Namibia;

10. Requests the United Nations Council for Namibia to make available to the Security Council the results of its study and proposals with regard to the issuance of passports and visas for Namibians, and to undertake a study and make proposals with regard to special passport and visa regulations to be adopted by States concerning travel of their citizens to Namibia;

11. Calls upon all States to discourage the promotion of tourism and emigration to Namibia;

12. Requests the General Assembly, at its twenty-fifth session, to set up a United Nations fund for Namibia to provide assistance to Namibians who have suffered from persecution and to finance a comprehensive educational and training programme for Namibians, with particular regard to their future administrative responsibilities in the Territory;

13. Requests all States to report to the Secretary-General on measures they have taken in order to give effect to the provisions set forth in the present resolution;

14. Decides to re-establish, in accordance with rule 28 of its provisional rules of procedure, the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee on Namibia and to request the Sub-Committee to study further effective recommendations on ways and means by which the relevant resolutions of the Council can be effectively implemented in accordance with the appropriate provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in the light of the flagrant refusal of South Africa to withdraw from Namibia;

15. Requests the Sub-Committee to study the replies submitted by Governments to the Secretary-General in pursuance of paragraph 13 of the present resolution and to report to the Council as appropriate;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to give every assistance to the Sub-Committee in the performance of its tasks;

17. Decides to remain actively seized of this matter.

RESOLUTION 284(1970), as proposed by Finland.

S/9892, adopted by Council on 29 July 1970, meeting 1550, by 12 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions (Poland, USSR, United Kingdom).

The Security Council,

Reaffirming the special responsibility of the United Nations with regard to the Territory and the people of Namibia,

Recalling its resolution 276(1970) of 30 January 1970 on the question of Namibia,

Taking note of the report and recommendations submitted by the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee established in pursuance of Security Council resolution 276(1970),

Taking further note of the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Sub-Committee on the possibility of requesting an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice,

Considering that an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice would be useful for the Security Council in its further consideration of the question of Namibia and in furtherance of the objectives the Council is seeking,

1. Decides to submit, in accordance with Article 96, paragraph 1, of the Charter of the United Nations, the following question to the International Court of Justice, with the request for an advisory opinion which shall be transmitted to the Security Council at an early date:

"What are the legal consequences for States of the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia, notwithstanding Security Council resolution 276(1970)?"

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the International Court of Justice, in accordance with Article 65 of the Statute of the Court, accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 and 2145(XXI) of 27 October 1966 and subsequent resolutions on the question of Namibia, as well as Security Council resolutions 264(1969) of 20 March 1969, 269(1969) of 12 August 1969 and 283(1970) of 29 July 1970,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of its resolution 2621(XXV) of 12 October 1970 containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Bearing in mind the special responsibility of the United Nations with regard to the Territory of Namibia and its people,

Deeply concerned at the deteriorating situation in Namibia due to the continued illegal presence of South Africa in the Territory in deliberate defiance of the United Nations, a situation which threatens international peace and security,

Gravely concerned that the continued refusal of South Africa to comply with the decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly seriously undermines and encroaches on the authority of the United Nations,

Taking into consideration the fact that South Africa has persistently violated the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and mindful of the obligations of Member States under Article 25 thereof,

Considering that the basic condition for the fulfilment of the responsibilities of the United Nations towards Namibia is the application of effective measures to ensure the removal of South Africa from the Territory,

Noting with appreciation the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the people of Namibia to self-determination and independence in conformity with General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV), and the legitimacy of their struggle against the foreign occupation of the Territory;

2. Recommends the report of the United Nations Council for Namibia to all States and to the subsidiary organs of the General Assembly and other competent organs of the United Nations, as well as to the specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned for appropriate action, acting in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council;

3. Condemns the Government of South Africa for its persistent refusal to comply with the decisions of the Security Council and the General Assembly and to withdraw from the Territory;

4. Further condemns the Government of South Africa for the extension of the internationally condemned policies of apartheid to the Territory, and for its policies aimed at destroying the unity of the people and the territorial integrity of Namibia through the creation of the so-called separate "homelands";

5. Condemns the support given to South Africa in the pursuit of its repressive policies in Namibia by the allies of South Africa and, in particular, by its major trading partners and financial, economic and other interests operating in the Territory;

6. Calls upon the Governments concerned to cease immediately any assistance to, and co-operation with, South Africa;

7. Invites the Security Council to consider taking effective measures, including those provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations, in view of the continued refusal by the Government of South Africa to comply with Council resolutions 264(1969) and 269(1969);

8. Calls upon all States, particularly the permanent members of the Security Council, to lend their full support to the Council in the application and implementation of all measures which the Council has decided or may decide upon to obtain the withdrawal of South Africa from the Territory;

9. Appeals to all States to take appropriate steps, through action in the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system of which they are members, with a view to discontinuing any collaboration with the Government of South Africa;

10. Reaffirms its solidarity with the people of Namibia in their legitimate struggle against foreign occupation and calls upon all States, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, to provide increased moral and material assistance to the Namibian people in their struggle;

11. Calls again upon the Government of South Africa to treat the Namibian people captured during their struggle for freedom as prisoners of war in accordance with the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949, and to comply with the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

12. Endorses the measures taken by the United Nations Council for Namibia with a view to the issuance of identity certificates and travel documents to Namibians, and appeals to all States which have not already done so to communicate to the Secretary-General their willingness to recognize and accept such documents for purposes of travel to their countries;

tives of the Namibian people and of the Organization of African Unity;

15. Calls upon all States to co-operate fully with the United Nations Council for Namibia in its efforts to discharge its responsibilities.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 2145 (XXI) of 27 October 1966, by which the United Nations decided to terminate the Mandate for South West Africa and assume direct responsibility for the Territory until its independence,

Recalling further its resolve to discharge that responsibility with respect to the Territory,

Bearing in mind that that responsibility includes the solemn obligation to assist and prepare the people of the Territory for self-determination and independence,

Considering that, in order to discharge its responsibilities under resolution 2145 (XXI), the United Nations should provide comprehensive assistance to the people of the Territory,

Having considered the request made by the Security Council, in its resolution 283 (1970) of 29 July 1970, that a United Nations fund be established to provide assistance to Namibians who have suffered from persecution and to finance a comprehensive educational and training programme for Namibians, with particular regard to their future administrative responsibilities in the Territory,

Taking into account the assistance provided to Namibians at present from United Nations agencies and funds, notably the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa and the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa,

1. Decides that a comprehensive United Nations Fund for Namibia shall be established;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to make a detailed study and report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on the development, planning, execution and administration of a comprehensive pro-

5. Decides that, in anticipation of the report of the Secretary-General on the matter, a decision on the extent of the financial implications of the programme should be deferred to the twenty-sixth session of the General Assembly;

6. Authorizes the Secretary-General, in the meantime, in consultation with the Chairman of the Advisory Committee on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, the Chairman of the Committee of Trustees of the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to make interim grants from the regular budget of the United Nations for 1971, not exceeding a total amount of $50,000 over and above the assistance provided at present, in order to enable the existing United Nations programmes to provide greater assistance, as necessary, to Namibians.

Noting further that these petitions relate, inter alia, to the general situation and recent developments concerning Namibia, to the refusal by South Africa to implement General Assembly resolutions 2145(XXI) and 2248(S-V) and, in particular, to the continued implementation by South Africa of the recommendations of the Odendaal Commission, including the removal of Africans from their ancestral lands,

CHAPTER IV

THE SITUATION IN SOUTHERN RHODESIA

During 1970, the situation in Southern Rhodesia continued to receive the consideration of United Nations bodies, including the Security Council, the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the (1960) Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

These bodies were concerned with bringing to an end the situation in Southern Rhodesia created by the white minority regime of Ian Smith—which had unilaterally declared its independence from the United Kingdom in 1965 and, early in March 1970, had declared itself a republic—and with enabling the African people of the territory to exercise their basic human rights, in particular their inalienable right to freedom and independence in accordance with the 1960 Declaration on granting independence.

At meetings in March 1970, the Security Council failed to adopt two resolutions on the question—one put forward by the United Kingdom and the other by five African and Asian States—and then adopted a Finnish proposal by which, among other things, it "condemned the illegal proclamation of republican status" of the territory by the illegal regime and decided that Member States should refrain from recognizing the illegal regime or rendering any assistance to it. The Council also reaffirmed its previous decisions calling for sanctions against the illegal regime.

On 17 November 1970, the Security Council adopted another resolution on the question whereby, among other things, it called upon the United Kingdom, as the administering power, to take urgent and effective measures to bring to an end the illegal rebellion in Southern Rhodesia and enable the people to exercise their right to self-determination. It decided that the sanctions against the territory would remain in force, deplored the attitude of States which persisted in giving assistance to the illegal regime and urged all States not to grant any form of recognition to it.

The General Assembly's Special Committee on implementation of the Declaration on granting independence to colonial countries and peoples adopted a consensus on 9 March 1970 by which, among other things, it strongly condemned the purported assumption of republican status and other illegal acts by the racist minority regime. The Special Committee also adopted a resolution on the question of Southern Rhodesia later in 1970.

The Commission on Human Rights, in a consensus adopted on 3 March 1970, also condemned the establishment of a republic by the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, regarding such an act as being fraught with serious danger to the existence of the human rights of the vast majority of the population of Southern Rhodesia.

At its twenty-fifth session, later in 1970, the General Assembly on 3 December adopted a resolution by which, among other things, it declared illegal all measures taken by the racist minority regime, including the purported assumption of republican status; condemned the failure of the United Kingdom to take effective measures to bring down the illegal regime and to transfer power to the people of Zimbabwe [Southern Rhodesia] on the basis of majority rule; and drew the Security Council's attention to the need for widening the scope of the sanctions against the illegal regime and imposing sanctions against South Africa and Portugal, whose Governments had refused to carry out the mandatory decisions of the Security Council.

For details of these decisions and related matters, see pp. 157-86.

CHAPTER V

TERRITORIES UNDER PORTUGUESE ADMINISTRATION

During 1970, various aspects of the situation in the Portuguese-administered territories of Angola, Mozambique, Guinea, called Portuguese Guinea, the Gape Verde Archipelago, Sao Tome and Principe, Macau and Timor, were the subject of discussion in the Security Council (see pp. 187-92), the General Assembly and the Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, as well as in the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

The General Assembly also discussed a report by the Secretary-General on the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, into which the special programme for the Portuguese-administered territories had been integrated in 1968.

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples considered the question of the territories under Portuguese administration at meetings held between 14 May and 24 June, between 24 and 30 July, and between 11 and 18 August 1970.

The Committee had before it six written petitions concerning the Portuguese-administered territories, including one each from the Council for Christian Social Action, United Church of Christ; the American Committee on Africa; and the Angola Comité of the Netherlands.

The Ad Hoc Group of the Special Committee, which visited Africa from 24 May to 5 June 1971 in preparation for the programme marking the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence (see page 689), heard the following petitioners: Joseph Turpin, Partido Africano da Independencia da Guiné e Cabo Verde (PAIGC) ; Marcelino dos Santos, Frente de Libertação de Moçambique (FRELIMO) ; Henrique Carreira, Movimiento Popular de Libertação de Angola (MPLA) ; and Fanuel Martuza, Comité Revolucionario de Moçambique (COREMO).

In connexion with its consideration of the Portuguese-administered territories, the Special Committee responded to an invitation to send observers to the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of the Portuguese Colonies, held in Rome, Italy, from 27 to 29 June 1970. The report of the delegation of observers was annexed to the Special Committee's report.

Opening the Special Committee's general debate on the questions of Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese administration, the representative of Sierra Leone pointed out that while the legal position of the territories differed, the political situation was the same: a black majority was being oppressed by a small white minority. Since the three regimes concerned had rejected the proposals for a peaceful solution contained in the Manifesto on Southern Africa (Lusaka Manifesto), adopted by the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1969,<sup>1</sup> the oppressed peoples had had to resort to armed struggle. The representative expressed the hope that the Governments concerned, including Portugal, might yet change their minds.

The representative of Madagascar also urged Portugal to recognize that it needed the confidence and consent of the people it governed and to change its policy before it was too late.

A number of speakers pointed out that instead of implementing the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,<sup>2</sup> Portugal had intensified its military actions against the peoples in Angola, Mozambique and Guinea, called Portuguese Guinea.

Bulgaria, India, Poland, Syria, the USSR and Yugoslavia noted the growing foreign economic activities in the territories. They contended that without the powerful economic interests, many of which were linked to members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), Portugal would not be able to carry on the war.

Some Special Committee members, including Afghanistan, noted that the complaints by Guinea and Senegal to the Security Council had highlighted the growing threat by Portugal against independent African States (see pp. 187-92). The representative of the USSR considered that NATO was an accomplice in this.

The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, among others, cited the Cabora Bassa dam project in Mozambique as an example of the growing collaboration of Western powers with Portugal. He recalled that OAU had strongly opposed the project, which, he said, would further entrench white power in southern Africa. The USSR representative noted that Portugal's plans for colonization in that area would have far-reaching consequences, as South African troops were already stationed in the region.

Several members recalled the frustration expressed by the representatives of the liberation movements, both in their contacts with the Ad Hoc Group of the Special Committee which had visited Africa and at the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of the Portuguese Colonies, over the inadequate international assistance to the colonial peoples in their struggle for freedom and independence. Bulgaria and Poland, among others, said that the national liberation movements had freed large areas of the territories and were in need of substantial aid to provide for the health, education and other needs of the peoples under their administration.

There was a consensus among the Special Committee members that the United Nations should increase its support to the liberation movements, find more effective means of mobilizing public opinion and secure the compliance by Western powers to withdraw economic and other support from Portugal.

On 18 August 1970, the Special Committee adopted a resolution whereby it reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of the territories under Portuguese administration to achieve self-determination, freedom and independence, and recognized the legitimacy of their struggle to achieve that right. It condemned Portugal's refusal to implement General Assembly and Security Council resolutions and condemned its colonial war against the peoples of the territories, as well as the intervention of South African forces against the peoples of the territories.

It called upon the Government of Portugal to implement the General Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 (containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples),<sup>3</sup> and in particular (a) to cease all repressive activities involving the denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms as well as military operations against the peoples of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau), and to withdraw all military and other forces; and ( ) to proclaim an unconditional political amnesty to restore democratic political rights and to transfer powers to freely elected institutions representative of the populations. It also called upon the Government of Portugal, in view of the prevailing armed conflict, to apply the 1949 Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War.

The Special Committee also called upon all States, particularly Portugal's military allies in NATO, to withhold all military assistance to Portugal, including the supply or sale of arms, military equipment and maintenance material, and the training of Portuguese military personnel within or outside the framework of NATO. It further called upon all States to put an end to all practices that exploited the territories and to discourage their nationals from economic activities in the territories which strengthened Portugal's domination. In particular, it appealed to all Governments that had not yet done so to prevent any participation in, and to withdraw from, activities relating to the Cabora Bassa project in Mozambique and the Cunene River Basin project in Angola. It urged all States to grant the peoples of the territories financial and material assistance necessary to continue their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights, and, in co-operation with OAU, to take co-ordinated measures to increase assistance to the national liberation movements, including the active participation within their fields of competence of the specialized agencies and other international organizations concerned.

The Special Committee appealed again to all specialized agencies and international institutions associated with the United Nations, in particular the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, to refrain from granting Portugal any financial, economic or technical assistance so long as the Government of Portugal failed to implement the General Assembly resolution of 14 December 1960. It requested them, in co-operation with OAU and through it with the national liberation movements, to increase their assistance, especially in the fields of medicine, education and agriculture.

The Committee drew the attention of the Security Council (a) to the grave situation created by Portugal's continued defiance of its obligation under the United Nations Charter, and the threat to international peace and security resulting from the growing collaboration between Portugal, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia; and (b) to the urgent need to adopt the necessary measures to make mandatory the provisions of the resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly on this question. The Committee decided to keep the situation in the territories under Portuguese domination under review and to examine the extent of compliance by States with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations.

The Special Committee's resolution to this effect was based on a proposal by Afghanistan, Ethiopia, India, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Madagascar, Mali, Sierra Leone, Syria, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Yugoslavia, as subsequently orally revised. It was adopted by a roll-call vote of 14 to 2, with 2 abstentions.

Explaining its vote, the United States reaffirmed its support of the right to self-determination of the peoples of the Portuguese-administered territories. However, it considered that the goal could best be obtained through peaceful efforts. The provisions of the resolution, which was based on assertions the United States did not share, would only confirm Portugal's determination to pursue the course on which it had embarked and would strengthen the hand of those in Portugal who opposed a peaceful compromise, the United States representative said. He also denied any involvement by his Government or any United States company in the Cabora Bassa project.

The representative of the United Kingdom noted that the text of the resolution closely followed that adopted in 1969; he questioned the effectiveness of passing the same resolution every year. Moreover, he said, the resolution contained unfounded and unjustified imputations against members of NATO, and employed the language of Chapter VII of the Charter, which was the exclusive prerogative of the Security Council.<sup>4</sup>

The representative of Italy expressed reservations regarding the reference to NATO, which, he said, was an organization devoted purely to defensive aims. It was the Italian Government's policy, he said, to make sure that no military material supplied to Portugal would be used in its African territories for purposes of war.

In connexion with its adoption of conclusions and recommendations on military activities and arrangements by colonial powers in territories under their administration which might be impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the granting of independence (see page 694 above), the Special Committee noted that the intensification of military activities and arrangements by the Portuguese Government in the territories under its administration continued to be based on close military co-operation between Portugal and its military allies in NATO.

The Special Committee also expressed grave concern at reports to the effect that Portugal was employing chemical and bacteriological weapons against the freedom fighters of the African population in the territories under its domination, in flagrant violation of international conventions.

DECISIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION AND ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its May 1970 session, the Economic and Social Council adopted two resolutions that touched upon the situation in the territories under Portuguese administration.

On 27 May, on the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (1501 (XLVIII)) concerning violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, including policies of racial discrimination and apartheid, in all countries, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories.

In so doing, the Council reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of the peoples of southern Africa against apartheid, racial discrimination and colonialism and the legitimacy to their right to self-determination; condemned the torture and ill-treatment of prisoners, detainees and captured freedom fighters in the African territories under Portuguese domination, among others, as well as of persons in police custody in those territories; reaffirmed that the Convention on Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, of 30 August 1955, applied to all political prisoners or detainees, in prison or in police custody in the African territories under Portuguese domination; and reaffirmed that mass killings of suspected opponents of the regime continued unabated in the African territories under Portuguese domination, and that the most inhuman form of forced labour prevailed in these territories.

The Council called upon the Government of Portugal to observe immediately the provisions of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949; to eradicate the practice of xibalo (forced labour) in its African colonies; and to introduce a system in which the products of African farmers could be freely bought and sold in normal market conditions.

(For text of resolution, see pp. 517-19.)

On 28 May 1970, the Economic and Social Council adopted a resolution (1509 (XLVIII)) concerning allegations of infringements of trade-union rights. The Council thereby, inter alia, recalled having received the report it had requested by its resolution of 6 June 1969 from the International Labour Organisation (ILO) on the infringement of trade-union rights in the Portuguese territories;<sup>5</sup> condemned and called for an end to the continuing suppression of trade-union rights in southern Africa; and called for the immediate and unconditional release of all persons imprisoned for trade-union activities.

The Council also authorized the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in co-operation with ILO, other specialized agencies and international trade-union organizations, to investigate the conditions of: (a) African producers of primary products in the Portuguese colonies in Africa; (b) unorganized labour, such as farm labour in the Portuguese colonies in Africa; (c) workers from Mozambique and Angola who were or had been employed in South Africa, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

GENERAL ASPECTS

At its 1970 session, the General Assembly referred the question of territories under Portuguese administration to its Fourth Committee.

The Fourth Committee heard the following petitioners on the question of the Portuguese-administered territories: Albert Bonaparte Nank; Sharfudine M. Khan, representative, Frente de Libertação de Moçambique (FRELIMO); Paul Toubá, representative, Gouvernement révolutionnaire de l'Angola en exil (GRAE); Francisco Alexandre, President and Secretary-General, National Union of Angolan Students (UNEA); and George M. Houser, Executive Director, American Committee on Africa.

Discussion of the territories under Portuguese administration centred largely on measures to be taken which might bring about Portugal's compliance with its obligations under the United Nations Charter to grant the peoples of the territories the right to self-determination and independence. Some representatives felt that the programme of action proposed by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in connexion with the tenth anniversary of the Declaration (see pp. 706-8), would serve as a new impetus to find a solution to the problem of the Portuguese-administered territories.

Many Members, including the Central African Republic, Cuba, Ghana, Hungary, India, Mali, Nigeria, Poland, the USSR, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia, considered that Portugal was able to continue to defy the United Nations only because it had the direct or indirect military, political and economic support of various western European countries, including some members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Other Members, including Burma and Sweden, pointed out that even if Portugal did not use arms supplied by NATO in its African territories, those arms released Portuguese resources for the military operations.

A number of speakers criticized the growing alliance between Portugal, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia and foreign economic activities which were impeding decolonization. The representative of the United Republic of Tanzania, among others, said that the joint effort of South Africa and European powers to build the Cabora Bassa dam in Mozambique was aimed at stifling the liberation movements, establishing a large number of white settlers in the region, strengthening the minority regimes and extending apartheid, all of which would have grave political implications for the whole of Africa.

Many Members emphasized the need for United Nations action to secure the implementation of its resolutions. Some Members suggested that the sanctions which had been imposed against the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia should be extended to include Portugal; among those strongly advocating such action were Algeria, the Byelorussian SSR, Pakistan, Senegal, Sierra Leone, the USSR, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Zambia.

Algeria, among others, considered that the colonial situation in southern Africa could be ended only by strengthening the liberation movements, including those in the Portuguese-administered territories. Many Members supported the view that the organization of the United Nations system should extend aid to the liberation movements in order to support them in their legitimate struggle for independence.

A number of speakers, including Argentina, Canada, Ireland, the Ivory Coast, Japan, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Turkey and Uruguay—some of whom stated they were opposed to the use of force—urged Portugal in its own interest to recognize the irreversible process of decolonization and the right of peoples to self-determination and independence.

Certain Members recalled that in the Manifesto on Southern Africa,<sup>6</sup> the African States had said that if Portugal should change its policy and accept the principle of self-determination, the African States would urge the liberation movements to desist from armed struggle and to co-operate in a peaceful transfer of power; these Members urged Portugal to accept that offer.

Denmark, among others, appealed to the major Western powers to try to persuade Portugal to change its policy. Iran expressed the view that any change in Portugal's colonial policy could come about only as a result of its domestic situation and under pressure from members of the European Economic Community.

Sweden expressed disappointment that although there were indications of a gradual liberalization in Portugal, the new Government had not yet introduced changes in its overseas policy. Sweden considered that people fighting for freedom had the right to assistance from the United Nations and that a survey should be made of their needs and of the available channels for assistance. Sweden also suggested that the United Nations adopt a resolution, with the widest possible support, which would convey to Portugal that practically the entire international community demanded a change in its overseas policy; such an action would encourage those in Portugal who favoured finding a political solution to the problem. Sweden also shared the view that public information activities aimed at mobilizing world opinion in favour of decolonization should be strengthened.

The representative of Portugal reiterated his Government's reservations about including the question of territories under Portuguese administration in the General Assembly's agenda. Nothing new had been said during the current debate, he maintained. Nevertheless, he felt it was necessary to recapitulate some points of Portuguese policy. He went on to emphasize Portugal's unconditional support for the principles of equality and dignity of all men and its repudiation of racism. Centuries of mutual and harmonious enrichment between civilizations and races had forged a unified State extending over several continents and constituting an inter-racial egalitarian society, the Portuguese representative said. A constant effort was being made to raise the cultural and economic level of the people and to increase their participation at all levels of the political and economic administration of the nation. The progressive autonomy of the territories, he said, was constantly being ensured in accordance with the laws and constitution of Portugal and the degree of their development and their resources. Portugal realized that much remained to be done and was making a substantial effort.

Contrary to charges made, the Cabora Bassa project reflected a desire to contribute to the well-being of all, the Portuguese representative continued. Portugal accepted foreign investments, as they constituted internationally recognized means for development and did not entail any political interference in Portugal's domestic affairs. The deliberate charges against Portugal encouraged armed groups from the outside which spread terror and disorder, the Portuguese representative said. Nevertheless, Portugal retained its calm and its complete faith in its future.

On 18 November 1970, the Fourth Committee approved a draft resolution concerning the Portuguese-administered territories, which was adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1970.

By the preamble to this resolution, the Assembly among other things: expressed its grave concern at Portugal's defiant attitude towards the international community and its persistent refusal to recognize the inalienable right of the peoples under its domination to self-determination and independence, and to implement relevant United Nations resolutions; indicated that it was deeply disturbed by the increasingly explosive situation created by the measures of oppression carried out by Portugal, in particular its intensified military operations in these territories; expressed its deep concern with the intensified activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests which were impeding the self-determination and independence of the peoples of the territories of Angola, Mozambique' and Guinea (Bissau); and deplored the aid that Portugal continued to receive from its allies in NATO and from other Governments, which enabled it to pursue its policies of domination and oppression of the African peoples of the territories.

By the operative part of the resolution, the General Assembly reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of the territories under Portuguese domination to self-determination and independence and the legitimacy of their struggle to achieve that right. It then called upon the Government of Portugal to apply to the territories' peoples without further delay the principle of self-determination and independence and, in particular: (a) to cease all acts of repression and withdraw all military and other forces employed for this purpose; (b) to cease immediately all practices that violated the inalienable rights of the indigenous population, including arbitrary eviction from the land and the settlement of immigrants in the territories; (c) to proclaim an unconditional political amnesty, to restore democratic political rights and to transfer powers to freely elected institutions representative of the population; (d) to refrain from all attacks on, and violation of, the security and territorial integrity of neighbouring sovereign countries; and (e) to release the men and property it had seized from those States.

The General Assembly also condemned: (a) Portugal's persistent refusal to implement the Assembly resolution of 14 December 1960 (which contained the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples)<sup>7</sup> and all other relevant United Nations resolutions, and the colonial war which threatened the security and violated the territorial integrity and sovereignty of neighbouring States; (b) the collaboration between Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, which was designed to perpetuate colonialism and oppression in southern Africa; and (c) the intervention of South African forces against the peoples of the territories.

The Assembly called upon Portugal to treat captured freedom fighters in accord with the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War and to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, and called upon it not to use bacteriological methods of warfare against the peoples of the territories, which was contrary to the generally recognized rules of international law and to the Assembly's resolution of 16 December 1969.<sup>8</sup>

It also called upon all States, in particular the members of NATO, to withhold any assistance which would enable Portugal to pursue the colonial wars and which impeded the implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 on granting independence, and in particular: (a) to desist forthwith from the training of Portuguese military personnel which encouraged that Government to continue its repression of the African peoples in the territories under its domination; (b) to prevent the sale or supply of weapons, military equipment and material to the Government of Portugal, as well as all supplies enabling it to manufacture or maintain weapons and ammunition which it used to perpetuate its colonial domination in Africa; and (c) to desist from any collaboration with the ground, air and naval forces of Portugal which might thwart the achievement of the objectives contained in the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960.

The Assembly called upon all States to put an end to practices which exploited the territories and to discourage activities by their nationals or companies which impeded the implementation of the Declaration on granting independence.

It welcomed the withdrawal by financial groups in certain States from participation in the Cabora Bassa project in Mozambique but requested Governments that had not yet done so to prevent companies under their jurisdiction from participating in that project or in the Cunene River project in Angola.

It also invited all States, the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to render to the peoples of the territories the necessary financial and material assistance in their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights.

The General Assembly, further, drew the attention of the Security Council to the grave situation in the territories and the growing collaboration between Portugal, South Africa and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia, which constituted a threat to international peace and security, and it recommended that the Council continue to give special attention to those aspects and to take effective measures to ensure full implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 14 December 1960 on the granting of independence and its own relevant resolutions.

It also invited the Secretary-General, in consultation with the specialized agencies and the Governments of the host countries, to develop and expand training programmes for the indigenous inhabitants of the territories.

These decisions were set forth in resolution 2707 (XXV), which the Assembly adopted by a roll-call vote of 94 to 6, with 16 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The text was based on a proposal made in the Fourth Committee by the following 34 Members: Afghanistan, Algeria, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Ceylon, Chad, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dahomey, Ethiopia, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Libya, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta, Yugoslavia and Zambia. It was approved by the Fourth Committee by a roll-call vote of 90 to 7, with 17 abstentions.

Two decisions of the General Assembly concerning the implementation of the 1960 Declaration on granting independence also had bearing on the question of the territories under Portuguese administration.

By a resolution (2621 (XXV)) of 12 October 1970, setting forth a programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration, the Assembly among other things drew the attention of the Security Council to the need to give careful consideration to the question of imposing sanctions upon Portugal, in view of its refusal to carry out the relevant decisions of the Security Council, and to consider urgently the adoption of measures to prevent the supply of arms of all kinds to Portugal, since such arms enabled it to deny the right of self-determination and independence to the peoples of the territories under its domination.

The Assembly also called upon Member States to campaign vigorously against foreign economic interests operating in the territories for the benefit of colonial powers, to end military activities in the territories and to oppose collaboration between Portugal, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia.

The programme of action adopted by the Assembly also incorporated other measures previously recommended by the Assembly concerning the treatment of freedom fighters under the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War of 12 August 1949; intensified provision of educational opportunities; and further public information activities to enhance public awareness concerning the need for decolonization.

By a resolution (2708 (XXV)) of 14 December 1970, the General Assembly took further steps to bring about the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. Among other things, it deplored the continued refusal of the colonial powers, especially Portugal and South Africa, to implement the Declaration and other relevant resolutions on the question of decolonization, particularly those relating to the territories under Portuguese domination, Namibia and Southern Rhodesia, and strongly condemned the attitude of those States which continued to co-operate with the Governments of Portugal and South Africa and with the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia.

After reaffirming the legitimacy of the struggle of the peoples in the colonial territories and noting the progress made by the national liberation movements within them, the Assembly urged all States and all organizations within the United Nations system to provide them, as appropriate, with moral and material assistance.

Among other things, the Assembly requested all States, the specialized agencies and international institutions to withhold assistance of any kind from the Government of Portugal until it renounced its policy of colonial domination and racial discrimination; reiterated that the use of mercenaries against national liberation movements in colonial territories constituted a criminal act; and requested the colonial powers to withdraw immediately and unconditionally their military bases and installations from colonial territories and to refrain from establishing new ones.

By a further resolution (2649 (XXV)), adopted on 30 November 1970, the General Assembly emphasized the importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination, and expressed its concern that many peoples were still denied that right and were still subject to colonial and alien domination. The Assembly affirmed the legitimacy of the struggles of peoples under colonial and alien domination recognized as being entitled to the right of self-determination to restore to themselves that right by all means at their disposal; and recognized the right of these peoples to seek and receive all kinds of moral and material assistance to achieve it, in accordance with the Charter and resolutions of the United Nations.

(For text of resolution 2649 (XXV), see p. 533.)

HUMAN RIGHTS QUESTIONS

A number of decisions taken by the General Assembly on human rights questions also related to conditions in southern Africa, including the territories under Portuguese administration.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN ARMED CONFLICTS

By a resolution (2674 (XXV)) of 9 December 1970, the General Assembly among other things affirmed that participants in resistance movements and freedom fighters in southern Africa and territories under colonial and alien domination and foreign occupation, in case of their arrest, should be treated as prisoners of war under the Hague Convention of 1907, the Geneva Protocol of 1925 and the Geneva Conventions of 1949. The Assembly also recognized the necessity of developing international instruments providing for the protection of freedom fighters against colonial and foreign domination as well as against racist regimes.

VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS

By another resolution (2714(XXV)), adopted on 15 December 1970, the General Assembly among other things condemned any and every practice of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners, detainees and captured freedom fighters in Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the African territories under Portuguese domination, as well as of persons in police custody in those territories. It reaffirmed that the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, of 30 August 1955, should be applied to all political prisoners or detainees, in prison or in police custody, in various areas in southern Africa, including the African territories under Portuguese domination; and reaffirmed that in the Portuguese territories mass killing of suspected opponents of the regime continued unabated and that the most inhuman form of forced labour prevailed.

The Assembly called upon the Government of Portugal: (a) to observe the provisions of the 1949 Geneva Conventions; (b) to eradicate the practice of xibalo, or forced labour, in its African colonies; and (c) to introduce a system in which the products of the African farmers could be freely bought and sold in normal market conditions.

ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION

By a resolution (2646(XXV)) adopted on 30 November 1970, the General Assembly reiterated its firm determination to bring about the complete elimination of racial discrimination and racism, which were abhorrent to the conscience and sense of justice of mankind.

In so doing, the Assembly among other things: reaffirmed the legitimacy of the struggle of oppressed peoples everywhere—and in particular those of South Africa, Namibia, Southern Rhodesia and the territories under Portuguese colonial domination—to obtain racial equality by all possible means; called for increased moral and material support to all peoples under colonial and alien domination who were struggling for the realization of their right to self-determination and for the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination; condemned the unholy alliance between South Africa, Portugal and the illegal regime in Southern Rhodesia designed to suppress the struggle of the peoples of southern Africa against racism, apartheid, economic exploitation and colonial domination; and called upon all Governments which still maintained diplomatic, consular, commercial, military, social and other relations with racist Governments in southern Africa to terminate such relations immediately, in accordance with relevant United Nations resolutions.

FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTERESTS

On 14 December 1970, the General Assembly adopted a resolution (2703(XXV)) concerning the activities of foreign and other economic interests which were impeding the implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples in southern Africa, including the Portuguese-administered territories.

The Assembly, thereby, among other things, reaffirmed the inalienable right of the peoples of dependent territories to the natural resources of their territories and their right to dispose of these resources in their best interests.

The Assembly condemned the activities of foreign economic and other interests in the territories under colonial domination, in particular, the construction of the Cabora Bassa project in Mozambique, which was contrary to the interests of the peoples of Mozambique and represented a plot designed to perpetuate the domination, exploitation and oppression of the peoples by the Government of Portugal and the minority racist regimes of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. The Assembly requested the colonial powers and States concerned, whose companies were participants in the Cabora Bassa project, to withdraw their support from the scheme and put an end to the participation of their companies in the project. It called upon the administering powers to abolish the discriminatory and unjust system of wages applied in dependent territories, notably in southern Africa.

CO-OPERATION OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

By another resolution (2704 (XXV))—adopted on 14 December 1970—the General Assembly affirmed that its recognition of the legitimacy of the struggle of colonial peoples to achieve freedom and independence entailed, as a corollary, the extension by the United Nations system of organizations of all necessary moral and material assistance to national liberation movements in those territories, especially in their liberated areas.

The Assembly urged specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system which had not yet done so to take steps to implement fully the relevant resolutions relating to assistance to the national liberation movements and to the discontinuance of all collaboration with the Governments of Portugal and South Africa and the minority regime of Southern Rhodesia. It also invited the specialized agencies to examine, in consultation with the Organization of African Unity, the possibility that leaders of liberation movements in the colonial territories in Africa might participate in conferences, seminars and regional meetings convened by the specialized agencies.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL AND TRAINING PROGRAMME FOR SOUTHERN AFRICA

Under the consolidated United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa, 224 applications from territories under Portuguese administration were received during the period 1 October 1969-31 October 1970. Eighty-four new awards were made and another 94 awards were extended.

At the end of October 1970, a total of 178 fellowship holders from Portuguese-administered territories were studying in 22 countries.

By a resolution (2706 (XXV)) adopted on 14 December 1970, the General Assembly among other things: noted that funds were still far from adequate to meet the objectives of the Programme; strongly appealed to all States, organizations and individuals to make generous contributions to the Programme; and decided that, as a transitional measure, provision should be made under the regular budget for an amount of $100,000 to ensure continuation of the Programme in 1971.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of Territories under Portuguese domination,

Having heard the statements of the petitioners,

Having examined the chapter of the report of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples relating to the question of Territories under Portuguese domination, and the report of the Special Committee's delegation of observers to the International Conference in Support of the Peoples of Portuguese Colonies, held at Rome from 27 to 29 June 1970,

Bearing in mind the views expressed by representatives of national liberation movements of the Territories under Portuguese domination, including those expressed to the Ad Hoc Group of the Special Committee which visited Africa in 1970 to contact leaders of liberation movements,

Recalling its resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, and the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, as well as those adopted by the Special Committee,

Recalling further the relevant provisions of General Assembly resolution 2621 (XXV) of 12 October 1970 containing the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples,

Gravely concerned at the defiant attitude of the Government of Portugal towards the international community and the persistent refusal of that Government to recognize the inalienable right of the peoples of the Territories under its domination to self-determination and independence and to implement the relevant resolutions of the United Nations,

Deeply disturbed by the increasingly explosive situation created by the measures of oppression carried out by the Government of Portugal and, in particular, by its intensified military operations in Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau), Deeply concerned at the continued and intensified activities of foreign economic, financial and other interests which are impeding the realization by the peoples of the Territories under Portuguese domination of their legitimate aspirations for self-determination and independence, contrary to the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly,

Deploping the continued assistance received by the Government of Portugal from its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and from other Governments, which it uses to pursue its policies of colonial domination and oppression of the peoples of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau),

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of the peoples of Angola, Mozambique, Guinea (Bissau) and other Territories under Portuguese domination to self-determination and independence, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 1514(XV), and the legitimacy of their struggle to achieve that right by all necessary means at their disposal;

2. Strongly condemns the persistent refusal of the Government of Portugal to implement resolution 1514 (XV) and all other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, and the colonial war being waged by that Government against the peoples of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau) which also threatens the security and violates the territorial integrity and sovereignty of the independent African States, in particular those States bordering the Territories;

3. Condemns the collaboration between Portugal, South Africa and the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, since this is designed to perpetuate colonialism and oppression in southern Africa;

4. Condemns the intervention of South African forces against the peoples of the Territories under Portuguese domination;

5. Calls upon the Government of Portugal to apply without further delay to the peoples of the Territories under its domination the principle of self-determination and independence in accordance with resolution 1514(XV) and other relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, and in particular:

(a) To cease forthwith all acts of repression against the peoples of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau) and to withdraw all military and other forces employed for this purpose;

(b) To cease immediately all practices which violate the inalienable rights of the indigenous population, including arbitrary eviction of the African population and the settlement of immigrants in the Territories;

(c) To proclaim an unconditional political amnesty, to restore democratic political rights and to transfer powers to freely elected institutions representative of the population, in accordance with resolution 1514(XV);

(d) To refrain from all attacks on, and violations of, the security and territorial integrity of neighbouring sovereign countries;

(e) To release the men and property of those sovereign States now being held by Portugal following the attacks and violations committed against them;

6. Calls upon the Government of Portugal to treat the freedom fighters of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau) captured during the struggle for freedom as prisoners of war in accordance with the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, of 12 August 1949, and to comply with the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

7. Reiterates its appeal to all States, particularly to members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, to withhold from Portugal any assistance which enables it to prosecute the colonial war in Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau), and in particular:

(a) To desist forthwith from the training of Portuguese military personnel which encourages that Government to continue its repression of the African peoples in the Territories under its domination;

(b) To prevent the sale or supply of weapons, military equipment and material, including aircraft, helicopters and vehicles, to the Government of Portugal, as well as all supplies enabling it to manufacture or maintain weapons and ammunition which it uses to perpetuate its colonial domination in Africa;

(c) To desist from any collaboration with the ground, air and naval forces of Portugal which might thwart the achievement of the objectives contained in resolution 1514(XV);

8. Calls upon all States to take all effective measures to put an end to all practices which exploit the Territories under Portuguese domination and the peoples therein and to discourage their nationals and companies from entering into any activities or arrangements which strengthen Portugal's domination over, and impede the implementation of the Declaration with respect to, those Territories;

9. Calls upon the Government of Portugal not to use chemical and biological methods of warfare against the peoples of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau), contrary to the generally recognized rules of international law embodied in the Protocol for the Prohibition of the Use in War of Asphyxiating, Poisonous or Other Gases, and of Bacteriological Methods of Warfare, signed at Geneva on 17 June 1925, and to General Assembly resolution 2603 (XXIV) of 16 December 1969;

10. Welcomes the action taken by the financial groups in certain States to withdraw their participation in the Cabora Bassa project, but requests the Governments which have not yet done so to withdraw from the activities relating to the Cabora Bassa project in Mozambique and the Cunene River Basin project in Angola and to take all the necessary measures to prevent the participation therein of any companies or individuals under their jurisdiction;

11. Invites all States and the specialized agencies and other organizations within the United Nations system, in co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, to render to the peoples of the Territories under Portuguese domination the financial and material assistance necessary to continue their struggle for the restoration of their inalienable rights;

12. Draws the attention of the Security Council to the grave situation in the Territories of Angola, Mozambique and Guinea (Bissau) created by the continued violation by Portugal of its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations and the growing collaboration between Portugal, the racist Government of South Africa and the illegal racist minority regime in Southern Rhodesia, which constitute a threat to international peace and security;

13. Recommends that the Security Council should continue to give special attention to the problems of Portuguese colonialism in Africa and of the collaboration between Portugal and the racist minority regimes of southern Africa, and to take effective measures, in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter, to ensure the full implementation of General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) and its own resolutions relating thereto;

14. Invites the Secretary-General, in the light of General Assembly resolution 2557(XXIV) of 12 December 1969 and in consultation with the specialized agencies and the Governments of the host countries, to develop and expand training programmes for the indigenous inhabitants of the Territories under Portuguese domination, taking into account their needs for qualified administrative, technical and professional personnel to assume responsibility for the public administration and the economic and social development of their own countries, and to report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on the progress of these programmes;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all States and to report to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on steps taken or envisaged by States in the implementation of the various provisions contained therein;

16. Requests the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to keep the situation in the Territories under review.

CHAPTER VI

OTHER QUESTIONS RELATING TO NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

TRANSMISSION OF INFORMATION

TERRITORIES ON WHICH

INFORMATION WAS SUBMITTED IN 1970

In accordance with Chapter XI, Article 73e, of the United Nations Charter, Members responsible for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government have the obligation to send each year to the Secretary-General information on economic, social and educational conditions in the territories for which they have responsibilities, subject to such limitations as security and constitutional considerations may require.<sup>1</sup>

Australia, France, New Zealand, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States regularly include information on political and constitutional developments in the territories on which they transmit information. Additional information on political and constitutional developments in the territories under their administration is also given by the representatives of Australia, New Zealand, Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States when the territories for which they have responsibility are discussed in the General Assembly's Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

During 1970, information relating to 1969 was transmitted to the Secretary-General with respect to the following territories:

Australia: Cocos (Keeling) Islands; Papua

France: New Hebrides (condominium with the United Kingdom)

New Zealand: Niue Island; Tokelau Islands

Spain: Spanish Sahara

United Kingdom: Bahamas; Bermuda; British Hon-

durac; British Virgin Islands; Brunei; Cayman Islands; Falkland Islands (Malvinas); Fiji;<sup>2</sup> Gibraltar; Gilbert and Ellice Islands; Hong Kong; Montserrat; New Hebrides (condominium with France); Pitcairn Island; St. Helena; Seychelles; Solomon Islands; Southern Rhodesia; Turks and Caicos Islands

United States: American Samoa; Guam; United States Virgin Islands

The Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly at its 1970 session, which opened on 15 September, that he had received no information concerning territories under Portuguese administration, which the General Assembly by a decision of 15 December 1960<sup>3</sup> considered to be non-self-governing territories within the meaning of Chapter XI of the Charter.

Nor had the Secretary-General received any information on Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla and St. Lucia. With respect to these territories, the representative of the United Kingdom stated, on 15 December 1967, that having achieved the status of Associated States, they had achieved "a full measure of self-government" and that information on them would not be transmitted in future. A similar statement with respect to St. Vincent was made by the representative of the United Kingdom on 10 December 1969.

STUDY OF INFORMATION

FROM ADMINISTERING MEMBERS

Up to 1963, information transmitted by administering Members on non-self-governing territories was examined by the General Assembly's Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. When the General Assembly decided to discontinue this Committee on 16 December 1963,<sup>4</sup> it requested the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples to study the information and take it fully into account in examining the situation in each of the non-self-governing territories.

The Special Committee approved a resolution on this question on 25 September 1970, by 15 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, the provisions of which were subsequently embodied in a General Assembly resolution adopted on 14 December 1970.

By this resolution, the General Assembly:

(1) approved the chapter of the report of the Special Committee relating to the information from non-self-governing territories transmitted under Article 73e of the Charter of the United Nations;

(2) deeply deplored that, despite the repeated recommendations of the General Assembly and the Special Committee, some Member States having responsibilities for the administration of non-self-governing territories still had not seen fit to transmit information under Article 73e of the Charter, had transmitted insufficient information or had transmitted information too late;

(3) condemned the Government of Portugal for its continued refusal to transmit information under Article 73e of the Charter with regard to the colonial territories under its domination, despite repeated requests by the General Assembly;

(4) considered that, in the absence of a decision by the General Assembly itself that the territories of Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia and St. Vincent had attained a full measure of self-government in terms of Chapter XI of the Charter, the Government of the United Kingdom should continue to transmit information under Article 73e of the Charter with respect to those territories;

(5) once again urged the administering powers concerned to transmit, or continue to transmit, to the Secretary-General the information prescribed in Article 73e of the Charter, as well as the fullest possible information on political and constitutional developments in the territories concerned;

(6) reiterated its request that the administering powers concerned transmit such information as early as possible and, at the latest, within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in the non-self-governing territories concerned; and

(7) requested the Special Committee to continue to discharge its functions in this connexion.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2701 (XXV), adopted by a recorded vote of 86 to 2, with 18 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Fourth Committee, which had approved the text on 11 December 1970 by a vote of 79 to 2, with 15 abstentions. The draft text was proposed by Afghanistan, Ceylon, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Iraq, Mali, Mauritania, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The representative of the United Kingdom proposed a separate vote on the paragraph having to do with the transmission of information by the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom proposal was rejected in the Fourth Committee by a roll-call vote of 54 to 21, with 20 abstentions. The motion for a separate vote on that paragraph was also rejected in the General Assembly plenary by a recorded vote of 50 to 27, with 29 abstentions.

During the discussion, which took place mainly in the Fourth Committee, a number of Members, including Afghanistan, Sudan and Zambia, condemned the attitude of Portugal in not transmitting information on the territories under its administration. This omission could only be interpreted as open defiance of numerous General Assembly resolutions, they said.

The representatives of Iran and Sudan, among others, regretted the failure of the United Kingdom to transmit information on some of the territories it administered.

The representative of Zambia stressed that the United Nations should not accept the arguments of some administering powers explaining their failure to transmit information, especially the argument that peoples of those territories had freely chosen to maintain a special colonial status or to incorporate themselves into the metropolitan countries as provinces.

Iran and Iraq maintained that only the General Assembly could determine whether or not there was a duty to transmit information and the administering powers could not unilaterally release themselves from that duty.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that his Government had always carried out its obligations; information in respect of the current year had been transmitted on or before 3 August.

The United Kingdom, its spokesman continued, had not sent information on the six West Indies Associated States because they were completely self-governing and had a Constitution that had been approved by the elected representatives of the people. In those circumstances and according to principles set forth by the General Assembly, he said, the United Kingdom was no longer required to transmit that information; it could not do so in any case, in view of the nature of the relations existing between the United Kingdom and the six Associated States.

OFFERS OF STUDY AND TRAINING FACILITIES

In 1970, the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that, up to 31 October 1970, the following 25 Member States had made scholarships available to persons from non-self-governing territories for secondary, vocational, university and post-graduate studies: Austria, Brazil, Bulgaria, Ceylon, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ghana, Greece, Hungary, India, Iran, Israel, Italy, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United States and Yugoslavia.

On 14 December 1970, the Assembly expressed its appreciation to Member States that had made scholarships available and invited other Member States to make generous offers of study and training facilities. It requested them to provide travel funds to prospective students if possible and to inform the Secretary-General of the details of the offers made under this programme.

The Assembly also requested the administering powers concerned to give widespread publicity in territories under their administration to offers of study and training facilities. It asked the Secretary-General to report to the Assembly in 1971 on the implementation of these decisions.

The Assembly decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2705 (XXV), adopted without vote, on the recommendation of its Fourth Committee. The Committee had unanimously approved the text on 10 December 1970, on the basis of a proposal by Ceylon, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, India, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Mauritania, Nigeria, Tunisia, Uganda, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In a decision taken on 12 October 1970, the Assembly stated that efforts should be intensified to provide increased educational opportunities for the inhabitants of non-self-governing territories and that States should render greater assistance in this field, both individually through programmes in the countries concerned and collectively by contributions through the United Nations. This decision, among others having to do with the programme of action for the full implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, was embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2621 (XXV). (For further details, see pp. 689-92.)

CHAPTER I

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

BARCELONA TRACTION, LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED (NEW APPLICATION: 1962) (BELGIUM v. SPAIN)

On 5 February 1970, the International Court of Justice delivered Judgment in the second phase of the case involving the Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited.<sup>1</sup>

The claim arose out of the adjudication in bankruptcy by a Spanish court of the Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, a company incorporated in Canada. On 19 June 1962, the Belgian Government filed an Application in which it claimed reparation for the damage allegedly sustained by Belgian nationals who were shareholders in the company, as a result of acts said to be contrary to international law which had been committed towards the company by organs of the Spanish State. (A previous case, which had been brought before the Court in 1958, was removed from the list in 1961 after discontinuance of the proceedings by the Belgian Government.)

The Spanish Government having raised four preliminary objections to the Belgian Application, the Court, by a Judgment of 24 July 1964, rejected two of the objections and joined the other two to the merits. The objections joined to the merits were to the effect that the Belgian Government lacked capacity to submit any claim in respect of injury to a Canadian company, even if the shareholders were Belgian, and that local remedies available in Spain had not been exhausted.

The written proceedings on the objections joined to the merits and on the merits were closed on 1 July 1968, and hearings were held from 15 April to 22 July 1969.

