

YEAR

BOOK

OF THE

UNITED NATIONS

19

52

UNITED NATIONS · NEW YORK

YEARBOOK
OF THE
UNITED NATIONS

1952

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INFORMATION
UNITED NATIONS, NEW YORK

First Printing: September 1953

UNITED NATIONS PUBLICATIONS

SALES NO.: 1953. 1. 30

Printed in the United States of America

FOREWORD

This, the sixth Yearbook of the United Nations, presents the record of the Organization for 1952, following the conclusion of the General Assembly's sixth session in February.

The volume contains an account of the many and varied activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies during 1952, together with documentary references for those who would study the matter further. It is hoped that it may prove a useful work of reference for all who take an interest in international affairs.

Throughout the year the United Nations pursued its efforts over the very wide field which its activities cover.

In the political sphere the negotiations for a just and honourable peace in Korea attracted special attention. The General Assembly in December, by an overwhelming majority, put forward proposals as a basis for a cease-fire agreement. Meanwhile the collective action against aggression was continued.

In the economic field perhaps the most noteworthy development was shown by the technical assistance activities. The Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance for under-developed countries made further progress. This important joint endeavour of the United Nations and several of its related specialized agencies could register increased support in all countries.

In these and many other ways the United Nations pursued its work of reconciliation and constructive assistance in order to fulfill its task as an instrument for the Member Governments in their efforts to further the causes of peace and freedom. The period reviewed in this Yearbook is not one of spectacular achievements, but the main front-line has been defended and progress has been made on many points of significance.

DAG HAMMARSKJÖLD
Secretary-General

CONTENTS

Part One: The United Nations

	Page
Historical Introduction	1
Text of the Charter of the United Nations and Statute of the International Court of Justice	10
I. Structure and Organization of the United Nations
A. FUNCTIONS AND MEMBERSHIP OF THE PRINCIPAL AND SUBSIDIARY ORGANS	29
B. SESSIONS AND OFFICERS OF THE PRINCIPAL ORGANS AND MEETINGS OF SUBSIDIARY BODIES	51
C. MATTERS CONSIDERED BY THE PRINCIPAL ORGANS DURING 1952	54
D. CONSTITUTIONAL AND ORGANIZATIONAL QUESTIONS	67
E. ADMINISTRATIVE ARRANGEMENTS	90
F. BUDGETARY ARRANGEMENTS	106
G. HEADQUARTERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS	127
H. UNITED NATIONS POSTAL ADMINISTRATION	129
ANNEX I. REPRESENTATIVES SERVING ON PRINCIPAL AND SUBSIDIARY ORGANS DURING 1952	131
ANNEX II. CHANGES IN RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE PRINCIPAL ORGANS	146
ANNEX III. STATES ACCEPTING THE COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE	150
ANNEX IV. ORGANIZATIONS AUTHORIZED TO REQUEST ADVISORY OPINIONS FROM THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE	150
ANNEX V. PRINCIPAL MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS SECRETARIAT	151
II. Political and Security Questions
A. THE QUESTION OF KOREA	155
ANNEX I. OFFERS OF MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO THE UNIFIED COMMAND FOR KOREA	214
ANNEX II. STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT OFFERS AND CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THE RELIEF AND REHABILITATION OF KOREA	216

	Page
ANNEX III. SUMMARY OF ASSISTANCE FOR THE KOREAN EMERGENCY RELIEF PROGRAMME	218
B. THE INDIA-PAKISTAN QUESTION	232
C. THE PALESTINE QUESTION	241
D. THE QUESTION OF ERITREA	262
E. THE TUNISIAN QUESTION	266
F. THE QUESTION OF MOROCCO	278
G. REPATRIATION OF GREEK CHILDREN	285
H. WORK OF THE BALKAN SUB-COMMISSION OF THE PEACE OBSERVATION COMMISSION	291
I. TREATMENT OF PEOPLE OF INDIAN ORIGIN IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA	291
J. THE QUESTION OF RACE CONFLICT IN SOUTH AFRICA	297
K. THE QUESTION OF AN AUSTRIAN PEACE TREATY τ	306
L. THE QUESTION OF HOLDING FREE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY	311
M. DISARMAMENT	312
N. THE QUESTION OF AN APPEAL TO STATES TO ACCEDE TO AND RATIFY THE GENEVA PROTOCOL OF 1925 FOR THE PROHIBITION OF THE USE OF BACTERIAL WARFARE	323
O. BACTERIAL WARFARE	327
P. REPORT OF THE COLLECTIVE MEASURES COMMITTEE	331
Q. ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS	332
R. OTHER MATTERS PLACED ON THE AGENDA OF THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY BUT NOT CONSIDERED DURING 1952	345
S. MATTERS BROUGHT TO THE ATTENTION OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL BUT NOT DISCUSSED	346

III. Economic and Social Questions

A. WORLD ECONOMIC SITUATION	348
B. ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDER-DEVELOPED AREAS	353
C. FULL EMPLOYMENT	393
D. WORLD FOOD SUPPLES	404
E. SHORTAGE OF INSECTICIDES	408
F. PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF NEWSPRINT	409
G. TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS	410
H. FISCAL QUESTIONS	412

	Page
I. STATISTICAL ACTIVITIES	414
J. ACTIVITIES OF THE REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS	416
K. HUMAN RIGHTS	439
L. FREEDOM OF INFORMATION	459
M. STATUS OF WOMEN	479
N. REFUGEES AND STATELESS PERSONS	491
O. SOCIAL WELFARE	502
P. UNITED NATIONS INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND (UNICEF)	516
Q. NARCOTIC DRUGS	523
R. POPULATION AND MIGRATION QUESTIONS	530
S. TEACHING ABOUT THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE SPECIALIZED AGENCIES	535
T. QUESTIONS OF CO-ORDINATION AND RELATIONS WITH SPECIALIZED AGENCIES	537
U. RELATIONS WITH NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS	548
V. IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS ON ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL MATTERS	556

IV. Questions Concerning Non-Self-Governing Territories and the International Trusteeship System

A. INFORMATION ON NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES TRANSMITTED UNDER ARTICLE 73e OF THE CHARTER	558
B. THE QUESTION OF SOUTH WEST AFRICA	583
C. CONDITIONS IN TRUST TERRITORIES IN THE PACIFIC	586
D. CONDITIONS IN TRUST TERRITORIES IN EAST AFRICA	609
E. CONDITIONS IN TRUST TERRITORIES IN WEST AFRICA	665
F. GENERAL DISCUSSION OF CONDITIONS IN TRUST TERRITORIES	726
G. PARTICIPATION OF THE INDIGENOUS INHABITANTS OF THE TRUST TER- RITORIES IN THE GOVERNMENT OF THOSE TERRITORIES AND IN THE WORK OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL	729
H. ADMINISTRATIVE UNIONS AFFECTING TRUST TERRITORIES	733
I. RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT IN TRUST TERRITORIES	743
J. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT IN TRUST TERRITORIES	743
K. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT IN TRUST TERRITORIES	745
L. DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON THE UNITED NATIONS AND ON THE INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM IN TRUST TERRITORIES	748

	Page
ANNEX PETITIONS DEALT WITH BY THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL DURING 1952	748

V. Legal Questions

A. THE ANGLO-IRANIAN OIL COMPANY CASE	759
B. THE AMBATIELOS CASE	769
C. CASE CONCERNING RIGHTS OF NATIONALS OF THE UNITED STATES IN MOROCCO (FRANCE vs. UNITED STATES)	776
D. THE QUESTION OF DEFINING AGGRESSION	784
E. THE INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION	791
F. WAYS AND MEANS FOR MAKING THE EVIDENCE OF CUSTOMARY INTER- NATIONAL LAW MORE READILY AVAILABLE	797
G. QUESTION OF THE CODIFICATION OF "DIPLOMATIC INTERCOURSE AND IMMUNITIES" BY THE INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION	800
H. INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION	803
I. QUESTION OF THE REVISION OF THE CHINESE TEXT OF THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION	807
J. USE OF THE CITATION "DIED FOR THE UNITED NATIONS"	810
K. STATUS OF CLAIMS FOR INJURIES INCURRED IN THE SERVICE OF THE UNITED NATIONS	813
L. PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF THE UNITED NATIONS	815
M. MULTILATERAL CONVENTIONS	816
N. REGISTRATION AND PUBLICATION OF TREATIES AND INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS	817
O. PROCEEDINGS IN NATIONAL COURTS	817

Part Two: The Specialized Agencies

A. THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION (ILO)	819
B. THE FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO).	830
C. THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO)	838
D. THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION (ICAO)	849
E. THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT (BANK)	858
F. THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND (FUND)	867
G. THE WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO)	874

	Page
H. THE UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION (UPU)	887
I. THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION (ITU)	893
J. THE WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION (WMO)	901
K. THE INTER-GOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE ORGANIZATION (IMCO)	911
L. THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION (ITO)	912

★ ★ ★

INFORMATION CENTRES OF THE UNITED NATIONS	917
ROSTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS	918
ADDRESSES OF DELEGATIONS AND MISSIONS	922
LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS	923
INDEX	924
SALES AGENTS OF THE UNITED NATIONS	end of volume

List of Illustrations and Charts

FLAGS OF UNITED NATIONS MEMBERS	Frontispiece
ORGANS OF THE UNITED NATIONS	27
STRUCTURE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY	28
STRUCTURE OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL	35
STRUCTURE OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL	37
STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM	41
STRUCTURE OF THE SECRETARIAT	44
MAP: MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS, THEIR DEPENDENCIES AND TRUST TERRITORIES	facing page 150
MAP OF KOREA	213
MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND SPECIALIZED AGENCIES	920

NOTE ON DOCUMENTATION

Resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council are referred to in this Yearbook by their official numbers. The number of the session at which the resolution was adopted appears in parenthesis: thus, the General Assembly's resolution 609 (VII) is its 609th, adopted at its seventh session; the Economic and Social Council's resolution 416 (XIV) is its 416th, adopted at its fourteenth session; and the Trusteeship Council's resolution 463 (XI) is its 463rd, adopted at its eleventh session. The context indicates which organ is referred to. In the case of the Security Council, the document citation of the original mimeographed resolution is given. These resolutions are, in general, reproduced in printed form in the Official Records; they are also collected in single mimeographed documents: S/INF/7 covers resolutions adopted during 1952. In the case of the International Court of Justice, the official citations are given for documents cited.

In the case of other documents, such as reports and draft resolutions, the original citation is given. The basic symbol forms are as follows: General Assembly, A/-; Security Council, S/-; Economic and Social Council, E/-; Trusteeship Council, T/-. In many instances, these documents appear as supplements to the Official Records. As far as discussions are concerned, it has been thought sufficient to specify the meetings at which the discussions took place, which correspond to the numbers of the verbatim or summary records concerned.

The Official Records of the various organs of the United Nations are available for consultation at United Nations depository libraries throughout the world and may be obtained from authorized agents for United Nations publications. In addition to the Official Records, the United Nations publishes a number of studies, reports and periodicals in many fields, including economics, finance, statistics, social welfare, human rights, demography and international law. Reference is made in the text of this Yearbook to a number of these studies and reports issued during 1952. A list of United Nations Sales Agents appears at the end of this volume and a list of abbreviations precedes the index.

Part One: The United Nations

Historical Introduction

The United Nations came into being on 24 October 1945, when its Charter, drawn up and signed at the United Nations Conference on International Organization, held at San Francisco from 25 April to 26 June 1945, had been ratified by China, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and a majority of other signatory States. The General Assembly, in resolution 168(II) of 31 October 1947, decided that 24 October should thereafter be celebrated annually as United Nations Day.

The following were among the principal steps leading to the establishment of the United Nations:

Declaration by United Nations, signed on 1 January 1942, by which 26 nations subscribed to the purposes and principles of the Atlantic Charter and undertook to co-operate in winning the war. The Declaration was later signed by other countries.

Declaration of Four Nations on General Security (Moscow Declaration), issued on 30 October 1943, under which China, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States recognized the necessity for establishing, as soon as possible, a general international organization based on the sovereign equality of all peace-loving States and open to all such States, to maintain international peace and security.

Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, issued on 9 October 1944, following informal conversations (1) between representatives of the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States (21 August to 28 September) and (2) between representatives of China, the United Kingdom and the United States (29 September to 7 October). The proposals provided a blueprint for the projected organization.

Crimea (Yalta) Conference, held from 4 to 11 February 1945, at which the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States agreed to call a conference of the United Nations to draft a Charter on the basis of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, and also agreed on a formula for voting in the Security Council (an item outstanding from the Dumbarton Oaks Conversations). The decision to call the conference was made known in the Crimea Communique, issued on 7 February. The proposed voting formula was included in the texts of invitations to the conference, sent on 5 March to those countries which had declared war on Germany or Japan and had signed the Declaration by United Nations.

Committee of Jurists, meeting in Washington from 9 to 20 April 1945; jurists from 44 countries prepared a draft Statute for the International Court of Justice.

United Nations Conference on International Organization (San Francisco Conference), held from 25

April to 26 June 1945, at which representatives of 50 countries—on the basis of the Dumbarton Oaks Proposals, the draft Statute for the International Court of Justice and numerous amendments and proposals by individual governments—drew up and, on 26 June 1945, signed the Charter of the United Nations.

Preparatory Commission, consisting of one representative of each nation represented at San Francisco, which met on 27 June in San Francisco and from 24 November to 23 December in London, and its Executive Committee of fourteen members, which met from 6 August to 24 November in London, made recommendations for the organization of the United Nations and provisional arrangements for the first meeting of its principal organs.

The first session of the General Assembly opened on 10 January 1946. By the end of 1951, six regular annual sessions (of which the first and third had been divided into two parts) and two special sessions, both dealing with the question of Palestine, had been held. The sixth regular session, which opened on 6 November in Paris, was still in progress at the beginning of 1952.

The Security Council held its first meeting on 17 January 1946. Thereafter, it was in continuous session, its 569th meeting (the last in 1951) being held on 19 December.

The first session of the Economic and Social Council opened on 23 January 1946; by the end of 1951 the Council had held thirteen regular sessions.

The first session of the Trusteeship Council opened on 26 March 1947; by the end of 1951 the Council had held nine regular sessions and four special sessions.

The inaugural meeting of the International Court of Justice was held on 18 April 1946; thereafter, the Court held sittings to conduct its internal business and when called upon to decide a case or render an advisory opinion.

During this period, various subsidiary organs had been created, chiefly by the General Assembly and by the Economic and Social Council, and eleven intergovernmental organizations had been brought into formal relationship with the United Nations as specialized agencies. One of these, the International Refugee Organization, ceased operations at the beginning of 1952.

¹For a detailed account of the origin and evolution of the United Nations, see Y.U.N. 1946-47, pp. 1-50; for accounts of its subsequent activities see Y.U.N. 1946-47; 1947-48; 1948-49; 1950, 1951.

By the end of 1951 there were 60 United Nations Members. The Secretariat numbered 3,385 regular staff members. It was drawn from 61 States, 55 of them Members of the United Nations.

The site for the permanent United Nations Headquarters in New York City was chosen on 16 December 1946. Excavating work was begun on 14 September 1948 and the foundation stone of the Secretariat building, the first building to be erected, was laid by Mr. Lie, Secretary-General, in the presence of the representatives of all the Member Governments at a special meeting of the General Assembly on 24 October 1949, which was addressed by the President of the United States. The building was financed by means of an interest-free loan from the United States Government. The first offices of the new Headquarters Building were occupied on 21 August 1950.

During its first six years the United Nations dealt with a wide variety of international problems in the political, economic, social and legal fields, as well as questions affecting the development of non-self-governing peoples.

In its role of maintaining international peace and security, the Organization, either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council, considered questions concerning: the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Iran; the withdrawal of British and French troops from Syria and Lebanon; the relations of Members of the United Nations with Spain; the situation in Greece and the Balkans (1) arising from the presence of British troops in Greece, (2) resulting from policies of the Greek Government alleged to be a threat to the peace, (3) resulting from aid allegedly provided to the Greek guerrillas by the States to the north of Greece, and (4) resulting from the detention of Greek children abroad; the situation in Indonesia (1) resulting from alleged military action against the local population by British and Japanese troops, and (2) resulting from the hostilities between the Netherlands and the Republic of Indonesia; the question of the treatment of persons of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa; the government of the Free Territory of Trieste; the responsibility for damage to British war vessels and death of British sailors caused by mines in the Corfu Channel; the future government of Palestine and the maintenance of peace and security in that area; the maintenance of British troops in Egypt and British policy in the Sudan; the independence of Korea, the breach of the peace caused by the invasion by North Korean forces of the Republic of Korea, Korean reconstruction and relief, the intervention of the People's Republic of China in Korea and the complaint of the armed invasion of Taiwan; the dispute concerning the accession to India or to Pakistan of the State of Jammu and Kashmir; the events preceding the change of government in Czechoslovakia in February 1948; measures taken to prevent Russian wives of foreign nationals leaving the USSR; observance of the human rights clauses in the peace treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania; the occupation of Hyderabad by Indian troops; the restrictions on transport and communications between the Western zones of Germany and Berlin; the question of holding free elections in Germany; alleged threats to the political independence and territorial integrity of China; and the representation of China in the United Nations.

In certain of these cases United Nations action was confined to discussions in the Assembly or the Security Council and to the making of recommendations; in other instances, commissions of inquiry or conciliation were established or a mediator designated. In the case of Korea, collective military measures were, for the first time, taken by an international organization to deal with a breach of the peace.

In the case of Palestine, for example, the General Assembly voted a partition plan on 29 November 1947, on the basis of a report by a special committee sent to the area. When hostilities broke out between the Arab States and the newly proclaimed State of Israel, it appointed, in May 1948, a United Nations Mediator to use his good offices to promote a peaceful settlement of the situation. The Mediator, Count Folke Bernadotte, backed by the Security Council, was successful in securing a truce, and he continued his mediation efforts until his assassination in September 1948, when the work was carried on by Ralph J. Bunche. As a result of the mediation efforts, armistice agreements were signed in the spring and summer of 1949 by Israel with Egypt, Lebanon, Jordan and Syria. Israel became a Member of the United Nations on 11 May 1949. During 1950 and 1951, the Security Council considered complaints of violations of the armistice agreements. To provide assistance to Palestine refugees, the General Assembly established in November 1948 the United Nations Relief for Palestine Refugees, and in December 1949 it set up the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, which was to be concerned with reintegration as well as with relief projects.

In Indonesia a Committee of Good Offices (later called the United Nations Commission for Indonesia) secured the agreement of the Netherlands and the Republic of Indonesia to a cease fire and a truce. When fighting broke out again between the two parties, the Commission, with the support of the Security Council, obtained an agreement on measures to halt military operations and guerrilla warfare, on the release of political prisoners and on the calling of a round table conference at The Hague to devise means for the transfer of sovereignty from the Netherlands to the Republic of the United States of Indonesia. The Round Table Conference, at which the United Nations Commission for Indonesia assisted, took place from 23 August to 2 November 1949 and resulted in the transfer of sovereignty to the Republic of the United States of Indonesia on 27 December 1949. Indonesia became a Member of the United Nations on 28 September 1950.

In the case of Greece the General Assembly set up a United Nations Special Committee to assist Greece, Albania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia in establishing friendly relations and to observe their compliance with the Assembly's recommendations, which included an injunction that Albania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia should cease aiding the guerrillas in fighting against the Greek Government. It called for the return to Greece of Greek children abroad when the children or their nearest relative requested it. After receiving reports that the children had not been repatriated, the Assembly in 1950 set up a standing committee to consult with the representatives of the States concerned.

A United Nations Commission of inquiry and mediation was set up to assist the solution of the India-Pakistan dispute concerning Jammu and Kashmir. It succeeded in securing acceptance of a cease-fire line and of certain basic principles for holding a plebiscite to decide whether Kashmir should accede to India or to Pakistan, but was unable to obtain agreement on the necessary measures to precede the plebiscite, such as troop withdrawal. In 1950, a United Nations Representative was appointed to take over the Commission's duties; he was not able, however, to secure agreement to a demilitarization programme.

Another representative appointed by the Security Council in April 1951, reported, in October, that general agreement on a number of points had been reached by the two Governments and, in December, reported that the differences had been narrowed down to two principal points—the size of the forces on each side of the cease-fire line and the date of induction into office of the plebiscite administrator.

A United Nations Temporary Commission observed the 1948 elections in South Korea (the only part of Korea open to it), after which a United Nations Commission was set up to observe and verify the withdrawal of the occupying forces and to lend its good offices to bring about the unification of the country.

After considering the Commission's report, the General Assembly declared that there had been established a lawful government (the Government of the Republic of Korea), having effective control and jurisdiction over that part of Korea where the Temporary Commission was able to observe and consult and in which the majority of Koreans resided; that this Government was based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate in that part of Korea; and that it was the only such government in Korea.

An attack by North Korean forces on the Republic of Korea on 25 June 1950 was called to the attention of the Security Council by the United States representative, and was reported on the same day by the United Nations Commission on Korea. The Security Council met immediately and, deciding that a breach of the peace had occurred, called for a cessation of hostilities and the withdrawal of the invading forces. It asked Members to assist the United Nations in executing the resolutions and to refrain from assisting the North Korean authorities. Two days later, noting that its previous recommendation had not been carried out, the Council recommended that the Members of the United Nations furnish to the Republic of Korea the assistance necessary to repel the armed attack and restore peace in the area. On 7 July, the Security Council authorized the formation of a Unified Command under the United States and recommended that all Members providing military forces and other assistance under its previous recommendations make them available to this Command.

By the end of 1951 a total of 52 Members of the United Nations had given their moral support to the Council's resolutions of 25 and 27 June. Seventeen countries, including the United States and the Republic of Korea, were providing forces, five other countries were providing medical units and 36 Member and three non-member countries were providing economic assistance. Most of the forces and other assistance were provided by the United States. A large part of the forces was being furnished by the Republic of Korea itself.

The Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, however, stated that the Council's resolutions were illegal, since they had been adopted without the vote of the USSR and with the vote of the Republic of China, who, they said, had no right to represent China. The USSR took the position that the events in Korea were the result of a planned and unprovoked attack by South Korean forces on the frontier areas of North Korea, and that the United States had resorted to open, armed intervention in Korea before the convening of the Security Council.

The General Assembly in 1950 set up a United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea to assist in taking steps to ensure conditions of stability throughout the country and for the establishment of a unified, independent and democratic government in Korea. The Assembly stated that United Nations forces should not remain in any part of Korea for any purpose other than to achieve these objectives. It also outlined a general policy for the relief and rehabilitation of Korea and established a United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency to undertake relief and reconstruction operations after the period of military activity. Meanwhile, relief activities were being carried on under the Unified Command. Following reports of the intervention of Chinese Communist military units in the fighting, while enforcement measures continued, the Assembly, in December 1950, asked its President to form a group, to consist of himself and two other persons chosen by him, to try to arrange for a cease fire, so as to prevent the conflict from spreading.

On 13 January 1951 proposals by this group, approved by the Assembly's First Committee, were transmitted to the Peiping Government. These proposals provided for: (1) the arrangement of a cease fire with adequate safeguards; (2) consideration of further steps for the restoration of peace; (3) withdrawal of all non-Korean armed forces and arrangements for the Korean people to express their own will in respect of their future government; (4) pending this, the making of interim arrangements for the administration of Korea and the maintenance of peace and security there; and (5) the setting up of an appropriate body, including representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States, the USSR and the People's Republic of China, to achieve a settlement of Far Eastern problems, including those of Formosa and the representation of China in the United Nations.

On the failure of the Peiping Government to accept the proposals, the Assembly, on 1 February 1951, adopted a resolution finding the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China guilty of aggression and called upon it to withdraw its forces from Korea. It requested a committee composed of members of the Collective Measures Committee to consider additional measures to meet this aggression unless a Good Offices Committee, created by it to negotiate, reported satisfactory progress. On 18 May the Assembly, on the report of the Additional Measures Committee, recommended the application of an embargo on the shipment of strategic materials to the People's Republic of China and areas under its control.

By the middle of 1951, United Nations forces had succeeded in throwing back the invading forces across the 38th parallel. Following a radio address by the Soviet representative to the United Nations on 23 June 1951, in which he stated that, as a first step to solve the conflict in Korea, discussions for a cease fire and an armistice should be begun, negotiations were started in Korea towards that end. By the end of 1951 agreement had been reached on almost all points except on arrangements relating to prisoners of war. The North Korean authorities and the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China insisted on unconditional repatriation of all prisoners, while the United Nations stood for the principle of non-forcible repatriation.

The questions of the Free Territory of Trieste and of the former Italian colonies were referred to the United Nations under the terms of the peace treaty with Italy. The Security Council accepted responsibility for guaranteeing the independence and integrity of Trieste. The General Assembly decided that Libya should be free and independent as soon as possible, and in any case not later than 1 January 1952, and appointed a United Nations Commissioner to assist the Libyan people in formulating a constitution and establishing an independent government. It recommended measures for the transfer of powers to an independent Libyan Government by the end of 1951, and adopted provisions concerning the economic and financial arrangements necessitated by the transfer. On 24 December 1951, power was formally transferred to an independent United Kingdom of Libya which became a federation under the monarchy of King Mohammed Idris El Senussi. The General Assembly approved, on 2 December 1950, an Agreement placing the Trust Territory of Somaliland under Italian administration for ten years, after which it is to be independent. It decided that Eritrea should be an autonomous unit federated with Ethiopia.

Persistent efforts were also made to reach agreement on the international control of atomic energy to ensure its use for peaceful purposes only and on the regulation of conventional armaments and of armed forces. It proved impossible, however, during the first five years of the United Nations, to secure agreement between the position of the majority of Members, who supported the plan adopted by the Atomic Energy Commission on the basis of the United States (Baruch) proposals, and the USSR position. The proposals of the Atomic Energy Commission, which were approved by the Assembly in 1948 as constituting the necessary basis for establishing an effective system of control, provided that international control of atomic energy should precede the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and that ownership and operation of atomic energy production facilities should be vested in an international control agency not subject to a "veto" in the Security Council. The basic USSR position was that conventions for the unconditional prohibition of atomic weapons and for the international control of atomic energy should come into force simultaneously and the production facilities should remain in national hands, but subject to international inspection by an agency operating within the framework of the Security Council.

At the Assembly's sixth session in 1951, agreement was, however, reached among the major Powers that a single Disarmament Commission be established to deal with the whole question of the regulation and reduction of all armed forces and all armaments, including atomic. The Commission was established on 11 January 1952 and was directed to prepare proposals to be embodied in a draft treaty or treaties for: (1) the regulation, limitation and balanced reduction of all armed forces and armaments; (2) elimination of all major weapons adaptable to mass destruction; and (3) effective international control of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only. Principles were laid down for its guidance.

Various proposals were made from time to time and steps were taken to strengthen the United Nations machinery for maintaining world peace. The Secretary-General in 1950 put forward a Twenty-Year Programme for achieving World Peace through the United Nations and discussed this with the heads of Governments in France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States. The Secretary-General's memorandum was submitted to the fifth session of the General Assembly, which commended him for his initiative and asked the appropriate United Nations organs to consider those portions of it with which they were particularly concerned.

The Assembly, in a resolution entitled "Uniting for peace", adopted on 3 November 1950, decided that if the Security Council, because of lack of unanimity of its permanent members, failed to exercise its primary responsibility for maintaining world peace in any case where there appeared to be a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression, the Assembly was to consider the matter immediately with a view to making to Members appropriate recommendations for collective measures. The Assembly also established a Peace Observation Commission to observe and report on areas where international tension exists, and it recommended that Member States include within their armed forces elements trained, organized and equipped for service as United Nations units. A Collective Measures Committee was established to advise Members in this regard and to report on measures which might be used to strengthen international peace and security. The USSR and certain other Members, although not objecting to the creation of a Peace Observation Commission, maintained that the resolution as a whole was unconstitutional and that it was tantamount to a revision of the Charter.

The work of the United Nations for economic and social progress covered a wide area. The activities of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary bodies included, for example, work relating to economic development and full employment, transport and communications, fiscal and statistical questions, population and migration problems, social welfare questions, human rights and freedom of information, refugees, child welfare, the status of women and narcotic drugs. In the beginning the United Nations was mainly concerned with urgent post-war problems; for instance, the need for reconstruction of the devastated areas, the world shortage of food, the question of refugees and the special needs of the children of countries which had been the victims of aggression. Later, as the economy of the devastated countries began to recover, attention was increasingly directed toward the needs of the less developed countries. Technical assistance was given to such countries by the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the course of their regular programmes. In December 1948 the General Assembly voted a special fund for this purpose, and in 1949 agreed that these technical assistance activities should be expanded and funds provided in the regular budget on a continuous basis.

In 1949, the Expanded Programme of technical assistance for economic development of under-developed countries was adopted by the Economic and Social Council and approved by the General Assembly. This programme provides for joint participation of the United Nations and some of the specialized agencies in rendering technical assistance, for a special fund to finance the programme to be made up of voluntary governmental contributions, and for special machinery to administer the Programme.

As a result of the first United Nations Technical Assistance Conference held in June 1950, a total of 54 Governments pledged over $20 million to finance the Programme during its first eighteen months. As these funds became available, the Programme came into operation toward the end of the year.

During 1951 the study of methods to finance economic development progressed. Detailed recommendations were made to both the capital exporting countries and those seeking to attract capital, and consideration was given to the possible establishment of an international finance corporation and of a special fund to finance basic non-self-liquidating projects in under-developed countries. Various other aspects of economic development were also studied, such as land reform and the utilization and conservation of the non-agricultural resources of the world. Problems of economic development were also increasingly emphasized in the work of the regional economic commissions for Europe, for Asia and the Far East, and for Latin America.

Other economic questions considered by the United Nations included: international and national measures to promote and maintain full employment, on which detailed recommendations were made on the basis of a report of a committee of experts; measures to develop world trade, resulting in the holding of multilateral tariff negotiations; the development of transport, including steps to create an inter-governmental shipping organization and the adoption of a new International Convention on Road Traffic and a Protocol on Road Signs and Signals; the improvement of the comparability of statistics. Numerous economic, statistical and fiscal studies were undertaken and publications were issued, including annual surveys of world and regional economic conditions.

In the social field, the United Nations took over and expanded the work of the League of Nations for the international control of narcotic drugs and the prevention of traffic in women and children. A Convention for the Suppression of Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others came into force in July 1951. It also took over the urgent and the important advisory social welfare services of UNRRA and, in 1949, placed these on a continuing basis. Steps were taken to establish, as a temporary agency, the International Refugee Organization (IRO) to care for the refugees who had been the concern of UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, and, in 1950, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees was set up to start activities at the beginning of 1951 and to deal with certain refugee problems after IRO ceased its activities. In July 1951 a Convention relating to the Status of Refugees was adopted by a Conference of Plenipotentiaries.

Through the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF), food, clothing and medical supplies were provided to aid needy children, pregnant women and nursing mothers. To supplement governmental and other contributions, a world-wide appeal, the United Nations Appeal for Children (UNAC), was conducted to secure voluntary contributions for such aid. The Assembly in 1950 decided that UNICEF should be continued for a further three years, and should pay increasing attention to the long-range and continuing needs of children, particularly in under-developed countries.

The first part of an international bill of human rights, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, was proclaimed by the General Assembly on 10 December 1948, and work proceeded on the drafting of a covenant and measures for implementation. A Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, drawn up and approved by the General Assembly, entered into force in January 1951. Work on the drafting of conventions on freedom of information, begun by an International Conference on Freedom of Information called by the Economic and Social Council, was carried on in the General Assembly and in the Economic and Social Council.

Among other questions on which recommendations were made and studies initiated were: slavery and customs resembling slavery; the repatriation of war prisoners; the status of women; population and migration problems; the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities; standards of living; housing problems; and the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders.

The General Assembly in February 1946 decided that the information transmitted by Members of the United Nations which are responsible for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories not placed under Trusteeship, in accordance with Article 73 e of the Charter, should be summarized, analysed and classified by the Secretary-General. The summaries and analyses have been examined annually by a special committee set up by the Assembly. On the basis of the committee's reports, the General Assembly has made recommendations concerning the transmission of information, guiding factors in determining whether or not a Territory is Non-Self-Governing, measures for improving educational, social and economic conditions in the Territories generally, and the use of technical assistance facilities and the co-operation of the specialized agencies in furthering their development. Between 1946 and the end of 1951 eight Administering Members transmitted information on over 60 Territories. Information on most of the Territories has been transmitted each year; on some, transmission has ceased, explanations being given in each case by the Administering Power concerned.

As of 31 December 1951 eleven Trust Territories were being administered under the International Trusteeship System: New Guinea (Australia); Ruanda-Urundi (Belgium); Somaliland (Italy); the Cameroons and Togoland (France); Western Samoa (New Zealand); Tanganyika, the Cameroons and Togoland (United Kingdom); Nauru (Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom jointly); and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (United States), which is classified as a strategic area. With the exception of the Trust Territory of Somaliland, all these Territories were formerly League of Nations Mandates.

In accordance with the terms of the Charter, the Trusteeship Council has examined annual reports submitted by the Administering Authorities on each of these Trust Territories. By the end of 1951 it had examined nearly 700 petitions concerning the Territories and, in the case of petitions concerning the unification of the Ewe people or of the two Togoland Trust Territories, had heard representatives of the petitioners. Regular visiting missions were sent to Trust Territories in East Africa in 1948, West Africa in 1949, the Pacific in 1950, and again to East Africa in 1951 and a special mission visited Western Samoa in 1947 to examine a petition from the Samoans for self-government. Recommendations were made by the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council for developing self-government in the Territories; for improving economic conditions; for abolishing such practices as whipping and such customs as child marriage; for improving health and educational facilities; and for the study of prevailing policies, laws and practices in the Territories relating to land. Among the special questions considered was a continuing study of administrative unions of Trust Territories with adjacent Non-Self-Governing Territories under the administration of the same Metropolitan Power, and of the arrangements affecting the Trust Territories under French administration, which are administered within the French Union.

One League of Nations Mandate, South West Africa, has not been placed under the International Trusteeship System. The Union of South Africa, which administers the Territory, stated that it would continue to administer it in the spirit of the Mandate. The Assembly, however, recommended that the Territory be placed under Trusteeship and asked the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion concerning South Africa's international obligations under the Mandate. The Court's opinion, given in 1950, stated, among other things, that the Union of South Africa continued to have international obligations concerning the Territory under the League of Nations Mandate, including the obligation to submit reports and transmit petitions. The Assembly established a committee to confer with the Union Government concerning procedural measures necessary to give effect to the Court's opinion.

The International Court of Justice had, by the end of 1951, delivered judgments in disputes between (1) the United Kingdom and Albania, (2) Colombia and Peru, and (3) the United Kingdom and Norway. It also indicated interim measures of protection in a dispute between the United Kingdom and Iran. A number of advisory opinions on various legal questions were likewise given by the Court.

The Corfu Channel case, a dispute between the United Kingdom and Albania, gave rise to three judgments by the Court. The case arose out of a United Kingdom complaint that Albania was internationally responsible for damage to British warships and death and injury to British naval personnel caused by mines in the Corfu Channel. The first of the three judgments, delivered on 25 March 1948, dealt with the question of jurisdiction. Albania had challenged the Court's competence, but the Court rejected Albania's objection and decided that proceedings on the merits should continue. The second judgment, delivered on 9 April 1949, related to the merits of the case. The Court ruled that Albania was responsible under international law for the explosions of the two British warships in Albanian waters and for the damage and loss of human life that was the result. It also decided that in one of its minesweeping operations the United Kingdom had violated Albanian sovereignty. In its third judgment on the case, the Court on 15 December 1949 fixed the amount of compensation due by Albania to the United Kingdom.

The dispute between Colombia and Peru arose out of the asylum granted by the Colombian Ambassador to Peru to Victor Raul Haya de la Torre, who was being sought by the Peruvian authorities on the ground that he had instigated and directed the military rebellion in Peru in October 1948. In a judgment given on 20 November 1950, the Court decided that Colombia was not entitled to qualify unilaterally and in a manner binding upon Peru the nature of Mr. Haya de la Torre's alleged offence. It further decided that Peru was not bound to deliver to Mr. Haya de la Torre a safe conduct out of the country. The Court held that the grant of asylum to Mr. Haya de la Torre was not in conformity with the terms of the Havana Convention on asylum in relation to political offenders, but rejected the contention that he was accused of common crime. It decided that the urgency required under the Havana Convention to justify asylum was absent in the case.

In a judgment delivered on 27 November 1950 the Court ruled inadmissible a Colombian request for an interpretation of the Court's judgment of 20 November 1950.

The Haya de la Torre Case, a sequel to the former proceedings, was instituted by Colombia by means of a fresh application. Immediately after the Court's judgment of 20 November 1950, Peru had called upon Colombia to surrender Mr. Haya de la Torre. Colombia refused to do so, maintaining that neither the texts in force nor the Court's judgment placed it under an obligation to surrender the refugee to the Peruvian authorities. The Court confirmed this view in its judgment on 13 June 1951. It declared that the question was a new one, and that although the Havana Convention expressly prescribed the surrender of common criminals to the local authorities, no obligation of the kind existed in regard to political offenders. While confirming that asylum had been irregularly granted and that on this ground Peru was entitled to demand its termination, the Court declared that Colombia was not bound to surrender the refugee; these two conclusions, it stated, were not contradictory because there were other ways in which the asylum could be terminated besides the surrender of the refugee.

The Fisheries Case concerned a controversy which had been pending between the United Kingdom and Norway for a long time. In 1935 Norway enacted a Decree by which it reserved certain fishing grounds situated off the northern coast of Norway for the exclusive use of its own fishermen. The question at issue was whether this Decree, which laid down a particular method for drawing the base-lines from which the width of the Norwegian territorial waters had to be calculated, was valid in international law. In its judgment on 18 December 1951, the Court found that, contrary to the submissions of the United Kingdom, neither the method employed for the delimitation by the 1935 Decree nor the lines themselves fixed by the said Decree were contrary to international law.

As a consequence of the nationalization by Iran of the undertaking of the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, the United Kingdom instituted proceedings against Iran on 26 May 1951 and in June requested the Court to indicate interim measures of protection. The Court indicated certain interim measures in an order of 5 July 1951.

By the end of 1951, the Court had rendered seven advisory opinions. Two (May 1948 and March 1950) concerned the interpretation of the provisions of the Charter with regard to the admission of new Members. Two others (March and July 1950) related to the interpretation of clauses—concerning the procedure for the settlement of disputes—in the Peace Treaties concluded after the Second World War with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania. One opinion (April 1949) was given on the question of reparations for injuries suffered in the service of the United Nations. Another (July 1950) related to the international status of South West Africa. The seventh opinion (May 1951) concerned the effect of reservations made by certain States in regard to the Convention on Genocide upon the relations between them and other signatory States.

The International Law Commission was established by the General Assembly in November 1947 to work for the progressive development of international law and its codification. By the end of 1951 it had, among other things, drafted a Declaration on Rights and Duties of States and a draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind; formulated the Nürnberg Principles; and made recommendations on: (a) the question of establishing an international criminal court; (b) ways and means of making the evidence of customary international law more readily available; (c) the effect of reservations to multilateral conventions; and (d) the question of defining aggression. Preparatory work was also done on the codification of the law of treaties, the regime of the high seas, arbitral procedure, and nationality, including statelessness.

By the end of 1951, a total of 2,390 treaties and international agreements had been registered or filed and recorded with the Secretariat.

Conventions on privileges and immunities of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies were adopted in 1946 and 1947, and a Headquarters Agreement, to provide for the privileges and immunities necessary as a result of the establishment of the United Nations Headquarters in New York, was signed in June 1946 with the United States authorities.

An agreement between the United Nations and the United States, under which the United Nations issues and uses its own postage stamps, was signed on 28 March 1951. It came into force on the day of the first issue of United Nations postage stamps, namely United Nations Day, 24 October 1951.

CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbours, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS.

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

CHAPTER I

PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;

2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and

4. To be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.

2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

CHAPTER II

MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of 1 January 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

CHAPTER III

ORGANS

Article 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as may be found necessary may be established in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs.

CHAPTER IV

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Composition

Article 9

1. The General Assembly shall consist of all the Members of the United Nations.

2. Each Member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

Functions and Powers

Article 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or to both on any such questions or matters.

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Article 12

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

Article 13

1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

a. promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;

b. promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational, and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1(b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Article 14

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations.

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

Article 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization.

2. The expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

3. The General Assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

Voting

Article 18

1. Each member of the General Assembly shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1(c) of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions.

3. Decisions on other questions, including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority, shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Article 19

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Procedure

Article 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the Members of the United Nations.

Article 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its President for each session.

Article 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

CHAPTER V

THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Composition

Article 23

1. The Security Council shall consist of eleven Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.

2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII, and XII.

3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Article 25

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

Voting

Article 27

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members.

3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Procedure

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization.

2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.

3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 31

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations.

CHAPTER VI

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation, which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.

3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.

2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.

3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Article 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.

2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

CHAPTER VII

ACTION WITH RESPECT TO THREATS TO THE PEACE, BREACHES OF THE PEACE, AND ACTS OF AGGRESSION

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims, or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

Article 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea, or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations.

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance, and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Article 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfilment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional sub-committees.

Article 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defence if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defence shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

CHAPTER VIII REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organization may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

CHAPTER IX
INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CO-OPERATION

Article 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

a. higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;

b. solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and

c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

Article 56

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 57

1. The various specialized agencies, established by intergovernmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

2. Such agencies thus brought into relationship with the United Nations are hereinafter referred to as specialized agencies.

Article 58

The Organization shall make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies.

Article 59

The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the states concerned for the creation of any new specialized agencies required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

CHAPTER X

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Composition

Article 61

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of eighteen Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, six members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election, eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council shall be chosen. The term of office of six members so chosen shall expire at the end of one year, and of six other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 62

1. The Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

2. It may make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

3. It may prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence.

4. It may call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

Article 63

1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into agreements with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations. Such agreements shall be subject to approval by the General Assembly.

2. It may co-ordinate the activities of the specialized agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly and to the Members of the United Nations.

Article 64

1. The Economic and Social Council may take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies. It may make arrangements with the Members of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and to recommendations on matters falling within its competence made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observations on these reports to the General Assembly.

Article 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

Article 66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions as fall within its competence in connection with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly.

2. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of Members of the United Nations and at the request of specialized agencies.

3. It shall perform such other functions as are specified elsewhere in the present Charter or as may be assigned to it by the General Assembly.

Voting

Article 67

1. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 68

The Economic and Social Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights, and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions.

Article 69

The Economic and Social Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

Article 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

Article 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

Article 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

CHAPTER XI

DECLARATION REGARDING NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Article 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories, and, to this end:

a. to ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement, their just treatment, and their protection against abuses;

b. to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;

c. to further international peace and security;

d. to promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to co-operate with one another and, when and where appropriate, with specialized international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic, and scientific purposes set forth in this Article; and

e. to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII apply.

Article 74

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy in respect of the territories to which this Chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighbourliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic, and commercial matters.

CHAPTER XII

INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

Article 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an international trusteeship system for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereinafter referred to as trust territories.

Article 76

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system, in accordance with the Purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article 1 of the present Charter, shall be:

- a. to further international peace and security;
- b. to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;
- c. to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and
- d. to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

Article 77

1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements:

- a. territories now held under mandate;
- b. territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
- c. territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.

2. It will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

Article 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become Members of the United Nations, relationship among which shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

Article 79

The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a Member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

Article 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeship agreements, made under Articles 77, 79, and 81, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this Chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which Members of the United Nations may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this Article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as provided for in Article 77.

Article 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which will exercise the administration of the trust territory. Such authority, hereinafter called the administering authority, may be one or more states or the Organization itself.

Article 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

Article 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the Security Council.

2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.

3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in the strategic areas.

Article 84

It shall be the duty of the administering authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

Article 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly.

2. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

CHAPTER XIII

THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Composition

Article 86

1. The Trusteeship Council shall consist of the following Members of the United Nations:

- a. those Members administering trust territories;
- b. such of those Members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and
- c. as many other Members elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer trust territories and those which do not.

2. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall designate one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

Functions and Powers

Article 87

The General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, may:

- a. consider reports submitted by the administering authority;
- b. accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the administering authority;
- c. provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering authority; and
- d. take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the trusteeship agreements.

Article 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the administering authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

Voting

Article 89

1. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Article 91

The Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

CHAPTER XIV

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

Article 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

CHAPTER XV

THE SECRETARIAT

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 100

1. In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

2. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs shall form a part of the Secretariat.

3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

CHAPTER XVI

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the present Charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.

2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

Article 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

Article 104

The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfilment of its purposes.

Article 105

1. The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfilment of its purposes.

2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization.

3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose.

CHAPTER XVII

TRANSITIONAL SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42, the parties to the Four-Nation Declaration, signed at Moscow, October 30, 1943, and France, shall, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of that Declaration, consult with one another and as occasion requires with other Members of the United Nations with a view to such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Article 107

Nothing in the present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action, in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the Governments having responsibility for such action.

CHAPTER XVIII

AMENDMENTS

Article 108

Amendments to the present Charter shall come into force for all Members of the United Nations when they have been adopted by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two-thirds of the Members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

Article 109

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two-thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

CHAPTER XIX

RATIFICATION AND SIGNATURE

Article 110

1. The present Charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the Secretary-General of the Organization when he has been appointed.

3. The present Charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of the ratifications deposited shall thereupon be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory states.

4. The states signatory to the present Charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become original Members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications.

Article 111

The present Charter, of which the Chinese, French, Russian, English, and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the Governments of the other signatory states.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the representatives of the Governments of the United Nations have signed the present Charter.

DONE at the city of San Francisco the twenty-sixth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

STATUTE OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 1

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

CHAPTER I

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar.

3. This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labour cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy despatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary.
2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance.
3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.
4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.
5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.
6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.
7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their travelling expenses refunded.
8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

CHAPTER II

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.
2. The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.
3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.
2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.
3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:
 - a. the interpretation of a treaty;
 - b. any question of international law;
 - c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
 - d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.
3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.
4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.
5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.
6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:
 - a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
 - b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
 - c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
 - d. subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.
2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

CHAPTER III

PROCEDURE

Article 39

1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.

2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.

2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

1. The parties shall be represented by agents.

2. They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.

3. The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.

2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.

3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.

4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.

5. The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.

2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.

2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favour of its claim.

2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.

2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.

3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.

2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.

2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.

2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.

2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.

2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

CHAPTER IV

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.

2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In its exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

CHAPTER V
AMENDMENTS

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.

ORGANS OF THE UNITED NATIONS

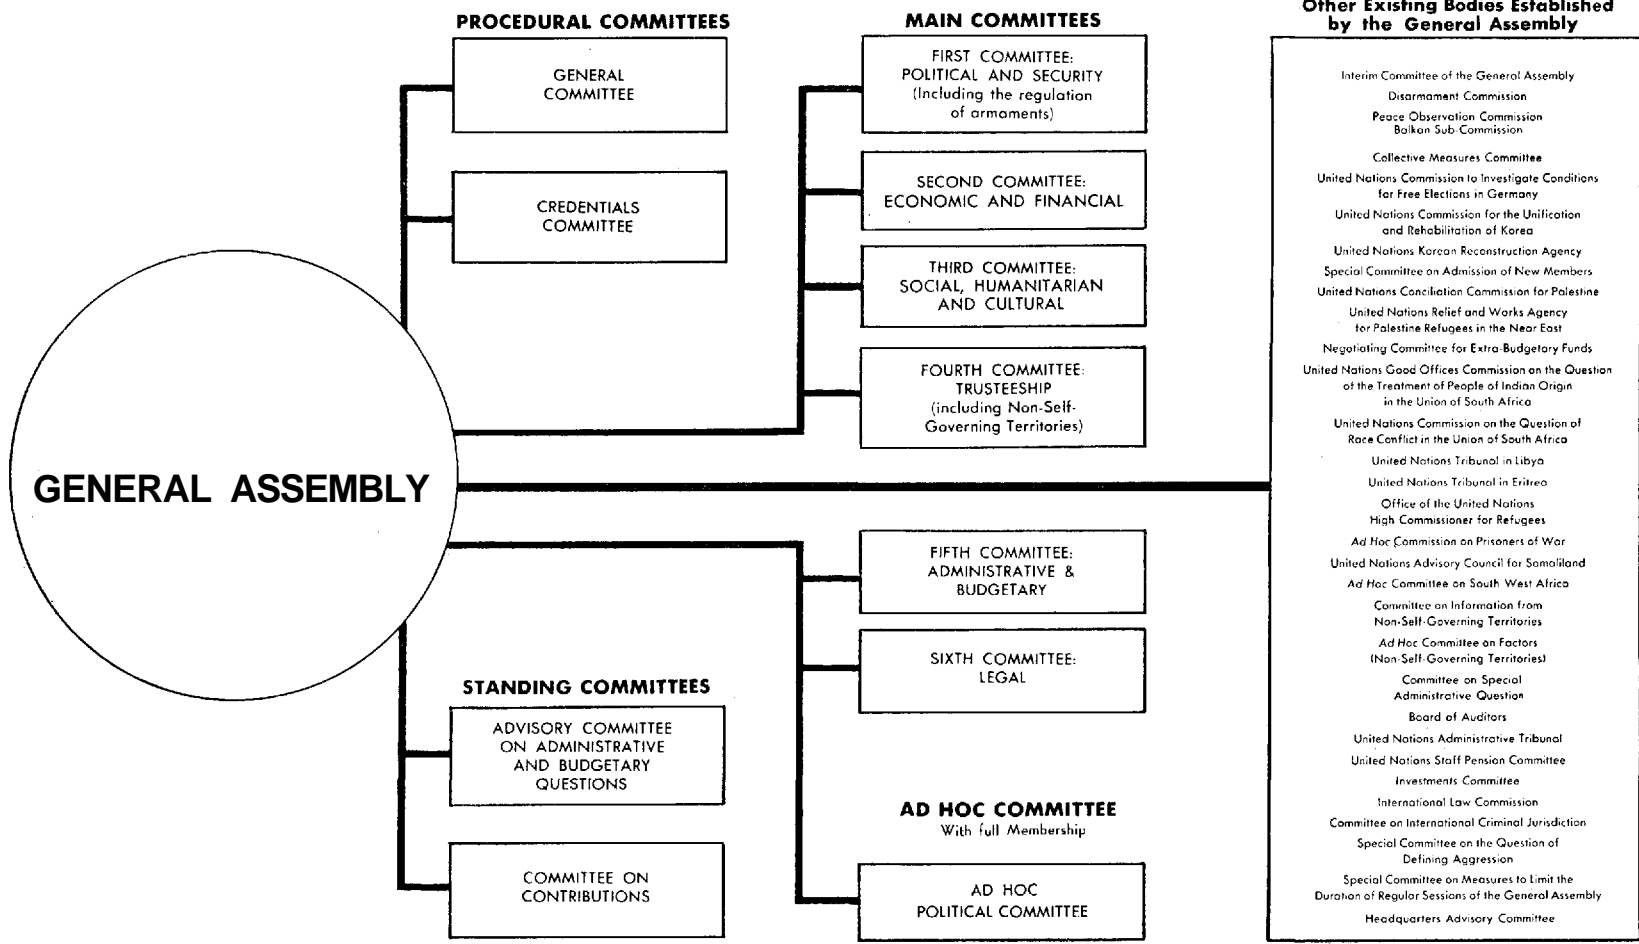

PRINCIPAL ORGANS AND SUBSIDIARY BODIES*

*For other subsidiary Bodies see Charts of Relevant Organs

STRUCTURE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

AS OF 31 DECEMBER 1952

I. Structure and Organization of the United Nations

A. FUNCTIONS AND MEMBERSHIP OF THE PRINCIPAL AND SUBSIDIARY ORGANS

The United Nations has six principal organs. The relevant Chapters and Articles of the Charter¹ concerning these organs are cited below. The principal members of the Secretariat and the membership of the other principal organs during 1952 is also given.

As regards subsidiary bodies of these principal organs, their membership during 1952 is given below (the countries of those persons appointed in their individual capacity are, for reference purposes, given in parenthesis); changes occurring during the year in the terms of reference of the subsidiary organs are indicated; where no such changes have occurred, references are made to previous summaries of their terms of reference².

1. The General Assembly

a. CHARTER PROVISIONS

The Charter provisions concerning the General Assembly are contained in Chapter IV (Articles 9-22) which defines the composition, functions and powers, voting and procedure of the Assembly. Other provisions relating to the Assembly are contained in Articles 1, 2, 4-7, 23, 24, 35, 60-64, 66, 85-88, 93, 96-98, 101, 105, 108 and 109 of the Charter and Articles 4, 7-15, 32, 33 and 69 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice. (For texts of these Articles, see above.)

b. MEMBERS

All Members of the United Nations are represented in the General Assembly; at the end of 1952 there were 60 United Nations Members.³

c. SUBSIDIARY BODIES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

(1) Main Committees⁴

There are six Main Committees; each Member may be represented by one person on each Main Committee:

First Committee—Political and Security (including the regulation of armaments)

Second Committee—Economic and Financial

Third Committee—Social, Humanitarian and Cultural fourth Committee—Trusteeship (including Non-Self-Governing Territories)

Fifth Committee—Administrative and Budgetary

Sixth Committee—Legal

For the duration of the seventh session, the Assembly established an Ad Hoc Political Committee on which each Member was entitled to be represented.

(2) Procedural Committees⁵

There are two Procedural Committees: a General Committee and a Credentials Committee.

(3) Standing Committees⁶

(a) ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS

Its members during 1952 were:

Elected to serve until 31 December 1952:

William O. Hall (United States), Olyntho Pinto Machado (Brazil), Sir William Matthews (United Kingdom).

Elected to serve until 31 December 1953:

Rafik Asha (Syria), Andre Ganem (France), Brag Kumar Nehru (India).

Elected to serve until 31 December 1954:

Thanassis Aghnides (Greece) (Chairman), Eduardo Carrizosa (Colombia), Igor V. Chechetkin (USSR).

(b) COMMITTEE ON CONTRIBUTIONS

Its members during 1952 were:

Elected to serve until 31 December 1952:

Kan Lee (China), Mitchell W. Sharp (Canada), Stuart Arthur Rice (United States).

¹ For text of the Charter, see pp. 10-26.

² See also the Structure of the United Nations (Sixth Revision), March 1952 (ST/DPI/7) for the membership and terms of reference of subsidiary bodies of the United Nations as of March 1953.

³ For a list of United Nations Members, see under Roster of the United Nations.

⁴ For terms of reference of these Committees, see Y.U.N., 1950, p. 16.

⁵ For the constitution and terms of reference of these Committees, see Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 16-17.

⁶ For the constitution and terms of reference of these Committees, see Y.U.N., 1950, p. 17. For election of new members to take office on 1 January 1953, see under Constitutional and Organizational Questions—Elections and Appointments.

Elected to serve until 31 December 1953:

Sir Sydney Caine⁷ (United Kingdom), Adolfo Nass (Venezuela), Maria Z. N. Witteveen (Netherlands) (Chairman).

Elected to serve until 31 December 1954:

René Charron (France), Arthur Samuel Lall (India), Josué Sáenz (Mexico), G. F. Saksin (USSR).

(4) Other Subsidiary Bodies⁸

At the end of 1952 the General Assembly had the following subsidiary bodies:

Interim Committee of the General Assembly⁹

Disarmament Commission

Peace Observation Commission⁹

Balkan Sub-Commission¹⁰

Collective Measures Committee¹⁰

Panel of Military Experts

United Nations Commission to Investigate Conditions for Free Elections in Germany¹⁰

United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea⁹

United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency⁹

Additional Measures Committee¹⁰

Special Committee on Admission of New Members

United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine⁹

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East¹¹

Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds

United Nations Good Offices Commission on the Question of the Treatment of People of Indian Origin in the Union of South Africa

United Nations Commission on the Question of Race Conflicted in the Union of South Africa

United Nations Tribunal in Libya⁹

United Nations Tribunal in Eritrea¹⁰

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees⁹

Ad Hoc Commission on Prisoners of War⁹

Group of Experts

United Nations Advisory Council for Somaliland⁹

Ad Hoc Committee on South West Africa⁹

Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories¹²

Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Non-Self-Governing Territories)

Committee on Special Administrative Questions

Board of Auditors⁹

United Nations Administrative Tribunal⁹

United Nations Staff Pension Committee⁹

Investments Committee⁹

International Law Commission⁹

Committee on International Criminal Jurisdiction

Special Committee on the Question of Defining Aggression

Special Committee on Measures to Limit the Duration of Regular Sessions of the General Assembly

During the period under review, the following bodies were discontinued, either through the completion of their mandates, or by specific action by the General Assembly:

Standing Committee on Repatriation of Greek Children⁹

Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds¹⁰
Committee on Administrative Unions¹⁰

Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Non-Self-Governing Territories)¹²

Special Committee for the Consideration of the Methods and Procedures of the General Assembly for Dealing with Legal and Drafting Questions¹⁰

Headquarters Advisory Committee⁹

Special Committee on Programme of Conferences

The members of the Assembly's subsidiary bodies during the period under review are given below as well as a summary of the functions of new bodies established during the period.

(a) INTERIM COMMITTEE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Each Member of the United Nations has the right to be represented on the Interim Committee.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR do not participate in the work of the Committee, the establishment of which they consider illegal and unconstitutional.

(b) DISARMAMENT COMMISSION

The Commission reports both to the General Assembly and the Security Council (see under Security Council).

(c) PEACE OBSERVATION COMMISSION

MEMBERS: China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Iraq, Israel, New Zealand, Pakistan, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

BALKAN SUB-COMMISSION

MEMBERS: Colombia, France, Pakistan, Sweden, United States.

(d) COLLECTIVE MEASURES COMMITTEE

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Egypt, France, Mexico, Philippines, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

PANEL OF MILITARY EXPERTS

The Experts are appointed by the Secretary-General under General Assembly resolution 377(V) ("Uniting for peace"). They are to be available, on request, to Member States wishing to obtain technical advice on the organization, training and equipment of elements within their national armed forces which could be made avail-

⁷ Resigned effective 1 January 1953.

⁸ The members of these bodies for 1952 is given below; for elections of members to take office in 1953, see under Constitutional and Organizational Questions; Elections and Appointments. For representatives serving on those bodies where States are designated as members see Annex I.

⁹ For terms of reference of these bodies, see Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 17-24.

¹⁰ For terms of references of these bodies, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 14-16.

¹¹ For terms of reference, see Y.U.N., 1950, p. 20 and Y.U.N., 1951, p. 15.

¹² For terms of reference, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 81-82.

able, in accordance with constitutional processes, for service as a United Nations unit or units upon recommendation by the Security Council or the General Assembly.

MEMBERS:

Army: Lt.-General A. J. Boase (Australia); Lt.-General B. H. Calmeijer (Netherlands); Lt.-General W. A. Burrell (United States); General de Corps d'Armée Jean Adolphe Leonce Curnier (France); Lt.-General Jira Vichitsonggram (Thailand); Maj.-General Archimedes Argyropoulos (Greece); Maj.-General Rustu Erdelhun (Turkey); Maj.-General L. O. Lyne, C.B., D.S.O. (United Kingdom); Maj.-General R. O. G. Morton, C.B.E. (Canada).

Navy: Vice-Admiral O. C. Badger (United States) (to 31 July 1952); Vice-Admiral Arthur D. Struble (United States) (from 1 August 1952); Vice-Admiral C. Caslon, C.B., C.B.E. (United Kingdom); Vice-Admiral E. Flokas (Greece); Vice-Admiral d'Escadre Jacques Marie Missoffe (France); Vice-Admiral J. W. G. van Hengel (Netherlands); Rear-Admiral Tacettin Taleyman (Turkey).

Air Force: Lt.-General C. Giebel (Netherlands); Lt.-General H. R. Harmon (United States); Maj.-General Kemal Colakoglu (Turkey); Air Vice-Marshal Sir Alexander P. Davidson, K.B.E., C.B. (United Kingdom); Air Vice-Marshal J. E. Hewitt (Australia); General de Brigade Aérienne Louis Eugène Tapie (France); Group Captain George Doucas (Greece).

(e) UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE CONDITIONS FOR FREE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY¹³

MEMBERS: Brazil, Iceland, Netherlands, Pakistan, Poland.¹⁴

(f) UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR THE UNIFICATION AND REHABILITATION OF KOREA

MEMBERS: Australia, Chile, Netherlands, Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand, Turkey.

(g) UNITED NATIONS KOREAN RECONSTRUCTION AGENCY

Agent-General: J. Donald Kingsley (United States)
Deputy Agent-General: Sir Arthur Rucker (United Kingdom)

Advisory Committee

MEMBERS: Canada, India, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

(h) ADDITIONAL MEASURES COMMITTEE

Consists of the members of the Collective Measures Committee, with the exception of Burma and Yugoslavia, who stated that they would not serve on this Committee.

(i) SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

This Committee was established by the General Assembly on 21 December 1952 to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of States to membership in the United Nations, examining the proposals and suggestions which had been made in the General Assembly and its Committees or which might be submitted to the Security Council by any Member of the United Nations. The study was to be undertaken in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter, the discussions in the Assembly and Committees, the debates in the Security Council, the other antecedents of the question, and the principles of international law. The Special Committee was directed to report to the Assembly's eighth session.

MEMBERS: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States.

(j) UNITED NATIONS CONCILIATION COMMISSION FOR PALESTINE

MEMBERS: France, Turkey, United States.

(k) UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST

Director: John B. Blandford, Jr. (United States)

Deputy Director: James Keen (United Kingdom) (to 19 October 1952); Leslie J. Carver (United Kingdom) (from 19 October 1952).

Advisory Commission

MEMBERS: France, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States.

(l) NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE FOR EXTRA-BUDGETARY FUNDS

The Assembly on 25 October 1952 re-established this Committee, to be composed of not more than ten members, to assist in obtaining voluntary contributions from governments for the Expanded Programme of technical assistance, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the programme of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, the programme of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, and such other special programmes not provided for in the regular budget of the United Nations as might be designated by the General Assembly.

MEMBERS: Australia, Canada, Colombia, France, Haiti, Lebanon, Pakistan, United Kingdom, United States.

(m) UNITED NATIONS GOOD OFFICES COMMISSION ON THE QUESTION OF THE TREATMENT OF PEOPLE OF INDIAN ORIGIN IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

This Commission was established by the General Assembly on 5 December 1952 to arrange and assist in negotiations between the Government of the Union of South Africa and the Governments of India and of Pakistan for a satisfactory solution of the question of the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa. The Commission was directed to report to the Assembly at its eighth session.

MEMBERS: Cuba, Syria, Yugoslavia.

¹³ On 5 August 1952 the Commission reported that it had adjourned sine die while remaining at the disposal of the United Nations and all parties concerned to carry out its task during such time as its mandate remained in force and at such time as it seemed likely to the Commission that it could do so with positive results.

¹⁴ Poland officially declined to participate.

(n) UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION ON THE QUESTION OF RACE CONFLICT IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

This Commission was established by the General Assembly on 5 December 1952 to study the racial situation in the Union of South Africa, in the light of the purposes and principles and provisions of the Charter and the resolutions of the United Nations on racial persecution and discrimination, and to report its conclusions to the Assembly's eighth session.

MEMBERS: Ralph Bunche¹⁵ (United States), Hernan Santa Cruz (Chile), Jaime Torres Bodet¹⁵ (Mexico).

(o) UNITED NATIONS TRIBUNAL IN LIBYA

MEMBERS: Vicente Sánchez Gavito (Mexico); Hugo G. L. Wickstrom (Sweden); Faiz Yorukoglu (Turkey).

(p) UNITED NATIONS TRIBUNAL IN ERITREA

MEMBERS: Vicente Sánchez Gavito (Mexico); Hugo G. L. Wickstrom (Sweden); Faiz Yorukoglu (Turkey).

(q) OFFICE OF THE UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES

High Commissioner; G. J. van Heuven Goedhart (Netherlands)

Deputy High Commissioner: James Read (United States)

United Nations High Commissioner's Advisory Committee on Refugees

The Committee was established to advise the High Commissioner, at his request, in the exercise of his functions.

MEMBERS: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, France, Holy See, Israel, Italy, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

(r) Ad Hoc COMMISSION ON PRISONERS OF WAR

MEMBERS: Countess Bernadotte (Sweden); Jose Gustavo Guerrero (El Salvador), Vice-President of the International Court of Justice; Aung Khine (Burma), Judge of High Court of Burma.

(s) GROUP OF EXPERTS

The Assembly, on 21 December 1952, requested the Secretary-General to appoint a group of experts to prepare during 1953 a report on practical measures relating to the recommendations contained in resolution 623 (VII) of the General Assembly on financing of economic development through the establishment of fair and equitable international prices of primary commodities and through the execution of national programmes of integrated economic development. The report is to be issued on the responsibility of the experts and is to be transmitted to the General Assembly together with the views of the Economic and Social Council thereon.

As at the end of the year the experts had not been appointed.

(t) UNITED NATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR SOMALILAND

MEMBERS: Colombia, Egypt, Philippines.

(u) Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON SOUTH WEST AFRICA

MEMBERS: Norway, Syria, Thailand, United States, Uruguay.

(v) COMMITTEE ON INFORMATION FROM NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

This Committee, which during the fourth session of the General Assembly was constituted for a three-year period, is composed of Members of the United Nations transmitting information on Non-Self-Governing Territories and an equal number of non-administering Members elected on as wide a geographical basis as possible by the Fourth Committee on behalf of the Assembly. It was provided that non-administering Members should be elected for three years but, to provide for rotation, at the first election four of the non-administering Members were elected for a term of three years, two for two years, and two for one year only. At the Assembly's fifth and sixth sessions members were elected to replace the retiring Members. The Assembly at its seventh session continued the Committee for a further three-year period.

During 1952 the Members were as follows: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, France, India, Indonesia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

(w) Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON FACTORS (NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES)

On 10 December 1952 a new Ad Hoc Committee was established to continue and carry out a more thorough study of the factors which will have to be taken into account in deciding whether a territory has or has not attained a full measure of self-government.

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Burma, Cuba, Guatemala, Iraq, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

(x) COMMITTEE ON SPECIAL ADMINISTRATIVE QUESTIONS

The Committee was established by the General Assembly on 21 December 1952 to meet between its seventh and eighth regular sessions to re-examine and prepare a report on certain aspects of the relationship between the Secretariat and the General Assembly as indicated by the Secretary-General in his memorandum submitted to the Assembly at its seventh session on administration of the United Nations. The Committee was also asked to review certain aspects of the procedure of the General Assembly and portions of the Statute of the Administrative Tribunal. The report, with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, was to be circulated to all Members four weeks before the opening of the Assembly's eighth regular session.

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, China, Dominican Republic, Greece, Iraq, Norway, Pakistan, Poland.

(y) BOARD OF AUDITORS

During 1952 the members were as follows:

Elected to serve until 30 June 1952:

Auditor General of Denmark (Otto F. Remke)

Elected to serve until 30 June 1953:

Auditor General of Canada (Robert Watson Sellar)

¹⁵ Unable to serve. Replaced by Henri Laugier (France) and Dantes Bellegarde (Haiti) on 30 March 1953.

Elected to serve until 30 June 1954:

Auditor General of Colombia (Jaime Jaramillo)

Elected to serve until 30 June 1955:

Auditor General of Denmark (Otto F. Remke)

(z) UNITED NATIONS ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNAL

During 1952 the members were as follows:

To serve until 31 December 1952:

Mrs. Paul Bastid (France); Lt.-General His Highness Maharaja Jam Shri Digvijayasinhji Sahib (India) (President); Hamed Sultan (Egypt).

Elected to serve until 31 December 1953:

Lord Crook (United Kingdom); Vladimir Outrata (Czechoslovakia).

Elected to serve until 31 December 1954:

Bror Arvid Sture Petren (Sweden); Homero Viteri-Lafrente (Ecuador).

(aa) UNITED NATIONS STAFF PENSION COMMITTEE

During 1952 the members were as follows:

Elected by the General Assembly:

MEMBERS: R. T. Cristóbal (Philippines); Edmundo de Holte-Castello (Colombia); N. I. Klimov (USSR); ALTERNATES: Keith Brennan (Australia); Warren B. Irons (United States); P. Ordonneau (France).

Appointed by the Secretary-General:

MEMBERS: Hans C. Andersen, Georges Palthey. ALTERNATES: W. P. Barrett, L. Michelmore, Urbain F. Roullier.

Elected by Participants:

MEMBERS: Marc Schreiber, David B. Vaughan, Raphael Trachtenberg. ALTERNATES: François Eyriey, Charles Hogan, Georges Rabinovitch.

(bb) INVESTMENTS COMMITTEE

During 1952 the Members were as follows:

Elected to serve until 31 December 1952:

Ivar Rooth—Former Governor of the Bank of Sweden, Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund

Elected to serve until 31 December 1953:

Jacques Rueff—Honorary Governor of the Bank of France

Elected to serve until 31 December 1954:

Leslie R. Rounds—Former Senior Vice-President of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York

(cc) INTERNATIONAL LAW COMMISSION

MEMBERS: Ricardo J. Alfaro (Panama) (Chairman); Gilberto Amado (Brazil); Roberto Cordova (Mexico); J. P. A. François (Netherlands); Shuhsi Hsu (China); Manley O. Hudson (United States); Faris Bey El-Khouri (Syria); F. I. Kozhevnikov¹⁶ (USSR); H. Lauterpacht¹⁶ (United Kingdom); Radhabinod Pal¹⁶ (India); A. E. F. Sandstrom (Sweden); Georges Scelle (France); Jean Spiropoulos (Greece); Jesus Maria Yepes (Colombia); Jaroslav Zourek (Czechoslovakia).

(dd) COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION

This Committee was established by the General Assembly on 5 December 1952 to explore the implications and consequences of establishing an international criminal court and of the various methods by which this might be done, to study the relationships between such a court and the United Nations and its organs, and to re-examine the draft statute for an international criminal court, prepared in 1951. The Committee was to undertake its work in the light of the comments and suggestions on the draft statute submitted by governments, as well as those made during the debates in the Assembly's Sixth Committee, and to submit a report for consideration by the Assembly at its ninth session.

MEMBERS: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, China, Denmark, Egypt, France, Israel, Netherlands, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

(ee) SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON THE QUESTION OF DEFINING AGGRESSION

The Special Committee was established by the Assembly on 20 December 1952 to prepare for submission to the Assembly at its ninth session a draft definition of aggression or draft statements of the notion of aggression. The Committee was also to study the following problems on the assumption that the Assembly would adopt a definition: (a) the various forms of aggression; (b) the connexion between a definition of aggression and the maintenance of international peace and security; (c) the problems raised by the inclusion of a definition of aggression in the code of offences against the peace and security of mankind and by its application within the framework of international criminal jurisdiction; (d) the effect of a definition of aggression on the exercise of the jurisdiction of the various organs of the United Nations; and (e) any other problem which might be raised by a definition of aggression.

MEMBERS: Bolivia, Brazil, China, Dominican Republic, France, Pakistan, Iran, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Syria, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

(ff) SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON MEASURES TO LIMIT THE DURATION OF REGULAR SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

This Committee was established by the General Assembly on 21 December 1952 to consider the Secretary-General's memorandum on measures to limit the duration of the regular sessions of the Assembly and any other relevant information from Member States and to submit recommendations on the subject to the Assembly at its eighth session.

MEMBERS: Afghanistan, Australia, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, France, Iran, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

The following subsidiary bodies were discontinued during the period under review:

(a) STANDING COMMITTEE ON REPATRIATION OF GREEK CHILDREN

MEMBERS: Peru, Philippines, Sweden.

(b) NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE FOR EXTRA-BUDGETARY FUNDS

MEMBERS: Canada, Colombia, France, Lebanon, Pakistan, United Kingdom, United States.

¹⁶ Elected at the fourth session of the Commission to replace Vladimir M. Koretsky, James L. Brierley and Sir Benegal N. Rau who resigned.

(c) COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE UNIONS

MEMBERS: Belgium, Brazil, India, United States.

(d) Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON FACTORS (NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES)

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Burma, Cuba, Denmark, France, Guatemala, Iraq, United States, Venezuela.

(e) SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF THE METHODS AND PROCEDURES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY FOR DEALING WITH LEGAL AND DRAFTING QUESTIONS

MEMBERS: Belgium, Canada, Chile, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

(f) HEADQUARTERS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, France, Greece, India, Norway, Poland, Syria, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

(g) SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PROGRAMME OF CONFERENCES

This Committee was established by the General Assembly on 25 November 1952 to prepare, with the assistance of the Secretary-General, a regular programme, covering a three to five year period, for the rational and economic distribution of United Nations conferences and meetings between the permanent headquarters and the United Nations Office at Geneva. The Committee reported to the Assembly on 18 December 1952.

MEMBERS: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Iraq, Pakistan, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

2. The Security Council

a. CHARTER PROVISIONS

The Charter provisions relating to the Security Council are contained in Chapter V (Articles 23-32) which defines the composition, functions and powers, voting and procedure of the Council; Chapter VI (Articles 33-38) which deals with the pacific settlement of disputes; Chapter VII (Articles 39-51) which deals with action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggressions; Chapter VIII (Articles 52-54) which relates to regional arrangements; and Articles 76 and 82-84 of Chapter XII which relate to strategic areas in Trust Territories. Other provisions are to be found in Articles 1, 2, 4-7, 10-12, 15, 18, 20, 65, 93, 94, 96-99, 106, 108 and 109 of the Charter and Articles 4, 7-15, 35, 41 and 69 of the Statute of the Court. (For text of the Articles, see above.)

b. MEMBERS¹⁷

PERMANENT MEMBERS: China, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

NON-PERMANENT MEMBERS:

Elected to serve until 31 December 1952: Brazil, Netherlands, Turkey.

Elected to serve until 31 December 1953: Chile, Pakistan, Greece.

c. SUBSIDIARY BODIES OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL

(1) Military Staff Committee¹⁸

The Military Staff Committee is composed of the Chiefs-of-Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council, or their representatives.

(2) Disarmament Commission¹⁹

This Commission consists of the members of the Security Council (see above) and Canada, when that State is not a member of the Council.

(3) Collective Measures Committee

This Committee reports to the General Assembly and to the Security Council (see under General Assembly).

(4) Standing Committees²⁰

(a) COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS

(b) COMMITTEE ON THE ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

The two Standing Committees are each composed of representatives of all the members of the Security Council (see above).

(5) Ad Hoc Committees and Commissions

The Security Council establishes such ad hoc committees and commissions as may be required from time to time for special purposes. The following report to the Council:

(a) UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR INDONESIA²¹

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, United States.

(b) UNITED NATIONS REPRESENTATIVE FOR INDIA AND PAKISTAN

Frank P. Graham²²

(c) UNITED NATIONS TRUCE SUPERVISION ORGANIZATION IN PALESTINE

Chief-of-Staff: Major-General William E. Riley²³

¹⁷ For members elected to take office on 1 January 1953, see p. 88.

¹⁸ This Committee continued to function and held a number of meetings during 1952 but without making any further progress on matters of substance. For terms of reference of the Committee, see Y.U.N. 1950, pp. 47-49.

¹⁹ For terms of reference of this Commission, see Y.U.N., 1951, p. 42.

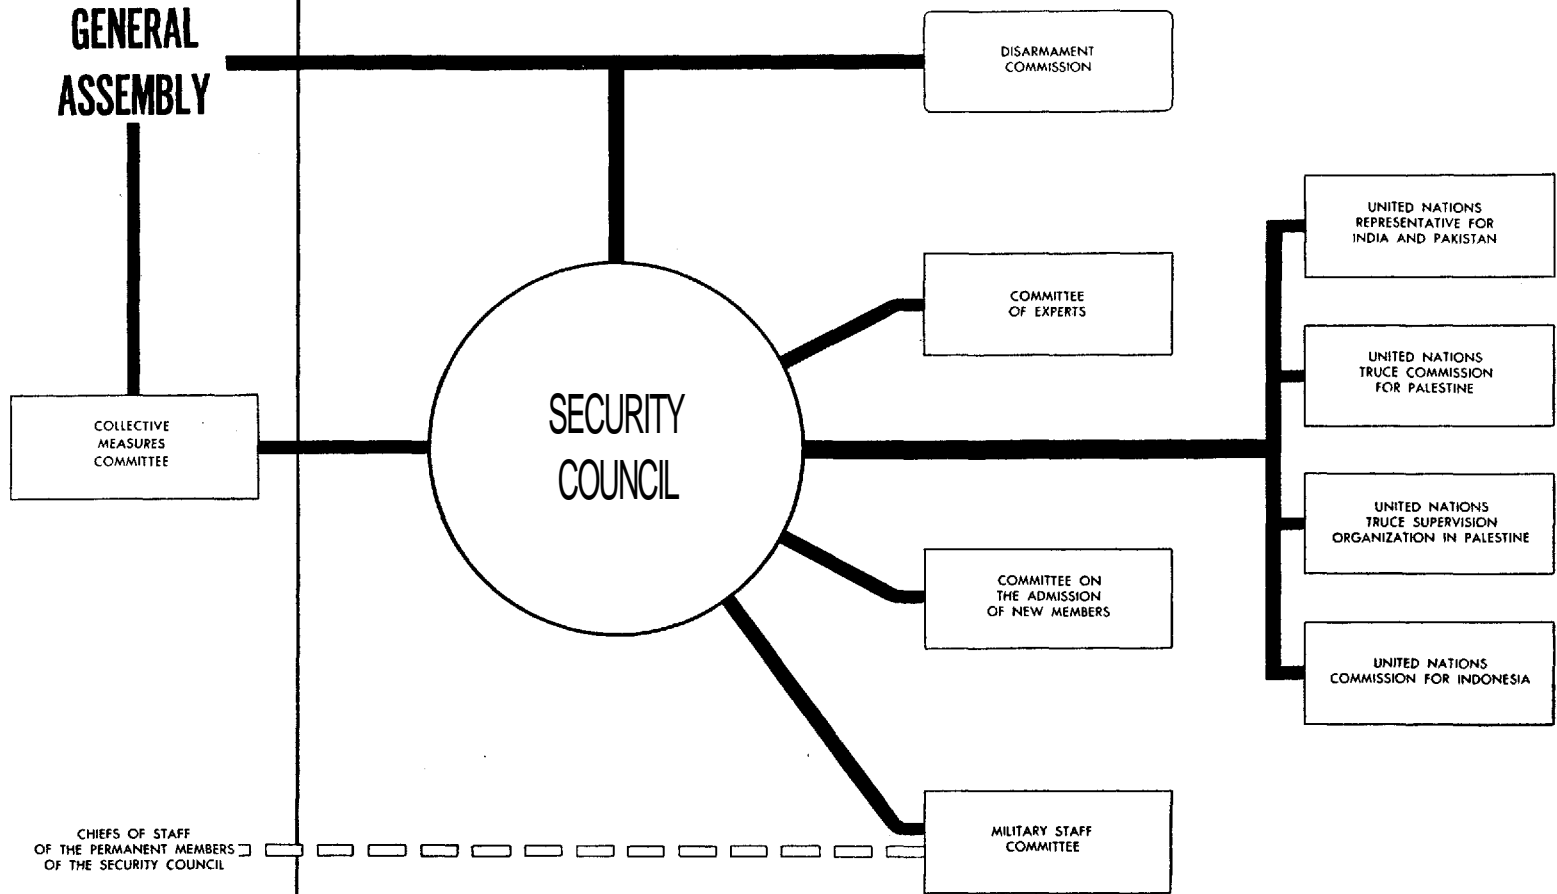

²⁰ For terms of reference of these Committees, see Y.U.N., 1950, p. 49.

²¹ On 1 April 1951 adjourned sine die, while continuing to hold itself at the disposal of the parties.

²² For terms of reference of the United Nations Representative, see Y.U.N., 1951, p. 42.

²³ For his terms of reference, see Y.U.N., 1950, p. 50.

STRUCTURE OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL

December 1952

3. The Economic and Social Council

a. CHARTER PROVISIONS

The Charter provisions relating to the Economic and Social Council are contained in Chapter IX (Articles 55-60) which sets forth the objectives and functions of the United Nations in the sphere of international economic and social co-operation, and Chapter X (Articles 61-72) which defines the compositions, functions and powers, voting and procedure of the Council. Other provisions are to be found in Articles 1, 2, 7, 15, 17, 18, 91, 96, 98 and 101. (For text of these Articles, see above.)

b. MEMBERS²⁴

Elected to serve until 31 December 1952:

Canada, Czechoslovakia, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan, United States.

Elected to serve until 31 December 1953:

Philippines, Poland, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, Uruguay.

Elected to serve until 31 December 1954:

Argentina, Belgium, China, Cuba, Egypt, France.

c. SUBSIDIARY BODIES OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

(1) Functional Commissions and Sub-Commissions²⁵

During 1952 the Council had the following Functional Commissions and Sub-Commissions:

(a) TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

MEMBERS: Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, China, Egypt, France, India, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Paraguay, Poland, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

(b) FISCAL

MEMBERS: Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Pakistan, Poland, Sweden, Union of South Africa, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

(c) STATISTICAL

MEMBERS: Argentina, Australia, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Egypt, France, India, Netherlands, Panama, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

(d) HUMAN RIGHTS

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Chile, China, Egypt, France, Greece, India, Lebanon, Pakistan, Poland, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

(i) Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press²⁶

MEMBERS: Karim Azkoul (Lebanon); Mahmoud Azmi (Egypt); Carroll Binder²⁷ (United States); P. H. Chang (China); Steven Dedijer²⁸ (Yugoslavia); Roberto Fontaina²⁹ (Uruguay); Devadas Gandhi²⁸ (India); Andre Geraud (France); Salvador P. Lopez (Philippines);

Alfredo Silva Carvallo (Chile); Francis Williams²⁸ (United Kingdom); Vasily M. Zonov (USSR).

(ii) Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

MEMBERS: A. P. Borisov²⁹ (USSR); C. F. Chang²⁹ (China); Jonathan Daniels³⁰ (United States); Erik Einar Ekstrand (Sweden); M. R. Masani (India); Elizabeth Monroe²⁹ (United Kingdom); Joseph Nisot (Belgium); Arturo Meneses Pallares (Ecuador); Herard C. L. Roy (Haiti); Rezazada Shafaq (Iran); Samuel Spanien³¹ (France); Joseph Winiewicz³⁰ (Poland).

(e) SOCIAL COMMISSION

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, China, Ecuador, France, Greece, India, Israel, New Zealand, Philippines, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

(f) STATUS OF WOMEN

MEMBERS: Brazil, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, China, Cuba, Dominican Republic, France, Iran, Lebanon, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Poland, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

(g) POPULATION

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, China, France, Indonesia, Mexico, Peru, Sweden, Syria, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

(h) NARCOTIC DRUGS

MEMBERS: Canada, China, Egypt, France, India, Iran, Mexico, Netherlands, Peru, Poland, Turkey, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

(2) Regional Economic Commissions³²

The Council has the following Regional Economic Commissions:

²⁴ For election of Members to take office on 1 January 1953, see p. 88.

²⁵ For terms of reference of these Commissions and Sub-Commissions, see Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 59-61, and Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 61-66. For representatives serving on those Commissions which met during 1952, see Annex I. For election of members to take office in 1953, see under Constitutional and Organizational Questions; Elections and Appointments.

As of 1952 the Transport and Communications, Fiscal, Statistical, Social and Population Commissions were scheduled to meet every two years, instead of annually; the Transport and Communications Commission and the Fiscal Commission were not to be convened before 1953.

²⁶ As provided in Economic and Social Council resolution 414(XII), the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press held its final session in 1952.

²⁷ Represented by alternate, J. Cates, at several meetings.

²⁸ Unable to attend session and designated, respectively, as alternates Ratko Pleic, Felix Polleri Carrío, Moni Moulík and Robert Waithman.

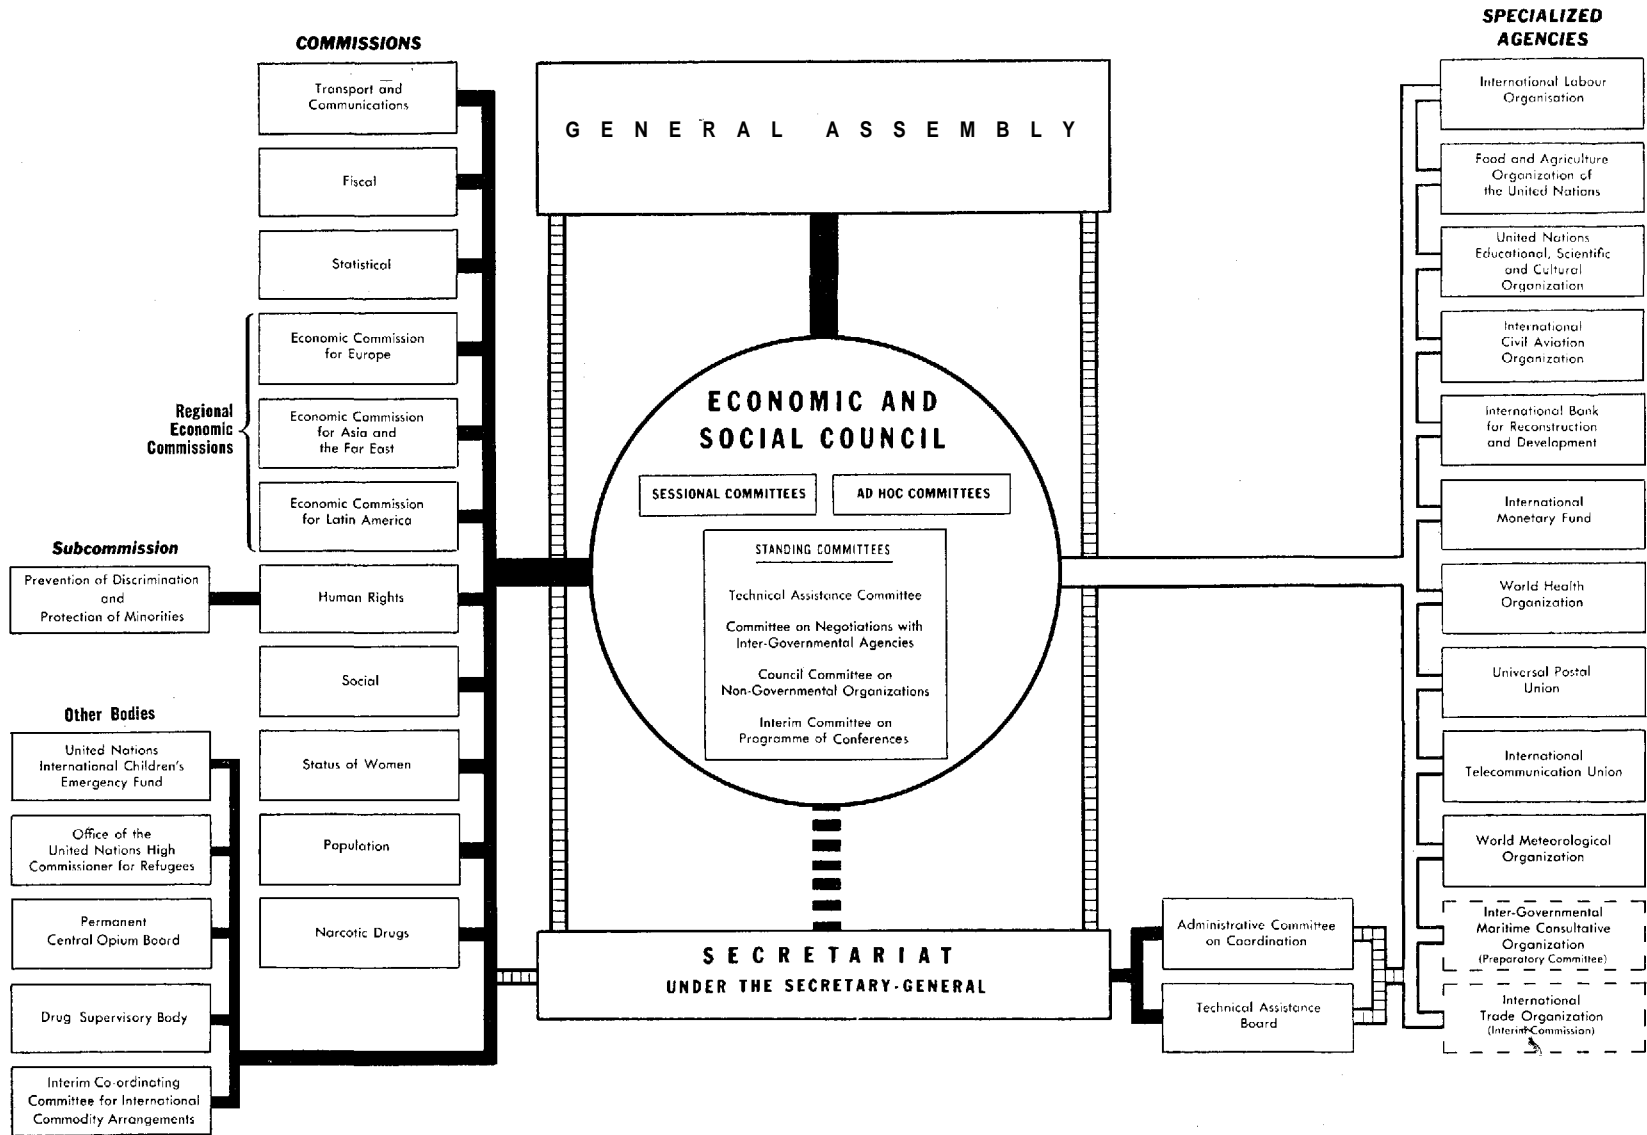

²⁹ Unable to attend session and designated, respectively, as alternates, A. A. Fomin, K. P. Fengsen and R. Hiscocks. Due to illness, Mr. Fengsen was later replaced by P. Y. Tsao.

³⁰ Represented by C. Blank and E. Kulaga, respectively, as alternates.

³¹ Died on 7 September 1912.

³² For terms of reference of these commissions, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 49-52.

STRUCTURE OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

(a) ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE

MEMBERS: Belgium, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Greece, Iceland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Sweden, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

European countries participating in a consultative capacity in the work of the Commission: Albania, Austria, Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Portugal, Romania, Switzerland.

The Commission has established the following principal organs:

- (a) Committee on Agricultural Problems
- (b) Coal Committee
- (c) Committee on Electric Power
- (d) Industry and Materials Committee
- (e) Inland Transport Committee
- (f) Manpower Committee
- (g) Steel Committee
- (h) Timber Committee
- (i) Committee on the Development of Trade

Some of these bodies have established subsidiary bodies of their own. In addition, there are various ad hoc committees and working parties.

(b)

MEMBERS: Australia, Burma, China, France, India, Indonesia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

ASSOCIATE MEMBERS: Cambodia, Ceylon, Hong Kong, Japan, Laos, Malaya and British Borneo, Nepal, Republic of Korea, State of Vietnam.

The Commission has established the following principal organs:

- (i) Committee on Industry and Trade
 - Sub-Committee on Iron and Steel
 - Sub-Committee on Electric Power
- (ii) Inland Transport Committee
 - Inland Waterway Sub-Committee
 - Railway Sub-Committee
 - Highway Sub-Committee

In addition there are various ad hoc committees and working parties.

The Commission also convenes regional conferences, e.g. a Conference on Flood Control, a Conference on Trade Promotion, and a Conference of Statisticians.

(c) ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA

MEMBERS: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, France, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

The Commission has established the following principal organs:

- (i) Committee on Economic Co-operation in Central America
 - Sub-Committee on the Standardization of Tariff Nomenclature in Central America

(3) Standing Committees³³

During 1952 the Economic and Social Council had the following four Standing Committees:

(a) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE COMMITTEE

This Committee is composed of the members of the Economic and Social Council.

(b) COMMITTEE ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH INTER-GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES³⁴

MEMBERS: Belgium, China, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Mexico, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

(c) COUNCIL COMMITTEE ON NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS³⁵

MEMBERS: Canada, China, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Chairman: President of the Economic and Social Council.

(d) INTERIM COMMITTEE ON PROGRAMME OF CONFERENCES³⁶

MEMBERS: China, France, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

(4) Special Bodies³⁷

Under this heading may be placed the following:

(a) PERMANENT CENTRAL OPIUM BOARD

MEMBERS: Pedro Pernambuco (Brazil); Hans Fischer (Switzerland); Sir Harry Greenfield (United Kingdom); Herbert L. May (United States); Paul Reuter (France); Milan Ristic (Yugoslavia); Sedat Tavat (Turkey); Y. N. Yang (China).

(b) DRUG SUPERVISORY BODY

MEMBERS:
Appointed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs: Colonel C. H. L. Sharman (Canada)

Appointed by the Permanent Central Opium Board: Herbert L. May (United States)

Appointed by the World Health Organization: Hans Fischer (Switzerland); Sedat Tavat (Turkey).

(c) UNITED NATIONS INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND

Executive Director: Maurice Pate³⁸

³³ For the terms of reference of these committees, see Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 63-4.

³⁴ Formerly called "Committee on Negotiations with Specialized Agencies".

³⁵ For list of Non-Governmental Organizations in consultative status with the Council see section III, Relations with Non-Governmental Organizations.

³⁶ Formerly called "Interim Committee on Programme of Meetings".

³⁷ These bodies, although not subsidiaries of the Council in the same way as its commissions and committees, are included here since the Council or its subsidiary bodies consider the reports on their activities. For the terms of reference of these bodies, see Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 64-65.

³⁸ Appointed by the Secretary-General in consultation with the Executive Board.

(i) Executive Board

MEMBERS: Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Ceylon, China, Ecuador, France, Greece, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Italy, New Zealand, Peru, Philippines, Switzerland, Thailand, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

(ii) Programme Committee

MEMBERS: Australia, Brazil, Ceylon, China, Ecuador, France, India, Switzerland, USSR, United Kingdom, United States

(iii) Committee on Administrative Budget

MEMBERS: Bolivia, France, Iraq, Israel, New Zealand, Thailand, United States.

(d) ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE ON CO-ORDINATION

Composed of the Secretary-General and the executive heads of the specialized agencies brought into relationship with the United Nations.³⁹

Director-General of ILO, David A. Morse
 Director-General of FAO, Norris E. Dodd
 Acting Director-General of UNESCO, John W. Taylor
 Director-General of WHO, G. Broch Chisholm⁴⁰
 President of the Bank, Eugene R. Black
 Managing Director of the Fund, Ivar Rooth
 President of the Council of ICAO, Edward Warner
 Director of UPU, Fritz Hess
 Secretary-General of ITU, Leon Mulatier
 Secretary-General of WMO, G. Swoboda

(e) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE BOARD

The Technical Assistance Board (TAB) is responsible for co-ordinating the Expanded Programme of technical assistance carried out by the United Nations Technical Assistance Administration and by the specialized agencies participating in the Programme. It reports periodically to the Council's Technical Assistance Committee (TAC) on activities undertaken and results achieved and on funds received and committed under the Expanded Programme. It receives annually and examines the proposed programmes of the participating organizations and makes recommendations concerning them and the total programme to the Council through TAC.

The Technical Assistance Board is composed of an Executive Chairman and the executive heads, or their representatives, of the organizations participating in the Expanded Programme of technical assistance (United Nations, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, ICAO, WHO, ITU, WMO). The Bank and the Fund, though they do not participate in the Expanded Programme and are not titular members of the Board, are represented at its meetings and co-operate fully with the promotion of the objectives of the Programme.

Executive Chairman: David Owen⁴¹

(f) INTERIM CO-ORDINATING COMMITTEE FOR INTERNATIONAL COMMODITY ARRANGEMENTS

Sir James Helmore, nominated by the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization.

R. B. Schwenger, nominated by the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations and concerned in particular with agricultural primary commodities.

Georges Peter, concerned in particular with non-agricultural primary commodities.

(5) Ad Hoc Committees

The Council and its subsidiary organs establish such ad hoc committees as may be required from time to time for special purposes. The following were among those meeting or established during 1952:

MEMBERS: Paal Berg, (Norway), Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar (Chairman) (India), E. Garcia Sayan (Peru).

(b) Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON RESTRICTIVE BUSINESS PRACTICES⁴²

MEMBERS: Belgium, Canada, France, India, Mexico, Pakistan, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

(c) COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS ON A SPECIAL FUND

This Committee was established by the Council on 23 June 1952 to consist of not more than nine persons serving in an individual capacity appointed by the Secretary-General. It was instructed to prepare for the Council's consideration a detailed plan for establishing, as soon as circumstances permit, a special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest, long-term loans to underdeveloped countries.

MEMBERS: Amjad Ali (Pakistan); Fernand Baudhuin (Belgium); C. V. Bramsnaes (Denmark); Miguel Cuaderno (Philippines); Sir Cyril Jones (United Kingdom); Leo Mates (Yugoslavia); Hernán Santa Cruz (Chile); Eduardo Suarez (Mexico); Wayne C. Taylor (United States).

(d) Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON IRON ORE RESOURCES

Established under Council resolution 345 (XII) of 9 March 1951 to initiate a programme designed to promote the systematic survey and inventory of non-agricultural natural resources, paralleling the work already undertaken under the auspices of FAO in the field of agricultural resources.

MEMBERS: F. Blondel (France); Carl E. Dutton (United States); N. S. Krishnan (India); Benjamin Leiding (Chile); G. C. Monture (Canada); F. G. Percival (United Kingdom); Martin Wiberg (Sweden).

³⁹ Agreements are in full force and effect between the United Nations and these agencies in accordance with Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter. An agreement with the proposed Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO), approved by the Assembly in November 1948, will come into force when that Organization is officially established and when the agreement has been approved by the Assembly of IMCO.

The negotiation of an agreement between the United Nations and the International Trade Organization (ITO), when and if established, has been authorized by the Economic and Social Council.

See also under Part II, The Specialized Agencies.

⁴⁰ Resigned in November 1952—his successor was to be appointed at the Sixth World Health Assembly in 1953.

⁴¹ Appointed by the Secretary-General in consultation with the participating organizations.

⁴² For the terms of reference of these committees, see Y.U.N., 1951, p. 53.

(e) SPECIAL RAPPORTEUR

On 25 July 1952 the Council elected S. P. Lopez (Philippines) to serve as Rapporteur on matters relating to freedom of information and to prepare for the Council in 1953 a substantive report covering major contemporary problems and developments in the field, together with recommendations for practical action.

4. The Trusteeship Council

a. CHARTER PROVISIONS

Chapter XII (Articles 75-85) and Chapter XIII (Articles 86-91) deal with the International Trusteeship System, which applies to those territories placed under it by means of Trusteeship Agreements. Chapter XII establishes this System and Chapter XIII defines the composition, functions and powers, voting and procedure of the Trusteeship Council. Other provisions relating to the Council are to be found in Articles 1, 2, 7, 15, 16, 18, 96, 98 and 101. (For text of these Articles, see above.)

(Chapter XI (Articles 73 and 74) of the Charter entitled "Declaration Regarding Non-Self-Governing Territories" applies to dependent territories in general. Summaries and analyses of the information transmitted under Article 73e concerning dependent territories not placed under the International Trusteeship System are examined by a special committee of the General Assembly.)⁴³

b. TRUSTEESHIP AGREEMENTS

Trusteeship Agreements placing the following Territories under the International Trusteeship System have been approved; the Administering Authorities are designated in the Agreements.

Administering Authority	Trust Territory	Agreement Approved by General Assembly
Australia	New Guinea	13 Dec. 1946
Belgium	Ruanda-Urundi	13 Dec. 1946
France	Cameroons under French Administration	13 Dec. 1946
France	Togoland under French Administration	13 Dec. 1946
Italy	Somaliland under Italian Administration	2 Dec. 1950
New Zealand	Western Samoa	13 Dec. 1946
United Kingdom	Cameroons under British Administration	13 Dec. 1946
United Kingdom	Togoland under British Administration	13 Dec. 1946

Administering Authority	Trust Territory	Agreement Approved by General Assembly
United Kingdom	Tanganyika	13 Dec. 1946
United Kingdom, New Zealand and Australia (administered by Australia)	Nauru	1 Nov. 1947
United States	Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (Strategic Area)	Approved by Security Council 2 April 1947

Although the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement vary, all contain most of the following provisions:

(1) Definition of the Territory to which the Agreement applies.

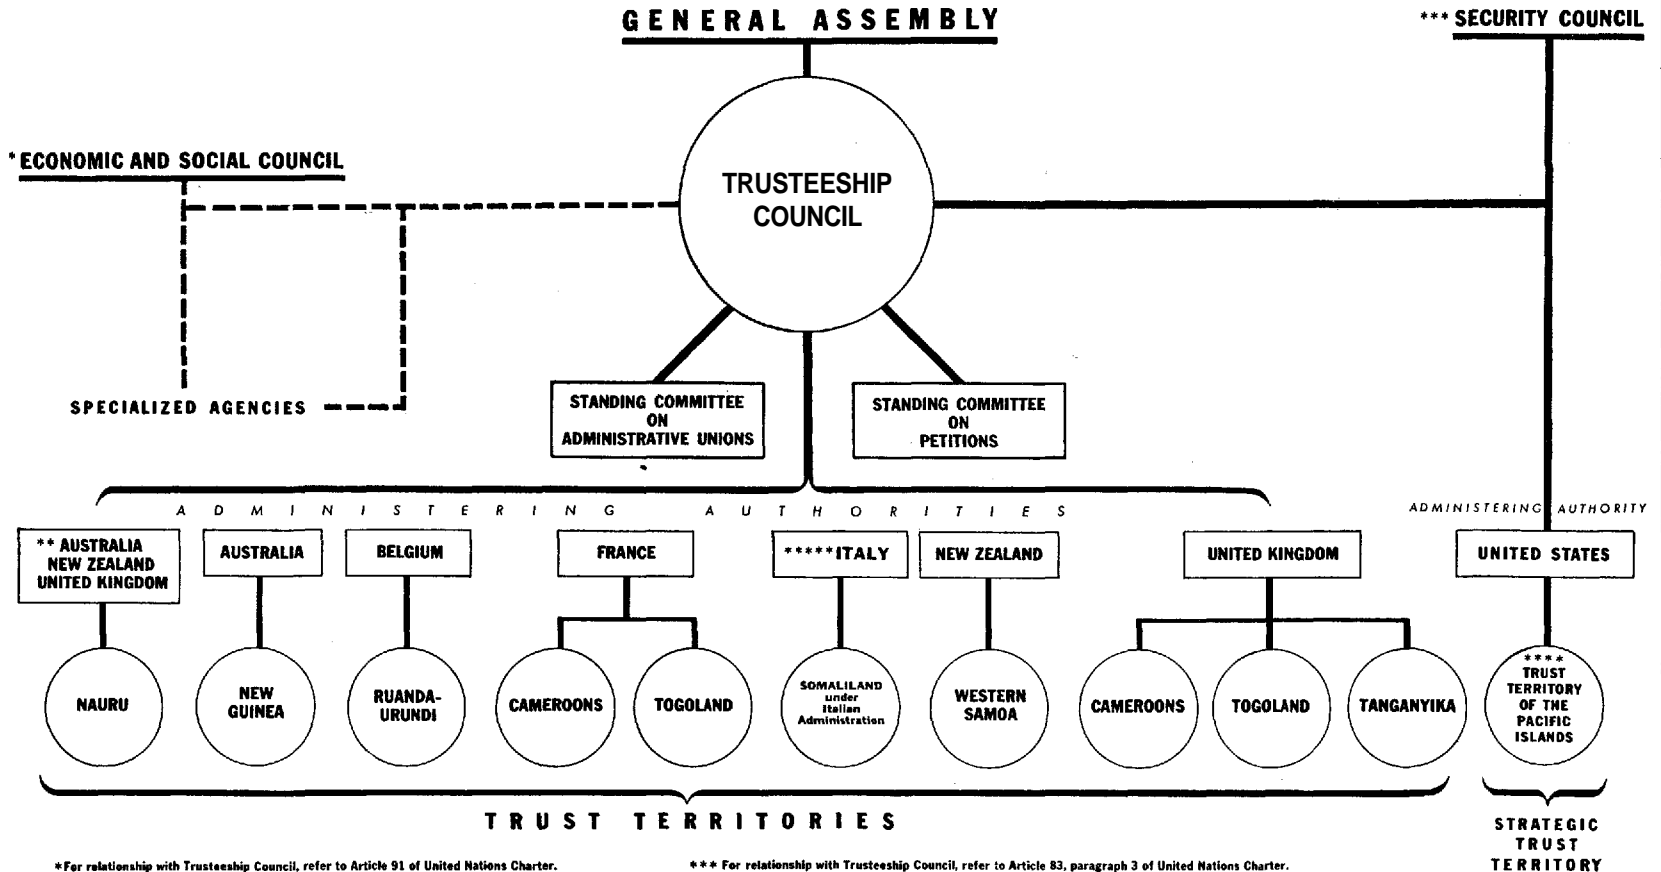

(2) Designation of the Administering Authority.

(3) Obligations of the Administering Authority: (a) to administer the Territory so as to achieve the basic objectives of Trusteeship as laid down in Article 76 of the Charter; (b) to be responsible for the peace, order and good government of the Territory and for ensuring that it plays its part in the maintenance of international peace and security; (c) to develop free political institutions and to give the inhabitants an increasing share in the government of the Territory; (d) to respect the rights of the indigenous inhabitants over land, and not to allow the land or natural resources of the indigenous population to be transferred, except with the previous consent of the competent public authority, which must respect the rights and safeguard the interests of the indigenous population; (e) to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, industrial and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, without prejudice to the attainment of the objectives of the Trusteeship System; (f) to develop education; (g) to guarantee to the inhabitants freedom of religion, of worship, of speech, of the Press, of assembly and of petition, subject only to requirements of public order.

(4) Rights of the Administering Authority: It is to have full powers of legislation, administration and jurisdiction in the Territory. (Certain Agreements specify that it may administer the Territory as an integral part of its own territory, subject to the provisions of the Charter and the Agreement.) It may constitute the Territory into a customs, fiscal, or administrative union or federation with adjacent territories under its control. It may establish naval, military and air bases, erect fortifications, and take other measures necessary for defence, and may also use volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from the Territory in carrying out the obligations to the Security Council undertaken by the Administering Authority, as well as for local defence. It may organize public services and works on conditions it thinks just, may create fiscal monopolies if this serves the interests of the inhabitants and may create other monopolies under proper public control, provided that in the case of monopolies granted to private agencies there is no discrimination, on the grounds of nationality, against Members of the United Nations or their nationals. It may arrange for the co-operation of the Territory in any ⁴³ See Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories.

STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

* For relationship with Trusteeship Council, refer to Article 91 of United Nations Charter.

 Australia exercises full powers of legislation, administration, and jurisdiction on behalf of the three governments which jointly constitute the Administering Authority.

 For relationship with Trusteeship Council, refer to Article 83, paragraph 3 of United Nations Charter.

* Marshalls, the Carolines, and the Marianas (with the exception of Guam).

 Italy, as Administering Authority, is aided and advised by a three-member United Nations Advisory Council. Italy participates, without vote, in the deliberations of the Council. The Territory is to become an independent State in 1960.

regional or technical organization, specialized international agencies or other forms of international activity not inconsistent with the Charter.

(5) The terms of the Agreement may be altered or amended only in accordance with the provisions of the Charter.

(6) Any dispute between the Administering Authority and another Member of the United Nations concerning the interpretation or application of the Agreement which cannot be settled otherwise must be submitted to the International Court of Justice.

Most of these provisions are included in the Agreement for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. The Trusteeship Agreement for this strategic area differs in certain respects from the Agreements for other Trust Territories:

In this Agreement the extent of the applicability of the functions and powers of Trusteeship Council is made dependent upon security requirements. Most-favoured-nation treatment is reserved for the Administering Authority and the question of air traffic rights is specifically reserved for separate agreements. The Administering Authority may, from time to time, specify certain areas in the Territory as closed for security reasons.

The Trusteeship Agreement for Somaliland under Italian Administration includes, in somewhat more specific terms than in other Agreements, the general provisions outlined above. In addition, it includes the following new features:

The Agreement provides that the Trust Territory shall receive its independence at the end of a fixed period of time—ten years. It provides that the Administering Authority be aided and advised by an Advisory Council. It includes, as an annex, a declaration of constitutional principles which expressly guarantees the rights and liberties of the population and proclaims that the sovereignty of the Territory is vested in its people, who shall be given a status of citizenship of the Territory; this declaration forms an integral part of the Agreement.

C. MEMBERS⁴⁴

Members Administering Trust Territories:

Australia, Belgium, France, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States.

Members mentioned by name in Article 23 of the Charter and not administering Trust Territories:

China, USSR.

Members elected by the General Assembly:

El Salvador, Iraq (to serve until 31 December 1952); Dominican Republic, Thailand (to serve until 31 December 1953).

d. SUBSIDIARY BODIES OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

(1) Standing Committees

During 1952 the Council had the following Standing Committees:

(a) STANDING COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE UNIONS⁴⁵

MEMBERS: China, New Zealand, Thailand, United States.

(b) STANDING COMMITTEE ON PETITIONS

The Committee meets during sessions of the Council and, when it considers necessary, between Council sessions. Subject to a review by the Council, it screens certain petitions concerning general problems and communications to the Council and decides whether any of them ought to be treated as a petition. It conducts, in consultation with a representative of the Administering Authority concerned, a preliminary examination of all petitions and recommends to the Council the action to be taken in each case.

The Standing Committee on Petitions consists of three members of the Trusteeship Council administering Trust Territories and three non-administering members appointed by the Council at the end of each session to serve until the close of the next session.

MEMBERS:

Australia, China, El Salvador, New Zealand, USSR, United States.⁴⁶

Belgium, China, El Salvador, New Zealand, USSR, United States.⁴⁷

(2) Ad Hoc Committees

The Council, from time to time, establishes ad hoc committees to deal with specific questions as required. The following were among those meeting or established during 1952:

(a) DRAFTING COMMITTEE ON THE QUESTIONNAIRE

The Council, on 14 July 1950, appointed the Drafting Committee on the Questionnaire to undertake a revision of the Provisional Questionnaire on the basis of which annual reports are transmitted by Administering Authorities on their administration of Trust Territories.

MEMBERS: Belgium, Dominican Republic, Iraq, United Kingdom.

(b) COMMITTEE ON RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The Committee was established by the Council on 16 March 1951 to study the prevailing policies, laws and practices which in the Trust Territories relate to land, land utilization and the alienation of land.

MEMBERS: China, Dominican Republic, France, Thailand, United Kingdom, United States.

(c) COMMITTEE ON GENERAL PROCEDURE OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The Committee was set up to review the general procedures of the Council.

MEMBERS: China, France, Iraq, United States.

⁴⁴ Italy, as an Administering Authority which is not a Member of the United Nations, takes part without the right to vote in the Council's deliberations concerning the Trust Territory of Somaliland and concerning general questions affecting the operation of the International Trusteeship System.

For election of members to take office on 1 January 1953, see p. 88.

⁴⁵ For the terms of reference of this Committee, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 85-87.

⁴⁶ Appointed on 13 March 1952 to serve until the end of the Council's eleventh session (24 July 1952).

⁴⁷ Appointed on 24 July to serve until the end of the Council's twelfth session in 1953, at the beginning of which China was to be replaced by the Dominican Republic.

(d) COMMITTEE ON THE ORGANIZATION AND FUNCTIONING OF VISITING MISSIONS

The Council established this Committee on 29 February 1952 to review its procedures with respect to the organization and functioning of visiting missions.

MEMBERS: Australia, Dominican Republic, Thailand, United Kingdom.

(e) COMMITTEE ON PARTICIPATION OF THE INDIGENOUS INHABITANTS OF THE TRUST TERRITORIES IN THE WORK OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

This Committee was established by the Council on 26 March 1952 to study the possibility of associating more closely the inhabitants of the Trust Territories in the work of the Council.

MEMBERS: Dominican Republic, El Salvador, France, Thailand, United Kingdom, United States.

(3) Visiting Missions

In addition, periodic official visits to Territories under Trusteeship are made by Visiting Missions consisting of members appointed by the Council. During 1952 the Council sent one visiting mission to the Trust Territories in West Africa and approved the terms of reference and composition of a Visiting Mission to the Trust Territories in the Pacific.⁴⁸

(a) UNITED NATIONS VISITING MISSION TO TRUST TERRITORIES IN WEST AFRICA, 1952⁴⁹

MEMBERS: Roy Albert Peachey (Chairman) (Australia); Robert Scheyven (Belgium); H. K. Yang (China); Roberto E. Quiros (El Salvador).

5. The International Court of Justicea. PROVISIONS OF THE CHARTER AND THE COURT'S STATUTE

The Charter provisions concerning the Court are contained in Chapter XIV (Articles 92-96) which defines the positions of the Court in the United Nations organizations, the obligations of Members of the United Nations with respect to the Court and the relationship between the Court and the other organs of the United Nations. The Statute of the Court, which forms an integral part of the Charter, contains five Chapters. Chapter I deals with the Court's organization; Chapter II defines its competence; Chapter III sets forth its procedure; Chapter IV lays down the conditions under which the Court may give advisory opinions; and Chapter V contains provisions for amendments to the Statute. (For text, see above.)

b. PARTIES TO THE STATUTE OF THE COURT

All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Court's Statute. Non-United Nations members may become parties in accordance with terms determined in each case by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council. Switzerland and Liechtenstein have become parties to the Statute of the Court under this provision, Switzerland on 28 June 1948, Liechtenstein on 29 March 1950. The terms laid down by the General Assembly on the Security Council's recommendation were identical in both cases. They provided for the deposit with the Secretary-General of the United Nations of an instrument containing:

Acceptance of the Statute; acceptance of the obligations under Article 94 of the Charter; and an undertaking to contribute to the expenses of the Court an equitable amount assessed by the Assembly from time to time after consultation with the government concerned.

c. MEMBERS

The names and nationality of the judges, in order of precedence, with the year their term of office ends is:

Sir Arnold Duncan McNair (British) (President)	1955
Jose Gustavo Guerrero (Salvadorian)
(Vice-President)	1955
Alejandro Alvarez (Chilean)	1955
Jules Basdevant (French)	1955
Green H. Hackworth (United States)	1961
Bohdan Winiarski (Polish)	1958
Milovan Zoricic (Yugoslav)	1958
Helge Klaestad (Norwegian)	1961
Abdel Hamid Badawi (Egyptian)	1958
John E. Read (Canadian)	1958
Hsu Mo (Chinese)	1958
Levi Fernandes Carneiro (Brazilian)	1955
Sir Benegal N. Rau (Indian)	1961
E. C. Armand Ugon (Uruguayan)	1961
Sergei A. Golunsky (USSR)	1961

d. CHAMBER OF SUMMARY PROCEDURE

The members of the Chamber of Summary Procedure, elected for one year, beginning 6 May 1952 were:

MEMBERS: President: Sir Arnold Duncan McNair; Vice-President: Jose Gustavo Guerrero; Judges Basdevant, Hackworth and Hsu Mo; Substitutes: Judges Klaestad and Badawi.

6. The Secretariata. CHARTER PROVISIONS

The main Charter provisions concerning the Secretariat are contained in Chapter XV (Articles 97-101). Other provisions are to be found in Articles 7, 12, 20, 73, 102, 105 and 110 of the Charter, and Articles 5, 7, 13, 14, 18, 36, 40, 67 and 70 of the Statute of the Court. (For texts, see above.)

⁴⁸ See also Chapter IV.

⁴⁹ For the terms of reference of this Mission, see Chapter IV.

STRUCTURE OF THE SECRETARIAT *

* There is also a United Nations Office at Geneva which comprises all the elements of the United Nations Secretariat established at Geneva, and of which the Economic Commission for Europe and the Geneva Information Centre, shown above, are administratively a part.

In addition to staff members serving at Headquarters, at the Geneva Office, at the regional economic centres, and at the information centres, other staff members also serve United Nations Missions in such places as Korea and Palestine. There are also several specialized secretariats, such as the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund, the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

b. TERMS OF APPOINTMENT OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

The General Assembly, on 24 January 1946, decided (resolution 11(I)) that the terms of appointment of the Secretary-General should be such as to enable a man of eminence and high attainment to accept and maintain the position, and that the first Secretary-General should be appointed for five years, the appointment being open at the end of that period for a further five-year term. The Assembly and the Security Council, it was noted, were free to modify the term of office of future Secretaries-General. The Assembly also stated that because the Secretary-General was a confidant of many governments, it was desirable that no Member should offer him, immediately upon retirement, any governmental position, and that he, on his part, should refrain from accepting any such positions.

c. COMPOSITION

The Secretariat comprises a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General during 1952 was Trygve Lie⁵⁰ and at the end of 1952 the Headquarters staff numbered 3,426⁵¹ drawn from 54 Member and 6 Non-member States.⁵²

d. ADMINISTRATIVE ORGANIZATION OF THE SECRETARIAT (AS OF 31 DECEMBER 1952)

The Secretariat is divided into eight Departments, a Technical Assistance Administration and an Executive Office of the Secretary-General. In part, it represents a division of responsibility according to the type of work performed. Each Department is headed by an Assistant Secretary-General; the Technical Assistance Administration by a Director-General; and the Executive Office by an Executive Assistant. Any Assistant Secretary-General may be designated to act for the Secretary-General in his absence. The main divisions of the Secretariat are as follows:

- Executive Office of the Secretary-General
- Department of Political and Security Council Affairs
- Department of Economic Affairs
- Technical Assistance Administration
- Department of Social Affairs
- Department of Trusteeship and Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories
- Department of Public Information
- Legal Department
- Conference and General Services
- Administrative and Financial Services

Also at Headquarters are offices of the secretariats of the Technical Assistance Board, the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East.

Some staff members are assigned to service the three regional economic commissions and the various information centres throughout the world.

There is, further, a United Nations Office at Geneva which comprises all the elements of the United Nations Secretariat established at Geneva, of which the regional Economic Commission for Europe and the Geneva Information Centre are administratively a part.

Staff members at Headquarters or any other established office may be detailed to serve on United Nations Missions in such places as Korea, Libya and Palestine.

The functions of the various divisions of the Secretariat and their sub-divisions are described below.

(1) Executive Office of the Secretary-General

It is the responsibility of the Executive Office of the Secretary-General:

- To assist the Secretary-General in the over-all co-ordination of the work of the various departments of the Secretariat;

- To assist the Secretary-General in relations with Member and non-member Governments and their delegations and in relations with specialized agencies;

- To co-ordinate the work of the Secretariat in the preparation for and servicing of the General Assembly and to supervise the implementation of General Assembly resolutions;

- To assist the Secretary-General in the determination of United Nations policy;

- To co-ordinate the work of the United Nations missions;

- To co-ordinate the research and publications programme of the United Nations;

- To determine United Nations correspondence policy and to promote its implementation;

- To determine policy and advise on questions relating to United Nations protocol;

- To perform other functions not delegated to various departments of the Secretariat.

The Executive Office of the Secretary-General is organized into an Office of the Executive Assistant to the Secretary-General, a General Assembly Affairs and Administrative Section, a Protocol and Liaison Section, an Office of the Director of Co-ordination for Specialized Agencies and Economic and Social Matters, and a Specialized Agencies Section.

Under the general direction of the Executive Assistant to the Secretary-General, the United Nations Library is responsible, at Headquarters, for all library services, the acquisition of all library materials and the indexing of all United Nations documents. Its primary function is to provide to members of delegations, to the Secretariat and to the other organs of the United Nations the library materials and information needed in the execution of their duties.

⁵⁰ Mr. Lie was succeeded on 10 April 1953 by Dag Hammarskjöld.

⁵¹ Includes Field Service and Manual Workers.

⁵² The principal officers of the Secretariat are given in Annex V.

(2) Department of Political and Security Council Affairs

It is the responsibility of the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs:

To provide substantive servicing and, in co-operation with Conference and General Services, general administrative and other services to the Security Council and its subsidiary organs (the Committee of Experts and the Committee on the Admission of New Members), the Disarmament Commission, the First Committee and the Ad Hoc Political Committee of the General Assembly, the Peace Observation Commission and its Balkans Sub-Commission, the Palestine Conciliation Commission, the Special Committee on the Admission of New Members established by General Assembly resolution 620 (VII), and sub-committees and working groups of the above-mentioned organs, and for the sub-committees and working groups of the Interim Committee of the General Assembly;

To assist the Secretary-General in the performance of his duties under Article 99 of the Charter;

To provide advice to the President of the Security Council on its rules of procedure;

To prepare working papers dealing with matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the promotion of international political co-operation;

To prepare surveys on international political events;

To advise with regard to the pacific settlement of disputes;

To undertake the preparation of and to maintain up-to-date a repertoire of the practice of the Security Council in accordance with General Assembly resolution 686 (VII);

To prepare studies, working papers, and other material relevant to the work of the Disarmament Commission and committees and working groups thereof;

To participate in investigations and advise on the security aspects of Trusteeship Agreements for strategic areas;

To participate, with the Military Staff Committee Secretariat, in the elaboration and application of military enforcement measures;

To establish and service, in co-operation with the Missions Co-ordination Committee, committees or commissions of investigation or conciliation created by the General Assembly or the Security Council;

To direct and co-ordinate the substantive work of such committees or commissions;

To provide Political Affairs Officers to serve as Principal Secretaries, Deputy Principal Secretaries, and Assistant Secretaries on such committees or commissions; and

To undertake any additional work assigned to it by the Secretary-General.

At the end of 1952, the Department consisted of the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General, the General Political Division, the Administrative and General Division, and the Disarmament Affairs Group.

The General Political Division consists of the Office of the Director and the following five sections: the General Political Problems and Procedures of Pacific Settlements Section, the European Affairs Section, the Middle East and African Affairs Section, the Asia and Pacific Affairs Section and the Western Hemisphere Affairs and Regional Arrangements Section.

The Administrative and General Division comprises three sections: the Substantive Servicing of the Security Council Section, the Substantive Servicing of Political Committees Section and the Administrative Section.

The Disarmament Affairs Group consists of the Office of the Director and two sections: the Atomic Energy Section and the Conventional Armaments and Enforcement Measures Section.

During 1952, the Department of Security Council Affairs changed its title to Department of Political and Security Council Affairs in order to describe more properly its functions.

By General Assembly resolution 502(VI) of 11 January 1952, the Atomic Energy Commission was dissolved and a Disarmament Commission was established under the Security Council. Further, as recommended by this resolution, the Security Council took action at its 571st meeting, on 30 January 1952, to dissolve the Commission for Conventional Armaments. Pursuant to these changes, the Department established, in March 1952, the Disarmament Affairs Group, headed by a Director, and including the two Sections previously servicing the Atomic Energy Commission and the Commission for Conventional Armaments. Also, during 1952, the number of sections of the Administrative and General Division was reduced to three.

MILITARY STAFF COMMITTEE SECRETARIAT

The secretariat of the Military Staff Committee serves the Committee in its various functions as defined by the Security Council. It is organized as an independent unit of the Secretariat because of the particular status of the Committee, and comprises three small sections dealing with administration, languages and documents.

(3) Department of Economic Affairs

It is the responsibility of the Department of Economic Affairs:

To provide such services and assistance as are required by the organs of the United Nations in respect of the economic and statistical problems with which they have to deal. These organs include particularly the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and its commissions, both functional and regional. The Department provides other branches of the Secretariat with economic and statistical information and advice, and prepares and publishes economic studies, reports, yearbooks and other periodicals.

In carrying out its responsibilities in the economic field, the Department maintains close touch with the specialized agencies in the fields of labour, food and agriculture, trade, transport and communications, banking and finance, and is responsible for servicing international conferences in these fields convened under the auspices of the United Nations. Operational responsibilities for the Expanded Programme of technical assistance and for the International Centre for Training in Public Administration are assigned to the Technical Assistance Administration (see below). However, this Department has responsibility for study and research and the formulation of general policy related to economic development. To the extent that its resources permit, it assists the Technical Assistance Administration by policy guidance, provision of background material, assistance in selection and briefing of experts and the reviewing of reports in connexion with the programme.

The Department of Economic Affairs comprises the office of its Assistant Secretary-General (which includes the Regional Commissions Section) and the divisions described below.

The Division of Economic Stability and Development consists of the office of its Director; and sections dealing with economic stability, economic development, international financial and commercial relations and current trade analysis;

The Fiscal Division has, besides its Director's office, a budgetary research section and an international tax section.

In the Transport and Communications Division are the office of the Director and sections dealing with inland transport; aviation, shipping and communications; and research and documentation.

The Statistical Office consists of the office of its Director, and branches dealing with economic statistics, demographic and social statistics, and national accounts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL SECRETARIAT

Although dealing with functions common to the Department of Social Affairs and the Department of Economic Affairs, for purely administrative purposes the Economic and Social Council secretariat forms part of the latter Department. It includes a unit responsible for consultative arrangements with non-governmental organizations.

REGIONAL SECRETARIATS

The secretariats of the regional economic commissions (Economic Commission for Europe, Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, and Economic Commission for Latin America, located respectively at Geneva, Bangkok and Santiago de Chile) are appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with the commissions' terms of reference.

The Office of the Assistant Secretary-General in the Department of Economic Affairs, with the assistance of the Regional Commissions Section, is responsible for formulating Headquarters policy for the guidance of the regional economic commissions' secretariats, and for ensuring that their activities are duly co-ordinated.

(4) Technical Assistance Administration

The Technical Assistance Administration is concerned with the operations under United Nations technical assistance programmes for: (1) advisory social welfare services; (2) economic development of under-developed countries; (3) assistance and training in public administration; and (4) the Expanded Programme of technical assistance for the economic development of under-developed countries. The first three programmes are financed by the regular United Nations budget; the Expanded Programme is financed by voluntary contributions from governments. The expanded programme is carried out in conjunction with the specialized agencies and is co-ordinated by the Technical Assistance Board (TAB).

Technical assistance is rendered only at the request of the government of the country concerned; it is primarily directed at aiding under-developed countries in their economic and social development.

The Technical Assistance Administration in meeting requests for assistance:

Provides experts in specified fields either to advise governments on over-all problems of development, as well as on specific problems and on priorities in the selection of development projects, or in carrying out such projects;

Arranges training facilities, through the provision of fellowships and scholarships enabling specialists to observe and to study in a foreign country the best techniques in their fields, and through the organization of national and regional training centres;

Arranges for international conferences of specialists for the purpose of exchanging information on a specific activity;

Distributes technical literature and films;

Arranges for demonstration projects and assists governments to obtain technical personnel and equipment for demonstration purposes.

The Technical Assistance Administration consists of the following units: an Office of the Director-General and Deputy Director-General with Central Administrative Services; Directorate of Co-ordination and Planning; Directorate of Operations, and Public Administration Division.