By its Judgment of 5 February 1970, the Court rejected the Belgian Government's claim, finding that that Government lacked jus standi to exercise diplomatic protection of Belgian shareholders in a Canadian company with respect to measures taken against that company in Spain.

In its reasoning, the Court observed that when a State admitted into its territory foreign investments or foreign nationals, it was bound to extend to them the protection of the law and assumed obligations concerning the treatment to be afforded them. Such obligations were not absolute, however. In order to bring a claim in respect of the breach of such an obligation, a State must first establish its right to do so. The rules on this subject rested on two suppositions: (1) that the defendant State had broken an obligation towards the national State in respect of its nationals; and (2) that only the party to whom an international obligation was due could bring a claim in respect of its brief.

In seeking to determine the law applicable to this case, the Court had to bear in mind the continuous evolution of international law. In the field of diplomatic protection, international law was called upon to recognize certain institutions of municipal law which had an important role in the international field.

In municipal law, the concept of the company was founded on a firm distinction between the separate entity of the company and that of the shareholder, each with a distinct set of rights.

The company alone could take action in respect of matters that were of a corporate character. Although a wrong done to the company frequently caused prejudice to its shareholders, this did not imply that both were entitled to claim compensation. Whenever a shareholder's interests were harmed by an act done to the company, it was to the latter that he had to look to institute appropriate action. An act infringing only the company's rights did not involve responsibility towards the shareholders, even if their interests were affected.

The situation would be different if the act complained of were aimed at the direct rights of the shareholder as such. Such was not the case here, since the Belgian Government had stated that it had not based its claim on an infringement of the direct rights of the shareholders.

As already indicated, the Court had to refer to those rules generally accepted by municipal legal systems. An injury to a shareholder's interests resulting from an injury to the rights of the company was insufficient to found a claim. Where it was a question of an unlawful act committed against a company representing foreign capital, the general rule of international law authorized the national State of the company alone to exercise diplomatic protection for the purpose of seeking redress. No rule of international law expressly conferred such a right on the shareholders' national State.

The Court considered whether there might be, in the present case, special circumstances in which the general rule might not apply. Two situations needed to be studied: (a) the case of a company having ceased to exist, and (b) the case of the protecting State lacking capacity to take action.

With regard to the first of these possibilities, the Court observed that while Barcelona Traction had lost all its assets in Spain and had been placed in receivership in Canada, it could not be contended that the corporate entity of the company had ceased to exist or that it had lost its capacity to take corporate action. So far as the second possibility was concerned, it was not disputed that the company had been incorporated in Canada and had its registered office in that country. Moreover, the Canadian nationality of the company had received general recognition. The record showed that the Canadian Government had exercised the diplomatic protection of Barcelona Traction since 1948. If at a certain point the Canadian Government ceased to act on behalf of Barcelona Traction, it none the less retained its capacity to do so, which the Spanish Government had not questioned. Whatever the reasons for the Canadian Government's change of attitude, that fact in itself could not constitute a justification for the exercise of diplomatic protection by another Government.

It had also been maintained that a State could make a claim when investments by its nationals abroad, such investments being part of a State's national economic resources, were prejudicially affected in violation of the right of the State itself to have its nationals enjoy a certain treatment. In the prevailing state of affairs, however, such a right could result only from a treaty or special agreement. No such instrument was in force between the parties to the current case.

It had also been maintained that, for reasons of equity, a State should be able, in certain cases, to take up the protection of its nationals, shareholders in a company which had been the victim of a violation of international law. The Court considered that the adoption of the theory of diplomatic protection of shareholders as such, by opening the door to competing diplomatic claims, could create an atmosphere of confusion and insecurity in international economic relations. In the case in question, where the company's national State was able to act, the Court was not of the opinion that jus standi was conferred on the Belgian Government by consideration of equity.

Since no jus standi before the Court had been established, it was not for the Court to pronounce upon any other aspect of the case. Accordingly, the Court rejected the Belgian Government's claim by 15 votes to 1. Twelve votes of the majority were based on the reasons set out above; three members of the majority supported the operative provisions of the Judgment for other reasons.

LEGAL CONSEQUENCES FOR STATES OF THE CONTINUED PRESENCE OF SOUTH AFRICA IN NAMIBIA (SOUTH WEST AFRICA) NOTWITHSTANDING
SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION 276(1970)
(REQUEST FOR ADVISORY OPINION)

By a resolution of 29 July 1970, the Security Council requested the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on the following question: "What are the legal consequences for States of the continued presence of South Africa in Namibia, notwithstanding Security Council resolution 276(1970)?"

(For further information and text of resolution 284(1970), see pp. 737-40 and 754.)

Pursuant to Article 66 of the Statute of the Court,<sup>2</sup> the States entitled to appear before the Court were notified that the Court was prepared to receive from them written statements furnishing information on the question. By Orders made on 5 and 28 August 1970, the President of the Court fixed 23 September 1970 as the time-limit for the submission of such statements; this limit was subsequently extended to 19 November 1970. Written statements were received from the following 12 States: Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, Hungary, India, the Netherlands, Nigeria, Pakistan, Poland, South Africa, the United States and Yugoslavia. In addition, the United Nations Secretary-General sent the Court documents likely to throw light upon the question, as well as a written statement.

In December 1970, the States entitled to appear before the Court were invited to state whether they intended to submit oral statements.

At the request of the General Assembly, the Court had previously given three advisory opinions, in 1950, 1955 and 1956, on, namely, the International Status of South West Africa (in 1950), Voting Procedures on Questions relating to Reports and Petitions concerning the Territory of South West Africa (in 1955), and on the Admissibility of Hearings of Petitioners by the Committee on South West Africa (in 1956).

In 1962 and 1966, the Court had also delivered two Judgments in contentious proceedings brought by Ethiopia and Liberia against South Africa on the subject of South West Africa.<sup>3</sup>

REVIEW OF THE ROLE OF THE COURT

By a letter of 14 August 1970, 12 States—Argentina, Australia, Canada, Finland, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Liberia, Mexico, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay—requested that the General Assembly include in the agenda of its 1970 session an item concerning review of the role of the International Court of Justice.

In making this request, these States maintained that the lack of business currently before the Court, which was not commensurate with either the distinction of the Judges or the needs of the international community, was evidence of the fact that a review of the Court's role was urgently needed. They proposed that an ad hoc committee be established by the Assembly to study the obstacles to the satisfactory functioning of the Court and ways and means of removing them, including an exploration of additional possibilities for use of the Court. Such a study, which would complement the revision that the Judges were undertaking of the Court's Rules, could appropriately be undertaken during the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, these States felt.

The Assembly decided to include the item in its agenda, and allocated it to its Sixth (Legal) Committee, which discussed the role of the Court at 16 meetings held between 29 October and 18 November 1970. On 15 December, the Assembly decided to transmit to the Court the records of its discussions and proposals, to solicit the opinions of Member States concerning the role of the Court, and to include the question in its provisional agenda for 1971.

DISCUSSION IN SIXTH COMMITTEE

During discussion in the Sixth Committee, a number of representatives held that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations was an appropriate time to review the role of the International Court of Justice, with a view to eliminating obstacles that decreased the Court's ability to fulfil the role established for it under the United Nations Charter as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations.

Other representatives, however—including those of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR—expressed doubts about the need for such a review which, in their minds, would substantially undermine the Charter. It was for the Court itself to undertake such action in order to improve its functioning, they maintained. Other members—among them France, India and Syria—considered that any review of the International Court should be approached with caution.

Some representatives maintained that the Court had not been functioning as might have been expected, and that, although the Court had obviously been intended to make a major contribution to the maintenance of peace by settling legal disputes, States had not often allowed it to make that contribution.

A number of factors were cited as being relevant to the present situation of the Court. At a very general level, these included the lack of homogeneity of the international community, international tensions and the lack of confidence between States. Lebanon was one of several States which observed that the Court's malaise was linked to the inability of the United Nations to settle, through political decisions, those international conflicts which called for a solution at the political level.

Several Members, among them Kenya and Mexico, maintained that one of the reasons why States hesitated to make greater use of the Court was that they doubted the adequacy of existing international law to meet their needs. This, it was argued, was because the law had not developed sufficiently rapidly to meet the changing needs and circumstances of contemporary life. Particular mention was made of the accession to independence of many States which had introduced new forms of civilization and new legal systems.

On the other hand, it was pointed out, in particular by Spain, that thanks to the efforts made during the past 25 years in the field of progressive development and codification of international law by the International Law Commission and various other United Nations organs and conferences, juridical norms were gradually emerging which corresponded to contemporary reality. Mention was made in that connexion of international decolonization law, international development law and international coexistence law.

A number of representatives, including those of the Byelorussian SSR, Ceylon, India, Iraq, Mexico, Pakistan, Poland and Syria, considered that the composition of the Court had not changed sufficiently to correspond to the evolving world situation and that its membership should be enlarged or modified to reflect the structure of the international community. In this connexion, it was noted that of the 42 judges elected to the Court since its establishment, 17 had come from Europe, 14 from the Americas, eight from Asia and Australia and three from Africa.

However, Australia and others doubted whether greater use would have been made of the Court if its composition had been different, and also observed that the composition of the Court had in fact changed significantly over the years, in response to the changes in the international community.

The question of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court was discussed by a number of representatives. It was noted that only 46 of the 127 States Members of the United Nations had declared their acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court, and that a number of declarations of acceptance were accompanied by crippling reservations which made them virtually illusory.

Various Members, among them Denmark and France, felt that it was desirable to encourage States either to accept the Court's compulsory jurisdiction if they had not already done so or to withdraw or attenuate the reservations accompanying their acceptance, and to urge them to accept the inclusion, in the bilateral or multilateral treaties to which they were parties, of clauses providing for compulsory recourse to the Court for the interpretation and application of those treaties or the settlement of disputes arising from them.

On the other hand, it was held, particularly by Jamaica, that the lack of acceptance of the Court's compulsory jurisdiction should not be over-emphasized, since the important point was the degree to which States were prepared to settle their disputes judicially.

Several Members, among them Bulgaria, Romania and the USSR, stated that the optional jurisdiction of the Court was the rule to which the declaration of acceptance of the Court's compulsory jurisdiction was the exception; the decisive rule with regard to judicial settlement and also arbitration was that jurisdiction in the international order was subject to the will of States. The Czechoslovakian representative observed that to make the Court's jurisdiction compulsory would amount to making it a supranational organ with greater power than the Security Council, which would be unacceptable.

A number of references were made to factors relating to the procedures, methods of work and competence of the Court. One suggestion made was that the Court itself could help to speed up its proceedings.

With regard to the competence of the Court in contentious matters, some Members, among them India and the United States, suggested that the provisions of the Court's Statute according to which only States could be parties in cases before the Court might be unduly limitative, and that it might be desirable to give international organizations the same prerogative. The Ukrainian SSR, among other Members, held that the activities of international organizations were strictly limited by their constitutional provisions and that it was doubtful whether their members would accept such an innovation.

Several Members, including the United Arab Republic and the United Kingdom, favoured enlarging the category of organizations authorized to request advisory opinions of the Court in order to include all the specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations. The Byelorussian SSR, however, felt that this might overload the Court with cases of a regional or secondary interest and jeopardize the unity of its jurisdiction. It was also suggested that States be given an opportunity to request advisory opinions from the Court. Other Members felt that the Court's authority would be diminished if it became merely a legal consultation office giving advisory opinions that were not binding on States.

Among the other ideas put forward was that of establishing regional chambers of the Court. This was criticized as costly and unbusiness-like by some States, however.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Four draft resolutions were introduced in the Sixth Committee with regard to action to be taken on the review of the role of the Court.

These reflected three points of view with regard to the problem: (1) to establish an ad hoc body to study ways of enhancing the effectiveness of the court; (2) to terminate the proceedings and transmit to the Court the views expressed during the debate; and (3) to postpone a decision until the 1971 session of the Assembly and in the meantime to obtain from Member States and States party to the Statute of the Court, and if possible from the Court itself, views and suggestions concerning the role of the Court.

The first viewpoint was reflected in two draft resolutions. One, sponsored by 22 States, would have had the Assembly establish, in 1970, an ad hoc body composed of 25 Member States, to be appointed by the President of the Assembly, to study obstacles to the satisfactory functioning of the Court and to submit a preliminary report to the Assembly in 1971. This draft was sponsored by Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Cyprus, Finland, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Sweden, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay.

Another proposal, sponsored by Tunisia, would have had the Assembly establish a working group of 21 Member States to prepare a preliminary comprehensive report on the Court, which would be considered by the Assembly at its 1971 session.

The second viewpoint was expressed in a draft resolution sponsored by Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR. By this text, the Assembly would transmit to the Court the records on the discussion in the Sixth Committee, together with the proposals and draft resolutions submitted to it.

The third point of view found expression in a draft resolution submitted by France. By this, the Assembly would: (1) request Member States and States parties to the Statute of the Court to submit to the General Assembly in 1971 their comments on ways of strengthening the role of the Court; (2) request the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the basis of these views and (3) inscribe the item on the review of the Court on the provisional agenda for the 1971 session.

A series of amendments to the 22-power draft also aimed at seeking the views of States, as well as of the Court before taking further action. These envisaged calling for deletion of the provision by which the Assembly would establish an ad hoc committee. Instead, the Assembly would invite States to submit views and suggestions concerning the role of the Court to the Secretary-General, who would prepare a report based on these views, and it would include the question of review of the Court in the provisional agenda for its 1971 session. These amendments, jointly sponsored by the Central African Republic, France, Gabon, Guyana, Kenya, Sierra Leone, Uganda and Zambia, were accepted by the 22 powers.

On 18 November 1970, the 22-power draft, as amended by the eight powers, was adopted by acclamation by the Sixth Committee. The Committee also decided, without vote, to include a statement in its report to the effect that the consensus draft resolution had been adopted on the understanding that it was without prejudice to whatever action might be taken in 1971.

On 15 December 1970, the text recommended by the Sixth Committee was unanimously adopted by the General Assembly as resolution 2723 (XXV).

The Assembly thereby: (a) recalled that the International Court of Justice was the principal judicial organ of the United Nations; (b) referred to the desirability of finding ways and means of enhancing the effectiveness of the Court; and (c) noted that a study of the Court would in no way impair its authority but should seek to facilitate the greatest possible contribution by the Court to the advancement of the rule of law and the promotion of justice among nations.

The Assembly then: (1) invited Member States and States parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice to submit to the Secretary-General, by 1 July 1971, views and suggestions concerning the role of the Court on the basis of a questionnaire to be prepared by the Secretary-General; (2) requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Court the records of the discussions and proposals in the Sixth Committee on this question; (3) invited the Court to state its views, should it so desire; (4) requested the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report in the light of the opinions expressed by States and by the Court; and (5) decided to include the question of a review of the role of the International Court of Justice in the provisional agenda of its 1971 session.

The Assembly also decided, without vote, to take note of the statement in the report of the Sixth Committee that it had adopted a consensus draft resolution on the understanding that it was without prejudice to whatever action might be taken in 1971.

CHAPTER II

PRINCIPLES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW CONCERNING FRIENDLY RELATIONS AND CO-OPERATION AMONG STATES

On 24 October 1970, on the occasion of the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, the General Assembly approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

In approving the Declaration, the Assembly reaffirmed that the maintenance of international peace and security and the development of friendly relations and co-operation among nations were among the fundamental purposes of the United Nations. It then proclaimed, and provided an elaboration of, seven principles which were to constitute basic principles of international law, and appealed to all States to be guided by them in their international conduct.

These principles were as follows:

(a) The principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations;

(b) The principle that States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered;

(c) The duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter;

(d) The duty of States to co-operate with one another in accordance with the Charter;

(e) The principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples;

(f) The principle of sovereign equality of States;

(g) The principle that States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter.

These seven principles had first been set down by the General Assembly in its resolution of 18 December 1962.<sup>1</sup> By the same resolution, the Assembly had decided to undertake a study of the principles, with a view to their progressive development and their codification, in

By a resolution of 16 December 1963, the General Assembly established a Special Committee on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States, which was to study and report on four of the principles.<sup>2</sup> The report of the Special Committee was considered by the Assembly at its 1965 session. On 20 December 1965, the Assembly reconstituted the Special Committee and requested it to complete the consideration and elaboration of all seven principles set forth in its resolution of 18 December 1962.<sup>3</sup>

The Special Committee held sessions in 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1969. It submitted a comprehensive report to the General Assembly at its 1969 session. On 8 December 1969, after considering the report, the Assembly requested the Special Committee to continue its work and endeavour to resolve the remaining questions relating to the elaboration of the seven principles, in order to complete its work and to submit to the General Assembly at its 1970 session a comprehensive report containing a draft Declaration on all seven principles.<sup>4</sup>

Earlier, on 31 October 1969, the Assembly had invited the Special Committee to expedite its work with a view to facilitating the adoption of an appropriate document by the Assembly during its twenty-fifth anniversary session.<sup>5</sup>

In accordance with these General Assembly requests, the Special Committee held informal consultations during early 1970 and then met in Geneva, Switzerland. On 1 May 1970, it approved the text of a draft Declaration of principles, which was subsequently approved by the Assembly. (For text of the Declaration, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The discussions and decisions of the Special Committee and of the General Assembly regarding the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States are summarized below.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Members of the Special Committee on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States held consultations preceding the 1970 session of the Committee. In particular, members of the drafting committee held informal consultations at Geneva from 16 to 20 February 1970.

At its 1970 session, held in Geneva from 31 March to 1 May 1970, the Special Committee concentrated on completing the work on the formulation of the principle of the prohibition of the threat or use of force and the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples. The Committee then took up the other principles and the preparation of the preamble and of general provisions of the draft Declaration on all seven principles.

The Special Committee decided to dispense with the general debate which at earlier sessions had preceded the consideration of the principles referred to it. Instead, consultations which were co-ordinated by the Chairman of the Special Committee were held at an informal level.

No new written proposal or amendment was submitted with regard to the principle of the prohibition of the threat or use of force. The Special Committee took as a basis for its work the report of the drafting committee on the principle adopted by the Special Committee in 1969, which included a number of proposals and amendments submitted to the Special Committee at its 1966, 1967 and 1969 sessions.<sup>6</sup>

During its informal consultations, the drafting committee considered a number of pending questions concerning the principle. Special attention was focused on the problems of: the use of force in territorial disputes and boundary problems; organization of armed bands and instigation of civil strife and terrorist acts; military occupation and non-recognition of situations brought about by the illegal threat or use of force; and military, political, economic and other forms of coercion.

There was agreement among members regarding the text on the need to prohibit force in territorial disputes. Different views were expressed, however, on whether the concept "lines of territorial demarcation" should be a corollary of the general principle prohibiting the threat or use of force.

On another point, it was held by some members that the use of volunteers in the context of a liberation struggle waged in exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination should be excluded from the prohibition against the organization of armed bands. It was agreed that every State had the duty to refrain from involvement in civil strife and terrorist acts in another State. Representatives also discussed the proper place in the Declaration for the approved text on military, political, economic and other forms of coercion; the suggestion that it be included in a chapter on general provisions received broad support.

The Special Committee considered the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples on the basis of the report of the drafting committee adopted by the Special Committee in 1969.<sup>7</sup> The report contained points of agreement on certain elements of the principle, points on which no agreement was reached, and texts of proposals and amendments submitted to the Special Committee at its 1966, 1967 and 1969 sessions. At its 1970 session, the Special Committee considered suggestions relating to the implementation of the principle by a State with respect to peoples within its jurisdiction, and the criteria for applicability of the principle.

There was agreement that the principle was a vitally important one, and during numerous informal consultations an effort was made to draft a compromise formula that would take into account the close inter-relationship between its various elements. The view was expressed that the formulation of the principle should include the following: that all peoples had equal rights; that they had the right freely to determine their economic, social and cultural development; and that every State had a duty to assist in the implementation of those rights, which were laid down in the United Nations Charter and in many General Assembly and Security Council resolutions.

Compromise texts on the above two principles were worked out in informal consultations.

The Special Committee also dealt with the consensus texts on the other five principles, which had been elaborated at earlier sessions of the Special Committee.

At its 1966 session, the Special Committee had approved texts on: the principle that States settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice were not endangered; the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State in accordance with the United Nations Charter; and the principle of sovereign equality of States.<sup>8</sup>

At its 1967 session, the Special Committee had reached agreement on the texts of the principle concerning the duty of States to co-operate with one another in accordance with the Charter, and the principle that States fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter.<sup>9</sup> Texts on these principles were incorporated into the text of the draft Declaration without changes.

The Special Committee also dealt with the preparation of the preamble and general provisions of the draft Declaration.

After considering the solutions reached at the informal meetings, the drafting committee adopted a report containing a draft Declaration on all seven principles. On 1 May 1970, the Special Committee approved the report of the drafting committee.

At that time, the Special Committee heard statements, specifying the position of their Governments on the outcome of the work of the 1970 session of the Special Committee, by the representatives of the following States: Argentina, Australia, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Italy, Japan, Kenya, Madagascar, Mexico, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Syria, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United States, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

The Special Committee decided that the draft Declaration was to be read in conjunction with these statements, which were included in its report.

The Special Committee also recommended that the General Assembly consider titling the Declaration as follows: "Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Peaceful and Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations."

In addition, the Special Committee decided to authorize its Chairman to convoke an informal meeting of representatives of members of the Committee in order to ascertain the position of Governments of States members of the Committee as regarded the final adoption of the text of the draft Declaration.

At the informal meeting, held on 15 September 1970 at United Nations Headquarters, New York, the representatives reaffirmed their approval of the text of the draft Declaration.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The report of the 1970 session of the Special Committee, containing the draft Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, was considered by the General Assembly at its 1970 session, mainly in its Sixth (Legal) Committee.

Introducing the report in the Sixth Committee, the representative of Mexico, on behalf of the Chairman of the Special Committee, stated that the draft Declaration contained in the report would be the most significant document to be adopted at the commemorative session. Observing that the subtle balance of the text of the draft Declaration was the necessary prerequisite for its unanimous endorsement by all members of the Special Committee, he expressed the wish that it be approved unanimously by the General Assembly.

During discussion in the Sixth Committee, the representatives of 79 Governments made statements in which they elaborated certain views, interpretations and positions of their respective Governments concerning the formulation of the draft Declaration. These statements were recorded in the summary records of the Sixth Committee, and it was understood that the text of the Declaration should be read in conjunction with them.

Although various views were expressed, most of the representatives stressed that the Declaration was an important step in the progressive development and codification of international law, which would contribute to the strengthening of world peace and international security and the development of friendly co-operation among all States. Members were unanimous in their opinion that the Declaration was a worthy contribution to the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations.

The Sixth Committee reached a consensus that the title of the Declaration should read as follows: "Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations."

A draft resolution which had as its annex the text of the Declaration was sponsored by the following 64 States: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Burundi, the Byelorussian SSR, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Ceylon, Chile, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Ghana, Greece, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Italy, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, the Philippines, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Singapore, Southern Yemen, Sweden, Syria, Tunisia, Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United States, Yemen, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

The draft resolution was approved without objection by the Sixth Committee on 28 September 1970.

On 24 October 1970, the General Assembly adopted the draft resolution without vote as its resolution 2625 (XXV).

By the preambular part of the resolution, the Assembly: (a) recalled its previous resolutions affirming the importance of the progressive development and codification of the principles of international law concerning friendly relations and co-operation among States; (b) emphasized the paramount importance of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security and for the development of friendly relations and co-operation among States; (c) expressed its conviction that the adoption of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations during the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations would contribute to the strengthening of world peace and constitute a landmark in the development of international law and of relations among States, in promoting the rule of law among nations and particularly the universal application of the principles embodied in the Charter; and (d) considered the desirability of the wide dissemination of the text of the Declaration.

By the operative part of the resolution, the Assembly: (1) approved the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, as annexed to the resolution; (2) expressed its appreciation to the Special Committee on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States for its work resulting in the elaboration of the Declaration; (3) recommended that efforts be made to ensure that the Declaration became generally known.

Emphasizing the paramount importance of the Charter of the United Nations for the maintenance of international peace and security and for the development of friendly relations and co-operation among States,

Deeply convinced that the adoption of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations would contribute to the strengthening of world peace and constitute a landmark in the development of international law and of relations among States, in promoting the rule of law among nations and particularly the universal application of the principles embodied in the Charter,

ANNEX

DECLARATION ON PRINCIPLES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW CONCERNING FRIENDLY RELATIONS AND CO-OPERATION AMONG STATES IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

PREAMBLE

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming in the terms of the Charter of the United Nations that the maintenance of international peace and security and the development of friendly relations and co-operation between nations are among the fundamental purposes of the United Nations,

Recalling that the peoples of the United Nations are determined to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours,

Bearing in mind the importance of maintaining and strengthening international peace founded upon freedom, equality, justice and respect for fundamental human rights and of developing friendly relations among nations irrespective of their political, economic and social systems or the levels of their development,

Bearing in mind also the paramount importance of the Charter of the United Nations in the promotion of the rule of law among nations,

Considering that the faithful observance of the principles of international law concerning friendly relations and co-operation among States and the fulfilment in good faith of the obligations assumed by States, in accordance with the Charter, is of the greatest importance for the maintenance of international peace and security and for the implementation of the other purposes of the United Nations,

Noting that the great political, economic and social changes and scientific progress which have taken place in the world since the adoption of the Charter give increased importance to these principles and to the need for their more effective application in the conduct of States wherever carried on,

Recalling the established principle that outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, is not subject to national appropriation by claim of sovereignty, by means of use or occupation, or by any other means, and mindful of the fact that consideration is being given in the United Nations to the question of establishing other appropriate provisions similarly inspired,

Convinced that the strict observance by States of the obligation not to intervene in the affairs of any other State is an essential condition to ensure that nations live together in peace with one another, since the practice of any form of intervention not only violates the spirit and letter of the Charter, but also leads to the creation of situations which threaten international peace and security,

Recalling the duty of States to refrain in their international relations from military, political, economic or any other form of coercion aimed against the political independence or territorial integrity of any State,

Considering it essential that all States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

Considering it equally essential that all States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in accordance with the Charter,

Reaffirming, in accordance with the Charter, the basic importance of sovereign equality and stressing that the purposes of the United Nations can be implemented only if States enjoy sovereign equality and comply fully with the requirements of this principle in their international relations,

Convinced that the subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a major obstacle to the promotion of international peace and security,

Convinced that the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples constitutes a significant contribution to contemporary international law, and that its effective application is of paramount importance for the promotion of friendly relations among States, based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality,

Convinced in consequence that any attempt aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a State or country or at its political independence is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter,

Considering the provisions of the Charter as a whole and taking into account the role of relevant resolutions adopted by the competent organs of the United Nations relating to the content of the principles,

Considering that the progressive development and codification of the following principles:

(a) The principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations,

(b) The principle that States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered,

(c) The duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter,

(d) The duty of States to co-operate with one another in accordance with the Charter,

(e) The principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

(f) The principle of sovereign equality of States,

(g) The principle that States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter, so as to secure their more effective application within the international community, would promote the realization of the purposes of the United Nations,

Having considered the principles of international law relating to friendly relations and co-operation among States,

1. Solemnly proclaims the following principles:

The principle that States shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations

Every State has the duty to refrain in its international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations. Such a threat or use of force constitutes a violation of international law and the Charter of the United Nations and shall never be employed as a means of settling international issues.

A war of aggression constitutes a crime against the peace, for which there is responsibility under international law.

In accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations, States have the duty to refrain from propaganda for wars of aggression.

Every State has the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force to violate the existing international boundaries of another State or as a means of solving international disputes, including territorial disputes and problems concerning frontiers of States.

Every State likewise has the duty to refrain from the threat or use of force to violate international lines of demarcation, such as armistice lines, established by or pursuant to an international agreement to which it is a party or which it is otherwise bound to respect. Nothing in the foregoing shall be construed as prejudicing the positions of the parties concerned with regard to the status and effects of such lines under their special regimes or as affecting their temporary character.

States have a duty to refrain from acts of reprisal involving the use of force.

Every State has the duty to refrain from any forcible action which deprives peoples referred to in the elaboration of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of their right to self-determination and freedom and independence.

Every State has the duty to refrain from organizing or encouraging the organization of irregular forces or armed bands, including mercenaries, for incursion into the territory of another State.

Every State has the duty to refrain from organizing, instigating, assisting or participating in acts of civil strife or terrorist acts in another State or acquiescing in organized activities within its territory directed towards the commission of such acts, when the acts referred to in the present paragraph involve a threat or use of force.

The territory of a State shall not be the object of military occupation resulting from the use of force in contravention of the provisions of the Charter. The territory of a State shall not be the object of acquisition by another State resulting from the threat or use of force. No territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognized as legal.

Nothing in the foregoing shall be construed as affecting:

(a) Provisions of the Charter or any international agreement prior to the Charter régime and valid under international law; or

(b) The powers of the Security Council under the Charter.

All States shall pursue in good faith negotiations for the early conclusion of a universal treaty on general and complete disarmament under effective international control and strive to adopt appropriate measures to reduce international tensions and strengthen confidence among States.

All States shall comply in good faith with their obligations under the generally recognized principles and rules of international law with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, and shall endeavour to make the United Nations security system based on the Charter more effective.

Nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as enlarging or diminishing in any way the scope of the provisions of the Charter concerning cases in which the use of force is lawful.

The principle that States shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered

Every State shall settle its international disputes with other States by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered.

States shall accordingly seek early and just settlement of their international disputes by negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements or other peaceful means of their choice. In seeking such a settlement the parties shall agree upon such peaceful means as may be appropriate to the circumstances and nature of the dispute.

The parties to a dispute have the duty, in the event of failure to reach a solution by any one of the above peaceful means, to continue to seek a settlement of the dispute by other peaceful means agreed upon by them.

States parties to an international dispute, as well as other States, shall refrain from any action which may aggravate the situation so as to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, and shall act in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

International disputes shall be settled on the basis of the sovereign equality of States and in accordance with the principle of free choice of means. Recourse to, or acceptance of, a settlement procedure freely agreed to by States with regard to existing or future disputes to which they are parties shall not be regarded as incompatible with sovereign equality.

Nothing in the foregoing paragraphs prejudices or derogates from the applicable provisions of the Charter, in particular those relating to the pacific settlement of international disputes.

The principle concerning the duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any State, in accordance with the Charter

No State or group of States has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other State. Consequently, armed intervention and all other forms of interference or attempted threats against the personality of the State or against its political, economic and cultural elements, are in violation of international law.

No State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights and to secure from it advantages of any kind. Also, no State shall organize, assist, foment, finance, incite or tolerate subversive, terrorist or armed activities directed towards the violent overthrow of the regime of another State, or interfere in civil strife in another State.

The use of force to deprive peoples of their national identity constitutes a violation of their inalienable rights and of the principle of non-intervention.

Every State has an inalienable right to choose its political, economic, social and cultural systems, without interference in any form by another State.

Nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as affecting the relevant provisions of the Charter relating to the maintenance of international peace and security.

The duty of States to co-operate with one another in accordance with the Charter States have the duty to co-operate with one another, irrespective of the differences in their political, economic and social systems, in the various spheres of international relations, in order to maintain international peace and security and to promote international economic stability and progress, the general welfare of nations and international co-operation free from discrimination based on such differences.

To this end:

(a) States shall co-operate with other States in the maintenance of international peace and security;

(b) States shall co-operate in the promotion of universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and in the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination and all forms of religious intolerance;

(c) States shall conduct their international relations in the economic, social, cultural, technical and trade fields in accordance with the principles of sovereign equality and non-intervention;

(d) States Members of the United Nations have the duty to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the United Nations in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Charter.

States should co-operate in the economic, social and cultural fields as well as in the field of science and technology and for the promotion of international cultural and educational progress. States should co-operate in the promotion of economic growth throughout the world, especially that of the developing countries.

The principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples

By virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all peoples have the right freely to determine, without external interference, their political status and to pursue their economic, social and cultural development, and every State has the duty to respect this right in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

Every State has the duty to promote, through joint and separate action, realization of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter, and to render assistance to the United Nations in carrying out the responsibilities entrusted to it by the Charter regarding the implementation of the principle, in order:

(a) To promote friendly relations and co-operation among States; and

(b) To bring a speedy end to colonialism, having due regard to the freely expressed will of the peoples concerned; and bearing in mind that subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constitutes a violation of the principle, as well as a denial of fundamental human rights, and is contrary to the Charter.

Every State has the duty to promote through joint and separate action universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the Charter.

The establishment of a sovereign and independent State, the free association or integration with an independent State or the emergence into any other political status freely determined by a people constitute modes of implementing the right of self-determination by that people.

Every State has the duty to refrain from any forcible action which deprives peoples referred to above in the elaboration of the present principle of their right to self-determination and freedom and independence. In their actions against, and resistance to, such forcible action in pursuit of the exercise of their right to self-determination, such peoples are entitled to seek and to receive support in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter.

The territory of a colony or other Non-Self-Governing Territory has, under the Charter, a status separate and distinct from the territory of the State administering it; and such separate and distinct status under the Charter shall exist until the people of the colony or Non-Self-Governing Territory have exercised their right of self-determination in accordance with the Charter, and particularly its purposes and principles.

Nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as authorizing or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign and independent States conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples as described above and thus possessed of a government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction as to race, creed or colour.

Every State shall refrain from any action aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of any other State or country.

The principle of sovereign equality of States

All States enjoy sovereign equality. They have equal rights and duties and are equal members of the international community, notwithstanding differences of an economic, social, political or other nature.

In particular, sovereign equality includes the following elements:

- (a) States are juridically equal;
- (b) Each State enjoys the rights inherent in full sovereignty;
- (c) Each State has the duty to respect the personality of other States;
- (d) The territorial integrity and political independence of the State are inviolable;
- (e) Each State has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems;
- (f) Each State has the duty to comply fully and in good faith with its international obligations and to live in peace with other States.

The principle that States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter

Every State has the duty to fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by it in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations.

Every State has the duty to fulfil in good faith its obligations under the generally recognized principles and rules of international law.

Every State has the duty to fulfil in good faith its obligations under international agreements valid under the generally recognized principles and rules of international law.

Where obligations arising under international agreements are in conflict with the obligations of Members of the United Nations under the Charter of the United Nations, the obligations under the Charter shall prevail.

GENERAL PART

2. Declares that:

In their interpretation and application the above principles are interrelated and each principle should be construed in the context of the other principles.

Nothing in this Declaration shall be construed as prejudicing in any manner the provisions of the Charter or the rights and duties of Member States under the Charter or the rights of peoples under the Charter, taking into account the elaboration of these rights in this Declaration.

3. Declares further that:

The principles of the Charter which are embodied in this Declaration constitute basic principles of international law, and consequently appeals to all States to be guided by these principles in their international conduct and to develop their mutual relations on the basis of the strict observance of these principles.

CHAPTER III

THE QUESTION OF DEFINING AGGRESSION

CONSIDERATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

In accordance with a General Assembly decision of 12 December 1969,<sup>1</sup> the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression continued its work in 1970.

Meeting at Geneva, Switzerland, from 13 July to 14 August 1970, the Special Committee discussed the three draft proposals which had been submitted to it at its 1969 session, namely:

- (1) a USSR proposal; (2) a 13-power proposal (Colombia, Cyprus, Ecuador, Ghana, Guyana, Haiti, Iran, Madagascar, Mexico, Spain, Uganda, Uruguay and Yugoslavia); and (3) a six-power proposal (Australia, Canada, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States).<sup>2</sup>

After a general discussion of the three proposals, the Special Committee decided to consider them paragraph by paragraph according to the concepts on which they were based.

The main points considered by the Special Committee were the following:

(1) Application of the definition of aggression:

- (a) the definition and the power of the Security Council; (b) political entities to which the definition should apply.

(2) Acts proposed for inclusion in the definition:

- (a) the question of "direct or indirect" aggression;

(b) declaration of war; (c) use of weapons of mass destruction; (d) invasion, attack, military occupation and annexation; (e) bombardment, attack on land, sea or air forces, blockade and the use of other forms of armed force; (f) armed bands, volunteer forces and terrorist and subversive activities.

(3) The principle of priority (first use of force).

(4) Aggressive intent.

(5) Legitimate use of force: (a) self-defence; (b) organs empowered to use force.

(6) Proportionality (the question of the limits of self-defence).

(7) Acts considered not to constitute acts of aggression: the right of peoples to self-determination.

(8) Legal consequences of aggression: (a) non-recognition of territorial gains; (b) the question of responsibility.

The Special Committee established an eight-member working group to formulate a definition of aggression. However, for lack of time it was unable to examine the Working Group's report, which it therefore decided to annex to its own report to the General Assembly. The Special Committee also decided to recommend to the General Assembly that it be asked to resume its work as early as possible in 1971.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The report on its 1970 session by the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression was considered by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session.

The report was referred to the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee, where it was discussed at 12 meetings held between 20 October and 2 November 1970.

VIEWS ON GENERAL ASPECTS OF QUESTION OF DEFINING AGGRESSION

During the discussion, a number of representatives, including those of Ceylon, Cyprus and Poland, stated that the formulation of a definition of aggression would help considerably towards the maintenance of international peace and security. It was said that in addition to contributing to the progressive development of international law, especially with regard to the principle of non-use of force, a legal definition would make it possible to consolidate the mechanism of collective security based on the Charter of the United Nations; it would not only dissuade potential aggressors but also protect States against the arbitrary or automatic characterization of the use of force as aggression.

Some Members, however—China, Israel and Sweden, for instance—expressed doubts about the usefulness of a definition of aggression. They held that there was no urgency to achieve a definition shortly after the adoption by the General Assembly of the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States (see pp. 784-92), which included provisions relating to the prohibition of the use of force, self-determination and legal consequences of aggression.

The representatives of Canada, Hungary and Syria, among others, felt that the Special Committee had made encouraging progress in the three years since its establishment, considering the vain attempts that had been made for 40 years to define aggression. It was observed that at the Committee's 1970 session the sponsors of the various draft proposals had clarified their positions and the gap between different points of view had been narrowed. It was also said that the area of agreement that had emerged from the Committee's 1970 session was much wider than was indicated in its report, which could only record official positions. A majority of the speakers therefore supported the proposal that the Special Committee should resume its work as early as possible in 1971.

In the opinion of some representatives, including those of Finland and Japan, the progress made by the Special Committee warranted neither optimism nor pessimism; the few common factors which had emerged from the Committee's 1970 session concerned only the less difficult questions. The representative of Liberia felt that the nature of the subject and the current political climate made it advisable to suspend the Committee's work for a year or two. Cameroon considered that the Committee's mandate should not be renewed unless the Committee was specifically requested to submit to the 1971 session of the General Assembly conclusions recommending a compromise between the various tendencies which would serve as the basis for a generally acceptable definition.

With regard to the procedure to be followed in preparing and adopting a definition of aggression, many Members, including Hungary, Japan, Kuwait, Mongolia and the United States, stressed that such a definition must be capable of attracting overwhelming support among Members of the United Nations, including the permanent members of the Security Council; in other words, it must be a consensus definition.

Other Members, such as Cyprus, Iraq and Uganda, were also in favour of working for unanimity. However, while recognizing the value of a mutually acceptable text, they believed that if unanimity could not be achieved the Special Committee should vote on controversial matters so that a draft definition that commanded a large majority of its members could be produced.

The representatives of the Central African Republic, Colombia and Zambia were among those who considered that it was unrealistic to try to adopt a definition by consensus; moreover, they said, it was not essential that the definition be acceptable to the permanent members of the Security Council, since there could be no question of accepting any veto in the progressive development of international law.

It was also maintained that a definition approved by a large majority of States would constitute a weighty legal basis that could not be ignored by the United Nations bodies responsible for maintaining international peace and security.

VIEWS ON CONTENT OF DEFINITION

Many representatives, including those of Belgium, China, Malaysia and Uruguay, observed that any definition of aggression should in no way curtail or fetter the Security Council's discretionary power under Article 39 of the United Nations Charter,<sup>3</sup> that is, its freedom of judgement in determining whether any specific situation involved an act of aggression. It was said in this connexion that the definition was not to be applied automatically by the Council, and that a definition adopted by the General Assembly could never enjoy binding legal force, even though it would have a definite moral value for public opinion and for the Council.

On the other hand, Austria, the Central African Republic and Iraq argued—as did others—that the definition ought to be worded in such a way as to prevent the Security Council from making arbitrary decisions. In the opinion of some of these Members, once the General Assembly had adopted a definition, based strictly on the Charter or on uncontested principles of international law, it would be binding on all bodies, including the Security Council. Whereas Austria considered that the Council should be free to determine the existence of an act of aggression in all cases not fully covered by a list of acts constituting aggression to be included in the definition, Mexico doubted if the Council had the right to add other acts to the list. Some Members, Barbados and Haiti, for instance, felt that the reference to the Security Council's power was irrelevant to the definition since the Assembly and the Council would automatically be guided by any definition that might be produced.

Some Members, including Austria and the United Kingdom, maintained that the definition of aggression should be applicable not only to States but also to other political entities. It was said that it should not be possible to argue that, by reason of the disputed status of a particular political entity by or against which force had been used, use of force did not constitute aggression.

Other Members, including Iraq and the USSR, were opposed to the inclusion in the definition of the idea of political entities, an idea which they termed alien to the Charter. Such inclusion, it was said, could blur the distinction between international conflicts and civil wars and also encourage certain States to prevent the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination by labelling national liberation movements as aggressors.

A number of Members, including Colombia, Syria, Uganda and the USSR, held that it would be more practical to deal first with direct armed aggression and to leave the question of other forms of aggression to a later stage. It was said that while it should not be difficult to agree on what constituted the most serious and obvious cases of armed aggression, to try to draw up a definition of aggression in the widest sense would raise many difficulties. Most of those Members specified that they attached great importance to the question of indirect aggression, which was of particular interest to small countries, which were especially vulnerable to that form of aggression, and to countries still under colonial domination.

Other Members, including the United Kingdom and the United States, maintained that any definition must cover all uses of force, whether or not they were "direct." It was said that the labels "indirect aggression" for covert forms of aggression and "direct aggression" for overt armed attack were at variance with the Charter. The most serious threats to international peace and security currently stemmed from the less direct and less overt uses of force; a partial definition covering only "direct" aggression would therefore not be acceptable.

The representatives of Sweden and Yugoslavia, among others, felt that, at the current stage, the definition should cover only the use of force, without qualifying it as "direct" or "indirect." In the opinion of some representatives, including those of Cyprus and France, the proposed definition of indirect aggression could not be exhaustive and therefore the definition of aggression should include a minimum list of the most serious cases of aggression under Articles 39 and 51 of the Charter;<sup>4</sup> the inclusion of certain serious cases of indirect aggression, for instance the infiltration of armed bands, would be acceptable in such a list.

Afghanistan and Pakistan were among Members holding that the definition should cover various other forms of aggression, such as economic, financial, political, cultural and ideological pressures. The value of including such forms was contested by other Members, however.

In the opinion of some Members, including Bolivia and Greece, a declaration of war was intrinsically an act of aggression. Others, Canada and Ceylon for instance, felt that a declaration of war did not necessarily constitute aggression per se and was not necessarily relevant to the existence of aggression.

Some Members, including Libya, considered that weapons of mass destruction should be expressly mentioned in a definition, while others thought that weapons represented only a means of committing aggression and were not a constituent element of it.

The United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia, among others, considered that invasion, attack, military occupation and annexation of territory constituted flagrant acts of aggression which should be incorporated in any definition. An opposing view was expressed by Canada and others, which held that military occupation and annexation were essentially consequences of either the legitimate use of force or acts of aggression and therefore should not be included. The representative of Romania maintained that the definition should mention a form of aggression whereby a State made its territory available to another State for the purpose of an armed attack against a third State.

The introduction of the concept of priority (first use of force) into the definition did not meet, in principle, any opposition. However, different views were expressed regarding the degree of importance which should be accorded to that concept in the definition.

Greece, Iran, Iraq and the USSR, among others, held that the priority principle, which was sanctioned by many international instruments and was based directly on the provisions of the Charter, constituted the only objective criterion applicable in determining the aggressor; it laid the burden of proof on the State that attacked first, and its purpose was to prevent States from committing acts of aggression in the guise of preventive wars. Other Members, including Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom, maintained that the priority principle should figure in the definition only as one element among others.

A number of representatives, including those of Colombia, Cyprus, France and Iraq, were opposed to including the element of aggressive intent in the definition. It was observed that the element of priority was irreconcilable with the subjective element of intent; the two elements, therefore, should not be placed on the same footing in the definition, even though it was conceivable that the Security Council might take into consideration expressions of intent by the States involved. It was pointed out that the inclusion of the concept of aggressive intent in the definition would have the effect of placing the burden of proof on the victim, and would also enable the aggressor to take shelter behind the definition in order to deny that he had any aggressive intent.

The representatives of Italy and the United Kingdom, among others, argued that aggressive intent was one of the most important elements in determining whether or not aggression had occurred; if intent were not recognized as an element of aggression, a limited, erroneous or unauthorized attack could unjustly be labelled as aggression. It was also said that the element of intent was not necessarily subjective: it was generally inferred, especially in criminal law, from the objective circumstances of the offence.

According to some representatives, including those of Australia and Uruguay, any definition of aggression should acknowledge that the use of force in the exercise of a State's inherent right to individual or collective self-defence did not constitute aggression. Other Members, for instance El Salvador and Uganda, felt that efforts should be made to establish the limits of the right of self-defence vested in States by virtue of Article 51 of the Charter, in order to prevent any possible ambiguity between any kind of military action and aggression in the proper sense of the word. It was said that not all breaches of the peace would give a State the right to self-defence.

Some Members, including Finland, Greece and Iran, favoured including the principle of proportionality in the definition. It was observed in that connexion that an unconditional right of self-defence could not be protective, particularly in the case of small States, since it seemed to provide the only guarantee that a defensive action would not turn into aggression. The representatives of Canada, Ghana and others said that the question of proportionality should play little part in the definition. It was pointed out that Article 51 of the Charter did not mention the principle of proportionality and placed no limitations on the means that the victim of armed aggression could use to repel the aggressor.

Some Members, Cuba and Iraq, for instance, stressed that the use of armed force by regional arrangements or agencies would be legitimate only if there had been a prior decision to that effect by the Security Council under Article 53 of the Charter.<sup>5</sup> The view was expressed, by Bulgaria among others, that the Security Council alone could decide to resort to enforcement measures involving the use of force.

Many Members including Guinea, Pakistan and Zambia, were in favour of including in the definition of aggression a provision that would make an exception for the use of force when it was necessary to ensure the exercise of the right of peoples to self-determination. Such a provision, it was said, was of great importance to countries that were prepared to support national liberation movements. Colonialism, they argued, qualified as aggression, and the use of force by dependent peoples for self-determination—for instance the organizing of armed bands and the instigation of civil strife—should be regarded as legitimate means.

Australia, Portugal and the United Kingdom were among those observing that the use of force by colonial peoples was not envisaged in the Charter system and should be excluded from the definition. In that connexion, it was noted that the question of self-determination and administration of dependent territories had been carefully regulated by the Charter, which had instituted an effective system that did not envisage the use of armed force by dependent peoples; moreover, recognition of the legitimacy of the use of force in order to give aid to dependent and oppressed peoples might provide a pretext for manifest acts of aggression.

Colombia and the Ukrainian SSR, among others, considered that the definition should contain provisions concerning the legal consequences of aggression; it should state clearly that the unlawful use of force entailed responsibility and conferred no rights. It was observed in this connexion that the principle of the non-recognition of territorial gains obtained by force had already been recognized in several international instruments and that the principle of the responsibility of the aggressor had also been embodied in international practice, for instance at the Nuremberg and Tokyo tribunals.

Other Members, such as Italy and the United Kingdom, felt that to include the legal consequences of aggression in the definition would impair the clarity of the text and the effectiveness of the guidance it was expected to provide. In this connexion, Burma suggested that it would be more appropriate to deal with the question of non-recognition of territorial gains obtained by force in the preamble of the definition, since it concerned a legal consequence of aggression and was not an element of aggression itself.

DECISION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 25 November 1970, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of its Sixth Committee, adopted without objection resolution 2644 (XXV).

The Assembly thereby recognized the widespread conviction of the need to expedite the definition of aggression, and considered the urgency of bringing the work of the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression to a successful conclusion.

The Assembly then decided that the Special Committee should resume its work as early as possible in 1971. It also decided to include the question in the provisional agenda of its 1971 session. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The resolution was based on a proposal put forward in the Sixth Committee by the following 38 Members: Algeria, Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the Central African Republic, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Kenya, the Khmer Republic,<sup>6</sup> Kuwait, Libya, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, Poland, Romania, Sierra Leone, Southern Yemen, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, Uganda, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen and Yugoslavia.

The text was approved without objection by the Sixth Committee on 2 November 1970.

<sup>6</sup> On 7 October 1970, Cambodia changed its name to the Khmer Republic.

RESOLUTION 2644 (xxv), as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/8171, adopted without objection by Assembly on 25 November 1970, meeting 1914.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression on the work of its session held at Geneva from 13 July to 14 August 1970,

Taking note of the progress made by the Special Committee in its consideration of the question of defining aggression and on the draft definition, as reflected in the report of the Special Committee,

Considering that it was not possible for the Special Committee to complete its task, in particular its consideration of the proposals concerning a draft definition of aggression submitted to the Special Committee during its sessions held in 1969 and 1970,

Considering that in its resolutions 2330 (XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2420 (XXIII) of 18 December 1968 and 2549 (XXIV) of 12 December 1969 the General Assembly recognized the widespread conviction of the need to expedite the definition of aggression,

Considering the urgency of bringing the work of the Special Committee to a successful conclusion and the desirability of achieving the definition of aggression as soon as possible,

Noting also the common desire of the members of the Special Committee to continue their work on the basis of the results achieved and to arrive at a draft definition,

1. Decides that the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression shall resume its work, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 2330(XXII), as early as possible in 1971;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Committee with the necessary facilities and services;

3. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its twenty-sixth session an item entitled "Report of the Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression."

CHAPTER IV

QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION

The International Law Commission held its twenty-second session in Geneva, Switzerland, from 4 May to 10 July 1970.

Most of the session was devoted to the consideration of the topic "relations between States and international organizations." The Commission also examined two other topics: "succession of States and Governments," and "State responsibility." Finally, it took several decisions and reached some conclusions concerning, among other things: the topic "the most-favoured-nation clause"; the question of treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between two or more international organizations; the organization of the Commission's future work; and the review of its programme of work.

The Commission's report on the work of its twenty-second session was considered by the General Assembly in 1970. The Assembly's consideration of the report was concluded on 12 November 1970 by the adoption of resolution 2634(XXV). (For details, see below.)

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION

RELATIONS BETWEEN STATES AND INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

At its twentieth (1968) and twenty-first (1969) sessions, the International Law Commission had adopted Parts I and II of its provisional draft on representatives of States to international organizations. These parts consisted of (a) a first group of 21 articles on general provisions (Part I) and on permanent missions to international organizations in general ('Part II section I'); and (b) a second group of 29 articles on facilities, privileges and immunities of permanent missions to international organizations, conduct of the permanent mission and its members, and end of functions of the permanent representative (Part II, sections II, III and IV), together with commentaries.<sup>1</sup>

At the 1970 session of the Commission, the Special Rapporteur, Abdullah El-Erian, submitted a fifth report containing a third group of draft articles, with commentaries, on permanent observers of non-member States to international organizations (Part III) and delegations to organs of international organizations and to conferences convened by international organizations (Part IV). The Special Rapporteur also submitted a working paper on temporary observer delegations and conferences not convened by international organizations; however, the Commission did not consider that it should take up the matter at that time.

After considering the fifth report of the Special Rapporteur, the Commission adopted a provisional draft of 65 articles. These articles constituted sections I (Permanent observer missions in general), II (Facilities, privileges and immunities of permanent observer missions), III (Conduct of the permanent observer mission and its members) and IV (End of functions) of Part III Permanent observer missions to international organizations); and sections T (Delegations in general), II (Facilities, privileges and immunities of delegations), III (Conduct of the delegation and its members) and IV

(End of functions) of Part IV (Delegations of States to organs and to conferences).

Section I of Part III (articles 51 to 64) contained provisions on the following: use of terms; establishment, functions, composition, size and offices of permanent observer missions; accreditation to two or more international organizations or assignment to two or more permanent observer missions; appointment of the members of the permanent observer mission and their nationality; credentials of the permanent observer; full powers to represent the State in the conclusion of treaties, notifications, charge d'affaires ad interim; and use of flag and emblem.

Section II of Part III (articles 65 to 75) contained provisions on: general facilities; accommodation and assistance; privileges and immunities of the permanent observer mission; freedom of movement; personal privileges and immunities; nationals of the host State and persons permanently resident in the host State; waiver of immunity and settlement of civil claims; exemption from laws concerning acquisition of nationality; duration of privileges and immunities; transit through the territory of a third State; and non-discrimination.

Sections III (article 76) and IV (article 77) of Part III concerned, respectively, conduct of the permanent observer mission and its members, and end of functions.

Section I of Part IV (articles 78 to 90) concerned: use of terms; derogation from Part IV; conference rules of procedure; composition, size and acting head of the delegation; appointment and nationality of its members; the principle of single representation; credentials of representatives; and full powers to represent the State in the conclusion of treaties and notifications.

Section II of Part IV (articles 91 to 111) contained provisions on: the status of the Head of State and persons of high rank; general facilities, assistance by the Organization and inviolability of archives and documents; premises and accommodation; inviolability of the premises; exemption of the premises of the delegation from taxation; freedom of movement and of communication; personal inviolability; inviolability of the private accommodation; immunity from jurisdiction; waiver of immunity; exemption from dues and taxes, from customs duties and inspection and from social security legislation, personal services and laws concerning acquisition of nationality; privileges and immunities of other persons and in case of multiple functions; nationals of the host State and persons permanently resident in the host State; duration of privileges and immunities; property of a member of a delegation or of a member of his family in the event of death; transit through the territory of a third State; and non-discrimination.

Section III of Part IV (articles 112 and 113) related to respect for the laws and regulations of the host State and professional activity.

Section IV of Part IV (articles 114 to 116) dealt with the end of the functions of a member of a delegation, facilities for departure and protection of premises and archives.

With regard to the articles on facilities, privileges and immunities, the International Law Commission developed a set of draft articles for Part III based mainly on the provisions concerning permanent missions, and for Part IV based mainly on Part II of the draft and the pertinent provisions of the 1969 Convention on Special Missions.<sup>2</sup> The Commission did so after examining each individual facility, privilege and immunity with reference to the subjects to be dealt with in both Parts III and IV. The Commission was particularly concerned with determining what distinctions should be made, in specific cases, between special missions, permanent missions, permanent observer missions and delegations of States to organs and to conferences. Having satisfied itself, in several instances, that such distinctions need not be drawn, the Commission concluded that it was not necessary to repeat in both Parts III and IV the substance of the analogous articles on permanent missions. Consequently, Parts III and IV included both specific articles (in those cases in which changes were required to take into account the differences existing between permanent missions and permanent observer missions or delegations of States to organs and to conferences) and articles employing the techniques of "drafting by reference." However, the Commission expressed its intention, during the second reading of the whole draft, to determine whether it would be possible to reduce the number of articles by combining provisions that were susceptible to uniform treatment.

It should also be noted that the articles of the third group did not include provisions analogous to those of article 50 on consultations between the sending State, the host State and the Organization.<sup>3</sup> Since the Commission intended article 50 to apply also to the articles on permanent observer missions and on delegations to organs and to conferences, it was to decide during its second reading of the whole draft on a suitable position for the article.

The Commission also decided to examine at its second reading the question of the possible effects of exceptional situations on the representation of States in international organizations in general, thus postponing any decision on that question in the context of Parts III and IV.

SUCCESSION OF STATES AND GOVERNMENTS

At its twenty-first session, in 1969, the Commission had before it second reports submitted, respectively, by Sir Humphrey Waldock, Special Rapporteur on succession of States and Governments in respect of treaties, and by Mohammed Bedjaoui, Special Rapporteur on succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties. Owing to lack of time, the Commission was able to consider only the report submitted by Mr. Bedjaoui.<sup>4</sup>

At the Commission's 1970 session, Mr. Bedjaoui submitted a third report on succession in respect of matters other than treaties. The report contained four draft articles, with commentaries, concerning certain aspects of the subject of succession to public property. However, the Commission was unable to study this aspect of the topic at its 1970 session.

Also at the 1970 session, Sir Humphrey Waldock submitted a third report on succession in respect of treaties. This report, together with his second report, contained 12 articles, with commentaries, covering the use of certain terms, the case of territory passing from one State to another (the so-called principle of moving treaty-frontiers), devolution agreements, unilateral declarations by successor States, and the rules governing the position of

"new States" in regard to multilateral treaties. (The Special Rapporteur defined "new States" as "a succession where a territory which previously formed part of an existing State has become an independent State.")

The Commission considered, in a preliminary manner, certain of the draft articles contained in the second and third reports, and endorsed the Special Rapporteur's general approach to the topic as evidenced therein. The Special Rapporteur, deeming it essential for the Commission to see the whole draft before taking a final position, indicated that in his next report he would give priority to dealing with all the remaining aspects of the topic.

STATE RESPONSIBILITY

At its twenty-first session, in 1969, the Commission considered the first report on the topic "State responsibility," submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Roberto Ago, and agreed on the main criteria to guide it in its future work on the topic.<sup>5</sup>

At its 1970 session, the Special Rapporteur submitted a second report on the origin of international responsibility. The report contained a general introduction dealing with certain questions of method, and a first chapter devoted to the general rules governing the topic as a whole, including draft articles to serve as a basis for the Commission's discussion.

The Special Rapporteur also submitted a questionnaire listing a number of points on which he particularly wished to learn the views of members of the Commission.

The Commission held a general discussion of the Special Rapporteur's report but postponed a detailed discussion of specific points to its twenty-third (1971) session. The Commission agreed that the Special Rapporteur should continue his study of the topic and the preparation of the draft articles. It also agreed that the Special Rapporteur should include in a third, more extensive report, to be considered at its 1971 session, the part which had been examined at the 1970 session, as revised in the light of the Commission's discussion. This new report was to include in particular a detailed analysis of the various subjective and objective conditions which must be met if an internationally wrongful act was to be attributed to a State as an act giving rise to international responsibility.

OTHER ASPECTS OF WORK OF INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION

At its 1970 session, Endre Ustor, Special Rapporteur on the most-favoured-nation clause, submitted a second report on this topic. Owing to lack of time, the International Law Commission postponed consideration of the report until its 1971 session.

As recommended by the General Assembly on 12 November 1969,<sup>6</sup> the Commission decided to include in its general programme of work the question of treaties concluded between States and international organizations, or between two or more international organizations. The Commission set up a sub-committee, composed of 13 members, to consider preliminary problems involved in the study of this topic.

On the basis of the sub-committee's report, the Commission decided that the Secretary-General be requested to prepare a number of documents and that the subcommittee's Chairman submit to members of that group a questionnaire regarding the scope of the topic and the method of treating it.

The Commission requested a 14-week session for 1971, primarily in order to complete the second reading of the draft articles on relations between States and international organizations, and the first reading of all the draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties.

Also, the Commission—confirming its intention of bringing up to date in 1971 its long-term programme of work, taking into account the General Assembly recommendations and the international community's current needs, and discarding those topics on the Commission's 1949 list which were no longer suitable for treatment—asked the Secretary-General to submit to its twenty-third session a new working paper to serve as a basis for the Commission's selection of a list of topics to be included in its programme.

DECISIONS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The report of the International Law Commission on the work of its twenty-second session was considered by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee.

On 12 November 1970, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, the General Assembly adopted a resolution concerning the report.

The General Assembly thereby, among other things:

(1) expressed its profound gratitude to the Commission, on the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, for its outstanding contribution to the achievements of the Organization during this period, particularly through the preparation of drafts which served as the basis for the adoption of important codification conventions;

(2) approved the programme and organization of the session planned by the Commission for 1971, as well as its intention to bring up to date its long-term programme of work;

(3) recommended that the Commission continue its work on relations between States and international organizations with the object of presenting in 1971 a final draft on the topic; continue its work on succession of States, with a view to completing in 1971 the first reading of draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties and making progress in the consideration of succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties; and continue its work on State responsibility, its study of the most-favoured-nation clause and its consideration of the question of treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between two or more international organizations;

(4) endorsed the decision of the Commission to request the Secretary-General to prepare new editions, brought up to date, of two publications, including The Work of the International Law Commission; and

(5) expressed the wish that other seminars be organized in conjunction with Commission sessions and that there should be an increasing number of participants from developing countries. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

These decisions of the Assembly were embodied in resolution 2634(XXV), which was adopted by a vote of 100 to 3, with 10 abstentions.

The text was based on a proposal by Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Cyprus, Ecuador, Finland, Greece, Haiti, Jamaica, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Mexico, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Sweden, Syria, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

It was approved by the Sixth Committee on 14 October 1970 by a roll-call vote of 81 to 4, with 11 abstentions.

The Committee rejected, by roll-call votes of 60 to 12, with 24 abstentions, and 28 to 16, with 52 abstentions, respectively, amendments submitted by the USSR which (a) would have deleted the paragraph approving the Commission's programme and organization of work of its 1971 session, as well as its intention to bring up to date its long-term programme of work, having in mind the possibility of elaborating a separate resolution on this provision; and (b) would have deleted the endorsement of the Commission's decision to request the Secretary-General to prepare a new edition, brought up to date, of The Work of the International Law Commission.

RESOLUTION 2634(xxv), as recommended by Sixth Committee, A/8147, adopted by Assembly on 12 November 1970, meeting 1903, by 100 votes to 3, with 10 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its twenty-second session,

Emphasizing the need for the further codification and progressive development of international law in order to make it a more effective means of implementing the purposes and principles set forth in Articles

1 and 2 of the Charter of the United Nations and to give increased importance to its role in relations among nations,

Noting with satisfaction that at its twenty-second session the International Law Commission completed its provisional draft articles on relations between States and international organizations, continued the consideration of matters concerning the codification and progressive development of the international law relating to succession of States in respect of treaties and State responsibility and included in its programme of work the question of treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between two or more international organizations, as recommended by the General Assembly in resolution 2501 (XXIV) of 12 November 1969,

Noting further that the International Law Commission has proposed to hold a fourteen-week session in 1971 in order to enable it to complete the second reading of the draft articles on relations between States and international organizations and the first reading of draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties before the end of the term of office of its present members,

Noting with appreciation that the United Nations Office at Geneva organized, during the twenty-second session of the International Law Commission, a sixth session of the Seminar on International Law,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Law Commission on the work of its twenty-second session;

2. Expresses its profound gratitude to the International Law Commission, on the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations, for its outstanding contribution to the achievements of the Organization during this period, particularly through the preparation of drafts which have served as the basis for the adoption of important codification conventions, and expresses its appreciation to the Commission for the valuable work it accomplished during its twenty-second session;

3. Approves the programme and organization of work of the session planned by the International Law Commission for 1971, as well as its intention to bring up to date its long-term programme of work;

4. Recommends that the International Law Commission should:

(a) Continue its work on relations between States and international organizations, taking into account the views expressed at the twenty-third, twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth sessions of the General Assembly and the comments which may be submitted by Governments, with the object of presenting in 1971 a final draft on the topic;

(b) Continue its work on succession of States, taking into account the views and considerations referred to in General Assembly resolutions 1765 (XVII) of 20 November 1962 and 1902 (XVIII) of 18 November 1963, with a view to completing in 1971 the first reading of draft articles on succession of States in respect of treaties and making progress in the consideration of succession of States in respect of matters other than treaties;

(c) Continue its work on State responsibility, taking into account the views and considerations referred to in General Assembly resolutions 1765 (XVII) of 20 November 1962, 1902 (XVIII) of 18 November 1963 and 2400 (XXIII) of 11 December 1968;

(d) Continue its study of the most-favoured-nation clause;

(e) Continue its consideration of the question of treaties concluded between States and international organizations or between two or more international organizations;

5. Endorses the decision of the International Law Commission to request the Secretary-General to prepare new editions, brought up to date, of the publication entitled The Work of the International Law Commission and of the document entitled "Summary of the practice of the Secretary-General as depositary of multilateral agreements";

6. Expresses the wish that, in conjunction with future sessions of the International Law Commission, other seminars might be organized, which should continue to ensure the participation of an increasing number of nationals of developing countries, and supports the suggestion contained in the Commission's report concerning the use of Spanish as a working language of the Seminar on International Law;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to forward to the International Law Commission the records of the discussion on the report of the Commission at the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly.

CHAPTER V

AERIAL HIJACKING

CONSIDERATION BY SECURITY COUNCIL

On 9 September 1970, the United States requested an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider the situation created by increasing incidents involving the hijacking of commercial aircraft engaged in international commerce and the threat to the lives of innocent travellers.

Also on 9 September the United Kingdom

asked that an urgent meeting of the Council be convened to consider the hijacking of civil aircraft, with particular reference to the incidents that had taken place during the preceding days.

Algeria and Israel, respectively, requested on 9 September that they be invited to participate in the discussion.

The Security Council met on 9 September, and the President said that prior to the meeting extensive consultations had taken place in order to meet the wishes of all concerned.

The representative of Finland said it was his understanding that a consensus had been reached during the consultations, and he formally moved that the Security Council decide to adopt immediately the text agreed upon and then adjourn without debate. There was no objection, and the Council then adopted the consensus without vote, in the form of resolution 286(1970).

By this resolution, the Security Council expressed its grave concern at the threat to innocent civilian lives from the hijacking of aircraft and any other interference in international travel. It then: (1) appealed to all parties concerned for the immediate release of all passengers and crews without exception, held as a result of hijackings and other interference in international travel; and (2) called on States to take all possible legal steps to prevent further hijackings or any other interference with international civil air travel.

Prior to the adoption of the resolution, the President of the Council, after stressing the gravity of the matter, said that important principles concerning the Middle East were involved which could not be solved in a single meeting, but he appealed to those concerned to spare the lives of innocent persons who were not involved in a state of war.

During 1970, a number of communications were received by the Secretary-General concerning the problem of airplane hijacking and other air incidents. (For details, see pp. 262-63.)

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On 6 October 1970, at the request of 14 States, an item on aerial hijacking or interference with civil air travel was placed on the agenda of the General Assembly's twenty-fifth session.

The States requesting inclusion of the item, in a letter dated 28 September, were: Belgium, Brazil, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Indonesia, Japan, Laos, Luxembourg, Nepal, the Netherlands, Panama, Peru, the Philippines and Thailand.

In an explanatory memorandum accompanying their request, these States pointed out, among other things, that since the General Assembly's action in 1969<sup>1</sup> there had been more than 40 additional cases of hijacking or forcible diversion of civil aircraft in flight—occurring in different parts of the world, involving airlines of different countries and endangering the lives of passengers of different nationalities. After drawing attention to the Security Council's consensus resolution of 9 September 1970, they said that the increasing number of cases of hijacking called for urgent action by the General Assembly to consider the matter within the framework of the concern of the international community for the protection of human life and for the promotion of respect for human rights.

On 19 November 1970, the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee, to which the item had been referred, approved—by a roll-call vote of 99 to 0, with 10 abstentions—a draft resolution sponsored by 34 Members and revised twice by them during the course of the discussion. In the same vote, the Committee decided to include the following paragraph in its report to the Assembly:

"It was agreed in the Committee that the adoption of the draft resolution cannot prejudice any international legal rights or duties of States under instruments relating to the status of refugees and stateless persons."

On 25 November, the General Assembly, by a vote of 105 to 0, with 8 abstentions, adopted the Sixth Committee's recommendation as its resolution 2645 (XXV). It also took note of the Sixth Committee's decision to include in its report the paragraph quoted above.

The text was eventually sponsored in the Sixth Committee by the following 34 Members: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil,

Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, Guatemala, Indonesia, Iran, Ireland, the Ivory Coast, Japan, Khmer Republic,<sup>2</sup> Laos, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, the Philippines, Singapore, Sweden, Thailand and the United Kingdom.

During the Sixth Committee's discussion, various amendments and sub-amendments were put forward, many of which were taken into account when the sponsors twice revised their text. Thus, amendments by Lebanon, and by Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR were withdrawn. Amendments by the United Republic of Tanzania were not pressed to a vote and Lebanese sub-amendments thereto were withdrawn.

By the resolution, the General Assembly among other things:

(1) condemned all acts of aerial hijacking or other interference with civil air travel—whether originally national or international—through the threat or use of force, and all acts of violence against passengers, crews and aircraft engaged in, and air navigation facilities and aeronautical communications used by, civil air transport;

(2) called on States to take all appropriate measures to deter, prevent or suppress such acts within their jurisdiction, at every stage of the execution of those acts, and to provide for the prosecution and punishment of persons perpetrating them, or, without prejudice to the rights and obligations of States under existing international instruments relating to the matter, for the extradition of such persons for prosecution and punishment;

(3) declared that the exploitation of unlawful seizure of aircraft for the purpose of taking hostages was to be condemned;

(4) declared further that the unlawful detention of passengers and crew in transit or otherwise engaged in civil air travel was to be condemned as another form of wrongful interference with free and uninterrupted air travel;

(5) urged States to whose territory a hijacked aircraft was diverted to provide for the care and safety of its passengers and crew and to enable them to continue their journey as soon as practicable, and to return the aircraft and its cargo to the lawful owners;

(6) invited States to ratify or accede to the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft, signed at Tokyo (Japan) on 14 September 1963;

(7) requested concerted action by States, in accordance with the United Nations Charter, towards suppressing all acts which jeopardized the safe and orderly development of international civil air transport;

(8) called upon States to take joint or separate action, in accordance with the Charter, in co-operation with the United Nations and the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) to ensure that passengers, crew and aircraft engaged in civil aviation were not used as a means of extorting advantage of any kind;

(9) urged full support for the current efforts of ICAO towards the development and co-ordination, in accordance with its competence, of effective measures in respect of interference with civil air travel; and

(10) called upon States to make every possible effort to achieve a successful result at the diplomatic conference to convene at The Hague (Netherlands) in December 1970 to adopt a convention on the unlawful seizure of aircraft, so that an effective convention could be brought into force at an early date.

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that international civil aviation is a vital link in the promotion and preservation of friendly relations among States and that its safe and orderly functioning is in the interest of all peoples,

Gravely concerned over acts of aerial hijacking or other wrongful interference with civil air travel,

Recognizing that such acts jeopardize the lives and safety of the passengers and crew and constitute a violation of their human rights,

Aware that international civil aviation can only function properly in conditions guaranteeing the safety of its operations and the due exercise of the freedom of air travel.

Endorsing the solemn declaration of the extraordinary session of the Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization held at Montreal from 16 to 30 June 1970, Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 2551 (XXIV) of 12 December 1969 and Security Council resolution 286(1970) of 9 September 1970 adopted by consensus at the 1552nd meeting of the Council,

1. Condemns, without exception whatsoever, all acts of aerial hijacking or other interference with civil air travel, whether originally national or international, through the threat or use of force, and all acts of violence which may be directed against passengers, crew and aircraft engaged in, and air navigation facilities and aeronautical communications used by, civil air transport;

2. Calls upon States to take all appropriate measures to deter, prevent or suppress such acts within their jurisdiction, at every stage of the execution of those acts, and to provide for the prosecution and punishment of persons who perpetrate such acts, in a manner commensurate with the gravity of those crimes, or, without prejudice to the rights and obligations of States under existing international instruments relating to the matter, for the extradition of such persons for the purpose of their prosecution and punishment;

CHAPTER VI

INTERNATIONAL TRADE LAW

THIRD SESSION OF COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL TRADE LAW

The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) continued to work during 1970 towards the realization of its principal goal: the promotion of the progressive harmonization and unification of the law of international trade.

At its third session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 6 to 30 April 1970, the Commission continued consideration of the four priority subjects on its programme of work: the international sale of goods, international payments, international commercial arbitration, and international legislation on shipping. The Commission's action with respect to these and other subjects is summarized below.

INTERNATIONAL SALE OF GOODS

The Commission's Working Group on Sales met twice in 1970 to study modifications of the existing conventions on the international sale of goods which might render the texts capable of wider acceptance by countries having different legal, social and economic systems. In particular, the Working- Group studied the Uniform Law on the International Sale of Goods. The Working Group's report, submitted to UNCITRAL at its 1970 session, contained an analysis of several basic provisions of the Uniform Law, as well as recommendations that some provisions be approved and others revised or studied further.

Another approach by the Commission to unification and harmonization of the law governing international sale of goods involved the unification of the rules on the periods within which claims arising out of international sales transactions could be presented to a tribunal (limitations or prescription).

At its 1970 session, UNCITRAL reviewed the recommendations of the Working Group on this subject, which had met in Geneva, Switzerland, from 18 to 22 August 1969 to analyse basic issues involved in the preparation of a convention. At the request of the Commission, this Working Group held a second meeting in August 1970 to prepare a draft convention for submission to the Commission in 1971.

A third approach to unification and harmonization in the field of international sale of goods concerned appropriate general conditions of sale which might be adopted voluntarily by the parties. In this regard, attention was given to certain general conditions drawn up by the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe (ECE).

At its 1970 session, UNCITRAL requested the Secretary-General to continue, with the help of the regional economic commissions, to seek the views of Governments and interested trade circles on the feasibility of extending to other regions the general conditions of sale and standard contracts used by ECE, and to assess the desirability of formulating other general conditions for commodities of special interest to those regions. The Secretary-General was further requested to undertake a study on the feasibility of developing general conditions which would embrace a wider scope of commodities than the existing formulations.

INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

The work of UNCITRAL towards unification and harmonization of the law of international trade in the field of international payments was concentrated in three areas: negotiable instruments, such as checks and bills of exchange; bankers' commercial credits; and guarantees and securities.

At its 1969 session, the Commission instituted studies concerning the legal rules applicable to the use of negotiable instruments in making international payments. Replies to a questionnaire on the subject, received from 78 Governments as well as banking and trading institutions, provided information on current practices in making and receiving international payments and the problems encountered in settling international transactions by means of negotiable instruments.

At its 1970 session, the Commission reaffirmed the decision that its work in this area should be directed towards a convention setting forth rules applicable to a special instrument for optional use in international transactions.

The Commission's work in the area of bankers' commercial credits revolved around the Uniform Customs and Practice for Documentary Credits (1962 revision), drawn up by the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC), which seeks to achieve a standardization of practices relating to documentary letters of credit. To assist with a forthcoming revision of the Uniform Customs by ICC, the Commission, at its 1970 session, developed a procedure to permit interested parties in countries not represented in ICC to comment on the operation of the Uniform Customs.

In the area of guarantees, UNCITRAL agreed to concentrate on the problems that arose when the guarantor was a bank or other financial institution. The Commission also invited ICC to expand its study on the subject of guarantees to include payment guarantees. Furthermore, the Commission developed procedures for soliciting the opinions of Governments and banking and trade institutions in countries not represented in ICC.

The Commission also took steps to obtain information about the national legal rules on security devices, and requested the Secretary-General to make a study of security devices relevant to international transactions in goods, with special reference to conditional sale contracts and trust devices.

INTERNATIONAL COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION

Ion Nestor (Romania), appointed in 1969 as Special Rapporteur on the most important problems concerning the application and interpretation of the existing conventions on international commercial arbitration, submitted a provisional report to the Commission's 1970 session. The Commission extended the mandate of the Special Rapporteur to its fifth (1972) session. It also reaffirmed that the 1958 United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards should be adhered to by the largest possible number of States.

INTERNATIONAL SHIPPING LEGISLATION

The Working Group on International Shipping Legislation, established in 1969, met during 1970 and made recommendations that provided the basis for UNCITRAL'S programme of work. The Commission noted that the Working Group on Shipping of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) had decided that priority should be given to the responsibility of ocean carriers for cargo, as embodied in bills of lading.

The Commission developed measures for co-ordination between the working groups of UNCITRAL and UNCTAD in this field.

TRAINING AND ASSISTANCE

The Commission continued to stress the importance of training and assistance in the field of international trade law. At its 1970 session, it requested the Secretary-General to continue and to intensify his activities under the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law, which he had undertaken in response to a Commission decision of 1969. (See also pp. 811-13.) The Secretary-General was also asked to consult with appropriate institutions on the feasibility of developing teaching materials on the subject-matters in this field and to call on those institutions to give increased emphasis to the teaching of the law governing international trade.

PUBLICATIONS

REGISTER OF TEXTS

The first volume of the Register of Texts of Conventions and Other Instruments concerning International Trade Law was published in 1970. It contained the texts of conventions and other relevant instruments, summaries of draft conventions relating to the international sale of goods and international payments, and lists of instruments relating to international commercial arbitration and international shipping legislation.

YEARBOOK OF THE COMMISSION

The first volume of the Yearbook of the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law, covering the first three sessions of the Commission, was published in 1970, pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 12 November 1969.<sup>1</sup>

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The report of UNCITRAL to the General Assembly was considered by the Sixth (Legal) Committee at the Assembly's 1970 session.

On 12 November 1970, by resolution 2635 (XXV), the General Assembly unanimously took note with appreciation of the Commission's report, and of the fact that the widest possible participation of the Commission's members in preparatory work had been achieved.

The Assembly also, among other things, recommended that UNCITRAL should continue: to work on the priority subjects; to give attention to ways and means of promoting training and assistance in the field of international trade law; to collaborate fully with international organizations active in this field; to develop working methods enhancing the efficiency of its working groups and ensuring full consideration of the commercial practices and needs of all regions; and to give special consideration to the interests of developing and land-locked countries. The text of the resolution was sponsored in the Sixth Committee by Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Greece, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Japan, Morocco, Nigeria, Norway, Pakistan, the Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Singapore and Zambia. The draft text was unanimously approved by the Committee on 22 October 1970.

CHAPTER VII

UNITED NATIONS PROGRAMME OF ASSISTANCE TO PROMOTE TEACHING AND KNOWLEDGE OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

Activities under the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law were continued during 1970.

Under a fellowship scheme jointly administered by the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR), 15 fellowships were awarded by the United Nations and five fellowships were awarded by UNITAR to persons from developing countries. The recipients were government officials and university teachers from the following countries: Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, China, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Mali, Mauritius, Nepal, Nicaragua, Panama, the Philippines, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, Upper Volta and Zambia.

The fellowship holders followed various courses of study, including attendance at the Seminar on International Law, organized by the United Nations in Geneva, Switzerland, and at the Hague Academy of International Law. Practical training was offered by the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs; UNITAR; and the legal departments of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization.

The Secretary-General continued his efforts to promote training and assistance in international trade law within the framework of the current Programme of Assistance, in order to meet the need for legal expertise in the field, particularly on the part of developing countries. Consultations were held with appropriate institutions on the possibility of establishing regional institutes or chairs in international trade law at universities and other institutions in developing countries, and on the feasibility of developing teaching materials on the subject.

A register of experts in international trade law was prepared as a supplement to the register of experts and scholars in international law.

The participation of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in the Programme included the following: the provision of fellowships; co-operation with the Tunisian National Commission for UNESCO in organizing a seminar on legal machinery for Maghreb co-operation, held in Tunis, Tunisia, in October 1970; subvention to the International Law Association to facilitate the participation of lawyers from developing countries in the Association's activities; and the promotion of the exchange of publications.

Work was continued by UNITAR on a series of subjects involving such aspects of international law as the peaceful settlement of disputes; financial and legal aspects of the improvement and maintenance of waterways for international navigation; problems of marine pollution; and the relationship between the United Nations and regional organizations.

FUTURE PROGRAMME OF ACTIVITIES

The Advisory Committee on the United Nations Programme of Assistance in the Teaching, Study, Dissemination and Wider Appreciation of International Law held its fifth session at United Nations Headquarters, New York, on 6 and 7 October 1970. At that meeting, it considered the Secretary-General's proposals that the United Nations carry out activities in 1971 broadly similar to those executed in previous years. The Secretary-General reported to the Advisory Committee that the future activities of UNESCO were expected to be concentrated on the development of university teaching and research in international law. For its part, UNITAR was to continue its series of studies relating to international law and was to conduct a regional symposium in international law, to be held in Ghana, and a regional training and refresher course in Latin America.

DECISION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The Secretary-General's proposals, as revised to take account of the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on the Programme, were considered by the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee at the Assembly's 1970 session.

On the basis of a proposal by Bolivia, Brazil, Cyprus, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ghana, Guyana, Kenya, the People's Republic of the Congo, the Philippines, the United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay and Zambia, a draft resolution was approved by the Sixth Committee on 30 November 1970 by a vote of 85 to 0, with 7 abstentions.

On 11 December 1970, the text was adopted by the General Assembly as resolution 2698 (XXV), by a recorded vote of 92 to 0, with 11 abstentions.

The General Assembly thereby authorized the Secretary-General to carry out in 1971 the activities specified in his report and expressed its appreciation to UNESCO and UNITAR for their participation in the Programme. The Assembly reiterated its request to Member States, interested bodies and individuals to make voluntary contributions towards the financing of the Programme and expressed its appreciation to those Member States which had made voluntary contributions for this purpose. The Secretary-General was requested to continue his efforts to promote training and assistance in international trade law within the framework of the programme in order to meet the need for strengthening legal expertise in this field, particularly in developing countries. The Secretary-General was also requested to report to the General Assembly at its 1971 session on the implementation of the Programme in 1971 and, following consultations with the Advisory Committee, to submit recommendations on the execution of the Programme in 1972 and subsequent years. In addition, nine treaties were filed and recorded, one by the Secretariat, one by a Government, and seven by four specialized agencies.

This brought the total of treaties and agreements registered or filed and recorded to 15,560. In addition, 667 certified statements relating to these treaties and agreements were registered during 1970, bringing the total of certified statements registered or filed and recorded by the end of 1970 to 7,386.

The texts of treaties registered or filed and recorded are published by the Secretariat in the United Nations Treaty Series in the original languages, followed by translations in English and French. Nineteen volumes of the United Nations Treaty Series, covering treaties registered or filed and recorded in 1967 and 1968, were published in the course of 1970.

OTHER LEGAL QUESTIONS

PROGRESSIVE DEVELOPMENT AND CODIFICATION OF THE RULES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW RELATING TO INTERNATIONAL WATERCOURSES

At the request of the Government of Finland, the General Assembly included in the agenda of its 1970 session an item on the progressive development and codification of the rules of international law relating to international watercourses.

During discussion in the Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee, the representatives of China, Iran, Iraq and Poland, among others, held that the question should be referred to the International Law Commission. Other Members of the Committee, including Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, while agreeing in principle to the referral of the item to the International Law Commission, preferred that the Secretary-General first seek the views of Governments on the question of codification in the field. Still other Members, among them Pakistan and Turkey, felt that the question should be taken up by an inter-governmental committee established for the purpose.

Much of the discussion in the Sixth Committee centred on the question of whether account should be taken of recent studies by inter-governmental or non-governmental bodies on the rules of international law relating to international watercourses. In this connexion, mention was made of the "Helsinki Rules on the Uses of the Waters of International Rivers," adopted by the International Law Association in 1966, and the resolution on "Utilization of Non-Maritime International Waters (except for navigation)," adopted by the Institute of International Law in 1961.

Some representatives—including those of Argentina, China, Finland, Haiti, India, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden—felt that any resolution adopted by the Assembly should contain a specific reference to one or more such documents. Other Members, among them Belgium, Ethiopia, Greece, Iraq and the Ivory Coast, were opposed to citing a document from a private source.

Seven Committee Members—Argentina, Finland, Haiti, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Yugoslavia—submitted a draft resolution on the question. By the operative paragraphs of the text, the General Assembly would recommend that the International Law Commission, as a first step, take up the study of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses with a view to its progressive development and codification. The Secretary-General would be requested to prepare a supplementary report on the legal problems relating to the utilization and use of international watercourses.

An amendment to the seven-power draft was submitted by the representatives of Belgium and Greece; it would delete from the preamble of the draft a paragraph by which the Assembly would take note of the Helsinki Rules on the Uses of the Waters of International Rivers.

Another draft resolution, introduced by India, would have had the General Assembly invite Member States to express their views and suggestions as to the manner in which progressive development and codification of the rules of international law relating to international watercourses might be proceeded with in the United Nations. The Secretary-General would be requested to prepare a report on the subject, in the light of the replies received from Member States, for submission to the General Assembly at its 1971 session.

Subsequently, six of the countries which had sponsored the seven-power draft submitted a new proposal. The six-power proposal, sponsored by Finland, Haiti, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Yugoslavia, consisted of two parts. The first part was a draft resolution similar to the seven-power draft resolution as amended by Belgium and Greece. By the six-power draft, the Assembly would recommend that the International Law Commission study the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses with a view to its development and codification, and would request the Secretary-General to prepare a supplementary report on legal problems relating to the use of international watercourses.

The second part of the proposal consisted of a paragraph for insertion in the report of the Sixth Committee to the General Assembly. By the paragraph, the Committee would agree that inter-governmental and non-governmental studies on the subject, especially those which were of recent date, such as the Helsinki rules of 1966, should be taken into account by the International Law Commission in its consideration of the topic.

Various motions and amendments were made in connexion with the six-power proposal.

On 25 November 1970, following a procedural debate, the Sixth Committee voted on the draft resolution submitted by India; the draft was rejected by a roll-call vote of 34 to 2, with 62 abstentions.

At the request of the representative of Lebanon, a separate vote was then taken with regard to the words "such as the Helsinki rules of 1966," which appeared in the paragraph of the six-power proposal to be inserted in the Sixth Committee's report; by a roll-call vote of 41 to 25, with 32 abstentions, the Committee rejected retention of the words.

At the request of Greece, a separate vote was then taken on the paragraph, as amended. By a vote of 55 to 0, with 39 abstentions, the Sixth Committee approved the paragraph.

Finally, by a vote of 87 to 0, with 8 abstentions, the Committee approved the draft resolution contained in the first part of the six-power proposal.

On 8 December 1970, the draft resolution recommended by the Sixth Committee was adopted by the General Assembly. The Assembly thereby (1) recommended that the International Law Commission should as a first step take up the study of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses with a view to its progressive development and codification, and consider the practicability of taking the necessary action as soon as it deemed appropriate; and (2) requested the Secretary-General to prepare a supplementary report on the legal problems relating to the utilization and use of international watercourses, taking into account the recent application in State practice and international adjudication of the law of international watercourses, and inter-governmental and non-governmental studies.

These decisions were set out in resolution 2669 (XXV), which was adopted by a recorded vote of 89 to 1, with 7 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On the same day the Assembly, without vote, took note of the following paragraph in the report of the Sixth Committee: "It was agreed in the Sixth Committee that inter-governmental and non-governmental studies on the subject, especially those which are of recent date, should be taken into account by the International Law Commission in its consideration of the topic."

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1401 (XIV) of 21 November 1959, by which it considered that it was desirable to initiate preliminary studies on the legal problems relating to the utilization and use of international rivers, and as a result of which useful legal material was collected in the report submitted by the Secretary-General on 15 April 1963,

Considering that water, owing to the growth of population and the increasing and multiplying needs and demands of mankind, is of growing concern to humanity, that the available fresh water resources of the world are limited and that the preservation and protection of those resources are of great importance to all nations,

Conscious of the importance of legal problems relating to the use of international watercourses, inter alia with regard to international water resources development,

Recalling that despite the great number of bilateral treaties and other regional regulations, as well as the Convention on the Regime of Navigable Waterways of International Concern, signed at Barcelona on 20 April 1921, and the Convention relating to the Development of Hydraulic Power affecting more than one State, signed at Geneva on 9 December 1923, the use of international rivers and lakes is still based in part on general principles and rules of customary law,

Noting that measures have been taken and valuable work carried out by several international organs, both governmental and non-governmental, in order to further the development and codification of the law of international watercourses,

Convinced of the necessity to promote, in accordance with Article 13 of the Charter of the United Nations, the work on the progressive development and codification of the law of international watercourses and to concentrate this work within the framework of the United Nations,

1. Recommends that the International Law Commission should, as a first step, take up the study of the law of the non-navigational uses of international watercourses with a view to its progressive development and codification and, in the light of its scheduled programme of work, should consider the practicability of taking the necessary action as soon as the Commission deems it appropriate;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue the study initiated by the General Assembly in resolution 1401 (XIV) in order to prepare a supplementary report on the legal problems relating to the utilization and use of international watercourses, taking into account the recent application in State practice and international adjudication of the law of international watercourses and also intergovernmental and non-governmental studies of this matter;

(b) To forward to the International Law Commission the records of the discussion on the item at the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly, the report prepared by the Secretary-General pursuant to resolution 1401 (XIV), as well as the text of the present resolution and all other documentation necessary for the Commission's work.

LEGAL ASPECTS OF THE PEACEFUL USES OF OUTER SPACE

In 1970, the General Assembly's Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space and its Legal Sub-Committee continued work on a draft convention on liability for damage caused by the launching of objects into outer space. Also received were proposals on the definition of outer space, the utilization of outer space and celestial bodies and the various implications of space communications.

The Legal Sub-Committee reached agreement on the title, the preamble and 13 articles of a draft convention on liability at its ninth session, held in Geneva, Switzerland, from 8 June to 3 July 1970. No agreement was reached, however, on the two main outstanding issues, concerning the settlement of claims and "applicable law" (the measure of damages).

The report of the Legal Sub-Committee was considered by the Committee on Outer Space at its thirteenth session, held at United Nations Headquarters, New York, from 1 to 17 September 1970. The Committee concluded that although a solution of the two outstanding issues was not in prospect, the completion of a liability convention should remain its firm priority task.

After considering the report of the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, the General Assembly, on 16 December 1970, took note of the Committee's efforts to complete the preparation of a draft convention on liability and expressed its deep regret that, notwithstanding some progress towards this objective, the Committee had not yet been able to complete the drafting. The Assembly affirmed that the early conclusion of an effective and generally acceptable convention on liability should remain the firm priority task of the Committee, and it urged the Committee to intensify its efforts.

In this connexion, the Assembly noted that the main obstacle to agreement lay in differences of opinion within the Committee on two main issues: the legal rules to be applied for determining compensation payable to the victims of damage and the procedures for the settlement of claims. The Assembly expressed the view that a condition of a satisfactory convention on liability was that it should contain provisions that would ensure the payment of a full measure of compensation to victims and effective procedures that would lead to the prompt and equitable settlement of claims.

Finally, the Assembly urged the Committee to make a decisive effort to reach early agreement on texts with a view to submitting a draft convention on liability to the Assembly at its 1971 session.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2733 B (XXV), adopted by the Assembly by 108 votes to 8, with 2 abstentions.

(For further details, see pp. 42-47.)

Also on 16 December 1970, the General Assembly requested the Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space to continue to study questions related to the definition of outer space and the utilization of outer space and celestial bodies, including various implications of space communications.

The Assembly also invited those States that had not yet become parties to the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies<sup>1</sup> and the Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space<sup>2</sup> to give consideration to ratifying or acceding to these agreements so that they might have the broadest possible effect.

These decisions were among those embodied in the Assembly's resolution 2733 C (XXV), adopted by 110 votes to 0, with 9 abstentions.

RATIONALIZATION OF THE PROCEDURES AND ORGANIZATION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On several occasions since the creation of the United Nations, the General Assembly established ad hoc committees entrusted with the task of studying ways to improve the procedures of the Assembly. The most recent of them, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Improvement of the Methods of Work of the General Assembly, was established in 1962<sup>3</sup> and reported in 1963.<sup>4</sup>

On 26 June 1970, Canada requested that an item entitled "Rationalization of the procedures and organization of the General Assembly" be put on the agenda of the General

Assembly's twenty-fifth session (due to open later in the year, on 15 September). In an explanatory memorandum annexed to the request it was pointed out that, in spite of the considerable increase in the membership of the United Nations and of the development of science and technology, the procedures of the General Assembly had remained almost unchanged since the early days of the Organization. A draft resolution providing for the establishment of a committee was also attached to the Canadian request.

On the recommendation of the General Committee, the General Assembly, on 18 September 1970, included the item in its agenda without objection and decided to consider it in plenary meeting without reference to a Main Committee.

On 9 November 1970, the Assembly decided to ask its President to establish a Special Committee on the Rationalization of the Procedures and Organization of the General Assembly, consisting of 31 Member States, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, to study ways and means of improving the procedures and organization of the Assembly in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including the allocation of agenda items, the organization of work, documentation, rules of procedure and related questions, methods and practices, and to submit a report to the Assembly in 1971. Member Governments were asked to give the Committee all assistance that it might require in pursuance of the resolution and to submit their views and suggestions to the Committee by 28 February 1971. In addition, the Assembly requested the specialized agencies to provide any relevant information regarding the procedures applying to their respective organizations.

The decisions were embodied in resolution 2632 (XXV) which was adopted by 88 votes to 0, with 12 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by the following 32 Members: Afghanistan, Argentina, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Denmark, Finland, Greece, Guyana, India, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Malaysia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Singapore, Sweden, Tunisia, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

(For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Before the vote, Bulgaria proposed that an amendment to the paragraph to have the President establish the Special Committee be made, so that, instead, the Assembly would ask its General Committee, in the exercise of its powers in accordance with the rules of procedure of the Assembly, to examine ways and means of rationalizing the Assembly's procedures and organization, taking into account the provisions of the United Nations Charter, and to submit recommendations to the corresponding sessions of the Assembly with a view to contributing to the simplification of the Assembly's work. By another Bulgarian amendment, the Assembly would have omitted the dead-line for the submission of replies from Governments.

The first Bulgarian amendment was rejected by 56 votes to 17, with 24 abstentions. The second amendment was not put to the vote.

The membership of the Special Committee was announced by the President on 17 December. (For details, see APPENDIX III).

The General Assembly,

Recognizing that the growth of its responsibilities and membership makes desirable a review of its procedures and the organization of its work,

Organization of the General Assembly, consisting of thirty-one Member States, on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, to study ways and means of improving the procedures and organization of the Assembly in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, including the allocation of agenda items, the organization of work, documentation, rules of procedure and related questions, methods and practices, and to submit a report to the Assembly at its twenty-sixth session;

DECLARATION ON UNIVERSAL PARTICIPATION IN VIENNA CONVENTION ON LAW OF TREATIES

On 18 September 1970, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of its General Committee, decided not to place on its agenda an item—deferred from its 1969 session<sup>5</sup>—entitled "Declaration on Universal Participation in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties." It decided to do so on the understanding that the item would be placed on the provisional agenda of the Assembly's twenty-sixth session, scheduled to open in 1971.

The Declaration had been adopted as part of the Annex to the Final Act of the United Nations Conference on the Law of Treaties, held in Vienna, Austria, between 26 March and 24 May 1968<sup>6</sup> and from 9 April to 22 May 1969.<sup>7</sup>

By the Conference's Declaration on Universal Participation in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, the General Assembly was requested to issue special invitations to become parties to the Vienna Convention to States not Members of the United Nations or members of any of the specialized agencies or of the International Atomic Energy Agency or parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

METHODS OF FACT-FINDING

Pursuant to a General Assembly resolution of 18 December 1967,<sup>8</sup> the Secretary-General issued on 7 November 1969 a register of experts in legal and other fields whose services the States parties to a dispute might use by agreement for fact-finding in relation to the dispute. The register contained the names of experts received from Member States by 30 September 1969; together with biographical information submitted concerning the nominees.

On 18 November 1970, the Secretary-General issued a note containing changes and additions which Member States had expressed a desire to make in the register. As at that date, 189 nominations from 42 Member States had been received.

INVIOABILITY OF DIPLOMATIC AGENTS

By a letter of 5 May 1970, addressed to the President of the Security Council, the Permanent Representative of the Netherlands stated that the increasing number of attacks on diplomats in various parts of the world, which had occurred despite clearly established rules of international law concerning the immunity and inviolability of diplomatic agents, was a cause of alarm to his Government. Such incidents might endanger the conduct of friendly relations between States and could even endanger the maintenance of international peace and security. The Permanent Representative requested the President of the Security Council to inform members of the Council and appropriate organs of the United Nations of the concern of the Netherlands Government in this matter.

The Permanent Representative's letter was circulated as a document of the Security Council. By a letter of 14 May 1970, the President of the Council also transmitted the letter to the President of the International Court of Justice and the Chairman of the International Law Commission.

The Chairman of the International Law

Commission, in his reply of 12 June 1970, drew attention to previous occasions on which the Commission had taken up the question of the protection and inviolability of diplomatic agents, namely in connexion with its draft articles on diplomatic intercourse and immunities and its draft articles on special missions; these formed, respectively, the basis for the 1961 Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the 1969 Convention on Special Missions.<sup>10</sup> The Chairman indicated that the Commission had the matter once more under consideration, in the context of relations between States and international organizations, and would continue to be concerned with the problem in the future.

INFORMAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON HOST COUNTRY RELATIONS

By a resolution of 17 December 1969,<sup>11</sup> the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to reconstitute and convene on a regular basis the Informal Joint Committee on Host Country Relations, in order to maintain a continuous interchange of views and exploration of problems between the diplomatic community, the Secretariat and the Government of the host country. The Secretary-General was requested to report on the work of the Committee to the General Assembly at its 1970 session, and annually thereafter.

The Informal Joint Committee, originally established in 1966, was composed of representatives of the permanent missions, the host country and the Secretariat.

The Committee held six meetings during 1970 (on 17 and 23 April, 22 May, 2 June, 21 September and 15 October), and began a preliminary examination of the following subjects: (a) housing for diplomatic personnel and Secretariat staff; (b) parking of diplomatic vehicles; (c) public relations in the host city; (d) privileges and immunities and related topics; (e) protection of permanent missions and their staff; (f) education and health; (g) insurance.

The meeting of 15 October was convened at the request of Libya, acting on behalf of the missions of the Arab States, "to consider the question of the recent threats of bombings to permanent missions of Arab States, and the protection of these missions and their staff." The representative of Libya requested the Committee to recommend to the host country that it take the necessary measures to protect members of the missions against such attacks. The representative of the host country reviewed the steps being taken by the appropriate authorities, and confirmed the readiness of his Government to discuss ways of dealing with the matter.

The report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Informal Joint Committee during 1970 was considered by the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session, mainly in its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. In his report, the Secretary-General noted that the Informal Joint Committee had identified a number of issues relevant to its terms of reference, which it would continue to examine during 1971.

During discussion in the Fifth Committee, the representative of Tunisia noted that the host country had taken steps to alleviate the problems facing the United Nations community. A number of representatives, however—including those of Cuba, Iraq, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Libya, Syria and the USSR—felt that much remained to be done in order to ensure that the permanent missions to the United Nations were able to perform their functions, particularly in the light of the violent acts and threats to which certain missions had been subjected. Some representatives also felt that the Informal Joint Committee should meet more often than it had during 1970.

The representative of the United States explained the circumstances surrounding the various incidents mentioned by other delegations, and gave assurances that the Government of the United States and the City of New York would continue to fulfil their obligations to the United Nations community. He commended the Informal Joint Committee for its work and expressed the belief that it should continue to meet as frequently as possible.

On 11 December 1970, by a vote of 72 to 0, with 1 abstention, the Fifth Committee approved a draft resolution proposed by Iraq and amended by the United States.

On 17 December 1970, the text was adopted by the General Assembly. By the preambular paragraphs of the resolution, the Assembly noted that it had heard the views expressing deep concern about the relations between the host country and the diplomatic missions accredited to the United Nations. It also noted that certain measures had been taken by the Government of the host country and by the City of New York to deal with matters of concern to the Permanent Missions to the United Nations and that assurances had been given by the host country with respect to the future.