(5) Department of Social Affairs

It is the responsibility of this Department:

To provide substantive and technical services and secretariat assistance to the Third Committee of the Assembly, to the Economic and Social Council and to several of its functional committees, other ad hoc committees and working groups, and to all organs or branches of the Secretariat which may require information, technical advice and other services in the field of social welfare and development, human rights, demography and narcotic drugs;

To perform certain functions and undertake numerous activities under the international treaties and the resolutions and decisions of various organs of the United Nations in connexion with narcotic drugs, child welfare, traffic in women and children and in obscene publications (some of these functions had formerly been the responsibility of the League of Nations);

To maintain liaison and develop working relations on technical problems: on the one hand, with Member Governments and with the specialized agencies, inter-governmental bodies and other research and professional organizations which are concerned with international or regional problems in these and other social fields; and on the other hand, with the departmental and organizational units of the Secretariat which are interested in the social aspects of the work of the Organization;

To undertake the publication of periodicals, annual reports from governments, yearbooks and technical reports and studies in the social field;

To advise the Secretary-General on all matters in the social welfare fields as set out in Chapters IX and X (which deal respectively with international economic and social co-operation and with the Economic and Social Council) of the Charter;

To undertake such additional tasks as may be assigned to it by the Secretary-General.

The Department is organized into an Office of the Assistant Secretary-General, to which is attached a Cartographic Office, and Divisions for: Human Rights, Narcotic Drugs, Population, and Social Welfare.

The Cartographic Office implements Economic and Social Council resolutions on this subject and publishes an annual bulletin: World Cartography.

The Division of Human Rights is organized into an office of the Director, five sections and a secretariat pool. The five sections are concerned with: (1) the work of the Commission on Human Rights; (2) special aspects of the human rights programme such as freedom of information, forced labour, freedom of association (trade union rights) and the plight of survivors of concentration camps; (3) the work of the Commission on the Status of Women; (4) special aspects of the human rights programme, such as prevention of discrimination, protection of minorities, abolition of slavery and servitude and problems of statelessness; (5) the work of the Ad Hoc Commission on Prisoners of War, the preparation of the Yearbook on Human Rights and other human rights publications, communications relating to human rights, co-operation with specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations concerning human rights, and the development of human rights educational programmes.

The Division of Narcotic Drugs comprises three sections and a unit reporting daily to the Director. The three sections deal with: (1) implementation of existing treaties for the international control of narcotics; (2) research, and the study and formulation of new measures to strengthen international control; (3) providing secretariat services and liaison with United Nations organs and specialized agencies in this field. The Unit prepares the quarterly Bulletin on Narcotics and material for use by other United Nations organs.

The Population Division has the responsibility of providing the information on population trends and problems which is needed by the various offices of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. For this purpose the Division carries out studies of relationships between population trends and economic and social conditions, and studies of demographic aspects of mortality, fertility, and migration; and makes population estimates and forecasts as required.

The Division of Social Welfare comprises the Office of the Director and the following sections: a Social Policy and Development Section (concerned with standards of living, community organization and development, world social survey programmes of social development and migration); a Housing and Town and Country Planning Section (the duties of which include publication of a bulletin and maintenance of a reference centre); a Social Services Section (concerned with the organization and training of social workers, planning of social administration, family and child and youth welfare, rehabilitation of the physically handicapped, and liaison with UNICEF); a Social Defence Section (concerned with the publication of a bulletin on international criminal policy, implementation of the International Convention for the Suppression of Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, and for the continuation of the functions of the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission); and a Social Reference Centre (providing technical information services).

(6) Department of Trusteeship and Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories

This Department:

Services the Trusteeship Council and the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories as well as the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly (on questions arising under Chapters XI, XII and XIII of the Charter);

Informs the Secretary-General of problems and developments in the field of Trusteeship and information from Non-Self-Governing Territories;

Supplies other organs of the United Nations and departments of the Secretariat with information concerning Trust Territories and Non-Self-Governing Territories and the non-security aspects of strategic areas; and Co-operates with various specialized agencies on matters relating to conditions in these Territories.

The Department consists of the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General, which is responsible for the planning, directing and co-ordination of the substantive and administrative functions of the Department, and the two divisions—the Division of Trusteeship and the Division of Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories.

The Division of Trusteeship is primarily concerned with the functioning of the International Trusteeship System. It provides required studies and documentation for the Trusteeship Council and assists it in: the drafting and consideration of Trusteeship Agreements; formulation of questionnaires concerning Trust Territories; examination of annual reports of Administering Authorities; acceptance and examination of petitions; and periodic official visits and surveys. The Division is organized into the office of its Director and five sections: Trusteeship Agreements, Questionnaires and Annual Reports, Petitions, Visits, and Territorial Research and Analysis.

The Division of Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories classifies, summarizes and analyses information transmitted under Article 73e of the Charter and other supplemental official information for the consideration of the General Assembly and its Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. The Division undertakes studies on economic, social and educational conditions in Non-Self-Governing Territories, so that the information available may be included in relevant programmes of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. It publishes every three years full summaries and analyses of the information on these Territories transmitted by the Administering Members, and, in the intervening years, annual supplements. The Division is composed of the office of its Director; sections on African, Pacific-Asian and Caribbean areas; and a Specialists Unit.

(7) Department of Public Information

This Department:

Advises the Secretary-General on information policy;

Supervises and maintains facilities at Headquarters for representatives of all information media;

Maintains Information Centres away from Headquarters to disseminate United Nations information throughout the world;

Provides services for press coverage of United Nations activities and issues informative publications;

Organizes sales and distribution throughout the world of all informative material issued by the United Nations;

Broadcasts accounts of United Nations activities and provides facilities for commercial and governmental broadcasting services;

Co-ordinates, together with the information services of the specialized agencies, the dissemination of information on the United Nations and the specialized agencies through the Consultative Committee on Public Information for the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies;

Works with the United Nations Film Board, produces and encourages the production of films on subjects connected with the United Nations and all the specialized agencies;

Maintains and encourages film and photographic coverage of United Nations activities and maintains files of prints for publication purposes; and Provides United Nations information material and related services to educational agencies, lecturers and non-governmental organizations.

The Department of Public Information is organized as follows: Office of the Assistant Secretary-General and External Services; Management and Circulation Division, with an Executive Office, an Overseas Administration Unit and a Sales and Circulation Section; Press and Publications Bureau, with the Central Information and Press Services, consisting of the Office of Press Services, the Central Editorial Services, the Regional and Overseas Services and the Features Services; and the Publications and Research Services, consisting of the Publications Services and the Research Services; Radio Division, with an English Language Service, European Service, French Service, Russian Service, Latin American Service, Middle Eastern Service, Chinese Service, South East Asia Service, Reports Desk, Technical Service, Television Service (live and kinescope), and a Record Library; Films and Visual Information Division, with a Films and Television Section and a Visual Information Section; and Special Services Division, with a Non-Governmental Organizations Section, Education Section and Headquarters Services.

At the end of 1952, eighteen information centres were serving the following areas:

Belgrade Information Centre—Yugoslavia.

Buenos Aires Information Centre—Argentina, Bolivia, Paraguay and Uruguay.

Cairo Information Centre—Egypt, Ethiopia, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen.

Copenhagen Information Centre—Denmark, Iceland, Norway, Sweden and, on request, Finland.

Geneva Information Centre—Switzerland, Germany, Italy, Austria, Turkey, Greece, Israel, Albania, Romania, Bulgaria, Hungary and Poland. It also provides coverage of all meetings held at the United Nations Office in Geneva.

Karachi Information Centre—Pakistan.

London Information Centre—the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, British dependencies and Ireland; makes transportation arrangements for Secretariat officials and representatives of governments travelling on United Nations business.

Mexico Information Centre—Mexico, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Cuba, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama and El Salvador.

Monrovia Information Centre—Liberia.

Moscow Information Centre—USSR, Byelorussian SSR and Ukrainian SSR.

New Delhi Information Centre—Burma, Ceylon and India.

Paris Information Centre—Belgium, France, French dependencies and Luxembourg.

Prague Information Centre—Czechoslovakia

Rio de Janeiro Information Centre—Brazil.

Shanghai Information Centre—China, Indonesia, the Philippines and Thailand.

Sydney Information Centre—Australia and New Zealand.

Teheran Information Centre—Afghanistan and Iran.

Washington Information Centre. Differing from other centres because it is located so close to Headquarters, this Centre provides public information services to press and radio correspondents in Washington, to government agencies, embassies, legations, specialized agencies with headquarters in Washington and the United States information media, and channels to United Nations Headquarters information from specialized agencies having headquarters in Washington.

(8) Legal Department

This Department furnishes legal assistance and advice to the organs of the United Nations and other departments in the Secretariat; prepares studies and recommendations with a view to encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification; participates in proceedings in the International Court of Justice and other judicial and arbitral bodies; and has responsibility for registration and publication of treaties and depositary functions entrusted to the Secretary-General. In fulfilling these functions, the Department:

Prepares legal studies and opinions on legal and constitutional questions arising in the United Nations, including questions on the interpretation and application of the Charter;

Furnishes legal advisers to the various commissions and committees of the United Nations and to international conferences;

Assists in the drafting of international conventions, resolutions, rules and regulations, and renders opinions on their interpretation;

Prepares legal statements to be submitted to the International Court of Justice and other judicial bodies on behalf of the Secretary-General;

Handles prosecution and negotiation of claims for the United Nations and, where required, furnishes legal services when claims are brought against the Organization;

Handles drafting and negotiation of important contracts;

Serves as the secretariat for the Sixth Committee of the General Assembly, the International Law Commission and ad hoc committees dealing with legal problems, and prepares the necessary documents for their sessions;

Carries on research work, prepares studies and memoranda to facilitate the work of the International Law Commission in the field of development and codification;

Prepares publications consisting of judicial reports, collections of agreements, collections of national legislation, and other legal material;

Deals with questions concerning privileges and immunities and legal capacity of the United Nations;

Registers, records and publishes treaties and issues the United Nations Treaty Series;

Exercises depositary functions entrusted to the Secretary-General under multilateral international instruments;

Deals with questions relating to credentials of representatives to organs of the United Nations.

The Department comprises the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General; the General Legal Division; the Division for the Development and Codification of International Law and the Division of Immunities and Treaties.

(9) Conference and General Services

This Department makes arrangements and provides services for meetings of the General Assembly, the councils, commissions and committees and special conferences held under the auspices of the United Nations. In fulfilling these functions, the Department:

Co-operates with the departments concerned in scheduling conferences and meetings;

Co-ordinates the service activities and provides translation, interpretation, reproduction and graphic presentation services for conferences and for the Secretariat;

Edits and publishes the journals and official records of conferences and meetings;

Provides such general services as technical telecommunications facilities, purchasing, stores and warehousing, commercial arrangements for printing, transportation arrangements, and hotel accommodations; and Handles mail, cables, telephone and telegraph services and supervises registries and files.

Conference and General Services consists of the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General, with a Conference Section; the Bureau of General Services; and the Bureau of Documents.

The Bureau of General Services consists of the Office of the Director and three divisions. The Purchase and Transportation Division is organized into the office of its Director and sections devoted to administration, purchase, standards and control, freight and supply, and travel. The Communications and Records Division is organized into archives, registry and communications sections. The Buildings Management Service comprises operations, safety, security and central services sections.

In addition to the above three divisions, there is also a Telecommunication Service and a United Nations Postal Administration. The Telecommunication Service plans, supervises and controls all phases of technical telecommunications and radio activities, including the design, construction, installation, replacement, maintenance and operation of broadcasting, television, sound recording, sound reinforcement and simultaneous interpretation equipment, whether owned or rented. The United Nations Postal Administration supervises United Nations activities in the international postal field. It oversees the preparation, printing and issuing of United Nations postage stamps; distributes them for official purposes and provides facilities for selling such stamps to philatelists.

The Bureau of Documents is organized into its Director's Office and three divisions. The Documents Control Division consists of: Editorial Control and Production Control Sections. The Language Services Division consists of: Interpretation Service, Editor-Verbatim Reporting Section, English Section, French Section, Spanish Section, Chinese Section and Russian Section. The Publishing Division consists of: Printing Section, Reproduction Section and Distribution Section.

In addition to the above three divisions there is also a Stenographic Service which comprises an English, French, Spanish, Russian typing pool, together with an official correspondence unit.

Effective 16 September 1952 the functions, records and staff of the Buildings Management Service were transferred from Administrative and Financial Services to Conference and General Services.

(10) Administrative and financial Services

The Department of Administrative and Financial Services plans and executes the organizational, budgetary, personnel and fiscal programmes of the United Nations.

It is responsible for health, field and inspection services. It keeps the Secretary-General informed on problems and developments in these categories which require his attention. It provides staff assistance to the Secretary-General and to the Assistant Secretaries-General in administrative and organizational planning. It furnishes data required by the General Assembly, Councils, and other bodies with respect to administrative, financial and budgetary questions. The Department maintains relationships with all departments of the Secretariat, the Registrar of the International Court of Justice and the specialized agencies on administrative, financial and budgetary questions. The Department advises the Secretary-General on proposed programmes of the Organization, prior to their adoption, with respect to their personnel and financial implications. It arranges with Members for payment of their contributions, and carries out such other functions as the Secretary-General may assign.

Administrative and Financial Services is organized into the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General, two bureaus, three services, and the Headquarters Planning Office.

Attached to the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General are the secretariats of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the Administrative Tribunal, the Joint Appeals Board and Joint Disciplinary Committee; and the secretariat of the Joint Staff Pension Board and the United Nations Staff Pension Committee.

The Bureau of Finance is organized into the Office of the Director, the Budget Division, the Accounts Division and the Treasury.

The Bureau of Personnel consists of the Office of the Director; the Appointments and Staff Relations Division; the Policy, Training and Examination Division; and the Technical Assistance Recruitment Office.

The three services, reporting directly to the Assistant Secretary-General in charge of Administrative and Financial Services, are: Inspection Service, Health Service and the United Nations Field Operations Service.

The Headquarters Planning Office also reports to the Assistant Secretary-General for Administrative and Financial Services. It is the responsibility of the Headquarters Planning Office to plan and make the necessary arrangements for the construction and furnishing of the General Assembly building, conference area and Secretariat building, as well as for the landscaping, underground construction and other appropriate improvements to the site and its approaches.

(11) United Nations Office at Geneva

This Office, established at Geneva and comprising all the elements of the United Nations Secretariat established at Geneva, is the headquarters for the Economic Commission for Europe, the Geneva Information Centre, the Drug Supervisory Body, the Permanent Central Opium Board, the Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees and such other United Nations bodies as the Secretary-General may decide.

The Office serves as a centre for United Nations meetings in Europe and provides office space and conference and other facilities for a number of specialized agencies on a reimbursement basis.

(12) Technical Assistance Board

A separate executive secretariat services the Technical Assistance Board. The Board is composed of an Executive Chairman and the executive heads, or their representatives, of the organizations participating in the Expanded Programme of technical assistance (United Nations, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, ICAO, WHO, ITU, WMO). The Bank and the Fund, though they do not participate in the Expanded Programme and are not titular members of the Board, are represented at its meetings and co-operate fully with the promotion of the objectives of the programme. The Board in turn reports to the Technical Assistance Committee, a committee consisting of all members of the Economic and Social Council.

(13) Special Organizations at United Nations Headquarters

The secretariats of the Technical Assistance Board (described above), the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, with offices at Headquarters, form part of the United Nations Secretariat, but do not administratively come under any of the eight Departments or the Technical Assistance Administration. The funds of these secretariats are not charged to the United Nations regular budget but to the budgets of the relevant agencies.

B. SESSIONS AND OFFICERS OF THE PRINCIPAL ORGANS AND MEETINGS OF SUBSIDIARY BODIES

1. "The General Assembly

The seventh regular session of the General Assembly opened at United Nations Headquarters on 14 October 1952. It adjourned on 22 December, was resumed on 24 February 1953⁵³ and adjourned sine die on 23 April 1953.

The following were the officers of the Assembly during this session:

President: Lester B. Pearson (Canada)

Vice-Presidents:

China	Honduras
Egypt	USSR
France	United Kingdom
	United States

FIRST COMMITTEE

Chairman: Joao Carlos Muniz (Brazil)
 Vice-Chairman: Fernand van Langenhove (Belgium)
 Rapporteur: Thor Thors (Iceland)

SECOND COMMITTEE

Chairman: Jiri Nosek (Czechoslovakia)
 Vice-Chairman: Ernest G. Chauvet (Haiti)
 Rapporteur: Omar Kamel Haliq (Saudi Arabia)

THIRD COMMITTEE

Chairman: S. Amjad Ali (Pakistan)
 Vice-Chairman: Arturo Lezama (Uruguay)
 Rapporteur: Mrs. Zena Harman (Israel)

FOURTH COMMITTEE

Chairman: Rodolfo Muñoz (Argentina)
 Vice-Chairman: Awni Khalidy (Iraq)
 Rapporteur: J. V. Scott (New Zealand)

FIFTH COMMITTEE

Chairman: Brigadier-General Carlos P. Romolo (Philippines)
 Vice-Chairman: Finn T. B. Friis (Denmark)
 Rapporteur: K. G. Brennan (Australia)

SIXTH COMMITTEE

Chairman: Prince Wan Waithayakon (Thailand)
 Vice-Chairman: Manfred Lachs (Poland)
 Rapporteur: E. Wikborg (Norway) (until 9 December); J. V. Rechendorf (Denmark) (from 9 December)

⁵³ Since this Yearbook covers the calendar year 1952, it does not deal with the matters considered at the Assembly's resumed session in 1953.

AD HOC POLITICAL COMMITTEE

Chairman: Alexis Kyrrou (Greece)
 Vice-Chairman: Clarence L. Simpson (Liberia)
 Rapporteur: Joaquin E. Salazar (Dominican Republic)

The General Committee, in accordance with the rules of procedure, consisted of the President of the General Assembly, as chairman, the Vice-Presidents of the General Assembly and the Chairmen of the six Main Committees. The Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee was granted by the Assembly at its seventh session the right to vote in the General Committee.

The Credentials Committee was composed of representatives of Lebanon (Chairman), Belgium, Burma, New Zealand, Panama, Paraguay, Sweden, USSR and United States.

In addition to meetings of sessional committees, the subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly held the following meetings⁵⁴ during the year:

Interim Committee of the General Assembly: fourth session—17 March at Headquarters (after electing its officers, it adjourned sine die).

Peace Observation Commission: 23 January in Paris and 12 December at Headquarters.

Balkan Sub-Commission: 31 January, in Paris; 2 May and 14 August at Headquarters.

Collective Measures Committee: 15 April to 6 October at Headquarters.

United Nations Commission to Investigate Conditions for Free Elections in Germany: 25 meetings in Paris, Geneva and Germany from 11 February to 5 August (when it adjourned sine die).

United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea: 94 meetings at Pusan, Korea, from 5 September 1951 (when it submitted its report to the Assembly's sixth session) to 28 August 1952 (when it submitted its report to the seventh session).

United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency: was in continuous operation during 1952, subject to the restrictions imposed by the continuance of military operations in the Republic of Korea and the requirements of military support.

United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine: one informal meeting on 28 January in Paris and 18 formal meetings from 24 April to 25 November at Headquarters.

United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East: in continuous operation during 1952.

Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds: 33 meetings from 16 January to 12 December, at Headquarters.

United Nations Tribunal in Libya: delivered its first judgment in Tripoli on 8 February.

United Nations Tribunal in Eritrea: formally installed in Asmara on 4 September.

Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees: was in continuous operation during 1952.

Ad Hoc Commission on Prisoners of War: second session—22 January to 9 February, at Geneva; third session—26 August to 13 September, at Geneva.

United Nations Advisory Council for Somaliland: 40 meetings from 1 April 1951 to 31 March 1952.⁵⁵

Ad Hoc Committee on South West Africa: 16 meetings (19th-34th) at Headquarters. All but the first three of these were held in private. In addition to these public and private meetings, the Committee held three informal meetings on 27 May, 2 June and 13 October 1952.

Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories: third session—11 September to 7 October 1952, at Headquarters.

Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Non-Self-Governing Territories): 4 to 9 September, at Headquarters.

United Nations Administrative Tribunal: in January in Paris; 23 July to 11 August, in Geneva; on 2, and from 10 to 12 December, at Headquarters.

United Nations Staff Pension Committee: third session—28 July to 8 August, at Headquarters.

International Law Commission: fourth session—4 June to 8 August, at Geneva.

Headquarters Advisory Committee: 7 January, in Paris; 21 May, and 1 October, at Headquarters.

2. The Security Council

The Security Council is in continuous session.

During 1952 it held 42 meetings, its 570th to 611th, between 17 January and 23 December. The first four of these meetings were held at the Palais de Chaillot, Paris; all the others were held at United Nations Headquarters, New York.

The Presidency of the Council is held in turn by Member States in the English alphabetical order of their names, each President holding office for one month. The following representatives held the office of President during 1952:

January	France	Jean Chauvel
February	Greece	Alexis Kyrrou
March	Netherlands	D. J. van Balluseck
April	Pakistan	Ahmed S. Bokhari
May	Turkey	Selim Sarper
June	USSR	Yakov A. Malik
July	United Kingdom	Sir Gladwyn Jebb
August	United States	Warren R. Austin
September	Brazil	Joao Carlos Muniz
October	Chile	Hernan Santa Cruz
November	China	Tingfu F. Tsiang
December	France	Henri Hoppenot

The Military Staff Committee held a meeting once every two weeks; the first meeting was held on 10 January and the last on 29 December.

The Disarmament Commission held 28 meetings from 4 February to 9 October. (Its first meeting was in Paris, all others at Headquarters.)

⁵⁴ Where possible, actual dates of meetings of subsidiary bodies are given. In certain cases, no dates are given because the subsidiary body concerned either was in continuous session or met sporadically throughout the year.

⁵⁵ From 1 April 1952 to 31 March 1953, the Advisory Council held 26 meetings, all of which, with the exception of one held at Headquarters in New York, were held at the Advisory Council's headquarters in Mogadiscio.

3. The Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council held the following sessions:

First Special Session—24 March 1952

Fourteenth Session—20 May to 1 August 1952

Fourteenth Session (Resumed)—16 to 19 December 1952. All of the above meetings were held at United Nations Headquarters.

The officers for 1952, elected at the first meeting of the fourteenth session were:

President: Syed Amjad Ali (Pakistan)

First Vice-President: Jiri Nosek (Czechoslovakia)

Second Vice-President: Raymond Scheyven (Belgium)

Jiri Nosek presided over the special session in the absence of Hernan Santa Cruz, President for 1951 (Chile having ceased to be a member of the Council on 31 December 1951), and of Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, First Vice-President.

In addition to sessional committees, the Council's subsidiary bodies and other special bodies reporting to it held the following sessions during 1952.

COMMITTEES OF THE COUNCIL

Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations: 8 and 9 April; 23 and 26 May; 16 and 23 June; 3, 18, 24 and 31 July, at Headquarters.

Interim Committee on Programme of Conferences: 24 January, at Paris; 8, 23, 25 July, at Headquarters.

Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements: 1-3 October, at Geneva.

FUNCTIONAL COMMISSIONS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION:

Group of Experts on Road Signs and Signals: third session—23 June to 18 July, at Headquarters.

Committee of Experts on Licensing of Motor Vehicle Drivers: first session—29 September to 24 October, at Headquarters.

SOCIAL COMMISSION: eighth session—12 May to 29 May, at Headquarters.

COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS: eighth session—14 April to 14 June, at Headquarters.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities: fifth session—22 September to 10 October, at Headquarters.

Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press: fifth session—3 to 21 March, at Headquarters.

COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN: sixth session—24 March to 5 April, at Geneva.

COMMISSION ON NARCOTIC DRUGS: seventh session—15 April to 9 May, at Headquarters.

Permanent Central Opium Board: 59th session—9 to 13 June, at Geneva; 60th session—1 to 10 September, at Geneva; and 61st session—11 to 18 November, at Geneva.

Drugs Supervisory Body: 37th session—18 to 20 June, at Geneva; 38th session—27 October to 3 November, at Geneva.

Permanent Central Opium Board and Drug Supervisory Body: seventh joint session—16 to 19 June, at Geneva; eighth joint session—4 to 10 November, at Geneva.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE: seventh session—3 to 18 March, at Geneva.

Coal Committee: 22nd session—25 to 26 January, at Geneva; 23rd session—28 February at Geneva; 24th session—30 May, at Geneva; 25th session—29 August, at Geneva; and 26th session—28 November, at Geneva.

Committee on Electric Power: ninth session—23 to 24 June, at Geneva.

Inland Transport Committee: special session—7 to 11 January, at Geneva; and eighth session—15 to 19 July, at Geneva.

Steel Committee: ninth session—14 to 15 February, at Geneva.

Timber Committee: ninth session—2 to 6 May, at Geneva; and tenth session—14 to 20 October, at Geneva.

In addition to the committees of the Economic Commission for Europe listed, various sub-committees and working groups held meetings during the year.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR ASIA AND THE FAR EAST: eighth session—29 January to 8 February, at Rangoon, Burma.

Committee on Industry and Trade: fourth session—18 to 26 January, at Rangoon.

Sub-Committee on Iron and Steel: fourth session—15 to 17 January, at Rangoon.

Sub-Committee on Electric Power: first session—11, 12 and 14 January, at Rangoon; and second session—29 September to 2 October, at Bangkok.

Highway Sub-Committee: first session—18 to 22 August, at Bangkok.

Working Party on Cottage and Small-Scale Industries: second session—28 July to 1 August, at Bangkok.

ECAFE/ILO/UNESCO Working Party on Fields of Economic Development Handicapped by Lack of Trained Personnel: second session—13 to 16 October, at Bangalore, India.

Working Party on Mobilization of Domestic Capital: second session—22 to 27 September, at Bangkok.

Working Party to Co-ordinate Work of Governments for the Adoption of Standard International Trade Classification: first session—7 to 19 January, at Bangkok.

Inter-Secretariat Working Party on Housing and Building Materials: first session—17 to 21 November, at New Delhi, India.

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA:

Committee of the Whole: 11 to 14 February, at Santiago, Chile.

SPECIAL BODIES

UNITED NATIONS INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND:

Executive Board: 22 to 24 April, at Headquarters; 6, 7, 10 and 13 October, at Headquarters.

Programme Committee: 14 to 17 April, at Headquarters; and 8 to 9 October, at Headquarters.

Committee on Administrative Budget: 18 April and 30 September, at Headquarters.

ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE ON CO-ORDINATION: 14th session—4 April, at Headquarters; and fifteenth session—10 October, at Headquarters.

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE BOARD: 17th meeting—29 January to 2 February, at Paris; eighteenth meeting—26 March to 2 April, at Headquarters; nineteenth meeting—1 to 6 May, at Geneva; 20th meeting—8 to 18 July, at Headquarters; 21st meeting—15 to 20 September, at Geneva; and 22nd meeting—8 to 16 December, at Headquarters.

Ad Hoc COMMITTEES

Ad Hoc Committee on Restrictive Business Practices: first session—29 January to 6 February, at Headquarters; second session—28 April to 9 May, at Headquarters; and third session—8 to 29 September, at Geneva.

Ad Hoc Committee on Forced Labour: second session—2 June to 1 July, at Headquarters; and third session—14 October to 22 November, at Geneva.

4. The Trusteeship Council

The Trusteeship Council held the following sessions:

Tenth session—27 February to 1 April

Eleventh session (first part)—3 June to 24 July

Eleventh session (second part)—19 November to 3 December. All of the above sessions were held at United Nations Headquarters.

The following were the officers of the Council during the year:

Tenth session:

President: Sir Alan Burns (United Kingdom)

Vice-President: Awni Khalidy (Iraq)

Eleventh session:

President: Awni Khalidy (Iraq)

Vice-President: W. D. Forsyth (Australia)

The Council's subsidiary organs held the following meetings during the year:

STANDING COMMITTEES

Standing Committee on Administrative Unions: ninth to 42nd meetings—5 March to 16 July, at Headquarters.

Standing Committee on Petitions: first to 40th meetings—18 March to 18 July, at Headquarters; and 41st and 42nd meetings—24 July to 15 October, at Headquarters.

Ad Hoc COMMITTEES

Drafting Committee on the Questionnaire: tenth session (third to fifth meetings)—28 February to 14 March, at Headquarters.

Committee on Rural Economic Development: seventh to eleventh meetings—31 July 1951 to 2 June 1952, at Headquarters.

Committee on General Procedure of the Trusteeship Council: first to seventh meetings—1 April to 26 May, at Headquarters.

Committee on Examination of Petitions: tenth session (first to third meetings)—29 February to 7 March, at Headquarters.

Committee on the Organization and Functioning of Visiting Missions: tenth session (first to fourth meetings)—4 to 25 March, at Headquarters.

Committee on Participation of the Indigenous Inhabitants of the Trust Territories in the Work of the Trusteeship Council: eleventh session (first and third meetings)—13 June to 15 July, at Headquarters.

5. The International Court of Justice

The officers of the Court during 1952⁵⁶ were:

President: Sir Arnold Duncan McNair (British)

Vice-President: Jose Gustavo Guerrero (Salvadorian)

Registrar: Edvard Hambro (Norwegian)

⁵⁶ On May 1952, in accordance with its Statute, the Court elected Sir Arnold Duncan McNair as its new President, the retiring President being Jules Basdevant (French). Mr. Guerrero was re-elected Vice-President.

C. MATTERS CONSIDERED BY THE PRINCIPAL ORGANS DURING 1952

1. The General Assembly

MATTERS CONSIDERED DURING THE SEVENTH REGULAR SESSION

Up to the Recess on 21 December 1952

* Indicates item was completed at second half of the seventh session in 1953

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
1. Opening of the session by the Chairman of the delegation of Mexico	Plenary meeting 376
2. Minute of silent prayer or meditation	Plenary meeting 376
3. Appointment of a Credentials Committee	Plenary meetings 376, 389, 410. Resolution 609(VII)
4. Election of the President	Plenary meeting 376

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
Constitution of the Main Committees and election of officers.	First Committee meetings 509, 510. Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 1, 2. Second Committee meetings 193, 194. Third Committee meetings 418, 419. Fourth Committee meetings 249, 250. Fifth Committee meetings 342, 343. Sixth Committee meetings 304, 305. Plenary meeting 378
6. Election of Vice-Presidents	Plenary meeting 378
7. Adoption of the agenda	General Committee meetings 79-85. Plenary meetings 380-382, 386, 396, 406, 410, 411. Resolution 692 (VII)
8. Opening of the general debate	Plenary meetings, 379, 380, 382-385, 392-398
9. Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization
10. Report of the Security Council	Plenary meeting 390. Resolution 695(VII)
11. Report of the Economic and Social Council	Second Committee meetings 240-246. Third Committee meetings 465-469, 482. Plenary meetings 409, 411. Resolutions 628, 641, 642(VII)
12. Report of the Trusteeship Council	Fourth Committee meetings 279-291, 296-299, 309-314. Plenary meeting 410. Resolutions 653-656(VII)
13. Election of three non-permanent members of the Security Council	Plenary meeting 389
14. Election of six members of the Economic and Social Council	Plenary meetings 389, 390
15. Election of two members of the Trusteeship Council	Plenary meeting 390
16. Korea: ⁵⁷
(a) Reports of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea	First Committee meetings 511-536, 557. Fifth Committee meeting 368. Plenary meeting 399. Resolution 610(VII)
(b) Reports of the United Nations Agent General for Korean Reconstruction	First Committee meeting 557
17- Regulation, limitation and balanced reduction of all armed forces and all armaments: report of the Disarmament Commission	Item placed on the agenda but not discussed before the Assembly recessed in December 1952*
18. Methods which might be used to maintain and strengthen international peace and security in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter: report of the Collective Measures Committee	Item placed on the agenda but not discussed before the Assembly recessed in December 1952*
19. Admission of new Members:
(a) Status of applications still pending: report of Security Council	Plenary meeting 410. Resolution 620(VII) Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 42-50
(b) Request for an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice: draft resolution proposed by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua at the sixth session	Ad Hoc Political Committee meeting 42
20. Report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East	Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 3-7. Plenary meeting 391. Resolution 614(VII)
21. Eritrea: report of the United Nations Commissioner in Eritrea	Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 40, 41. Plenary meeting 404. Resolution 617(VII)
22. Treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa	General Committee meeting 79. Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 8-12. Fifth Committee meeting 367. Plenary meeting 401. Resolution 615(VII)
23. Repatriation of Greek children: reports of the Secretary-General and of the international Red Cross organizations	Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 22-24. Fifth Committee meetings 370, 372. Plenary meeting 404. Resolution 618(VII)
24. Appointment of members of the Peace Observation Commission	Plenary meeting 391. Resolution 696(VII)

⁵⁷ Consideration of item not completed before Assembly recessed in December 1952.

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
25. Economic development of under-developed countries:	Second Committee meetings 195-209, 231-240. Plenary meeting 411. Resolutions 621-627(VII)
(a) Financing of economic development of under-developed countries: report of the Economic and Social Council	Second Committee meetings 213-224. Fifth Committee meetings 372, 374
(b) Methods to increase world productivity: report of the Economic and Social Council	Second Committee meetings 239, 240
(c) Land reform: report of the Secretary-General	Second Committee meetings 224-230
(d) Technical assistance for the economic development of under-developed countries	Second Committee meetings 209—212
26. Co-ordination between the United Nations and the specialized agencies:
(a) Administrative and budgetary co-ordination: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions	Fifth Committee meetings 370, 374. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 672(VII)
(b) Programme of conferences at Headquarters and Geneva: report of the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meeting 375. Plenary meetings 398, 409. Resolutions 694, 698(VII)
27. Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	Third Committee meetings 470-473. Plenary meeting 408. Resolutions 638, 639(VII)
28. Draft Protocol relating to the Status of Stateless Persons	Third Committee meetings 420, 421. Plenary meeting 391. Resolution 629(VII)
29. Freedom of information:
(a) Problems of freedom of information, including the study of the draft Convention on Freedom of Information	Third Committee meetings 421-441. Plenary meeting 403. Resolutions 630-635 (VII)
(b) Dissemination by governments of resolutions adopted by organs of the United Nations and communicated to them by the Secretary-General	Third Committee meetings 431, 442. Plenary meeting 403. Resolution 636(VII)
30. Human rights. Recommendations concerning international respect for the self-determination of peoples: report of the Economic and Social Council	Third Committee meetings 443—464. Plenary meeting 403. Resolution 637(VII)
31. Administrative unions affecting Trust Territories: special report of the Trusteeship Council and report of the Committee on Administrative Unions	Fourth Committee meetings 292-295, 312. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 649(VII)
32. The Ewe and Togoland unification problem: special report of the Trusteeship Council	Fourth Committee meetings 300-308, 313. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 652(VII)
33. Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73e of the Charter: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories:	Fourth Committee meetings 251-263, 268, 292. Plenary meeting 402. Resolutions 643-645 (VII)
(a) Information on social conditions and development
(b) Information on other conditions
(c) Transmission of information
34. Question of the renewal of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories	Fourth Committee meetings 264-267, 304, 306. Plenary meetings 402, 409. Resolution 646(VII)
35. Participation of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the work of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories: report of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories	Fourth Committee meetings 268-270. Plenary meeting 402. Resolution 647(VII)
36. Factors which should be taken into account in deciding whether a territory is or is not a territory whose people have not yet attained a full measure of self-government: report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Non-Self-Governing Territories)	Fourth Committee meetings 271-279, 296. Plenary meeting 402. Resolution 648(VII)
37. Cessation of the transmission of information under Article 73e of the Charter in respect of the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam	Fourth Committee meetings 304, 312. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 650(VII)
38. Question of South West Africa:
(a) Implementation of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice: report of the Ad Hoc Committee on South West Africa	Fourth Committee meetings 304, 308, 312. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 651 (VII)

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
(b) Examination of any report on the administration of South West Africa which may be transmitted by the Government of the Union of South Africa: report of the Ad Hoc Committee on South West Africa
39. Financial reports and accounts, and reports of the Board of Auditors:
(a) United Nations, for the financial year ended 31 December 1951	Fifth Committee meetings 343, 352, 366. Plenary meeting 398. Resolution 658(VII)
(b) United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, for the financial year ended 31 December 1951	Fifth Committee meetings 343, 352, 366. Plenary meeting 398. Resolution 659(VII)
(c) United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, for the period 1 January 1951 to 30 June 1952	Fifth Committee meeting 366. Plenary meeting 398. Resolution 660(VII)
(d) United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, for the financial year ended 30 June 1952	Fifth Committee meeting 366. Plenary meeting 398. Resolution 661 (VII)
40. Audit reports relating to expenditure by specialized agencies of technical assistance funds allocated from the Special Account	Fifth Committee meetings 367, 374. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 673 (VII)
41. Supplementary estimates for 1952: report of the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meetings 365, 366. Plenary meeting 398. Resolution 662(VII)
42. Budget estimates for the financial year 1953:
(a) Budget estimates prepared by the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meetings 344-356, 365-368, 370-375. Plenary meeting 410. Resolutions 674-677(VII)
(b) Reports of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions
43. Report of the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds	Plenary meetings 389, 393. Resolution 693(VII)
44. Appointments to fill vacancies in the membership of subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly:
(a) Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions	Fifth Committee meetings 367, 373. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 666(VII)
(b) Committee on Contributions	Fifth Committee meetings 367, 373, 374. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 667(VII)
(c) Board of Auditors	Fifth Committee meetings 368, 373. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 668(VII)
(d) Investments Committee: confirmation of the appointment made by the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meetings 368, 373. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 669(VII)
(e) United Nations Administrative Tribunal	Fifth Committee meetings 368, 373. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 670(VII)
(f) United Nations Staff Pension Committee	Fifth Committee meetings 369, 373. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 671 (VII)
45. United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund:
(a) Annual report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for the year ended 31 December 1951	Fifth Committee meetings 369, 375. Plenary meeting 410. Resolutions 678-680(VII)
(b) Second actuarial valuation of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund: report of the Actuary
(c) Amendments to the regulations for the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund: report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board
46. Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations: report of the Committee on Contributions	Fifth Committee meetings 360-364, 368. Plenary meeting 401. Resolution 665 (VII)
47. Headquarters of the United Nations: report of the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meetings 365, 366. Plenary meeting 398. Resolution 663(VII)
48. United Nations Postal Administration: report of the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meetings 348, 354. Plenary meeting 391. Resolution 657(VII)
49. Staff regulations of the United Nations. Question of a probationary period: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions	Fifth Committee meetings, 374, 375. Plenary meeting 410. Resolution 682(VII)

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
50. Measures to limit the duration of regular sessions of the General Assembly: memorandum by the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meetings 367, 374. Sixth Committee meetings 346-354, 357. Plenary meetings 387, 388, 410. Resolution 689(VII)
51. Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fourth session	Sixth Committee meeting 312. Plenary meeting 391. Resolution 683(VII)
52. International criminal jurisdiction: report of the Committee on International Criminal Jurisdiction	Sixth Committee meetings 321-328. Plenary meetings 400, 407. Resolution 687(VII)
53. Methods and procedures of the General Assembly for dealing with legal and drafting questions: report of the Special Committee	Sixth Committee meetings 306-312. Plenary meeting 391. Resolution 684(VII)
54. Question of defining aggression: report of the Secretary-General	Sixth Committee meetings 329-346. Plenary meeting 408. Resolution 688(VII)
55. Ways and means for making the evidence of customary international law more readily available: report of the Secretary-General	Fifth Committee meeting 366. Sixth Committee meetings 317-320. Plenary meeting 400. Resolution 686(VII)
56. Request of the Government of China for revision of the Chinese text of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide	General Committee meeting 79. Sixth Committee meetings 354-357. Plenary meetings 400, 411. Resolution 691(VII)
57. Status of claims for injuries incurred in the service of the United Nations: report of the Secretary-General	Sixth Committee meetings 346, 357. Plenary meeting 410. Resolution 690(VII)
58. Giving priority to the codification of the topic "Diplomatic intercourse and immunities" in accordance with article 18 of the Statute of the International Law Commission	Sixth Committee meetings 313-317. Plenary meeting 400. Resolution 685(VII)
59. Use of the citation "Died for the United Nations" in respect to persons who, in certain circumstances, are killed in the service of the United Nations	General Committee meeting 79. Plenary meeting 401. Resolution 699(VI)
60. The Tunisian question	General Committee meeting 79. First Committee meetings 537-546. Plenary meeting 404. Resolution 611(VII)
61. Draft Convention on Political Rights of Women	Third Committee meetings 474-482. Plenary meetings 408, 409. Resolution 640(VII)
62. Question of the adoption by the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions of Spanish as a working language	Fifth Committee meetings 356-360, 366, 367. Plenary meetings 400, 401. Resolution 664(VII)
63. Question of an appeal to the Powers signatories to the Moscow Declaration of 1 November 1943, for an early fulfilment of their pledges toward Austria	General Committee meeting 79. First Committee meetings 553-556. Plenary meeting 409. Resolution 613(VII)
64. Application of Japan for membership in the International Civil Aviation Organization	Plenary meeting 391. Resolution 697(VII)
65. The question of Morocco	General Committee meeting 79. First Committee meetings 547-553. Plenary meeting 407. Resolution 612(VII)
66. The question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Union of South Africa	General Committee meeting 79. Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 13-21. Fifth Committee meeting 367. Plenary meeting 401. Resolution 616(VII)
67. The Conciliation Commission for Palestine and its work in the light of the resolutions of the United Nations	Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 25-39. Plenary meetings 405, 406.
68. Complaint of violation by Arab States of their obligations under the Charter, United Nations resolutions and specific provisions of the General Armistice Agreements concluded with Israel, requiring them to desist from policies and practices of hostility and to seek agreement by negotiation for the establishment of peaceful relations with Israel	Ad Hoc Political Committee meetings 39, 50. Plenary meeting 410. Resolution 619(VII)
69. Administration of the United Nations	Fifth Committee meetings 371, 372, 375. Plenary meeting 410. Resolution 681(VII)
70. Complaint of non-compliance of States still detaining members of the Greek armed forces with the provisions of resolution 382 A (V), adopted by the General Assembly on 1 December 1950, recommending "the repatriation of all those among them who express the wish to be repatriated"	Re-allocated to the First Committee at the 406th plenary meeting. Item uncompleted as of 22 December 1952*

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
Additional Items:
71. Interference of the United States of America in the internal affairs of other States as manifested by the organization on the part of the Government of the United States of America of subversive and espionage activities against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the People's Republic of China, the Czechoslovak Republic and other People's Democracies	General Committee meeting 79. Item uncompleted as of 22 December 1952*
72. Measures to avert the threat of a new world war and measures to strengthen peace and friendship among the Nations	General Committee meeting 80. Included in the agenda at the 386th plenary meeting. Item uncompleted as of 22 December 1952*
73. Question of impartial investigations of charges of use by United Nations Forces of bacteriological warfare	General Committee meeting 80. Included in the agenda at the 386th plenary meeting. Item uncompleted as of 22 December 1952*
74. Appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations	General Committee meeting 81. Included in the agenda at the 396th plenary meeting. Item uncompleted as of 22 December 1952*
75. Report of the Secretary-General on personnel policy	General Committee meeting 84. Fifth Committee meeting 375. Included in the agenda at the 406th plenary meeting. Item uncompleted as of 22 December 1952*
76. Complaint of the mass murder of Korean and Chinese prisoners of war by United States military authorities on the island of Pongam	General Committee meeting 85. Plenary meeting 411

The following items on the provisional agenda were not included in the Assembly's agenda (see A/2225/Rev.1):

Additional assistance to Libya for financing its economic and social development: item 25 of the provisional agenda.	The General Committee recommended that this item should not be included in the agenda as it had been informed by the Secretary-General that the Economic and Social Council had deferred consideration of it until 1953.
Draft International Covenants on Human Rights and measures of implementation: item 31 (a) of the provisional agenda.	The General Committee recommended that this item should not be included in the agenda as the Economic and Social Council was not expected to deal with it until 1953.
Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind: item 58 of the provisional agenda.	The General Committee recommended the deletion of this item on the understanding that the matter would continue to be discussed by the International Law Commission.

PARTICIPANTS IN THE GENERAL DEBATE AT THE ASSEMBLY'S SEVENTH SESSION

Representatives of 43 Member States took part in the general debate at the opening of the General Assembly's seventh session. The debate began at the 370th plenary meeting on 16 October, was adjourned, by a vote of 40 to 5, with 3 abstentions, at the 385th plenary meeting on 20 October, resumed at the 392nd plenary meeting on 10 November and concluded at the 398th plenary meeting on 25 November.

The following were the Member States taking part, with the meetings at which they spoke:

Country	Meeting	Date
Afghanistan	380	16 Oct.
Argentina	380	16 Oct.
Australia	384	20 Oct.
Belgium	392	10 Nov.
Bolivia	384	20 Oct.
Brazil	394	11 Nov.
Burma	394	11 Nov.
Byelorussian SSR	395	12 Nov.
Canada	382	17 Oct.
Chile	379	16 Oct.
China	396	13 Nov.
Colombia	397	13 Nov.
Costa Rica	393	11 Nov.
Cuba	379	16 Oct.
Czechoslovakia	385	20 Oct.
Dominican Republic	396	13 Nov.
Ecuador	383	18 Oct.
Egypt	395	12 Nov.
Ethiopia	398	25 Nov.
France	395	12 Nov.
Greece	392	10 Nov.
	393	11 Nov.

Country	Meeting	Date	Meeting	Subject	Date
India	393	11 Nov.			June
Indonesia	394	11 Nov.	581st	Question of an appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial weapons	25
Iran	397	13 Nov.
Iraq	379	16 Oct.
	397	13 Nov.
Israel	397	13 Nov.	582nd	Question of an appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial weapons	25
Lebanon	397	13 Nov.
Liberia	382	17 Oct.
Netherlands	392	10 Nov.
New Zealand	380	16 Oct.
Pakistan	395	12 Nov.	583rd	Question of an appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial weapons	26
Panama	383	18 Oct.
Paraguay	383	18 Oct.
Peru	384	20 Oct.
Poland	382	17 Oct.			July
Sweden	379	16 Oct.	584th	Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare	1
Syria	396	13 Nov.
	397	13 Nov.	585th	Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare	1
Ukrainian SSR	396	13 Nov.
Union of South Africa	397	13 Nov.
USSR	383	18 Oct.	586th	Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare	2
United Kingdom	393	11 Nov.
United States	380	16 Oct.	587th	Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare	3
Uruguay	384	20 Oct.
Yugoslavia	394	11 Nov.	588th	Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare	8

2. The Security Council

MEETINGS AND MATTERS CONSIDERED DURING 1952

Meeting	Subject	Date	Meeting	Subject	Date
		January	591st	Admission of new Members	9
					August
570th	The India-Pakistan question	17	592nd	Consideration of Security Council's draft report to the General Assembly (closed meeting)	19
571st	The regulation and reduction of conventional armaments and armed forces	30
	The India-Pakistan question		593rd	Consideration and approval of Security Council's draft report to the General Assembly (closed meeting)	26
572nd	The India-Pakistan question	31
		February			September
573rd	Admission of new Members	6	594th	Admission of new Members	2
		April	595th	Admission of new Members	3
574th	Adoption of the agenda (The Tunisian question)	4	596th	Admission of new Members	5
575th	Adoption of the agenda (The Tunisian question)	10	597th	Admission of new Members	8
576th	Adoption of the agenda (The Tunisian question)	14	598th	Admission of new Members	10
		June	599th	Admission of new Members	12
577th	Question of an appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial weapons	18	600th	Admission of new Members	16
			601st	Admission of new Members	17
			602nd	Admission of new Members	18
			603rd	Admission of new Members	19
			604th	Admission of new Members	19
					October
578th	Question of an appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial weapons	20	605th	The India-Pakistan Question	10
					November
			606th	The India-Pakistan Question	6
					December
579th	Question of an appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial weapons	20	607th	The India-Pakistan Question	5
			608th	The India-Pakistan Question	8
580th	Adoption of the agenda (Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare)	23	609th	The India-Pakistan Question	16
			610th	The India-Pakistan Question	23
			611th	The India-Pakistan Question	23

3. The Economic and Social Council

MATTERS CONSIDERED AT THE FIRST SPECIAL SESSION AND THE FOURTEENTH REGULAR SESSION

a. FIRST SPECIAL SESSION

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
1. Proposal for suspension of rule 19 in relation to the special session	Plenary meeting 569
2. Action required by General Assembly resolution 549(VI) of 5 February 1952: "Special session of the Economic and Social Council to precede the eighth session of the Commission on Human Rights"	Plenary meeting 569. Resolution 415(S-1)

b. FOURTEENTH SESSION

1. Election of the President and Vice-Presidents for 1952	Plenary meeting 570
2. Adoption of the sessional agenda	Plenary meetings 571-573, 653
3. World economic situation, including:	Plenary meetings 587, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 598, 599, 600, 601
(a) Report of the Economic Commission for Europe;	Plenary meetings 594-596. Resolution 418(XIV)
(b) Report of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East;	Plenary meeting 597. Resolution 419(XIV)
(c) Report of the Economic Commission for Latin America;	Plenary meeting 596. Resolution 420(XIV)
(d) Report of the International Monetary Fund	Plenary meeting 584. Resolution 421 (XIV)
4. Full employment, and report of experts on the problem of reducing the international impact of economic recessions and on measures required to mitigate the effect of fluctuations in international markets on the economies of under-developed countries (Council resolutions 290(XI), paragraph 19, and 341 A (XII), paragraph 5):
(a) Consideration of replies from governments to the Questionnaire on Full Employment;	Plenary meetings 635, 636, 638. Resolution 426(XIV)
(b) Report of experts on the problem of reducing the international impact of economic recessions and on measures required to mitigate the effect of fluctuations in international markets on the economies of under-developed countries (Council resolutions 290(XI), paragraph 19, and 341 A (XII), paragraph 5)	Plenary meetings 624, 625, 627-631, 635-638. Resolution 427(XIV)
5. Economic development of under-developed countries, including:	Plenary meeting 605
(a) Report of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development on the question of creating an international finance corporation (Council resolution 368(XIII), paragraph 13);	Plenary meetings 606-610, 613-615. Resolution 416 C (XIV)
(b) Methods of financing economic development: report by the Secretary-General under Council resolution 368 C (XIII), paragraph 14 (b);	Council NGO Committee meeting 115. Plenary meetings 606-610, 613-615, 626, 627. Resolutions 416 A, D (XIV)
(c) Annual report of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development;	Plenary meetings 605, 606. Resolution 416 B (XIV)
(d) Other aspects of economic development; ⁵⁸	Plenary meetings 638-640. Resolution 416 F (XIV)
(e) Methods to increase world productivity (General Assembly resolution 522(V));	Plenary meetings 623, 629, 634, 638. Resolution 416 E (XIV)
(f) Integrated economic development and commercial agreements (General Assembly resolution 523(VI)).	Plenary meetings 624, 625, 627, 628, 629, 636-638. Resolution 427(XIV)
6. International co-operation on water control and utilization (Council resolution 346(XII))	Plenary meetings 581, 582, 584-586. Resolution 417 (XIV)

⁵⁸ Changed during the session to "Integrated economic development".

Agenda Item

7. Development of arid land (General Assembly resolution 402(V))
8. Critical shortage of insecticides for public health purposes (Council resolution 377(XIII))
9. Production and distribution of newsprint and printing paper (Council resolution 374(XIII))
10. Migration: report by the International Labour Organisation (Council resolution 396(XIII))
11. Social activities:
 - (a) Development and concentration of the efforts in the social field of the United Nations and the specialized agencies;
 - (b) Report of the Social Commission (eighth session);
 - (c) Reports of the Executive Board of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund;
 - (d) Preliminary report on the world social situation;
 - (e) Housing and town and country planning (General Assembly resolution 637(VI))
12. Report of the Commission on Human Rights (eighth session)
13. Freedom of Information:
 - (a) Report of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press (fifth session);
 - (b) Report of the Secretary-General on the result of the inquiry under Council resolution 414 B III (XIII), paragraph 28
14. Prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities: report by the Secretary-General under resolution 414 B II (XIII), paragraph 23
15. Allegations regarding infringements of trade-union rights received under Council resolution 277(X) (i.e., any allegations received before 25 March 1952)
16. Slavery: report by the Secretary-General under Council resolution 388(XIII)
17. Commission on the Status of Women:
 - (a) Report of the Commission on the Status of Women (sixth session);
 - (b) General Assembly resolution 532 A (VI)
18. Refugees:
 - (a) Annual report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (General Assembly resolution 428(V), annex, chapter H);
 - (b) Review of the composition of the United Nations High Commissioner's Advisory Committee for Refugees;
 - (c) Report of the International Refugee Organization
19. Narcotic drugs:
 - (a) International limitation of opium production (Council resolution 395(XIII));
 - (b) Report of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs (seventh session);
 - (c) Report of the Permanent Central Opium Board;
 - (d) Approval of the appointment of the Secretary of the Permanent Central Opium Board (article 20 of the 1925 Convention, as amended);

Consideration and Action Taken

- Plenary meetings 581, 582, 584-586. Resolution 417 (XIV)
- Economic Committee meeting 124. Plenary meeting 628. Resolution 422(XIV)
- Plenary meeting 654. Resolution 423(XIV)
- Plenary meeting 649. Resolution 439(XIV)
- Plenary meetings 641-646, 660, 661. Resolution 434 A (XIV)
- Council NGO Committee meeting 115. Social Committee meetings 223-226. Plenary meetings 659, 661, 663. Resolution 434 B-H (XIV)
- Council NGO Committee meeting 115. Plenary meetings 658, 659. Resolution 434 J (XIV)
- Plenary meetings 641-646, 660, 661. Resolution 434 A (XIV)
- Social Committee meetings 225, 226. Council NGO Committee meeting 115. Plenary meeting 659. Resolution 434 I (XIV)
- Plenary meetings 665-668. Resolution 440(XIV)
- Social Committee meetings 214-220. Plenary meetings 602-604, 658, 660. Resolution 442(XIV)
- Social Committee meetings 214-220. Plenary meetings 602-604, 658, 660. Resolution 442(XIV)
- Social Committee meetings 221, 222. Plenary meetings 620, 621, 627. Resolution 443(XIV)
- Plenary meetings 571, 648, 649. Resolution 444(XIV)
- Plenary meeting 650. Consideration postponed until fifteenth session
- Plenary meetings 575-580, 583. Resolution 445 A-H (XIV)
- Council NGO Committee meeting 115. Plenary meeting 579. Resolution 445 I (XIV)
- Plenary meetings 632-634. Resolutions 437, 438(XIV)
- Council NGO Committee meeting 115. Plenary meetings 574, 580. Resolution 436 A (XIV)
- Plenary meetings 580, 581, 583. Resolutions 436 B-G (XIV)
- Plenary meetings 574, 580, 583. Resolution 436 H (XIV)
- Plenary meeting 574

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
(e) Invitation to Libya to become a Party to the Protocol of 19 November 1948 bringing under international control drugs outside the scope of the Convention of 13 July 1931 for limiting the manufacture and regulating the distribution of narcotic drugs, as amended by the Protocol of 11 December 1946;	Plenary meeting 574. Resolution 436 I (XIV)
(f) Communication to governments of findings of the World Health Organization under article 8 of the 1925 Convention, as amended by the 1946 Protocol.	Plenary meetings 574, 580. Resolution 436 J (XIV)
20. Teaching of the purposes and principles, the structure and activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in schools and other educational institutions of Member States (Council resolution 314(XI))	Plenary meetings 655, 656. Resolution 446(XIV)
21. World conference on population (Council resolution 389(XIII))	Plenary meetings 588, 598. Resolution 435(XIV)
22. Programmes of technical assistance:
(a) United Nations programme;	Plenary meetings 653, 654. Resolution 432(XIV)
(b) Expanded Programme	Technical Assistance Committee meetings 21-28. Plenary meetings 599, 600, 653, 654. Resolution 433(XIV)
23. Relief and rehabilitation of Korea (General Assembly resolution 410 A (V), section A, paragraphs 5 (d) and 13)	Plenary meeting 654. Debate on item postponed
24. Implementation of recommendations on economic and social matters (Council resolution 283(X))	Plenary meeting 663. Resolution 450(XIV)
25. Report of the International Labour Organisation	Plenary meetings 646-649. Resolution 447(XIV)
26. Report of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations	Plenary meetings 604, 610, 611. Resolution 424 (XIV)
27. Report of the World Health Organization.	Plenary meeting 612. Resolution 448(XIV)
28. Report of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization	Plenary meetings 616, 617. Resolution 449(XIV)
29. Report of the International Civil Aviation Organization	Plenary meetings 621, 622. Resolution 428(XIV)
30. Report of the International Telecommunication Union	Plenary meeting 621. Resolution 429(XIV)
31. Report of the Universal Postal Union	Plenary meeting 622. Resolution 430(XIV)
32. Report of the World Meteorological Organization	Plenary meeting 622. Resolution 431 (XIV)
33. Co-ordination of the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies:
(a) Report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination;	Co-ordination Committee meetings 101-113. Plenary meeting 661, 662. Resolution 451 (XIV)
(b) Review of 1953 programmes and adoption of United Nations priority programmes in the economic and social fields (Council resolution 402 (XIII))
34. Non-governmental organizations:
(a) Applications and re-applications for consultative status;	Council NGO Committee meetings 112, 113, 116. Plenary meetings 572, 573, 586. Resolution 453 A (XIV)
(b) Hearings by the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations under rules 80 and 81 of the rules of procedure of the Council and applications for hearings by the Council under rule 82;	Council NGO Committee meetings 114-117, 119-122. Plenary meetings 583, 633, 653.
(c) Review of organizations granted consultative status at the eighth and ninth sessions of the Council (Council resolution 413 B (XIII));	Council NGO Committee meeting 114. Plenary meeting 573. Resolution 453 B (XIV)
(d) Application of the Headquarters Agreement to representatives of non-governmental organizations (General Assembly resolution 606 (VI))	Council NGO Committee meeting 115. Plenary meetings 572, 618, 619. Resolution 455(XIV)

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
35. Amendment of the rules of procedure of the Council and the functional commissions: memorandum by the Secretary-General (Council resolution 414 (XIII))	Plenary meetings 642, 644, 650, 651, 652, 654, 664. Resolution 456 (XIV)
36. Calendar of conferences for 1953	Interim Committee on Programme of Conferences meetings 28-30. Plenary meetings 640, 657, 663, 664
37. Elections:
(a) Election of one-third of the membership of the functional commissions of the Council;	Plenary meetings 657, 658. Resolution 457(XIV)
(b) Election of members of the Executive Board of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (General Assembly resolution 417(V));	Plenary meeting 658
(c) Election of members of the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations for 1952;	Plenary meeting 657
(d) Election of members of the Permanent Central Opium Board	Plenary meetings 658, 662, 664, 666
38. Confirmation of members of functional commissions of the Council	Plenary meeting 669
39. Summary of financial implications of actions of the Council	Plenary meeting 669
40. Arrangements regarding the report of the Council to the General Assembly	Plenary meeting 669
41. Work of the Council in 1953:
(a) Basic programme for 1953;	(To be considered at the resumed fourteenth session during the seventh regular session of the General Assembly)
(b) Provisional agenda for the first regular session of 1953
42. Disposal of items arising out of the seventh regular session of the General Assembly in 1952	(To be considered at the resumed fourteenth session during the seventh regular session of the General Assembly)
43. Food and famine (General Assembly resolution 525 (VI))	Plenary meetings 622, 623, 625. Resolution 425(XIV)
44. Question of assistance to Libya (General Assembly resolution 515 (VI))	Plenary meeting 654. Consideration postponed until 1953
45. Applications for membership in UNESCO	Plenary meeting 573. Resolution 452(XIV)
46. Communications concerning human rights (General Assembly resolution 542 (VI))	Plenary meeting 656. Resolution 441 (XIV)
Additional Items
47. Request by the Commission on Human Rights for an extension of the duration of its current (eighth) session	Plenary meeting 585
48. Communications containing complaints against governments	Council NGO Committee meetings 117, 118. Plenary meetings 653, 661, 662. Resolution 454(XIV)
49. Programme of conferences at Headquarters and at Geneva	Plenary meetings 653, 663, 664. Resolution 458(XIV)

At its 632nd meeting, on 7 July 1952, the Council decided not to include the question of "humanitarian action on behalf of twenty-seven Spanish trade unionists" as a separate item on its agenda. The Council, however, discussed this question in connexion with item 15.

4. The Trusteeship Council

MATTERS CONSIDERED AT THE TENTH AND ELEVENTH REGULAR SESSIONS

a. TENTH SESSION

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
1. Adoption of the agenda	Plenary meeting 386
2. Report of the Secretary-General on credentials	Plenary meetings 386, 408
3. Examination of annual reports of Administering Authorities on the administration of Trust Territories:

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
(a) Western Samoa, period ended 31 December 1950;	Plenary meetings 390-395,408,411
(b) Nauru, year ended 30 June 1951;	Plenary meetings 400-402, 409, 411
(c) New Guinea, year ended 30 June 1951;	Plenary meetings 394-401, 410, 411
(d) Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, year ended 30 June 1951	Plenary meetings 403-407, 410, 411
4. Examination of petitions	Plenary meetings 397, 406, 408, 410, 411. Resolutions 428-462(X)
5. Arrangements for a periodic visiting mission to Trust Territories in West Africa	Plenary meetings 388, 389, 409, 410. Resolution 424 (X)
6. Revision of the Provisional Questionnaire: report of the Drafting Committee on the Questionnaire	Plenary meetings 389, 408. Action deferred to eleventh session, pending comments from members of Council
7. Progress report of the Committee on Rural Economic Development of the Trust Territories	Plenary meeting 411. Consideration postponed until the eleventh session
8. Report of the Standing Committee on Administrative Unions	Plenary meeting 410
9. General procedure of the Trusteeship Council (General Assembly resolution 432 (V))	Plenary meetings 387, 388, 411. Question referred to Committee on General Procedure; further consideration deferred until eleventh session
10. Examination of petitions (General Assembly resolution 435 (V) and resolution 552 (VI))	Committee on Examination of Petitions meetings 1-3, 8. Plenary meetings 387, 397. Resolution 425(X)
11. Organization and methods of functioning of visiting missions (General Assembly resolution 553 (VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meetings 388, 409. Resolution 427(X)
12. Participation of the indigenous inhabitants of the Trust Territories in the work of the Trusteeship Council (General Assembly resolution 554 (VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meetings 388, 389, 408, 409. Resolution 426 (X)
13. The Ewe and Togoland unification problem (General Assembly resolution 555(VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meetings 388, 389. Resolution 424(X)
14. Dissemination of information on the United Nations and on the International Trusteeship System in Trust Territories (General Assembly resolution 556 (VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meetings 387, 388, 389. Resolution 423(X)
15. Educational advancement in Trust Territories (General Assembly resolution 557(VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meetings 388, 410
16. Report of the Trusteeship Council (General Assembly resolution 559 (VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meeting 388
17. Information on the implementation of Trusteeship Council and General Assembly resolutions relating to Trust Territories (General Assembly resolution 560 (VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meeting 388. Resolution 422(X)
18. Rural economic development of the Trust Territories (General Assembly resolution 561 (VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meeting 387. Resolution.421(X)
19. Administrative unions affecting Trust Territories (General Assembly resolution 563 (VI) of 18 January 1952)	Plenary meeting 387. Resolution .420(X)
20. Nomination and appointment of women as members of visiting missions (Economic and Social Council resolution 385 E (XIII))	Plenary meetings 388, 409. Resolution 427(X)
b. ELEVENTH SESSION (FIRST PART)
1. Adoption of the agenda	Plenary meeting 412
2. Report of the Secretary-General on credentials	Plenary meetings 412, 454
3. Election of a President and Vice-President	Plenary meeting 412
4. Examination of annual reports:
(a) Somaliland under Italian administration, 1951;	Plenary meetings 415-422, 440, 441, 443, 453
(b) Tanganyika, 1951;	Plenary meetings 425-430, 442, 450, 455
(c) Ruanda-Urundi, 1951;	Plenary meetings 421-424, 427, 429, 430, 442, 450

Agenda Item	Consideration and Action Taken
(d) Togoland under British administration, 1951;	Plenary meetings 430, 432-435, 450, 454
(e) Togoland under French administration, 1951;	Plenary meetings 436-441, 453, 455
(f) Cameroons under British administration, 1951;	Plenary meetings 443-446, 448, 453, 455
(g) Cameroons under French administration, 1951;	Plenary meetings 446-451, 455
5. Examination of petitions: reports of the Standing Committee on Petitions	Plenary meetings 413,414,431,432,440-443,450-453. Resolutions 468-640(XI)
6. Reports of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Trust Territories in East Africa, 1951	Plenary meetings 415-430, 440, 442, 450, 453. Resolution 464(XI)
7. Arrangements for a periodic visiting mission to Trust Territories in West Africa	Plenary meetings 427, 453. Resolution 465(XI)
8. Revision of the Provisional Questionnaire: report of the Drafting Committee on the Questionnaire	Plenary meetings 413, 414. Resolution 463(XI)
9. Report of the Committee on Rural Economic Development of Trust Territories	Plenary meeting 413
10. Administrative unions affecting Trust Territories: reports of the Standing Committee on Administrative Unions	Plenary meeting 454
11. General procedure of the Trusteeship Council: report of the Committee on General Procedure	Plenary meetings 413, 450, 453. Resolution 467(XI)
12. Report of the Committee on Participation of Indigenous Inhabitants of Trust Territories in the Work of the Trusteeship Council	Plenary meeting 454. Resolution 466(XI)
13. Educational advancement in Trust Territories (General Assembly resolution 557(VI)): report of the Secretary-General	Plenary meeting 450
14. Social advancement in Trust Territories (Assembly resolution 323(IV)): reports of the International Labour Organisation on migrant labour and penal sanctions for breach of contract by indigenous inhabitants	Plenary meetings 449, 450
15. Provision of information on the activities of the United Nations in Trust Territories (Trusteeship Council resolution 36(III)): report of the Secretary-General	Plenary meeting 454
16. Adoption of the report of the Trusteeship Council to the General Assembly	Plenary meeting 455. Resolution 641(XI)
c. ELEVENTH SESSION (SECOND PART)
1. Adoption of the agenda	Plenary meeting 456
2. The Ewe and Togoland unification problem: special report of the Visiting Mission	Plenary meetings 456-460. Resolution 643(XI)
3. Arrangements for a periodic visiting mission to Trust Territories in the Pacific during 1953	Plenary meetings 456-458. Resolution 642(XI)
4. Programme of future meetings of the Council	Plenary meetings 456, 459

5. The International Court of Justice

During 1952 the Court dealt with the following matters:

Election of the President and Vice-President	Case concerning Rights of Nationals of the United States in Morocco
Election of the Chamber of Summary Procedure and committees	Anglo-Iranian Oil Company Case (Preliminary Objection)
Ambatielos Case	Minquiers and Ecrehos Case: determination of time-limits
	Nottebohm Case
	Administrative Questions

D. CONSTITUTIONAL AND ORGANIZATIONAL QUESTIONS

1. Question of Chinese Representation

At the General Assembly's seventh session, the representative of the USSR on 17 October 1952 submitted in the Credentials Committee a draft resolution (A/CR/L.1), in terms of which the Committee would recommend that the Assembly regard as invalid the credentials of the representatives of the "so-called Kuomintang Government" to the seventh session, since these credentials did not satisfy the requirements of rule 27⁵⁹ of the Assembly's rules of procedure.

The representative of the United States submitted a draft resolution (A/CR/L.2) which would:

(1) recommend that the Assembly postpone for the duration of its seventh session consideration of all proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to seat representatives of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China; and (2) find that the credentials of the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China conformed with the provisions of rule 27 of the Assembly's rules of procedure.

By 6 votes to 3 the Credentials Committee adopted a United States motion that the United States draft resolution should be put to the vote first, and it was adopted by the same vote. By 6 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, the Committee adopted a United States motion that the USSR draft resolution should not be put to the vote.

In its report (A/2234) to the Assembly, the Credentials Committee included China in the list of Member States whose Governments had submitted to the Secretary-General credentials for their representatives which completely satisfied the requirements of rule 27. The Committee recommended that the Assembly adopt a resolution: (1) approving its report; and (2) deciding to postpone for the duration of the seventh session consideration of all proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to seat representatives of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China.

The report was considered at the Assembly's 389th plenary meeting on 25 October 1952, when the representative of the USSR reintroduced (A/L.109) the draft resolution he had submitted to the Credentials Committee.

After separate votes on the individual paragraphs, the Assembly adopted the draft resolution recommended by the Credentials Committee, as a whole, by a roll-call vote of 42 to 7, with 11 abstentions (resolution 609 A (VII)). Voting was as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Against: Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Israel, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

The representative of the United States considered that, in view of this decision, the USSR draft resolution should not be put to the vote. This objection was sustained by 45 votes to 6, with 4 abstentions.

Assembly resolution 609 A (VII) read:

"The General Assembly

"1. Approves the first report of the Credentials Committee;

"2. Decides to postpone for the duration of its seventh session consideration of all proposals to exclude the representatives of the Government of the Republic of China and to seat representatives of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China."

During 1952 the delegation of the USSR and certain other delegations raised the question of the representation of China in various other organs and bodies of the United Nation.

At the opening (386th) meeting of the Trusteeship Council's tenth session on 27 February, and at the opening (412th) meeting of its eleventh session on 3 June, the representative of the USSR proposed (T/L.232) that the representative of China should be excluded from the Council and that a representative of the People's Republic of China, appointed by the Central People's Government of China, should be invited to participate in the proceedings. On each occasion, on a motion by the representative of the United States, the Council decided, by 11 votes to 1, to postpone consideration of the Soviet proposal indefinitely.

In the Economic and Social Council, at the only plenary (569th) meeting of the first special session of the Council on 24 March, the representative of the USSR submitted a similar oral proposal. The Council, however, by 12 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions, adopted a proposal by the United States, in accordance with rule 49 of the rules of procedure, for adjourning indefinitely all debate on the question of the representation of China.

⁵⁹ Rule 27 states, among other things, that credentials shall be issued either by the Head of State or Government or by the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

A similar draft resolution (E/L.353) was introduced by the representative of the USSR at the first plenary (570th) meeting of the Council's fourteenth session on 20 May. The Council again adopted, by 14 votes to 4, a motion by the representative of the United States for adjournment of the debate on the question of the representation of China for the duration of the fourteenth session.

A similar draft resolution was submitted orally by the representative of the USSR at the 112th meeting of the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations on 8 April. The Chairman considered that the proposal was within the competence of the Committee. The representative of the United States, however, appealed, under rule 48 of the rules of procedure, and the Chairman's ruling was overruled by the Committee by 6 votes to 1.

Similar motions were put forward in the functional commissions listed below. The Acting Chairmen of those bodies, in ruling that the commissions were not competent to effect changes in their membership, recalled the terms of reference, according to which the functional commissions (with the exception of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, of which the members are States) consist of one representative from Member States of the United Nations selected by the Council; the Secretary-General consults with the governments thus selected before the representatives are finally nominated by these governments and confirmed by the Council.

Commission on Human Rights (eight session; 252nd meeting on 14 April): The ruling of the Chairman that a draft resolution by the USSR (E/CN.4/L.20) was not receivable, challenged by the representative of the USSR, was upheld by 9 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions.

Social Commission (eighth session; 176th meeting on 12 May): The ruling of the Chairman that the Commission was not competent to decide on the question raised by the USSR (E/CN.5/L.154), with which the Soviet representative expressed disagreement, was upheld by 14 votes to 2, with 1 abstention.

Commission on the Status of Women (sixth session; 101st meeting on 24 March): The Acting Chairman recalled that Assembly resolution 396(V) laid down that questions relating to the representation of a Member State in the United Nations were to be considered by the Assembly or by the Interim Committee when the Assembly itself was not in session; and that the Commission was consequently not competent to take a decision on the point of order raised orally by the representative of the USSR. The Acting Chairman invited representatives to vote on a motion that the Commission was in favour of observing Assembly resolution 396(V). The motion was adopted by 12 votes to 3.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs (seventh session; 156th meeting on 15 April): A motion by the representative of the United States, that the Commission should postpone until its next session any further discussion of the representation of China, raised orally by the representative of the USSR, was adopted by 10 votes to 3, with 1 abstention.

The question of the representation of China was also raised at the eighth session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, at the Commission's 90th meeting on 29 January. The ruling of the Chairman that an oral draft resolution by the USSR was out of order, challenged by the representative of the USSR, was upheld by the Commission in a roll-call vote of 9 to 2, with 3 abstentions. On the motion of the representative of Thailand, the Commission, in a roll-call vote of 10 to 4, decided to adjourn the debate on this question, on the ground that it would be inappropriate to discuss the issue while the question was under consideration by the General Assembly.

At the 90th meeting of the Executive Board of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund on 22 April, the Board, on a motion by the representative of the United States, by 16 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions, decided to adjourn the debate on an oral draft resolution submitted by the representative of the USSR.

2. Measures to Limit the Duration of General Assembly Sessions

The General Assembly at its sixth session decided to include this question in the provisional agenda of its seventh session.⁶⁰

It did so on the basis of a report by the Fifth Committee, which recommended that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the permanent delegations, and directly with Member States having no permanent delegations, should prepare in the interval between the sixth and seventh sessions a working paper with appropriate comments and recommendations. These consultations were held in the summer of 1952 and, on 1 October 1952, the Secretary-General circulated a memorandum (A/2206) on the subject to all Member Governments. Estimates (A/C.5/514) of the financial implications involved in certain of the measures recommended were also submitted.

The Secretary-General's memorandum contained general observations on the role and the functions of the General Assembly and suggestions regarding the agenda of regular sessions, the examination of items in plenary meetings and committees, the schedule of meetings, the consideration of items between sessions, the participation of the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee in the work of the General Committee, and other related matters. In an annex to the memorandum, it was suggested that certain rules of procedure relating to procedural motions in plenary meetings and in committees should be amended, namely: rules 73 and 113, concerning limitation of time to be allowed to speakers; rules 75 and 115, concerning adjournment of the debate of an item under discussion; rules 76 and 116, concerning closure of the debate on an item under discussion; rules 74 and 114, concerning closure of the list of speakers; and rules 74 and 112, concerning a point of order. It was also suggested that rule 38 concerning the voting rights of the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee in the General Committee should be amended.

⁶⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 30.

Following a general discussion at the 387th and 388th plenary meetings on 23 and 24 October, the question was considered by the Sixth Committee at its 346th to 354th meetings from 10 to 18 December 1952. The Committee was instructed by the Assembly (A/C.6/339/Add.1) to consider and report on the amendments to the rules of procedure proposed by the Secretary-General and on any other amendment proposed by the members of the Sixth Committee.

During the discussions in the Sixth Committee, the opinion was generally expressed that the adoption of the proposed amendments to the Assembly's rules of procedure would only slightly affect the duration of sessions. There was general agreement that no undue restrictions should be placed on the right of each representative to express fully its views on any of the items placed on the General Assembly's agenda. The representatives of Australia, Brazil, Colombia, El Salvador, New Zealand and the United States, among others, laid stress on the good will which all delegations would have to display if sessions were to be effectively shortened.

The representatives of Australia, Canada, China, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Norway, New Zealand, Sweden, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States, among others, were, in general, in agreement with most of the proposed amendments to the rules of procedure. They considered that the amendments were of limited scope and would mostly serve to clarify provisions already in effect and that their adoption would not curtail free discussions. The rules relating to the general powers of the President and the Chairmen of committees, they considered, already granted to the presiding officers the powers of initiative envisaged in the amendments concerning the limitation of time and adjournment and closure of debate. They were confident that the presiding officers would not abuse their powers and would not be in a position to do so as the ultimate decision on matters of procedure would continue to rest in each case with the Assembly or the Committee concerned. The proposed limitation of the number of speakers on motions to limit the time and the number of speakers in a debate was justified, in their opinion, by similar restrictions on debates which already existed with respect to other procedural motions.

They also considered that a definition of a point of order would be useful because of the abuses which had occurred under the existing rules.

Finally, they thought it natural that the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee should be granted the same rights in the deliberation of the General Committee as the Chairman of the Main Committees.

The representatives of Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, Guatemala, India, Iraq, Iran, Liberia, Mexico, Peru, Poland, Syria, the USSR and Uruguay, among others, expressed themselves, in general, as against the proposed amendments to the rules. They considered that these amendments, if adopted, would limit freedom of speech and hamper discussion without shortening the duration of the sessions. The General Assembly's rules of procedure, they said, had to be considered in the light of the principles of the Charter, which was based on the sovereign equality of States. Rules preventing representatives from expressing their views as fully as they wished would be detrimental to the interest of the smaller States. The length of the Assembly's sessions was essentially due to the nature and complexity of the problems confronting the United Nations and to the Assembly's eminent position among other United Nations organs. Often, they felt, long debates were necessary in order that solutions acceptable to all Members might be found and technical considerations should not outweigh political necessities.

Some representatives, in particular those of Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR, opposed the proposed amendment to the rule concerning the composition of the General Committee as unrelated to the question of the shortening of the session of the General Assembly. They also considered that the proposed definition of the point of order was unduly restrictive.

A number of representatives, including those of Czechoslovakia, India, Poland and the USSR, felt that the proposed granting of powers of initiative to the President and the Chairman with respect to procedural motions would give to the presiding officers powers extending beyond the normal function of directing debates and would enable them to influence the course of discussions.

The representatives of Afghanistan, Brazil, Chile, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, Iraq, Mexico, Poland, Syria, the USSR, Uruguay and Yugoslavia, among others, considered that motions to limit the time to be allowed to each speaker and the number of times each representative might speak on a question were of such importance that no restrictions should be placed on consideration of such motions.

Several representatives, including those of Afghanistan, India, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan, Syria and Uruguay, expressed their opposition to premature action and thought that there would be an advantage in establishing a special committee composed of representatives of Member States which would make a more complete study of the Secretary-General's memorandum and of other proposals which Members might wish to submit in the course of the coming year. They expressed the hope that such a thorough study would enable the General Assembly to arrive at final conclusions at its eighth session. Other representatives, including those of Brazil, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States, doubted whether this proposal was strictly within the Sixth Committee's terms of reference and thought that the proposed amendments were sufficiently clear to make the establishment of a special committee unnecessary.

The representatives who favoured the fixing of a "closing date" of the session of the General Assembly instead of a "target date" as at present—in particular those of Argentina and Belgium—thought that such a provision would result in a more rational use of the time available to the General Assembly and would enable representatives to organize their work better. Other representatives, including those of Bolivia, India, the Ukrainian SSR, the United Kingdom, the USSR and Uruguay, were in favour of referring the proposal for study to the special committee which was established to study the question further (see below).

The Sixth Committee had before it two draft resolutions on the subject, one proposed by Norway (A/C.6/L.278) and the other by Argentina (A/C.6/L.279). Amendments to the Norwegian draft were submitted by Australia (A/C.6/L.282 and Rev. 1), Syria (A/C.6/L.280), Egypt (A/C.6/L.286) and Uruguay (A/C.6/L.284). Amendments to the Argentinian draft were submitted by Belgium (A/C.6/L.281) and Egypt (A/C.6/L.285). Voting on the two drafts and amendments to them took place at the Committee's 353rd meeting on 17 December.

The Norwegian draft resolution (A/C.6/L.278), in the preamble, would have the Assembly:

- (1) refer to the Secretary-General's memorandum;
- (2) recognize the importance of appropriate measures to limit the duration of Assembly sessions; and (3) note the Secretary-General's observations and suggestions, in particular those regarding the participation of the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee in the General Committee and regarding the rules of procedure relating to points of order and limitation of debates. A revised version of the draft (A/C.6/L.278/Rev.1) omitted the references in the third paragraph to the participation of the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee and to the rules relating to points of order and limitation of debates. In its operative part, the Norwegian draft (A/C.6/L.278 and A/C.6/L.278/Rev.1) recommended that the General Assembly: (1) approve the amendments proposed by the Secretary-General to rules 38, 72(112), 73(113), 75(115) and 76(116); (2) decide that the study of factors affecting the duration of its sessions should be pursued by making use of the experience gained during Assembly sessions, and request the Secretary-General to submit when he considered it appropriate proposals likely to result in limiting the duration of sessions.

The Australian amendment (A/C.6/L.282 and Rev. 1) proposed:

- (1) the addition of rule 74(114) to the rules to be amended under the Norwegian draft resolution; and (2) the amendment of rule 88(127) to prohibit explanations of votes by members who had participated in the debate on the subject to be voted upon. The Australian amendment was withdrawn by its sponsor at the 351st meeting of the Committee on 16 December.

The Uruguayan amendment (A/C.6/L.284) proposed to replace the operative part of the Norwegian draft by provisions under which the General Assembly would:

- (1) appoint a special committee of eleven members;
- (2) request it to consider the Secretary-General's memorandum and any other relevant information communicated to it by Member States and to submit its recommendations to the eighth session of the Assembly; and
- (3) ask the Secretary-General to transmit the special committee's report to Member States for comments and to include the item in the provisional agenda of the eighth session. This amendment was adopted in separate votes, the first paragraph by 23 votes to 20, with 2 abstentions, the second by 26 votes to 20, with 2 abstentions, and the third by 27 votes to 20, with 1 abstention.

The Syrian amendment (A/C.6/L.280) proposed:

Deletion of the first operative paragraph of the Norwegian draft.

The Egyptian amendment (A/C.6/L.286):

Provided for the adoption by the General Assembly of the proposed amendment to rule 38 only.

In view of the adoption of the Uruguayan amendment, these two amendments were not voted on.

The preamble to the Norwegian draft resolution was adopted in separate votes ranging from 35 to 5, with 7 abstentions, to 29 to 11, with 8 abstentions.

The Norwegian draft as a whole, as amended, was adopted by 27 votes to 20, with 1 abstention.

At the 353rd meeting on 17 December, the USSR representative requested that, in accordance with rule 130⁶¹ of the rules of procedure, the Argentine draft should not be voted upon. He argued that the Sixth Committee had just decided to set up a special committee to consider the problem as a whole. The Committee rejected the USSR proposal by 21 votes to 20, with 5 abstentions.

At the 357th meeting on 19 December, a proposal by the Chairman to increase to fifteen the number of members of the special committee provided by the draft resolution was adopted by the Sixth Committee. At the same meeting the Chairman announced the proposed composition of the special committee.⁶²

The Argentine draft resolution would, in its preamble, have the General Assembly:

(1) refer to the Secretary-General's memorandum; (2) recognize the need for adopting measures to limit the duration of Assembly sessions without restricting the rights of States Members to speak fully and freely in the debates; and (3) state that the best method of limiting the duration of sessions was to prescribe a maximum time limit on duration in the rules of procedure, any items not dealt with within the prescribed time limit to be postponed until the following session. In its operative part, the draft resolution proposed to amend rule 2 of the rules of procedure as follows:

"On the recommendation of the General Committee, the General Assembly shall, at the beginning of its session, fix a closing date for the session.

"The duration of any regular session shall not exceed six weeks. Any items still pending at the close of the session shall be referred to the next regular session."

The Belgian amendment (A/C.6/L.281), which was accepted by Argentina at the 352nd meeting on 16 December, proposed the deletion of the third paragraph of the preamble and of the second paragraph of the proposed amended rule 2.

The Egyptian amendment (A/C.6/L.285) proposed to revise the text of the second paragraph of the preamble of the Argentina draft resolution to replace the reference to the rights of States Members to speak by a reference to "the rights of States Members, including the right to speak". This amendment was adopted by 42 votes to none, with 4 abstentions.

The Committee adopted the first paragraph of the preamble to the Argentine draft by 27 votes to 11, with 7 abstentions and the operative paragraph, as amended by Belgium, by 25 votes to 17, with 5 abstentions. The draft resolution as whole, as amended, was adopted by 26 votes to 15, with 6 abstentions.

The General Assembly at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December considered the two resolutions proposed by the Sixth Committee (A/2349)—resolution A, originally the Norwegian draft as amended, and resolution B, originally the Argentine draft as amended. The Assembly also had before it a report (A/2326) by the Fifth Committee on the financial implications involved.

The Fifth Committee informed the Assembly that, subject to certain reservations, adoption of the proposals contained in paragraph 47 of the Secretary-General's memorandum (A/2206) would involve the provision of additional funds amounting to $69,700 for a General Assembly session of nine weeks, or of $41,000 for a session of eight weeks.

In this paragraph, the Secretary-General had proposed: (1) that arrangements should be made for the simultaneous meeting of five Main Committees of the General Assembly; and (2) that the number of representatives or alternate representatives of each Member State whose travel expenses are reimbursed by the United Nations should be increased from five to seven.

The Fifth Committee suggested that the Assembly consider the possibility of convening certain Main Committees with heavy agendas in advance of other Committees within the period of the session, and also consider limiting to one the increase in the number of delegation members to be reimbursed for travel expenses.

At the request of the USSR representative, separate votes were taken on parts of draft resolution A. The first paragraph of the preamble was adopted by 41 votes to 5, with 4 abstentions; the preamble, as a whole, by 41 votes to 6, with 3 abstentions; and the draft resolution as a whole by 53 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions.

Resolution B was adopted by 37 votes to 12, with 3 abstentions. The resolutions (689 A and B (VII)) read:

A

"The General Assembly,

"Having considered the memorandum submitted by the Secretary-General on measures to limit the duration of regular sessions of the General Assembly,

"Recognizing the importance of adopting appropriate measures to this end, consistent with the fulfilment of the Assembly's functions,

⁶¹ This rule reads as follows: "If two or more proposals relate to the same question, a committee shall, unless it decides otherwise, vote on the proposals in the order in which they have been submitted. A committee may, after each vote on a proposal, decide whether to vote on the next proposal."

⁶² For members of the Committee, see below, in text of resolution as adopted.

"Noting the observations and suggestions presented by the Secretary-General with respect to the rules of procedure,

"1. Decides to establish a Special Committee of fifteen members, each representing one of the following Member States: Afghanistan, Australia, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, France, Iran, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America and Uruguay;

"2. Requests this Special Committee to consider the Secretary-General's memorandum and any other relevant information communicated to it by Member States and to submit its recommendations to the General Assembly at its eighth session;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the Special Committee's report to Member States for comment and to include the item in the provisional agenda of the eighth session of the General Assembly."

B

"The General Assembly,

"Having examined the memorandum submitted by the Secretary-General on measures to limit the duration of regular sessions of the General Assembly,

"Recognizing the need for adopting measures calculated to accomplish this purpose, without restricting the rights of States Members, including the right to speak fully and freely in the debates of the plenary meetings and in the various Committees,

"Amends rule 2 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly to read as follows:

"On the recommendation of the General Committee, the General Assembly shall, at the beginning of each session, fix a closing date for the session."

3. Methods and Procedures of the General Assembly for Dealing with Legal and Drafting Questions

At its sixth session, the General Assembly (resolution 597 (VI)) established a fifteen-member special committee to consider the question of its methods and procedures for dealing with legal and drafting questions⁶³ and to report to the Assembly's seventh session.

The Special Committee met from 27 August to 4 September 1952. In its report (A/2174) to the Assembly it recommended:

"(a) That, whenever any Committee contemplates making a recommendation to the General Assembly to request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice, the matter shall, at some appropriate stage of its consideration by that Committee, be referred to the Sixth Committee or to an ad hoc sub-committee established by the Committee concerned, for advice on the legal aspects and on the drafting of the request.

"(b) That, whenever any Committee contemplates making a recommendation to the General Assembly to refer a matter to the International Law Commission, the Committee shall, at some appropriate stage of its consideration, consult the Sixth Committee as to the advisability of such a reference, and on its drafting.

"(c) That, whenever any Committee contemplates making a recommendation for the adoption by the General Assembly of any amendment to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, the matter shall, at some appropriate stage of its consideration by that Committee, be referred to the Sixth Committee for advice on the drafting of such amendment and of any consequential amendment.

"(d) That, when a Committee considers the legal aspects of a question important, the Committee should refer it for legal advice to the Sixth Committee or to an ad hoc sub-committee of the Committee concerned.

"(e) That, normally, the Chairman of a Committee shall, at the appropriate time, call upon the Vice-Chairman and the Rapporteur to join him for the purpose of proceeding, in consultation with the competent officials of the Secretariat, to examine the draft resolutions from the point of view of style, form and the use of technical terms, and, when appropriate, to suggest to the Committee such changes as they deem necessary."

The report of the Special Committee was considered at the Assembly's seventh session by the Sixth Committee at its 306th to 312th meetings from 20 to 28 October 1952.

The following Members, among others, supported, in general, the Special Committee's recommendations: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, France, Greece, Israel, the Netherlands, Peru, Sweden, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia. Those recommendations, in the view of some of these representatives, might not go as far as was desirable, but they were a compromise solution which represented an irreducible minimum of necessary improvements in the General Assembly's procedures. It was necessary, in their opinion, to make these provisions obligatory as optional provisions would make no change in the existing situation. They thought that the system proposed by the Special Committee would do much toward ensuring adequate consideration of legal questions, would be sufficiently flexible not to impair the efficiency of the General Assembly, and would respect the competence of Committees other than the Sixth.

The representatives of, among others, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, India, Iraq, Liberia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Syria, the USSR and the United States did not agree with the recommendations of the Special Committee. They thought that every Committee of the General Assembly should be left completely free to decide whether or not to adopt the methods and procedures proposed in the report. To make it obligatory to refer legal questions to the Sixth Committee for advice would in some degree subordinate other Committees to the Sixth, would make the procedure of the General Assembly excessively rigid, would overburden the Sixth Committee and would consequently prolong the Assembly's sessions. Further, the attempt to separate the legal aspects from the political and other aspects of agenda items was, they considered, futile, and might provoke extensive debates. The Sixth Committee, in their view, was not primarily a body of legal experts but rather a meeting of representatives of governments; reference to the Sixth Committee would not, therefore, necessarily promote consideration of legal questions from a technical viewpoint.

⁶³ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 25-29.

Other representatives, including those of Chile, Egypt, El Salvador, Indonesia, Norway and Venezuela, recognized the force of some of the arguments advanced on both sides. They proposed that the General Assembly should recommend that certain procedures should be followed; this course would preserve some flexibility while making an improvement in the existing situation.

The Sixth Committee had before it a United Kingdom draft resolution (A/C.6/L.234), amendments to which were submitted by Egypt (A/C.6/L.235), by Argentina, Mexico and Peru jointly (A/C.6/L.236), by Poland (A/C.6/L.237), by Belgium (A/C.6/L.238), by Czechoslovakia (A/C.6/L.239), by El Salvador (A/C.6/L.240)—later revised by the sponsor (A/C.6/L.240/Rev.1), by Venezuela (A/C.6/L.243), and orally, by France and by the Union of South Africa.

The joint amendment of Argentina, Mexico and Peru was withdrawn in favour of a joint amendment by Argentina, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Mexico, Panama and Peru (A/C.6/L.242), which was later revised by the sponsors (A/C.6/L.242/Rev.1). Part of the Polish amendment (A/C.6/L.237) was applied to the new joint amendment, and oral sub-amendments to it were proposed by Syria and Australia.⁶⁴

Following is a summary of the draft resolution and amendments, paragraph by paragraph, together with the Committee's action on them:

In the first paragraph of the preamble, the United Kingdom draft resolution (A/C.6/L.234) proposed that the Assembly state that it considered it essential to establish for its work "conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained." It would further state that to this end it was desirable to improve the Assembly's methods and procedures for dealing with legal and drafting questions.

(1) A Czechoslovak amendment (A/C.6/L.239) proposed the deletion of the second statement, but was subsequently withdrawn.

(2) A Venezuelan amendment (A/C.6/L.243) proposed to replace the first paragraph of the preamble by two new paragraphs. The first of these was accepted by the United Kingdom (see text of resolution as adopted, below) and the second was withdrawn. It would have stated that the Assembly considered it necessary to ensure the greatest possible consistency in the style, form and language of its resolutions and accuracy in the use of technical terms contained in them.

The paragraph, as amended, was adopted by 36 votes to none, with 15 abstentions.

No amendments were proposed to the second paragraph of the preamble to the United Kingdom draft and it was adopted without dissent; it provided that the Assembly take note of the report and recommendations of the Special Committee.

The first operative paragraph of the United Kingdom draft resolution provided that the Assembly decide to follow the Special Committee's five recommendations (see above), which were set out in five subparagraphs. During the discussions the sponsor orally proposed that the Committee should "adopt" the Committee's recommendations rather than "decide" to follow them.

An amendment by El Salvador (A/C.6/L.240/Rev.1) proposed that the Assembly should "recommend" the five points made by the Special Committee rather than adopt these recommendations. It was adopted by 22 votes to 15, with 11 abstentions.

The first sub-paragraph in the United Kingdom draft reproduced the recommendation of the Special Committee concerning requests for advisory opinions from the International Court (see above). The following amendments were submitted to it:

(1) An amendment by Argentina, Mexico and Peru proposed (A/C.6/L.236) that the question of a request to the Court be referred to the Sixth Committee or that a joint committee should be appointed with representatives of the Sixth Committee, rather than that the question be referred to the Sixth Committee or an ad hoc committee set up by the Committee concerned. This amendment was withdrawn in favour of a joint amendment by Argentina, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Honduras, Mexico, Panama and Peru (A/C.6/L.242).

(2) This joint eleven-Power amendment, as revised by the sponsors (A/C.6/L.242/Rev.1), proposed that the question of a request to the Court should at some appropriate stage of its consideration be referred to the Sixth Committee or that the Committee concerned should propose that the matter be considered by a joint committee of itself and the Sixth committee.

Three sub-amendments were proposed to the eleven-Power amendment. A Polish sub-amendment (A/C.6/L.237) and a Syrian oral sub-amendment suggested that the reference to the Sixth Committee or a joint committee should be permissive rather than mandatory. The Polish sub-amendment, which proposed to replace the word "shall" by "may", was rejected by 24 votes to 22, with 3 abstentions. The Syrian oral sub-amendment, which would have stated that the question should be referred if the referring Committee when considering it "deems such action to be necessary and appropriate", was rejected by 22 votes to 21, with 7 abstentions. An Australian oral sub-amendment, as revised by the sponsor, proposed that the question might alternatively be referred to an ad hoc sub-committee of the Committee concerned. It was rejected by 19 votes to 11, with 20 abstentions.

⁶⁴ The proposal and amendments, except for some revisions and withdrawals immediately prior to the vote, were tabulated in a working paper prepared by the Secretariat (A/C.6/L.244).

The eleven-Power amendment (A/C.6/L.242/Rev.1) was adopted by 20 votes to 18, with 13 abstentions.

The Committee did not therefore vote on the other amendments which had been proposed to this subparagraph of the United Kingdom draft. These were an Egyptian amendment (A/C.6/L.235) and a Polish amendment (A/C.6/L.237) which had proposed the same changes as those subsequently proposed respectively in the Syrian and Polish sub-amendments to the eleven-Power amendment, and a South African oral amendment which would have specified that the proposed ad hoc sub-committee should be "an ad hoc legal sub-committee."

The second subparagraph of the United Kingdom draft resolution's first operative paragraph reproduced the Special Committee's recommendations concerning reference of matters to the International Law Commission. Two amendments were proposed to it, one by Egypt (A/C.6/L.235) and one by Poland (A/C.6/L.237), both aimed at making the proposed consultation with the Sixth Committee permissive rather than mandatory.

(1) The Polish amendment, which would have replaced the word "shall" by "may", was rejected by 24 votes to 21, with 4 abstentions.

(2) The Egyptian amendment, which would have had the Committee consult "if, during its consideration of the matter, it deems such action to be necessary and appropriate" was rejected by 24 votes to 23, with 5 abstentions.

The United Kingdom text of this subparagraph was adopted by a roll-call vote of 26 to 4, with 22 abstentions.

No amendments were proposed to the third subparagraph of the first operative paragraph, which reproduced the Special Committee's recommendations regarding the Assembly's rules of procedure, and it was adopted by 45 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions.

The fourth subparagraph, reproducing the fourth of the Special Committee's recommendations, provided that when a Committee considered the legal aspects of a question important it should refer it for legal advice to the Sixth Committee or to an ad hoc sub-committee of the Committee concerned. Four amendments were proposed to it.

(1) A Polish amendment (A/C.6/L.237) to delete the subparagraph was rejected by a roll-call vote of 24 to 24, with 4 abstentions.

(2) A Czechoslovak amendment (A/C.6/L.239) proposed to substitute a provision that when a Committee considered the legal aspects of a question important, it might consult the Sixth Committee. On a roll-call vote, the amendment was adopted by 27 votes to 18, with 7 abstentions. After the voting, it was pointed out that there was a discrepancy between the English original and the Spanish version of the amendment. The Chairman ruled that the discrepancy had led to a substantial misunderstanding on the part of Spanish-speaking representatives and that a new vote should be taken; this ruling was sustained by the Committee by 25 votes to 18, with 10 abstentions. On a new roll-call vote, the Czechoslovak amendment was rejected by 29 votes to 16, with 8 abstentions.

(3) A French oral amendment, as revised by the sponsor, would have the provision for reference to an ad hoc sub-committee replaced by a provision that the Committee should propose that the question be considered by a joint committee of itself and the Sixth Committee. It was adopted by 19 votes to 8, with 14 abstentions.

(4) A South African oral amendment to specify that the ad hoc sub-committee would be a legal one was therefore not voted on by the Committee.

The subparagraph, as amended, was adopted by 20 votes on 12, with 11 abstentions.

Three amendments were proposed to the fifth subparagraph, which reproduced the Special Committee's recommendations concerning the examination of draft resolutions from the point of view of style, form and the use of technical terms.

The Committee, by 23 votes to 22, with 7 abstentions, adopted a Polish amendment (A/C.6/L.237) to delete this subparagraph. It did not therefore vote on a Belgian amendment (A/C.6/L.238) which would have specified that the changes to be suggested should be "formal". Nor did it vote on a South African oral amendment to state that competent officers of the Secretariat to be consulted would be "legal" officials.

The second operative paragraph of the United Kingdom draft resolution provided that the Assembly direct that its decision to adopt the Special Committee's recommendations be embodied in an annex to the rules of procedure and that the annex should also contain paragraphs 19, 20, 29, 30, 35, 36, 38 and 39 of the Special Committee's report (A/2174).

A Polish amendment (A/C.6/L.237) to delete this paragraph was withdrawn. An amendment by El Salvador (A/C.6/L.240/Rev.1) to substitute the word "recommendations" for the word "decision" was adopted by the Committee by 27 votes to 4, with 16 abstentions.

The United Kingdom accepted an amendment by El Salvador to add paragraph 37 to the list of paragraphs of the Special Committee's report to be set forth in an annex. As thus amended, this part of the second operative paragraph was adopted by 17 votes to 14, with 18 abstentions.

The draft resolution as a whole was adopted at the Committee's 310th meeting on 28 October by 29 votes to 9, with 10 abstentions.

When the Committee's report (A/2247) was considered by the General Assembly at its 391st plenary meeting on 6 November, the representative of Czechoslovakia objected that there was not enough elasticity in the Committee's draft resolution and maintained that Committees of the Assembly other than the Sixth Committee should have greater freedom than was provided in the draft. He therefore orally proposed amendments which, by substituting "may" for "shall" or "should", would make reference to and consultation with the Sixth Committee permissive rather than mandatory except in the subparagraph relating to rules of procedure.

The amendments were adopted in the case of the first two subparagraphs (see 1 (a) and 1 (b) of text as adopted, below) by 25 votes to 20, with 6 abstentions, and 22 votes to 20, with 7 abstentions, respectively. In the case of the fourth sub-paragraph (1 (d)) the amendment was rejected by 22 votes to 22, with 6 abstentions.

The resolution as amended was voted on by paragraphs and was adopted in votes ranging from 41 to none, with 8 abstentions, to 26 to 18, with 7 abstentions. It was adopted as a whole by 33 votes to 2, with 15 abstentions.

The representatives of Iran and the Philippines, explaining their votes in favour of the Czechoslovak amendments, stated that without them the resolution would make the work of the Assembly more complicated and cumbersome. The Iranian representative also considered that without these amendments the resolution would be dangerous as it would take away from the political Committees the right to decide the way in which they would ask for advisory opinions from the Court. Both representatives said they had abstained from voting on the draft resolution because, with the adoption of the Czechoslovak amendments, it became superfluous.

The representative of the Union of South Africa stated that he had opposed the Czechoslovak amendments because they made the recommendation permissive rather than mandatory. He however thought that the printing of the recommendations in the book of rules might help committees to realize the need for referring matters to an appropriate committee, and had therefore voted for the resolution as a whole.

The resolution adopted by the Assembly (684 (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Considering that it is desirable to introduce adequate methods and procedures for dealing with the legal questions with which it is concerned, while leaving its Committees sufficient latitude for conducting their proceedings concerning matters within their competence,

"Taking note of the report and recommendations of the Special Committee established under resolution 597 (VI) of 20 December 1951,

"1. Recommends:

"(a) That, whenever any Committee contemplates making a recommendation to the General Assembly to request an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice, the matter may, at some appropriate stage of its consideration by that Committee, be referred to the Sixth Committee for advice on the legal aspects and on the drafting of the request, or the Committee concerned may propose that the matter should be considered by a joint Committee of itself and the Sixth Committee;

"(b) That, whenever any Committee contemplates making a recommendation to the General Assembly to refer a matter to the International Law Commission, the Committee may, at some appropriate stage of its consideration, consult the Sixth Committee as to the advisability of such a reference and on its drafting;

(c) That, whenever any Committee contemplates making a recommendation for the adoption by the General Assembly of any amendment to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, the matter shall, at some appropriate stage of its consideration by that Committee, be referred to the Sixth Committee for advice on the drafting of such amendment and of any consequential amendment;

"(d) That, when a Committee considers the legal aspects of a question important, the Committee should refer it for legal advice to the Sixth Committee or propose that the question should be considered by a joint Committee of itself and the Sixth Committee;

"2. Directs:

"(a) That the terms of the foregoing recommendations shall be embodied as an annex to the rules of procedure of the General Assembly;

"(b) That the said annex shall also set out, verbatim, paragraphs 19, 20, 29, 30, 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39 of the report of the Special Committee."

4. Question of a Change in the Opening Date of Regular Sessions of the General Assembly

During the seventh session of the General Assembly, the Assembly's General Committee, at its 83rd and 84th meetings held on 15 and 18 December 1952, considered the organization of the work of the Assembly. At its 84th meeting, the General Committee, by 12 votes to none, with 2 abstentions, adopted a resolution recommending that the Assembly include in the provisional agenda of its eighth session an item entitled "Question of a change in the opening date of regular sessions of the General Assembly". The Secretary-General would be instructed to prepare a report on the question.

The report of the General Committee (A/-2329) was considered by the General Assembly at its 406th plenary meeting on 18 December. The draft resolution contained in the report was adopted by the Assembly by 56 votes to none.

The representative of the United States, in explaining his vote, declared that in his opinion the original purpose of the draft resolution was to consider the practical consequences of a change in the opening date from the third Tuesday in September to some time in April.

In voting in favour of the resolution, the representative of France explained that his delegation's intention was not that the Secretary-General's study should be limited merely to the consequences of changing the opening date to April, but that it should cover any substantial change of date, any decision to change it to two, three or more months after 1 September, or to three or four months earlier.

The resolution adopted (692 (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly

"Decides

"1. To include in the provisional agenda of the eighth session an item entitled "Question of a change in the opening date of regular sessions of the General Assembly"

"2. To instruct the Secretary-General to prepare a report, for circulation to Members not later than five weeks before the opening of the eighth session, on the practical consequences of a change in the opening date of regular sessions from the third Tuesday in September to another date earlier or later in the year."

5. Adoption of Spanish as a Working Language of the Economic and Social Council

In its discussions concerning revisions of its rules of procedure (see below), the Economic and Social Council at its fourteenth session had before it a proposal by Argentina, Cuba, Mexico, and Uruguay (E/L.364 and Corr.1) to make Spanish a working language of the Council and its functional commissions.

The question was discussed at the 642nd, 644th, 651st, 652nd and 654th plenary meetings of the Council on 14, 15, 18, 21 and 22 July 1952.

During the discussions, the representatives of Poland (E/L.425) and China proposed, respectively, that Russian and Chinese should also be made working languages.

The Council also had before it financial estimates by the Secretary-General (E/L.364/Add.1 and E/L.425/Add.1) on these proposals. He estimated that on a net basis the total annual cost of introducing Spanish as a working language would be $312,300 if it were possible to recruit the greater part of the additional staff required on a six-month basis, or $534,000 if it were necessary to recruit them on a full-time basis. For Russian, the estimated additional cost would be $327,000 on a six-month basis or $645,000 on a yearly basis; for Chinese, $560,000 and $900,000, respectively.

Certain representatives, including those of Belgium, Canada, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, considered that the matter should be dealt with by the General Assembly, which had the budgetary authority.

A draft resolution (E/L.421) was, accordingly, submitted jointly by the United Kingdom and the United States, by which the proposal to make Spanish one of the working languages of the Council and its functional commissions would be noted by the Council and transmitted to the Assembly for its consideration. The Council, at the same time, would note the Assembly's recommendation that English and French should be its working languages. The sponsors accepted amendments by Poland (E/L.426) and by China (E/L.428) to have the resolution cover also the proposals to make Russian and Chinese working languages.

The representatives of Argentina, Cuba, Mexico and Uruguay, in urging the adoption of Spanish as a working language, stressed that it was the language used by almost a third of the Members of the United Nations, which would thereby be enabled to co-operate more effectively in the work of the United Nations. They emphasized that the Council was master of its own procedure and held that it should amend its rules to include Spanish as a working language, leaving to the Assembly the question of budgetary approval. They thought that the estimates of the cost were excessive.

Accordingly, they proposed a joint amendment (E/L.427) to the United Kingdom-United States draft by which the Council would note the Assembly's decision to adopt Spanish as one of its working languages, decide to adopt Spanish as a working language of the Council, and request the Secretary-General to make provision for this in the budget. The proposal was supported by Egypt.

The representatives of Poland and the USSR urged the adoption of Russian as a working language, pointing out its widespread use; the USSR representative also referred to the fact that Russian had been used in many of the basic documents leading up to the Foundation of the United Nations.

The representative of China, stating that he proposed the use of Chinese to avoid discrimination between the official languages, expressed the hope that at some future date the United Nations would be able to use only one working language.

The representatives of Belgium and Sweden considered that a working language should be one that was truly international. The representative of Sweden held the view that all the three languages in question were "regional" rather than universal languages in the same sense as English and French; the representative of Belgium, on the other hand, drew a distinction between Spanish, a language used by nearly a third of the United Nations Members, and Russian and Chinese.

The representative of France, while sympathetic to the Latin American proposal, considered that, in view of the financial implications, the question should be decided by the Assembly. Accordingly, as a compromise, he proposed an amendment (E/L.431) to the joint amendment of Argentina, Cuba, Mexico and Uruguay. According to the French amendment, the question of making Spanish a working language would be transmitted to the General Assembly "for its favourable consideration".

A Polish amendment (E/L.432) to the French amendment to include Russian as well as Spanish was defeated by 10 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions.

The French amendment was adopted by a roll-call vote of 10 to 5, with 3 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, Cuba, Egypt, France, Iran, Mexico, Philippines, Uruguay.

Against: China, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden, USSR.

Abstaining: Pakistan, United Kingdom, United States.

The joint amendment of Argentina, Cuba, Mexico and Uruguay (E/L.427), as amended by France, was also adopted by 10 votes to 5, with 3 abstentions. The amended draft resolution as a whole was adopted by 10 votes to 4, with 4 abstentions, as resolution 456 C (XIV) at the Council's 654th plenary meeting on 22 July.

By this resolution, the Council referred to the proposals to make Spanish, Russian and Chinese working languages, noted that the Assembly had recommended that English and French should be adopted as working languages of the Council and also that the Assembly had adopted Spanish as one of its working languages, and transmitted to the Assembly for its favourable consideration the question of adopting Spanish as a third working language of the Council and its functional commissions.

The question was considered at the Assembly's seventh session at the 356th to 360th meetings of the Fifth Committee from 7 to 11 November and at the 400th and 401st plenary meetings of the Assembly on 5 December 1952.

The Secretary-General, in a report to the Committee (A/C.5/501), presented revised estimates of the cost of the proposal. He expressed the opinion that an additional $472,000, subject to reduction through the application of the Staff Assessment Plan, would be required, with a further $41,500 if the Economic and Social Council were to meet in Geneva and an additional $27,500 if the Commission on Human Rights were also to meet in Geneva.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in its sixth report to the Assembly's seventh session (A/2242), stated its opinion that for the year 1953 additional expenditure could be held within a maximum of $350,000 gross, taking into account unavoidable delays in the recruitment of staff and the fluctuating workload of the Secretariat from January to March. The Committee recommended, however, purely on administrative and financial grounds, that expenditure of the magnitude proposed should be deferred for the present.

The majority of the delegations supported the proposal that Spanish should be adopted as a working language of the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions. Representatives speaking in its support either in the Fifth Committee or in plenary meeting included those of: Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Honduras, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Peru, the Philippines, Syria, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The arguments advanced were, broadly speaking, those which had been put forward in the Council. In particular, it was stressed: (1) Spanish was the language of almost a third of United Nations Members; (2) its adoption as a working language by the Economic and Social Council would increase the scope and effectiveness of the Council's work and, in particular, would enable the Spanish-speaking peoples to co-operate more effectively in furthering the work of the United Nations thereby enabling the Latin American members of the Council to contribute more; (3) the expenses involved would be offset by the added contribution to the work of the Organization and, in any case, it was a question of principle which should not be set aside for financial reasons; and (4) adoption by the Economic and Social Council and its functional commissions of Spanish as a working language was a logical corollary of its adoption by the General Assembly.

A number of delegations, including those of Argentina, Cuba, Ecuador, Honduras, Mexico and Uruguay, considered that the costs involved had been overestimated. They pointed out that, since Spanish was an official language, Spanish-speaking delegations were already entitled to ask for Spanish translations of important documents, and suggested that the estimated cost might also be cut by dispensing with a large part of the 1946-49 backlog of Spanish translation. They suggested that the figure of $350,000 suggested by the Advisory Committee for 1953 should be a maximum one and that an attempt should be made to cut it further.

In this connexion, statements were made in the Fifth Committee by the representative of the Secretary-General and the Chairman of the Advisory Committee in explanation and justification of the estimates. The view was expressed that, while it was impossible to forecast exactly the cost for future years, it was clear that the figure of $350,000 would be exceeded.

Certain representatives, including those of Australia and the United Kingdom, were prepared to support the proposal provided that the target figure for the United Nations budget of $48,700,000 (gross) previously adopted by the Fifth Committee⁶⁵ was not thereby exceeded. Otherwise, they stated, they might have to reconsider the position and move, purely on financial grounds, that the proposal be deferred.

Some representatives, in particular those of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, and also those of the Netherlands and New Zealand, opposed the proposal on budgetary and administrative grounds. The representatives of New Zealand and South Africa, who voted against the proposal in committee, abstained on the vote in plenary meeting. While paying tribute to the cultural contribution of the Spanish-speaking peoples to the United Nations and the ideals for which it stood, these representatives pointed out that there were some 25 Members which could not use their native languages in debate, much less have them adopted as working languages. The Council, they considered, had managed effectively with two working languages and a third would complicate its working arrangements. Further the adoption of Spanish as a working language would lead to similar claims for other languages, and it should also be taken into account that there were other Councils with subsidiary bodies to which the same arguments would apply. Moreover, the rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council already provided for the translation of important documents into Spanish and these documents might, perhaps, be distributed more widely. It was necessary, these representatives emphasized, to limit expenditure to essential projects since many Members were having difficulty in meeting their commitments.

The adoption of Spanish as a working language, some representatives, in particular the representative of Norway, maintained, would directly benefit only a section of the total membership paying a small percentage of the total assessment; it would be an added burden on those countries which could not use their own languages. It was pointed out, on the other hand, by the representative of Mexico, among others, that the expenses of the United Nations were shared according to the capacity to pay and that Spanish-speaking countries in turn contributed to the expense of using English and French as working languages.

The representative of Norway considered that the use of a number of languages in the United Nations introduced an element of diversion whereas the purpose of the United Nations was unity; he was opposed to linguistic barriers separating representatives of different countries.

The USSR representative, while favouring the proposal to adopt Spanish, held that the same rights should be accorded to the Russian language, which, he said, was spoken by a greater number of people than Spanish and used by Member States bearing a larger proportion of the budget. Russian had, he pointed out, been one of the working languages in the conferences leading to the drafting of the Charter. He could not support the adoption of Spanish unless Russian were also adopted, as this would imply discrimination. The same view was expressed by the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR.

Other representatives, including those of Brazil, Ecuador and Mexico, while not opposed to the adoption of Russian, considered that the proposal was unrelated to the item before the Committee and that it should come before the Assembly only if referred by the Economic and Social Council.

The representative of China favoured in principle the adoption of Spanish, but could not support the proposal for budgetary reasons, more particularly as the Fifth Committee had refused a credit of $50,000 to clear up the backlog in Chinese translation.

The representatives of Egypt and Syria expressed the hope that Arabic would in the future be included in the working languages, particularly in view of the probable increase in Arab membership when more Arab countries gained their independence.

The Fifth Committee considered the following draft resolutions:

(1) A USSR draft resolution (A/C.5/L.186), according to which the Committee would recommend that the General Assembly concur in the adoption by the Council of Spanish and Russian as working languages of the Council and its functional commissions and would inform the Assembly of the consequential budgetary appropriations. This was rejected by 31 votes, to 9, with 12 abstentions.

(2) A United Kingdom draft resolution (A/C.5/L.188), according to which the Committee would recommend in principle the adoption of Spanish as a working language, inform the Assembly of the costs involved in 1953 and subsequent years, and recommend that the question of whether the funds should be appropriated in 1953 for the purpose should be considered by the Fifth Committee in the light of the over-all budgetary position. (This draft was later withdrawn in favour of the draft proposed by 22 countries, see below (5).)

(3) A draft resolution by Uruguay and other Latin American delegations (A/C.5/L.189), according to which the Fifth Committee would make the necessary budgetary provision and empower the Rapporteur to inform the Assembly of the Committee's debates on the subject. (This was also withdrawn in favour of the draft proposed by 22 countries.)

⁶⁵ See pp. 113-14

(4) A United States draft resolution (A/C.5/L.190) which, revising and consolidating the Uruguayan and United Kingdom drafts, would have the Fifth Committee recommend that the General Assembly recommend that the Council adopt Spanish as a working language, inform the Assembly of the maximum cost in 1953 and include in the 1953 budget on first reading $350,000 for the purpose.

(5) A joint draft resolution by the following 22 countries: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela. According to this draft, the Fifth Committee would recommend: (1) that the Assembly endorse the opinion of the Economic and Social Council that Spanish should be a working language; (2) inform the Assembly that the amount estimated by the Advisory Committee ($350,000 gross) was the maximum necessary for 1953; (3) decide to include this in the recommended budget for 1953; and (4) request the Rapporteur to inform the Assembly of the Committee's debates on the question.

Amendments submitted orally by Poland to delete paragraphs 1 and 3 of the 22-Power draft were rejected by 42 votes to 10, with 2 abstentions, and 37 votes to 12, with 6 abstentions, respectively; a third Polish amendment to redraft paragraph 2 to make it clear that the provision of $350,000 in 1953 would only arise in the event that the Assembly approved the adoption of Spanish as a working language was rejected by 27 votes to 9, with 7 abstentions.

The joint draft resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 43 to 11, with 1 abstention.

The draft resolution proposed by the Fifth Committee (A/2283) was adopted by the General Assembly at its 400th plenary meeting on 5 December by 44 votes to 8, with 3 abstentions.

In its resolution (664 (VII)), the Assembly endorsed the opinion of the Economic and Social Council that Spanish should be adopted as a working language of the Council and its functional commissions.

6. Amendments to the Rules of Procedure of the Economic and Social Council and its Subsidiary Organs⁶⁶

At its thirteenth session the Council had adopted resolution 414 (XIII)⁶⁷ on the organization and operation of the Council and its commissions. This resolution had requested the Secretary-General to prepare and present to the Council at its fourteenth session draft revised rules of procedure in order that the rules might conform to the provisions of that resolution.

Consequently, the Council, at its fourteenth session, had before it a paper containing draft revised rules prepared by the Secretary-General (E/2212 A); also a draft revised rule 33 prepared by the Secretary-General (E/2274) in accordance with General Assembly resolution 533 C (VI)⁶⁸ concerning priorities and financial implications of new projects; a draft of proposed rules submitted by the Secretary-General based on the Council's recommendations contained in paragraph 39 of the Annex to resolution 402 B (XIII)⁶⁹ regarding the methods for inter-agency consultation (E/2212 B); and amendments suggested by the Secretary-General to the Council concerning its rules on records (E/2212).

The Council referred these drafts to a working party and at its 664th plenary meeting on 29 July 1952 adopted the revised rules of procedure by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions (456 A (XIV), annex.⁷⁰ It was decided that they would go into effect at the end of the current session, i.e., on 1 August 1952. The revised rules provided for changes in the rules concerning sessions (rules 1, 2, 4 & 6); agenda (rules 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16 & 17 (formerly rule 16)); secretariat (rule 34 (formerly rule 33)); records (rule 43 (formerly rule 42), 44, 46 (formerly rule 43)); participation and consultation with specialized agencies (rule 79 (formerly rule 12), and 80 & 81 (new rules)).

No changes were made in the rules of procedure of the functional commissions. In accordance with the recommendations of the Council (414 C. I (XIII)), the Regional Economic Commissions for Europe, Asia and the Far East, and Latin America examined their rules of procedure concerning date and place of future sessions and relations with non-governmental agencies. ECAFE and ECLA amended the rules concerning the date and place of sessions. ECAFE adopted and ECLA postponed consideration of changes relating to non-governmental organizations.

7. Revision of the Provisional Trusteeship Questionnaire

The Drafting Committee on the Questionnaire, appointed by the Trusteeship Council in July ⁶⁶ See above for the adoption of Spanish as a working language of the Council.

⁶⁷ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 59-67.

⁶⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 585-86.

⁶⁹ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 580-81.

⁷⁰ For the revised rules of procedure adopted by the Council at its fourteenth session, see Annex II. For complete text of revised rules, see E/2336.

1950 to prepare a revised text of the Questionnaire, reported (T/L.246 and Corr.1) to the Council at its tenth session, as had been requested by Council resolution 342(IX) of 5 June 1951.⁷¹ The Committee informed the Council that in the revised Questionnaire it had adopted most of the suggestions made in the observations received from the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Belgium, France and Italy, by Members of the Fourth Committee during the General Assembly's sixth session, on 26 March 1952, and at the 413th and Secretary-General. Suggestions by Australia which tended to eliminate much of the information required were not adopted, the Committee stated.

The Drafting Committee's report was considered by the Council at the 408th meeting of its tenth session, on 26 March 1952, and at the 413th and 414th meetings of its eleventh session, on 4 and 6 June 1952.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated (T/SR.408) that he was prepared to vote for the revised Questionnaire subject to the following reservations, which had been recorded in the Drafting Committee's report:

(1) that the Administering Authorities might submit their reports in the narrative form and not in the form of answers to each question in the revised Questionnaire, provided that each question was covered and that the report contained an index showing where each answer could be found;

(2) that at least five years should be allowed to elapse before the Questionnaire was revised again, as officers in the Trust Territories became accustomed to a given Questionnaire in preparing annual reports;

(3) that there was no need to repeat in each annual report certain information which did not vary from year to year provided that reference was made to the report in which the information had been contained;

(4) that Administering Authorities which had already transmitted required information to one of the specialized agencies should be allowed to append their report to the agency to their annual report rather than repeat the information in toto in the body of the latter.

The representatives of Australia, Belgium and France associated themselves with these reservations and indicated that they would accept the Questionnaire on the understanding that it would form the basis for the preparation of annual reports. The representative of Belgium also made reservations with regard to part III of the draft questionnaire on international regional relations involving Trust Territories, especially questions 9 and 10, which he considered a repetition of questions in other parts of the draft text, and the third sub-paragraph of question 14 (part V), which, he stated, was pointless since the whole annual report was in reply to it. The representative of France associated himself with these further reservations.

The representative of New Zealand stated that his Government intended to continue submitting its reports in narrative form; it would cover all the questions and provide an index to show where the answer to each question could be found.

On the other hand, the representatives of the Dominican Republic, China, El Salvador and the USSR expressed strong opposition to any reservation being made with regard to the adoption of the Questionnaire. The representative of the Dominican Republic also referred to Article 88 of the Charter as stating specifically that the Trusteeship Council should formulate a questionnaire for each Trust Territory. Pointing out that the Administering Authorities had frequently complained that certain questions in the Provisional Questionnaire were difficult to answer with respect to a given Territory since they were not strictly applicable to that particular Territory, he considered that the General Assembly should be asked for its interpretation of Article 88 and suggested that there should be a master questionnaire with several variations to meet the needs of each Territory.

An amendment (T/L.272) to the draft revised Questionnaire was submitted by the Dominican Republic during the eleventh session of the Council. This amendment, which was unanimously adopted by the Council on 6 June, related to the status of women and provided, inter alia, for the inclusion in question 91, in view of Economic and Social Council resolution 445 (XIV) C of 28 May 1952,⁷² of a question concerning the existence of customs violating the physical integrity and moral dignity of women; and for the insertion of a new question on the right of women to work on an equal footing with men.

By resolution 463 (XI) of 6 June 1952, adopted by 9 votes to none, with 2 abstentions, the Council decided: "to approve the Questionnaire set forth in documents T/L.246 and Corr.1 as amended, reservations of the individual members of the Council having been entered in the Council's official records".⁷³

The Questionnaire⁷⁴ includes a series of definitions to be used as a practical guide.

Those relating to general terminology fell under the following headings:

⁷¹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 98.

⁷² See under Status of Women.

⁷³ T/SR.408, 413, 414.

⁷⁴ For reasons of space, the text of the Questionnaire is not included. It may be consulted in United Nations Doc. T/1010 (New York, 10 June 1952), Questionnaire as Approved by the Trusteeship Council at its 414th meeting, eleventh session, on 6 June 1952 (Trusteeship Council, Official Records, Special Supplement).

A. Political terms — (a) Administering Authority, (b) Metropolitan government, (c) Territorial government, (d) Local government

B. Terms describing the inhabitants of the Territory — (a) Section of the population, (b) Indigenous inhabitants, (c) Immigrant inhabitants

C. Terms relating to slavery and slave trade — (a) Slavery, (b) Slave trade

D. Terms relating to public health — (a) Medical staff: (i) Registered physicians, (ii) Licensed physicians, (iii) Special categories, (iv) Medical assistants, (v) Nurses with senior training, (vi) Certified nurses, (vii) Midwives with senior training, (viii) Midwives; (b) Medical institutions: (i) General hospitals, (ii) Cottage hospitals or infirmaries, (iii) Dispensaries.

Those relating to statistical terminology related to: (a) The International Standard Industrial Classification (ISIC) of All Economic Activities; (b) The International Standard Classification of Occupations (ICSO); (c) The Classification by Status; (d) The Standard International Trade Classification (SITC).

The Questionnaire itself consists of eleven parts, containing 190 questions. These are grouped under the following headings:

I. Introductory descriptive section (Questions 1-4)

II. Status of the Territory and its inhabitants (Questions 5-7)

III. International and regional relations (Questions 8-11)

IV. International peace and security; maintenance of law and order (Questions 12-13)

V. Political advancement (Questions 14-28)

General political structure; territorial government; local government; civil service; suffrage; political organizations; the judiciary; legal system.

VI. Economic advancement (Questions 29-78)

Section 1. Finance of the Territory: public finance; taxation

Section 2. Money and banking

Section 3. Economy of the Territory: general; policy and planning; investments; economic equality; private indebtedness

Section 4. Economic resources, activities and services: general; commerce and trade; land and agriculture—land tenure; agricultural products; water resources; livestock; fisheries; forests; mineral resources; industries; transport and communications; public works.

VII. Social advancement (Questions 79-149)

General social conditions; human rights and fundamental freedoms; status of women; labour; social security and welfare services; standards of living; public health—general and organization, medical facilities, environmental sanitation, prevalence of diseases, preventive measures, training and health education, nutrition; narcotic drugs; drugs; alcohol and spirits; housing and town and country planning; prostitution; penal organization.

VIII. Educational advancement (Questions 150-186)

General educational system; primary schools; secondary schools; institutions of higher education; other schools; teachers; adult and community education; culture and research.

IX Publications (Questions 187-188)

X. Resolutions and recommendations of the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council (Question 189)

XI. Summary and conclusions (Question 190)

In addition there are 23 appendices to the Questionnaire dealing with:

Population; Administrative structure of government; Justice; Public finance; Taxation; Money and banking; Commerce and trade; Agriculture; Livestock; Fisheries; Forests; Mineral reserves; Industrial production; Co-operatives; Transport and communications; Cost of living; Labour; Social security and welfare services; Public health; Housing; Penal organization; Education; International treaties, conventions and other agreements. In addition the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is annexed to the Questionnaire.

At the 279th meeting of the Fourth Committee on 8 December 1952, the representatives of El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and Syria submitted a joint draft resolution (A/C.4/L253), in terms of which the General Assembly would invite the Trusteeship Council to undertake the preparation of separate questionnaires adapted to the particular circumstances of each Trust Territory.

The representative of Belgium, supported by the representatives of the Dominican Republic and the United States, stated that the question was extremely complicated and required detailed discussion. Accordingly, he proposed orally that that question be deferred. The Committee, by 18 votes to 16, with 10 abstentions, adopted the Belgian proposal.

8. General Procedures of the Trusteeship Council

By resolution 432(V)⁷⁵ of 2 December 1950, the General Assembly, noting the increase in the volume of the work of the Council and in the length of its sessions, considered that a review of the Council's methods of work appeared desirable for the more effective discharge of its duties, and accordingly recommended that the Council should review its general procedure, bearing in mind the observations and suggestions made during the discussions at the fifth session of the Assembly.

Having considered in 1951, in connexion with this resolution, a preliminary report (T/L.209/Rev.1) of its Committee on General Procedure, the Trusteeship Council decided at the 387th meeting of its tenth session on 28 February 1952 to refer the matter back to this Committee and to enlarge its membership. At its 388th meeting on 29 February the Council appointed to the Committee the representatives of China and France, in addition to the representatives of Iraq and the ⁷⁵ See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 115. For action taken by the Trusteeship Council during 1951 on this resolution, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 93-94.

United States appointed during the ninth session. At its 411th meeting on 1 April the Council decided to postpone further consideration of the matter to its eleventh session.