The Assembly then: (1) urged that the Government of the host country make certain that the measures taken to ensure the protection and security of diplomatic missions and their diplomatic personnel were adequate to enable Permanent Missions to the United Nations to perform their functions properly; (2) requested the Secretary-General to convene the Informal Joint Committee on Host Country Relations in January 1971 and as frequently as possible thereafter so that it might examine the matters within its term of reference and seek solutions to problems within the broad context of relations with the host country; (3) recommended that the Informal Joint Committee undertake a systematic consideration of the implementation of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, as well as conditions of life and obligations of members of Permanent Missions to the United Nations; and (4) requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Informal Joint Committee, to submit a comprehensive report on the Committee's work to the General Assembly at its 1971 session.

These decisions were embodied in resolution 2747 (XXV), which was adopted by a vote of 119 to 0, with 1 abstention. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

RESOLUTION 2747(xxv), as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/8099, adopted by Assembly on 17 December 1970, meeting 1933, by 119 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution 2618(XXIV) of 17 December 1969, in which it requested the Secretary-General to reconstitute and convene on a regular basis the Informal Joint Committee on Host Country Relations, so that there would be a continuous interchange of views and exploration of problems among the diplomatic community, the Secretariat and the Government of the host country on matters of mutual interest, and to report the results thereof to the General Assembly at its twenty-fifth session and annually thereafter, Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee.

Noting that the Committee has provided a forum for an airing of views on a variety of matters of interest to Member States,

Welcoming the ratification by the Government of the host country of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations,

Considering that the Committee should continue and intensify its consideration of matters of concern to the Permanent Missions to the United Nations and to the host country,

Considering further that a systematic review of the privileges, immunities and conditions of life of diplomatic and Secretariat personnel in New York should now be carried out,

Having heard the views expressing deep concern about the relations between the host country and the diplomatic missions accredited to the United Nations,

Having noted that certain measures have been taken by the Government of the host country and by the City of New York to deal with matters of concern to the Permanent Missions to the United Nations and that assurances have been given by the host country with respect to the future,

1. Urges that the Government of the host country make certain that the measures taken to ensure the protection and security of diplomatic missions and their diplomatic personnel are adequate to enable Permanent Missions to the United Nations to perform properly the functions entrusted to them by their Governments;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to convene the Informal Joint Committee on Host Country Relations in January 1971 and thereafter as frequently as appropriate in order that it may be in a position to examine carefully the matters specified in its terms of reference and to seek solutions to problems which fall within the broad context of relations with the host country;

3. Recommends that the Committee undertake a systematic consideration of the implementation of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations and the Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America regarding the Headquarters of the United Nations, as well as conditions of life and obligations of members of Permanent Missions to the United Nations;

4. Authorizes the Committee to maintain and circulate summary records of its proceedings;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Committee, to report in a comprehensive manner to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session on the status of the work of the Committee with particular reference to the extent to which existing problems have been solved.

Administrative and Budgetary Questions

CHAPTER I

ADMINISTRATIVE ARRANGEMENTS

THE COMPOSITION OF THE UNITED NATIONS SECRETARIAT

In 1970, the General Assembly reviewed the composition of the Secretariat in terms of the application of new linguistic standards for staff on recruitment, in terms of its geographical distribution and in terms of the representation of women in the Secretariat, and recommended new guidelines for the recruitment of staff.

REPORT BY SECRETARY-GENERAL

The discussions were based on a report by the Secretary-General covering developments during the year ending 31 August 1970, in implementing an Assembly resolution of 11 December 1969 which, inter alia, reaffirmed the need for an equitable geographical distribution of the staff of the Secretariat as between regions and within each region, in particular at the level of senior posts, and the need for a better linguistic balance in the Secretariat,<sup>1</sup> and recalled a previous Assembly resolution of 21 December 1968 which established linguistic standards for staff recruitment to be applied with effect from 1 January 1970.<sup>2</sup> The report recommended certain guidelines for the recruitment of the staff of the Secretariat with the aim of achieving the over-all objective of full participation of nationals of all Member States.

In implementation of the directives contained in the Assembly's resolution of 11 December 1969, the Secretary-General reported on measures taken during the past year within and outside the Secretariat, which included: improved methods of control over the various stages of recruitment, instituted following a re-allocation of functions in the Office of Personnel; modified procedures governing the announcement of vacancies; revised linguistic standards for staff recruitment; expanded co-operation with United Nations Member Governments in the discovery and employment of suitable candidates for service in the Secretariat, through contact with the permanent missions to the United Nations and through visits to those countries which had extended an invitation for the purpose; and recruitment missions to selected universities.

Bearing in mind that one of the original justifications for an increase in the proportion of fixed-term staff was to speed up the process of improving the geographical distribution of the staff, procedures were put into effect under which posts expected to become vacant upon expiration of the temporary appointments of their incumbents were made known sufficiently in advance to allow for the presentation of qualified candidates of under-represented nationalities. A description of the duties and responsibilities of these posts, as well as of their qualification requirements, was thus included in the periodic circular of vacancies made available by the Office of Personnel to all Member Governments.

The Secretary-General also reported that arrangements were made to draw up a long-term plan of recruitment. Action taken in this regard included a review of all posts which would become vacant in the next five years as a result of the retirement of their present incumbents in order to prepare suitable replacements. The review would also cover all posts occupied by fixed-term staff whose appointments were due to expire within the same five-year period.

A number of studies on broad issues of staff administration were conceived and conducted with the co-operation of the Secretariat as part of its own review of the efficiency of existing arrangements. These included a study of the major aspects of personnel policy initiated by the Joint Inspection Unit, an examination of the feasibility of establishing an international civil service commission and an examination under the auspices of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research of the possibility of establishing a staff college for the United Nations system.

In terms of language qualifications, the report added, 142 of the 257 staff appointed met the requirement of proficiency in one working language of the Secretariat and, in addition, had at least a fair knowledge of a second working language. The remaining 115 staff appointees possessed the required proficiency in one working language only.

As at 31 August 1970, Secretariat members came from 114 of the 126 United Nations Member States. Also in the Secretariat were nationals of four non-member States. There were 10 Member States that did not have nationals in the Secretariat at the end of the year under review.

Three regions were below their desirable range in the Secretariat. They were: Eastern Europe, with an actual staff percentage of 12.2 as against the desirable percentage of 16.5; North America and the Caribbean, with corresponding percentages of 22.8 and 26.3, respectively; and Asia and the Far East, with a percentage of 15.8 as against 16.9. In the case of Eastern Europe both the desirable and actual percentages had declined slightly, but those of North America and the Caribbean had gone up. In the case of Asia and the Far East, the desirable percentage had risen but the actual percentage had dropped.

In connexion with the recruitment practices in the offices away from Headquarters, the Director of Personnel visited the offices at Geneva, Switzerland, and Vienna, Austria, and a representative of his Office attended the third meeting of the Executive Committee of the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in May 1970. At that meeting, the members of the Committee stressed the need to apply the recruitment guidelines with flexibility so that the proportion of nationals from African countries could be increased to the desirable level. They expressed the hope that the ECA secretariat would be able to obtain the services of the staff it required from among nationals of those countries in Africa which could provide them, even if it involved a temporary over-representation of some nationalities.

The Secretary-General concluded that if a small number of nationalities had not been, or were not presently, represented on the staff, it was due to conditions prevailing at the source of recruitment. The difficulty was not so much in the absence of qualified candidates willing to serve with the United Nations as in the absence of access to the primary sources of professional talent, a difficulty which was diminishing every year through more effective co-operation with the national authorities involved.

A regional balance in the composition of the Secretariat remained, in his opinion, an essential element of the system of geographical distribution. One of the factors behind whatever regional imbalance persisted was the disparity in the rate of separations. These disparities would have to be reduced by lengthening the period of initial fixed-term appointments, by encouraging their extension and by granting more career appointments.

The retirement of a substantial number of senior officials and fixed-term staff who occupied senior posts would have to be corrected by the appointment of young men and women from all parts of the world.

The Secretary-General also stated that some questions raised by United Nations bodies concerned touched on the adequacy of existing practices, the standards and methods of recruitment, the need to balance competence and geography, career and fixed-term staff, regions and nationalities, working and other official languages, and senior and other posts. These bodies asked whether the traditional methods of recruitment for the Secretariat, which relied heavily on academic degrees, references and interviews, should possibly be supplanted or supplemented by competitive examinations and more accurate assessments of the equivalence of academic degrees.

In conclusion, the Secretary-General recommended the following guidelines for the recruitment of the staff of the Secretariat. In the recruitment of staff for posts subject to geographical distribution, preference should be given to qualified candidates of under-represented nationalities; if they could not be found within a reasonable period, preference should be given to candidates of other nationalities of the same geographical region. In considering candidates for posts of complex duties and responsibilities, preference should be given to those who were willing to accept a career or a fixed-term appointment of not less than five years, provided that the latter appointment was subject to a period of probation; and special efforts should be made to recruit young men and women of the highest qualifications for service with the United Nations.

CONSIDERATION BY GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The discussions on the composition of the Secretariat at the 1970 session of the General Assembly took place mostly in the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. They centred on three main points: geographical distribution, types of appointment and recruitment of young men and women in the United Nations. (Also discussed were matters pertaining to the representation of women in the Secretariat; for further details, see pp. 831-32.)

Several delegations felt that although progress had been made with respect to geographical distribution, much effort might be taken with regard to the persistently under-represented countries. Candidates from over-represented countries continued to be appointed to vacant posts, thus compounding the geographical imbalance in the Secretariat.

Japan, noting that the Office of Personnel had made efforts to achieve a more equitable geographical representation and that the number of new appointments from under-represented countries had increased, hoped that the Secretary-General would redouble his efforts to remedy the excessive under-representation of several countries, including Japan. The introduction of new methods of recruitment, based on examinations and a more accurate assessment of the equivalence of academic degrees, should make it possible to improve the selection of candidates. It would also be useful to send recruitment missions more frequently to the different regions, particularly to distant and under-represented countries.

Indonesia considered that the principle of equitable geographical distribution should apply not only to the Secretariat staff at Headquarters but also to staff serving in the regions and sub-regions—particularly to recruiting nationals for staffs of the regional economic commissions from the countries in those regions.

The Byelorussian SSR felt that great importance should be attached to this principle with regard not only to the Organization as a whole but also to its various departments and the different categories of posts. Several Members of the Fifth Committee considered that this principle should apply to the distribution of senior posts in every department, including offices concerned with administrative and budgetary matters. The principle could be combined with the criteria of efficiency, competence and integrity, specified in Article 101, paragraph 3, of the United Nations Charter.<sup>3</sup> Bearing in mind this Article, some representatives requested the Secretary-General to implement the long-term plan for Secretariat recruitment mentioned in his report. The efficiency of the Secretariat would be improved only if the Office of Personnel was able to carry out this long-term plan free from departmental pressures.

Some delegations gave favourable consideration to the guidelines suggested by the Secretary-General that preference in recruitment should be given to candidates of other nationalities of the same region when candidates of under-represented nationalities were not available. Others, however, objected, cautioning that it might lead to further over-representation of those nationalities that had already exceeded their desirable range.

"The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible."

Various Members, including the USSR, noted that the African States, the Asian region and the Eastern European region were not adequately represented in the senior posts.

As to the composition of the staff by type of appointment, several representatives favoured the increase in the proportion of fixed-term staff. The fact that more of such appointments were being granted, in their opinion, helped to redress the imbalance in geographical distribution. By recruiting fixed-term staff, the United Nations and the countries from which they came would benefit, since those officials returned to their country with the rich experience acquired with the Organization, which would enable them to see national problems in the light of the activities of the international organizations. The interests of developing countries should be taken into account in any consideration of the question of fixed-term contracts which, because they assured that staff members from developing countries would eventually return and contribute to the development of their own countries, provided a practical means of co-operation between the Organization and developing countries. Some representatives considered that the substance of the problem was the duration of service, not the form of contract. In this connexion, they added that a staff member could reach the high level of efficiency required of him within two years. Fixed-term contracts would rejuvenate the staff and would be an important step towards the elimination of conservatism and rigidity.

Other representatives, however, considered that the growing number of fixed-term appointments impaired the morale and promotion prospects of career staff and felt that, if the fixed-term appointment was to become the administrative norm, the Secretariat might lose the international character it was required to have under the Charter and become a body of employees on loan to the Organization and in practice appointed by Governments from which they would take their orders. By offering permanent appointments, the new appointees might be attracted by the possibility of a continuing career.

In this regard, Norway and Saudi Arabia noted that, although the expedient of the fixed-term appointments help to correct quickly certain geographical imbalances, 75 per cent of the staff should be career staff and only 25 per cent engaged for fixed terms. The trend towards increasing the number of fixed-term contracts and the insistence on a strict application of the system of desirable ranges conflicted with the concept of a career appointment.

Some Members stressed the need for training courses for all Secretariat staff, including the professional staff. Orientation courses would enable them to adjust better to the needs of the international community. One Member considered that perhaps emphasis should rather be placed on in-service training, with greater opportunity for long-term staff to be granted leave to take courses.

Several representatives welcomed the Secretary-General's intention to recruit young men and women for service with the United Nations.

The representative of the Secretary-General, replying to some points made in the discussions, said that the system of geographical distribution adopted by the General Assembly applied to the Secretariat as a whole rather than to any particular department or service. Moreover, special arrangements had been made for ensuring equitable geographical distribution at the highest level and were left to the discretion of the Secretary-General. With regard to the long-term plan of recruitment, the representative of the Secretary-General informed the Fifth Committee that visits and missions had been organized to some countries and to various universities to examine the possibilities of recruitment.

On 10 December 1970, the Fifth Committee, by 56 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions, approved a three-part draft resolution on the composition of the Secretariat based on a proposal by the following 14 Members: Burundi, Colombia, Ghana, Indonesia, Iraq, Japan, Kenya, Mali, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, the Philippines, Sierra Leone and Sudan, as orally amended by the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, and by the United Kingdom. The text was then adopted at a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 17 December 1970 by 81 votes to 0, with 13 abstentions, as resolution 2736 (XXV).

By this resolution, the Assembly—recognizing the need for a more equitable geographical distribution of the staff of the Secretariat among regions and within each region, and reiterating its interest in a long-term plan of recruitment to be prepared by the Secretary-General, bearing in mind the changes in the nationality pattern as the result of the retirement of permanent staff and the separation of fixed-term staff—requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to achieve a better geographical distribution of staff at all levels, particularly at the senior level, and also the representation of all United Nations Member States, bearing in mind the United Nations Charter requirements for efficiency, competence and integrity, and to achieve a better linguistic balance within the Secretariat. The Secretary-General was also requested to include in his reports information on the geographical distribution of the staff of the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Children's Fund, reflecting the position at the regional as well as the country level.

New guidelines for the recruitment of Secretariat staff were also approved by the Assembly in adopting this resolution, as follows:

1. In recruitment of staff subject to geographical distribution, preference should be given to qualified candidates from under-represented countries in general, and at the higher level in particular. If, when recruiting staff for the United Nations regional economic commissions, qualified candidates of comparatively under-represented countries could not be found within a reasonable period, preference should be given to qualified candidates of the same geographical region that were not fully represented, taking into full consideration the attainment of an equitable geographical distribution of posts among regions.
2. In considering candidates for posts involving complex duties and responsibilities, preference should be given to those who were willing to accept a career appointment or a fixed-term appointment of not less than five years, inclusive of the probationary period.
3. An official assigned to a post should serve for some minimum period after recruitment before becoming eligible for transfer to another post.
4. In the interest of long-term recruitment planning policies, special efforts should be made to recruit young men and women for service with the United Nations through the development of more objective selection methods such as, wherever appropriate, open competitive examinations, special allowance being made for candidates whose mother tongue was not one of the working languages of the Secretariat. (The reference to "Secretariat" working languages—i.e. English and French—was inserted on the proposal of the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, to replace a reference to "working languages of the United Nations"—i.e. Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish.)

REPRESENTATION OF WOMEN IN THE SECRETARIAT

Questions pertaining to the employment of qualified women in senior and other professional positions by the secretariats of organizations in the United Nations system and to the representation of women in the United Nations Secretariat were discussed during 1970 in the General Assembly and in the Economic and Social Council and its Commission on the Status of Women.

On 15 December 1970, the General Assembly, expressing the hope that the United Nations and the inter-governmental bodies related to it would set an example with regard to the opportunities they afforded for the employment of women at senior and other professional levels, urged them to take, or continue to take, appropriate measures to ensure equal opportunities for the employment of qualified women at these levels. It also requested the Secretary-General to include, in his report to the General Assembly on the composition of the Secretariat, data on the employment of women, including their numbers and the positions occupied.

This decision was embodied in resolution 2715 (XXV), adopted by 107 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, which approved the text on 11 December 1970 by 88 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

This action was taken on the recommendation of the Economic and Social Council which, on 28 May 1970, decided—by 21 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions—to recommend the text for final approval by the Assembly. This decision was embodied in Council resolution 1510 (XLVIII), which the Council approved on the basis of a proposal to a similar effect adopted on 8 April 1970 by its Commission on the Status of Women.

The Commission adopted another resolution that day recommending that the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the executive heads of four specialized agencies (the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and the World Health Organization) and the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund make a special effort to appoint qualified women to fill future vacancies in the highest ranks of the international civil service. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to ask United Nations Member States to publicize vacancies and encourage the candidatures of their most qualified women nationals for such posts.

The question was also raised later in the year in the discussions which took place in the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee on the composition of the Secretariat. The Fifth Committee decided to include a paragraph in its report to the General Assembly noting the under-representation of women in the Secretariat, particularly at the senior level where they comprised only 6 per cent of the staff, and requested the Secretary-General:

(a) to encourage Governments of United Nations Member States to make available qualified women to compete for positions of responsibility in the Secretariat, particularly at the senior level;

(b) to continue to ensure that the selection, appointment and promotion of Secretariat staff at all levels was conducted without distinction as to sex; and

(c) to include data on women employed in the United Nations Secretariat in his report to the 1971 Assembly session on the composition of the Secretariat.

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly took note of this decision.

SALARIES OF SECRETARIAT STAFF IN PROFESSIONAL AND HIGHER CATEGORIES

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly agreed to increase the salary scales for staff in the professional and higher categories by 8 per cent after the incorporation of two classes of post adjustment, effective 1 July 1971. At the same meeting, the Assembly decided, inter alia., to establish a Special Committee for the Review of the United Nations Salary System, consisting of government experts from 11 United Nations Member States, to undertake a thorough review of the long-term principles and criteria which should govern the whole salary structure of the United Nations. It was also decided that no further adjustment of the base salary scales for the professional and higher categories would be made pending completion of the review.

INCREASE IN SALARY SCALES

Basing his action on recommendations made earlier in 1970 by the International Civil Service Advisory Board (ICSAB), the Secretary-General proposed to the General Assembly the consolidation of two classes of post adjustment<sup>4</sup> into the base salaries for staff in the professional and higher categories, and an increase of 8 per cent in their salary scales, to become effective 1 January 1971.

The salary scales of the professional and higher-level staff had previously been reviewed by ICSAB in 1965.<sup>5</sup> At that time, ICSAB had drawn attention to what it believed to be anomalous results produced by the existing salary system and decided to pursue a broad-scale examination of the underlying principles of the system. At the end of its four-year review, in 1969, ICSAB concluded that the anomalies and defects of the current system were inherent in the complex problems of providing equitable conditions for a multinational staff working in over 100 countries and that their removal would create other difficulties and perhaps extra cost.

Accordingly, ICSAB concluded that it would be unwise to discontinue the existing system. It stressed, however, that this did not imply its indefinite endorsement of the Noblemaire principle whereby the conditions of service of professional and higher categories of staff were determined by reference to the salaries of the highest-paid national service (with an additional element to compensate for such factors as expatriation) in order to enable the Organization to attract staff of all nationalities.

During 1970, ICSAB reviewed relationships between the level of remuneration in the United Nations common system at Geneva, used as the base city, and that of the highest-paid national service, i.e. the Federal (home) Civil Service of the United States, and concluded that, since 1960, there had been a lag of about 8 per cent as compared with the real-income changes in net salaries of the United States Civil Service.

In the light of this and other information and in the light of the considerations on which its previous reviews had been based, ICSAB expressed its judgement that an increase of 8 per cent should be applied to the United Nations gross salary scales, effective 1 January 1971. The Advisory Board also endorsed the recommendations of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination that two post adjustments be consolidated into the base salaries, mainly because a number of duty stations, including New York, were reaching very high post classifications and, as a result, too high a proportion of pay was non-pensionable, and the base scales appeared unnecessarily unattractive to persons from high-salary areas.

In addition, ICSAB called for measures which would enable it to make a thorough review of existing anomalies.

Later in the year, the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions made a detailed examination of the ICSAB recommendations. It was of the opinion that, while ICSAB might have been correct in its assumptions on the basis of January 1970 data, developments since that date with respect to the relationships between United Nations salaries and those of the United States Civil Service had varied. The Advisory Committee came to the conclusion that the Secretary-General's proposal for an 8 per cent increase should be made effective 1 July 1971 rather than 1 January 1971. It also agreed with ICSAB that a thorough review of the United Nations salary system should be undertaken as a matter of priority. It was, in addition, the opinion of the Advisory Committee that such a review could best be carried out by ICSAB with the assistance of outside consultants when necessary, rather than by a governmental committee of experts, because of the acknowledged competence of ICSAB'S members.

<sup>4</sup> See Y.U.N., 1956, pp. 394, 396-98. When on 27 February 1957 the General Assembly decided, by resolution 1095 (XI), to use Geneva as the base city for salaries of United Nations staff in the professional and higher categories, it also decided to inaugurate a system of post adjustments to preserve equivalent standards of living at different duty stations, on the basis of relative costs of living and related factors.

The recommendations of the Advisory Committee, as contained in its report on the subject, were as follows:

1. That ICSAB should be requested to undertake a thorough review of the United Nations salary system, bearing in mind the observations to be made in the course of the discussion of the question in the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, and also the views set out concerning a review of such matters as: the basic principles underlying the salary system and their application in practice; the operation of the post adjustment system; the implications of comparing United States salary scales with United Nations scales using Geneva as the base for the system, and how it operated at high-cost duty stations; whether the relationship between the entry-grade salary level and the senior-grade salaries was appropriate in the current situation; the possibility of reintroducing an expatriation allowance; the question of relating salary levels to the transferability of staff; and the recruitment difficulties of certain organizations in the United Nations family.

2. That the General Assembly might wish to increase the salary scales for the professional and higher categories, after consolidation of two classes of post adjustment, by 8 per cent with effect from 1 July 1971, it being understood that no further adjustment of the said scales would be made until such time as the review to be requested of ICSAB had been completed and its results approved by the General Assembly.

In the course of the discussion of this question in the Assembly's Fifth Committee, the United States proposed an amendment to the Advisory Committee's proposal so as to increase the salaries by 5 per cent—instead of 8 per cent—effective 1 July 1971. without consolidation of classes of post adjustment, it being understood that no further adjustment of the salary scales be made pending the completion of a thorough review of the United Nations salary system. It was the opinion of the United States that if one accepted ICSAB'S approach, based upon the relationship of real-income increases in the salaries of United Nations employees in Geneva and United States Civil Service employees in New York, the factual data did not justify an 8 per cent increase either from 1 January or 1 July 1971. A sub-amendment was proposed by Argentina, and subsequently accepted by the United States, to have the original United States amendment provide for the consolidation of two classes of post adjustment in the base salaries.

Canada, Japan, Liberia, Nigeria, Pakistan, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Upper Volta subsequently supported the revised United States amendment. Other Members, such as the USSR, which felt there was no justification for an increase in the salary scales, were prepared to take a positive view of the revised United States amendment.

On behalf of Algeria, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia and Tunisia, Peru proposed a draft resolution to give effect to the Secretary-General's proposal, but this was later amended, on the proposal of Mauritius, to increase the salaries by 8 per cent effective 15 July 1971 instead of 1 January 1971. The following 13 Members sponsored this revised proposal: Algeria, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Morocco, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan and Tunisia. The 13-power proposal was subsequently withdrawn by its sponsors on 1 December 1970 in favour of the Advisory Committee's proposal.

On 20 November 1970, a procedural draft resolution introduced in the Fifth Committee by Saudi Arabia—on behalf also of Colombia, Senegal and Sudan—would have had the Chairman of the Staff Committee of the United Nations Staff Association and the General Secretary of the Federation of International Civil Servants' Associations appear before the Fifth Committee in order to express the views of the staff on the question before a final decision was taken by the Committee. On 23 November 1970, this proposal was rejected by a roll-call vote of 30 to 15, with 34 abstentions.

In favour of this proposal it was argued that there was danger of serious deterioration of staff morale if staff representatives were not permitted the democratic process of expressing their views before the Fifth Committee, especially since the Secretary-General, as Chief Administrative Officer, was in full agreement with their demands.

The principal objections to the proposal were: the staff had already expressed its views in writing through the Secretary-General; and, whereas the Secretary-General was in agreement with the staff in this instance, such a procedure if adopted might set a dangerous precedent for the future when the Fifth Committee might find itself in the position of an arbiter between the Secretary-General and the staff.

After a lengthy procedural debate on which of the proposals before it on the increase of salaries should be put to the vote first, the Fifth Committee decided, on 1 December 1970, to give priority to the 8 per cent proposal. It did so, by roll-call, by 49 votes in favour of priority for the 8 per cent proposal, 30 in favour of priority for the 5 per cent proposal, with 15 abstentions.

Accordingly, the Fifth Committee then voted on the Advisory Committee's proposal to raise the salaries of staff in the professional and higher categories by 8 per cent after consolidation of two classes of post adjustment, with effect from 1 July 1971, it being understood that no further adjustment of the base salary scales would be made until a thorough review of the salary scales was completed. This proposal was approved by the Fifth Committee by a roll-call vote of 60 to 15, with 23 abstentions.

The decision to this effect was endorsed at a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 17 December 1970 by 89 votes to 11, with 15 abstentions, with the adoption of resolution 2742 (XXV). (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below. For the salary scales for each level and step, as finally approved, and for the schedules of post adjustments, see TABLES I and II, pp. 838, 839.)

REVIEW OF THE SALARY SYSTEM

Decisions were also taken by the General Assembly on a review of the United Nations salary system.

Two draft resolutions on this subject were presented to the Fifth Committee.

One proposal called, inter alia, for a review to be undertaken by a governmental committee of experts from 11 United Nations Member States, to be nominated by the President of the twenty-fifth session of the General Assembly. This was sponsored by the following 22 Members: Burundi, Ceylon, Ghana, Guyana, India, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Kenya, Mali, Mauritius, Mongolia, Nigeria, the People's Republic of the Congo, Poland, Rwanda, Syria, Togo, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Republic of Tanzania, the Upper Volta and Zambia.

The second proposal would have had the Assembly inter alia invite the International Civil Service Advisory Board (ICSAB) to carry out a review of the whole system of salaries, allowances and other benefits for international civil service personnel. This proposal, introduced by the United Kingdom on 25 November 1970, was sponsored by the following 10 Members: Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Greece, Japan, Pakistan, the Philippines and the United Kingdom.

Those sponsoring the 22-power text, although recognizing the expertise and experience of ICSAB, felt that there was a difference between reviewing salaries and allowances, as called for by ICSAB'S terms of reference, and reviewing the principles, criteria and guidelines for determining salaries and allowances. In their opinion, although the last such review (which had been made in 1956 by an expert governmental committee—the Salary Committee—set up by the Assembly on 15 December 1955<sup>6</sup>) was a good one, any committee which was to be currently constituted for that purpose should be representative of the increased membership of the Organization since 1956. Moreover, they felt that ICSAB would not be in a position to devote the time necessary for such a study.

On the other hand, those sponsoring the 10-power proposal to invite ICSAB to carry out the review were of the opinion that this was the most practical and efficient course since ICSAB was already in existence, it was undeniably an expert body and it already had the necessary background information. Moreover, ICSAB was already acceptable to the specialized agencies, whereas the alternate proposal for an inter-governmental committee would result in a substantial delay before the review could start in order to allow for consultations with the agencies.

On 1 December 1970, the Fifth Committee voted on the 22-power proposal, which had been submitted first. The other proposal was not voted on, the 22-power text having been approved, by roll-call, by 45 votes to 31, with 21 abstentions.

This was subsequently adopted at a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 17 December 1970, by 104 votes to 4, with 12 abstentions, as resolution 2743 (XXV).

By this, the Assembly—convinced that the Noblemaire principle, which had been the basis of the international salary system for staff in the professional and higher categories, had led to a number of serious anomalies in its contemporary application and noting that the system of establishing salaries for staff in the General Service category had also given rise to considerable difficulties and concern—decided to set up a Special Committee for the Review of the United Nations Salary System, consisting of government experts from 11 Member States, to be nominated by the President of the Assembly with due regard to geographical balance. These States, it was understood, would nominate individuals of recognized standing and experience to serve on the Special Committee.

The Assembly asked the Special Committee to undertake a thorough review of the long-term principles and criteria which should govern the whole United Nations common system of salaries, allowances, grants, superannuation and other benefits, and to report, inter alia, its conclusions and recommendations on the following:

1. The structure of categories and grades which would best enable the international civil service to discharge its functions with efficiency and reasonable economy;
2. The base of the system;
3. The principles which should govern the establishment of the salary scales and other conditions of service for the various categories;
4. The level of salaries and allowances, and the fringe benefits for the various grades;
5. Such other matters concerning the system as it deemed relevant.

Among other things, the Assembly asked the Secretary-General:

(i) to transmit to the Special Committee the reports of earlier review committees, the views expressed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the summary records of relevant Fifth Committee discussions; and

(ii) to invite, and to transmit to the Special Committee, the comments and views on the salary system and possible modifications thereof of Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies in the United Nations common system, of the specialized agencies themselves and of the staff associations of the organizations.

In addition, the Assembly: (a) invited the Special Committee to seek evidence from such other quarters as it deemed useful; (b) invited ICSAB to express its views on the report of the Special Committee; and (c) asked the Special Committee to transmit its report, together with the comments of ICSAB, through the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to the General Assembly twenty-sixth session (due to open in September 1971).

On 30 November 1970, when introducing the resolution in the Fifth Committee on behalf of its 22 sponsors, Nigeria explained that the mention of the term "superannuation" in the terms of reference for the proposed Special Committee was not in any way intended to suggest that this body was to undertake a review of the pension system for Secretariat staff.

The sponsors also indicated that while the Special Committee was expected to report to the General Assembly's 1971 (twenty-sixth) session, this was not intended as a rigid deadline for completion of the salary review. If the Special Committee needed more time, it should instead submit a progress report to the Assembly in 1971.

Immediately following the adoption of the resolution on 17 December 1970, the President of the General Assembly nominated, and the Assembly confirmed the nominations of, the following 11 Member States as members of the Salary Review Committee: Argentina, France, India, Japan, Niger, Nigeria, Peru, Poland, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States.

RESOLUTION 2743 (xxv), as recommended by Fifth Committee, A/8099, adopted by Assembly on 17 December 1970, meeting 1933, by 104 votes to 4, with 12 abstentions.

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on salary scales for the Professional and higher categories and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

Convinced that the Noblemaire principle which has been the basis of the international salary system has led to a number of serious anomalies in its contemporary application,

Noting that the system of establishing salaries for the General Service category in some areas has also given rise to considerable difficulties and concern,

Taking into account the fact that there has been no comprehensive review of the United Nations common system of salaries, allowances, grants, superannuation and other benefits since 1956,

Recalling its resolution 975 (X) of 15 December 1955, which established the Salary Review Committee, in whose report it was indicated that, as the international civil service increased in size and complexity, changes would need to be made in the system which the Committee then recommended,

1. Decides to establish a Special Committee for the Review of the United Nations Salary System, consisting of government experts from eleven Member States to be nominated by the President of the General Assembly with due regard to geographical balance, it being understood that these States will nominate individuals of recognized standing and experience to serve on the Committee;

2. Requests the Special Committee to undertake a thorough review of the long-term principles and criteria which should govern the whole United Nations common system of salaries, allowances, grants, superannuation and other benefits and to report, inter alia, its conclusions and recommendations on the following:

(a) The structure of categories and grades which will best enable the international civil service to discharge its functions with efficiency and reasonable economy;

(b) The base of the system;

(c) The principles which should govern the establishment of the salary scales and other conditions of service for the various categories;

(d) The level of salaries and allowances, and the fringe benefits for the various grades;

(e) Such other matters concerning the system as it may deem relevant;

3. Suggests that the Special Committee could establish such panels or subsidiary groups of experts as will ensure that adequate time is devoted to the subjects under study;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Special Committee, to arrange for such additional assistance by way of staff or consultants as the Special Committee may need;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To transmit to the Special Committee the reports of earlier review committees, the views expressed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the summary records of relevant Fifth Committee discussions;

(b) To invite, and to transmit to the Special Committee, the comments and views on the salary system and possible modifications thereof of States Members of the United Nations or members of specialized agencies in the United Nations common system, of the specialized agencies themselves and of the staff associations of the organizations;

6. Invites the Special Committee to seek evidence from such other quarters as it may deem useful;

7. Invites the International Civil Service Advisory Board to express its views on the report of the Special Committee:

8. Requests the Special Committee to transmit its report, together with the comments of the International Civil Service Advisory Board, through the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session.

THE UNITED NATIONS JOINT STAFF PENSION FUND

Eleven organizations are members of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund. They are: the United Nations (including the Registry of the International Court of Justice); the International Labour Organisation; the Food and Agriculture Organization; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the World Health Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the International Telecommunication Union; the World Meteorological Organization; the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization; the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization; and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

OPERATION OF THE FUND

During the 12 months ending 30 September 1970, the number of participants increased from 29,377 to 32,336 and the number of associate participants (having only death and disability coverage) decreased from 1,440 to 404, owing to the discontinuance of the associate participant scheme for new entrants. As of 1 January 1967 there could be no new associate participants. This was in accordance with a resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 15 December 1966.<sup>7</sup>

The principal of the Fund increased during the 12-month period ending 30 September 1970 from $435,180,076.97 to $505,555,040.77. The cash return on the investment of the Fund's assets was at the annual rate of 4.07 per cent, as against 4.21 per cent for the preceding year.

As at 30 September 1970, the Fund was paying 1,775 retirement benefits, 782 withdrawal settlements in the form of life annuities, 656 widow's benefits, 128 disability benefits, 1,237 children's benefits and 20 secondary dependant's benefits.

ANNUAL REPORT OF PENSION BOARD

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board (which normally meets once every two years) held no session in 1970. Its annual report to the General Assembly and to the member organizations of the Fund was therefore presented on its behalf by its Standing Committee.

The report included: the audited accounts of the Fund for the fiscal year ended 30 September 1969; a summary of the investments of the Fund as at that date; various statistical tables reflecting the operation of the Fund during the year; and an account of the action taken by the Standing Committee on behalf of the Board since the Board's previous session in 1969. That account included a review of the investment policy, an examination of the Fund's financial statements and the audit report thereon, the framing of interim administrative rules, implementation of the recommendations of the management survey conducted in 1969, decisions on a number of individual cases arising under the Fund's Regulations and submission to the General Assembly of estimates of administrative expenses for 1971.

In addition, the Standing Committee proposed, for approval by the General Assembly, an agreement with the Government of Canada (under article 13 of the Fund's Regulations) which was intended to provide continuity of pension and staff benefit rights in circumstances of transfer between the United Nations and Canadian Government service.

On 11 December 1970, the General Assembly, upon the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, adopted without objection a resolution (2696 (XXV)) by which it took note of the report of the Board, approved the estimate of administrative expenses for 1971, and concurred in the proposed agreement with the Government of Canada, which thereupon went into effect on 11 December 1970. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below).

CHAPTER II

BUDGETARY ARRANGEMENTS

THE UNITED NATIONS BUDGET FOR 1971

On 17 December 1970, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly voted appropriations totalling $192,149,300 to meet the expenses of the United Nations in 1971. It also approved estimates of income in the amount of $31,777,000 (including $21,663,000 to be derived from staff assessment on wages and salaries).

The gross amount to be contributed by Member States for 1971 was set by the Assembly at $178,718,816, after taking into account the surplus amount for the financial year 1969 and certain revisions to the income estimates for 1970. The gross assessment on United Nations Member States was to be offset by their respective shares in staff assessment income through the Tax Equalization Fund, for a total amount of $21,894,529. These decisions were embodied in Assembly resolution 2738 (XXV) of 17 December 1970. (For text and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Assembly's action was taken on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, on the basis of reports of the Secretary-General and recommendations thereon by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

The original expenditure estimates for 1971 submitted by the Secretary-General amounted to $183,974,800. Those recommended by the Advisory Committee came to $180,544,700, representing a reduction of $3,430,100 from the Secretary-General's estimates. Income estimates originally submitted by the Secretary-General amounted to $29,779,900. The Advisory Committee recommended a small reduction of $354,000 in the income estimates submitted by the Secretary-General. The final approved figures of $192,149,300 and $31,777,000 were the consequence of revisions subsequent to the submission of the initial estimates and of inclusion of appropriations to meet the financial implications of decisions taken by the General Assembly. (For details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

As in previous years, certain Members, including Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, reiterated their reservations regarding the inclusion in the regular budget of such items as the United Nations bond issue, the financing of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea and the United Nations Memorial Cemetery in Korea. They also expressed reservations about various items relating to technical assistance programmes which they considered to be in contravention of the United Nations Charter, as they believed that those activities should be financed solely from voluntary contributions and not from the regular budget.

Argentina, Brazil, India, Kenya, Mexico and Nigeria reserved their position of principle with regard to the United Nations bond issue. In their view, the funds raised on those bonds were utilized exclusively to cover expenditures resulting from peace-keeping operations and should be financed on the principles approved by the General Assembly for that purpose rather than on the same basis as the regular expenditure of the Organization.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF UNITED NATIONS

During the Fifth Committee's discussions on the budget estimates for 1971, the steadily deteriorating financial position of the Organization as described by the Secretary-General in the introduction to his latest annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization was of wide concern to delegations. The Secretary-General had stated that the main cause of the worsening situation was the fact that certain Member States continued to withhold their share of contributions in respect of certain items which they considered to be improperly included in the regular budget, as well as the fact that the amounts owed by slow payers were increasing. At certain times during 1970, he added, it had become necessary to borrow from trust funds and special accounts in his custody in order to meet salary payments to staff. This hand-to-mouth existence could not continue and scarcely befitted the dignity of the world Organization, the Secretary-General stated. He strongly urged that Member States concern themselves with the urgency and seriousness of the situation on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Organization, and find means to restore its solvency.

A number of delegations found encouragement in an oral statement made by the Secretary-General before the Fifth Committee in which, with reference to the financial situation, he stated that, in the light of recent consultations and contacts, "an imaginative initiative may meet with a positive response." Denmark, New Zealand, Trinidad and Tobago and the United States were among those that expressed the hope that the Secretary-General would continue his efforts actively and that Member States would co-operate by using the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations to express financially the reaffirmation of their confidence in the aims and purposes of the United Nations Charter.

The view was expressed by Poland that the present financial crisis was not an expression of a negative attitude of Member States towards the Organization but rather evidence of the difficulties which some of them experienced in meeting the ever-growing costs of their participation in the various organizations of the United Nations family.

Recalling the solution indicated by the General Assembly in its consensus adopted on 1 September 1965, when it proposed that United Nations Member States make voluntary contributions to ease the difficult financial situation of the Organization and that the highly developed countries make substantial contributions,<sup>1</sup> Finland and Sweden considered that the appeal for voluntary contributions should be repeated and strengthened.

Guyana observed that not only was the good name of the Organization at stake due to the critical situation but it was also foreseeable that a reduction in its activities would be inevitable. A good indication of that trend was, in its opinion, the fact that the Secretary-General had used the financial situation as an important justification for his proposal to reduce his initial budget estimates for 1971.

REDUCTION IN FORESEEABLE BUDGET NEEDS AND GROWTH OF THE BUDGET

When presenting his budget estimates for 1971 before the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General stated that certain factors which had not been taken into account in his initial estimates of expenditure of $183.9 million in 1971 would likely raise the level of the 1971 budget to a total of $199.7 million and he proposed certain measures that would reduce this requirement by approximately $7 million.

In making his proposal, the Secretary-General stated that he had in mind primarily the high percentage increase in the 1971 budget estimates, about 18.5 per cent over the total 1970 appropriations, as well as the increasing gravity of the financial position of the Organization and the difficulties that might be experienced by a large number of Member States, particularly those of limited means, in adjusting themselves to such a sharp rise. In addition, the progress of the manpower utilization surveys which were being carried out during 1970 was casting a new light on the initial assessment of staff resources that would be required in 1971 and, on balance, he was persuaded that, pending completion of the total survey operation, no great risk would be involved in maintaining throughout 1971 the level of staff resources approved for 1970. The measures proposed by the Secretary-General to achieve a $7 million reduction in the total requirements for 1971 were, in broad terms, the maintenance of the total level of staff resources for the Secretariat at the level approved for 1970, and a reduction in actual cash requirements in 1971 for the implementation of the various construction plans which the General Assembly had approved in principle.

In the course of the general debate on the budget estimates for 1971, a number of Members—among them New Zealand, Pakistan, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States—took the view that the Secretary-General's initiative in proposing the reduction was courageous and realistic in light of the rising expenditures of the Organization and its difficult financial position.

Other delegations, although recognizing the reasons that had prompted the Secretary-General's action, were concerned about the possible adverse consequences it might have on the activities of the Organization, especially in the economic and social fields which were of special interest to developing countries. Norway, for instance, commented that it was difficult to comprehend how carefully prepared budget estimates could be reduced so considerably without serious repercussions. Guyana and Nigeria felt that if the Secretary-General's new assessment was an accurate one, it pointed to serious inadequacies in the initial budget-formulating process.

During the Committee's discussion of the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General in respect of the budget section on salaries and wages—which, among other revisions to his initial estimates, took into account his proposal to maintain the total level of staff resources for 1971 at that approved for 1970—some delegations sought assurances that the Secretary-General's decision in this regard would not impede in any way the work programme in the economic, social and human rights fields.

Accordingly, Guyana introduced a draft paragraph—for inclusion in the Fifth Committee's report to the General Assembly on the budget estimates for 1971—which was intended primarily to afford the Secretary-General sufficient flexibility in assuring the full implementation of approved programmes.

The paragraph, co-sponsored by Argentina, Brazil, Ghana, Guyana, India, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia, was adopted by the Fifth Committee on 27 November 1970, by 47 votes to 10, with 11 abstentions, and read as follows:

The Fifth Committee has noted the Secretary-General's recommendation that the total level of staff resources for all offices and departments for 1971 be maintained at the level provided for in 1970, including both established and provisional posts. The Committee is concerned, however, that at the beginning of the Second United Nations Development Decade, the United Nations work programme in the economic, social and human rights fields should not suffer. It therefore recommends that if the Secretary-General finds that during 1971 the resources available to him are not sufficient to implement fully his work programme for 1971 as approved by the Economic and Social Council, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions be empowered to approve requests from him for additional manpower resources provided that: (a) such requests are within the limits of the additional established and provisional posts for 1971 requested by the Secretary-General and (b) the Advisory Committee would consider the Secretary-General's requests bearing in mind the results of the manpower utilization survey.

After taking into account the $7 million reduction in the foreseeable budget requirements for 1971, as proposed by the Secretary-General, the potential level of the appropriations—approximately $193 million—represented an increase of about 14 per cent above the level approved for 1970. Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR were among those Members that regarded such an increase in the budget level as unjustifiable and unacceptable. Poland commented, for instance, that the percentage increase of the United Nations budget in recent years was rising faster than the gross national income of Member States, and since the growth of national income reflected capacity to pay, the increase in United Nations expenditure, and consequently in the contributions of Member States, exceeded considerably the growth in their capacity to pay.

The United States was particularly concerned with the manner in which the increase had occurred. It could not accept as a valid approach to the problem that increases in certain expenditures were mandatory. A serious effort should be made in the first instance to absorb such increases within the existing budget levels. Effective implementation of existing programmes was more important than the launching of new ones and, moreover, experience indicated that new programmes could frequently be initiated with existing staff resources.

A number of representatives of developing countries were concerned with the fact that the bulk of the increase in the 1971 budget was in administrative costs and that only 2.3 per cent was attributable to programme expansion. In the view of Brazil, however, every increase in administrative expenditure was not necessarily an unproductive one since the success of substantive programmes often depended upon the quality of the infrastructure.

Sweden pointed out that during the past decade the United Nations had, in addition to its activity in the economic and social fields, been called upon to assume responsibilities on important technical issues such as the sea-bed, outer space and environment. This development should be viewed as a healthy sign and, if it were accepted as such, appropriate funds needed to be allocated for carrying out those responsibilities without impeding in any way the growth of the predominantly economic and social activities of the Organization.

Other delegations—including Brazil, Ceylon, Denmark, Finland and India—while concerned with economy and efficiency and the elimination of wasteful procedures, reiterated their objection to imposing an arbitrary ceiling on the growth of the budget which, in their opinion, would ultimately be detrimental to the expansion of the essential activities of the Organization. The Organization, it was argued, had definite obligations under the Charter to promote social progress and better standards of life and to contribute to the solution of international problems in the economic, social, cultural and humanitarian fields.

LONG-TERM PLANNING ESTIMATES

As originally envisaged by a General Assembly decision of 19 December 1967,<sup>2</sup> the Secretary-General was to suggest to the Assembly at each regular session a planning estimate for the United Nations regular budget for the second succeeding (forecast) budgetary period; the first planning estimate was to be considered and approved for the forecast period 1971. In 1969, however, the Assembly decided to postpone consideration of the 1971 planning estimate because the work of the Administrative Management Service had not made it possible accurately to predict the manning tables of the Secretariat for 1971.

As the reasons advanced for the postponement in 1969 of the 1971 estimates remained valid in 1970 with respect to 1972 estimates, Norway, among others, felt that consideration of the 1972 planning estimates should be postponed. It therefore proposed that the Fifth Committee recommend that the Assembly defer for one further year the implementation of the paragraph of the Assembly's 1967 resolution which envisaged that the first planning estimate should

The Fifth Committee approved the decision on 20 November 1970. India and Pakistan, however, expressed reservations about limiting the postponement to one year, inasmuch as the Secretary-General's decision to keep the Secretariat staff for 1971 at the 1970 level created too artificial a level for use as a basis for the planning estimate. Further, implications of other proposals under consideration by the Assembly, such as programme budgeting, expansion of United Nations activities, the uncompleted manpower utilization survey and other studies would have to be taken into account when considering the planning estimates.

Acting on the Fifth Committee's recommendation, the Assembly, on 4 December 1970, decided to defer for one further year, until 1972, consideration and approval of the first planning estimates for a forecast period.

(For information about Fifth Committee discussions on the duration of the United Nations budget cycle and the form of the United Nations budget, see p. 866.)

MANPOWER SURVEY

During the Fifth Committee's general discussion of the budget estimates for 1971, a number of delegations commented on the manpower utilization survey currently being undertaken by the Secretariat's Administrative Management Service.

Surveys, the Fifth Committee was informed, had been completed in respect of the Office of Public Information, the Office of Conference Services, the Economic Commission for Africa, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Surveys were currently in progress in respect of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic Commission for Latin America, and the United Nations Economic and Social Office in Beirut. It was expected that by the end of 1970 and during 1971 the remaining units of the Secretariat would be reviewed.

Commenting on the survey, delegations expressed their appreciation of the work done by the Administrative Management Service.

Canada, Guyana, Japan, the United Arab Republic and Yugoslavia, however, were not satisfied to receive only statements of the conclusions reached by the Secretary-General after a department had been surveyed. They agreed with the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that both the Advisory Committee and the Fifth Committee needed to know what recommendations the Administrative Management Service made, and which of them had been accepted, rejected or postponed by the Secretary-General in the exercise of his responsibilities; they looked forward to receiving such a report from the Secretary-General in order to be in a position to make an objective assessment of staff requirements. Some delegations also agreed with the comments of the Advisory Committee made in the same report regarding the fact that it was premature to evaluate the results of the survey until after the entire Secretariat had been surveyed and the interrelationships between the various units were studied.

UNFORESEEN AND EXTRAORDINARY EXPENSES

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly established the conditions under which the Secretary-General was authorized to enter into commitments to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses in the financial year 1971 for which no provision had been made in the United Nations budget for that year.

The decision to this effect was embodied in resolution 2739(XXV), adopted by the Assembly by 107 votes to 10, with 0 abstentions, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved the text by 60 votes to 10, with 0 abstentions, on 16 December 1970. The resolution followed the pattern set for previous years. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Also taken up in the Fifth Committee in 1970 were a report by the Secretary-General and a report by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions dealing with procedures to govern the financing of unforeseen and extraordinary expenses.

The Secretary-General's report was submitted in accordance with a Fifth Committee request of 2 November 1969 for an inquiry to be made in the first 10 months of 1970 on the way the system previously recommended by the Advisory Committee<sup>3</sup> for dealing with unforeseen and extraordinary expenses would have worked had it been in force.

The Secretary-General made the point that experience during 1970 had not provided a sufficient basis for adequately testing the procedures suggested by the Advisory Committee. The Secretary-General also observed that this question could not be considered in isolation from studies being made on the form of the United Nations budget and the budget cycle.

The Advisory Committee agreed with this conclusion and recommended that further consideration of the matter be deferred until it could be reviewed in its proper context and on the basis of fuller information than was currently available.

On 11 December 1970, the Fifth Committee accordingly decided, without objection, to defer further consideration of the matter, as recommended by the Advisory Committee.

WORKING CAPITAL FUND FOR 1971

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, established the level of the Working Capital Fund for 1971 at $40 million, the same level as for 1970. The Assembly, as in previous years, also set forth terms under which the Secretary-General was authorized to make advances from the Working Capital Fund, as might be necessary, to finance certain expenditures.

The decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2740 (XXV), adopted by 105 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, which approved the text on 16 December 1970 by 61 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

UNITED NATIONS PUBLIC INFORMATION POLICIES

In the course of its general discussions on the United Nations budget, the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee also dealt—but not at length—with the report of the Secretary-General on the review and reappraisal of United Nations information policies and activities. It decided to continue its consideration of this report at the 1971 session of the General Assembly.

The report originated from a suggestion made in 1963 by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the Secretary-General might envisage instituting a procedure for a thorough review of the United Nations public information programme, either on a continuous basis or at regular intervals, to consider the emphasis given to its various information media in responding as rapidly as possible to the changing needs of the developing countries.

In arriving at the recommendations embodied in his report, the Secretary-General had for his consideration the report of the Office of Public Information based on an internal study of its policies, practices and programmes in all its fields of activity and encompassing all the media of communication in which it operated, as well as surveys carried out in 1969 and earlier in 1970 by the Administrative Management Service and in 1968 by the Secretary-General's Committee on the Reorganization of the Secretariat.<sup>4</sup>

The Secretary-General's report was devoted mainly to a review of the constitutional directives underlying the work of the Office of Public Information and to an examination of the nature of information work within the context of the objectives of the United Nations.

Among the Secretary-General's conclusions and recommendations on broad information policies were the following:

1. While the broad terms of reference established for the Office of Public Information by the General Assembly on 13 February 1946<sup>5</sup> remained a valid and practical framework, certain constituent elements of the organization and operations of the Office of Public Information should, within that framework, be strengthened.

2. The essential role of the Office of Public Information should continue to be to provide basic services and support for national outlets, but it needed to intensify its own supplementary information output, in all media; national outlets relied on it not only for basic services but also for sustained stimulation.

With the exception of two recommendations resulting from the survey of the Office carried out by the Administrative Management Service and already provided for by the Secretary-General in his revised estimates for 1971, the conclusions and recommendations in the report on the review and reappraisal of United Nations public information activities had no financial implications for the 1971 budget. Some of them, however, would have considerable financial implications for later years should they be approved by the Assembly.

In a related report, the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions expressed the view that the questions of information policy raised in the Secretary-General's report were not within its competence but rather called for consideration by the General Assembly. While it recognized that some of the conclusions and recommendations did not directly involve questions of information policy, it felt that all the matters raised in the Secretary-General's report were to an extent interrelated and should therefore be taken as a whole rather than dealt with piecemeal.

During the Fifth Committee's discussion of the revised budget estimates for 1971 for salaries and wages, Belgium, France and Tunisia called attention to the establishment of a small French language unit within the Press and Publications Division of the United Nations Office of Public Information to undertake the dissemination of information material in the French language, as commented upon by the Secretary-General in his report on the review and reappraisal of information policies and activities. They sought assurances that the revised estimates submitted by the Secretary-General for the Office of Public Information did in fact adequately provide for the continuation of the small French language unit which had been established on an experimental basis on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Organization.

On 27 November 1970, the Fifth Committee, acting on a proposal by France and Mali, decided, without objection, to include paragraphs to the following effect in its report on the 1971 budget estimates to the Assembly.

The Fifth Committee considered that, if the Office of Public Information was to carry out properly the tasks entrusted to it, it would have to maintain on a permanent basis a unit which was large enough to provide the necessary French language services.

The maintenance of these services, envisaged in the Secretary-General's report on United Nations information policies and activities, would call for an appropriate distribution of the staff and resources available to the Press and Publications Division.

Later, during the discussion which took place in the Fifth Committee on the Secretary-General's report on the review and reappraisal of information policies and activities, the Assistant Secretary-General for Public Information inter alia assured the Fifth Committee of the continued efforts of the Office of Public Information to improve its French language services, as well as those of the other official languages.

Canada was particularly concerned with the use of French in the Press and Publications Division and emphasized that the French language unit in that Division should be established on a permanent basis. Mexico and Iraq commented on the need for strengthening the Spanish and Arabic language activities of the Office and stressed the need for adequate television coverage in those languages. China observed that, in carrying out its entrusted task of disseminating information concerning the United Nations to all peoples of the world, the Office of Public Information should take into consideration the number of persons using the principal languages and concentrate on areas which had so far been inadequately covered, making a special effort in respect of the Chinese people.

Commenting on the role of the Centre for Economic and Social Information (CESI), the USSR expressed the view that the Office of Public Information possessed all the necessary experience in the economic and social spheres and that there was no justification for a separate centre for economic and social information. The USSR felt that if CESI was to continue to function, it should be financed entirely from voluntary contributions.

Norway, referring to the comments of the USSR on CESI, made reference to a General Assembly resolution of 13 December 1969<sup>6</sup> on the mobilization of public opinion, in which the Assembly endorsed the concept on which the work of CESI was based, and to a section of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, which had been adopted and solemnly proclaimed by the General Assembly on 24 October 1970.<sup>7</sup>

The United Kingdom stated that it attached great importance to the three fundamental principles governing the information activities of the United Nations as set out in the General Assembly's resolution of 13 February 1946 and reaffirmed by the Assembly on 4 February 1952.<sup>8</sup>

The three principles were that the Office of Public Information in the performance of its task should (a) eschew all propaganda, (b) supplement, but not seek to replace, established information agencies, and (c) maintain the principle of unified control. The United Kingdom believed that those principles had stood the test of time and needed no revision.

It was generally agreed that the Secretary-General's report on the review and reappraisal of information policies and activities was too significant to be discussed hastily and deserved more thorough examination.

Accordingly, on 8 December 1970, the Fifth Committee decided, without objection, to postpone further consideration of the report until the twenty-sixth (1971) session of the General Assembly.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR THE FINANCIAL YEAR 1970

On 17 December 1969, at its twenty-fourth session, the General Assembly, in adopting the United Nations budget for 1970, approved: gross appropriations amounting to $168,420,000; an estimate of income from staff assessment of $19,180,000; and an estimate of income from other sources of $9,944,125.<sup>9</sup> On 16 December 1970, at its twenty-fifth session, the General Assembly approved revised appropriations for 1970 in the amount of $168,956,950, representing an increase of $536,950 over the original appropriations voted in 1969. Income from staff assessment was increased by $25,000 for a revised estimate of $19,205,000, and income from other sources was increased by $1,991,710 for a revised estimate of $11,935,835.

The revised appropriations and income estimates were approved by the Assembly on the basis of a recommendation by its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, following consideration of reports by the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

In his report, the Secretary-General requested an additional provision of $985,350 and proposed an increase in income of $1,235,100. In determining his request for additional credits, he took into account commitments of $72,900 which had been initially entered into under the terms of a General Assembly resolution of 17 December 1969 on unforeseen and extraordinary expenses for 1970,<sup>10</sup> or within the provisions of previous General Assembly decisions relating to United Nations assistance in cases of natural disaster. In addition, the Secretary-General requested further increases of an unavoidable nature which had since become apparent, offset by unexpended balances which were anticipated under a number of other budget headings.

The Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in a related report, recommended a reduction of $250,000 in the additional appropriations requested by the Secretary-General, bringing the total revised appropriations to $169,155,350. The Advisory Committee recommended no adjustment in the Secretary-General's income estimates.

On 12 October 1970, the Fifth Committee approved the revised appropriations, as recommended by the Advisory Committee, by 67 votes to 5, with 5 abstentions. The Committee also adopted unanimously the revised income estimates.

On 9 December 1970, the Secretary-General submitted to the Fifth Committee a revision to the approved supplementary estimates which, compared with the amounts approved earlier, involved a reduction of $198,400 under the expenditure sections, to bring the total for expenditures to $168,956,950. The revision also involved an increase of $781,610 in the estimates of income, for a total of $31,140,835. The Advisory Committee concurred in the Secretary-General's recommended revisions. On 12 December 1970, the Fifth Committee approved the revised supplementary expenditure estimates and the revised income estimates.

On the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly approved the revised appropriations for 1970 at a plenary meeting on 16 December 1970 in adopting resolution 2729 A (XXV) by 86 votes to 9, with 2 abstentions. The income estimates for 1970 were unanimously approved by the Assembly with the adoption of resolution 2729 B (XXV). (For texts of resolutions, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

SCALE OF ASSESSMENTS FOR THE APPORTIONMENT OF UNITED NATIONS EXPENSES

On 4 December 1970, the General Assembly established a new percentage scale of assessments for contributions of Member States to the United Nations budget for the financial years 1971, 1972 and 1973, as well as that for non-member States contributing to specific activities or sections of the United Nations budget. The Assembly did so on the basis of a report by its Committee on Contributions, which had met earlier in the year to review the scale of assessments.

In introducing the report of the Committee on Contributions to the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions said that, in the absence of new directives from the Assembly, the criteria and guidelines used by the Committee and the methods followed for the establishment of the scale were basically the same as in the past. The Committee had based its review of the scale on the net national products at market prices of the Member States for the three-year period 1966-1968, adjusted by deductions for low per capita income by application of the existing allowance formula.

In compliance with previous Assembly directives, he added, the Committee had observed the "ceiling," the "per capita ceiling" and the "floor" principles, and had paid particular attention to the special problems of developing countries. Throughout its review, the Committee had taken account of the economic and financial problems of the developing countries. As a result the Committee had ensured that, in the proposed scale, the developing countries with per capita income below $300 showed no increases in assessment and many showed reductions, and, with only a few exceptions, the same applied to developing countries with per capita income above that level and below $1,000. No systematic allowance had been devised for the ability of Members to secure foreign currency, but through the use of available data on the servicing and amortization of external debts, the Committee had taken into account payments difficulties of Member States and made corresponding downward adjustments in individual assessments. In order to facilitate the payment of contributions, the Committee had also recommended that the Secretary-General's authority to accept a portion of the contributions in currencies other than United States dollars should be extended to the years 1971-1973.

In the ensuing discussions in the Assembly's Fifth Committee, some Members—among them Japan, Libya, the Netherlands and Spain—considered the proposed increases in their assessment rates to be excessive, particularly when compared to the decreases that had been recommended for some highly industrialized countries.

Ceylon, India, Indonesia and Sudan expressed concern over having the "subsistence income" of the rural population included in the net national product. The sector of population living on a "subsistence income," it was pointed out, remained outside the monetary system; that concept could not therefore be included in the national product figures.

A number of delegations welcomed the decision of the Committee on Contributions to exercise wider discretion for the concession of relief to developing countries with low per capita incomes.

Several delegations expressed satisfaction that the Committee on Contributions had taken more systematic account of the payments difficulties of Member States through the use of data on the servicing and amortization of external debts. It was hoped that the Committee would pursue this new approach and that further practical steps would result from its continued study of the problem of securing foreign currency. They supported the Committee's recommendations that the Secretary-General's authority to accept payment of a portion of Member States' contributions in currencies other than United States dollars be extended to the years 1971-1973, and that the arrangements be made as comprehensive as feasible.

In this connexion, on the suggestion of the United Arab Republic, the Fifth Committee decided unanimously to include a paragraph to the following effect in its report to the Assembly:

In the context of the factor regarding the ability of Member States to secure foreign currency . . . the Committee recommends that the needs of the Organization in currencies other than the United States dollar should be met by giving priority for payments in non-United States currencies to the countries whose currencies they may be.

Concern was also expressed by some Members at the tendency to regard it as a principle that contributions of the industrialized countries must not be reduced, while those of the developing countries must not be increased. The scale, it was stated, should reflect changes in the economic realities of all Member States.

Maintaining that the fundamental principle for the establishment of an equitable scale was the capacity to pay of Member States, some delegations pointed out that it was difficult to justify the "ceiling" and "per capita ceiling" limitations on assessments. In this regard the United States observed that, although the "ceiling," "per capita ceiling" and "floor" principles were not deduced from the concept of capacity to pay, they were nevertheless valid principles in an organization of sovereign equals with correlative equal responsibilities.

Japan considered that, because of their prerogatives and powers, the permanent members of the Security Council should be expected to bear a correspondingly larger financial responsibility than the non-permanent members of the Council.

On 2 November 1970, the Fifth Committee approved the scale of assessments and draft resolution recommended by the Committee on Contributions. It did so by 86 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions. On 4 December, the General Assembly endorsed this action establishing the scale of assessments in adopting resolution 2654(XXV) without objection. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

RECOMMENDATIONS ON FINANCES OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

CONTINUATION OF THE JOINT INSPECTION UNIT

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly decided to continue the Joint Inspection Unit on the existing experimental basis for a further period of two years beyond 31 December 1971 and to review the question of the Unit at the end of that period. [The Joint Inspection Unit had originally been set up for an initial period of four years on the basis of recommendations by the Assembly's Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies.<sup>11</sup>]

The decision to this effect was embodied in resolution 2735 A (XXV) which was unanimously adopted at a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 17 December 1970, on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved the text by 89 votes to 0 on 5 November 1970, on the basis of a proposal by Argentina, Austria, France, India, the United Republic of Tanzania, and Upper Volta. (For text of resolution, See DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

On 10 November 1970, the Fifth Committee also decided, on the proposal of Barbados, Ghana, Guyana, India, Mexico and the United Republic of Tanzania, to include the following text in its report on the subject to the Assembly:

In the interest of improving the operations of the Joint Inspection Unit, while at the same time bearing in mind its terms of reference and independent status, the Fifth Committee recommends that:

(a) The Joint Inspection Unit should, through the Secretary-General, publish details of its works programme at the beginning of each year and should intensify its consultations with external bodies of an investigative and co-ordinating nature. It is hoped that in this way overlap and duplication of work carried out by the various bodies in this field may be minimized. The Joint Inspection Unit will, of course, be able to adjust its work programme as it sees fit and will continue to make use of the device of unscheduled, on-the-spot inspections.

(b) The Joint Inspection Unit should give priority attention to requests from legislative bodies for inspection reports in fields within its terms of reference. In this connexion, the Committee suggests to the appropriate legislative bodies that they fully utilize the expertise of the Joint Inspection Unit. Furthermore, the Committee is of the view that the Joint Inspection Unit should take into account the comments made in the Committee concerning rationalization of its field activities.

(c) Legislative bodies should continue to arrange their work programmes in such a way that sufficient time is allocated for full consideration of the Unit's reports and recommendations.

(d) The procedures for the handling of the Joint Inspection Unit reports should in future allow for the reports to be made available to Member States as soon as practicable after issue.

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF AD HOC COMMITTEE

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly, in taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies, endorsed the observations and recommendations of the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, particularly those on the need for a continuing critical review, in the future, of the implementation of the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendations.

The decision to this effect was embodied in resolution 2735 B (XXV), adopted, without a formal vote, on the recommendation of the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee where it was approved, also without a formal vote, on 17 November 1970. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

REACTIVATION OF AD HOC COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS

In the course of the discussion which took place in 1970 in the General Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, Argentina, Brazil, Canada, France, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Nigeria, the USSR, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom and the United States proposed a draft resolution whereby the Assembly would, inter alia: (1) decide to reactivate the Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies; and (2) request the Ad Hoc Committee, with the assistance of the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and in liaison with the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, to direct its attention to the following matters:

(a) the development of programme budgeting in the United Nations system, including the interconnected questions of medium- and long-term planning, the budget cycle, the harmonization of programming and budgetary policies, and the determination of priorities;

(b) the machinery already in existence in the United Nations system for the purposes of programme review, administrative and budgetary control, audit, inspection and co-ordination, with a view to avoiding overlapping of activities;

(c) arrangements and procedures for effective evaluation of the activities of the United Nations system; and

(d) financial, budgetary and programme arrangements of the United Nations with the specialized agencies arising out of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

Following a brief discussion on the proposal, in the course of which some Members felt that no decision should be taken on such a complex and important matter inasmuch as the proposal had been presented rather late in the Assembly's session, the sponsors informed the Fifth Committee that they decided not to press the draft resolution to a vote since there was not enough time for a full discussion of the matter, on the understanding that the Fifth Committee would give it priority consideration at the next Assembly session (due to open in September 1971). The Fifth Committee thereupon decided to defer further consideration of the proposal to the Assembly's 1971 session.

FORM OF UNITED NATIONS BUDGET AND DURATION OF BUDGET CYCLE

During its discussion in 1970 on the implementation of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee of Experts to Examine the Finances of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee considered a report by the Secretary-General, and related comments by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on proposals to change the form of presentation of the United Nations budget—from an object-of-expenditure basis to a programme basis where feasible, and from an annual to a biennial budget cycle.

The Secretary-General's report was prepared in connexion with his comments on a report by Maurice Bertrand, a member of the Joint Inspection Unit, who had analysed current United Nations budget practices and had advanced proposals for change.

Several Members of the Fifth Committee felt that more time was needed before a final decision could be reached on changing the form of the budget and the budget cycle.

Eventually, the Fifth Committee decided, by 65 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions, to include a paragraph to the following effect in its report to the Assembly on the Fifth Committee's discussion of the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Committee:

Noting the Secretary-General's report to the 1970 Assembly with appreciation, the Fifth Committee asked him to report to the next General Assembly session (due to open in September 1971) through the Economic and Social Council on the progress of the studies necessary to enable the Assembly to be in a position to take a final decision on the question of the form of the United Nations budget and the duration of the budget cycle. The Fifth Committee noted various suggestions contained in the Secretary-General's report, as endorsed by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, and asked the Secretary-General to base the report requested of him on those suggestions. In particular, the Secretary-General's report should include a mock-up of the 1972 budget estimates in a new form and an assessment of the possible technical difficulties and means to overcome them and a suggested detailed time-table for the preparation and review of a medium-term programme and budget presented in the new format.

In its report, the Fifth Committee also stated that it was conscious of the need to benefit from the best possible advice on the technical questions involved, and asked the Secretary-General to secure, as necessary, the services of qualified outside consultants.

CHAPTER III

OTHER ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS

ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY CO-ORDINATION AND HARMONIZATION OF BUDGETS AND PROGRAMMES IN THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM

ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY CO-ORDINATION

Among the background documents for the General Assembly to consider in 1970 in taking up the question of administrative and budgetary co-ordination between the United Nations and the inter-governmental bodies related to it was a report prepared by the Secretary-General, requested by the Assembly on 11 December 1969<sup>1</sup> in view of the need to strengthen and improve the whole machinery of the United Nations system for control and investigation of administrative and financial activities in the interest of economy and greater efficiency and to avoid duplication of efforts. The report was to list all bodies and organs established for such purposes, their terms of reference and the annual expenditures for the financial years 1965 to 1969, as well as give the estimated outlay of manpower for the preparation of data for the testimony before or consultation with each such body and organ.

This study and a related report by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions were discussed mainly in the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

On 13 November 1970, the Fifth Committee, acting on a proposal by Austria, Brazil, Indonesia, Pakistan, the Philippines, the United Arab Republic and the United Republic of Tanzania, decided to include a paragraph to the following effect in its report on the subject to the Assembly: The Committee was of the opinion that the Secretary-General's report on bodies and organs established for purposes of administrative and budgetary control, investigation and co-ordination, and the comments of the Advisory Committee thereon, could be used by the competent organs of the United Nations system in their consideration of matters related to administrative and budgetary control, investigation and co-ordination, particularly with a view to the avoidance of duplication and to the efficient and economical use of resources. The Fifth Committee therefore asked the Secretary-General, the Economic and Social Council, the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Joint Inspection Unit to take these reports into account when appropriate. It also asked the Secretary-General to transmit the reports to the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) for the same purpose.

On the proposal of Canada, the Fifth Committee, on 11 December 1970, also included a paragraph in its report to the Assembly whereby it expressed the hope that, in view of the increased interest in and the growing importance of administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and IAEA, the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the agencies would explore, with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, ways and means to ensure that the Advisory Committee's annual report on the administrative budgets of these agencies would be made available to United Nations Member States earlier than heretofore. The Fifth Committee felt that more time was required by delegations to study the report and receive instructions from their Governments before debating the report in the Committee.

Also on 11 December, acting on a proposal by the United States related to the need to achieve economy in the reproduction of documentation through better co-ordination among organizations, the Fifth Committee included another paragraph in its report to the Assembly whereby it noted that there was apparently some degree of unutilized internal reproduction capacity currently in Geneva, and agreed that the Secretary-General should explore, with the heads of the specialized agencies in Geneva, the formation of an inter-organizational working-level group to co-ordinate publication schedules with a view to more efficient utilization of existing publication facilities in Geneva.

On 16 December, acting on a recommendation made by the Fifth Committee without objection on 11 December, the Assembly, inter alia, asked the Secretary-General (1) to refer the report on general co-ordination matters, for comment, to the executive heads of the specialized agencies and IAEA and to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination; and also to refer it to the Board of Auditors and the Joint Inspection Unit; (2) to refer the reports before it on the administrative and management procedures for the programme and budget of the International Labour Organisation and the World Health Organization to the executive heads of those agencies so that they could be brought to the attention of their respective legislative organs.

The decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2731 (XXV), adopted by the Assembly without vote. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

HARMONIZATION AND GROWTH OF BUDGETS AND PROGRAMMES

Also before the General Assembly in 1970 was a report by the Secretary-General, who had been requested by the Assembly on 17 December 1969<sup>2</sup> to submit an "economic and financial analysis of the nature of the increases in the activities, staff and budget of the United Nations, clearly distinguishing between the increase in money terms and that in real terms," taking into account, to the extent possible, such factors as the rise in contributions to the regular budget of the specialized agencies.

The report was discussed mainly in the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

On 17 December 1970, acting on a recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the Assembly—convinced that, in the year of the commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations and on the threshold of the Second United Nations Development Decade, it would be appropriate for United Nations Member States to reaffirm their financial commitment to the Organization—asked the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of preparing in due course additional data relevant to the Assembly's resolution of 17 December 1969.

The Assembly recognized that a large share of the growth in money terms had been applied for additional expenses in connexion with increases in the membership of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, increases in the number of working languages, a general rise in the cost of goods and services and the maintenance of existing establishments.

As a result of the adoption of the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade (see above, pp. 319-29, text of resolution 2626 (XXV)), the Assembly considered it desirable that there should be a suitable growth in the activities undertaken by the United Nations system. It was therefore important to achieve a better harmonization of the programming and budgetary policies in the United Nations system through the establishment of closer links between the action of bodies dealing with substantive issues and those dealing with financial and budgetary questions, inter alia, with a view to achieving a more rational and more effective use of the resources that Member States put at the disposal of the United Nations system.

Accordingly, the Assembly urged the Governments of all Member States, in accordance with their relative capacity to pay, to consider devoting an increasing level of resources to the budgets and voluntary programmes of the United Nations system, on the basis of established programme requirements, in order to enable the organizations of that system to continue their present activities in a more effective way and to undertake new activities for the benefit of the world community as a whole.

It also urged the Governments of all Member States, in a spirit of renewed dedication to the United Nations and the principles embodied in the Charter, to maintain continuity in their contributions to the regular budgets of the organizations of the United Nations system, without detriment to increasing contributions to the various voluntary programmes and funds.

The Assembly's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2748 (XXV), adopted by 107 votes to 10, with 3 abstentions. The Fifth Committee had approved the text on 9 December 1970 by a roll-call vote of 60 to 10, with 4 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Brazil, Guyana, India, Kenya, Nigeria, Trinidad and Tobago, the United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia and Zambia. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

ELECTRONIC DATA-PROCESSING IN UNITED NATIONS FAMILY

Considered both by the Economic and Social Council and by the General Assembly in 1970 were recommendations arising out of a study of the electronic data-processing facilities and needs of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency, in Geneva or within technically and economically feasible computer-linking distance. (See also pp. 615-16.) The primary recommendation in the study was the creation of a separate facility in Europe for the United Nations system of organizations which would provide data-processing, systems and information services on an inter-governmental basis.

The inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) (which had commissioned the study carried out by the Auditor-General of Canada) accepted that recommendation and agreed on a number of specific points enumerated by the Secretary-General in a report on the subject, including the creation of an inter-organization board for information systems on which all organizations in the United Nations system would be represented.

By the adoption of resolution 1551 (XLIX) on 30 July 1970, the Economic and Social Council endorsed in principle the idea of establishing a common centre in Geneva and took various decisions on the co-ordination aspects of the matter. (See pp. 618-19.)

On 6 November 1970, the Council commended the proposal of the Secretary-General for establishment of the International Computing Centre and recommended that all organizations represented on ACC review their electronic data-processing work with a view to co-ordinating it with the Centre, and that they consider the desirability of participating in the Centre. In addition, the Council requested the Secretary-General to report to it regularly on the work carried out by the Centre on behalf of each organization.

The matter was also discussed in the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee.

On the basis of a USSR proposal, as amended by Canada and the United Republic of Tanzania, the Fifth Committee, on 13 November 1970, recommended in its report to the Assembly that, bearing in mind the paramount consideration of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity, the staff of the International Computing Centre should be recruited with due regard to the principle of equitable geographical distribution.

The Fifth Committee also recommended a resolution for adoption by the General Assembly on the establishment of the International Computing Centre.

By the adoption of this resolution, on 17 December 1970, the Assembly noted with appreciation the report of the Auditor-General of Canada on electronic data-processing in the United Nations family of organizations and noted as well the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on this subject.

The Assembly authorized the Secretary-General to proceed with the proposals for the Centre, subject to appropriate action by the legislative bodies of the United Nations Development Programme and the World Health Organization. It invited all other agencies in the United Nations system to join as partners in the International Computing Centre, and it asked the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of ACC., to seek final agreement on the arrangements for the proposed inter-organization board for information systems and related activities.

The Assembly's decisions were set forth in resolution 2741 (XXV), adopted without vote. In the Fifth Committee, the text, suggested by the Committee's Chairman, was approved without vote on 13 November 1970. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

EXTENSIONS TO UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE AND OFFICE FACILITIES

UNITED NATIONS ACCOMMODATION IN BANGKOK AND ADDIS ABABA

Reporting to the General Assembly in 1970 on architectural and engineering surveys for the possible construction of United Nations accommodation facilities in Bangkok, Thailand, and Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the Secretary-General stated he was satisfied they were well-conceived and would meet the needs of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East and the Economic Commission for Africa, respectively. He recommended that the Assembly approve them in principle at a total cost of $7.6 million and $6.2 million, respectively. In addition, the Secretary-General recommended acceptance of the offer from the Government of Thailand for the use of a plot of land on which to construct new buildings, subject to certain agreements outlined in his report, as well as the offer from the Government of Ethiopia to transfer to the United Nations the title to Africa Hall, to the land on which it stands and to the additional land on which new buildings would be constructed by the United Nations, subject to negotiation of mutually agreed terms and conditions for transfer of title and related matters.

In its report on the matter, the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions recommended to the Assembly approval in principle of the building projects and of the offers from Thailand and Ethiopia as set out in the Secretary-General's report.

On 17 December 1970, the General Assembly, in adopting resolution 2745 (XXV), by 108 votes to 0, with 10 abstentions, concurred in the recommendations of the Advisory Committee and authorized the Secretary-General to proceed in accordance with the recommendations in his report.

The Assembly acted on the proposal of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved the text on 9 December 1970 by 60 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions.

UNITED NATIONS BUILDING IN SANTIAGO, CHILE

Reporting to the General Assembly in 1970 that United Nations premises in Santiago, Chile would, in the absence of unforeseen circumstances, be completed during the first half of 1971, the Secretary-General asked for authority to carry forward to 1971 a credit of $250,000, approved for this purpose for 1970 and remaining unspent at the end of 1970, to meet commitments in 1971. The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in its related report, concurred in the Secretary-General's request.

As regarded the proposed construction of an additional office building, the Secretary-General, after a preliminary examination of two architectural plans, proposed two alternatives. The first was that he be authorized to obtain revised preliminary plans and cost estimates for the project and submit detailed plans and cost estimates to the 1971 session of the Assembly; if these were accepted, construction would commence at the beginning of 1972. The second alternative was that he be authorized to obtain preliminary plans and cost estimates only, and submit those for approval to the Assembly in 1971. Under the latter alternative, construction could not begin before the autumn of 1972. The Advisory Committee, in its related report, recommended the second alternative.

On 12 December 1970, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee recommended without vote that the Assembly concur in the recommendations of the Advisory Committee and that it authorize the Secretary-General to carry forward into 1971 the unspent portion of the funds provided in 1970 for the programme of alterations and improvements to the United Nations building in Santiago.

These proposals were endorsed by the Assembly at a plenary meeting on 17 December 1970 with the adoption of resolution 2746 (XXV), by 109 votes to 0, with 8 abstentions. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

UNITED NATIONS HEADQUARTERS

On 17 December 1969, the General Assembly decided, inter alia, that the budgetary appropriations for the United Nations Headquarters construction project should not in any circumstances exceed $25 million, to be spread over a period of 10 years beginning in 1971. Among other things, it requested the Secretary-General to undertake a further study, to be submitted in 1971, of the optimum distribution of Secretariat functions between Headquarters in New York, the United Nations Office at Geneva and any other location that might be appropriate, bearing in mind the construction projects envisaged. In addition, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to undertake a systematic inquiry into the possibility and desirability of relocating all or part of certain units of the United Nations.<sup>3</sup>

In submitting his revised estimates for 1971, the Secretary-General proposed that an amount of $2 million be appropriated for new construction and major alterations to existing premises at Headquarters, in accordance with the Assembly's resolution of 17 December 1969.

On 15 December 1970, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, without proposing adoption of a formal resolution, approved the recommendation for including an appropriation of $2 million in the 1971 budget, for major alterations and new construction at Headquarters, by 56 votes to 8, with 6 abstentions. The Assembly endorsed this action on 17 December 1970 when it approved the United Nations budget for the financial year 1971.

PALAIS DES NATIONS

Also before the General Assembly in 1970 were two reports by the Secretary-General, and a related report by the Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, on the programme of major maintenance of and improvements to the Palais des Nations—headquarters of the United Nations Office at Geneva, Switzerland—and on the programme for extension of the Palais.

One of the Secretary-General's reports updated previous annual reports on the progress of work on the extension to the Palais which the Assembly had authorized on 20 December 1966<sup>4</sup> and subsequently modified on 21 December 1968.<sup>5</sup>

The report indicated that delays—caused mainly by material and manpower shortages coupled with bad weather—and modifications resulting from recommendations of the architects had led to the advancement of the estimated date of occupancy and had substantially increased costs, from the $22 million initially approved by the Assembly to $24.5 million. As a result of the $2.5 million increase in the estimated construction costs, the schedule of appropriations covering the annual instalments on the interest of a $14,120,000 loan would have to be revised. However, since final costs could not yet be estimated, the terms of repayment of the loan agreement would be reviewed in his next annual report, the Secretary-General stated, and he did not propose an immediate change in the currently approved series of budgetary appropriations.

In a related report, the Advisory Committee suggested that the Assembly might wish to approve the course of action outlined by the Secretary-General to the effect that he proceed as expeditiously as possible with work on the extension to the Palais and that, in his next annual report, he review the existing financing arrangements.

The Secretary-General also submitted an annual progress report on the programme of major maintenance of and improvements to the Palais des Nations to be undertaken during the period 1966-1974. The report indicated that: the Secretary-General had been able to double the amount of work originally scheduled for execution in 1970; the estimated cost of the programme, excluding new projects, had increased by a further $472,300; and that reduction of the estimated cost of projects requiring integration with the Palais extension had not proved possible. Also, eight new projects of improvement and major maintenance were proposed at a cost of $845,000, raising the total cost of this programme to $6,353,847.

The programme was financed by appropriations of $2,448,000 ($612,000 for each of the years 1967 to 1970) and by an interest-free loan of $1,967,000 to be repaid in five equal instalments from 1970 to 1974. Having regard to the pace and scheduling of the programme and the fact that the last part of the loan was drawn only in 1970, the Swiss authorities, who had granted the loan, agreed to repayment in four equal instalments of $491,750 during the period 1971-1974.

In a related report, the Advisory Committee recommended that the Assembly approve the revised programme proposed by the Secretary-General, as well as the provisions relating to repayment of the loan.

On 4 December 1970, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee recommended without vote that the Assembly approve the programme of major maintenance and improvements to the Palais des Nations set out in the Secretary-General's report, as well as the provisions relating to the repayment of the loan which appeared in that report. It also recommended approval of the measures concerning the extension of the Palais as set out in the Advisory Committee's report approving the course of action outlined by the Secretary-General.

These proposals were endorsed at a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 17 December 1970 with the adoption of resolution 2744 (XXV), by 108 votes to 0, with 11 abstentions. (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

PATTERN OF CONFERENCES

Following up requests made by the Economic and Social Council on 8 August 1969<sup>6</sup> and by the General Assembly on 16 December 1969,<sup>7</sup> the Secretary-General prepared a study in 1970 on trends in the number and length of conferences and meetings held in the economic, social and human rights fields on the resulting changes in the number of interpretation, translation and servicing personnel for the conferences and on the costs of temporary assistance services related to the conferences. His study also contained proposals on the calendar of conferences for 1971 and the following years, to allow for the most rational and economic use possible of the administrative premises and staff assigned, to conference and meeting services both at Headquarters in New York and at the United Nations Office in Geneva.

The study showed that the total number of meetings and conferences held by United Nations bodies at Headquarters and at Geneva—excluding meetings of the specialized agencies—increased from 4,652 in 1965 to 5,959 in 1969.

The Secretary-General also reported that there was a trend towards an increase in the number and length of meetings by the subsidiary organs of the General Assembly at New York and Geneva, primarily as a result of the creation of new subsidiary organs. Thus, the number of meetings of such organs held in 1969 totalled 1,010, compared with 465 in 1965, and the sum total of length of sessions in 1969 was 728 days, compared with 337 days in 1965.

The number and length of meetings in the economic, social and human rights fields, which took place at Geneva, also showed an increase between 1965 and 1969, while those held at New York had decreased, owing to the transfer of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) from New York to Geneva in 1966 and the transfer of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) from New York to Vienna in 1967.

DECISIONS OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

After considering the Secretary-General's study and related reports, including a report from the Joint Inspection Unit on issuing minutes instead of summary records, the Economic and Social Council, on 30 July 1970, decided on a number of measures to improve the organization of its work. Among these were measures to enable the Council to receive reports from its subsidiary organs and other sources sufficiently in advance to avoid the proliferation of meetings at the end of Council sessions arising from the late submission of documents relating to its agenda.

On 31 July 1970, the Council decided that its Commission on the Status of Women should meet once every two years, starting in 1971, instead of annually.

It also took a number of decisions on the calendar of conferences and meetings in 1971 of the Council and some of its subsidiary organs.

These decisions were taken without the adoption of a formal resolution.

On 12 November 1970, the Council reaffirmed that the question of the choice of venue for the regular sessions of its regional economic commissions was primarily a matter falling within the competence of those commissions, which met as inter-governmental bodies.

In taking this decision, the Council recalled that it was "established and consistent practice" which entitled all countries members of regional economic commissions to be venues for commission sessions. It was, moreover, highly-beneficial to the commissions and their member States for some regular commission sessions to be held at venues other than the headquarters of these bodies, despite possible limitations in conference facilities. The Council further recalled in this regard that membership of the regional commissions was limited mainly by geographical considerations and that not all United Nations Members were eligible for membership in these regional organs.

The Council's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 1561 (XLIX), adopted by 14 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions, on the basis of a proposal by Ceylon, Chad, Indonesia, Pakistan, the People's Republic of the Congo, Sudan, Tunisia and Upper Volta. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

DECISION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The question of the pattern of conferences was also considered by the General Assembly at its 1970 session held from 15 September to 17 December.

On 11 December, the Assembly approved the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1971, as submitted by the Secretary-General. It asked the Secretary-General to report to it in 1971 on his study, requested the previous year, on proposals for future calendars of conferences which would allow for the most rational and economic use possible of administrative premises and staff assigned to conference and meeting services both at United Nations Headquarters in New York and at the United Nations Office in Geneva.

In addition, the Assembly requested that the Joint Inspection Unit report to it in 1971 on possible improvements in the system used by the United Nations in handling and processing documents before, during and after meetings, including Assembly sessions, and in organizing proceedings at such meetings.

The Assembly's decisions to this effect were embodied in resolution 2693 (XXV), adopted without objection. The Assembly took this action on the recommendation of its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which approved the text without vote on 5 December, on the basis of a proposal by Australia, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Japan and New Zealand. (For text of resolution, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the established and consistent practice which entitles all countries members of regional economic commissions to be the venue of meetings of the said commissions,

Considering that it is highly beneficial to these commissions and their member States to have some of their regular sessions held elsewhere than at the headquarters of these organs, despite the limitations in terms of conference facilities that may exist,

Recalling also that the membership of the regional economic commissions, unlike that of the principal organs of the United Nations, is limited primarily by geographical considerations and that not all Members of the United Nations are eligible for membership in these regional organs,

1. Reaffirms that the question of the appropriateness of the choice of venue for the regular sessions of the regional economic commissions is primarily within the competence of the said commissions meeting as intergovernmental bodies, as provided in their rules of procedure;

2. Recalls that the participation of States Members of the United Nations which are not members of the regional organs is governed by the terms of reference and rules of procedure of those regional organs, in accordance with Article 69 of the Charter of the United Nations and the interpretation thereof in rule 75 of the rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council, and that this question is accordingly subject to the decisions of the above-mentioned organs.

PUBLICATIONS AND DOCUMENTATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Following a decision taken by the General Assembly on 11 December 1969<sup>8</sup> with a view to cutting down on the growing volume of United Nations documentation, a number of measures to this end were taken by various United Nations bodies in 1970. Other steps for reducing documentation still further were also the subject of additional decisions taken in 1970 by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly.

On 31 July 1970, for instance, the Council, in deciding on a number of measures to improve the organization of its work (see also page 877), also advocated ways of reducing the number and size of various documents and publications, as well as ways of speeding up the submission of Council documents needed for discussion of items of its agenda.

When, later in the year, the General Assembly took up the question of United Nations publications and documentation, it had before it not only the decision of the Council but also a report by the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Assembly's resolution of 11 December 1969. Also before the Assembly was a related report by its Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

Discussion took place first in the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which had before it a proposal submitted by Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Liberia, New Zealand, the Philippines and Poland.

The purpose of this draft resolution was to defer consideration of the item to the General Assembly's 1971 session, in the meantime (a) requesting the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to reduce documentation in those areas within his competence and authority, (6) inviting the Joint Inspection Unit to examine and report on the programme of recurrent publications of the United Nations and (c) reiterating the Assembly's appeal of 11 December 1969 to all organs, bodies and committees to consider ways of reducing documentation.

The United States proposed amending the draft resolution so that instead of asking the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to reduce documentation, the Assembly would request that he continue those efforts with the specific objective of achieving a reduction of $1 million during 1971, and that an itemized report of the savings be submitted to the Assembly in 1971.

The United States amendment was approved by the Fifth Committee on 10 December 1970 by 17 votes to 12, with 42 abstentions. The draft resolution as a whole, as thus amended by the United States, was then approved by 58 votes to 0, with 16 abstentions.

When the Fifth Committee's text came up for final approval at a plenary meeting of the Assembly on 16 December 1970, Brazil, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, the Philippines and the United Republic of Tanzania proposed an amendment the effect of which would be to delete the reference to the stipulation, as proposed in the Fifth Committee by the United

States, that the Secretary-General reduce documentation costs by $1 million during 1971.

The Assembly adopted the seven-power amendment by 78 votes to 17, with 19 abstentions. The Assembly then approved the text as a whole, as thus amended, by 118 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, with the adoption of resolution 2732 (XXV). (For text, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

Before taking this decision, the Assembly also had before it a United States proposal (introduced as a compromise to the seven-power amendment) to revise the Fifth Committee's text so that the Assembly would ask the Secretary-General to continue trying to reduce documentation costs "in the areas within his competence and authority with the target of reducing documentation costs by $1 million in 1971." The amendment to this effect, however, was not put to the vote because the seven-power text, which had already been approved, according to the Assembly's rules of procedure, implied the rejection of the United States proposal.

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 2538 (XXIV) of 11 December 1969 on publications and documentation of the United Nations,

Bearing in mind that its resolutions 2609 (XXIV) of 16 December 1969 and 2632 (XXV) of 9 November 1970, as well as the appointment by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination of two special rapporteurs to carry out a survey of certain reports and studies in the economic and social field, provide concurrently for a closely related examination of the whole field of documentation, meetings and procedures of the General Assembly,

1. Decides to defer to the twenty-sixth session its consideration of the item entitled "Publications and documentation of the United Nations";

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its twenty-sixth session any additional information relating to the implementation of resolution 2538 (XXIV) which he deems appropriate;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue, without detriment to the work programmes of the United Nations, his efforts to reduce expenditures on documentation in areas within his competence and authority, keeping in mind the suggestions specifically made in the Fifth Committee for greater economy in this regard;

4. Invites the Joint Inspection Unit, with reference to paragraphs 17, 18 and 19 of its report on documentation and further to paragraph 15 of General Assembly resolution 2609(XXIV), to examine and report on the programme of recurrent publications of the United Nations with a view to drawing attention to those which appear to have lost their usefulness or have become redundant or whose value may not measure up to the cost involved in continuing them, and to submit its findings and recommendations to the Assembly at its twenty-sixth session along with the report referred to by the Secretary-General in his report on the pattern of conferences dated 22 September 1970;

5. Reiterates its appeal, in paragraph 1 of resolution 2538(XXIV), to all United Nations organs, bodies and committees to consider ways of reducing documentation.

THE UNITED NATIONS POSTAL ADMINISTRATION

In 1970, gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration from the sale of philatelic items at United Nations Headquarters, New York, and at overseas offices was over $6 million. (Revenue derived from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes accrues to the United Nations; revenue from stamps used for postage purposes from United Nations Headquarters in New York is retained by the United States Postal Service, in accordance with an agreement between the United Nations and the United States Government. Similarly, revenue from the United Nations stamps in Swiss denominations used for postage from the Palais des Nations, Geneva, is retained by the Swiss Postal, Telephone and Telegraph Enterprise (PTT) according to the agreement between the United Nations and the Swiss Government.)

One of the first commemorative issues for 1970 was the Peace Bell stamp, in denominations of 60 and 250. This fourth stamp in the "Art at the United Nations" series showed the Japanese peace bell that was presented to the United Nations by the United Nations Association of Japan in 1954. Another commemorative issue, in denominations of 60 and 130, paid tribute to the Lower Mekong Basin Development Project and reproduced a map of the area being developed under United Nations auspices. Both stamps were issued on 13 March.

Two stamps in the United Nations/Geneva definitive series were issued on 17 April in compliance with the terms of the United Nations/Swiss agreement. The 60-centime stamp was the same design as the 11¢ definitive issued in New York in 1962; the 10-franc stamp was similar to the $1.00 definitive issued in New York in 1951. However, both stamps were changed in colour.

The third commemorative stamp for the year was issued on 22 May, on the theme "Fight Cancer," in 60 and 130 denominations which showed a man wrestling with a giant crab.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the signing of the United Nations Charter was commemorated with a "Peace and Progress" issue on 26 June. Special permission was given by the United States Postal Service to cancel these stamps in San Francisco on the one day of 26 June, as well as in New York. The 6¢, 13¢ and 250 denominations were issued individually, as well as collectively, on an imperforate, 440 souvenir sheet.

In conformity with the agreement between the United Nations and the Swiss PTT, four more definitive stamps were issued, on 22 September, in Swiss denominations as follows: 70 centimes, a copy of the New York 130 definitive of 1969; 80 centimes, copied from the 1965 200 definitive; 90 centimes, similar to the 300 definitive issued in New York in 1961; and a 2-franc issue, a replica of the 500 definitive of 1964. The Geneva issues were different in colour from the New York originals.

The fifth and final commemorative for 1970 was issued in accordance with a General Assembly resolution of 17 December 1969 on the theme "Peace, Justice and Progress." The 6¢ and 130 stamps, issued on 20 November, showed a pair of scales superimposed on an olive branch and a chart.

By the end of 1970, United Nations stamps were available in local currency to collectors in 79 countries outside the United States.

The number of first-day covers serviced for the various issues in 1970 was as follows:

Peace Bell	502,384
Lower Mekong Basin Development	522,218
United Nations/Geneva definitives	148,055

Fight Cancer	444,449	United Nations/Geneva definitives	226,000
Peace and Progress	1,317,489	Peace, Justice and Progress	521,419

FINANCIAL REPORTS AND ACCOUNTS AND REPORTS OF THE BOARD OF AUDITORS FOR 1969

On 4 December 1970, the General Assembly approved the financial reports and accounts for the year ending 31 December 1969 and the relevant reports of the Board of Auditors for the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) and the voluntary funds administered by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). The Assembly did so in adopting resolutions 2653 A-F (XXV), on the basis of recommendations by its Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, which also had before it the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and a note by the Secretary-General with a consolidated statement of the accounts. (For texts of resolutions and voting details, see DOCUMENTARY REFERENCES below.)

In the discussion of the reports and accounts in the Fifth Committee, the USSR, while concurring in the approval of the financial reports and accounts for 1969 submitted by the Board of Auditors, reiterated its objection to the inclusion in the budget for 1969 of expenditures related to the financing and repayment of amortization and interest charges on United Nations bonds, to the maintenance of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK), to the United Nations Cemetery in Korea and to the financing, from the regular budget, of technical co-operation programmes for economic, social and industrial development. The inclusion of such items of expenditure in the budget, it considered, were in contravention of the United Nations Charter.

The Inter-Governmental Organizations Related to the United Nations

CHAPTER I

THE INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY (IAEA)

At the end of 1970, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA)<sup>1</sup> had 102 member States, the same number as the previous year. Ireland became a member State on 6 January 1970, while Nicaragua withdrew from the Agency on 14 December 1970.

The Agency accepted some new tasks during the year: carrying out safeguards responsibilities under the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; assembling information on nuclear explosions for peaceful purposes; studying the effects of nuclear power stations on the human environment; and preparing for the Fourth International Conference on the Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy, to be held in Geneva, Switzerland, in September 1971. These new activities did not, however, overshadow other Agency activities, which were carried on as usual.

AGENCY SAFEGUARDS RESPONSIBILITIES

The implementation of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons,<sup>2</sup> which entered into force on 5 March 1970, entailed a growth of Agency safeguards activities. The Treaty called upon each non-nuclear-weapon State party to the Treaty to accept safeguards controls as set forth in an agreement to be concluded with IAEA. A Safeguards Committee, open to all member States, was established to advise the Agency on its safeguards responsibilities under the Treaty.

By the end of 1970, IAEA had concluded 44 safeguards agreements with 32 States. These agreements involved 10 nuclear power stations, 68 other reactors, 4 conversion plants, fabrication plants and fuel-reprocessing plants and 74 other separate accountability areas. This amounted to a control of about 12 per cent of the total world capacity of 24,000 megawatts (electrical).

The Agency's programme of systems analysis—the study of the nuclear power programmes of member States—was nearly completed and had been agreed to by most specialists involved. (See also pp. 58-59.)

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Under IAEA'S regular programme and the United Nations Development Programme, about $3 million worth of technical assistance was provided to some 60 countries in 1970. During the first 11 months of the year, 138 experts and 11 visiting professors carried out assignments, and equipment valued at $629,300 was delivered. As in previous years, training was offered at IAEA'S International Centre for Theoretical Physics, at Trieste, Italy. In addition, 354 fellowships were awarded for individual study.

During the year, 11 regional and inter-regional training courses were organized by IAEA. The Agency also sponsored an advanced summer school on reactor physics; two visiting seminars, in Asia and the Far East; and three study tours: on in vivo radioisotope measurement techniques in medicine, in Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Sweden and the USSR; on the use of isotopes and radiation in agricultural research, in the USSR; and on industrial applications of radioisotopes and radiation, in Canada and the United States.

In 1970, more IAEA assistance was provided to projects in agriculture than to any other sector. Considerable assistance was given to the industrial application of radioisotopes and radiation, and the number of projects in prospecting, mining and the processing of nuclear materials also increased.

ENVIRONMENT

Three symposia on radioactive pollution caused by peaceful uses of atomic energy were organized during the year: one in New York, on environmental aspects of nuclear power stations; another in Aix-en-Provence, France, on developments in the management of low and intermediate level radioactive wastes; and a third in Salzburg, Austria, on the use of nuclear techniques in the measurement and control of environmental pollution.

Isotopic tracer techniques for the study of pesticide residues were being investigated in order to reduce pollution from chemical pesticides. The programme was being carried out in co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), the World Health Organization (WHO), and the International Union of Pure and Applied Chemistry.

Radioactive fall-out data was being collected in collaboration with FAO. In co-operation with WHO, the Agency made siting evaluations for power plants to be built in various countries and published basic safety standards for radiation protection.

NUCLEAR POWER

By the end of 1970, 24,000 MW(C) of nuclear electrical capacity were expected to have been installed throughout the world. By 1980, this figure was expected to rise to 330,000 MW(e), or about 15 per cent of all electric power generated. During the year, IAEA continued to supply practical services in assisting member countries in the development of nuclear power; the Agency advised on economic studies, reactor siting and safety and evaluated bids for supplying reactor facilities.

Several conferences and meetings were convened to assess progress in technical aspects of nuclear power. Design criteria and safety of concrete pressure vessels were discussed by an expert panel. An international working group on fast reactors and a symposium on progress in sodium-cooled fast reactors were convened. In collaboration with the Economic Commission for Europe, IAEA organized a symposium on the economic integration of nuclear power stations in electric power systems.

The Agency has acted as a clearing-house for data on nuclear raw materials. An IAEA panel reviewed the geology of uranium occurrences and defined areas of exploration, and a symposium, held in Latin America, discussed the recovery of uranium from its ores.

The peaceful use of nuclear explosions was the subject of two international expert meetings held in Vienna, Austria. A bibliography on the peaceful uses of nuclear explosions was issued, and a comprehensive review of the subject was being prepared.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE

Nuclear applications in food and agriculture continued to be studied by a Joint Division of FAO and IAEA, which concentrated on co-ordinated research programmes on soil fertility and crop production, plant breeding and genetics, animal production and health, insect eradication and pest control, pesticide residues and pollution, and food preservation.

A new international programme on food irradiation was launched under the joint auspices of IAEA and the European Nuclear Energy Agency (ENEA) of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. The Agency also prepared a training manual on food irradiation technology.