The report of the Committee on General Procedure (T/L.265) was considered by the Council at the 413th, 450th and 453rd meetings of its eleventh session on 4 June, 18 and 22 July 1952.

With respect to the division of the workload of the Council between the two sessions, the Committee reported that the main question to be decided was at which session annual reports by Administering Authorities on the administration of Trust Territories would be examined. The Council's current practice of examining the reports on the Trust Territories in Africa at its summer session and on the Trust Territories in the Pacific at its winter session, the Committee noted, resulted in the examination at the summer session of at least seven of the eleven Trust Territories, in addition to other important business. To reduce the workload at the summer session, the Committee recommended that the consideration of one or more of the Trust Territories in Africa should be transferred to the winter session and suggested that the Council itself select the two Territories best suited for such a transfer. The Committee also made recommendations concerning the dates for submission of annual reports and their distribution.

In 1951 the Council had approved a schedule (resolution 346(IX))⁷⁶ designed to enable it to examine annual reports during the session ensuing six months (rather than one year, as before) after the end of the period covered by the individual reports. In order to relieve the heavy workload at its summer sessions as well as to afford a longer period for the preparation of their annual reports by the Administering Authorities and for the study of these reports by the members of the Council, however, the Council decided at the 453rd meeting of its eleventh session on 22 July 1952, that, except in the cases of Somaliland under Italian administration and Western Samoa, it would revert to its earlier practice, and that it would examine annual reports in accordance with the following schedule:

Winter session: Togoland under United Kingdom administration; Togoland under French administration; Cameroons under United Kingdom administration; Cameroons under French administration; Tanganyika; Ruanda-Urundi.

Summer session: Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands; Western Samoa; New Guinea; Nauru; Somaliland under Italian administration.

In accordance with this decision, the Council adopted an amendment to rule 72, paragraph 2, of its rules of procedure to permit the examination of an annual report at an earlier time than normally specified, if the Administering Authority concerned agreed. This amendment was designed to cover the annual reports on Somaliland under Italian administration and on Western Samoa.

On the recommendation of the Committee on General Procedure, the Council also adopted other amendments to its rules of procedure. It adopted an amendment to rule 41 to make it clear that recourse to the secret ballot should be mandatory only when electing the President and Vice-President of the Council; a re-drafting of Rule 19 suggested by the Committee as a consequence to this amendment was also adopted by the Council.

By an amendment to rule 39, the Council introduced a procedure for roll-call voting similar to that adopted by the General Assembly, providing that the roll should begin with the member whose name was drawn by lot by the President.⁷⁷

By resolution 467 (XI), adopted on 22 July 1952 by 10 votes to none, with 1 abstention, the Council decided to approve the report of the Committee on General Procedure. It further decided that the amendments to its rules of procedure which it had adopted as a result of that Committee's recommendations should be regarded as provisional and would be reconsidered in the light of experience at its twelfth session.⁷⁸

9. Procedure of the Trusteeship Council for the Examination of Petitions

By resolution 552 (VI)⁷⁹ of 18 January 1952, the General Assembly recalled its resolution 435 (V)⁸⁰ of 2 December 1950, recommending that the Trusteeship Council should consider a number of possible means for improving its procedure for the examination of petitions. It considered that, while the Council had, in the course of its eighth and ninth sessions, revised to a limited extent its procedures in that respect, it had not yet devised procedures which accorded fully with the importance of the function of examining petitions and with the interests of the inhabitants of the Trust Territories. It observed, also, that the

⁷⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 93-94.

⁷⁷ For text of rules 72, 41, 19 and 39, as revised, see Annex II.

⁷⁸ For the recommendations of the Committee on General Procedure with respect to rules governing the handling of petitions, and the action taken by the Council, see next section.

⁷⁹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 96.

⁸⁰ See Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 114-15.

number of petitions received by the Council had been increasing from year to year.

Accordingly, the Assembly recommended that the Council should:

(a) constitute a standing committee for the examination of petitions which should meet as soon as possible whenever necessary between sessions of the Council as well as during sessions; and (b) devise procedures by which the standing committee would examine each petition in a preliminary way, within a prescribed period after the receipt of the petition by the Administering Authority concerned, and in conjunction with such observations as might be submitted thereon by the Administering Authority on its own initiative or at the request of the standing committee, or as might be obtained by the standing committee from any other official or responsible source which it deemed useful, and would prepare, on the basis of such preliminary examination, proposals for action to be taken on each petition by the Council.

The Assembly also requested the Administering Authorities to submit to the Council each year special information concerning action taken on the Council's recommendations in respect of all petitions examined, except in those cases where the Council did not deem it necessary.

At its 387th meeting on 28 February 1952 the Council decided to set up a committee composed of the representatives of Belgium, the Dominican Republic, Thailand and the United States to consider these questions. In its report (T/L.243) the Committee, which held three meetings between 29 February and 7 March, expressed the opinion that the very broad provision contained in rule 79⁸¹ of the rules of procedure of the Council had led to the processing as petitions of a great number of communications which differed widely as to their nature. It agreed that all communications addressed to the Secretary-General or the Council, bearing on the affairs of one or more Trust Territories, the operation of the International Trusteeship System, or the activities of the Council, except those which were manifestly inconsequential, were of interest to the Council, and should be made available to members as expeditiously and fully as possible. Experience had shown, however, that it was not desirable to apply indiscriminately to all those documents the lengthy procedure which the Council and its Ad Hoc Committee on Petitions had used up to that time in dealing with petitions.

Accordingly, the Committee was of the opinion that all communications, containing requests, complaints and grievances, seeking action by the Council, should continue to be handled in accordance with the established procedure for the examination of petitions. However, such of those communications as concerned general problems to which the attention of the Council had already been called, and on which it had taken decisions or made recommendations, as well as anonymous communications, should be circulated in the same manner as other communications, pending examination by a Standing Committee on Petitions which would decide whether the established procedure concerning petitions should be applied to them.

The Committee was of the opinion that other types of communications should be transmitted to members in full unless their length precluded it, so as to ensure that they were given the attention they deserved. Those communications also should be screened by the Standing Committee, which should decide whether any of them ought to be treated as a petition. In that event, the normal procedure applying to petitions would then be followed. Moreover, any member of the Council would be at liberty to propose that any other communication be considered as a petition.

The Committee then discussed the question of the treatment of communications received by Visiting Missions. It observed that, when a Visiting Mission travelled in a Territory, it gave an opportunity to individuals and groups to present their views orally and in writing on all matters concerning the Territory. While this was an effective and helpful way of gathering information, the Committee questioned whether all such communications and memoranda were necessarily petitions in the strict sense of the word. The authors of such communications wanted the Mission to take their views into account in drafting its report; they also wanted the Council to be informed about their views; but it was not inevitably their wish that each of their communications should be technically considered as a petition, and receive the treatment accorded thereto. The Committee therefore suggested that petitions and, whenever appropriate, other communications received by Visiting Missions should be handled in the same manner as it had suggested for petitions and communications addressed to the Council.

The Committee then recommended the establishment of a Standing Committee on Petitions to be composed of three Members administering Trust Territories, and three Members having no administering responsibilities, to be appointed by the Council at the end of each session to serve until the close of the ensuing session. In addition to meeting during sessions of the Council, the Standing Committee should, whenever it considered necessary, meet between sessions and, normally, approximately one month before each regular session.

⁸¹ Rule 79 states: "A written petition may be in the form of a letter, telegram, memorandum or other document concerning the affairs of one or more Trust Territories or the operation of the International Trusteeship System as laid down in the Charter."

The Standing Committee, it was proposed, should:

(a) screen the various communications which had not been initially circulated as petitions; (b) conduct, in consultation with the representative of the Administering Authority concerned, a preliminary examination of those petitions on which written observations by the Administering Authority were available, or which had been received by the Administering Authority at least two months before the opening of the next regular session of the Council and, in particular, formulate any questions to be submitted to the Administering Authority, or to its special representative; and instruct the Secretariat to carry out studies or prepare working papers and to undertake such preparatory work as it deemed necessary, so that, during the session of the Council, the Standing Committee, with the assistance of the special representative, would conclude its examination of the petitions and submit to the Council its recommendations on the action to be taken in each case; (c) complete, whenever possible, its examination of those petitions which the Administering Authority agreed to have examined in the absence of a special representative. The Committee suggested that, as only experience would show whether its approach to the problem of handling petitions represented an appreciable improvement or not, the Council might wish to give further consideration to the matter at a subsequent session, in the light of the experience gained by the Standing Committee on Petitions.

The report of the Committee (T/L.243) was considered by the Council at its 397th meeting on 13 March.

The representative of the USSR stated that the procedure currently followed in the examination of petitions should be maintained. According to Articles 87 and 76 of the Charter the Council itself must receive and examine petitions in order to protect the indigenous inhabitants against the abuses of the Administering Authorities; it could not delegate that function to any subsidiary body. Moreover, he disagreed with the Committee's view that documents dealing with general problems should no longer be included in the list of petitions; by examining these documents with the participation of the indigenous inhabitants the Council could greatly improve the lot of the inhabitants of the Trust Territories and further their political advancement. He was opposed to both the conclusions of the Committee and the establishment of a Standing Committee on Petitions.

The representative of Belgium said that his delegation continued to oppose in principle the establishment of a Standing Committee, although it had taken part in the work of the Committee on Examination of Petitions.

The Council, by 11 votes to 1, adopted resolution 425(X), as recommended by the Committee, thus deciding to establish a Standing Committee on Petitions. It then elected as members of the Committee until the end of the eleventh session the representatives of Australia, China, El Salvador, New Zealand, the USSR and the United States.

The Council decided also, by resolution 425 (X), to refer to the Committee on General Procedure (see section 8, above) the question of what amendments of the Council's rules of procedure would be necessary as a result of its acceptance of the recommendations of the Committee on Examination of Petitions; and, pending the adoption of such amendments as might be necessary, it decided to suspend the application of rule 90 which established procedures for the appointment of an ad hoc committee to make a preliminary examination of petitions.

The Committee on General Procedure accordingly recommended (T/L.265) amendments to rules 24, 84, 85, 86 and 90 to bring them into conformity with the new procedure adopted by the Council for the examination of petitions. The proposed amendments were considered by the Council at its 413th meeting on 4 June. The Council adopted provisionally the amendments to rules 24, 84 and 85 recommended by the Committee on General Procedure and, after further modifications, those proposed to rules 86 and 90.⁸² By resolution 467(XI) of 22 July, the Council invited its Standing Committee on Petitions to report to its twelfth regular session on the effectiveness of these new rules, which it would then reconsider in the light of experience.

Following the adoption of this resolution, the representative of the USSR reiterated the position of his delegation and stated that under the procedure adopted the most important petitions, the so-called general petitions, would be set aside. He contended that it had been shown during the Council's eleventh session that all the major petitions from individuals and organizations giving evidence of the anti-democratic policies of the Administering Authorities—alienation of land from indigenous inhabitants and the unsatisfactory state of affairs in education, health and other matters—might be listed under the category of general petitions. If this principle were adopted, more than a hundred petitions submitted to the eleventh session would be set aside. In the view of his delegation, the USSR representative added, this was a gross violation of the rights and interests of the indigenous population of the Trust Territories.

⁸² For text of revised rules 24, 84, 85, 86 and 90, as thus adopted, see Annex II.

The representative of Belgium observed that his delegation would continue to pay close attention to the petitions submitted to the Council and pointed out, further, that the new procedure for petitions was provisional since the Standing Committee on Petitions had been requested to report on the subject to the Council's next session.

10. Question of Oral Hearings by the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly

At the 280th meeting of the Fourth Committee on 21 November, the representative of the Dominican Republic submitted a draft resolution (A/C.4/L.240), calling for the appointment of a sub-committee to recommend a suitable procedure for dealing with oral hearings by the Fourth Committee.

A number of representatives, while stating they did not in any way deny the right of petitioners to approach the Fourth Committee, considered it would be more appropriate for petitioners to address themselves to the Trusteeship Council, where machinery for handling their petitions existed. They considered further that the Council should not be by-passed and that, in granting requests for oral hearings, there were implications which might disturb the orderly conduct of the Committee's business. Representatives supporting these views included those of Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, France, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Sweden, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States.

On the other hand, a number of representatives considered, broadly speaking, that such requests should be granted, on the ground that statements by petitioners would aid the Committee in its work and would also assist in establishing that petitioners had access to the Committee. Representatives holding this view included those of Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. It was also stated by the representative of the Philippines, among others, that some requests were being directed to the Fourth Committee because petitioners felt that they had not gained satisfaction from the Trusteeship Council.

At the 282nd meeting of the Committee on 25 November, the representative of the Dominican Republic said that he had introduced the proposal merely to facilitate proceedings in the Fourth Committee, but as a number of delegations appeared to have serious doubts concerning the draft resolution, he would withdraw his proposal.

11. Organization and Functioning of Visiting Missions

By resolution 553 (VI) of 18 January 1952,⁸³ the General Assembly recommended that the Trusteeship Council again review its procedures in respect of the organization and functioning of Visiting Missions, bearing in mind the financial implications, with a view to increasing the duration of each visit to each Trust Territory, to reducing the number of Trust Territories to be visited by a single Mission, and to achieving those ends without diminishing the frequency of visits to the Trust Territories. The Assembly, moreover, reaffirmed the desirability of each Visiting Mission being constituted as much as possible from among representatives on the Council, and recommended that, whenever that course was not practicable, the Council should consider inviting Members of the United Nations which were not members of the Council to nominate suitable qualified persons as members of Visiting Missions.

By resolution 385 E (XIII) of 27 August 1951, the Economic and Social Council, considering it desirable that women should share in the responsibilities of Visiting Missions, in order to promote the development of the status of women in the Trust Territories, invited Member States to nominate, and the Trusteeship Council to consider appointing, women to serve as members of such Missions.

In addition to these resolutions, the Trusteeship Council had before it a special report (T/951) of the 1951 Visiting Mission to Trust Territories in East Africa on the organization and functions of Visiting Missions. This Mission considered that, for members of a Mission to gain the widest knowledge of the Territories visited, the advance preparations should be as thorough as possible and should include a systematic and detailed briefing on the Territories concerned and on the procedures of Visiting Missions. From its experience, the Mission stated, the itineraries and programmes of future Missions should be prepared with a view to allowing more time for Mission members to talk at length with officers of the local administration and leaders of local political and social groups and to engage in frequent exchanges of views among themselves. When possible, it suggested, a Mission might save time by splitting its membership to carry out the various activities of less direct substantive value for the Mission. Pointing out that both Missions to Trust Territories in East Africa had visited the areas during the dry season, the Mission suggested that the next visit be made during the rainy season so that the Council might receive reports on these Territories written from a somewhat different perspective.

⁸³ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 97-98.

Calling attention to the large number of written communications which it had received, the Mission observed that it had clearly been impossible for it to study them all on the spot; it also considered that the passing of almost all such communications to the Trusteeship Council might be a questionable procedure. With respect to a statement prepared by the Council for the use of Visiting Missions (T/L.126/Rev.1), the Mission suggested that Missions be given sufficient latitude to enable them to adapt the statement to the cultural and educational levels of the various groups it encountered. It explained that the statement was oversimplified for some groups it had met and for others it embodied concepts which could not be understood; in some cases, even, it apparently could not be adequately translated into the vernacular.

The Trusteeship Council decided on 29 February 1952 to establish a committee composed of the representatives of Australia, the Dominican Republic, Thailand and the United Kingdom to consider the two resolutions referred to above and the Visiting Mission's special report.

This Committee held four meetings in March. At its invitation, a number of former chairmen and members of Visiting Missions and Secretariat officers who had serviced Missions gave the Committee their views on the organization and functioning of Visiting Missions.

In its report to the Council (T/L.249), the Committee concluded that the length of time spent in a Trust Territory did not necessarily determine the value of the visit; it was more important that the time spent should be effectively used. The Committee emphasized the need for the most careful organization of the itineraries and programmes of Visiting Missions; it considered that successive Missions need not cover the same ground, but rather that the value of the Missions could be enhanced by a relatively greater concentration of attention on particular developments or problems. It considered that the effectiveness of the time spent in the Territory might be increased if, as suggested by the Visiting Mission to East Africa, on suitable occasions a Mission was divided. This procedure, it believed, was warranted if for no other reason than that of increasing the Mission's contact with the populations of the Territories and avoiding disappointments on the part of groups of people who might not otherwise have been seen by the Mission. With respect to petitions received by Visiting Missions, the Committee considered that the procedure established by the Council at its 397th meeting (see above) provided the necessary guidance for future Visiting Missions. As regards reducing the number of Territories to be visited by a single Mission, the Committee observed that, apart from the budgetary implications, one of the most valuable experiences open to a Mission was the possibility of comparing conditions, progress and methods in different Territories. It stressed the importance of the Missions being composed as far as possible of persons normally sitting as members of delegations to the Trusteeship Council, but was of the opinion that, in exceptional cases where the necessary number of persons was not available from among such members, the solution suggested by the General Assembly should be considered. The Committee saw no reason to question the suitability of the existing arrangement whereby each Trust Territory was visited once every three years. As regards the participation of women in the work of Visiting Missions, the Committee noted that the action envisaged on the part of the Council as a whole lay in the appointment of women to Missions after they had been nominated by the governments of members, and believed that members invited to nominate representatives on Visiting Missions would wish to take into account the Economic and Social Council's resolution. The Committee considered that, wherever practicable, the appointment of a Visiting Mission should precede the examination by the Council of the annual reports and petitions relating to the Territories to be visited; in that way, participation in the Council's discussions would form the starting point for the preparation of the Mission.

At its 409th meeting on 27 March 1952, the Trusteeship Council approved the report of its Committee and, by resolution 427(X), adopted by 11 votes to none, with 1 abstention, decided that, in making arrangements for future visits to the Trust Territories, it would take into account the principles set forth in General Assembly resolution 553 (VI), in Economic and Social Council resolution 385 E (XIII) and in the special report of the 1951 Visiting Mission to Trust Territories in East Africa, and the observations made thereon by the Committee.

12. Collaboration of UNESCO in the Work of the Trusteeship Council

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), in response to a resolution (47(IV)) adopted by the Trusteeship Council on 1 March 1949, has regularly submitted to the Council its observations on the educational situation in the various Trust Territories; it has also made available to the Council its experience on general questions within its competence. This was noted by the Council in resolution 641 (XI), adopted on 24 July 1952 by 9 votes to none, with 2 abstentions, in which the Council expressed its appreciation to UNESCO for its full implementation of resolution 47 (IV) on collaboration with the specialized agencies and expressed the hope that this valuable collaboration would continue.

13. Implementation of Resolutions Relating to Trust Territories

By resolution 560(VI) of 18 January 1952,⁸⁴ the General Assembly had expressed the hope that the Administering Authorities which had not yet given effect to all Trusteeship Council and Assembly recommendations and resolutions applicable to Trust Territories would implement them as speedily as possible and would inform the Council of the steps taken, or proposed to be taken. It also requested the Council to include in each case in its report to the Assembly such conclusions as it might deem necessary regarding the action taken by the Administering Authorities and regarding the measures which, in the Council's opinion, should be adopted in view of those conclusions.

After considering the Assembly's resolution, the Trusteeship Council decided, by resolution 422 (X), adopted by 11 votes to none on 29 February 1952, to include such conclusions in its reports to the General Assembly, and instructed its drafting committees on annual reports to take the decision into account in preparing draft reports on individual Trust Territories for its consideration.

14. Annual Reports of the Principal Organs

THE SECURITY COUNCIL

The annual report of the Security Council to the General Assembly (A/2167), covering the period from 16 July 1951 to 15 July 1952, was adopted by the Council at its 593rd meeting (closed) on 26 August 1952. The Assembly at its 390th plenary meeting on 27 October 1952 adopted without objection a resolution (695 (VII)) taking note of the report.

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

The Economic and Social Council at its 669th plenary meeting on 1 August 1952 discussed the arrangements for its annual report to the General Assembly and decided to make no change in the previous arrangements, i.e., that the President of the Council, in consultation with the two Vice-Presidents and the Secretariat, prepare the report and that it contain the principal views expressed on the various problems before the Council.

The Council's report (A/2172), which covered the period from 22 September 1951 to 1 August 1952, was divided into nine chapters: Chapter I (Constitutional and organizational questions); Chapter II (General economic questions); Chapter III (Economic development of under-developed countries); Chapter IV (Social questions); Chapter V (Human rights); Chapter VI (General questions); Chapter VII (Questions of co-ordination and relations with specialized agencies); Chapter VIII (Non-governmental organizations); Chapter IX (Financial implications of the actions taken by the Council). The General Assembly at its seventh session considered the report in connexion with the various substantive questions.⁸⁵

THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The annual report of the Trusteeship Council to the General Assembly, covering its fourth special session, its tenth session and the first part of its eleventh session (A/2150), held from 18 December 1951 to 24 July 1952, was approved by the Council, by 10 votes to 1, on 24 July 1952. By the same vote, the Council, on 3 December, approved an addendum to the report covering the second part of its eleventh session (A/2150/Add. 1), held from 19 November to 3 December. At this meeting the Council agreed, under rule 64 of the rules of procedure, that the position taken by the USSR during the discussions be appended as a minority report.

The first part of the report was the subject of a general debate during the seventh session of the General Assembly in the Fourth Committee, at the 279th to 285th meetings, held from 19 to 28 November. At its 299th meeting on 9 December the Fourth Committee approved, by 39 votes in favour and 5 abstentions, a draft resolution by Argentina (A/C.4/L.251) taking note of the Council's report (A/2150 and Add.1) and this resolution was in turn adopted by the General Assembly, without discussion, at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December, by 46 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, as resolution 654(VII). By this resolution, the Assembly took note of the Council's report and recommended that the Council take into account the comments and suggestions⁸⁶ made during the Assembly's discussions.

⁸⁴ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 774-75.

⁸⁵ See under appropriate headings.

In accordance with Article 83 of the Charter and with the agreement reached in 1949 by the Trusteeship and Security Council concerning their respective functions as regards strategic areas under Trusteeship, the Trusteeship Council examined, at its 410th and 411th meetings on 31 March and 1 April, the annual report (T/950) of the Government of the United States on its administration of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands for the year ended 30 June 1951. The Council adopted a report (T/L.264) which it transmitted to the Security Council on the exercise of its functions in respect of this strategic area. The Security Council did not discuss the report during 1952.

15. Elections and Appointments

a. ELECTION OF THREE NON-PERMANENT MEMBERS OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL

At its 389th plenary meeting on 25 October, the General Assembly elected Colombia, Lebanon and Denmark as non-permanent members of the Security Council for a two-year term beginning 1 January 1953 to replace Brazil, the Netherlands and Turkey, retiring members.

The election was on the first ballot, Colombia and Lebanon each receiving 58 votes and Denmark 56.

b. ELECTION OF SIX MEMBERS OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its 389th and 390th plenary meetings on 25 and 27 October, the General Assembly elected Australia, India, Turkey, the United States, Venezuela and Yugoslavia for a three-year term of office beginning 1 January 1953 to replace Canada, Czechoslovakia, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan and the United States, retiring members.

Venezuela, Australia, the United States, India and Turkey, having received the required two-thirds majority, were elected on the first ballot, the voting being as follows:

Venezuela	57	United States	52
Australia	52	India	45

Turkey	41	Afghanistan	1
Czechoslovakia	31	Brazil	1
Pakistan	28	Denmark	1
Yugoslavia	27	Mexico	1
Egypt	2	Syria	1
Israel	2	Indonesia	1

Twelve further ballots were held for the sixth place. In accordance with the rules of procedure, the first two of these additional ballots were confined to the two States which had received the largest number of votes but had not been elected, Czechoslovakia and Pakistan, and the next three ballots were unrestricted. On the sixth (unrestricted) ballot, Yugoslavia received 34 votes, and Czechoslovakia and Pakistan 13 each, and the seventh (restricted) ballot was therefore taken on all three candidates. The later restricted ballots were between Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, and these two States also continued to receive the largest number of votes in the later unrestricted ballots. Yugoslavia was elected on the thirteenth ballot by 40 votes to 18 cast for Czechoslovakia.

c. ELECTION OF TWO MEMBERS OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

At its 390th plenary meeting on 27 October, the General Assembly elected El Salvador and Syria as members of the Trusteeship Council for a three-year term beginning 1 January 1953 to replace El Salvador and Iraq, retiring members.

The election was on the first ballot, the voting being as follows:

El Salvador	55	Liberia	1
Syria	53	Pakistan	1
Egypt	1	Uruguay	1

d. VACANCIES IN MEMBERSHIP OF SUBSIDIARY ORGANS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

(1) Peace Observation Commission

At its 391st plenary meeting on 6 November, the General Assembly had before it a note by the Secretary-General (A/2182) on the appointment of members of the Peace Observation Commission. The Assembly, without objection, adopted a draft resolution proposed by Canada (A/L.112). The representative of Iraq, in explaining his vote, stated that he had voted for the Canadian draft resolution with the reservation that there was one member of the Commission which his Government did not recognize and with which it could not deal. By its resolution (696(VII)) the Assembly reappointed for the calendar years 1953 and 1954 the existing fourteen members of the ⁸⁶ See under General Discussion of Conditions in Trust Territories.

Commission⁸⁷ and requested the Commission to continue its work as set forth in section B of Assembly resolution 377 A (V).⁸⁸

(2) Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories

The General Assembly at its 402nd plenary meeting on 10 December 1952 renewed the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories (646(VII)) and instructed the Fourth Committee, acting on its behalf, to fill such vacancies as might occur among the non-administering members of the Committee. Accordingly, the Fourth Committee (A/2296/Add.1) at its 306th meeting on 15 December elected Brazil, China, India and Iraq for a three-year term beginning in 1953 to replace Brazil, Egypt, India and the USSR.

Iraq, Brazil and India were elected on the first ballot, the voting being as follows:

Iraq41	Bolivia	8
Brazil39	Thailand	2
India35	Greece	2
China	2.5	Canada	2
USSR22	Egypt	2
Sweden18	Haiti	2
Yugoslavia	9	Dominican Republic 1

The second ballot was held between the USSR and China, the two States receiving the largest number of votes short of election. China was elected by 27 votes, the USSR having received 24.

(3) Administrative and Budgetary Committees

The General Assembly at its 409th plenary meeting, without objection or discussion, made the following appointments, as recommended by the Fifth Committee. The numbers of the Fifth Committee's reports and the Assembly's resolutions are given below.

(a) ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS

Carlos Blanco, Arthur H. Clough and William O. Hall for a three-year term beginning 1 January 1953 to succeed William O. Hall, Olyntho P. Machado and Sir William Matthews (resolution 666(VII)—Fifth Committee report A/2314).

(b) COMMITTEE ON CONTRIBUTIONS

S. M. Burke, Jiri Nosek and S. A. Rice for a three-year term beginning 1 January 1953 to succeed Kan Lee, Mitchell W. Sharp and S. A. Rice (resolution 667(VII)—Fifth Committee report A/2315).

Arthur H. Clough for a one-year term ending 31 December 1953 to fill the unexpired term of Sir Sydney Caine, who resigned effective 1 January 1953 (resolution 667 B (VII)—Fifth Committee report A/2315/Add.1).

(c) BOARD OF AUDITORS

The Auditor-General of Canada re-appointed for a further three-year term beginning 1 July 1953 (resolution 668(VII)—Fifth Committee report A/2316).

(d) UNITED NATIONS ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNAL

Djalal Abdoh, Mrs. Paul Bastid and Omar Loutfi for a three-year term beginning 1 January 1953 to succeed Mrs. Paul Bastid, Lt. General His Highness Maharaja Jam Shri Digvijayasinhji Sahib and Hamed Sultan. The Assembly decided that the terms of office of the two members who were due to retire on 30 November 1953 should be extended to 31 December 1953 (resolution 670(VII)—Fifth Committee report A/2318).

(e) UNITED NATIONS STAFF PENSION COMMITTEE

Keith G. Brennan, R. T. Cristobal, Francisco A. Forteza, as members, and Arthur H. Clough, Warren B. Irons and Fazlollah Nouredin Kia, as alternates, for a three-year term beginning 1 January 1953 to succeed R. T. Cristobal, Edmundo de Holte-Castello, N. I. Klimov, members, and Keith Brennan, Warren B. Irons and P. Ordonneau, alternates (resolution 671 (VII)—Fifth Committee report A/2319).

(f) INVESTMENTS COMMITTEE

Reappointment by the Secretary-General of Ivar Rooth for a further three-year term beginning 1 January 1953 confirmed (resolution 669(VII)—Fifth Committee report A/2317).

e. VACANCIES IN MEMBERSHIP OF SUBSIDIARY ORGANS OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At its fourteenth session, at its 657th and 658th plenary meetings on 24 July 1952, the Council held elections for one third of the membership of the functional commissions in accordance with the arrangements for the renewal of membership on a system of rotation. It decided, at its 657th plenary meeting, to postpone the election of the five elective members of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs until after the session of the Commission in 1953.

The following were elected (asterisk indicates member re-elected):

Transport and Communications Commission: China*, Colombia, France*, Norway*, Pakistan*.

Fiscal Commission: Belgium, Canada*, Chile, Cuba*, USSR*.

Statistical Commission:⁸⁹ Canada*, Cuba, India*, Iran, Ukrainian SSR*.

Population Commission: China*, France*, Iran, Sweden*, Ukrainian SSR*.

Social Commission: Argentina, Brazil*, Czechoslovakia, Iraq, Norway, United Kingdom*.

Commission on Human Rights: Egypt*, France*, India*, Philippines, Ukrainian SSR*, USSR*.

Commission on the Status of Women: Haiti, Lebanon*, USSR*, United Kingdom*, United States*, Venezuela.

⁸⁷ For members see p. 30.

⁸⁸ See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 194.

⁸⁹ The terms of office of the members of the Statistical Commission were extended to the day of termination of the seventh session of the Commission in 1953. On that day, the newly elected members were to begin their terms of office (resolution 457 (XIV)).

UNITED NATIONS INTERNATIONAL
CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND

Members of the Social Commission being ex-officio members of the Board, the Council, in electing members of this Commission (see above), elected them as members of the Executive Board of UNICEF. At its 658th plenary meeting on 24 July 1952 it elected Australia, Pakistan and Yugoslavia to replace Ceylon, Indonesia and Iraq as additional members of the Executive Board.

PERMANENT CENTRAL OPIUM BOARD

At its 666th plenary meeting on 30 July 1952 the Council, after considering the report of a working party (E/L.456) established at its 658th plenary meeting on 24 July, elected the following eight members of the Board:

Ramon Sánchez (Chile); Paul Reuter (France); M. E. Rehman (India); Fouad Abou Zahar (Lebanon); Emilio D. Espinosa (Philippines); Hans Fischer (Switzerland); Sir Harry Greenfield (United Kingdom); Herbert May (United States).

COUNCIL COMMITTEE ON NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

At its 657th plenary meeting on 24 July the Council elected China, France, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States as members of the Committee for 1953.

f. VISITING MISSION OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The Trusteeship Council at its 456th to 458th meetings on 20, 24 and 25 November 1952 appointed the following as members of the United Nations Visiting Mission to Trust Territories in the Pacific, 1953:

Enrique de Marchena (Chairman) (Dominican Republic); Leon Pignon (France); Najmudine Rifai (Syria); W. A. C. Mathieson (United Kingdom).

E. ADMINISTRATIVE ARRANGEMENTS

1. Resignation of the Secretary-General

In a letter (A/2253) dated 10 November 1952, addressed to the President of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General, Trygve Lie, referred to the personal and confidential conversation on 11 September, in which he had said that, after long consideration, he had decided to submit his resignation as Secretary-General of the United Nations. It had been his intention, as he had then said, to take that step at the opening of the seventh session of the General Assembly. However, he had delayed until the arrival of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the permanent members of the Security Council, in the hope that that would facilitate agreement on his successor. He requested that the President propose the inclusion, in the agenda of the General Assembly, of the following item: "Appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations". On the same date the Secretary-General transmitted (S/2846) the text of this letter to the President of the Security Council.

At the 392nd plenary meeting of the General Assembly on the same date, the Secretary-General recalled that he had wanted to retire in 1950 at the end of his five-year term. He had agreed to continue only because the aggression in Korea had created circumstances that put him under an obligation to carry on. However, he said, the existing situation was somewhat different. The United Nations had thrown back aggression in Korea. There could be an armistice if the USSR, the People's Republic of China and the North Koreans were sincere in their wish to end the fighting. If they were sincere, a new Secretary-General who was the unanimous choice of the five Great Powers, the Security Council and the General Assembly might be more helpful than he could be. On the other hand, if the world situation should go from bad to worse, he would not wish the position of the Secretary-General to hinder any hope of reaching a new understanding.

There were other reasons why it was more appropriate for him to retire at that time than in 1950. The Permanent Headquarters buildings had been completed. The Secretariat was better established and organized as one of the principal organs of the United Nations. He had placed before the seventh session proposals for reorganization,⁹⁰ that he believed might contribute to improved administration in the future. He felt that a new Secretary-General should be elected so that he might have time to make his own judgment about those proposals before the Assembly's next session.

The Secretary-General stated that his resignation was caused by the reasons he had given and by no other. He was stepping aside at that time because he hoped that that might help the United Nations to preserve peace and to serve better the cause of freedom and progress for all mankind.

⁹⁰ For the reorganization proposed by the Secretary-General see below under Administration of the United Nations.

At its 396th plenary meeting, on 13 November, the General Assembly decided to include in the agenda of the seventh session the item entitled: "Appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations". There was no further consideration of this item in the General Assembly and the Security Council during 1952.⁹¹

2. Administration of the United Nations

a. EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

In the course of debates on the 1952 budget estimates during the sixth session of the General Assembly, a number of representatives expressed doubts as to the soundness of the existing administrative structure of the United Nations Secretariat. The Secretary-General gave an assurance that, should the Fifth Committee so desire, he would prepare a study of the desirability of a general reorganization of the Secretariat for submission to the seventh session through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. In the light of this assurance and of proposals presented by the Egyptian and other representatives, the Fifth Committee included in its report to the Assembly (A/2022) a request that such a study should be undertaken, special attention being paid to the whole structure and functions of the Departments of Economic and of Social Affairs and the Technical Assistance Administration as well as to the system of co-ordination between them.

Pursuant to this request, the item "Administration of the United Nations" was proposed by the Secretary-General for inclusion in the supplementary list of agenda items for the seventh session of the General Assembly and an explanatory memorandum (A/2214) was submitted by him to the Assembly. The item was referred to the Fifth Committee.

The first part of the explanatory memorandum dealt in general with the organization of the Secretariat. The Secretary-General expressed the belief that, in order to cope effectively with questions of over-all policy, with planning and balancing programmes of work, and with guiding and appraising the execution of work programmes, the structure of the Secretariat should be simplified and its functioning improved, and the lines of responsibility more clearly defined within the Secretariat as well as between the Secretariat and other organs of the United Nations.

The Secretary-General considered eight Assistant Secretaries-General, as well as a Director-

General of the Technical Assistance Administration too large a number either to act as a coordinating group or to work intimately with him in the consideration and formulation of policy. He suggested the introduction of a simplified scheme by which three Deputy Secretaries-General would replace the present Assistant Secretaries-General and more responsibility for day-to-day administration would be delegated to the Principal Directors.

In the second part of his memorandum, the Secretary-General commented on certain aspects of the relationship between the Secretariat and the General Assembly. He felt that confusion had arisen from the dual status of some members of agencies of the Assembly, in particular, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Administrative Tribunal.

He suggested that the Assembly create a small committee to examine this matter and report to the next regular Assembly session.

b. REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The Fifth Committee, at its 343rd meeting on 20 October 1952, referred the first part of the Secretary-General's memorandum to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

At the 354th meeting of the Fifth Committee on 4 November, the representative of the USSR proposed (A/C.5/L.185) that the Departments of Economic Affairs and of Social Affairs should be merged, and that reductions of $400,000 and $300,000 should be made respectively in the estimates for section 10 and section 11 (dealing with these two Departments) of the 1953 budget. The Fifth Committee decided to defer further consideration of the estimates for these two sections until the Advisory Committee had submitted its observations both on the Secretary-General's memorandum (A/2214) and on the USSR proposals (A/C.5/L.185). The report (A/2290) of the Advisory Committee on these two matters was submitted on 6 December.

On the broader issues of reorganization dealt with in the Secretary-General's memorandum, the Advisory Committee's general conclusions were to the effect that the advantages to be gained from the changes proposed could only be evaluated on a long-term basis and that recommendations on methods to give effect to such changes required a detailed and exhaustive study of their implications.

⁹¹ Mr. Lie's resignation took effect on 10 April 1953, the date of the installation of Mr. Dag Hammarskjöld.

It noted, furthermore, that in presenting his proposals the Secretary-General had expressly pointed out that he could not, at the current stage, develop them in greater detail, and had therefore recommended that, after the General Assembly had expressed its views on the general lines of the proposed reorganization, he should be requested to work out further details and to base his 1954 budget estimates accordingly.

On the question of the possible merger of the Departments of Economic Affairs and of Social Affairs and the Technical Assistance Administration, the Advisory Committee was informed that the Secretary-General did not feel justified at this stage in recommending a full merger of the two Departments without a further careful study, and that as regards a yet wider merger embracing the Technical Assistance Administration in addition to these two Departments, such a decision should not, in his opinion, be taken independently of the broader reorganization of the Secretariat.

The Advisory Committee considered that the position taken by the Secretary-General did not fully accord with the intentions of the Fifth Committee. It took note, however, of his assurance that more time was required for a fuller study of the measures already taken or planned, as a result of which greater efficiency and economy were anticipated during 1953, as well as of his view that any further administrative and structural changes of a far-reaching nature should only be made as part of the broader reorganization of the Secretariat that was envisaged. The Advisory Committee stated that it remained of the opinion, nevertheless, that relationships between these two Departments and the Technical Assistance Administration constituted a problem of major and prior importance, the treatment of which should not be deferred beyond the opening of the eighth session of the General Assembly. The Advisory Committee stated that it was not able to make a recommendation as regards the reductions totalling $700,000 proposed by the USSR in sections 10 and 11 of the 1953 budget estimates.

c. CONSIDERATION BY THE FIFTH COMMITTEE

The question of the administration of the United Nations was considered in detail by the Fifth Committee at its 371st and 372nd meetings, held on 9 and 10 December. In addition to the explanatory memorandum by the Secretary-General (A/2214) and the report of the Advisory Committee (A/2290), the Fifth Committee had before it two draft resolutions (A/C5/L.212 and A/C5/L.213) on the question, presented jointly, in each case, by Chile, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Norway and the Philippines.

According to the first (A/C5/L.212) of the two joint draft resolutions, the General Assembly would include the question of the reorganization of the Secretariat in the provisional agenda of the eighth regular session. The Secretary-General would be requested to prepare a full report on the administrative and financial implications of the proposed reorganization and to circulate it, with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee, to all Members four weeks before the opening of the eighth session.

The second (A/C5/L.213) of the two joint draft resolutions would have the Assembly refer the second part of the Secretary-General's explanatory memorandum to a committee composed of the Chairman of the Advisory Committee and six members nominated by the Chairman of the Fifth Committee for study and report (to the Assembly's eighth session). The Secretary-General would be invited to submit to that committee such proposals as he might wish to make on the matters dealt with.

At the 371st meeting of the Fifth Committee, the Secretary-General amplified the recommendations contained in his memorandum.

The USSR proposal to amalgamate the Departments of Economic Affairs and of Social Affairs into a single Department of Economic and Social Affairs in 1953 was the first to be voted upon by the Fifth Committee. It was rejected by 9 votes to 5, with 21 abstentions, at the 371st meeting on 9 December.

The Chairman of the Committee stated that his interpretation of the Committee's vote was that it had merely postponed a final decision; it was to be assumed that the views of the USSR representative, as expressed in his proposal, would be taken into account in the broader study contemplated.

In explaining their votes on the USSR proposal, some representatives, including those of Belgium, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, stated that they had voted without prejudice to the position which their delegations might subsequently take on the question of amalgamation and that, in consequence, little significance should be attached to their votes at this stage. Other representatives, in particular those of Canada and Denmark, explained that they had abstained since they were not prepared at the time the vote was taken either to support the proposal or to vote against it.

Subject to minor drafting amendments, the proposals contained in the first joint draft resolution (A/C.5/L.212) found general support. Certain representatives, in particular the representative of Norway, considered that the Secretary-General had a right and a duty to place before the General Assembly administrative problems which he had encountered in discharging his responsibilities under the Charter, and to make such suggestions regarding them as he saw fit. Equally, it was the duty and responsibility of the Fifth Committee to study the problems so presented in the light of the suggestions made in order that appropriate solutions might be found. Most representatives were of the opinion that, since the basic material necessary for reaching a considered decision was not immediately available and a detailed and thorough study of the whole matter was therefore essential, the procedure proposed in the draft resolution was the most appropriate to follow. They also recognized that the incoming Secretary-General should be afforded an opportunity of joining in any such study.

The representative of Belgium orally proposed that the scope of the proposed study be broadened in order to cover the whole problem of the reorganization of the Secretariat, and the representative of the United Kingdom orally suggested that there be included in the proposed study a specific reference to the question of the relationship between the Departments of Economic and of Social Affairs and the Technical Assistance Administration. Following acceptance by the sponsors of these two suggestions, the first joint draft resolution, as amended, was approved unanimously at the Committee's 372nd meeting on 10 December.

The opinion in the Fifth Committee regarding the proposals contained in the second joint draft resolution (A/C5/L.213) was somewhat more sharply divided. Some representatives, including those of New Zealand and the United States, expressed surprise that there should be any difficulty in concurring in the procedure recommended. The Fifth Committee, they pointed out, was not being asked to take decisions on any of the issues involved. It was simply being requested to recommend that a special committee should be appointed to consider the issues and to obtain the views thereon of Member Governments and of the Advisory Committee. The General Assembly would only take a decision after all the facts had been placed before it.

Other representatives, however, including those of Colombia, France, India, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, expressed the view that the mere reference of the second part of the Secretary-

General's memorandum to a special committee could be interpreted as a recognition on the part of the Fifth Committee of the merit of the proposals referred to therein. They did not consider there was anything wrong or harmful in members of such bodies as the Advisory Committee and the Administrative Tribunal serving also as governmental representatives or alternates in committees of the General Assembly; nor, in their opinion, had this practice led to confusion or diminished the General Assembly's confidence in the usefulness of the bodies concerned. Members of the Advisory Committee who served on the Fifth Committee did so, not by favour of any organ of the United Nations, but as properly accredited representatives of their governments, whose right freely to appoint their own representatives should not be in any way restricted. It was further argued that it was both reasonable and desirable for members of the Advisory Committee who served also in the General Assembly occasionally to modify their views in the light of further argument developed in the Fifth Committee. The function of the Advisory Committee, as its name implied, was to advise; nor could the view be maintained that an opinion, once expressed in the Advisory Committee, could never be modified, or that the collective views of that Committee were sacrosanct and not open to revision in the Fifth Committee after the issues had been clarified. They also argued that it was only reasonable that governments providing experts to serve on such bodies as the Advisory Committee should have the benefit of their services as delegation members and that, furthermore, the Secretary-General's task might be made more difficult if such experts were precluded from direct participation in the Fifth Committee deliberations.

Some representatives, while adhering to the position indicated above, so far as the question of membership in the Advisory Committee was concerned, felt that the position in the case of the Administrative Tribunal might be slightly different since there were valid grounds for arguing that a judicial organ should be kept entirely separate from a legislative body. Thus, the representative of France orally suggested that only those paragraphs of the Secretary-General's memorandum relating specifically to the Administrative Tribunal should be referred to the proposed special committee. The representative of the United Kingdom orally proposed an amendment to the second joint draft to indicate that, in the opinion of the General Assembly, members of the Advisory Committee should not be debarred from serving in any capacity in the Fifth Committee. This amendment was, however, later withdrawn on the understanding that reference to it would be included in the report of the Fifth Committee as the considered view of the United Kingdom Government.

The sponsors of the second joint draft agreed to amend their proposal to meet the views expressed by the Chairman of the Advisory Committee that it would be improper for him to take part, in that capacity, in the work to be undertaken by the proposed special committee, and that a more appropriate procedure would be for the observations of the Advisory Committee, should they be desired, to be furnished at a later stage.

A French oral amendment to increase the membership of the special committee to eleven was adopted by 39 votes to none, with 6 abstentions. A further French oral amendment that the special committee, in addition to studying the second part of the Secretary-General's memorandum, should also review rules 154 to 156 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly (concerning the Advisory Committee), as well as the Statute of the Administrative Tribunal, was adopted by 31 votes to 7, with 6 abstentions.

The draft resolution, as amended, was then adopted by the Fifth Committee, at its 372nd meeting on 10 December, by 35 votes to 6, with 6 abstentions. The Fifth Committee agreed that Members should be invited to submit their comments on matters raised in the second joint draft to the special committee while it still had these matters under consideration, rather than to delay their submission until the problem was before the Fifth Committee at the eighth session.

d. RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The report of the Fifth Committee was considered by the General Assembly at its 410th meeting on 21 December. The two draft resolutions contained in the report were voted upon without discussion. The first joint draft (resolution A) was adopted unanimously; the second (resolution B) was adopted by 47 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions. The resolutions (681 A and B (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Taking note of the proposals and opinions concerning the organization of the Secretariat contained in the memorandum by the Secretary-General on the question of the administration of the United Nations, and of the report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on these proposals,

"Considering that the problems of reorganization require further study,

"1. Decides to include the question of the organization of the Secretariat in the provisional agenda of the eighth session of the General Assembly;

"2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a full report on the problems of reorganization of the Secretariat, including the relationship between the Departments of Economic Affairs and of Social Affairs and the Technical Assistance Administration, as well as on their administrative and financial implications, and to circulate it, with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to all Members four weeks before the opening of the eighth session of the General Assembly."

B

"The General Assembly,

"Noting paragraphs 38 to 45 of the memorandum of the Secretary-General on the administration of the United Nations,

"1. Decides to refer these paragraphs to a Committee composed of representatives of the following eleven Members: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, China, Dominican Republic, Greece, Iraq, Norway, Pakistan and Poland, to meet in the interval between the seventh and eighth sessions of the General Assembly, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its eighth session;

"2. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee such proposals as he may wish to make on the matters dealt with in the above-mentioned paragraphs;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the Committee, with the comments of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to all Members four weeks before the opening of the eighth session of the General Assembly."

3. United Nations Personnel Policies

a. RECRUITMENT AND CONTRACTS

During the year efforts were continued to intensify the recruitment of international staff from Member nations whose nationals were inadequately represented. In August 1952 the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly that the international staff comprised nationals of 56 Member States and that geographical distribution as envisaged in the Charter had in the main been successfully accomplished.

The General Assembly, at its sixth session, approved Staff Regulations (590 (VI))⁹² which came into effect on 1 March 1952. These Regulations, which replaced the provisional regulations under which the staff functioned during the first six years of the life of the United Nations, fix the fundamental obligations of the staff, their basic conditions of service, their rights, and the authority of the Secretary-General in such matters as selection, day-to-day administration and termination. The Staff Regulations are in many respects general in nature, and the Secretary-General issues detailed Staff Rules to implement them.⁹³

⁹² See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 117-22.

In 1952, attention was given principally on the development of a career service along already defined lines. The Secretary-General in January 1952 reported to the Assembly at its sixth session that, with a view to increasing the number of staff members holding permanent contracts, he intended to complete within 1952 and 1953 the review of temporary staff appointed before 1 January 1950. For this purpose he set up on 12 May 1952 a special Selection Committee, under the chairmanship of F. P. Walters, former Deputy Secretary-General of the League of Nations, and with a representative of the staff participating.

The Selection Committee submitted three reports to the Secretary-General in 1952. The first of these dealt with staff members in the general service category; the second with trainees; and the third with staff members in the professional category. The Committee recommended 41 permanent appointments for staff members in the general service category, and the Secretary-General issued that number. With respect to the trainees, the Committee recommended four permanent appointments and two probations and deferred four cases. The Secretary-General accepted the Committee's recommendations in all ten cases. The Committee recommended 246 permanent appointments for staff members in the professional category, and of these the Secretary-General issued 238. Three of those recommended had previously resigned and permanent appointments were not given by the Secretary-General in five other cases. The Committee recommended 35 staff members for a probationary period of one year and the Secretary-General accepted all of these recommendations. It recommended 25 fixed-term appointments and the Secretary-General issued 24. It recommended 62 terminations and of these the Secretary-General followed the recommendation in 59 cases; three of the staff members involved had previously resigned. The Committee deferred 29 cases for review in 1953. It made no recommendation in three cases. In two of these cases the Secretary-General approved the Committee's reasons for making no recommendations and communicated these reasons to the staff members concerned. In the third of these cases, the Secretary-General issued a permanent appointment.

The Secretary-General at the seventh session of the General Assembly reported (A/C.5/L.210) to the Fifth Committee on the work of the Selection Committee. The Fifth Committee took no action during 1952 on this report.⁹⁴

The Selection Committee was scheduled to reconvene early in 1953 with as nearly as possible the same membership to review those members of the general service category who entered on duty before 1 January 1951, in addition to those cases in the professional category previously deferred, and those who entered on duty between 1 January 1950 and 1 January 1951. By the end of 1952, out of some 2,872 established posts at United Nations Headquarters, there were 1,500 staff members serving under permanent appointment.

b. PROBLEM OF ALLEGED SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES BY STAFF MEMBERS

During 1952 United States authorities conducted investigations of the activities outside their official functions of certain staff members of United States nationality. These investigations, which related to the general area of activities considered to be subversive, took two forms.

The first consisted of proceedings before a Special Federal Grand Jury which began its investigations in the summer of 1952. This investigation, which was conducted in private, had the function of enabling the Grand Jury to decide whether indictments should be presented against any person who, if indicted, would have to stand for public trial in the appropriate criminal court.

The second form was an investigation by the Internal Security Sub-Committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Public hearings of the Sub-Committee, at which United Nations staff members of United States nationality were called, were held in May, October, November and December 1952. Its investigations were conducted under Senate resolutions which direct a continuing study of the administration, operation and enforcement of the Internal Security Act of 1950 and of other laws relating to espionage, sabotage and the protection of the internal security of the United States, and also of the extent, nature and effects of subversive activities in the United States.

The scope of the investigation conducted by the Special Federal Grand Jury was described by the Grand Jury in a presentment prepared at the termination of its service as follows:

"Our investigation has not been concerned in any way with the United Nations itself—its policies, objectives, or its internal affairs. Our sole concern and effort has been directed toward the possible violations of law by United States citizens whose activities are indisputably within our jurisdiction. Consequently, only United States citizens have been called as witnesses by us, and their interrogation has been scrupulously confined to matters unrelated to their official activities in the United Nations."

⁹³ To implement the new Staff Regulations, the Secretary-General issued detailed Staff Rules, which came into force on 1 January 1953.

⁹⁴ The Secretary-General on 30 January 1953 submitted to the General Assembly a report (A/2364) on personnel policy, which included, among other things, a review of the work of the Selection Committee.

Some of the staff members being investigated were requested by the Grand Jury to submit to it certain documents from the archives of the United Nations, including photostats of their personnel applications submitted when they applied for employment, and letters written by them in their official capacity to other officials of the United Nations. By letters of 13 June and 3 October 1952, the Secretary-General informed the staff members concerned that these documents were part of the United Nations archives which were declared to be inviolable by the law of the United States, and that photostats and originals of such documents could not be given either to staff members or to agencies of Member States. The staff members, however, were given the opportunity, at their request, of having access to their personnel files in order to make a copy of the application they prepared at the time of their appointment for use during their testimony. The Secretary-General requested a copy of the record of the Grand Jury proceedings, or at least some official statement of what took place, but this request was denied on the ground that it could not legally be complied with.

On 2 December 1952, the Grand Jury made public a presentment which it submitted to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. This presentment contained no indictments and mentioned no names. It stated that more than twenty United Nations staff members of United States nationality had refused, on the ground of the privilege against self-incrimination, to answer "questions concerning past and present Communist Party membership and activity, including in some instances past and present espionage activity against the United States". The presentment also set forth certain conclusions and made certain recommendations. Among the conclusions were statements that there was "infiltration into the United Nations of an overwhelmingly large group of disloyal United States citizens", and that this situation constituted a menace to the security of the United States. The Grand Jury recommended, among other things, that no United States citizens should be permitted to accept employment with the United Nations without prior clearance by the United States Government; that staff members and applicants of United States nationality should be required to fill out an application form designed to elicit information on subversive activities; and that another Grand Jury should continue the investigation.⁹⁵

On the following day the Secretary-General formally addressed the United States Mission to the United Nations asking that, in view of the wide publicity given to the conclusions of the Grand Jury and in fairness to himself and the staff, he be given either the Grand Jury records or at least an official statement of specific evidence.⁹⁶

The scope of the investigation conducted by the Internal Security Sub-Committee of the United States Senate was more specifically defined by the Acting Chairman of the Sub-Committee at the opening of public hearings in New York in October 1952 as follows:

"This Sub-Committee will take testimony to determine whether United States citizens who, even though they are United Nations employees, have been engaged in subversive activities which are clearly beyond the scope of their employment. Our interest in this inquiry is solely to safeguard the internal security of the United States. This is in no sense an investigation into the United Nations or the functions of the United Nations."

A number of witnesses were heard only in executive sessions by the Sub-Committee and the records of these sessions were not made available to the Secretary-General. In public hearings on various dates in May, October, November and December 1952, a total of 24 persons who at the time were staff members of the United Nations and four persons who had formerly been staff members were examined. Of the persons who were at the time staff members, seventeen invoked the constitutional privilege against self-incrimination⁹⁷ on questions of various types, as follows:

⁹⁵ In accordance with the recommendation of the Grand Jury, the investigation was being continued by another Grand Jury.

On 9 January 1953, the President of the United States issued Executive Order 10422 (18 F.R.239), prescribing procedures for making available to the Secretary-General of the United Nations certain information concerning United States citizens employed or being considered for employment in the Secretariat of the United Nations. Executive Order 10422 was later amended by Executive Order 10459 of 2 June 1953 (18 F.R.3183). Procedures for supplying the United States Government with the necessary identification information concerning United States citizens employed or being considered for employment in the Secretariat of the United Nations were put into effect in early 1953.

⁹⁶ On 28 January 1953 the Permanent Representative of the United States to the United Nations replied that the Secretary-General's request had been transmitted to the Department of State, and referred to the Department of Justice.

⁹⁷ Speaking at the 413th plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 10 March 1953, the Secretary-General stated: "Every United States citizen has the right to

One witness declined to answer whether he was presently engaged or had ever engaged in espionage against the United States. Another declined to state whether he was now engaged in subversive activities⁹⁸ against the United States or had in the past engaged in espionage. Ten witnesses refused to answer questions on present membership in the American Communist Party and also on past membership. Four denied present membership in the Communist Party; two of these witnesses, however, invoked the privilege on questions concerning membership in the recent past and the other two invoked it as to membership in the more distant past. One witness admitted membership in the Communist Party in 1935, but declined to answer questions relating to participation in its activities.

Seven witnesses who were then staff members did not invoke the privilege against self-incrimination. Three of these stated that they had been members of the American Communist Party at various periods in the past, and testified concerning their activities in it. Another denied ever being a member of the Communist Party but testified that at a time sixteen years ago he had assisted the Communist underground against German Nazism; his testimony was in conflict with that of another witness never connected with the United Nations, who stated that he knew the staff member to be a Communist and that the staff member had participated to a greater extent than was admitted. A further staff member, who did not invoke the privilege, denied all subversive or Communist activities; there was testimony by a witness never connected with the United Nations that in 1937 he had heard from an espionage agent of a foreign country that a man he believed to be the same as this staff member was a Communist. Two other staff members who did not claim the privilege were not asked about membership in the Communist Party; one of them admitted past connexions with one organization later declared subversive by the Attorney General of the United States.

An issue concerning the privileges and immunities of the United Nations arose during the course of the hearings. In a memorandum from the Secretary-General to the staff members of United States nationality, issued on 13 October 1952, the Secretary-General, after referring to Articles 100 and 105 of the Charter and to the International Organizations Immunities Act of the United States (which provides, inter alia, that the archives of the United Nations shall be inviolable and that officers and employees of the United Nations shall be immune from legal process relating to acts performed by them in their official capacity and falling within their functions as such officers or employees), stated as follows:

"In accordance with these provisions of law, staff members of the United Nations called before the Senate Committee are not authorized to testify with regard to official activities of the United Nations and do not have the right to waive the immunity conferred by law. They are authorized to answer questions which are matters of public record regarding their position as staff members such as title, job description, compensation, date of appointment and the like."

At the hearings on 13 October 1952 a staff member declined, on the ground of the Secretary-General's instruction, to answer questions relating to his actions in a case pending before the United Nations Joint Appeals Board of which the witness was a member. The witness was allowed to refrain from answering until the following day so as to allow time for him to consult his superiors in the United Nations. At the hearing on 14 October, when asked whether he had ever tried to prevent the discharge of a named individual from his employment in the United Nations, the witness declined to answer, on the ground, however, of his privilege against self-incrimination rather than of the United Nations privilege. Nevertheless, at the close of the hearing on the following day, 15 invoke a constitutional privilege. But the use of a constitutional privilege against self-incrimination does not, under the laws of the United States, imply a constitutional right to continued public employment by those who exercise the privilege. On the contrary, the practice for federal, state and municipal employment alike is clearly in the opposite direction. As for the United Nations, I can conceive of circumstances when to plead the privilege would not necessarily be incompatible with the conduct required of international civil servants—But in these circumstances, for a United Nations staff member thus to draw upon himself grave suspicion of being a danger to the security of a Member State was, I felt, a grave breach of the staff regulations concerning the conduct required of staff members. Further more, the attitude taken by these witnesses tended to discredit and cast unjustified suspicion upon their fellow staff members and even to imperil the position of the whole Organization in the host country."

⁹⁸ Also at the same meeting, the Secretary-General declared: "It is clear that no staff member should engage in subversive activities against his own government or the government of any Member State. He may disagree with his government. He has a right to his own private and personal opinions and beliefs. But so long as he remains in the Secretariat it is his clear obligation, under the Charter and the Staff Regulations, to take no part in any activity, either open or secret, aimed at subverting or overthrowing the government of a Member State. Secondly, with regard to United States nationals in the Secretariat, I believe that, in view of the present laws and regulations of the United States toward the American Communist Party and verdicts of the courts on the leadership of that party, no United States national who is a member of the American Communist Party and who is, thereby, barred from employment in the service of his own government, should, as a matter of policy, be employed in the Secretariat. A major consideration for such a policy is, of course, the fact that the United States is the host country to the permanent Headquarters."

October, the Acting Chairman of the Sub-Committee made a statement in which he declared, inter alia, that the Sub-Committee did not agree that any United Nations privilege justified the witness's original refusal to answer, and that it would be held contemptuous of the Senate for witnesses to use any such excuse for failing or refusing to disclose information pertinent to the Sub-Committee's inquiry.

Confronted by the problems arising from the charges and investigations, the Secretary-General decided on 22 October 1952 to appoint an international commission⁹⁹ of jurists to advise him on the action he should take to meet the situation.

The Commission of Jurists met for the first time on 14 November and presented its opinion to the Secretary-General on 29 November 1952. The Commission advised the Secretary-General, among other things, that holders of permanent contracts who refused on the ground of their privilege against self-incrimination to answer questions about espionage, subversive activities or membership in an organization declared to be subversive, could and should have their contracts terminated under the existing Staff Regulations. The Commission also proposed that in certain cases a special panel¹⁰⁰ be created to advise the Secretary-General, after affording staff members involved the opportunity to be heard.

While awaiting the report of the jurists the Secretary-General had in the meantime taken such action as he considered was clearly within his authority. Temporary employees who had invoked the privilege against self-incrimination during the hearings of the United States Senate Internal Security Sub-Committee and with respect to whom the Secretary-General had subsequently received additional confidential information from reliable sources, were dismissed on the ground that their employment was no longer in the interest of the United Nations. Those staff members with permanent appointments who had refused to answer questions on the ground of the privilege of self-incrimination were placed on compulsory leave. On 5 December, acting on the basis of the jurists' opinion, the Secretary-General terminated the permanent staff members who had pleaded the privilege after first giving them an opportunity to change their minds about testifying.

c. CONSIDERATION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY DURING 1952

The report of the Commission of Jurists was transmitted by the Secretary-General to the members of the General Assembly on 4 December 1952.

At the 371st meeting of the Fifth Committee on 9 December, the representative of Egypt asked the Committee when it would take up this report, and at the 373rd meeting on 13 December, supported by the representative of Sweden, he repeated his question. The Chairman of the Fifth Committee replied that he was consulting the President of the General Assembly and the Secretary-General on the matter and at the following meeting he reported that there was a formal difficulty to the discussion of the subject at that time since the issues were not covered by any agenda item and, under rule 97 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, Committees of the Assembly might not introduce new items on their own initiative. The Fifth Committee was informed, however, that the Secretary-General was gathering all relevant material which he intended to present to the Member States as early as possible in a comprehensive report on personnel policy.¹⁰¹

On 18 December 1952 the Secretary-General requested (A/2327) that the following item be placed on the agenda: "Report of the Secretary-General on Personnel Policy".

The Assembly's General Committee considered the request at its 84th meeting on 18 December, and, by 12 votes to 2, recommended the inclusion of the item. By 49 votes to 5, with 2 abstentions, the Assembly, at its 406th plenary meeting, adopted the recommendation (A/2330) of the General Committee.¹⁰² The representative of the USSR, in the General Committee, and the representatives of the USSR and Poland, in the plenary meeting, opposed the inclusion of the item, arguing that a report on the matter should be submitted first, and then a decision as to its inclusion in the agenda should be taken by the General Assembly on the basis of the facts and information contained in that report.

The General Assembly did not discuss the item further during 1952.

⁹⁹ The three members of the commission were: William DeWitt Mitchell (United States), Sir Edwin Herbert (United Kingdom) and Professor P. Veldekens (Belgium).

¹⁰⁰ The Secretary-General on 16 January 1953 announced the appointment of the members of the Advisory Panel proposed by the Commission of Jurists.

¹⁰¹ The report (A/2364) was prepared by the Secretary-General and submitted to the General Assembly on 30 January 1953.

¹⁰² The General Assembly began consideration of the Secretary-General's report at its 413th plenary meeting on 10 March 1953. The Assembly, at the same meeting, decided that the item should be dealt with in plenary meeting rather than in Committee.

4. Staff Regulations of the United Nations: Question of a Probationary Period

During the sixth session of the General Assembly, when the question of Staff Regulations of the United Nations¹⁰³ was under consideration, the Fifth Committee decided to recommend to the General Assembly that the enactment of a specific regulation on the question of a probationary period should be deferred, the Secretary-General having given an assurance that he would submit a report on this question for the consideration of the General Assembly at its seventh session.

In the Secretary-General's report (A/2272) to the Assembly's seventh session, he recommended that action on this question should be postponed for a further year pending submission of a final proposal for the consideration of the Assembly at its eighth session. His proposal was based on two grounds: (1) the desirability of co-ordination with the specialized agencies with a view to a common approach to this problem; and (2) the fact that the review of the existing temporary staff of the United Nations had not been completed. The experience to be gained from this review would, in the Secretary-General's opinion, be valuable in formulating a definite regulation. The Secretary-General further reported that the current United Nations staff rule with respect to a probationary period was substantially in line with the regulation which had previously been recommended for adoption by the Advisory Committee. This rule (rule 104.12 (b)), which the Secretary-General intended to introduce as from 1 January 1953 read as follows:

"The probationary period for a permanent appointment shall normally be two years provided that prior full-time satisfactory service under a temporary appointment shall be credited towards the probationary period."

In its 38th report (A/2307) to the Assembly's seventh session, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions made a number of observations on the report of the Secretary-General (A/2272). It emphasized that it adhered to the position of principle that was reflected in the text of regulation 9.1A which it had previously recommended. This text read as follows:

"The probationary period for confirmation of a permanent appointment shall normally not exceed two years. Service in a temporary capacity may be allowed to count towards such confirmation."

On a comparison of the revised rule 104.12 (b) introduced by the Secretary-General and the regulation (9.1A) recommended by the Advisory Committee at the Assembly's sixth session, two differences, the Advisory Committee declared, emerged:

(1) under 9.1A the norm was not fixed, as under 104.12 (b), at two years, but at any period of time not exceeding two years; and (2) the permissive form of 9.1A conferred a lesser right upon a staff member serving under a temporary appointment.

The Advisory Committee reported, however, that objection would not be offered to the Secretary-General's request in view of the considerations to which he had called attention, including, in particular, the desirability of proceeding in consultation with the specialized agencies and the fact that the review of existing temporary staff had not been completed.

The reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee were considered by the Fifth Committee at its 374th meeting on 16 December. Discussion was limited, for the most part, to the issue of postponement rather than to the substance of the question. The representatives of Belgium and the Netherlands declared that they were prepared to approve the Secretary General's proposal that the Assembly should take no decision at its current session on this question. They argued, however, that the need for a final solution must not be forgotten.

After the Chairman of the Advisory Committee explained the effects of the provisions contained in the two texts before the Fifth Committee, the Fifth Committee unanimously adopted a resolution recommending that this question be referred to the Assembly's eighth session.

The report of the Fifth Committee (A/2348) was considered by the General Assembly at its 410th meeting on 21 December. The draft resolution contained in the report was adopted unanimously and without discussion as resolution 682 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Noting the reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions on the question of a probationary period,

"1. Requests the Secretary-General to submit through the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions a final proposal on this question for the consideration of the General Assembly at its eighth session;

"2. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of the eighth session of the General Assembly the item 'Staff Regulations of the United Nations: question of a probationary period'."

5. International Civil Service Advisory Board

The International Civil Service Advisory Board was established by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in accordance with General Assembly resolution 13(I) of 13 February 1946. The Advisory Board is composed of nine members appointed by the Secretary-General, no two of whom are from the same Member nation, and was set up to advise the United Nations and all its specialized agencies on the methods of recruitment for the Secretariat and on the means by which common standards of recruitment may be insured. Under its present terms of reference, elaborated in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination by the Secretary-General and the heads of the specialized agencies, the purpose of the Board is "to contribute to the improvement of recruitment and related phases of personnel administration in all of the international organizations".

¹⁰³ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 115-22.

The Advisory Board held its fourth session in Geneva from 12 to 16 May 1952. This session was devoted to two subjects, namely "In-Service Training in the International Secretariats", discussion of which had been continued from the third session, and "Standards of Professional Conduct in the International Civil Service", an item suggested by the International Labour Organisation.

For its further consideration of the question of in-service training, the Board had before it its own provisional report on the subject as well as the observations of the United Nations and the specialized agencies on the report. In the light of these comments, the Board amended and clarified its provisional report; its final Report on In-Service Training in the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies was published in 1952 (COORD/CIVIL SERVICE/4).

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination received the final report at its fifteenth session, in October 1952, and commended the conclusions reached by the Board as suitable guiding principles to be followed when in-service training programmes are undertaken within the various organizations.

After completing revision of its provisional report on in-service training, the Board turned its attention to the question of standards of professional conduct in the international civil service. In view of the important and complex nature of this problem, the Board decided not to attempt to prepare a report on the subject at once, but rather to circulate to members of the Board, for their comments, a summary of views expressed and points covered in the discussions on this item. This summary, together with comments of members, would be taken up by the Board at its meeting in 1953.

6. United Nations Administrative Tribunal

The United Nations Administrative Tribunal was established by the General Assembly on 24 November 1949 to hear and pass judgment upon applications alleging non-observance of contracts of employment of United Nations Secretariat staff members or of their terms of appointment. The Tribunal, during 1952, met on three occasions to consider the appeals of four staff members.

It met first in Paris in January to consider the application of a staff member who alleged wrongful termination of his temporary-indefinite contract. The Tribunal rejected the applicant's request for an interlocutory order for his temporary reinstatement pending delivery of the Tribunal's final decision (Judgment no. 13, AT/DEC/13). On the main issues of the case, the Tribunal rejected the applicant's request that the decision to terminate his employment be revoked, and set aside the applicant's alternative request for a recommendation that he should be granted a further period of employment to demonstrate his ability (Judgment no. 14, AT/DEC/14/Rev.I).

The Tribunal next met at the European Office of the United Nations at Geneva from 23 July to 11 August to consider two applications. The first case concerned an appeal against the non-renewal of a fixed-term contract held by a former Secretariat staff member. The Tribunal ruled that, under article 2 of its Statute, it was bound to apply not only the Staff Regulations and Staff Rules, but also the directives issued by the Secretary-General in pursuance thereto, including the provisions of the Administrative Manual. The Tribunal did not consider it necessary to make any pronouncement on the issue raised as to whether the Administration had created any expectancy on the part of the applicant that his contract would be renewed. Attention was rather directed to the point whether the right of association of staff members had been infringed by the action of the Administration. It was observed that this right was recognized by the United Nations as a whole and by the Secretary-General with respect to the members of the Secretariat. It was ruled that since the applicant had taken a very active part in the work of the Staff Association as an officer of the Staff Committee, the non-renewal of his contract was bound to give rise to suggestions as to the denial of the right of association. In this particular case, therefore, the Tribunal considered that, in order to protect the right of association, the Administration was bound to furnish a specific reason for the non-renewal of the contract and, for this purpose, a general term such as "suitability" was not sufficient. As the applicant had requested compensation instead of rescission of the decision to terminate him, the Tribunal awarded compensation in the amount of $5,990 together with partial costs corresponding to the travelling expenses of the counsel of the applicant in the amount of $1,000 (Judgment no. 15, AT/DEC/15).

In the second case, a former staff member of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund appealed against the termination of his temporary-indefinite contract. The Tribunal held that under Staff Rule 104 and its interpretation in the Administrative Manual, the Bureau of Personnel of the Secretariat had the duty to consider whether there was a suitable vacancy elsewhere for the applicant. It noted that, while certain efforts were made to find a post for the applicant elsewhere, these efforts, owing to a misinterpretation of the Administration's obligations, were made by a service which was not equipped to take effective action and that, in fact, the inquiries prescribed in the Administrative Manual had not been made. While it was found that there had been non-observance of Staff Rule 104, the Tribunal took into account the fact that the prospect of re-employment for the applicant was hypothetical and therefore awarded the sum of $400 as compensation (Judgment no. 16, AT/DEC/16).

On 2 December, the Tribunal met at United Nations Headquarters to consider the case of a former Secretariat staff member who contested the non-renewal of his fixed-term contract. The Tribunal ruled that it was not within its functions to deal with a number of internal administrative problems which had been raised in the report of the Joint Appeals Board nor to pronounce upon alleged weaknesses in internal administrative procedures. It noted that the applicant had been given a further period of two months after the expiration of his contract and that the Administration had therefore complied with the spirit of Staff Rule 115 and its interpretation in the Administrative Manual. It observed that all prescribed procedures had been followed by the Administration in this case and that it was therefore not incumbent upon the Tribunal to enter into the motives which might have led to the decision not to renew the contract. The Tribunal found that there had been no non-observance of the contract of employment within the meaning of article 2 of its Statute and accordingly rejected the claims of the applicant (Judgment no. 17, AT/DEC/17).

The Tribunal met in plenary session at Headquarters from 10 to 12 December and elected its officers for 1953. With a view to simplifying the presentation of cases and to expediting oral proceedings, the Tribunal adopted at the same session provisional amendments to its rules. Under the amended rules, each party to a case will, in ordinary circumstances, be restricted to the delivery of one single written document or set of documents to the Tribunal, that is, the staff member's application and the Secretary-General's answer to it. The staff member may, however, submit a further written statement if he renounces any claim to oral hearings. The duration of oral hearings will also be curtailed; they will be limited, as a general rule, to one single day for any given case.

7. Joint Appeals Board and Joint Disciplinary Committee

The Joint Appeals Board and the Joint Disciplinary Committee, as constituted in May 1950, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 352 (IV),¹⁰⁴ continued to function in 1952. These two bodies, established to advise the Secretary-General in cases of appeal against administrative decisions or concerning proposed disciplinary action, respectively, are each composed of three members of the Secretariat, one appointed by the Secretary-General, one elected by the Staff Committee, and a Chairman appointed by the Secretary-General after consultation with the Staff Committee.

During 1952, the Joint Appeals Board reported to the Secretary-General on eleven cases of appeals, most of them relating to termination of temporary-indefinite appointments. The Joint Disciplinary Committee considered one case in 1952.

8. United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund

a. ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UNITED NATIONS JOINT STAFF PENSION BOARD FOR 1951

In pursuance of article 35 of the regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board presented to the seventh session of the General Assembly of the United Nations and to the governing bodies of all organizations which are members of the Joint Staff Pension Fund an annual report (A/2189) on the operation of the Joint Staff

¹⁰⁴ See Y.U.N., 1948-49, p. 919.

Pension Fund for the year ended 31 December 1951.

The following organizations participated in the Fund during that year: the United Nations; the World Health Organization (WHO); the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO); the International Labour Organisation (ILO); the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); and the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO).

In the course of the year, the Joint Staff Pension Board recommended the approval of agreements providing for the admission to the Joint Fund, as member organizations, of UNESCO and ICAO. Agreements admitting these specialized agencies to the Fund were subsequently concluded by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the effective dates of entry being, for UNESCO 1 January 1951, and for ICAO 1 March 1951. Negotiations were well advanced for the admission of the World Meteorological Organization as a member of the Fund with effect from 1 January 1952.

The report indicated that on 31 December 1951 the active membership of the Fund was 7,582, an increase of 2,092 members during the year. About half this increase was due to the admission of the two new member organizations. The total number of members who entered the Fund since its inception in 1947 was 9,472, and the number of withdrawals in the same period was 1,890.

The number of benefits authorized in 1951 were: 24 retirement, seven widows', eight children's, four disability and 836 withdrawal benefits. The total value of benefits paid during the year was $515,574, of which withdrawal benefits amounted to $467,995.

The financial statements showed that the principal of the Fund at the beginning of 1951 was $14,085,740; the excess of income over expenditure for the year was $7,237,700, thus making a total Fund at 31 December 1951 of $21,323,440.

Investments at book value amounted to $20,731,321 at the end of the year. These investments consisted of Canadian and United States Federal Government paper and highly-graded United States corporate paper, mostly of railways and utilities. The rate of yield of the current investments was a little in excess of 21/2 per cent per annum, which was the rate of interest assumed for the actuarial basis of the Fund.

A reference was made in the report to the question of the competent jurisdiction for hearing applications alleging non-observance of Joint Staff

Pension Fund regulations. Under the Statute, the United Nations Administrative Tribunal is competent to receive appeals from United Nations staff members alleging non-observance of the Pension Fund Regulations. That competence does not, however, extend to any one of the five specialized agencies in the Joint Fund, although it is open to them to accept the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. One of the agencies has its own tribunal. The question was referred to the General Assembly for consideration without a recommendation.

In a report (A/2285) to the General Assembly, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions made a number of observations on this question. The Committee was of the opinion that a single jurisdiction was indispensable in order to secure equality of treatment among participants. The Committee suggested that, as the most practical course, member organizations should be invited to accept the exclusive jurisdiction of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal.

The report of the Joint Staff Pension Board (A/2189) and the observations of the Advisory Committee (A/2285) were considered by the Fifth Committee of the General Assembly at its 369th meeting, held on 6 December 1952. Discussion in the Committee was concerned, for the most part, with the question of jurisdiction. The representatives of Canada and the Netherlands indicated their concurrence in the recommendations of the Advisory Committee that the most practical course would be to invite organizations, members of the Joint Staff Pension Fund, to accept the exclusive jurisdiction of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal.

The Fifth Committee by 41 votes to none, and, on its recommendation (A/2347), the General Assembly, at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December, without discussion and without objection, adopted a resolution (678(VII)) on the matter. It read:

"The General Assembly

"1. Takes note of the annual report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for the year ended 31 December 1951;

"2. Requests the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the specialized agencies which are members of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund the reports submitted to the General Assembly at its seventh session by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board and by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions;

"3. Recommends that the appropriate governing organs of the specialized agencies concerned accept the jurisdiction of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal in matters involving applications alleging non-observance of Pension Fund regulations;

"4. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its eighth session on the action taken by the specialized agencies concerning this recommendation."

b. SECOND ACTUARIAL VALUATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS JOINT STAFF PENSION FUND

Under the terms of article 31 of the regulations of the Joint Staff Pension Fund, the Joint Staff Pension Board is required to have actuarial valuations of the Fund made at stated intervals. The Board is further required, under that article, to make proposals to the General Assembly and to member organizations for any action to be taken as a result of the valuation.

The first actuarial valuation was made as of 31 December 1949; the second valuation as of 31 December 1951. Both valuations were made by the consulting actuary of the Board, George B. Buck (New York). The report of the second valuation (A/2190) was transmitted to the General Assembly for consideration at its seventh session. Included in the report were the results of an investigation by the actuary into the mortality, service and compensation experience of the participants and beneficiaries of the Fund. The consulting actuary recommended, inter alia, because of the short experience of the Fund, that the current rate of contributions by member organizations (14 per cent) should be continued, even though it was slightly higher than the rate of 13.48 per cent shown by the valuation to be necessary; the Board concurred in this recommendation.

Pursuant to a request of the Fifth Committee, the report of the Joint Staff Pension Board was reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. The observations of the Advisory Committee on the question were presented in its 24th report to the seventh session of the Assembly (A/2285). The Advisory Committee, while not dissenting from the recommendation that the aggregate contribution rate should be maintained at 21 per cent of participants' pensionable remuneration (contributions of participants, 7 per cent; contributions of member organizations, 14 per cent), believed that the following points merited consideration:

(a) The ratio between the respective rates of contribution currently authorized by the General Assembly (member organizations, two; participants, one) had been laid down, and therefore might be revised, if necessary, by the Assembly;

(b) The existing rate of 21 per cent, currently yielding a surplus which was being used to accumulate a reserve fund for contingencies, might be changed by the Assembly on the recommendation of the Board, for social or other reasons;

(c) Although the use of a part or the whole of any such surplus for changes in benefits might be justified in certain circumstances, it should serve to protect the interests both of member organizations and participants. The reserve fund should likewise ensure that article 19 of the regulations, which require the governments of members of the various organizations to make good any deficiency which an actuarial valuation may show, be invoked only as an emergency measure.

The report of the Joint Staff Pension Board and the observations thereon made by the Advisory Committee were considered by the Fifth Committee at its 369th meeting on 1 December 1952. The Fifth Committee, by 43 votes to none, and, on its recommendation (A/2346), the General Assembly, at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952, adopted, without discussion and without objection, a resolution (679 (VII)) taking note of the report of the Joint Staff Pension Board and of the observations thereon by the Advisory Committee.

c. AMENDMENTS TO THE REGULATIONS FOR THE UNITED NATIONS JOINT STAFF PENSION FUND

The United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board submitted to the seventh session of the General Assembly a report (A/2203) proposing a number of amendments to the existing regulations of the Joint Staff Pension Fund which were adopted by the General Assembly in 1948 and came into force in January 1949 (resolution 248(III) of 7 December 1948).¹⁰⁵

The report stated that the proposed amendments did not seek to achieve any substantial change in the structure of the Fund or in the benefits payable. Most of them were editorial or proposed for the purpose of clarifying the existing provisions. The only changes in benefits payable at present were contained in articles 7 (death benefits), 8 (children's benefits and orphans' benefits), 11 (summary dismissal for serious misconduct), 12 (re-employment) and 16 (leave without pay for military service). The amendments, the report explained, had been put forward after having been the subject of investigation by working parties of the Board and after having been considered by the Staff Pension Committee of each member organization. Throughout its discussions, the Joint Staff Pension Board, the report stated, had kept in mind the actuarial implications of the proposed amendments, and it was of the opinion that any changes in benefits which would result from their adoption could be absorbed by the contributions currently made to the Fund by participants and member organizations.

¹⁰⁵ See Y.U.N., 1948-49; pp. 912-18.

The proposed amendments were referred to the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions which commented on them in its 24th report (A/2285) to the Assembly's seventh session. The Advisory Committee stated that, in view of the fact that the proposed amendments represented the agreed views of all organizations which were members of the Fund, the Committee had confined its observations to points of major importance. It made a number of observations on the various articles. For example, the Committee reached the conclusion that, in view of the gravity of any disciplinary offence leading to summary dismissal, the existing regulation (article 11) was an equitable one and should be retained. Also, a review of the policy regarding article 16 might, in the opinion of the Committee, be undertaken by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination for report to the next Assembly session. Subject to these observations, the Advisory Committee was prepared to recommend the adoption of the proposed amendments to the regulations, on the understanding that the additional costs, if any, could be met within the existing structure of the Fund without affecting its actuarial position.

The reports of the Joint Staff Pension Board and of the Advisory Committee were considered by the Fifth Committee at its 369th meeting on 6 December 1952.

An oral proposal made by the representative of the United States to refer article 11 back to the Pension Board for further consideration in the light of the Advisory Committee's comments was approved by the Fifth Committee by 35 votes to none, with 6 abstentions.

A United Kingdom oral proposal to maintain the existing text of article 16, pending a review of the problem by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the Joint Staff Pension Board, was approved by 36 votes to none, with 6 abstentions.

An amendment to article 27, regarding administrative expenses, was adopted by 40 votes to none, with 1 abstention. The amendment, proposed by the Joint Staff Pension Board, would make possible the sharing amongst member organizations of the administrative expenses of the Pension Board. The Committee referred at the same time to the Board a suggestion of the Advisory Committee to the effect that expenses incurred by the Pension Board should be charged against the Pension Fund instead of being met out of the general budget of the United Nations.

Article 38 concerning the termination of the membership of a member organization—a new article—was voted upon in parts. Paragraphs (a) and (b) were adopted by 11 votes to 7, with 26 abstentions. Paragraph (c), concerning the dissolution of the Fund, was rejected by 13 votes to 4, with 27 abstentions. This paragraph was felt to be inappropriate in the regulations.

The other amendments proposed by the Joint Staff Pension Board were approved without objection.

Subject to the Committee's decision with respect to articles 11, 16 and paragraph (c) of article 38 and with some drafting changes, the amendments to the regulations of the Pension Fund as recommended by the Pension Board were then adopted by 42 votes to none.

The General Assembly considered the report of the Fifth Committee (A/2345) at its 410th plenary meeting of 21 December, and adopted the resolution recommended by the Committee, without discussion and without objection, as resolution 680(VII). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Having considered the recommendations proposed by the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board in pursuance of article 37 of the Regulations for the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund, with respect to amendments and additions to be made in the Regulations,

"1. Approves the amendments and additions to the Regulations for the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund as set forth in the annex¹⁰⁶ to the present resolution and decides that the Regulations so amended shall take effect as from 1 January 1953;

"2. Refers the proposals of the Joint Staff Pension Board relating to articles 11 and 16 to the Board for further consideration in the light of the observations presented with respect to these articles in the twenty-fourth report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to the seventh session of the General Assembly and of the discussions held at the 369th meeting of the Fifth Committee;

3. Refers to the Joint Staff Pension Board for consideration at its next session the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions that the administrative expenses incurred in the administration of the Regulations of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund should be charged to the Fund;

"4. Requests the Joint Staff Pension Board to report to the General Assembly at its eighth session on the matters referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the present resolution."

¹⁰⁶ For text of revised Regulations annexed to the resolution, see General Assembly, Official Records: Seventh Session Supplement No. 20 (A/2361) pp. 53-59.

9. United Nations Interne Programmes

Three United Nations interne programmes were held in 1952. This marked the sixth year of operation of these programmes, which were initiated in July 1947. The first programme during 1952, for civil servants, was held from 31 March to 23 May; it was attended by twenty civil servants, from sixteen Member Governments, and its specific purpose was to study the working methods and procedures of the United Nations Secretariat.

The second programme, for students, held during the summer, was in two sections. The first section was held at the Geneva Office from 23 June to 15 August and was attended by eleven students from eleven countries. The main interests of this group were in the work of the International Law Commission and the Economic Commission for Europe. The second section was held at the United Nations Headquarters in New York from 7 July to 29 August, and was attended by 40 students from 25 countries. This group included eleven students accepted on a scholarship basis from ten universities, and seven "Auditeurs Libres"¹⁰⁷ principally from non-member governments. There were also three representatives from non-governmental organizations. Special emphasis was placed at the second section on the work of the Trusteeship Council and on the agenda and functions of the seventh session of the General Assembly.

The third programme, for civil servants, was conducted at the New York Headquarters. It was attended by 31 internes; 25 from the civil services of 22 Member Governments, and six representatives (involving four additional nationalities) from non-governmental organizations. In addition, seven scholars from the American Ford Foundation were given permission to attend the lectures. This programme concentrated on a study of the operations and procedures of the General Assembly.

By the end of 1952, a total of 568 internes from 55 countries had taken part in these eight-week programmes.

10. Staff Services

a. HEALTH SERVICE

In 1952, the medical expert committees, organized by the Health Service in the Department of Administrative and Financial Services to advise on tuberculosis, cardiovascular diseases and mental hygiene, submitted their recommendations regarding standards for employability and placement. On the recommendation of the Tuberculosis Expert Committee, the Health Service instituted a programme of chest X-rays for United Nations staff members at intervals of no less than two years, and a pre- and post-natal chest X-ray system was begun.

The Health Service also set up during the year a card code system for the purpose of sick leave studies such as cause, incidence and seasonal variations.

b. UNITED NATIONS HOUSING

On 12 June 1952 an agreement was signed between the United Nations and Parkway Village, Incorporated, under the terms of which the Housing Section of the United Nations Secretariat has been able to hold the United Nations responsibility for leases in Parkway Village, Long Island, to a level approximating the needs of the United Nations Staff for such apartments. At the end of 1952 there were 300 United Nations tenants in Parkway Village, including some 30 members of delegations and of the staff of the specialized agencies. In addition, four apartments were occupied by the International school.

When an apartment is vacated by a United Nations tenant and there are no requests for the apartment, it is immediately released to the Parkway Management for renting to a tenant not of the United Nations. When the apartment is rented in this way, United Nations responsibility ceases.

The Housing Section thus offers to new United Nations applicants for Parkway Village accommodation only vacant apartments on which the United Nations has guaranteed leases. In this way the responsibility of the United Nations in respect of Parkway Village was gradually being reduced during 1952, while, at the same time, provision was being made to secure adequate housing for new staff members and new members of delegations to the United Nations.

During 1952 the Housing Section continued to serve staff members in need of assistance in finding housing, in counselling on many housing problems, such as privileges and obligations under leases and in subletting accommodation during home leave and mission assignments.

c. VOLUNTEER SERVICES

During 1952, the United Nations Volunteer Services, consisting of 22 women volunteers under the direction of a staff chief and staff secretary, carried out a broad programme of services for the benefit of the United Nations Secretariat, and, in particular, for the benefit of new staff members.

¹⁰⁷ An interne given permission to attend the programme, but who pays his own expenses.

During the year 1133 persons participated in 88 hospitality events as guests of 303 American families. Volunteer Services conducted counselling services on vacation and travel, and assisted staff members in making plans for weekends and vacations. Staff members, with sons and daughters of school and camp age, were also assisted in making selections for suitable places to send their children to school or to camp.

Volunteer Services operated as a daily information service for staff members on shopping, theatres, musical events and sports programmes. It distributed tickets for radio and TV programmes, and also literature about lectures, adult education classes and other interesting facilities available in New York City. Special-rate tickets for Philharmonic concerts were made available to a large number of staff members and their families. Many sight-seeing and "Know your City" educational tours were conducted, and "welcome teas" were held each month for all new staff members.

F. BUDGETARY ARRANGEMENTS

1. Financial Reports and Accounts and Reports of the Board of Auditors

a. UNITED NATIONS: YEAR 1951

The Board of Auditors submitted a report (A/2123) to the seventh session of the General Assembly covering the United Nations financial year ended 31 December 1951. Obligations incurred for 1951, the report said, amounted to $48,628,383 compared with total appropriations of $48,925,500. The balance on surplus account at 31 December 1951 was $1,503,594. Of this amount $1,239,203 was transferred to the Working Capital Fund in 1952 in accordance with the terms of General Assembly resolution 585(VI) of 21 December 1951. On the other hand, $116,120 was charged to the assessed contributions for 1952 covering a portion of the deficiency in miscellaneous income. The remaining balance, available for credit to Members against 1953 contributions, or for transfer to the Working Capital Fund, was therefore $380,511.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in its first report to the seventh session of the Assembly (A/2157), submitted observations on the above report. The Committee, among other things, reiterated its suggestion to the effect that studies of missions administration by officers with specialized experience in administration and finance should be undertaken, with a view to effecting economies both by better utilization of staff and by simplification of procedures.

The Fifth Committee, at its 343rd meeting on 20 October 1952, considered the financial report and accounts and reports of the Board of Auditors as well as the observations of the Advisory Committee. The representatives of the USSR and Czechoslovakia objected to certain parts of the report of the Board of Auditors and requested a vote on it. The financial report and accounts of the United Nations for 1951 and the certificate of the Board of Auditors were approved by the Fifth Committee by 45 votes to none, with 5 abstentions.

The Assembly at its 398th plenary meeting on 25 November 1952 adopted the resolution proposed by the Fifth Committee (A/2265), without discussion, by 48 votes to none, with 5 abstentions. The resolution 658(VII) read:

"The General Assembly

"1. Accepts the financial report and accounts of the United Nations for the financial year ended 31 December 1951, and the certificate of the Board of Auditors;

"2. Concurs in the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions with respect to the report of the Board of Auditors."

b. UNITED NATIONS INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND: YEAR 1951

In accordance with resolution 57(I) establishing the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF), the Secretary-General submitted to the seventh session of the General Assembly an annual audit (A/2124) of the accounts of the Fund for the year ended 31 December 1951, which had been carried out by the Board of Auditors. The Assembly also had before it the Advisory Committee's observations (A/2220) on the report.

The Secretary-General's report showed that income from all sources in 1951 totalled $11,423,015. Expenditures for 1951 totalled $22,571,234. The principal of the Fund at 31 December 1951 amounted to $27,199,237, of which $24,998,801 was allocated by the Executive Board, leaving an unallocated surplus of $2,200,436.

In its observations, the Advisory Committee stated that further scope for economy—besides keeping administrative costs to a minimum—might also be found in the possible utilization of United Nations branch offices and technical assistance personnel for certain functions of regional liaison and procurement. It was further suggested that where, as in Bangkok, separate United Nations and UNICEF establishments are maintained, a greater effort towards the co-ordination of services would be appropriate. The Advisory Committee had been informed that the Fund had not so far experienced serious difficulty in utilizing contributions made in soft currencies. It trusted that, wherever possible and with due regard to the Fund's requirements, arrangements could be made for a fuller interchange of available currencies as between UNICEF and other United Nations programmes.

The Fifth Committee, at its 343rd meeting on 20 October 1952, unanimously adopted a draft resolution (A/2265), which was likewise adopted unanimously, and without discussion, by the General Assembly at its 398th plenary meeting on 25 November 1952, as resolution 659(VII). It read:

"The General Assembly

"1. Accepts the financial report and accounts of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund for the financial year ended 31 December 1951, and the certificate of the Board of Auditors;

"2. Takes note of the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions with respect to the report of the Board of Auditors."

c. UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST: 1 JANUARY 1951 TO 30 JUNE 1952

The financial statements of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East covering the period 1 January 1951 to 30 June 1952, together with the report of the Board of Auditors (A/2207) thereon, were submitted to the seventh session of the General Assembly. The Assembly also had before it the observations of the Advisory Committee (A/2238) on the report.

The statement of income and expenditures during the eighteen-months period under review showed that the total income amounted to $57,298,113, and the total expenditure to $42,130,595 leaving an excess of income over expenditure of $15,167,518. When the $6,904,991 balance as at 31 December 1950 was added, the result was that the Agency had $22,072,509 available for its activities after 30 June 1952.

In its observations, the Advisory Committee stated that it was informed that, on the basis of a commitment and expenditure programme of not less than $100,000,000 during the financial year 1952-53, administrative costs could, it was anticipated, be held at a ratio of 3 per cent or less. The Committee also took note of the satisfactory recruitment policy followed by the Agency and of the gratifying increase in the number of contributors, both governmental and non-governmental, to the programme. The Advisory Committee suggested that savings should be possible in future years through the omission from the annual report of the Director of financial statements which constitute an unnecessary and costly duplication.

The Fifth Committee considered the financial statements and the observations of the Advisory Committee at its 352nd meeting on 3 November 1952. A resolution adopted by the* Fifth Committee (A/2265) by 42 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, was adopted by the General Assembly at its 398th plenary meeting on 25 November, without discussion, by 48 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, as resolution 660(VII). It read:

"The General Assembly

"1. Accepts the accounts of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for the period 1 January 1951 to 30 June 1952, and the certificate of the Board of Auditors;

"2. Takes note of the observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions."

d. UNITED NATIONS KOREAN RECONSTRUCTION AGENCY: YEAR ENDING 30 JUNE 1952

The financial statements of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, together with the audited accounts and the report of the Board of Auditors for the financial year ended 30 June 1952 (A/2205), were submitted to the seventh session of the General Assembly. The Assembly also had before it the observations of the Advisory Committee (A/2239) on the report.

The statement of income and expenditure for the period under review showed that total income amounted to $11,975,429, while total expenditure amounted to $4,132,705, leaving an excess of income over expenditure of $7,842,724. At the end of the previous year, the excess of income over expenditure was $6,743,633; therefore, when the increment for the year of $7,842,724 was added, the Agency had $14,586,357 available, as at 30 June 1952, for future operations.

In its observations, the Advisory Committee stated that it had inquired, in particular, into the high ratio of administrative to other costs disclosed in the financial statements of the Agency's report. The Advisory Committee noted that two main factors had contributed to this situation: first, the limited scope of the operations which the Agency could undertake and second, the fact that, under the system of accounting in force during the period under review, certain items of an operational character had been recorded as administrative costs. The Advisory Committee declared that it was, however, informed: (1) that a plan of expenditure involving a total of $70,000,000 in respect of the balance of the financial year 1952-53 provided for administrative expenditure in a ratio of 3.75 per cent to total expenditure, a figure which the Advisory Committee considered to be reasonable; and (2) that care would be exercised in the recruitment of administrative staff so as to ensure a proper balance between administrative and operational personnel. The Committee was satisfied that, if the ratio applied did not exceed the figures mentioned above, administrative expenses would not be excessive.

The Fifth Committee, at its 352nd meeting on 3 November 1952, by 40 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, adopted a resolution (A/2265) which was adopted by the General Assembly, without discussion, at its 398th plenary meeting on 25 November 1952, by 48 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, as resolution 661 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly

"1. Accepts the financial report and accounts of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency for the financial year ended 30 June 1952, and the certificate of the Board of Auditors;

"2. Takes note of the observation of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions."

2. Supplementary Estimates for the Financial Year 1952

In a report (A/C.5/507 and Corr.1) to the seventh session of the General Assembly, the Secretary-General recalled that the Assembly, by resolution 583(VI) of 12 December 1951, had approved appropriations of $48,096,780 to meet expenses of the United Nations for the financial year 1951. Additional requirements had, however, arisen in the course of the year and, after allowance had been made for anticipated savings on the 1952 appropriations, would increase appropriations for the financial year 1952 by $2,442,420, thus making the total requirements $50,539,200. Of the total supplementary provision requested, $1,650,000 was estimated to be required for reimbursement of national income taxes, as authorized by Assembly resolution 585 A (VI) of 21 December 1951. Other major items for which budgetary provision was requested included additional expenditures for political missions ($462,750), increased common staff costs ($468,000) and additional costs incurred in 1952 in connexion with the prolongation of the sixth session of the General Assembly ($180,200).

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, in its eleventh report to the seventh session of the Assembly (A/2256), made a number of observations and recommendations on the Secretary-General's report. In its observations, the Advisory Committee expressed the view that: (1) exemption from national taxation was indispensable; (2) stricter methods of control should be introduced, where indicated, in the administrative and financial arrangements of United Nations missions; (3) it might have been possible to use less costly arrangements with respect to the Headquarters furniture programme and to new stamp issues of the United Nations Postal Administration; (4) it might be possible to introduce a system of compensatory time off for United Nations guards; and (5) it was desirable that the loans made to the Interim Commission of the International Trade Organization should be repaid at an early date. Subject to these observations, the Advisory Committee recommended that the amount of $48,096,780 appropriated for the financial year 1952 be increased by $2,442,420, as requested by the Secretary-General.

The Fifth Committee, at its 365th meeting on 17 November 1952, considered the Secretary-General's report and the observations on it made by the Advisory Committee.

The representative of the USSR objected to the provision of funds for reimbursement of national income taxes on the ground that the adoption of the staff assessment scheme was intended to solve this particular problem and that, in any event, ample time had elapsed for the Member States concerned to make appropriate arrangements in compliance with the decision of the General Assembly. He stated further that he could not approve appropriations for certain political missions which he considered had been illegally created in contravention of the provisions of the Charter. Nor was there any justification for requesting additional funds for the Assembly's sixth session since, with prudent management on the part of the Secretariat, expenditures should have been kept within the level of the appropriations originally authorized.

In connexion with the question of tax reimbursement, the representative of Norway stated that he would vote in favour of the appropriations needed to refund to the staff members national income taxes paid by them on salaries or emoluments received from the United Nations. He considered it essential, however, that the General Assembly be apprised of all the facts and for this purpose requested that an inquiry be undertaken into the financial implications for the United Nations budget of the new United States Immigration Act which was shortly to come into force. In order that the Fifth Committee might be able fully to review the situation, it was necessary to know, among other things, the composition of the staff, including, in particular, the number of locally recruited personnel other than United States nationals who, under the provisions of the new law, might in the future be liable for payment of United States income tax.

The representative of Australia, supported by the representatives of Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, Egypt, Iran and Syria, proposed that the supplementary estimates for 1952 be increased by $8,460. The General Assembly, at its sixth session, he said, had authorized the Secretary-General to grant a subsidy of this amount to the International School at Parkway Village if it could be made available through savings under Common Staff Costs. The expected savings, however, had not materialized, with the result that the Secretary-General had been obliged to seek recovery of an advance of $4,230 made to the School in January 1952. The School was not in a position to repay the sum and, unless the intended subsidy towards its 1952-53 expenses was forthcoming, there was serious danger that a pedagogic experiment which had created interest in many countries of the world would have to be abandoned.

The representative of Uruguay, in supporting the proposal, asked that the Secretary-General should submit a complete report on the work of the International School and its requirements. The representatives of the Netherlands, Norway and the United Kingdom urged that this report should be made available at the current session. They considered that the question of subsidies raised important principles. While they were prepared to support the Australian proposal for a supplementary appropriation for 1952, they were not prepared to consider this action as a precedent nor to prejudice any decision which might be reached subsequently in connexion with appropriations for the 1953 or future budgets.

After the debate, the Fifth Committee first decided, by 40 votes to none, with 7 abstentions, to include an additional supplementary appropriation of $8,460 under Common Staff Costs and to request the Secretary-General to report to the current session of the Assembly on the operation of the School, its financial position and on plans for the future. (The Secretary-General later presented a report on the School (A/C.5/524 and Add.1), which was considered by the Fifth Committee at its 370th and 373rd meetings held on 9 and 13 December 1952. An Australian oral proposal for an appropriation not exceeding $7,400, under Common Staff Costs of the 1953 budget, to cover the rent of the premises occupied by the United Nations International School, was adopted by 27 votes to none, with 13 abstentions, at the 373rd meeting.) The Committee then approved, by 43 votes to 5, a draft resolution increasing the amount of $48,096,780 appropriated for the financial year 1952 by a total of $2,450,880. This resolution (A/2266) was adopted without discussion by the General Assembly by 48 votes to 6, at its 398th plenary meeting on 25 November 1952, as resolution 662 (VII). It read:

The General Assembly

Resolves that the amount of $US48,096,780 appropriated for the financial year 1952 by resolution 583 (VI) adopted on 21 December 1951, is increased by $2,450,880 as follows:

{See table on pp. 110-11.}

3. Budget of the United Nations for

The Secretary-General submitted to the seventh session of the General Assembly budget estimates for 1953 (A/2125 and Add.1), totalling $47,765,200, with an income estimated at $6,112,500, leaving a net expenditure of $41,652,700. The amount of $47,765,200 for 1953 compared with an approved budget for 1952 of $48,096,780 and a total expenditure for 1951 of $48,628,383.

In accordance with the Agreement concluded with the United States Government, the 1953 estimates included an increased provision for the amortization of the Headquarters Loan — $1,500,000 in 1953, as against $1,000,000 in 1952. Other main increases in the 1953 estimates, the Secretary-General said, covered: expansion of the activities of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East and the Economic Commission for Latin America ($215,000); operation and maintenance throughout a full year of the Headquarters buildings, including the General Assembly Hall ($370,000); increase in Common Staff Costs at Headquarters, especially on account of home leave, pension contributions and children's allowances ($315,000); and an increase in the publications programme ($100,000). The additional requirement at Headquarters and in branch

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR THE FINANCIAL YEAR 1952

{See resolution 662(VII) on p. 109.}

	AMOUNT APPROPRIATED AS ADJUSTED UNDER RESOLUTION 583 (VI)	SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION, INCREASE OR decrease (italic figures)	REVISED AMOUNTS OF APPROPRIATION
A. UNITED NATIONS
Dollars (US)
PART I. SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, THE COUNCILS, COMMISSIONS AND COMMITTEES
Section
1. The General Assembly, Commissions and Committees	$1,450,400	$161,800	$1,612,200
2. The Security Council, Commissions and Committees
3. The Economic and Social Council, Commissions and Committees	149,770	6,200	155,970
(a) Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body	16,000		16,000
(b) Regional Economic Commissions	50,300	24,400	25,900
4. The Trusteeship Council, Commissions and Committees	50,000		50,000
TOTAL, PART I	1,716,470	143,600	1,860,070
PART II. INVESTIGATIONS AND INQUIRIES
5. Investigations and inquiries	2,350,300	462,750	2,813,050
(a) United Nations Field Service	517,160	20,000	497,160
TOTAL, PART II	2,867,460	442,750	3,310,210
PART III. HEADQUARTERS, NEW YORK
6. Executive Office of the Secretary-General	489,860		489,860
(a) Library	473,450	6,150	467,300
7. Department of Security Council Affairs	791,040	25,040	766,000
8. Military Staff Committee secretariat	140,800	24,700	116,100
9. Technical Assistance Administration	300,000		300,000
10. Department of Economic Affairs	2,309,910	74,010	2,235,900
11. Department of Social Affairs	1,704,410	9,310	1,695,100
12. Department for Trusteeship and Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories	933,970		933,970
13. Department of Public Information	2,732,310		2,732,310
14. Department of Legal Affairs	454,370	7,070	447,300
15. Conference and General Services	7,811,940	58,060	7,870,000
16. Administrative and Financial Services	3,067,780	91,820	3,159,600
17. Common staff costs	4,145,000	2,126,460	6,271,460
18. Common services	3,572,900	48,500	3,524,400
19. Permanent equipment	517,100		517,100
(a) Improvements to premises	91,500		91,500
TOTAL, PART III	29,536,340	2,081,560	31,617,900
PART IV. UNITED NATIONS OFFICE AT GENEVA
20. United Nations Office at Geneva (excluding direct costs, chapter III, joint secretariat of the Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body)	4,305,120	34,000	4,339,120
Chapter III, joint secretariat of the Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body.	55,700	10,300	45,400
(a) Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	639,100	39,100	600,000
TOTAL, PART IV	4,999,920	15,400	4,984,520

	AMOUNT APPROPRIATED AS ADJUSTED UNDER RESOLUTION 583(VI)	SUPPLEMENTARY APPROPRIATION, INCREASE OR decrease (italic figures)	REVISED AMOUNTS OF APPROPRIATION
PART V. INFORMATION CENTRES
Dollars (US)
.Section
21. Information centres (other than information services, United Nations Office at Geneva)	$892,300	$892,300
TOTAL, PART V	892,300	892,300
PART VI. REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS (other than the Economic Commission for Europe)
22. Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East	973,800	25,400	999,200
23. Economic Commission for Latin America	734,700	734,700
TOTAL, PART VI	1,708,500	25,400	1,733,900
PART VII. HOSPITALITY
24. Hospitality	20,000	20,000
TOTAL, PART VII	20,000	20,000
PART VIII. CONTRACTUAL PRINTING
25. Official Records (excluding chapter VI, Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body)	814,570	70,030	744,540
Chapter VI, Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body	8,960	8,960
26. Publications	850,000	150,000	700,000
TOTAL, PART VIII	1,673,530	220,030	1,453,500
PART IX. TECHNICAL PROGRAMMES
27. Advisory social welfare functions	768,500	768,500
28. Technical assistance for economic development	479,400	479,400
29. Programme for training in public administration	145,000	145,000
TOTAL, PART IX	1,392,900	1,392,900
PART X. SPECIAL EXPENSES
30. Transfer of the assets of the League of Nations to the United Nations	649,500	649,500
31. Amortization of the Headquarters construction loan ..	1,000,000	1,000,000
(a) Headquarters construction costs	1,000,000	1,000,000
TOTAL, PART X	2,649,500	2,649,500
B. THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE
PART XI. THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE
32. The International Court of Justice	639,860	7,000	632,860
TOTAL, PART XI	639,860	7,000	632,860
GRAND TOTAL	$48,096,780	$2,450,880	$50,547,660

offices for within-grade increments (approximately $750,000) was offset by savings resulting from the suppression of a number of established posts at Headquarters ($200,000), a reduction in the number of political missions ($350,000) and a reduction in the cost of permanent equipment ($295,000). Examination of the estimates in this way, he noted, revealed an apparent increase in comparable items of $945,000 in 1953.

The main features of the budget estimates for 1953 were reflected in the following table, which showed a part-by-part comparison with the 1952 appropriation:

	1953	1952
I. Sessions of the General Assembly, the Councils, Commissions and Committees	936,900	1,716,470
II. Investigations and Inquiries	2,565,200	2,867,460
III. Headquarters, New York	30,432,600	29,613,440
IV. United Nations Office at Geneva (includes Office of the High Commissioner for Refugees)	5,053,600	4,946,520
V. Information Centres (excluding Information Centre, Geneva)	892,300	892,300
VI. Regional Economic Commissions (other than Economic Commission for Europe)	1,924,800	1,708,500
VII. Hospitality	20,000	20,000
VIII. Contractual Printing	1,756,600	1,649,830
IX. Technical Programmes.	1,392,900	1,392,900
X. Special Expenses	2,149,500	2,649,500
XI. International Court of Justice	640,800	639,860
TOTAL	$47,765,200	$48,096,780

The Secretary-General's estimates for the 1953 budget were examined by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. In a report (A/2157) to the General Assembly, the Advisory Committee recommended that the Assembly approve for 1953 appropriations totaling $46,774,300, or a saving of $990,900, compared with the figure ($47,765,200) recommended by the Secretary-General.

In the course of 30 meetings, the 344th to the 374th held between 20 October and 16 December 1952, the Fifth Committee considered in detail the budget estimates for 1953, as submitted by the Secretary-General and reviewed by the Advisory Committee.

The keynote of the Committee's general discussion was an emphasis by most of the representatives participating on the continuing upward trend of expenditures and the need for seeking a still greater measure of budgetary stabilization. While there was widespread appreciation of the efforts made in this direction by the Advisory Committee and by the Secretary-General himself, the importance was stressed of the United Nations making itself an example of efficiency, economy and simplicity to national administrations. This objective, it was suggested, could best be accomplished by putting first things first, by continuously reviewing the organization and work of the Secretariat and constantly seeking to improve its methods of operation. The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR reaffirmed the view previously expressed in meetings of the Fifth Committee that the objective should be to operate within a predetermined budget ceiling and suggested that serious consideration be given to the establishment of $35,000,000 net as an appropriate target. Other representatives, in particular those of Australia and Iraq, who were equally desirous of economy, did not consider a predetermined budget ceiling practicable or necessarily desirable. The universal desire for a stabilized budget, it was stated, did not mean that it should be made inflexible to a harmful degree, and serious misgivings were expressed as to whether such measures would not impair the work of vital services and hamper the execution of essential programmes. The representative of Norway declared that stabilization did not mean the establishment of a fixed ceiling, but rather that expenditure be incurred only in proportion to the practical results which the United Nations hoped to obtain. The representative of New Zealand felt that a sounder way of effecting economy and achieving an adequate degree of stability might be to examine proposed activities, one by one, with a view to the restriction of those which lent themselves to curtailment or postponement without harmful consequences.

Subject to these general reservations, the specific recommendations made by the Advisory Committee were generally supported. In some instances, however, especially with respect to the cost of public information activities, doubt was expressed as to whether the reductions proposed might not impair services or activities which some representatives, in particular the representative of Brazil, considered should be maintained at least at the 1952 level of expenditure. It was agreed by the representatives of Belgium, Iraq, Pakistan and Peru that the effectiveness of the Organization, as an instrument of international peace and security, should be measured by its positive achievements rather than by the publicity given to them. At the same time, the view was strongly held by the representatives of, among others, Brazil, Cuba, Ecuador, the Philippines, Uruguay and Yugoslavia that the peoples of the world, on whose informed and insistent support the continuing success of the Organization so largely depended, must be kept fully informed of its aims and activities.

Other directions in which economies were sought included the costs of temporary assistance, consultants, official travel and the expenses of meetings held away from Headquarters. On the last item, a number of representatives including, among others, those of Iraq, Mexico, New Zealand, Pakistan and Uruguay, thought that with the new Headquarters fully equipped and available, the holding of meetings away from Headquarters should be discouraged. The view was also expressed by, in particular, the representative of Norway, however, that reductions in the costs of meetings could be achieved by careful planning and scheduling of meetings with a view to the maximum utilization of available facilities both at Headquarters and in Geneva, and not by restricting meetings to Headquarters alone.

The subject of the re-organization of the Secretariat figured prominently in the general discussion. The representative of Egypt, among others, voiced regret that the benefits of re-organization, particularly as regards the Departments of Economic and Social Affairs and the Technical Assistance Administration, on which the Secretary-General had been requested to report, had not been reflected in the budget estimates for 1953.

The point was also made that responsibility for continuing increases in expenditure did not rest with the Secretary-General alone. On the contrary, such increases as had in fact occurred arose for the most part from decisions taken by United Nations bodies themselves. The Secretary-General had no alternative other than to interpret in his budget estimates the financial implications of such decisions. While the Secretary-General could do much in the future, as he had done in the past, towards achieving the desired budgetary objectives, much more depended, in the last analysis, on the willingness and ability of Member Governments to pursue consistent and co-ordinated policies in the various Councils, commissions and committees of the United Nations on which they were represented. The representative of Norway, in particular, declared that delegations of the same country did not always adopt a uniform attitude in all committees. For example, they would recommend economies in the Fifth Committee while asking for new appropriations in other organs. The representative of the Netherlands stated that it was right to recognize that the increase in the budget was not due solely to administrative expenses. Member States were partly responsible for that situation as they often asked the Organization to undertake new work without due consideration of the expenses and the work involved.

At the 352nd meeting of the Fifth Committee on 3 November, the representative of the United Kingdom formally proposed (A/C.5/L.184) that the Committee should request the Secretary-General to submit to it, before the second reading of the budget, suggestions for reducing the gross total of appropriations requested for 1953 (including all supplementary items to be presented) to $48,700,000. He considered that a reduction of $735,000 would be reasonable. He suggested that the Fifth Committee should neither apply arbitrary reductions in particular sections of the budget, nor fix an arbitrary maximum ceiling for expenditure, but should request the Secretary-General to make the necessary savings by making over-all administrative cuts "across the board" and himself inform the Committee how such savings could be distributed.

A wide measure of support for the United Kingdom proposal was expressed. Some representatives, however, in particular those of Belgium, India and New Zealand, were concerned at the precedent it might establish. They considered that an "across the board" cut might result in the elimination or curtailment of measures which had considerable support among representatives, or precipitate a series of bargainings on the second reading which would be out of keeping with the Committee's responsibilities. The representative of India stressed that the Committee should not look on its task as being merely to reduce appropriations, but should regard itself as having an obligation to ensure that any funds appropriated were used in the most economical and rational way possible. A global and arbitrary reduction might be an excellent method at a national level, he said, but it was an unduly severe and dangerous method at an international level.

At the Committee's 355th meeting on 6 November, the Secretary-General expressed his agreement with the underlying purposes of the United Kingdom proposal and undertook to submit recommendations on the second reading which would give effect to it. The Committee adopted, by 44 votes to none, with 6 abstentions, the proposal of the United Kingdom, amended in accordance with a suggestion made by the representative of the United States (A/C5/L.184).

At its 371st meeting on 9 December the Fifth Committee referred to the Advisory Committee the proposals made by the Secretary-General (A/C.5/526) pursuant to its previous decision and considered at its 373rd meeting on 13 December both the Secretary-General's report and the thirty-seventh report of the Advisory Committee upon it (A/2306).

The Secretary-General's report enumerated two groups of items totalling $303,150, which had appeared in his provisional forecast of Members' assessments but which had been since eliminated by the Fifth Committee and which left a balance of $431,850 if the target reduction of $735,000 were to be achieved. The report also indicated how the Secretary-General proposed to achieve reductions in this amount without impairing any of the substantive programmes of the United Nations. He requested some flexibility in effecting the reductions and proposed that the total sum of $431,850 be deducted from the budget under a new section 33, "global reductions to be achieved on various sections of the budget". He asked for authority to administer as a unit the total credit for travel on official business, for which an over-all reduction of $25,000 had been proposed.

In its report, the Advisory Committee recommended that the total 1953 appropriation should be reduced by the sum of $431,850 proposed by the Secretary-General and concurred in the procedure suggested to secure that reduction.

During the examination of the Secretary-General's proposals, the representative of New Zealand orally proposed that an additional $8,000 be provided in order to permit two interne training programmes in 1953 instead of one as suggested by the Secretary-General. This proposal was adopted by 17 votes to 3, with 15 abstentions.

In the light of the above considerations, the Committee, at its 373rd meeting agreed, by 33 votes to none, to adopt the following proposals:

(a) that provision be made under a new Section 33 for a global reduction in the 1953 appropriations of $423,850;

(b) that a sub-paragraph be added to the draft appropriation resolution authorizing the Secretary-General to apply this global reduction under Section 33 to the various sections of the budget;

(c) that a further sub-paragraph be added to the appropriation resolution authorizing the Secretary-General "to administer as a unit the appropriation provided in the various sections in Part III of the budget for travel on official business".

The representative of the USSR supported the reduction, but said he was categorically opposed to a budget ceiling for 1953 of $48,700,000. He stated that the United Nations budget had practically doubled between 1946 and 1953. There should be an over-all reduction so that the 1953 budget should be at a net total of $35,000,000.

At its 374th meeting on 16 December, the Fifth Committee undertook a second reading of the budget estimates on the basis of a budget summary (A/C.5/538) prepared by the Secretary-General, and approved the different sections of the budget by varying votes (see A/2352). A draft resolution (A/C5/L.226) providing for a total budget for 1953 of $48,327,700 gross, was then approved by 37 votes to 6, with no abstentions.

The draft resolution proposed in the Fifth Committee's report (A/2352) was adopted by the General Assembly at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December by 50 votes to 5.

The representatives of Czechoslovakia and the USSR declared that they had voted against the budget estimates because those estimates amounted to nearly $4,000,000 more than the total expenditure in 1951. They considered that this constant increase in the United Nations budget was undesirable and dangerous and testified to poor budgetary policy on the part of the Secretariat. They had also voted against the 1953 budget appropriations because, in their view, they included large appropriations for the activities of a number of "illegally created organs", such as the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea, and the United Nations Field Service. They opposed the appropriation of funds for the support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, since that body's activities, they argued, impeded the repatriation of refugees and were aimed at binding them to countries to which they were sent under duress. The USSR representative also stated that the budget estimates provided for large appropriations for staff costs due to the system of double taxation which continued to be imposed on a certain section of the staff, in particular United States citizens. As a result of not exempting United States citizens who were members of the Secretariat from the federal income tax, Members of the United Nations were forced to pay over $1,500,000 to the United States Treasury for 1952 alone.

The representative of Mexico stated that he had voted in favour of the budget estimates for 1953, in view of the various economies and cuts made in the original estimates by the Fifth Committee with the valuable assistance of the Advisory Committee. However, this affirmative vote, he said, should also be interpreted in the light of the remarks and reservations made by his delegation during the debate in the Fifth Committee, in which, inter alia, concern was expressed regarding the continuing upward trend of the expenses of the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

The resolution adopted (674(VII)) read:

The General Assembly

Resolves that for the financial year 1953:

1. Appropriations totalling $US 48,327,700 are hereby voted for the following purposes:

{See table on pp. 116-117.}

2. The appropriations voted by paragraph 1 above shall be financed by contributions from Members after adjustment as provided by the Financial Regulations, subject to the provision of paragraph 1 of the resolution relating to the Working Capital Fund. For this purpose, miscellaneous income for the financial year 1953 is estimated at $US 6,238,200;

3. The Secretary-General is authorized:

(i) To administer as a unit the following appropriations:

- (a) Provisions under section 3a, section 20, chapter III, and section 25, chapter VI;
- (b) Provisions under section 13, section 20, chapter U, section 21, and in respect of section 26 for items relating to public information;
- (c) Provisions under the various sections in part III for travel on official business;

(ii) To apply the reduction under section 33 to various sections of the budget;

(iii) With the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, to transfer credits between sections of the budget;

4. The Secretary-General is further authorized to enter into such arrangements with the competent authorities of the Republic and Canton of Geneva in connexion with the exchange of the property called Le Chêne owned by the United Nations for the property called Le Bocage owned by the Republic and Canton of Geneva as he may see fit under the provisions set forth in document A/C.5/510;

5. In addition to the appropriations voted by paragraph 1 above, an amount of $US 13,000 is hereby appropriated for the purchase of books, periodicals, maps and library equipment, from the income of the Library Endowment Fund, in accordance with the object and provisions of the endowment.

4. Unforeseen and Extraordinary Expenses for the Financial Year 1953

While considering the budget estimates for the United Nations for 1953, the Fifth Committee at its 374th meeting on 16 December voted upon a draft resolution (A/C.5/L.224) relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses and approved it by 33 votes to 5, with 1 abstention. The USSR representative declared that he had voted against the draft because it provided for the purchase of medals and ribbons for the Korean campaign. He stated that General Assembly resolution 483(V) establishing the decoration was illegal because it approved a war of aggression against the Korean people.

The draft resolution adopted by the Fifth Committee (A/2352) was adopted by the General Assembly without discussion at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952, by 53 votes to 5, with 1 abstention, as resolution 675 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly

"Resolves that, for the financial year 1953,

"The Secretary-General, with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and subject to the Financial Regulations of the United Nations, is authorized to enter into commitments to meet unforeseen and extraordinary expenses; provided that the concurrence of the Advisory Committee shall not be necessary for:

"(a) Such commitments not exceeding a total of $US 2,000,000 if the Secretary-General certifies that they relate to the maintenance of peace and security or to urgent economic rehabilitation;

"(b) Such commitments not exceeding a total of $25,000 as are occasioned by the holding of an inter-governmental commodity conference;

"(c) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of $50,000 as are required for the United Nations Good Offices Commission on the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa;

"(d) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of $50,000 as are required for the Commission on the question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of South Africa;

"(e) Such commitments, not exceeding a total of $129,000 as are required for the purchase of Korean service medals and ribbons;

"(f) Such commitments, duly certified by the President of the International Court of Justice, relating to expenses

(i) By the designation of ad hoc judges (Statute, Article 31),

(ii) By the appointment of assessors (Statute, Article 30), or by the calling of witnesses and the appointment of experts (Statute, Article 50),

(iii) By the holding of sessions of the Court away from The Hague (Statute, Article 22), and not exceeding $24,000, $25,000, and $75,000, respectively, under each of the above three headings;

"The Secretary-General shall report to the Advisory Committee and to the General Assembly at its next regular session all commitments made under the provisions of the present resolution, together with the circumstances relating thereto, and shall submit supplementary estimates to the General Assembly in respect of such commitments."

BUDGET APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FINANCIAL YEAR 1953

{See resolution 674(VII) on p. 115.}

A. UNITED NATIONS

PART I. SESSIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, THE COUNCILS, COMMISSIONS AND COMMITTEES

Section	Dollars (US)
1. The General Assembly, Commissions and Committees	$	603,400
2. The Security Council, Commissions and Committees.
3. The Economic and Social Council, Commissions and Committees	$	263,200
(a) Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body		20,000
(b) Regional Economic Commissions		96,000
4. The Trusteeship Council, Commissions and Committees		59,900
TOTAL, PART I	$	1,042,500

PART II. INVESTIGATIONS AND INQUIRIES

5. Investigations and inquiries	2,140,700
(a) United Nations Field Service	546,200
TOTAL, PART II		2,686,900

PART III. HEADQUARTERS, NEW YORK

6. Executive Office of the Secretary-General	458,600
(a) Library	475,000	933,600
7. Department of Political and Security Council Affairs.		769,200
8. Military Staff Committee secretariat		137,000
9. Technical Assistance Administration		386,700
10. Department of Economic Affairs		2,304,000
11. Department of Social Affairs		1,749,500
12. Department of Trusteeship and Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories		950,000
13. Department of Public Information		2,755,000
14. Department of Legal Affairs		459,400
15. Conference and General Services		9,721,600
16. Administrative and Financial Services		1,604,900
17. Common staff costs		4,521,000
18. Common services		3,831,600
19. Permanent equipment		247,550
(a) Improvements to premises
TOTAL, PART III		30,371,050

PART IV. UNITED NATIONS OFFICE AT GENEVA

20. United Nations Office at Geneva (excluding direct costs, chapter III, joint secretariat of the Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body)	4,423,300
Chapter III, joint secretariat of the Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body	47,100
(a) Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees	650,000	5,120,400
TOTAL, PART IV		5,120,400

PART V. INFORMATION CENTRES
Section	Dollars (US)
21. Information centres (other than information services, United Nations Office at Geneva)	$ 862,300
TOTAL, PART V		$ 862,300
PART VI. REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS (other than the Economic Commission for Europe)
22. Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East	1,030,000
23. Economic Commission for Latin America	866,000
TOTAL, PART VI		1,896,000
PART VII. HOSPITALITY
24. Hospitality	20,000
TOTAL, PART VII		20,000
PART VIII. CONTRACTUAL PRINTING
25. Official Records (excluding chapter VI, Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body)	$ 752,220
Chapter VI, Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body	11,780	764,000
26. Publications		815,200
TOTAL, PART VIII		1,579,200
PART IX. TECHNICAL PROGRAMMES
27. Social activities	768,500
28. Economic development	479,400
29. Public administration	145,000
TOTAL, PART IX		1,392,900
PART X. SPECIAL EXPENSES
30. Transfer of the assets of the League of Nations to the United Nations	649,500
31. Amortization of the Headquarters construction loan ..	1,500,000
(a) Headquarters construction costs	1,000,000	2,500,000
TOTAL, PART X		3,149,500
B. THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE
PART XI. THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE
32. The International Court of Justice	630,800
TOTAL, PART XI		630,800
C. SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS
PART XII. SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS
33. Global reduction to be achieved on various sections of the budget	—(423,850)	—(423,850)
GRAND TOTAL		$48,327,700

5. Working Capital Fund for the Financial Year 1953

The Secretary-General, in a proposal (A/C.5/515) to the seventh session of the General Assembly, suggested that the Assembly retain in the Working Capital Fund the balance of surplus account as at 31 December 1950 ($1,239,203) which had been temporarily transferred to the Fund at the Assembly's sixth session, as well as the balance of surplus account as at 31 December 1951 ($380,511). This proposal was submitted to the Advisory Committee which in its 21st report (A/2275) expressed the opinion that the level of the Working Capital Fund was somewhat too low for the needs of the Organization and concurred in the proposal of the Secretary-General.

The reports of the Secretary-General and the Advisory Committee on this question were considered by the Fifth Committee at its 367th meeting on 1 December 1952. While some representatives, in particular those of Czechoslovakia, Mexico and the USSR, were opposed to any increase in the Fund above $20,000,000, the majority agreed with the recommendation of the Advisory Committee to retain in the Fund the balance of surplus account at 31 December 1950 ($1,239,203). This proposal was approved by 40 votes to 8, with 2 abstentions. The Fifth Committee, however, by 17 votes to 11, with 21 abstentions, approved a French oral proposal to defer until the second reading of the budget a decision on the proposal regarding the transfer of the balance of surplus account at 31 December 1951 ($380,511).

At the Committee's 373rd meeting on 13 December, the representative of France orally proposed that the amount of the Working Capital Fund be fixed for 1953 at $21,500,000, by transferring to the Fund a part only—namely, $260,797—of the balance of surplus account at 31 December 1951, and leaving the remainder—$119,714—to be offset against the contributions of Members for 1953. The representative of the Secretary-General said that he would raise no objection to the proposal, which was then approved by 28 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions.

At its 376th meeting, the Fifth Committee also considered an Australian proposal (A/C.5/L.203) that the amount of $1,000,000 be included in the budget on its first reading (as had been proposed by the Secretary-General) but that a working group of the Fifth Committee be appointed to discuss with Member Governments the extent to which firm undertakings could be given that all or a substantial part of their contributions could be paid in the first half of 1953. If the working group's discussions showed that contributions likely to be received in the early part of 1953 would make possible the temporary financing of all Headquarters construction costs out of the Working Capital Fund, the item of $1,000,000 might be eliminated. The Australian proposal was approved by 36 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions. The Chairman then appointed a working group consisting of the representative of Denmark, as Chairman, and the representatives of Australia, Egypt, Mexico, Norway, Pakistan and Poland.

The working group met three times and in the course of its meetings held discussions with representatives of Members, taking as a basis the replies submitted in response to the inquiries instituted by the Secretary-General as a result of the adoption of General Assembly resolution 585 (VI). That resolution had invited Members to examine methods whereby, within the limits of their constitutional processes, a substantial proportion of their contributions would be paid within the first quarter of each year. The responses of Members to this invitation were summarized in a report of the Secretary-General (A/C.5/516).

In its report (A/C.5/539) the working group indicated that, on the basis of replies submitted by Governments in response to Assembly resolution 585(VI) and the statements made to it, the Secretary-General estimated that approximately 27.79 per cent of the total 1953 contributions might be expected during the first six months of that year as compared with 19.13 per cent of the 1952 contributions actually collected during the first six months of 1952.

The Fifth Committee considered the working group's report at its 374th meeting on 16 December. The representative of the Secretary-General expressed the view that it would not be safe either to reduce the size of the Working Capital Fund or to eliminate any part of the appropriation of the section of the budget regarding the financing of Headquarters construction costs. A tentative estimate of expenses likely to arise in the first half of 1953 indicated that, if contributions in the first half of 1953 were received in accordance with the undertakings given to the working group, the balance in the Working Capital Fund as at 30 June 1953 would not be greatly in excess of $3,000,000. He thought that such a margin was insufficient to justify the Secretary-General's agreeing to any proposal which might have the effect of decreasing the cash resources available; the position might, however, be reviewed at the Assembly's eighth session in the light of the actual record of contributions in 1953.