The use of the radiation-induced sterile-male technique in controlling the Mediterranean fruit fly obtained conclusive results. The project was carried out in Central America under the United Nations Development Programme; smaller experiments took place in Murcia, Spain, and on the island of Procida, Italy. The Agency's laboratory in Seibersdorf, Austria, supported all experiments, provided training in mass-rearing techniques and continued radiation sterilization studies on the tsetse fly and codling moth.

NUCLEAR MEDICINE, PHYSICS, INDUSTRY

A number of research contracts and agreements on radiation biology, radioisotope application in medicine, and dosimetry were concluded or renewed. A scientific meeting between representatives of IAEA and WHO reviewed recent research on biochemical indicators of radiation injury in man. Assistance to laboratories and hospitals in many countries to improve dosimetry in radiotherapy centres proved successful, and 180 dosimeters had been posted to institutions in 41 developing countries. Absolute radiation dose determination was discussed by a joint IAEA/WHO panel, which also made recommendations for international action.

The Agency's physical science programme concentrated on the physics of fission, fusion and neutron physics. A meeting of the Joint ENEA/IAEA Liaison Group dealt with thermionic electrical power generation. Increased international co-operation in fusion research was agreed upon at a consultants' meeting, which was followed by a panel on this topic.

The collection and publication of data from all over the world on environmental isotopes in precipitation continued. A symposium on the use of isotopes in hydrology was held in Vienna, and the Agency provided courses and lectures in hydrology, organized within the framework of the International Hydrological Decade.

Increasing interest was shown in industrial nuclear techniques, notably in radiation processing, mining and mineral surveys, and pollution control.

NUCLEAR INFORMATION

The International Nuclear Information System (INIS) started operations in May 1970; by the end of the year, 36 countries and eight international organizations were participating in the scheme. The aim of INIS was to compile a complete file of references to published scientific literature, to be collected and stored by computer and made available to all member States on magnetic tapes, prints or microfiches.

A second international conference on nuclear data for reactors was organized by IAEA during the year. The conference assessed the current status of measurement and evaluation in important areas of neutron physics data.

GENERAL CONFERENCE

The fourteenth session of the IAEA General Conference was held in Vienna from 22 to 28 September 1970. Vikram A. Sarabhai, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission of India, was elected President. The General Conference voted (subject to ratification) to increase the membership of the Board of Governors from 25 to 34. The Board elected Vishnu Trivedi (India) as Chairman.

SECRETARIAT

As at the end of 1970, there were 1,082 staff members employed by IAEA under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments, drawn from 61 nationalities. Of these, 357 were in the professional and higher categories and 725 in the general service and maintenance and operative categories.

BUDGET

The IAEA General Conference set the regular budget of the Agency for 1971 at $13,778,000. The target for voluntary contributions to finance technical assistance projects was increased to $2.5 million, as of 1971.

CHAPTER II

THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION (ILO)

At the end of 1970, the International Labour Organisation (ILO)<sup>1</sup> had 21 member States, the same number as the previous year.

Following the resignation of David A. Morse from the post of Director-General of the International Labour Office, the ILO Governing Body appointed Wilfred Jenks (United Kingdom) to succeed him for a five-year term beginning 1 June 1970. Mr. Jenks was previously Principal Deputy Director-General of ILO.

Two sessions of the International Labour Conference were held in 1970. The fifty-fourth session was devoted to the improvement of working and living conditions in general, the fifty-fifth session to the special problems of seafarers.

The fifty-fourth session of the International Labour Conference met in Geneva, Switzerland, from 3 to 25 June 1970. The Conference was addressed by President V. V. Giri of India and by more than 200 other speakers who took part in the general debate on the theme of world poverty and ILO's role in helping to raise minimum living standards.

<sup>1</sup> For further information, particularly about the functions and organization of ILO and its activities prior to 1970, see previous volumes of Y.U.N., reports of the Director-General to the ILO Conference and the proceedings of the Conference.

The Conference adopted: a Convention and a Recommendation on minimum wage-fixing with special reference to developing countries; a new Convention, revising former standards, concerning annual holidays with pay; and a Recommendation concerning special youth employment and training schemes for development purposes. It also discussed a proposed Recommendation concerning protection and facilities to be afforded to workers' representatives in the undertaking, and decided to include this item on the agenda of the fifty-sixth session in 1971 with a view to setting new international labour standards.

The Conference also approved a number of resolutions. It called for ILO action on trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties necessary for their exercise; affirmed that non-governmental delegates attending ILO meetings should be free to express their views and those of their organizations and to report back to their membership; and requested the inclusion in the schedule of occupational diseases listed in the Employment Injury Benefits Convention (No. 121), 1964, of deafness and other noise-induced disorders, illnesses resulting from the performance of work under compression, and infectious diseases contracted by the staff of medical services and laboratories.

By further resolutions the Conference: called on ILO to strengthen its workers' education activities, particularly in developing countries, with a view to training workers for active participation in national development; invited ILO to co-ordinate current projects and experiments relating to the employment of older workers, with a view to avoiding discriminatory practices, to study methods of continuous vocational training or retraining enabling such workers to adapt to technological change and to examine the effects of certain pension schemes on the employment of older workers; and asked for ILO participation in the Conference on the Human Environment, to be convened by the United Nations in 1972, particularly as regards the working environment.

Finally, the Conference approved a resolution requesting the updating and periodic review of the Model Code of Safety Regulations for Industrial Establishments drawn up in 1949 for the guidance of Governments and industry.

In accordance with usual practice, the Conference set up a tripartite committee to examine the application by member States of ILO Conventions and Recommendations. The committee examined replies from 65 Governments to the comments made by an independent committee of experts which meets annually to consider difficulties of application. It also considered reports from Governments on the effect given to four Recommendations, dealing, respectively, with protection of workers' health, welfare facilities, occupational health services and workers' housing.

The Conference took note of the sixth special report presented by the Director-General of ILO on the application of the Declaration adopted by the ILO Conference in 1964, concerning the policy of apartheid of the Republic of South Africa.<sup>2</sup>

The fifty-fifth (maritime) session of the International Labour Conference, held in Geneva from 14 to 30 October 1970, was the eighth session since ILO's founding in 1919 to be devoted specifically to labour and social conditions in the shipping industry. Sixty-five speakers took part in the general debate on developments in shipping, seafarers' living and working conditions and the activities of ILO in this field.

The international standards adopted during this session were: a Recommendation on employment problems arising from technical developments and modernization on board ship; a Recommendation on the vocational training of seafarers; a Convention and a Recommendation on accident prevention on board ship, at sea and in port; a Convention and two Recommendations on crew accommodation, the two latter dealing with air conditioning and the control of harmful noise, respectively; and a Recommendation on seafarers' welfare at sea and in port.

This brought the total number of international standards adopted by the International Labour Conference since 1919 to 134 Conventions and 142 Recommendations. The total number of ratifications of Conventions by member States reached 3,695, an increase of 130 over the previous year.

At its fifty-fifth session the Conference also passed a resolution on the subject of minimum wages of seafarers. In view of the general decrease in the value of money since the adoption in 1958 of a Recommendation on seafarers' minimum wages, the Conference stated that the figures of £42 or $100 could be regarded as the present equivalent of the previously recommended minimum monthly wage, and requested that these figures be periodically reviewed by ILO'S Joint Maritime Commission. Fourteen other resolutions were approved, calling for ILO studies on a broad range of questions relating to maritime work.

The ninth Conference of the American States Members of the International Labour Organisation met in Caracas, Venezuela, from 12 to 24 April 1970, with Government, employer and worker representatives from 19 countries attending. Among the questions discussed were social security in the western hemisphere, participation of employers' and workers' organizations in economic and social development, and remuneration and conditions of work in relation to economic development. The Conference adopted resolutions on a variety of social problems affecting Latin America and the Caribbean, including employment promotion, voluntary participation by the population in development and freedom of association.

The fourteenth session of ILO'S Asian Advisory Committee was held in Bandung, Indonesia, from 14 to 25 September 1970. The Committee considered such matters as employment promotion, population policies, the use of labour-intensive techniques in industry, vocational training, rural development, implementation of ILO standards and technical co-operation.

THE WORLD EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMME

Launched in 1969 as a major ILO contribution to the Second United Nations Development Decade, the World Employment Programme was intended to stimulate and co-ordinate national and international efforts to stem the rising tide of unemployment and underemployment which accompanied the rapid population growth in the developing regions of the world.

During 1970, ILO took a number of steps to make the promotion of productive employment a mainspring of its activities. Employment aspects were emphasized in the organization's technical co-operation programmes, in such fields as industrialization, rural development, vocational training and productivity. Research was initiated on various factors affecting employment, including trade policies, the rural exodus, the "green revolution" in agriculture, education, progressive technology for developing countries, labour-intensive techniques in public works and the role of the service sector in expanding employment. Contacts with the Governments of developing countries were also strengthened through ILO regional teams and offices.

The first study of an individual country to be made under the World Employment Programme was carried out in Colombia, at Government invitation, by a 27-man team of development specialists made available by ILO and 11 other international and regional organizations. In its report to the Colombian Government, the mission submitted proposals for integrated policies dealing with such matters as agrarian reform, industrial advance, income distribution, the use of labour-intensive techniques, labour legislation, health and education and international trade and aid policies. After examination by a presidential committee, the recommendations were to be acted upon under a three-year development plan adopted by the Colombian Congress in November 1970. A similar inter-agency team was invited by the national authorities to study the employment situation in Ceylon, and plans were under way for missions of the same type to Africa.

An educational programme aimed at high-level policy planners was also conducted. A seminar held in Dakar, Senegal, in December 1970, enabled senior officials from eight French-speaking African countries to study employment promotion in relation to human resources planning.

FIELD ACTIVITIES

In 1970, there was further growth in ILO technical co-operation activities for the development of human resources and social institutions and the improvement of living and working conditions.

During the year, the agency spent more than $29.9 million on technical assistance, compared with $24.5 million in 1969 and $20.8 million in 1968.

These funds came from the following sources: United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Special Fund component, $19.9 million; UNDP-Technical Assistance component, $5.5 million; funds in trust (special financial contributions from Governments), $2 million; and the ILO regular budget, $2.5 million.

The expenditure was allocated by region as follows: Africa, $13 million; Asia, $7 million; Europe, $2.7 million; Latin America and the Caribbean, $5 million; the Near and Middle East, $1.6 million; and inter-regional projects, $0.6 million.

A major part of ILO's technical aid went to human resources development, including manpower organization, vocational training, small-scale industry, productivity, and management development.

Assistance continued in the following fields: organization of co-operatives, social security, occupational safety and health, workers' education, vocational rehabilitation, rural development, labour relations and labour administration. The Agency continued to co-ordinate the Andean Indian Programme, a multi-agency project to assist the indigenous populations of South American countries, including new activities financed under the UNDP Special Fund component.

The World Employment Programme, comprising regional plans for Latin America, Asia and Africa, was financed during 1970 mainly under the ILO regular programme ($516,000).

TRAINING CENTRES AND INSTITUTES

The International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training, established by ILO in 1965 at Turin, Italy, continued to provide training in the latest techniques in management, technology and teaching methodology for key personnel, including managers, instructors, technicians, and directors of training services, primarily from the developing regions of the world. A multinational staff of instructors and visiting lecturers had trained people from more than 120 countries and territories since the Centre's opening.

The International Institute for Labour Studies, Geneva, an ILO centre for advanced study in the labour and social fields, continued to bring together government administrators, trade union officials, industrial experts and management, university and other specialists from all parts of the world. The activities of the Insti-

RESEARCH AND PUBLICATIONS

In 1970, ILO published under the title Towards Full Employment the report of the inter-agency mission which drew up a comprehensive employment promotion plan for Colombia, under the World Employment Programme (see above). Also published were three studies. Development and Rural Tradition in Africa, Agricultural Organisations and Development and Social Security in Agriculture, and, in collaboration with the Food and Agriculture Organization and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, the first part of a Code of Safety for Fishermen and Fishing Vessels.

Other publications included reports on all agenda items of the 1970 sessions of the International Labour Conference. For the fifty-fourth session, a two-part report by the Director-General was issued. The first part, Poverty and Minimum Living Standards: the Role of the ILO, discussed the inadequate social results of development and suggested ways in which progress might be made towards attaining minimum standards of life for all workers and their families, as well as the contribution that ILO might make towards this goal. The second part of the report reviewed ILO'S activities in 1969. A supplement to the report, The ILO and the United Nations: Twenty-Five Years of a Partnership of Service, traced the development of relations between the two organizations on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the United Nations.

Reports published for the ninth Conference of American States Members of ILO included a report by the Director-General outlining major economic and social trends in the Americas and reviewing progress in the implementation of the Ottawa Programme of Social Security Reform, as well as possible ILO contributions to development in the hemisphere.

The International Labour Office also continued its periodical publications: International Labour Review, Official Bulletin, Legislative Series and Year Book of Labour Statistics, as well as its public information magazine, ILO Panorama.

SECRETARIAT

As of 31 December 1970, the number of full-time staff under permanent, indefinite, fixed-term and short-term appointments at ILO headquarters and at area, branch and other offices stood at 3,036. Of these, 1,689 were in the professional and higher categories (including 875 technical assistance experts) and 1,347 in the general service and maintenance categories. The total staff employed for one year or more under the regular ILO budget was 1,800, including 600 officials assigned to technical co-operation projects.

BUDGET

In June 1969, the fifty-third session of the International Labour Conference approved a budget totalling $61,500,000 to cover ILO expenses during the 1970-1971 biennium. In June, 1970, at the fifty-fourth session of the Conference, this was increased to $62,929,849 (including funds from UNDP). The main details of expenditure covered by this budget were:

CHAPTER III

THE FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO)

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)<sup>1</sup> celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary in 1970. During its first quarter century, the organization grew from 46 member States to 119 full members and two associate members. Its budget increased from $2 million in 1945 to more than $100 million in 1970, including the regular programme of FAO and funds received from the United Nations Development Programme and other programmes and specialized agencies of the United Nations ("partnership budgets").

At a special one-day conference held in November 1970, at FAO headquarters in Rome, Italy, FAO'S Director-General reviewed the organization's development over twenty-five years. He estimated that during that period resources for technical assistance and pre-investment work, including those contributed by Governments on the spot, amounted to approximately $1,000 million, and that the total investment in development work was around $2,000 million.

Pope Paul VI, the first Catholic Pontiff to visit FAO headquarters, attended the conference and pledged the continued support of the Roman Catholic Church in the organization's "great and complex work."

In June 1970, FAO held a Second World Food Congress at The Hague, Netherlands, which was attended by 1,800 participants. Conservation, population growth and the role of youth in development were among the topics discussed at the plenary sessions of the Congress. Specialized commissions of the Congress analysed proposals for tackling the major problems of the developing countries as reflected in FAO'S Indicative World Plan for Agricultural Development.

A Final Declaration of the Congress called on Governments to increase drastically the supply of resources for development through an improved system of international co-operation.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

During 1970, FAO supervised the spending of approximately $59 million under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) Special Fund component allocations, which were spread over 259 operational projects. Under the Technical Assistance component of UNDP, about 600 projects costing approximately $12 million were carried out by FAO in 1970. During the year, FAO also operated field projects involving approximately $14 million in trust fund monies.

Some 800 fellowships were awarded during 1970, bringing the total number of fellowships supervised by FAO since 1951 to approximately 8,700. In 1970, there were 37 training centres in existence, and FAO was co-operating with the International Atomic Energy Agency in organizing three new centres.

The joint Inter-Secretariat Committee set up by the Agreement on Co-operation between FAO and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization held four meetings during 1970.

In 1970, FAO representatives participated in more than 1,000 conferences, seminars and specialized discussions held by United Nations bodies and specialized agencies. The organization was also represented at meetings of the Organization of American States, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the Colombo Plan, as well as meetings of non-governmental organizations and other bodies concerned with agricultural and rural development.

FOOD STANDARDS

The keystone of the joint FAO/World Health Organization (WHO) Food Standards Programme continued to be the Codex Alimentarius Commission, which developed international food standards aimed at protecting health, harmonizing national food legislations and ensuring fair practices in the food trade. At the end of 1970, 79 developed and developing countries were members of the Commission. More than 50 standards and three codes of hygienic practices had been adopted by the Commission, and some 400 food additive provisions had been toxicologically examined. The Commission's Code of Principles for Milk and Milk Products had been adopted by 71 countries.

FAO INVESTMENT CENTRE

The commitment of loans and credits for agricultural development by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and its affiliated organizations—the International Development Association (IDA) and the International Finance Corporation—increased from $369 million in 1968/1969 to $414 million in 1969/1970. Of the latter amount, $275 million went to 21 projects which the FAO/International Bank Co-operative Programme helped to prepare. National contributions brought the total expenditures on these projects to more than double that amount. Facilities granted by IDA included a $26 million credit to help finance the largest tile drainage operation ever undertaken, on nearly 1 million acres of irrigated land in the Nile Delta.

A major undertaking of the FAO/Inter-American Development Bank Co-operative Programme in 1970 was the initiation of assistance to the Peruvian Government in planning projects for land reform.

During the year, assistance was also given to the Asian Development Bank in the preparation of various projects.

INDUSTRY CO-OPERATIVE PROGRAMME

Through the Industry Co-operative Programme (ICP) FAO was providing the machinery for establishing contacts and co-ordinating action between inter-governmental agencies and public and private sectors interested in agricultural development. By the end of 1970, about 90 companies were members of ICP.

Among the projects carried out in 1970 were those involving the production of small farm equipment in Pakistan, testing of high-protein weaning food in West Africa, pulp-milling in Central America and research on production of yeast for animal feed from coffee waste. The Government of Cyprus and UNDP accepted a proposal for pilot-scale production of protein from carob beans, as part of a research project covering the many uses of the bean. Industry also provided experts for FAO field assignments in the Caribbean, India and the Republic of Korea.

WORLD FOOD PROGRAMME

The World Food Programme, a joint operation of the United Nations and FAO, continued to provide food aid to be used both as an investment in social and economic development and for emergency relief.

During 1970, the Programme committed $270 million to 90 development projects in 45 countries. This included an allocation of 126,000 tons of dried skim-milk powder and 42,000 tons of butter oil to India's $241 million dairy-improvement and milk-marketing scheme, the largest such project ever undertaken in a developing country.

During the same period, some 20 emergency operations were approved in as many countries. It was estimated that more than 6 million victims of natural or man-made disasters received food aid under the Programme during the year.

Since the inception of the Programme in 1963, nearly 500 projects, for a total commitment of over $1,150 million, have been approved in 84 countries. (For further information about the World Food Programme, see pp. 369-75.)

FREEDOM FROM HUNGER CAMPAIGN

The Freedom from Hunger Campaign was launched in 1960 to increase public awareness of the world food problem and to support projects designed to solve it. Under the Campaign, national committees had been set up in 93 developed and developing countries by the end of 1970. During the year, FAO supervised 137 field projects sponsored by the Campaign, mainly in the areas of farmer training, rural communications, nutrition, education and rural youth.

Six East African Freedom from Hunger Committees participated in a study tour of nutrition-education and social-communications work in Zambia as a preliminary to the establishment of national programmes in their own countries. Five West African committees were helped to launch a regional grouping for the exchange of staff members and information.

The Young World Promotion Group was formally admitted to the FAO structure as the Advisory Group on FAO programmes. By the end of 1970, there were Young World Programme Committees (or corresponding bodies) in 47 countries. During the year, publicity "walks" were organized for the first time in Guatemala, India, Italy, Kenya and Zambia; they raised nearly $4 million.

COMMODITIES AND TRADE

During 1970, FAO's Committee on Commodity Problems was primarily concerned with promoting commodity export earnings and import savings in the developing countries. An FAO central information service on food aid operations was set up during the year to assemble data on trade transactions subject to the new consultative and reporting procedures accepted by the principal trading countries. This information was presented in a new FAO quarterly, Food Aid Bulletin.

A Study Group on Meat was established in October 1970, bringing the total number of commodity study groups to 11.

In its first year of operation, the Consultative Committee on Tea was instrumental in achieving acceptance of an informal arrangement whereby exporters agreed to withhold 90 million pounds of tea during 1970 with a view to stabilizing the international market. The Consultative Committee on Jute, Kenaf and Allied Fibres reached an agreement on an indicative price range for Thai kenaf, continued its recommendations for Pakistan jute and maintained a close watch on the growing threat to jute from synthetics. The Consultative Sub-Committee on Hard Fibres failed to reach agreement on extension of the informal international quota and price arrangements for this group of fibres which had been successfully operated in 1968 and 1969.

ECONOMIC ANALYSIS

Further progress was made in applying a more highly integrated approach to country planning assistance, appraisal and economic intelligence. The country-evaluation method, by which all FAO-administered programmes were assessed as a whole, was adopted in 1970.

A survey of the Comahue region in Argentina, one of the largest under-developed temperate regions in the world, was successfully concluded in 1970. The Lerma (Mexico) project to assist the Mexican Government in the social and economic development of a region inhabited by 8 million people became operational at the end of 1970. The Brazilian Government was given assistance in drawing up plans for a four-year, $3-million project designed to set up a co-ordinated policy-making structure in agrarian development.

STATISTICS

In support of the 1970 World Census of Agriculture and its concurrent promotional campaign, FAO organized training centres at international, regional and national levels. For the first time, an integrated project was set up, comprising five African countries and aimed at linking current census-taking operations with the establishment of a permanent structure retaining the personnel and equipment assembled for the 1970 census.

The first volume of FAO's Review of Consumption Surveys 1970 was issued, and further progress was made towards the standardization of production and agricultural producer price statistics.

Forty-six field projects were carried out during the year, and technical supervision was provided for some 40 fellowships.

FISHERIES

The safeguarding of the living resources of oceans and inland waters against pollution and other dangers continued to be a major concern of FAO. In December 1970, an FAO Conference on Marine Pollution was attended by some 300 marine biologists, ecologists and pollution experts, who recommended guidelines for international control of marine pollution.

During 1970, FAO participated in more than 130 fishery development projects. Among them were the International Indian Ocean Fishery Survey and Development Programme, which embraced the largest number of countries ever involved in an FAO fishery project, and the $13.4 million UNDP/FAO fishery development project in the Atlantic Ocean, off Africa.

Revolutionary changes in equipment and techniques were reviewed at FAO's third Conference on Fish Finding, Purse Seining and Aimed Trawling, held at Reykjavik, Iceland, in May 1970 and attended by 350 fishery technologists, engineers, industrialists and managers from 34 countries.

During 1970, Spain and Belgium signed the FAO-sponsored Convention on the Conservation of the Living Resources of the South East Atlantic, bringing the total number of signatories to eight. Japan and the Republic of South Africa became the first two countries to ratify the Convention.

FORESTRY

During 1970, FAO prepared a revised version of Forest Policy, Law and Administration., which provided guidance for national forest services and education centres. A Handbook on Forest Concessions, intended to assist member Governments in keeping their forests under sound economic management, was also published.

The International Labour Office, the United Nations regional economic commissions and Swedish authorities joined forces with FAO in organizing training courses and seminars in forestry techniques in Europe and Africa. Programmes in the operation of national parks and wildlife reserves in Latin America were made possible through Rockefeller Foundation support. Programmes in forestry training were carried out in co-operation with the Governments of Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, and the United Kingdom.

Pre-investment forestry surveys were made in Colombia and Guyana.

NUTRITION

In line with the objectives of the Second United Nations Development Decade, FAO intensified its efforts at orienting national development plans towards nutritional needs. Governments were helped to formulate comprehensive policies and programmes, to carry out food consumption surveys and to wage the "war on waste" through food-control services and legislation.

Efforts to bridge the protein gap continued in 1970 with further studies on the measurement of under-nutrition, particularly in children, and with the development of high-lysine wheat, high-protein rice and other improved varieties of cereals and legumes. Co-operation continued with WHO and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) on several projects in this area.

PLANT PRODUCTION AND PROTECTION

During 1970, more than 700 FAO specialists were assigned to field projects in plant production and protection, including development of pasture production and better grazing control.

New high-yielding varieties of rust-resistant wheat were identified through a project covering 23 countries in the Near East, Africa and Southern Europe. Soybean cultivation was introduced and tested in various Asian, African and Latin American countries. Seeds of protein-rich crops were supplied to educational and research programmes in developing countries.

In the search for safer and more effective use of pesticides, FAO joined forces with WHO. More than 250 pesticide residue levels had been recommended as being internationally acceptable in crops.

Desert locust surveys in strategic areas and local concentration of effort prevented the formation of swarms in 1970.

In co-operation with various governmental and non-governmental authorities, FAO developed a world-wide programme for conservation of plant genetic resources for use in future plant breeding programmes. Over 200 field projects were in operation during 1970. Among these were projects in Thailand (rubber), Iraq (cereal seed), Ceylon (pasture) and Turkey and the United Arab Republic (tomatoes).

AGRICULTURAL SERVICES

Advancing technology, the growing commercialization of agriculture and the implications of agrarian reform called for sweeping changes and heavy investment in the agricultural sector. By introducing new techniques in farm management and mechanization, food processing, storage and agricultural engineering, FAO sought to contribute to a smooth transition in agriculture.

Among the 130 field projects administered in 1970 was a UNDP-financed project assisting Iran in the development of a hides, skins and leather industry. Assistance was given to the diversification of agriculture in El Salvador, where an FAO team introduced limes and cashew nuts and improved the production of livestock and basic food crops. In Turkey, FAO aided a project in the processing and marketing of fruits and vegetables.

LAND AND WATER

DEVELOPMENT

Land reclamation and soil development figured prominently among the field projects supervised by FAO in 1970.

During the year, a Soil Data Bank was set up for the computerized storage, retrieval and interpretation of information on soils.

Large-scale projects in soil fertility and fertilizer use were given FAO aid during 1970. Under the Freedom from Hunger Campaign Fertilizer Programme, FAO provided 25 countries with 48 experts who worked on field experiments, demonstrations and pilot schemes for fertilizer distribution to farmers. The Fertilizer Programme continued to be carried out in co-operation with private industry.

Stress was also laid on the need for realistic planning in irrigation and water development projects. The Merim Lagoon Basin Project, an investigation undertaken at the request of Brazil and Uruguay, was completed in 1970, and a pre-investment survey of groundwater resources in Jordan was continued.

ANIMAL PRODUCTION

AND HEALTH

In the promotion of animal production and the improvement of animal health, increased emphasis was put on investment opportunities for the developing countries and on field projects designed to fit into the countries' development programmes.

Specialists were sent to India to co-operate with that country's dairy-improvement and milk-marketing scheme, one of the largest nutritional undertakings in the world (see above). The Milk Technology Institute in Valdivia, Chile, and three FAO/UNICEF-assisted milk plants in Malawi, Mali, and Nigeria became operational during 1970.

Supplies of vaccine were sent to Lebanon, where rinderpest disease reappeared in 1970 for the first time in 50 years. The Near East Animal Health Institute, an FAO/UNDP-assisted project with headquarters in Beirut, Lebanon, co-operated in establishing facilities for diagnosis and vaccine production. Countries north and south of the Sahara were helped in combating contagious bovine pleuropneumonia. In Mexico, research was progressing on methods of protecting livestock against bat-transmitted rabies, a growing economic threat in a number of Latin American countries.

Seventeen training courses with a total of 273 trainees were organized during the first six months of 1970. Four permanent regional training programmes were established in Latin America, Africa and the Near East, and two-year certificate training courses for middle-grade technicians were set up in Afghanistan, Ethiopia, Kenya and Somalia.

RURAL INSTITUTIONS

Efforts were continued to widen the range of knowledge, incentives and opportunities available to the rural community. At the FAO World Conference on Agricultural Education and Training, organized in Copenhagen, Denmark (July-August 1970), with the co-operation of the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, 350 delegates from 95 countries urged a more comprehensive approach to problems of rural development through more efficient planning. New forms of co-operation in agricultural development, enabling farmers to participate in planning programmes devised for their benefit, were discussed at FAO-sponsored meetings in Brazil, Denmark and Poland.

Co-operation in agricultural research on an ecological rather than a geo-political basis was advanced with the appointment of a consultant to assist Governments in the Sudanian, or semi-arid, zone of Africa. Three types of research zone were being set up: semi-arid, humid tropical and high altitude. The new approach was based on the similarity of environmental factors, such as climate and soils, which cut across national boundaries and lent themselves to concerted action on problems with common characteristics.

An integrated approach to the development of rural institutions was also applied in Afghanistan, where a project financed by UNDP and the Swedish International Development Authority helped to set up a training centre and two pilot areas for the development of sugar beet and other crops.

DOCUMENTATION, INFORMATION AND PUBLICATIONS

The organization continued to maintain the leading international library on food and agriculture.

Communication media were increasingly used to assist development projects. Communications experts were being recruited to work in the field, producing audio-visual aids to interest local populations in development projects and to assist in the training of extension workers.

A pilot German-language edition of FAO'S bi-monthly review of development, Ceres, was published in November-December.

Publications and documents issued in 1970 included the following:

ANNUALS: The State of Food and Agriculture 1970; Commodity Review and Outlook 1969-70; Yearbook of Forest Products 1969; Animal Health Yearbook 1969; Trade Yearbook 1969; Production Yearbook 1969; Fertilizers: An Annual Review of World Production, Consumption, Trade and Prices 1969; Yearbook of Fishery Statistics 1968 (Fishery Commodities); Yearbook of Fishery Statistics 1969 (Catches and Landings); World Grain Trade Statistics 1968-1969; FAO Rice Report 1969; National Grain Policies 1969.

SECRETARIAT

As at mid-December 1970, the total number of staff employed by FAO at all offices stood at 6,072, including 253 World Food Programme staff. Of the regular FAO staff, 1,145 were in the professional and higher categories and 1,998 in the general service category. There were also 134 professional and 266 general service staff working in the regional offices and outposts. Of the World Food Programme staff, 63 were professional staff at FAO headquarters, 90 were project officers in the field and 100 were general service staff. An additional 2,040 staff in the professional and higher categories were field experts and an additional 236 in the general service category were employed by FAO in the field on UNDP and various technical assistance assignments.

BUDGET

The fifteenth session of the FAO Conference, in November 1969, voted a gross budget of $70,568,000 for the 1970-1971 biennium, of which $63,910,662 was to be assessed to member Governments and associate members. The operating budget for 1970 was expected to amount to approximately $36 million.

CHAPTER IV

THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO)

In 1970, the activities of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)<sup>1</sup> centred on efforts of the organization and its 125 Member States to bring about a radical renewal in education, in observance of International Education Year.

Stress was also laid on the application of science to development, the protection of the cultural heritage (including sites and monuments) and the diffusion of knowledge and ideas through the media of mass communication.

Operational activities absorbed most of the resources of the organization during 1970. About 1,000 UNESCO experts were working on projects in the field, more than 1,000 grants were made and equipment worth about $6 million was supplied.

EDUCATION

The activities of UNESCO in the educational sector continued to be governed by the belief that qualitative improvement should accompany quantitative expansion. Projects in teacher training, instructional methods and educational content were accordingly carried out at the same time that the organization continued its work of helping developing countries to plan and build up their educational systems in accordance with national priorities.

Planning work increased as a result of co-operation between UNESCO and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Development Association. During 1970, 37 survey missions were dispatched and $98,500,000 in loans and credits were granted to educational projects. This work, led by UNESCO'S International Institute for Educational Planning, in Paris, France, was assisted by the organization's research and training centres for administrators at Santiago, Chile; New Delhi, India; Beirut, Lebanon; and Dakar, Senegal (where a UNESCO regional office was set up in March).

During the year, UNESCO acted as executing agency for 31 primary, secondary, higher and technical teacher-training projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). In co-operation with the United Nations Children's Fund, it was involved in 92 teacher-training projects in primary and rural education. Teacher training was also promoted by the various regional centres.

New techniques in education were promoted through assistance to such projects as a workshop on school broadcasting in Nairobi, Kenya; a mission to India to study the possibility of establishing a training centre for educational television personnel; and a mission to Spain to prepare a scheme on the use of computers in education.

The 20 years of collaboration with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) were continued when UNESCO helped organize a school-leaving examination for 8,000 children from the joint UNRWA/UNESCO schools in the Gaza strip.

In 12 projects of the Experimental World Literacy Programme, UNESCO experts continued training and testing activities in which adults involved in development schemes were made "functionally literate" as part of their job instruction. By the end of the year, 5,000 instructors had been trained and 175,000 adults had received instruction.

Life-long education—the democratization of education and the relationship between education and development—was a major theme of the organization's education programme. The relationship between school and life-long education was studied in Czechoslovakia, France, the Republic of Viet-Nam and the United States, and the results were considered by an expert meeting held in Paris in October. An introduction to life-long education was also published during the year.

In pursuance of its policy of convening regional meetings to assess problems and progress in education, UNESCO organized a conference of Arab ministers of education and ministers responsible for economic planning. The conference, held at Marrakesh, Morocco, in January 1970, was attended by some 75 delegates from 16 of UNESCO'S Arab member States.

Special attention was paid to the problems of youth in a rapidly changing society, and efforts were made to encourage youth to participate in the organization's activities. In 1970, as part of its work to help member States with their youth problems, UNESCO further developed its network of national institutions for out-of-school education in experimental programmes in Ceylon, Chile, France and Nigeria.

In observance of International Education Year (IEY),<sup>2</sup> which was aimed at focusing attention on the world-wide crisis in education, a special unit for IEY was created at organization headquarters. During the year, it issued 17 copies of an IEY Bulletin, which circulated information on the activities of some 110 of the member States as well as of nearly 100 international non-governmental organizations. The activities included special television and radio programmes, films, publications, exhibitions, training courses, the issuance of commemorative postage stamps, and fund-raising campaigns for education improvement in developing countries.

In 1970, the gradual absorption of the International Bureau of Education (IBE) in Geneva, Switzerland, into UNESCO was completed with the appointment of a Director of IBE; at the same time, a number of activities relating to educational information and documentation, previously carried on at UNESCO headquarters, were transferred to IBE.

The annual $5,000 Mohammad Reza Pahlavi Prize for work in adult literacy was awarded to Acción Cultural Popular, Colombia. The first award of the 5,000 rouble Nadezhda Krupskaya Prize, named for the wife of V. I. Lenin, was made to the Institute of Language and Literature of Mongolia.

NATURAL SCIENCES

During 1970, UNESCO'S principal projects in the natural sciences underlined the increased emphasis being placed upon the development of national and regional science policies. The organization convened a number of regional meetings to deal with the strengthening of fundamental research, the exchange of scientific information, and science teaching. In June, 30 European member States sent delegations to the first conference of ministers responsible for science policy, held at UNESCO headquarters. The conference adopted several resolutions which, inter alia, urged the European countries to put their intellectual resources and their scientific experience and potential at the service of the less advanced regions.

Preliminary plans were completed for the launching of a campaign on man and the biosphere, an international multidisciplinary exercise aimed at the reduction of pollution in the air, land and sea and at the more careful utilization of the world's natural resources.

The Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission (IOC) completed its study of the Indian Ocean and published its findings in several atlases. During the year, Kenya, Malta, Portugal and Syria joined IOC, bringing that organization's membership to 71.

In accordance with decisions of the co-ordinating council of the International Hydrological Decade (IHD), UNESCO continued to provide the technical secretariat for the permanent working groups of IHD. Emphasis was placed on the problems of water pollution, floods and their computation and the training of hydrologists. In the Khmer Republic (formerly called Cambodia), for example, UNESCO assisted the Government in establishing a flood-warning system for that section of the Mekong River in Khmer territory.

Three earthquake reconnaissance missions were sent out during the course of the year: to Turkey, following the Gediz earthquake of 28 March; to the Philippines, after the Luzon earthquake of 7 April; and to Peru, in response to the seismic disaster of 31 May. A second mission was sent to Peru to survey the possibility of future avalanches and landslides in the Callejón de Huaylas.

A reconnaissance mission of experts was sent to the Philippines in December 1970 to study the damage caused by the typhoons which struck Manila and southern Luzon in October and November. This was the first mission of its kind; it was hoped that in future such missions would prove as valuable in the case of wind storms as they had in the case of earthquakes.

Through its regional science offices, UNESCO continued to assist Governments in strengthening their basic science teaching and improving research facilities. The regional offices were located in New Delhi, India (for South Asia); Cairo, United Arab Republic (Arab States); Nairobi, Kenya (Africa); Montevideo, Uruguay (Latin America); and Djakarta, Indonesia (South East Asia).

The 1970 Kalinga Prize for the popularization of science was awarded to the Austrian ethnologist and writer Konrad Lorenz. The $3,000 UNESCO Science Prize, awarded for an outstanding contribution to the technological development of a developing member State or region, went jointly to the International Rice Research Institute, Philippines, and the International Maize and Wheat Improvement Centre, Mexico, for their development of improved cereal strains.

SOCIAL SCIENCES, HUMAN SCIENCES AND CULTURE

The major event of the year in the cultural field was the inter-governmental conference organized by UNESCO in Venice, Italy, from 24 August to 2 September, and attended by 450 delegates from 88 countries. The conference reached a large measure of agreement on the institutional, administrative and financial aspects of culture which it was convened to examine. Nine publications in the UNESCO series Studies and Documents on Cultural Policies were available to conference participants.

In response to an appeal launched in 1968 to save the temples of Philae, threatened by the rising waters behind the Aswan Dam, the United Arab Republic and UNESCO signed an agreement in Cairo in December 1970. Under the terms of the agreement, the Government of the United Arab Republic was to dismantle the temples and reconstruct them on an island near their original site. The cost of the operation was estimated at $13,300,000, of which the Government of the United Arab Republic was to provide one third.

The sixteenth General Conference of UNESCO (held at the organization's headquarters in Paris from 12 October to 14 November 1970) adopted a convention on prohibiting and preventing the illicit import, export and transfer of ownership of cultural property. In the Middle East and the Khmer Republic, UNESCO continued the implementation of the Hague Convention on the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict.

Co-operation also continued with the Italian Government on the protection of Venice, the preservation of the city's cultural treasures and the stimulation of its cultural life. As part of its programme for the conservation and restoration of cultural sites and monuments, where possible with the aid of credits arising from tourism, UNESCO organized two training courses during the year: one on the conservation of monuments in stone, held in Venice, and the other on the education of architects, held in Zurich, Switzerland.

Three expert meetings were organized in Africa: on African musical traditions, held at Yaounde, Cameroon, in February; on the preparation of a general history of Africa, held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in June; and on the contribution of African languages to cultural activities and to literacy programmes, held at Yaounde in August. The first rostrum of African music, organized by the International Music Council, was held at UNESCO headquarters in May, coinciding with the seventeenth International Rostrum of Composers.

To mark the centenary of the birth of V. I. Lenin, UNESCO organized an international symposium on Lenin's contribution to science, education and culture. The symposium, held in April at Tampere, Finland, with the collaboration of the UNESCO National Commissions of Finland and the USSR, was attended by specialists from 20 countries.

During 1970, UNESCO continued to work for the elimination of racial prejudice and the promotion of human rights. In January, an expert meeting was organized on the right to privacy; the participants examined the social, cultural, legal, technological and other aspects of this right and investigated the problems posed by the mass media, bureaucracy and Government.

In May, UNESCO organized an interdisciplinary expert meeting on the implications of recent scientific research for the understanding of human aggressiveness. Eighteen social scientists and biologists discussed the fundamental biological, psychological and social aspects of aggression; assessed the state of present knowledge; suggested ways of improving research; and considered how human aggressiveness might be controlled and redirected towards constructive purposes.

Studies of problems arising from population increase and from the "brain drain" of trained specialists from developing to developed countries also continued during the year.

At the end of June, a week-long international symposium on the role of the social sciences in development was held at UNESCO headquarters, attended by 16 participants from 14 countries.

Publications of the organization during the year included the first volume of a survey on the main trends of research in the social and human sciences; three international catalogues of films of archaeological, ethnographic and folklore interest; and a Field Manual for Museums.

COMMUNICATION

During 1970, a mission was dispatched to the Arab States to explore the possibilities of using a regional satellite for educational television transmissions to all Arabic-speaking countries. A feasibility study for an eight-country educational television satellite system in Latin America was also begun.

A six-month consultant mission on book development was sent to 13 countries in Latin America, and the region's first book development centre was opened at Bogota, Colombia. The UNESCO regional centre in Karachi, Pakistan, organized a four-week course in publishing for publishers from 12 countries, held in New Delhi; a course in publishing techniques for printing specialists from French-speaking African countries was held in Kinshasa, Democratic Republic of the Congo. Missions to explore book production facilities were sent to a number of African countries.

Work continued on the development of the communication media and the training of specialists in the field of information. The year saw the opening of a school of journalism in the University of Nairobi, which was set up with the help of a UNESCO expert. Other UNESCO experts assisted in the training of radio and television personnel in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, and in organizing a first regional training course at the Institute of Communication in the University of Lagos, Nigeria. A technical adviser was appointed to set up a Special Fund project to establish a training centre for television personnel in India, aimed at permitting the Government to expand its educational television facilities.

A regional course on documentary film production for economic and social development was held in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in May. Other courses included two symposia at the International Centre for Advanced Training in Journalism at Strasbourg, France; a course for 44 professors of journalism at the Latin American centre in Quito, Ecuador; and a course on the rural press held at Dakar and attended by participants from 11 African countries.

A regional course on the use of the mass media in family planning was held at Seoul, Republic of Korea, in September. Expert research missions in the same field went to El Salvador and Costa Rica, and an advisory mission was sent to the United Arab Republic.

Among the titles published in the UNESCO series Reports and Papers on Mass Communications were the volumes Broadcasting from Space, International Cultural Co-operation and The Application of Radio and Television to Functional Literacy Teaching, as well as the report on the 1969 Montreal meeting on the mass media in society. The UNESCO information services published The UNESCO Chronicle (monthly), UNESCO Features (twice monthly), and the illustrated magazine UNESCO Courier (monthly) which appeared in 12 languages and 13 editions.

Aid continued to the East African School of Librarianship in Kampala, Uganda, and in Algeria, Nepal, Sierra Leone and the Sudan, UNESCO'S microfilm unit worked at reproducing 1,250,000 pages of rare and historical documents.

SECRETARIAT

At 31 December 1970, the total number of full-time staff employed by UNESCO on permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments stood at 3,268. Of these, 1,671 were in the professional and higher categories, of whom some 964 were experts serving in the field. There were 1,597 staff members in the general service and maintenance worker category, of whom 395 were employed in the field.

BUDGET

The sixteenth General Conference of UNESCO, held in October-November 1970, voted a budget of $89,898,560 for the 1971-1972 biennium, compared with the $77,413,500 regular budget for the 1969-1970 biennium. Extra-budgetary sources from UNDP Special Fund projects and Technical Assistance were expected to add another $69,422,000 to this sum.

CHAPTER V

THE WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO)

During 1970, membership in the World Health Organization (WHO)<sup>1</sup> remained unchanged at 128 full member and three associate member States.

The twenty-third World Health Assembly, which met in Geneva, Switzerland, from 5 to 22 May 1970, devoted special attention to problems of environmental health. The Assembly requested the Director-General to draw up a long-term programme of measures to combat water, soil, food and air pollution, including the creation of a world-wide system of surveillance and monitoring of pollution and the framing of a code of environmental health.

COMMUNICABLE DISEASES

MALARIA ERADICATION

The revised strategy of malaria eradication endorsed by the twenty-second World Health Assembly in 1969 began to be applied during 1970. The programme called for diversification of methods, greater adaptation to local conditions and more realistic planning.

Four more countries and territories were entered in the WHO official register of areas where malaria eradication had been achieved, bringing the total to 17. In another 21 countries, eradication was claimed but not yet registered. Assistance was offered by WHO to 44 countries and territories for eradication programmes and to 27 countries for other anti-malaria work, including surveys and control programmes.

Of the estimated 1,802 million people living in the originally malarious areas of the world (excluding mainland China, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam), 1.340 million were in areas where malaria had been eradicated or where eradication programmes were in progress. Of these, 710 million were living in areas in the maintenance phase of the programme, 296 million in areas in the consolidation phase, 329 million in areas in the attack phase and 5 million in areas in the preparatory phase. Of the 462 million people living in areas where malaria eradication programmes were not yet in operation, 113 million were protected by malaria control measures, and Governments were making anti-malaria drugs available to a further 62 million.

Research and training in malaria eradication were actively pursued. From January to December 1970, WHO concluded 43 new or renewed agreements with national institutions for studies on parasitology, chemotherapy, immunology, epidemiology, entomology and methodology of attack in relation to malaria.

In malaria eradication, as in many other fields of activity, WHO continued its close collaboration with the United Nations Children's Fund.

SMALLPOX ERADICATION

At the end of 1970, the fourth year of the intensified programme of smallpox eradication, the disease was considered to be endemic in 14 countries, three fewer countries than in 1969 and 13 fewer than in 1967, the first year of the programme; eradication programmes were in operation in all countries where the disease was endemic. Figures on smallpox incidence decreased for the third consecutive year despite substantially more complete reporting in most countries. The number of smallpox cases reported in 1970 in the entire world was about 30,000, the lowest figure ever recorded. The total number of countries experiencing smallpox had been halved in the four years of the intensified programme: from 42 countries in 1967 to 21 in 1970.

In helping to promote the production of adequate quantities of freeze-dried vaccine, WHO provided advice and equipment to more than 25 laboratories in endemic areas. Vaccine production in the affected countries increased; all of the vaccine produced met the standards of potency established by the WHO Expert Committee on Biological Standardization. During 1970, donations of vaccine were received from Belgium, Canada, China, Finland, Hungary, Kenya, the Netherlands, Romania, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand and the USSR.

In smallpox research, particular emphasis was put on studies of the epidemiology of smallpox, the nature of monkeypox and experimental studies of smallpox infection in monkeys, the development and application of new techniques of vaccine production, and field techniques for the rapid laboratory identification of smallpox and chickenpox infections.

INFLUENZA

Following the occurrence of influenza A2 in Spain and France, in October 1969, several months earlier than usual, infection spread rapidly to Israel, Yugoslavia, Italy, Switzerland, Norway and Portugal; by the end of January 1970, almost the whole of Europe was heavily attacked. A major epidemic was reported in Mexico, and the infection was also recorded in Algeria, Canada, the Philippines, Sudan and Uganda. The United States, which had suffered a severe epidemic the previous year, escaped very lightly in 1970.

In the southern hemisphere, between March and August 1970, epidemics were reported in Argentina, Australia, Chile, Fiji, New Zealand, Panama, Papua and New Guinea and South Africa.

In both the northern and the southern hemispheres, the epidemics were associated with a virus similar to the A2 Hong Kong strain. The relative inefficiency of current inactivated and live vaccines was carefully considered in the light of the new knowledge that had been gained about that strain; chemotherapy and chemoprophylaxis were also studied. The long-run prospects for effective prevention of influenza appeared to be good, but much laboratory and field research was considered necessary before such expectations could be realized. Virus B influenza was rarely reported in 1970.

The WHO world network of influenza centres continued to study and identify virus strains. Reagents for the identification of influenza viruses and for use in serological studies were distributed to the 87 national influenza centres in 56 countries. The International Influenza Centre for the Americas, in Atlanta (Georgia), United States, and the World Influenza Centre in London, United Kingdom, received some 700 strains of virus A from 63 countries to identify their characteristics.

TUBERCULOSIS

In 1970, for the ninth consecutive year, WHO-sponsored inter-regional training courses in the epidemiology and control of tuberculosis were held in Prague, Czechoslovakia, and Rome, Italy, for directors of national tuberculosis programmes. Modern concepts and methods of tuberculosis control, with special reference to socio-economic conditions in the developing countries, were discussed, and training in the field was provided.

The introduction of direct BCG vaccination without previous tuberculin testing led to a substantial increase in the number of persons vaccinated and also facilitated combined immunization schemes. In Burma, for example, it was possible to double the annual BCG vaccination figure. In 29 countries in all WHO regions, campaigns were conducted for simultaneous BCG and smallpox vaccination.

A WHO-supported study was carried out as part of the preliminary investigations for the tuberculosis prevention trial in south India. The results were expected to be of interest to other health schemes in which self-administration of drugs played an important role, such as family planning.

CHOLERA

Cholera was more widespread in 1970 than in any year since 1961, when the seventh pandemic began, and appeared in some countries of north, east and west Africa for the first time in the twentieth century. In certain cases, incomplete reporting made it difficult for WHO to disseminate accurate epidemiological information on the spread of the disease. As far as could be determined, cholera was present in Brunei, Burma, Czechoslovakia, the French Territory of the Afars and the Issas, Ghana, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia (west), Mali, Nepal, Pakistan (east), the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, the Republic of Viet-Nam, Sabah (Malaysia), Sarawak (Malaysia), Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Syria, Togo, Trucial Oman, Tunisia, Turkey and the USSR (Astrakhan, Odessa and Kerch). Imported cases were also reported by France, Japan and the United Kingdom.

The organization provided emergency assistance in the form of expert advice and supplies of rehydrating fluid, antibiotics, vaccine, vaccination equipment, disinfectants, diagnostic media and serums to several countries in the South-East Asia region and to a number of countries in the Eastern Mediterranean and Africa regions. Other countries answered an appeal by WHO for cholera vaccines and vaccination equipment and made experts available at short notice.

Training in various aspects of the control and treatment of cholera was stepped up. Research projects were supported in many countries, including field trials on different types of vaccine. Discussions were held on ways of making better use of available resources; it was noted that from the cost-benefit standpoint, improved sanitation was more effective than immunization in cholera control.

A compilation of the remarkable advances in the knowledge of cholera made during the past decade was published in WHO'S Public Health Papers, together with a supplement outlining practical measures for cholera control.

OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH PROBLEMS

CANCER

In view of the steadily rising incidence of many types of cancer, WHO continued to focus attention on clinical cancer control and on the unification of histopathological and cytological nomenclature. The cancer control activities of the organization were concentrated on early detection and diagnosis, treatment and education. The 1970 World Health Day (7 April) developed the theme "Early Detection of Cancer Saves Lives."

During the year, efforts were made to establish central cytology laboratories in many parts of the world where personnel, particularly in family planning programmes, could be trained in the early detection of cervical and other neoplasms. A fourth international reference centre for the evaluation of methods of diagnosis and treatment was set up at the National Cancer Centre, Tsukiji, Tokyo, Japan; the new centre was to deal with stomach cancer.

INTERNATIONAL AGENCY FOR RESEARCH ON CANCER

The carcinogenic effects of pollution of air and water and of contamination of food by natural or added substances were studied during the year by the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC), whose headquarters are in Lyons, France. The Agency continued its work on primary liver cancer in regions of Africa where it was relatively common and where aflatoxin, a fungal contaminant of ground-nut meal, might be a factor.

Forty travel and 25 research training fellowships were awarded by IARC under its training programme, and a training course in the use of epidemiological techniques in cancer research was held in Lyons in March.

CARDIOVASCULAR DISEASES

Attention was focused during 1970 on atherosclerosis, ischaemic heart disease, arterial hypertension, cerebrovascular diseases, cardiomyopathies and rheumatic fever. Ischaemic heart disease was given high priority: in addition to analyses carried out by WHO, investigations were promoted or co-ordinated by the organization to test the value of preventive measures, to develop community control programmes for patients with acute myocardial infarction, to investigate the natural history and causation of the disease. An analysis was made by WHO of the mortality from ischaemic heart disease in relation to dietary factors; based on data covering the past 15 to 20 years in 23 countries, the analysis revealed positively and strongly correlated increases over that period in the death rate from ischaemic heart disease and the consumption of total and saturated fats, sucrose and other simple sugars.

HUMAN GENETICS

Inherited diseases of the blood cells and allied disorders, chromosome aberrations and serious inborn metabolic disorders headed the list of diseases of genetic origin investigated by WHO in the attempt to understand their origins and develop methods for prevention and treatment. At the WHO International Reference Centre for the Processing of Human Genetics Data, in Honolulu (Hawaii), United States, training was given to research workers from five countries.

HUMAN REPRODUCTION

The main emphasis of WHO in the field of human reproduction continued to be on advisory services, which in 1970 were provided to 40 countries. These services included the planning, implementation and evaluation of family planning services within the framework of general health services; the development of educational programmes and facilities; and the stimulation of research into the physiological and clinical aspects of human reproduction. The organization was able to enlarge its activities in this field with the co-operation of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the Swedish International Development Authority.

INSECT VECTORS OF DISEASE

The search for new methods of vector control was given fresh impetus by the world-wide concern over the effects of pesticides on the environment. The twenty-third World Health Assembly reflected this concern by endorsing a long-term programme of laboratory research and field experiments on the control of disease vectors by biological, genetic and other non-chemical means.

Increasing attention was paid to the safe use of pesticides. The organization intensified its investigation of compounds used in malaria eradication, began a study of the effects of long-term exposure to pesticides, took steps to deal with possible outbreaks of pesticide poisoning and continued research on DDT. There was little doubt that DDT and certain other pesticides would continue to be used for public health purposes since, on present evidence, their advantages in vector control far outweighed possible hazards. Efforts to establish a firm ecological foundation for vector control were extended, and a computerized system for accumulating information on certain vector species was established. Studies on resistance to insecticides were continued.

ZOONOSES AND #### VETERINARY PUBLIC HEALTH

The number of cases of food-borne infections and of animal diseases transmitted to man continued to increase in most parts of the world from which information was available, due in part to increases in animal production, international trade, tourism and nomadism. In dealing with these problems, WHO worked closely with the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO).

The epidemic of wildlife rabies in central Europe continued to spread slowly westward at a rate of about 40 kilometres a year. The WHO/FAO co-ordinated research programme on wildlife rabies in central Europe was reviewed at a meeting held during the year. Because foxes appeared to be the principal carriers, discussion centred on whether wildlife rabies could be eradicated by controlling the fox population without seriously disturbing the ecological balance.

In the study of animal influenzas, a number of observations made during the year were consistent with the view that human influenza pandemics might have their origin in avian or animal reservoirs. Problems arising in the study of the social and economic effects of the zoonoses in man and animals were explored in a series of consultations held during the year. Research on spontaneous diseases of animals similar to, or identical with, diseases of man was continued, and more attention was paid to problems arising from the use of laboratory animals.

COMMUNITY

HEALTH SERVICES

Seventy-nine projects designed to strengthen community health services received WHO assistance in 1970. Activities included the planning, development and organization of comprehensive health services; manpower planning and utilization; research; and in-service training of professional and other health personnel.

Of the 118 national plans for economic and social development reported in 1970, 103 included health programmes. Most of these 103 countries were assisted by WHO in the preparation, implementation and periodic review of their health plans.

NURSING

During 1970, WHO provided assistance in nursing to 102 countries through 223 projects, most of them focused on education and training. In the Africa region, for example, there were 24 projects for the training of nurses at state diploma level: by the end of the year, more than 6,000 nurses had successfully completed training through these programmes. Assistance was continued to educational projects intended to prepare nurses for teaching and administrative posts, public health nursing and specialization in various clinical fields. Special attention was devoted to helping countries plan and revise curricula for teaching staffs.

With the development and expansion of health services, particularly in rural areas, nursing and midwifery personnel were expected to play an increasingly important role. During the year, WHO provided some 90 nurses specializing in public health nursing to assist in over 40 projects involving education of the public, communicable disease control, care of the sick and maternal and child health. Increased emphasis was given to the role of nursing and midwifery personnel in family planning.

DRUG MONITORING

The WHO drug monitoring centre, set up in 1968 as a pilot research project in Alexandria (Virginia), United States, developed systems for handling case reports of adverse reactions to drugs recorded in national centres. The pilot project demonstrated that an international drug monitoring programme could benefit all countries, not only those in the programme.

In 1970, the project was transferred to WHO headquarters in Geneva and entered a primary operational phase. The organization's provision of technical advice to national monitoring centres was expected to be facilitated by the move.

DRUG DEPENDENCE

The widespread concern at the self-administration of dependence-producing drugs, particularly among young people, was reflected in a decision of the twenty-third World Health Assembly to encourage and assist both research on drug dependence and the development of improved preventive, treatment and rehabilitation programmes. General principles for improving the effectiveness of preventive action, treatment and rehabilitation services were outlined by the Expert Committee on Drug Dependence, which met during the year. The Committee favoured a common policy at national and international levels on control of the production, manufacture and distribution of certain dependence-producing drugs.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH ## POLLUTION

By the end of 1970, an international network for the monitoring and study of air pollution had been set up by WHO. The network consisted of two international centres, in London and Washington, D.C.; three regional centres, in Moscow, USSR, Nagpur, India, and Tokyo; and 20 laboratories in various parts of the world. The network was to record monthly averages on levels of air pollution due to sulphur dioxide and dust particles, to compare trends in various countries and to issue warnings when necessary.

During the year, WHO continued to give aid to Governments on many aspects of air, soil and water pollution, including assisting countries in preparing requests for pollution-control projects to be financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The Pan American Sanitary Engineering and Environmental Sciences Centre, established in Lima, Peru, in 1968, with the assistance of the Pan American Health Organization and WHO, provided advisory services to Governments in specialized fields of sanitary engineering and environmental health, including air, water and land pollution.

Studies of radioactive wastes continued, and the first comparative studies were made of the hazards of nuclear and of conventional power plants.

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

During the period 1 December 1969 to 30 November 1970, WHO awarded 5,627 fellowships. Of these, 3,830 were for study (as compared with 3,411 for the period ending 30 November 1969), including 487 for undergraduate study, and 1,797 were for participation in meetings and other educational activities organized by WHO.

As part of the observance of International Education Year, the twenty-third World Health Assembly discussed the question "Education for the Health Professions: Regional Aspects of a Universal Problem." Special issues of the WHO publications Chronicle and World Health were also devoted to International Education Year.

SECRETARIAT

As at December 1970, the total number of full-time staff employed by WHO came to 3,497. Of these, 1,821 (drawn from 95 countries) were in professional and higher categories; 1,019 were on field assignments. There were 1,676 staff members in the general service category, of whom 80 were employed on field assignments. Of the total number of staff members, 254 were employed on UNDP projects. In addition, there were 213 consultants, of whom 41 were assigned to UNDP projects.

CHAPTER VI

THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

During 1970, the activities of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development<sup>1</sup> and those of its affiliates, the International Development Association (IDA) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC), continued to expand in accordance with the five-year programme (1969-1973) of lending for economic development outlined in 1968. At the 1970 annual meeting, the President of the Bank reported that the programme, entailing the doubling of the lending of the Bank and its affiliates over the 1969-1973 period as compared with the 1964-1968 period, was on schedule and that he was confident that the level of commitments for high-priority development projects envisaged over the 1969-1973 period—$12,000 million—could be attained.

During 1970, the Bank continued to emphasize not only quantitative increases in lending but also qualitative improvements in its approach to the problems of economic development. A number of new initiatives designed to meet this goal were taken during the year. Some of them were prompted by the recommendations of the Commission on International Development in its report Partners in Development, published in October 1969,<sup>2</sup> while others resulted from the Bank's continuing review of its policies and procedures.

Steps were taken during the year to improve the scope and quality of information on the external debt of developing countries and to identify debt problems and help countries solve them; the Bank was to work with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and the International Monetary Fund, respectively, on these matters. The Bank also initiated a series of studies on the debt-servicing problems of its developing member countries whose service payments on external debt had been increasing nearly three times as fast as their exports in recent years.

Further steps in the co-ordination of development assistance were taken by the Bank, which was already the sponsor of two Consortia, 11 Consultative Groups and the Aid Group for Ceylon. During 1970, with the approval of the Governments concerned, the Bank organized new groups for the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia and the Philippines and re-activated the groups for Nigeria and Thailand.

In order to help developing member countries in the formulation of their development strategies and donor countries and international agencies in channelling their assistance as productively as possible, the Bank started work in 1970 on a new series of expanded Country Economic Reports. These reports were to contain comprehensive data on social as well as strictly economic factors.

The Bank's increasing concern with the qualitative aspects of development and with the need to view developmental problems in as broad a context as possible led to the establishment of new units in 1970 to consider, respectively, the environmental consequences of development projects and the problems of urbanization.

Following the establishment in 1969 of a department within the Bank concerned with population problems, a number of appraisal missions visited member countries during 1970 to examine the possibility of advising on programmes or financing projects related to population questions. In June 1970, the Bank made its first loan for a family planning project, to Jamaica. (See below.)

During 1970, Cambodia (22 July), Equatorial Guinea (1 July) and Yemen (22 May), became members of the Bank, raising the Bank's membership to 115 countries.

LENDING OPERATIONS

The Bank made loans amounting to $1,615.1 million in the calendar year 1970. This new peak level of lending brought the over-all total of Bank commitments since its inception (net of cancellations, terminations and refundings) to $14,647 million.

The following tables summarize the Bank's lending during 1970 by area and by purpose:

AGRICULTURE

Bank loan commitments for agricultural projects—financing designed to help raise the quantity and quality of agricultural output in developing member countries and to encourage a shift in their agricultural sectors from subsistence farming to cash crop production—amounted to $84.6 million in the calendar year 1970. The cumulative total of Bank loans in the agricultural sector, the most important single area of activity in the overwhelming majority of the countries of the developing world, stood at over $1,300 million by the end of 1970.

Apart from one operation in Ceylon (where $13.6 million of a $14.5 million multipurpose loan was allocated to irrigation), all the loans approved during 1970 were provided either for investment credit to support crop or livestock production or for projects in general agricultural development.

Four loans for investment credit, totalling $36.5 million, were approved during 1970. Three of these commitments—in Iran ($6.5 million), Israel ($20 million) and Jamaica ($3.7 million)—were channelled through specialized financial agencies in the countries concerned, for re-lending for export crop development (in the case of Israel) or for the expansion of crop and livestock production (in the cases of Iran and Jamaica). The fourth investment credit loan, of $6.3 million to Uruguay, was made directly to the Government to support an ongoing programme of specialized livestock development.

The Bank approved four loans, totalling $34.5 million, for general agricultural development during 1970. Two loans to Malaysia represented the second phase of Bank support for the country's largest regional development undertaking, the Jengka Triangle Programme. A loan of $13 million was to provide funds for the second phase of a land clearance and settlement programme which involved the clearing of 93,000 acres, the planting of oil palms and rubber trees, and the settlement of some 9,000 families on holdings of about 10 acres each. A loan of $8.5 million was to help finance Malaysia's first integrated forest industries operation, a logging and timber complex which would ultimately employ about 1,200 people. Both loans were designed to increase Malaysia's export earnings as well as to ameliorate problems of unemployment and underemployment. A $7.5 million commitment was made to the Ivory Coast to assist the expansion of production of cocoa, one of the country's main exports, while a $5.5 million loan was made to Zambia to encourage the commercial cultivation of maize and tobacco.

Under a co-operative agreement between the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) and the Bank, FAO provided assistance in the identification of projects for potential Bank financing. Four of the projects for 1970—those in Iran, Israel, the Ivory Coast and Jamaica—were drawn up after prior FAO assistance.

EDUCATION

Educational lending, a relatively new field for the Bank and its affiliates, continued to expand rapidly. In 1970, the Bank made eight loans for education, amounting to $79.8 million, or almost half of the cumulative total of Bank lending for this purpose ($177.2 million).

In lending for education, the Bank concentrated its assistance in three areas: secondary schooling, technical and vocational education, and teacher training. It also encouraged member countries to take advantage of advances in educational technology and to develop their national education systems.

A loan of $11 million made in 1970 to the Ivory Coast was of particular interest in this regard. The loan was to help finance the construction of an instructional television centre, which was expected to start producing pilot programmes for primary school children by 1971, and the construction and equipment of three primary teacher-training colleges, three general secondary schools, two post-secondary technical schools and one vocational school for adult training; the loan was also to provide funds for various consultancy activities.

Other loans for education in 1970 included commitments to the following: (a) Chile, two loans, totalling $8.5 million, for teacher-training schools, agricultural secondary schools and industrial and agricultural vocational training; (b) China, $9 million, for industrial and vocational schools and for feasibility studies in the fields of fisheries and instructional television; (c) Colombia, $6.5 million, for comprehensive secondary schools; (d) Greece, $13.8 million, for higher technical education centres; (e) Iran, $19 million, for primary and secondary education reform, for teacher training, for vocational schools and for secondary agricultural schools; and (f) Spain, $12 million, for basic general education and teacher-training centres.

TRANSPORTATION

Lending for transportation projects (mainly involving funds for roads, railways and ports) has traditionally made up a major share of Bank financing. This trend continued in 1970; the 19 commitments approved during the year totalled $466.9 million, bringing the cumulative net amount of Bank lending in this sector to $4,442 million.

Two loans for reconstruction assistance were of special interest. A $25 million loan was made to Nigeria to help rehabilitate that country's ravaged road, railway and port facilities. Peru received a $30 million loan to provide road reconstruction funds following the earthquake of May 1970.

Thirteen loans, totalling $322.6 million, were made for roads during the year (including the loan to Peru but excluding the roads component of the Nigeria reconstruction loan).

In addition to the loan to Peru, six other loans were provided to countries in the western hemisphere: to Brazil ($100 million), to Chile ($10.8 million), to Colombia ($32 million), to Costa Rica ($15.7 million), to Mexico ($21.8 million), and to Paraguay ($6 million).

The Brazilian loan, the year's largest for transportation, was to help finance the construction of new roads, the improvement of existing ones and highway engineering and feasibility studies. Roads had become the dominant mode of transport in Brazil, accounting for 72 per cent of freight and 92 per cent of passenger traffic. The project assisted by the Bank was designed to help reduce vehicle operating costs, cut travel time (thereby reducing losses of perishable goods), and facilitate the movement of population from the densely populated coastal areas into the interior of the country.

Other road loans approved during 1970 included a $42 million commitment to Iran for major improvements in the main road network, and a $40 million loan to Yugoslavia to assist in the construction of four major highways, of particular importance for the country's rapidly growing tourism industry. Loans for roads were also made to Cameroon ($12 million), Iceland ($4.1 million), Papua and New Guinea ($4.5 million) and Sierra Leone ($3.7 million). The Bank's concessionary lending affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA) (see pp. 951-59) provided finance simultaneously with the Bank for the projects in Cameroon, Papua and New Guinea and Sierra Leone.

Another of the year's transportation projects receiving simultaneous assistance from both the Bank and IDA was a railway expansion operation in the Republic of Korea, for which the Bank lent $40 million and IDA $15 million. The project was to help the Korean railways, which handled three quarters of the country's freight and half of its passenger traffic, to meet rapidly rising demand.

The Korean project was one of three railway loans approved during 1970. Another loan, of $42.4 million, was made to the East African Community (Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania) for improved track, rolling stock and signalling and other equipment, and the construction of new marshalling yards and offices. A $5.2 million loan was made to Cameroon to help finance track rehabilitation, bridge construction and the purchase of rolling stock for the Trans-Cameroon Railway, due to be completed by 1974.

Loans of $12.5 million for port improvement in Thailand, and of $19.3 million for the further expansion of the Sui northern pipeline system in Pakistan, were also approved during 1970.

ELECTRIC POWER

The largest over-all amount of Bank loans continued to be directed towards the development of electric power, loans for which reached a cumulative total of $4,793 million by the end of 1970. Loans in 1970 amounted to $572.1 million; these included 13 loans exclusively for power (to Brazil, China, Colombia, Iran, Honduras, Liberia, Malaysia, Mexico, Panama, Thailand, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay and Zambia), totalling $571.2 million, and the power component of $0.9 million of a multipurpose loan to Ceylon.

Most of the year's power loans were made to support expansion programmes of existing Bank borrowers in this sector. The year's largest loan, of $125 million, went to Mexico to help the country's generation, transmission and distribution system expand to meet the 11 per cent annual rate of increase in electricity demand. This was the Bank's eleventh loan to Mexico for power, making that country the Bank's second largest net borrower (following India).

Iran and Liberia each received power loans for the first time. The amount of $60 million went to Iran to help provide a substantial increase in distribution and transmission facilities in the area in and around Teheran, and to supply funds for engineering services and the training of technical, managerial and supervisory personnel. The loan to Liberia, of $7.4 million, was to assist a programme which would double the capacity of the electricity system and to provide funds for transmission facilities and a study of distribution requirements.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Three loans, totalling $86.4 million, brought the cumulative amount of Bank lending in the relatively new sector of telecommunications to $280 million by the end of 1970.

A loan of $10.4 million was made to the East African Community to assist the further expansion of local and long-distance telephone services, and the provision of additional telegraph and telex facilities. A $40 million loan went to Yugoslavia to help a programme that would almost quadruple the number of long-distance circuits and provide greatly improved international telecommunication links. Both projects involved the eventual use of earth satellite stations.

Iran received a loan of $36 million to help relieve the shortage of telecommunication facilities by helping to finance the costs of new telephone, telex and telegraph equipment and of management and engineering services.

WATER SUPPLY AND SEWERAGE

The two loans made by the Bank in 1970 for the development of water supplies—one of $18.5 million to Colombia and one of $8.3 million to Kenya—brought the cumulative total of Bank lending for this purpose to $131 million by the end of the year.

The Colombian loan was to help improve the water supply and sewerage services in Cali. The loan to Kenya would nearly double the capacity of the water services supplying the capital, Nairobi, and was expected to provide adequate supplies (despite rapid projected population growth) through 1980.

FAMILY PLANNING

The Bank made its first loan in the family planning field in June 1970. The loan, of $2 million, was to help Jamaica finance improvements in the maternity services offered by the country's main hospital and to construct and equip ten rural maternity centres. The expansion of facilities was intended to improve the conditions under which babies were born and to facilitate the development of a family planning information programme.

INDUSTRY

By the end of 1970, the cumulative total of Bank lending for the development of industry amounted to $2,266 million. The bulk of the $296.5 million provided in 1970 for this purpose was channelled through development finance companies in member countries; 12 loans, totalling $278 million, were made to such companies. These included a number of "repeater" loans to companies with which the Bank had co-operated in the past, in China, Finland, Greece, India, Iran, Israel, Morocco, Nigeria and Turkey.

Three loans were made to companies with which the Bank had not previously been associated. A $25 million loan went to the Banco do Nordeste do Brasil to help promote development in the north-east region. A $10 million commitment to Morocco's Credit Immobilier et Hotelier was designed to encourage the development of tourism in Morocco by providing funds to an institution which specialized in lending for hotel building and equipment. A $5 million loan was made to the Development Bank of Singapore to help in the work of financing new industries (especially export-oriented concerns) in that country.

A loan of $18.5 million to Yugoslavia was to provide direct assistance to specific industrial projects in the fields of automotive and specialized steel production.

DEVELOPMENT AID CO-ORDINATION

The Bank continued to encourage joint efforts of capital-exporting countries designed to co-ordinate the flow of development assistance through consortia or consultative groups. Ten meetings of such groups took place in 1970 for the following countries: Ceylon, Ghana, India, Morocco, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Thailand and Tunisia. The consultative groups for East Africa met twice, reviewing development assistance in Kenya and in the United Republic of Tanzania.

The Bank continued to maintain close relations with other members of the United Nations family. It continued to act as executing agency for pre-investment projects of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and to carry out co-operative arrangements with FAO and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), under which special units in those two agencies provided assistance in the identification and preparation of projects for Bank financing. The arrangement with UNESCO was expanded during 1970 to provide technical support in the fields of educational planning and sector studies. The Bank also continued its frequent contact with other agencies, such as the Development Assistance Committee of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

A growing proportion of Bank loans contained allocations for technical assistance and preparation of future projects. The Bank also continued to assist nations in identifying and preparing projects, through the work of its resident staff in permanent missions in West Africa, East Africa and Indonesia, as well as through missions sent from headquarters.

The Bank continued to encourage Governments to look to UNDP for financing pre-investment and feasibility studies, while being prepared to act as an executing agency for such studies if requested to do so by UNDP.

During 1970, work went forward on the following UNDP studies:

Country	Project	UNDP Allocation (in U.S. dollars)
Afghanistan	Highway maintenance programme	1,760,000

	Total	8,913,600

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

The Economic Development Institute was set up by the Bank in 1955 as a staff college for senior officials concerned with economic affairs in developing countries. By the end of 1970, it had graduated 1,165 fellows from courses in development and in project evaluation.

In 1970, 150 individuals attended the Institute's courses. The Bank approved the beginning of a long-range programme providing for yearly increases in enrolment for each of the next six years; by 1976, it was envisaged, the Institute would offer twice as many courses and graduate twice as many fellows as in 1970.

SETTLEMENT OF INVESTMENT DISPUTES

At the end of 1970, 66 countries had signed and 59 countries had ratified the Convention setting up the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID), established in 1966. The Bank continued to act as host for negotiations in the event of disputes arising between foreign investors and participating Governments.

BANK BORROWING

The Bank sold $1,040.4 million of its obligations in the international investment market during 1970. This included the first borrowings in Japan of 72,000 million yen (equivalent to $200 million); a public offering of $200 million in the United States; borrowings in the Federal Republic of Germany equivalent to $245.4 million; and in Switzerland equivalent to $17.5 million. Other borrowings, all outside the United States, amounted to the equivalent of $377.5 million. The net increase in the Bank's funded debt was about $620 million, raising the total to about $4,921 million.

BANK'S INCOME AND RESERVES

The Bank's gross income for the calendar year 1970 was about $550 million, compared with $455 million in 1969. Expenses, which included $273 million for interest on Bank borrowing, bond issuance and other financial expenses, totalled $322 million, as compared with $266 million in 1969. Net income in 1970 amounted to $228 million, as compared with $189 million in 1969. Total reserves amounted to about $1,442 million as at 31 December 1970, made up of $1,150 million in the Supplemental Reserve and $292 million in the Special Reserve.

The Democratic Republic of the Congo, Jamaica, Nigeria, Panama and Uruguay increased their subscriptions to the Bank's capital; as at 31 December 1970, the Bank had a total subscribed capital of $23,207,200,000,

SECRETARIAT

The acceleration of financing operations and a widening of activities required a large expansion of the Bank's staff, which numbered 2,800 by the end of 1970. This number was about equally divided between professional and non-professional staff. Efforts to recruit on a fully international basis met with considerable success; there were 95 nationalities represented on the staff at the end of the year.

CHAPTER VII

THE INTERNATIONAL FINANCE CORPORATION (IFC)

During 1970, the International Finance Corporation (IFC)<sup>1</sup> made 28 commitments totalling $118.6 million in 20 countries. Other domestic and foreign financial institutions and private industrial firms made separate investments of approximately $371 million in projects IFC helped finance in 1970, raising the total capital mobilized by these projects to approximately $489 million.

The International Finance Corporation was established in 1956 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to assist developing member countries by helping them to promote the private sector of their economies. The principal objectives of IFC are to provide risk capital for productive private enterprises, in association with private investors and management; to encourage the development of local capital markets; and to stimulate the international flow of capital.

The Corporation continued in 1970 to make investments in the form of share subscriptions and long-term loans; to carry out stand-by and underwriting arrangements; and to provide financial and technical assistance to privately controlled development finance companies. It neither requires nor accepts guarantees by Governments in its operations. Generally, IFC invests on a mixed equity and loan basis, with other investors providing the bulk of the funds required for any given project.

In 1970, new emphasis was given to certain aspects of the IFC programme. The Corporation showed a greater readiness to make straight loans (i.e. investments without an equity feature) where appropriate; it increased efforts in project identification and promotion; it paid more attention to the creation of institutions likely to make a major contribution to economic development, such as development finance companies and investment companies at the local, national and regional levels; it sought to create broader based capital markets in developing countries by helping to establish and support institutions designed to mobilize domestic savings and when requested by Governments, it advised on policies to encourage the growth of private investment.

The Corporation's commitments in 1970 were in Brazil, Ceylon, Chile, China, Colombia, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia, Greece, Honduras, India, Kenya, Malaysia, Mexico, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

First commitments were made by IFC during the year in three countries—Ceylon, China and the Democratic Republic of the Congo—spreading the Corporation's investments to 43 countries. In addition, IFC invested in a regional investment company that was assisting productive private enterprises in developing nations in the western hemisphere.

By the end of 1970, IFC had made cumulative total commitments of $496 million over the past 14 years. Commitments in Africa totalled $84.8 million, or 17 per cent of the total commitments; commitments in Asia and the Middle East totalled $147.3 million, or 30 per cent; and commitments in the western hemisphere totalled $199.8 million, or 40 per cent. The remaining 13 per cent represented investments in Europe and Australia.

Three countries joined IFC in 1970—the Democratic Republic of the Congo (15 April), Gabon (20 October), and Yemen (22 May)—raising total membership in the Corporation at the end of the year to 95 countries. Paid-in share capital rose to $107,009,000.

INVESTMENT OPERATIONS

Brazil. Jointly with one United States and two Brazilian companies, IFC invested $8.4 million in loan, equity and contingent loan and equity commitments in Poliolefinas S.A., a new company that was to build a $29 million low-density polyethylene plant at Santo Andre, near

<sup>1</sup> For further information, see previous volumes of Y.U.N., annual reports to IFC Board of Directors and to IFC Board of Governors, and summary proceedings of annual meetings of IFC Board of Gov-

Sao Paulo. Poliolefinas was expected to provide the country with substantial net foreign exchange benefits and to stimulate further investment in businesses converting polyethylene into other products.

The Poliolefinas plant was adjacent to the Petroquímica União S.A., a naphtha refining plant, and was expected to purchase a substantial portion of Petroquímica's ethylene output as raw material for producing polyethylene. Petroquímica was established in 1968, with IFC assistance, as the base for an enlarged Brazilian petrochemical industry.

Ceylon. Ceylonese and Japanese investors, the Private Investment Company of Asia and IFC joined to sponsor a new $13.8 million integrated textile mill to be built near Colombo. The project was subsequently cancelled when the local licence was withdrawn. The commitment of IFC was to have been $3.3 million in equity and loan.

Chile. The Corporation committed $10.9 million to Minera Sagasca S.A.—a new Chilean company financed by Chilean, Japanese and United States interests—to help establish a $32.5 million copper mining and processing venture near the port of Iquique in the northern part of the country.

Production and exports averaging 24,000 metric tons of fine copper equivalent annually were expected to generate substantial foreign exchange earnings for Chile and contribute to the Iquique region's economy through higher employment, development of infrastructure and creation of ancillary business activities.

China. During 1970, IFC made its first commitments in China: $4.2 million in loan and equity to the Asia Cement Corporation and $3 million in loan to Asia Cement's subsidiary, Oriental Chemical Fiber Corporation.

The investments were to help Asia Cement implement a $14.47 million project to increase cement output from 900,000 to 1.7 million metric tons a year and to establish Oriental Chemical Fiber Corporation, a $14.32 million company with an annual production capacity of 7,500 metric tons of polyester staple fibre.

The expansion of Asia Cement was to help meet growing domestic demand and maintain cement exports, one of the country's important foreign exchange earners. Oriental Chemical Fiber's output was to substitute for synthetic fibres now imported and help augment China's net foreign exchange earnings from exports of textiles and textile goods.

Colombia. A group of Colombian investors and two United States organizations joined IFC in financing Pro-Hoteles S.A., which was building a $4.1 million, 255 room first-class business and tourist hotel in Cali. The new hotel was expected to employ approximately 300 Colombians and to result in foreign exchange earnings of about $500,000 annually.

The commitment of IFC consisted of approximately $1 million in equity and loan. The investment resulted from a suggestion by Hoturismo, a Colombian tourism industry promotion company which IFC helped establish in 1969.

Democratic Republic of the Congo. The International Development Association (IDA) and IFC helped to further industrial expansion in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by providing $5.75 million to Société congolaise de financement du développement (SOCOFIDE), the country's new private institutional source of medium- and long-term finance. A credit of $5 million was provided by IDA and an equity commitment of $750,000 was made by IFC.

Sponsored by the Government and by commercial, industrial and financial organizations in the Congo, SOCOFIDE was to provide financial assistance to private enterprises, primarily in the manufacturing and processing fields, as well as make equity investments, underwrite securities and provide guarantees.

The Bank, IDA and IFC assisted the sponsors in establishing the new development bank, finding management personnel and recruiting financial institutions in Europe, Japan and the United States to subscribe to the company's share capital.

Ethiopia. Together with Ethiopian and Japanese investors, IFC helped finance a $5 million expansion of the Cotton Company of Ethiopia. S. C., the largest integrated cotton spinning and weaving mill in the country. The IFC commitment amounted to approximately $618,000 in loan and equity.

This was the Corporation's second investment in Cotton Company of Ethiopia: in October 1964, IFC assisted the company's first expansion and modernization programme.

Greece. Assistance was given to Aluminium de Grèce, S.A., Greece's largest industrial enterprise, to increase alumina and aluminium capacity, expand shipping facilities and provide additional permanent working capital. The cost of the project was estimated at $29.3 million; IFC provided $8.6 million in equity, loan and contingent commitments.

Aluminium de Grèce was selling most of its production abroad, and the project was expected to lead to substantial gains in foreign exchange earnings, lower production costs and the strengthening of the company's position as one of the leading aluminium producers of Europe.

India. A second commitment, of $3 million, to a $75.4 million fertilizer project, Zuari Agro Chemicals Limited, in Goa, increased IFC financing for the venture to $18.94 million. More than half of the company's share capital was held by Indians and the rest by United States investors.

Zuari Agro Chemicals was expected to have an ammonia capacity of 220,000 metric tons a year. Part of this would be used directly in the production of 340,000 metric tons a year of prilled urea; the remainder would be used, together with urea and phosphoric acid, to produce 150,000 metric tons a year of granulated compound fertilizer.

Kenya. East Africa's first integrated pulp and paper mill—Panafrikan Paper Mills (E.A.) Limited—was financed in 1970 by: Indian and African investors; United Kingdom, United States and Middle Eastern banks; and a $14.7 million IFC commitment in loans and equity.

Panafrikan Paper Mills was establishing a $35 million kraft pulp and paper mill in western Kenya. Using local raw materials, the mill would initially produce some 45,000 tons of paper a year, primarily for domestic consumption. Substitution of local production for imports was expected to result in annual net foreign exchange savings to Kenya of approximately $4.5 million and to create more than 2,000 jobs.

Malaysia. Together with Malaysian and Indian investors, IFC was helping to establish a $5.9 million integrated textile mill in West Malaysia which was expected to be among the largest textile producers in the country. The mill was to have an annual capacity of some 7.3 million square yards of suiting, shirting and dress material of natural and synthetic fibre blends, and was to employ approximately 900 workers.

The investment of IFC in the new company, India Malaysia Textiles Berhad, consisted of $1.5 million in loan and equity.

Mexico. In 1970, IFC helped finance a new mining project intended to assure an adequate iron ore supply for expanded operations of Mexico's largest privately owned steel company, Compania Fundidora de Fierro y Acero de Monterrey, S.A. (Fundidora).

Because of increased production and decreasing ore reserves at the Cerro de Mercado mine, the major source of Fundidora's iron ore, development of a new source of iron became necessary. The IFC commitment was a $1.5 million loan to Mineral del Norte, S.A., a wholly owned subsidiary of Fundidora, which was implementing a $4.6 million project to develop iron ore deposits at Hercules (Coahuila), in northern Mexico.

Philippines. Philippine and United States investors and IFC joined to finance the addition of a $68.6 million pulp and paper mill to a Philippine lumber company—making it South-East Asia's first integrated forest products complex. The $2.2 million commitment of IFC included both a firm subscription and a stand-by commitment.

Most of the equity for the Paper Industries Corporation of the Philippines (PICOP) was provided by Philippine investors—60 per cent of it through a public share offering which IFC helped underwrite. In order to accommodate the large number of Philippine investors, IFC made part of its shares available to them.

The project, located on the island of Mindanao, was expected to create some 1,200 new jobs; add annual productive capacity of 150,000 metric tons of newsprint, linerboard and corrugating medium; and result in net foreign exchange savings of $15 million a year.

Republic of Korea. The Private Investment Company of Asia and IFC joined Korean investors to help finance Atlas Paper Company, Limited, a new company that was building an $11 million paper mill near Seoul; the plant was expected to produce 37,000 metric tons of paper a year. The commitment of IFC was $5 million in loan and equity.

The Atlas Paper project was designed as an integrated de-inked pulp and paper mill utilizing waste paper to produce newsprint and writing and printing paper to meet the rapidly growing demand. The project was expected to result in foreign exchange savings to Korea and to create some 280 jobs.

Turkey. Three investments were made by IFC in Turkey during 1970.

More than 1,000 Turkish glass retailers and a Turkish investor group provided the bulk of the share capital for a new glass-making company, Anadolu Cam Sanayii A.S. (ACS). The IFC commitment was $11.6 million in loan and equity. The technical sponsor was a Belgian company, the world's largest producer of drawn flat glass. The ACS project was intended to meet the growing consumption of Turkish flat and container glass, which had more than doubled in the preceding five years. The project would employ more than 1,100 workers and was expected to save and generate approximately $15 million in foreign exchange yearly.

In its second Turkish investment—$8.3 million in loan equity—IFC joined a group of Turkish investors and a United States company to set up an aluminium sheet and foil manufacturing enterprise near Istanbul as a step towards establishing an integrated aluminium industry. Aluminium consumption in Turkey rose to some 32,000 metric tons in 1969, five times its 1964 level.

The new plant was being built by Aluminum Sanayii ve Ticaret A.S. (NASAS) at a cost of approximately $25.4 million. It was scheduled for completion in late 1972.

The third IFC commitment in Turkey was a $750,000 loan to Sentetik Iplik Fabrikalari A.S. (SIFAS), the country's largest nylon producer, to increase the company's spinning capacity by 1,160 metric tons, to 8,560 tons a year. This was IFC's third commitment in less than five years to assist SIFAS, whose multiphase expansion programme was aimed at meeting rapidly growing domestic demand for nylon yarn and generating foreign exchange through sales abroad. Increased output enabled SIFAS to enter the export market for the first time in 1970.

Venezuela. The Corporation made its third commitment, a $5 million loan and a $5 million stand-by loan, to C.A. Venezolana de Desarrollo (Sociedad Financiera)—known as Cavendes—the only private development finance company in Venezuela. The stand-by loan would enable Cavendes to draw on IFC funds should there be a shortfall in a programme to raise long-term funds locally.

Yugoslavia. The Bank made a $10 million loan and IFC committed $8 million in equity to a project to double the production of Yugoslavia's largest and only integrated automobile manufacturer, Zavodi Crvena Zastava (zcz).

The financing by the Bank and its affiliates was part of a $105.8 million programme to increase zcz's output from 96,000 to approximately 193,000 vehicles a year, in the process creating more than 8,000 new jobs.

Funds were also provided by Fiat S.p.A., of Italy, and Yugoslav organizations. The project was a joint venture of Fiat and zcz, which for 15 years had been producing vehicles of Fiat design under a co-operative arrangement with the Italian manufacturer.

Regional. The first commitment of IFC to a privately owned, regional institution was made during the year with a $10 million loan to ADELA Investment Company, S.A., an international company giving financial, technical and promotional aid to private enterprises in Latin America and the Caribbean. Primarily an investor and promoter of new enterprises, ADELA had in the past joined IFC in assisting businesses in Latin America.

The loan to ADELA was intended to increase the amount of long-term capital available for investment and to make IFC funds available to a wider range of enterprises in developing countries.

Other Commitments. During 1970, IFC made seven small commitments, most of them resulting from holdings previously acquired, in Colombia, Greece, Honduras, Thailand and Tunisia. These commitments totalled approximately $1.7 million.

FINANCIAL OPERATIONS

The net income of IFC in 1970 was $6.6 million and, as in previous years, was credited to a reserve against losses. This brought the total reserve against losses to $62.1 million as at 31 December 1970. Total resources available to the Corporation rose to $549.2 million, compared with $512.4 million a year earlier. Uncommitted funds were $81.8 million at the end of 1970, compared with $157.6 million the previous year.

PARTICIPATIONS AND PORTFOLIO SALES

The Corporation sold or agreed to sell $21.6 million of loan and equity commitments in 1970, bringing the total at the end of the year to $118.1 million. In addition, other investors acquired $1.4 million of securities covered by IFC stand-by and underwriting commitments, raising the cumulative total in this respect to $27.5 million.

SECRETARIAT

As at the end of 1970, IFC had a staff of 155. Of these, 89 were in the professional category and 66 in the general and special service staff.

CHAPTER VIII

THE INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION (IDA)

The International Development Association (IDA)<sup>1</sup> was founded in September 1960 as an affiliate of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Its purpose is to promote economic development among those of its members that are developing countries. It does so by providing credits on terms that are more flexible and bear less heavily on the balance of payments of borrowing countries than conventional loans. However, projects are appraised in the same way as projects assisted by conventional loans from the Bank.

The Association's credits to date have been free of interest, bearing only a service charge of  $\frac{3}{4}$  of 1 per cent on funds disbursed. Credits are repayable over 50 years, with an initial grace period of 10 years before repayment begins. The Association lends only to Governments, which may then re-lend the funds on the standard terms for loans in the country concerned. Thus, IDA financing does not subsidize projects as such, or distort the local credit market; rather, by providing funds on concessionary terms, IDA enables Governments to finance their economic development programmes while keeping to a minimum the burden on their balance-of-payments position.

Because of its highly concessionary lending terms, IDA relies primarily on contributions by its richer member countries—together with transfers of funds from the Bank—for its lending resources. The bulk of these resources has been provided by 18 of these countries, referred to under IDA'S Articles of Agreement as "Part I" countries. (See below.) (Other member countries of IDA are referred to as "Part II" countries.)

Periodic replenishments of IDA'S resources have been undertaken by the 18 Part I member countries. During 1970, negotiations were concluded which—subject to parliamentary approval in donor countries—would provide for a third replenishment of IDA'S resources amounting in total to $813 million a year for three years, beginning in 1971. Under the terms of the proposals negotiated for the third replenishment, the 18 high-income Part I countries would make annual contributions to IDA in the amounts shown below:

Country	Amount (in U.S. dollar equivalents)
Australia	16,000,000
Austria	5,440,000
Belgium	13,600,000
Canada	50,000,000
Denmark	8,800,000
Finland	4,080,000

The Bank transferred $100 million out of its net income to IDA in 1970, bringing the total of such transfers to $485 million. Loans to the Association by Switzerland (approximately $30 million) and New Zealand (approximately $5.6 million) were also arranged during the year.

Though a separate financial and legal entity, IDA is closely linked to the Bank in its membership and administration. Each member country of IDA is represented by the same Governor and Executive Director as represents it for the Bank. The two institutions are also served by the same staff.

Membership of IDA is open to all members of the Bank. During 1970, three States joined the Association—Cambodia (22 July) (which on 7 October 1970 changed its name to the Khmer Republic), Southern Yemen (9 October) (which on 30 November 1970 changed its name to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen) and Yemen (22 May)—thus raising IDA membership to 107 countries.

LENDING OPERATIONS

As at 31 December 1970, IDA had made cumulative net commitments totalling $2,886 million, of which $604.81 million was committed in the calendar year 1970. The tables below summarize IDA lending in 1970 by area and purpose:

TRANSPORTATION

Transportation continued to be a key sector of the IDA lending programme. A total of $85.2 million was made available during the year for 12 projects in this sector, chiefly in highway construction and maintenance.

Credits were extended to several land-locked African countries which considered road improvement vital to their commerce: the Central African Republic ($4.3 million), Mali ($7.7 million) and Rwanda ($9.3 million) obtained credits to clear and surface roads. Also, IDA credits for highway extensions and purchase of heavy mechanized equipment were extended to Cameroon ($7 million), the People's Republic of the Congo ($1.5 million), Dahomey ($3.5 million) and Sierra Leone ($3.5 million).

A $9.6 million credit was made to Madagascar to help enlarge the port of Tamatave. Gambia also received $2.1 million for port improvements.

With the collaboration of a United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) technical assistance team, $2.5 million in IDA funds were extended to Nepal to improve roads and to grade and construct bridges.

Australia guaranteed a $4.5 million credit to Papua and New Guinea for a project to extend roads from the sea coast to the central highlands, where over half the territory's population lives.

A $15 million credit was extended to assist the Republic of Korea to expand its railway network.

AGRICULTURE

The importance of agriculture to IDA members was reflected in the fact that nearly half of 1970 lending was provided for projects in this sector. In all, 24 credits totalling $273.18 million were approved for agricultural projects. Special emphasis was placed on irrigation projects and the promotion of cash crops.

The largest loan for irrigation went to India, where $35 million was allocated to the Kadana irrigation project. The United Arab Republic received $26 million to provide saline-free drainage systems that would help to increase the yields of rice, cotton, wheat and maize. Other recipients of credits for irrigation projects were Ceylon ($5.1 million), Indonesia ($33 million), Madagascar ($5 million) and Pakistan ($27 million).

Cash crop credits were extended to India ($62.5 million), Afghanistan ($5 million) and Niger ($584,000). Upper Volta received $6.2 million to increase cotton production.

Ethiopia received a $3.1 million credit for general agricultural development in the Humera region. Ghana received $8.5 million for rehabilitation of its cocoa industry, and Indonesia received $17 million to rehabilitate oil palm and rubber estates. The United Republic of Tanzania received $9 million and Uganda $4 million to increase tobacco production.

Livestock credits went to a number of Latin American nations, including Bolivia ($1.4 million), Ecuador ($11.5 million), Guyana ($2.2 million) and Honduras ($2.6 million).

ELECTRIC POWER

Three countries were recipients of IDA electric power credits totalling $43 million in 1970.

Ceylon was provided with $9.4 million for a 40-megawatt hydroelectric power plant at Polgolla and for high-voltage transmission cables.

The African Development Bank joined IDA for the first time in financing a development project—a $5.25 million IDA credit to Malawi to help provide for the installation of 19 megawatts of new generating capacity and the construction of some 200 miles of transmission lines.

A $23 million credit was extended to Pakistan to help meet the needs of the West Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority for agricultural equipment and distribution facilities.

EDUCATION

Four IDA credits for education, amounting to $21.7 million, went to nations simultaneously facing three related trends: increasing unemployment, a lower median age, and a rising demand for skilled labour.

Indonesia received a $4.6 million credit to be used for the construction of training centres and the training of mechanical, electrical and civil engineers.

Kenya borrowed $6.1 million to upgrade farm skills. Regional agricultural institutes were to be set up in the western part of the country to supplement the work of the faculty of agriculture at the University of Nairobi.

An IDA credit of $8 million was provided to expand engineering schools in Karachi and Lahore, Pakistan. Sierra Leone received a $3 million IDA credit to finance improvements in 11 secondary schools, 2 technical institutes and 2 trade schools.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

In 1970, $27.8 million was committed for telecommunication credits to Pakistan and Indonesia.

Bilateral sources joined IDA in providing foreign exchange credit to improve and expand electronic communication services in Pakistan. The $15 million in IDA funds helped to finance a microwave route from Karachi to Rawalpindi, with spur connexions to other towns, and helped to complete installation of 175,000 telephones.

Indonesia's telecommunication requirements were particularly complex, as they involved linking thousands of islands over an area of 3,000 miles. With the assistance of a technical mission from Australia, a five-year programme was drawn up which called for a microwave system to connect the islands of Sumatra, Borneo and Java. The IDA commitment to the programme was $12.8 million.

INDUSTRY AND INDUSTRIAL IMPORTS

In response to requests by countries wishing to diversify and expand their industrial bases, IDA extended five credits amounting to $133 million to help finance the foreign exchange costs of small industries, development finance companies and industrial banks.

In the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the International Finance Corporation and IDA provided assistance to that nation's new private financing bank, the Société congolaise de financement du développement (SOCOFIDE). The IDA credit of $5 million was to finance the foreign exchange costs for projects sponsored by SOCOFIDE in the manufacturing and processing industries.

A $20 million credit was extended to the Industrial Development Bank of Pakistan. India received $75 million to help pay for industrial imports by firms that build farm equipment, machine tools, electric motors and fertilizers. In Indonesia, a $3.5 million credit was allocated to improve deep-sea fishing facilities, and $30 million in foreign exchange requirements were committed to help construct a fertilizer plant.

PROJECT PREPARATION AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Five credits valued at $10.28 million were extended for project preparation and technical assistance.

Indonesia supplemented technical assistance from UNDP and bilateral sources in using an IDA credit of $4 million to evaluate its programme to intensify rice production, as well as its extensive irrigation works.

In Pakistan, IDA covered the foreign exchange costs of engineering and consulting services in connexion with a project to expand and improve the port of Karachi. The cost of financing engineering services for the Karnaphuli and Muhari irrigation projects in that country was to be assisted by an IDA credit of $2.4 million.

Botswana received $2.5 million to study the infrastructure needs for a mining project, and Burundi obtained $380,000 for highway engineering and maintenance studies.

CHAPTER IX

THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

During 1970, the total of member subscription quotas in the International Monetary Fund<sup>1</sup> increased by $7,084 million (or about 33 per cent) to $28,433 million. This increase, equal to $21 million, resulted partly from the growth in Fund membership but mainly from increases obtained by members under a resolution approved by the Fund's Board of Governors in February 1970, following the general review of quotas carried out in 1969. The increase in the total quotas of members placed the Fund in a better position to meet the needs of its membership for temporary balance-of-payments assistance.

The Fund's Special Drawing Rights became established during 1970 as a new component of international reserves. With the advent of Special Drawing Rights, the Fund was able to supplement the existing reserve assets of participants in its Special Drawing Account.

On 1 January 1970, an initial allocation of Special Drawing Rights (SDR) 3,414 million was made to 104 participants in the Fund's Special Drawing Account. This allocation was based on a rate of 16.8 per cent of each member's quota as at 31 December 1969. By the end of 1970, the number of participants had risen to 110. Preparations were completed to allocate close to SDR 3,000 million on 1 January 1971, at a rate equal to 10.7 per cent of each participating member's quota as at 31 December 1970. Thus the Special Drawing Rights created by the first two allocations of the first basic period totalled about SDR 6.4 million, or approximately 8 per cent of other reserves (gold, foreign exchange and reserve positions in the Fund) of the member countries of the Fund.

During 1970, transactions between Special Drawing Rights participants reached SDR 472 million, out of a gross amount of SDR 857 million used by participants for all purposes (including repurchases by members of their own currency from the Fund's General Account and payment of charges to the Fund). During the year, 56 participants were net users of Special Drawing Rights, 26 increased their holdings above the level of their initial allocation, and 22 neither used nor augmented their holdings.

<sup>1</sup> For further information, particularly about the Fund's functions and organization, and activities prior to 1970, see previous volumes of Y.U.N., annual reports of the Executive Directors, summary proceedings of the annual meetings of the Board of Governors, schedules of par values, and quarterly financial settlements.

In November 1970, the Fund announced that it would stand ready to assist in the financing of the buffer stock to be instituted by participating tin-producing countries under the Fourth International Tin Agreement, which was expected to enter into force on 1 July 1971. This would be the first use of the Fund's buffer stock financing facility, which was established in 1969.

Prominent among the features of the background against which the Fund's activities were conducted was the tendency of world trade to level off in 1970. During the third quarter, estimated world exports reached the equivalent of $268,600 million on an annual basis, and estimated world imports $281,500 million.

During 1970, the membership of the Fund rose to 117, with the admission of Barbados (29 December) and Yemen (22 May).

Total drawings on the Fund reached $22,008.1 million at the end of 1970—the Fund's twenty-fifth year—against $20,168.8 million a year earlier. (These figures included Fund repayments of earlier borrowings under the General Arrangements to Borrow.) Forty-one of the Fund's 117 members made use of Fund resources in 1970. New drawings during the year amounted to $1,839.3 million, compared to repayments by repurchase amounting to $1,393.8 million. (See Tables I, II and III below.)