The Fifth Committee decided, by 32 votes to 5, with 2 abstentions, to retain the full amount of $1,000,000 in the relevant section of the budget.

A draft resolution (A/C.5/L.227) relating to the Working Capital Fund was put to the vote at the Committee's 374th meeting and approved by 35 votes to 5, with 1 abstention.

The draft resolution adopted by the Fifth Committee (A/2352) was adopted by the General Assembly at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952, by 51 votes to 6, with 1 abstention.

The representatives of Czechoslovakia and the USSR stated that they had voted against the draft because they considered that any increase in the Working Capital Fund was contrary to the principles of sound budgetary policy. The representative of Mexico declared that he had voted against the draft because an increase in the Fund beyond the original amount of $20,000,000 was contrary to the interests of those countries which, like Mexico, punctually fulfilled their financial obligations towards the United Nations.

The text of the resolution adopted 676(VII) read:

"The General Assembly

"Resolves that:

"1. The Working Capital Fund is established for the financial year 1953 at the amount of $US 21,500,000 to be derived:

"(a) As to $20,000,000 from cash advances by Members in accordance with the provisions of paragraphs 2 and 3 of the present resolution;

"(b) As to $1,239,203, by previous transfer of the balance of surplus account as at 31 December 1950, not already applied against Members' assessments for 1951 in accordance with General Assembly resolution 585 A (VI) of 21 December 1951;

"(c) As to $260,797 by transfer of part of the balance of surplus account as at 31 December 1951 not already applied against Members' assessments for 1952;

"2. Members shall make cash advances to the Working Capital Fund as required under paragraph 1 (a) above in accordance with the scale adopted by the General Assembly for contributions of Members to the eighth annual budget;

"3. There shall be set off against this new allocation of advances the amounts paid by Members to the Working Capital Fund for the financial year 1952, under General Assembly resolution 585 A (VI), paragraph 2; provided that, should the advance paid by any Member to the Working Capital Fund for the financial year 1952 exceed the amount of that Member's advance under the provision of paragraph 2 hereof, the excess shall be set off against the amount of contributions payable by that Member in respect of the eighth annual budget, or any previous budget;

"4. The Secretary-General is authorized to advance from the Working Capital Fund:

"(a) Such sums as may be necessary to finance budgetary appropriations pending receipt of contributions; sums so advanced shall be reimbursed as soon as receipts from contributions are available for the purpose;

"(b) Such sums as may be necessary to finance commitments which may be duly authorized under the provisions of the resolution relating to unforeseen and extraordinary expenses. The Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates for reimbursing the Working Capital Fund;

"(c) Such sums as, together with net sums outstanding for the same purposes, do not exceed $250,000 to continue the revolving fund to finance miscellaneous self-liquidating purchases and activities. Advances in excess of the total of $250,000 may be made with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. The Secretary-General shall submit, with the annual accounts, an explanation of the outstanding balance of the revolving fund at the end of each year;

"(d) Loans to specialized agencies and preparatory commissions of agencies to be established by inter-governmental agreement under the auspices of the United Nations to finance their work, pending receipt by the agencies concerned of sufficient contributions under their own budgets. In making such loans, which shall normally be repayable within two years, the Secretary-General shall have regard to the proposed financial resources of the agency concerned, and shall obtain the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions for any cash issues which would increase the aggregate balance outstanding (including amounts previously advanced and outstanding) at any one time to an amount in excess of $3,000,000 and for any issue which would increase the balance outstanding (including amounts previously advanced and outstanding) in respect of any one agency to an amount in excess of $1,000,000, provided that, notwithstanding the above provisions, the Interim Commission of the International Trade Organization shall be authorized to postpone until 31 December 1953 repayment of the outstanding balance of the loans made to the Interim Commission;

"(e) such sums as, together with the sums previously advanced and outstanding for the same purpose, do not exceed $420,000 to continue the Staff Housing Fund in order to finance rental payments, guarantee deposits and working capital requirements for housing the staff of the Secretariat. Such advances shall be reimbursed to the Working Capital Fund following the recovery of rental advances, guarantee deposits and working capital advances;

"(f) Such sums not exceeding $90,000 as may be required to finance payments of advance insurance premiums and deposits where the period of insurance extends beyond the end of the financial year in which payment is made. This amount may be increased with the prior concurrence of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions. The Secretary-General shall make provision in the budget estimates of each year during the life of the related policies to cover the charges applicable to each such year;

"(g) Such sums not exceeding $1,000,000 as may be necessary to complete the Headquarters of the United Nations."

6. Scale of Assessments for Apportionment of Expenses of the United Nations

The scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations for the financial year 1953 was considered at the seventh session of the General Assembly by the Fifth Committee, at its 360th to 364th meetings from 11 to 14 November 1952, and at the 401st plenary meeting of the Assembly on 5 December. The discussion in the Fifth Committee was based on a report of the Committee on Contributions (A/2161).

In its report the Committee on Contributions recommended changes in the rates of contribution of 37 countries. It recommended that the rates of contributions of the following countries be increased: Belgium, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Greece, Mexico, the Philippines, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Venezuela and Yugoslavia, the largest increase recommended being that of the USSR (2.43 per cent). It recommended that the rates of contributions of the following countries be decreased: Argentina, Australia, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, India, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States, the largest decrease recommended being that of the United States (1.78 per cent).

The Committee, as in previous years, made recommendations regarding the rate at which Switzerland and the Principality of Liechtenstein (non-members of the United Nations but parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice) should contribute towards the expenses of the Court. It also established rates at which non-members of the United Nations which were signatories of international instruments relating to the control of narcotic drugs might be called upon to contribute towards the expenses arising out of the obligations placed on the United Nations by such instruments.

In the Fifth Committee, the United States representative urged that the 33 1/3 per cent ceiling on the assessment of the largest contributor, which had been adopted in principle by General Assembly resolution 238 A (III) of 18 November 1948, should be fully and finally implemented in the scale to be applied for 1953. Since 1946, he said, the United States had consistently taken the position that no international organization of 60 sovereign equals should be dependent upon any one State for a predominant share of its financial support. The Committee on Contributions had annually, for the last four years, taken some steps toward the implementation of the one-third ceiling principle and had recommended an assessment for the United States in 1953 of 35.12 per cent. The additional reduction that would be necessary to reach the agreed objective was a relatively small one and it was therefore as a matter of principle, and not for financial reasons, that he felt obliged to request the immediate implementation of the one-third ceiling. That the United States position was one of principle rather than of finance was shown by the generous extent to which it had voluntarily contributed to the large operating programmes financed by the United Nations and the specialized agencies from extra-budgetary funds, he observed. The United States representative, along with the representatives of Canada and the United Kingdom, also considered it imperative that there should be an increase in the contribution of those States, in particular the USSR, which had experienced, and whose spokesmen had in many instances frankly acknowledged, very substantial economic improvement since the end of the war and which had for a long time been under-assessed.

Many representatives, including, among others, those of Cuba, Denmark, Egypt, Iraq, Mexico, New Zealand, Pakistan and the Union of South Africa, felt, on the other hand, that the policy of limiting the contribution of any one Member State to one-third of the Organization's regular budget, was one which should be applied progressively as the world economic situation became more normal and as new Members were admitted. The view was also expressed by the representative of Belgium, in particular, that eventually, and especially in the event of the admission of new Members, consideration should be given to the possibility of fixing a ceiling of less than 33 1/3 per cent as the maximum proportionate assessment that would be paid by any one Member. Although in favour of giving early effect to the one-third ceiling principle, other representatives including, among others, those of China, France, Norway and the United Kingdom, stated that they would be unable to support its full implementation in 1953. The representative of Canada, recalling that his delegation had from the beginning recognized the validity of the United States request for a ceiling of 33 1/3 per cent on its assessment, proposed that the Committee on Contributions should be instructed to give full effect to that request in drawing up a recommended scale of assessments for 1954.

The representative of Norway noted that his country's contribution had not been increased, but he would be prepared to accept an increase of about 2 per cent, to convince the United States representative of his desire to co-operate with other countries. So small a sum might not solve all the difficulties, but if all representatives approached the problem in the same spirit the world would have taken a big step along the path of international peace. The representative of the United Kingdom likewise stated that his Government was willing to bear its fair share of any changes in assessments which might result from progress towards a permanent scale of contributions.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR expressed the view that a reduction in the United States assessment was not justified, since its national income had increased; it had suffered no physical damage in the Second World War which had, in fact, greatly strengthened rather than weakened its economic and financial resources; nor was it faced, as were most other Members, with the difficult problem of obtaining dollar exchange with which to pay its contributions. They contended, further, that the United States benefited very greatly from the location of the United Nations Headquarters in New York and from the reimbursement by the United Nations of income taxes paid by United States nationals on the Secretariat. If allowance were made for the fact that approximately $7,000,000 had already been paid out of the United Nations budget on account of income tax reimbursement (over $1,600,000 being paid out in taxes in 1952 alone), the proportionate share of the assessed expenses of the Organization actually borne by the United States Treasury was already substantially less than 33 1/3 per cent.

Discussion of the one-third ceiling principle and the problem of its early implementation served to focus attention also on the related problem of giving effect to the further principle that no country's per capita contribution should be higher than that of the largest contributor's. Concern was expressed lest too rapid an application of both ceiling principles simultaneously should result in a shifting of the burden from countries with high to countries with relatively lower per capita incomes.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR maintained that the Committee on Contributions had not made sufficient allowance for certain criteria mentioned in its terms of reference; namely the "temporary dislocation of national economies arising out of the Second World War" and "the ability of Members to secure foreign exchange". The representative of the USSR, in particular, was of the opinion that there was no justification for further increases of approximately 25 per cent in the 1953 contributions of the USSR, the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR and Poland, following successive increases in 1950 and 1951 of approximately 10 per cent and 40 per cent respectively. These countries, moreover, had suffered more severely than others from the ravages of the Second World War, he stated, with the result that considerable funds had still to be spent on repairing war damage, on pensions to widows and orphans, and on the rebuilding of the entire economies of these countries. Furthermore, the difficulty of securing foreign exchange was greater than ever, having been aggravated by the discriminatory trade policies followed by the United States towards the USSR and the peoples' democracies, he said. He also considered that the proposed increases were not in accordance with the Committee's own working rule adopted in 1950 to the effect that no change of more than 10 per cent should be made in any one year in the percentage assessment of any country. The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, the Ukrainian SSR, Poland and Czechoslovakia associated themselves with the views expressed by the USSR representative.

Certain representatives, notably those of Cuba and Mexico, expressed the view that the Committee on Contributions in recommending an increase in their assessments could not have taken all economic factors and other elements affecting capacity to pay fully into account. They contended that the years 1950 and 1951, which the Committee had used as a basis for its work, were not normal years and in many cases did not represent a satisfactory basis on which to establish rates of contribution for 1953. Thus, they argued that, in the case of agricultural countries or countries largely dependent on the export of raw materials whose prices are subject to wide fluctuations from year to year, a temporary improvement in their economic position during 1950 and 1951 could not in itself be held to justify an increased rate of assessment for 1953.

While the decision of the Committee on Contributions to base its estimates of national income on the average of a two-year period was generally welcomed, it was nevertheless suggested that in the future such estimates might well be based on a longer period. The Fifth Committee was informed, however, that the Committee on Contributions in arriving at its recommendations had taken into account factors such as the trend of export prices and balance-of-payment positions, and had proceeded with special caution in recommending changes for countries which were mainly raw material producers, in recognition of the fact that their economies might be subject to heavier and more frequent fluctuations than those of industrialized countries.

The representative of the Philippines acknowledged that his country had experienced a measure of economic recovery but maintained that the large increase recommended in its assessment for 1953 was not justified by the actual situation. The Philippines economy was relatively underdeveloped, had suffered heavy war damage and was feeling the general dollar shortage as acutely as that of most other Members, he said. He stated that he would vote against the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions and expressed the hope that if they were adopted the Committee in reviewing the scale in 1953 would allow for his country's true economic position by reducing its assessment.

The representative of Pakistan, referring to the economic position of his country in 1952 in comparison with 1950 and 1951, stated that Pakistan had been seriously affected by the decline in the demand for raw materials and in prices and was experiencing great difficulty in obtaining foreign currency. There were also other special circumstances, such as the problem of refugees, which should be taken into account. He expressed concern at the constant increase in the assessment for Pakistan and hoped that the Committee on Contributions would be able to re-examine the situation with a view to reducing the assessment to the pre-1952 level.

The representative of Iran stated that, in view of his country's very low per capita income and of the exceptional circumstances currently prevailing, his Government was compelled to ask for a reduction in its contribution. He hoped that his request would receive the fullest consideration.

In connexion with the dollar shortage referred to by several representatives, it was strongly urged that the Secretary-General should again be authorized to accept for 1953 as large a proportion of contributions as possible in currencies other than United States dollars.

The Fifth Committee had before it three draft resolutions: one submitted by the United States (A/C.5/L.192), another submitted by the USSR (A/C.5/L.193) and the third embodying the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions (A/C.5/L.194). Canada alone and Canada and Egypt jointly submitted oral amendments to the United States draft, and Poland submitted an oral amendment to the draft embodying the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions. Voting on the proposals took place at the Fifth Committee's 364th meeting on 14 November.

The Chairman announced that in view of the many amendments to the United States draft and in deference to the USSR representative's request the USSR proposal would be put to the vote first. This proposed that the Committee on Contributions should be instructed to review the scale of assessments for 1953 and to report thereon to the General Assembly at the current session with a view to establishing the percentage contribution of the USSR, the Ukrainian SSR, the Byelorussian SSR and Poland for 1953 at the 1950 level. The Fifth Committee rejected the USSR proposal by 37 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions.

The United States draft, after being modified by its mover, proposed that from 1 January 1953 the assessment of the largest contributor should not exceed one-third of the total assessments of Members, and that the Committee on Contributions should be requested to make such consequential adjustments as might be necessary in the scale of assessments recommended by the Committee for 1953.

The Canadian amendment would change the date of the application of the one-third ceiling from 1 January 1953 to 1 January 1954. This amendment was adopted by 19 votes to 10, with 19 abstentions. In the light of this particular action, the last part of the United States proposal regarding consequential adjustments in the scale to be applied in 1953 did not apply.

The joint Canadian and Egyptian amendment proposed the addition of two paragraphs to the United States draft, the first paragraph dealing with recognition to be given by the Committee on Contributions to countries with low per capita income, and the second dealing with the deferment of further action on the per capita ceiling.

The Fifth Committee adopted the first paragraph of the joint amendment by 40 votes to none, with 9 abstentions, and the second paragraph by 44 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions. The United States proposal as a whole, in its amended form, was adopted by 33 votes to 6, with 9 abstentions.

The Polish amendment to the draft resolution embodying the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions provided that in the review of the scale for 1954 the Committee on Contributions should make no increase or decrease in any assessment by a percentage exceeding 10 per cent. It was rejected by 20 votes to 9, with 16 abstentions.

The draft resolution embodying the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions was then voted upon, first, in parts, and then, as a whole. The various paragraphs were adopted by votes ranging from 36 to 7, with 2 abstentions, to adoption by unanimity. The draft resolution as a whole was adopted by 38 votes to 7, with 3 abstentions. The Fifth Committee then decided to consolidate the two draft resolutions.

The report of the Fifth Committee (A/2286) embodying the consolidated draft resolution was considered by the General Assembly at its 401st plenary meeting on 5 December. In addition to the draft resolution recommended by the Fifth Committee, the Assembly had before it a draft resolution submitted by the USSR (A/L.122) which was similar to the one rejected in the Fifth Committee.

The draft resolution presented by the Fifth Committee was adopted by 44 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions. The USSR draft resolution was rejected by 43 votes to 5, with 9 abstentions.

The representative of the United States declared that he had abstained in the vote on the draft resolution submitted by the Fifth Committee. The representatives of the Ukrainian SSR and Poland stated that they had voted against the draft submitted by the Fifth Committee and in favour of the draft submitted by the USSR. All three representatives made statements similar to those they had made in the Fifth Committee. The representative of the Philippines drew attention to the stand his delegation had taken in the Fifth Committee and asked that it be made a part of the record.

The text of the resolution adopted (665 (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Having considered the recommendations of the Committee on Contributions concerning the proposed adjustments in the scale of assessments for the financial year 1953,

"1. Notes with satisfaction the action taken by the Committee on Contributions to implement the recommendations of General Assembly resolution 582 (VI) of 21 December 1951 by giving additional recognition to countries with low per capita income, and urges the Committee to continue to do so in the future;

"2. Instructs the Committee on Contributions to defer further action on the per capita ceiling until new Members are admitted or substantial improvement in the economic capacity of existing Members permits the adjustments to be gradually absorbed in the scale;

"3. Decides that from 1 January 1954 the assessment of the largest contributor shall not exceed one-third of total assessments against Members;

"4. Resolves:

"(a) That the scale of assessments for the 1953 budget shall be as follows:

Member State	Per cent
Afghanistan	0.08
Argentina	1.45
Australia	1.75
Belgium	1.37
Bolivia	0.06
Brazil	1.45
Burma	0.13
Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic	0.43
Canada	3.30
Chile	0.33
China	5.62
Colombia	0.35
Costa Rica	0.04
Cuba	0.34
Czechoslovakia	1.05
Denmark	0.78
Dominican Republic	0.05
Ecuador	0.04
Egypt	0.50
El Salvador	0.05
Ethiopia	0.10
France	5.75
Greece	0.19
Guatemala	0.06
Haiti	0.04
Honduras	0.04
Iceland	0.04
India	3.45
Indonesia	0.60
Iran	0.33
Iraq	0.12
Israel	0.17
Lebanon	0.05
Liberia	0.04
Luxembourg	0.05
Mexico	0.70
Netherlands	1.25
New Zealand	0.48
Nicaragua	0.04
Norway	0.50
Pakistan	0.79
Panama	0.05
Paraguay	0.04
Peru	0.18
Philippines	0.39
Poland	1.58
Saudi Arabia	0.07
Sweden	1.65
Syria	0.08
Thailand	0.18
Turkey	0.65
Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic	1.63
Union of South Africa	0.83
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	12.28
United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland	10.30
United States of America	35.12
Uruguay	0.18
Venezuela	0.35
Yemen	0.04
Yugoslavia	0.44
TOTAL	100.00

"(b) That, notwithstanding the provisions of rule 159 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, the scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations shall be reviewed by the Committee on Contributions in 1953 and a report submitted for the consideration of the General Assembly at its next regular session;

"(c) That, notwithstanding the terms of financial regulation 5.5, the Secretary-General shall be empowered to accept, at his discretion, and after consultation with the Chairman of the Committee on Contributions, a portion of the contributions of Member States for the financial year 1953 in currencies other than United States dollars;

"(d) That Switzerland shall contribute 1.50 per cent and the Principality of Liechtenstein 0.04 per cent of the expenses of the International Court of Justice for the year 1953, these assessments having been established after consultation with the respective Governments, in accordance with the terms of General Assembly resolutions 91 (I) of 11 December 1946 and 363 (IV) of 1 December 1949;

"(e) That non-member States which are signatories of international instruments relating to narcotic drugs shall be called upon to make contributions towards the annual expenses, commencing with the year 1952, resulting from obligations placed on the United Nations by those instruments, in accordance with the following rates:

Country	Per cent
Albania	0.04
Austria	0.31
Bulgaria	0.19
Cambodia	0.04
Ceylon	0.13
Finland	0.42
Federal Republic of Germany	4.22
Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan	0.04
Hungary	0.48
Ireland	0.34
Italy	2.20
Japan	1.90
"Laos	0.04
Liechtenstein	0.04
Monaco	0.04
Portugal	0.30
Romania	0.50
San Marino	0.04
Switzerland	1.26
Vietnam	0.17

7. Payment of Honoraria to Rapporteurs of United Nations Bodies

One of the questions dealt with by the Fifth Committee at the seventh session of the General Assembly resulted from a decision taken by the Economic and Social Council at its fourteenth session. In resolution 442 C (XIV), adopted on 13 June 1952, the Council decided to appoint for an experimental period of one year and in a personal capacity, a rapporteur on matters relating to freedom of information. The cost of implementing this decision was estimated by the Secretary-General at $8,800, including a sum of $2,500 to cover the payment of an honorarium to the rapporteur (A/C.5/498, paragraph 9). The Advisory Committee in its eighth report to the Assembly's seventh session (A/2245) recalled that only in exceptional cases had the General Assembly concurred in the payment of honoraria for work performed on behalf of the United Nations. It stated its preference, in the present case, for a provision on a per diem basis within a maximum of $2,000, thus recommending a reduction of $500 in the Secretary-General's estimate of $8,800.

The Fifth Committee considered the question at its 356th meeting on 7 November. There was general recognition that the important question was not the sum involved but whether any subsidiary organ of the General Assembly should have the right to appoint a rapporteur on the understanding that an honorarium would be paid. The Committee approved an oral proposal of the United States to restore the estimate to its original level of $8,800 in the specific instance before it. At the same time, however, it referred to the Advisory Committee a draft resolution proposed by the United States (A/C.5/L.187) which would instruct all organs of the United Nations to obtain prior General Assembly approval before taking decisions which would involve commitments to pay honoraria.

In its sixteenth report (A/2264) to the Assembly dealing with the United States proposal, the Advisory Committee submitted an alternative text which would suggest that the General Assembly should express its recognition of the fact that the appointment of a person as rapporteur of a United Nations body confers honour upon his country and distinction upon himself, and that no such appointment should carry remuneration. The Advisory Committee stated that while it associated itself with the purposes contemplated in the United States draft resolution, the alternative text proposed by the Advisory Committee was designed to lay emphasis on those purposes by affirming the principle that the office of rapporteur in the United Nations, being an office of honour, not profit, carried no emoluments.

This report was considered by the Fifth Committee at its 366th meeting on 21 November. The representative of the United States withdrew his draft resolution (A/C.5/L.187) and accepted the one put forward by the Advisory Committee. Most of the representatives taking part in the discussion endorsed the principle underlying the text proposed by the Advisory Committee but some, in particular the representatives of Brazil and the Netherlands, without dissenting from the view that no commitment could be entered into except with the prior consent of the General Assembly, considered that cases should be judged on their merits and that the text proposed was too rigid. The Fifth Committee agreed that remuneration should not be understood as meaning subsistence allowances for the payment of which there existed valid reasons. It approved the draft resolution proposed by the Advisory Committee by 46 votes to none, with 2 abstentions.

The draft resolution adopted by the Fifth Committee (A/2352) was adopted unanimously and without discussion by the General Assembly at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952, as resolution 677 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Recognizing that the appointment of a person as rapporteur of a United Nations body confers honour upon his country and distinction upon himself,

"1. Considers that no such appointment should carry remuneration;

"2. Requests all organs of the United Nations to bear in mind in future the views of the General Assembly as expressed in the present resolution."

8. Appointment of a Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds

The General Assembly on 7 December 1951 adopted resolution 571 B (VI)¹⁰⁸ establishing a Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds. In accordance with this resolution, the President of the sixth session of the Assembly appointed the following seven States as members of the Committee: Canada, France, Lebanon, Pakistan, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay. Subsequently, the President appointed Colombia to replace Uruguay, the latter having found it necessary to withdraw from the Committee.

The Negotiating Committee was requested to obtain pledges of voluntary contributions from governments for such programmes requiring funds from sources outside the regular budget of the United Nations as were designated by the General Assembly. On 12 January 1952 the General Assembly adopted resolution 519 A (VI),¹⁰⁹ requesting the Negotiating Committee to obtain pledges for the second financial period of the Expanded Programme of technical assistance; on 26 January by resolution 513 (VI)¹¹⁰ the Assembly made a similar request as regards the financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWAPRNE); and, on 5 February 1952, in resolution 507(VI),¹¹¹ the Assembly also authorized the Committee to obtain pledges for contributions to the programme of the United Nations

Korean Reconstruction Agency (UNKRA). Since it was not possible for the Negotiating Committee to complete its work in the course of the Assembly's sixth session, the Assembly, on 29 January 1952, adopted resolution 607(VI)¹¹² authorizing it to continue its activities for such period as might be required after the close of the session.

In a report (A/2210 and Corr. 1 and Add. 1) to the Assembly's seventh session, the Negotiating Committee stated that it had held 23 meetings up to 1 October 1952, and that altogether it was in touch with 83 governments by means of written communication, group consultations and individual meetings. It had been clearly understood by the Committee that all offers of contributions made or to be made by governments would be subject to the constitutional processes of the countries concerned.

With respect to the Expanded Programme of technical assistance, the Negotiating Committee reported that pledges for the calendar year 1952 from 65 Governments in an amount totalling the equivalent of $18,824,642 had been made as of 31 August 1952. This amount compared with total pledges equivalent to $20,070,000 for the first financial period from 55 governments for an eighteen-months period.

As regards UNRWAPRNE, the Negotiating Committee reported that, for the fiscal year 1 July 1951 to 1 July 1952, contributions totalling the equivalent of $66,305,143 in cash from 25 countries and $1,084,794 in kind from eleven countries were pledged to the Agency. In the previous year contributions totalling the equivalent of $38,004,943 in cash from twelve countries and $738,504 in kind from five countries were received. The estimated cost of the programme for the fiscal year 1952-53 was $118,000,000, of which $18,000,000 would be for relief and $100,000,000 for reintegration. The Negotiating Committee stated that it was engaged in consultations with governments for contributions for the current fiscal year and as of 9 October 1952 a total equivalent approximately to $78,000,000 had been pledged.

The Committee further reported that, due to the situation in Korea, it had not been possible for UNKRA to assume full operational responsibility in that country and it had therefore not been necessary for the Committee to consult with governments on additional pledges for this programme. However, as of 31 August 1952, pledges

¹⁰⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 138-39.

¹⁰⁹ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 400-01.

¹¹⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 315-16.

¹¹¹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 237.

¹¹² See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 139.

of contributions for the work of the Agency had already been made by the governments of 24 Members and of two non-members, totalling $205,590,306.

In a draft resolution which it submitted to the General Assembly, the Negotiating Committee recommended that its activities should be continued.

The report of the Negotiating Committee was considered by the General Assembly at its 389th plenary meeting on 25 October without prior reference to a Main Committee of the Assembly. The Assembly also had before it an amendment (A/L.110) to the draft resolution submitted by the Negotiating Committee which was presented jointly by Australia, Belgium, Colombia, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines and Yugoslavia. This amendment, in effect, would empower the Negotiating Committee to undertake the raising of funds for UNICEF—in addition to raising funds for the Expanded Programme of technical assistance, UNRWAPRNE and UNKRA. The amendment also provided for increasing the membership of the Negotiating Committee from seven to ten.

All of those who participated in the discussion, with the exception of the representative of Norway, supported the proposal before the Assembly. While explaining that his Government was in sympathy with the objectives mentioned in the report of the Negotiating Committee, the representative of Norway said that, on constitutional grounds, he could not vote for the proposal before the Assembly as the Norwegian Constitution did not permit a Norwegian delegation to pledge Norway to contribute anything which had not been approved by the Norwegian Parliament. However, the Norwegian Parliament, he stated, had unanimously voted a larger credit in support of the main ideas of the Negotiating Committee than any negotiating committee could have obtained.

At the end of the discussion, the draft resolution submitted by the Negotiating Committee, as amended, was adopted without objection as resolution 693 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Considering the necessity for establishing procedures for obtaining funds to finance special programmes not provided for in the regular budget of the United Nations,

"Noting the report of the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds appointed at the sixth session of the General Assembly,

"Noting that the Executive Board of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, at its session in October 1952, expressed the opinion:

"(a) That responsibility for raising funds for that organization, which in the past has been undertaken by the Executive Director of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, should in future be shared by governments and the Executive Director;

"(b) That governmental responsibility in this field might best be undertaken through the good offices of a negotiating committee for extra-budgetary funds appointed by the General Assembly,

"Concluding that a Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds should again be established to assist in obtaining funds for the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, the programme of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the programme of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, the programme of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund and such other special programmes not provided for in the regular budget of the United Nations as may be designated by the General Assembly,

"1. Requests the President of the General Assembly to appoint a Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds composed of not more than ten members for the purpose of consulting as soon as possible with Member and non-member States as to the amounts which governments may be willing to contribute on a voluntary basis towards the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, the programme of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the programme of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, the programme of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund and such other programmes as may be approved by the General Assembly for which funds are not available through the regular budget of the United Nations, and for which the Negotiating Committee is specifically requested by the General Assembly to obtain pledges of voluntary contributions from governments;

"2. Authorizes the Negotiating Committee to adopt the procedures best suited to the accomplishment of its task, bearing in mind:

"(a) The necessity of maintaining the identity and integrity of each programme;

"(b) The necessity of obtaining pledges and payments of contributions to each programme as soon as possible;

"(c) The need for securing the widest possible and most equitable participation in the programmes;

"(d) The desirability of ensuring that any contribution in kind is of a nature which meets the requirements of the contemplated programmes;

"(e) The degree of assistance which can continue to be rendered by specialized agencies, non-member States and other contributors;

"3. Decides that, as soon as the Negotiating Committee has ascertained the extent to which States are willing to make contributions, the Secretary-General shall, if the Committee so requests, arrange an appropriate meeting or meetings of Member and non-member States at which the pledges of Members and non-members may be made known;

"4. Requests the Negotiating Committee to report to the General Assembly at its eighth session, and requests the Secretary-General to place the report on the provisional agenda of that session."

G. HEADQUARTERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS

1. Report of the Secretary-General

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 589(VI)¹¹³ adopted on 2 February 1952, the Secretary-General, in October 1952, submitted to the seventh session of the Assembly a report (A/2209) on the progress of construction of the Headquarters.

The Secretary-General reported that early in January 1951 the Headquarters was officially established on the permanent site. Satisfactory progress was made in 1952, during which virtually all construction had been completed. While much remained to be added in the form of embellishment by landscaping, furnishings and artistic material of a decorative nature, the Secretary-General stated, the Headquarters was established and occupied and it was functioning according to the plan adopted by the General Assembly in 1947.

During 1952, the second year of occupancy of the Secretariat building, the two floors which had previously been held in an unfinished state for future expansion requirements were completed and occupied. Certain adjustments were required and were made in some of the mechanical features of the completed buildings, such as air conditioning, conveyors and elevators. Because of the unfinished state of the other units, the Secretariat building had served temporarily as the principal entrance to all the buildings; members of delegations and the public would now, however, be able to use the entrance facilities in the General Assembly building.

The Conference building, housing the three Councils and containing three large conference rooms, together with the cafeteria, dining-room and smaller committee rooms, was put into use early in 1952. All three Councils had met in their respective Chambers and several other commissions and committees had occupied the other rooms at different times.¹¹⁴

The General Assembly building, including the plenary auditorium, a fourth large conference room, smaller committee rooms and lounges, together with spaces for the public and the Press, had been completed.¹¹⁵ A number of artistic decorative materials, the Secretary-General said, would be added in and around the building in the future.

The garage had been completed and had been in use for some time. During 1952 much space which had served as storage areas for construction material had been released for regular garage operation.

The Library building continued to serve the Library and the Military Staff Committee. No construction work had been done on that building during 1952.

Landscaping plans had been completed and some of the planting and final arrangements were in progress. The largest part, of necessity, had to be held in abeyance until other construction was finished. Some of the improvements in streets and approaches undertaken by the City of New York had been delayed, and this had made it impossible to go forward with much of the landscape work. The property-line curbs, fence and final pavements could not be built until the First Avenue tunnel, running from 41st to 48th Streets, was completed.

A supplementary request in the amount of $3 million was submitted to the General Assembly at its sixth session, to augment the original authorization of $65 million. The General Assembly authorized the additional funds, as follows:

(a) $1 million was voted as a budgetary appropriation (resolution 592(VI) of 4 February 1952¹¹⁶);

(b) authorization to draw against the Working Capital Fund in an amount not to exceed $2 million as required to complete the permanent Headquarters (resolution 585 B (VI) of 4 February 1952¹¹⁷).

The Secretary-General stated that, as of 15 August 1952, the sum of $66,433,825 had been expended or obligated for the permanent Headquarters construction programme. Certain phases of the work had not been completed as yet and there remained a sum of $1,566,175 available for obligation between August 1952 and the spring of 1953. This was principally for completion of the landscaping, reconstruction of the East River bulkhead and the final architectural, engineering, administrative and other related costs in connexion with the last stages of construction.

The sum of $63,468,825.03 had been withdrawn by requisition against the loan of $65 million made ¹¹³ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 131.

¹¹⁴ The first meetings of the Councils in the Conference building were as follows: Trusteeship Council—27 February; Security Council—4 April; and Economic and Social Council—20 May.

¹¹⁵ The inaugural meeting of the General Assembly at the new assembly building was on 14 October.

¹¹⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, p.149.

¹¹⁷ See Y.U.N., 1951, p.154.

available by the United States.¹¹⁸ The balance of $1,531,174.97, the Secretary-General declared, would be withdrawn against the loan as required during the fourth quarter of 1952.

A withdrawal in the amount of $500,000 had been made against the 1952 budget appropriation and the remainder would be expended during the latter part of 1952. As obligations were translated into expenditures, withdrawals would be made against the Working Capital Fund authorization. No further requests to the General Assembly for funds were contemplated.

The procedure of clearing with the Board of Art Advisers all matters relating to the selection of art objects, decorative materials and gift offers was still in effect. Important gifts of interior decorative objects and furnishings had been received from a number of governments, while other proposals were under discussion. The complete list of these contributions, the Secretary-General stated, would be made available at a later date.

The authorities of the City of New York, reported the Secretary-General, had carried forward their improvements around the site in accordance with the over-all plan which had been agreed to by the City and the United Nations in 1947. Reconstruction of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Drive, which was a co-operative venture by the City and the United Nations, was completed early in 1952 and the new approaches had been regularly used by vehicular traffic for many months. The alterations in general had proceeded well but progress on the First Avenue traffic underpass structure, the largest single undertaking by the City, had suffered because of slow deliveries of structural steel.¹¹⁹ The roadways and sidewalk pavings on the various streets involved in the City programme would not all be finished until the spring of 1953.

2. Consideration by the General Assembly at its Seventh Session

The Secretary-General submitted (A/2209) for the Assembly's consideration a draft resolution:

(1) taking note of his report; and (2) requesting him to submit a final report to the General Assembly at its eighth session.

The question of the permanent Headquarters was considered by the Fifth Committee at its 365th meeting on 17 November 1952. The representatives of Australia, Egypt, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States extended their congratulations on the successful outcome of the efforts that had been made to complete the work on the Headquarters building. Special tribute was paid to all concerned for the efficient manner in which the technical installations and services had operated from the commencement of the session of the Assembly. The representatives stressed, in particular, the very great debt which the United Nations owed to the Secretary-General himself for the interest he had shown and the contribution he had personally made to the success of the undertaking. Appreciative reference was made also to the major contributions which had been made by the staff concerned, the Headquarters Advisory Committee and the Director of Planning, as well as the generous assistance provided by the City of New York.

At the conclusion of the discussion, the Fifth Committee approved, by 43 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, the draft resolution presented by the Secretary-General.

The General Assembly at its 398th plenary meeting on 25 November 1952 adopted without discussion the draft resolution proposed by the Fifth Committee (A/2267) by 48 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, as resolution 663 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly

"1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the Headquarters of the United Nations;

"2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a final report to the General Assembly at its eighth session on the construction of the Headquarters."

¹¹⁸ According to the terms of the loan, it was to be repaid in annual instalments ranging from $1,000,000 to $2,500,000, the final payment being due in 1982. The first instalment of $1,000,000 was paid on 28 June 1951 and the second instalment, also of $1,000,000, on 30 June 1952.

¹¹⁹ The First Avenue vehicular tunnel was officially opened on 20 April 1953.

H. UNITED NATIONS POSTAL ADMINISTRATION

The General Assembly on 16 November 1950 adopted resolution 454(V)¹²⁰ requesting the Secretary-General to conclude an agreement with the United States concerning a United Nations postal administration and to proceed with the necessary arrangements for establishing the postal administration as soon as possible. The Assembly further requested the Secretary-General to submit, not later than the beginning of its seventh session, a comprehensive report on the establishment of the postal administration and on its subsequent operations.

The Secretary-General accordingly reported (A/2191 and Add.1) to the Assembly's seventh session. He recalled the establishment of the United Nations Postal Administration as of 1 January 1951, described, inter alia, the work preliminary to the first issue of United Nations postage stamps and referred to the operations of the United Nations post office station.¹²¹

As regards the relations between the United Nations Postal Administration and the Universal Postal Union, the Secretary-General reported that prior to their issuance, United Nations postage stamps had already been given official recognition by the Universal Postal Union through a decision taken by its Executive and Liaison Committee at Locarno in 1948.

The position of the United Nations Postal Administration vis-a-vis the Universal Postal Union was considered by the latter at its XIIIth Congress held at Brussels in 1952. The Congress on 8 July 1952 adopted a resolution which recognized, from the postal point of view, the establishment of the Postal Administration, and which noted that the Secretary-General of the United Nations was prepared to make a declaration expressing the obligation of the United Nations to observe the provisions of the Postal Convention and Regulations applicable to the postal operations of the United Nations. The resolution also expressed agreement with the suggestion of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination that the United Nations should act on behalf of the specialized agencies in any further postal activities, and recommended that any further postal activity contemplated by the United Nations or any of the specialized agencies should be subject to consultation with the Universal Postal Union and subsequent approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

The Secretary-General further reported that certain specialized agencies had been considering the possibility of participating in the United Nations Postal Administration or making their own postal arrangements with the governments concerned. This matter was submitted to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination which, in its eleventh report to the Economic and Social Council (E/2203), expressed the view that there would be great advantage in making common or joint arrangements in regard to postal matters and facilities for the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and initiated the preparatory work necessary for making proposals to enable the Postal Administration to act on behalf of the specialized agencies.

The Economic and Social Council on 28 July 1952 adopted a resolution (451 B (XIV))¹²² on the matter. It took note of the recommendations of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and of the Universal Postal Union and requested the specialized agencies to submit any proposals concerning postal operations to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for consultation with the Universal Postal Union through its competent organs, and for subsequent consideration by the General Assembly.

The Secretary-General also reported that, following consultations with the United States authorities concerned, it had been agreed that facilities should be provided to the visiting public at United Nations Headquarters for the purchase of United Nations stamps either for mailing or for philatelic purposes. This would require, however, a revision of the Postal Agreement to provide for the deletion of the restrictive provision under which philatelic sales by the United Nations Postal Administration might be made only "in response to orders received by mail". The Secretary-General accordingly submitted a draft resolution (A/2191/Add.1) by which the Assembly would authorize him to conclude the instrument necessary to make this revision.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report (A/2237) to the Assembly on the question observed that the Postal Agreement since it came into force on 24 October 1951 had proved generally satisfactory and that the proposed amendment, with which the United States Government had concurred, was the only revision which the Secretary-General had found it necessary to suggest. It further noted that philatelic sales to visitors to United Nations Headquarters, amounting to not less than $20,000 a year and probably exceeding that figure, might be expected to result from the additional facilities which the proposed amendment would make possible. Accordingly it recommended that the Assembly approve the Secretary-General's draft resolution.

¹²⁰ See Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 172-73.

¹²¹ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 131-32.

¹²² See also p. 544.

The draft resolution proposed by the Secretary-General was adopted unanimously by the Fifth Committee at its 348th meeting on 27 October and, on the Committee's recommendation (A/2249), by the General Assembly, also unanimously and without discussion, at its 391st plenary meeting on 6 November (resolution 657(VII)). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Noting the provisions of the Postal Agreement between the United Nations and the United States of America, concluded by the Secretary-General on behalf of the United Nations on 28 March 1951 in conformity with a request contained in General Assembly resolution 454(V) of 16 November 1950,

"Having considered a report by the Secretary-General on certain difficulties arising in the application of this Agreement with respect to the purchase of United Nations postage stamps by the visiting public at United Nations Headquarters,

"Noting the arrangements proposed by the Secretary-General as to the future operation of postal service at United Nations Headquarters,

"Noting in particular that an amendment to the Postal Agreement consisting of the deletion of the words "in response to orders received by mail" at the end of the first sentence of paragraph (ii) of section 3 of the Agreement will be required to bring these arrangements into effect,

"Authorizes the Secretary-General to conclude the instrument necessary to revise the Postal Agreement with the United States of America as provided in the preceding paragraph."

The revised Agreement came into effect on 17 November 1952. On the same day, a United Nations Postal Administration Sales Counter was opened in the public lobby of the General Assembly building at United Nations Headquarters in New York where United Nations stamps are now sold for both philatelic and postal purposes. Arrangements were also made during 1952 for the sale of United Nations stamps for philatelic purposes at the European Office of the United Nations at Geneva and were being made for their sale in London.¹²³ All the stamps issued by the United Nations Postal Administration are available at face value, or at equivalent prices established in Swiss francs and sterling.

Only United Nations postage stamps are sold at United Nations Headquarters in New York, and only United Nations stamps may be used on mail dispatched from Headquarters.

Revenue derived from stamps used for postage on United Nations official or private mail, or from mail deposited by visitors to the United Nations Headquarters is retained by the United States Post Office Department. The United Nations derives revenue from the sale of stamps for philatelic purposes only. The total gross revenue of the United Nations Postal Administration for 1952 was $492,547.95.

During 1952 an international competition for designs for United Nations postage stamps was held. Member Governments had been approached in 1951 with a request to furnish lists of artists and designers who would be competent and willing to participate in such a competition. On the basis of these lists, invitations to take part in the competition were sent out by the United Nations Postal Administration. Sixty-seven artists from 32 Member States submitted 194 designs, which were judged by an international jury appointed by the Secretary-General. The winners of the competition were announced on 25 November 1952. Artists and designers from eleven countries received prizes in three different groups of separate designs.

During 1952, two new commemorative stamps were issued and two items of postal stationery. The two last-mentioned were a 2¢ postcard first issued on 18 July and a 10¢ air letter sheet first issued on 29 August.

The first commemorative stamp issued on United Nations Day, 24 October, in a 5¢ denomination, shows the Veterans' War Memorial Building in San Francisco, where the United Nations Charter was signed in 1945, and carries the inscriptions "San Francisco, 1945" and "Birthplace of the Charter".

The second new stamp to commemorate the adoption in 1948 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, was issued on Human Rights Day, 10 December in 3¢ and 5¢ denominations. The design shows a flame surrounded by a circle with the words "Human Rights" in the five official languages superimposed on the two hemispheres, and the dates "10 December 1948-1952".

First day covers for these issues were serviced as follows:

2¢ postcard	116,023
10¢ air letter sheet	57,274
5¢ United Nations Day	160,117
3¢ and 5¢ Human Rights Day	299,309

The stamp programme for 1953 calls for the following issues:

24 April—Refugee stamp, to commemorate the work of the United Nations on behalf of refugees, in 3¢ and 5¢ denominations.

¹²³ These arrangements were completed on 26 May 1953, when a branch office of the United Nations Postal Administration was established at Russell Square House, Russell Square, London, W.C.1., England, for philatelic sale to countries in the sterling area.

12 June—UPU stamp, to honour the Universal Postal Union, in 3¢ and 5¢ denominations.

15 September—3¢ embossed envelope, to be issued in two sizes, standard and legal.

24 October—United Nations Day stamp, in 3¢ and denominations.

10 December—Human Rights Day stamp, in and 5¢ denominations.

ANNEX I. REPRESENTATIVES SERVING ON PRINCIPAL AND SUBSIDIARY ORGANS DURING 1952

A. THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

1. Delegations to the First Part of the Seventh Session

AFGHANISTAN:

Representatives: Mohammed Kabir Ludin, Mir Najmouddin Ansari, Abdullah Yaftali, Rahman Razhwak; Alternates: Ataulah Naser-Zia, Abdul Hakim Tabibi, Abdul Aziz, Mohammed Ismail Osman, Mohammed Younos Rafik.

ARGENTINA:

Representatives: Rodolfo Muñoz, César A. Bunge, General Juan Carlos Sanguinetti, Enrique Ferrer Vieyra, Andres Lescure; Alternates: Enrique Abal, Cecilio J. Morales, Leonardo Vartalitis.

AUSTRALIA:

Representatives: R. G. Casey,¹²⁴ Sir Percy Spender, W. D. Forsyth, Patrick Shaw, K. C. O. Shann; Alternates: C. Q. F. Lee, A. H. Loomes, A. J. Eastman, D. W. McNicol, G. A. Jockel.

BELGIUM:

Representatives: Paul van Zeeland, Fernand van Langenhove, Leo Mundeleer, Maurice Orban, Henri Fayat; Alternates: Pierre Ryckmans, William van Remoortel, Albert Parisi, Miss Jeanne Driessen.

BOLIVIA:

Representatives: Hernan Siles Zuazo, Eduardo Arze Quiroga, Carlos Salamanca Figueroa, Manuel Frontaura Argandoña, Gaston Araoz; Alternates: Mrs. Carmen Bustamante de Lozada, German Rovira, Alberto Canedo, Raul Canedo Reyes, Hugo de la Rocha.

BRAZIL:

Representatives: Joao Neves da Fontoura, Joao Carlos Muniz, Gilberto Amado, Georgino Avelino, Aloysio de Castro; Alternates: Henrique de Souza Gomes, Aguinaldo Boulitreau Fragoso, Hernes Lima, Roberto Marinho, Ottolmy Strauch.

BURMA:

Representatives: James Barrington, Sao Wunna, Tun Shein, Sin Koi, Aung Pe; Alternates: Tint Swe, Bo Khin Maung, Ba Shwe, Sao Pye, Wuna Kyaw Htin U Thant.

BYELORUSSIAN SSR:

Representatives: K. V. Kiselyov, Pavel E. Astapenko, Mrs. Faina A. Novikova, M. T. Lynkov, G. A. Povetyev.

CANADA:

Representatives: Lester B. Pearson, Paul Martin, G. B. Isnor, A. Y. McLean, David M. Johnson; Alternates: C. P. Hébert, K. W. Taylor, J. Léger, Edgar McInnis, Mrs. Louis Berger.

CHILE:

Representatives: Hernan Santa Cruz, Alfredo Lea Plaza, Mrs. Ana Figueroa, Alberto Sepúlveda Contreras, Fausto A. Soto; Alternates: Horacio Suarez, Jorge Burr.

CHINA:

Representatives: George K. C. Yeh, Tingfu F. Tsiang, Shih-Shun Liu, Chieh Liu, C. L. Hsia; Alternates: Ti-Tsun Li, Shuhsi Hsu, Kan Lee, Pao-Yu Yin, Chih-Mai Chen.

COLOMBIA:

Representatives: Evaristo Sourdis, Cipriano Restrepo, Carlos Echeverri-Cortés, Francisco Urrutia, Arsencio Londoño-Palacios; Alternates: Jose Gutierrez Gomez¹²⁵, Eduardo Carrizosa, Alfonso Patiño-Roselli, Alfredo Cock.

COSTA RICA:

Representatives: Alfredo Volio Mata, Cristián de Tattenbach, Fernando Hine, Gonzalo Facio, Fabio Fournier; Alternates: Ruben Esquivel, Mario Golcher.

CUBA:

Representatives: Miguel Angel Campa, Emilio Nunez-Portuondo, Joaquín Meyer, Carlos Blanco, Eugenio Castillo; Alternates: Alberto de la Campa, Jose Manuel Cortina, Guy Perez Cisneros, Jose Miguel Ribas, Nicolás Rivero.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA:

Representatives: Gertruda Sekaninová-Cakrtová, Frantisek Vavricka, Jiri Nosek, Frantisek Komzala, Josef Ullrich; Alternates: Karel Petrzelka, Jan Cech, Jaroslav Pscolka, Zdenek Trhlik.

DENMARK:

Representatives: Ole Bjorn Kraft,¹²⁶ Kristen Amby, Henry L. W. Jensen, Alsing Andersen, Hermod Lannung; Alternates: William Borberg, Hjalmar Collin, Mrs. Bodil Begtrup, Finn T. B. Friis, J. V. Rechendorf.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC:

Representatives: Joaquin E. Salazar, Tulio Franco y Franco, Porfirio Herrera Baez, Miss Minerva Bernardino, Enrique de Marchena; Alternate: Hans Cohn Lyon.

ECUADOR:

Representatives: Jose Vicente Trujillo, Alfonso Tous, Jose Maria Ponce-Yépez, Clemente Durán Ballen, Abel Romeo Castillo; Alternates: Gonzalo Apunte, Eduardo Larrea.

¹²⁴ In the absence of Mr Casey, C. Q. F. Lee and K. G. Brennan were designated to serve respectively as representative and alternate.

¹²⁵ Replaced Mr Urrutia on 8 November.

¹²⁶ In the absence of Mr Kraft, Mr Borberg was designated to act as Chairman of the Delegation.

EGYPT:

Representatives: Ahmed Mohamed Farrag, Ahmed Galal Eldine Abdelrazek, Abdel Monem Mostafa, Mahmoud Azmi; Alternates: Fouad El-Pharaony, Aly Kamel Fahmy, Abdel Monem El-Tanamly, Saleh Abdelrahman Mahmoud.

EL SALVADOR:

Representatives: Miguel Rafael Urquía, Carlos A. Siri, Lt.-Colonel Manuel de J. Cordova, Carlos Serrano-Garcia, Rafael Eguizabal.

ETHIOPIA:

Representatives: Ato Abte-Wold Aklilou, Ato Gabre Heywot Zaude, Blatta Ogbazgy Dawit, Ato Haddis Alemayehou, Ato Imru Zelleke; Alternates: Ato Dessalegn Amde Mikael, Lij Mikael Imru, John Spencer.

FRANCE:

Representatives: Robert Schuman,¹²⁷ Maurice Schumann, Jules Moch, Georges Pernot, Maurice Bourges-Maunoury, Henri Hoppenot; Alternates: Leon Jouhaux, Pierre Schneider, Paul Devinat, Guérin de Beaumont, Jean Maroger.

GREECE:

Representatives: Athanase Politis, Alexis Kyrou, Jean Spiropoulos, Jean Kindynis, Dimitrios Lambros; Alternates: Christian X. Palamas, Constantina Triantaphyllakos, Agis Kapsambélis, Costa Caranicas.

GUATEMALA:

Representatives: Guillermo Toriello-Garrido, Eduardo Castillo Arriola, Carlos Gonzalez Orellana, Alfonso Bauer Paiz, Jose Luis Mendoza; Alternates: Marco Antonio Villamar-Contreras, Victor Manuel Caceres, Antonio Aris de Castilla.

HAITI:

Representatives: Luc Fouché, Ducasse Jumelle, Max H. Dorsinville, Ernest Chauvet, Pierre L. Hudicourt; Alternates: Salnave Zamor, Joseph Loubeau.

HONDURAS:

Representatives: Tiburcio Carias, Jr., Jorge Fidel Duron, Humberto Lopez Villamil.

ICELAND:

Representatives: Thor Thors, Kristjan Albertson.

INDIA:

Representatives: Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, V. K. Krishna Menon, B. Shiva Rao, Nawab Ali Yawar Jung, G. S. Pathak; Alternates: Rajeshwar Dayal, Brag Kumar Nehru, Arthur Samuel Lall, A. D. Mani, Apa B. Pant.

INDONESIA:

Representatives: Mukarto Notowidigdo,¹²⁸ L. N. Palar, Darmasetiawan Notohatmodjo, Ali Sastroamidjojo, Sutan Mohamad Rasjid; Alternates: Abu Hanifah, Sudjarwo Tjondronegoro, Achmad Natanegara, S. H. Tajibnapsi, Mrs. A. Marzuki.

IRAN:

Representatives: Nasrollah Entezam, Ali Gholi Ardalan, Ghassem Ghassemzadeh, Djalal Abdoh, Abbas Ali Khalatbary; Alternates: Mohammad Ali Massoud-Ansari, Fazlollah Nouredin Kia, Fereydoun Adamiyat, Ezzedin Kazemi.

IRAQ:

Representatives: Mohamed Fadi Al-Jamali, Moussa Shabandar, Abdullah Bakr, Abdul Majid Abbas, Awni Khalidy; Alternates: Abdulrahman Bazzaz, Hashim Hilli, Adnan Pachachi, Nathir Umari, Mrs Badia Afnan.

ISRAEL:

Representatives: Moshe Sharett, Abba Eban, Arthur Lourie, Jacob Robinson, Shmuel Eliashiv, Shlomo Ginosar; Alternates: Gideon Rafael, Moshe Tov, Emile Najjar, Mrs. Zena Harman, Arthur Liveran.

LEBANON:

Representatives: Fouad Ammoun, Charles Malik, Jamil Mikaoui, Karim Azkoul; Alternates: Halim Shebea, Abdelrahman Sohl.

LIBERIA:

Representatives: Gabriel L. Dennis, Clarence L. Simpson, Henry F. Cooper, Richard S. Bright, E. C. B. Jones; Alternates: Lawrence E. Mitchell, Joseph J. Mends-Cole.

LUXEMBOURG:

Representatives: Joseph Bech, Hugues Le Gallais, Jean-Pierre Kremer, Pierre Pescatore, Camille Dumont; Alternate: Paul Reuter.

MEXICO:

Representatives: Luis Padilla Nervo, Luis Quintanilla, Jose Gorostiza, Luciano Joubanc Rivas, Carlos Peon del Valle; Alternates: Antonio Gomez Robledo, Francisco Cos, Mario Ramon Beteta.

NETHERLANDS:

Representatives: J. M. A. H. Luns,¹²⁹ D. J. von Baluseck, W. J. A. Kernkamp,¹²⁹ L. J. C. Beaufort, C. L. Patijn; Alternates: G. J. N. M. Ruygers, Marga A. M. Klompé, H. Riemens, B. V. A. Röling, Maria Z. N. Witteveen.

NEW ZEALAND:

Representatives: T. Clifton Webb, Leslie Knox Munro, A. D. McIntosh, G. R. Laking; Alternates: Thomas P. Davin, A. R. Perry, T. C. Larkin, J. V. Scott, R. Q. Quentin-Baxter.

NICARAGUA:

Representatives: Guillermo Sevilla Sacasa, Henri de Bayle, Colonel Julio C. Morales.

NORWAY:

Representatives: Halvard M. Lange, Oscar Gundersen, Finn Moe, C. J. Hambro, Hans Engen; Alternates: Chr. S. Oftedal, Erling Wikborg, Mrs. Aase Lionaes, Konrad Nordahl, Arne Ordning.

¹²⁷ During the presence of Mr Schuman, Mr Bourges-Maunoury and Mr Beaumont were designated to act, respectively, as alternate and adviser.

¹²⁸ In the absence of Mr Notowidigdo, Mr Palar and Mr Notohatmodjo were designated to act, respectively, as Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Delegation, while Mr Hanifah and Mr Tjondronegoro were designated to act as representatives and Laila Rusad and Ibnu Suwongso Haminsar as alternates.

¹²⁹ During the absence of Mr Luns or Mr Kernkamp, G. J. N. M. Ruygers, Marga A. M. Klompé, W. H. J. van Asch van Wijck and A. I. Spits were designated to act as representatives.

PAKISTAN:

Representatives: Mohammad Zafrulla Khan, Ahmed S. Bokhari, Amjad Ali, Begum Ra'ana Liaquat Ali Khan, Maulvi Ebrahim Khan; Alternates: Hakim Mohammad Ahson, Fazal Elahi, Yusuf Khattak, Haran Chandra Barman, S. Itaat Hussain.

PANAMA:

Representatives: Jose Ramon Guizado, Ignacio Molino, Eusebio A. Morales, Jephtha B. Duncan, Ernesto de la Ossa; Alternate: Roberto de la Guardia.

PARAGUAY:

Representatives: Bernardo Ocampos, Osvaldo Chaves, Luis Oscar Boettner, Manuel J. Diaz de Vivar, Fernando Caballero Marsal.

PERU:

Representatives: Victor A. Belaunde, Juan Bautista de Laval, Fernando Berckemeyer, Carlos Holguin; Alternates: Manuel Felix Maurtua, Carlos Salazar, Jose A. Encinas.

PHILIPPINES:

Representatives: Carlos P. Rómulo, Jose C. Zulueta, Vicente Madrigal, Diosdado Macapagal, Jose J. Roy, Marcos M. Caló,¹³⁰ Alternates: Salvador P. Lopez, Jose D. Ingles, Mauro Mendez, Narciso G. Reyes, Adriano R. Garcia.¹³⁰

POLAND:

Representatives: Stanislaw Skrzesezewski, Marian Naszkowski, Jozef Winiewicz, Jerzy Michalowski, Henryk Birecki; Alternates: Juliusz Katz-Suchy, Alexander Krajewski, Manfred Lachs, Stanislaw Gajewski, Mrs. Irena Domanska.

SAUDI ARABIA:

Representatives: Prince Faisal Al-Saud, Yousef Yasin, Shaikh Asad Al-Faqih, Shaikh Ebrahim Sulaiman, Shaikh Ali A. Alireza; Alternates: Shaikh Ahmed Abdul Jabbar, Aouney W. Dejany, Jamil M. Baroody, Omar Haliq, Omar Abou Khadra.

SWEDEN:

Representatives: Osten Undén,¹³¹ Rickard Sandier, Mrs. Ulla Lindstrom, Knut Eworlöf,¹³² Ake Holmback;¹³² Alternates: Rolf Sohlman, Oscar Thorsing, Rolf Edberg, Bernhard Nasgård,¹³² Mrs. Adga Rossel.

SYRIA:

Representatives: Zafer Rifai, Farid Zeineddine, Ahmed Shukairi, Rafik Asha; Alternates: Salah el Dine Tarazi, Toufic Huneidi, Adib Daoudi, Najmuddine Rifai.

THAILAND:

Representatives: Prince Wan Waithayakon, Khemjati Punyaratabhan, Pote Sarasin, Thanat Khoman; Alternates: Luang Chammong Dithakar, Chitti Sucharitakul, Banthern Amatayakul, Mom Chao Jotisi Devakul, Prasong Pibulsonggram.

TURKEY:

Representatives: Fuat Köprülü, Selim Sarper, Kemal Süleyman Vaner, Melih Esenbel; Alternates: Adil Derinsu, Necmettin Tuncel, Sadi Eldem, Semih Baran.

UKRAINIAN SSR:

Representatives: A. M. Baranovsky, L. F. Palamar-chuck, M. P. Bazhan, Mrs. E. N. Khokhol, P. V. Kriven; Alternates: I. Z. Shtokalo, S. P. Demchenko.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA:

Representatives: G. P. Jooste, A. A. Roberts, J. R. Jordaan, L. Wessels, R. H. Coaton; Alternates: H. L. T. Taswell, M. I. Botha, B. G. Fourie, J. S. F. Botha.

USSR:

Representatives: Andrei Y. Vyshinsky, Andrei A. Gromyko, Valerian Alexandrovich Zorin, G. N. Zarubin, A. A. Sobolev; Alternates: A. M. Kutchkarov, O. O. Yurans, Mrs S. M. Speranskaya, G. P. Arkadyev, P. D. Morozov.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representatives: Anthony Eden, Selwyn Lloyd,¹³³ H. L. d'a. Hopkinson,¹³⁴ Sir Gladwyn Jebb, Mrs E. Emmet; Alternates: Lord Llewellyn, Viscount Caldecote, Sir Clifford Norton, G. G. Fitzmaurice, P. M. Crowthwaite.

UNITED STATES:

Representatives: Dean Acheson, Warren R. Austin, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Theodore F. Green, Alexander Wiley, Ernest A. Gross,¹³⁵ Alternates: Philip C. Jessup, Benjamin V. Cohen, Charles A. Sprague, Edith S. Sampson, Isador Lubin.¹³⁵

URUGUAY:

Representatives: César Charlone, Enrique Rodríguez Fabregat, Angel Maria Cusano, Alfredo Lepro, Arturo Lezama; Alternates: Gilberto Pratt de Maria, Aureliano Aguirre.

VENEZUELA:

Representatives: César Gonzalez, Santiago Perez, Victor Manuel Perez Perozo, Francisco Manuel Mármol, Lorenzo A. Mendoza; Alternates: Victor Manuel Rivas, Francisco Alfonzo Ravard, Adolfo Nass.

YEMEN:

Representatives: Prince Saif Al Islam Abdullah, Sayed Hasan Ibrahim, Sayed Abdurrahman Abulsamad Abou-Taleb, Adnan Tarcici, Alkadi Mohammed Azzohieri; Alternates: Sayed Mohammad Al-Shami Talat Alghoussein.

YUGOSLAVIA:

Representatives: Veljko Vlahovic, Vladimir Popovic Leo Mates, Josip Djerda, Vladimir Dedijer; Alternates: Milan Bartos, Marijan Barisic.

¹³⁰ During the presence of the first five representatives, Mr Caló and Mr Garcia were designated to act respectively as alternate representative and adviser.

¹³¹ In the absence of Mr Unden, Dag Hammarskjöld was designated to act as Chairman of the Delegation.

¹³² Were replaced when absent by Erik Hagberg, Manne Stahl and Torstion Bengtsson.

¹³³ Was designated to act as Chairman of the Delegation during the absence of Mr Eden.

¹³⁴ On the departure of Mr Hopkinson, Lord Llewellyn and Sir Alan Burns were designated to act respectively as representative and alternate.

¹³⁵ During the presence of Mr. Acheson, Mr Gross and Mr Lubin were designated to serve, respectively, as alternate and adviser.

NON-MEMBER STATES MAINTAINING OBSERVERS AT HEADQUARTERS

AUSTRIA:

Representative: Franz Match.

FINLAND:

Representative: Richard R. Seppälä.

GERMANY, FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF:

Representative: Hans E. Riesser.

ITALY:

Representative: Gastone Guidotti.

JAPAN:

Representative: Ryuji Takeuchi

KOREA:

Representatives: Y. T. Pyun, Y. C. Yang, B. C. Limb, P. W. Han, D. Y. Namkoong.

SWITZERLAND:

Representatives: Jean Frederic Wagnière, Claude van Muyden.

VIETNAM:

Representative: Buu Kinh.

REPRESENTATIVES OF THE INTERNA- TIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Sir Arnold Duncan McNair (President), Jean Garnier-Coignet.

REPRESENTATIVES OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION (ILO):

F. Cisternas (Chairman of the Governing Body of the International Labour Office), Leon Jouhaux, Sir
Guildhaume Myrddin-Evans, G. P. Delaney, C. Shaw, H. Taylor, David A. Morse (Director-General of the International Labour Office); Alternate to the Director-General: C. W. Jenks.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO):

Frank L. McDougall (Special Assistant to the Director-General); Alternate: J. Orr.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO):

John Taylor (Deputy Director-General), Lionel Elvin,
René Maheu, Solomon V. Arnaldo, Arthur F. Gagliotti, Gerald Carnes, C. M. Berkeley, Pio-Carlo Terenzio.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZA- TION (ICAO):

Edward Warner (President of the Council), E. C. R.
Ljungberg (Secretary-General), E. R. Marlin, J. Hutchison.

INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT (BANK):

Richard H. Demuth, Enrique López Herrarte.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND (FUND):

Ivar Rooth (Managing Director), Gordon Williams.

UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION (UPU):

John M. Redding (Assistant Postmaster-General of the United States), John J. Gillen, Greever P. Allan.

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO):

R. L. Coigny (Chief, Liaison Office with the United Nations), Mabel S. Ingalls, Mrs. S. Meagher.

INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION (ITU):

Helen Kelly.

WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION (WMO):

F. W. Reichelderfer (President); Alternates: P. H.
Kutschenreuter, H. N. Burke.

2. Representatives Serving on Subsidiary Bodies During 1952

a. PEACE OBSERVATION COMMISSION

CHINA:

Representative: Tingfu F. Tsiang; Alternates: Shuhsi
Hsu, Chiping H. C. Kiang.

COLOMBIA:

Representative: Carlos Echeverri-Cortés.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA:

Representative: Jiri Nosek; Alternates: Jaroslav Rybar, Milan Glozar.

FRANCE:

Representative: Henri Hoppenot; Alternate: Francis Lacoste.

INDIA:

Representative: Rajeshwar Dayal; Alternate: B. Rajan.

IRAQ:

Representative: Abdul Majid Abbass.

ISRAEL:

Representative: Abba Eban; Deputy: Arthur Lourie.

NEW ZEALAND:

Representative: Leslie Knox Munro.

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Ahmed S. Bokhari; Alternate: Viqar
Ahmed Hamdani.

SWEDEN:

Representative: Oscar Thorsing.

USSR:

Representative: Valeryan Aleksandrovich Zorin.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Sir Gladwyn Jebb.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Ernest A. Gross.

URUGUAY:

Representative: Enrique Rodríguez-Fabregat.

BALKAN SUB-COMMISSION

COLOMBIA:

Representative: Eduardo Carrizosa.

FRANCE:

Representative: Pierre Ordonneau.

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Viqar Ahmed Hamdani.

SWEDEN:

Representative: Oscar Thorsing.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Thomas Cory.

b. COLLECTIVE MEASURES COMMITTEE

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: W. D. Forsyth; Alternate: A. H. Loomes.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Joseph Nisot; Alternate: Georges Cassiers.

BRAZIL:

Representative: Joao Carlos Muniz (Chairman);
Alternate: Alvaro Teixeira Soares.

BURMA:

Representative: James Barrington; Alternate: Ba Maung.

CANADA:

Representative: David M. Johnson; Alternate: James George.

EGYPT:

Representative: Mahmoud Fawzi;¹³⁶ Alternate: Fouad El-Pharaony.

FRANCE:

Representative: Henri Hoppenot; Alternate: Francis Lacoste.

MEXICO:

Representative: Luis Padilla Nervo; Alternate: Jose Gorostiza.

PHILIPPINES:

Representative: Salvador P. Lopez.

TURKEY:

Representative: Selim Sarper; Alternate: Adil Derinsu.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Sir Gladwyn Jebb; Alternate: J. E. Coulson.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Warren R. Austin; Deputy: Harding F. Bancroft.

VENEZUELA:

Representative: César Gonzalez; Alternate: Victor Manuel Rivas.

YUGOSLAVIA:

Representative: Djuro Nincic.

C. UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE CONDITIONS FOR FREE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY

BRAZIL:

Representative: Antonio Mendes Vianna,

ICELAND:

Representative: Thor Thors; Alternate: Kristjan Albertson.

NETHERLANDS:

Representative: Max Kohnstamm.

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Ali Haider Abbasi.¹³⁷

POLAND¹³⁸d. UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR THE UNIFICATION AND REHABILITATION OF KOREA

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: James Plimsoll (to 13 December), Thomas K. Critchley (from 14 December, previously alternate); Alternates: H. W. Bullock, O. N. H. M. Smith, Lionel E. Phillips.

CHILE¹³⁹

NETHERLANDS:

Representative: Baron G. E. Van Ittersund; Alternates: E. J. Lewe Van Aduard, H. Hagenaar (Acting Representative to 29 April), David Ketel (Acting Representative from 17 August).

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Mian Zia-Ud-Din; Alternate: Abdul Ghayur Kakar.

PHILIPPINES:

Representative: Jose P. Melencio; Alternate: Maximino G. Bueno.

THAILAND:

Representative: Prince Pridi Debyanbongs Devakula; Alternate: Chitti Sucharitakul.

TURKEY:

Representative: Kamil Idil.

Representatives Serving on Advisory Committee

CANADA (Chairman):

David Johnson.

INDIA:

Rajeshwar Dayal.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Gerald Meade.

UNITED STATES:

Isador Lubin; Deputy: Graham Hall.

URUGUAY:

Darwin Bracco.

f. UNITED NATIONS CONCILIATION COMMISSION FOR PALESTINE

FRANCE:

Representatives: Leon Marchal (to 21 April) Claude Bréart de Boisanger (21 April to 14 May) Pierre Ordonneau (from 14 May).

¹³⁶ Replaced by Ahmed Galal Eddine Abdel-Razek in November.

¹³⁷ During the absence of Mr Abbasi between 16 and 23 March 1952, Pakistan was represented by Omar Hayat Malik.

¹³⁸ Officially declined to participate in the Commission.

¹³⁹ Had no representative in the area during 1952; on 20 May 1953 Gonzalo Montt was appointed to replace Manuel Trucco.

TURKEY:

Representatives: Turgut Menemencioglu (to 5 September), Adil Derinsu (5 to 23 September), Semih Baran (from 23 September).

UNITED STATES:

Representatives: Ely E. Palmer (to 22 July), John C. Ross (from 12 September); Alternate: James W. Barco.

g. UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST

Representatives Serving on Advisory Commission

FRANCE:

Henry Ingrand

TURKEY:

Refet Bele

UNITED KINGDOM:

Sir Henry Knight

UNITED STATES: Edwin A. Locke, Jr.

b. STANDING COMMITTEE ON REPATRIATION OF GREEK CHILDREN¹⁴⁰

PERU:

Representative: J. A. Encinas.

PHILIPPINES:

Representative: Salvador P. Lopez

SWEDEN:

Representative: Oscar Thorsing (Chairman)

i. OFFICE OF THE UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR REFUGEES

Representatives Serving on High Commissioner's Advisory Committee on Refugees (second session)

AUSTRALIA:

Patrick Shaw

AUSTRIA:

Karl Fritzer

BELGIUM:

René Contempre

BRAZIL:

B. Rocque da Motta

DENMARK:

Finn T. B. Friis

GERMANY FED. REP. OF:

Werner G. Middelmann

FRANCE:

Jean Serres (Chairman)

HOLY SEE:

Reverend Edward Killion

ISRAEL:

Menahem Kahany (Rapporteur)

ITALY:

Lorenzo Nicolai

SWITZERLAND:

Oscar Schurch

TURKEY:

Necmettin Tuncel

UNITED KINGDOM:

John G. S. Beith

UNITED STATES:

Donald C. Blaisdell

VENEZUELA:

Victor Montoya (Vice-Chairman)

j. UNITED NATIONS ADVISORY COUNCIL FOR SOMALILAND

COLOMBIA:

Representative: Edmundo de Holte-Castello.

EGYPT:

Representative: Salah El Din Fadel (to 20 September), Mahmoud Moharram Hammed (from 27 October).

PHILIPPINES:

Representative: Victorio D. Carpio (to 10 June), Vicente L. Pastrana (from 10 June).

k. Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON SOUTH WEST AFRICA

NORWAY:

Representative: Jacob S. Worm-Muller; Alternate: Hans Engen.

SYRIA:

Representative: Farid Zeineddine; Alternate: Najmuddin Rifai.

THAILAND:

Representatives: Prince Wan Waithayakon (Chairman),¹⁴¹ Mom Chao Dilokrit Kridakon, Thanat Khoman.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Benjamin Gerig.

URUGUAY:

Representative: Enrique Rodríguez Fabregat; Alternate: Francisco A. Forteza.

l. COMMITTEE ON INFORMATION FROM NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: W. D. Forsyth; Alternate: A. H. Loomes.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Pierre Ryckmans; Alternates: Georges Cassiers, Jacques Houard.

BRAZIL:

Representative: Carlos Calero Rodrigues.

¹⁴⁰ As of 31 Dec. 1952.

¹⁴¹ Prince Waithayakon resigned from the chairmanship on 23 April and the Committee appointed Mr Kridakon as Chairman. Upon his resignation from the chairmanship on 30 September Mr Kohman was elected Chairman.

CUBA:

Representative: Carlos Blanco (Vice-Chairman);
Alternate: Uldarica Manas.

DENMARK:

Representative: Willam Borberg; Alternates: Eske
Brun, P. P. Sveistrup, Christian D. Holten-Eggert.

ECUADOR:

Representative: Teodoro Bustamante.

EGYPT:

Representative: Aly Kamel Fahmy; Alternates: Abdel
Hamid Abdel Ghani, Ibrahim Ezzat.

FRANCE:

Representative: Leon Pignon; Alternate: Andre Naudy.

INDIA:

Representative: B. Shiva Rao.

INDONESIA:

Representative: Soeleiman Hoesin Tajibnapis.

NETHERLANDS:

Representative: D. J. von Balluseck; Alternates: A. I.
Spits, A. J. van Baal, H. Scheltema.

NEW ZEALAND:

Representative: T. P. Davin (Rapporteur); Alternate:
J. V. Scott.

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Muhammad Asad (Chairman).

USSR:

Representative: A. A. Roschin.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: W. A. C. Mathieson; Alternate: W. H.
Chinn.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Benjamin Gerig; Alternate: William
I. Cargo.

m. Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON FACTORS (NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES)

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: W. D. Forsyth; Alternate: A. H.
Loomes.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Pierre Ryckmans; Alternates: Georges
Cassiers, Jacques Houard.

BURMA:

Representative: Thray Sithu, James Barrington; Alternate: Ba Maung.

CUBA:

Representative: Carlos Blanco; Alternate: Uldarica Manas.

DENMARK:

Representative: William Borberg; Alternates: Eske
Brun, P. P. Sveistrup, Christian D. Holten-Eggert.

FRANCE:

Representative: Leon Pignon; Alternate: Andre Naudy.

GUATEMALA:

Representative: Eduardo Castillo Arriola; Alternate: Antonio Aris de Castilla.

IRAQ:

Representative: Awni Khalidy (Chairman).

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Benjamin Gerig (Vice-Chairman and Rapporteur).

VENEZUELA:

Representative: Victor Manuel Rivas.

n. COMMITTEE ON ADMINISTRATIVE UNIONS

BELGIUM:

Representative: Jacques Houard.

BRAZIL:

Representative: Carlos Calero Rodrigues.

INDIA:

Representative: A. D. Mani (Chairman)

UNITED STATES:

Representative: William I. Cargo; Alternate: D. Vernon McKay.

O. HEADQUARTERS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: H. G. Marshall.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Robert Fenaux.

BRAZIL:

Representative: Luiz L. Bastian Pinto.

CANADA:

Representative: Kenneth Greene.

CHINA:

Representatives: C. L. Hsia, Chipping H. C. Kiang.

COLOMBIA:

Representative: Eduardo Carrizosa.

FRANCE:

Representative: Francis Lacoste; Alternate: Pierre Ordonneau.

GREECE:

Representative: Alexis Kyrrou.

INDIA:

Representative: Rajeshwar Dayal.

NORWAY:

Representative: Arne Sunde; Alternates: Hans Engen, Bredo Stabell, Rolf Hancke.

POLAND:

Representative: Stefan Boratynski.

SYRIA:

Representatives: Rafik Asha, Farid Zeineddine.

USSR:

Representative: Georgi Filippovich Saksin.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Stuart Gerald Yorston.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Warren R. Austin (Chairman).

YUGOSLAVIA:

Representative: Ratko Pleic.

p. SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF THE METHODS AND PROCEDURES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY FOR DEALING WITH LEGAL AND DRAFTING QUESTIONS

BELGIUM:

Representative: Joseph Nisot; Alternate: Georges Cassiers.

CANADA:

Representative: A. Raymond Crepault (Rapporteur).

CHILE:

Representative: Horacio Suarez; Alternate: Margarita Gallo-Muller.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA:

Representative: Karel Petrzelka.

EGYPT:

Representative: Saleh Mahmoud.

EL SALVADOR:

Representative: Miguel Rafael Urquía; Alternate: Rafael Eguizábal.

FRANCE:

Representative: Pierre Ordonneau.

INDONESIA:

Representative: Soeleiman Hoesin Tajibnapis.

IRAN:

Representative: Djalal Abdoh (Chairman); Alternate: Fereydoun Adamiyat.

ISRAEL:

Representative: Gideon Rafael.

SWEDEN:

Representative: Oscar Thorsing; Alternate: Baron Goran von Otter.

USSR:

Representative: Georgi Filippovich Saksin.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: F. A. Vallat.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: James N. Hyde; Alternate: Charles D. Cook.

VENEZUELA:

Representative: Victor Manuel Perez Perozo (Vice-Chairman).

B. THE SECURITY COUNCIL

1. Representatives and Deputy, Alternate and Acting Representatives Accredited to the Council

BRAZIL:

Joao Carlos Muniz, Alvaro Teixeira Soares.

CHILE:

Hernán Santa Cruz, Rudecindo Ortega Masson, Mrs. Ana Figueroa, Alfredo Lea-Plaza, Horacio Suarez.

CHINA:

Tingfu F. Tsiang, C. L. Hsia, Shuhsi Hsu.

FRANCE:

Jean Chauvel (to 1 February), Henri Hoppenot (from 1 February), Francis Lacoste.

GREECE:

Alexis Kyrrou, George B. Kapsambelis, Stavros G. Roussos.

NETHERLANDS:

D. J. von Balluseck, J. M. A. H. Luns, Baron S. van Heemstra, Baron D. W. van Lynden.

PAKISTAN:

Ahmed S. Bokhari, Muhammad Asad, A. H. B. Tyabji Syed Itaat Husain.

TURKEY:

Selim Sarper, Ilhan Savut.

USSR:

Yakov A. Malik, Valerian Alexandrovich Zorin, Semen K. Tsarapkin, Aleksander A. Soldatov.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Sir Gladwyn Jebb, J. E. Coulson, P. Moore Cross-thwaite.

UNITED STATES:

Warren R. Austin, Ernest A. Gross, John C. Ross.

2. Military Staff Committee

CHINA:

Navy Representative: Commodore Kao Ju-fon.

FRANCE:

Army Representative: General de Brigade Marcel Penette.

Navy Representative: Capitaine de Fregate Pierre H. Mazoyer (to 10 September 1952); Capitaine de Fregate Marc Sanoner (from 11 September 1952).

Air Force Representative: Commandant Louis Le Gelard.

USSR:

Army Representative: Major-General Ivan Andreevich Skliarov.

Air Force Representative: Lt.-General A. R. Sharapov.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Army Representative: Major-General W. A. Dimoline.

Navy Representative: Captain R. G. Mackay, RN (to 30 June 1952); Commander R. H. Graham, RN (from 1 July 1952).

Air Force Representative: Group Captain A. M. Montagu-Smith.

UNITED STATES:

Army Representative: Lt.-General Willis D. Crittenberger.

Navy Representative: Vice-Admiral O. C. Badger (to 13 May 1952); Vice-Admiral A. D. Struble (from 14 May 1952).

Air Force Representative: Lt.-General H. R. Harmon.

3. Disarmament CommissionBRAZIL:

Representative: Joao Carlos Muniz; Alternate: Alvaro Teixeira Soares.

CANADA:

Representative: David M. Johnson; Alternate: James George.

CHILE:

Representative: Hernan Santa Cruz; Alternate: Carlos Valenzuela.

CHINA:

Representative: Tingfu F. Tsiang; Alternate: Hsioh-Ren Wei.

FRANCE:

Representative: Jules Moch,
Acting Representative: Henri Hoppenot.

GREECE:

Representative: Alexis Kyrou; Alternate: George B. Kapsambelis.

NETHERLANDS:

Representative: D. J. von Balluseck; Alternate: J. M. A. H. Luns, Baron D. W. van Lynden (from 19 September 1952).

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Ahmed S. Bokhari; Alternate: Muhammad Asad, A. H. B. Tyabji (from 30 September).

TURKEY:

Representative: Selim Sarper.

USSR:

Representative: Yakov A. Malik, Valerian Alexandrovich Zorin (from 28 August); Alternate: Semen K. Tsarapkin, Aleksander A. Soldatov (from 28 August).

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Sir Gladwyn Jebb; Alternate: J. E. Coulson, P. M. Crosthwaite (from 18 September).

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Warren R. Austin; Deputy Representative: Benjamin V. Cohen.

C. THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL1. Delegations to the Council*a. FIRST SPECIAL SESSION*MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL*ARGENTINA:

Representative: Luis A. Arean; Alternates: Andres M. Lescure, Cecilio J. Morales.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Fernand van Langenhove; Alternates: Robert Fenaux, Jules Woulbroun.

CANADA:

Representative: D. M. Johnson.

CHINA:

Representative: C. L. Hsia; Alternate: Paonan Cheng.

CUBA:

Acting Representative: Carlos Blanco.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA:

Representative: Jiri Nosek; Alternate: Milan Glozar.

EGYPT:

Representative: Mahmoud Azmi.

FRANCE:

Representative: Philippe de Seynes; Alternates: Gerard Amanrich, Roger Gorse.

IRAN:

Representative: Ali Gholi Ardalan; Alternate: Djalal Abdoh.

MEXICO:

Representative: Jose Gorostiza; Alternate: Manuel Rodríguez de San Miguel.

PAKISTAN:

Representative: A. A. Farooq.

PHILIPPINES:

Representative: Carlos P. Rómulo; Alternates: Jose D. Ingles, Mauro Mendez, Adriano R. Garcia.

POLAND:

Representative: Henryk Birecki; Alternate: Stefan Boratynski.

SWEDEN:

Alternate: Baron Goran von Otter.

USSR:

Representative: Georgi Filippovich Saksin.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: C. M. Anderson; Alternate: H. T. A. Overton.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Isador Lubin; Alternate: Walter Kotschnig.

URUGUAY:

Representative: Enrique Rodríguez Fabregat.

SPECIALIZED AGENCIESINTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION (ILO):

Representative: R. A. Métall; Alternate: A. A. P. Dawson.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO):

Representative: Alicia Banos.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO):

Representative: Solomon V. Arnaldo.

UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION (UPU):

Representative: M. Gillen

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO):

Representatives: Mabel S. Ingalls, George E. Hill, H.

NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

Category A

WORLD FEDERATION OF UNITED NATIONS ASSOCIATIONS:

Representative: Stephen Schwebel.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE ALLIANCE:

Representative: Leslie Woodcock.

INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION OF FREE TRADE UNIONS:

Representative: Toni Sender.

Category B

WORLD UNION FOR PROGRESSIVE JUDAISM:

Representative: Ronald L. Ronalds.

WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS:

Representative: Gerhard Jacoby.

CO-ORDINATING BOARD OF JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS FOR CONSULTATION WITH THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS:

Representative: Colonel Bernard Bernstein.

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR THE RIGHTS OF MAN:

Representative: Max Beer.

INTER-AMERICAN COUNCIL OF COMMERCE AND PRODUCTION:

Representative: Earl F. Cruickshank.

b. FOURTEENTH SESSION

MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL

ARGENTINA:

Representative: Rodolfo Muñoz; Alternates: Luis A. Arean, Cecilio J. Morales.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Raymond Scheyven; Alternates: Georgette Ciselet, Henri Fayat, Louis-Ghislain Delhayé, Robert Fenaux, Pierre Staner, Jacques Mertens de Wilmars, Robert Faniel, André Chaval, Jules Woulbroun, J. Desy.

CANADA:

Representative: J. Lesage; Alternates: D. M. Johnson, James Sinclair, G. F. Davidson, F. G. Robertson, John Deutsch.

CHINA:

Representative: C. L. Hsia; Alternate: Paonan Cheng.

CUBA:

Representative: Emilio Nuñez-Portuondo; Alternates: Carlos Blanco, Guy Pérez Cisneros, Jose Miguel Ribas, Nicolas Rivero, Manuel G. Hevia.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA:

Representative: Jiri Nosek; Alternates: Frantisek Vavricka, Ladislav Novak, Karel Petrzelka, Otakar Taufer, Jiri Stary.

EGYPT:

Representative: Mahmoud Fawzi; Alternates: Mahmoud Azmi, Fouad El Pharaony, Aly Kamel Fahmy, Salen Abdelrahman Mahmoud.

FRANCE:

Representative: Pierre Abelin; Alternate: Georges Boris.

IRAN:

Representative: Ali Gholi Ardalan; Alternate: Djalal Abdoh.

MEXICO:

Representative: Luis Padilla Nervo; Alternates: Jose Gorostiza, Luciano Joubland-Rivas.

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Amjad Ali; Alternate: Said Hasan.

PHILIPPINES:

Representative: Carlos P. Rómulo; Alternates: Salvador P. Lopez, Jose D. Ingles, Mauro Mendez, Narciso G. Reyes, Adriano R. Garcia.

POLAND:

Representative: Henryk Birecki; Alternate: Jan Galewicz.

SWEDEN:

Representative: Richard Mauritz Edvard Sterner; Deputy Representatives: Erik Westerlind, Baron Goran von Otter, Sven Backlund, Ernst Michanek.

USSR:

Representative: Georgi Petrovich Arkadiev; Alternates: Georgi Filippovich Saksin, P. D. Morozov.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Earl of Selkirk (to 8 July), Sir Gladwyn Jebb (from 9 July); Alternates: C. A. G. Meade, J. M. Fleming.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Isador Lubin; Deputy Representative: Walter M. Kotschnig.

URUGUAY:

Representative: Enrique Rodríguez-Fabregat.

OBSERVERS

MEMBER STATES OF THE UNITED NATIONS

BRAZIL:

Representatives: Alvaro Teixeira Soares, Luis Bastian Pinto.

CHILE:

Representatives: Hernan Santa Cruz, Mrs. Ana Figueroa, Horacio Suarez, Alberto Yoacham.

INDIA:

Representatives: B. Rajan, P. K. Banerjee.

NETHERLANDS:

Representative: H. Jonker.

SAUDI ARABIA:

Representative: Omer Halik.

TURKEY:

Representative: Kemal Suleyman Vaner.

YUGOSLAVIA:

Representatives: Marjan Barisic, Ratko Pleic.

NON-MEMBER STATES OF THE UNITED NATIONS

JAPAN:

Representative: Hisanaga Shimazu.

SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION (ILO):

Representative: C. Wilfred Jenks; Alternates: R. A. Métall, W. Yalden-Thomson.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO):

Representatives: Frank L. McDougall, Karl D. Olsen, Harold A. Vogel, Alicia Banos.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO):

Representatives: Jaime Torres Bodet, Malcolm S. Adiseshiah, Solomon V. Arnaldo, Julian M. Behrstock, Gerald Carnes, Pio-Carlo Terenzio, Arthur F. Gagliotti.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION (ICAO):

Representatives: Edward Warner, E. R. Marlin, J. Hutchison.

INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT (BANK):

Representatives: Eugene R. Black, Richard H. Demuth, Enrique Lopez-Herrarte.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND (FUND):

Representatives: Ivar Rooth, Gordon Williams.

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO):

Representatives: Pierre Dorolle, W. P. Forrest, P. Kaul, Mabel S. Ingalls, Miss B. Howell, George E. Hill, II.

UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION (UPU):

Representatives: Joseph F. Jones, Cornelius Petersen.

INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION (ITU):

Representative: Harvey B. Ottermann.

WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION (WMO):

Representatives: F. W. Reichelderfer, P. H. Kutschenreuter, Norman: R. Hagen.

PREPARATORY COMMITTEE OF THE INTER-GOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE ORGANIZATION:

Representative: Branko Lucac.

OTHER INTERGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

PROVISIONAL INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE FOR THE MOVEMENT OF MIGRANTS FROM EUROPE:

Representative: Abba P. Schwartz.

NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

Category A

INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE:

Representatives: Wilbert Ward, Maurice J. Smits, Roberta M. Lusardi, Mr McIntyre.

INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION OF FREE TRADE UNIONS:

Representatives: Toni Sender, James T. Leary.

INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE ALLIANCE:

Representative: Leslie Woodcock.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS:

Representative: Andrew Cairns.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF CHRISTIAN TRADE UNIONS:

Representative: Gerhard Thormann.

WORLD FEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS:

Representatives: Fernando Santi, Iradj Eskandary, Elinor Kahn.

WORLD FEDERATION OF UNITED NATIONS ASSOCIATIONS:

Representative: Clark M. Eichelberger, Clyde Eagle-ton, Stephen Schwebel.

Category B and Register

AGUDAS ISRAEL WORLD ORGANIZATION:

Representative: Isaac Lewin.

CATHOLIC INTERNATIONAL UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE:

Representatives: Grace Aieta, Angele de Broeck.

COMMISSION OF THE CHURCHES ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS:

Representatives: Frederick Nolde, Richard M. Fagley, Elfan Rees.

COMMITTEE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT (UNITED STATES):

Representatives: Sylvia Stone, David W. Day, Wesley F. Rennie.

CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL OF JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS:

Representative: Moses Moskowitz.

CO-ORDINATING BOARD OF JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS:

Representatives: Colonel Bernard Bernstein, Stanley Halperin.

FRIENDS WORLD COMMITTEE FOR CONSULTATION:

Representatives: Elmore Jackson, Spencer Cox.

INDIAN COUNCIL OF WORLD AFFAIRS:

Representative: C. R. Sundaram.

INTER-AMERICAN COUNCIL OF COMMERCE AND PRODUCTION:

Representatives: Noel Sargent, Estrella F. Baldi, Earl Cruickshank.

INTERNATIONAL AIR TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION:

Representatives: Sir William P. Hildred, John C. Cooper.

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PENAL LAW, AND INTERNATIONAL BUREAU FOR THE UNIFICATION OF PENAL LAW:

Representatives: Vespasian V. Pella, Basil Vlavianos, David Avram, Sabin Manuila, Veturia Manuila.

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN:

Representative: Wanda Grabinska.

INTERNATIONAL CATHOLIC PRESS UNION:

Representative: M. Fink.

INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE OF SCIENTIFIC MANAGEMENT:

Representative: Elliott Haynes.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC CHARITIES:

Representatives: Msgr. John O'Grady, Beatrice M. Faivre, L. Cornelius Longarzo.

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF SOCIAL WORK:

Representatives: Joseph P. Anderson, Miss I. de Hurtado, Susan Pettiss.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF NURSES:

Representatives: Effie J. Taylor, Jeannie Lamotte.

INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN:

Representatives: Laura Dreyfus-Barney, Eunice Carter, Mrs. Barclay Parsons.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN:

Representatives: Esther Hymer, Yvonne Soudan.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF SETTLEMENTS:

Representatives: Helen Morton, Fern Colborn.

INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN:

Representative: Janet Robb

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ADMINISTRATIVE SCIENCES, INTERNATIONAL UNION OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES, AND INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION FOR HOUSING AND TOWN PLANNING:

Representative: Charles S. Ascher.

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC LAW:

Representative: Rev. J. A. Maynard.

INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR THE RIGHTS OF MAN:

Representatives: Max Beer, Roger N. Baldwin.

INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY OF CRIMINOLOGY:

Representative: Gregory Zilboorg.

INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY FOR THE WELFARE OF CRIPPLES:

Representatives: Donald L. Wilson, Norman Acton.

INTERNATIONAL UNION FOR CHILD WELFARE:

Representative: Mary A. Dingman.

INTERNATIONAL UNION FOR THE SCIENTIFIC STUDY OF POPULATION:

Representatives: Louis I. Dublin, Frank Lorimer

LEAGUE OF RED CROSS SOCIETIES:

Representatives: G. Galub, W. St. Aubin.

LIAISON COMMITTEE OF WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS:

Representatives: Eunice Carter, Madesin Phillips.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS:

Representatives: Arvid Frank, Addison Parris.

PAX ROMANA:

Representative: Henk Luiten

O.R.T. UNION:

Representative: Jacob Frumkin

ST. JOAN'S INTERNATIONAL SOCIAL AND POLITICAL ALLIANCE:

Representative: Wanda Grabinska.

WORLD FEDERATION FOR MENTAL HEALTH:

Representative: Helen S. Ascher

WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS:

Representative: Maurice L. Perlzweig, Gerhard Jacoby, Mr Hayes.

WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM:

Representative: Gladys Walser.

WORLD'S ALLIANCE OF YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS:

Representatives: Owen E. Pence, Paul M. Limbert.

WORLD POWER CONFERENCE:

Representative: Harold C. Dean.

WORLD'S WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION:

Representative: Elizabeth Smart.

WORLD'S YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION:

Representatives: Constance M. Anderson, Marion V. Royce.

WORLD UNION FOR PROGRESSIVE JUDAISM:

Representatives: Ronald Louis Ronalds, Eleanor S. Polstein.

WORLD UNION OF CATHOLIC WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS:

Representatives: Catherine Schaefer, Jean Gartlan, Alba Zizzamia.

2. Representatives Serving on Subsidiary Bodies
During 1952⁴²

a. COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS
(EIGHTH SESSION)

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: H. F. E. Whitlam (Rapporteur).

BELGIUM:

Representative: F. Dehousse; Alternate: Joseph Nisot.

CHILE:

Representatives: Hernan Santa Cruz; Alternates: Mrs. Ana Figueroa, Carlos Valenzuela, F. J. Oyarzun, Margarita Gallo-Muller.

CHINA:

Representative: Paonan Cheng.

EGYPT:

Representative: Mahmoud Azmi; Alternate: A. Ghorbal.

⁴²Representatives are only given for those of the functional commission which met during 1952.

- FRANCE:
Representative: René Cassin (1st Vice-Chairman);
Alternates: P. Juvigny, B. Epinat.
- GREECE:
Representative: Alexis Kyrou; Alternate: George B.
Kapsambelis.
- INDIA:
Representative: Hansa Mehta (2nd Vice-Chairman);
Alternate: B. Rajan.
- LEBANON:
Representative: Charles Malik (Chairman); Alternate:
Karim Azkoul.
- PAKISTAN:
Representative: A. Waheed.
- POLAND:
Representative: H. Birecki; Alternate: Stefan Bora-tynski.
- SWEDEN:
Representative: Agda Rossel; Alternate: E. O. L.
Westerberg.
- UKRAINIAN SSR:
Representative: V. P. Kovalenko.
- USSR:
Representative: P. D. Morosov.
- UNITED KINGDOM:
Representative: S. Hoare; Alternates: H. Overton F.
Vallat.
- UNITED STATES:
Representative: Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt; Alternate:
James Simsarian.
- URUGUAY:
Representative: Jose A. Mora; Alternates: Darwin
Bracco, Francisco A. Forteza.
- YUGOSLAVIA:
Representative: Branko Jevremovic.
- b. SOCIAL COMMISSION (EIGHTH SESSION)
- AUSTRALIA:
Representative: F. H. Rowe
- BELGIUM:
Representative: Robert Houben;¹⁴³ Alternate: Charles Roger.
- BOLIVIA:
Representative: Hugo Navajas-Mogro.
- BRAZIL:
Representative: C. V. Moog (2nd Vice-Chairman).
- BYELORUSSIAN SSR:
Representative: A. S. Polianski.
- CANADA:
Representative: R. B. Curry (1st Vice-Chairman).
- CHINA:
Representative: Yi-Chi Mei; Alternate: C. M. Chang.
- ECUADOR:
Representative: Miguel Albornoz.
- FRANCE:
Representative: Henry Hauck (Chairman); Alternate:
Gerard Amanrich.
- GREECE:
Representative: H. Goutos.
- INDIA:
Representative: Mrs. A. Arayanayakam.
- ISRAEL:
Representative: G. G. Lotan (Rapporteur); Alternate:
Zena Herman.
- NEW ZEALAND:
Representative: Thomas P. Davin.
- PHILIPPINES:
Representative: Salvador P. Lopez; Alternate: Adriano
R. Garcia.
- USSR:
Representative: V. M. Zonov.
- UNITED KINGDOM:
Representative: Sir Oswald Alien.
- UNITED STATES:
Representative: A. J. Altmeyer; Alternate: Miss J.
M. Hoey.
- YUGOSLAVIA:
Representative: G. Vlahov.
- C. COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN
(SIXTH SESSION)
- BRAZIL:
Representative: Bertha Lutz.
- BURMA:
Representative: Mrs Kyaw Nyein.
- BYELORUSSIAN SSR:
Representative: Mrs Faina Novikova.
- CHILE:
Representative: Mrs Ana Figueroa (1st Vice-Chairman)
- CHINA:
Representative: Miss Pao Swen Tseng.
- CUBA:
Alternate: Miss Uldarica Manas.
- DOMINICAN REPUBLIC:
Representative: Mrs Milady Felix de l'Official.
- FRANCE:
Representative: Mrs Marie-Hélène Lefauchaux (Chairman).
- IRAN:
Representative: Mrs Safiyeh Firouz.
- LEBANON:
Representative: Mrs Laure Tabet.
- MEXICO:
Representative: Mrs Amalia C. de Castillo Ledon.¹⁴⁴
- NETHERLANDS
Representative: Miss Elizabeth Ribbius Peletier.

¹⁴³ Did not attend session.

¹⁴⁴ Was prevented by illness from attending the

NEW ZEALAND:

Representative: Mrs Grace Hilda Ross.

PAKISTAN:

Representative: Mrs Fida Hassan (Rapporteur).

POLAND:

Representative: Miss Fryderyka Kalinowska (2nd Vice-Chairman).

USSR:

Representative: Mrs Elizavieta Popova.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Miss Mary Sutherland.¹⁴⁵

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Mrs Olive Remington Goldman.

d. COMMISSION ON NARCOTIC DRUGS (SEVENTH SESSION)

CANADA:

Representative: Colonel C. H. L. Sharman.

CHINA:

Representative: C. L. Hsia.

EGYPT:

Representative: Saleh Abdelrahman Mahmoud.

FRANCE:

Representative: C. Vaillat (Vice-Chairman); Alternate: Gérard Amanrich.

INDIA:

Representative: E. S. Krishnamoorthy.

IRAN:

Representative: Ali Gholi Ardalan; Alternate: Djalal Abdoh.

MEXICO:

Representative: O. Rabasa (Chairman); Alternate: A. Martínez-Lavalle.

NETHERLANDS:

Representative: A. Kruysse.

PERU:

Representative: C. Avalos; Alternate: C. Monge.

POLAND:

Representative: Stefan Boratynski; Alternate: E. Kulaga.

TURKEY:

Representative: C. Or; Alternate: I. Kavadar.

USSR:

Representative: V. V. Zakusov.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: J. H. Walker.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: H. J. Anslinger; Alternate: G. A. Morlock.

YUGOSLAVIA:

Representative: D. Nikolic (Rapporteur).

e. Ad Hoc COMMITTEE ON RESTRICTIVE BUSINESS PRACTICES (FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD SESSIONS)

BELGIUM:

Representative: Emile Thiltges; Alternates: Jacques Houard (1st and 2nd sessions), Robert Faniel (3rd).

CANADA:

Representative: T. D. MacDonald (1st and 3rd); A. S. Whiteley (2nd); Alternate: A. S. Whiteley (1st).

FRANCE:

Representative: Philippe de Seynes; Alternate: M. Kojive (1st).

INDIA¹⁴⁶

Representative: Arthur Samuel Lall; Alternate: M. J. Oza.

MEXICO:

Representative: Armando Amador (1st and 2nd), Gonzalo Mora Ortiz (3rd).

PAKISTAN:

Representative: A. A. Farooq (1st), M. H. Farukhi (2nd), G. Aziz Ahmad (3rd).

SWEDEN:

Representative: Ingvar Svennilson (1st and 3rd), Baron Goran von Otter (2nd); Alternates: Baron Goran von Otter (1st), C. Olsson (3rd).

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: R. Burns (1st), P. Harris (2nd and 3rd); Alternate: A. D. Neale.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Corwin D. Edwards; Alternates: Joseph A. Greenwald (3rd), Donald Blaisdell (3rd).

URUGUAY:

Representative: Juan Felipe Yriart (1st and 2nd); Observer: Francisco Dominguez (3rd).

D. THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

(1) Delegations to the Council

a. TENTH SESSION

MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: W. D. Forsyth; Alternate: Roy Albert Peachey.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Pierre Ryckmans; Alternate: Robert Scheyven.

CHINA:

Representative: Shih-Shun Liu; Alternate: Yu-Wan Liu.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC:

Representative: Max Henríquez-Ureña; Alternates: Joaquin Salazar, Enrique de Marchena, Miss Minerva Bernardino.

EL SALVADOR:

Representative: Miguel Rafael Urquía; Alternates: Carlos Serrano Garcia, Rafael Eguizábal, Roberto E. Quiros.

FRANCE:

Representative: Leon Pignon; Alternates: Pierre Ordonneau, Francis Huré.

IRAQ:

Representative: Awni Khalidy.

¹⁴⁵ Represented by alternate, J. G. S. Beith, permanent representative of the United Kingdom to the European Office of the United Nations, at the first seven meetings.

¹⁴⁶ Was not represented at third session.

NEW ZEALAND:

Representative: Leslie Knox Munro; Alternates: G. R. Laking, Thomas P. Davin, J. V. Scott.

THAILAND:

Representative: Prince Wan Waithayakon; Alternate: Mom Chao Dilokrit Kridakon.

USSR:

Representative: Aleksander A. Soldatov.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Sir Alan Cuthbert Burns; Alternate: W. A. C. Mathieson.

UNITED STATES:

Representative: Francis B. Sayre.

NON-MEMBER OF THE UNITED NATIONS
AND NON-MEMBER OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

ITALY:¹⁴⁷

Representative: Gastone Guidotti; Alternates: Guerino Roberti, Giuseppe Brigidi.

SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVES OF ADMINISTERING AUTHORITIES

AUSTRALIA:

J. R. Halligan (for the Trust Territories of New Guinea and Nauru).

NEW ZEALAND:

J. B. Wright (for the Trust Territory of Western Samoa).

UNITED STATES:

Elbert D. Thomas (for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands).

REPRESENTATIVES OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION
(ILO) :

Representative: R. A. Métall; Alternate: A. A. P. Dawson.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO):

Representatives: Alicia Banos, Harold A. Vogel.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO):

Representative: Solomon V. Arnaldo.

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO):

Representatives: P. M. Kaul, Mabel S. Ingalls, George E. Hill, II.

b. ELEVENTH SESSION

MEMBERS OF THE COUNCIL

AUSTRALIA:

Representative: W. D. Forsyth; Alternates: A. H. Loomes, Roy Albert Peachey.

BELGIUM:

Representative: Pierre Ryckmans; Alternate: Robert Scheyven.

CHINA:

Representative: Shih-Shun Liu; Alternate: Yu-Wan Liu.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC:

Representative: Joaquin E. Salazar; Alternates: Enrique de Marchena, Minerva Bernardino.

EL SALVADOR:

Representative: Miguel Rafael Urquía; Alternates: Carlos Serrano-García, Roberto E. Quiros, Rafael Eguizabal.

FRANCE:

Representative: Leon Pignon; Alternates: Pierre Ordoneau, Francis Huré.

IRAQ:

Representative: Awni Khalidy.

NEW ZEALAND:

Representative: Leslie Knox Munro; Alternates: G. R. Laking, Thomas P. Davin, J. V. Scott.

THAILAND:

Representative: Mom Chao Dilokrit Kridakon; Alternate: Mom Chao Jotisi Devakul.

USSR:

Representative: Aleksander A. Soldatov.

UNITED KINGDOM:

Representative: Sir Alan Cuthbert Burns; Alternate: W. A. C. Mathieson.

UNITED STATES:

Acting Representative: Benjamin Gerig.

MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS
NON-MEMBERS OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

COLOMBIA:¹⁴⁸

Representative: Edmundo de Holte-Castello.

EGYPT:¹⁴⁸

Representative: Salah El Din Fadel

PHILIPPINES:¹⁴⁸

Representatives: Victorio D. Carpio, Vicente Pastrana.

NON-MEMBER OF THE UNITED NATIONS
AND NON-MEMBER OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

ITALY:¹⁴⁹

Representative: Gastone Guidotti; Alternates: Guerino Roberti, Giuseppe Brigidi.

SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVES OF ADMINISTERING AUTHORITIES

BELGIUM:

Pierre Leroy (for the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi) .

¹⁴⁷ Italy, through not a Member of the United Nations, as the Administering Authority of the Trust Territory of Somaliland participated without vote in the Council's discussions concerning that Territory and concerning general questions affecting the operation of the International Trusteeship System.

¹⁴⁸ States members of the United Nations Advisory Council for the Trust Territory of Somaliland under Italian administration.

¹⁴⁹ Administering Authority of the Trust Territory of Somaliland.

FRANCE:

Charles Marie Watier (for the Trust territory of the Cameroons under French administration); René Doise (for the Trust Territory of Togoland under French administration).

ITALY:

Pier Pasquale Spinelli (for the Trust Territory of Somaliland under Italian administration).

UNITED KINGDOM:

J. E. S. Lamb (for the Trust Territory of Tanganyika); Brigadier E. J. Gibbons (for the Trust Territory of the Cameroons under British administration); Michael de Normann Ensor (for the Trust Territory of Togoland under British administration).

REPRESENTATIVES OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION (ILO):

Representative: R. A. Métall.

FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS (FAO):

Observer: E. H. Jacoby.

UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION (UNESCO):

Representatives: Solomon V. Arnaldo, Marcel Desombes.

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION (WHO):

Representative: Mabel S. Ingalls.

ANNEX II. CHANGES IN RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE PRINCIPAL ORGANS

A. THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL¹⁵⁰

I. SESSIONS

Rule 1

The Economic and Social Council shall normally hold two regular sessions a year.

Rule 2

Each regular session shall be held, subject to the provisions of rule 3, at a date fixed by the Council at a previous session. The date of the opening of the first regular session of the year shall be fixed as nearly as administratively practicable to the first Tuesday in April. The date of the second regular session of the year shall be fixed as late as administratively practicable before the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly, and shall be adjourned at least six weeks before it. This session shall be resumed during or shortly after the regular session of the General Assembly for a brief series of meetings.

Rule 4

Special sessions shall be held by decision of the Council, or at the request of:

- (1) A majority of the members of the Council;
- (2) The General Assembly;
- (3) The Security Council.

The Council shall also hold a special session at the request of the Trusteeship Council, any Member of the United Nations or a specialized agency, if the President of the Council and the two Vice-Presidents agree to the request. If the officers have not notified their agreement to the Secretary-General within four days of the receipt of the request, the President shall forthwith inform the other members of the Council, through the Secretary-General, of the request and shall inquire whether or not they support the request for a session. If within eight days of the inquiry, a majority of the members of the Council explicitly concurs in the request, the President will convene the Council accordingly.

Special sessions will be convened within six weeks of receipt by the President of a request for such a session at a date fixed by the President.

Rule 6

Each session shall be held at United Nations Headquarters, unless, in pursuance of a previous decision of the Council or at the request of a majority of its members, another place is designated for the whole or part of the session.

II. AGENDA

Rule 9

In the course of meetings held during or shortly after the regular session of the General Assembly as provided in rule 2, the Council shall work out, with the assistance of the Secretary-General, the basic programme of its activities for the following year.

Rule 10

1. The Secretary-General shall draw up and submit to the Council at each regular session the provisional agenda for the following regular session. The provisional agenda shall include all items proposed by:

- (a) The Council;
- (b) The General Assembly;
- (c) The Security Council;
- (d) The Trusteeship Council;
- (e) A Member of the United Nations;
- (f) The Secretary-General;
- (g) A specialized agency.

2. Non-governmental organizations in category A may propose to the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations that the Committee request the Secretary-General to place items of special interest to the organizations on the provisional agenda of the Council.

The Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations, in considering a request from a non-governmental organization in category A that an item be placed on the provisional agenda of the Council, shall take into account:

- (a) The adequacy of the documentation submitted by the organization;
- (b) The extent to which it is considered that the item lends itself to early and constructive action by the Council; and
- (c) The possibility that the item might be more appropriately dealt with elsewhere than in the Council.

Any decision by the Committee not to grant a request submitted by a non-governmental organization that an item be placed on the provisional agenda of the Council shall be considered as final.

¹⁵⁰ Only the rules which have been changed or amended are given in this annex. For purposes of convenience, the new numbers of the former rules (E/1662) have been indicated in square brackets. The rules which have not been amended or re-numbered are not listed here.

Rule 11

The agenda for each regular session shall include as an item the consideration of the provisional agenda for the following regular session of the Council. At each regular session the Council shall give consideration to such provisional agenda in the light of the basic annual programme referred to in rule 9, and shall consider the grouping of related items and fix the approximate dates at which the consideration of such groups of items shall begin.

Rule 12

After the Council has considered the provisional agenda for its following regular session, the provisional agenda, incorporating any amendments made by the Council, shall be communicated by the Secretary-General to the Members of the United Nations, the President of the Security Council, the President of the Trusteeship Council, the specialized agencies and the non-governmental organizations in categories A and B and on the Register.

Rule 13

The inclusion of supplementary items in the provisional agenda considered by the Council under rule 11 may be proposed by the General Assembly, the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council, a Member of the United Nations, the Secretary-General, a specialized agency or a non-governmental organization, in accordance with the procedure provided in paragraph 2 of rule 10. The request for inclusion of a supplementary item shall be accompanied by a supporting statement from the authority proposing it, except in the case of the General Assembly, the Security Council or the Trusteeship Council, regarding the urgency of the consideration of the item and the reasons which precluded its submission before the consideration by the Council of the provisional agenda as provided in rule 11. The supplementary items shall be placed by the Secretary-General on a supplementary list and communicated to the Council together with the supporting statements and such observations as the Secretary-General may wish to offer, including observations regarding the session of the Council at which the items might be taken up.

Rule 14

1. At the beginning of each regular session, subject to the provisions of rule 17 and after the election of officers when required under rule 20, the Council shall adopt its agenda for the session, on the basis of the provisional agenda and the supplementary list referred to in rule 13.

2. An organ of the United Nations, a Member of the United Nations or a specialized agency which has requested the inclusion of an item in the provisional agenda or the supplementary list shall be entitled to be heard by the Council, or by a committee appointed by it for the purpose, on the inclusion of the item in the agenda for the session.

3. In the case of an item placed on the provisional agenda or the supplementary list, at the request of the Council Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations under paragraph 2 of rule 10 or rule 13, the non-governmental organization which proposed the item to that Committee shall be entitled to be heard by the Council or by a committee appointed by it for the purpose, on the inclusion of the item of the agenda for the session.

4. The Council shall normally include in its agenda for the session only items for which adequate documentation has been circulated to members six weeks before the beginning of the session of the Council.

Rule 15

The Council shall allocate items between the plenary Council and committees, and may refer items without preliminary debate in the Council to:

(a) A specialized agency with the proviso that the specialized agency shall report at a subsequent session of the Council;

(b) One or more of its commissions, for examination and report at a subsequent session of the Council;

(c) The Secretary-General, for study and report at a subsequent session of the Council; or

(d) The proposer of the item, for further information or documentation.

Rule 16

The provisional agenda for a special session shall consist only of those items proposed for consideration in the request for the holding of the session, subject, when appropriate, to rule 20. It shall be transmitted to the authorities mentioned in rule 12 at the same time as the notice convening the Council.

Rule 17 [formerly rule 16]

During a session, the Council may revise the agenda for the session by adding, deleting, deferring or amending items. Only urgent and important items shall be added to the agenda of the Council during the session. The Council may refer to a committee any request for inclusion of an item in the agenda for the session.

[Former rules 17 to 32 are now numbered 18 to 33.]

VI. SECRETARIAT

Rule 34 [formerly rule 33]*

1. The Secretary-General shall circulate to the Council for its information at the beginning of its session immediately preceding the regular session of the General Assembly, an analysis, by fields of activity and by budget sections, of the estimated cost for the following financial year of the economic and social activities of the United Nations, prepared as an annex to his budget estimates.

2. Before a proposal which involves expenditure from United Nations funds is approved by the Council or by any of its committees, the Secretary-General shall prepare and circulate to members, as early as possible, a separate estimate of the cost involved in each such proposal. In the case of a proposal involving a new project, he shall also circulate to the members an estimate of the time required to complete it. The President of the Council and chairmen of committees shall draw the attention of members to these estimates and invite discussions on them when the proposal is considered by the Council or by a committee.

* Rule 34 (formerly rule 33), together with resolution 456 B (XIV), was adopted by the Council on 22 July 1952 (see E/SR.654). However, no decision was taken with respect to the coming into force of this rule.

3. The Council shall take into account the estimates referred to in paragraph 2 before adopting any proposal involving expenditure from United Nations funds. If the proposal is adopted, the Council shall indicate, whenever appropriate, the priority or degree of urgency which it attaches to the projects and as the case may be which current projects may be deferred, modified or eliminated to ensure that the economic and social work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies will be carried on most effectively.

4. Whenever the Council wishes to recommend, in cases of exceptional urgency, the work, for which no financial provision exists, be started before the next regular session of the General Assembly, it shall include a specific indication to that effect to the Secretary-General in the resolution approving the proposal.

[Former rules 34 to 41 are now numbered 35 to 42]

IX. RECORDS

Rule 43 [formerly rule 42]

Summary records of public meetings of the Council, its committees and subsidiary bodies shall be prepared by the Secretariat. They shall be distributed in provisional form as soon as possible to all members of the Council and any others participating in the meeting, who may, within three working days of their receipt by delegations and others participating in the meeting submit corrections to the Secretariat. Any disagreement concerning such corrections shall be decided by the President of the Council, or by the chairman of the committee or subsidiary body to which the record relates, after consulting, upon request of the representative concerned, the sound records of the proceedings. At the end of sessions and in other special circumstances, the President may, in consultation with the Secretary-General, on giving previous notice, extend the time for submitting corrections.

The summary records, with any such corrections incorporated, shall be distributed promptly to the members of the Council, to other Members of the United Nations and to the specialized agencies. Separate corrigenda shall not normally be issued. The summary records may be consulted by the public on publication.

Rule 44

The records of private meetings of the Council, its committees and subsidiary bodies, shall be distributed promptly to the members of the Council and any other Members of the United Nations participating in the meeting. They shall be made available to the other Members of the United Nations upon decision of the Council. They may be made public at such time and under such conditions as the Council may decide.

Rule 46 [formerly rule 43]

Sound records of the meetings of the Council and of its committees of the whole shall be kept by the Secretariat.

[Former rules 46 to 76 are now numbered 47 to 77.]

XV. PARTICIPATION OF AND CONSULTATION WITH SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

[former rule 77 is now numbered 78.]

Rule 79 [formerly rule 12]

Text of former rule 12 without change.

Rule 80 [new rule]

1. Where an item proposed for the provisional agenda or the supplementary list of items for a session contains a proposal for new activities to be undertaken by the United Nations relating to matters which are of direct concern to one or more specialized agencies, the Secretary-General shall enter into consultation with the agency or agencies concerned and report to the Council on the means of achieving co-ordinated use of the resources of the respective agencies.

2. Where a proposal put forward in the course of a meeting for new activities to be undertaken by the United Nations relates to matters which are of direct concern to one or more specialized agencies, the Secretary-General shall, after such consultation as may be possible with the representatives at the meeting of the other agency or agencies concerned, draw the attention of the meeting to these implications of the proposal.

3. Before deciding on proposals referred to above, the Council shall satisfy itself that adequate consultations have taken place with the agencies concerned.

Rule 81 [new rule]

Where items are placed on the provisional agenda or the supplementary list of items for a session with a view to the adoption of an international convention, the Secretary-General shall, at the same time as he is requesting governments for their comments on the proposed convention, consult the specialized agencies in respect of any provision of the proposed convention which affects the activities of such agencies and the comments of such agencies shall be brought before the Council, together with the comments received from governments.

[Former rules 78 to 85 are now numbered 82 to 89]

B. THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL¹⁵¹

Rule 19

The Trusteeship Council shall elect, at the beginning of its regular session in June, a President and a Vice-President from among the representatives of the members of the Trusteeship Council.

Rule 24

The Secretary-General shall transmit promptly to the members of the Trusteeship Council all communications which may be addressed to the Council from Members and organs of the United Nations and from specialized agencies. The Secretary-General shall also circulate promptly to the members of the Council communications from other sources, except those which are manifestly inconsequential, if they relate to the activities of the Trusteeship Council. Such communications shall be transmitted in full, unless their length precludes this, in which case the procedure set forth in paragraph 3 of rule 85 shall apply.

Rule 39

The Trusteeship Council shall vote by show of hands except that, before a vote is taken, any representative of a member may request a roll-call, which shall then be taken in the English alphabetical order of the names of the members of the Trusteeship Council, beginning with the member of the Trusteeship Council whose name is drawn by lot by the President. The name of each member shall be called and the representative shall reply "Yes", "No" or "Abstention". The result of the voting shall be inserted in the record in the English alphabetical order of the names of the members.

¹⁵¹ For complete text of the rules of procedure, see United Nations Document T/1/Rev.3, Rules of Procedure of the Trusteeship Council as amended up to and during its eleventh session (New York 1952). (U.N.P., Sales No.: 1952.I.19.)

Rule 41

The election of the President and Vice-President of the Trusteeship Council shall be taken by secret and separate ballot. The Council may decide that the election to any other office or function established by the Council shall also be taken by secret ballot.

Rule 72

1. The annual report of an Administering Authority prepared on the basis of the questionnaire formulated by the Trusteeship Council shall be submitted to the Secretary-General within six months from the termination of the year to which it refers.

2. Each report of an Administering Authority shall be considered by the Trusteeship Council at the first regular session following the expiration of six weeks from the receipt of the report by the Secretary-General, unless the Administering Authority concerned shall agree to an earlier examination of the report.

3. The Secretary-General shall transmit these reports without delay to the members of the Trusteeship Council.

Rule 84

1. Representatives of the Trusteeship Council engaged in periodic visits to Trust Territories or on other official missions authorized by the Council, may accept written petitions, subject to such instructions as may have been received from the Trusteeship Council. Petitions of this kind shall be transmitted promptly to the Secretary-General for circulation to the members of the Council. A copy of each such petition shall be communicated to the competent local authority. Any observations which the visiting representatives may wish to make on the petitions, after consultation with the local representative of the Administering Authority, shall be submitted to the Trusteeship Council.

2. The visiting mission shall decide which of the communications it receives are intended for its own information and which of these are petitions to be transmitted to the Secretary-General, pursuant to paragraph 1 of this rule, to be dealt with in accordance with rules 85, 86 and 90.

Rule 85

1. The Secretary-General shall circulate promptly to the members of the Trusteeship Council all written petitions received by him which contain requests, complaints and grievances seeking action by the Trusteeship Council.

2. Petitions concerning general problems to which the attention of the Trusteeship Council has already been called and on which the Council has taken decisions or has made recommendations, as well as anonymous communications, shall be circulated by the Secretary-General in the manner provided for in rule 24.

3. In the case of lengthy petitions, the Secretary-General will first circulate a summary of the petition, the original petition being made available to the Trusteeship Council. The original petition, however, will be circulated if the President of the Trusteeship Council, during the recess of the Council, or the Council, if it is in session, so decides.

4. The Secretary-General shall not circulate petitions which are manifestly inconsequential, a list of which, with a summary of their contents, shall be communicated to the members of the Trusteeship Council.

5. With respect to petitions relating to a strategic area, the functions of the Trusteeship Council shall be governed by Article 83 of the Charter and the terms of the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

Rule 86

1. Written petitions will normally be placed on the agenda of a regular session provided that they shall have been received by the Administering Authority concerned either directly or through the Secretary-General at least two months before the date of the next following regular session.

2. The date of receipt of a petition shall be considered as being:

(a) In respect of a petition which is presented through the Administering Authority, the date on which the petition is received by the competent local authority in the Territory or the metropolitan Government of the Administering Authority, as the case may be, and

(b) In respect of a petition received by a visiting mission the date on which the copy of the petition is communicated to the local authority in accordance with rule 84;

(c) In respect of a petition not presented through the Administering Authority, the date on which the petition is received by the Administering Authority through the Secretary-General. The Administering Authority concerned shall immediately notify the Secretary-General of the date of receipt of all such petitions.

3. In cases where the Administering Authority may be prepared to consider a written petition at shorter notice than is prescribed by the foregoing rules, or where, in exceptional cases, as a matter of urgency, it may be so decided by the Trusteeship Council in consultation with the Administering Authority concerned, such written petition may be placed on the agenda of a regular session notwithstanding that it has been presented after the due date, or it may be placed on the agenda of a special session.

4. The Administering Authority concerned shall, whenever possible, submit written observations on the petitions referred to in paragraph 1 of rule 85 within two months after the date of receipt. In the case of other petitions and communications upon which a decision is taken pursuant to paragraph 3 of rule 90, to apply the established procedures concerning petitions, the Administering Authority concerned, whenever possible, shall submit written observations within two months of the date of such decision.

Rule 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall establish a Standing Committee on Petitions of six members to undertake a preliminary examination of all written petitions and such oral petitions as may be referred to it by the Council in accordance with rule 80. The Council shall appoint at the end of each regular session three members administering Trust Territories and three members having no administering responsibilities to serve on the Standing Committee on Petitions until the close of the following regular session.

2. The Standing Committee on Petitions shall meet during sessions of the Council and, whenever it considers necessary, between sessions, normally approximately one month before each regular session of the Council.

3. The Standing Committee on Petitions shall decide which, if any, of the petitions referred to in paragraph 2 of rule 85 and the communications circulated pursuant to rule 24 shall have the established procedure concerning petitions applied to them. However, the Trusteeship Council may review the decision of the Standing Committee and decide that any of the petitions referred to in paragraph 2 of rule 85 and any of the communications circulated pursuant to rule 24 shall have the established procedure concerning petitions applied to them.

4. The Standing Committee on Petitions meeting between sessions may conduct, in consultation with the representative of the Administering Authority concerned, a preliminary examination of those petitions on which written observations by the Administering Authority are available, or which have been received by the Administering Authority at least two months previous to the date of the meeting of the Committee at which the examination is to be conducted. In particular it may formulate any questions to be submitted to the Administering Authority, or to the special representative, and may instruct the Secretariat to carry out studies or undertake such preparatory work as the Standing Committee may deem necessary. The Standing Committee on Petitions shall complete, whenever possible, its preliminary examination of petitions which the Administering Authority has agreed to have examined without the presence of a special representative.

5. The Standing Committee shall make a report to the Trusteeship Council on each petition to which the established procedure on petitions has been applied, together with its recommendations as to the action to be taken by the Trusteeship Council in each case. The Standing Committee shall also make such recommendations as it deems necessary concerning the consideration by the Council of the petitions referred to in paragraph 2 of rule 85 and the communications circulated pursuant to rule 24.

6. The Standing Committee on Petitions shall submit recommendations to the Trusteeship Council specifying petitions in respect of which special information on the action taken on the recommendations of the Trusteeship Council by the Administering Authority concerned is not required.

ANNEX III. STATES ACCEPTING THE COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Declarations made by the following States accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice (or made under the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and deemed to be an acceptance of the jurisdiction of the International Court for the period for which they still have to run) had not ceased to be in force in accordance with their terms at the end of 1952:

AUSTRALIA	COLOMBIA	HAITI
BELGIUM	DENMARK	HONDURAS
BOLIVIA	DOMINICAN	INDIA
BRAZIL	REPUBLIC	ISRAEL
CANADA	EL SALVADOR	LIBERIA
CHINA	FRANCE	LIECHTENSTEIN

LUXEMBOURG	PAKISTAN	THAILAND
MEXICO	PANAMA	UNION OF SOUTH
NETHERLANDS	PARAGUAY ¹⁵²	AFRICA
NEW ZEALAND	PHILIPPINES	UNITED KINGDOM
NICARAGUA	SWEDEN	UNITED STATES
NORWAY	SWITZERLAND	URUGUAY

Most of these declarations are for a specified period¹⁵³ and are made on condition of reciprocity; most of them have reservations attached.¹⁵⁴

In 1952 the only new declaration accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court was that of Liberia, signed on 3 March, subject to ratification. Certain reservations were attached to the declaration, which was deposited on 20 March.¹⁵⁵

ANNEX IV. ORGANIZATIONS AUTHORIZED TO REQUEST ADVISORY OPINIONS FROM THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

By the end of 1952 the following organizations were authorized to request advisory opinions from the Court:

Authorized in the Charter to request advisory opinions on any legal question:

General Assembly
Security Council

Authorized by the General Assembly in accordance with the Charter to request advisory opinions on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities:

Economic and Social Council
Trusteeship Council
Interim Committee of the General Assembly
International Labour Organisation

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization

International Civil Aviation Organization
World Health Organization
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
International Monetary Fund
International Telecommunication Union
World Meteorological Organization

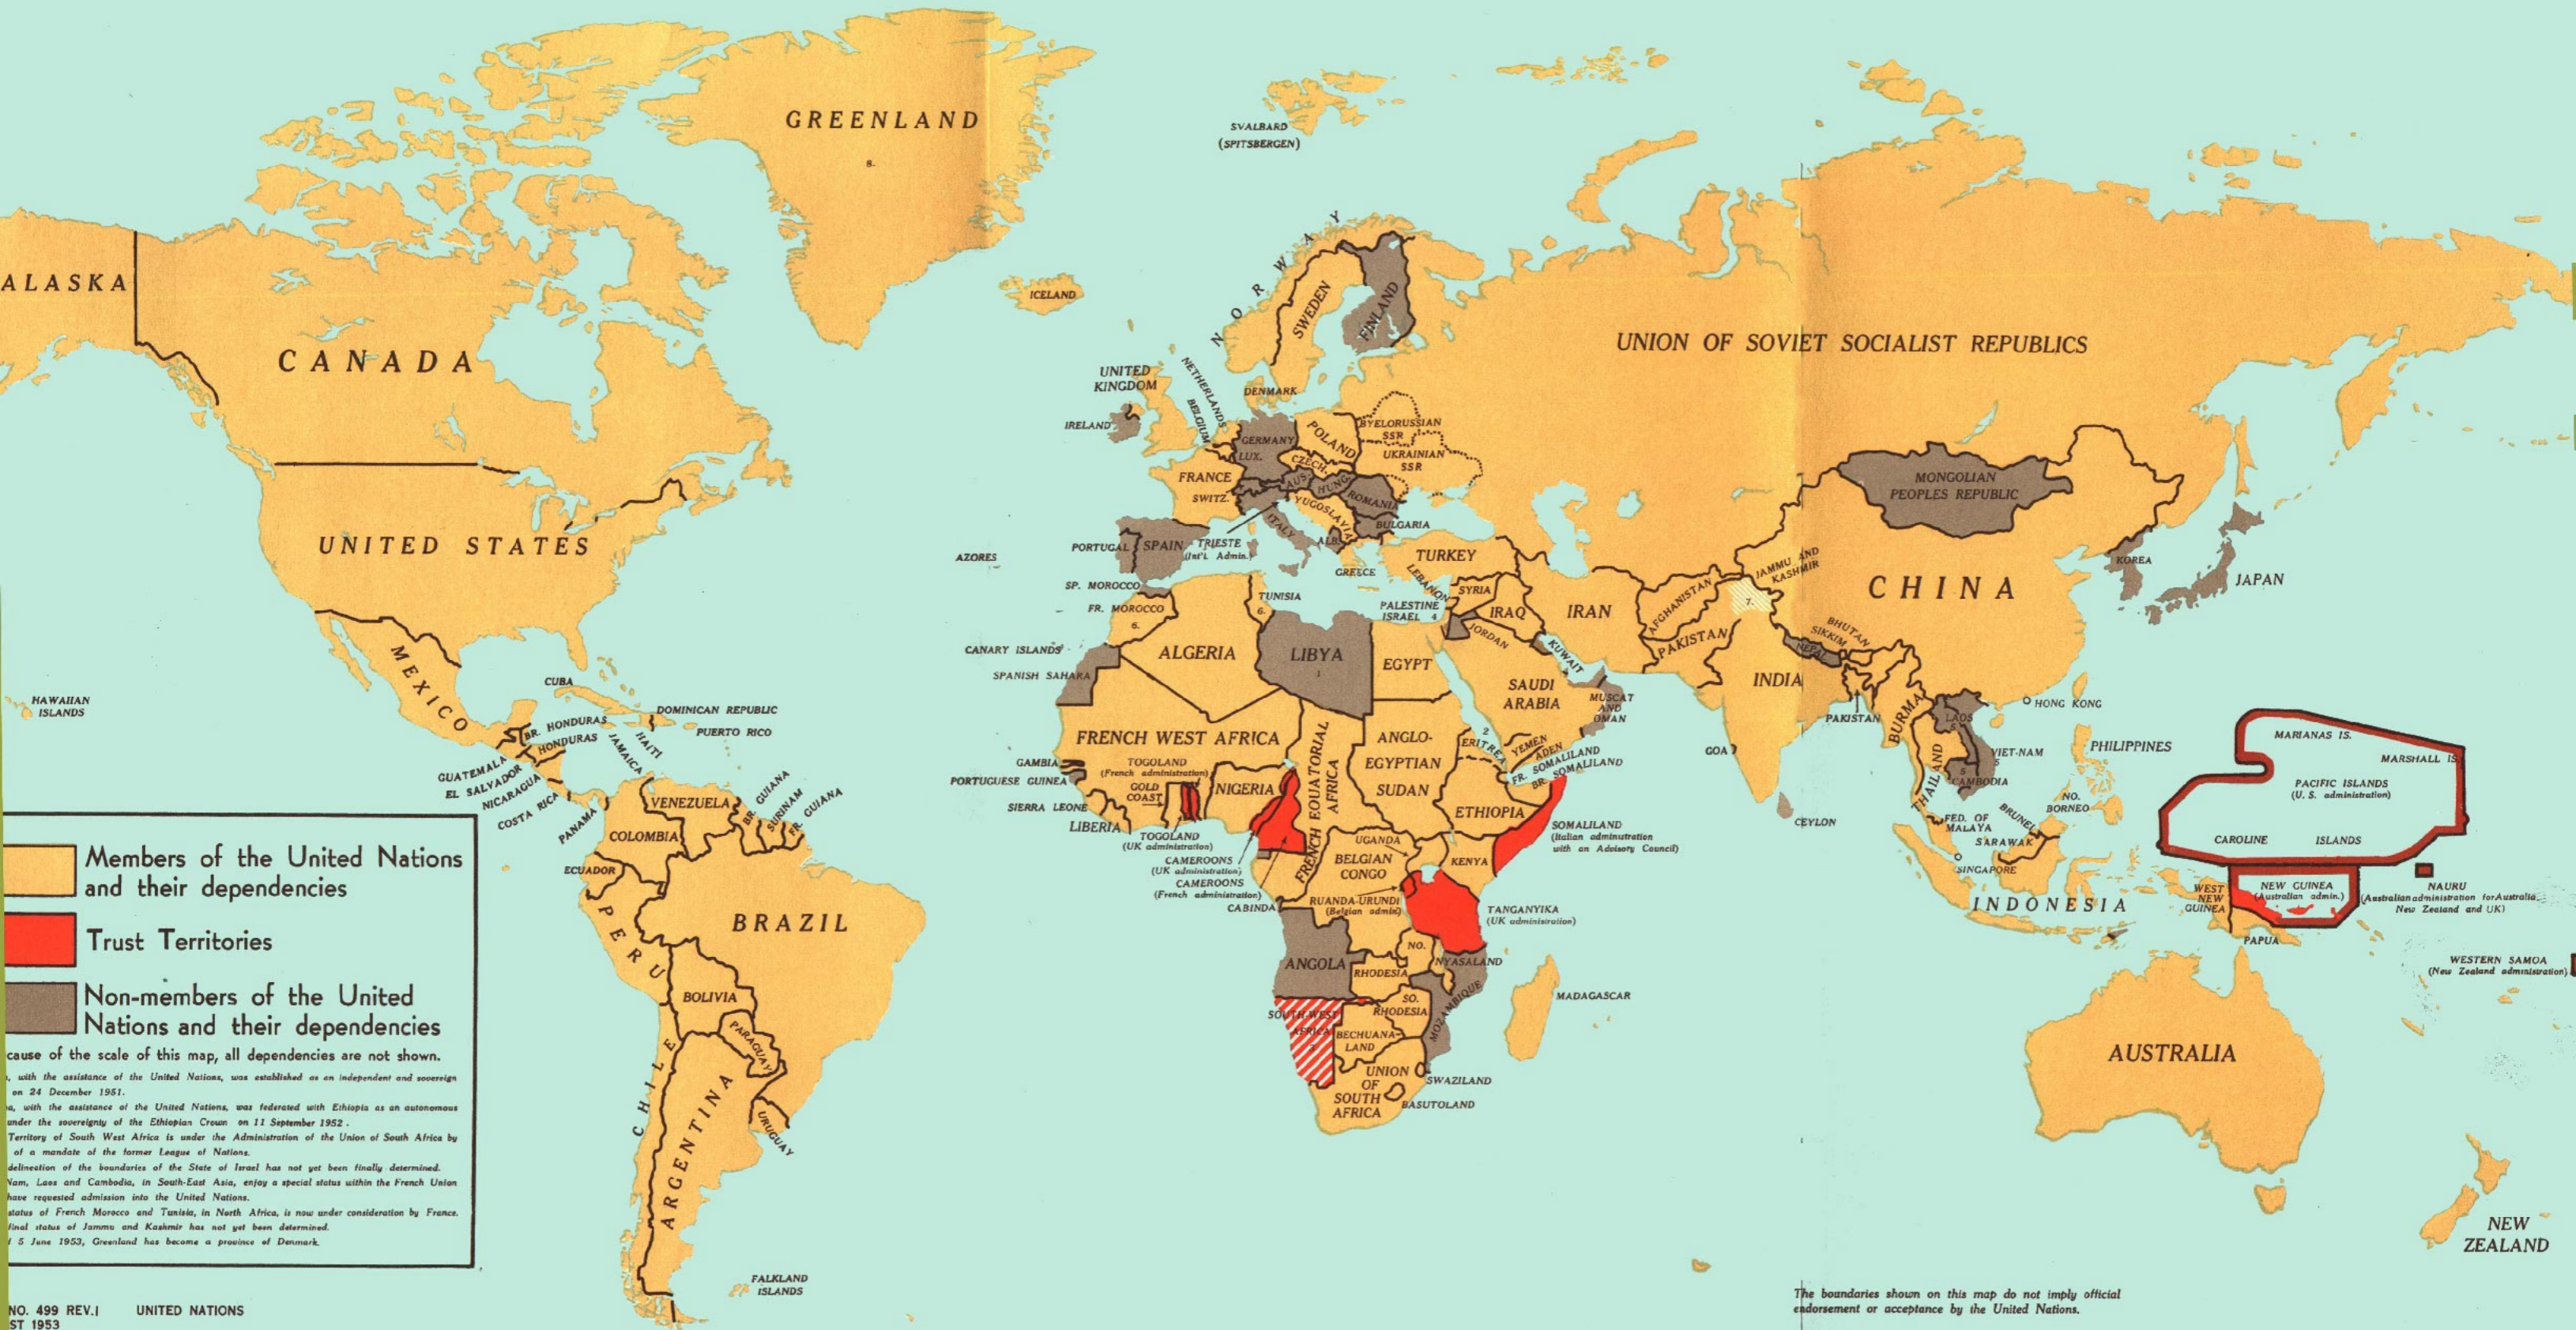

¹⁵² Paraguay's declaration was made without limitation of duration. It was withdrawn by Paraguay by a decision of 26 April 1938.

¹⁵³ For duration of declarations, see Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 123-24.

¹⁵⁴ For details concerning declarations, including conditions, see I.C.J. Yearbook, 1951-1952, pp. 186-197.

¹⁵⁵ This declaration was ratified in 1953.

MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND THEIR DEPENDENCIES*, AND TRUST TERRITORIES AS OF 31 DECEMBER 1952

Members of the United Nations and their dependencies Trust Territories
 Non-members of the United Nations and their dependencies

* cause of the scale of this map, all dependencies are not shown.
 ... with the assistance of the United Nations, was established as an independent and sovereign ... on 24 December 1951.
 ... with the assistance of the United Nations, was federated with Ethiopia as an autonomous ... under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown on 11 September 1952.
 Territory of South West Africa is under the Administration of the Union of South Africa by ... of a mandate of the former League of Nations.
 ... delineation of the boundaries of the State of Israel has not yet been finally determined.
 ... Yam, Laos and Cambodia, in South-East Asia, enjoy a special status within the French Union ... have requested admission into the United Nations.
 ... status of French Morocco and Tunisia, in North Africa, is now under consideration by France.
 ... final status of Jammu and Kashmir has not yet been determined.
 ... 5 June 1953, Greenland has become a province of Denmark.

The boundaries shown on this map do not imply official endorsement or acceptance by the United Nations.

ANNEX V. PRINCIPAL MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS SECRETARIAT
(As OF 31 DECEMBER 1952)

Secretary-General: Trygve Lie¹⁵⁶

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE
SECRETARY-GENERAL

Executive Assistant to the Secretary-General: Andrew W. Cordier
Director of Co-ordination for Specialized Agencies and Economic and Social Matters: W. Martin Hill
Director, Special Unit: Alfred G. Katzin
Acting Director of the Library: Edouard Rehman

DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL AND SECURITY COUNCIL AFFAIRS

Assistant Secretary-General: Constantin E. Zinchenko¹⁵⁷
Principal Director: Dragoslav Protitch¹⁵⁷
Director of General Political Division: Alfonso Garcia Robles
Director of Disarmament Affairs Group: Petrus J. Schmidt¹⁵⁸

DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Assistant Secretary-General: Guillaume Georges-Picot¹⁵⁹
Principal Director: Roy Blough
Director of Division of Economic Stability and Development: David Weintraub¹⁶⁰
Director of Fiscal Division: Henry S. Bloch
Director of Division of Transport and Communications: Branko Lukac
Director of Statistical Office: William R. Leonard
Secretary of the Economic and Social Council: Mehdi Vakil¹⁶¹

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE

Executive Secretary: Gunnar Myrdal

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR ASIA AND THE FAR EAST

Executive Secretary: P. S. Lokanathan

ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA

Executive Secretary: Raul Prebisch

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ADMINISTRATION

Director-General: Hugh L. Keenleyside
Deputy Director-General: Gustavo Martínez Cabanas
Director of Co-ordination and Planning: Arthur Goldschmidt
Director of Operations: George W. Cadbury
Director of Public Administration Division: H. J. Van Mook

DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS

Assistant Secretary-General: Guillaume Georges-Picot¹⁶²
Principal Director: Hussein Mohammed Asfahany
Director of Division of Human Rights: John P. Humphrey
Acting Director of Division of Narcotic Drugs: Gilbert Yates
Director of Population Division: P. K. Whelpton
Director of Division of Social Welfare: Miss Julia Henderson

DEPARTMENT OF TRUSTEESHIP AND INFORMATION FROM NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Assistant Secretary-General: Victor Chi-tsai Hoo
Principal Director and Director of Division of Trusteeship: Ralph J. Bunche
Director of Division of Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories: Wilfrid Benson

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INFORMATION

Assistant Secretary-General: Benjamin A. Cohen
Principal Director: Tor Gjesdal
Director for External Services: V. J. G. Stavridi
Director of Management and Circulation Division: G. J. Janecek
Director of Press and Publications Bureau: Wilder Foote

¹⁵⁶ Dag Hammarskjöld was formally installed as the second Secretary-General at the 426th plenary meeting of the General Assembly, held on 10 April 1953.

¹⁵⁷ The Secretary-General on 26 May 1953 announced that he had accepted the resignation of Mr. Zinchenko. At the same time, it was announced that the Secretary-General had appointed Ilya S. Tchernychev to complete Mr. Zinchenko's unfinished term of office which expires on 1 February 1954.

During the absence of Mr. Zinchenko from 9 July 1952 until the arrival of Mr. Tchernychev on 30 June 1953, D. Protitch has been in charge of the Department. D. Protitch is also in charge of the Administrative and General Division.

¹⁵⁸ Following the establishment of the Disarmament Affairs Group in March 1952, Petrus J. Schmidt, Chief of the European Affairs Section of the Department, was appointed Director of this Group. Mr. Schmidt died in December 1952, and his post had not been filled by the end of the year.

¹⁵⁹ The Secretary-General on 18 June 1952 announced that David Owen, Assistant Secretary-General in charge of the Department of Economic Affairs, would assume the Executive Chairmanship of the Technical Assistant Board on 1 August, and that Guillaume Georges-Picot, Assistant Secretary-General in charge of the Department of Social Affairs would, as of the same date, head the Department of Economic Affairs.

¹⁶⁰ David Weintraub resigned on 6 January 1953.

¹⁶¹ Mehdi Vakil formally assumed his duties on 1 January 1953. Previously Gilbert Yates had been Secretary of the Council.

¹⁶² Guillaume Georges-Picot is also the head of the Department of Economic Affairs.

Deputy Director of Press and Publications Bureau: Henri Fast
 Director of Radio Division: Peter Ayles
 Deputy Director of Radio Division: Carlos Garcia-Palacios
 Director of Films and Visual Information Division: Jan Gunnar Lindstrom
 Acting Director of Special Services: William Agar

BELGRADE—Director: Milan Hofman
 BUENOS AIRES—Director: Marco Gandasegui
 CAIRO—Director: Rahat Bokhari
 COPENHAGEN—Director: Viggo A. Christensen
 GENEVA—Director: Jerzy Szapiro
 KARACHI—Director: A. M. Ashraf
 LONDON—Director: George Ivan Smith
 MEXICO CITY—Director: Rafael A. Fusoni
 MONROVIA—Director: R. de Roussy de Sales
 MOSCOW—Acting Director: Leonid Pavlov
 NEW DELHI—Director: James B. Orrick
 PARIS—Director: Rubens Borba de Moraes
 PRAGUE—Director: Olav Rytter
 RIO DE JANEIRO—Director: Paul Vanorden Shaw
 SHANGHAI—Officer-in-Charge: Mrs. Elizabeth Tong
 SYDNEY—Director: Vernon Duckworth-Barker
 TEHERAN—Director: Abdollah Faryar
 WASHINGTON—Director: Arthur Sweetser

LEGAL DEPARTMENT

Assistant Secretary-General:¹⁶³
 Principal Director in Charge of the Legal Department (also in charge of Division of Immunities and Treaties): Constantin Stavropoulos
 Director of General Legal Division: Oscar Schachter
 Director of Division for the Development and Codification of International Law: Yuen-Li Liang
 Deputy Director of Division of Immunities and Treaties: W. W. Cox

CONFERENCE AND GENERAL SERVICES

Assistant Secretary-General: Shamaldharee Lall
 Principal Director: David B. Vaughan
 Director of Bureau of General Services: Byron F. Wood
 Chief of Communications and Records Division: E. D. Brodnax
 Director of Purchase and Transportation Division: F. A. Mapes
 Chief of United Nations Postal Administration: Reidar Tvedt
 Director of Bureau of Documents: Georges Peissel
 Director of Documents Control Division: Charles H. Le Bosquet
 Director of Language Services Division: Honorio Roigt
 Director of Publishing Division: David Zablodowsky¹⁶⁴
 Director of Buildings Management Service: Frank M. Begley

ADMINISTRATIVE AND FINANCIAL SERVICES

Assistant Secretary-General: Byron Price
 Executive Officer: Bruce R. Turner
 Co-ordinator of Construction, Headquarters Planning Office: James A. Dawson Medical Director, Health Service: Frank Calderone
 Acting Director of United Nations Field Operations Service: Carey Seward
 Director of Inspection Service: Frode Hansen
 Director of Bureau of Personnel: Georges Palthey
 Principal Director of Bureau of Finance: Hans C. Ander-

UNITED NATIONS OFFICE AT GENEVA

Director Representing the Secretary-General: Adrian Pelt

UNITED NATIONS INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S EMERGENCY FUND

HEADQUARTERS

Executive Director: Maurice Pate
 Deputy Executive Director: Eric J. R. Heyward
 Chief Executive Officer: Karl Borders
 Chief Medical Adviser: Dr. B. Borcic (WHO)
 Chief, Administrative Division: John T. Birkhead
 Comptroller: Stanley Sroka
 Chief of Programme Division: Myron Schmittlinger
 Chief of Supply Division: Edmund T. Bridgewater
 Chief of Public Information Division: Dickson Hartwell
 Chief of Reports and Proceedings Office: John J. Char-now
 Milk Conservation Co-ordinator: Donald B. Sabin
 Special Assistant to Executive Director: Bernard H. Fraser

UNICEF REGIONAL OFFICES

Regional Director, Asia Region: Spurgeon Keeny
 Regional Director, Africa, Eastern Mediterranean, and Europe: Charles Egger Regional Director, Latin America: Robert Davee

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE BOARD

Executive Chairman: David Owen
 Director of Programme Office: William McCaw
 Executive Secretary: Manuel Perez-Guerrero
 Special Representative of the Executive Chairman: James Keen

FIELD PERSONNEL

Acting Resident Representative (Haiti): Raoul Aglion
 Special Representative in Latin America (Uruguay, Paraguay, Argentina): Miguel A. Albornoz

Ivan S. Kerno, first Assistant Secretary-General, retired on 26 September 1952.

¹⁶⁴ Resigned 7 January 1953.

Resident Representative (Ceylon): J. P. Bannier
 Resident Representative (Afghanistan): Philip Beck
 Resident Representative (Israel): Sune L. Carlson
 Representative (Yugoslavia): Myer Cohen
 Resident Representative (Iran): Marcel DeBaer
 Resident Representative (Philippines): William Ellis
 Resident Representative (Colombia and Ecuador): Raymond P. Etchats
 Special Representative (Bolivia): Carter Goodrich
 Resident Representative (Pakistan): Sir A. MacFarquhar
 Liaison Officer (Australia and New Zealand): John R. Minter
 Resident Representative (Libya): Thomas F. Power, Jr.
 Resident Representative (Indonesia): John S. Reid
 Acting Resident Representative (Burma): J. P. B. Ross
 Liaison Officer in Beirut (Lebanon, Jordan, Iraq, Syria): C. W. Schuller
 Resident Representative (Burma): Francis R. Scott
 Resident Representative (India): Leon Steinig
 Resident Representative (Haiti): A. J. Wakefield
 Resident Representative (Turkey): Milton Winn
 Liaison Officer (Greece): Frederick Wormald

UNITED NATIONS KOREAN RECONSTRUCTION AGENCY

NEW YORK HEADQUARTERS

Agent-General: J. Donald Kingsley
 General Counsel: Alfred Davidson
 Assistant Agent-General and Chief of Division of Supply: John Goodison
 Director of Bureau of Finance and Services: Clyde Hysong
 Comptroller and Chief of Division of Finance: James McLean
 Director of Office of Public Information: Donald Pryor
 Director of Office of Budget and Management: Richard Youdin
 Chief of Division of General Services: Reginald Parminter

KOREA-HEADQUARTERS: KOREA

Director of Bureau of Rural Services: Donald Faris
 Chief of Division of Food and Agriculture: Burlin Hamer
 Executive Officer, Office of Chief of Mission: Thomas Jamieson
 Special Assistant, Office of Chief of Mission: Charles Lloyd Executive Officer, Office of Chief of Mission: Bert Sampson
 Deputy Chief, Office of Chief of Mission: William Shaughnessy
 Chief of Mission: John Wood

KOREA-UNCAACK

Advisor to the Bank of Korea: Prayad Buranasiri

TOKYO LIAISON AND PROCUREMENT OFFICE

Deputy Agent-General: Sir Arthur Rucker
 Chief of Bureau of Programme Planning: Russell McClure

GENEVA LIAISON AND PROCUREMENT OFFICE

Chief of Office: J. Franklin Ray

WASHINGTON LIAISON AND PROCUREMENT OFFICE

Chief of Office: John Coulter

UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE REFUGEES IN THE NEAR EAST

Director: John B. Blandford, Jr.
 Deputy-Director: Leslie J. Carver

II. Political and Security Questions

A. THE QUESTION OF KOREA¹

This chapter deals with: (1) reports of the United Nations Command in Korea submitted under the Security Council resolution of 7 July 1950;² as well as a special report to the General Assembly on the status of armistice negotiations (A/1882); (2) other communications relating to the Korean question; (3) the report (A/2187) of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK); (4) consideration by the General Assembly of the Korean question at the first part of its seventh session in 1952; (5) discussion at that session of the item "Complaint of mass murder of Korean and Chinese prisoners of war by the United States military authorities on the island of Pongam"; and (6) the report (A/2222 and Add.1 and 2) of the Agent-General of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency (UNKRA).

Consideration of the Korean question had not been completed when the General Assembly recessed the first part of its seventh session on 22 December.

1. United Nations Command Reports³

Reports of the United Nations Command operations in Korea were submitted by the representative of the United States to the Security Council, in accordance with the Security Council resolution (S/1588) of 7 July 1950. The following information on the progress of truce negotiations and of operations is taken from the reports.

a. TRUCE NEGOTIATIONS

At the beginning of 1952, truce negotiations between the United Nations Command and the Chinese-North Korean Command centered in the following three agenda items: item 3, "Concrete arrangements for the realization of a cease-fire and an armistice in Korea"; item 4, "Arrangements relating to prisoners of war"; and item 5, "Recommendations to the governments concerned."

Towards the close of 1951 agreement had been reached on the following points under agenda item 3: cessation of hostilities within 24 hours after the signing of the armistice agreement; withdrawal of armed forces from the demilitarized zone; and withdrawal of armed forces from coastal islands and territories controlled by the other side. Earlier—in November 1951—full agreement had been reached on item 2, relating to the demarcation line.

On 19 February 1952, agreement was reached on agenda item 5 concerning recommendations to governments. Initially the Chinese-North Korean side had proposed a political conference covering the whole range of Far Eastern problems to be held three months after the armistice agreement became effective. They proposed that the following matters be discussed at that conference: (1) withdrawal of all foreign forces from Korea; (2) peaceful settlement of the Korean question and other related questions. The United Nations Command delegation pointed out that it was a military negotiating team without authority to deal with political matters. It was, however, prepared to make procedural recommendations concerning a political conference to deal exclusively with Korean political problems upon the conclusion of an armistice. It could not consider recommending a discussion of matters not directly concerned with Korea.

The United Nations Command delegation accepted a revised Chinese-North Korean proposal recommending that within three months after the armistice became effective "a political conference of a higher level of both sides be held by representatives appointed respectively to settle through negotiations the questions of the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Korea, the peaceful settlement of the Korean question, et cetera". In agreeing to this recommendation, the United Nations Command representative made the following statement for the record concerning the understanding of this proposal by the United Nations Command:

¹ For map of Korea, see p. 213.

² See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 230.

³ Reports Nos. 37 to 60 of the United Nations Command operations in Korea: S/2550, S/2593 & Corr.1, S/2605, S/2619, S/2629, S/2662, S/2700, S/2715, S/2768, S/2774, S/2789, S/2805, S/2836, S/2837, S/2897, S/2898, S/2920, S/2970, S/2970-S/2972, S/2972, S/2982.

"First, we desire to point out that this recommendation will be made by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, to the United Nations as well as to the Republic of Korea. Second, in accepting the term Foreign Forces we are doing so on the basis of your statement that this term means non-Korean Forces, and third, we wish it clearly understood that we do not construe the word et cetera to relate to matters outside of Korea."

On agenda item 3, the following were the main points at issue between the two delegations:

(1) The United Nations Command delegation wanted the broadest possible access to all parts of Korea to assure against the increase of military strength. It offered corresponding facilities to the Chinese-North Korean side. The Chinese-North Korean side wanted to limit inspection claiming that it would be unwarranted interference in the affairs of North Korea.

(2) The United Nations Command proposed a prohibition applicable to both sides on the construction of new military airfields and a ceiling on the number of civilian airfields to be rehabilitated. The Chinese-North Korean side held that the provision would constitute an abridgment of sovereignty and insisted on unlimited airfield construction.

(3) The United Nations Command proposed a provision for the rotation of 40,000 persons per month in order to enable their personnel to be withdrawn from Korea when their tour of duty was completed. The Chinese-North Korean side insisted on a rotation figure of 30,000.

(4) The United Nations Command initially proposed that inspection regarding adherence to the terms of the armistice agreement relative to reinforcement should be carried on by joint teams of both sides. It accepted in principle, however, the proposal of the Chinese-North Korean side for the inspection to be carried out by a Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission. But the United Nations Command did not accept the Chinese-North Korean proposal that the USSR be accepted as one of the neutral nations.

By March 1952 agreement was reached on the following points:

(1) Inspection teams would be stationed at five ports of entry on each side and there would be ten mobile teams to investigate reported violations. The ports of entry agreed upon were:

Territory under the military control of the United Nations Command	Territory under the military control of Korean People's Army and the Chinese People's Volunteers
Inchon	Sinuiju
Taegu	Chongjin
Pusan	Hungnam
Kangnung	Manpo
Kunsan	Sinanju

(2) Both sides would cease, after the signing of the armistice, the introduction into Korea of reinforcing military personnel. However, the rotation of 35,000 military personnel a month would be permitted. Rotation personnel were to enter Korea only through designated ports of entry, under the supervision and inspection of the teams of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission.

No agreement was reached, however, on airfield construction and the composition of a neutral supervisory organization. On 25 February, the United Nations Command stated, in an effort to break the deadlock on this issue, it proposed four neutral nations—Sweden and Switzerland on the United Nations Command side and Poland and Czechoslovakia on the Chinese-North Korean side.

Discussion on the item relating to the exchange of prisoners of war began early in 1952, when the United Nations Command proposed that after the signing of the armistice all prisoners of war would be released, including soldiers of one side who had been impressed into the armed forces of the other side. As regards repatriation, the proposal permitted freedom of choice to the individual, ensuring that no duress or force would be used to influence him. The proposal provided for repatriation of prisoners of war, displaced persons and refugees. Finally, the United Nations Command said, its proposal provided for a supervisory organ, the International Committee of the Red Cross, to interview all prisoners of war, to ensure that, whatever their choice, it would be made "freely and without fear".

The Chinese-North Korean delegation, the United Nations Command stated, rejected these proposals, accusing the United Nations Command of attempting to keep prisoners of war in slavery, to hold them as hostages and to prevent the civilian population in the United Nations Command zone from being repatriated. At the same time, this delegation argued the right of an impressed soldier of the Republic of Korea Army to remain in the Chinese-North Korean forces.

The United Nations Command report (S/2593) covering the period 16 to 31 January stated that, with the gradual development of the discussion, the Chinese-North Korean representatives maintained an adamant position that the individual prisoner of war must be repatriated after an armistice, irrespective of his choice.

They insisted that the plain wording of the Geneva Convention supported their view. Without admitting it openly, the report said, they implied that the Geneva Convention was designed to protect the State rather than the individual.

In subsequent discussions, although the issue of voluntary repatriation remained unsolved, agreement was reached on the following points:

(1) Prisoners of war, when released from custody, would not again be employed in acts of war in the Korean conflict.

(2) Sick and injured prisoners would be repatriated first.

(3) The exchange of prisoners of war would be completed within two months.

(4) A committee of Chinese-North Korean Command and United Nations Command officers would supervise the exchange of prisoners of war.

(5) This committee would be assisted by joint Red Cross teams composed of representatives of United Nations Red Cross societies and Chinese-North Korean Red Cross societies.

(6) Korean civilians would be permitted to return to their homes on either side of the demarcation line.

(7) Foreign civilians would be permitted to return to their homes.

At the suggestion of the United Nations Command, the armistice negotiations went into secret session on 25 March when, the United Nations Command stated, it made its position on forced repatriation unmistakably clear. The Chinese-North Korean delegation indicated its willingness to negotiate but on condition that the United Nations Command would provide an estimate of the total number of persons the Chinese-North Koreans would expect to have returned to their side. The United Nations Command stated that, since no poll of the individual preferences had been taken, there was no basis for any reliable estimate of the number available for return. However, it reported, Chinese-North Korean insistence on a round figure compelled the United Nations Command to initiate a screening programme for all persons held in custody in the camps at Koje-Do and Pusan.

It gave the following account of the screening process:

During a 24-hour period prior to the screening, North Korean and Chinese Communist prisoners of war of each compound on Koje-Do were carefully informed of the fact that they would be interviewed for the purpose of determining whether or not they would forcibly oppose repatriation. The prisoners were briefed not only on the importance of this decision, which was to be final, but on the fact that for their own safety they should not discuss the matter with others or make known their decision before the individual interviews were held.

The interviews were conducted by unarmed United Nations Command personnel near the entrance to each compound. Each prisoner, carrying his personal possessions, was called forward individually and interviewed in private. Highly qualified personnel, it was stated, conducted the interrogations.

The series of questions used in the interview, the report said, was designed to encourage a maximum number of prisoners to return to the Chinese-North Korean side, not to oppose such return. The first question was designed to identify those who clearly desired to return. In the case of Chinese prisoners, the first question was: "Would you like to return to China?" In the case of North Koreans, the first question was: "Would you like to return to North Korea?" If the answer was in the affirmative, the prisoner was listed for repatriation without further questioning. Those who replied in the negative were subjected to additional questions designed to determine whether their opposition was nominal or whether they would violently oppose repatriation, the report said. The second question was: "Would you possibly resist repatriation?" If the answer was "No" the prisoner of war was listed for repatriation. If the answer was "Yes" the prisoner of war was asked four additional questions to determine fully his attitude. These were: "Have you carefully considered the important effect of your decision upon your family?" "Do you realize that you may stay in Koje-Do for a long time—even after those who choose repatriation have already returned home?" "Do you understand that the United Nations Command has never promised to send you to any certain place?" "Do you still insist on forcibly resisting repatriation?" And, finally, "Despite your decision, if the United Nations Command should repatriate you, what would you do?" The prisoner was listed for repatriation unless during the questioning he mentioned suicide, fight to death, braving death to escape, or similar intentions. As a result of these procedures, all prisoners of war were included among those to be repatriated except those whose opposition to return was so strong that they would attempt to destroy themselves rather than return to Communist control.

Prisoners of war and civilian internees in custody at the hospital compound in Pusan were screened under a similar procedure.

As a result of the screening, in which prisoners of war and civilian internees were interviewed to ascertain their decisions, it was estimated that approximately 70,000 prisoners of war and civilian internees would remain on Koje-Do to await repatriation to the Chinese-North Korean authorities following an armistice. This was the number reported to the Chinese-North Korean side.

Following the refusal of the Chinese-North Korean delegation to an exchange of prisoners of war on the basis of the results of the screening, the United Nations Command, on 28 April, offered a proposal covering the remaining differences on the arrangements for supervising the armistice, namely, rehabilitation and construction of airfields, the composition of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and the question of repatriation of prisoners of war. The proposals were:

(1) There would be no forced repatriation of prisoners of war.

(2) The United Nations Command would not insist on prohibiting rehabilitation and construction of airfields.

(3) The United Nations Command would agree to accept Poland and Czechoslovakia as members of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission if the Chinese-North Korean side agreed to accept Sweden and Switzerland (thus withdrawing their demand for the inclusion of the Soviet Union).

The United Nations Command reported that, in making this proposal, it made it clear that the proposal must be accepted as a whole. The Chinese-North Korean delegation accepted the second and third points but rejected the first which, according to the United Nations Command, constituted a rejection of the proposal. However, the United Nations Command held the proposal open.

On 6 July the Chinese-North Korean delegation stated that if, after rechecking and reclassifying lists of prisoners, the United Nations Command lists contained a reasonable total, including 20,000 Chinese prisoners, the question of exchanging prisoners of war would be settled. They further stated, the United Nations Command report said, that they considered a figure in the neighbourhood of 110,000 prisoners as a reasonable total for the United Nations Command to submit.

By this time, the complete results of the United Nations Command screening had become available. These figures totalled 83,000 prisoners, who would not oppose repatriation, including approximately 6,400 Chinese prisoners.

On 13 July the United Nations Command presented this new figure of 83,000. On 18 July the Communist side rejected this figure and restated its position of 6 July, but with the increased demand for 116,000 prisoners, including 20,000 Chinese People's Volunteers.

On 28 September 1952, at a meeting of the main armistice delegations, the United Nations Command delegation reviewed the proposals that it had offered for a solution of the prisoners of war question. These were as follows:

(1) On 23 April the United Nations Command had proposed that joint Red Cross teams from both sides, with or without military observers of both sides, be admitted to the prisoner-of-war camps of both sides to verify the fact that non-repatriates would forcibly resist return to the side from which they came.

(2) At the same time it had proposed that all prisoners of war of both sides be delivered in groups to the demilitarized zone and be given an opportunity to express their preference on repatriation. The verification was to be carried out by one or a combination of the following: the the International Committee of the Red Cross, teams from impartial nations, joint teams of military observers or Red Cross representatives from each side.

The same day the United Nations Command also made the following proposals:

"1. Both sides would agree that as soon as the armistice agreement goes into effect all prisoners of war of each side shall be entitled to release and repatriation, both sides agreeing that the obligation to exchange and repatriate prisoners of war is fulfilled by having them brought to an agreed exchange point in the demilitarized zone where the prisoner of war will be identified and his name checked against the agreed list of prisoners of war. However, both sides would agree that any prisoner of war who at the time of his identification states that he wishes to return to the side by which he had been detained shall immediately be permitted to do so and that that side will transport him from the demilitarized zone and not detain him as a prisoner of war but permit him to regain civilian status.

"2. Prisoners not resisting repatriation would be expeditiously exchanged. All prisoners of war who have indicated to the United Nations Command that they would forcibly resist repatriation will be delivered to the demilitarized zone in small groups where they will be entirely freed from the military control of either side and interviewed by representatives of mutually agreed country or countries not participating in the Korean hostilities and free to go to the side of their choice as indicated by those interviews.

"3. Prisoners not resisting repatriation would be expeditiously exchanged. Prisoners of war who have indicated to the United Nations Command that they will forcibly resist repatriation will be delivered in groups to the demilitarized zone and there entirely freed from the military control of either side and without questioning, interviewing or screening of any kind to be released and free to go to the side of their choice."

The United Nations Command delegation stated that it had also made it clear that the procedures contained in the three proposals could be carried out in the presence of, or under the observation of, one or a combination of (1) the International Committee of the Red Cross, (2) joint Red Cross teams, or (3) joint teams of military observers of both sides.

The reports (S/2898 and S/2920) for October referred to a Communist proposal of 8 and 16 October, according to which all Chinese prisoners and United Nations personnel must be repatriated. Captured personnel of the North Korean Army whose homes were in North Korea must also be repatriated, while those whose homes were in South Korea might return there. For captured South Korean Army personnel, corresponding arrangements were suggested.

The United Nations Command stated that it had rejected these proposals, since they constituted no real change in the enemy position. It held that the Communists had rejected the United Nations Command proposals of 28 September. No meetings of the armistice delegations were held between 16 and 31 October.

In its report (S/2971) for the period 16 to 30 November, the United Nations Command stated that the Chinese-North Korean Command had ignored a United Nations Command request that captured personnel in that Command's custody be permitted to receive individual parcels through the mail exchange which was then in operation. The reports for the period 1 to 15 December (S/2972) and for the period 16 to 31 December (S/2982) stated that the armistice negotiations had continued in recess.

b. INCIDENTS RELATING TO PRISONERS OF WAR

In its report (S/2593) covering the period 16 to 31 January 1952, the United Nations Command stated that the Chinese-North Korean side had claimed that its prisoner-of-war camp No. 8 at Kang-Dong had been attacked by United Nations Command aircraft and that 22 prisoners had been killed and 55 injured. The United Nations Command had lodged an immediate protest that the areas had not been marked in accordance with the Geneva Convention.

Later, agreeing to United Nations Command demands, the Chinese-North Korean delegation had presented data which, according to it, showed exact locations of prisoner-of-war camps in the Chinese-North Korean area. An investigation by the United Nations Command showed that on the date of the alleged occurrence, 14 January, United Nations Command aircraft had attacked military targets in that area but it could not be verified whether the camp had been attacked.

The report of the United Nations Command (S/2619) covering the period 16 to 29 February stated that, on 18 February, a riot believed to have been planned and led by Communists took place among Korean civilian internees on the island of Koje. It was put down by United Nations Command security troops. One American soldier and 69 inmates of the internment camp were killed. One American soldier was injured, 22 suffered minor injuries and 142 inmates were wounded. No prisoners of war were involved. The United Nations Command said that the rioters were nationals of the Republic of Korea and that the subsequent Chinese-North Korean stand that the matter concerned them was not supported by international law.

In its report (S/2629) covering the period 1 to 15 March the United Nations Command related that on 13 March an outbreak among North Korean prisoners of war had occurred at Koje island, as a result of which twelve prisoners of war died and 26 were wounded. One American officer and one Republic of Korea civilian were injured.

The United Nations Command report (S/2715) covering the period 1 to 15 May stated that prisoners of war culminated a long series of incidents, disorders and demonstrations against the United Nations Command by forcibly seizing, on 7 May, Brigadier-General Francis T. Dodd, the United Nations Commander of Koje-Do. The view was expressed that this action was taken primarily to offset the announcement by the United Nations Command that all but approximately 70,000 of the 132,000 prisoners of war held by it would forcibly resist return to Communist control.

The Communist prisoner-of-war leaders demanded certain conditions under which Brigadier-General Dodd was to be released. To avoid the bloodshed on a large scale which would have resulted if an attempt had been made to free General Dodd by the use of force, Brigadier-General Colson, the Acting Commander of Koje-Do acquiesced in the demands without proper authority. The ransom note thus forced from Brigadier-General Colson was, the report stated, deliberately misconstrued by the Communists as admitting the guilt of the United Nations Command as regards certain allegations of abuse and ill-treatment.

Following these incidents, the Commanding General, Eighth Army, was directed to take the steps necessary to ensure complete control of all prisoners of war at Koje-Do. On 10 June the United Nations Command began to distribute the prisoners of war into smaller, more separated compounds. This attempt was met by resistance from the prisoners who had armed themselves with improvised weapons. Most prisoners were evacuated without difficulty, but in one corner of Compound 76 some 1,500 prisoners had gathered in a group. They were brought under control by the use of tear-gas and concussion grenades. Total casualties were: one United States enlisted man killed and fourteen others wounded; 31 prisoners of war were killed and 139 wounded. It was significant, the United Nations Command noted (S/2774), that some prisoners were seen attacking the others.

The Commanding General, United Nations Prisoner-of-War Camp No. 1, in a personal report to higher headquarters, stressed that he himself had given both written and oral orders to Colonel Lee Hak Koo, North Korean Communist prisoner-of-war leader, to form his people into groups of 150. This order was ignored. After the compound was subdued, Lee and other leaders were segregated and the remainder of the strong pro-Communist compounds were also segregated and moved without resistance.

The United Nations Command reported that a survey of Compound 76 revealed that prisoners were armed with about 3,000 spears, 1,000 gasoline grenades, 4,500 knives and an undetermined number of clubs, hatchets, hammers and barbed wire flails. These weapons had been covertly fashioned from scrap materials and metal-tipped tent poles over a long period of time in preparation for armed resistance. One tunnel was under construction from Compound 76 to Compound 77. Entrenchments around each hut were connected from one building to another. In Compound 77 the bodies of sixteen murdered prisoners were found.

The United Nations Command report (S/2805) for the period 1 to 15 July stated that, concurrently with the movement of personnel who had been segregated for return to Communist control, construction of 500-man compounds continued at Chogu-ri, on the south-west end of Koje-Do, at Pongam-Do and Yonco-Do, small islands south-west of Koje-Do, and at Cheju City. Following orders for special vigilance, the commanding officer of the pro-Communist Chinese prisoner-of-war camp at Cheju City reported that plans had been uncovered to disrupt discipline in that camp. These plans included: (1) deliberate misunderstanding of orders; (2) ignoring instructions or explanations of camp supervisory personnel; (3) continued demonstrations and loud noise-making; and (4) surreptitious communications between compounds.

In its report (S/2836) covering the period 1 to 15 August, the United Nations Command stated:

"An investigation of an incident which occurred on 27 July 1952 at Nonsan, United Nations Prisoner-of-War Camp No. 16, housing North Koreans who had indicated they would violently resist repatriation to Communist control, produced the first evidence of possible pro-Communist infiltrators into the non-repatriate camps. Testimony taken from anti-Communist prisoners alleged that a group of North Koreans who had been shipped from Koje-Do were posing as anti-Communists in order to penetrate mainland camps to cause unrest and violence. It was further alleged that this group planned to assassinate anti-Communist leaders and later take over control of entire compounds. This situation resulted in the seizure of the agitators by prisoner leaders who interrogated them and attempted to force confessions of planned resistance, by beating them into submission. One prisoner died as a result of injuries and seven were evacuated for treatment. While conclusive evidence is lacking, camp authorities felt it appeared definite that this incident was anti-Communist counteraction against actual Communist agitators.

"A second incident on 30 July at Nonsan, which followed the general pattern of the 27 July foray, resulted in injuries to 24 North Korean prisoners. Interrogation of the injured by Counter Intelligence Corps and security personnel indicated that this incident was related to an internal struggle for power between pro- and anti-Communist elements. Investigation by United States personnel did not substantiate previous allegations of assassination plots. It was becoming apparent, however, that some Communist prisoners of war were in this camp with a deliberate purpose of creating trouble.

"A series of scattered incidents occurring at other prisoner-of-war installations did not appear to be part of an over-all resistance movement. Instead, they seemed to be unrelated, varying in degree of violence, and purely local in nature."

The United Nations Command report (S/2898) covering the period 1 to 15 October stated that the series of open acts of defiance which occurred during the latter part of September at United Nations Prisoner-of-War Camp No. 3, Cheju City, culminated on 1 October 1952 in a carefully planned attempt at open rebellion. In an attempt to restore order, two platoons forced their way into the compound and were immediately attacked by prisoners armed with rocks, spears, barbed wire flails and other hand-made missiles. Total casualties resulting from firing were: 56 prisoners dead, 91 injured and evacuated to the prisoner-of-war hospital at Pusan, and nine slightly injured. Nine United States troops were bruised by rocks or clubs.

The report noted that the inmates of these camps had been specifically warned the day previously that demonstrations celebrating Chinese Communist holidays during the period 1 to 3 October would not be permitted. Facilities were provided for the Press to take photographs of weapons used by inmates and to question the United States personnel involved.

Reporting for the period 1 to 15 November (S/2970) the United Nations Command described two incidents which, it said, provided further evidence of pro-Communist intelligence activities in prisoner-of-war camps. On 5 November two prisoners, apprehended while trying to escape from Camp No. 1 at Koje-Do, were found to have on their persons: six petitions addressed to Chinese and North Korean officials; a hand-drawn map of Korea; a map of Koje-Do indicating United Nations Command troop dispositions, as seen from the enclosure; a partial list of military units on Koje-Do; a diary of a Communist Party member; two home-made flags; and a crude compass.

During an interrogation of a prisoner of war at Koje-Do who had escaped on 17 October and was recaptured 19 November, the prisoner admitted he had delivered a package containing coded documents and petitions of a type similar to that mentioned above to a pre-determined individual at the Pusan railroad station. He was able to identify his contact by a peculiar manner of dress and three code words. The United Nations Command, thereafter, took measures to prevent "warfare through prisoners". The measures included dispersal of confirmed Communist prisoners into smaller groups, the strengthening of security forces and the evacuation of a nearby village and homes which had previously sheltered enemy agents. The report also noted other scattered incidents in pro-Communist camps.

On 6 December, the United Nations Command stated, a plan for a mass outbreak of prisoners was discovered. Coded documents were intercepted in several compounds. On 14 December, reports came to the commander of the camp that internees in two of the compounds were massing. Order was restored with a small detachment of United States and Republic of Korea guards.

c. MILITARY OPERATIONS

(1) Ground Operations

During the period of armistice negotiations no significant changes took place in front lines or troop dispositions. Ground action was mainly characterized by patrol clashes, probing attacks and raids which ranged from platoon to regimental strength.

On 12 May 1952, General Mark W. Clark succeeded General Matthew B. Ridgway as Commander-in-Chief of the United Nations forces in Korea.

Intermittently during the year the United Nations Command noted continued improvement in enemy combat capabilities although prisoner-of-war statements and other evidence pointed towards a predominantly defensive attitude. In June the United Nations Command reported that it had captured and retained, for fifteen days, critical and strongly held terrain features in the sector of the 45th Infantry Division. During the engagements the enemy suffered casualties estimated at 3,500. From 12 to 27 June strongly defended enemy positions in the sector of the 6th Republic of Korea Division were captured against strong enemy attacks. Confirmed enemy casualties were 207 dead and ten prisoners.

In August the United Nations Command reported definite increase in the amount of artillery and mortar fire employed by the enemy. The combined fire, it was stated, attained a record daily average of 8,700 rounds, with the unprecedented amount of 21,688 rounds fired in a single 24-hour period.

The heaviest ground action in over a year was reported by the United Nations Command in October, when hostile units of up to regimental strength struck a total of 40 United Nations Command positions on the western and central fronts. At the end of October, the enemy, at great cost, was reported to have taken and retained five positions. During these attacks, the report said, the enemy unleashed the largest volume of artillery and mortar fire since the beginning of hostilities in Korea. Over 93,000 rounds fell on United Nations Command positions on 7 October and the daily average rose to 24,000 rounds. In the latter part of October the United Nations Command reported increased enemy pressure on the central and western fronts, the majority of enemy attacks having been repulsed with heavy losses.

In November and December the United Nations Command did not report any major changes in the front lines but stated that there had been persistent heavy attacks on forward positions of the United Nations forces, in which often over 18,000 rounds of artillery and mortar fire were employed by the enemy. The reports said that the Chinese-North Korean campaign during November and December 1952 to retake and hold terrain features in the Kumhwa area continued, with heavy losses to the enemy. Positions such as those on Triangle Hill and Sniper Ridge temporarily captured by the enemy from the United Nations forces were, however, quickly regained.

(2) Naval Operations

United Nations Command Naval forces operating in the Sea of Japan, the Yellow Sea and the Gulf of Korea continued to blockade the Korean coasts and to shell coastal enemy transportation hubs and positions at both ends of the battle line. Coastal rail and highway routes and bridges were cut continuously by night and day attacks.

In February the United Nations Command reported the appearance of an increased number of enemy sampans and small craft attempting to run the coastal blockade. A total of 175 of these were sunk or damaged. An enemy attack on a friendly-held island was repulsed. During the year the enemy ports of Wonsan, Hungnam and Sonjin were kept under siege and the enemy forces in those parts were subjected to continuous fire.

United States naval auxiliary vessels, Military Sea Transportation Service and merchant vessels under contract provided personnel lift and logistic support for United Nations air, ground and naval forces in Japan and Korea.

Shore-based marine and carrier-based aircraft provided front-line units with close support and flew strike and reconnaissance sorties deep into enemy territory. These sorties destroyed or damaged gun and mortar positions and other military objectives.

In October the United Nations Command reported that United Nations Naval aircraft operating from fast carriers in the Sea of Japan had struck targets from the bomb-line to the Manchurian border. Further, Navy and Air Force planes and United Nations Command warships of the United Nations Command Joint Amphibious Task Force Seven bombarded enemy positions in the Kojo area. Intermittent enemy shore gunfire resulted in minor damage to two United Nations Command naval vessels.

On 21 and 24 October two destroyers were reported struck by enemy shore batteries. In one case seven United Nations personnel were killed and one wounded. In the second, no damage or casualties were suffered.

The United Nations Command report (S/2972) for the period 1 to 15 December stated that during the period 430 close and deep support missions resulted in destruction of many enemy bunkers, gun and mortar positions, and front-line supply areas. A major strike was made on 9 December against the four important supply centres of Hyesanjin, Munsan, Hunyung and Najin. During the period a strike was also made on the Kyosen No. 1 hydro-electric plant, resulting in heavy damage.

(3) Air Operations

The United Nations Command air offensive against North Korea was continued during the year, its primary objective being systematic interdiction of enemy rail and highway lines of communication, and destruction of the enemy's industrial war potential. Combat cargo aircraft continued to airlift high priority passengers, to evacuate patients and to provide emergency supplies to United Nations Command ground, air and naval units.

In February the United Nations Command reported greater activity on the part of enemy jet fighters and the appearance of large MIG-15 formations over North Korea.

In May the United Nations Command noted the appearance of enemy jet aircraft in smaller formations but at lower altitudes and more willing to engage in combat. United Nations Command pilots, the report said, noted a continued increase in the aggressiveness of enemy pilots.

In June the United Nations Command reported the largest aerial operation conducted by it since the beginning of the conflict in Korea. On 23 and 24 June, a combined naval and airforce attack was made on thirteen vital hydro-electric installations in North Korea. Simultaneous strikes were conducted against the power plants at Suiho, Chosen and Fusen. The United Nations Command stated that the Suiho installation on the Yalu River was reputedly the fourth largest in the world.

The United Nations Command reported the successful bombing of an iron-ore processing plant at Tasyudong on 20 October and a successful attack two days later on a lead and zinc-processing plant near Okung. Fighter bombers struck enemy supply points and other targets including bridges, gun positions, troop concentrations and railway lines; they almost completely destroyed the military school at Kumgang.

The United Nations Command report (S/2971) for the period 16 to 30 November stated that Sabre-jets of the United States Command air forces destroyed the 500th Russian-built enemy MIG-15 during the first week of the period. The month, the report said, brought to a close two years of jet aerial warfare with the Chinese Communists and North Koreans failing to produce an aircraft pilot team capable of seriously threatening United Nations Command air superiority. MIG losses, as compared to those of Sabre-jets, during these two years, the report said, stood at approximately eight to one.

d. ECONOMIC AND RELIEF ACTIVITIES

The United Nations Command report (S/2662) for the period 1 to 15 April stated that the dollar value of supplies and equipment actually delivered to Korea in support of the Korean economic aid programme from July 1950 to March 1952 by the United States Government agencies was $227 million. The supplies and equipment included the following:

(1) Supplies and equipment for direct relief and short-term economic aid under the United Nations Command programme from United States funds amounting approximately to $101 million.

(2) Supplies and equipment procured by the Economic Construction Agency during the period 1 July 1950 to 7 April 1951 for economic rehabilitation amounting to $26 million.

(3) Civilian supplies and equipment provided by the United Nations Command for common military-civilian purposes amounting, approximately, to $65 million. This category of supplies, the report stated, was provided as a military necessity, but was considered within the framework of Korean economic aid since the Korean economy derived considerable benefit from it. The projects included in this category were: construction and reconstruction of bridges and roads; rehabilitation and improvement of ports and harbours; rehabilitation of railroads; provision of rolling stocks, coal and operation supplies for the railroad; rehabilitation and improvement of communication facilities; and rehabilitation of public utilities such as water works, ice plants, electric power system and coal mines.

(4) Raw materials supplied for support of the Republic of Korea Army as a military requirement. These supplies, the United Nations Command report stated, were considered within the sphere of the Korean economic aid programme since the manufacture of end items in Korea supported Korean economy by sustaining industry, providing employment and easing restrictions on civilian supplies. On a conservative estimate, it was stated, $35 million worth of raw materials were delivered to Korea for this purpose.

The figure of $227 million, it was stated, did not cover the following: purchase of supplies and services in Korea; services of United States service troops in rehabilitation projects; power furnished from floating power barges and destroyer escorts; trucks; salaries of all personnel solely engaged in movements of refugees by ship, airplane, rail and trucks; salaries of all personnel solely engaged in Korean economic aid at all levels. The cost of such services was conservatively estimated to be over $225 million.

The United Nations Command estimated contributions of supplies and equipment delivered to Korea from other United Nations Member nations and non-governmental agencies to be $19,500,000. The total from 1 July 1950 to 15 March 1952 was estimated at $471,500,000.

During the same period, the United Nations Command reported, the progress in the construction of all types of houses under the National Housing Programme had continued: of the 19,644 family units planned, 6,475 were completed and 4,336 were under construction.

The United Nations Command reported (S/2768) that an Agreement on Economic Co-ordination between the Republic of Korea and the Unified Command was signed on 24 May 1952 at Pusan.

The Agreement provided for the establishment of a Combined Economic Board composed of one representative from the Republic of Korea, and one representative of the United Nations Command. Under the Agreement, the Unified Command would assist the Government of the Republic of Korea in ascertaining its requirements for equipment, supplies and services; and, within the limits of available resources, would provide food, clothing and shelter for the population, as necessary to prevent epidemics, disease and unrest. The Unified Command would also assist the Republic of Korea in rehabilitation projects.

Under the Agreement, the Government of the Republic of Korea agreed to take further measures to prevent inflation, hoarding and harmful speculative activities; to apply sound, comprehensive, and adequate budgetary, fiscal and monetary policies, including maximum collection of revenues; and to maintain adequate controls over public and private credit. It also agreed to promote wage and price stability, to make the most effective use of all foreign exchange resources and to maximize production for export.

In a complementary exchange of notes, the United States agreed: (1) to pay at the same rate for all won drawn by the United Nations forces and sold to United States personnel; and (2) to pay for all won expended by the United States for bona fide military purposes during the period 1 June 1952 to 31 March 1953. The United States also agreed that, as soon as practicable after 31 March 1953, it would make full and final settlement for all won used between 1 June 1952 and 31 March 1953 for bona fide military purposes. The Government of the Republic of Korea agreed to utilize the proceeds of the sale of foreign exchange or imports derived from the payments in accordance with principles contained in the Agreement. The above settlements, it was stated, were without prejudice to the settlement of any other claims arising from the provision and use of currency and credits for periods prior to 1 January 1952 for which settlement had not yet been made.

The report (S/2837) for 16 to 31 August referred to continued United Nations Command assistance to the Republic of Korea in obtaining maximum food production—this included the rehabilitation of the fishing industry. Because of the fighting and the fact that military installations occupied some agricultural lands, the crop yield for 1951 was about 5 to 10 per cent less than pre-war yields but the 1952 harvest was expected to be higher than the 1951 harvest. The United Nations Command expressed satisfaction with the distribution of food to refugees. During the period 25 June 1950 to 30 June 1952 a total of 554,599 long tons of grain, with a value of $75,194,140 was delivered to Korea through the United Nations Command, the report said.

A preliminary survey of crop-growing conditions and areas planted with rice and supplemental crops was conducted by a joint United Nations Command-Republic of Korea survey team during the period 29 August to 11 September. The survey was based on the recognition of four categories of land: (1) land under control of irrigation associations; (2) land under controlled irrigation; (3) land partially irrigated; and (4) non-irrigated land.

Upon completion of the first phase of the survey it was jointly agreed that 96 per cent (362,095 acres) of the land controlled by irrigation associations and that 97 per cent (682,002 acres) of other land under controlled irrigation had been planted with rice. It was further agreed that at least 75 per cent (407,264 acres) of land under partial irrigation had been planted with rice. The report noted that, normally, land in the first two categories accounted for about 68.5 per cent and land in the third category for approximately 23 per cent of the total amount of rice produced. Non-irrigated land normally produced only 8.5 per cent of the total. It was jointly agreed, the report said, that a large portion of this land should be reclassified as suitable only for dry-land crops.

The United Nations Command report (S/2970) for the period 1 to 15 November stated that under the terms of the Economic Co-ordination Agreement of 24 May 1952 the United States Government on 7 November paid $17,987,671.43 to the Republic of Korea. This amount represented a $4 million monthly payment on account for won expended for bona fide military uses from June to September, together with payment for won sold to troops during the period from May to August. On 12 December the United States paid a further $8,552,225. This, the fourth such payment, brought the total to $74,190,444.

The report said that preliminary results of the crop survey conducted to estimate the Republic of Korea rice crop for the current food year indicated, according to the United Nations Command members of the team, that approximately 13 million suk of brown rice would be produced (1 suk=5.12 bushels). The report said that during the period 1940-44 the annual average rice production was 13,718,516 suk, and that during the period 1946-50 the annual average was 14,145,444 suk. By comparison with these figures for previous years, the estimate for the year's crop showed that the Republic of Korea rice production would be approximately normal.

The United Nations Command report (S/2971) for the period 16 to 30 November stated that at a meeting of the Combined Economic Board, held on 19 November, a joint proposal was made for the free allocation of veterinary drugs and supplies to establish and maintain 200 veterinary clinics in Korea for six months to treat animal disease and conserve livestock. It was estimated that in six months' time the clinics would be able to begin paying an increasing percentage of the cost of supplies.

A seminar-workshop programme was being held during the reporting period in Pusan for 180 educators from all provinces of the Republic of Korea. Conducted by members of the American Education Mission, the seminars covered five major areas of education, including: teaching and learning; fundamental philosophy of education; administration; and child development and guidance. The six members of the American Education Mission, who were recruited for the Unitarian Services Committee, were to spend nine months in Korea on a technical assistance programme.

An appropriation of $1,845,000 was made by the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency for an orphans' programme, the Unified Command reported. Projects to be financed by this appropriation were prepared by the Joint United Nations Civil Assistance Command Korea-United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency-Republic of Korea Child Welfare Committee, which was established on 6 October for the purpose of studying, analyzing and co-ordinating child welfare plans and activities. Three projects were proposed, which included: the establishment of a child welfare centre and a rational model and training institution in each province; extension and improvement of the best existing educational institutions; and the establishment of three vocational training institutions.

The report (S/2982) covering the period 16 to 31 December stated that civilian relief supplies delivered by the United Nations for use in Korea as of 30 November 1952 totalled $243,978,485.

The United States Government had furnished goods valued at $218,910,952. United Nations Members and other free nations had contributed an additional $11,667,350; United States voluntary agencies had contributed $10,952,657; and United Nations voluntary agencies $2,447,526.

The report further said that UNKRA had accepted a procurement request from the United Nations Civil Assistance Command for the purchase of a hundred "Land Crete" machines to manufacture brick-shaped earth blocks and tile from indigenous materials on sites where a building programme was being conducted. Delivery of the machines would facilitate a much more comprehensive building programme.

The first group of Republic of Korea merchant seamen arrived on 17 November at Yokusuka, Japan, for merchant marine training to be given by the United Nations Command. The programme provides for the training of 480 Republic of Korea seamen during the next twelve months.

e. PUBLIC HEALTH ACTIVITIES

Reviewing public health conditions, the United Nations Command stated that during the North Korean advance up to Pusan in 1950, the invaders had stripped all hospitals and dispensaries and kidnapped doctors and nurses to North Korea. In addition to these inroads, the Republic of Korea Army, of necessity, utilized all hospitals and many public buildings as emergency hospitals during the first year of the war. Doctors were drafted to serve in the Republic of Korea Army.

To meet this emergency, shipments were made from Japan and the United States, principally by air transport, of substantial quantities of drugs, vaccines, serums, anti-biotic preparations and human blood plasma, together with surgical supplies.

Public health medical facilities, it was reported, had grown from emergency front-line military first aid and evacuation stations to a current programme of 491 dispensaries and 97 hospitals having 9,200 bed spaces. The daily "in-patient" load in June was reported to be 6,000 and the monthly "out-patient" load approximately 910,000. Four-and-a-half million patients had been treated since January 1952. In addition, there was one mobile hospital (40-bed capacity) for civilians in each United States combat corps area and one civilian dispensary in each United States division area.

Equipment and supplies for X-ray diagnosis were furnished to rehabilitate X-ray service in hospitals. In addition, equipment and supplies for nation-wide diagnostic laboratory service for civilians were furnished by the United Nations Command.

Supplies and equipment for 500 small medical teams were distributed throughout Korea in the early part of 1952. These medical teams, located in new urban areas, did the bulk of medical relief and immunization work in Korea, it was stated.

As a result of sanitation work by the United Nations Command no epidemics of insect-borne or filth diseases had occurred in South Korea. Deaths from typhoid averaged only 22 per month during the first four months of 1952, as compared with 1,669 per month in 1951; from smallpox 37 per month, as compared with 1,032 per month in 1951; and typhus eighteen per month, as compared with 433 per month in 1951. No cases of cholera occurred during 1952. The United Nations Command attributed the decline in death rate to mass immunization programmes conducted in 1951.

f. SPECIAL REPORT BY THE UNIFIED COMMAND

On 18 October 1952 the Unified Command under the United States transmitted to the Secretary-General a special report (A/2228) on the status of the military action and the armistice negotiations in Korea for circulation to the Members of the General Assembly. The report briefly surveyed the course of military operations in Korea and stated that, at the time of reporting, the United Nations forces faced a Chinese-North Korean army of over a million men, mainly Chinese Communist forces, deployed in depth. These forces, the report said, were well equipped with artillery, tanks and other heavy military equipment. They had at their disposal an air force of 2,000 planes, mostly jet-engined, flown by competent pilots and based in Manchuria, from which they attacked United Nations aircraft operating within Korea.

The report further stated that the United Nations Command had not, as alleged in Communist propaganda accusations, attacked any territory outside Korea nor used bacteriological or chemical warfare weapons. The military operations of the United Nations Command had been conducted with the maximum respect for humanitarian considerations and for the lives of civilians. The report also surveyed briefly the course of armistice negotiations in Korea and contained the text of the draft armistice agreement which had been worked out by both sides, covering all agreed points (for text see below).

It reiterated the willingness of the United Nations Command to continue negotiations and concluded by stating that the United Nations Command with the forces currently at its disposal was confident of its ability to contain a Chinese-North Korean offensive, should the Chinese-North Korean authorities choose that course of action.

It stressed, however, the importance of additional forces for the continued effectiveness of the United Nations forces.

ANNEX. DRAFT ARMISTICE AGREEMENT

REVISION OF 29 AUGUST 1952

The Unified Command in its special report of 18 October, to which was annexed the draft armistice agreement, stated as follows with regard to the Draft Agreement:

The attached draft agreement has no official status.

With the exception of the paragraphs noted below, the provisions of the attached draft armistice agreement have been tentatively agreed to by representatives of the United Nations Command and of the North Korean and Chinese Communist military authorities.

Paragraphs 51 and 54: The United Nations Command agreed to incorporate these paragraphs in the attached draft on the understanding that they would be interpreted in such a way as not to require the forcible repatriation of prisoners of war. The United Nations Command tentatively agreed to the wording of Article 51 on condition that the Communists agree that prisoners of war who would forcibly resist repatriation should not be considered as "held in the custody of each side at the time that this armistice agreement becomes effective", and that their names should not be included on the "lists which have been exchanged". The Communists have refused to agree to this interpretation, and have continued to insist on an agreement which would compel the United Nations Command to use force to repatriate prisoners who would violently resist repatriation. In the event of agreement on any one of the alternatives proposed by the United Nations Command on September 28, 1952, paragraphs 51 and 54 would require further amendment.

Paragraphs 13 and 37: In accordance with the UNC proposal of April 28, the texts of paragraph 13 and paragraph 37 are only conditionally agreed upon. The United Nations Command has made its agreement to the omission from paragraph 13 of a limitation on the construction and rehabilitation of military airfields conditional on Communist agreement to the United Nations Command position on prisoners of war (as set forth above) and on the composition of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission in paragraph 37. The Communists stated that they would agree to the United Nations Command position on the composition of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission if the United Nations Command would drop its insistence on the limitation on construction and rehabilitation of military airfields in paragraph 13. They did not, however, agree to the United Nations Command position on prisoners of war.

ARMISTICE

Agreement between the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, on the one hand, and the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, on the other hand, concerning a military armistice in Korea.

PREAMBLE

The undersigned, the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, on the one hand, and the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, on the other hand, in the interest of stopping the Korean conflict, with its great toll of suffering and bloodshed on both sides, and with the objective of establishing an armistice which will insure a complete cessation of hostilities and of all acts of armed force in Korea until a final peaceful settlement is achieved, do individually, collectively, and mutually, agree to accept and to be bound and governed by the conditions and terms of armistice set forth in the following articles and paragraphs, which said conditions and terms are intended to be purely military in character and to pertain solely to the belligerents in Korea.

ARTICLE I

MILITARY DEMARCATION LINE AND DEMILITARIZED ZONE*

1. It is agreed that a Military Demarcation Line shall be fixed and that both sides shall withdraw two (2) kilometers from this line so as to establish a Demilitarized Zone between the opposing forces. It is also agreed that a Demilitarized Zone shall be established as a buffer zone to prevent the occurrence of incidents which might lead to a resumption of hostilities.
2. The Military Demarcation Line is located as indicated on the attached map (Map 1). The Military Demarcation Line is described by terrain features and by latitude and longitude in Annex A attached hereto.
3. The Demilitarized Zone is defined by a northern and a southern boundary as indicated on the attached map (Map 1). The northern boundary is described by latitude and longitude in Annex B attached hereto. The southern boundary is described by latitude and longitude in Annex C attached hereto.
4. The Military Demarcation Line shall be plainly marked as directed by the Military Armistice Commission hereinafter established. The Commanders of the opposing sides shall have suitable markers erected along the boundary between the Demilitarized Zone and their respective areas. The Military Armistice Commission shall supervise the erection of all markers placed along the Military Demarcation Line and along the boundaries of the Demilitarized Zone.
5. The waters of the Han River Estuary shall be open to civil shipping of both sides wherever one bank is controlled by one side and the other bank is controlled by the other side. The Military Armistice Commission shall prescribe rules for the shipping in that part of the Han River Estuary indicated on the attached may (Map 2). Civil shipping of each side shall have unrestricted access to the land under the military control of that side.

* The maps and the annexes referred to below are not included in the present volume.

6. Neither side shall execute any hostile act within, from, or against the Demilitarized Zone.

7. No person, military or civilian, shall be permitted to cross the Military Demarcation Line unless specifically authorized to do so by the Military Armistice Commission.

8. No person, military or civilian, in the Demilitarized Zone shall be permitted to enter the territory under the military control of either side unless specifically authorized to do so by the Commander into whose territory entry is sought.

9. No person, military or civilian, shall be permitted to enter the Demilitarized Zone except persons concerned with the conduct of civil administration and relief and persons specifically authorized to enter by the Military Armistice Commission.

10. Civil administration and relief in that part of the Demilitarized Zone which is south of the Military Demarcation Line shall be the responsibility of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command; and civil administration and relief in that part of the Demilitarized Zone which is north of the Military Demarcation Line shall be the joint responsibility of the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers. The number of persons, military or civilian, from each side who are permitted to enter the Demilitarized Zone for the conduct of civil administration and relief shall be as determined by the respective Commanders, but in no case shall the total number authorized by either side exceed one thousand (1,000) persons at any one time. The number of civil police and the arms to be carried by them shall be as prescribed by the Military Armistice Commission. Other personnel shall not carry arms unless specifically authorized to do so by the Military Armistice Commission.

11. Nothing contained in this article shall be construed to prevent the complete freedom of movement to, from, and within the Demilitarized Zone by the Military Armistice Commission, its assistants, its Joint Observer Teams with their assistants, the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission hereinafter established, its assistants, its Neutral Nations Inspection Teams with their assistants, and of any other persons, materials, and equipment specifically authorized to enter the Demilitarized Zone by the Military Armistice Commission. Convenience of movement shall be permitted through the territory under the military control of either side over any route necessary to move between points within the Demilitarized Zone where such points are not connected by roads lying completely within the Demilitarized Zone.

ARTICLE II

CONCRETE ARRANGEMENTS FOR CEASE-FIRE AND ARMISTICE

A. General

12. The Commanders of the opposing sides shall order and enforce a complete cessation of all hostilities in Korea by all armed forces under their control, including all units and personnel of the ground, naval, and air forces, effective twelve (12) hours after this Armistice Agreement is signed. (See paragraph 63 hereof for effective date and hour of the remaining provisions of this Armistice Agreement).

13. In order to insure the stability of the Military Armistice so as to facilitate the attainment of a peaceful settlement through the holding by both sides of a political conference of a higher level, the Commanders of the opposing sides shall:

(a) Within seventy-two (72) hours after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, withdraw all of their military forces, supplies, and equipment and destroy all fortifications in the Demilitarized Zone except as provided herein. All demolitions, minefields, wire entanglements, and other hazards to the safe movement of personnel of the Military Armistice Commission or its Joint Observer Teams, known to exist within the Demilitarized Zone after the withdrawal of military forces therefrom, shall be reported to the Military Armistice Commission by the Commander of the side whose forces emplaced such hazards. All such hazards shall be removed from the Demilitarized Zone as directed by and under the supervision of the Military Armistice Commission. Thereafter, except for such units of a police nature as may be specifically requested by the Military Armistice Commission and agreed to by the Commanders of the opposing sides, and except for personnel authorized under paragraphs 10 and 11 hereof, no personnel of either side shall be permitted to enter the Demilitarized Zone.

(b) Within five (5) days after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, withdraw all of their military forces, supplies, and equipment from the rear and the coastal islands and waters of Korea of the other side. If such military forces are not withdrawn within the stated time limit, and there is no mutually agreed and valid reason for the delay, the other side shall have the right to take any action which it deems necessary for the maintenance of security and order. The term "coastal islands" as used above, refers to those islands which, though occupied by one side at the time when this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, were controlled by the other side on 24 June 1950; provided, however, that all the islands lying to the north and west of the provincial boundary line between HWANGHAE-DO and KYONGGI-DO shall be under the military control of the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, except the island groups of PAENGYONG-DO (37°58'N, 124°40'E), TAECHONG-DO (37°50'N, 124°42'E), SOCHONG-DO (37°46'N, 124°46'E), YONPYONG-DO (37°38'N, 125°40'E) and U-DO (37°36'N, 125°58'E) and which shall remain under the military control of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command. All the islands on the west coast of Korea lying south of the above-mentioned boundary line shall remain under the military control of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command. (See Map 3).

(c) Cease the introduction into Korea of reinforcing military personnel; provided, however, that the rotation of units and personnel, the arrival in Korea of personnel on a temporary duty basis, and the return to Korea of personnel after short periods of leave or temporary duty outside of Korea shall be permitted within the scope prescribed below. "Rotation" is defined as the replacement of units or personnel by other units or personnel who are commencing a tour of duty in Korea. Rotation personnel shall be introduced into Korea only through the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof.

Rotation shall be conducted on a man-for-man basis; provided, however, that no more than thirty-five thousand (35,000) persons in the military service shall be admitted into Korea by either side in any calendar month under the rotation policy. No military personnel of either side shall be introduced into Korea if the introduction of such personnel will cause the aggregate of the military personnel of that side admitted into Korea since the effective date of this Armistice Agreement to exceed the cumulative total of the military personnel of that side who have departed from Korea since that date. Reports concerning arrivals in and departures from Korea of military personnel shall be made daily to the Military Armistice Commission and the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission; such reports shall include places of arrival and departure and the number of persons arriving at or departing from each such place. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, through its Neutral Nations Inspection Teams, shall conduct supervision and inspection of the rotation of units and personnel authorized above, at the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof.

(d) Cease the introduction into Korea of reinforcing combat aircraft, armored vehicles, weapons, and ammunition; provided, however, that combat aircraft, armored vehicles, weapons, and ammunition which are destroyed, damaged, worn out, or used up during the period of the armistice may be replaced on the basis of piece-for-piece of the same effectiveness and the same type. Such combat aircraft, armored vehicles, weapons, and ammunition, shall be introduced into Korea only through the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof. In order to justify the requirement for combat aircraft, armored vehicles, weapons, and ammunition to be introduced into Korea for replacement purposes, reports concerning every incoming shipment of these items shall be made to the Military Armistice Commission and the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission; such reports shall include statements regarding the disposition of the items being replaced. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, through its Neutral Nations Inspection Teams, shall conduct supervision and inspection of the replacement of combat aircraft, armored vehicles, weapons, and ammunition authorized above, at the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof.

(e) Insure that personnel of their respective commands who violate any of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement are adequately punished.

(f) In those cases where places of burial are a matter of record and graves are actually found to exist, permit graves registration personnel of the other side to enter, within a definite time limit after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, the territory of Korea under their military control, for the purpose of proceeding to such graves to recover and evacuate the bodies of the deceased military personnel of that side, including deceased prisoners of war. The specific procedures and the time limit for the performance of the above task shall be determined by the Military Armistice Commission. The Commanders of the opposing sides shall furnish to the other side all available information pertaining to the places of burial of the deceased military personnel of the other side.

(g) Afford full protection and all possible assistance and cooperation to the Military Armistice Commission, its Joint Observer Teams, the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, and its Neutral Nations Inspection Teams, in the carrying out of their functions and responsibilities hereinafter assigned; and accord to the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, and to its Neutral Nations Inspection Teams, full convenience of movement between the headquarters of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof over main lines of communication agreed upon by both sides (Map 4), and between the headquarters of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and the places where violations of this Armistice Agreement have been reported to have occurred. In order to prevent unnecessary delays, the use of alternate routes and means of transportation will be permitted whenever the main lines of communication are closed or impassable,

(h) Provide such logistic support, including communications and transportation facilities as may be required by the Military Armistice Commission and the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and their Teams.

(i) Jointly construct, operate and maintain a suitable airfield at the site of the headquarters of the Military Armistice Commission, for such uses as the Commission may determine.

14. This Armistice Agreement shall apply to all opposing ground forces under the military control of either side, which ground forces shall respect the Demilitarized Zone and the area of Korea under the military control of the opposing side.

15. This Armistice Agreement shall apply to all opposing naval forces, which naval forces shall respect the waters contiguous to the Demilitarized Zone and to the land area of Korea under the military control of the opposing side, and shall not engage in blockade of any kind of Korea.

16. This Armistice Agreement shall apply to all opposing air forces, which air forces shall respect the air space over the Demilitarized Zone and over the area of Korea under the military control of the opposing side, and over the waters contiguous to both.

17. Responsibility for compliance with and enforcement of the terms and provisions of this Armistice Agreement is that of the signatories hereto and their successors in command. The Commanders of the opposing sides shall establish within their respective commands all measures and procedures necessary to insure complete compliance with all of the provisions hereof by all elements of their commands. They shall actively cooperate with one another and with the Military Armistice Commission and the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission in requiring observance of both the letter and the spirit of all of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement.

18. The costs of the operations of the Military Armistice Commission and of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and of their Teams shall be shared equally by the two opposing sides.

B. Military Armistice Commission

1. Composition

19. A Military Armistice Commission is hereby established.

20. The Military Armistice Commission shall be composed of ten (10) senior officers, five (5) of whom shall be appointed by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and five (5) of whom shall be appointed jointly by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers. Of the ten members, three (3) from each side shall be of general or flag rank. The two (2) remaining members on each side may be major generals, brigadier generals, colonels, or their equivalents.

21. Members of the Military Armistice Commission shall be permitted to use staff assistants as required.

22. The Military Armistice Commission shall be provided with the necessary administrative personnel to establish a Secretariat charged with assisting the Commission by performing record-keeping, secretariat, interpreting, and such other functions as the Commission may assign to it. Each side shall appoint to the Secretariat a Secretary and an Assistant Secretary and the clerical and specialized personnel required to assist the Secretariat. Records shall be kept in English, Korean, and Chinese, all of which shall be equally authentic.

23. (a) The Military Armistice Commission shall be initially provided with and assisted by ten (10) Joint Observer Teams, which number may be reduced by agreement of the senior members of both sides on the Military Armistice Commission.

(b) Each Joint Observer Team shall be composed of not less than (4) nor more than (6) officers of field grade, half of whom shall be appointed by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and half of whom shall be appointed jointly by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers. Additional personnel such as drivers, clerks, and interpreters shall be furnished by each side as required for the functioning of the Joint Observer Teams.

2. Functions and Authority

24. The general mission of the Military Armistice Commission shall be to supervise the implementation of this Armistice Agreement and to settle through negotiations any violations of this Armistice Agreement.

25. The Military Armistice Commission shall:

(a) Locate its headquarters in the vicinity of PAN-MUNJOM (37°57'29"N, 126°40'00"E). The Military Armistice Commission may relocate its headquarters at another point within the Demilitarized Zone by agreement of the senior members of both sides on the Commission.

(b) Operate as a joint organization without a chairman.

(c) Adopt such rules of procedure as it may, from time to time, deem necessary.

(d) Supervise the carrying out of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement pertaining to the Demilitarized Zone and to the Han River Estuary.

(e) Direct the operations of the Joint Observer Teams.

(f) Settle through negotiations any violations of this Armistice Agreement.

(g) Transmit immediately to the Commanders of the opposing sides all reports of investigations of violations of this Armistice Agreement and all other reports and records of proceedings received from the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission.

(h) Give general supervision and direction to the activities of the Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War and the Committee for Assisting the Return of Displaced Civilians, hereinafter established.

(i) Act as an intermediary in transmitting communications between the Commanders of the opposing sides; provided, however, that the foregoing shall not be construed to preclude the Commanders of both sides from communicating with each other by any other means which they may desire to employ.

(j) Provide credentials and distinctive insignia for its staff and its Joint Observer Teams, and a distinctive marking for all vehicles, aircraft, and vessels, used in the performance of its mission.

26. The mission of the Joint Observer Teams shall be to assist the Military Armistice Commission in supervising the carrying out of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement pertaining to the Demilitarized Zone and to the Han River Estuary.

27. The Military Armistice Commission, or the senior member of either side thereof, is authorized to dispatch Joint Observer Teams to investigate violations of this Armistice Agreement reported to have occurred in the Demilitarized Zone or in the Han River Estuary; provided, however, that not more than one half of the Joint Observer Teams which have not been dispatched by the Military Armistice Commission may be dispatched at any one time by the senior member of either side on the Commission.

28. The Military Armistice Commission, or the senior member of either side thereof, is authorized to request the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission to conduct special observations and inspections at places outside the Demilitarized Zone where violations of this Armistice Agreement have been reported to have occurred.

29. When the Military Armistice Commission determines that a violation of this Armistice has occurred, it shall immediately report such violation to the Commanders of the opposing sides.

30. When the Military Armistice Commission determines that a violation of this Armistice Agreement has been corrected to its satisfaction, it shall so report to the Commanders of the opposing sides.

3. General

31. The Military Armistice Commission shall meet daily. Recesses of not to exceed seven (7) days may be agreed upon by the senior members of both sides; provided, that such recesses may be terminated on twenty-four (24) hour notice by the senior member of either side.

32. Copies of the record of the proceedings of all meetings of the Military Armistice Commission shall be forwarded to the Commanders of the opposing sides as soon as possible after each meeting.

33. The Joint Observer Teams shall make periodic reports to the Military Armistice Commission as required by the Commission and, in addition, shall make such special reports as may be deemed necessary by them or as may be required by the Commission.

34. The Military Armistice Commission shall maintain duplicate files of the reports and records of proceedings required by this Armistice Agreement. The Commission is authorized to maintain duplicate files of such other reports, records, etc., as may be necessary in the conduct of its business. Upon eventual dissolution of the Commission, one set of the above files shall be turned over to each side.

35. The Military Armistice Commission may make recommendations to the Commanders of the opposing sides with respect to amendments or additions to this Armistice Agreement. Such recommended changes should generally be those designed to insure a more effective armistice.

C. Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission

1. Composition

36. A Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission is hereby established.

37. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall be composed of four (4) senior officers, two (2) of whom shall be appointed by neutral nations nominated by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, namely, SWEDEN and SWITZERLAND, and two (2) of whom shall be appointed by neutral nations nominated jointly by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, namely POLAND and CZECHOSLOVAKIA. The term "neutral nations" as herein used is defined as those nations whose combatant forces have not participated in the hostilities in Korea. Members appointed to the Commission may be from the armed forces of the appointing nations. Each member shall designate an alternate member to attend those meetings which for any reason the principal member is unable to attend. Such alternate members shall be of the same nationality as their principals. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission may take action whenever the number of members present from the neutral nations nominated by one side is equal to the number of members present from the neutral nations nominated by the other side.

38. Members of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall be permitted to use staff assistants furnished by the neutral nations as required. These staff assistants may be appointed as alternate members of the Commission.

39. The neutral nations shall be requested to furnish the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission with the necessary administrative personnel to establish a Secretariat charged with assisting the Commission by performing necessary record-keeping, secretariat, interpreting, and such other functions as the Commission may assign to it.

40. (a) The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall be initially provided with, and assisted by, twenty (20) Neutral Nations Inspection Teams, which number may be reduced by agreement of the senior members of both sides on the Military Armistice Commission. The Neutral Nations Inspection Teams shall be responsible to, shall report to, and shall be subject to the direction of, the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission only.

(b) Each Neutral Nations Inspection Team shall be composed of not less than four (4) officers, preferably of field grade, half of whom shall be from the neutral nations nominated by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and half of whom shall be from the neutral nations nominated jointly by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers. Members appointed to the Neutral Nations Inspection Teams may be from the armed forces of the appointing nations. In order to facilitate the functioning of the Teams, sub-teams composed of not less than two (2) members, one of whom shall be from a neutral nation nominated by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and one of whom shall be from a neutral nation nominated jointly by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, may be formed as circumstances require. Additional personnel such as drivers, clerks, interpreters, and communications personnel, and such equipment as may be required by the Teams to perform their missions, shall be furnished by the Commander of each side, as required, in the Demilitarized Zone and in the territory under his military control. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission may provide itself and the Neutral Nations Inspection Teams with such of the above personnel and equipment of its own as it may desire; provided, however, that such personnel shall be personnel of the same neutral nations of which the neutral Nations Supervisory Commission is composed.

2. Functions and Authority

41. The mission of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall be to carry out the functions of supervision, observation, inspection, and investigation, as stipulated in sub-paragraphs 13 (c) and 13 (d) and paragraph 28 hereof, and to report the results of such supervision, observation, inspection, and investigation to the Military Armistice Commission.

42. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall:

(a) Locate its headquarters in proximity to the headquarters of the Military Armistice Commission.
 (b) Adopt such rules of procedure as it may, from time to time, deem necessary.

(c) Conduct, through its members and its Neutral Nations Inspection Teams, the supervision and inspection provided for in sub-paragraphs 13 (c) and 13 (d) of this Armistice Agreement as the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof, and the special observations and inspections provided for in paragraph 28 hereof at those places where violations of this Armistice Agreement have been reported to have occurred. The inspection of combat aircraft, armored vehicles, weapons, and ammunition by the Neutral Nations Inspection Teams shall be such as to enable them to properly insure that reinforcing combat aircraft, armored vehicles, weapons, and ammunition are not being introduced into Korea; but this shall not be construed as authorizing inspections or examinations of any secret designs or characteristics of any combat aircraft, armored vehicle, weapon, or ammunition.

(d) Direct and supervise the operations of the Neutral Nations Inspection Teams.

(e) Station five (5) Neutral Nations Inspection Teams at the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof located in the territory under the military control of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command; and five (5) Neutral Nations Inspection Teams at the ports of entry enumerated in paragraph 43 hereof located in the territory under the military control of the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers; and establish initially ten (10) mobile Neutral Nations Inspection Teams in reserve, stationed in the general vicinity of the headquarters of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, which number may be reduced by agreement of the senior members of both sides on the Military Armistice Commission. Not more than half of the mobile Neutral Nations Inspection Teams shall be dispatched at any one time in accordance with requests of the senior member of either side on the Military Armistice Commission.

(f) Subject to the provisions of the preceding subparagraphs, conduct without delay investigations of reported violations of this Armistice Agreement, including such investigations of reported violations of this Armistice Agreement as may be requested by the Military Armistice Commission or by the senior member of either side of the Commission.

(g) Provide credentials and distinctive insignia for its staff and its Neutral Nations Inspection Teams, and a distinctive marking for all vehicles, aircraft, and vessels, used in the performance of its mission.

43. Neutral Nations Inspection Teams shall be stationed at the following ports of entry:

Territory under the military control of the United Nations Command

INCHON	(37° 28'N, 126° 38'E)
TAEGU	(35° 52'N, 128° 36'E)
PUSAN	(35° 06'N, 129° 02'E)
KANGNUNG	(37° 45'N, 128° 54'E)
KUNSAN	(35° 59'N, 126° 43'E)

Territory under the military control of the Korean People's Army and the Chinese People's Volunteers

SINUJU	(40° 06'N, 124° 25'E)
CHONGJIN	(41° 46'N, 129° 49'E)
HUNGNAM	(39° 50'N, 127° 37'E)
MANPO	(41° 09'N, 126° 18'E)
SINANJU	(39° 36'N, 125° 36'E)

These Neutral Nations Inspection Teams shall be accorded full convenience of movement within the areas and over the routes of communication set forth on the attached map (Map 5).

3. General

44. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall meet daily. Recesses of not to exceed seven (7) days may be agreed upon by the members of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission; provided, that such recesses may be terminated on twenty-four (24) hour notice by any member.

45. Copies of the record of the proceedings of all meetings of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall be forwarded to the Military Armistice Commission as soon as possible after each meeting. Records shall be kept in English, Korean, and Chinese.

46. The Neutral Nations Inspection Teams shall make periodic reports concerning the results of their supervision, observations, inspections, and investigations to the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission as required by the Commission, and, in addition, shall make such special reports as may be deemed necessary by them, or as may be required by the Commission. Reports shall be submitted by the Team as a whole, but may also be submitted by one or more individual members thereof; provided, that the reports submitted by one or more individual members thereof shall be considered as informational only.

47. Copies of the reports made by the Neutral Nations Inspection Teams shall be forwarded to the Military Armistice Commission by the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission without delay and in the language in which received. They shall not be delayed by the process of translation or evaluation. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall evaluate such reports at the earliest practicable time and shall forward their findings to the Military Armistice Commission as a matter of priority. The Military Armistice Commission shall not take final action with regard to any such report until the evaluation thereof has been received from the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission. Members of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and of its Teams shall be subject to appearance before the Military Armistice Commission, at the request of the senior member of either side on the Military Armistice Commission, for clarification of any report submitted.

48. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission shall maintain duplicate files of the reports and records of proceedings required by this Armistice Agreement. The Commission is authorized to maintain duplicate files of such other reports, records, etc., as may be necessary in the conduct of its business. Upon eventual dissolution of the Commission, one set of the above files shall be turned over to each side.

49. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission may make recommendations to the Military Armistice Commission with respect to amendments or additions to this Armistice Agreement. Such recommended changes should generally be those designed to insure a more effective armistice.

50. The Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission, or any member thereof, shall be authorized to communicate with any member of the Military Armistice Commission.

ARTICLE III

ARRANGEMENTS RELATING TO PRISONERS OF WAR

51. All prisoners of war held in the custody of each side at the time this Armistice Agreement becomes effective shall be released and repatriated as soon as possible. The release and repatriation of such prisoners of war shall be effected in conformity with lists which have been exchanged and have been checked by the respective sides prior to the signing of this Armistice Agreement. (So that there may be no misunderstanding owing to the equal use of three languages, the act of delivery of a prisoner of war by one side to the other side shall, for the purposes of this Armistice Agreement, be called "repatriation" in English, "SONG HWAN" () in Korean, and "CH' IEN FAN" () in Chinese, notwithstanding the nationality or place of residence of such prisoner of war.)

52. Each side insures that it will not employ in acts of war in the Korean conflict any prisoner of war released and repatriated incident to the coming into effect of this Armistice Agreement.

53. Seriously sick and seriously injured prisoners of war shall be repatriated with priority. Insofar as possible, there shall be captured medical personnel repatriated concurrently with the seriously sick and seriously injured prisoners of war, so as to provide medical care and attendance en route.

54. The repatriation of all of the prisoners of war required by paragraph 51 hereof shall be completed within a time limit of two (2) months after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective. Within this time limit each side undertakes to complete the repatriation of all the prisoners of war in its custody at the earliest practicable time.

55. PANMUNJOM is designated as the place where prisoners of war will be delivered and received by both sides. Additional place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war in the Demilitarized Zone may be designated, if necessary, by the Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War.

56. (a) A Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War is hereby established. It shall be composed of six (6) officers of field grade, three (3) of whom shall be appointed by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and three (3) of whom shall be appointed jointly by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers. This Committee shall, under the general supervision and direction of the Military Armistice Commission, be responsible for coordinating the specific plans of both sides for the repatriation of prisoners of war and for supervising the execution by both sides of all of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement relating to the repatriation of prisoners of war. It shall be the duty of this Committee to coordinate the timing of the arrival of prisoners of war at the place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war from the prisoner-of-war camps of both sides; to make, when necessary, such special arrangements as may be required with regard to the transportation and welfare of seriously sick and seriously injured prisoners of war; to coordinate the work of the Joint Red Cross teams, established in paragraph 57 hereof, in assisting in the repatriation of prisoners of war; to supervise the implementation of the arrangements for the actual repatriation of prisoners of war stipulated in paragraphs 53 and 54 hereof; to select, when necessary, additional place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war; to arrange for security at the place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war; and to carry out such other related functions as are required for the repatriation of prisoners of war.

(b) When unable to reach agreement on any matter relating to its responsibilities, the Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War shall immediately refer such matter to the Military Armistice Commission for decision. The Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War shall maintain its headquarters in proximity to the headquarters of the Military Armistice Commission.

(c) The Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War shall be dissolved by the Military Armistice Commission upon completion of the program of repatriation of prisoners of war.

57. (a) Immediately after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, joint Red Cross teams composed of representatives of the national Red Cross societies of countries contributing forces to the United Nations Command on the one hand, and representatives of the Red Cross society of the Democratic People's Republic of China on the other hand, shall be established. The joint Red Cross teams shall assist in the execution by both sides of those provisions of this Armistice Agreement relating to the repatriation of prisoners of war by the performance of such humanitarian services as are necessary and desirable for the welfare of the prisoners of war. To accomplish this task, the joint Red Cross teams shall provide assistance in the delivering and receiving of prisoners of war by both sides at the place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war, and shall visit the prisoner-of-war camps of both sides to comfort the prisoners of war and to bring in and distribute gift articles for the comfort and welfare of the prisoners of war. The joint Red Cross teams may provide services to prisoners of war while en route from prisoner-of-war camps to the place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war.

(b) The joint Red Cross teams shall be organized as set forth below:

(1) One team shall be composed of twenty (20) members, namely, ten (10) representatives from the national Red Cross societies of each side, to assist in the delivering and receiving of prisoners of war by both sides at the place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war. The chairmanship of this team shall alternate daily between representatives from the Red Cross societies of the two sides. The work and services of this team shall be coordinated by the Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War.

(2) One team shall be composed of sixty (60) members, namely, thirty (30) representatives from the national Red Cross societies of each side, to visit the prisoner-of-war camps under the administration of the Korean People's Army and the Chinese People's Volunteers. This team may provide services to prisoners of war while en route from the prisoner-of-war camps to the place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war. A representative of the Red Cross society of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea or of the Red Cross society of the People's Republic of China shall serve as chairman of this team.

(3) One team shall be composed of sixty (60) members, namely, thirty (30) representatives from the national Red Cross societies of each side, to visit the prisoner-of-war camps under the administration of the United Nations Command. This team may provide services to prisoners of war while en route from the prisoner-of-war camps to the place(s) of delivery and reception of prisoners of war. A representative of a Red Cross society of a nation contributing forces to the United Nations Command shall serve as chairman of this team.

(4) In order to facilitate the functioning of each joint Red Cross team, sub-teams composed of not less than two (2) members from the team, with an equal number of representatives from each side, may be formed as circumstances require.

(5) Additional personnel such as drivers, clerks, and interpreters, and such equipment as may be required by the joint Red Cross teams to perform their missions, shall be furnished by the Commander of each side to the team operating in the territory under his military control.

(6) Whenever jointly agreed upon by the representatives of both sides on any joint Red Cross team, the size of such team may be increased or decreased, subject to confirmation by the Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War.

- (c) The Commander of each side shall cooperate fully with the joint Red Cross teams in the performance of their functions, and undertakes to insure the security of the personnel of the joint Red Cross team in the area under his military control. The Commander of each side shall provide such logistic, administrative, and communications facilities as may be required by the team operating in the territory under his military control.
- (d) The joint Red Cross teams shall be dissolved upon completion of the program of repatriation of prisoners of war.
58. (a) The Commander of each side shall furnish to the Commander of the other side as soon as practicable, but not later than ten (10) days after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, the following information concerning prisoners of war:
- (1) Complete data pertaining to the prisoners of war newly added and those who escaped since the effective date of the data last exchanged.
 - (2) Insofar as practicable, information regarding name, nationality, rank, and other identification data, date and cause of death, and place of burial, of those prisoners of war who died while in his custody.
- (b) If any prisoners of war are newly added or escape or die after the effective date of the supplementary information specified above, the detaining side shall furnish to the other side, through the Committee for Repatriation of Prisoners of War, the data pertaining thereto in accordance with the provisions of sub-paragraph "a" hereof. Such data shall be furnished at ten-day intervals until the completion of the program of delivery and reception of prisoners of war.
- (c) Any escaped prisoner of war who returns to the custody of the detaining side after the completion of the program of delivery and reception of prisoners of war shall be delivered to the Military Armistice Commission for disposition.
59. (a) All civilians who, at the time this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, are in territory under the military control of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and who, on 24 June 1950, resided north of the Military Demarcation Line established in this Armistice Agreement shall, if they desire to return home, be permitted and assisted by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, to return to the area north of the Military Demarcation Line; and all civilians who, at the time this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, are in territory under the military control of the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, and who, on 24 June 1950, resided south of the Military Demarcation Line established in this Armistice Agreement shall, if they desire to return home, be permitted and assisted by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers to return to the area south of the Military Demarcation Line. The Commander of each side shall be responsible for publicizing widely throughout the territory under his military control the content of the provisions of this sub-paragraph, and for calling upon the appropriate civil authorities to give necessary guidance and assistance to all such civilians who desire to return home.
- (b) All civilians of foreign nationality who, at the time this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, are in territory under the military control of the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers shall, if they desire to proceed to territory under the military control of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, be permitted and assisted to do so; all civilians of foreign nationality who, at the time this Armistice Agreement becomes effective, are in territory under the military control of the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, shall, if they desire to proceed to territory under the military control of the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, be permitted and assisted to do so. The Commander of each side shall be responsible for publicizing widely throughout the territory under his military control the content of the provisions of this sub-paragraph, and for calling upon the appropriate civil authorities to give necessary guidance and assistance to all such civilians of foreign nationality who desire to proceed to territory under the military control of the Commander of the other side.
- (c) Measures to assist in the return of civilians provided for in sub-paragraph "a" hereof and the movement of civilians provided for in sub-paragraph "b" hereof shall be commenced by both sides as soon as possible after this Armistice Agreement becomes effective.
- (d) (1) A Committee for Assisting the Return of Displaced Civilians is hereby established. It shall be composed of four (4) officers of field grade, two (2) of whom shall be appointed by the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, and two (2) of whom shall be appointed jointly by the Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army and the Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers. This Committee shall, under the general supervision and direction of the Military Armistice Commission, be responsible for coordinating the specific plans of both sides of assistance to the return of the above-mentioned civilians, and for supervising the execution by both sides of all of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement relating to the return of the above-mentioned civilians. It shall be the duty of this Committee to make necessary arrangements, including those of transportation, for expediting and coordinating the movement of the above-mentioned civilians; to select the crossing point(s) through which the above-mentioned civilians will cross the Military Demarcation Line; to arrange for security at the crossing point(s); and to carry out such other functions as are required to accomplish the return of the above-mentioned civilians.
- (2) When unable to reach agreement on any matter relating to its responsibilities, the Committee for Assisting the Return of Displaced Civilians shall immediately refer such matter to the Military Armistice Commission for decision. The Committee for Assisting the Return of Displaced Civilians shall maintain its headquarters in proximity to the headquarters of the Military Armistice Commission.
- (3) The Committee for Assisting the Return of Displaced Civilians shall be dissolved by the Military Armistice Commission upon fulfillment of its mission.

ARTICLE IV

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE GOVERNMENTS
CONCERNED ON BOTH SIDES

60. In order to insure the peaceful settlement of the Korean question, the military commanders of both sides hereby recommend to the governments of the countries concerned on both sides that, within three (3) months after the Armistice Agreement is signed and becomes effective, a political conference of a higher level of both sides be held by representatives appointed respectively to settle through negotiation the questions of the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Korea, the peaceful settlement of the Korean question, etc.

Done at PANMUNJOM, Korea at hours on the ... day of 1952, in English, Korean, and Chinese, all texts being equally authentic.

KIM IL SUNG
Supreme Commander of Korean People's Army

PENTE-HUAI
Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers

MARK W. CLARK
General, United States Army
Commander-in-Chief
United Nations Command

PRESENT

NAM IL
General, Korean People's Army,
Senior Delegate, Delegation of the Korean People's Army and Chinese People's Volunteers Delegation

WILLIAM K. HARRISON, JR.
Major General, United States Army
Senior Delegate, United Nations
Command Delegation

ARTICLE V

MISCELLANEOUS

61. Amendments and additions to this Armistice Agreement must be mutually agreed to by the Commanders of the opposing sides.

62. The articles and paragraphs of this Armistice Agreement shall remain in effect until expressly superseded either by mutually acceptable amendments and additions or by provision in an appropriate agreement for a peaceful settlement at a political level between both sides.

63. All of the provisions of this Armistice Agreement, other than paragraph 12, shall become effective at hours on 1952.

2. Other Communications Relating to the Korean Question

In addition to the communications dealt with in the foregoing section, two communications regarding the Korean question were issued as documents of the Security Council during 1952:

(1) A note dated 28 April (S/2617), in which the acting representative of the United States informed the Security Council that the President of the United States had on that date appointed General Mark W. Clark to replace General Matthew B. Ridgway as the Commanding General of the forces made available to the Unified Command pursuant to the Security Council resolution of 7 July 1950.

(2) A note dated 13 May (S/2633), in which the representative of the United States informed the Council that the effective date of the change in the Command was 12 May.

Four communications from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea were issued as documents of the General Assembly:

(1) A cablegram dated 17 October (A/C.1/720), requesting that representatives of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea be given an opportunity to participate in the discussion of the Korean question in the Assembly and declaring that the Government of the People's Republic would regard as illegal any discussion of the Korean question and decisions taken by the Assembly without such participation.

(2) Cablegrams dated 17 and 21 October (A/C.1/726), communicating the text of a letter dated 16

October, addressed by Generals Kim Il Sung and Peng Teh Huai to General Mark W. Clark, regarding the suspension of the armistice negotiations in Korea on 8 October, and the text of the draft armistice agreement completed during the negotiations.

(3) A cablegram dated 8 November (A/C.1/733/Rev.1), communicating the text of a statement by "The Central Committee of the United Democratic Patriotic Front of Korea", dated 4 November, containing a number of charges of atrocities by United States forces in Korea.

(4) A cablegram dated 28 November (A/C.1/735), expressing support for the USSR draft resolution (A/C.1/729/Rev.1/Corr.1/Add.1—see below).

Communications also issued as documents of the Assembly were:

(1) A letter dated 25 December 1951 (A/2038), from the representative of the USSR, transmitting a message from "The Central Committee, United States-British War Prisoners Peace Organizations in Korea", signed by nine American and British prisoners of war, requesting confirmation of the receipt of a declaration and an appeal sent to the United Nations under the same signatures, on 7 July 1951, in which the United States was charged with waging an aggressive war in Korea, while the United Nations was called upon to settle the Korean question peacefully by withdrawing all foreign troops from Korea. At the request of the USSR representative, the declaration and the appeal were also issued as documents of the Assembly (see A/2038, annexes).

(2) Cablegrams dated 14 and 17 December respectively (A/2354), from the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, rejecting the Assembly resolution of 3 December (see below).

(3) A cablegram dated 18 December (A/2357), from the Secretary-General of the League of Red Cross Societies, communicating the text of a resolution adopted on 13 December by the Executive Committee of the League, calling on the countries concerned to take immediate action for the repatriation of sick and wounded prisoners of war.

3. Reports of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea

On 5 February the Assembly decided to defer consideration of the report (A/1881)⁴ of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK) submitted to its sixth session (resolution 507(VI)).⁵ The Commission submitted a further report (A/2187) to the seventh session of the Assembly, covering the period from 5 September 1951, the date of the Commission's previous report, to 28 August 1952.

A substantial part of the report submitted to the Assembly's seventh session (A/2187) described the Commission's activities in connexion with its function of observing the development of representative government in the Republic of Korea. A detailed account was given of the controversy, continuing from previous years, between the Executive and the Legislature on the relative roles of each.

The report stated that, as the date of the presidential election approached in the summer of 1952, Members of the Assembly complained that the Government was ignoring the Legislature, while the Government complained that the Assembly would not pass the necessary legislation. The main aspect of the controversy revolved around the adoption of constitutional amendments advocated by the President of the Republic, Syngman Rhee, which provided for the direct election of the President by the people instead of by the National Assembly and for a bi-cameral legislature instead of a legislature of one house.

A Bill to this effect was rejected in the National Assembly on 18 January 1952 by 143 votes to 19, with 1 abstention. There was little criticism of the President or his administration and defeat of the Bill, the report said, did not necessarily mean that Mr. Rhee could not secure in the Assembly a majority for his own re-election when the time came. It was only later when extreme pressure was applied by the Executive against the Legislature that opinion in the Assembly hardened against Mr. Rhee; many members came to oppose so strongly what they regarded as arbitrary and personal rule that they did not want to vote for any amendment to the Constitution until they had exercised their votes to elect someone other than Mr. Rhee, it was stated. The President argued that it was more democratic for each citizen to vote directly for the President than to have the National Assembly do so and that a second chamber would act as a brake on the first house of the Legislature. Against that, some of his opponents argued that in a new State, like the Republic of Korea, the people did not yet know enough about prospective candidates to weigh their merits and that, in any case, a "popular vote" was really a fiction as long as the incumbent controlled the police. The discussions, however, were not confined to the merits of the proposals, the report stated; the moves in the political struggle were greatly influenced by personalities and by competition for power and patronage.

After the National Assembly had rejected this Bill, the President expressed the hope that the public and the legislators would reverse this decision. He suggested that the Assemblymen should be "recalled by popular vote if they neglected the popular will in favour of their private interests". He thus launched a campaign which was an important element in the pressure brought to bear on the recalcitrant Legislature.

The report said that on 25 May "emergency martial law" was put into effect in Pusan and its vicinity, by the State Council (the Cabinet, presided over by the President). All power was vested in the Martial Law Commander, who issued a number of proclamations, the first of which attributed the need for martial law to "the enemy" who were pursuing "their scandalous plots without restriction, intercepting traffic and communications and disturbing the public mind". In later explanations it was said that martial law was imposed to counteract guerrilla activities.

The significance of martial law in Pusan, as distinct from other parts of the country, the report said, was that it placed the organs of central government under great restrictions. The Martial Law Commander claimed that he was responsible only to the President. He also claimed the right to arrest any government official, including members of the National Assembly. By the second day of martial law, over 50 of 183 members of the Assembly were under detention of some sort. The number who were detained very shortly dropped to twelve. Pressure continued to be brought to bear on the members, the report stated. The Assembly's supporters had great difficulty in making their views known because of the restrictions imposed by martial law, including rigorous censorship and the withholding of licences for certain meetings.

⁴ For a summary of the report, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 230-31.

⁵ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 237.

The President's opponents took the position that, if the Constitution and law were followed: the Assemblymen could not be detained; martial law could not be continued; and the dissolution of the Assembly, or the recall of individual members, threatened by the President, could not take place. President Rhee claimed that these objections were overridden by article 2 of the Constitution, which says: "The sovereignty of the Korean Republic shall reside in the people. All State authority shall emanate from the people." He claimed that it was the will of the people that the Assembly should adopt the amendments he had proposed; if it should refuse, it would mean that the members had ceased to be true representatives of the people, and the Assembly should be dissolved so that the people could elect new representatives. He said that, where the national existence of Korea was at stake, the Government had to depart, if necessary, from the strict letter of the law, the report stated.

Several attempts at a compromise proved of no avail and the members of important political parties ceased to attend the meetings of the Assembly, so that the quorum of two thirds, necessary for the adoption of any amendment to the Constitution, could not be obtained. On 2 July, however, the report stated, the Government announced that Assemblymen who failed to attend would be "guided and escorted" by the police to the Assembly. The police search began that evening, and those found were brought to the Assembly building. A plenary meeting was held on 4 July, attended by 166 members, and a Bill was passed by 163 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, providing for election of the President and the Vice-President directly by the people and for the establishment of a bi-cameral legislature. Some members protested against the procedure adopted and the pressure employed.

The Commission considered that a critical point had been reached with the proclamation of martial law in Pusan and the actions by the police against members of the Legislature, and, it stated, it had raised these questions in conversations with the President and the Martial Law Commander. In a letter dated 28 May it stressed that it did not take sides in any internal political conflict, but that it was incumbent upon it to take action without delay if it became aware of any danger of violation of the Constitution and fundamental laws of the country. Martial Law, the letter continued, was maintained in spite of the Assembly having voted on 28 May by a great majority for its lifting. Article 49 of the Constitution and article 17 of the Law governing the Enforcement of Martial Law had not been observed. A number of Assemblymen had been arrested and were still under arrest, while others lived in fear of arrest or detention and were thereby prevented from attending meetings of the Assembly. It therefore urged the lifting of martial law in the city of Pusan and the release of any Assemblymen still under arrest or otherwise detained, the report stated.

In a detailed reply dated 31 May the President reiterated his arguments in favour of the constitutional amendments and stated that a group of Assemblymen had confessed that they had received money from the Communists to finance a plan to unify North and South after the Communist pattern, and that a proper prosecution of the case demanded keeping the involved Assemblymen under detention for the time being. As to martial law, he said, it had been proclaimed solely to counteract guerrilla activities.

The attitude of the Commission, it said, was supported by the United Nations Commander-in-Chief, as well as by the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Australia and New Zealand, while a number of governments expressed to the Secretary-General their concern regarding developments in the Republic of Korea. The Secretary-General also expressed his concern on behalf of the United Nations and especially those Members providing assistance in Korea.

In a letter dated 31 May, in reply to the President's letter of the same date, the Commission reiterated its demands and stated that the United Nations, having taken up arms in defence of the Republic of Korea, had both a right and an interest to see that the Constitution of the Republic of Korea was faithfully observed, so that there would be no doubt as to the legitimacy of the Government of the country on whose behalf so many lives were being spent by other countries. It suggested that the political leaders of Korea agree to a "political holiday" of ten days, during which efforts to reach agreement could be pursued.

On 9 June the Commission called on President Rhee to discuss this letter. The President indicated that he could not agree to the Commission's suggestion and said he expected the situation to be settled very soon. He based his case for the arrests on the alleged conspiracy and reproached the Commission for not believing in its existence. He said that his two proposed amendments to the Constitution must be adopted, and that this main issue must not be mixed with minor questions, the Commission reported. The Assembly would have already accepted his proposed amendments if it had not been for this conspiracy, which had caused the Assembly to reject them, he stated.

The Commission, the report said, thereafter continued to follow the situation closely, and kept in touch with Korean political leaders of all shades of opinion. Individual representatives of the Commission saw President Rhee on a number of occasions. Finally, the political tension was eased by the adoption of the Constitutional Amendment Bill on 4 July. On 15 July the Assembly passed legislation giving effect to the new constitutional provision for direct election of the President and the Vice-President. A Presidential decree set the election day for 5 August. Martial law in Pusan and several other districts was lifted on 28 July in order to "ensure as free an atmosphere as possible" during the elections. On election day President Rhee was re-elected, receiving 86 per cent of the votes of those registered (5,238,769) out of 7,033,633).

On 1 August, the day after the Court had given its verdict in the alleged conspiracy case, sentencing to imprisonment six men (none of them Members of the National Assembly), the Commission had a meeting with the United States Ambassador and the United Kingdom and French Charges d'Affaires, who, together with the Commission, had provided for international observation of the trial. The report said that the observers considered that: (1) there had been a miscarriage of justice in the sentences imposed; (2) the evidence and witnesses brought before the Court—at least in so far as the international observers had been allowed to see the evidence—did not justify such a verdict; and (3) the existence had not been proved of an international conspiracy involving Members of the National Assembly. It was decided that the United Kingdom Charge d'Affaires should call upon the President to make known the views of the international observers on some aspects of the case and to let it be known to the Government of the Republic of Korea that the presence of the observers throughout the trial and the fact that they did not make any public comment on the verdict did not imply international endorsement of the findings or agreement that the existence of the international conspiracy had been established. The United Kingdom Charge d'Affaires later had an interview with the President in which the trial was fully discussed.

With regard to the re-election of Mr. Rhee as President of the Republic, the report stated that the Commission had sent several observation teams to different electoral districts. The chief criticism against the elections was the short time between the date when nomination commenced (26 July) and polling day (5 August). As it had only been decided on 4 July that there would be a direct election by the people, there had been little time for campaigning and the incumbent had had a big advantage. Although there undoubtedly had been some police interference in the campaign it had not made any significant difference as far as the choice of the President was concerned, the Commission stated.

The report said that in its progress towards democratic institutions, the Republic had faced great difficulties because of the lack of trained leaders, the absence of any political education of the mass of the people, and the psychological effects of 40 years of bondage superimposed on many centuries of feudal life. The war had disrupted the government machinery for many months. Millions had become refugees and special restrictions had had to be imposed in the interests of national security. The economic situation also had had a strong bearing upon the political situation. These conditions had inevitably affected not only the machinery of administration and politics but the state of mind and the conduct of those involved in them. The consequences in the political life had become particularly obvious in 1952 because of the prolonged clash between the Executive and the Legislature. The disturbing features in this case were the disregard of the Constitution and law, the attempted resort to "mob rule", and the use of martial law and government authority to limit freedom of political expression, the Commission said. It felt that some concern was justified in regard to the deterioration in democratic freedom in the Republic of Korea.

While the setbacks to democratic development had attracted world-wide notice, the advances during the year had sometimes been overlooked. On 25 April elections had been held for city and town councils which, in turn, had chosen the mayors; and on 10 May provincial councils had been elected. These elections, both held for the first time, were a step towards associating the people more closely with their own public affairs. The agreement on a constitutional amendment, the beginning of a new Presidential term, the progressive expansion of local government and international economic assistance all opened the way for placing the political life of the Republic on a more stable basis.

With regard to the economic and financial situation, the report stated that the basic picture remained as in 1951. While no further destruction had occurred in the Republic itself as a direct result of the fighting, reconstruction had been limited, chiefly because shipping space had still had to be devoted primarily to military requirements and to importing basic necessities of life which could not currently be provided from Korea's domestic resources.

Inflation continued to be a most serious problem, imperilling the whole basis of relief and rehabilitation. Between May 1951 and September 1952 the note issue had almost doubled and the price of rice in Pusan had increased by more than eight times. This problem could be overcome only by joint action by the United Nations Command and the Government of the Republic, the report said.

Some reconstruction had been undertaken, mostly by the United Nations military authorities, in part for direct military purposes, such as communication facilities. Part of this reconstruction, particularly the rehabilitation of electric power, while of military importance, had been of even greater significance to the rehabilitation of the Korean economy. Despite some improvement, the economy of the country was still suffering greatly from the war and had not yet taken a major step towards recovery. Steady economic progress could be based on the work being undertaken, but inflation, weaknesses in the administrative machinery, the continued dislocation of population and basic difficulties arising from the division of the country and the destruction caused by the fighting were warnings against over-optimism.

The refugee problem during the previous year had differed radically from the problem in 1950-51, when millions of people were on the move. Refugees—persons displaced from their homes by the war—were estimated in March 1952 to total 2,618,000 in the Republic of Korea. They had been helped by supplies brought in and distributed by the United Nations Civil Assistance Command, Korea (UNCACK). The problem now was to look after those who had been away from their homes for over a year but were no longer fleeing. Very few of them wanted to settle permanently in their places of refuge, because they looked forward to returning to their homes some day.

The report further stated that, since the outbreak of hostilities, the estimated dollar value of supplies and equipment delivered in Korea by 31 July 1952 as part of the civilian relief and economic aid programme was $195,855,562. To this amount should be added supplies and equipment provided by the United States Economic Co-operation Administration and the United States Army, as well as additional expenditures for services rendered by the United States military authorities, estimated to total approximately $350 million.

Assistance in the field of public health had continued to be a major part of the activities of UNCACK, and no epidemic had occurred in the Republic of Korea during the period under review. The Command had also helped Korean officials to increase production, to provide basic welfare services and, in general, to re-establish normal community life. At the current stage of military operations, primary responsibility for international assistance rested with the United Nations military authorities; the United Nations Civil Assistance Command being the principal body operating in Korea. The role of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency (UNKRA) was therefore limited for the time being to recruiting international staff for UNCACK, to long-term planning and preparation for the relief and rehabilitation of Korea, and to discussions with the military authorities and the Government of the Republic of Korea.

Setting out its general conclusions, the Commission emphasized that the strictly limited military objective of defeating the aggression against the Republic of Korea was distinct from the political objective of the United Nations, which continued to be the establishment by peaceful means of a unified, independent and democratic Korea. It remained as important as before that efforts were not relaxed to repel that aggression, and to help the victim recover from the devastation which it had brought about.

Finally, the Commission reaffirmed that even after the fighting had ceased, some political representation of the United Nations was needed in Korea—to observe and report on developments in Korea, to consult with and, whenever appropriate, to assist the Government of the Republic of Korea and to provide a continuing demonstration that the United Nations would protect legitimate Korean interests.

4. Consideration of the Korean Question by the General Assembly at the First Part of the Seventh Session

a. INTRODUCTION

At its 380th meeting on 16 October, the General Assembly decided to include in the agenda of its seventh session the item: "Korea: (a) Reports of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea; (b) Reports of the Agent General of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency." At its 382nd meeting on 17 October, it decided to refer sub-items (a) and (b) respectively to the First and the Second Committee for consideration and report. At its 406th meeting on 18 December, the Assembly decided to re-allocate sub-item (b) to the First Committee for consideration during part II of the seventh session.

The item was considered by the Assembly's First Committee at its 511th to 536th meetings from 23 October to 2 December and by the General Assembly at its 399th plenary meeting on 3 December when the reports of UNCURK (A/1881 and A/2187) were before the Committee. The representative of the Republic of Korea, who was invited to participate in the discussions, commented on some of the statements made in the Commission's report, and brief references to the report were made by other representatives. The debate, however, was chiefly concerned with: (1) the previous history of the Korean question and, in particular, the responsibility for the outbreak of hostilities; (2) the progress of negotiations at Panmunjom and the responsibility for the deadlock in those negotiations; and (3) the question of the repatriation of prisoners of war. The great majority of representatives considered that the first essential was to stop the war in Korea prior to any general discussion of the political issues involved, and that the only outstanding question preventing the conclusion of an armistice appeared to be the prisoners-of-war issue. They, therefore, concentrated on this question.

Five draft resolutions were presented in the First Committee:

(1) a joint draft resolution (A/C.1/725) by 21 Powers: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Honduras, Iceland, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay; (2) a draft resolution by the USSR (A/C.1/729/Rev.1/Corr.1 and Rev.1/Corr.1/Add.1); (3) a draft resolution by Mexico (A/C.1/730); (4) a draft resolution by Peru (A/C.1/732); and (5) a draft resolution by India (A/C.1/734), to which amendments were introduced by: (a) Iraq

(A/C.1/L.3); (b) Greece (A/C.1/L.6); (c) Denmark (A/C.1/L.5); and (d) the USSR (A/C.1/L.4).

The debate in the First Committee opened with a survey by the United States, introducing the joint 21-Power draft resolution; it was followed by a survey by the USSR, introducing the Soviet draft resolution. Subsequent statements referred to these two surveys and replies were made, in particular by the USSR representative, to points raised in the debate. The Peruvian and Mexican draft resolutions were introduced later and, finally, the Indian draft resolution was introduced as a compromise and was given priority in the voting.

In view of the subsequent adoption of the amended Indian draft, the First Committee, at its 535th meeting on 1 December, agreed to defer further consideration of the 21-Power draft as well as the Mexican and Peruvian draft resolutions.

For ease of reference, matters are treated here in the following order: (1) questions referring to the report of UNCURK, in particular the statement made by the representative of the Republic of Korea; (2) the four draft resolutions which were before the Committee during most of its discussions; (3) the views expressed by representatives during the general debate prior to the introduction of the Indian proposal, treated according to the general line they adopted, rather than chronologically; (4) the Indian proposal and the views expressed on it; (5) the decisions taken by the Committee and the General Assembly; and (6) the report of the President of the General Assembly on the action taken by him pursuant to the resolution adopted by the Assembly.

b. CONSIDERATION BY THE FIRST COMMITTEE

At the beginning of its discussions, at the 511th meeting, the First Committee considered a draft resolution by Thailand (A/C.1/L.1) providing for an invitation to a representative of the Republic of Korea to participate in the consideration of the item without the right to vote.

The USSR, while agreeing to that proposal, also submitted a draft resolution (A/C.1/L.2) providing for a similar invitation to representatives of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea. The representatives of Australia, Brazil, Canada, Greece, the Netherlands, the Philippines, the United Kingdom and the United States opposed the USSR proposal on the ground that the Assembly should not give a hearing to the aggressor while he was engaged in aggression. The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR rejected the view that the People's Democratic Republic of Korea was the aggressor, and considered that opposition to invite its representatives was due to fear of hearing the truth about United States aggression in Korea, and unwillingness to move one step towards the solution of the Korean question. It was a matter of history as to who was the aggressor and who was the victim and now practical measures for the cessation of hostilities had to be discussed. How could representatives refuse to have anything to do with North Korea and simultaneously say that they wished to attain a peaceful settlement of a dispute to which it was a party?

The representatives of Burma and Pakistan, supporting the Thailand draft resolution, stated that they would also support the USSR draft in order not to let slip any opportunity of breaking the deadlock in Korea. The Indonesian representative considered that by negotiating with North Korea the United Nations had recognized North Korea as a party to a military conflict; he would therefore vote for both draft resolutions. The representatives of Chile and Syria declared that they would abstain in the vote on the USSR proposal, the former because he did not wish to assume responsibility for not exhaustively exploiting all possibilities for a settlement of the Korean question and the latter because he considered that an invitation to North Korea might create the false impression that the United Nations had changed its attitude since the previous session.

The Committee adopted the Thailand draft resolution by 54 votes to 5, with 1 abstention, and rejected the USSR draft resolution by 38 votes to 11, with 8 abstentions.

(1) Views Expressed by the Representative of the Republic of Korea and other Statements Referring to the Report of UNCURK

At the 518th meeting of the First Committee on 3 November the representative of the Republic of Korea made certain observations on the report of UNCURK (A/2187). He observed that three fourths of the report had been devoted to the internal developments in Korea—an allocation which did not fairly represent the nature and significance of the problems. To the Korean people, the economic and military problems and the international complications of the situation were of more importance than the report indicated, he said.

Discussing the political observations in the report, the representative of the Republic of Korea said that every good government required checks and balances between its executive, legislative and judicial branches. Until those checks and balances were firmly established, individual freedom was never ensured. When they were disturbed, individual freedom was again exposed to danger, and until they were restored, no pain should deter the people in the struggle necessary for their restoration.

When the first National Assembly met in 1948, he said, its initial task was to draft a constitution. Because there was danger of attack from beyond the 38th parallel, and no one knew what capacities the Korean people might demonstrate for self-government, the National Assembly had decided to entrust the election of the President to its own members and to provide a single legislative chamber. It was regrettable that the Constitution was not drawn up by a separate body which would thereafter have been dissolved. The Constitution was drafted by a group of people intensely interested in endowing their own branch of government with more power than was its due. The representative of the Republic of Korea added that the National Assembly had repeatedly sought to encroach upon the authority of the administrative branch. The recent so-called "compromise amendments", under which the National Assembly was enabled to force the Cabinet to resign without running any risk of its own dissolution, were not satisfactory and required modification. Unless elected legislators were required to respond to the will of the people, they would be governed by their own special interests. That was what had happened in Korea.

When the time came for the election of a new President in Korea, the National Assembly had insisted upon retaining exclusively its power of election, the representative of the Republic of Korea said. The President had repeatedly stated his desire for constitutional amendments whereby that power of electing the President could be returned to the people, who had endured so much for the sake of democratic liberties, and whereby a bi-cameral legislative system could be set up. It was understandable, even though regrettable, that the National Assembly should have resisted all movements to curtail its powers. What seemed strange to the Koreans, he said, was that foreign representatives who were determined to protect democracy in their own homelands and who were charged with the duty of encouraging it in Korea should have lost sight of the larger issues involved and joined the National Assembly in decrying the extension of the sovereign right of election to the whole electorate.

Although the President of Korea had been charged with being dictatorial, he had proposed not to seize power, but to return it to the people.

The representative of the Republic of Korea remarked that perhaps the foreign observers had listened too attentively to the complaints of political opponents of the Government and had paid too little attention to the resolutions adopted in nine provincial assemblies and in more than 1,400 local councils, demanding acceptance of the proposed constitutional amendments.

While the nations fighting on the side of the Republic of Korea had sought to settle the issues by political negotiations at Panmunjom, he continued, Communist money was secretly brought to Pusan to be used in bribing members of the National Assembly to elect a President who would concur in a programme of political unification for Korea on terms acceptable to the Communists. In the midst of all the threats, pressures and demands, however, President Rhee resolutely insisted that the purely Korean issues in the conflict must be settled on conditions acceptable to Korea and that the Korean nation be headed by a President representing the will of the people.

Although there were many specific allegations in the Commission's report which he would like to refute one by one, the representative of the Republic of Korea said that perhaps it would suffice to state that most of the allegations dealt with what might have happened or with the Commission's fears concerning hypothetical eventualities.

If President Rhee and the people had bowed before the first rejection of the amendments by the National Assembly, Korea would have had a President who did not truly represent the people, he said. The National Assembly would have been split into warring factions. There would have been encouragement for factional divisions among the people and in the armed forces. Instead, the Constitution was amended by a vote of 163 to none. Four candidates stood for election to the presidency, of whom one was an avowed Marxist still. The fact that that candidate was not hampered in campaigning and received 800,000 votes was sufficient evidence of the fairness of the election. The fact that President Rhee received four fifths of the total vote, the representative of the Republic of Korea said, made clear the desires of the electorate. The election was over, and the Korean people were united to a higher degree than ever before. The people who had claimed that the legislative election of 1950 had showed that President Rhee lacked popular support had been refuted. In those few weeks the Korean people had taken a longer step towards true democracy than they had previously achieved in over 4,000 years of history.

Since the detailed analysis of every stage of the dispute concerning the constitutional amendments occupied such a large proportion of the report, the representative of the Republic of Korea said, readers might miss the significance of the Commission's general conclusions. These were:

- (1) the elections held in Korea were a fair and free expression of the will of the Korean people;
- (2) despite all their burdens and problems, they had continued their steady and significant development of a truly democratic government;
- (3) a reorganization of political parties was under way, and that might bring new strength to political life;
- (4) one of the matters on which the Republic of Korea deserved special commendation was the continuance of the work of education in the face of immense difficulties;
- (5) there was a grim picture of suffering and devastation begun and prolonged by those who launched the aggression from the north;
- (6) the agreement on a constitutional amendment, the beginning of a new presidential term, the progressive expansion of local government, and international economic assistance all opened the way for the political life of the Republic to be placed on a more stable basis.

The representative of the Republic of Korea stated that the central fact in the thinking and feeling of the Korean people was that theirs was a sovereign and independent government, truly representative of its people and wholly determined to pursue to the death the objectives of a reunited, democratic and free nation.

The representative of the Republic of Korea stated that he regretted that very little was said in the report on restoring the unity of Korea. The Commission, as well as its two predecessors, had been charged with that essential task. On 7 October 1950, the General Assembly in resolution 376(V), had voted that peace and security should be restored in Korea and that elections should be held under United Nations observation to ensure a truly representative government of the unified nation. On that question the feelings of the Korean people had become more intense. Events had emphasized that leaving the northern half of the nation in the illegal possession of a foreign army determined upon its destruction was intolerable, he said.

Surveying the devastation caused by 28 months of war, he stated that, despite the need for rehabilitation, there had been tragically little reconstruction. Although the endurance of the Korean people was threatened by the worst possible economic conditions, they trusted that all the free nations would join them in their determination that victory was the only goal to be sought.

Stating his Government's position on the alternatives proposed by the United Nations at Panmunjom and in the Mexican proposal (see below), the representative of the Republic of Korea said that such measures would require the creation of a neutral area. Past experience, he considered, discouraged the belief that such an area could be completely free from pressure. In the past, neutral areas had somehow fallen under Communist domination. The Kojé prisoner-of-war camps had also at one time been controlled from afar by Communists. His Government had no doubt that in any neutral area no non-Communist prisoner could safely exercise his own volition, whereas the Communist prisoners would be able to do so, individually and collectively. With regard to the Mexican proposal, his Government found it difficult to accept the idea of placing in the custody of a third party prisoners of war who refused to go home, because North Koreans who refused to be sent back to the Communists were loyal citizens of the Republic. His country could not agree that such prisoners should be treated like alien prisoners of war by being removed temporarily to a foreign country.⁶

References to the Commission's reports were made during the general debate by the representatives of Australia, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Sweden, the USSR, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia, among others.

The representatives of Cuba and the United Kingdom stated that they found the reports objective and frank. The representatives of Australia, Sweden, the United Kingdom and Yugoslavia drew attention to the fact that the reports showed that there were certain features of government in South Korea, particularly in connexion with the administration of the country, which they were unable to endorse; the representatives of Australia and the United Kingdom, however, felt that it should be borne in mind that independence had only recently been gained by the Republic of Korea and that the aggression had subjected it to difficulties, including economic difficulties, not of its own making. It was stated by the representatives of Australia, the Netherlands and New Zealand that the United Nations should continue to be represented in Korea for some time after the cessation of hostilities, in order to help the Korean people bring about that country's recovery.

The representatives of the Netherlands and Sweden approved the attitude adopted by the Commission. The representative of the Netherlands said that while the Commission had tried not to intervene in any internal political conflict in the Republic of Korea, the Commission could not remain inactive in the face of the existing political situation; it had acted wisely in seeking to safeguard the principles of democratic constitutional government, bearing in mind that, besides the sacrifices made by the South Koreans themselves, a number of countries had also made sacrifices of men and materials and would be called upon in the future to give further assistance to the Republic of Korea. He stated that his Government agreed with the conclusions reached by the Commission in its reports. The representative of Sweden considered that undemocratic methods used by the South Korean authorities had had an unfavourable effect on the willingness of other countries to make contributions to the work of rehabilitation of Korea.

The representative of the United States said that in considering the reports of UNCURK, the Committee should take a long and broad view of the whole of the Korean question as it had developed from the beginning. He referred also to the economic burdens placed upon South Korea by the separation of the industrial area of the North, by the influx of refugees from the North and by the problems arising from the war.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR and the USSR, on the other hand, could not commend the work of the Commission.