By areas, nine Latin American countries drew $124.2 million during 1970, while repayments from Latin America (not necessarily from the same drawing countries) totalled $300.8 million. Eleven member countries in Asia and the Middle East drew $156.6 million, while repayments from the same area were $284.2 million. Thirteen African countries drew $45.8 million, and repayments from Africa totalled $76.2 million. Eight industrial and other developed countries drew $1,513 million. Repayments from industrial and other developed countries totalled $732.8 million.

Net drawings—representing the outstanding total of Fund resources in use by members—were $4,914.1 million as at 31 December 1970, down from the year's peak of $5,607.3 million, reached in February.

Amounts available to members under stand-by arrangements as at 31 December 1970 totalled $171.5 million, against $849.2 million the year before, the latter figure reflecting largely the $485 million then available on a $985 million stand-by arrangement approved for France in September 1969. (See table of Fund stand-by arrangements below.)

The largest drawings of the year were $485 million by France in February, $150 million by the United Kingdom in March, $150 million by the United States in May and $133 million by Italy in July.

Members that drew on the Fund's resources during 1970 were: Afghanistan, Burma, Burundi, Ceylon, Chad, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Ghana, Guinea, Honduras, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Laos, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Mali, Morocco, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Peru, the Philippines, South Africa, Swaziland, Syria, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, the United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, the United States, Upper Volta, Uruguay and Yemen.

During 1970, the Fund used 18 member currencies in its support operations, one more than in 1969. The Fund sold in quantity United States dollars, Belgian francs, Deutsche mark, Netherlands guilders, Canadian dollars and Japanese yen.

Fund holdings of gold, currencies and Special Drawing Rights totalled $29,711 million as at 31 December 1970, but holdings of some currencies were considerably below quota levels as a result of Fund transactions. These included: Austrian schillings (11 per cent of quota), Belgian francs (40 per cent), Deutsche mark (43 per cent), Netherlands guilders (42 per cent), Norwegian kroner (51 per cent) and Canadian dollars (51 per cent).

During 1970, the Fund bought $646 million of gold, including $639.75 million from South Africa under the arrangements made at the end of 1969. The Fund sold $920 million of gold during the year to replenish its holdings of members' currencies, bringing the total sold since Fund operations began to $3,516 million.

In September 1970, the Fund reduced by $400 million the $800 million of gold invested in United States Treasury securities. A $330 million repayment made to Italy, in July 1970, reduced to $485 million the Fund's outstanding borrowings under the General Arrangements to Borrow.

Members whose currency held by the Fund averaged less than 75 per cent of their quotas were paid remuneration at a rate of 1.5 per cent on their net creditor positions. The amount paid totalled the equivalent of $27.2 million. The Fund also made a distribution of net income to members, amounting to the equivalent of $17.5 million.

In September 1970, Ecuador joined the 34 other members who had already accepted the obligations of convertibility expressed in article VIII of the Fund's Articles of Agreement. Also in September, initial par values were established for the currencies of China and the Democratic Republic of the Congo, which raised to 83 the number of Fund members with established par values. Changes in the par values of the currencies of Turkey and Ecuador were agreed with the Fund in August.

In May 1970, the Fund was advised by the Canadian authorities that the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar was being allowed to float temporarily, and that the Canadian intention was to remain in close consultation with the Fund with a view to the resumption of an effective par value at the earliest possible date.

The Fund continued its annual round of consultations with individual members on their balance of payments, foreign exchange practices and related problems, and it provided technical assistance for a variety of fiscal, monetary, central banking and statistical problems.

CHAPTER X

THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION (ICAO)

During 1970, total traffic—passengers, cargo and mail—on scheduled domestic and international services of all airlines of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)<sup>1</sup> member States rose to 57,270 million tonne-kilometres, an 11 per cent increase over 1969. The number of passengers carried in 1970 rose to 382 million and the number of passenger kilometres to 466,000 million, respectively 7 and 11 per cent more than in 1969.

At the request of 11 member States, an extraordinary (seventeenth) session of the ICAO Assembly was convened in Montreal, Canada, from 16 to 30 June 1970 to take actions necessary to prevent unlawful interference with international civil aviation.

The Assembly concentrated on three areas: the immediate organization and development of security responsibility and authority for international airports; preventive security measures for use against acts of unlawful seizure of civil aircraft, sabotage and armed attacks against civil aviation and its facilities; and legal measures in the form of international treaties and national legislation to deal with unlawful interference.

During 1970, the membership of ICAO rose to 120 with the adherence of Mauritius (2 March), Southern Yemen (28 February) (which on 30 November 1970 changed its name to the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen), and the USSR (14 November) to the Convention on International Civil Aviation.

AIR NAVIGATION

During 1970, the organization's main efforts in the air navigation field continued to be directed to the implementation and revision of ICAO Specifications (Standards and Recommended Practices in 14 technical Annexes to the Convention on International Civil Aviation and four sets of Procedures for Air Navigation Services) and the ICAO Regional Plans for air navigation facilities and services.

To promote uniform application of the ICAO Specifications, the organization prepared addi-

<sup>1</sup> For further information, particularly about ICAO's functions and organization, and activities prior to 1970, see previous volumes of Y.U.N. tional guidance through the publication of new and revised technical manuals.

The Specifications in eight Annexes and three sets of Procedures for Air Navigation Services were revised; the amendments pertained mainly to the improvement of safety and efficiency in the en route phases of flight.

In implementing Regional Plans, member States were assisted by the ICAO regional offices in Bangkok (Thailand), Cairo (United Arab Republic), Dakar (Senegal), Lima (Peru), Mexico City (Mexico) and Paris (France). In four regions, the work of the regional offices was supplemented by Special Implementation Projects, in which expert advice was provided to States on the installation of new facilities and the operation of existing ones.

The Regional Plan for the ICAO North Atlantic region was completely revised, and for the first time a detailed Regional Plan was established for the North American region.

One divisional and ten technical panel meetings were also held during 1970. The divisional meeting assisted in the resolution of a number of problems in the fields of personnel licensing, aviation training and aviation medicine and recommended a major revision of the Specifications in Annex 1 (on personnel licensing).

In the technical field, special attention was given to the problems of aircraft noise, sonic boom, supersonic operations, all-weather operations, application of space techniques to aviation, aircraft separation, visual aids, rescue and fire fighting, airworthiness of aircraft, obstacle clearance and automated data interchange systems. A study was also continued of the feasibility of applying systems planning to the introduction of new aircraft types.

As a result of the extraordinary session of the ICAO Assembly in June 1970, the organization took a number of measures in the technical field aimed at reducing the number of acts of unlawful interference in the air and improving security at aerodromes.

AIR TRANSPORT

In 1970, the ICAO regional offices were increasingly engaged in air transport activities. Work was undertaken on a number of projects on the work programme of the African Civil Aviation Commission, and preparations were begun for the first plenary session of the organization, scheduled to be held early in 1971. Two major air transport studies were completed during the year—on air freight, for the European-Mediterranean region, and on air freight and air mail, for the African region.

A fifth session of the Statistics Division was held, in 1970, at which a complete review of ICAO'S statistical work programme was undertaken. One of the major recommendations, subsequently approved by the ICAO Council, was to initiate collection of statistics for non-scheduled air transport, supplementing the existing programme of statistics for scheduled airlines.

The Panel on Studies of the Economics of Route Facilities completed its regional studies and undertook a global review based on its work during the preceding two and a half years.

The Panel on Passport Cards held its second meeting, in Paris, and considered a number of details pertaining to the proposed card.

LEGAL MATTERS

The year 1970 saw considerable progress in the acceptance of the Protocol on the Authentic Trilingual Text of the Convention on International Civil Aviation, adopted in September 1968. The parties to the International Air Services Transit Agreement increased by four, and the parties to the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft (Tokyo, 1963) by 16. A diplomatic conference, convened under ICAO auspices at The Hague, Netherlands, adopted the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft.

In two sessions, during 1970, the Legal Committee completed work on: (i) the draft Convention on unlawful seizure of aircraft; (ii) texts prepared for the purpose of revising the Warsaw Convention as Amended by the Protocol of The Hague, 1955; and (iii) the draft Convention on Unlawful Interference against International Civil Aviation.

The Committee began work on subjects covered by two Council resolutions: (i) consultation and joint action by States in certain cases related to unlawful seizure of aircraft; and (ii) a special clause to be incorporated in bilateral air transport agreements with the objective of providing for the enforcement of international legal obligations relating to unlawful interference with international civil aviation.

The extraordinary session of the ICAO Assembly adopted a number of resolutions on the legal aspects of the development of adequate security specifications and practices for application by ICAO States in international civil aviation, aimed at the protection of air passengers, civil aviation personnel and civil aircraft.

By the end of 1970, five conventions on international air law concluded under the auspices of ICAO were in force. They were as follows:

Convention on International Recognition of Rights in Aircraft
(Geneva, June 1948) (total ratifications, 33)

Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface
(Rome, October 1952) (total ratifications, 24)

Protocol to Amend the Convention for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carriage by Air Signed at Warsaw on 12 October 1929
(The Hague, September
1955) (total ratifications, 67)

Convention, Supplementary to the Warsaw Convention, for the Unification of Certain Rules relating to International Carnage by Air
Performed by a Person
Other Than the Contracting Carrier
(Guadalajara, September
1961) (total ratifications, 33)

Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft
(Tokyo, September 1963) (total ratifications, 37)

ASSISTANCE ACTIVITIES

In 1970, ICAO provided assistance to a total of 83 States; in 29 of these, it had resident missions of one or more experts.

The total commitments incurred under the Technical Assistance component of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) were the equivalent of US$3,635,659—65 per cent on country programmes and 35 per cent on regional and inter-regional projects. The percentage distribution by project components of the total commitments incurred was approximately as follows: experts, 74 per cent; fellowships and scholarships, 24 per cent; and equipment and miscellaneous, 2 per cent.

Under the Special Fund component of UNDP, six new projects were formally approved by the UNDP Governing Council during the year; these involved a total UNDP earmarking of US$5,205,900 against an estimated Governments' counterpart contribution equivalent to US$6,158,000.

The organization also continued to assist projects in Afghanistan (extension of air services to remote areas), Chile (development of installations and services for civil aviation), the Democratic Republic of the Congo (civil aviation training institute), East Africa (school of aviation), Iraq (air navigation facilities at the new Baghdad International Airport), Lebanon (civil aviation safety centre) and Nigeria (civil aviation training centre).

During 1970, expert services and equipment to the value of US$618,242 were provided under funds-in-trust arrangements to Argentina, Iran, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia and Tunisia. Under the Congo Central Trust Fund agreement, ICAO supplied to the Democratic Republic of the Congo 84 man-months of expert services.

Under an agreement between the Government of Sweden and ICAO, 11 associate experts were assigned to projects and missions in Afghanistan, Nigeria and Tunisia, and one to an inter-regional project.

The joint ICAO/Fund for the Development of West Irian Air Communications project was in full operation during the year, and the required four international experts were on duty. The ICAO-assisted Merpati Nusantara Airline expanded its operation and preparations were made for aerodrome construction projects.

Two hundred and seventeen experts from 39 countries were employed by ICAO during all or part of the year 1970 on technical assistance projects: 89 on assignments under the Technical Assistance component of UNDP; 79 under the Special Fund component; 14 under the Congo (Democratic Republic) Central Trust Fund Agreement; 27 under other funds-in-trust arrangements; 14 under the Associate Experts programme; and 5 under the Fund for the Development of West Irian. Five of the experts listed above were on operational assistance (OPAS) appointments.

In 1970, 107 fellowships and 227 scholarships were awarded by ICAO under UNDP and Fund for the Development of West Irian programmes.

All the scholarships were for training at ICAO-sponsored training centres.

SECRETARIAT

As at 31 December 1970, the total number of established posts in the ICAO secretariat was 607. Of these, 228 were in the professional and higher categories and 379 in the general service category. There were also 217 persons in the professional category employed by ICAO on UNDP projects in the field in 1970.

BUDGET

The appropriations voted by the ICAO Assembly for the 1970 financial year totalled $8,251,354. Modifications were approved by the ICAO

Council and the adjustments made are reflected below:

THE UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION (UPU)

The Universal Postal Union (UPU),* established at Berne, Switzerland, in 1874, is one of the oldest inter-governmental organizations. Its aim is to promote the organization and improvement of postal services and to further the development of international collaboration in this sphere. It also participates, as far as possible, in various forms of postal technical assistance which might be requested by its member States.

<sup>1</sup> For further information about UPU, see L'Union postale universelle: sa fondation et son développement, 1874-1949—memoire (Berne, Bureau international de l'Union, 1950), annual reports of UPU and previous volumes of Y.U.N.

In 1970, the membership of UPU rose to 143 with the admission of Equatorial Guinea on 24 July.

ACTIVITIES OF UPU ORGANS

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

The UPU Executive Council is responsible for continuing the work of the Union during the five-year interval between meetings of the UPU Congress. During its annual session, held in Berne from 13 to 21 May 1970, the Council examined administrative matters as well as various questions which had been referred to it by the sixteenth Universal Postal Congress, held in Tokyo, Japan, in 1969. The Council also approved the Union's budget for 1970, calling for net expenditures of 7,644,000 Swiss francs (about US$1,770,000), and for 1971, with net expenditures of 7,762,000 Swiss francs (about US$1,797,000).

Among the questions examined by the Executive Council were: the various forms of technical assistance provided to the developing countries, including, in particular, vocational training; international postal co-operation; the finances of the Union; relations with the United Nations and other international organizations; re-examination of transit and mail conveyance charges; simplification of pricing and of general conditions of admission of letter-post items; simplification of customs processing of mail; postal relations in cases of dispute, conflict or war; modernization and simplification of book-post; maximal use of air means for mail conveyance; and the celebration of UPU Day on 9 October 1974, during the centenary of the Union.

CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL FOR POSTAL STUDIES

The Consultative Council for Postal Studies, created by the sixteenth UPU Congress to replace the Management Council of the Consultative Committee for Postal Studies, is composed of 30 member States. It is responsible for organizing the study of technical, operational, economic and technical co-operation problems which are of interest to the Postal Administrations of member States, in particular of the new and the developing countries.

The annual session of the Council took place at Berne from 8 to 14 October 1970. Among the questions considered by the Council were: a proposed study of the postal market; a review of basic rates of air transport; the study of the organization of postal services in developing countries and the means by which these countries could ensure an efficient postal service; the development of postal services in industrialized countries over the next two decades; the development of human resources (particularly the training of postal personnel); and the role of savings and financial services in economic and social development.

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU

The International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union serves the Postal Administrations of UPU member countries as an organ for liaison, information and consultation. It collects, collates, publishes and distributes information of every kind relating to the international postal service. It also conducts inquiries requested by Postal Administrations and acts as a clearing-house in the settlement of certain accounts between Postal Administrations.

TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING

The technical co-operation provided by UPU continued to expand during 1970. Multilateral aid was provided under the Technical Assistance and Special Fund components of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). The UPU Special Fund, established in 1967 and maintained by voluntary contributions in cash and in kind from UPU member States, continued to make a large contribution, especially in the area of instruction, and the Postal Administrations granted extensive bilateral assistance.

About 50 national and regional projects were undertaken during 1970 under the Technical Assistance component of UNDP; seven projects were administered under the Special Fund component, two of them in co-operation with the International Telecommunication Union. Under these projects, some 120 scholarships were granted for study in the areas of postal organization, advanced vocational training, training of postal instructors and inspectors, organization and management of postal cheque services, study of vending machines, and mechanization and automation of postal services.

Four seminars on postal services were organized during the year in Africa, Asia and Latin America. They dealt with the following topics: information and planning in the postal field; study of operational problems; planning of postal development; and management and use of postal personnel. The meetings were attended by 75 senior officials of various nationalities.

The projects carried out under the UNDP Special Fund component were principally devoted to the creation or reorganization of national and regional vocational training centres. One project was aimed at the establishment of a postal savings fund and the extension of postal services.

Twenty-seven experts were involved in these projects, in all fields of postal services.

Several countries received aid in the form of equipment grants, expert services, acceptance of trainees (for vocational and advanced training) and advice. There was also an increasing exchange between Postal Administrations of experience on various questions.

Within the framework of the UPU Special Fund, a programme was set up in 1970 with the aid of voluntary contributions amounting to about 300,000 Swiss francs (about US$75,000). With the agreement of the Executive Council of UPU, the International Bureau granted 21 teacher training scholarships and two expert scholarships, as well as more than 60,000 Swiss francs (about US$15,000) to 16 countries for the acquisition of training equipment.

As in previous years, UPU organized courses for the training of postal instructors. In 1970, two courses were held in London, United Kingdom, and one in Paris, France.

Also, UPU provided the services of its experts in development, who were sent on brief missions to countries in Asia, Africa and Latin America to help resolve problems of postal organization and training.

SECRETARIAT

As at 31 December 1970, the total number of permanent and temporary staff members employed at the International Bureau of UPU was 106, of whom 54 were in the professional and higher categories and 52 in the general service category.

Because the only official language of UPU is French, various Translation Units have been set up under the aegis of the International Bureau, with expenses shared jointly by the English (52 member States), Arabic (18 member States) and Spanish (20 member States) language groups. As at 31 December 1970, their staffs comprised a total of 13 officials. Their estimated budget expenditures for 1970 amounted to 931,500 Swiss francs (about US$232,877).

BUDGET

The expenditures of the Universal Postal Union are borne in common by all members. For this purpose, member countries are divided into seven classes. (See Annex below for listing of class to which each country belongs.) The expenditures for 1970 were apportioned among the various classes as follows:

		ASSESSMENTS FOR 1970

CHAPTER XII

THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION (ITU)

In 1970, the membership of the International Telecommunication Union (ITU)<sup>1</sup> rose to 139 with the admission of Equatorial Guinea on 2 July and Swaziland on 11 November.

ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL

The twenty-fifth session of the Administrative Council of ITU was held from 23 May to 12 June 1970 at ITU headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. In addition to dealing with administrative matters, the Council decided that the World Administrative Radio Conference for Space Communications would be held in Geneva from 7 June to 16 July 1971 and that the next Plenipotentiary Conference of ITU would be held in Geneva in September 1973.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEES

Study groups of the two ITU international consultative committees—the International Radio Consultative Committee (CCIR) and the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (CCITT)—held numerous meetings during the year.

The International Radio Consultative Committee held its twelfth plenary assembly in New Delhi, India, from 21 January to 11 February 1970.

PLAN COMMITTEES

Four regional Plan Committees of ITU, covering the different areas of the world, were responsible for preparing plans setting out circuit and routing requirements for international telecommunications and for estimating the growth of international traffic. They also played an active part in the work of the World Plan Committee, which was concerned with inter-regional relations.

During 1970, the Regional Plan Committee for Asia and Oceania met in Teheran, Iran, from 20 to 30 April, and the Regional Plan Committee for Europe and the Mediterranean Basin met in Warsaw, Poland, from 14 to 23 September.

INTERNATIONAL FREQUENCY REGISTRATION BOARD

Throughout 1970, the International Frequency Registration Board (IFRB) continued its work of keeping up to date the Master International Frequency Register, showing the frequencies assigned by countries to their radio stations. It also continued to prepare the seasonal high-frequency broadcasting schedules and monthly summaries of monitoring information.

A seminar on frequency management and the use of the radio-frequency spectrum was held in September 1970.

TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION

In 1970, under ITU'S various programmes of technical co-operation in developing countries, 241 experts were on field missions, 395 fellows were undergoing training abroad and equipment valued at US$780,187 was delivered, mainly to telecommunication training centres. The total cost of this assistance amounted to US$6,050,198.

The three main objectives of ITU'S activity in the field of technical co-operation continued to be: (a) promoting the development of regional telecommunication networks in Africa, Asia and Latin America; (b) strengthening the telecommunication technical and administrative services in developing countries; and (c) developing the human resources required for telecommunications.

Further efforts were made by ITU to develop a form of concerted action with regard to the planned integration of telecommunication networks in Africa, Asia and Latin America into a world-wide telecommunication system, in accordance with the objectives established by the World and Regional Plan Committees. To this end, ITU collaborated with the United Nations regional economic commissions, regional telecommunication organizations, banks and the Governments concerned in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

A plan of operation for feasibility studies for the Asian telecommunication network was signed in Bangkok, Thailand, in April 1970, by the Governments of 12 countries.

Approximately 53 per cent of the Union's field experts were directly engaged in the training of telecommunication personnel in developing countries as organizers, advisers, lecturers or instructors. Most of the other experts also gave on-the-job training to national counterparts while carrying out their other duties. Approximately 20 per cent of the fellows studying abroad received training in subjects directly connected with the development of human resources; 85 per cent of the equipment purchased by the Union was to be used exclusively for training purposes.

The expenses incurred in connexion with the training of telecommunication staff in 1970 represented approximately two-thirds of the total cost of ITU field programmes.

Considerable assistance was also provided by ITU in the specialized fields of telephony, telegraphy, radiocommunications, frequency management, satellite communications, planning, organization, administration and management. The increasing interest of developing countries in satellite communications was reflected in the assigning of an expert to this field.

As at 31 December 1970, 462 officials were employed by ITU on a permanent or fixed-term basis; 150 posts, filled through international recruitment, were occupied by officials from 41 countries. Of the secretariat manning-table posts, 9 were elected posts, 164 were in the professional or higher levels, and 298 were in the general service category.

CHAPTER XIII

THE WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION (WMO)

During 1970, the Bahamas, which had previously participated in the activities of the World Meteorological Organization (wMo)<sup>1</sup> as a part of the British Caribbean Territories, became a separate member territory, bringing total membership of the organization to 133: 122 member States and 11 member territories.

The Executive Committee of WMO held its twenty-second session in Geneva, Switzerland, from 8 to 16 October 1970. It reviewed the state of implementation of the World Weather Watch (www) programme and of projects being carried out under the Voluntary Assistance Programme, which was established by the fifth World Meteorological Congress in 1967 to provide assistance to member countries at their request.

Special attention was paid by the Executive Committee to WMO participation in ocean affairs and to the continuation of its work in various aspects of the environmental problem.

The fifteenth WMO Prize was awarded posthumously to R. T. A. Scherhag of the Federal Republic of Germany for his work in meteorology and international collaboration.

Three regional associations met during the year: the fifth session of the South American regional association was held at Bogota, Colombia, in May; the fifth session of the Asian regional association met at Tokyo, Japan, in July; and the fifth session of the South-West Pacific regional association convened at Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, in August.

Specialized technical problems were discussed at two sessions of technical commissions: the fifth session of the Commission for Synoptic Meteorology (Geneva, in June-July) and the fifth session of the Commission for Atmospheric Sciences (Washington, D. C., in August).

Other meetings held by WMO during 1970 included four sessions of panels of experts established by the Executive Committee in the following fields: meteorological education and training, meteorological aspects of air pollution, the International Hydrological Decade, and meteorological aspects of ocean affairs.

WORLD WEATHER WATCH (WWW)

In 1970, WMO continued the implementation of the World Weather Watch (www)<sup>2</sup> plan which had been approved by the fifth World Meteorological Congress in 1967 and further defined by subsequent sessions of the Executive Committee, technical commissions, and regional associations of WMO. Agreement on certain technical details of www was reached at a number of meetings convened during 1970.

Under the www programme, each member State was to be responsible for all meteorological activity within its territory. Where necessary, and as requested, assistance was to be provided by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), by bilateral and multilateral arrangements, and by the WMO Voluntary Assistance Programme. In addition to supporting www, the various assistance programmes resulted in a number of projects which were implemented in 1970.

RESEARCH PROGRAMME

The main research effort of WMO, collaboration with the International Council of Scientific Unions, continued to be centred on the Global Atmospheric Research Programme (GARP). The aim of GARP was to investigate the scientific problems standing in the way of a fuller understanding of the atmosphere's structure and behaviour.

The programme, a world-wide scientific effort involving both theoretical research and complex field experiments, was aimed at developing and testing the fundamental physical and mathematical bases of long-range weather prediction. The first major experiment under the programme was to be organized, probably dur-

PROGRAMME ON THE INTERACTION OF MAN AND HIS ENVIRONMENT

A WMO programme on the interaction of man and his environment sought to apply meteorological knowledge to human activities. The programme covered such fields as agricultural meteorology; aeronautical meteorology; maritime meteorology and other oceanographic matters; human biometeorology; water resources; atmospheric pollution; and meteorological factors involved in industry and recreation.

In the field of agricultural meteorology, WMO continued to carry out a programme in agricultural biometeorology, in co-operation with UNDP, the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the World Health Organization (WHO). Agroclimatological surveys were planned in various areas and related projects, including technical conferences, were being developed.

Through the Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology, acting in co-operation with expert bodies of the International Civil Aviation Organization, universal regulations were brought up to date in respect of the supply of weather information for new classes of aircraft operations (in particular, supersonic transport) and for planning purposes.

Recognizing the interdependence of physical processes in the ocean and atmosphere, WMO took an active part in a number of international ocean research projects and in the planning and implementation of programmes for the acquisition of meteorological and oceanographic data. Fields of interest common to other international organizations and WMO, such as the Integrated Global Ocean Station System, ocean atmosphere interaction, ocean circulation and pollution studies, and legal aspects relating to scientific investigations of the ocean, were co-ordinated through joint working groups and mutual representation at meetings. Through its Executive Committee Panel on Meteorological Aspects of Ocean Affairs and its Advisory Committee on Oceanic Meteorological Research, WMO maintained close contact with other organizations in the planning and implementation of research programmes.

In collaboration with the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, and the International Atomic Energy Agency, WMO sponsored a Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution which, among other things, advised the sponsoring organizations and considered the development of programmes on oceanographic research aspects of marine pollution, including the monitoring aspects.

In the area of water resources development, WMO continued its close collaboration with the United Nations and interested specialized agencies. It participated in the International Hydrological Decade and in the priority programme in water resources within the United Nations Development Decade. The operational aspect of the collection and processing of data related to the land phase of the hydrological cycle was a particular concern of WMO.

The consequences of continued pollution of the atmosphere had long been recognized by WMO, which actively encouraged studies of the meteorological aspects of air pollution. In July 1970, as a result of these studies, a global network of stations to measure "background" air pollution was established; by the end of 1970, it was operating with the participation of 11 countries. The network was designed to reveal long-term changes in atmospheric composition due to regional land-use practices.

In addition, the organization encouraged the establishment of a few special stations ("baseline air pollution stations"). These stations were located away from major population centres and were intended to document long-term changes in atmospheric parameters of particular significance to weather and climate.

TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION

Technical assistance was provided by WMO to developing countries under UNDP and WMO'S own assistance programme, principally the Voluntary Assistance Programme.

In 1970, WMO provided technical assistance to 87 countries under the Technical Assistance component of UNDP and funds-in-trust arrangements. Sixty-three experts served in 42 countries and territories, and 150 students from 62 countries and territories received training under fellowships. Approximately $1.5 million was spent on field projects in 1970.

Of the 63 expert missions, 15 were devoted to meteorological training and 14 were for the development of meteorological services; the remaining 34 missions were in agrometeorology, aeronautical meteorology, meteorological telecommunications, meteorological instruments, hydrometeorology and other special fields. Twelve of these missions involved the provision of operational experts.

Under the Special Fund component of UNDP, implementation began of projects to develop and improve the meteorological and hydrological services in Bolivia and to establish a hydrometeorological institute for training and research in Algeria. A project to expand and improve the Cuban Meteorological Service was to become operational early in 1971.

The execution of the following projects continued: the improvement, expansion and development of meteorological, hydrometeorological and hydrological services in Afghanistan, Brazil, Colombia, Mongolia and the Caribbean and Central American regions; the establishment of training and research institutions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the Philippines and the United Arab Republic; the development of flood forecasting and warning systems in China and on the Niger River in Guinea and Mali; and the conducting of a hydrometeorological survey of the catchments of Lakes Victoria, Kioga and Albert.

Sixty-six experts participated in the above projects and 60 students studied under fellowships. The total expenditure for projects under the Special Fund component of UNDP in 1970 was $3.2 million.

Under the Voluntary Assistance Programme in implementation of the World Weather Watch, 94 projects were implemented, ten of which were completed during the year. These projects included the provision of equipment and supplies and long-term fellowships for the training of meteorological personnel.

Under WMO programmes, 66 students had long-term fellowships in 1970. These fellowships, of up to five years' duration, were for studies leading to university degrees with specialization in meteorology.

SECRETARIAT

As at 31 December 1970, the total number of full-time staff (excluding those on technical assistance projects) employed by WMO under permanent, fixed-term and short-term appointments stood at 267. Of these, 108 were in professional and higher categories and 159 were in the general service category. In addition, about 101 persons in the professional category were employed on technical assistance projects in the field.

BUDGET

The year 1970 was the third year of WMO's fifth financial period (1 January 1968-31 December 1971). The fifth World Meteorological Congress (1967) set a maximum expenditure of $11,817,000 for this four-year period; it also authorized the WMO Executive Committee to incur additional expenditure resulting from any increases in secretariat staff salaries due to comparable changes in United Nations salaries and allowances, if such increases could not be met by economies within the approved budget.

For 1970, the Executive Committee at its twenty-first session (June 1969) approved a budget of $3,418,216. In addition, the 1970 budget for technical co-operation activities, financed entirely from allocations from UNDP and other budgetary sources, amounted to $640,200.

For 1971, the twenty-second session of the Executive Committee (October 1970) approved a budget of $3,605,577.

CHAPTER XIV

THE INTER-GOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE ORGANIZATION (IMCO)

The Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO)<sup>1</sup> was established to facilitate co-operation and exchange of information among Governments on all technical matters affecting shipping and to achieve the highest practicable standards of maritime safety and efficient navigation, with special responsibility for safety of life at sea.

During 1970, membership of the agency rose to 72, as Barbados (7 January), Hungary (10 June) and Libya (16 February) became members.

The organization was the depositary authority for the following international conventions, most of them the result of conferences called by IMCO as a natural corollary of its statutory functions:

International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1948;

International Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, 1960;

International Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil, 1954, as amended in 1962;

Convention on Facilitation of International Maritime Traffic, 1965;

International Convention on Load Lines, 1966;

International Convention on Tonnage Measurement of Ships, 1969;

International Convention relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties, 1969; International Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage, 1969.

ACTIVITIES IN 1970

SAFETY OF NAVIGATION

Under an IMCO recommendation, navigational equipment such as radar, echo-sounders, the gyro-compass and direction-finders—which previously had been carried at the discretion of the ship's owner or master—was made mandatory on ships above a certain size. The requirement was an outcome of IMCO'S emergency programme resulting from the stranding of the tanker Torrey Canyon in March 1970. An attempt was also made to establish an international set of performance specifications and testing procedures for radar, gyro-compasses and echo-sounding devices.

Traffic separation schemes had been established in some 50 areas where there was heavy sea traffic. Detailed descriptions of the schemes were included in the appropriate national nautical publications and charts, and IMCO issued a comprehensive booklet on the subject. The schemes were kept continuously under review and updated as necessary.

In addition, IMCO made a number of recommendations to Governments concerning the provision of pilotage and port advisory services, electronic position-fixing equipment and identification lights for deep-draught ships in narrow channels.

Work was proceeding on the revision of the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea. A conference on this subject was scheduled for 1972. The possible use of space techniques for position determination and other purposes related to safety was also being studied.

As part of the United Nations programme on the exploration and exploitation of the world's oceans, IMCO studied various safety aspects of the operation of scientific stations—Ocean Data Acquisition Systems (ODAS)—in the marine environment. Provisional recommendations were approved covering marking, lighting and signals for these stations, their use as aids to navigation, and the provision of safety equipment on board manned units; these recommendations were eventually to be incorporated into a convention on the legal status of ODAS.

RADIO-COMMUNICATIONS

A wide range of operational techniques designed to improve the existing Maritime Distress Systems was being studied by IMCO. The use of space communication techniques for shipping was also being considered, and a list of operational requirements was drawn up and sent to Governments in preparation for the Conference on Space which was to be convened under the auspices of the International Telecommunication Union. On this project, IMCO was co-operating with the International Civil Aviation Organization and the United Nations.

Performance standards and test procedures for shipboard radio equipment were being prepared so as to ensure a measure of standardization in the event of a change of flag.

The radio-communication needs of newer types of craft, such as hydrofoil boats and air-cushion vehicles, were being considered, and recommendations were made concerning the radio-communication needs of mobile drilling units.

LIFE-SAVING APPLIANCES

Standards had been developed for the testing and approval of life-jackets, requirements concerning life-saving appliances for air-cushion vehicles and for mobile off-shore units engaged in the exploration and exploitation of underwater resources.

MERCHANT SHIP SEARCH AND RESCUE MANUAL

The Merchant Ship Search and Rescue Manual (MERSAR) was prepared as a guide for masters and others involved in distress incidents at sea. It contained specific instructions on the actions to be taken by the vessel in distress and by those participating or assisting in the search, as well as general guidelines on the organization and conduct of search and rescue operations.

STABILITY AND SUBDIVISION

The organization continued to study ship stability with a view to developing improved stability criteria. Particular attention was being paid to the effect of external forces on stability; in this connexion, wave and wind data were being collected by a group of naval architects and wave research specialists from various international organizations.

SAFETY OF FISHERMEN AND FISHING VESSELS

A recommendation on the construction of fishing vessels affecting the vessels' stability and crew safety—broadly following the constructional requirements of the 1966 Load Lines Convention—was being drawn up.

Together with the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) and the International Labour Organisation (ILO), IMCO was preparing a Code of Safety for Fishermen and Fishing Vessels. The first part, on the safety and health practices of skippers and crews, was approved by the governing bodies of the three agencies concerned; the second part, on safety and health requirements for the construction and equipment of fishing vessels, was being drawn up.

SHIP DESIGN AND EQUIPMENT

As part of a series of measures to prevent oil pollution of the sea, studies on the construction and equipment of tankers were continued with a view to limiting the risk of collisions or stranding and to avoiding or limiting the escape of oil when accidents occurred.

BULK CARRIAGE OF CHEMICALS

The rapid increase in the sea transportation of hazardous or noxious chemicals in bulk pointed up the need for international measures to ensure their safe carriage. An interim recommendation concerning the design and equipment of existing ships of the tanker type carrying liquid dangerous chemicals in bulk was adopted, and a more comprehensive code for new ships was being prepared.

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS

A further development of IMCO'S work concerning the carriage of dangerous goods by sea was the commencement of studies, in collaboration with ILO and the International Cargo Handling Co-ordination Association, on a possible future international convention on the handling of dangerous goods in ports, along lines similar to the International Maritime Dangerous Goods Code.

CONTAINERS AND THEIR CARRIAGE BY SEA

The question of the safety aspects of container traffic, originally raised by IMCO in 1968, continued to be given careful study. Various proposals were set forth which were eventually to form part of a convention on container traffic, to be considered at a joint IMCO/United Nations conference scheduled for 1972.

MARINE POLLUTION

Together with FAO, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Meteorological Organization, and the International Atomic Energy Agency, IMCO was a sponsoring agency of the Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution, which considered various scientific matters upon which the sponsoring agencies required expert advice regarding pollution of the marine environment.

The organization was represented at meetings of the United Nations Committee on the Peaceful Uses of the Sea-Bed and the Ocean Floor beyond the Limits of National Jurisdiction, and was actively participating in preparations for the International Conference on the Human Environment, scheduled to be held in Sweden in 1972.

TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION

Provision of experts by IMCO to developing countries greatly increased during 1970, as did the organization's fellowship programme and sponsorship of training centres.

SECRETARIAT

As at the end of 1970, the IMCO secretariat consisted of the Secretary-General, the Deputy Secretary-General, the Secretary of the Maritime Safety Committee, 37 members in the professional category and 73 in the general service category.

BUDGET

In October 1969, the sixth IMCO Assembly voted a budget of $2,706,994 for the two-year period 1970-1971.

CHAPTER XV

THE INTERIM COMMISSION FOR THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION (ICITO) AND THE GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE (GATT)

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, held at Havana, Cuba, between November 1947 and March 1948, drew up a Charter, known as the Havana Charter, for an International Trade Organization (iTo)<sup>1</sup> and established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (ICITO). As a result of the lack of acceptances of the Havana Charter, it became evident by the end of 1950 that the attempt to establish the International Trade Organization would be postponed indefinitely.

While the Charter for ITO was in the course of preparation, the members of the Preparatory Committee decided to proceed with tariff negotiations among themselves and also drew up the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). The Agreement—a multilateral treaty embodying reciprocal rights and obligations—entered into force on 1 January 1948, there being then 23 Contracting Parties to GATT.

During 1970, Mauritius (23 December) and the United Arab Republic (22 April) acceded to GATT, bringing the total number of Contracting Parties to 78. The Contracting Parties to GATT were estimated to carry on well over four fifths of all international trade. Fifteen other countries that did not have full Contracting Party arrangements were also participating in the work of GATT.

The twenty-sixth regular session of the Contracting Parties, held from 16 to 27 February 1970, provided the occasion for a general review of progress under the GATT programme of work established in 1967. At the end of the session, the Contracting Parties adopted Conclusions by which they agreed that with regard to both industrial and agricultural products work should move rapidly from the stage of study and identification of problems to that of a search for mutually acceptable solutions, with particular reference to the needs of developing countries. This search relating to both tariff and non-tariff barriers, undertaken without commitment as regards actual further negotiations, formed the main part of GATT's regular work during 1970.

The Council of Representatives held six meetings during the year and dealt with a wide range of problems, a number of which had been placed before it for urgent consideration and action. The more important of these are referred to below.

PROGRAMME OF WORK

At their twenty-fourth session, in November 1967, the Contracting Parties established a programme of work looking towards the further expansion of trade. The programme called for a co-ordinated move forward under three main headings: industrial products, agriculture, and the trade of the developing countries. A Committee on Trade in Industrial Products, an Agriculture Committee, and a Committee on Trade and Development were set up to consider these respective aspects of the programme.

With regard to industrial products, the programme required: (a) an analysis of the tariff situation as it would be when all Kennedy Round (1964-1967) concessions had been fully implemented;<sup>2</sup> and (b) an inventory and analysis of non-tariff and para-tariff barriers affecting international trade, and a search for a suitable base for solutions to the special problems of the developing world.

In connexion with agriculture, the programme called for the Agriculture Committee to explore possibilities for making progress in the attainment of the objectives of the General Agreement in the agricultural field. The programme also called for immediate discussions in urgent cases where widespread difficulties affecting world trade were recognized to exist.

With regard to the trade of developing countries, the programme called for action on a number of fronts, including possible advance implementation of the Kennedy Round reductions, examination of problems affecting trade in tropical products, the early removal of import restrictions on industrial products of particular interest to developing countries, and trade negotiations between developing countries.

TRADE IN INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTS

In the field of non-tariff barriers, work in 1968 and 1969 resulted in the establishment of an inventory of some 800 barriers to trade notified by Governments as being applied by other countries. These barriers were divided into five main categories: Government participation in trade; customs and administrative entry procedures; standards involving imports and domestic goods; specific limitations on imports and exports; and restraints on imports and exports through price mechanisms. In 1969, a selected "illustrative list" was established for further examination.

In fulfilment of the mandate given by the Contracting Parties, this examination, aimed at exploring possibilities for concrete action to reduce or remove such barriers to trade, was carried forward and largely completed during 1970. Five working groups, corresponding to the categories established above, held a series of meetings during 1970. At the end of the year they reported on the types of solutions envisaged in each case. These included, according to the case, improvement of specific GATT rules, re-interpretation of these rules, introduction of new codes of conduct, bilateral negotiation, and unilateral action. The recommendations were to be forwarded by the Committee on Trade in Industrial Products to the Council of Representatives early in 1971.

The Committee was also expected to make recommendations for the next stage of work on the tariff study. This study, an essential counterpart to the action on non-tariff barriers, involved the recording on computer tape of the post-Kennedy Round (i.e. post-January 1972) tariffs of the principal developed countries, and of trade data corresponding to the various tariff items shown, in order to provide a "contour map" of the tariffs of the principal world trading countries. During 1970, the first tabulations from these data were prepared; they described the tariff situation by areas and sectors of trade, by principal industrial categories, and in terms of differentials between tariffs on raw materials and finished products. It was agreed to set up a working party to carry out the analysis on the basis of the tabulations and certain additional material.

TRADE IN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Work in 1970 in the agricultural field paralleled that for industrial products. Four working groups studied the principal problems of international trade in agricultural products, including imports, exports and production, with a view to finding mutually acceptable solutions. They reported to the Agriculture Committee, which in turn prepared and forwarded a report to be discussed by the Council of Representatives early in 1971.

On 14 May 1970, a GATT arrangement to regulate trade in certain dairy products entered into force. The agreement applied initially to skim-milk powder, with other products to be added later.

TRADE OF DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

The Committee on Trade and Development continued during 1970 to be responsible for ensuring that priority attention was given to trade problems of developing countries, in accordance with Part IV of the General Agreement and the expressed intention of the Contracting Parties. Improved arrangements for consultations in respect of instances of non-compliance with provisions of Part IV were agreed upon. The Committee continued to stress the interest and concern of developing countries in other areas of GATT'S operations, in particular, tariff and non-tariff barriers, the removal of import restrictions and trade in tropical products.

As regarded preferences by developed for developing countries, for which a scheme was worked out by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (see pp. 387-89) during 1970, the Contracting Parties reaffirmed at their 1970 session their readiness to take appropriate action to accommodate the scheme within the rules of GATT. It was expected that such action would be discussed and that the necessary waiver or waivers would be given in the course of the first half of 1971.

During the final months of 1970, intensive discussions, including the exchange of request and offer lists, took place among about 20 developing countries, including both members and non-members of GATT. A further intensive phase of negotiations was scheduled for the spring of 1971.

IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

During 1970, a thorough examination was carried out of all quantitative import restrictions maintained by developed countries. For this purpose, a Joint Working Group on Quantitative Import Restrictions was constituted, composed of the members of the Industrial Products, Agriculture, and Trade and Development Committees. This was the first such systematic examination of the nature and justification of all import restrictions whether or not authorized under GATT. The Group was to report to the Council of Representatives early in 1971.

As usual, regular consultations were held in 1970 with countries maintaining such restrictions for balance-of-payments purposes. Schemes for import deposits or import surcharges maintained by a number of countries were also kept under consideration. The import deposit scheme introduced by the United Kingdom in 1968 was terminated in December 1970.

TAX ADJUSTMENTS

An exhaustive study of tax adjustments applied to goods entering into international trade was made by the GATT Working Party on Border Tax Adjustments from 1968 to 1970. The Working Party's report was adopted by the Council in December 1970. It was agreed that GATT countries would in future keep one another informed of major changes in their tax adjustment legislation and practices involving international trade, and would hold consultations on these changes if requested. The notification procedure was introduced on a provisional basis.

TRADE IN COTTON TEXTILES

The Arrangement regarding International Trade in Cotton Textiles, negotiated in 1962 and extended in 1967, was renewed in 1970 for a further three years, to 30 September 1973. The Cotton Textiles Committee agreed to undertake discussions on the state of international trade in cotton textiles and the longer-term development of such trade beyond 1973.

ASSOCIATION AGREEMENTS OF THE EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

A number of association trade agreements between the European Economic Community (EEC) and certain African and Mediterranean countries were discussed during 1970 in the GATT Council of Representatives and in working parties set up for the purpose. The agreements were notified as being in conformity with article XXIV of GATT, which covered customs unions and free trade areas.

No agreed conclusions were reached, in the working parties or in the GATT Council, on either the "Yaounde II" Agreement between EEC and 18 African and Malagasy States or the EEC association agreements with Tunisia and Morocco.

Working parties were set up during 1970 to examine the EEC agreements with Israel, with Spain, and with Kenya, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania (the Arusha Agreement).

WAIVERS FROM GATT OBLIGATIONS

During 1970, a working party examined a request by the Government of Greece for a waiver of its obligations under article I of GATT to permit it to offer, in accordance with a Protocol signed in 1969, special tariff treatment for a period of two years to imports of certain products from the USSR. The working party did not recommend the grant of a waiver; its report was adopted in December 1970 by the GATT Council of Representatives.

During 1970, the Council was informed that EEC had abolished its system of preferences for citrus fruits from Israel and Spain.

ANTI-DUMPING CODE

The Anti-dumping Committee, composed of the signatories of the Anti-dumping Code concluded in 1967, continued to meet yearly to consult on the administration of anti-dumping systems. A working party on the acceptance of the Anti-dumping Code was also set up in 1970 to examine the special problems of developing countries with regard to the acceptance of the Code and any proposals and suggestions for a solution to these problems. In 1970, GATT published Anti-dumping Legislation.

CONFERENCE ON EFFECTIVE PROTECTION

A Conference on Effective Protection was held in December 1970. Economists who attended the Conference, sponsored jointly by GATT and the Graduate Institute of International Studies, Geneva, Switzerland, studied the practical and theoretical implications of the concept that the tariffs on intermediate products, as well as those on final products, should be considered in assessing the protective effect of a country's tariff structure.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

In 1970, as in previous years, two five-month courses on international trade and commercial policy were held at GATT headquarters in Geneva. The officials from developing countries who attended held fellowships under the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). Since 1955, 30 such courses had been held, in which more than 300 officials from some 70 countries participated.

In collaboration with the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa, courses on commercial policy and foreign trade were also held in 1970 in Lome, Togo, and Monrovia, Liberia.

MEMBERSHIP

The provisional accession of Tunisia was extended for a further year, to 31 December 1971.

Further meetings were held of the working party created to examine Romania's request for accession. The working party on the accession of Hungary held its first meeting in December 1970. The working party on the accession of Colombia, appointed in January 1969, had not met by the end of 1970.

An application for accession was received from the Democratic Republic of the Congo. A working party to examine this application was appointed by the GATT Council in May.

PUBLICATIONS

In 1970, the GATT secretariat published Basic Instruments and Selected Documents, Seventeenth Supplement; International Trade, 1969; Activities of GATT 1969/1970; Analytical Index to the General Agreement, Third Revision; and Anti-dumping Legislation.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE CENTRE

The International Trade Centre was established by GATT in 1964 to give direct help to developing countries in promoting their exports. In 1967, GATT and UNCTAD decided to pool their resources and activities in this field, and on 1 January 1968 the joint UNCTAD/GATT International Trade Centre came into operation.

The Centre was administered jointly by GATT and UNCTAD, which provided it with policy guidance and regularly reviewed its programme of activities.

The aim of the Centre was to assist developing countries in promoting their export trade by: providing them with information on export markets and marketing; assisting them to develop their export promotion and marketing organizations and services; and helping them to train specialized personnel required for these services.

In 1970, GATT financed more than half of the Centre and also provided it with considerable supporting services. The budget of the Centre for its regular work programme in 1971 was set at $1,390,800, of which the GATT share was to be $688,400, with an additional $200,000 in supporting services. As at 31 December 1970, the personnel establishment of the Centre consisted of 64 posts: 32 in the professional and higher categories and 32 in the general service category.

(For a more detailed account of the work of the International Trade Centre in 1970, see pp. 396-98.)

SECRETARIAT

As at 31 December 1970, the GATT secretariat employed 199 full-time staff members. Of these, 87 were in the professional and higher categories and 112 in the general service category.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

Governments parties to GATT participate financially in accordance with a scale of contributions assessed on the basis of the country's share in the total trade of the Contracting Parties and associated Governments. The scale of contributions for 1971 is given in ANNEX I below.

The GATT budget for 1970 was $3,678,000; for 1971, it was set at $4,024,000 (including GATT's share of $688,400 in the regular budget of the UNCTAD/GATT International Trade Centre and its supporting services to the Centre, valued at approximately $200,000).

<sup>1</sup> In a letter dated 20 January 1965, Indonesia informed the Secretary-General that it had decided "at this stage and under the present circumstances" to withdraw from the United Nations. In a telegram dated 19 September 1966, Indonesia notified the Secretary-General of its decision "to resume full co-operation with the United Nations and to resume participation in its activities starting with the twenty-first session of the General Assembly." On 28 September 1966, the General Assembly took note of the decision of the Government of Indonesia and the President invited the representatives of that country to take their seats in the Assembly.

APPENDIX II

THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE STATUTE OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

NOTE: The Charter of the United Nations was signed on 26 June 1945, in San Francisco, at the conclusion of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, and came into force on 24 October 1945. The Statute of the International Court of Justice is an integral part of the Charter.

Amendments to Articles 23, 27 and 61 of the Charter were adopted by the General Assembly on 17 December 1963 and came into force on 31 August 1965. The amendment to Article 109, adopted by the General Assembly on 20 December 1965, came into force on 12 June 1968.

The amendment to Article 23 enlarges the membership of the Security Council from 11 to 15. The amended Article 27 provides that decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) and on all other matters by an affirmative vote of nine members (formerly seven) including the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

The amendment to Article 61 enlarges the membership of the Economic and Social Council from 18 to 27.

The amendment to Article 109, which relates to the first paragraph of that Article, provides that a General Conference of Member States for the purpose of reviewing the Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any nine members (formerly seven) of the Security Council. Paragraph 3 of Article 109, which deals with the consideration of a possible review conference during the tenth regular session of the General Assembly, has been retained in its original form in its reference to a "vote of any seven members of the Security Council," the paragraph having been acted upon in 1955 by the General Assembly, at its tenth regular session, and by the Security Council.

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

to practise tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

CHAPTER I PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;

2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and

4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

4. ## THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Article 86 of the United Nations Charter lays down that the Trusteeship Council shall consist of:

Members of the United Nations administering Trust Territories
Permanent members of the Security Council which do not administer Trust Territories
As many other members elected for a three-year term by the General Assembly as will ensure that the membership of the Council is equally divided between United Nations Members which administer Trust Territories and those which do not.*

* There were no elected members of the Trusteeship Council in 1970. New Zealand ceased to be a member of the Trusteeship Council upon the accession of Nauru to independence on 31 January 1968 and the United Kingdom changed its status from that of an administering member to that of a non-administering member. The remaining two members administering territories (Australia and the United States) thus became a minority on the Council. China, France, USSR and the United Kingdom continued as members of the Trusteeship Council, in accordance with Article 86 b of the Charter; thus the parity called for in that Article between administering and non-administering powers could no longer be maintained.