The representative of the USSR stated that the Committee's consideration of the reports had, in fact, turned into a debate on the problem of bringing to an end the war imposed on the Korean people.

The representative of the United States, he said, had tried to pass over facts mentioned by the Commission because they would have denied the United States representative any possibility of praising the Syngman Rhee regime. The Commission itself, he maintained, had been unable to conceal the sanguinary character of that regime.

He charged that this regime, with the support of the United States, had, among other things, suppressed democratic elements and had resorted to police terrorism and mass executions. The living conditions of the people in South Korea had, he said, deteriorated, but wealthy landowners and industrial companies had increased their profits.

The representative of the Republic of Korea denied the allegations of the USSR representative. He stated, among other things, that steps had been taken not against the democratic movement but against people engaged in violently subversive activities, arson and murder. With regard to the failure of South Korea to be self-supporting in foodstuffs, he pointed out that land reforms had put an end to landlordism and said that the crop failures were due to the war and severe droughts.

⁶ For the views of the Representative of Korea on the Indian draft resolution, see under (4) below.

As for the unification and rehabilitation of Korea, the representative of the USSR stated that the Commission set up to help solve that problem had not carried out its mission. It seemed, in fact, as if the Commission had been set up to confuse world public opinion. Unification was impossible when a war leading up to the accentuation of the division of the country had been imposed on the Korean people. No rehabilitation could be envisaged while towns and villages were being constantly bombarded.

The representative of the Byelorussian SSR, maintaining that the Commission had been illegally established, said that its reports revealed it as the servant of the United States. It had attempted to justify that aggression to support Syngman Rhee and to spread lies about the People's Democratic Republic of Korea and the People's Republic of China. A number of representatives had praised the Commission as wise, dignified and honourable. In its reports, however, it had argued in favour of unification on the basis advocated by Syngman Rhee, namely the extension of the jurisdiction of the Government of South Korea. Even the Commission had been unable to ignore the corruption and had referred to the political disorders which had undermined the stability of the country, admitting that the disregard of law could lead to a form of dictatorship. The gentleness of the criticism was accounted for by the necessity for the Commission to represent the South Korean regime as a democratic one, he stated. The only reason, he said, why the Commission recommended the extension of the jurisdiction of the South Korean Government was its desire to aid the United States aggressors in dispelling the growing feeling throughout the world of the senselessness of the Korean adventure.

The Commission had done nothing to end the war, the representative of the Byelorussian SSR stated; instead it had demagogically asserted that reports of an armistice had produced widespread gloom in South Korea where there was a desire to wage war in order to unify the country. Thus, the Commission demanded the continuation of hostilities, as did the propaganda of Syngman Rhee. The reports were neither truthful nor unbiased, he maintained.

(2) Draft Resolutions Before the First Committee⁷

Draft resolutions before the Committee were as follows:

(a) JOINT 21-POWER DRAFT RESOLUTION

Under the terms of the joint 21-Power draft resolution (A/C.1/725) by Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Honduras, Iceland, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay, which came before the Committee at its 512th meeting on 24 October, the General Assembly would reaffirm the earnest intention of the United Nations to reach a just and honourable settlement of the Korean conflict and note, with approval, among other things: (a) the efforts of the United Nations negotiators to achieve a just and honourable armistice to bring an end to the fighting in Korea in accordance with United Nations principles; and (b) the principles followed by the United Nations Command with regard to the question of repatriation of prisoners of war, and numerous proposals which the United Nations Command had made to solve the questions in accordance with humanitarian principles.

In its operative part, the draft would:

(1) call upon the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and the North Korean authorities to avert further bloodshed by having their negotiators agree to an armistice which recognized the rights of all prisoners of war to an unrestricted opportunity to be repatriated and which avoided the use of force in their repatriation; and (2) request the President of the General Assembly to transmit the resolution to the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and the North Korean authorities and to report to the Assembly as soon as he deemed appropriate, during the current session, on the result of his action.

(b) USSR DRAFT RESOLUTION

Under the USSR draft resolution (A/C.1/729), submitted to the Assembly at its 514th meeting on 29 October as an alternative to the 21-Power draft, the Assembly, having considered the report of UNCURK, would consider it necessary:

(1) to establish a commission for the peaceful settlement of the Korean question consisting of the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the USSR, the People's Republic of China, India, Burma, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea and South Korea; and (2) to instruct this commission to take immediate steps for the settlement of the Korean question on the basis of the unification of Korea, to be effected by the Koreans themselves under the supervision of the above-mentioned Commission, such steps to include extending all possible assistance in the repatriation of all prisoners of war by both sides.

At a later stage in the discussions the representative of the USSR introduced an additional paragraph (A/AC.1/729/Rev.1/Corr.1 and Rev.1/Corr.1/Add.1) to this draft resolution, by which the Assembly would recommend to the belligerents in Korea an immediate and complete cessation of military operations on land, by sea and in the air, on the basis of the draft armistice agreement already approved, the question of the complete repatriation of war prisoners to be referred for solution to the proposed commission, in which all questions should be decided by a two-thirds majority.

⁷ For the Indian draft resolution (A/C.1/734), the amendments to it and the views expressed, see section (4) below.

(c) MEXICAN AND PERUVIAN DRAFT RESOLUTIONS

On 3 and 5 November, at the 518th and 519th meetings of the Committee, draft resolutions were submitted by Mexico and Peru, respectively.

The Mexican draft resolution (A/C.1/730), among other things, would request the President of the Assembly to invite, through the channels that he might deem appropriate, the Military Commanders of the North Korean and Chinese forces in Korea to consider the following general bases for the exchange of prisoners of war:

(1) prisoners held by either of the parties, who had voluntarily expressed their desire to return to the country of their origin, would be repatriated without delay upon the conclusion of the armistice;

(2) other prisoners who desired to establish temporary residence in other States would not return to the country of their origin until the coming into force of the decisions adopted in the political conference that would take place after the armistice, in conformity with the agreement reached by the Military Commanders, on point 5 of the armistice agenda;

(3) pending the entry into force of the decisions of this conference, the situation of the prisoners wishing to reside temporarily in countries other than their countries of origin, should be governed by the following rules: (a) the Assembly would negotiate with each State agreeing to participate in the plan envisaged in the resolution on the number of prisoners which such a State might be prepared to receive in its territory, as well as on the conditions inherent in their admission; (b) once the refugees were in the country of temporary residence, the authorities of that country should grant them a migratory status which would enable them to work in order to provide for their needs;

(4) when the time came for their repatriation in accordance with the provisions of (2) above, the authorities of the countries of origin would grant facilities for the return of the ex-prisoners of war and would furnish guarantees for the subsequent protection of their freedom and their lives; and

(5) in the case of those ex-prisoners of war who, by virtue of the resolution, were provisionally residing in another country and who expressed their desire to return to their country of origin before the provisions of paragraph (2) took effect, the United Nations would provide the means to carry their wishes into effect.

Under the Peruvian draft resolution (A/C.1/732), the Assembly would, among other things:

(1) set up a five-member commission, on which each of the parties to the conflict would be represented by one delegate; the Assembly, for its part, would appoint two delegates to the commission and would invite the collaboration of a neutral State, not a Member of the United Nations, to be a member of the commission and to serve as its chairman;

(2) the commission would immediately take steps to co-operate in the repatriation of prisoners in accordance with their freely expressed wishes;

(3) prisoners not wishing to be repatriated would remain under the protection of the commission in a neutralized zone for so long as no provision had been made for their future; and

(4) the commission would propose to the United Nations at the earliest possible moment the most suitable measures for the final decision on the future of the prisoners remaining under its protection, one of the measures to be considered being their transfer to the territory of such Powers as were prepared to receive them, or their settlement in Trust Territories in agreement with the Administering Power concerned; prisoners would, in any event, be free to make a decision later concerning their return to their place of origin.

(3) Views Expressed in the first Committee

(a) UNITED STATES SURVEY AND VIEWS EXPRESSED IN SUPPORT OF THE 21-POWER DRAFT RESOLUTION AND AGAINST FORCIBLE REPATRIATION

The general debate in the First Committee was opened by the representative of the United States, who, among other things, gave a survey of past events in Korea, discussing the question of responsibility for the outbreak of hostilities, the negotiations for a cease-fire at Panmunjom and the responsibility for the deadlock in those negotiations. A number of representatives expressed agreement with the account given by the United States and disagreed with that given by the USSR (see below). Several representatives expressed support of the 21-Power draft resolution, and the majority opposed any forcible repatriation of prisoners of war.

Introducing the 21-Power draft resolution, the representative of the United States reviewed the history of the Korean question since the Cairo Conference of 1 December 1943. He said that early hopes for the establishment of a unified, independent and democratic Korea had been frustrated when, in the United States-USSR Joint Commission, the USSR had denied the right of the Korean people to free expression of their will. Consequently, the United States had in 1947 referred to the United Nations the matter of redeeming the pledges of Korean independence. The Government of the Republic of Korea had been established as the result of elections observed by the United Nations. But a "people's republic" had been arbitrarily established in North Korea and had never given its subjects an unfettered opportunity to decide upon its claim to rule, he stated.

Attempts had thereafter been made to subvert the Republic of Korea by political and guerrilla warfare while a United Nations Commission was being maintained in Korea to promote the country's unification.

The United States representative then reviewed the aggression against the Republic of Korea, and the role of the United Nations in the question, including achievement of its immediate objective to halt and throw back the aggression, and the establishment on 7 October 1950 of UNCURK to seek to bring about a unified, independent and democratic government for the whole country. He emphasized that the United Nations had done everything possible to bring about peace while the aggressors had done nothing but impede those efforts, and that the aggressors had friends in the United Nations who were present in the Committee and were active on their behalf.

These facts, he said, were cited to supplement the reports which his Government had submitted under the Security Council resolution of 7 July 1950 by which the United States had been asked to organize the Unified Command in Korea. The United Nations Command had also submitted a special report (A/2228) on 18 October 1952.⁸

In the negotiations for an armistice, he stated, the United Nations Command had had three main objectives: (1) to bring the fighting to an end on a basis which would achieve the purpose of repelling the aggression; (2) to secure the maximum assurance against a renewal of the fighting; and (3) to bring about a fair exchange of prisoners. After agreement had been reached on a military demarcation line and on a recommendation for a political conference, which would be held three months after an armistice and would discuss the withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea, the outstanding issues in connexion with arrangements for a cease fire and its supervision had at long last been reduced to the questions of the rehabilitation of North Korean airfields, the composition of an impartial inspection commission and the treatment of prisoners. The United Nations Command had put forward a package proposal, which provided: (1) that the Command would give up its insistence that the airfields should not be rehabilitated; (2) that the inspection commission would be composed of Sweden, Switzerland, Poland and Czechoslovakia; and (3) that no prisoner would be forcibly repatriated. That proposal had been rejected. From that time on, the discussions had revolved around the prisoner-of-war question. The United Nations Command would have been quite satisfied to have all prisoners returned, provided no humanitarian considerations prevented such returns. Useful proposals had been made by the Government of Mexico and many others, but they had all come to grief upon the Communist insistence that prisoners must be forced to return.

From the very beginning, the United States representative said, the United Nations Command had observed the provisions of the Geneva Convention of 1949. It had promptly sent lists of prisoners to the International Committee of the Red Cross which, in turn, had sent those lists to the other side. Some 170,000 names had been sent in. Subsequently it was discovered that during the large-scale surrenders by the North Korean Army and the mass movement of refugees from the North, over 37,000 persons who were not prisoners at all had been sent into prisoner-of-war camps. These civilians had been reclassified and set free. The International Committee was later informed of those persons by name and a revised list, containing some 132,000 names, was given to the Chinese-North Korean side. Subsequent checking of the revised list revealed that some 11,000 of those listed there were citizens of the Republic of Korea improperly classified as prisoners of war, and they too were being released. The United Nations Command therefore had in custody as prisoners of war about 121,000 persons. On the other hand, the Chinese-North Korean practice had been not to inform the International Committee of the Red Cross or the United Nations Command, through any channel, of the names and numbers of prisoners of war, as required by law. When they finally had agreed to do so, they had listed 11,500, including all Koreans and all United Nations Command personnel. That was disappointing because, on 8 April 1951, the Chinese-North Korean side had announced over the radio that they had captured 65,000 prisoners in the first nine months of hostilities. When asked about the difference between the 65,000 and 11,500, they said the difference was accounted for by people who had been "re-educated" at the front so quickly that it was impossible to get their names. They had joined the North Korean Army.

The United Nations Command had also admitted the International Red Cross Committee to its camps, given it every facility to investigate and had promptly met any criticism. The other side, besides not giving lists of names, had, he said: (1) failed to appoint a protecting Power or body such as the Red Cross; (2) rejected the efforts of the latter to enter their camps; (3) refused to exchange relief packages; (4) until very recently, refused to exchange mail and now permitted it only on a very limited scale; (5) refused to report on the health of prisoners; (6) refused to exchange the seriously sick and wounded as required by the Geneva Convention; (7) failed to give the accurate locations of their camps and failed to mark them properly; and (8) situated their camps in places of danger near legitimate military targets, in defiance of the Geneva Convention.

⁸ See pp. 165-66.

Turning to the origin of the question of the repatriation of the prisoners of war, the representative of the United States said that, as increasing numbers of prisoners were taken, it was learned that more and more of them believed that, if they were returned, they would be executed, imprisoned or treated brutally. They therefore took the position that if an attempt were made to exchange them, they would resist it by force. To the United Nations Command and to all governments whose troops were in Korea it was unthinkable that force should be used to drive into the hands of the Chinese-North Korean Command persons who would resist that return by force. So far as he knew, there had been no Member of the United Nations outside the Communist group that had ever suggested that it was right, proper, legal or necessary to return those prisoners by force. The magnitude of the problem had not been known until the interrogation period in April 1952. The numbers who held those views and the violence with which they held them made it clear that it would not only be highly immoral to force their return but that it would also require a military operation of no inconsiderable proportions. The representative of the United States added that the Unified Command had throughout taken the view that all prisoners in its possession were entitled to the opportunity to be repatriated, regardless of the vast numerical disproportion involved in the exchange.

In seeking a solution to the problem, the first step had been to find out what the prisoners thought and whether or not they would resist by force their repatriation, the United States representative said. The Communists now claimed that it was wrong to find that out, despite the fact that they had agreed to the interrogation in April 1952 and had issued an amnesty proclamation, to influence, if possible, the decision of the prisoners. The prisoners had been encouraged to agree to repatriation; warned of the possible consequences to their families in the Communist area if they did not return; and given no promises about their future if they were not repatriated. If there was doubt whether a prisoner would resist repatriation, he had been put in the group which had agreed to return home. Only when an interrogator was convinced that the prisoner would violently resist repatriation had the prisoner been classified as not available for repatriation. The original screening of prisoners of war in April 1952 had applied only to those in camps where such interrogation was permitted. In some of the camps, the Communist leaders had refused to permit any interrogations and such interrogations had not been possible until later. The first results had shown that 70,000 would be available for repatriation. In camps in which it had not been possible to carry on an interrogation, it had been estimated that most of the prisoners would want to return. Even in such camps, however, 1,000 prisoners had escaped from their leaders at the earliest opportunity. A considerable number who had attempted to escape had been murdered by their own fellow Communist prisoners. Subsequently, the United Nations Command had completed the interviewing of all prisoners and reported that 83,000 (76,600 Koreans and 6,400 Chinese) were available for repatriation. The United Nations Command had said over and over again that it was willing to have that screening redone by any impartial body in the world. When those figures had been announced, the Communist leaders had inspired disturbances at the Kojé camps in order to discredit the United Nations Command and the interrogation.

Turning to the repatriation question in the light of international law and practice, the United States representative stated that the United Nations Command had fully and faithfully abided by the provisions of the Geneva Convention, according to which—subject to special agreements which did not derogate from the rights of prisoners—"the prisoner shall be released and repatriated if he is sick and it is established that he is out of the battle". The others were to be dealt with at the end of hostilities. The ordinary presumption, which was true in a large number of cases, was that the prisoner wanted to go home. The Geneva Convention gave the prisoner the right and the opportunity to do so. On the other hand, there was nothing in that Convention to imply that a prisoner of war must be forced at the end of a bayonet to go back when he did not want to go. That very question, he stated, had been discussed in 1949 when, with a view to enlarging the existing recognized international practice, some delegates had claimed that the Convention should give the prisoner of war the absolute right to stay, if he so wished, in the detaining State. This proposal had been rejected and the Convention had maintained the practice that the detaining State retained discretion to grant or refuse asylum. The right of a Power to grant asylum to prisoners of war which it detained and the thesis that forced repatriation was in no way admissible had, moreover, been recognized by the Soviet Union itself in the Brest-Litovsk Treaty and in numerous other treaties signed between 1918 and 1921.

The representative of the United States emphasized that the following alternative procedures had been offered during the armistice negotiations by the United Nations Command in connexion with its package proposal: (1) joint Red Cross teams from both sides, with or without military observers from both sides, should be admitted to the camps of both sides to verify whether alleged non-repatriates would, in fact, forcibly resist return to the side from which they come; (2) all prisoners of war on both sides should be delivered in groups to a neutral area and should there be given an opportunity to express their attitude towards repatriation. That attitude could be expressed to and ascertained by any one or any combination of the following groups: the International Committee of the Red Cross; teams from impartial nations; joint military teams from the Communist side and the United Nations side; or joint Red Cross teams. On 28 September 1952 three variations of the latter suggestion had been made. One was that the armistice agreement should state that all prisoners were entitled to be released and repatriated. The obligation of the two military sides would be discharged by taking a prisoner to the agreed neutral place, where he would be identified and his name checked against the agreed list of prisoners of war, and at that time any prisoner who indicated that he wished to return to the side which had detained him would be permitted to do so and would be released. The United Nations Command had thought that that suggestion met almost all difficulties. Another suggestion was that prisoners who would not resist repatriation should be expeditiously exchanged, and all prisoners who had indicated that they would forcibly resist repatriation would be delivered to the demilitarized zone in small groups, where they would be entirely free from the military control of either side. They would then be interviewed by representatives of a mutually agreed country or countries not participating in the Korean hostilities, and they would be free to go either north or south. Yet another suggestion was that there would be no interviewing. The prisoners would be taken in small groups to the neutral zone and told that "that was North Korea and that was South Korea" and would be allowed to go whichever way they wished.

Those suggestions, the representative of the United States said, had all been rejected on 8 October. The USSR representative had stated a number of times that, on that date, new proposals had been introduced by the Chinese-North Korean side, but the fact was that they were the same as those made for the last five months. The senior United Nations armistice negotiator, General Harrison, had therefore recessed the discussions at Panmunjom, while expressing his willingness to return at any time when the Chinese-North Korean side either indicated that it would accept one of the United Nations proposals or present new proposals of its own in good faith. Nothing of the kind had happened. As to the proposals contained in the letters from the Chinese-North Korean side, the texts of which were included in a communication dated 20 October 1952 (A/2230) addressed to the Secretary-General by the United States representative, they also amounted only to a reiteration of the principle of forcible repatriation.

The United States delegation and some of its associates in the United Nations believed therefore, said the United States representative, that a preliminary step in the consideration of the Korean question was to determine, if possible, whether the Communists really wished to have an honest armistice in North Korea. It seemed to them that it would be wise to have the General Assembly affirm the principle of non-forcible repatriation as representing the will of that body. To that end, the United States delegation had joined with the delegations of the 21-Powers in presenting a draft resolution (A/C.1/725).

In the subsequent discussions, a number of representatives expressed agreement with the account of events given by the United States. Representatives of countries with forces in Korea, in particular, stressed their support of the principle of collective security in accordance with the provisions of the Charter. The majority of representatives also opposed the forcible repatriation of prisoners of war and supported the United States interpretation of the Geneva Convention as not providing for such forcible repatriation.

On this point, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that article 118 of the 1949 Geneva Convention provided that prisoners of war should be released and repatriated without delay after the cessation of hostilities, and that this meant that the release of the prisoners should precede their repatriation. Forcible repatriation would involve precisely the opposite of release, since it would necessitate continued detention of the prisoners until they were delivered to the authorities of their own countries. As to article 7 of the Convention,⁹ its obvious purpose was to prevent prisoners from being forced by the detaining authorities to renounce their right of repatriation, the United Kingdom representative said. The authors of that provision had certainly not intended, however, to impose on States the obligation of delivering prisoners to political persecutors. The concept of forcible repatriation introduced an element foreign to the normal idea of repatriation. A detailed study of the Convention led irresistibly to the conclusion that it had been drawn up in the interests of the prisoners of war and in order to protect individual rights. The aim of the United Nations Command, he emphasized, was not an arrangement for allowing prisoners to decide arbitrarily where they wished to go, but one under which they should not be compelled to go to a country where they thought that their lives and freedom would be in danger. He invited the representative of the USSR to state frankly: (1) whether he agreed that the only current obstacle to the conclusion of an armistice was the question of whether all prisoners of war must be repatriated, if necessary by force; (2) whether the Government of the USSR considered that all prisoners of war must be repatriated, if necessary by force; (3) whether he interpreted the letter sent to General Clark, the Commander-in-Chief of the United Nations Command, on 16 October 1952 by the Supreme Command of the Chinese-North Korean armies as a demand for the repatriation of all prisoners of war, by force if necessary; and (4) if he thought that the letter referred to contained new proposals, would he state them.

In connexion with the screening of the prisoners of war, the representative of the United Kingdom affirmed that he had observed on the spot that a large number of prisoners had considered that their lives might be in danger if they were forced to return to their country. He added that he had inquired about the methods used during the screening and had found that the procedure had been a genuine endeavour to ascertain the true state of mind of the prisoners. The representative of Peru also observed that even if it were true—which he maintained it was not—that some pressure had been exercised by the United Nations Command against the prisoners, it was the future that should be considered, and the repatriation commission could be relied upon to discharge its functions honestly with due respect for the Geneva Convention.

The representative of France said that the repatriation of all prisoners on the conclusion of hostilities ought to remain the general rule. The rule had developed in a period when national wars had not been ideological in character and it had been scarcely conceivable that a prisoner should prefer exile to repatriation. It was also designed to prevent a victorious country from abusing its power to retain prisoners indefinitely. It would be a distortion, however, of both the aim and the scope of the Geneva Convention to turn the inalienable right of all prisoners to repatriation into an obligation to use force or violence in order to repatriate them against their will. That principle could not be extended in such a way as to defeat its own purpose. The problem might perhaps be solved on the basis of principles similar to those followed by the English-speaking countries with regard to conscientious objectors, principles which endeavoured to reconcile respect for the individual with the demands of national duty. Conscientious objectors were granted an exceptional status only after a long and thorough inquiry into the sincerity and compelling nature of their religious or philosophical convictions. Those principles seemed to have been respected by the United Nations Command. Each of the proposals submitted by the Command would enable Chinese and North Korean observers to check each individual case and would give them an opportunity to persuade each of their fellow-countrymen to return home. Hitherto, however, those proposals had been rejected en bloc.

The representatives of Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Ethiopia, Greece, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, the Philippines, Turkey and Uruguay also expressed their views as co-sponsors of the 21-Power draft resolution. They endorsed the statement of the United States representative and stressed that, while each prisoner had the right to be repatriated, nothing could be found in international law supporting the principle of forcible repatriation and, particularly, that since the whole purpose of the Geneva Convention was to protect the interests of the prisoners, it could not be argued that giving them more favourable treatment than demanded by that Convention was forbidden by the Convention. They also stressed that, in order to allay all fears that pressure might be applied to induce prisoners to refuse repatriation, it was necessary to place them in a position where their decisions would be free from all constraint. The 21-Power draft resolution offered, in their view, many possibilities for a solution, if the parties were honestly willing to co-operate. The representative of Canada observed that if there were any basis for the charges of terrorism on the part of the Unified Command to force the prisoners to refuse repatriation, the Unified Command would be making every effort to prevent a free expression of views by prisoners before impartial bodies, rather than propose an impartial investigation.

⁹ Article 7 of the Geneva Convention declared that "prisoners of war may in no circumstances renounce in part or in entirety the rights secured to them by the present convention and by the special agreements referred to in the foregoing article, if such there be".

Support for the draft resolution was expressed by the representatives of China, Costa Rica, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Panama and Sweden. As regards the ultimate objectives of the United Nations in Korea, its unification and rehabilitation, which a number of representatives had called to the attention of the Committee, the representative of China said that the present armistice negotiations were desirable only in so far as they constituted a step towards the restoration of and not an obstacle to peace. An armistice was not an end in itself. What was more important was that adequate safeguards be provided for the security of the Republic of Korea.

The representative of Israel emphasized that the United Nations objective in Korea was, in fact, the political unification of that country by peaceful methods, not necessarily by the use of force. In that connexion, recent statements by the Government of the Republic of Korea appeared to indicate that it failed to recognize the objective and the limitations of the action undertaken by the United Nations in the peninsula.

The representatives of Egypt, Israel, Lebanon, Pakistan and Yugoslavia endorsed the principle of non-forcible repatriation of prisoners of war. The representative of Pakistan observed that the Geneva Convention clearly stipulated that prisoners were entitled to demand and obtain repatriation but was silent on the particular problem before the Committee for the reason that the problem had not existed nor had it been foreseen at the time. It was essential, however, to bring hostilities to an end while the problem of repatriation was subjected to thorough study, he said. The representative of Israel suggested the inclusion in the 21-Power draft resolution of a statement stressing that there could be no question of forcible retention of prisoners of war.

Some representatives also stated that forcible repatriation would constitute a violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the General Assembly in 1948.

The representative of China said that the so-called Chinese volunteers in Korea were either regular units of the Chinese Communist forces or persons impressed into the service by the Chinese Communist regime in Peiping. It was known, however, that a number of them did volunteer to go to Korea in the hope that they might work themselves across the lines and surrender to the United Nations forces and thus regain their freedom. It was hardly necessary for him, he said, to point out that no request of any kind had been made by his Government for the repatriation of Chinese prisoners of war to Taiwan (Formosa). It was premature in any case for such requests to be made by any government at the present stage.

He doubted seriously if the Communists would ever agree to the principle of voluntary repatriation. It was their design that those prisoners who dared to choose freedom should be returned and liquidated so that, in future wars of aggression, they would not encounter any defection. That, he considered, was why they had rejected the reasonable proposals made by the United Nations Command.

At the close of the general debate, the United States representative stated, inter alia, that the discussion had shown a wide agreement on the following points: (a) aggression had been stopped; (b) there would be no need for or purpose in continuing hostilities if the aggression ended, provided there were safeguards that aggression would not be renewed and an honourable agreement were reached on the military questions leading up to an armistice. He also called attention to the approval evinced of the efforts of the United Nations Command in the armistice agreement and the almost complete unanimity among delegations that force should not be used either to return or to detain prisoners of war.

Stating that the sponsors of the 21-Power draft resolution welcomed other constructive suggestions, he referred to the valuable contributions made by the Mexican and Peruvian proposals as well as by other delegations. He criticized, however, the stand taken by the USSR representative (see below), stating that he had resorted to every technical legal argument to extract from a treaty, the Geneva Convention, results which supported the Communist stand on the prisoner question, on behalf of China and North Korea, which had violated almost every provision of that Convention.

The USSR draft resolution was not helpful, the United States representative said. It did not accept the principle that no force should be used. It confused military and political questions. There could be no cease fire which did not provide for the return of the United Nations Command prisoners and settle the prisoner-of-war question.

During the discussions, other supporters of the 21-Power draft resolution also criticized the USSR draft.

The representative of Canada considered that it was vague and did not seem to address itself to the problem blocking the armistice. By calling for the establishment of a commission, it only added to the confusion. He asked: (1) when, where and by whom would the prisoner-of-war issue be discussed if the USSR draft resolution were adopted? (2) would the progress made at Panmunjom have to be abandoned and entirely fresh negotiations undertaken by the commission? (3) would the commission be created before an armistice had been reached, or would the cease-fire talks continue while the commission discussed other problems related to the "peaceful settlement of the Korean question" which both sides had agreed to do within three months of an armistice? and (4) were the political discussions to begin before an armistice, or would the commission come into being only after an armistice? He considered that, in the absence of further explanation, there seemed to be nothing new in the Soviet Union draft resolution. At the previous session, he recalled, the Assembly had decided to defer consideration of the Korean situation until there was an armistice. That priority surely still obtained.

The representative of Israel, supporting that statement, suggested that, instead of voting immediately on the USSR draft resolution, the Assembly should recommend that consideration of that proposal should take place in strict accordance with paragraph 60 of the tentative draft armistice agreement, namely within three months from the effective date of the armistice and possibly during a special session of the Assembly, which could consider the composition and terms of reference of a commission which might institute a political conference in accordance with the objectives of the USSR draft resolution.

Among the representatives who opposed the argument of the representative of the USSR that a prisoner of war remained duty bound to the State to whose military forces he belonged when taken prisoner (see below), the representative of Peru stated, inter alia, that no national link bound the South Koreans enrolled by force in the North Korean army and similarly no link of the fatherland existed between the Chinese "volunteers" and the State of North Korea. Furthermore, if the representative of the USSR now spoke about a State link between the Chinese "volunteers" and the Government of the People's Republic of China, he would refute his delegation's own emphatic affirmations in 1951 regarding the complete absence of State relations between the Government of Communist China and the Chinese "volunteers".

The representative of Australia observed that the great majority of the Members of the United Nations believed in human freedom and considered it inconsistent with their concept of humanity, as well as the concept of human rights set down in the Charter, that force should be applied to compel a prisoner of war to return home. The contrary viewpoint was based, he said, on the concept of a totalitarian State. It was that the citizens of a State had no rights, except through the State, and that prisoners of war belonged to the State from which they had been captured and to which they had to be returned.

(b) USSR SURVEY AND VIEWS EXPRESSED IN FAVOUR OF THE USSR DRAFT RESOLUTION AND OPPOSING THE 21-POWER, THE MEXICAN AND PERUVIAN DRAFTS

The representative of the USSR, whose statement followed that of the representative of the United States at the opening of the general debate, also gave an account of past events in Korea and discussed the question of responsibility for the outbreak of hostilities. The views expressed in this statement, which were in opposition to those expressed by the representative of the United States, were supported by the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, who also declared their support for the Soviet draft resolution.

These representatives also expressed criticism of the 21-Power draft resolution as unlikely to lead to a settlement in Korea, and of the Mexican and Peruvian draft resolutions.

The representative of the USSR considered that the review of the Korean question by the representative of the United States was a complete distortion of events since the Cairo Conference in 1943. After the Second World War, he said, the United States had wanted to stifle the South Korean democratic movement towards the unification of the country and towards independence on the basis of democratic institutions. The United States had decided to violate its obligations towards its allies and the co-signatories of the Moscow Agreement and in order to perpetuate the division of Korea, they had alleged that agreement with the USSR was impossible and had accordingly ceased all co-operation with the Soviet Union in Korea. The allegations of subversive action directed against Syngman Rhee were merely an attempt to divert popular opinion from the anti-democratic methods applied in South Korea by the United States authorities with the support of reactionary elements, feudal landowners and notorious collaborators with Japan. The attack by the South against the North had been premeditated and the attempts of the United States delegation to deny that aggression had failed in the face of the evidence furnished by the USSR delegation at the fifth session of the General Assembly.

Turning to the question of the prisoners of war, he stated that ever since 12 December 1951 the Chinese-North Korean Command had been proposing that prisoners of war of both sides should be released and repatriated as soon as possible after the armistice was signed, that repatriation commissions should be set up and that lists of war prisoners should be exchanged. Instead of answering that proposal, the United States delegation had issued an ultimatum concerning both information on war prisoners and inspection of prison camps by the International Committee of the Red Cross. On 18 December the Chinese-North Korean Command had submitted a list of 11,500 prisoners, and the United States Command had submitted a list of 132,000 prisoners, although earlier it had given the International Committee of the Red Cross a list of 176,000 names. The representative of the United States had explained that the difference of some 44,000 between the two totals was due to the fact that some prisoners had been released as civilian internees of South Korea. That was a strange explanation, since any prisoner of war could be regarded as a former civilian. There had then been a second explanation—that the 44,000 prisoners were really South Koreans who had been mobilized into the North Korean armies. The United States delegation to the armistice negotiations had finally been forced to submit the necessary information on more than 132,000 prisoners. There was a discrepancy between that figure and the latest figure of 121,000 prisoners given by the representative of the United States. The reason for the difference had become apparent from the statement on 30 December 1951 by the United Nations Commander, General Ridgway, that nearly 7,000 Korean and Chinese prisoners had died in United States camps. All that, as well as the United States demand for an exchange of prisoners on the basis of equal numbers, had had an adverse effect on the course of the negotiations, he said.

The greatest obstacle, however, had been the demand of the United States that the International Committee of the Red Cross should be empowered to make certain that the decision of war prisoners and civilians in favour of repatriation had not been made under duress, the representative of the USSR stated. Such a demand ran directly counter to the principles of international law. The Chinese-North Korean Command had naturally rejected such demands, together with the United States proposals that all prisoners of war who had been citizens of South or North Korea before 25 June 1950 should be regarded as civilians. The purpose of that scheme had been to detain such prisoners of war, reclassified as civilians, and to use them in the armed gangs of Syngman Rhee and Chiang Kai-shek. On 21 March 1952 the Chinese-North Korean Command had made another attempt to reach an agreement. It had proposed that, immediately after the armistice, the 11,500 prisoners in North Korean hands and the 132,000 prisoners in United States hands should be released after the lists of names had been checked by both sides. On 25 March the United States Command had said that those proposals might provide the basis for a solution. Accordingly, the Chinese-North Korean Command had submitted a concrete proposal for the return to their places of residence of all war prisoners of other than Korean nationality who were in the hands of either side, and Korean war prisoners whose place of residence was not under the control of the side whose prisoners they were. The Korean war prisoners whose place of residence was in territory occupied by the side whose prisoners they were need not be exchanged if they wished to return home and lead a peaceful life.

During the negotiations from June to September 1952, the representative of the USSR continued, the parties had agreed in principle on: (1) article 51 of the draft armistice agreement, concerning the release and compulsory repatriation of all war prisoners on the basis of lists to be exchanged and verified; and (2) on article 52, providing that no released war prisoner could take part in future military operations. After first stating that it had 132,000 war prisoners in its hands, and then reducing that figure to 121,000, the United States delegation had proposed to repatriate only 83,000 Korean or Chinese prisoners. The Chinese-North Korean delegation had pointed out that the intention of the United States to retain a large number of war prisoners was contrary to those articles. The United States delegation, however, had declared that its proposals were final. In that connexion, the representative of the USSR recalled that, on 5 February 1952, the United States delegation had said that there would be no compulsory repatriation or exchange.

Events had shown, he said, that at that point the United States Command had taken steps to ensure that it would be able to retain war prisoners by force. The prisoners had been forced, by systematic terror and compulsion, to sign declarations that they did not wish to be repatriated. The United States Command had insisted on repeated interrogations, which showed both that the first interrogations had not had the desired results and that the United States Command was using coercion and pressure, contrary to the principles of international law. The representative of the USSR quoted a report of the International Committee of the Red Cross, published in the April 1952 issue of the Revue internationale de la Croix Rouge, which, he said, spoke of the unbearable regime in the American camps and described the bloody events of February and March 1952 in the camp on Kojé Island. The report drew particular attention to the police methods and the brutality of the American troops. In the light of the action taken by those troops at dawn on 18 February 1952 against prison camp No. 62, the assertion that Communist agitators or leaders had committed acts of terrorism to force prisoners to be repatriated was hollow mockery. The document entitled "Our life is in danger. Help us to get out of this American Hell", signed by 6,600 prisoners on Kojé Island, he said, also related the story of a series of massacres and pogroms between 19 and 23 May, during which hundreds of prisoners had been wounded, killed or hanged in camps Nos. 66 and 76 on Kojé Island. More executions had taken place on Cheju Island on 2 October while the Chinese had been celebrating the third anniversary of their Republic. The claim that the truce talks in Korea were being hampered because a certain number of prisoners did not wish to be repatriated only masked the attempt made by the United States commander to oblige prisoners to waive repatriation and to impose on them a preliminary screening, he said. Neither the principles nor the practice of international law allowed compulsory interrogation and screening by force, as both of those actions were designed to deprive prisoners of war of the right to be repatriated.

The representative of the USSR said that the question of prisoners of war should be examined from three different aspects—moral, political and legal.

Morally, one should be guided by the principle that prisoners of war must freely express their wishes. It was clear, he said, that a defenceless man such as a prisoner of war did not have freedom of choice between remaining where he was or returning to his country. Propaganda, pressure and even violence might greatly alter his wishes. From the ethical point of view, all attempts to make the prisoner state his choice in that connexion should therefore be ruled out on principle.

From the political point of view, he added, a classification of prisoners of war into two groups—those who wished to be repatriated and those who did not—would undermine the political rights of States. It would be too easy to use against their country of origin those who did not wish to be repatriated.

Dealing with the argument of the United States representative that in some instances the USSR had not insisted on the return of all prisoners, the USSR representative said that the United States representative had referred to selected provisions of only some treaties, and had refrained from mentioning those which did not support his theory. On the other hand, he had not taken into account the historical events behind the treaties he had cited. Those agreements, in fact, represented the balance sheet of the fight which the new USSR had had to make against the old capitalist States which wished to destroy it. The real meaning of a treaty could not be understood by taking it out of its historical context. For instance, the Brest-Litovsk Treaty, which the Soviet Government had been compelled to sign, was one of the most predatory and forced treaties in history. The young Soviet State did not then have sufficient strength to oppose such demands.

The guiding principle of international law concerning prisoners of war, he said, was based on two facts: (1) the natural presumption that each prisoner of war wished to return to his country of origin, and (2) that the pacific settlement of disputes must not be delayed by the question of the repatriation of prisoners. It was essential that they should not be made the victims of unlawful or merely unreasonable measures which would deprive them of their right to repatriation. Article 118 of the Geneva Convention of 1949 stated that prisoners of war should be released immediately after hostilities had ceased and that, in the absence of provisions to the contrary in the agreements concluded by the parties in conflict, each of the Powers holding war prisoners should immediately implement a repatriation plan in conformity with the principles set out in the previous articles. Article 7 of the Convention provided that war prisoners could in no case waive the rights secured to them by the Convention. The text was mandatory on that point. The USSR representative recalled that the wording had not been adopted without certain difficulty.

The Austrian representative, he said, had made a suggestion diametrically opposed to that text and had tried to establish the right of prisoners of war to waive the right to return to their own countries. The USSR delegation had at that time taken a strong stand and had been fully supported by the United States delegation. The guiding principle of international law in that question should therefore be sought in the texts of those agreements. Article 7 of the Convention settled the whole matter, but not in the way presented by the representative of the United States in the First Committee. The Conference of 1949 laid down that it was the sacred right of every citizen to be able to return to his country. It was criminal to resort to plots and pressure—not to mention executions and violence—to prevent the person concerned from using that right.

The representative of the USSR also referred, among other things, to the Treaty of 1898 between Spain and the United States, to article 220 of the Treaty of Versailles, and to the Armistice concluded with Bulgaria, Romania and Hungary at the end of the Second World War which provided for the exchange of all prisoners of war without any reservation. The same principle, he said, was to be found in the text of the Peace Treaty signed with Italy and the German and Japanese Acts of Capitulation. The standards of international law excluded the theory which the United States Government wished to apply. The generally applied standards were also supported by legal doctrine.

The representative of the USSR said that the draft resolution (A/C.1/725) submitted by the United States and certain other countries taking part in the Korean war must be rejected as it would not lead to the peaceful settlement sought. The principal task in Korea was to end the war. The proposals submitted by the Polish delegation¹⁰ (A/2229) were fully in keeping with that idea. The representative of the USSR stated that he wished to remedy the situation created by the fact that the First Committee in drawing up its agenda had decided, at its 510th meeting on 22 October, to consider these proposals separately at a later date. He had therefore submitted a draft resolution (A/C.1/729/Rev.1/Corr.1 and Rev.1/Corr.1/Add.1).

Replying later in the debate to criticisms of this draft resolution, the representative of the USSR re-emphasized certain points he had made in his general survey. Among other things, he stressed: (1) that the true obstacle to peaceful settlement lay in the fact that the United States High Command was resorting to force and pressure to ensure that Chinese and Korean prisoners should remain in American hands; (2) that the screening procedure used by the United States Command was not impartial since the reply to the questions was indicated and ordered in advance—it was aimed at provoking prisoners against their own country; (3) that the United States, by insisting on the adoption of an unreasonable principle, was, in effect, presenting an ultimatum whose inevitable results must be the breakdown in negotiations and the continuation of the war; (4) that other delegations whose countries were participating in the Korean war only desired to help American ruling circles get out of the embarrassing situation in which they had placed themselves by making war on the Korean people, while disguising their true objectives by hypocritical statements; (5) that article 118 and article 7 of the Geneva Convention, respectively: (a) established the principle that repatriation should take place irrespective of the existence of any agreement and regardless of the consent of the prisoners, and (b) protected prisoners against any attempt to compel them to waive their right to repatriation; (6) that this interpretation had been accepted during the discussions leading to the adoption of the Convention; (7) that it was inconceivable that the fulfilment of commitments assumed by States in an international agreement should be conditional on the wishes of individuals to be repatriated; and (8) a serviceman taken prisoner underwent no change in legal status and therefore could not invoke the right of political asylum.

The facts, the representative of the USSR said, thus proved that: (1) the 1949 Geneva Convention and the previous 1929 Convention required the unconditional repatriation of all prisoners of war; (2) such requirement was so binding that, in the absence of similar provisions in special agreements entered into by the parties concerned, repatriation should be carried out under article 118 of the 1949 Convention; (3) the Convention contained no exceptions or reservations affecting the principle of the exchange and repatriation of prisoners of war under which prisoners should be released and repatriated immediately after the cessation of hostilities; (4) there were no provisions in the Convention or any similar conventions which would allow the detaining Power to delay the repatriation of any prisoner of war on the ground that he was unwilling to return to his country or that to do so might be dangerous; (5) the attitude of the United States Command in Korea and of the Governments supporting it was in flagrant contradiction of the 1949 Geneva Convention and the generally accepted principles of international law governing the repatriation of prisoners of war; (6) reference to the refusal of some prisoners of war to be repatriated had no legal value; such refusal was a natural result of the measures taken by the United States Command against the Korean and Chinese prisoners of war.

¹⁰ The consideration of these proposals, entitled "Measures to avert the threat of a new world war and to strengthen peace and friendship among the nations", was deferred to the second part of the seventh session.

The problem of exchange of prisoners of war could be explained, said the USSR representative, by the general trend of United States foreign policy. One needed only to recall the law of 10 October 1952 which, he said, provided for financing of terroristic activities against the democratic countries. Such activities required a nucleus of men who could be equally recruited among the prisoners of war as among the terrorists who had fled from the wrath of the people to the capitalist countries as "displaced persons". This was the line of the policy which determined the stand of the United States Command in the matter. The fact that an attempt was being made to conceal this policy behind all sorts of considerations did not alter the facts. There could be no doubts that any State signatory to the Geneva Convention wishing earnestly to fulfil its obligations under the Convention would not have to resort to arbitrary screening or other excesses against the prisoners of war in its hands.

The USSR representative, therefore, opposed the 21-Power draft resolution; it was, he said, in reality an effort to substitute the question of forced repatriation for that of compulsory screening.

He also expressed opposition to the Mexican and Peruvian draft resolutions. The Mexican draft, he said, departed from the 1949 Geneva Convention by making repatriation dependent on the prisoners' decision, opened the door to every kind of abuse and permitted the coercion of prisoners of war. The Peruvian draft resolution also contained certain unacceptable provisions, which hardly differed from the proposals of the United States Command. It upheld the principle of the screening of prisoners of war and was therefore also incompatible with the principles of international law. The first operative paragraph of this draft provided for the creation of a five-member commission, but it did not provide for the participation of States directly concerned and other States, including those which had not taken part in the war in Korea. His delegation could not support such a proposal any more than it could agree with the definition of the duties of the commission.

Statements along similar lines, calling for the adoption of the USSR draft resolution and the rejection of the 21-Power draft resolution as well as the draft resolutions of Mexico and Peru, were made by the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR. The latter two draft resolutions, they stressed, were unacceptable because they retained the concept of voluntary repatriation of the prisoners.

The representative of Poland stated that the resistance of the prisoners in the camps was the best evidence of the falsity of the claims about their refusal to be repatriated. If those claims were true, he said, there would hardly have been need for United States troops to use machine-guns, tanks and flame-throwers to subdue the prisoners. In such circumstances there could be no question of an expression of free will. Moreover, it was against forceful methods of this kind that article 7 of the Geneva Convention was supposed to protect the prisoners. He also stated that the Korean war had been undertaken from the beginning in the interests of United States imperialist policy and its economy and military strategy. The so-called United Nations Command in Korea was a mere fiction; all those troops were subject to American military command without any control on the part of the United Nations, as had become even more clear in connexion with the bombing of Chinese and Korean towns and the utilization of the most brutal types of weapons forbidden by international law.

The representative of Czechoslovakia said that it was hard to speak of a principle of voluntary repatriation based on the exercise of free will in the light of violations of the Geneva Convention by the United States Government in its administration of the prisoner-of-war camps and its coercive screening process, forcing prisoners with massacres and bloodshed to sign anti-Communist declarations. What the United States chose to call voluntary repatriation was merely forced detention. The North Korean and Chinese representatives had never expressed themselves in favour of forcible repatriation; they had spoken against forced detention. The Geneva Convention of 1949, the representative of Czechoslovakia stressed, provided for the principle of unconditional repatriation; the Polish proposal, consideration of which the Committee had postponed, represented a full programme of concrete measures for the solution of the Korean question.

(C) VIEWS EXPRESSED IN SUPPORT OF THE MEXICAN AND PERUVIAN DRAFT
RESOLUTIONS

Statements were made by the representatives of Mexico and Peru in explanation of their draft resolutions (A/C.1/730 and A/C.1/732, respectively).

The representative of Peru, referring to the statement of the Soviet representative that the guiding principle of international law concerning prisoners of war was based on the presumption that the prisoners wished to be repatriated, stated that it would follow that in cases where there was evidence that the prisoner was opposed to repatriation, he would not be forced into accepting repatriation. He stressed that, by eliminating force, the Peruvian draft started from the exception to the principle of repatriation and indicated certain impartial and neutral means which could be found in the Geneva Convention and which were binding upon those who had accepted the Convention. It was in this respect that the Peruvian draft resolution differed from the Mexican draft. He was of the opinion that the problem was not a political problem but a juridical one which had to be resolved in accordance with the Geneva Convention.

The representative of Mexico, explaining his draft resolution, considered on the other hand, that it was important to avoid raising the question of deciding the rule of law to be applied. Neither the Geneva Convention nor the practice of States was decisive and uniform in one way or the other. It would, too, be hard to examine the Geneva Convention in the light of the historical factors which had prevailed at the time of its drafting. Finally, the General Assembly was not the proper organ to undertake a legal study of the matter at that stage, since such a study could not fail to be influenced by the political contingencies of the Korean question. A legal discussion would probably be indefinitely protracted and would not serve the urgent purpose of putting an end to the hostilities in Korea. The question at issue was, therefore, he said, political—far more than legal. A formula should be presented which would not stipulate a condition known beforehand to be unacceptable. If the North Korean authorities then refused such a formula likely to lead to an honourable solution, despite the United Nations' endeavours towards a compromise, the United Nations would certainly not bear the weight of the responsibility for the breakdown of the negotiations. The United Nations would be conscious of having discharged its entire duty to restore peace and consolidate the unity of its Members. The Mexican proposal, he stated, therefore left aside the purely legal aspect in order to make possible a specific settlement taking into account the political factors influencing the Korean situation.

The representatives of Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Israel, Lebanon, Nicaragua, Panama, the Philippines and the United Kingdom expressed either unqualified support for the draft resolutions or for principles which they contained, or felt that the proposals constituted valuable suggestions which the Committee might consider further.

The representative of Brazil expressed the view that those two proposals offered complementary measures. The machinery suggested by Peru for screening could, he said, be a preliminary step towards the measures proposed by Mexico. The Mexican proposals, on the other hand, could constitute a specific course to be studied by the commission provided for in the Peruvian proposal. He suggested that those who had so far put forward proposals concerning the problem of repatriation might informally try to iron out any discrepancy. That course would assist in removing difficulties and might lead to a plan which would fit within the framework of the 21-Power draft resolution.

(4) Indian Draft Resolution and Amendments

At the 524th meeting of the Committee on 17 November, India submitted a draft resolution (A/C.1/734) in terms of which, among other things, the Assembly would:

(1) affirm that the release and repatriation of prisoners of war should be effected in accordance with the Geneva Convention of 1949, the well-established principles of international law and the relevant provisions of the draft armistice agreement; (2) affirm that force should not be used against prisoners of war to prevent or effect their return to their homelands; and (3) request the President of the General Assembly to: (1) transmit to the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and to the North Korean authorities a set of seventeen specific proposals, contained in the draft resolution, as forming a just and reasonable basis for an agreement; (2) invite their acceptance of these proposals; and (3) report to the Assembly during its seventh session.

The proposals called, among other things, for the establishment of a repatriation commission consisting of representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden and Switzerland.

Paragraphs 14 and 17 of the proposals¹¹ read:

"14. The Repatriation Commission shall at its first meeting and prior to an armistice proceed to agree upon and appoint an umpire. If agreement on the appointment of an umpire cannot be reached by the Commission within a period of three weeks after the date of the first meeting, this matter shall be referred to the General Assembly.

¹¹ The other proposals were adopted by the Committee and subsequently by the Assembly without revision or amendment. For text of resolution adopted by the Assembly, see pp. 201-202.

"17. At the end of ninety days, the disposition of any prisoners of war whose return to their homelands has not been effected in accordance with the procedure set out above shall be referred by the Repatriation Commission to the political conference to be called under article 60¹² of the draft armistice agreement."

The representative of India stated that the seventeen paragraphs constituting its second part had been termed "proposals" because they were meant to show the way to a solution rather than be a solution in themselves.

He said that the real meaning of the terms "voluntary repatriation" or "non-forcible repatriation" was that force should not be used against prisoners of war. The Chinese, he said, had repeatedly stated that they were not asking for forcible repatriation. They appeared to argue that the soldiers had become prisoners as a result of force and that, in order to release them, it was necessary to remove the force. The other party stated that force would have to be used in order to repatriate some of the prisoners. The practice of international law, however, specifically laid down, without any equivocation or ambiguity, that force must not be used against the prisoners of war to prevent or effect their return to their homelands. That was the general background of paragraph 3 of his proposals.

One aspect of the repatriation question was the Chinese-North Korean view that the real issue was one of forcible detention, the representative of India stated. The charge of forcible detention would no longer arise, he pointed out, once the prisoners had been released into the temporary jurisdiction of the repatriation commission. As for the other side of the question, namely that of forcible repatriation, he said that no member of a civilized community could be called upon to exercise force against another person who was not fighting him, and against whom there was no legal sanction to use force. In the case of prisoners of war, the legal duty would have been discharged when the prisoners were released and provided with facilities to go home. Paragraph 3, he emphasized, was equally applicable to both parties.

With regard to paragraph 7 of the proposals, he recalled that it had been argued that a prisoner could not express himself while he was under imprisonment. This paragraph therefore envisaged that once the prisoners had been released by the detaining Power and were on their way to their homelands, the two parties should have freedom and facilities to explain to the prisoners depending on them their rights and the conditions prevailing in their homelands. One party had pointed out that, since the prisoners had been completely shut off from the world during their captivity, they had no knowledge of what was going on on the other side. For this reason, the two parties should have facilities to explain the situation to them. This would mean that it would be possible for the Chinese side, for instance, to explain to the prisoners that there was an amnesty. They would be able to tell the prisoners that they need have no fear of going home and there would be an opportunity to answer the questions of the prisoners.

Referring to the clauses dealing with the appointment of an umpire, the representative of India pointed out that when the two sides had agreed on the basis of repatriation, questions of interpretation would arise. The interpretation of the agreement would rest with the repatriation commission, but since each side would nominate two members of the commission, there might be an even split. His delegation felt, therefore, that the best way out of an impasse would be for the two parties to agree on the appointment of an umpire. Until that umpire was appointed, the repatriation commission would not come into being and the armistice would not become operative. If there were no agreement, however, the matter would be referred to the General Assembly. That did not mean that the Assembly would appoint the umpire, but only that it would consider what could be done at that stage. In order to avoid a prolongation of the disagreement on the appointment of an umpire, it was proposed that a period of three weeks be fixed for the appointment by the commission. The suggestion of this time-limit was not to be construed as constituting an ultimatum, but only an indication that the appointment of an umpire, which alone would enable the commission to proceed with its task, should not be delayed.

As to paragraph 17 of the proposals, it was linked with the sixth paragraph of the preamble; the draft armistice agreement provided for the political conference to meet at the end of 90 days, and that was why this time-limit had been set in paragraph 17, he said.

In conclusion, the representative of India requested the Committee to give priority to the Indian draft resolution so that no procedural difficulties on the side of the United Nations might affect the minds of those on the other side.

¹² See p. 174.

Following suggestions by the representatives who endorsed (see below) the main lines of his draft resolution, the representative of India, on 23 November, submitted a revision (A/C.I./734/Rev.1) amending paragraphs 14 and 17 of the proposals to read as follows:

"14. The Repatriation Commission shall at its first meeting and prior to an armistice proceed to agree upon and appoint the umpire who shall at all times be available to the Commission and shall act as its Chairman unless otherwise agreed. If agreement on the appointment of the umpire cannot be reached by the Commission within the period of three weeks after the date of the first meeting, this matter should be referred to the General Assembly.

"17. At the end of ninety days, after the Armistice Agreement has been signed, the disposition of any prisoners of war whose return to their homelands may not have been effected in accordance with the procedure set out in these proposals or as otherwise agreed, shall be referred with recommendations for their disposition, including a target date for the termination of their detention, to the political conference to be called as provided under article 60 of the draft armistice agreement. If, at the end of a further sixty days, there are any prisoners of war whose return to their homelands has not been effected or provided for by the political conference the responsibility for their care and maintenance until the end of their detention shall be transferred to the United Nations."

On 26 November, the representative of India submitted a second revision (A/C.I./734/Rev. 2), amending the final sentence of paragraph 17 to read:

"If at the end of a further sixty days there are any prisoners of war whose return to their homelands has not been effected under the above procedures or whose future has not been provided for by the political conference, the responsibility for their care and maintenance and for their subsequent disposition shall be transferred to the United Nations, which in all matters relating to them shall act strictly in accordance with international law."

The representative of India, at the 535th meeting of the First Committee on 1 December, made a further statement, elaborating his earlier statement and replying to some of the points raised during the discussion (see below). The representative of India stated, among other things, that: (1) the Government of India, in presenting what it thought might be a possible solution of the Korean problem, had acted largely on the basis of its judgment and the information it possessed—not laying down any terms but merely making proposals which would pave the way to negotiation; (2) settlement of the prisoner-of-war issue must be in terms of the Geneva Convention of 1949, which placed no obligation for forcible repatriation on the detaining Power and, in terms of the Indian draft, prisoners of war would be in the custody of neutral Powers, who would be bound by international law, thereby allowing no opportunity for the former detaining Power on either side to exercise any coercive pressure on them; (3) the Indian draft resolution was, in fact, a cease-fire resolution, as the only outstanding obstacle to an armistice agreement in Korea was the non-settlement of the prisoner-of-war issue and, if this issue were settled, there would be a cease fire within twelve hours; (4) regarding the question of the appointment of an umpire, his delegation considered that the umpire should only be called in to arbitrate if and when the members of the commission were divided on an issue; and (5) regarding the last part of paragraph 17 of the proposals, the question of the disposition of any prisoners of war who might not have been repatriated according to the procedures set forth in the rest of the draft resolution should go to the political conference—the United Nations acting, in all matters relating to any such prisoners, strictly in accordance with international law. In this respect he drew a distinction between the United Nations as one of the belligerent parties, referred to in the draft resolution as the detaining Powers, and the United Nations as a whole, including all 60 Members, in connexion with the provisions of paragraph 17.

Statements welcoming the Indian draft resolution, while suggesting the need for certain clarifications or revisions, particularly with regard to paragraphs 14 and 17 of the proposals, were made by the representatives of Afghanistan, Australia, Bolivia, Burma, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, France, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Mexico, New Zealand, the Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Sweden, Syria, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The representative of the United States stressed that for two years the United Nations had been bravely and successfully performing its greatest duty, that of resisting aggression in order that there would be a world of law and order supported by collective security. The people of the United States had taken a proud part in the United Nations effort because they believed in the United Nations and realized that if this great effort failed, the world would be back to the futile efforts of twenty years ago to build a barrier of words against aggression.

The representative of Sweden believed that the umpire of the Commission, mentioned in paragraph 14, should be a fifth member of the Commission and its chairman.

The representative of Norway felt that the underlying purpose of paragraph 17 could be expressed more comprehensively and that the best way to give the prisoners a feeling that they had a real choice would be to have an agency of the United Nations not only to take care of them but also to entrust that agency with powers to release them in case the political conference should fail to agree on a solution after the 60-day period envisaged.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, on the other hand, stated that the Indian draft could not provide a satisfactory solution. It was unacceptable, they stated, because: (1) the draft attempted to use the provisions of the Geneva Convention to support or cloak a possible refusal to repatriate the prisoners; it was in conflict with the articles of the Convention and reduced the matter to an exchange of those prisoners of war who voluntarily expressed a desire to be repatriated; (2) the functions of the commission proposed by India would be limited to repatriation of prisoners in contrast to the commission proposed in the USSR draft which would consider measures for settling the Korean question as a whole; (3) the draft gave a decisive voice to an umpire who would act as the commission's chairman thus, in the last analysis, making the United Nations—in spite of the fact that it was a belligerent party—a judge in its own case; (4) the conditions for an armistice were vague and the draft resolution, therefore, would not be conducive to a just and rapid solution of the Korean question; and (5) the draft made no mention of the question of the cessation of hostilities, the most urgent problem before the United Nations and the gateway to a peaceful settlement.

The representative of the USSR also stated that the Indian draft resolution failed to take into account the views of the North Korean and Chinese Governments. The views of the latter Government on the draft resolution, he said, were known to the Indian Government, since the draft resolution had been submitted to the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China for preliminary consideration and since, as early as 24 November, according to information at the disposal of the USSR delegation, that Government had given a negative answer to the Indian Government as regards the draft resolution. Proposals which were unacceptable to the Chinese People's Republic and the Korean People's Democratic Republic, he said, could not be expected to be at all effective. In reply to this point, the representative of India stated that while his Government could not speak for China it could speak to China and, on its own responsibility, had kept the People's Republic of China informed of its efforts to find a solution of the Korean problem. It realized that no settlement could be reached without the agreement of the People's Republic of China and therefore it was merely making proposals to pave the way to negotiation. In view of India's long and friendly relations with China and its position midway between those of the two opposing views, it felt that it was its duty to continue its efforts to dispel misunderstandings.

The representative of the Republic of Korea stated that he considered that the Indian draft resolution was based on erroneous premises, such as the assumption that a truce was a means to achieve United Nations objectives in Korea, and that the aggressors represented a legally acceptable position, which entitled them to all privileges in connexion with the conclusion of hostilities. Furthermore, he said, the draft resolution was unrealistic. For example, could it be supposed that a commission made up of two neutral countries and two Soviet satellites would exercise a purely neutral role, even with the guiding hand of an umpire? Moreover, the representative of the Republic of Korea asked, could it be supposed that, without supervision, the Communist prisoners of war would leave unmolested non-Communist prisoners of whom many had already been killed by the Communist prisoners in the prisoner-of-war camps? He expressed doubts that an unarmed "neutral" commission could exercise better control over the released Communist prisoners of war in a demilitarized zone than had existed in prisoner-of-war camps under the ostensible control of the United Nations Command. The conclusion, he said, was patent: the draft resolution underwrote the forced return of thousands of prisoners, to whom it sought to promise freedom to return to their homelands.

The representative of the Republic of Korea concluded that a just and honourable peace could be achieved only by achieving complete victory, which in turn could only be secured through the employment of total sanctions against the aggressor. One of the measures to secure the peace, when that was won, must be the establishment of a buffer zone in Manchuria, manned by an international security brigade which would be the instrument of the general collective security system of the United Nations against an aggressor.

At the 529th meeting, on 24 November, the representative of Iran moved that the Committee vote first on the Indian draft resolution, as the representative of India had requested, because that proposal had the best chance of being approved by the Assembly and the parties to the dispute. The representative of the USSR opposed the Iranian motion as contrary to the rules of procedure, asserting that the USSR draft resolution should be put to the vote before the Indian draft. After discussion at the 530th and 531st meetings, on 25 and 26 November, the Committee adopted the Iranian motion by 49 votes to 5, with 1 abstention.

The following amendments to the Indian draft resolution were proposed:

(a) An amendment by Iraq (A/C.1/L.3), which: (1) called for the addition of India as a member of the repatriation commission; (2) called for the deletion of the provisions concerning the appointment of an umpire; and (3) proposed the revision of the last sentence of paragraph 17 to provide that if, at the end of a further 60 days, there were any prisoners of war whose return to their homelands had not been effected or provided for by the political conference, the responsibility for them should be transferred to the United Nations. The representative of Iraq explained that his premise was that, by adding India as a member of the commission, the difficulty of choosing an umpire would be avoided. (This amendment was later withdrawn in view of the revision of the Indian draft resolution and the explanations made by the representative of India.)

(b) An amendment by Greece (A/C.1/L.6) to make explicit the fact that the classification of prisoners under paragraph 5 of the Indian proposals would be made by the repatriation commission. (The representative of Greece withdrew his amendment after the representative of India had stated that it was the understanding of his delegation that the classification would be carried out in accordance with the arrangements made by the repatriation commission.)

(c) An amendment by Denmark (A/C.1/L.5) proposing a 30-day instead of a 60-day time-limit for the political conference to provide for the future of the remainder of the prisoners.

(d) An amendment by the USSR (A/C.1/L.4) which proposed:

(1) to redraft paragraph 8 of the first part of the Indian draft to read: "Affirms that prisoners of war shall at all times be treated humanely in accordance with the specific provisions of the Geneva Convention and with the general spirit of the Convention";

(2) to substitute for paragraph 1 of the proposals a proposal to recommend to the belligerents in Korea an immediate and complete cease fire, namely, the cessation of military operations by both sides on land, by sea and in the air, on the basis of the draft armistice agreement already approved by the belligerents and to refer the question of the complete repatriation of prisoners of war for its solution to the commission for the peaceful settlement of the Korean question provided for in paragraph 2 of the proposals, in which commission questions should be decided by two-thirds majority vote;

(3) to substitute for paragraph 2 of the proposals a new paragraph proposing (a) to establish a commission for the peaceful settlement of the Korean question consisting of: the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the USSR, the People's Republic of China, India, Burma, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea and South Korea; and (b) to instruct that commission to take immediate steps for the settlement of the Korean question on the basis of the unification of Korea, which should be effected by the Koreans themselves under supervision of the commission, such steps to include extending all possible assistance in the repatriation of all prisoners of war by both sides;

(4) to amend the first sentence of paragraph 3 to provide that the treatment of prisoners of war must be such as to exclude, absolutely, any violence to their persons or affront to their dignity or self-respect in any manner or for any purpose whatsoever; and to delete the second sentence of paragraph 3, providing for the repatriation commission;

(5) to amend paragraph 6 to provide that, after classification, all prisoners of war should be returned forthwith to their homelands, and their speedy return should be facilitated by all parties concerned; and

(6) to delete paragraphs 7 to 17 of the proposal.

The representative of the USSR, stating that the Indian draft resolution failed to take into account the views of the North Korean and Chinese Governments, explained his amendments. He said that the first, calling for the redrafting of paragraph 8 of the first part of the Indian draft, had been proposed because the reference in the draft to the absence of force was inappropriate in the light of existing brutality. The second amendment had been proposed because it was impossible to reduce the whole question merely to one of the repatriation of prisoners. Regarding his fifth amendment, he said that it was not a question of a prisoner having the right to go home but of the creation of institutional, political, material, ideological and moral conditions which would enable the prisoner to fulfil his obligation to go back to his fatherland. His delegation could not admit a situation where an infringement of that duty would be encouraged. Subsequently, the USSR representative added that to say that force would not be used against prisoners in connexion with their repatriation was actually a disguise for forcible, coercive retention.

The representative of the USSR considered that the representative of India had not given a satisfactory answer to the question as to whether the Indian draft resolution opened the door to peace. In the light of the statement made by the Foreign Ministers of the Chinese People's Republic and the Korean People's Democratic Republic (A/C.1/735), there was no ground to expect that an armistice could be concluded within any reasonably short period. The USSR proposal was for an immediate cease fire on the basis of the draft armistice agreement already approved by the belligerents, rather than for one which might result from an armistice agreement that might be reached at some indefinite point in the future.

Statements in support of the USSR amendments were made by the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, who maintained that the only possible solution of the problem lay in complete observance of the Geneva Convention, which called for the immediate repatriation of all prisoners.

A majority of the representatives expressed opposition to the USSR amendments. They considered, among other things, that they constituted a procedural device to nullify the Committee's decision to give priority in the voting to the Indian draft resolution.

The representative of New Zealand, for example, considered that they were unacceptable because they confused political problems (such as the unification and rehabilitation of Korea) and military problems. Only military problems should be dealt with in the armistice negotiations; political problems should be settled later. The Soviet amendments, furthermore, implied the use of force. The representative of the USSR had called for the humanitarian treatment of prisoners of war but at the same time claimed that only the State had the right to decide the fate of prisoners who were its nationals, he said.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the first USSR amendment was only a fresh attempt to evade the question of forced repatriation. The USSR delegation had been very cautious about public opinion and this observation could be applied to the form in which the fourth amendment was presented. The second and third amendments actually coincided almost word for word with the text of the draft resolution previously submitted by the USSR delegation (A/C.1/729/Rev.1/Corr.1 and Rev.1/Corr.1/Add.1). An attempt was being made to represent the majority of the members of the Committee as hostile to a cease fire, though everyone desired a cease fire. It was, however, impossible for the nations which had forces in Korea, and some of whose soldiers were consequently in captivity, to agree to a cease fire before having obtained a basic agreement relating to them.

The representative of Burma stated that he would abstain in the vote on the USSR amendments because he did not consider them logically related to the Indian draft resolution.

(5) Decisions Taken by the First Committee

At its 535th meeting on 1 December, the Committee voted on the Indian draft resolution (A/C.1/734/Rev.2), paragraph by paragraph, adopting all paragraphs in votes ranging from 54 to 5, with no abstentions, to 53 to none, with 5 abstentions.

The Danish amendment (A/C.1/L.5), proposing a 30-day instead of a 60-day time-limit for the political conference to provide for the future of the remainder of the prisoners, was adopted by 39 votes to 5, with 14 abstentions.

The Committee rejected the first four Soviet amendments (A/C.1/L.4) by 46 votes to 5, with 8 abstentions, two of them by roll-call vote. The remaining two amendments were rejected by 50 votes to 5, with 1 abstention, and 52 votes to 5, with 2 abstentions, respectively.

The Indian draft resolution, as a whole, as amended, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 53 to 5, with 1 abstention.

At the 536th meeting on 2 December the representative of Lebanon stated that, for reasons beyond its control, his delegation had been unable to take part in the vote on the Indian draft resolution, but would support it in the vote in the plenary session of the General Assembly.

The Committee thereafter rejected the USSR draft resolution (A/C.1/729/Rev.1/Corr.1 and Rev.1/Corr.1/Add.1) by a roll-call vote of 41 to 5, with 12 abstentions.

At the same meeting it was agreed that further consideration of the 21-Power draft resolution as well as the Mexican and Peruvian draft resolutions should be deferred until the President of the General Assembly had submitted his report in accordance with the resolution adopted.

c. CONSIDERATION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN PLENARY SESSION

The report (A/2278) of the First Committee containing the draft resolution adopted by it was considered by the Assembly at its 399th plenary meeting on 3 December 1952.

The representative of the USSR submitted four amendments (A/L.117) to the Committee's draft resolution, identical with those submitted by him in the Committee with regard to the Indian draft resolution (see above). He also submitted a draft resolution (A/L.118) identical with that submitted by his delegation in the First Committee.

The representative of India submitted an amendment (A/L.120) to the Committee's draft resolution, which would add the words: "so that an immediate cease fire would result and be effected", thus stressing that the purpose of the draft resolution was to bring about the termination of hostilities, he explained.

In explanation of his vote, the representative of the USSR stated that the Indian amendment did not in any way change the Committee's draft resolution, since it made a cease fire conditional on an agreement being reached between the parties, instead of proposing an immediate and complete cease fire.

The representative of France considered that the USSR, by a change of tactics, had relegated to second place the question of prisoners of war, while having at first considered it fundamental. By the introduction of draft resolutions and amendments, it now asked the First Committee for a decision in favour of an immediate cessation of hostilities, the fate of the prisoners to be decided by a political commission and no limit being set on the duration of their detention. Such a proposal, he said, was unacceptable.

The USSR amendments (A/L.117) were rejected as follows: the first amendment by 43 votes to 5, with 7 abstentions; the second, third and fourth amendments by roll-call votes of 46 to 5, with 9 abstentions. The votes on the second and third amendments were as follows:

In favour: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Against: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Yemen.

The vote on the fourth amendment was the same as in the case of the two previous amendments, except that India voted against it, while Pakistan abstained.

The fifth and sixth amendments were rejected by 50 votes to 5, with 4 abstentions, and by 52 votes to 5, with 1 abstention, respectively.

The Indian amendment (A/L.120) was adopted by 53 votes to none, with 5 abstentions.

The Committee's draft resolution, as amended by India, was adopted (resolution 610(VII)) in a roll-call vote of 54 to 5, with 1 abstention. The voting was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: China.

Explaining his vote, the representative of China stated that, while he considered the draft resolution sound in principle, he was convinced that the machinery which it envisaged was defective and inadequate, inasmuch as two of the members of the Repatriation Commission, namely Czechoslovakia and Poland, could not be expected to carry out fairly and impartially the provisions of the resolution which they had denounced in the Committee. In the camps under the Unified Command some of the prisoners had resorted to terror against their fellow prisoners, he said, and there was no guarantee that the same terroristic bands would not do likewise in the demilitarized zone, as the resolution did not confer instruments upon the Repatriation Commission to prevent such incidents.

Resolution 610 (VII) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Having received the special report of the United Nations Command of 18 October 1952 on "the present status of the military action and the armistice negotiations in Korea" and other relevant reports relating to Korea,

"Noting with approval the considerable progress towards an armistice made by negotiation at Panmunjom and the tentative agreements to end the fighting in Korea and to reach a settlement of the Korean question,

"Noting further that disagreement between the parties on one remaining issue, alone, prevents the conclusion of an armistice and that a considerable measure of agreement already exists on the principles on which this remaining issue can be resolved,

"Mindful of the continuing and vast loss of life, devastation and suffering resulting from and accompanying the continuance of the fighting,

"Deeply conscious of the need to bring hostilities to a speedy end and of the need for a peaceful settlement of the Korean question,

"Anxious to expedite and facilitate the convening of the political conference as provided in article 60 of the draft armistice agreement,

"1. Affirms that the release and repatriation of prisoners of war shall be effected in accordance with the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, dated 12 August 1949, the well-established principles and practice of international law and the relevant provisions of the draft armistice agreement;

"2. Affirms that force shall not be used against prisoners of war to prevent or effect their return to their homelands, and that they shall at all time be treated humanely in accordance with the specific provisions of the Geneva Convention and with the general spirit of the Convention;

"3. Accordingly requests the President of the General Assembly to communicate the following proposals to the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and to the North Korean authorities as forming a just and reasonable basis for an agreement so that an immediate cease-fire would result and be effected; to invite their acceptance of these proposals and to make a report to the General Assembly during its present session and as soon as appropriate:

PROPOSALS

"I. In order to facilitate the return to their homelands of all prisoners of war, there shall be established a Repatriation Commission consisting of representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Sweden and Switzerland, that is, the four States agreed to for the constitution of the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission and referred to in paragraph 37 of the draft armistice agreement, or constituted, alternatively, of representatives of four States not participating in hostilities, two nominated by each side, but excluding representatives of States that are permanent members of the Security Council.

"II. The release and repatriation of prisoners of war shall be effected in accordance with the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, dated 12 August 1949, the well-established principles and practice of International Law and the relevant provisions of the draft armistice agreement.

"III. Force shall not be used against the prisoners of war to prevent or effect their return to their homelands and no violence to their persons or affront to their dignity or self-respect shall be permitted in any manner or for any purpose whatsoever. This duty is enjoined on and entrusted to the Repatriation Commission and each of its members. Prisoners of war shall at all times be treated humanely in accordance with the specific provisions of the Geneva Convention and with the general spirit of that Convention.

"IV. All prisoners of war shall be released to the Repatriation Commission from military control and from the custody of the detaining side in agreed numbers and at agreed exchange points in agreed demilitarized zones.

"V. Classification of prisoners of war according to nationality and domicile as proposed in the letter of 16 October 1952 from General Kim Il Sung, Supreme Commander of the Korean People's Army, and General Peng Teh-huai, Commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, to General Mark W. Clark, Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, shall then be carried out immediately.

"VI. After classification, prisoners of war shall be free to return to their homelands forthwith, and their speedy return shall be facilitated by all parties concerned.

"VII. In accordance with arrangements prescribed for the purpose by the Repatriation Commission, each party to the conflict shall have freedom and facilities to explain to the prisoners of war "depending upon them" their rights and to inform the prisoners of war on any matter relating to their return to their homelands and particularly their full freedom to return.

"VIII. Red Cross teams of both sides shall assist the Repatriation Commission in its work and shall have access, in accordance with the terms of the draft armistice agreement, to prisoners of war while they are under the temporary jurisdiction of the Repatriation Commission.

"IX. Prisoners of war shall have freedom and facilities to make representations and communications to the Repatriation Commission and to bodies and agencies working under the Repatriation Commission, and to inform any or all such bodies of their desires on any matter concerning themselves, in accordance with arrangements made for the purpose by the Commission.

"X. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph III above, nothing in this Repatriation Agreement shall be construed as derogating from the authority of the Repatriation Commission (or its authorized representatives) to exercise its legitimate functions and responsibilities for the control of the prisoners under its temporary jurisdiction.

"XI. The terms of this Repatriation Agreement and the arrangements arising therefrom shall be made known to all prisoners of war.

"XII. The Repatriation Commission is entitled to call upon parties to the conflict, its own member governments, or the Member States of the United Nations for such legitimate assistance as it may require in the carrying out of its duties and tasks and in accordance with the decisions of the Commission in this respect.

"XIII. When the two sides have made an agreement for repatriation based on these proposals, the interpretation of that agreement shall rest with the Repatriation Commission. In the event of disagreement in the Commission, majority decisions shall prevail. When no majority decision is possible, an umpire agreed upon in accordance with the succeeding paragraph and with article 132 of the Geneva Convention of 1949 shall have the deciding vote.

"XIV. The Repatriation Commission shall at its first meeting and prior to an armistice proceed to agree upon and appoint the umpire who shall at all times be available to the Commission and shall act as its Chairman unless otherwise agreed. If agreement on the appointment of the umpire cannot be reached by the Commission within the period of three weeks after the date of the first meeting this matter should be referred to the General Assembly.

"XV. The Repatriation Commission shall also arrange after the armistice for officials to function as umpires with inspecting teams or other bodies to which functions are delegated or assigned by the Commission or under the provisions of the draft armistice agreement, so that the completion of the return of prisoners of war to their homelands shall be expedited.

"XVI. When the Repatriation Agreement is acceded to by the parties concerned and when an umpire has been appointed under paragraph 14 above, the draft armistice agreement, unless otherwise altered by agreement between the parties, shall be deemed to have been accepted by them. The provisions of the draft armistice agreement shall apply except in so far as they are modified by the Repatriation Agreement. Arrangements for repatriation under this agreement will begin when the armistice agreement is thus concluded.

"XVII. At the end of ninety days, after the Armistice Agreement has been signed, the disposition of any prisoners of war whose return to their homelands may not have been effected in accordance with the procedure set out in these proposals or as otherwise agreed, shall be referred with recommendations for their disposition, including a target date for the termination of their detention to the political conference to be called as provided under article 60 of the draft armistice agreement. If at the end of a further thirty days there are any prisoners of war whose return to their homelands has not been effected under the above procedures or whose future has not been provided for by the political conference, the responsibility for their care and maintenance and for their subsequent disposition shall be transferred to the United Nations, which in all matters relating to them shall act strictly in accordance with international law."

d. REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE
GENERAL ASSEMBLY

In a report (A/2354) dated 20 December 1952, the President of the General Assembly communicated the text of telegrams he had received from the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, dated 14 and 17 December, respectively, in reply to his communications, dated 5 December, transmitting the General Assembly's resolution together with a message inviting acceptance of its proposals.

Both replies recalled that the resolution had been adopted without the participation of representatives of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, and stressed that the presence of both interested parties was essential to a just solution of the Korean question.

In the telegram from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China, it was stated, among other things, that the Assembly's action in adopting this resolution was clearly illegal and void and was firmly opposed by the Chinese people, because it was entirely based on the so-called principles of "voluntary repatriation" or "non-forcible repatriation", all of which were in essence the "principle" of forcibly retaining in captivity prisoners of war, which was universally recognized as violating the Geneva Convention and international law. The resolution could not settle the sole remaining issue, namely, the principles and procedures by which the repatriation of the prisoners could be effected. The fact on this issue was, the telegram continued, that both parties to the negotiations had established concrete and detailed measures and procedures in article 3 of the draft armistice agreement. The Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China had always upheld the basic principle of the total repatriation of prisoners of war after an armistice was effected, as established in the Geneva Convention, and would continue to do so.

The resolution, it was stated, was based also on the hypothesis that there were, among the Korean and Chinese captured, some personnel who refused to return home. The facts were that large numbers of special agents of the United States, Syngman Rhee and Chiang Kai-shek were placed in responsible posts in prisoner-of-war camps and had posed as Korean and Chinese prisoners of war. They had coerced prisoners to make declarations refusing repatriation. Prisoners who had refused to submit had been viciously beaten up by these agents and, while unconscious, had been tattooed with humiliating marks of treason against their motherland. The fingers of prisoners had been dipped in blood from their wounds and their fingerprints had been forcibly affixed to "screening" petitions allegedly expressing "unwillingness to return home".

The proposal to give the United Nations the final authority of appointing the umpire and the final authority of disposing of those prisoners of war allegedly "unwilling to go home" was absurd, it was stated. The proposals of the General Assembly actually embodied in full the three proposals put forward at Panmunjom on 28 September 1952 by the United States. In fact, the Assembly proposals were more deceptive and were designed to facilitate the realization of the United States Government's scheme forcibly to retain in captivity prisoners of war. The proposed repatriation commission, the telegram said, could not be effective because it would be absolutely impossible to separate or isolate the Syngman Rhee or Chiang Kai-shek special agents from the Korean and Chinese prisoners. Only by directly delivering prisoners of war to their own side for protection could this be accomplished. The People's Republic of China considered that such an illegal resolution could not possibly provide "a just and reasonable basis for an agreement".

In conclusion, the telegram stated that the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China requested that the Assembly rescind this illegal resolution, call upon the Government of the United States to resume immediately the negotiations at Panmunjom, and, with the draft Korean armistice agreement as a basis, to bring about the realization of a complete armistice as a first step and then to refer for settlement the question of the total repatriation of prisoners of war to the "Commission for the peaceful settlement of the Korean question", proposed by the USSR. If the Assembly agreed to discuss this request, representatives of the People's Republic of China and the Korean Democratic People's Republic must take part in the discussions. Should the General Assembly reject the request, it would further demonstrate that its purpose, far from being the achievement of peace in Korea and the Far East, was to continue and expand the Korean war in support of the policies of the United States, the communication stated.

The telegram from the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, which also rejected the resolution on the basis of arguments similar to those adduced by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Central Peo-pie's Government of the People's Republic of China, concluded by requesting the Assembly to: (1) revoke resolution 610(VII); (2) condemn the fighting in Korea and take the necessary steps to bring about an immediate cease fire and achieve a peaceful settlement of the Korean question on the basis of the USSR proposals; (3) give representatives of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea an opportunity to participate in the discussion on the Korean question in the United Nations, as the true representatives of the Korean people; (4) call to account the representatives of the American side as responsible for the breakdown of the Panmunjom negotiations; (5) put an end to the barbarous bombing of the peaceful populations, towns and villages of North Korea by the American aggressors under the flag of the United Nations; (6) cease immediately the barbarous procedure of forcibly detaining the prisoners of war and the inhuman treatment and mass murder of and brutality towards the inmates of prisoner-of-war camps;¹³ (7) punish severely the American war criminals who, it was said, hypocritically trampling upon the standards of international law and the principles of human morality, were using bacterial,¹⁴ chemical and other weapons for the mass slaughter of the peaceful inhabitants of North Korea.

The report of the President was not considered by the General Assembly during 1952.

5. Complaint of Mass Murder of Korean and Chinese Prisoners of War by United States Military Authorities on the Island of Pongam

In a letter dated 20 December 1952 (A/2355) the USSR requested the inclusion in the Assembly's agenda of an item entitled: "The mass murder of Korean and Chinese prisoners of war by the United States military authorities on the island of Pongam", and requested that it be considered before the suspension of the work of the session.

In an accompanying memorandum it was stated that, according to available information and to reports from the Associated Press and Reuters news agencies, the American guards of the prisoner-of-war camp on the island of Pongam had, on 14 December 1952, killed 82 and wounded 120 Korean and Chinese prisoners of war who were demanding repatriation.

A draft resolution was also enclosed. It would have the Assembly:

(1) note new evidence of inhuman brutalities perpetrated by the United States military authorities; (2) state that it considered that such mass murders of

Korean and Chinese prisoners of war in United States camps were characteristic of the systematic extermination of prisoners of war, as shown by the numerous atrocities committed by the United States military authorities against prisoners of war in the camps on the islands of Koje, Cheju and Pongam, in Pusan and in other places; (3) condemn these criminal acts; (4) insist that the Government of the United States should take immediate steps to end these brutalities against Korean and Chinese prisoners of war; and (5) call to strict account those guilty of committing these crimes.

In cablegrams dated 21 December the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea (A/2358 and Corr.1 and A/2359) levelled the same charges and requested that the Assembly take action similar to that proposed by the USSR.

The item was included in the agenda under the title: "Complaint of the mass murder of Korean and Chinese prisoners of war by United States military authorities on the island of Pongam", and, on the recommendation of the General Committee (A/2356), was considered by the Assembly at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December.

The representative of the USSR stated that the brutalities committed on the island of Pongam by the American soldiery, and the savage treatment of prisoners of war on Koje Island, Cheju Island and at Pusan, to which the USSR delegation had drawn the attention of the Assembly during the discussion of the Korean question, had taken on the character of a policy of systematic extermination of Korean and Chinese prisoners of war in American camps by the United States military command in Korea. The new act of repression against Korean and Chinese prisoners of war, he said, had been perpetrated because the prisoners asked to be repatriated and because they did not wish to be subjected to the violence and terror inflicted on them in order to force them to betray their countries and place themselves at the mercy of the American executioners; it showed that the ruling circles of the United States continued shamelessly to ignore the most elementary principles of international usage and law in their treatment of both the civilian population and prisoners of war.

¹³ During Part I of its seventh session, the Assembly also considered an item entitled: "Complaint of the Mass Murder of Korean and Chinese Prisoners of War by the United States Military Authorities on the Island of Pongam", submitted by the representative of the USSR (see below).

¹⁴ Consideration of an item, submitted by the representative of the United States under the title "Question of impartial investigation of charges of use by United Nations Forces of bacterial warfare", was postponed to the second part of the session.

The United States military authorities in Korea had committed crimes against Korean and Chinese prisoners of war before, he stated. The assertions by representatives of the United States that their Government's policy towards prisoners of war was based on principles of humanity and freedom of the human person, had, he said, been refuted by the relevant facts adduced by the representatives of the USSR during the discussion of the Korean question. On the other hand, these facts had been confirmed by the reports of American and British news agencies, by the admissions of former commanders of prisoner-of-war camps, by the statements of Korean and Chinese prisoners who had escaped from these camps and also by the report, dated April 1952, of the International Committee of the Red Cross. They had also been confirmed in the reports of a Canadian war correspondent who had visited those camps.

The representative of the USSR added that an Associated Press dispatch from Geneva, dated 16 December 1952, had stated that the International Red Cross Committee had that day made public a communication in which it said that the action of the United Nations Command in Korea showed that that Command was violating the Geneva Convention on prisoners of war. The dispatch also stated that the Committee, describing those incidents, had declared that it appeared, in the circumstances, that the firing constituted a violation of article 42 of the Geneva Convention of 1949.¹⁵ Nevertheless, a further use of force against Korean and Chinese prisoners of war had subsequently occurred on Koje Island. General Colson, the commander of the camp on that island, had admitted that even earlier cases of bloodshed had occurred in the camp. He had stated that he would do everything in his power to end force and bloodshed. He had also assured the prisoners of war that they could count on humane treatment in the camp in the future, in accordance with the principles of international law. This forced admission proved that in the prisoner-of-war camps the United States Command was resorting to the practice of compulsory screening, accompanied by violence and murder. These crimes, the USSR representative stated, were the consequence of the Korean policy followed by the ruling circles of the United States, aimed at continuing the war of aggression against the Korean people and extending that aggression to China.

The facts, he said, showed that the trans-Atlantic preachers of humanitarian treatment of prisoners of war were grossly deceiving world public opinion. According to a dispatch of the Korean Central Press agency, published in May 1951, some 1,400 prisoners of war had been secretly sent to the United States to be subjected to experiments with atomic weapons. On 19 July 1951, a total of 100 prisoners of war had been shot by machine-gun fire in the prisoner-of-war camp No. 62, in order to give the machine-gunners training in shooting at moving targets. On 18 February 1952, another 300 prisoners had been killed in the same camp in the same way. On 13 March and 17 and 20 April, a total of 175 prisoners of war had been brutally murdered. Documents confirmed that on 10 May 1952, in camp No. 76, four prisoners who had stated their desire to return to their country had been hanged. On 1 May, the hangmen had gouged out the eyes of eighteen prisoners. On 18 May, thirteen fighters of the Korean People's Army in the camp had been quartered. When the other prisoners in the camp had started to protest, the guard officer had picked from among them 50 men who on the same day were subjected to experiments in the use of new hand-grenades; four prisoners had been killed on the spot, and the remaining 46 had been wounded and had died of injuries shortly after. Horrible brutalities had been committed by the aggressors in camp No. 77 on 27 May 1952. The documents stated that flame-throwers of a new type had been tried out on a large group of prisoners of war who had demanded to be repatriated. Almost 800 prisoners had been burned alive on that day. On 20 and 30 May, a total of 37 prisoners had been killed and sixteen wounded in the same camp. These were facts cited by the Korean Central Press agency and so far had not been refuted.

All statements by representatives of the United States and their supporters to the effect that the repatriation of all prisoners of war was impossible and that the Korean and Chinese prisoners of war did not wish to be repatriated were, said the USSR representative, designed merely to conceal the policy of violence and terror against Korean and Chinese patriots who expressed the legitimate desire to return to their country and an equally legitimate indignation at the atrocities committed by the Americans in Korea.

There could be no doubt, the representative of the USSR continued, that the so-called Indian draft resolution (A/C.1/734/Rev.2)¹⁶ which had been rubber-stamped by the General Assembly under pressure from the United States, suited the needs of certain United States circles which did not wish to put an end to the bloodshed in Korea. It must be clear to everyone, from the reply which had been received from the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and from the Government of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, that that resolution could not provide a basis for the settlement of this question, as its sole purpose was to deceive world public opinion. It was certainly no mere coincidence, he said, that the adoption of this resolution had been immediately followed by the mass murders of Korean and Chinese prisoners of war on the island of Pongam.

¹⁵ This article states: "The use of weapons against prisoners of war, especially against those who are escaping or attempting to escape, shall constitute an extreme measure which shall always be preceded by warnings appropriate to the circumstances".

¹⁶ Adopted by the Assembly on 3 December (resolution 610(VII)). See above.

Statements along similar lines were made by the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR.

The representative of the United States considered that three factors should be kept in mind with regard to the agenda item: (1) the time chosen by the delegation of the USSR to raise the question; (2) its motives in doing so; and (3) the substance of the charges made, not for the first time, but repeatedly, from the day when the Korean question had come up for discussion at the current session.

The Soviet representative had reviled the dignity of the Assembly by saying that the Indian draft resolution had been rubber-stamped by the Assembly under United States pressure. The USSR Government and its satellites had voted against peace, and that was the fact which they were now seeking to conceal by a propaganda stunt, he said. Nevertheless, the Assembly should discuss this item, because the USSR accusations should be brought out of the dark corners of their origin and exposed to the white light of truth.

The background of the events on Pongam Island, the representative of the United States continued, was that the Koreans interned there, numbering over 9,000, were Communist guerrillas captured in South Korea and other Communists, rounded up for revolutionary activity behind the lines. They had not been captured from enemy armies and there were no Chinese among them.

The facts of the case, he said, were as follows: On 6 December 1952, the prisoner-of-war command had reported indications that plans for a mass break-out were being formulated within the prisoner-of-war and internee camps of the Unified Command. This was just three days after the adoption by the Assembly of its resolution calling for peace in Korea. As the representative of the USSR had said, there was a connexion between these events. Coded documents had been intercepted, indicating that the plan was centrally directed. All camp commanders had been instructed to take every precaution to negate any attempt by the internees to put such plans into effect. The plot had matured in the violence on Pongam, which had occurred on the same day that the Chinese Communist authorities had rejected the United Nations resolution. The Chinese Communist authorities had known and selected the day on which they chose to send their rejection.

Here again, the connexion between the dispatch of their note and the events on the island of Pongam was surely not an accident or a coincidence, the representative of the United States said. At noon on 14 December, reports had come to the commander of the camp that internees in two of the compounds were massing. The commander, with a small detachment of United States and Republic of Korea guards, had had to act at once to prevent many hundreds of internees from breaking out and inviting pitched battles. He had dispatched platoons to the two compounds in which the internees had begun to mass. The guards of the United Nations Command had deployed as skirmishers 25 yards from the massed internees, who had drawn themselves up many ranks deep in military fashion. Behind these ranks were hundreds more, threatening, screaming and throwing rocks down upon the United Nations guards from a high ledge upon which they had taken positions. The commander ordered the rioters to quiet down and to disperse. When his order was disobeyed, he realized that only a show of force could prevent a mass outbreak. The direction of the wind made the use of tear-gas impossible. A frontal approach by the few guards upon the many massed men was out of the question. The rioting was skilfully organized and directed, and it was necessary to fire volleys to quell the rioters in the two compounds where the disturbances had started. Meanwhile, internees had been massing in four of the other compounds. A burst of fire was necessary in two of these compounds in order to prevent further outbreaks. Having quelled the riots in the first two compounds, the camp commander had been able to send the guards into three other compounds and move the demonstrators out without use of firearms.

The use of force to repress inspired and centrally directed outbreaks of fanatical violence by prisoners was at times unavoidable, said the representative of the United States. That such unavoidable use of force should result in casualties was no evidence that force was not required. The Unified Command had at once instituted an investigation of the incident on Pongam.

One might ask, he continued, what the purpose of the outbreak on Pongam was. Bloodshed was the real motive, the sacrifice of as many internees as possible and the deliberate fashioning of ammunition to provide an excuse for a false issue. The consistent purpose of the Government of the USSR was to create the impression that all prisoners of war wished to be repatriated and were being held against their will. This explained why the representative of the USSR had produced this propaganda item. It was obviously, he said, a clumsy attempt to smear the United States and the United Nations at the last minute, in an effort to cover up the fact that the aggressors and their Soviet sponsors had rejected peace in Korea.

The representative of the USSR had talked of incidents on Koje and Cheju Islands, where there were prisoners of war, not civilian internees, the representative of the United States stated. The facts about the treatment of prisoners of war in Korea were that, from the very beginning, the Unified Command had followed the provisions of the Geneva Convention of 1949. The United Nations prisoner-of-war camps had been wide open to the International Committee of the Red Cross. On occasions when the International Committee had presented criticism, the Unified Command had taken any corrective action necessary. On the other hand, the North Korean-Chinese authorities had hidden their treatment of prisoners from the eyes of the world. They had continually refused to permit the International Committee to inspect their camps. They had refused to exchange relief packages. They had refused to report on the health of the prisoners of war, and refused to exchange the seriously sick and wounded, as required by the Geneva Convention. They had failed to give the accurate location of prisoner-of-war camps and had failed to mark them properly. They had located their camps in places of danger near legitimate military targets, in defiance of that Convention. Until the Government of the USSR accepted the United Nations proposals for solving the prisoner-of-war question, the world would remain convinced that the USSR and its supporters in the United Nations stood alone against the 54 nations which endorsed the principle of non-forcible repatriation as the key to peace in Korea, the United States representative concluded.

The representatives of Canada, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Iraq, Israel, New Zealand, Turkey and the United Kingdom also spoke against the USSR draft resolution (A/2355). The representatives of Canada, France, Greece, New Zealand, Turkey and the United Kingdom associated themselves with the substance of the statement of the representative of the United States, while the representatives of Ethiopia, Iraq and Israel limited their statements to expressions of the view that the USSR accusations were unsubstantiated by proof and that this in itself precluded their being seriously considered.

The representative of India stressed the need for strict observance of the provisions of the Geneva Convention of 1949 with regard to all prisoners, irrespective of whether they were civilians or not. With reference to Assembly resolution 610(VII), he expressed the hope that the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the USSR would, on consideration, appreciate that the proposals contained in that resolution were based essentially on the Geneva Convention and on international law, and were not opposed to the basic principles which these Governments themselves had put forward on earlier occasions. With regard to the USSR draft resolution, he declared that he would not vote against it, for the simple reason that it referred to prisoners of war; he could not vote in favour of it, however, because it referred to facts which had not been investigated.

The USSR draft resolution (A/2355) was rejected by a roll-call vote of 45 to 5, with 10 abstentions.

Voting was as follows:

In favour: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Against: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Yemen.

6. Relief and Rehabilitation of Korea

a. REPORT BY THE SECRETARY-GENERAL TO THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

At the fourteenth session of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General submitted a report (E/2197) on Korean relief and rehabilitation covering the period from 14 August 1951 to 3 March 1952.

The Secretary-General reported that on 3 March 1952 the Unified Command had agreed to his proposal that, in future, all requests and offers of assistance should be channelled through the Agent

General of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency.

The Secretary-General reported that two additional requests had been received from the Unified Command since his previous report to the Council,¹⁷ bringing to eighteen the total number of requests. One of these requests was a consolidated list of approximate monthly requirements of various relief items for the civilian population of Korea; it had been circulated to all Member and certain non-member States, specialized agencies and voluntary organizations. The other, which asked for additional personnel for service with the United Nations Civil Assistance Command, was passed to the Agent General. From 1 January 1952, with one or two exceptions, all personnel serving in Korea under the Unified Command who had been provided by specialized agencies or other civilian organizations were transferred to the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency (UNKRA).

The report detailed offers of assistance received from governments between 14 August 1951 and 3 March 1952, and the total value of contributions from all sources for emergency relief from the inception of the programme to 3 March. The United States Government, the report said, had advised the Secretary-General on 28 March 1952 that the total United States contribution to Korean relief, through the Unified Command, from 25 June 1950 to 1 March 1952, amounted to $215,608,010. Offers to a total value of $3,590,947 had been received from non-governmental organizations since 14 August 1951.

The Secretary-General stated that he had drawn the attention of Member States to some of the reports of the United Nations Command (S/2408, S/2410 and S/2412) on its relief activities¹⁸ and had stressed the urgent need for contributions.

The report also listed the assistance pledged and contributed up to 3 March 1952.¹⁹

At its 654th plenary meeting on 22 July, the Council, by 13 votes to none, with 4 abstentions, accepted a Canadian motion for the adjournment of debate on Korean relief and rehabilitation. The adjournment motion was submitted in view of the General Assembly's decision at its sixth session (resolution 507(VI)) to defer the examination of the question until the conclusion of an armistice in Korea, or until events in Korea made its consideration desirable.²⁰

b. REPORT OF THE AGENT GENERAL OF UNKRA

The Agent General of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency (UNKRA) submitted to the seventh session of the General Assembly his report (A/2222) dated 21 October and its supplement (A/2222/Add.1 and 2) dated, respectively, 1 December 1952 and 18 February 1953. The report and the addenda covered, between them, the period from February 1951 to February 1953. The main report gave an account of the structure of Korean economy during the country's occupation by Japan, the economic dislocation caused by the division of the country in 1948, the work of the Economic Co-operation Administration, which, in 1949, assumed responsibility for the United States aid to Korea, and a detailed account of contemporary economic conditions in South Korea.

Dealing with the "Organization of United Nations Assistance" (chapter IV), the report outlined the background of the events in Korea which had led to the formation, in 1950, of UNKRA (Assembly resolution 410(V))²¹. The report stated that, on 3 March 1952, the United Nations Command accepted a proposal by the Secretary-General that, in the future, all offers of and requests for emergency relief assistance to Korea should be channelled through the Agent General. As of that date, the Agent General assumed full responsibility for this phase of the Korean relief programme. Requests for relief assistance were mainly for food, clothing, medical supplies and personnel. The Governments of Member States as well as some non-members responded generously.²² Assistance was also acknowledged from the International Refugee Organization (IRO), the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and from non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies in the United States, Canada, New Zealand and Norway.

In response to requests for personnel to assist in Korean rehabilitation, IRO, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the World Health Organization (WHO), the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), UNESCO and the Technical Assistance Administration contributed the services of specialized personnel. In addition, non-¹⁷ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 231-234.

¹⁸ For relief activities of the United Nations Command see pp. 163-65.

¹⁹ For details of offers of assistance for relief programme as at 15 February 1953 see Annexes to this chapter

²⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 237.

²¹ For details see Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 280-283.

²² For details of offers of assistance for relief programme see Annexes.

governmental organizations and voluntary agencies provided technical personnel assistance. Under special arrangements with the League of Red Cross Societies, medical teams were supplied by the American, British, Canadian, Danish and Norwegian Red Cross Societies; The Mennonite Central Committee and The Australian Save the Children Fund also sent personnel to Korea in response to Unified Command requests.

The report stated that on 1 January 1952, in agreement with the Secretary-General and the Unified Command, the Agent General became responsible for a large part of the recruitment of specialized civilian personnel for Korea. Provision was made to transfer to UNKRA personnel supplied by the specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies, and to second them to the United Nations Civil Assistance Command.

The report then summarized the action taken by the Economic and Social Council and by the General Assembly on Korean relief in 1950, 1951 and 1952,²³ and gave an account of the work of the Negotiating Committee on Contributions to Programmes of Relief and Rehabilitation.²⁴

As of 15 September 1952, 27 Member States had contributed to the UNKRA programme in response to the efforts of the Negotiating Committee and UNKRA, the report said. They had pledged a total of $205,590,806, of which $18,718,954 had actually been made available to the Agent General.

In addition, 27 Member States and one non-member State had pledged assistance in response to Security Council resolutions. Of the total of $270,211,986 pledged in this connexion, $264,580,697 had been received.²⁵

In Chapter V, under the heading "Organization and General Approach of the Agency", the main report (A/2222) outlined the Agency's relations with the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK), the United Nations Command and the specialized agencies.

In May 1951 UNCURK formally designated the Government of the Republic of Korea and the Commander-in-Chief of the United Nations Command, together with the sub-ordinate Commands in Korea, as the authorities with whom the Agent General might deal. UNCURK later prescribed the territory within the control of the Republic of Korea as the area within which UNKRA could operate. The Agent General also referred to the agreement reached with the United Nations Command regarding the division of responsibility for Korean relief and rehabilitation signed on 16 July 1951, the Memorandum of Understanding between the two organizations signed in December 1951 and the supplement thereto signed in March 1952.²⁶

The Joint Committee representing UNKRA and the United Nations Command in Tokyo and Pusan and UNKRA and the Unified Command in Washington had met regularly and proved a useful forum for exchange of views. This organizational pattern was further developed on 24 May 1952 by the creation of a Combined Economic Board in Korea, composed of one representative of the Government of the Republic of Korea and one of the United Nations Command. This Board, established as a result of formal agreement between the Republic of Korea and the Unified Command, had broad powers of control over the Government budget and the utilization of foreign exchange. Its major objective, which was strongly supported by the Agent General, was, the report said, to check the inflation which had reached dangerous limits in Korea. In this connexion the Board proposed to scrutinize all expenditures of won for reconstruction and other purposes.

The Agent General's Advisory Committee had held seventeen meetings with him and had, among other things, adopted the Financial Regulations of the Agency, reviewed the staff rules, adopted a number of interim plans of expenditure, reviewed the accounts and approved a number of projects for implementation. It had also approved important guiding principles in respect to so-called "counterpart" funds, procurements and relations with non-governmental organizations.

The attention of the United Nations, UNKRA and the specialized agencies was now, the Agent General said, concentrated principally on formulating, together with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Korea and the United Nations Command, a comprehensive reconstruction programme to assist the Republic of Korea towards achieving a viable economy.

At the request of the Agent General, specialized agency teams from UNESCO, FAO and WHO currently in Korea would: (1) make general recommendations on the scope of a pro-

²³ See Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 269-283. Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 231-237.

²⁴ See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 283. Y.U.N., 1951, p. 232.

²⁵ For details of offers and contributions made to UNKRA and the emergency relief programme as at 15 February 1953 see Annexes to this chapter.

²⁶ For terms of the agreement and the Memorandum see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 234-35.

gramme in each of their respective fields, with estimates of outlay in relation to total funds available; and (2) develop specific lists of projects to be carried out as part of the programme, with time schedules, priorities and cost estimates of each project.

Dealing individually with each specialized agency the Agent General acknowledged UNESCO's contribution of $100,000 in 1950 which was used for acquiring printing machinery for the manufacture of elementary text books.²⁷ The paper was provided by UNKRA. With this joint assistance the Ministry of Education had printed 7,500,500 books. UNESCO had also provided assistance for Korean scholars by making books available and by donating educational supplies for Korean children. The purchase of these supplies was financed by a gift from the Belgian Committee of the United Nations Appeal for Children. Discussions had also been held with UNESCO to assess the suitability of its Gift Coupon Programme for obtaining educational assistance for Korea from voluntary sources. UNESCO continued to participate in the development of programmes for educational rehabilitation. An international team of educators was in Korea to survey Korean educational needs.

The contribution of FAO was also acknowledged; at the time of reporting an eleven-man FAO team was studying Korean agricultural conditions.

UNICEF, it was stated, had maintained a continuous flow of supplies to the United Nations Command for the needs of Korean children. In addition, allocations of substantial funds had been made by the Executive Board of UNICEF, and the Fund had paid for the shipment of a large quantity of cod liver oil.

IRO had contributed medical supplies, cloth, clothing, sewing machines, kitchen equipment, tools and miscellaneous small items. In response to requests for personnel, it had supplied the services of 22 persons. Before it ceased operations, IRO also made a substantial contribution in staff services to the Agent General during the period when he served both as Agent General of UNKRA and as Director-General of IRO.

WHO had made available the services of twenty medical team personnel and three public health advisers. It had also dispatched a three-man planning mission to aid in the formulation of a balanced health programme as part of an over-all Korean reconstruction programme.

In response to the Secretary-General's appeal for personnel for the emergency programme, ILO sent two experts to work on employment and labour problems. The Agent General had subsequently discussed, with the Director-General of ILO, the question of ILO participation in an expanded relief and rehabilitation programme. The Director-General had promised to make experts available at the appropriate stage of operations.

The Agent General also acknowledged the offers and contributions of non-governmental organizations in the United States, Canada, New Zealand, Norway and other countries.²⁸

He stated that, due to military exigencies, the United Nations Command had been unable, until recently, to permit non-governmental organizations to control the use and distribution in Korea of the supplies they contributed. These supplies had practically all been channelled through the Unified Command. In June 1952, the policy governing the activities of non-governmental organizations was modified to permit the shipment of supplies and equipment to orphanages, hospitals, schools and similar institutions through commercial carriers at their own expense to the extent of 500 long tons per month.

The Agent General, with the approval of the Advisory Committee, was stated to be providing financial assistance to non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies in connexion with these shipments. Arrangements had been made to ship to Korea, on behalf of the Unitarian Service Committee of Canada, 200,000 pounds of powdered sweetened milk for the Committee's school-feeding programme.

Under the heading "Current Programmes of Relief and Rehabilitation" (Ch.VI), the report said that during the first phase, i.e., during the continuance of hostilities, the task of UNKRA was "complementary and supplementary" to the basic relief and short-term aid programme of the United Nations Command. Thus, in agreement with that Command, UNKRA had initiated and carried out a number of relatively minor projects. More recently, however, the United Nations Command, the Government of the Republic of Korea and the Agent General agreed upon the outlines of a substantial UNKRA rehabilitation programme, to be carried out during the remainder of the current financial year. Agreement was further reached on the development of a single, integrated United Nations—Republic of Korea Government programme for the following financial year. The resources originally pledged to UNKRA for a programme of slightly more than a year's duration would, in combination with those available to the United Nations Command, be spread out over a period of slightly more than two years.

²⁷ See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 921.

²⁸ For offers and contributions from non-governmental organizations see Annexes to this chapter.

The civilian relief and economic aid programmes of the United Nations Command were and would continue to be on a larger scale than those of UNKRA, the Agent General said. He gave an account of the assistance programmes of the United Nations Command.²⁹

Under the UNKRA programme, it was reported, a small number of projects had been completed or were already far advanced in their implementation. These included, in the field of food production, the importation of hatching-eggs and farm animals, of seed for an experimental seed improvement programme, and of substantial quantities of fishing nets.

In the field of education, projects included the importation of paper for school books, the restoration of university and technical libraries, the provision of manuals for a literacy programme, and the provision of supplies and equipment for a college secretarial course.

A much larger number of projects were currently being developed. These included: the repair of 2,200 school classrooms, about one-fourth of the repairs necessary to restore minimum school conditions in Korea, repair and replacement of some 500 miles of electrical transmission and distribution lines, rehabilitation of three electric generating stations, establishment of a minerals assay laboratory, a mine school, a merchant marine school and provision of mobile clinics to serve as training units for Korean medical personnel. The clinics would also be used for disseminating information on health, hygiene and sanitation.

These specific projects, the report said, were developed on an ad hoc basis through the Joint Committees and after consultation with the Government of the Republic of Korea. There was now full agreement among the Commander-in-Chief, United Nations Command, the Government of the Republic and the Agent General that UNKRA could now carry out a more rounded programme integrated with the civil assistance programme of the United Nations Command.

In the supplementary report (A/2222/Add.1) the Agent General stated that on 24 November 1952 his Advisory Committee adopted a $70 million programme for the relief and rehabilitation of Korea for the period ending 30 June 1953. The programme which was worked out by the Agent General after consultation with the Commander-in-Chief, the United Nations Command and the President of the Republic of Korea, was designed to make an immediate and positive contribution towards meeting the most pressing needs of the Korean people in advance of the cessation of hostilities.

As approved, the programme envisaged the expenditure of $14 million for the importation of essential commodities such as food, lumber and fertilizers, $10,634,000 for capital equipment for Korean industry, a total of $6,900,000 for agricultural research, irrigation, land reclamation and farm and fisheries development, and $7,100,000 to rehabilitate power plants and develop new sources of power. To restore urgently needed educational facilities, approximately $8 million would be spent on the reconstruction of schools and libraries and to furnish teacher-training and vocational-training services. The work of the United Nations Command which kept major port facilities and railways in repair, would be supplemented by an UNKRA allocation of $7,500,000 to repair secondary ports and transverse and feeder rail lines. Housing reconstruction would be initiated in the amount of $3 million, this programme to be expanded as supplies became available. To meet the fuel needs for Korean industrial production and civilian use, $2 million were allocated for the increase of the production of natural resources such as coal and peat. The health programme of the United Nations Civil Assistance Command in Korea would be supplemented by a $2,500,000 UNKRA programme to restore hospitals, clinics, water systems and sanitation facilities and to provide for the training of medical assistance personnel.

The Agent General stated in the supplementary report covering the period from 15 September 1952 to 15 February 1953 (A/2222/Add.2) that the Agency was in a position to give substantial aid in the remainder of the financial year. He had inaugurated the $70 million UNKRA programme and continued the close working relationships with the United Nations Command and the Government of the Republic. Pointing out the dangers of continued inflationary pressures, he stated that the only way to reduce these dangers was to increase the volume of consumer goods available in Korea. The rehabilitation of factories, the restoration of transport and power systems, the repair of schools and construction of houses, hospitals and orphanages all added, in the first instance, to inflationary pressures. Therefore, he considered, no more than a limited amount of construction could be safely undertaken at the present time.

²⁹ For this assistance programme see under "United Nations Command Reports", pp. 163-65.

The general situation, the report stated, had made it necessary to accord first priority to the importation of consumer goods which could be sold to cover the local currency costs of the reconstruction programme. While the provision of local currency was the major objective of the import programme, the selection of commodities to be imported was determined by the most pressing needs of the Korean people and the expressed desire of the Government of the Republic. In December 1952, therefore, the Agent General allocated $6 million for the purchase of cereals and $3 million for the import of fertilizer to improve food prospects for next year. The grain, it was reported, was already arriving in Korea. The Agent General also requested the Advisory Committee to approve a modification of the current programme by increasing the amounts allotted for the importation of consumer goods from $14 million to $20 million, in order to increase UNKRA's won resources and to ensure that the Agency's reconstruction programme did not accelerate inflation. He recommended that the additional $6 million should be expended for further grain and fertilizer imports.

The Agent General concluded by stating that substantial additional resources would have to be made available by the free nations of the world if the shattered Korean economy was to be restored. He believed that the programme would have reached a stage by the end of the current financial year when its continuance would depend upon the ability of interested governments to make available to UNKRA any remaining portions of contributions originally pledged to the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds. He also hoped that additional Member and non-member Governments would support the programme.

The following additional contributions were acknowledged since 15 September 1953: $25 million from the United States and $110,000 from Venezuela and Australia.

The Agent General reported that discussions had been held with the Governments of the Scandinavian countries and of the United Kingdom and it was expected that approximately $8,748,840 would be forthcoming from those sources. Furthermore, the Government of Australia was providing a shipment of barley, against its pledge to an approximate value of $909,440. In addition, a sum of $869,149 had been received, as of December 1952, as miscellaneous income, bringing the total resources so far available and immediately anticipated, to $54,356,383. Of this sum, $4,629,540 was reported to have been expended in the period ending 30 June 1952, leaving a balance of $49,726,843 available for beginning the $70 million programme.

The report was not considered until the second part of the Assembly's seventh session, which opened in February 1953. The Assembly's discussions are, therefore, not dealt with in this Yearbook.

MAP NO. 498 UNITED NATIONS
JUNE 1953

ANNEX I. OFFERS OF MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO THE UNIFIED COMMAND FOR KOREA (AS OF OCTOBER 1952)³⁰

Country	Offer	Status
1. Australia	2 destroyers	In action
	1 aircraft carrier	In action
	1 frigate	In action
	1 RAAF fighter squadron	In action
	1 air communication unit with supporting administrative and maintenance personnel	In action
	Ground forces from Australian infantry forces in Japan	In action
	Additional battalion of troops	In action
2. Belgium	Air transport	In operation
	Infantry battalion	In action
	Reinforcements	In action
3. Bolivia	30 officers	Acceptance deferred
4. Canada	3 destroyers	In action
	1 RCAF squadron	In action
	Brigade group, including 3 infantry battalions, 1 field regiment of artillery, 1 squadron of self-propelled anti-tank guns, together with engineer, signal, medical, ordnance and other services with appropriate reinforcements	In action
	Canadian-Pacific Airlines (commercial facilities between Vancouver and Tokyo)	In operation
	10,000-ton dry cargo vessel	In action
5. China	3 infantry divisions	Acceptance deferred
	20 C-47's	Acceptance deferred
6. Colombia	1 frigate	In operation
	1 infantry battalion	In action
7. Costa Rica	Sea and air bases	Accepted
	Volunteers	Acceptance deferred
8. Cuba	1 infantry company	Accepted
9. Denmark	Hospital ship "Jutlandia"	In Korea
	Motorship "Bella Dan"	Superseded by offer of hospital ship "Jutlandia"
10. El Salvador	Volunteers if US will train and equip	Acceptance deferred
11. Ethiopia	1,069 officers and men	In action
12. France	1 patrol gunboat	Returned to other duty after service in Korea
	Infantry battalion	In action
13. Greece	7 RHAF transport aircraft	In action
	Ground forces	In action
	Additional unit of land forces	Pending
14. India	Field ambulance unit	In action
15. Italy	Field ambulance unit	In action
16. Luxembourg	Infantry company (integrated into Belgian Forces)	In action

³⁰ Based on the Special Report by the Unified Command (A/2228), dated 18 October 1952, and amplified by information supplied through delegations concerned.

Country	Offer	Status
17. Netherlands	1 destroyer	In action
	1 infantry battalion	In action
18. New Zealand	2 frigates	In action
	1 combat unit	In action
19. Norway	Merchant ship tonnage	In operation
	Surgical hospital unit	In Korea
20. Panama	Contingent of volunteers	Acceptance deferred
	Use of merchant marine for transportation of troops and supplies	Accepted
	Free use of highways	Accepted
	Farmlands to supply troops	Pending
	Bases for training	Acceptance deferred
21. Philippines	17 Sherman tanks	In action
	1 tank destroyer	In action
	Regimental combat teams consisting of approximately 5,000 officers and men	In action
22. Sweden	Field hospital unit	In action
23. Thailand	Infantry combat team of about 4,000 officers and men	In action
	2 corvettes	In action (one Corvette destroyed after grounding).
	Sea transport	In action
	Air transport	In operation
	Facilities for treatment for frost-bite	Pending
24. Turkey	Infantry combat team of 4,500 men, later increased to 6,086 men	In action
25. Union of South Africa	1 fighter squadron, including ground personnel	In action
26. United Kingdom	Ground troops: 2 brigades composed of brigade headquarters, 5 infantry battalions, 1 field regiment, 1 armoured regiment	In action
	Naval forces: 1 aircraft carrier; 1 aircraft carrier maintenance ship; 2 cruisers, 4 destroyers, 1 survey ship; 1 hospital ship; 7 supply vessels, 4 frigates, 1 headquarters ship;	In action
	Elements of the air force	In action
27. United States	Ground forces: 3 army corps and 1 marine division with supporting elements	In action
	Naval forces: carrier task group with blockade and escort forces; amphibious force; reconnaissance and anti-submarine warfare units; supporting ships	In action
	Air force: 1 tactical air force; 1 bombardment command; 1 combat cargo command; all with supporting elements	In action
	Transport† Medical††

† No details available. The Unified Command has, however, arranged for transport of United States troops and material, as well as for the transport of some of the forces and material listed in the present summary.

†† No details available. The Unified Command, however, provided full medical facilities not only for US troops but also for the troops of participating governments.

ANNEX II. STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT OFFERS AND CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THE RELIEF AND REHABILITATION OF KOREA AS AT 15 FEBRUARY 1953³¹
(IN U.S. DOLLAR EQUIVALENTS)

Member States	Under General Assembly resolution 410(V) of 1 December 1950				Under Security Council resolutions pertaining to the Emergency Programme			Total offered, received and promised under both programmes
	Amount offered	Received in cash	Offered in kind and made available to Unified Command	Balance outstanding	Received in kind	Promised	Total received and promised
Argentina	500,000	—	500,000	—	—	—	—	500,000
Australia ³²	4,002,710	—	—	4,002,710	412,326	—	412,326	4,415,036
Belgium	—	—	—	—	60,000	—	60,000	60,000
Brazil	—	—	—	—	—	2,702,703	2,702,703	2,702,703
Burma	49,934	—	49,934	—	—	—	—	49,934
Canada ³³	6,904,762	6,904,762	—	—	—	—	—	6,904,762
Chile ³⁴	250,000	—	—	250,000	—	—	—	250,000
China	—	—	—	—	634,782	—	634,782	634,782
Cuba	—	—	—	—	270,962	—	270,962	270,962
Denmark	860,000	—	—	860,000	238,011	—	238,011	1,098,011
Dominican Republic	10,000	—	—	10,000	—	—	—	10,000
Ecuador	—	—	—	—	99,441	—	99,441	99,441
Egypt	28,716	—	—	28,716	—	—	—	28,716
El Salvador	500	—	—	500	—	—	—	500
Ethiopia ³⁵	40,000	40,000	—	—	—	—	—	40,000
France	—	—	—	—	74,286	—	74,286	74,286
Greece	—	—	—	—	153,219	—	153,219	153,219
Guatemala ³⁶	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Honduras	2,500	2,500	—	—	—	—	—	2,500
Iceland	—	—	—	—	45,400	—	45,400	45,400
India	—	—	—	—	171,080	—	171,080	171,080
Indonesia	100,000	100,000	—	—	—	—	—	100,000
Iran ³⁷	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Israel	33,600	—	33,600	—	63,000	—	63,000	96,600
Lebanon ³⁸	50,000	50,000	—	—	—	—	—	50,000
Liberia	15,000	—	15,000	—	10,000	—	10,000	25,000
Luxembourg	30,000	20,000	—	10,000	—	—	—	30,000
Mexico ³⁹	—	—	—	—	346,821	—	346,821	346,821
Netherlands	263,158	263,158	—	—	—	—	—	263,158
New Zealand	—	—	—	—	279,597	—	279,597	279,597

Paraguay ⁴⁸	10,000	10,000	—	—	—	—	—	10,000
Peru	—	—	—	—	58,723	—	58,723	58,723
Philippines ⁴⁴	—	—	—	—	2,330,653	—	2,330,653	2,330,653
Saudi Arabia	20,000	20,000	—	—	—	—	—	20,000
Sweden	966,518	—	—	966,518	48,326	—	48,326	1,014,844
Syria ⁴⁵	11,408	—	—	11,408	—	—	—	11,408
Thailand	—	—	—	—	4,368,000	—	4,368,000	4,368,000
Turkey ⁴⁶	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
United Kingdom	28,000,000	700,000	—	27,300,000	752,146 ⁴⁷	580,962	1,333,108	29,333,108
United States ⁴⁸	162,500,000	35,000,000	—	127,500,000	321,688,005	—	321,688,005	484,188,005
Uruguay	—	—	—	—	250,780	2,000,000	2,250,780	2,250,780
Venezuela	70,000	—	70,000	—	80,842	—	80,842	150,842
TOTAL	205,550,806	43,110,420	668,534	161,771,852	332,885,685	5,283,665	338,169,350	543,720,156
Non-member States
Austria	40,000	—	40,000	—	—	—	—	40,000
Cambodia ⁴⁹	—	—	—	—	2,429	25,000	27,429	27,429
Germany	—	—	—	—	47,619	—	47,619	47,619
Japan	—	—	—	—	50,000	—	50,000	50,000
Switzerland (and International Red Cross ⁵⁰)	—	—	—	—	34,884	—	34,884	34,884
Vietnam ⁵¹	10,000	10,000	—	—	—	1,943	1,943	11,943
TOTAL	50,000	10,000	40,000	—	134,932	26,943	161,875	211,875
GRAND TOTAL	205,600,806	43,120,420	708,534	161,771,852	333,020,617	5,310,608	338,331,225	543,932,031

³¹ Taken from Addenda to the Report of the Agent General of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency (A/2222/Add.1 & 2).

³² Contributions to emergency programme deducted from amount pledged to UNKRA.

³³ Converted from Canadian $7,250,000 at rate ruling on date of receipt, 31 March 1951—Can. $1.05—US $1.00.

³⁴ An offer of nitrates from the Government of Chile is pending further legislation.

³⁵ Expended by WHO on behalf of UNKRA on medical supplies for Unified Command.

³⁶ "Several thousand tons of timber"—offered but not yet valued.

³⁷ An offer of fuel was declined by Unified Command owing to difficulty of transportation.

³⁸ Offered to emergency programme but made available to UNKRA.

³⁹ Supplies to value of $462,428 were shipped to Korea of which $115,607 was intended as contribution to Palestine relief. This will be subject to adjustment between emergency programme and UNRWAPRNE.

⁴⁰ Tentative value only.

⁴¹ Offer of supplies declined by Unified Command unless made available at US port.

⁴² Contributions to emergency programme deducted from amount pledged to UNKRA. *Tentative value only.

⁴³ Offered to emergency programme but made available to UNKRA.

⁴⁴ Tentative value only.

⁴⁵ Offer not yet formally confirmed.

⁴⁶ An offer of medical supplies was declined by Unified Command owing to difficulty of shipment.

⁴⁷ Tentative value only.

⁴⁸ Total contribution to emergency relief through Unified Command from 25 June 1950 to 31 December 1952.

⁴⁹ An offer of rice, dried fish and timber is under consideration by Unified Command.

⁵⁰ Tentative value only.

⁵¹ An offer of rice is under consideration by Unified Command.

ANNEX III. SUMMARY OF ASSISTANCE FOR THE KOREAN EMERGENCY RELIEF PROGRAMME (REPORTED BY THE AGENT GENERAL OF UNKRA AS AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952 (A/2222) AND FROM 15 SEPTEMBER 1952 to 15 FEBRUARY 1953 (A/2222/Add.1 and 2))

A. MEMBER AND NON-MEMBER STATES

1. OFFERS MADE DIRECT TO EMERGENCY PROGRAMME

AS AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
Australia	28 Nov. 1950	Penicillin crystalline	67,344		Arrived in Korean theatre
	14 Dec. 1950	Distilled water	31,836		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Laundry soap, 116,000 lbs.	8,029		Arrived in Korean theatre
	8 Jan. 1951	Procaine penicillin	108,547		Arrived in Korean theatre
	31 Jan. 1951	Barley, 2,000 long tons	196,570	412,326	Arrived in Korean theatre
Belgium	7 Nov. 1950	Sugar, 400 metric tons	60,000	60,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
Brazil	22 Sept. 1950	Cruzeiros, 5.0 million	2,702,703	2,702,703	Pending legislation
Cambodia	11 May 1951	Salted fish, 1,400 kgs.	389		Arrived in Korean theatre
	14 June 1951	Rice, 52 metric tons	583		Arrived in Korean theatre
	25 Feb. 1952	Rice, 100 sacks	1,457	2,429	Under shipment
China	4 Oct. 1950	Coal, 9,900 metric tons Rice, 1,000 metric tons Salt, 3,000 metric tons DDT, 20 metric tons	613,630		Shipped direct to Korea by Government of China
	17 July 1951	Medical supplies	21,152	634,782
Cuba	2 Oct. 1950	Sugar, 2,000 metric tons Alcohol, 10,000 gallons	270,962	270,962	Arrived in Korean theatre
Denmark	5 July 1950	Medical supplies	142,964		Arrived in Korean theatre
	26 Sept. 1950	Sugar, 500 metric tons	95,047	238,011	Arrived in Korean theatre
Ecuador	13 Oct. 1950	Rice, 500 metric tons	99,441	99,441	Arrived in Korean theatre
France	9 Oct. 1950	Medical supplies	74,286	74,286	Arrived in Korean theatre
	29 Dec. 1950	Medical supplies
Greece	20 Oct. 1950	Soap, 113 metric tons	31,167		Arrived in Korean theatre
	30 Nov. 1950	Notebooks and pencils, 25,000 each	1,333		Arrived in Korean theatre
	27 Dec. 1950	Medical supplies	84,586		Arrived in Korean theatre
	15 April 1952	Salt, 10,000 tons	36,133	153,219	Accepted by Unified Command
Iceland	14 Sept. 1950	Cod Liver oil, 125 metric tons	45,400	45,400	Arrived in Korean theatre
India	4 Oct. 1950	Jute bags, 400,000	167,696		Arrived in Korean theatre
	11 Oct. 1950	Medical supplies	3,384	171,080	Arrived in Korean theatre

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
Israel	22 Aug. 1950	Medical supplies	63,000	63,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
Liberia	17 July 1950	Natural rubber	10,000	10,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
Mexico ⁵²	30 Sept. 1950	Pulses and rice	} 346,821	346,821	Arrived in Korean theatre
		Medical supplies
New Zealand	6 Oct. 1950	Dried peas, 492 long tons	55,318		Arrived in Korean theatre
	20 Nov. 1950	Milk powder, 150 metric tons	66378 ⁵³		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Soap, 200 metric tons	49,644 ⁵³		Arrived in Korean theatre
	14 Mar. 1951	Vitamin capsules	38,532 ⁵³		Arrived in Korean theatre
	26 May 1952	Soap and vitamin capsules	69,725 ⁵³	279,597	Accepted by Unified Command
Nicaragua	16 Nov. 1950	Rice, 1,000 quintals	} —		Declined unless can be made available at United States port
	16 Dec. 1950	Rice, 2,000 quintals
		Alcohol, 5,000 quarts
Norway	13 Feb. 1951	Soap, 120,250 lbs.	21,091		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Vitamins, 24,850 bottles	10,210		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Ether	36,699 ⁵³	71,000	Under shipment
Pakistan	29 Aug. 1950	Wheat, 5,000 metric tons	378,285	378,285	Arrived in Korean theatre
Peru	21 Nov. 1950	Clothing, cotton wool and cloth	58,723	58,723	Under shipment
Philippines	7 July 1950	Soap, 50,000 cakes	5,500		Under shipment
	7 Sept. 1950	Vaccine	50,050		Arrived in Korean theatre
	8 Sept. 1950	Rice, 10,000 metric tons	2,255,628		8,285 tons arrived in Korean theatre, balance awaiting shipment. Tentative value only
	8 Sept. 1950	Fresh blood, 518 units	19,475		Arrived in Korean theatre
	29 Nov. 1950	Fresh blood, 500 units	—	2,330,653	Declined
Sweden	14 May 1952	Medical supplies	48,326	48,326	Under shipment
Thailand	20 Sept. 1950	Rice, 40,000 metric tons	4,368,000	4,368,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
Turkey	29 Aug. 1950	Vaccines and serums	—	—	Declined owing to difficulties of transportation
United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland	19 Oct. 1950	Salt, 6,000 long tons	139,150		Arrived in Korean theatre
	20 Oct. 1950	Sulfa drugs	48,791		Arrived in Korean theatre
	22 Dec. 1950	Food yeast, 50 long tons	25,167		Arrived in Korean theatre
	19 June 1951	Supplies to the value of £400,000 including:	1,120,000		Supplies to be made available at request of Unified Command
		Charcoal, 24,000 piculs			Under shipment

⁵² Supplies to the value of $462,428 were shipped by the Mexican Government to Korea, of which $115,607 was intended as a contribution to Palestine relief. This will be subject to adjustment between the Emergency Programme and UNRWAPRNE.

⁵³ Tentative value only.

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total ($ US equivalent)	Status
		Salt, 8,200 long tons			Arrived in Korean theatre
		Food yeast, 75 tons			Accepted by Unified Command
		Cotton sheeting		1,333,108	Acceptance pending
United States of America	Official valuation received on 10 Oct. 1952	Total contribution to emergency relief from 25 June 1950 to 31 August 1952		253,728,212	This total includes: $214,966,395 for goods supplied or in process of supply from US Army plus transportation costs of $31,270,488; US borne transportation for sundry donations $1,-966,483; ECA relief assistance (exclusive of approximately $32 million non-relief ECA economic assistance) $5,-524,846
Uruguay	14 Sept. 1950	2 million dollars (US)	2,000,000		Pending legislation
	28 Oct. 1950	Blankets, 70,000	250,780	2,250,780	Arrived in Korean theatre
Venezuela	14 Sept. 1950	Medical supplies and foodstuffs	80,842	80,842
			TOTAL	270,211,986

FROM 15 SEPTEMBER 1952 TO 15 FEBRUARY 1953

Total received and promised to 15 September 1952				270,211,986
Cambodia	8 Nov. 1952	Rice, dried fish and timber	25,000		Acceptance pending
Germany	25 Nov. 1952	Medical supplies	47,619		Accepted by Unified Command
Iran	13 Jan. 1953	1,000 tons of fuel	Not valued		Declined owing to difficulties of transportation
Japan	8 Jan. 1953	Cotton cloth, thread, cotton socks, underwear, medical supplies	50,000		Accepted by Unified Command
Switzerland (and International Red Cross)	11 Dec. 1952	Medical supplies	38,884		Accepted by Unified Command. Tentative value only
United Kingdom	5 Jan. 1953	Medical supplies, blankets, cotton goods, underwear, nails			Acceptance pending. The value of these supplies (approximately $280,000) will be deducted from amount of $1,-120,000 pledged on 19 June 1951

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
United States of America	Official valuation received on 12 Feb. 1953	Additional contribution for emergency relief from 31 August 1952 —31 December 1952	57,959,793		This total includes cost of goods supplied or in process of supply from U.S. Army plus transportation costs; also included are U.S. borne transportation costs for sundry donations
Vietnam	22 Nov. 1952	Rice: 10 tons
TOTAL TO 15 FEBRUARY 1953				338,331,225

2. OFFERS MADE TO THE NEGOTIATING COMMITTEE ON CONTRIBUTIONS TO PROGRAMMES OF RELIEF AND REHABILITATION BUT MADE AVAILABLE BY UNKRA TO THE EMERGENCY PROGRAMME

AS AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952

Argentina	8 Aug. 1951	Corned meats, 13,950 cases	500,000	500,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
Burma	1 Feb. 1951	Rice, 400 metric tons	49,934	49,934	Arrived in Korean theatre
Israel	19 Feb. 1951	Citrus products	33,600	33,600	Arrived in Korean theatre
Liberia	23 Feb. 1951	Natural rubber	15,000	15,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
TOTAL				598,534

FROM 15 SEPTEMBER 1952 TO 15 FEBRUARY 1953

Total received to 15 September 1952				598,534
Austria	16 June 1952	Medical equipment	40,000		Under shipment
Venezuela	11 Mar. 1952	Canned fish, footwear, and cotton blankets	70,000	110,000	Under shipment
TOTAL				708,534

3. CASH CONTRIBUTIONS OFFERED TO THE EMERGENCY PROGRAMME BUT CREDITED TO UNKRA

AS AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952; NO CHANGE BY 15 FEBRUARY 1953

"Ethiopia	5 Aug. 1950	£14,286 Sterling		40,000	Transferred by UNKRA to World Health Organization and expended on medical supplies for Unified Command
Lebanon	26 July 1950	$US50,000		50,000
Paraguay	3 Nov. 1950	$US10,000		10,000
TOTAL				100,000

Yearbook of the United Nations

SUMMARY OF ALL GOVERNMENTAL ASSISTANCE

As AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952

Section (1).....	270,211,986
Section (2).....	598,534
Section (3).....	100,000
GRAND TOTAL (PART A)	270,910,520

As AT 15 FEBRUARY 1953

Section (1).....	338,331,225
Section (2).....	708,534
Section (3) unchanged from original report ..	100,000
GRAND TOTAL	339,139,759

B. NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS (BY COUNTRY)

AS AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	total	Status
Australia Save the Children Fund	25 June 1951	Services of 3 medical and welfare personnel			1 doctor now work- ing in Korea with UNCAK
Canada United Church of Canada	19 April 1951	Used clothing and shoes, 24,000 lbs.	24,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	14 Nov. 1951	Used clothing, 30,000 lbs.	30,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	4 Feb. 1952	Used clothing, 30,000 lbs.	30,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	7 May 1952	Used clothing, 40,000 lbs.	40,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	21 July 1952	Used clothing, 40,000 lbs.	40,000	164,000	Accepted by Unified Command
Colombia Commercial firms	3 Mar. 1951	Clothing—amount not specified			Accepted by Unified 500 Command
	19 Mar. 1951	Clothing—amount not specified
Japan Japan Canned and Bottled Food Assoc.	27 April 1951	Preserved foods, 300 cases	3,000		Arrived in Korean theatre. Tentative value only
Japanese Catho- lic Organiza- tion AI RIN KAI	17 June 1952	Textiles and miscel- laneous supplies	5,400	8,400	Stored in Japan
New Zealand Council of Or- ganizations for Relief Services Overseas	21 Nov. 1950	Used clothing, 71 cases	11,377		Arrived in Korean theatre

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
	16 Mar. 1951	Used clothing, 48 cases	19,392		Arrived in Korean theatre
	15 Oct. 1951	Used footwear and clothing, 104 cases	44,069		Accepted by Unified Command
	23 April 1952	Used clothing, 15 cases	12,029		Accepted by Unified Command
	23 April 1952	Clothing and footwear, 9 cases, 10 bales	14,052		Accepted by Unified Command
	16 May 1952	Medical books, 12 cases	1,349		Accepted by UNK-RA for medical library
	25 Aug. 1952	Medical books (not yet valued)		102,268	Accepted by UNK-RA for medical library
Norway
Europahjelpen	29 Dec. 1950	Clothing, 126 metric tons	277,780	277,780	Arrived in Korean theatre
United Kingdom
YWCA, Hong Kong	29 Mar. 1951	Clothing and cloth, 1,200 lbs.	1,200	1,200	Arrived in Korean theatre. Tentative value only
United States of America
American Friends Service Committee	16 Nov. 1950	Used clothing, 103,000 lbs. } Soap, 5,000 lbs. }	104,000		Part arrived in Korea, balance under shipment
	23 Jan. 1951	Used clothing, 10 metric tons	20,000		Part arrived in Korea, balance under shipment
	14 Feb. 1951	Used clothing, 11,000 lbs.	10,000		Part arrived in Korea, balance under shipment
	12 Mar. 1951	Used clothing, 7,500 lbs.	7,500		Arrived in Korean theatre
	28 May 1951	Used clothing, 24,233	24,233		Arrived in Korean theatre
	12 July 1951	Used clothing, 67,500 lbs.	67,500		Part arrived in Korea, balance stored in Japan
	28 Aug. 1951	Used clothing, 32,500	32,500		Arrived in Korean theatre
	11 Sept. 1951	Used clothing, 60,860 lbs. } Soap, 3,700 lbs. }	60,860 370	326,963	Arrived in Korean theatre
American Relief for Korea
	13 June 1951	Used clothing and shoes, 500,000 lbs.	480,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	24 Oct. 1951	Used clothing and shoes, 3,868,403 lbs. } Hospital supplies, 1,135 lbs. } Powdered milk, 400 lbs. }	3,869,650		Arrived in Korean theatre
	3 Mar. 1952	Used clothing and shoes, 1,500,000 lbs.	1,225,000		Part arrived in Korea, balance under shipment
	13 Mar. 1952	Rice, 20,000 lbs.	2,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	21 May 1952	Canned goods, 150 lbs.	30		Accepted by Unified Command
		Children's supplies, 315 lbs	315		Accepted by Unified Command

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
		Physician's samples, 177 lbs. (no com- mercial value)			Accepted by Unified Command
	18 Aug. 1952	Used clothing and shoes, 1,500,000 lbs.	1,225,000		Accepted by Unified Command
		Laundry and toilet soap, 12,000 lbs.	2,160	6,804,155	Accepted by Unified Command
Church World Service	25 Sept. 1950	Used clothing and miscellaneous supplies	104,958		Arrived in Korean theatre
	6 Nov. 1950	Vitamin tablets, 1,000,000	5,500		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Used clothing, 100,000 lbs.	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	30 Jan. 1951	Used clothing, 60,000 lbs.	60,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	19 Feb. 1951	Used clothing, 12,000 lbs.	12,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	21 Feb. 1951	Used clothing, 40,000 lbs.	40,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	2 April 1951	Used clothing, 10,000 lbs.	10,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	18 May 1951	Used clothing, 50,000 lbs.	50,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	28 Mar. 1952	Hospital supplies (in- cluding 1,000,000 vi- tamin tabs.), 6,720 lbs.	33,600		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Used clothing, 268,567 lbs.	268,567		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Food, 54,248 lbs.	14,595		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Soap, 2,433 lbs.	243	699,463	Arrived in Korean theatre
Committee for Free Asia	8 Aug. 1951	Newsprint, 1,000 tons	150,000	150,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
Co-operative Agencies for Remittances to Europe, Inc. (CARE)	21 Sept. 1950	Food and clothing packages	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	20 Nov. 1950	Blankets and textile packages	154,294		Arrived in Korean theatre
	10 April 1951	Food packages	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	19 June 1951	Food packages	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Blanket packages	28,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	25 July 1951	Food packages	110,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	13 Aug. 1951	Dress material, soap, food	1,565		Arrived in Korean theatre
	22 Aug. 1951	Food packages	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	19 Oct. 1951	Knitting wool packages	25,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	3 Dec. 1951	Clothing and blanket packages	85,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Food packages	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
	9 Jan. 1952	Soap packages	38,800		Arrived in Korean theatre
	21 Jan. 1952	Blankets and underwear	80,000		Part arrived Korea, balance available Japan
	21 Feb. 1952	Food packages	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	10 Mar. 1952	Food packages	230,000		Part delivered Korea, balance under shipment
	21 Mar. 1952	Cotton packages	17,500		Under shipment
	25 April 1952	Food packages	140,000		Under shipment
	23 May 1952	Knitting packages	25,000		Under shipment
	14 July 1952	Food packages	100,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	31 July 1952	Cloth, 13,595 lbs.	10,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	19 Aug. 1952	Food packages, 14,870 lbs.	74,350	1,719,509	Accepted by Unified Command
Friendship Among Children and Youth Around the World Inc.	26 Feb. 1952	Relief parcels, clothing, shoes	8,700	8,700	Under shipment
General Conference of Seventh Day Adventists Heifer Project Committee	11 April 1951	Used clothing, 19,000 lbs.	10,000	10,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
	6 Mar. 1952	Hatching eggs, 250,000	17,500		Arrived in Korean theatre, offer originally made to UNKRA who in turn offered this donation to Unified Command
	19 June 1952	Goats, 100 } Pigs, 300 }	25,000	42,500 42,500
Lutheran World Relief	23 Feb. 1951	Used clothing, 44,500 lbs.	44,500		Arrived in Korean theatre
	26 Mar. 1951	Used clothing and soap, 12,851 lbs.	12,851		Arrived in Korean theatre
	26 April 1951	Used clothing, 200 bales	25,287		Arrived in Korean theatre
	18 July 1951	Used clothing, 290 bales	29,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	15 April 1952	Used clothing and bedding, 21,750 lbs.	21,750		Under shipment
	1 May 1952	Used clothing, 60,000 lbs.	60,000		Under shipment
	19 June 1952	Used clothing and bedding	14,031	207,469	Accepted by Unified Command
Manget Foundation Mennonite Central Committee	26 Sept. 1951	Used clothing, 101 bales	9,000	9,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
	Oct. 1951	Services of 1 supply officer			Services made available for one year from October 1951
Oriental Missionary Society	19 Feb. 1951	Used clothing, 102,883 lbs.	102,883	102,883	Arrived in Korean theatre
Presbyterian Church in the United States	10 Sept. 1951	Medical supplies	950	950	Arrived in Korean theatre

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
Save the Children Federation	12 Dec. 1950	Used clothing, 4,913 lbs.	5,033		Arrived in Korean theatre
	16 Feb. 1951	Used clothing, 10,011 lbs.	10,087		Arrived in Korean theatre
	23 April 1951	Used clothing, 13,512 lbs.	13,610		Arrived in Korean theatre
	9 July 1951	Used clothing, 15,700 lbs.	15,395		Arrived in Korean theatre
	20 July 1951	School equipment	1,200		Arrived in Korean theatre
	10 Oct. 1951	Used clothing, 15,136 lbs.	15,115		Arrived in Korean theatre
	10 Oct. 1951	School equipment and gift packages	7,500		Part arrived Korean theatre, part un- der shipment
	22 Oct. 1951	Used clothing, 4,826 lbs.	4,826		Arrived in Korean theatre
	10 Dec. 1951	Used clothing, 9,867 lbs.	9,867		Arrived in Korean theatre
	21 Jan. 1952	Gift packages and tents	2,900		Arrived in Korean theatre
	28 April 1952	School equipment Used clothing, 10,257 lbs.	5,000 10,326		Under shipment Under shipment
	9 July 1952	Tents and poles	360		Accepted by Unified Command
	4 Aug. 1952	Layettes	900	102,119	Accepted by Unified Command
	War Relief Services	17 Oct. 1950	Used clothing, soap, medicinal supplies	290,749		Arrived in Korean theatre
	National Catholic Welfare Con- ference	27 Oct. 1950	Services of medical team			Declined
17 Nov. 1950		Clothing, shoes, soap	99,739		Arrived in Korean theatre
29 Nov. 1950		Used clothing, 1,000,000 lbs.	1,000,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
7 Dec. 1950		Used clothing, 1,000,000 lbs.	1,000,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
7 Dec. 1950		Used clothing 70,000 lbs.	70,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
16 Feb. 1951		Medicinals	2,600		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Used clothing 20,000 lbs.	20,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
26 Mar. 1951		Dried milk, 1,000,000 lbs.	125,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Dried eggs, 100,000 lbs.	40,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
30 Aug. 1951		Used clothing, 10,000 lbs.	10,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
22 Oct. 1951		Used clothing, 950,000 lbs.	950,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
6 Dec. 1951		Used clothing, 400,000 lbs.	400,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
27 Dec. 1951		Used clothing, 115,000 lbs.	115,000		Under shipment
15 Feb. 1952		Used clothing, 12,000 lbs.	12,000		Part delivered Ko- rean theatre, bal- ance under ship- ment
12 Mar. 1952		Baby foods, 31,844 lbs.	8,250	4,143,338	Under shipment

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
Miscellaneous
United States Sources
Anonymous donors
	—	Used clothing, 130,802 lbs.	130,802		Arrived in Korean theatre
	—	Chaplain's supplies	3,360		Arrived in Korean theatre
	—	Canned milk and food	250		Arrived in Korean theatre
	—	Law books, 1 set	600		Arrived in Korean theatre
Mrs. J. M. Lee, Chicago	—	Used clothing, 1,120 lbs.	1,120		Arrived in Korean theatre
Korean Consul General, San Francisco	—	Used clothing, 756 lbs.	750		Arrived in Korean theatre
School Children of San Francisco
	—	Rice, 800 lbs.	80		Arrived in Korean theatre
USA Naval Hospital Bethesda
	—	Medical books, 2 cases	500		Arrived in Korean theatre
US 3rd Army
	—	Baby clothes and used clothing	10,857		Arrived in Korean theatre
USAF 19 Bomardment Wing
	—	Used clothing, 200 lbs.	120		Arrived in Korean theatre
Special Service Officer, US Army in Pacific
	—	Used clothing, 16 boxes	1,120		Arrived in Korean theatre
Sharp and Dohme, Philadelphia
	—	"Captivate" 600 bottles	1,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
Cash donations
	—		1,903	152,462
TOTAL NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS AND MISCELLANEOUS				15,033,659

FROM 15 SEPTEMBER 1952 TO 15 FEBRUARY 1953

Total received to 15 September 1952 15,033,659

Canada
United Church of Canada
	27 Oct. 1952	Used clothing, 40,000 lbs.	40,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	17 Dec. 1952	Used clothing, 40,000 lbs.	40,000	80,000	Accepted by Unified Command
Unitarian Services Commission
	18 Dec. 1952	Used clothing, 4,000 lbs.	4,000		Accepted by Unified Command
New Zealand
Council of Organizations for Relief Services Overseas
	15 Oct. 1952	Used clothing and footwear, 33 cubic tons	24,640		Accepted by Unified Command
	26 Nov. 1952	Dental supplies	200	24,840	Accepted by Unified Command

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
United States of America American Relief for Korea	10 Nov. 1952	Toilet and laundry soap	4,500		Accepted by Unified Command
	13 Nov. 1952	Used clothing and shoes, 1,500,000 lbs.	1,225,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	16 Jan. 1953	Toilet and laundry soap, 25,000 lbs.	4,500		Accepted by Unified Command
	22 Jan. 1953	Dried fruit: 10,458 lbs.	1,992	1,235,992	Accepted by Unified Command
Cooperative Agencies for Remittances to Europe, Inc. (CARE)	6 Oct. 1952	Vitamins: 350 cartons	9,500		Accepted by Unified Command
	16 Oct. 1952	Cotton, wool blankets, underwear packages and remnants	} 43,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	28 Oct. 1952	200 Korean cotton packages		20,000	Accepted by Unified Command
	13 Nov. 1952	2,030 knitting wool packages	20,300		Accepted by Unified Command
	13 Nov. 1952	1,500 underwear packages	15,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	13 Nov. 1952	5,000 food packages	50,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	8 Jan. 1953	1,500 blanket packages	10,500	168,300	Accepted by Unified Command
	Friendship Among Chil- dren and Youth Around the World, Inc.	4 Dec. 1952	1,470 "Share your Friendship" parcels	12,000	12,000	Accepted by Unified Command
Lutheran World Relief		23 Oct. 1952	Used clothing: 1 ton	8,000	8,000	Accepted by Unified Command
Miscellaneous United States Sources Religious denomi- nations, Fort Devens	—	Miscellaneous welfare supplies	1,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	U.S. Army Chapels, Alaska	—	Food	1,271		Accepted by Unified Command
	A. William Neal, Chicago	—	Medical library	2,500		Accepted by Unified Command
	States Grain Corporation	—	1,800 bushels soft white wheat	4,000		Accepted by Unified Command
	Cash donations	—		800	9,571	Accepted by Unified Command
TOTAL NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS				16,576,362

C. SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

AS AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952; NO CHANGE BY 15 FEBRUARY 1953

Agency	Date of offer	Details of offer	($ US equivalent)		Status
International Labour Office	29 Nov. 1950	Services of 2 labour advisers			Services made available by ILO until 1 January 1952
International Refugee Organization	3 Aug. 1950	Clothing, cloth, thread, kitchen equipment, sewing machines	179,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	8 Aug. 1950	Medical supplies: 2 metric tons	12,177		Arrived in Korean theatre
	19 Aug. 1950	Services of 5 medical team personnel		191,177		Services made available by IRO until 1 January 1952
		Services of 4 medical team personnel
	Services of 5 supply officers
United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization	31 Jan. 1951	$100,000 for purchase of educational supplies	100,000	100,000	Made available to Unified Command
United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund	27 Sept. 1950	Blankets, 312,020	535,006		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Powdered milk, 330,000 lbs.	10,054		Arrived in Korean theatre
	28 Sept. 1950	Soap, 100,000 lbs.	7,167		Arrived in Korean theatre
		Medical supplies	1,964		Arrived in Korean theatre
	26 Jan. 1951	Clothing	200,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	1 Feb. 1951	Clothing	199,586		Arrived in Korean theatre
	24 July 1951	Freight charges on cod liver oil donated by Iceland	3,729		Arrived in Korean theatre
Cotton cloth, 2,400,000 yds.		540,000	1,497,506	Arrived in Korean theatre
World Health Organization	8 Aug. 1950	Services of 10 medical team personnel			Services made available by WHO until 1 January 1952
	4 Sept. 1950	Services of 3 public health advisors
	22 Nov. 1950	Services of 10 medical team personnel
TOTAL				1,788,683

D. LEAGUE OF RED CROSS SOCIETIES

AS AT 15 SEPTEMBER 1952

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
League of Red Cross Societies, Geneva	11 Nov. 1950	Services of 9 medical teams each of 3 persons			5 teams made avail- able by Red Cross until 1 January 1952
		Tents, blankets, medical supplies, clothing			Supplied direct to the Korean Red Cross
	7 May 1952	Reconditioned cloth- ing, knitting wool	2,016	2,016	Arrived in Korean theatre
American Junior Red Cross	8 June 1951	Educational gift boxes	100,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	27 July 1951	School chests	7,600		Arrived in Korean theatre
	2 Aug. 1951	Children's clothing	150,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	5 Sept. 1951	Educational gift boxes	100,000		Part delivered in Korean theatre, balance under shipment
	7 May 1952	Duplicating machines	2,700		Arrived in Korean theatre
	1 July 1952	School chests and edu- cational gift boxes	210,000	570,300	Accepted by Unified Command
American Red Cross Society	2 Aug. 1951	Layettes and blankets	46,000	46,000	Arrived in Korean theatre
Australian Red Cross Society	31 July 1951	Medical supplies	970		Arrived in Korean theatre
	2 Aug. 1951	Used clothing	6,100		Arrived in Korean theatre
	11 Mar. 1952	Used clothing	2,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	7 May 1952	Used clothing	6,720		Arrived in Korean theatre
	7 May 1952	Used clothing	2,000	17,790	Arrived in Korean theatre
British Red Cross Society	31 July 1951	Woollen clothing	8,400	8,400	Arrived in Korean theatre
Canadian Red Cross Society	7 May 1952	Knitting wool	2,240	2,240	Under shipment
Costa Rican Red Cross Society	3 Mar. 1951	Used clothing	1,761	1,761	Arrived in Korean theatre
Greek Red Cross Society	13 June 1951	Dried fruits	686	686	Arrived in Korean theatre
Indian Red Cross Society	13 June 1951	Mepacrine tablets	6,090		Arrived in Korean theatre
	15 Aug. 1951	Medical supplies	2,100	8,190	Part arrived in Ko- rean theatre, bal- ance stored in Ja- pan
Iranian Red Lion and Sun Society	31 July 1951	Blankets and clothing	3,900	3,900	Arrived in Korean theatre

Country	Date of offer	Details of offer	Value ($ US equivalent)	Total	Status
Japan Red Cross Society	19 June 1951	Medical supplies, clothing and food	36,000		Part delivered Korean theatre, balance stored in Japan
	22 Jan. 1952	Medical supplies	25,000	61,000	Stored in Japan
New Zealand Red Cross Society	7 May 1952	Knitting wool and needles	194	194	Arrived in Korean theatre
Norwegian Red Cross Society	31 July 1951	Hospital supplies	5,640	5,640	Arrived in Korean theatre
Swedish Red Cross Society	2 Aug. 1951	Used clothing	90,000		Arrived in Korean theatre
	28 Feb. 1952	Used clothing	82,512	172,512	Arrived in Korean theatre
Turkish Red Crescent	10 Jan. 1951	Knitting wool and needles	898	898	Arrived in Korean; theatre
TOTAL				901,527

FROM 15 SEPTEMBER 1952 TO 15 FEBRUARY 1953

Total received to 15 September 1952			901,527
Australian Red Cross Society	9 Oct. 1952	Used clothing, 95 cases	4,256
	9 Jan. 1953	Used clothing, 65 cases	2,912
TOTAL			7,168
TOTAL			908,695

SUMMARY

As at 15 September 1952

Summary	$
Total part A—Member and Non-Member States	270,910,520
Total part B—Non-governmental organizations	15,033,659
Total part C—Specialized agencies	1,788,683
Total part D—League of Red Cross Societies	901,527
TOTAL	288,634,389

As at 15 February 1953

Total part A. Member and non-member States	339,139,759
Total part B. Non-governmental organizations	16,576,362
Total part C. Specialized agencies (unchanged from original report)	1,788,683
Total part D. League of Red Cross Societies	908,695
TOTAL	358,413,499

B. THE INDIA-PAKISTAN QUESTION

In his second report⁵⁴ to the Security Council (S/2448), submitted on 18 December 1951, Dr. Frank P. Graham, the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan, outlined the stage reached in his efforts to secure the concurrence of the Governments of India and Pakistan on a twelve-point agreement which would involve demilitarization of the State of Jammu and Kashmir in a single continuous process. He reported that agreement had been reached on four more of the proposals but had still not been reached on proposals 5, 6, 7 and 10. The two fundamental differences remaining concerned: (1) the minimum number of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the demilitarization; and (2) the day on which the Government of India would cause the Plebiscite Administrator to be formally appointed to office.

1. Consideration by the Security Council of the Second Report of the United Nations Representative

The Security Council considered the second report of the United Nations Representative at its 570th to 572nd meetings on 17, 30, and 31 January 1952.

Presenting his report to the Council, Dr. Graham stressed his belief that any negotiations that could be undertaken by the United Nations to obtain demilitarization of the State of Jammu and Kashmir under the resolutions of the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan (UNCIP) of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949 would, in the prevailing circumstances, encounter almost insurmountable obstacles unless agreed solutions were found for:

(1) a definite period of demilitarization; (2) the scope of demilitarization and quantum of forces that would remain at the end of the period of demilitarization; and (3) the day for the formal induction into office of the Plebiscite Administrator.

The representative of the USSR declared that all the plans put forward by the United States and the United Kingdom in the Kashmir question, instead of seeking a real settlement, were aimed at prolonging the dispute and at converting Kashmir into a trust territory of the United States and the United Kingdom under the pretext of giving it "assistance through the United Nations". Their intention, he said, was to introduce Anglo-American troops into Kashmir so as to convert it into an Anglo-American colony and a military and strategic base against the USSR and the People's Republic of China.

In support of his thesis, the USSR representative quoted Pakistan and United States newspapers, and statements allegedly made by a Pakistan journalist and by Mr. Ghulam Mohammad Sadiq, President of the Kashmir Constituent Assembly.

From the beginning, the United States and the United Kingdom, in direct violation of the Charter, particularly of Article 1, had done everything possible to prevent the people of Kashmir from being able to decide freely on their own future, he said. The resolution of 30 March 1951 (S/2017/Rev.1)⁵⁵, the USSR representative stated, forced upon the people of Kashmir a plebiscite ostensibly under the United Nations, but, in reality, under Anglo-American control; the original text of that resolution had contained an open demand that foreign troops should be introduced into Kashmir. The demand had been dropped in view of the Indian representative's objection, but that had merely been a formal gesture, and the idea had been taken up again by Dr. Graham, whose chief military adviser was an American general. Since the Council resolution defining the powers of the United Nations Representative contained no such authorization, it might be asked what justification Dr. Graham had had for submitting, without the knowledge of the Security Council, a question concerning the introduction of foreign troops into Kashmir in the questionnaires sent out to the Governments of India and Pakistan on 18 December 1951 (S/2448, Annex III). The USSR representative charged that the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom had exerted direct pressure on the Governments of India and Pakistan, insisting on the adoption of their proposal for the submission of the Kashmir question to the arbitration of a third party, their purpose being to bring the people of Kashmir under their authority.

He stressed the opinion of his Government that the Kashmir question could be satisfactorily settled only by giving the people of Kashmir an opportunity to decide the question of its constitutional status by themselves, without outside interference. That could be achieved if the status of Kashmir were determined by a constituent assembly, democratically elected by the people of Kashmir.

⁵⁴ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 348-49.

⁵⁵ For the text of the resolution, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 343-44.

The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States considered that the charges made by the Soviet representative of an Anglo-American anti-Soviet plot in Kashmir were fantastic. The representative of the United Kingdom paid tribute to Dr. Graham's record in Indonesia, and expressed the hope that the Council, considering the Kashmir dispute objectively, would succeed in enabling the two parties to agree on a settlement satisfactory to both. The United States representative expressed the hope of his Government that the dispute would be settled in accordance with United Nations principles and the agreements already reached between the parties.

The representative of Pakistan said that there had never been any question of anything being imposed from the outside upon either party to the dispute. The efforts of the Security Council had been directed solely toward securing the implementation of the agreements existing between the parties. The current deadlock, which had lasted almost three years, related to the demilitarization of the State preparatory to the holding of a plebiscite and the induction into office of a Plebiscite Administrator. He reviewed the history of the negotiations and outlined Pakistan's position on the outstanding questions, and said that his Government would accept in principle the truce proposals formulated in Dr. Graham's second report but considered that some of the important terms used in the proposals should be defined and that other necessary details should be filled in. He denied that military bases in Kashmir had been granted to the United States or any other Power, and said that the difference between what the USSR representative had suggested and what the Security Council had sought to achieve with the agreement of the parties was one of method, not of principle. Throughout the controversy, India, Pakistan and the Security Council had agreed that the question of the accession of Jammu and Kashmir should be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite.

The representative of India emphasized his Government's anxiety that an early, equitable and peaceful solution of the dispute be found. The problems of a definite period for the demilitarization and of the date for the formal induction into office of the Plebiscite Administrator could, he said, be settled without difficulty provided that agreement was reached on the scope of demilitarization and the quantum of forces that would remain at the end of the period of demilitarization, and provided that the programme agreed upon for that purpose was satisfactorily implemented.

The majority of representatives, including those of Brazil, Chile, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States, paid tribute to the work of Dr. Graham and considered that he had succeeded in considerably narrowing down the differences between the two parties. They considered that Dr. Graham should return to the sub-continent to attempt to bring about a solution of the outstanding points of difference.

The representative of the United Kingdom expressed disappointment that the differences between the parties appeared to be as wide as ever on basic points but thought it a considerable gain to have the main points on which agreement was required formulated in Dr. Graham's twelve proposals, of which eight had been agreed to by the parties.

The United States, its representative said, considered that the twelve points formed a solid basis on which the parties could reach agreement so as to enable a fair and impartial plebiscite to be held. Progress had been made on some of these points and should not be halted; none of the remaining issues constituted an insurmountable barrier to a peaceful solution.

The Netherlands representative considered that the basic issue was the need of the people of Jammu and Kashmir for self-determination. As long as there was a reasonable chance of further agreement through negotiation, he felt, that method should be given priority over the arbitration called for in the Council's resolution of 30 March 1951 (S/2107/Rev.1). On the other hand, the patience shown by the Security Council should not be misconstrued as lightening in any way the moral and political responsibilities of the parties for the fulfilment of their commitments regarding the creation of fair conditions for a free and impartial plebiscite in Jammu and Kashmir.

At the conclusion of the discussion, the President stated that it was the sense of the Council that the United Nations Representative, acting under the resolutions of 30 March 1951 (S/2017/Rev.1) and 10 November 1951 (S/2392), was authorized, without any new decision by the Council, to continue his efforts to fulfil his mission and to submit his report, which the Council hoped would be final, within two months. He noted that the representative of the USSR had not concurred in that agreement.

2. Third Report of the United Nations Representative

On 22 April the United Nations Representative transmitted his third report (S/2611) to the Security Council. He stated that in his continued negotiations he had had in mind two purposes: (1) to assist the parties in removing the remaining difficulties in an effort to reach an agreement on the twelve proposals; and (2) without prejudice to this to obtain, if possible, further withdrawals from the State of Jammu and Kashmir on both sides of the cease-fire line.

He outlined the positions of the two parties on the remaining four items in dispute. He stated that India maintained its position concerning the minimum number of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization (namely, 21,000 regular Indian Army forces and 6,000 State militia on the Indian side and 4,000 men normally resident in Azad Kashmir territory, half of whom should be followers of Azad Kashmir, on the Pakistan side). India considered that if agreement could be reached on the scope of demilitarization and on the quantum of forces to remain at the end of the demilitarization period, the other two remaining differences (the period of demilitarization and the date for the induction into office of the Plebiscite Administrator) could be settled without difficulty.

Pakistan, Dr. Graham reported, had accepted the proposals of the United Nations Representative concerning the period of demilitarization, the quantum of forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line and the date for induction into office of the Plebiscite Administrator. It insisted that the demilitarization programme should embrace all the armed forces in Jammu and Kashmir without exception.

The United Nations Representative also reported on the progress made in demilitarization. Since the cease fire of 1 January, he said, both India and Pakistan had made substantial withdrawals of their forces from Kashmir, which, including the current withdrawal of one Indian division, amounted to some 50 per cent of their forces from the States. Both parties had also withdrawn their forces along the borders of the State.

Analysing the two UNCIP resolutions of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949, he stated that the demilitarization of the State had reached the stage at which further reductions of troops were directly related to the preparation of a plebiscite. He accordingly considered it necessary that the Plebiscite Administrator designate should be associated with him in studies and the consideration of common problems.

Dr. Graham emphasized the importance of finding a settlement for the question and recommended that negotiations be continued with a view to resolving the remaining differences on the twelve proposals, with special reference to the amount of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the demilitarization period and the general implementation of the United Nations Commission's resolutions of August 1948 and January 1949. He also recommended that the two Governments should:

(1) refrain from taking any action which would augment the current military potential of the forces in the State; (2) continue their determination not to resort to force and to adhere to peaceful procedures and follow faithfully their agreement to instruct their official spokesmen and urge all their citizens not to make statements calculated to incite the people of either nation to war over Kashmir; (3) observe the cease fire effective from 1 January 1949, and the Karachi Agreement of 27 July 1949; and (4) undertake to reduce further by 15 July 1952, the forces under their control in the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

3. Fourth Report of the United Nations Representative

By letter dated 29 May 1952 (S/2649), the United Nations Representative informed the Security Council that negotiations had been renewed. On 31 July he stated (S/2727) that India and Pakistan had agreed to a meeting of representatives of the two Governments at ministerial level under the auspices of the United Nations Representative at the European office of the United Nations in Geneva, beginning 25 August 1952.

On 16 September Dr. Graham submitted his fourth report (S/2783) to the Security Council regarding the negotiations carried out in agreement with the two Governments from 29 May to 16 July 1952 in New York, and regarding the conference held at ministerial level from 26 August to 10 September 1952 in Geneva. He stated that, as a result of meetings and conversations with the parties, he had submitted a new draft of his proposals on 2 September, in which he suggested (paragraph 7 A (III) and B (II) of the proposals) a minimum force of 6,000 on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line, and of 18,000 on the Indian side. He had made it clear that those figures did not include the Gilgit and Northern Scouts on the Pakistan side nor the State militia on the Indian side. In addition to suggesting definite minimum figures, he had attempted in a provisional clause to accommodate the concern expressed during the conversations that the agreement should not come into effect until the demilitarization programme had been approved by the two Governments.⁵⁶

On 3 September it had appeared that no agreement could be secured on the basis either of the figures proposed or of the brackets of 3,000 to 6,000 on the Pakistan side and of 12,000 to 18,000 on the Indian side which had been proposed to the parties on 16 July 1952. As it had not been possible in the circumstances to secure agreement on the minimum forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line, the United Nations Representative had thought it might be possible for the two Governments to agree on some principles based on the requirements of each side, which principles could then serve as the criteria for fixing the quantum of forces. He had accordingly submitted a further draft on 4 September 1952 according to which, at the end of the demilitarization period, there would be on each side of the cease-fire line the minimum number of forces required for the maintenance of law and order and of the cease-fire agreement, with due regard (in the case of the Indian side) to the security of the State and (in the case of both sides) to the freedom of the plebiscite.

Concerning that draft, he reported, the position of India was that the principles enumerated were conceived in the right spirit, having regard to the two UNCIP resolutions. As a basis for the evolution of a suitable definition of the functions of forces on both sides of the cease-fire line, they contained the germs of a settlement. India could not, however, accept any equation of its responsibilities with the local authorities on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line or agree to anything more than a local character to the maintenance of public order in that area by those authorities. It considered that the defence of the entire State was the concern of the Government of India, which alone was entitled to maintain a military armed force for that purpose.

Pakistan had been prepared to accept the draft proposals of 4 September, subject to the observation that the references to "due regard to the freedom of the plebiscite" and the "security of the State" should be deleted to avoid recurrence in the Military Sub-Committee of the political controversies that had held up progress in the main conference.

In conclusion, Dr. Graham stated that, in his view, in order to reach an agreement on a plan of demilitarization, it was necessary either:

(1) to establish the character and number of forces to be left on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization; or (2) to declare that the forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of that period should be determined in accordance with the requirements of each area and, accordingly, principles or criteria should be established which would serve as guidance for the civil and military representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan in the meeting contemplated in the provisional clause of the revised proposals.

4. Consideration by the Security Council of the Third and Fourth Reports

The third and fourth reports of the United Nations Representative were considered by the Security Council at its 605th to 611th meetings on 10 October, 5 November and 5, 8, 16 and 23 December.

Summarizing the main points of his report, the United Nations Representative dealt with the obstacles that had stood in the way of demilitarization and with his twelve proposals. The narrowing of the differences to the number and character of forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line emphasized, he said, the depth of the difference on that point. Recalling the alternative approaches which he had suggested for resolving that difference, he stressed the great importance of solving the Kashmir problem peacefully, not only for the peoples of the State and of the sub-continent, but for the whole world.

On 5 November the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States submitted a joint draft resolution (S/2839 and Corr. 1) which, inter alia, would have the Council urge the Governments of India and Pakistan to enter into immediate negotiations at United Nations Headquarters, in order to reach agreement on the specific number of forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization, "this number to be between 3,000 and 6,000 armed forces remaining on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line, and between 12,000 and 18,000 armed forces remaining on the India side of the cease-fire line", as suggested by the United Nations Representative. Such specific numbers were to be arrived at bearing in mind the principles or criteria contained in paragraph 7 of the United Nations Representative's proposals of 4 September 1952 (S/2783/Annex 8). The draft resolution provided that the United Nations Representative would be requested to continue to make his services available to the Governments of India and Pakistan, and those Governments would be requested to report to the Council not later than 30 days from the date of adoption of the resolution. Dr. Graham would also be requested to keep the Council informed of any progress.

⁵⁶ This clause provided that the agreement would enter into effect when the two Governments had approved a programme of demilitarization in conformity with the relevant paragraphs of the proposals. The draft of this programme was to be drawn up in meetings between the representatives of India and Pakistan assisted by their Military Advisers under the auspices of the United Nations, the first meeting to be held two weeks after signature of the agreement.

Speaking in support of their draft resolution, the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States emphasized the basic agreement of the parties on the objective of a free and impartial plebiscite as laid down in the two resolutions of the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan (UNCIP) of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949. Examining the extent to which the United Nations Representative had been able to secure acceptance by the two Governments of the points contained in his twelve proposals, they maintained that the main difference to be resolved now was the one on the number and character of the forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line. They recalled that the parties had agreed that the demilitarization should be carried out in such a way as to involve no threat to the cease-fire agreement.

This, they said, must have been the criterion that the United Nations Representative had in mind when he suggested the range of figures within which the parties were being urged, in the joint draft resolution, to negotiate. The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States believed that the Kashmir militia and the Gilgit scouts occupied a special position and need not be included in the total of forces to be determined.

Regarding the character of the forces to remain on each side of the cease-fire line, the representative of the United Kingdom expressed the view that, in order to ensure that demilitarization would at no stage become a threat to the cease-fire agreement, the forces on both sides should be, broadly speaking, of the same kind. Moreover, he stated, the proposal to limit the forces on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line to an armed civil police force while leaving a military force on the other side would not be consistent with a really free plebiscite.

Recalling the proposal put forward by the United Kingdom and the United States on 21 February 1951 (S/2017) that a neutral force might be used to facilitate demilitarization of the State, the representative of the United Kingdom suggested that, should the fear that demilitarization might lead to a renewal of the conflict in Kashmir still exist, whichever of the parties felt that fear might be urged to reconsider the proposal to make available such a force. That device would of course not be necessary if demilitarization on the lines suggested by Dr. Graham and by the joint draft resolution could be brought about.

On the question of the Azad Kashmir forces, the representative of the United States referred to the suggestion made by the United Nations Representative that there should be a large-scale disbanding and disarmament of those forces so that there would remain at the end of the period of demilitarization only the minimum number of such forces as was required for the maintenance of law and order and of the cease-fire agreement, with due regard to the freedom of the plebiscite. He said that the sponsors of the draft resolution had accepted what they considered to be the view of the United Nations Representative that the forces which remained on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line should be those Azad Kashmir forces which remained after the large-scale disbandment, and that these forces should be detached from the administrative and operational control of the Pakistan High Command and be placed under neutral and local officers under United Nations surveillance. The sponsors, he said, had also accepted the view, that, on the Indian side of the cease-fire line, the forces should be Indian armed forces and State armed forces. This position, he held, was entirely consistent with the resolution of the United Nations Commission of 13 August 1948.

The sponsors of the draft resolution considered that it offered the parties an opportunity to arrive, by their own negotiations, at a settlement of the final issue standing in the way of the demilitarization of the State and the planning for a plebiscite, including the induction into office of the Plebiscite Administrator.

The representative of India reviewed the circumstances in which the Kashmir dispute had been brought to the attention of the Security Council, stating that Pakistan had twice been guilty of aggression in Kashmir, once when it assisted and participated in the initial invasion and secondly on 8 May 1948 when it admittedly sent its regular troops there. Its illegal occupation of the State's territory continued. It had, moreover, created subversive forces and authorities there. Until the Council was prepared to face that central issue, no just and lasting solution could be found, the Indian representative stated.

In support of the thesis that Kashmir's accession to India was legal and had been recognized as such by the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan, she said that under the resolutions of that Commission, while India was required to withdraw only the bulk of its forces, Pakistan was to withdraw all its forces. Those resolutions, further, recognized the sovereignty of the Jammu and Kashmir Government over the entire State, including the areas invaded and occupied by the Pakistan forces. They also recognized India's constitutional responsibility for protecting the State against external aggression. Similar recognition had been contained in Dr. Graham's proposals of 16 July 1952, under which the forces to remain on the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line would be separated from the administrative and operational control of the Pakistan High Command, and would be officered by neutral and local officers under the surveillance of the United Nations, whereas on the Indian side there would be an Indian armed force. Dr. Graham's seventh proposal of 4 September 1952, which laid down that, in considering the final number of forces on the Indian side, due regard would be paid to the security of the State, also recognized India's moral and constitutional responsibility for the protection and security of the State. The Government of India, its representative said, was not prepared to abdicate that responsibility, or to share it with others, least of all with the aggressor.

She said that, considering the requirements of maintaining law and order as well as the overall security of the State, the Government of India had come to the conclusion that a minimum force of 28,000 would be required on the Indian side of the cease-fire line. However, when the Azad Kashmir forces were completely disbanded, the Government of India would be prepared to effect a further reduction of 7,000. The force of 21,000 which was the absolute minimum would include the former State forces and would have no supporting arms such as armour or artillery.

Referring to the United Kingdom representative's contention that the presence of troops on the Indian side with only a civil armed force on the Pakistan side would be inconsistent with a really free plebiscite, she said that this argument ignored not only the UNCIP resolutions but also the proximity of the Pakistan frontier and Pakistan forces which would be within striking distance of the cease-fire line and vital areas of the State. The administration of the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line by local authorities under United Nations surveillance had been accepted by India, but those local authorities had no international status and could not be entrusted with regular troops. They could, at best, be entrusted with a civil armed force of 4,000 which, she considered, would be adequate. India, however, would be willing to permit some increase in those forces which would be operating under United Nations surveillance, provided a case was made out for such an increase.

Anything aimed at establishing a parity between India on the one hand and Pakistan on the other, either in quantum or character of forces, was, she stated, a departure from the two UNCIP resolutions and was unacceptable to India. In this connexion, she said that the joint draft resolution inadvertently or unjustifiably combined the essentially independent and alternative approaches envisaged by the United Nations Representative. The draft resolution proposed a single procedure, restricted in advance and leading to a predetermined result.

Moreover, the proposals of Dr. Graham of 16 July had also stipulated a radically different character for the forces on each side, a fact which the draft resolution overlooked. Under Dr. Graham's proposals, the forces on the Indian side were to remain under the complete control of the Government of India, whereas those on the other side were to be separated from the administrative and operational control of the Pakistan High Command and were to be officered by neutral and local officers—a difference which Pakistan had rejected.

The Government of India had therefore, she said, been forced to refer again to the essential difference in the status of the parties which had been totally disregarded in the draft resolution.

As for the reference to a so-called "neutral force", originally proposed by Pakistan, India had long since rejected the idea of the imposition of a foreign force on its territory as being derogatory to the dignity and territorial integrity of an independent nation.

Further, the reference to the principle that demilitarization should be carried out in such a way as to involve no threat to the cease-fire agreement was misleading, since the relevant paragraph of Dr. Graham's proposals, paragraph 8, had no bearing on the principles for determining the character and quantum of the forces; the figures suggested in the 16 July proposals were entirely arbitrary and unrelated to the normal considerations determining the minimum need for security. India was responsible for the security and protection of the State, and therefore any alternative for the figure it considered the absolute minimum must be justified on realistic considerations of security.

The view that the limits suggested by Dr. Graham represented his considered judgment was also misleading in view of the United Nations

Representative's definition, accepted by both parties, of his functions as those of a mediator whose duty was to find an approach acceptable to both Governments.

The Security Council had failed to address itself to the central and basic issue of aggression against India, Her Government, therefore must reject the joint draft resolution which, she maintained, went beyond the two resolutions of the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan or ignored the vital elements of principle contained in these resolutions.

In reply, the representative of Pakistan maintained that the allegation of Pakistan's aggression against India was based on the false assumption that Kashmir was part of Indian territory and that the accession of that State to India was complete and valid. This, however, was belied by the position which the Council had repeatedly taken that the accession was to be decided by a free plebiscite—a position that both parties had accepted. The so-called accession had been made after the people of Kashmir had successfully revolted against the tyranny of the Maharaja and had put him to flight. The occupation of Kashmir by Indian troops had thus been an act of aggression against the people of Kashmir, he stated. As to the so-called second invasion of Kashmir by regular Pakistan troops, he said that Pakistan troops had been sent as a result of a general offensive by the Indian army. In the face of that offensive, the Commander-in-Chief of the Pakistan army had recommended that the Indian army should not be allowed to advance beyond a certain line for various reasons vital to Pakistan, including the disruption which would have been caused by a renewed influx of refugees. That action could not be termed aggression because the territory involved had never been under the control or military occupation of India, even as a result of the supposed accession. In any case, the question was academic in view of the acceptance by the two Governments of the two resolutions of the United Nations Commission.

The crux of the matter, as the representative of India had said, was the implementation of that agreement, he said, and pointed out that paragraph 1 of the UNCIP's resolution of 5 January 1949 had provided that the question of the accession would be decided "through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite".

Those resolutions had not required the large-scale disbanding and disarming of the Azad Kashmir forces, he said. Yet India made this a condition precedent to any withdrawal of her forces. The two sides had agreed, under paragraph 8 of Dr. Graham's proposals, that the demilitarization would be carried out in such a way as to involve no threat to the cease-fire agreement. Yet, according to India, there should be substantial military forces on its side of the cease-fire line and none at all on the other side. Would there not be a serious threat to the cease-fire line in that event, the representative of Pakistan asked. It was clear that a certain number of forces must remain on the Azad Kashmir side to maintain law and order and to maintain the cease-fire line.

The representative of Pakistan stated that Pakistan had repeatedly accepted proposed solutions which had been rejected by India. Despite the public support by India for submission of disputes to international arbitration, it had refused several proposals for such arbitration on the meaning of the obligation undertaken under the two UNCIP resolutions. It had rejected the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' proposal to make available Commonwealth troops to facilitate a plebiscite. India had rejected in all some fourteen different proposals for solution of the question which had been accepted by Pakistan.

If the course of the dispute proved anything, he said, it was that Pakistan was anxious to proceed to the holding of a plebiscite and that India was not. It was academic, therefore, to suggest that upon withdrawal of the bulk of India's forces from Kashmir, Pakistan would march in, destroying any possibility of a plebiscite's being held and inviting India to attack it from the rear and occupy it.

Dealing with the joint draft resolution, he submitted that, having regard to the agreements that existed and the needs on both sides, the numbers suggested were not fair to the Pakistan side of the cease-fire line. Would not the proposal set up an imbalance that would cause apprehension on one side that the cease-fire line might not be adhered to? Despite those considerations, Pakistan was prepared to go forward even on the basis of that resolution. Nevertheless, there were two matters in which the proposal did not appear to aim at achieving progress: (1) the parties were to seek out each other and go into conference; and (2) the parties were to report the results to the Council. The Council owed it to the United Nations Representative, to the parties to the dispute and to the people of Kashmir that the United Nations Representative should retain the initiative in the matter, that the conversations should take place under his auspices and that he should report to the Security Council.

In conclusion, the representative of Pakistan, noting that the representative of India had inicated India's view that a minimum force of 28,000 was required to carry out its responsibilities, proposed that the resolution of 13 August 1948 be implemented immediately on the basis that India would retain that number of forces on its side of the cease-fire line, including State armed forces, and without armour or artillery. On the Pakistan side, Pakistan would carry out the full obligations undertaken by it under that resolution. The Plebiscite Administrator would then take over and carry out the functions entrusted to him by the resolution of 5 January 1949.

In reply, the representative of India reiterated the view that Kashmir's accession to India was complete when the instrument of accession was signed. The Indian Governor-General's declaration that the question would be settled by a reference to the people was, she said, a wish unilaterally expressed by him which did not alter the fact or the validity of the accession. The reference was to have been made when the land was cleared of the invader. But the invader had remained and the reference to the people had been delayed.

It had been argued that the invasion of the State could not be regarded as aggression since it preceded accession, but, since Pakistan had then had a stand-still agreement with Kashmir, it had been aggression against that State and, after the accession, against India as well.

As to the second invasion by Pakistan, she maintained that Pakistan had exceeded the right of self-defence because there was no attack on its territory. In this connexion she referred to Article 51 of the Charter which stipulated that there must be an attack on the Member which takes defensive measures and that the measures it takes should be reported to the Security Council. None of the two requirements had been fulfilled at the time when Pakistan sent its troops into Kashmir.

She said that the Pakistan representative's attempt to claim merit for acceptance of various proposals and at the same time to discredit India for inability to concur was misleading. Pakistan had accepted and India rejected the Council's resolution of 21 April 1948. But that had been followed by Pakistan's invasion of the State, on the one hand, and by India's co-operation and negotiation with UNCIP, on the other, despite the grave provocation offered by Pakistan's acts. Again, Pakistan had accepted Dr. Graham's proposals of 16 July 1952. But Pakistan's acceptance was subject to the condition that the character of the forces should be the same on both sides of the cease-fire line, a condition that had nullified that acceptance. In the same way, Pakistan had nullified its acceptance of Dr. Graham's proposals of 4 September 1952 by refusing to accept India's responsibility for the security of the State. India had considered that those proposals contained the germ of a settlement.

Dealing with Pakistan's offer agreeing to the retention of 28,000 Indian troops, the representative of India said that the Azad Kashmir forces were indistinguishable from regular Pakistan troops. Since the resolution of the Commission of August 1948 envisaged the withdrawal of all Pakistan forces, it must apply to all armed formations including Azad troops, Gilgit scouts and others. Moreover, the Plebiscite Administrator was only responsible for the disposition, i.e. the location of the Indian forces, not for any reduction in their number; they could not be reduced below the minimum necessary for maintaining law and order.

In a further reply, the representative of Pakistan recalled that he had already pointed out, on the issue of accession, that India's position had been that, on independence, the sovereignty of the States rested in the people, and he had stressed the fact that, long before the alleged accession, there had been a difference between the Maharajah and his people which had reached the point of revolt. Even if the Azad forces were now under the control of the Pakistan army such control would cease when the Pakistan army withdrew. The question of the disbandment and disarming of the Azad forces, however, would rise when the Plebiscite Administrator took over. It could not be argued that the people of the State, who had taken up arms in August 1947, were invaders who had to withdraw. What was delaying progress in organizing and holding the plebiscite was the refusal of India to withdraw its forces in accordance with the two UNCIP resolutions that it had accepted. Nowhere in those resolutions was the security of the State made the sole responsibility of India. The reference to "due regard to the security of the State" dealt with the functions of the United Nations Representative, succeeding the Commission, and the Plebiscite Administrator, who, after the withdrawal of the bulk of the Indian forces and after the Representative was satisfied that peaceful conditions had been restored, were to determine, in consultation with the Government of India, the final disposal—not disposition—of Indian and State armed forces. His Government, he said, agreed that there should be no departure from the two resolutions of the Commission. But India asked for a great deal more which was not provided for by those resolutions or which was not provided for during the stages at which India required it.

In reply to the representative of India, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that he did not see any inconsistency between the joint draft resolution and the two agreed UNCIP resolutions. Analysing the provisions of the joint draft resolution from that point of view, he noted that it had been accepted by both parties that the provisions of the two UNCIP resolutions should be combined so as to produce one continuous demilitarization process. The only extra element which had been introduced into Dr. Graham's proposals of 4 September, and consequently into the joint draft resolution, was that the number of forces should be determined with due regard to the maintenance of the cease-fire agreement. But that did no more than reflect the agreement already reached in paragraph 8 of Dr. Graham's proposal that demilitarization would be carried out in such a way as to involve no threat to the cease-fire agreement.

The two alternative approaches mentioned by Dr. Graham had been combined in the joint draft resolution only after the most careful thought. The United Kingdom Government thought it wise to avoid the possibility that one of the parties might choose to negotiate in accordance with one of the alternatives and the other party in accordance with the other. As for the question whether the United Nations Representative was competent to assess the strength of military forces to be left behind in the State at the end of the demilitarization process, the resolution of 5 January 1949 made it clear that the Representative, as the successor of the Commission, together with the Plebiscite Administrator, would be responsible for determining the final disposal of the armed forces, in consultation with the Government of India, such disposal to be "with due regard to the security of the State and the freedom of the plebiscite". The freedom of the plebiscite and the security of the State were both matters to which considerable weight must be attached and in regard to which some kind of balance might have to be struck.

The representative of the United States concurred with the view expressed by the United Kingdom representative.

Reiterating the views expressed by him in January (see above), the representative of the USSR said that Dr. Graham's reports, like the documents submitted earlier, showed the futility of attempts to seek agreement on the demilitarization of Jammu and Kashmir and on the holding of a plebiscite there under United Nations auspices. The United States and the United Kingdom, he said, had for five years done all in their power to protract a settlement of the question.

These two countries were intervening in the internal affairs of Kashmir with a view to transforming that territory into a strategic base against the Soviet Union. He quoted a statement in which Admiral Radford, the Commander-in-Chief of the United States Fleet in the Pacific, had stressed the strategic importance of Pakistan. He said that, despite India's refusal to allow a United Nations force, Dr. Graham had returned to that proposal in his last report when the proposal took the form of operational and administrative control of Azad Kashmir troops by the United Nations through local or neutral officers. Like all earlier resolutions on the question, the joint draft resolution, he said, excluded any possibility of a decision by the people of Kashmir themselves without outside pressure or interference. The correct way to solve the question would be to have the status of Kashmir determined by a constituent assembly elected by the people of the State on a democratic basis, in accordance with their right to self-determination.

In reply to the charge that the United States and the United Kingdom were trying to establish an aggressive base in Kashmir, the United Kingdom representative stated it was obvious that such a proposal would be completely opposed to the known policies of both India and Pakistan. It would always be open, he said, to the USSR to oppose a recommendation by the Council for a neutral force in Kashmir, should such a recommendation be made. But he did not see what the USSR could do should the parties agree to some such proposal.

The representative of the Netherlands considered that the presence of a considerable number of forces in the State would, admittedly, not create or facilitate conditions for a fair and impartial plebiscite. There must therefore be the greatest possible demilitarization and a reasonable proportion between the military forces on either side of the cease-fire line. He supported the joint draft resolution because it seemed likely to promote an agreement on that basis and was a fair proposal. The representative of Brazil also supported the joint draft. He found it hard to believe that two nations with so many ties and so much in common would be unable peacefully to settle their differences. A new effort should be made to that end. The representative of China observed that no member of the Council, apart from the parties, had ever discussed the charges of aggression. Instead, the Council had accepted the basic agreement of the parties that the question of the accession of the State should be decided by a fair and impartial plebiscite under the auspices of the United Nations. He hoped that the joint proposal might serve as a basis for the renewal of successful negotiations.

The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States accepted a Netherlands amendment (S/2881) to the joint draft resolution providing that the negotiations would be under the auspices of the United Nations Representative and deleting the reference to their being held at the Headquarters of the United Nations.

The representative of India pointed out that his Government had already stated that it was unable to accept the joint draft resolution. It was not prepared to be a party to any talks on the basis suggested in paragraph 7 of that proposal. With those explicit reservations, however, the Government of India, in line with its readiness to explore all avenues toward a peaceful settlement, would be prepared to join and continue in any talks in connexion with the dispute. If the Council still considered it useful or necessary to proceed with the draft resolution, his Government could only profoundly regret the decision.

As amended, the joint draft resolution (S/2883) was adopted by 9 votes to none, with 1 abstention (USSR). Pakistan did not participate in the voting.

The resolution read:

"The Security Council

"Recalling its resolutions of 30 March 1951, 30 April 1951, and 10 November 1951;

"further recalling the provisions of the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan resolutions of 13 August 1948 and 5 January 1949 which were accepted by the Governments of India and Pakistan and which provided that the question of the accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan will be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite conducted under the auspices of the United Nations;

"Having received the Third Report dated 22 April 1952 and the Fourth Report dated 16 September 1952 of the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan;

"Endorses the general principles on which the United Nations Representative has sought to bring about agreement between the Governments of India and Pakistan;

"Notes with gratification that the United Nations Representative has reported that the Governments of India and Pakistan have accepted all but two of the paragraphs of his twelve point proposals;

"Notes that agreement on a plan of demilitarization of the State of Jammu and Kashmir has not been reached because the Governments of India and Pakistan have not agreed on the whole of paragraph 7 of the twelve point proposals;

"Urges the Governments of India and Pakistan to enter into immediate negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan in order to reach agreement on the specific number of forces to remain on each side of the cease fire line at the end of the period of demilitarization, this number to be between 3,000 and 6,000 armed forces remaining on the Pakistan side of the cease fire line and between 12,000 and 18,000 armed forces remaining on the India side of the cease fire line, as suggested by the United Nations Representative in his proposals of 16 July 1952 (Annex III of S/2783) such specific numbers to be arrived at bearing in mind the principles of criteria contained in paragraph 7 of the United Nations Representative's proposal of 4 September 1952 (Annex VIII of S/2783);

"Records its gratitude to the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan for the great efforts which he has made to achieve a settlement and requests him to continue to make his services available to the Governments of India and Pakistan to this end;

"Requests the Governments of India and Pakistan to report to the Secretary Council not later than thirty days from the date of the adoption of this resolution; and further requests the United Nations Representative for India and Pakistan to keep the Security Council informed of any progress."

C. THE PALESTINE QUESTION

1. Complaints of Jordan and Israel to the Security Council

In a cablegram to the Secretary-General dated 22 January 1952 (S/2486) the Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Jordan complained of increasing Jewish acts of aggression against life and property inside Jordan territory in violation of the Jordan-Israel Armistice Agreement. Since these provocations might result in retaliation, the Prime Minister requested the Secretary-General to bring the contents of the cablegram to the attention of the Security Council to enable it to take measures necessary to stop further aggression.

In reply, in a letter dated 29 January 1952 (S/2502) addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representative of Israel stated that the Israel-Jordan Mixed Armistice Commission had, on 24 January 1952, determined that Jordan had been responsible for 59 violations of the Armistice Agreement and Israel for one such violation. These results revealed the distorted and inaccurate character of the Jordanian communication, the letter said.

In the same communication, the representative of Israel complained against a threatening statement made by Ahmed Shukairy, the Syrian representative, before the Ad Hoc Political Committee on 22 January 1952. This statement, it was charged, constituted a violation of Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter, as well as of articles III, paragraph 3, and IV, paragraph 3, of the Israel-Syrian General Armistice Agreement. The representative of Israel stated that his Government would resist any unauthorized passage across the Armistice lines and would reserve its right, under Article 35 of the Charter, to request meetings of the Security Council to consider and pass judgment on statements containing a threat of force against Israel.

In another letter (S/2762), dated 2 September 1952, the representative of Israel drew the Council's attention to pronouncements made by Colonel Shishakly, Chief of Staff of the Syrian Army and Deputy Prime Minister, on 15 and 16 August 1952, which, it was alleged, contained threats against the territorial integrity and independence of Israel in violation of the Charter and of the General Armistice Agreement of 20 July 1949 between Syria and Israel, wherein the signatories had undertaken to abstain, not only from the use of force, but also from the threat of force against each other.

2. Report of the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization on the Work of the Mixed Armistice Commissions

On 30 October 1952 the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization submitted a report, (S/2833 and Add.1) covering the period from 1 November 1951 to 30 October 1952, on the work of the Mixed Armistice Commissions.

The report stated that the Egyptian-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission had received a total of 429 complaints alleging violations of the Egyptian-Israel General Armistice Agreement; 246 by Israel and 183 by Egypt. Nearly all the complaints alleged violations of the Agreement committed in the proximity of the Armistice demarcation line delimiting the Egyptian-controlled territory known as the "Gaza strip".

At an emergency meeting of the Commission held on 4 May 1952, the question of ways of improving the general situation along the Armistice demarcation line was discussed and an understanding was concluded on the principle of reinstating mixed patrols along this line.

At the 49th formal meeting, which was held in two sessions on 26 August and 9 September 1952, it was agreed unanimously that all complaints on the agenda, which had totalled 324, were "to be considered as acted upon by the Mixed Armistice Commission and to be filed".

An informal agreement was also concluded to the effect that no further complaints would be brought before the Mixed Armistice Commission by either party and that direct and frequent contacts between representatives of both sides would be established.

The Jordan-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission had, during the period, received 506 complaints alleging military activity along the demarcation line, including crossing of the line by patrols, flying over the line and various violations involving civilians crossing the line. The numerous instances of civilian infiltration for smuggling, thefts or other purposes had presented a serious problem in the relations between the parties. Clashes between Israel frontier guards or patrols and armed Arab groups had occurred frequently, and were in some cases followed by retaliatory raids by Israelis into Jordan-controlled territory.

On 30 January 1952 an agreement on measures to curb infiltration and unauthorized crossing of the demarcation line by civilians was concluded by representatives of the two parties. Detailed procedures were worked out to implement this agreement, the most effective of which, it was stated, were the weekly or semi-weekly conferences of local commanders representing both military and police agencies which were usually attended by United Nations observers. These procedures, the report said, had been responsible for a significant drop in both the number and seriousness of cases of infiltration, border crossings and smuggling.

Another cause of frequent incidents along the demarcation line was reported to be the cultivation of land by residents of one party in the territory controlled by the other in no-man's land. Arrangements were made for joint surveying teams, accompanied by United Nations observers, to determine the exact location of the demarcation line in certain difficult areas. Nevertheless, several incidents had occurred in which a number of Israelis and Jordanians were either severely wounded or lost their lives. These events led the Mixed Armistice Commission to take various decisions condemning Jordan and Israel. Finally, the parties agreed to mark the demarcation line in important sectors by a plough furrow in an effort to prevent further misunderstandings in that area. The Commission also decided to call upon the Israel authorities to take measures to prevent unauthorized crossing of the demarcation line by civilians.

During the latter part of the period, the report stated, two major incidents interfered with the normal functioning of the Mixed Armistice Commission. The first was on 20 June 1952 when armed Israel military police entered and remained in the offices of the Commission in order to prevent the United Nations observers from carrying out the inspection of a barrel which had been taken from the fortnightly supply convoy to the Israel personnel on Mount Scopus. The Jordan delegation refused to use the headquarters of the Commission so long as Israel military police remained there. For nearly three months the few meetings held by the Commission took place in the open air and only on 17 September was agreement reached on the use of a new headquarters building. Later, the functioning of the Commission was interrupted when the Israel delegation refused to attend its meetings as long as the Jordan authorities refused to return two Israel soldiers captured on 9 June 1952 by a Jordanian patrol within Jordan-controlled territory. An agreement was, however, reached on this question on 17 September.

The last part of the report concerned the demilitarized area of Mount Scopus. It reiterated that the special committee, provided for by article VIII of the Israel-Jordan General Armistice Agreement had not yet met on account of Jordan's refusal, and that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization continued to administer on behalf of the United Nations the Agreement of 7 July 1948 for the demilitarization of the area.

The Israel-Lebanese Mixed Armistice Commission, the report stated, had held 25 formal meetings from 1 November 1951 to 15 October 1952. It had also held two meetings on Chief-of-Staff level and a number of unofficial or special meetings. In addition, there were frequent meetings of the Sub-Committee for Border Incidents and of the Sub-Committee for Staking of the Border. The Commission's main activities concerned the question of marking the Armistice demarcation line, the seizure of property by both parties, the reunion of separated families and the alleged flying over the demarcation line.

During the period the Israel-Syrian Mixed Armistice Commission had held four emergency meetings to discuss serious incidents which had occurred. No other formal meetings of the Commission were held and, as of 15 September 1952, 112 complaints were pending before it. The failure of the Commission to meet regularly in formal sessions was due to the conflicting attitudes regarding the status of the demilitarized zone and the interpretation of the provisions of article V of the Israel-Syrian General Armistice Agreement.

The report also gave an account of the Chief of Staff's efforts to implement the Security Council's resolution (S/2126) of 18 May 1951.⁵⁷ It described the circumstances in which some of the Arab inhabitants had returned to their former homes, in accordance with that resolution, and explained why others had not. Israel, it was reported, had agreed to pay compensation for the demolished Arab homes in one village, but had not, so far as was known, indicated willingness to pay compensation in other cases.

With the exception of three villages, almost the entire demilitarized zone was controlled by Israel police acting under orders from police headquarters outside the zone. The Chairman of the Commission had maintained that the provisions of article V of the Armistice Agreement and the explanatory note of Dr. Bunche, quoted in the Security Council's resolution of 18 May 1951, called for police of a local character within the demilitarized zone. Israel, however, had not agreed to remove its non-local police from the zone and no arrangement had been reached.

Referring to the activities of the Palestine Land Development Company, the report stated that its work would result in a considerable loss of water to the irrigation in Syrian territory. The report stated that no solution agreeable to both parties had been reached on this matter.

3. The United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine

a. PROGRESS REPORTS OF THE COMMISSION

Pursuant to General Assembly resolution 512 (VI)⁵⁸ of 26 January 1952 which called for periodic progress reports, the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine submitted its eleventh and twelfth progress reports (A/2121 and A/2216), with a supplement (A/2216/Add. 1). These reports covered the period from 19 November 1951 to 24 November 1952.

In its eleventh progress report (A/2121), dated 2 May 1952 and covering the period from 19 November 1951 to 30 April 1952, the Commission stated that in April 1952 it had decided to continue to meet at Headquarters in New York, where contact with the parties was possible through the permanent delegations. It had also decided that the most promising way of assisting the parties would be by further efforts to solve the questions of (1) compensation for the Palestine refugees and (2) the release of bank accounts blocked in Israel. As regards the first problem, the Commission considered the reaffirmation by the delegation of Israel of its intention to compensate those Arabs who abandoned their property in ⁵⁷ See Y.U.N. 1951, pp. 290-91.

⁵⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 309.

Israel and instructed the land specialist of its Refugee Office to conduct negotiations with the Israel authorities and to make periodic reports on the progress of his activities. With regard to the second problem, it decided to resume discussions with the delegation of Israel in order to ascertain the position of its Government on the question and to consider what further steps should be taken towards the release of the blocked accounts.

In its twelfth progress report (A/2216), dated 8 October 1952 and covering the period from 1 May 1952 to 7 October 1952, the Commission stated that, following negotiations conducted through the United States member of the Commission, the representative of Israel had expressed his Government's willingness to discuss measures for the gradual release of those accounts. Subsequently, the Commission was informed that the Israel Government was willing to release the amount of one million Israel pounds, to be transferred at the rate of one Israel pound to one pound sterling. The Israel delegation agreed with the Commission's suggestion that precedence should be given to the holders of small private accounts who were in particular distress. The Commission expressed the hope that the transfer of securities and other valuables belonging to refugees and held in banks in Israel would be carried out without delay. The Israel Government expressed its readiness to release and transfer the contents to the owners in accordance with the provisions of the laws of Israel. The Commission stated that the United Kingdom Government had acceded to its request to use its good offices to initiate discussions between representatives of Israel and Barclay's Bank.

The Commission decided, following its land specialist's discussions with the Israel authorities and the interested Arab circles, that the work of assessing potential claims for compensation should be started without delay. In its opinion, the first step in identifying and evaluating individual Arab property holdings should be the examination of the Land Registers of the former mandatory administration pertaining to territory within the State of Israel, as well as the study of the Rural Tax Distribution Lists and the Urban Field Valuation Sheets prepared by the mandatory administration and now in the hands of the Government of Israel. Microfilm copies of the majority of the Land Registers required were secured from the United Kingdom Government and the Government of Israel had agreed in principle to make available the necessary documentation in its possession. The land specialist was instructed to set up in New York the necessary machinery for extracting from these documents the information desired.

The Commission reported that it had informed the parties concerned of its decision to meet at United Nations Headquarters, and had added that it was prepared to meet at its Jerusalem headquarters and elsewhere if and when there was a recognized need for such meetings. It had received a reply only from Yemen and an acknowledgment from Jordan but no replies from the five other Arab States or from Israel. The Commission therefore concluded that there had been no change in the parties' attitude towards its efforts and that it would be fruitless for it to attempt to undertake again any of its procedures. However, in view of its successful intervention in the matter of blocked accounts, the Commission believed that further progress could be made by concentrating in a constructive way on individual issues and thus reducing the area of disagreement. It expressed the hope that such an approach would also help in securing compensation. In a supplement to its twelfth progress report (A/2216/Add.1), dated 24 November 1952 and covering the period from 8 October to 24 November 1952, the Commission said that, as a result of negotiations between representatives of the Government of Israel and of Barclay's Bank, a general agreement had been reached on the outline of the scheme to be submitted to the Government of Israel for its approval. It was expected that the first instalment would effect the rapid liquidation of small accounts, which constituted the great majority within the framework of existing Israel Law, without the need for special legislation.

On the question of compensation the Commission stated that its land specialist and two assistants were currently engaged in compiling from the Palestine Land Registers the necessary information regarding ownership, area, description and value of the great number of parcels of land involved. It concluded that the value of each individual holding could be estimated with reasonable accuracy from the information contained in the Land Registers, supplemented by information to be obtained subsequently from the taxation records of the former mandatory administration.

b. CONSIDERATION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY AT ITS SEVENTH SESSION

By a letter dated 12 September 1952 (A/2184), the permanent representatives of Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen requested the inclusion in the agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly of the item "The Conciliation Commission for Palestine and its work in the light of the resolutions of the United Nations". The explanatory memorandum accompanying the letter stated that the United Nations had not fulfilled the responsibility for the Palestine question which it had assumed in 1947 since none of its relevant resolutions had as yet been implemented. It suggested that the objective in considering the item should be to obtain a broad view of the activity of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in the light of those resolutions and the appropriate measures and machinery for giving effect to them.

The General Assembly decided to include the question in its agenda and to refer it to the Ad Hoc Political Committee, which considered it at its 25th to 39th meetings from 25 November to 11 December.

At the meeting of 25 November the Committee rejected by 14 votes to 13, with 20 abstentions, a motion of the representative of Iraq to invite Dr. Izzat Tannous, the representative of the Arab refugees of Palestine, to sit with the Committee during the discussion of the item. On 1 December a communication by Dr. Tannous was circulated as a Committee document (A/AC.61/L.24) at the request of the representative of Iraq. At the invitation of the Chairman and with the consent of the Committee, a statement was made by the representative of Jordan on 5 December. The statement expressed the same views as those put forward by the representatives of the other Arab States (see below).

(1) Discussions in the Ad Hoc Political Committee

At the outset of the discussion, the representative of Mexico, invoking an earlier request of the Chairman for moderation and sobriety in the debate, appealed to both the Arab States and Israel to discuss their problems in a conciliatory and moderate spirit. Subsequently, a number of representatives, including the Chairman of the Conciliation Commission, associated themselves with the Mexican appeal.

At the request of the Ad Hoc Political Committee, the Chairman of the Conciliation Commission for Palestine made a statement in which he reviewed the Commission's most recent efforts to reconcile the positions of Israel and the Arab States at the Paris Conference in 1951. He recalled that, after the failure of that Conference, the General Assembly in its resolution 512 (VI)⁵⁹ of 26 January 1952 had urged the parties to seek agreement and had requested the Commission to continue its efforts and to remain available to the parties. Since no request for assistance had come from either party, the Commission believed that the atmosphere was unfavourable to extensive negotiations and that ill-considered activities on its part might have done more harm than good. The Chairman explained that the Commission had endeavoured to find a new approach to the problems involved and had directed its attention to the more limited technical issues, such as payment of compensation and the release of bank accounts. In studying a possible basis for payment of compensation to Arab refugees, the Commission had no intention of prejudging any final solution of the problem of returning those refugees to their homes and restoring their property. Concerning the release of bank accounts, he said that Israel's agreement to unfreeze a first instalment of 1 million pounds sterling would assure compensation to over 5,000 of approximately 6,000 holders of bank accounts. He concluded that the results achieved by the Commission might appear negligible when viewed against the background of the issues arising in connexion with Palestine problems, yet they might well facilitate the restoration of normal relations between the parties.

(a) VIEWS OF THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE ARAB STATES

In their statements the representatives of Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen recalled that under Assembly resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine had been given both general directives and specific duties. According to the general directives, it was to assist the parties concerned to reach an early settlement of their differences in accordance with the relevant General Assembly resolutions. Its specific tasks had been directed to solutions of three aspects of the problem: (1) Jerusalem was to be placed under effective United Nations supervision; (2) the refugees wishing to return to their homes were to be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date and compensation was to be paid for the property of those choosing not to return; and (3) positive measures were to be taken with regard to the Holy Places. The Commission had been in existence for over four years, but its work, with which the Arab countries had from the beginning co-operated to the fullest extent, had as yet produced very little result. As early as 1949 it had become clear that the solution of the problem depended on the settlement of the refugee question, and only if that question were settled on a just and lasting basis could peace and stability return to the Middle East. Representatives of the Arab countries had accepted invitations from the Commission to attend conferences in Beirut, Lausanne, New York, Geneva and Paris. On every occasion, they had emphasized the need for allowing the Arab refugees to return to their homes and for providing compensation to those not wishing to do so. It was most regrettable that the Commission should have been unable to accomplish its task. It had been difficult for it to achieve positive results in view of Israel's refusal to comply with the General Assembly's resolutions, but at least it could have been expected to make a sincere effort and, in case of failure, to state the reasons for that failure clearly and precisely.

⁵⁹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 309.

The Commission, the representatives of the Arab States charged, had attempted to ignore previous United Nations decisions on the subject and had improperly assumed the right of interpreting its own terms of reference to suit the situation prevailing in Palestine. But the resolution of 11 December 1948 did not contain recommendations but had entrusted the Commission with carrying out the Assembly's decisions. They contended that the Commission had been partial to Israel. Whenever Israel's interests were at stake or there was some possibility of consolidating Israel's position, the Commission had found support for that position in the Assembly's resolutions. On the other hand, it had tended to belittle the Arab interests which had been guaranteed in the very same resolutions. It was attempting, for example, to re-establish communications and economic relations between Israel and its Arab neighbours. But that objective could not be secured as long as a million Arab refugees were denied their rights and the Israel Government continued to pursue an aggressive policy in defiance of United Nations resolutions.

The Arab refugees, the Arab representatives said, were animated by a genuine determination to return to their homes and would accept no alternative solution. Since Jewish immigration had virtually stopped and large numbers of Jews were leaving Israel, there could be no justification for barring Arab refugees from returning to their homes. In order further to relieve existing pressures, other countries of the international community could attract Israel immigrants and thus contribute indirectly to the repatriation of the refugees. That suggestion should not be construed as an incitement to Israel Jews to emigrate; it merely reflected the real situation. Israel had sought in vain to make a case for the impracticability of repatriating the Arab refugees; it had tried to divert attention from its obligations by raising such irrelevant considerations as responsibility for the refugees' plight, the capacity of the Arab States to absorb their kinsmen and the example set by Israel in receiving thousands of Jewish immigrants. The refugee question was purely humanitarian; it involved individual rights on which the question of responsibility had no bearing. The argument that the Arab States had the means to resettle the refugees with whom they had cultural ties was equally absurd, especially since Israel itself had admitted that Lebanon and Egypt, for example, had a greater population density than Israel. Further, the analogy drawn between the Arabs of Palestine who had been forced into exile and degradation and the Jews who had left the Arab States to settle in Israel was fallacious. The security of Israel had likewise been invoked in support of the argument that the repatriation and rehabilitation of the Arab refugees was impracticable. That reason was incompatible with Israel's appeal for peace and could only serve to perpetuate mistrust of Israel's motives. Against the argument that the Arabs of Palestine had a separate economy, a different language and culture and would therefore create a minority problem, it must be borne in mind that they had always lived in Palestine and the late President Weizmann had affirmed that there was room for both Jews and Arabs to live without fear in his country. Thus the contention that it would be impracticable to repatriate the refugees was totally unfounded and intended to becloud the fact that Israel was refusing to recognize the elementary principles of justice and was defying the Assembly's resolution of 11 December 1948.

As for the territorial question, the representatives of the Arab States argued that it had been provided that this question was to be settled by negotiations on the basis of the General Assembly's resolutions, and the Commission had been instructed to provide its services of mediation and conciliation to that end. Both parties to the dispute had signed on 12 May 1949, at Lausanne, a protocol which the Commission had very properly proposed as the basis for its work. This protocol had taken the partition map of 1947 as a basis for discussions between the parties and the Commission. No sooner, however, had Israel signed the protocol than it proceeded to obstruct the work of the Commission. It had insisted on combining all the issues of the problem and delaying the solution of any one of them until a final settlement had been reached on all.

Under the Armistice Agreement Israel controlled 5,000 square miles beyond the area allotted to it under the partition plan. If Israel wished to be reasonable it would allow the refugees to return to that area, thereby enabling half a million refugees to be repatriated. In view of the express refusal of Israel, it was difficult to see how direct negotiations could succeed when Israel refused to consider the cession of territory that had not been assigned to it by the Assembly resolution.

As regards compensation, the Commission had proposed that the Israel Government should make good its pledge to pay compensation for property belonging to non-repatriated Arab refugees. However, the sum to be paid was to be linked to Israel's financial capacity. The Arab States had made considerable reservations on that aspect of the proposal. The Arab representatives agreed that the right of the refugees to compensation had been guaranteed by the Assembly's 1948 resolution; it was an individual right which could not be restricted. Israel had recognized its obligation to honour that right; failure to do so was tantamount to confiscation of Arab property. The financial difficulties in which the Israel Government found itself as a result of its policy of mass immigration, despite United States financial aid, could not be invoked as a pretext for delaying full compensation or subordinating it to any conditions whatsoever.

With regard to the question of blocked accounts, it was recalled that, since the last General Assembly resolution (512(VI)), the Commission had dealt almost exclusively with the question of the release of blocked accounts of Palestine Arabs from Israel banks. Thus it was inverting the logical order for dealing with the refugee problem. The first and primary right of the refugees to repatriation continued to be disregarded, while the very complex question of compensation, which affected only those who did not wish to return to their homes, seemed to have priority. Compensation should become a primary question only after repatriation had been completed. Moreover, the sum released by the Israel Government represented a very small amount in relation to the total value of the blocked accounts. Israel should free all accounts as speedily as possible; any temporizing on that matter by the Commission would be an admission of its helplessness.

As for the internationalization of Jerusalem and its Holy Places, the Commission had been unable to implement the Assembly's decisions. Not only could it not secure the acceptance of the internationalization principle by Israel, but the latter still occupied part of Jerusalem, in defiance of the Assembly's resolutions, and the Prime Minister of Israel had even declared officially that Jerusalem was and would always remain the capital of Israel.

(b) VIEWS OF THE REPRESENTATIVE OF ISRAEL

The representative of Israel stated that the representatives of the Arab States appeared to be seeking not so much a constructive and just solution of the problem as a scapegoat for the difficulties which prevented a solution. They had been more concerned with the interpretation and binding force to be attributed to documents than with the current situation and the future of the Near East. Nevertheless, his Government thought the time was ripe for the consideration of a peaceful settlement based on neighbourly relations between Israel and its Arab neighbours.

The problem was to transform into stable treaties the armistice agreements Israel had concluded with Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and Syria. Israel was prepared to negotiate a final settlement for the establishment of peaceful relations with any of those States. It would neither impose nor accept any preconditions for such negotiations, in which each party should be free to make its own proposals and United Nations machinery or other good offices should be used by mutual consent.

As to the question of the peace settlement and related problems, he stated that it was the primary responsibility of the Government of Israel and the Governments of the Arab States to settle their differences by negotiation. Experience had shown that mediating and conciliating agencies could not substantially influence inter-State relations unless the parties entered into free negotiations. The Conciliation Commission itself in its report of 1950 had acknowledged the need for such negotiations.

In connexion with the question as to whether an agreement between Israel and the Arab States must necessarily conform with previous Assembly resolutions, he said that he wished to remove the impression that the Arab Governments had always accepted United Nations resolutions. Since the Mandatory Power had submitted the Palestine problem to the General Assembly, each of the Governments concerned had, on some occasions, failed to comply with resolutions of the Assembly. As a general rule, the Arab States had opposed the resolutions when the circumstances had been favourable to their implementation and had demanded compliance with them when it had been quite safe to assume that they could no longer be implemented. It was hardly arguable that recommendations should retain an unchanging validity in the face of radically changed situations. Nothing would be more prejudicial to the success of direct negotiations which might materialize than to link future prospects to unfulfilled proposals of the past. His Government, therefore, considered that any measures to limit the parties in their sovereign power of agreement by pre-conditions requiring conformity with previous programmes would be an error which would destroy the prospects for a peaceful Near East.

His Government believed that the relations between Israel and the Arab States had six major aspects, all of which should appear on an agenda for direct negotiations.

The first question related to security. The Armistice Agreements could only be replaced by a final peace settlement; they did not in themselves constitute a satisfactory basis for relations between Israel and the Arab States in the matter of security. Israel, having experienced a sudden invasion four years before and having to deal with subsequent infiltration, was of the opinion that the peace settlement should include more binding mutual guarantees against aggression than those contained in the Armistice Agreements. In view of the prevailing situation, the Governments of the Near East were maintaining higher military budgets than they would in normal circumstances, and thus there was a permanent danger of an armaments race. Moreover, the Arab States had expressed fear of a possible expansion of Israel; that fear was quite unfounded. However, if they were sincere, the Arab States should, logically, support a peace treaty embodying non-aggression guarantees. Also, a pacific settlement would make it possible to limit military budgets and to avoid an armaments race.

The second question was that of territorial adjustments. The previous frontiers laid down by the Armistice Agreements could be modified and adjusted within the framework of a negotiated peace settlement. In that connexion, one of the problems to be studied would be that of the demilitarized zones, where division of authority had always caused serious tensions at critical times. Similarly, both parties could take the necessary action to re-unite with their lands and fields certain villages now separated by frontiers laid down in the Armistice Agreements. Actually, in signing the Armistice Agreements, the parties had accepted the principle that frontier adjustments required consent; and the United Nations had always maintained that frontier adjustments, provided they could be effected by consent, were within the exclusive competence of the governments concerned.

The third question was that of the refugees. Israel, which had made more sacrifices than any

State in history on behalf of refugees coming to it from outside, regarded that problem as one of urgent humanitarian concern. In the circumstance, nothing would be more inspiring than for the two negotiating parties to make joint proposals to the Commission for international assistance in solving the problem. His Government, in spite of the current political tension and the great strain on its economy, had agreed to release certain accounts held by Arab refugees in Israel banks and had further agreed, at the request of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, to settle 19,000 refugees in Israel. It had also undertaken a special programme to unite families, thereby facilitating the passage of thousands of refugees across the lines, notwithstanding the state of tension. The Israel Government had always held that the settlement of the refugee question was an integral part of the establishment of normal relations between Israel and the Arab States. Nevertheless, it had agreed to the request of the Conciliation Commission to discuss the compensation question separately. It had also accepted the obligation to pay compensation for lands abandoned by Arab refugees, and it would co-operate with the United Nations organs concerned in working out a plan to that effect.

The fourth question related to the economic questions between the two parties. Since the States of the Near East were faced with similar or related economic problems, peaceful co-operation among them could enhance the welfare of the entire region; the economy of both the Arab States and of Israel would benefit considerably if the present blockade measures were replaced by normal economic relations. Co-operation between the States in the area in evolving new methods for the development of the area as a whole would assist the industrial growth needed by each country to supplement its agricultural production, would improve the exploitation of the area's natural resources and could even solve the common problem of the encroachment of the desert upon the cultivated area.

The fifth question concerned regional co-operation which had four aspects: communications, social and health questions, scientific and cultural questions and co-operation in technical assistance. The material and cultural predominance of the Near East in the past had resulted largely from active inter-communications between the countries of the region; the peace negotiations should consider ways and means of re-establishing road and railway communications, the interruption of which was harmful to the entire region. One of the chief obstacles to progress in the Near East was its low standard of public health and its lack of progress in social organization. The absence of regional co-operation in matters common to all the Near Eastern countries, such as the battle against malaria and the traffic in narcotics, was a threat to the general human welfare. In the field of science and culture, the interchange by governmental agreement of students and teachers would serve to remind both the Hebrew and the Arab peoples of the human elements in their own traditions, thus removing the unnatural estrangement that had separated them in recent times. Finally, all the countries of the Near East needed technical assistance to solve their water, health and organizational problems, which could be dealt with only through co-operation.

The sixth question related to diplomatic and juridical relations. The establishment of normal relations in all the fields outlined should, the representative of Israel stated, be given formal effect in diplomatic international instruments. A treaty of peace should replace the Armistice Agreements. The boycott and blockade should be succeeded by trade treaties and transit agreements. Navigation, air and visa agreements and all the other conventions which normally existed between sovereign States at peace with each other should replace the ostracism and silence which at the moment marked the relations between Israel and the Arab States. There was nothing Utopian, he said, in the prospects he had outlined which represented merely Israel's view of a possible agenda for direct peace negotiations between Israel and its Arab neighbours. Israel would prefer to meet separately with each of the Arab States as it had met with each of them to conclude Armistice Agreements. If the proposals he had outlined were adopted as a result of the United Nations calling for free and direct peace negotiations, the Organization's prestige would be greatly enhanced.

In reply, the Arab representatives, in particular the representative of Syria, said that the plan outlined by the representative of Israel merely evaded the real problem before the Committee, since it dealt with the development of the Middle East and not with the rights of the refugees. It was an endeavour to obscure the issues by referring to a large number of subjects which fell within the sphere of the sovereign rights of Member States. Such problems, he held, could not be considered by the United Nations. The plan was not far removed from colonialism and the Arab States were not prepared to exchange European colonialism, which they were still fighting, for Israel colonialism. They added that the plan constituted simply a new version of the plans which the pioneers of Zionism had presented successively to various Powers, each time recommending an alliance and pointing out the advantages to be derived by the Power concerned, both for its economy and for its influence and prestige throughout the world. They added that before a peace plan could be negotiated the parties concerned must be sincerely and honestly prepared to respect all the obligations laid down in the Charter and all the resolutions of the General Assembly. For their part, the Arab States accepted all the Assembly's resolutions concerning the Palestine question. Israel, on the other hand, demanded that direct negotiations should be opened and stated from the outset that it intended to ignore the General Assembly's resolutions.

(c) DRAFT RESOLUTIONS AND AMENDMENTS
SUBMITTED IN THE Ad Hoc POLITICAL COMMITTEE

In the course of the debate, three draft resolutions were submitted:

(1) a joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.23) originally submitted by Canada, Denmark, Ecuador, Netherlands, Norway and Uruguay which was later also sponsored by Cuba (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.1) and by Panama (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.2); (2) a joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.25) by Afghanistan, Indonesia, Iran and Pakistan; and (3) a Syrian draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.33).

Under the eight-Power draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.2), the Assembly, recalling its own resolutions and the resolutions of the Security Council, especially those calling upon the parties in Palestine to achieve an early agreement on a final settlement, and taking note of the twelfth report of the Palestine Conciliation Commission, would:

(1) call upon all parties to desist from any further acts of hostility; (2) reaffirm the principle that the Governments concerned had the primary responsibility for reaching a settlement; (3) urge these Governments to begin early direct negotiations for a settlement; and (4) request the Conciliation Commission to be available for that purpose, if so desired.

The following amendments to the eight-Power draft were submitted:

(a) An amendment by Chile (A/AC.61/L.26) which would change the first paragraph of the operative part to refer to "any act" of hostility rather than to "any further acts" and in the third paragraph add a provision that in the envisaged negotiations due consideration would be given to the fundamental principles contained in United Nations resolutions on Palestine and its problems.

(b) A joint amendment by Colombia, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Haiti and Honduras (A/AC.61/L.27) which would: (1) add a paragraph expressing appreciation of the Commission's work; (2) rephrase the third paragraph to add a reference to Article 33 of the Charter and the previous Assembly resolutions and to include a provision asking the Governments concerned to use in their negotiations the good offices of the Commission and the facilities of the United Nations; (3) replace the fourth paragraph by one which would urge the Commission to continue helping the parties in reaching a settlement and to initiate direct negotiations between them; and (4) add at the end two new paragraphs which would request the Commission to render periodic reports and the Secretary-General to provide facilities for carrying out the terms of the resolution.

(c) An amendment by Peru (A/AC.61/L.28) which would insert a clause to refer to the jurisdiction vested under the Charter in the United Nations and particularly in the Assembly and the Security Council under the previous resolutions on Palestine.

At the 36th meeting of the Committee on 8 December another revision of the eight-Power draft resolution was presented (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.3) which took into account the various amendments. The new text contained a provision whereby the Governments would enter into direct negotiations without prejudice to their respective rights and claims and would bear in mind the principal United Nations objectives in Palestine including the religious interests of third parties. The representatives of Chile and Peru therefore withdrew their amendments and the representative of Costa Rica, on behalf of the sponsors, withdrew the joint amendment. This draft underwent a further change (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.4) when, at the suggestion of the Mexican representative, words were added to the effect that the Governments concerned would bear in mind resolutions of the United Nations as well as the religious interests of third parties.

In explaining their draft resolution, the sponsors of the eight-Power draft, supported by the representatives of Chile, Colombia, France, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States, said that the draft resolution was intended to accomplish one of the essential purposes of the United Nations, namely, the pacific settlement of international disputes by means of direct negotiations.

The unsettled situation in the Near East, they said, was a factor making for instability in the world. It was necessary to establish normal relations between Israel and the neighbouring States and many attempts had already been made in that connexion, more particularly by the Conciliation Commission for Palestine. It was to be hoped that the Commission would continue its efforts, but they were convinced that an appeal should be made for direct negotiations between the parties.

Since the United Nations and its agencies could only recommend and not impose any solution, the primary responsibility for reaching a settlement rested on the parties themselves. They were aware of the difficulties of the problem, particularly those presented by the unsettled refugee question. However they doubted the wisdom of making direct negotiations conditional upon settlement of that question and suggested that that settlement had perhaps been rendered more difficult because the matter had been considered in isolation. They felt that it would be preferable to seek a comprehensive settlement by direct negotiations and if that attempt failed, at least a clear picture of the whole problem would have been obtained.

Moreover, the joint draft resolution recalled old resolutions adopted by the United Nations on the Palestine question. None of these resolutions had been rejected and the Arab delegations were perfectly free to propose them as a basis for negotiations, while every delegation would have the right to put forward new and different proposals in the light of events. These resolutions undoubtedly contained many useful proposals which could and should still be implemented; nevertheless, they inevitably took account of the situation at the time of their adoption and did not necessarily bind the Assembly forever. In the present case, the Assembly would certainly not wish some of its resolutions to stand in the way of an agreement between the parties. They added that it was encouraging to note that the Arab States had not rejected the idea of direct negotiations although they wished them to take place on the basis of past General Assembly resolutions. However, to make these resolutions a prerequisite for negotiation was not the best procedure to achieve good results.

The representatives of the Arab States rejected the eight-Power draft resolution as being partial, impractical and useless. Their central thesis was that the direct negotiations called for in the joint draft would be fruitless if they were not based upon the previous resolutions of the United Nations, and in particular resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948.

Under the joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.25) submitted by Afghanistan, Indonesia, Iran and Pakistan, the General Assembly would reaffirm its resolution 512(VI) of 26 January 1952, express appreciation of the efforts of the Conciliation Commission and note with regret that during the previous year the progress had not come up to expectations. It would further: request the Commission to continue efforts to fulfil its task under Assembly resolutions; decide that its headquarters should be located in Jerusalem; increase the Commission's membership to five, the two additional members to be nominated by the Assembly; and request the Commission to report to the eighth session of the Assembly.

The sponsors of the four-Power draft resolution, supported by the representatives of the Arab States as well as by those of Ethiopia and India, considered that the previous resolutions should be reaffirmed and not merely recalled, as in the eight-Power draft resolution, and that the United Nations objectives in Palestine should be specific and the basis for the recommended negotiations should be made clear. They also felt some concern at the statement by the Israel representative that the previous resolutions had been rendered obsolete by the march of events and could not serve as a basis for negotiations. These resolutions, they considered, should continue to be the basis for negotiations. If the parties subsequently agreed to modify some of the Assembly's decisions, there would be no grounds for objection; the essential point was to afford them a basis upon which negotiations could be started. The draft reaffirmed Assembly resolution 512 (VI), giving particular importance to the fourth and fifth operative paragraphs. The headquarters of the Commission should, they argued, be in Jerusalem, if only for the moral effect it would have on the peoples concerned; the Commission's presence there would show that it was prepared to take an active part in the negotiations between the parties to the dispute. As for the increase in the membership of the Commission, one of the reasons for such an increase was that, in its report to the Assembly's sixth session, the Conciliation Commission had stated that its members had received instructions from their Governments which they had felt obliged to carry out. United Nations commissions should be objective, impartial and truly international in character and an extension of the Commission's membership would probably increase confidence in its impartiality. Moreover, the Commission, which had begun to show signs of fatigue during its four years in office, might gain in vigour by the introduction of new blood.

The representative of Syria was of the opinion that the joint eight-Power draft resolution raised legal questions of the highest importance. Since direct negotiations would deal with the rights of the refugees, he wondered whether the United Nations could invite Israel and the Arab States to reach agreement with respect to the purely private rights of persons who were not even their nationals. Before coming to a decision on the eight-Power draft, the Committee should, logically, ask the highest international legal authority for an answer to the question. That course of action was essential so that the members of the Committee should no longer have any doubt in their minds as to the justice and equity of the decisions they would be required to adopt. Therefore he introduced a draft resolution (A/AC.61/L33), according to which the General Assembly would state that the problem of the Palestine Arab refugees involved questions of law and would call for legal examination of the various rights of refugees. It would request, in accordance with Article 96, paragraph 1, of the Charter, the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the following legal questions:

- (1) whether Palestine Arab refugees were entitled as of right to be repatriated to their former homes and to exercise their rights to their properties and interests;
- (2) whether Israel was entitled to deny refugees these rights;
- (3) whether these rights should be observed by themselves or required to be negotiated by States, the refugees not being nationals thereof; and
- (4) whether Member States were entitled in law to enter into any agreement in relation to these rights.

Both the representatives of France and of the USSR expressed their opposition to the principles contained in the Syrian draft resolution.

The representative of France recalled that his delegation had consistently taken the position that the International Court of Justice had not been created as a United Nations tribunal and had no competence to interpret the Charter or render advisory opinions to the Assembly, as would be seen from a study of Chapter II of its Statute. Practice had been different, but his Government's position had been in some measure vindicated by the fate of advisory opinions so far rendered. This course was to be deplored because it compromised the authority of the Court in purely political questions. The French delegation, therefore, opposed the Syrian draft resolution on principle. It further objected to the Syrian proposal in the interests of the Arab refugees themselves. The special circumstances of the Palestine question had rendered the General Assembly competent to deal with it. If, as Syria argued, the Assembly was not competent to recommend negotiations between the parties, its competence to settle the refugee question could also be called into question. Were the Syrian argument carried to its logical conclusion, it would in fact deprive the refugees of the international protection afforded by an Assembly resolution and leave them no other recourse than to the courts of Israel. In the interests of the refugees, France would vote against the Syrian proposal.

The representative of the USSR argued that the rights of the Arab refugees had been recognized by General Assembly decisions which could not be revised or annulled. There was therefore no need for an opinion from the International Court. Moreover, it would be incorrect to refer such a political matter to the Court. Accordingly, the USSR would vote against the Syrian draft resolution.

At the 39th meeting on 11 December 1952, the Committee voted on the three draft resolutions before it in the order of their submission, having rejected by a roll-call vote of 21 to 13, with 24 abstentions, a motion by the representative of Syria to give priority to his draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.33).

The revised eight-Power draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.4) was voted on first, with the following results:

The preamble and the first three paragraphs of the operative part were adopted by 34 votes to 11, with 9 abstentions; paragraph 4 of the operative part was adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 14, with 13 abstentions; paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 were adopted by 35 votes to 16, with 3 abstentions. The draft resolution as a whole was adopted by a roll-call vote of 32 to 13, with 13 abstentions.

The four-Power draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.25) was rejected by 27 votes to 14, with 13 abstentions, and the Syrian draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.33) was rejected by 26 votes to 13, with 19 abstentions. The text of the draft resolution adopted by the Committee read:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling that it is the primary duty of all Members of the United Nations, when involved in an international dispute, to seek the settlement of such a dispute by peaceful means, in accordance with Article 33 of the Charter,

"Recalling the existing resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council on Palestine,

"Recalling especially those resolutions which call upon the parties to achieve at an early date agreement on a final settlement of their outstanding differences,

"Taking note of the twelfth progress report (A/2216) of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in which it is suggested that general or partial agreement could be sought through direct negotiations, with United Nations assistance or mediation,

"1. Expresses its appreciation of the efforts made to date by the Conciliation Commission for Palestine in the discharge of its mandate;

"2. Calls upon the parties to honour fully their undertaking to refrain from any acts of hostility against each other;

"3. Reaffirms the principle that the Governments concerned have the primary responsibility for reaching a settlement of their outstanding differences, and with this in view;

"4. Urges the Governments concerned to enter at an early date, without prejudice to their respective rights and claims, into direct negotiations for the establishment of such a settlement, bearing in mind the resolutions as well as the principal objectives of the United Nations on the Palestine question, including the religious interests of third parties;

"5. Requests the Conciliation Commission for Palestine to continue its efforts to fulfil the tasks entrusted to it under General Assembly resolutions and to be available for assistance in the negotiations if so desired;

"6. Requests the Conciliation Commission for Palestine to render progress reports periodically to the Secretary-General for transmission to the Members of the United Nations; and

"7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to provide the necessary staff and facilities for carrying out the terms of the present resolution."

(2) Consideration by the General Assembly
in Plenary Session

The report of the Ad Hoc Political Committee (A/2310) was considered by the General Assembly at its 405th and 406th plenary meetings on 18 December. The representative of the Philippines submitted an amendment (A/L.134) to alter the fourth paragraph of the operative part of the draft resolution recommended by the Committee to read:

"Urges the Governments concerned to enter at an early date, without prejudice to their respective rights and claims, into direct negotiations for the establishment of such a settlement, on the basis of the resolutions as well as the principal objectives of the United Nations on the Palestine question, including the religious interests of third parties, and, in particular, the principle of the internationalization of Jerusalem."

The words "on the basis of" would replace the words "bearing in mind" and the reference to the principle of the internationalization of Jerusalem would be added. The representatives of Belgium, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, Pakistan and Peru, speaking in favour of the amendment, declared that they were doing so because it reaffirmed all United Nations resolutions relating to the Palestine question, especially to the internationalization of Jerusalem. The representatives of Australia, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the United States declared that they would vote against the amendment because it would limit the freedom of the proposed negotiations by dictating, in advance, the conditions for those negotiations. Moreover, it would make the question of the internationalization of Jerusalem a subject for negotiations between the parties, whereas that question was an international one. Furthermore, some representatives, while supporting the internationalization principle, doubted whether the two parties affected, namely, Israel and Jordan, would be ready to accept implementation of that principle.

The representatives of Iraq and Egypt reiterated the view they had previously expressed in the Ad Hoc Political Committee to the effect that the direct negotiations called for in the proposed resolution would be fruitless. They quoted excerpts from an interview of Mr. Ben Gurion, Prime Minister of Israel, who was alleged to have said that the Arab refugees should not be repatriated, that Jerusalem should not be internationalized and that no part of Israel territory could be ceded. In view of that declaration, they said, the Arabs were wondering what remained to be negotiated.

The representative of Israel remarked that the dispatch of the New York Times which was referred to had not accurately described the intentions of the Israel Prime Minister, but had merely reflected the correspondent's interpretation of the Prime Minister's views. He suggested that it would not be in keeping with the usual procedures of international relations to describe the viewpoints of governments from unofficial sources.

The representative of Syria agreed that only official governmental views should be taken into consideration. However, he recalled that Mr. Ben Gurion himself had, on 13 December 1949, officially declared in the Israel Parliament that the United Nations decision to internationalize Jerusalem was utterly incapable of implementation. Moreover, the Conciliation Commission had declared in its third progress report that it had not succeeded in achieving the acceptance by Israel of the principle of repatriation. Furthermore, Mr. Eban, the permanent representative of Israel to the United Nations, in a letter dated 28 October 1949 addressed to the Conciliation Commission, had declared that there could be no cession of the present Israel territory. If the New York Times dispatch and these quotations were either false or had misinterpreted the intentions of the Government of Israel, the Syrian representative maintained, the representative of Israel should so inform the Assembly.

At its 406th plenary meeting on 18 December, the General Assembly voted on the Philippine amendment. It first rejected, by a roll-call vote of 26 in favour to 24 against, with 10 abstentions,⁶⁰ the proposal to replace the words "bearing in mind" by the words "on the basis of" in the fourth operative paragraph. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, China, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, Peru, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against: Australia, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Chile, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Israel, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Poland, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, Union of South Africa, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Abstaining: Burma, Costa Rica, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Paraguay, Venezuela.

The Assembly then rejected, by a roll-call vote of 28 in favour to 20 against, with 12 abstentions,⁶¹ the remainder of the amendment, referring to the principle of the internationalization of Jerusalem. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Venezuela, Yemen.

Against: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Iceland, Israel, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Poland, Sweden, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, Union of South Africa, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Abstaining: Australia, Burma, Canada, China, France, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Nicaragua.

The draft resolution proposed by the Ad Hoc Political Committee was rejected by a roll-call vote of 24 in favour to 21 against, with 15 abstentions,⁶² as follows:

In favour: Australia, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Israel, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Sweden, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Against: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yemen.

Abstaining: Argentina, Belgium, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Mexico, Peru, Philippines, Turkey, Venezuela.

In explaining his vote, the USSR representative recalled that in the course of the debates in the Ad Hoc Political Committee several resolutions had been submitted. However, "as a result of corridor politics", the draft of the resolution recommended to the Assembly had been changed several times. His delegation had abstained on that resolution since it referred to the Conciliation Commission to the creation and activities of which the Soviet Union had always objected. He also recalled that his delegation had, on a number of occasions, pointed out that the Commission, which was created at the initiative of and headed by the United States, did not serve to reconcile the interests and settle disputes between the parties in Palestine. In fact, he said, the whole activity of the Commission testified to the fact that not only did it not help to settle points of dispute, but it was rendering the situation in the Middle East more acute and was not acting in the interests of the people of that area. The presence in the resolution of items relating to the work of the Commission had made the whole resolution unacceptable to his delegation.

⁶⁰ The proposals were not adopted as they did not receive the required two-thirds majority.

⁶¹ The proposals were not adopted as they did not receive the required two-thirds majority.

⁶² The proposals were not adopted as they did not receive the required two-thirds majority.

No resolution on the question was adopted at the seventh session of the General Assembly, and the resolution adopted at its sixth session (512(VI)) therefore remained in force.

4. Complaint of Israel against Arab States

In a letter (A/2185) dated 14 September 1952 to the Secretary-General, the permanent representative of Israel stated that, in the event of an item concerning the Palestine conciliation effort being included in the agenda of the Assembly's seventh session, his Government would request that, with a view to a balanced consideration of this question by the Assembly, the following item should be included: "Violation by Arab States of their obligations under the Charter, United Nations resolutions and specific provisions of the General Armistice Agreements concluded with Israel, requiring them to desist from policies and practices of hostility and to seek agreement by negotiation for the establishment of peaceful relations with Israel".

Subsequently, by a letter (A/2185/Add.1) dated 9 October 1952, the permanent representative of Israel submitted an explanatory memorandum recalling that hostilities between the Arab States and Israel, brought about by the armed intervention of the Arab States in defiance of the General Assembly resolution 181(II) of 29 November 1947, were terminated early in 1949 by the series of Armistice Agreements between Israel, on the one hand, and Egypt, Lebanon, Jordan and Syria, on the other. Despite the lapse of nearly four years, there had been little or no further progress towards the conclusion of a final peace settlement between the parties.

The Assembly, in resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948, the memorandum said, had called upon the Arab States to seek agreement by negotiation with a view to the final settlement of all questions outstanding between the Arab States and Israel. Similar calls to the parties to settle their differences by negotiations had repeatedly been made by both the General Assembly itself and by the Security Council, most recently by Assembly resolution 512(VI) of 26 January 1952. Moreover, the Armistice Agreements of which the above-mentioned States were signatories, were intended, according to their very text, to facilitate the transition to permanent peace.

The Government of Israel, the memorandum continued, had at all times indicated its readiness to meet with representatives of the Arab countries with a view to achieving such a settlement. The Arab States on the contrary, it charged, had continued to maintain tension and to endanger peace and security throughout the region: by constantly rejecting proposals for direct discussion and negotiation; by reiterated threats of force and by inflaming public sentiment against Israel; by declared ambitions of territorial expansion against Israel, including acts of armed infiltration across the borders; by acts of illicit blockade condemned by the Security Council; and by refusal to implement vital provisions of the Armistice Agreements, including provisions for ensuring free access to and operation of institutions of science, culture and religion. All efforts of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine throughout the four years of its existence to bring the parties together had, therefore, remained fruitless.

The refusal of the Arab States to enter into negotiations with Israel also, it was maintained, constituted a violation of the United Nations Charter, which, in Article 2, paragraph 3, enjoined all Members to settle their international disputes by peaceful means and, in Article 33, enjoined the parties to any dispute to seek a solution by negotiation or other peaceful means of their own choice.

Israel therefore requested that the General Assembly give further consideration to the situation with a view to calling upon the Arab States to seek a peaceful settlement of their dispute with Israel by direct negotiations.

The General Assembly, at its 380th plenary meeting on 16 October, decided to include the question in its agenda and at its 382nd plenary meeting on 17 October, decided to refer it to the Ad Hoc Political Committee.

By a letter (A/AC.61/L.45) dated 19 December 1952, addressed to the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee, the representative of Israel stated that since the problem had been fully discussed during consideration of the item "The Conciliation Commission for Palestine and its work in the light of the resolutions of the United Nations" (see above), his delegation did not insist that the new item proposed by his delegation should be considered by the Ad Hoc Political Committee.

On the proposal of the Chairman, the Ad Hoc Political Committee at its 50th meeting on 19 December, by 47 votes to none, with 10 abstentions, adopted a draft resolution taking note of the communication from Israel.

The draft resolution proposed in the Committee's report (A/2340) was adopted by the General Assembly at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December by 37 votes to 1, with 11 abstentions, as resolution 619(VII). It read:

"The General Assembly

"Takes note of the communication of 19 December 1952 from the representative of Israel to the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee, stating that the debate in that Committee on item 67 of the agenda of the General Assembly had dealt fully with most aspects of item 68 and that the Israel delegation did not insist on the consideration of the latter item."

5. Assistance to Palestine Refugees

In accordance with General Assembly resolution 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949, establishing the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWAPRNE), the Director of UNRWAPRNE submitted an annual report (A/2171) covering the period 1 July 1951 to 30 June 1952 and a special report (A/2171/Add.1) containing recommendations of the Director and the Agency's Advisory Commission for the future work of assistance to the Palestine refugees.

a. REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF UNRWAPRNE

The report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWAPRNE) (A/2171) covering the period 1 July 1951 to 30 June 1952 stated that as of June 1952 there were more than 880,000 refugees on the Agency's ration rolls. They were distributed as follows:

Lebanon	104,000
Syria	84,000
Jordan	470,000
Gaza	204,000
Israel	19,000

Late in June 1952, agreement was reached with Israel that it would assume responsibility for the care of 19,000 refugees on its soil. Supplies already delivered, as well as technical assistance from the Agency's staff were, however, to be available over a transition period of two months.

Only one third of the registered refugee population lived in Agency-organized camps, the report said. The other two-thirds had managed to find lodging on their own. However, with their diminishing resources, a large number had found it impossible to continue independently and had to be admitted to camps. The requests of many more had been turned down.

Due to the world shortage of tents and the experience of the 1951-52 winter when very large numbers of tents were destroyed by storms, new shelter and hut construction programmes had been launched by the Agency in Jordan, Syria and parts of the Gaza strip where there was a more or less permanent refugee population.

A satisfactory nutritional level was maintained during the period—a fact attested by experts of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) and the World Health Organization (WHO) after a survey conducted in April 1952. The experts however emphasized the fact that the satisfactory nutritional level had been maintained largely on account of the supply of milk to 450,000 refugee infants, children and mothers by the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF). (Milk was not supplied by the Agency.) Standards of health care remained high and no outbreaks of disease occurred during the year, it was reported.

The report said that with relief funds it had been barely possible to maintain minimum standards of food, shelter and health and that clothing of the refugees had been dependent on voluntary contributions organized in a number of countries.

A welfare programme was also provided including social case-work for the individual refugee, recreational facilities, Boy and Girl Scouts and other youth activities and sewing and embroidery centres for girls. The Agency also developed, with the assistance of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), an education and school system at the primary level.

The report emphasized the need to terminate relief operations by providing regular work for the refugees in order to prevent the development of "a professional refugee mentality". It further emphasized the need for dispersal of refugees in areas with an economic potential. The report then reviewed the Agency's work⁶³ from its inception to the adoption by the Assembly at its sixth session of resolution 513 (VI)⁶⁴ by which it approved a $250 million programme and called for contributions of that amount over a period of approximately three years. This provided for $50 million for relief and $200 million for the new programme of improvement of living conditions of refugees.

Explaining the new programme, the report said that its essence was the improvement of living conditions of refugees and the elimination of camp life and ration rolls, an aim to be achieved without prejudicing the interests of refugees as regards repatriation and/or compensation. This objective, the report said, was to be accomplished through: helping refugees to find employment; training for occupations where there was shortage of trained workers; making loans and grants to refugees to establish small enterprises; building houses in or near urban areas where employment was available; establishing villages in areas where cultivable land was available; developing agricultural lands through the drilling of wells, irrigation works, and access roads; and financing economic development generally and providing technical assistance where there were assurances of proportionate benefit to refugees.

Giving the status of the programme in various areas, the report said that Jordan, which had within its borders almost half the refugees, had offered citizenship to them and opportunities for self-support. The Jordan Government was completing a 200-unit housing project for refugees at Ghor Nimrim. The Agency's activities in Jordan comprised: (1) the establishment of a Development Bank for a small loan programme for refugees; (2) studies for an agricultural project at Sheraa; (3) the completion of a 50-unit housing programme in Amman; (4) the establishment of a small co-operative on government land—the first crops under this co-operative were good and the project was being expanded; (5) the establishment of a 36-unit Merj Naja Agricultural Community; (6) the merging of small training projects into a $1 million vocational programme; and (7) the drawing up of an agreement for an $11 million programme which had been approved by the Government.

As regards Syria, the report stated that there were good prospects of helping refugees in that country and that a small loan programme was at present in operation. A large vocational programme was being planned. Iraq and Libya were, in the opinion of the Agency, suitable as placement centres. Iraq already had 5,000 refugees under government refugee care while the new Government of Libya had suggested the admission of 1,200 refugee families.

In Lebanon, the report said, the Government did not feel that there were opportunities for refugees and in Gaza water and soil survey did not yield good results. However, plans were being made in Gaza for large-scale vocational training projects.

The Agency expressed the hope that in the coming year it would demonstrate convincingly the economic potential of a capital investment of $200 million in improving refugee living conditions. It also envisaged economic benefits to the countries where the refugees were settled.

The report stated that the Agency's total income for the fiscal year amounted to some $43.3 million, including cash contributions of $41.8 million, contributions in kind of $1.1 million, and miscellaneous receipts of $400,000. The greater part of the cash contributions were against current pledges amounting to some $66 million. Contributions by countries were: United States $30,000,000, United Kingdom $8,000,000, France $2,000,000, others $1,030,921. Thus, the report stated, as against $77 million budgeted by UNRWAPRNE and authorized by the General Assembly resolution, some $66 million were pledged by governments and $41 million were actually received. The total expenditure was stated by the report to have been $29.19 million out of which $25.90 million were spent on relief and $3.28 million on the new programme. The Agency expected that ample funds would be available for the new fiscal year. On 1 July the Agency had approximately $11 million of unallotted and unreserved cash, and $25.2 million were expected on pledges for the fiscal year 1951-52. In addition, a total of $80 million was anticipated during the fiscal year 1952-53 as follows: United States $60 million; United Kingdom $15 million; France $3 million; other contributors $2 million.

Though the available resources for the new fiscal year were nearly $116 million, the report stated that only a small part of the sum would be available for the relief programme, since two of the contributing governments had stipulated that only a limited portion of their funds might be used for that purpose. However, a large part of the funds would be available for financing projects under the new programme.

⁶³ See Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 323-28 and Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 309-16.

⁶⁴ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 315-16.

Under the heading "Operational Reports", the Agency dealt with its organization and administration; procedures and methods of supply and procurement; the organization, personnel and budget of its health and medical programme; the organization of refugee welfare including social welfare, placement and statistics of refugees; the organization of its education division including pre-vocational and technical training, and fundamental and adult education; co-ordination with specialized agencies and other bodies; and the legal aspects of the Agency's work.

A special report (A/2171/Add.1) of the Director and the Advisory Commission of the Agency, dated 17 October, stated that the Director and the Advisory Commission together had reviewed the programme operations. They now submitted their conclusions and recommendations which were as follows:

(1) During the intervening months, the Agency had made efforts to negotiate programme agreements with the governments in the area and to start projects which would take refugees off relief without prejudice to their interests in repatriation or compensation.

(2) Although the programme had started and agreements had been reached, a revision of schedules was necessary.

(3) Relief costs for the current year would approximate $23 million instead of the estimated $18 million. The Agency was prepared financially to commit and to expend during the current fiscal year $100 million on works projects. It was hoped that project agreements would be executed for the balance of the programme by 30 June 1954.

(4) Acceleration of the programme was essential. Relief funds were running out and the flow of funds for projects could not be sustained unless available funds were utilized.

(5) The Director and the Advisory Commission would urge governments concerned to co-operate with the Agency in preparing specific projects and helping in their execution.

The Director and the Advisory Commission therefore recommended that the Assembly:

(1) authorize the Agency to spend $23 million for relief and to commit and expend $100 million for works projects in the fiscal year 1952-53; (2) authorize the Director after consultation with the Advisory Commission, to formulate and revise a fiscal plan for the fiscal year 1953-54 within limits of the over-all programme under Assembly resolution 513(VI); (3) direct that revisions and transfers with respect to fiscal plans for 1952-53 and 1953-54 be reported to the Assembly at its eighth regular session; and (4) request that negotiations for contributions necessary to finance the programme be continued by the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds.

b. CONSIDERATION BY THE Ad Hoc POLITICAL COMMITTEE

The General Assembly decided to include the two reports in its agenda and referred them to the Ad Hoc Political Committee which discussed them at its 3rd to 7th meetings between 23 and 30 October 1952.

In a statement supplementing the reports, the Director of the Agency said that UNRWAP-RNE's function was to help improve the living conditions of the Palestine refugees and to enable them to become self-supporting without prejudice to their right to repatriation or to compensation if they decided not to return to their homes.

The success of the programme, he declared, would depend upon the co-operation of the governments of the host countries, the generosity of contributing governments, a spirit of understanding on the part of refugees and administrative effectiveness on the part of the Agency. It was important, he said, that the programme had been endorsed by the Arab League. With that solid foundation, the Agency had drawn up works projects which had been submitted to governments of host countries and had received their approval. The current financial year was a decisive one for the Agency as well as for the refugees, the interested governments and the contributing governments. Relief expenses, he said, would amount to $23 million, but that sum would only cover the most urgent needs and would suffice only if food prices remained stationary, if relief was restricted to refugees really in need and if the operation of the new programme progressed according to plan. He noted also that the estimated relief expenses for the current financial year would exhaust allocations for relief. Any increase in expenditure would have to be met out of funds allocated for the projects and would jeopardize their execution. He then recapitulated the progress achieved by the Agency in its work (see above).

He concluded by stating that during the current financial year the Agency would have $100 million to devote to the work of improving the condition of the refugees—a heartening fact which held out fresh hope.

Discussion in the Committee centred in a draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.1) submitted jointly by France, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States, under which the General Assembly, recalling its previous resolutions and recognizing that immediate realization of the goals for the reduction of relief expenditure envisaged in the three-year $250 million programme approved in resolution 513 (VI) had not proved possible, would:

authorize the Agency to increase the budget for relief to $23 million for the fiscal year ending June 1953, and to make such further adjustments as it might deem necessary to maintain adequate standards. It would, further, authorize the Agency to adopt an $18 million relief budget for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1954, and to allocate any funds remaining for reintegration according to time schedules deemed appropriate. The draft resolution would request that negotiations regarding contributions for the programme should be carried out with Member and non-member States by the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds.

The following amendments to the draft resolution were submitted:

(1) An amendment by El Salvador (A/AC.61/L.2) which would add at the end of the operative part a fourth paragraph reiterating gratitude to the voluntary agencies of various countries, and specially of the United States, for their co-operation and requesting them to continue their effective, humanitarian assistance.

(2) An amendment by the Philippines (A/AC.61/L.3) which would add, after the Salvadorian amendment, a paragraph expressing appreciation of the collaboration of the specialized agencies and the hope that such collaboration would continue.

The Committee decided, at the suggestion of the United States and with the agreement of El Salvador and the Philippines, to include in the record a statement by the Chairman on behalf of the Committee expressing its appreciation for the close collaboration of the specialized agencies and the hope that it would continue in increasing measure. The Committee also reiterated its gratitude to the numerous voluntary agencies, mostly religious agencies of various countries, which on their own initiative had co-operated with UNRWAPRNE. It urgently requested them to continue their effective, humanitarian assistance which the civilized world needed, profoundly appreciated and whole-heartedly commended. Thereupon the representatives of El Salvador and the Philippines withdrew their amendments.

Opening the debate, the representative of the United States paid tribute to the work of the Agency stating that in the past year it had housed, fed and clothed more than 800,000 refugees scattered over more than 100,000 square miles. It had made progress with large-scale, long-range projects which would mean work and wages for thousands now on relief. He agreed with the Director's report that widespread projects to enable the refugees to live by their own efforts should be sought. The United States, he said, had contributed $110 million to the $250 million programme so far and the Executive Branch was ready to ask Congress for more funds, on condition that other nations should meet a fair share of the cost.

He said that the Agency's three-year programme of diminishing relief and expanding development had thus far not been achieved and the relief budget for the current year would have to be increased beyond the $18 million set at the Assembly's sixth session and therefore adjustments within the $250 million programme would be necessary for the coming fiscal year. The joint draft resolution, he said, provided for the $23 million budget proposed by the Agency but also allowed for flexibility permitting the Agency either to exceed the figure or to reduce expenditure if unexpected economies could be effected. By contrast it proposed a definite figure for the relief budget for the fiscal year 1954. It did not provide for the revision of that figure by the Agency since the Assembly could review it at its eighth session. The lesser figure for 1954 however, he emphasized, did not mean that less would be done for the refugees that year. On the other hand, more would be done in other helpful ways.

The representative of the United States expressed his Government's hope that before the next Assembly the capital funds available would have been utilized on programmes of economic development on a co-operative basis. As more and more work was found for refugees on such programmes, wages would replace relief and they would move forward as self-supporting members of the community.

Reiterating the need for increasing the relief budget, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that the programme had suffered a set-back for unavoidable reasons but that there was no need for disappointment. His Government's belief in the programme, he said, was indicated by its willingness to contribute $15 million during the current year towards its realization.

The representative of Turkey stated that his country's concern for the refugees had been demonstrated by the contributions it had made either directly to UNRWAPRNE or through the Turkish Red Crescent. But because of its preoccupation with its own refugee problem—the resettlement of refugees coming from Bulgaria—it did not have sufficient financial resources to make a formal commitment regarding its contribution for the current fiscal year. Consequently its sponsorship of the joint draft resolution should not be construed as a financial commitment.

The representative of France stated that in order to advance its work the Agency must settle its current budgetary problem. The draft resolution, he said, offered a practical solution. The $23 million figure for relief for 1952-53 would be supplemented by the $2 million held in reserve from the previous year's budget. This would, he said, bring the relief budget up to $25 million, a sum comparable to that actually spent for the previous year's operations.

The representative of Canada stated that, while the rehabilitation of refugees could not be accomplished without the active co-operation of all Members, those in a position to render the best assistance were the countries closest, both geographically and in other respects, to the refugees themselves. The Canadian Government had contributed over $3 million to the relief of refugees but it was neither sound nor equitable for a few great Powers and a small number of other States to assume almost the entire financial responsibility for the United Nations undertaking. The generous impulses of some peoples, he said, might lose their warmth unless they were convinced that Member States as a whole were doing their share and that opportunities for rehabilitation and not mere relief were being offered to the victims of war.

The representatives of Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen were united in the view that the report of the Director had painted an unduly rosy picture of the condition of refugees. They held that the refugees were inadequately housed, clothed and fed and that their health conditions were far from satisfactory. In this connexion, the representative of Yemen charged that ten per cent of them were suffering from tuberculosis. The representative of Lebanon said that there was an acute shortage of trained doctors, hospital beds and homes for orphaned children. He also referred to the lack of educational facilities for refugee children, of whom more than three quarters were receiving no schooling at all. The Lebanese Government was providing education to 12,000 refugee children even at the risk of depriving Lebanese children of the schooling they would normally receive. All these representatives expressed the view that the only effective way of dealing with the refugee situation was to repatriate them to their homes and to pay compensation to those not wishing to return, as laid down in previous Assembly resolutions.

Discussing specific problems, the representative of Egypt stated that the flexibility in handling funds which had been provided for in the joint draft resolution might make it possible to exceed the ceiling and provide refugees with a basic subsistence level. With this in view he expressed the hope that UNRWAPRNE's Director might be able to cut administrative costs to the minimum.

The representatives of Saudi Arabia and Lebanon referred to the per capita allowance of the refugees which, it was stated, was $2.62 per month. In this connexion the representative of Lebanon stated that immigrants into Israel who were now being settled in the former homes of the refugees were receiving three times the assistance given to Arab refugees.

The representative of Iraq stated that it was the duty of the Assembly to compel Israel to yield for settlement by refugees territory it had occupied beyond that authorized by the General Assembly's partition plan and to implement provisions of Assembly resolutions on repatriation and compensation. He said that Israel could not legitimately claim compensation from Germany until it had complied with the obligation to pay compensation to Arab refugees.

The Secretary-General of the Arab Refugee Committee, invited by the Chairman at the suggestion of the representative of Iraq to make a statement, said that for three years, 1948, 1949 and 1950, the Committee had discussed the question of relief for refugees pending their repatriation. In 1951, however, it had added the question of resettling the refugees in the Arab countries, for which purpose it had allocated $200 million. Despite the phrase "without prejudice to their right of repatriation" this meant nothing less than their permanent exile.

He said that the rents and proceeds from the abandoned properties of the refugees were estimated at £20 million, or about $60 million a year, an amount which, if made available to the refugees by Israel, would release UNRWAPRNE from most of its responsibilities and the United States Congress from further payments.

The refugees, he said, complained of UNRWAPRNE's large international staff receiving high salaries although most of them were non-technicians and could be replaced by nationals at much lower salaries; the employment of foreign typists, secretaries, clerks, nurses and others while the unemployed nationals were starving was incomprehensible.

Turning to the rations given to the refugees, the Secretary-General of the Refugee Committee stated that they were receiving only 1,600 calories per day instead of the needed minimum of 2,200. Moreover, since the ration did not include meat or fresh vegetables, the refugee had to sell part of his flour ration to secure these, thus further reducing the calorific value of his diet to a dangerous level.

Only one third of the refugees, he said, lived in tents, the remainder living in miserable houses, mosques, caves and stables. Many of the camps were infested with insects and in most of them there were no public latrines or baths. Many of the refugees were in rags and the clothing supplied by UNRWAPRNE was what it got from philanthropic institutions. A family of eight was supplied with one blanket and a family of nine and over with two blankets. Health services were superficial, with only 75 doctors to serve 850,000 refugees. Only one half to two thirds of the children received even the most primitive education.

The Secretary-General of the Arab Refugee Committee also observed that the refugees were implacably against any form of resettlement except in Palestine. The return of every person to his fatherland, home and property, a principle decreed and guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, was, he said, fundamental. For the refugees, this had also been reaffirmed by the United Nations resolutions.

The representatives of Egypt, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Yemen proposed orally that the four-Power draft resolution be modified to make $27 million rather than $23 million available for relief.

The representative of Israel, replying to some of the statements by Arab representatives, protested against the remarks of the representative of Iraq who, he said, had made a totally false and evil comparison between the alleged expulsion of the Arab refugees and the victimization of Jews by Hitler. Comments on treaty relations between Israel and the Federal Republic of Germany were also out of order, he declared. He said that the plight of Arab refugees was a direct consequence of the armed assault of Arab States on the mandated area of Palestine with the intent to frustrate the United Nations recommendation for the establishment of Israel. Therefore, neither the United Nations nor Israel could legitimately be made to bear the responsibility for the refugees; it was an essential function of the United Nations to assign this responsibility to those who had taken the initiative in using force.

Since the Arab States were responsible for the exodus of the refugees from Palestine, he stated, they should share with Israel in the efforts to help them through the three-year relief and reintegration programmes unanimously endorsed by the Assembly and concurred in by the Arab States as well as by Israel, precisely because the humanitarian problem had been isolated from its political context. He observed that, despite heavy strain on its economy aggravated by economic boycott and blockade by Arab Governments, Israel was aiding the refugees. It had acceded to the Palestine Conciliation Commission's request for the progressive release of the refugee's blocked bank deposits. It had further responded to UNRWAPRNE's request by assuming full responsibility for the welfare and complete integration into Israel of 19,000 refugees, making possible a saving for the Agency of $600,000 annually. Israel, he said, was the only country to comply with the Assembly's request to help to reduce the relief budget, despite the incredible drain on its economy caused by the absorption of some 750,000 immigrants, of whom 350,000 came from Arab countries.

The Arab policy, he continued, was to thwart the natural process of refugee integration. Given the normal affinities of the refugees for the peoples of the same language, culture and national sentiments among whom they were living, their social and economic absorption should not be difficult. Israel believed that the only just, merciful and practical solution of the refugee problem lay in resettlement in the Arab countries. The Conciliation Commission for Palestine had urged regional integration and had stated candidly that the assumption under which the Assembly had adopted its resolution of 11 December 1948 was no longer valid in the light of the real situation in the Middle East. Other countries also held this view, which, the representative of Israel considered, served to emphasize that repatriation would result in cultural conflict, economic adversity and a threat to the security of Israel.

Statements in support of the draft resolution were made by a number of representatives, including those of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, China, Costa Rica, Cuba, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, the Netherlands and New Zealand.

The representative of Australia stated that the four-Power draft resolution might lead to a final settlement of the refugee problem and open the way to fruitful discussion of other differences between Arab States and Israel. He referred to an apparent reluctance to press on with resettlement, as well as to an attitude likely to inflate relief provisions at the expense of a more permanent solution. Should that come about, he said, it might well throw the whole programme out of balance and make it much more difficult for his country to continue to make contributions of any consequence, not because of any lack of sympathy with the plight of the refugees, but because the primary purpose would not be achieved and there would seem to be no end to it all. The representative of Australia expressed interest in a statement by the Minister of Construction and Development of Jordan who had said, reportedly, that the economic potential of Jordan should be exploited while providing work for refugees who would then become a source of power, rather than of weakness.

The representative of Belgium suggested that UNRWAPRNE should purchase weaving equipment so that refugees could be gainfully employed and the clothing shortage met on the spot. He cautioned, however, that UNRWAPRNE should beware of glutting the labour market of the host countries and should move groups of refugees to areas where they could be more easily absorbed.

Some representatives, including those of Afghanistan, Argentina, Ethiopia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Haiti, Honduras, Liberia, Mexico, Peru and Uruguay, indicated that, while they would vote in favour of the draft resolution, their vote should not be construed to mean the willingness of their Governments to contribute to the programme.

The four-Power draft resolution was voted on at the 7th meeting of the Ad Hoc Political Committee and was adopted by 50 votes to none, with 7 abstentions.

The representative of Iraq stated that he had abstained from voting on the joint draft resolution because a document had just been brought to his notice explaining that the discriminatory policy practised against the refugees was that of a certain Power.

c. RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

At its 391st plenary meeting on 6 November the General Assembly adopted without discussion the draft resolution submitted by the Ad Hoc Political Committee (A/2246) by 48 votes to none, with 6 abstentions.

In explanation of his vote, the representative of Iraq stated that he had abstained because the relief provided was inadequate to meet the sub-human conditions under which many of the refugees were living, and because the resolution would not correct those conditions. Further, his delegation felt that one of the Powers most instrumental in "causing this tragedy" viewed the refugees in a discriminatory way. It did not want them treated as human beings or as refugees of other races were treated, but recognized in their case a sub-human standard. The representative of Syria stated that repatriation was the only way to save the refugees from their moral and physical stagnation and their unprecedented misery.

The representative of Israel said that Israel had voted in favour of the resolution and would do its best to contribute to the alleviation of suffering in the area. He, however, reiterated his earlier views regarding Arab responsibility for the plight of the refugees and said that their absorption into Arab society was the best remedy for the situation. Israel had absorbed thousands of refugees from abroad and if the Arab countries had the same attitude towards their own people the current situation would never have arisen.

The resolution 614(VII) adopted by the General Assembly read:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolutions 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949, 393 (V) of 2 December 1950 and 513 (VI) of 26 January 1952,

"Having examined the report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the special joint report of the Director and the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency,

"Noting that negotiations have taken place between the Agency and governments of Near Eastern countries under the programme approved in resolution 513 (VI),

"Having in mind the goals for the reduction of relief expenditure envisaged in the three-year $US 250 million relief and reintegration programme, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 513 (VI) without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 11 of resolution 194 (III) or to the provisions of paragraph 4 of resolution 393 (V) relative to reintegration either by repatriation or resettlement,

"Recognizing that immediate realization of these goals has not proved possible and that increased relief expenditures are therefore required, with a resultant reduction in the reintegration funds,

"1. Authorizes the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to increase the budget for relief to $23 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1953 and to make such further adjustments as it may deem necessary to maintain adequate standards; and to adopt a budget for relief of $18 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1954 which shall be subject to review at the eighth session of the General Assembly;

"2. Authorizes the United Nations Relief and Works Agency to allocate funds remaining for reintegration according to time schedules deemed appropriate up to 30 June 1954;

"3. Requests that negotiations regarding contributions for the programme be carried out with Member and non-member States by the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds."

D. THE QUESTION OF ERITREA⁶⁵

On 2 December 1950 the General Assembly adopted resolution 390 A (V), recommending that the former Italian colony of Eritrea should be an autonomous unit, federated with Ethiopia under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown. In 1952 the General Assembly's resolution was finally implemented.

1. Report of the United Nations Commissioner in Eritrea

The United Nations Commissioner submitted, to the seventh session of the Assembly, his final report (A/2188) dated 17 October 1952, covering the whole of his mission. This report supplemented the progress report submitted to the General Assembly at its sixth session (A/1959 and Add.1).⁶⁶

Describing the general developments subsequent to the drafting of the progress report, the United Nations Commissioner stated that in November and December 1951 he held discussions in Geneva with a panel of legal consultants formed at his request to formulate opinions on certain general principles and legal questions which had arisen in the course of his work. These questions concerned the various problems of international and constitutional law raised by the Assembly resolution, such as the legal obligations of Members of the United Nations arising from the resolution, the delimitation of the duties of the Commissioner, the application of the resolution after the entry into force of the Federal Act and the Eritrean Constitution, the legal interpretation of the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown, the provisions of the Federal Act concerning human rights, and the question whether the Constitution could include provisions safeguarding institutions, traditions, religions and languages of the inhabitants of Eritrea.

In January and February 1952, the Commissioner met with a second panel of legal consultants with whose collaboration he prepared a provisional draft Constitution. This draft, the report stated, became the main subject of consultations held in March and April with the Administering Authorities and the Ethiopian Court. These consultations, the report stated, resulted in the drafting of a text, dated 22 April 1952, which was acceptable to the parties concerned.

Meanwhile, the Administering Authority, in consultation with the Commissioner, made arrangements for and convoked a Representative Assembly of Eritreans chosen by the people. The elections were carried out in two stages, with delegates first being elected to electoral colleges, according to customary methods, and then the members of the Assembly being selected by those colleges by secret ballot. In the towns of Asmara and Massawa only, direct elections were held in a single stage, by secret ballot. The elections to the Representative Assembly, the first ever held in Eritrea, took place on 25 and 26 March 1952. The results were as follows:

Unionist and Liberal Unionist parties	32
Democratic and Independent Front (Moslem League and other parties of the Front)	18
Moslem League of the Western Province	14
National Party	1
Independent Moslem League	1
Total	66

In addition, a representative from the Democratic Front and a member of the Moslem League of the Western Province were elected by second ballot (indirect election) on 12 May 1952, thus amending the foregoing figures to 19 for the Democratic Front and 15 for the Moslem League of the Western Province. Christian and Moslem representatives were equal in number.

On 28 April the Representative Assembly convened for the first time. Opening statements were delivered by the Chief Administrator, the United Nations Commissioner and the Representative of the Emperor of Ethiopia.

On 3 May the Commissioner presented the draft Constitution to the Assembly, stressing the importance of equal respect for the two fundamental principles of the General Assembly resolution: Eritrean autonomy and the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown. The Representative Assembly considered the draft Constitution during 40 meetings between 12 May and 10 July 1952. On 14 May it unanimously adopted article 1 concerning the adoption and ratification of the Federal Act, which consisted of paragraphs 1 to 7 inclusive of the General Assembly's resolution 390 A (V). During the next two months, each article of the draft Constitution, explained personally by the Commissioner, was considered.

Giving a detailed analysis of the discussions in the Representative Assembly, the report stated that problems relating to the Assembly itself (such as the establishment of a single chamber, the term of four years, the arrangement of the sessions and the necessary quorum) generally did not give rise to serious difficulties. However, certain questions not dealt with, or merely touched on, during the consultations, gave rise to important discussions, e.g., the status of Eritrea; nationality (and rights of federal nationals), citizenship and the electorate; special rights of the various population groups of Eritrea; and communities with local authority.

⁶⁵ For previous consideration see Y.U.N., 1948-49, pp. 256-79, Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 363-70 and Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 277-85.

⁶⁶ For summary of the report see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 277-79.

Both in the consultations held by the Commissioner and in the proceedings of the Representative Assembly, several other questions aroused controversy, e.g., the election of the Chief Executive, the representation of the Emperor in Eritrea and the symbols of the Federation and of Eritrea.

On 2 July 1952 the Assembly adopted the article relating to the symbols of Eritrea which should be decided upon by law.

On 10 July the amended Constitution was unanimously adopted as a whole.

The Eritrean Constitution establishes a democratic form of government which might be termed as semi-presidential. The initial article is an undertaking on the part of the Eritrean people to observe faithfully the provisions of the Federal Act as laid down in General Assembly resolution 390 A (V). The Constitution defines the status of Eritrea as an autonomous unit federated with Ethiopia under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown. On the basis of reciprocity, nationals of the Federation who are not Eritrean citizens are to enjoy the same rights as Eritrean citizens. The Constitution also provides safeguards for the institutions, traditions, religions and languages of the inhabitants of Eritrea.

Under the Constitution, Eritrea has a unicameral legislature of not less than 50 and not more than 70 members elected for periods of four years by direct or indirect ballot. The Assembly votes the laws and the budget, elects the Chief Executive and supervises his activities. An Auditor-General, elected by the Assembly and independent of the Executive, examines and reports on the annual accounts.

The Constitution provides that the representative of the Emperor shall have the right to request reconsideration of Eritrean draft laws if he considers that they encroach upon federal jurisdiction or involve the international responsibility of the Federation.

Following such a request, the Assembly, after reconsideration of the draft law, may adopt it by a two-thirds majority.

The federal flag (that of Ethiopia) is to be respected in Eritrea, which is, nevertheless, to have its own flag, seal and arms.

The various population groups in Eritrea, both nationals of the Federation and foreign nationals, are to have the right to respect for their customs and their own legislation governing personal status and legal capacity. Property and other rights of real nature of the various population groups are not to be impaired by any discriminatory law.

Eritrea has an independent judiciary, judicial power being exercised by a Supreme Court whose jurisdiction includes disputes concerning the constitutionality of laws.

The Constitution can be amended by a majority of three quarters of the Assembly. Amendments not in accordance with the Federal Act cannot be introduced. They enter into effect after ratification by the Emperor.

The Constitution contains transitional provisions for the orderly transfer of power from the Administering Authority to the Government of Eritrea upon entry into effect of the Constitution.

In accordance with the provisions of paragraph 14 of resolution 390 (V), the United Nations Commissioner approved this Constitution on 6 August and transmitted the legal instrument to the Chairman of the Eritrean Assembly. On 11 August 1952 at Addis Ababa, the Emperor of Ethiopia during a formal ceremony, attended by the United Nations Commissioner, ratified the Constitution which could not enter into force, however, until the ratification of the Federal Act.

During the period between the adoption of the Constitution and its entry into effect, the Administering Authority and the United Nations Commissioner prepared and transmitted to the Executive Committee (a transitional body established by the Administering Authority under article 97 of the Constitution) the drafts of certain organic laws necessary to implement the Constitution immediately upon the transfer of powers. These included drafts for proclamation to be issued by the British Administration in Eritrea on the Administration of Justice, the Eritrean Function of Government Act, the Eritrean Electoral Act, the Eritrean Budget Act, the Eritrean Audit Act, the Eritrean Advisory Council Act and the Eritrean Civil Service Act. On 28 August, Ato Tedla Bairu was elected Chief of the Executive and Cheik Mohamed Mussa Radai, Chairman of the Eritrean Assembly.

The Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia was formally established on 11 September 1952, when the Emperor ratified the Federal Act. On 15

September the Administering Power formally handed over the Administration to the Federal and Eritrean Governments.

On that day the Representative Assembly adopted the final design of the Eritrean flag: azure background with a green olive wreath in the centre and an olive branch in the middle of the wreath. The Ethiopian currency became effective in Eritrea on 16 September at the rate of seven Ethiopian dollars to £1 (sterling).

2. Consideration by the General Assembly at its Seventh Session

The General Assembly at its 380th plenary meeting, held on 16 October 1952, decided to include in its agenda the report of the United Nations Commissioner in Eritrea and at its 382nd meeting referred it to the Ad Hoc Political Committee, which considered it at its 40th and 41st meetings, held on 11 and 12 December 1952.

The Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee invited the United Nations Commissioner in Eritrea to make a statement. The representative of Italy, who had submitted to the Secretary-General a request (A/AC.61/L.4) to take part in the discussion on the item, was also invited to participate in the discussion.

In his statement, the United Nations Commissioner underlined the importance of resolution 390 (V) by which the General Assembly had solved the deadlocked Eritrean problem. The implementation of that resolution, he said, had raised racial, linguistic and religious problems which had been increased by the very divergent programmes of the political parties. However, the establishment of the Federation, recommended by the United Nations, had satisfied both those in favour of union with Ethiopia and those in favour of independence. The resolution of December 1950, he observed, was a new type of decision in the history of the United Nations. For the first time, the Assembly had appointed a Commissioner who was responsible for ensuring that the resolution was carried out without the assistance of a council composed of Member States. For the first time, too, the General Assembly had drawn up the statute for a federation and had laid down the principles on which the Constitution of one of the members of that federation should rest.

The United Nations Commissioner paid a tribute to the sincere desire for co-operation displayed by the governments concerned and the goodwill and respect for the Assembly's decisions shown by the inhabitants of Eritrea.

The Commissioner then described his successive consultations with the Administering Authority, with the Government of Ethiopia and with the Eritrean population.

Since he had had differences of opinion with the governments concerned and various population groups concerning the interpretation of certain fundamental principles of the General Assembly's resolution, the Commissioner had decided to seek the opinion of a Panel of Legal Consultants appointed by the Secretary-General (see above).

Legal consultants had also helped him in drafting an Eritrean Constitution, in which the suggestions of the Ethiopian Government and the British Administration were taken into account without sacrificing the unity of the draft or the essential elements of the Assembly's resolution. For its part, the Eritrean Assembly had made a detailed study of the draft Constitution and several amendments had been adopted which had improved the text. All the articles of the draft Constitution had been adopted by the Eritrean Assembly by more than a two-thirds majority and the chapter on human rights had been adopted by acclamation. The Constitution as a whole had been approved unanimously.

The United Nations Commissioner pointed out that in the economic field Eritrea would have to continue receiving the assistance afforded it in the past. That was a great responsibility which the Federal Government would have to discharge fairly and with respect for Eritrean autonomy, since without economic and financial autonomy political and legal autonomy could become illusory.

The Commissioner emphasized the confidence shown in the Ethiopian Government by the United Nations. The Ethiopian Government had freely assumed, especially in the international sphere, heavy responsibilities, one of the most important of which was the maintenance of the Federation's integrity, which might be threatened either by a secession movement or by annexation to Ethiopia. The United Nations Commissioner concluded by paying tribute to the Eritrean people who, by accepting the General Assembly's resolution, had forgotten the disputes of the past to turn to the future in a spirit of co-operation and fraternity. The Federation of Eritrea and Ethiopia under the Ethiopian Crown had, he announced, become a reality on 15 September 1952.

Presenting his Government's report (A/2233) on its administration of Eritrea for the period from December 1950 to September 1952, the representative of the United Kingdom described the difficulties which the British Government had faced in carrying out its responsibilities under the Assembly's resolution. The people of Eritrea, he said, had been divided into three rival groups, one advocating union with Ethiopia, the second independence and the third partition. No group had suggested federation. The fact that the various factions had finally become reconciled and had accepted the federal solution was evidence of the good sense and understanding of the people of Eritrea. Nevertheless, political and racial cleavage was too deep-rooted to disappear completely. Inexpert handling of political affairs or revival of intolerance could restore hostility and once again divide the countries.

The British Administration had next had to give special attention to the problem of security and had taken action to eliminate the menace of organized bandit groups known as Shiftas. It considered its handling of the Shifta problem as one of its most important achievements.

While, under resolution 390(V), the preparation of the Eritrean Constitution was the primary responsibility of the United Nations Commissioner, initiative in all other matters had rested with the British Administration, especially for the organization of an Eritrean Administration and the convocation of a Representative Assembly of Eritreans. A simplification of the administrative machinery and special methods of recruitment and training had made it possible to obtain an Administration consisting 96 per cent of Eritreans. The new Administration would obviously be inexperienced for some time, but the presence of foreign advisers and technicians would assist it in making necessary progress. To convoke a Representative Assembly of Eritreans, the British Administration had organized general free elections throughout the territory. This was the first time in Eritrean history that a general election had been held. The voters had gone to the polls enthusiastically and the Assembly might be regarded as truly representative of the people. The equal distribution of seats between Christians and Moslems had caused all fears of supremacy of one group to disappear.

As to public finance, the United Kingdom representative said, the British Administration had left Eritrea a balanced budget. Such a budget was absolutely necessary in order to ensure the independence of the new government. But the financial and economic resources of the country were limited and Eritrea hoped to be able to obtain Point Four aid from the United States and assistance from the United Nations specialized agencies. The representative of the United Kingdom underlined that the economic needs of Eritrea required careful study. If it were not federated with Ethiopia, Eritrea would not be economically viable. The effect of any measure in the economic field would need to be watched by the Federal Authorities as well as by the Eritrean Government since economic difficulties could bring political trouble. In conclusion, he stated that the federal solution might or might not be ideal, but it had been accepted by the people of Eritrea and had brought about unity in the country. The Federation had come into being in an excellent atmosphere. He expressed his Government's wish that Eritrea would achieve happiness and prosperity under the wise guidance of the Emperor.

The Foreign Minister of Ethiopia expressed, on behalf of his sovereign and of the Ethiopian and Eritrean peoples, the satisfaction with which they had greeted the entry into force of the Federation of Eritrea. He congratulated all those who had participated in this great achievement. He emphasized, however, that without the personal intervention of the Emperor of Ethiopia and the sacrifices made by that country, the Federation of Eritrea and Ethiopia could never have been achieved. It had been necessary to prepare the populations to accept the federal solution proposed by the Assembly; close co-operation had been achieved between the United Nations Commissioner and the Ethiopian Government on this question and the Emperor of Ethiopia, himself, had appealed directly to the people to support unreservedly the idea of federation. The Eritrean Constitution, the Ethiopian representative stated, had to respect Eritrean independence strictly, while allowing for the responsibilities that the Ethiopian Government was to assume with regard to Federal services. In every respect, the Ethiopian Government wished to promote the well-being of Eritrea in full accordance with the provisions of the Federal Act. It had already demonstrated its desire to see minority parties participate in the executive; it had urged the protection of human rights by the Constitution and expressed its wish that all Eritreans should enjoy all the privileges of Ethiopian citizens with no obligations other than those resulting from the Federation. The Ethiopian Government had supplied the Eritrean Government unconditionally with the working capital it needed and made it a gift of considerable stocks of equipment. The Federation was prepared to ensure the balance of payments in Eritrea which had always shown a deficit. As for foreign enterprises, especially Italian enterprises, the Ethiopian Government intended that they should be enabled to continue their useful work under the federal system. The Italians were welcome in the Federation as friends. The representative of Ethiopia stated in conclusion that peace and security were now ensured in East Africa. He felt sure that all the inhabitants of Eritrea and Ethiopia would, under the liberal and enlightened guidance of the Emperor, march together along the path of peace and progress.

The representative of Italy thanked the Committee for the opportunity he had been given to express his Government's appraisal of a particularly important United Nations achievement. The Italian Government was sure that the system of federation was the only solution which could ensure close association between Ethiopia and Eritrea, while safeguarding the ethnic and social characteristics and economic interests of the two countries. It had therefore given its full and unreserved support to the principle of federation. Long years of association between Italy and Eritrea had created lasting ties between those countries. The Italian Government wished to see the Italians in Eritrea play an effective part in the Federation as an element of friendship and co-operation between Italy and Ethiopia. In that connexion, he had noted with satisfaction the formal assurances given by the Ethiopian representative concerning the Italian community in Eritrea and its economic activity. It was obvious that certain questions raised by the new federal structure still remained to be solved. For instance, the economic structure of Eritrea had entered a delicate phase as a result of its union with Ethiopia. The Italian Government therefore hoped that the United Nations and its specialized agencies would give Eritrea the financial and technical assistance it required.

The representative of the United States introduced a joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.34), sponsored by Brazil, Burma, Canada, Denmark, Ecuador, Greece, Liberia, Mexico, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Turkey and the United States, welcoming the establishment of the Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown and congratulating the people and governmental authorities of the Federation for the effective and loyal fulfilment of the General Assembly's resolution 390 A (V).

At the 41st meeting on 12 December 1952, the representatives of Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, China, Chile, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, India, Israel, Liberia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, the Philippines, the Union of South Africa and Uruguay spoke in favour of the joint draft resolution, which was adopted by 52 votes to none, with 5 abstentions. At its 404th plenary meeting on 17 December 1952, the General Assembly adopted, without debate, by 51 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, the draft resolution recommended by the Ad Hoc Political Committee in its report (A/-2313).

The resolution (617 (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolution 390 A (V) of 2 December 1950, providing that Eritrea be constituted an autonomous unit federated with Ethiopia under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown,

"Having noted the adoption and ratification of the Eritrean Constitution and the ratification of the Federal Act embodying the provisions contained in paragraphs 1-7 inclusive of that resolution,

"Having noted that the conditions laid down in paragraph 13 of resolution 390 A (V) of 2 December 1950 have been fulfilled, and that on 11 September 1952 the Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia was proclaimed,

"Noting further the final report of the United Nations Commissioner in Eritrea of 17 October 1952 and the report of the Administering Authority of 27 October 1952,

"Noting with appreciation the part played by the United Nations Commissioner and the former Administering Authority in Eritrea in preparing Eritrea to take its place in the Federation,

"Noting also with satisfaction the contribution made by Ethiopia to the establishment of the Federation and Ethiopia's expression of determination scrupulously to execute the provisions of the Federal Act,

"1. Welcomes the establishment of the Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian Crown;

"2. Congratulates the people and governmental authorities of the Federation for their effective and loyal fulfilment of resolution 390 A (V) of the General Assembly of 2 December 1950."

E. THE TUNISIAN QUESTION

1. Consideration by the Security Council

On 31 March 1952, at the request of Pakistan, communications from the Tunisian Government were circulated as a Security Council document (S/2571).

In the first, dated 12 January 1952, the Prime Minister of Tunisia stated that the domestic sovereignty of the Bey had been maintained intact under the Treaty of Bardo of 1881, by which the French Government had been authorized provisionally to occupy certain points in Tunisia. The French authorities, however, had established a system of direct administration in Tunisia which had led to constant unrest. To remedy that state of affairs, the French Government had undertaken to abandon direct administration and to permit the development of Tunisian political institutions to the point of internal autonomy. On that basis, the Bey had entrusted the Prime Minister, in August 1950, with the task of forming a "Ministry for negotiations to lead Tunisia to internal autonomy". After long and difficult negotiations it had become apparent, the communication stated, that the position of the French Government, including insistence on the participation of French citizens in Tunisia, a foreign colony, in that country's political institutions, was contrary to the Treaty of Bardo.

The Tunisian Government considered that the situation created a dispute which it had proved impossible to settle by direct negotiation and felt that the attitude of the French Government was likely to prejudice the development of "friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples", as provided for in Article 1, paragraph 2, of the Charter. It had, therefore, brought the dispute before the Security Council in accordance with Article 35,⁶⁷ paragraph 2, which provides that non-member States may bring before the Council disputes to which they are parties provided they accept for the purposes of the dispute the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the Charter.

Subsequent communications (S/2571) of the Tunisian representatives stated, among other things, that the French authorities had exerted pressure on the Tunisian sovereign to disavow his Government's approach to the Council; that there had been serious incidents marked by death and injuries; and that the French authorities were arbitrarily arresting political leaders in order to stifle the aspirations of the Tunisian people.

In letters dated 2 April 1952 (S/2574-S/2584), Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia and Yemen brought the situation in Tunisia to the attention of the Security Council under Article 35, paragraph 1, of the Charter. They stated that, since the Tunisian application of 12 January, the Prime Minister and other Ministers of the Tunisian Government had been arrested and the deteriorating situation was seriously endangering the maintenance of international peace and security, thereby falling within the scope of Article 34 of the Charter.⁶⁸ Accordingly, they requested the Council to consider the matter urgently.

The representatives of these countries, except Burma and Pakistan, requested that they be called upon, in accordance with the rules of procedure, to participate in the discussion. Explanatory notes submitted with those letters reviewed relations between Tunisia and France and stated that the French Government's violation of the 1881 Treaty had deprived the people of Tunisia of their right to self-government and self-determination. The notes stated that in Asian and African countries it was keenly felt that the domination of weak nations by colonial Powers had no moral justification and was contrary to the spirit of the times.

At its 574th, 575th and 576th meetings on 4, 10 and 14 April the Security Council considered the question of including the item in the agenda.

The representative of France said that the Tunisian application of 12 January was not receivable under the Charter and was invalid because the Bey's seal had not been attached. Moreover, if the governments which had been approached by the representatives of Tunisia had made it clear that they could not take cognizance of a matter which did not threaten their own security or peace in general, the French and Tunisian authorities would more quickly have found a common ground for the necessary agreements. Several weeks previously it might have been argued that there was a domestic dispute, not between France and Tunisia, but between the Residency General and certain Ministers. Following the agreement between the Bey and the Resident General, however, the Council could only note that any situation or dispute that might have existed had disappeared. The only thing which could reopen the matter would be a decision by the Council implying that the problem still existed.

The representative of France said that the Resident General's decision concerning the former Ministers had been based primarily on the need to ensure, in his conversations with the Bey, an atmosphere without constraint. The higher French responsibilities under the Regency had been exercised because it was impossible to leave in power men who for several months had paralysed the entire administrative machine through inefficiency and by encouraging every kind of breach of the peace. France had displayed its goodwill, constructive desire for conciliation and sincerity. The plan of reforms which had been presented to the Bey went beyond all the legitimate aspirations of Tunisian nationalism and did not bring into question the Bey's sovereignty. It provided for the establishment of assemblies representing all the interests in the country and sought, through freely conducted negotiations, to reconcile continued French co-operation with the necessary growth of the Tunisian people's participation in and responsibility for the conduct of its own affairs. The Bey had given his consent to the programme of negotiations and reforms and had instructed an independent and respected person to form a new government. The calm situation in Tunisia proved that the people had heeded the Bey's appeal that they should follow the new path which had been opened to them, in peace and with respect for public order.

⁶⁷ For text of Article 35, see p. 13.

⁶⁸ Article 34 provides for investigation by the Council of disputes and situations to determine whether their continuance is likely to endanger international peace and security. Article 35, paragraph 1, provides that any United Nations Member may bring such disputes and situations before the Council.

The representative of France added that the eleven Powers had chosen to disregard the existing situation and had presented a sketchy, inaccurate and tendentious picture of the past, reducing their communications to the status of a propaganda instrument.

The President of the Council, speaking as the representative of Pakistan, protested against that charge. He pointed out that article 2 of the Treaty of 1881 provided that French military occupation would cease when the French and Tunisian authorities had agreed that the local administration was able to maintain order. Since that time, he stated, the protectorate had gradually deprived a free country of its freedom. A policy of peopling Tunisia with French settlers had been pursued and the best land had passed into the hands of colonists. The Tunisian nationalist movement, which had become increasingly dynamic in the twentieth century, had met with the opposition of foreign vested interests and the short-sighted use of force by the colonial Power. The hopes created by the reforms of 1950 had been completely destroyed by French vested interests in Tunisia. The Tunisian Cabinet, which had been formed to negotiate with the French Government for the restoration of Tunisian autonomy, had been made ineffectual by the intrigues of French settlers and by interference in the day-to-day work of the Tunisian Ministers.

On 15 January 1952, the representative of Pakistan continued, after the submission of the Tunisian application to the Security Council, the Resident General had demanded that the complaint should be withdrawn, that the Cabinet should be changed and that the Resident General should be appointed as Minister for Foreign Affairs and General Garbay as Minister of Defence. On being instructed by the Bey to reply, the Prime Minister had stated that he had been authorized by the Bey to bring the complaint to the United Nations. On 24 March the Resident General had informed the Bey that the French Government was prepared to resume negotiations, on condition that the Cabinet would be dismissed and the complaint withdrawn. When the Bey had refused, the Resident General had produced a document signed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs for France, giving him full powers to re-establish law and order and to protect French interests. The Bey had cabled the President of the French Republic, drawing attention to the pressure exerted by the Resident General and demanding his recall. That night hundreds of persons, including the Tunisian Prime Minister and other Ministers, had been arrested, all nationalist newspapers had been suppressed, martial law had been applied and the Bey's palace had been surrounded by troops. After a private interview the following morning, the Resident General had declared that the Bey had consented that a decree be issued in the Bey's name. A new Prime Minister had been appointed who had no very great following and, up to that time, had not been able to form a Cabinet.

The eleven Powers, the representative of Pakistan stated, were not making any extreme demands, but simply asking the Security Council to discuss the question. Failure to include the item in the agenda would lay the foundations for the suppression of free discussion in the United Nations.

The representative of France, in reply, stated that the representative of Pakistan had dealt with a number of questions irrelevant to the consideration of the agenda and that his comments on France's achievements in Tunisia had been partial, unjust and inaccurate.

The representative of the United Kingdom considered that a satisfactory solution of the problem was likely to result only from peaceful negotiations between France and Tunisia, which should be continued. The new Prime Minister was a highly respected figure in Tunisia; the Bey was prepared to negotiate and the French Government had made concrete suggestions for a plan of reform which would lead Tunisia towards internal autonomy. He doubted if discussions in the Security Council could assist a peaceful solution and avoid further inflaming passions. Moreover, the matter appeared to fall within France's domestic jurisdiction and the Council was therefore barred from intervening by Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter. For these reasons, he said, he would vote against the adoption of the agenda.

The representatives of Greece, the Netherlands, Turkey and the United States said that they would abstain when the provisional agenda was put to the vote. While endorsing the principle that it was the task of the Council to examine situations which might lead to international friction, they stressed that there were still possibilities that the parties might by direct negotiations reach a fair agreement and that it would be better that such negotiations should be continued than that debates should be held in the Council which might make those negotiations more difficult. The representatives of the Netherlands and Turkey reserved their position on the question of the Council's competence.

The representative of the United States said that, while his Government had always considered that the organs of the United Nations should be available for examining any problems which caused serious friction in international relations, under the Charter the parties to a controversy were obliged first to seek a solution by negotiation. The United States did not wish to pass judgment upon the most recent developments in Tunisia; however, it could not condone the use of force by either party. The French programme appeared to constitute a basis for resumption of negotiations for the establishment of home rule in Tunisia, and it was fervently hoped that France would bring about far-sighted and genuine reforms. So that, without dealing with the question of the Council's competence, he would abstain on the question of including the item in the agenda. His Government would reassess the situation if a Member again brought the question before the Council.

The representatives of Brazil, Chile, China and the USSR considered that the item should be included in the Council's agenda. The first three of these representatives supported the inclusion of the item without prejudice to the merits of the case or to the Council's competence. They emphasized the number and importance of the countries which regarded the situation as a danger to peace and felt that this in itself deserved the Council's attention. Rejection of the request of the eleven Powers, it was stated, would be a denial of justice and would accentuate divisions based on differences of race and economic and social development. It might have an unfavourable effect in Tunisia and throughout Asia and Africa.

The representative of Brazil considered that it might be preferable to postpone consideration of the item after its inclusion in the agenda, since the parties had not yet exhausted peaceful means for settling the dispute. The representative of China said that if the agenda could not be adopted the second best course would be to postpone a decision on its adoption.

The representative of the USSR said that Tunisia was a Non-Self-Governing Territory in regard to which France had the obligation, under Article 73 of the Charter, to promote to the utmost the well-being of the inhabitants, to develop self-government and to assist in the progressive development of free political institutions. The appeal of the eleven Powers had indicated that the French Government, by pursuing an undemocratic policy in Tunisia and by repressing the national liberation movement, had created a situation endangering the maintenance of international peace and security. It was the duty of the Security Council to investigate the situation, to hear both sides, and to take the necessary action. However, the representatives of France and the United Kingdom opposed the inclusion of the question in the Council's agenda and the United States representative, who had stated his intention of abstaining, would in effect be voting against the item's inclusion since his abstention would make it impossible to muster the seven necessary votes. These three representatives were, thus, not only opposed to a just settlement of the Tunisian question but did not even want to discuss the matter in the Council, despite the request submitted by eleven States and supported by a number of Council members. That was a reflection of the imperialist policy of the colonial Powers towards dependent countries and showed once again to the peoples of the world, and above all to those of Asia and Africa, that the ruling circles in the United States, the United Kingdom and France were trampling on the legitimate rights of Members of the United Nations and were attempting to convert the Organization into an instrument of aggressive policy and to use it to suppress national liberation movements in colonial and dependent countries. He supported the appeal of the eleven States and considered that all of them which had so requested should be allowed to address the Council.

On 10 April, the President informed the Council that he had received letters from the representatives of Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia and Yemen rejecting the French representative's allegations concerning their intentions and motives in sponsoring the Tunisian case. Those representatives, with the exception of Burma, hoped that the Council would permit them to reply to the charges.

On 14 April, Pakistan submitted a draft resolution (S/2598) providing that the Security Council should invite those representatives to take part in the proceedings of the Council for that purpose.

At the same meeting, the representative of Chile stated that it appeared that there would not be seven votes in favour of including the Tunisian question in the agenda. His delegation could not reconcile itself to that situation without making a last effort to safeguard the principles of freedom of discussion and equal rights for all Member States. Accordingly, he submitted a draft resolution (S/2600) by which the Council would: (1) include the eleven communications of 2 April in its agenda, on the understanding that such action would not imply any decision regarding the Council's competence to consider the substance of the question; and (2) postpone consideration of those communications. The representative of Chile expressed confidence that if, after a reasonable period of time, it became obvious that the situation had improved or was about to improve, the eleven Powers would not insist on the Council taking up the matter. They would ask for immediate consideration only if some new development made intervention by the United Nations a matter of urgency.

The draft resolution by Pakistan, the Chilean draft resolution and the provisional agenda were put to the vote on 14 April. Each received 5 votes in favour, 2 against (France, United Kingdom) and 4 abstentions (Greece, Netherlands, Turkey, United States). Having failed to obtain the requisite majority, the draft resolutions and the provisional agenda were not adopted.

2. Request for a Special Session of the General Assembly

By a letter dated 20 June 1952 (A/2137), addressed to the Secretary-General, Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen called attention to the continuing gravity of the situation in Tunisia and requested that a special session of the General Assembly be summoned. They pointed out that, since the Security Council had refused to admit the Tunisian question to its agenda, the Assembly was competent to consider the matter under Article 11, paragraph 2, of the Charter as a question relating to the maintenance of international peace and security.

In an accompanying explanatory memorandum, it was stated that, after the discussion in the Security Council in April 1952, civil liberties had not been restored and the expected negotiations had not materialized, because the acknowledged representatives of the Tunisian people were in prison or exile and the Bey was virtually a prisoner. It appeared, said the communication, that the French authorities, having failed to negotiate even with a Tunisian government of their own contrivance, were proposing to impose dubious reforms of their choice on the Tunisian people, and to back their implementation with military force. Since the friendly relations that could have existed between the French and the Tunisians were rapidly being destroyed, urgent consideration of the question was necessary.

On 20 June, in accordance with the Assembly's rules of procedure, the Secretary-General informed the other Members of the United Nations of the request for a special session and inquired whether they concurred in it. By 20 July, ten States (Bolivia, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Yugoslavia) had given affirmative replies, so that the number of Members in favour of holding a special session was 23. Negative replies were received from 27 States (Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Ecuador, France, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, Turkey, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay). Two members (Ethiopia and Thailand) stated that they wished to abstain on the question. Accordingly, no special session was convened, since the required majority had not been obtained.

3. Consideration by the General Assembly at its Seventh Session

By a letter (A/2152), dated 30 July 1952, Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen requested that the Tunisian question be included in the provisional agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly.

An accompanying explanatory memorandum stated that, as the situation in Tunisia continued to be serious, the question was being referred to the Assembly, in order that a just and peaceful settlement might be achieved.

When the General Committee considered the agenda of the seventh session, at its 79th meeting on 15 October, the representative of France protested against the accusations against France. He declared that his Government found the interference of the United Nations in matters which were exclusively within France's national jurisdiction wholly unacceptable and, accordingly, he would not take part in any discussion or in any vote on the inclusion of the item. The General Committee decided, without vote, to recommend that the Tunisian question be included in the agenda.

At its 380th plenary meeting on 16 October the Assembly decided to include the Tunisian question in the agenda of the seventh session and subsequently referred it to the First Committee.

During the opening general debate of the Assembly's seventh session, at the 392nd plenary meeting on 10 November 1952, the Minister for Foreign Affairs for France made a statement concerning both Tunisia and Morocco.⁶⁹ With respect to Tunisia, he said that the United Nations was excluded from discussing the question by the treaties between France and Tunisia and by the provisions of the United Nations Charter. The treaties, concluded between sovereign States, provided that the foreign relations of Tunisia could be conducted only within the framework provided for in the treaties, namely, through France. They also provided that reforms in Tunisia were to be effected in close and exclusive co-operation with France and on the initiative of France. The United Nations had not been given competence to revise treaties.

Furthermore, Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter provided that nothing contained in the Charter should authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State or should require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the Charter. The proviso contained in this Article—that the principle should not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII—was not applicable, since it could not reasonably be claimed that the situation in North Africa threatened international peace. Moreover, if the General Assembly were given competence to deal with every matter referred to it, the country in which criticism was free and agitation easy would be more readily indicted than a country in which opposition was impossible. The Organization would, further, be overwhelmed by the weight of its responsibilities or by a storm of sterile recrimination.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs for France analysed the reciprocal rights and duties arising from the Treaty of Bardo of 1881 and the Convention of La Marsa of 1883. It was intended that any inequality arising from the difference of means and resources should progressively disappear, thus making room for a true partnership. He described the situation in Tunisia when the treaties were signed, and the advantages which Tunisia had derived from association with France. Tunisia had been transformed into a true State and had been helped in building up administrative bodies and public services adapted to modern requirements. Economic conditions had been greatly improved by such measures as the reorganization of the land tenure system, the modernization of agriculture, reforestation, water conservation, the development of hydro-electric power and the construction of ports and roads. These achievements had not been made only for the benefit of the French. For instance, 90 per cent of the farm land was owned by Tunisians. The indigenous population of Tunisia had trebled since 1880. The health conditions of the people had been greatly improved and a developing social legislation, modelled directly on that of France, was being put into effect. The technical and financial contributions of France had been decisive in developing mineral resources and establishing new industries. Educational facilities were being extended yearly, although in this field it had been necessary to start virtually from nothing.

France had undertaken the task of education and democratic initiation, as provided in the treaties, and was responsible for completing that task. Considerable strides had been made; others of even greater importance, were being prepared, and France was ready to discuss them with properly authorized representatives. It was, however, for France to determine the stages and pace of evolution in Tunisia. How could the United Nations, he asked, quite apart from legal considerations, define what reforms should be undertaken, by what stages and through what institutions? The political problem consisted basically of how to ensure for the future that the various elements of the population, each essential to the life of the country, should be able to live and work together in peace and friendship. France would not allow herself to be ousted; the French Constitution stated that France would guide the peoples for whom it had assumed responsibility towards the freedom to govern themselves. With that objective, France had proposed reforms leading to internal self-government and extensive participation by the Tunisians in public affairs. As the reforms were tested, France would gradually give up her powers under the treaties. Although, unfortunately, some elements in Tunisia had preferred violence and intimidation to free understanding, it was not possible to give way to such methods.

⁶⁹ See also under The Question of Morocco.

The French Minister for Foreign Affairs said that it would be a serious mistake if territories still imperfectly developed were set up as independent States before they were able to meet the heavy responsibilities which that would imply. Premature independence would imperil the legitimate interests of France and of others, which France had undertaken to safeguard, as well as the further development of those territories. France was compelled to warn the Assembly against the consequences of interference. The Government of France could agree to discuss neither the principle nor the manner of such interference.

a. DISCUSSION IN THE FIRST COMMITTEE

The First Committee considered the Tunisian question at its 537th to 546th meetings, from 4 to 12 December 1952.

By a letter (A/C.1/737) dated 4 December, the representative of France informed the Chairman of the Committee that his delegation would be unable to participate in the discussion of the item. At the 537th meeting on 4 December, the representative of Iraq proposed that the Committee appeal to the representative of France to attend. The Chairman stated that he would transmit that appeal.

At the 541st meeting on 9 December, the representative of Pakistan submitted a proposal which, after revision (A/C.1/L.9), provided that the First Committee should: (1) express its regret at the absence of the French delegation and appeal to the Government of France to reconsider its decision; and (2) decide that the Bey of Tunis should be invited to depute his representative to participate in the debates, without the right of vote. At the 542nd meeting on 10 December, the Committee adopted the first paragraph of the Pakistan proposal by a roll-call vote of 19 to 16, with 22 abstentions. The second paragraph was rejected by a roll-call vote of 26 to 24, with 7 abstentions. It was then pointed out that the draft resolution constituted a whole, and that those who had voted in favour of the first part had done so in the hope that the second part would also be adopted. Accordingly, it was felt that a vote should be taken on the draft resolution as a whole. The resolution, minus the second paragraph, was then rejected by roll-call vote of 21 to 2, with 34 abstentions.

Two draft resolutions (A/C.1/736 and A/C.1/L.8) relating to further negotiations between the parties were presented to the Committee.

The first (A/C.1/736), submitted at the 537th meeting on 4 December by Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen, recalled the three applications of the Arab-Asian Powers to the United Nations to consider the question.

The remainder of this draft resolution would have the General Assembly, inter alia:

(1) refer to the Charter provisions concerning the equal rights of large and small nations and the development of friendly relations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples; (2) state that the continuance of the Tunisian situation was detrimental to those rights and purposes and also endangered international peace and security; (3) recall that Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force; (4) urge France to establish normal conditions and civil liberties in Tunisia; and (5) recommend the renewal of negotiations between France and "true representatives" of the Tunisian people for the purpose of implementing the right of self-determination and the fulfilment of the national aspirations of the Tunisian people. The draft further proposed that the Assembly establish a commission of good offices to arrange and assist in the negotiations, ask the commission to report on progress and invite all concerned to give it their full co-operation. The Assembly would also decide to include the item in the agenda of its eighth session.

The second draft resolution (A/C.1/L.8) was submitted at the 539th meeting of the First Committee on 8 December by Brazil, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Honduras, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Nicaragua, Uruguay and Venezuela. It would, inter alia, have the Assembly:

(1) refer to the necessity of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples; (2) state that the United Nations as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of their common ends under the Charter should strive towards removing causes and factors of misunderstanding among its Members; (3) express confidence that France would endeavour to further the effective development of the free institutions of the Tunisian people in pursuance of its proclaimed policies and in conformity with the Charter; (4) express the hope that the parties would continue negotiations on an urgent basis with a view to bringing about Tunisian self-government in line with Charter provisions; and (5) appeal to the parties to conduct their disputes in accordance with the spirit of the Charter and refrain from measures likely to aggravate the current tension. (For text of resolution, as adopted, see below.)

The positions taken by the representatives participating in the debate fell, broadly speaking, into three main groups.

The first group, consisting of the representatives of Australia, Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, the Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom, questioned the competence of the General Assembly. Most of them argued that the Assembly was not competent to discuss the question; the Netherlands representative, however, considered that since the item had been admitted to the agenda the Committee might discuss it although he doubted whether the Assembly was entitled to intervene with particular political recommendations or particular executive actions.

Neither Tunisia nor the United Nations, these representatives considered, had ever objected to the action of the French Government in transmitting information to the Secretary-General in accordance with Article 73 of the United Nations Charter. Therefore the United Nations had consistently recognized the international status of Tunisia arising from valid treaties between Tunisia and France. Whether Tunisia was a sovereign State made no difference; the sovereignty was limited precisely by the treaty, which removed the relations between the two States from the international plane. What the authors of the first joint draft resolution (A/C.1/736) really recommended was revision of the treaties between France and Tunisia. The Charter of the United Nations, however, unlike the Covenant of the League of Nations, contained no provision giving that power. No organ of the United Nations could go beyond the limits of the authority which it derived from the specific provisions of the Charter. That principle had been confirmed in the advisory opinion (A/597) given by the International Court of Justice on 28 May 1948 concerning the conditions of admission of a State to membership in the United Nations.⁷⁰

Accordingly, these representatives held, the matter came within Article 2, paragraph 7, of the United Nations Charter which provides for the non-intervention of the Organization in matters "essentially" within the domestic jurisdiction of any State. The mere fact that a question was of international concern did not remove it from the sphere of domestic jurisdiction; for example, a country's trading and commercial policies, although of great international concern, remained within its domestic jurisdiction except in so far as they were governed by specific treaties. It was also emphasized that the word "essentially" could not be interpreted as "solely", a proposal to substitute "solely" having been defeated at the San Francisco Conference. Therefore it could not be argued that a matter ceased to be essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of a State because some of its aspects were within the domestic jurisdiction of another State. Further the word "domestic", as used in international law, referred to matters within a State's jurisdiction, whether exercised in relation to matters inside or outside its territory.

The situation in Tunisia, these representatives considered, did not threaten international peace and security, and therefore the proviso contained in Article 2, paragraph 7, that the principle of non-intervention should not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII of the Charter, did not apply. Had this proviso applied, it would, in any case, have excluded action by the General Assembly as distinct from the Security Council. It was inadmissible, in view of the provisions of Article 2, paragraph 7, to rely on Article 73 or the human rights provisions of the Charter to establish jurisdiction. Further, Article 73 did not confer on the United Nations any supervisory powers in relation to Non-Self-Governing Territories within the provisions of Chapter XI of the Charter; it merely contained a declaration by certain Powers that they would strive to attain certain objectives.

Practical considerations also made it inadvisable for the Assembly to attempt to deal with the Tunisian question, these representatives felt. If the true meaning of the words of the Charter were ignored in order to deal with a dispute which attracted the concern and interest of the Assembly, it was certain that in the future the Charter would be exploited for purposes which would defeat the principles on which it was based. Care should also be taken to avoid endangering the common larger interests of the democratic countries. Furthermore, the Assembly could not enforce decisions. If its recommendations were meant to exert a moral influence, they should reflect the feelings of the greatest possible majority. When the Assembly's competence, or its extent, was seriously contested by one of the parties and by a number of Members, it was necessary to consider whether intervention would not merely fan the flames of unrest and encourage extremism and uncompromising attitudes. The prospect of United Nations intervention had already caused regrettable incidents and hampered negotiations in Tunisia and an attempt by the United Nations to intervene and to indicate the procedures to be followed could not facilitate a solution of the problem, these representatives maintained. They were accordingly against the adoption of any resolution by the General Assembly; they opposed the first draft resolution and opposed or abstained on the second.

⁷⁰ See Y.U.N., 1947-48, p. 797.

Representatives in both the other groups, however, considered that the General Assembly should adopt a resolution on the Tunisian question.

The representatives of Afghanistan, Burma, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Liberia, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Yemen and Yugoslavia supported the first draft resolution. Although most of them expressed a preference for this draft, after its rejection (see below) they all, except the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Guatemala, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, voted in favour of the second joint draft resolution.

The third group, consisting of the representatives of Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Haiti, Israel, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, Turkey, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela supported the second draft resolution. They voted against or abstained from voting on the first joint draft resolution, some of them considering that it exceeded the Assembly's competence.

In reply to the argument that the competence of the United Nations was excluded by the treaties between France and Tunisia, representatives in these two groups considered that the right of peoples to self-determination was established in Article 1, paragraphs 2 and 4, of the Charter. Under Article 103, obligations under the Charter prevailed over obligations under any other international agreement. The treaties, moreover, clearly recognized the Tunisian State as a separate entity and made only a limited delegation of powers to France. Tunisia had its own legislation, its own administrative machinery and its own Head of State, without whose signature no measure could become law. A declaration of war by France did not automatically commit Tunisia. Tunisia was considered foreign territory by the French code of military justice. Even the conduct of Tunisia's foreign relations was not entirely delegated to France, since the international treaties concluded by Tunisia before the Treaty of Bardo were still valid. French interference in matters left within the Bey's sovereignty could not, it was argued, be a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of France. Moreover, the treaties could not prevent Tunisia from protesting when France violated them.

The competence of the United Nations was equally clear, these representatives maintained, if Tunisia were considered to be a Non-Self-Governing Territory within the meaning of the Charter. Chapters XI, XII and XIII recognized that the Non-Self-Governing Territories were no longer subject to the domestic law of the Metropolitan country, and established an unquestionably international system. In reply to the argument that Chapter XI was, in effect, a unilateral declaration and that the Charter did not confer on any international organ the right of supervision, it was stated that the insertion of this Chapter in the Charter transformed it into a multilateral contractual obligation binding upon the States concerned.

It was also pointed out that one of the accepted principles in determining the sphere of domestic jurisdiction was that, if a matter were regulated by international law, or governed by a treaty or international agreement, it was not essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State within the meaning of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter. That view, which had been recognized by the practice of the United Nations, drew its authority from the advisory opinion of the Permanent Court of International Justice given on 8 November 1921 concerning the Tunisia-Morocco nationality decrees. The Court in this opinion had established that the existence of treaty obligations covering the substance of a matter was sufficient to remove it from the sphere of domestic jurisdiction. Questions arising from the application of treaties could not be settled exclusively in accordance with the national law of either party but had to be settled according to international law.

Some of these representatives maintained that a question with such important international aspects ceased to be a matter of domestic jurisdiction. The Tunisian question was the subject of dispute between France and thirteen Members of the United Nations; there was a chronic state of tension between two sovereign States and two distinct peoples; and the question involved the basic right of self-determination, recognized in the Charter. The Assembly, it was recalled, had confirmed its competence in the question of the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa.

It was further maintained that the Assembly had jurisdiction under Article 10,⁷¹ which authorized it to make recommendations concerning any matters within the scope of the Charter. Among the provisions bringing the Tunisian question within the scope of that Article were: parts of the Preamble concerning the equal rights of nations and the establishment of conditions under which justice and respect for treaties could be maintained; and paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article 1 stating the purposes of the United Nations to bring about by peaceful means the settlement of international disputes which might lead to a breach of the peace and to develop friendly relations among nations.

It was also argued that one of the basic threats to world peace arose from the disputes between the Metropolitan Powers and the independence movements in Non-Self-Governing Territories. The trouble in Tunisia obviously affected the general situation and decreased the possibility of finding peaceful solutions. Accordingly the Assembly also had jurisdiction under Article 11, paragraph 2, which authorized it to make recommendations concerning any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations. The situation was also covered by Article 14, which provided that the Assembly might recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deemed likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the Charter setting forth the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

In support of the first joint draft resolution (A/C.1/736), the representatives of Afghanistan, Burma, the Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guatemala, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Yemen and Yugoslavia recalled that the legal basis for the relationship between France and Tunisia was contained in the Treaty of Bardo of 1881. Relations between the two countries were further regulated by the Convention of La Marsa of 1883. From then on, it was stated, France had gradually assumed full control in Tunisia—a process in accord neither with the Treaty nor with the Convention.

On 11 April 1950, the Bey had informed the President of the French Republic of his desire to introduce substantive reforms, it was stated. A new Resident General, whose task was to pave the way for independence, was appointed. On 17

August 1950 a new Tunisian Government had been formed, acceptable to the Bey and to the French Government. The official announcement stated that the task of the new Cabinet was to negotiate such institutional changes as were needed to lead to internal autonomy. However, no progress had been made for a year, although on 8 February 1951 a decree embodying unsatisfactory reforms had been promulgated. Accordingly, on 31 October 1951 the Tunisian Cabinet had addressed a formal note to the French Government, stating that the pledge of autonomy had to be realized within a limited period and that it had to be acted upon at the governmental, legislative and administrative levels. At the governmental level an homogeneous Tunisian Government was necessary to avoid duality, although Ministers might attach French technicians whose experience would assist them. At the legislative level a representative Assembly should be established to draft laws and control the administration and general policy of the Government; but as a transitional measure the initiation of legislation might be reserved to the Government, leaving to the Assembly, however, the right of amendment. At the administrative level, the note stated, it was essential to give the public services a status in keeping with the new regime. However, experts would be recruited only from France and through the French Government. French citizens residing in Tunisia would be guaranteed the full exercise of their civil rights and the full protection of their persons and property.

All that had been offered in the final reply of the French Government on 15 December, it was stated, had been to go forward with a stage of municipal reform, and even that advance had failed to materialize because of French insistence on the equality of representation of French and Tunisian interests, i.e., between the 140,000 French colonists and 3,250,000 Tunisians. The reply had tried to justify French participation in the management of Tunisia's affairs by an alleged co-sovereignty which was incompatible with the protectorate treaty. It had also affirmed the finality of the ties between France and Tunisia. Following the failure of the negotiations the Tunisian Prime Minister had brought the situation to the notice of the Security Council.

Mr. Baccouche, the new Prime Minister, it was recalled, had been unable to form a government and a caretaker administration of civil servants had therefore been established. The French Government had negotiated with the new administration, but even that had not resulted in a settlement. Draft reforms had been presented to the Bey on 2 August 1952. On 9 September the Bey had replied that he could not approve the proposals, since study by a group representing all sections of Tunisian opinion had made it clear that they would impair Tunisian sovereignty, legalize the direct administration and in no way represent progress towards the internal autonomy which the French Government had promised. The terror had then been intensified and hundreds of Tunisians had been killed or wounded as a result of action by the French colonists.

⁷¹ For text of Article referred to, see p. 11.

Tunisia had become a centre of trouble, which was liable to spread unless an early solution was found, it was felt. International peace was undermined by the division of the world into antagonistic blocs, and one of the most serious divisions was that between the Powers of the North-Atlantic Treaty Organization and the peoples of Asia and Africa.

It was argued by these representatives that the Bey and the Tunisian Government had advanced moderate and reasonable proposals and had maintained a sober, friendly and co-operative attitude, demonstrating an honest desire for a settlement. The crux of the matter was that there were about 140,000 French settlers in Tunisia and 3,250,000 Tunisians. From the Tunisian side, full guarantees had been offered that the legitimate interests of French citizens in Tunisia would be fully safeguarded on the restoration of Tunisian sovereignty. However, the 140,000 French citizens desired to occupy a position of privilege even when the French Government had been willing to take a timid step forward.

It was also argued that, as a result of the long French domination:

(1) the natural resources and mining reserves of Tunisia had been taken over and official colonization had been financed entirely from the Tunisian budget with some 4,000 colonists owning some 800,000 hectares of cultivated land, whereas between 400,000 and 450,000 Tunisians owned approximately 1 million hectares; (2) agricultural unemployment and poverty had resulted and during the last twelve years the rural population had suffered five famines; (3) in industry and trade Tunisia was a French satellite as any processing industry likely to compete with a similar French industry or to assemble a large concentration of labour had been eliminated; and (4) more than 15,000 French civil servants were employed in the Tunisian administration, in which they enjoyed considerable advantages and monopolized most of the higher positions.

The Tunisian people, it was contended, had suffered the ruin of its small and medium properties, the distress of its peasantry, the exploitation of its working class, endemic unemployment, undernourishment, illiteracy, and medieval housing standards. Those conditions, and the lack of adequate medical facilities, had caused widespread disease and a high death rate among the indigenous population.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR stated that United States military construction authorities were adapting fourteen airports in Tunisia for use by American bombers and were transforming the El Kantara port to service American naval vessels. The French naval base of Bizerte had actually come under the United States control. France, the United Kingdom and the United States were using their military alliance to maintain their privileges in the colonies and to suppress the national liberation movements.

Finally, it was argued that since the Tunisian representatives had not succeeded in negotiating on an equal footing, as required by democratic principles, it was essential that the United Nations should adopt a resolution recommending the resumption of negotiations and appointing a commission of good offices to assist therein. It was felt that the Latin-American draft resolution did not reflect the grave realities of the situation in Tunisia. It called upon both parties equally to resume negotiations, although the responsibility for breaking them off did not rest with the Tunisians. Furthermore, it did not mention the restoration of peaceful conditions or normal civil liberties, which were essential if negotiations were to take place in an atmosphere of freedom and mutual trust.

In support of the second joint draft resolution (A/C.1/L.8), the representatives of Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Haiti, Israel, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, Turkey, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela argued that the Administering Power could not be the sole judge of the interests of the inhabitants of a Non-Self-Governing Territory, and could not refuse to permit even a discussion of the principles involved. It was admitted that great material and cultural advances had certainly been made in Tunisia under French administration. However, the demand for self-determination could not be silenced by progress in other fields. If an agreed solution were not attained, the demand for self-government would be reiterated in stronger terms and an element of instability would be introduced into the international situation. The Tunisian independence movement was only a part of the nationalistic movement which had spread throughout the Arab and Moslem world. It depended on the parties to the dispute and on the United Nations whether the problem would be solved peacefully or by violent methods.

Viewed in historical perspective, it was said, conditions in Tunisia reflected credit upon France. The stage of civilization which Tunisia had attained was one reason for granting it progressive self-government.

In expressing confidence that the French Government would endeavour to develop the free institutions of the Tunisian people, the second joint draft resolution merely reflected the belief that that was in fact the road that France had already chosen, it was stated. The appointment of a commission of good offices, they felt, would prejudice the status long enjoyed by France and would pay too little regard to France's solemn promise that Tunisia's national aspirations would be fulfilled. The first joint draft resolution (A/C.1/736) was neither moderate nor wise, and the action it recommended should be contemplated only when the possibilities of direct settlement had been exhausted. Furthermore, the resolutions of the Assembly were only recommendations, and Member States were free to abide by them or not. Unless every effort were made to seek the maximum agreement, the result would be the adoption of high-sounding resolutions which would have no practical effect and would not add to the prestige of the Organization.

The urge for freedom was not the only important condition for the achievement of real and lasting self-government in the interests of the inhabitants, some of these representatives pointed out. Among those conditions were a sound administration, economic viability, and a deep-rooted understanding of democratic processes. The road to progressive self-government lay in a free and open interplay between the administering authorities and representatives of the various elements within the territory. That interplay would only be progressive and constructive if it were peaceful. In this connexion it was also maintained that the General Assembly was not a tribunal and no opinion could be expressed concerning the acts of violence of which France had been accused.

The Tunisian question had been submitted to the General Assembly pursuant to Article 11, paragraph 2, of the Charter, as a question relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, it was said. Article 11, paragraph 2, provided that the Assembly could discuss such questions and make recommendations, but that any such question on which action was necessary should be referred to the Security Council either before or after discussion. If the parties did not fulfil their initial obligation to settle their differences, the Assembly could call upon them to fulfil their duties. However, the Assembly lacked the power to indicate to the parties a specific procedure to be followed, such as the use of good offices or mediation. The Assembly further lacked the power to add to such a choice of method the appointment of the person who was to act as mediator. Accordingly it was argued that the second joint draft resolution (A/C.1/L.8) was the proposal more in conformity with the Charter.

At the 546th meeting on 12 December, the representative of India presented amendments (A/C.1/L.10) to the second joint draft resolution (A/C.1/L.8) which would:

(1) delete the fourth paragraph, which provided that the Assembly should express its confidence that, in pursuance of its proclaimed policies, the Government of France would endeavour to further the effective development of the free institutions of the Tunisian people, in conformity with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter; and

(2) add a new paragraph requesting the President of the Assembly to keep under observation the progress of the negotiations, and to give in his discretion such assistance as might be necessary or useful. The representative of India argued that the course of previous negotiations and the refusal of the French Government to participate in the First Committee's debates did not appear to justify an expression of confidence in one party only. In view of the attitude taken by the French Government in previous negotiations, the additional paragraph would be useful in giving the Tunisian people some guarantee of the Assembly's interest.

The representative of Brazil pointed out that the second joint draft resolution clearly foresaw the evolution of the free institutions of the Tunisian people in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter and adoption of the amendment would indicate a lack of confidence in the two parties and would prejudice future negotiations.

At the same meeting, the Indian amendments (A/C.1/L.10) were rejected by roll-call votes of 31 to 21, with 6 abstentions, and 31 to 20, with 7 abstentions, respectively.

In separate votes, the Committee adopted paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 5 of the first draft resolution (A/C.1/736). The remaining paragraphs were rejected, two (paragraphs 7 and 12) being rejected by roll-call votes. The Committee voted 27 to 24, with 7 abstentions, to reject the first joint draft resolution, as amended, as a whole.

After adopting separately the individual paragraphs of the second joint draft resolution (A/C.1/L.8), the Committee adopted the resolution as a whole by a roll-call vote of 45 to 3, with 10 abstentions.

b. RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The draft resolution recommended by the First Committee (A/2312) was adopted without discussion at the 404th plenary meeting of the Assembly on 17 December by 44 votes to 3, with 8 abstentions, as resolution 611 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Having debated the question proposed by thirteen Member States in document A/2152,

"Mindful of the necessity of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

"Considering that the United Nations, as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of their common ends under the Charter, should strive towards removing any causes and factors of misunderstanding among Member States, thus reasserting the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security.

"1. Expresses its confidence that, in pursuance of its proclaimed policies, the Government of France will endeavour to further the effective development of the free institutions of the Tunisian people, in conformity with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter;

"2. Expresses the hope that the parties will continue negotiations on an urgent basis with a view to bringing about self-government for Tunisians in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations;

"3. Appeals to the parties concerned to conduct their relations and settle their disputes in accordance with the spirit of the Charter and to refrain from any acts or measures likely to aggravate the present tension."

F. THE QUESTION OF MOROCCO

1. Inclusion of the Item in the General Assembly's Agenda

By a letter dated 8 August 1952 (A/2153), Iraq requested that the question of Morocco be included in the agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly.

Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen made a similar request in a letter dated 3 September (A/2175). In an accompanying explanatory memorandum, those representatives recalled that a request to have the item placed on the agenda of the Assembly's sixth session had not secured the support of the necessary majority. The promises that reforms in the Moroccan administration would be introduced, made then and subsequently by France, had not been fulfilled. The methods of the French administration in Morocco were totally unsuited to the situation and to the demands of the people of Morocco. The principles of both the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights had been flouted time and again, these representatives alleged; stringent French rule had compromised the sovereignty of the country and its legitimate ruler and had resulted in complete suppression of civil liberties and democratic rights.

The national movement in Morocco was being oppressed at a time when the world was witnessing the emancipation of colonial peoples; peoples more backward than Morocco had obtained far more rights and liberties. The peoples of Asia and Africa supported the legitimate aspirations of the Moroccan people and considered that it was the duty of the Assembly not to ignore the situation.

The French Administration, by encouraging strife among the inhabitants and by arming French civilian residents, had created a dangerous situation, threatening both the liberties of the Moroccan people and international peace. Accordingly, those Governments felt it their duty to raise once again the question of Morocco. They believed that debate in the Assembly on the question would not only contribute to the solution of the Moroccan problem and to safeguarding peace in that area, but also to sustaining the principles of the Charter and of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The representatives of those countries later transmitted to the Secretary-General an additional explanatory memorandum (A/2175/Add.1) and a communique of the Sultan of Morocco, dated 8 October 1952 (A/2175/Add.2). Pakistan, by a letter dated 11 December 1952, also transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of two documents relating to the Speech from the Throne, delivered on 18 November 1952, and to details of Franco-Moroccan negotiations (A/C.1/738).

Iraq, in a letter dated 8 September (A/2153/Add.1), stated that the communication of the thirteen States would supersede its individual request (A/2153).

At its 380th plenary meeting on 16 October 1952, the General Assembly, without discussion, decided to include the question of Morocco in the agenda of its seventh session. The item was subsequently referred to the First Committee.

During the opening general debate of the Assembly's seventh session, at the 392nd plenary meeting on 10 November 1952, the Minister for Foreign Affairs for France made a statement concerning both Tunisia and Morocco.⁷²

With respect to Morocco, he said that the United Nations was excluded from discussing the question by the Treaty of Fez signed between France and Morocco in 1912 and by the provisions of the United Nations Charter. The Treaty, concluded between sovereign States, provided that the foreign relations of Morocco could be conducted only within the framework provided for in the Treaty, namely, through France. It also provided that reforms in Morocco were to be effected in close and exclusive co-operation with, and on the initiative of France.

The United Nations had not been given competence to revise treaties. Moreover, the competence of the United Nations was limited by Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter which precluded the Organization from intervening in matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any State. This rule applied even where a question had international implications. The proviso in the paragraph that the principle should not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under the Charter was not applicable since it could not reasonably be claimed that the existing situation in North Africa constituted a threat to international peace.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs for France analyzed the reciprocal rights and duties arising from the Treaty of Fez of 1912. It was intended that any inequality arising from the difference of means and resources should progressively disappear, thus making room for a true partnership. He described the situation in Morocco when the Treaty was signed, and the advantages which Morocco had derived from its association with France. Morocco, he said, had been transformed into a true State and had been helped in building up administrative bodies and public services adapted to modern requirements. Economic conditions had been greatly improved by such measures as the reorganization of the land tenure system, the modernization of agriculture, reforestation, water conservation, the development of hydro-electric power and the construction of ports and roads. These achievements had not been made only for the benefit of the French. For instance, 94 per cent of the arable land was cultivated by Moroccans. The indigenous population of Morocco had doubled since 1920. The health conditions of the people had been greatly improved and a developing social legislation, modelled directly on that of France, was being put into effect. The technical and financial contributions of France had been decisive in developing mineral resources and establishing new industries. Educational facilities were being extended yearly, although in this field it had been necessary to start virtually from nothing.

France had undertaken the task of education and democratic initiation, as provided in the Treaty, and was responsible for completing that task. Considerable strides had been made; other advancements of even greater importance were being prepared, and France was ready to discuss them with properly authorized representatives. These were not secret negotiations. The Sultan of Morocco could make his position known freely and publicly. It was, however, for France to determine the stages and pace of evolution in Morocco. How could the United Nations, he asked, quite apart from legal considerations, define what reforms should be undertaken, by what stages and through what institutions? The political problem in Morocco consisted basically of how to ensure for the future that the various elements of the population, each essential to the life of the country, should be able to live and work together in peace and friendship. France would not allow itself to be ousted from Morocco; the French Constitution stated that France would guide the peoples for whom it had assumed responsibility towards the freedom to govern themselves. With that objective, France had endeavoured to strengthen the individuality of Morocco as a sovereign State and that of its dynasty; to foster development of political and social institutions upon democratic foundations within the framework of a progressively expanding autonomy; to protect all interests; to exploit all natural resources; and to enlist support from all quarters. That would ensure the well-being of Morocco and all its inhabitants. Although, unfortunately, some elements in Morocco had preferred violence and intimidation to free understanding, it was not possible to give way to such methods.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs for France said that it would be a serious mistake if territories still imperfectly developed were set up as independent States before they were able to meet the heavy responsibilities which that would imply. Premature independence would imperil the legitimate interests of France and others, which France had undertaken to safeguard, as well as the further development of those territories. France was compelled to warn the Assembly against the consequences of interference. The Government of France could agree to discuss neither the principle nor the manner of such interference.

By a letter dated 4 December (A/C.1/737), France informed the Chairman of the Assembly's ⁷² See also under The Tunisian Question, above.

First Committee that, in accordance with the statement made by the Minister for Foreign Affairs for France at the 392nd plenary meeting of the General Assembly on 10 November, the French delegation would be unable to take part in the discussion of the item.

2. Consideration by the First Committee

The First Committee considered the question at its 547th to 553rd meetings, from 13 to 17 December.

In the general debate, at the 548th meeting on 15 December, the Chairman announced that some representatives had already expressed their views when speaking on the related question of Tunisia and had decided not to participate in the general debate on the question of Morocco. A summary of the views expressed, in so far as they relate particularly to Morocco, is given here.

The representatives of Ethiopia, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen, stated, in general, that the tragedy of Morocco had begun in 1830, when France had annexed Algeria, and had resulted from the industrial revolution in Europe and the quest for markets and raw materials. Algeria had been an obvious prey for the interests of French industrialists—geographically near to France, economically prosperous and politically weak and divided. The conquest of Algeria had been completed in 1848 and from that moment the French had intrigued incessantly against the Sultan of Morocco, and had encouraged with arms and money the dissident elements undermining the authority of the Sultan's Government. During the nineteenth century, it was stated, the French, abusing the right of protection enjoyed by Foreign Missions in Morocco, had bestowed that protection not only upon their own nationals but also upon a large number of Moroccans, who had thus ceased to be subject to the authority and jurisdiction of the Sultan. Morocco had also had to fight against France in 1845 and against Spain in 1865. With the object of creating economic chaos, France had forced Morocco to pay huge indemnities. The fact that Morocco had been able for a time to escape the fate of Algeria had been due to the commercial rivalry between the great European Powers. That situation had led to the Convention of Madrid in 1880, which had stopped the practice of granting foreign protection to Moroccan citizens and had guaranteed equal trading rights to all countries. France had raised strong objections to the conclusion of the Convention. In 1881 it had occupied Tunisia and had then concentrated its efforts on Morocco.

Thereafter, it was stated, France had continued to foment internal disturbances against the Sultan. It had forced the Sultan to accept loans at exorbitant rates of interest. France, however, had acted mainly at the international level. It had managed to gain the acquiescence in its domination of Morocco, one by one, of Italy, England, Spain and Germany. In 1901 France had signed a secret treaty with Italy, by which Italy renounced all claims on Morocco in exchange for a free hand in Libya. In 1904 a secret treaty between France and Great Britain immediately after the ratification of their entente cordiale had recognized British supremacy in Egypt and had given France a free hand in Morocco. That year Spain had adhered to the Franco-British agreement and had been promised a free hand on the African side of the Straits of Gibraltar. In 1905 the Kaiser had sent warships to Tangier and had declared himself prepared to defend Moroccan independence. The diplomatic crisis that followed had resulted in the Conference and the Act of Algeciras in 1906. The Conference had recognized the independence of the Sultan and the integrity of his territory, and had established the principle of the open door in economic relations with Morocco.

The Moroccans had felt reassured. None of the governments which signed the Act, however, had the slightest intention of respecting its signature, it was said. They had been bound by secret treaties which violated the letter and the spirit of the Act of Algeciras. France had been the first to violate the provisions of the Act; the assassination of four French citizens in Morocco had provided it with the long-awaited opportunity to occupy part of the country. From 1907 to 1911 all the coastal towns had been occupied by French troops. Finally, in 1911, the Agadir incident had eliminated all remaining obstacles to French domination of Morocco. By a treaty signed in the same year Germany had finally given France a free hand in Morocco, receiving in return part of the French Congo. From that time the European Powers, having satisfied their ambitions in other parts of the world, had lost interest in Morocco. Such had been the power politics, imperialist deals and secret diplomacy, that France was able finally to dominate Morocco and to force the Treaty of Fez upon the Sultan in 1912.

In the opinion of these representatives, the 40 years of the French protectorate in Morocco had seen the expression of a conflict between the nationalism of a dominated people and European colonialism. It was true that under the first Resident General, Marshal Lyautey, Morocco had been pacified, a regime of law and order established, and certain economic and social reforms undertaken, but those reforms, for the most part, operated only to the advantage of the French colonists. Both before and after the establishment of the protectorate, Morocco was a sovereign State; yet in reality it was a French colony, under the control of the French immigrants.

For many years the Sultan had pressed for the introduction of democratic reforms and the holding of municipal elections, it was maintained. When the Resident General had finally consented to hold such elections, he had requested that 4,000 French colonists should elect the same number of deputies as 8,000,000 indigenous inhabitants. When the Sultan had refused to accept that undemocratic condition, the Resident General had accused him of being reactionary. Moreover, since his ascension to the throne in 1927, the Sultan had not been allowed to have political counsellors. In 1950, General Juin had consented to the creation of an imperial Cabinet, with the function of giving advice on political questions. In 1951, however, the Sultan had been obliged to dismiss that Cabinet and to exile its members as punishment for their nationalistic aspirations.

Another characteristic trait of French policy, it was said, had been the creation of artificial separations between the two native elements, the Arabs and the Berbers, whose unity had been established by more than a thousand years of life in common. The French argument that because of the dual nature of the population there could not be any national unity in Morocco, was merely a pretext for preventing unification and justifying the protectorate.

Those representatives reviewed in detail the history of Franco-Moroccan relations since the official visit to France by the Sultan in 1950 to discuss the termination of the protectorate and its replacement by a regime more in harmony with the sovereignty of Morocco. This, however, had been fruitless.

France had proposed on 17 September the following reforms: (1) the instrument of administrative Djamas elected in the rural areas; (2) the creation of Joint Municipal Commissions in the urban centres; (3) promises of legislative texts regarding the organization of the judiciary; and (4) the assignment of a French secretary-general of the protectorate to the office of the Grand Vizier. This scheme of reforms did not contain a single novel element, as a communique issued by the Sultan on 8 October 1952 had pointed out. The Sultan further outlined the demarches he had decided to make to clarify the status of Franco-Moroccan relations, in a communique issued in October 1952. It recalled that, in its reply to the memorandum submitted by the Sultan in 1950, the French Government had considered it premature to make any modification in the existing regime and had merely proposed fragmentary reforms within the framework of the Protectorate Treaty. On 14 March 1952, the Sultan had sent the French Government another memorandum, stating that the wisest solution of the Moroccan problem lay in a new definition of Franco-Moroccan relations which would guarantee the sovereignty of Morocco and the legitimate interests of the French, within the framework of co-operation between the two countries in the fields of economics, culture and international affairs. To achieve that aim, the Sultan had proposed granting public and private liberties and, in particular, trade union liberties, and the constitution of a provisional Moroccan Government which, in the name of the Sultan, would negotiate the terms of a new agreement with the French Government.

In its reply of 17 September 1952, to the Sultan, France had declared itself prepared to institute elected joint municipal commissions in the towns and Franco-Moroccan commissions in the rural areas. With regard to executive power, the reply had noted the existence of the Council of Viziers and the directors of ministerial departments; it had indicated, further, that France was prepared to put forward legislative drafts with regard to the judicial organization and that, once those principles had been accepted, the French Government would be prepared to proclaim in a solemn Act the principles upon which Franco-Moroccan relations would be based in the future, without in any way impugning the objectives defined in the Treaty of Fez. There could be no sharing of sovereignty.

In reply to the French Government, the Sultan on 3 October 1952, had expressed his regret at the refusal of the Government of France to agree to his proposals. At the same time he had drawn the attention of the French Government to the fact that the reforms it had proposed seemed to amount to a division of Moroccan sovereignty.

The negotiations had failed, these representatives considered, because the Moroccan people wanted to regain their complete independence while France envisaged a regime of co-sovereignty, in contravention of the Protectorate Treaties and the Act of Algeiras.

The representatives of Brazil and Panama said that, because of nationalist aspirations, a state of tension existed in Morocco. This had prevented an agreement acceptable both to the French and Moroccans. The Sultan had proclaimed that the best solution, which would guarantee both Moroccan sovereignty and French and foreign interests, would be to re-define French-Moroccan relations. He had added that he had not requested the immediate withdrawal of French troops and so had displayed a real desire to compromise. On the other hand, there was no reason to doubt France's desire to compromise, a desire which it had expressed repeatedly and which was in conformity with the principles of the Charter. They believed, however, that it was not appropriate, at that time, for the Committee to analyse the relations between France and Morocco. The Charter would not justify direct intervention by the United Nations, particularly when there was no evidence of a threat to international peace and security in that part of the world. The Committee should instead act as a mediator. The aspirations of the people of Morocco were justified, but France also desired the realization of those aspirations. Thus, these representatives considered, the solution of the problem rested solely with the two peoples. The Committee's duty was, therefore, to have recourse to means of peaceful settlement. Intransigent measures would tend only to aggravate the situation. In this view, those representatives were supported by the representatives of Afghanistan, the Philippines and Yugoslavia.

On the question of competence, the representatives of Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen argued that Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter did not apply to the case of Morocco, because the Permanent Court of International Justice had, in 1922, upheld Moroccan sovereignty and the International Court of Justice had also decided, in 1952, the international character of the relations between France and Morocco. It was, therefore, the duty of the United Nations to use its good offices in inviting both parties to negotiate. The representatives of Afghanistan, Guatemala, the Philippines and Yugoslavia also stressed this view. Although French residents in Morocco were in a privileged position, it could not surely be claimed that the Moroccans had no international status or that their affairs were inseparably bound up with those of the French. Furthermore, the Act of Algeciras, signed by twelve States, had safeguarded the sovereignty and independence of the Sultan, the integrity of his domains and the economic freedom on an equal footing, of all States which traded with Morocco. That Treaty was still in force.

The representatives of Australia, Belgium, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, the Union of South Africa and the United States questioned the competence of the Assembly to examine the question.

The representative of the United Kingdom, in particular, considered that in dealing with the question, the Assembly was usurping functions to which it was not entitled. As the Permanent Court and the International Court of Justice had recognized, the Franco-Moroccan Protectorate Treaty was valid. Unlike the League of Nations, however, the United Nations had no general power to revise treaties. As regards the reference made to Article 103 of the Charter, which provides that the obligations of the Charter take precedence over other obligations, that Article would be applicable only if there were a specific legal conflict between the Charter and the Protectorate Treaty, and that was not the case. Under that Treaty, Morocco, while retaining certain attributes of sovereignty, had vested the conduct of its foreign affairs in France. Questions arising between the two parties had ceased to have an international character.

The Charter recognized the existence of dependent territories by the very fact that it dealt with them in Chapter XI and XII, it was stated. In the case of a Protectorate not under Trusteeship, the United Nations had, at most, the right and responsibilities which it had under Chapter XI, in relation to Non-Self-Governing Territories, not those of the Chapter on the Trusteeship System, which implied the acceptance of actual supervision by the United Nations. The only obligation incumbent on Members of the United Nations under Article 73 was that of transmitting information on Non-Self-Governing Territories to the Secretary-General; nowhere in Chapter XI was it provided that the United Nations could intervene in the political relations between the parties concerned.

It could not be claimed, he said, that international peace was threatened since there was no dispute between fully independent States. Consequently, neither an international dispute nor a threat to international peace was involved. Moreover, the limitations placed upon the General Assembly's powers in Article 10 applied to the enumeration of its specific powers in Articles 11 to 17. In other words, the General Assembly could not, under Article 14 or Article 10, either discuss or make recommendations that were not within the scope of the Charter. Furthermore, the matters to which Article 2, paragraph 7, applied, because they were matters of domestic jurisdiction, were excluded from the scope of the Charter.⁷³

The representative of the Netherlands said that as the competence of the Committee had been denied by France, without whose co-operation no practical results could be expected, he believed that no intervention by the Assembly could serve any constructive purpose.

⁷³ For texts of these articles, see pp. 10-12.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR maintained that the United Nations was competent to consider the question and referred to the political, social and economic conditions of the Moroccan people. The representative of the USSR, in particular, argued that Morocco was a non-self-governing territory within the meaning of the Charter and that this was recognized by the French themselves. The United Nations had a special responsibility to such territories. States administering those territories had assumed a particular obligation which was likewise determined by the Charter. France, under Article 73 of the Charter, had undertaken to promote and ensure the political, economic, social and educational advancements of the people of Morocco as one of its non-self-governing territories. The French Government had failed to abide by its obligations, he stated. He maintained that:

(1) French monopolists had taken over the natural resources and the best lands of Morocco and were dominating its industrial, financial, social and cultural enterprises; (2) the part played by the United States in the foreign trade of Morocco, particularly imports, was growing yearly; (3) lawlessness and the subjection of the Moroccan citizens to abuse and injustice were part of a systematic policy of discrimination against the Moroccan population; (4) Moroccans did not enjoy the right to form trade unions and their wages were always lower than those of European workers; (5) in public health and national education, discrimination also prevailed; (6) expenditures allocated from the national income for services for the Moroccan population and for the colonists were entirely out of proportion; and (7) the Moroccan people had been excluded from any participation in the government of their country.

Since 1914, the powers of the French Resident General had been constantly used to suppress the national liberation movement, the USSR representative stated. All public and private assemblies were prohibited by law; Moroccans were persecuted, condemned or imprisoned for participating in private assemblies and for distributing or possessing pamphlets criticizing the French authorities. The complete absence of freedom of speech, of assembly and of the Press, and the absence of the right to organize trade unions could not have failed to stir the indignation of the indigenous population, especially as it had been provoked constantly by the use of force.

The tense situation in Morocco had been considerably worsened when the territory had been turned into a military base for the United States, the representative of the USSR said. Morocco played one of the major roles in the strategic plans of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In December 1950, the Government of France had concluded a secret agreement with the Government of the United States permitting the United States to build air bases in Morocco and to maintain American troops there, even in peacetime. By its actions in Morocco, designed to suppress the liberation movement and to produce a regime of militarization, the French Government had created a serious situation which required careful scrutiny by the United Nations.

The General Assembly should take measures for the solution of the Moroccan question in accordance with the principles of the Charter, and especially with paragraph 2 of Article I, those representatives said.

At the 549th meeting of the Committee on 15 December, Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen submitted a draft resolution (A/C.1/L.12).

In terms of this draft, the Assembly would:

(1) recall that the International Court, in its judgment of 27 August 1952, had pronounced that it was common ground that the characteristic of the status of Morocco was respect for the three principles stated in the preamble to the General Act of Algeciras, namely the sovereignty and independence of the Sultan, the integrity of his domains and economic liberty without any inequality; (2) state that it was mindful that Morocco had entered into solemn covenants in the exercise of its sovereign rights; and (3) state that it was conscious that France respected solemn covenants, the law of nations and the rights and desires of peoples to liberty and equality as well as the rights of peoples and nations under the Charter.

The Assembly would also:

(1) note that the Sultan and people of Morocco had proclaimed their desire for the early attainment of their national aspirations through peaceful methods of negotiation and settlement; (2) note that the International Court had recorded that it was not disputed by France that Morocco, even under the Protectorate, had retained its personality as a State in international law; and (3) state that it considered that the existing situation in Morocco caused deep concern and adversely affected Franco-Moroccan relations and peaceful conditions in the world.

In its operative part, the draft resolution would have the Assembly request the Government of France and the Sultan of Morocco to enter into negotiations to reach an early peaceful settlement in accord with the sovereignty of Morocco, the aspirations of its people and the United Nations Charter.

In explaining the joint draft resolution, the representatives of India and the Philippines pointed out that the draft did not condemn nor ask for sanctions against France; it made no provision for arraignment before a court. It merely noted that Moroccan sovereignty had been violated and, therefore, asked the parties concerned to enter into negotiations to reach a peaceful settlement of the situation in accord with the sovereignty of Morocco, the aspirations of the Moroccan people, and the principles of the United Nations. The draft resolution was based on two premises: the first, that France as a rule respected the covenants it had signed, the law of nations and the rights and desires of peoples to liberty and equality; the second, that the Sultan and the people of Morocco had proclaimed their desire for the early attainment of their national aspirations by peaceful methods of negotiations.

The draft, they said, was a modest, moderate and reasonable proposal, which took into account the national aspirations of the Moroccan people and the principles of the Charter. It also took into account the apprehensions which certain delegations had expressed during the debate on the Tunisian question. In submitting the joint draft resolution, the sponsors were in no way moved by a desire to bring about the condemnation of a great and honoured Member of the United Nations or to jeopardize the security of a vital area of the world. Their only concern was to bring the moral force of the United Nations to bear upon both parties so that the methods of peaceful negotiations might be set in motion as early as possible, and so that the Moroccan people might make a start on the road back to self-government.

At the 550th meeting, on 16 December 1952, a joint draft resolution (A/C.1/L.13) by Brazil, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela was submitted.

In terms of this draft, the Assembly would:

(1) state that it was mindful of the necessity of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples; (2) state that it considered that the United Nations should strive towards removing any causes or factors of misunderstanding among Member States, thus reasserting the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security; (3) express its confidence that France would endeavour to further the fundamental liberties of the people of Morocco, in conformity with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter; (4) express the hope that the parties would continue negotiations on an urgent basis towards developing the free political institutions of the people of Morocco, with due regard to legitimate rights and interests under the established norms and practices of the Law of Nations; and (5) appeal to the parties to conduct their relations in an atmosphere of goodwill, mutual confidence and respect and to settle their disputes in accordance with the spirit of the Charter, thus refraining from any acts or measures likely to aggravate the existing tension.

Introducing the joint draft, the representative of Brazil said that it was based on respect for the legitimate rights and interests of all parties.

The representative of Pakistan stated, at the 552nd meeting on 17 December 1952, that the thirteen-Power joint draft resolution (A/C.1/L.12) embodied provisions likely to solve the problem. It had been modelled on the draft resolution on Tunisia adopted by the Committee. Those parts of the original thirteen-Power proposal concerning Tunisia, which had been rejected, had been withdrawn from the draft on Morocco, so that the latter might be adopted unanimously. In case it were not adopted, his delegation proposed the substitution of an amendment (A/C.1/L.14) to the second operative paragraph of the eleven-Power draft resolution (A/C.1/L.13), in terms of which the Assembly would express the hope that the parties would continue negotiations on an urgent basis with a view to bringing about self-government for Moroccans in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations.

At the 552nd meeting on 17 December, the Committee voted paragraph by paragraph on the thirteen-Power draft (A/C.1/L.12).

By 26 votes to 21, with 7 abstentions, it adopted that part of the preamble which declared that the Assembly was conscious that France respected the rights and desires of peoples to liberty and equality as well as the rights of peoples and nations under the United Nations Charter. By votes ranging from 25 to 20, with 10 abstentions, to 27 to 18, with 9 abstentions, however, the Committee rejected the remainder of the preamble. The operative part of the joint draft was rejected by 27 votes to 25, with 3 abstentions, and the amended joint draft as a whole was accordingly rejected.

The Committee adopted, by 28 votes to 23, with 4 abstentions, the amendment by Pakistan (A/C.1/L.14) to the eleven-Power draft (A/C.1/L.13). It adopted the remaining paragraphs of the draft in separate votes, ranging from 44 to 3, with 9 abstentions, to 50 to 3, with 3 abstentions. It adopted the amended draft as a whole by 40 votes to 5, with 11 abstentions.

3. Resolution Adopted by the General Assembly

At the 407th plenary meeting on 19 December 1952 the Assembly considered the draft resolution recommended by the First Committee (A/2325).

Brazil, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela submitted an amendment (A/L.135) to the second operative paragraph of the draft resolution (the paragraph originally proposed as an amendment by Pakistan). The amendment proposed to express the hope for negotiations "towards developing the free political institutions of the people of Morocco, with due regard to legitimate rights and interests under the established norms and practices of the law of nations" in place of negotiations "with a view to bringing about self-government for Moroccans in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations".

The Assembly adopted the amendment by a roll-call vote of 29 to 8, with 22 abstentions. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Israel, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela.

Against: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Guatemala, Pakistan, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yemen.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Belgium, Burma, China, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia.

The Assembly adopted by a roll-call vote of 45 to 3, with 11 abstentions, the draft resolution recommended by the First Committee, as amended. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against: Belgium, Luxembourg, Union of South Africa.

Abstaining: Australia, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Netherlands, Pakistan, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom.

The resolution (612 (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Having debated the "Question of Morocco", as proposed by thirteen Member States in document A/2175,

"Mindful of the necessity of developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

"Considering that the United Nations, as a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of their common ends under the Charter, should strive towards removing any causes or factors of misunderstanding among Member States, thus reasserting the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security,

"1. Expresses the confidence that, in pursuance of its proclaimed policies, the Government of France will endeavour to further the fundamental liberties of the people of Morocco, in conformity with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter;

"2. Expresses the hope that the parties will continue negotiations on an urgent basis towards developing the free political institutions of the people of Morocco, with due regard to legitimate rights and interests under the established norms and practices of the law of nations;

"3. Appeals to the parties to conduct their relations in an atmosphere of goodwill, mutual confidence and respect and to settle their disputes in accordance with the spirit of the Charter, thus refraining from any acts or measures likely to aggravate the present tension."

G. REPATRIATION OF GREEK CHILDREN

The question of the repatriation of Greek children, which was considered by the General Assembly as part of the Greek question every year from its third to sixth session, was before the Assembly as a separate item at its seventh session.

The Assembly had recommended, in resolution 193 C (III) of 27 November 1948, the return to Greece of Greek children away from their homes when the children, their father or mother or, in his or her absence, their closest relative expressed a wish to that effect; it had reiterated this recommendation in subsequent years. It had also in resolution 193 C (III) asked that the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies organize and ensure liaison with the national Red Cross organizations of the States concerned with a view to the implementation of the recommendation. Accordingly, reports had been received from these organizations in subsequent years and the Assembly had called upon them to continue their work and to report further.⁷⁴

At its seventh session, the Assembly had before it the fourth general report (A/2236) and a supplementary report (A/2236/Add.1) of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies, submitted in accordance with resolution 517 (VI), as well as a report from the Secretary-General (A/2241 and Corr.1) submitted under the same resolution.

⁷⁴ The relevant Assembly resolutions are 193 C (III), 228 B (IV), 382 C (V) and 517 (VI). The texts of these resolutions may be found in Y.U.N., 1948-49, pp. 244, 256, Y.U.N., 1950, p. 381 and Y.U.N., 1951, p. 337. An account of the consideration leading to the adoption of these resolutions is also given in these volumes.

1. Reports of the International Red Cross Organizations

The fourth general report (A/2236) of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies, dated 1 October 1952, described the efforts of the two organizations for the repatriation of Greek children in the previous twelve months and, in addition, reviewed their work in 1949, 1950 and 1951—work which, they said, had proved unsuccessful except for the return of a number of children from Yugoslavia.

In transmitting the report the organizations stated that they considered that they had exhausted all possible ways available to them in seeking a solution of the problem (except for the opportunities that might still occur of repatriating Greek children living in Yugoslavia), and that, accordingly, they felt obliged to suspend their work for the time being. They would be ready to resume this work if and when the United Nations or the governments concerned succeeded in establishing conditions, at the governmental level, which would make practical action by the Red Cross possible and useful. They also remained at the disposal of any of the governments concerned which might apply for their assistance in preparing or carrying out repatriation.

Giving a chronological account of their efforts, the Red Cross organizations stated that as far back as the beginning of 1949 each of the harbouring countries, Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania and Yugoslavia, had been asked for a list of Greek children living on its territory, for purposes of identification and to determine, in consultation with the national Red Cross Society of the State concerned, their eligibility for repatriation. Failing the receipt of that information, lists of children claimed through the Greek Red Cross had been sent to those countries with the request that they indicate which of the children were living in their territory. Up to the time of the report, it was stated, requests for the repatriation of 12,661 children had been received through the Greek Red Cross. No practical action, however, it was stated, had been taken by any of the harbouring countries except Yugoslavia. Efforts to make direct contacts with the national Red Cross organizations of those countries, for joint study of problems of repatriation including identification and authenticity of claims, had also failed except in the case of Yugoslavia from which 469 children had been repatriated up to 30 September 1952.

The report dealt, in particular, with the case of 138 Greek children⁷⁵ identified in Czechoslovakia in 1949 by the Red Cross of that country. The international Red Cross organizations considered that most of these children were eligible for repatriation on the basis of documents which had been obtained in 1950 at the request of the Czechoslovak Red Cross. With the agreement of the Government of Czechoslovakia, negotiations were resumed in April 1952 at Prague between the representatives of the international Red Cross organizations and those of the Czechoslovak Red Cross for the repatriation of these children. The negotiations, however, had to be broken off since the representatives of the Czechoslovak Red Cross refused to discuss the specific case of the 138 children, insisting that a discussion should first be held on the general situation of children in Greece, particularly of the question as to whether they suffered from political discrimination.

The report also referred to the efforts made to return to their families Greek children separated from them, wherever the actual place of residence of the families might be, on the same lines as had been adopted for returning Greek children to their families in Greece. Lists of Greek children living in Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Albania, Bulgaria, Greece and Poland, who were claimed by their families in Yugoslavia, were submitted by the Yugoslav Red Cross and forwarded to the Red Cross Societies in the harbouring countries; lists submitted by the Red Cross Societies of Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia and Hungary, as well as applications from relatives resident in Poland for the return to their parents or relatives in these countries of Greek children residing in Yugoslavia were similarly submitted to the Yugoslav Red Cross Society. The only response had been from Yugoslavia.

The Yugoslav Red Cross informed the international Red Cross organizations on 17 January 1952 that, in response to requests from parents in Czechoslovakia for 123 Greek children living in Yugoslavia, it had identified 57 of the children and would be prepared to transfer them as soon as the relevant documents were received. On 3 June the Yugoslav Red Cross notified its willingness to transfer to Czechoslovakia twelve such children in respect of whom the necessary documents had been made available. The international Red Cross organizations, it was stated, had transmitted the information to the Czechoslovak Red Cross, informing it that the transfer would be carried out in the same manner as in Greece, that is, in the presence of a representative of the international Red Cross organizations who would accompany the children until they were delivered to their relatives. The international Red Cross organizations also asked for a guarantee that the children would be immediately returned to their parents with whom they would live in future.

⁷⁵ For developments in the case up to January 1952, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 331-33.

The report further referred to a number of claims from Hungary and Czechoslovakia for children living in Yugoslavia for which the Yugoslav Red Cross had not found the necessary authentication.

The supplementary report (A/2236/Add.1), dated 13 November 1952, covered events since 1 October 1952 and described the repatriation of 69 Greek children from Yugoslavia in October 1952 and their return to their relatives in Greece. It stated that, to date, 538 children had been repatriated from Yugoslavia, which had identified a further 100 Greek children living in its territory. The Greek Red Cross had thus far received the list and had prepared documents for 34 of them.

On 18 October, it was reported, the Yugoslav Red Cross had transmitted to the international Red Cross organizations a new list of thirteen children identified in Yugoslavia whose relatives lived in Czechoslovakia. It was prepared to arrange for their transfer to Czechoslovakia. The request was transmitted to the Czechoslovak Red Cross which was invited to make such proposals as it desired for the organization of the transfer. At the same time the attention of the Czechoslovak Red Cross was drawn to the list of twelve children forwarded to them earlier. No reply, the report said, had been received from Czechoslovakia, so far, to either of the communications.

2. Report of the Secretary-General

The report of the Secretary-General (A/2241), dated 30 October 1952, concerned the efforts made by him and the Standing Committee established under General Assembly resolution 382 C (V) for the repatriation of Greek children. It stated that the text of resolution 517 (VI)⁷⁶ of 2 February 1952 had been transmitted to the Governments concerned, particular attention being drawn to the provisions in which the General Assembly urged "all countries harbouring Greek children to take steps to facilitate the early return of the children to their homes". No replies had been received and in the past year, as in the previous year, it was noted, no Greek children were repatriated except from Yugoslavia.

The Standing Committee, consisting of C. Holguin de Lavalle (Peru), S. P. Lopez (Philippines) and S. Grafström (Sweden), it was reported, reviewed in May 1952 the situation resulting from the breakdown in April of the negotiations in Prague between representatives of the Czechoslovak Red Cross and the international Red Cross organizations. The Committee's subsequent effort to secure through the good offices of the Czechoslovak representative to the United Nations a resumption of the negotiations, beginning with the consideration of the cases of the 138 Greek children, was unsuccessful.

3. Consideration by the Ad Hoc Political Committee

The question was considered by the Ad Hoc Political Committee at its 22nd to 24th meetings between 21 and 24 November 1952.

At the outset, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on the Repatriation of Greek Children expressed regret that none of the countries directly concerned, with the exception of Yugoslavia, had repatriated any Greek children. He declared that, while the Committee members would be happy to continue their efforts if any results were to be hoped for, it seemed preferable, in view of the insurmountable obstacles encountered, that the Committee should be dissolved. He also paid tribute to the efforts of the international Red Cross organizations and thanked the Yugoslav Government for its co-operative attitude.

The Committee had before it a joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.18) submitted by Brazil and New Zealand, under which the General Assembly would, among other things:

(1) recall that the States harbouring Greek children had not opposed the recommendations of earlier Assembly resolutions in the matter; (2) express deep regret that, except for Yugoslavia, none of the harbouring States had complied with the recommendations; (3) condemn the failure of those States to co-operate in efforts to enable the Greek children to return to their homes; and (4) decide to discontinue the Standing Committee and to agree to the suspension of the work of the international Red Cross organizations (except in Yugoslavia where it would be requested to continue work until all children had been repatriated) until such time as conditions making practical action by the Red Cross possible and useful had been established.

Two amendments were proposed to the joint draft resolution:

(1) A Byelorussian SSR amendment (A/AC.61/L.20) which would delete the two paragraphs expressing regret that none of the harbouring States except Yugoslavia had complied with the Assembly resolutions and condemning their failure to co-operate;

(2) An Ecuadorean amendment (A/AC.61/L.21) which, as amended at the suggestion of China, would: (a) provide for the discontinuance of the Standing Committee but decide not to suspend the work of the international Red Cross organizations; and (b) would request them to continue their work, not only in Yugoslavia, but until all children had been repatriated.

⁷⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 337.

A majority of representatives, including those of Australia, Belgium, Brazil, China, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Honduras, the Netherlands, Norway, the Philippines, Sweden, Turkey, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States, supported the draft resolution. While praising the efforts of the international Red Cross organizations and the Standing Committee and the co-operative attitude of Yugoslavia, they expressed deep regret at the refusal of the other countries which harboured Greek children to heed repeated Assembly resolutions on that subject.

The representatives of New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom expressed the view that the USSR partly shared the responsibility for the refusal of those countries to assist in the repatriation of Greek children because it had failed to exercise its influence on them to secure repatriation.

The representative of the United States said that it was important to ascertain the significance of the situation in relation to the maintenance of peace. The fact that no Member had ever opposed the Assembly resolutions on the repatriation of Greek children showed the unanimity of opinion on that question. But the attitude of "Cominform" countries had shown that, even when no vital political interests were involved, they refused to act like respectable members of the international community. The United Nations, she said, must register its concern for the situation by condemning the countries which were responsible for it.

The representative of Cuba, while condemning the detention of Greek children, drew attention to the parallel situation which, he said, existed in the USSR where 3,000 Spanish children were detained. These children, he stated, had reached the USSR in 1937 from Bilbao and were being detained for propaganda purposes. He denounced the detention of these children.

The representative of Greece declared that at its fourth, fifth and sixth sessions, the Assembly had already noted that none of the Greek children harboured in Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Romania, the USSR and East Germany had been repatriated and that none of those countries had taken steps to implement the various resolutions of the Assembly on the subject. They had, he said, on the contrary, systematically hampered the work of the international committees. They had refused them access to their territories; had failed to reply to United Nations communications and refused to enter into direct contact with the International Red Cross. Reviewing the recent refusal of Czechoslovakia to consider the case of the 138 Greek children identified there, he declared that if that Government's attitude were based upon concern for the children's welfare, its fears could be dispelled by the fact that all the children repatriated from Yugoslavia had been returned to their parents under the personal supervision of accredited representatives of the International Red Cross.

The overwhelming mass of evidence, the Greek representative stated, led only to the conclusion that the countries of the Soviet bloc had no intention of returning the Greek children to their homeland. After five years of Communist indoctrination, he added, those children must be well advanced on the road indicated for them in a speech by the Secretary-General of the Greek Communist Party when in 1950 he referred to them as fighters in the army which would liberate the Greek people. The conscience of the civilized world demanded a prompt settlement of this purely humanitarian problem, but the countries in question were making use of it for their reprehensible political ends. He exhorted the Assembly to condemn their attitude and stated that his Government reserved its right to do everything possible for the deliverance of the children.

The representative of Yugoslavia said that the repatriation of Greek children had always been viewed by his Government as a humanitarian problem. It had done everything possible to repatriate children whose parents were in Greece. However, a number of children had not yet been claimed by their parents and it had therefore not been possible to repatriate them.

As to Greek children whose parents were in other Eastern European countries, only twelve authenticated applications had been received by July 1952. Yugoslavia had made known its readiness to return these children to their parents, but the authorities in the countries in question had not taken the necessary steps.

There were also children in a number of Eastern European countries, he said, whose parents were in Yugoslavia. In June 1952 the Yugoslav Red Cross had sent the League of Red Cross Societies 98 requests from Greek refugees in Yugoslavia whose children were in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Romania and the USSR. The requests had been passed on to those countries, but none of them had replied.

The Yugoslav representative expressed gratitude to speakers commending Yugoslavia's efforts. If they had had so little success, it was due particularly to the fact that certain countries harbouring Greek children placed political above humanitarian considerations.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR expressed strong opposition to parts of the joint draft resolution, in particular those expressing regret that none of the harbouring States except Yugoslavia had complied with Assembly resolutions and condemning them for failure to co-operate. Stating that they favoured the principle of repatriation, these representatives maintained that the task had been made difficult by justifiable fears of reprisals against the children and their parents on the part of the Greek Government which, they said, still continued repressive measures against democrats, including minors. Moreover, it was maintained, requests for repatriation and lists submitted by the Greek authorities had been falsified. The Greek Government really intended to obtain custody of these children to put them in "re-education homes" which were nothing more than prisons and concentration camps.

In reply to what he called slanderous statements of certain representatives, the representative of the USSR said that, by expecting the USSR to "give orders" to the Eastern European countries harbouring Greek children, those representatives had shown an absolute ignorance of the relations prevailing among the people's democracies, relations which were based on respect for the sovereignty and independence of States.

The representative of Czechoslovakia stated that from the outset his Government had favoured the idea of repatriation. Not only had it supported the Assembly resolution of 1948, but it had undertaken, in co-operation with the Czechoslovak Red Cross, to give it practical effect. A list of 138 Greek children identified in Czechoslovakia had been sent to Geneva; meanwhile the children had been well cared for. It appeared, he said, that practically none of the requests for the return of those children had been written by the applicants themselves, and that in many cases they had been signed by a third party. Of the 138 cases, only 78 had been verified as to authenticity, as agreed, by the signatures of two members of the International Red Cross Mission to Greece. In 30 cases, there had been no signature at all. Obviously, the conditions for voluntary repatriation set out in the Assembly resolution were not being fulfilled.

In reply, the representative of Greece pointed out that the international Red Cross organizations had stated that they had received renewed assurances from the Greek Government that repatriated children would immediately be returned to their parents and that no discriminatory measures would be taken against the children or the parents. Those organizations had also testified to the efficiency of the Greek Red Cross and to the care provided for the children. With regard to the allegation of forged repatriation requests, he quoted the international Red Cross organizations as having pointed out that failure of the harbouring countries to co-operate had made it impossible to verify requests for repatriation. The Greek Government had itself suggested that the national Red Cross organizations of those countries should make specific reference to any doubtful cases.

The representative of Uruguay stated that no question involving children should be made contingent on the solution of a political problem. He felt that the work of the Red Cross should be continued and that it should not be restricted to Yugoslavia alone. Agreeing with this view, the representative of Ecuador urged acceptance of his amendment, which was also supported by the representatives of Cuba, El Salvador, Honduras, Israel and Lebanon.

The sponsors of the joint draft resolution, supported by the representative of Greece, however, opposed the amendment. They stated that the draft resolution recognized the facts of a tragic situation and that the continuance of committees which were being flouted was harmful to the reputation of the United Nations.

The representatives of Guatemala, Indonesia, Israel, Lebanon and Mexico expressed their intention of either abstaining or voting against the paragraph condemning the failure of the harbouring States other than Yugoslavia to co-operate. The representative of Mexico stated that such condemnation should be reserved for extreme cases such as aggression.

At the 24th meeting of the Ad Hoc Political Committee on 24 November, the first part of the Byelorussian SSR amendment (A/AC.61/L20) was rejected by 41 votes to 5, with 11 abstentions, and the second part by 36 votes to 5, with 16 abstentions. The first part of the Ecuadorean amendment (A/AC.61/L.21) was adopted by 21 votes to 20, with 17 abstentions, and the second part by 23 votes to 11, with 20 abstentions.

The various paragraphs of the joint draft resolution were voted on separately and were adopted in votes ranging from 54 to none, with 5 abstentions, to 36 to 5, with 17 abstentions. The draft resolution as a whole, as amended, was adopted by 46 votes to 5, with 7 abstentions.

4. Consideration by the General Assembly in Plenary Session

The report of the Ad Hoc Political Committee (A/2295) was considered by the General Assembly at its 404th plenary meeting on 17 December.

The representative of New Zealand, supported by the representatives of Brazil and Sweden, reminded the Assembly that for four years it had, with pitifully small results, attempted to rescue and to help the Greek children abducted from their homeland and kept in countries of Eastern Europe. The joint draft resolution sponsored in the Ad Hoc Political Committee by Brazil and New Zealand, it was felt, met the facts of the situation fairly and frankly. The draft resolution did not close the door on repatriation because it provided for resumption of work by the Red Cross agencies as soon as conditions were established making practical action by them possible and useful. It had been amended by Members who found it unpalatable to suspend the work of the Red Cross, lest it appear that the United Nations was refusing to act when something might still be done. However, the international Red Cross organizations had since then requested (A/2277) that the final General Assembly resolution take note, among other things, of the fact that continuation of their work was absolutely conditional on the removal of obstacles described in their report (A/2236) and that Red Cross action could not produce results unless favourable conditions were created by the Governments concerned. He suggested that the Assembly recognize those facts. Accordingly, his delegation had submitted amendments (A/L.128) to restore the original text of the draft resolution.

The representative of Ecuador, speaking also on behalf of the delegation of Uruguay, explained that although its amendment had been intended to leave open the last possibility of an action in defence of the interests of humanity, it was now ready to accept the situation and to support the New Zealand amendment.

The representative of Greece stated that by supporting the recommendation of the Ad Hoc Political Committee, as amended by New Zealand, his delegation accepted a tragic fate rendered inevitable by unprecedented human callousness. Both the international Red Cross agencies and the Standing Committee had been explicit as regards the responsibility for a situation which would be a slur on the record of this century. Their reports gave an accurate picture of the difficulties encountered in drawing up the lists of the abducted children, difficulties which the harbouring countries had not co-operated in resolving. As for allegations that children repatriated from Yugoslavia were not returned to their families, the reports bore witness to the scrupulous observance by the Greek Government of its promises with regard to the immediate reunion of the repatriated children with their parents.

Although the solution to this problem seemed remote, the door was open, however, and Greece continued to hope that, with God's help and the moral assistance of the civilized world, its lost children would one day be restored to it.

The New Zealand amendments (A/L.128) were adopted by 46 votes to none, with 9 abstentions, and 49 votes to none, with 9 abstentions.

Two amendments (A/L.130) submitted by the Byelorussian SSR delegation, identical with those rejected by the Ad Hoc Political Committee, were then rejected by 41 votes to 5, with 9 abstentions, and 43 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions, respectively.

Paragraphs 3 and 4 were voted on separately and were adopted by 41 votes to 5, with 9 abstentions, and by 43 votes to 5, with 11 abstentions, respectively.

The draft resolution, as amended, was adopted by 46 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions, as resolution 618(VII). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Viewing with grave concern the report of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies and the report of the Secretary-General and the Standing Committee on the Repatriation of Greek Children,

"1. Thanks the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross Societies, the Standing Committee on the Repatriation of Greek Children and the Secretary-General for their efforts to give effect to General Assembly resolutions 193 C (III), 288 B (IV), 382 C (V) and 517 (VI);

"2. Recalls that the States harbouring Greek children have not opposed the successive recommendations of the General Assembly for the solution of the problem of repatriating these children;

"3. Expresses deep regret that, except for Yugoslavia, none of the harbouring States has complied with these recommendations;

"4. Condemns the failure of the harbouring States other than Yugoslavia to co-operate in efforts to enable the Greek children to return to their homes;

"5. Decides to discontinue the Standing Committee on the Repatriation of Greek Children, and agrees to the suspension of the work of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies—with the exception of the activities referred to in paragraph 7 below—until such time as conditions making practical action by the Red Cross possible and useful are established;

"6. Notes with satisfaction that further groups of Greek children have been repatriated from Yugoslavia;

"7. Requests the International Committee of the Red Cross and the League of Red Cross Societies to continue their work in Yugoslavia until all children have been repatriated."

H. WORK OF THE BALKAN SUB-COMMISSION OF THE PEACE OBSERVATION COMMISSION

The Sub-Commission on the Balkans was established by the Peace Observation Commission on 23 January 1952 at the request of the General Assembly.⁷⁷

At its first meeting in Paris on 31 January the Sub-Commission decided, in accordance with its terms of reference and at the request of Greece, to send observers to the frontier areas of that country. It invited the Member States represented on the Sub-Commission—Colombia, France, Pakistan, Sweden and the United States—each to make an observer available to the Sub-Commission. The United Kingdom, furthermore, was invited to make an observer available to serve as principal observer. The Governments concerned took action accordingly.

At its next meeting on 2 May in New York, the Sub-Commission took note of the first situation report from the observers and approved various provisional instructions. The observers were requested to forward periodic general reports giving a factual and technical appraisal of the situation. Matters regarded as of particular importance were to be the subject of special reports. The observers were instructed to report on incidents to which the Greek Government called their attention, and also, in so far as they were clearly in a position to do so, to report on incidents which had been the subject of complaints by Albania or Bulgaria in communications to the Secretary-General. A number of such complaints were received during 1952. Albania and Bulgaria did not during the year admit the observers to their territories.

Apart from the periodic reports, which noted a generally quiet situation along the Greek frontier, the observers also submitted special reports on three occasions in 1952: one regarding a frontier incident on the Greek-Albanian frontier on 16 July in which a Greek citizen was killed (A/CN.7/SC.1/17); another regarding some frontier incidents occurring on 26 and 27 July along the Evros river on the Greek-Bulgarian frontier during which four Greek citizens were killed (A/CN.7/SC.1/29); and a third report regarding an incident on 12 August in the Belles Mountains on the Greek-Bulgarian frontier during which two Greek soldiers were killed (A/CN.7/SC.1/35).

The Balkan Sub-Commission took note of the various reports from the observers, but did not find it necessary to report to the Peace Observation Commission during 1952. On 12 December 1952, the Peace Observation Commission decided to continue the Sub-Commission with the same authority and the same membership (A/CN.7/8).

I. TREATMENT OF PEOPLE OF INDIAN ORIGIN IN THE UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

The question of the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa was first brought before the General Assembly by India in 1946, and was discussed at the first, second, third, fifth and sixth sessions. None of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly had been implemented before the opening of its seventh session.

On 12 January 1952, during its sixth session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 511 (VI) recommending the establishment of a commission of three members to assist the parties, namely India, Pakistan and the Union of South Africa, in carrying through appropriate negotiations.⁷⁸ If members of the commission were not nominated by the parties, the Secretary-General was requested, at his discretion, to assist them with a view to facilitating negotiations and, after consulting the Governments concerned, to appoint an individual for the purpose. The resolution stipulated that the question should be included in the agenda of the Assembly's seventh session.

1. Report of the Secretary-General

In a special report (A/2218) on 10 October 1952, the Secretary-General informed the General Assembly of developments since the adoption of resolution 511 (VI) including the failure of the parties concerned to nominate members to the proposed commission. On 22 February 1952 the ⁷⁷ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 14, 328-30.

⁷⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 353. One member was to be nominated by the Union of South Africa, one jointly by India and Pakistan, and the third by the other two members or, in default of agreement between them within a reasonable time, by the Secretary-General.

Union of South Africa informed the Secretary-General that it was not able to accept the terms of the resolution, as it constituted interference in a matter which was essentially within the Union's jurisdiction, but expressed readiness to participate in a round-table conference on the basis of the formula agreed to at Capetown in February 1950, a formula which allowed the widest freedom of discussion to all parties without any further conditions.

India, on 27 February 1952, indicated that, for reasons previously explained, it could not agree to the resumption of the negotiations on the basis proposed by the Union's Government. The reasons included refusal of the Union not to add to the disabilities of persons of Indian origin pending the proposed round-table conference. It added that, in view of the Union's reply, the nomination of the joint representative of India and Pakistan on the proposed commission could serve no useful purpose.

On 3 March 1952 Pakistan stated that, in view of the conflicting and irreconcilable points of view contained in the communications from the Union Government and India, it was clear that no useful purpose would be served by nominating the joint representative.

Subsequent consultations with representatives of the three Governments concerned and with those of other Governments forced the Secretary-General, the report stated, to the conclusion that there was at present no possible solution to the problem and that, consequently, the appointment of an individual under the terms of paragraph 3 of resolution 511(VI) was not yet opportune.

The special report concluded by stating that in late September 1952 the three Governments concerned informed the Secretary-General of their recent positions regarding resolution 511(VI), positions which were substantially the same as those taken in the course of the debate at the Assembly's sixth session.

Pursuant to resolution 511(VI), the question was placed on the provisional agenda of the Assembly's seventh session. At the 79th meeting of the General Committee, on 15 October, and at the 380th plenary meeting, on 16 October 1952, the representative of the Union of South Africa argued that the subject was not one which could be appropriately considered by the Assembly because it concerned a matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the Union of South Africa.

The General Committee recommended its inclusion. The General Assembly, by 46 votes to one, with 6 abstentions, rejected a formal proposal of the representative of the Union Government to exclude the item from the agenda. It then referred the question to the Ad Hoc Political Committee which considered it at its 8th to 12th meetings from 3 to 11 November 1952.

2. Consideration by the Ad Hoc Political Committee

Opening the debate in the Ad Hoc Political Committee, the representative of the Union of South Africa stated that Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter debarred the Assembly from considering the matter since it fell wholly within the domestic jurisdiction of his Government. He could not, therefore, deal with the merits of the question. Certain facts, however, should be reiterated in order that the "complaint"—or, to be more correct, the "campaign"—against the Union of South Africa might be seen in its true colours. While the Charter, as drafted in San Francisco, remained unchanged, his Government would continue its stand and would not consider itself bound to give effect to Assembly resolutions on the matter.

What could the United Nations gain, he asked, by continuing year after year to adopt resolutions which, because they were unconstitutional, his Government could not accept?

The Union Government, he pointed out, had repeatedly indicated its willingness to enter into direct negotiations on the matter with India and Pakistan on the basis of the formula agreed upon between the three Governments in Capetown in 1950. Did India sincerely desire to achieve a solution on the matter, he asked, or was it merely endeavouring to keep the issue before the United Nations in order to further its own political interests? Not once since 1946 had India given any real proof that it wished to seek an amicable settlement. On the contrary, it had applied trade sanctions against South Africa and resorted to tactics which gave world opinion a distorted picture of the facts and encouraged intransigence among people of Indian origin in that country.

Despite the alleged hardships to which they were being subjected, the people of Indian origin continued to remain in the country even though the South African Government had offered to provide them with free passage to India and to pay them a special allowance.

By affording India an annual opportunity to pursue its vendetta against the Union of South Africa, the United Nations was not acting in the interest of international peace and goodwill. He hoped that the Committee would state clearly that the Assembly did not intend to permit the United Nations to be used, unconstitutionally and improperly, as a propaganda forum for the promotion of a campaign of vilification against a Member State.

The representative of India reviewed her country's attempts since 1946 to solve the problem by direct negotiations. In accordance with resolution 265(III) it had been agreed in Capetown in 1950 to convene a round-table conference to explore all possible ways and means of settling the question. That conference had not taken place, she stated, because the Union Government had continued its policy of racial discrimination not only by its action under the Asiatic Land Tenure Amendment Act of 1949 but also by the adoption of a new racial segregation law known as the Group Areas Act. The Union Government had ignored the request of India and Pakistan to delay the enforcement of the latter Act so that the purpose of the proposed conference would not be defeated.

In resolutions 395 (V) and 511(VI) the General Assembly affirmed that a policy of racial segregation (apartheid) was necessarily based on doctrines of racial discrimination and made various recommendations for the purpose of assisting the parties to carry through appropriate negotiations, meanwhile calling upon the Union Government to refrain from the implementation of enforcement of the Group Areas Act. The South African Government, the representative of India declared, had refused to enter into any negotiations with the Governments of India and Pakistan. It was pursuing a policy of denying elementary human rights and fundamental freedoms, systematically and deliberately, to the vast majority of its non-white nationals, and events in South Africa were moving rapidly towards inevitable catastrophe. Race tension was increasing dangerously. India believed it to be its duty to plead once more before the Assembly the cause of the non-white nationals of the Union of South Africa and, in particular, that of the people of Indian origin, who were victims of that Government's policy of racial segregation. In the face of the rapidly deteriorating situation resulting from the enforcement of laws which violated the fundamental principle of the Charter, the Indian representative called on the Assembly to make a new attempt to seek an amicable settlement of the problem. India hoped that the pressure of world opinion, exercised through the United Nations, would induce the Union Government to collaborate in the quest for a solution. It was the duty of the United Nations to defend human values and fundamental human rights without distinction of colour, race or religion. Otherwise, its prestige and authority would be seriously impaired.

Accordingly, at the eighth meeting of the Ad Hoc Political Committee on 3 November, the representative of India introduced a draft resolution (A/AC.61/L5/Rev.1), sponsored jointly by Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand and Yemen. Under that draft resolution the General Assembly would:

(1) note that the Government of the Union of South Africa had continued to enforce the Group Areas Act in contravention of resolutions 395(V) and 511(VI) and would establish a United Nations Good Offices Commission with a view to arranging and assisting in negotiations between the parties to solve the dispute in accordance with the principles and purposes of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; and (2) call upon the Union Government to suspend implementation of enforcement of the Group Areas Act pending the conclusion of such negotiations and would include the item in the agenda of the eighth session.

At the twelfth meeting on 11 November the sponsors added a clause stating that the members of the Good Offices Commission should be nominated by the President of the General Assembly.

The representative of Pakistan noted that the question of competence of the United Nations had once again been raised by the Union of South Africa in spite of the decisions taken on the question by the overwhelming majority at previous sessions of the General Assembly. He recalled that only two delegations had voted against resolution 511(VI). Consequently, he said, the question of competence should no longer be raised. The fact that fifteen Governments were jointly sponsoring a draft resolution should be regarded by the Union of South Africa as a sign of the times. That Government must ask itself why the resolutions on the question were adopted by an increasing number of votes each year. It was in pursuance of certain moral principles which actuated the larger part of humanity that the question had been again submitted to the United Nations.

It was not possible, he declared, to reconcile the Group Areas Act adopted in June 1950 with resolution 103(I) of the Assembly whereby the Member States had pledged themselves to take the most prompt and energetic steps in order to put an immediate end to racial discrimination in the world. Articles 2 and 3 of the Act established a distinction according to colour among the Union's inhabitants in order to determine their right to occupy or own property in a given region.

That constituted racial discrimination designed to segregate various elements of the population.

The question was the action to be taken by the United Nations. The Assembly had already recommended direct negotiation between the parties, and it was proposed that that recommendation should be renewed. The Government of Pakistan would be happy to participate in such negotiations. Unfortunately this had hitherto been impossible because the Union Government had not agreed to even a temporary halt in the passage or enforcement of the Group Areas Act, which would have been a necessary condition for successful negotiations. He reviewed the failure of the measures envisaged in resolution 511 (VI) and declared that, despite the failure of these very moderate measures, the United Nations must not give up, but must adopt energetic measures to end religious persecution and racial discrimination in accordance with resolution 103(I).

Assertions by the Union of South Africa that any action by the United Nations would constitute interference should not cause the United Nations to drop the question, he said. The Assembly could not cast aside the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; it should reaffirm the principles on which the United Nations was founded. Moreover, it was impossible to say that the stand of any Government would never change. His Government did not give up hope that the Union Government would eventually accede to the United Nations appeal. It was for these reasons that Pakistan had associated itself with the other sponsors of the draft resolution.

Speaking in full support of the draft resolution, the representatives of Afghanistan, Burma, Cuba, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, the Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, the USSR, Uruguay and Yugoslavia emphasized that there could be no question of the competence of the General Assembly. The previous resolutions on the matter showed that the Assembly considered the question a matter of international concern. These representatives strongly objected to the South African Government's policy of racial discrimination and segregation as an offence to human dignity and a clear violation of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Disregard by that Government of the Assembly's repeated recommendations was a direct challenge to principles which the Union Government had undertaken to respect, they said. They denied that there was any intention to interfere in the domestic affairs of the Union of South Africa, or any feeling of hostility or ill-will towards the Union Government, and considered the draft resolution a moderate and conciliatory one designed to find a solution to the existing deadlock and offering a practical approach towards a peaceful settlement. All urged an early resumption of negotiations and expressed hope that the Union would realize the gravity of the deteriorating situation and would co-operate with the United Nations in bringing about a solution of the problem. Several supporters considered that the Union Government's policy would inevitably lead to disturbances and was a potential threat to international peace and security.

The representative of Afghanistan asserted that the Union Government's policy of racial discrimination and segregation contained the seeds of destruction of South African society. Its economic structure had been built on the labour of the non-white population and the unity of the country depended on the harmonious co-operation of individuals and groups in ensuring the voluntary and continuous exchange of goods and services. Thus, apart from moral and humanitarian considerations, it was primarily in South Africa's own interest to put an end to its unfair racial policy.

The representative of Mexico stated that a truly democratic society was still an ideal towards which all peoples strove, but which was still far from realization anywhere. The Committee was merely seeking a reasonable and practical solution for a problem which threatened to weaken the cordial relations which existed with the Union of South Africa.

The representative of Poland declared that the essence of the South African Government's laws, which violated fundamental rights and were permeated by a spirit of fascism, was the degradation of human beings, a weapon in a calculated campaign to maintain the non-whites in a position of economic subservience. His country's own experience made it protest all the more vigorously against racial discrimination. The attempt of the Union Government to perpetuate its policies was doomed to failure in a world where oppressed peoples were clamouring for liberation. South Africa could not stem that tide by terror, he said.

World opinion looked to the United Nations to remedy this state of affairs, said the representative of Haiti; by its dilatory action, the Organization ran a risk of undermining its own prestige.

In expressing support of the draft resolution and its desire for a peaceful settlement of the question in accordance with the Charter, the representative of the USSR said that his Government's position was dictated by one of the fundamental principles of its policy: equality of political, economic and cultural rights for all without distinction of race. He stated that the question of the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa could not be considered as being exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of the Union of South Africa as it involved violation of bilateral agreements concluded in 1927 and 1932 between the Government of India and the Union of South Africa, thereby making the matter one of international concern. The South African Government, by its attitude and its policy, was violating Article 1, paragraphs 2 and 3, of the Charter. That South Africa was practising racial discrimination in violation of paragraph 2 of that Article, he stated, was not denied by the South African representative and was proved by the texts of paragraphs 2(1) and 4(2) of the Group Areas Act.

While stating that they would vote in favour of the draft resolution, the representatives of Brazil, China, Ecuador and the United States opposed some of its provisions, particularly the fourth paragraph of the operative part calling for the suspension of the Group Areas Act.

The representative of the United States favoured conciliation rather than recrimination. He pointed out that to translate ideas into realities in the field of human relations was a long and difficult task. Despite difficulties, the direction was clearly marked by the Charter. The test was not just how bad conditions were in a country, but whether efforts were being made there to improve those conditions. There appeared to be a serious difference, he thought, between the national policy of South Africa and the whole current of modern philosophy and scientific knowledge and the line of conduct endorsed in the Charter. His Government hoped that the discussion might create an atmosphere favourable to negotiations. The United Nations should not attempt to impose any solution. Progress could be hoped for only to the extent that the parties were willing to confer. Resolutions should not be such as to excite adverse nationalist reactions, but ought rather to follow the path of accommodation through negotiation. While the United States would support the draft resolution as a whole, it felt it contained certain doubtful provisions. It was inadvisable to censure a piece of national legislation and appear to set a condition preceding negotiations between the parties.

While supporting the draft resolution, the representatives of El Salvador, Israel and Mexico suggested that the resolution be framed so as to be more readily acceptable to the Union of South Africa. The representative of Israel said that the primary concern should be to bring the parties into direct negotiation so that they might find a ground for understanding rather than express feelings and convictions. No good offices commission could reach a settlement if the parties refused to engage in direct negotiations.

The representatives of Denmark, Norway and Sweden likewise supported the resolution but said that they would abstain on the fourth paragraph concerning the suspension of the Group Areas Act. This paragraph, they considered, was not worded in such a way as to facilitate renewal of negotiations in a friendly atmosphere. The representative of Denmark suggested a number of deletions.

Expressing doubts about the competence of the Assembly and opposition to some provisions of the draft resolution, particularly its references to the Group Areas Act, the representatives of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Colombia, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Turkey and the United Kingdom indicated that, while anxious that the parties open direct negotiations, they would abstain from voting on the draft resolution.

The United Kingdom was anxious lest, while examining delicate questions involving the domestic policy of any State, the Ad Hoc Committee run the risk of increasing tension between the countries concerned instead of promoting friendly relations, its representative declared. The legal situation was far from clear. Parts of the resolutions adopted by the Assembly, he considered, constituted intervention in matters within South Africa's domestic jurisdiction. It was difficult to ascertain whether by reason of earlier agreements between the governments concerned the problem went beyond the national competence of the Union and the United Nations was justified in considering it.

The representative of France observed that, despite good intentions, the draft resolution was not likely to offer a solution but rather to delay it. His Government remained convinced that a solution acceptable to all could only be reached through direct negotiation among the parties to the dispute.

The representative of Australia considered the matter outside the competence of the United Nations. He declared that the fact that the question had been the subject of Assembly resolutions in no way implied that it was no longer the domestic jurisdiction of the State directly concerned. It was not sufficient to point to certain Articles of the Charter to justify the consideration of questions which, even if of international interest, were nevertheless a domestic concern. Article 2, paragraph 7, by reason of its position in the Charter, governed the application of all the other Articles.

A change of public opinion within a country was never, he remarked, a rapid process and could not be hastened as the result of the intervention of other countries. Aside from the merits or demerits of the law on which the Assembly was being asked to pass judgment, the Australian representative emphasized the explosive and undesirable consequences of exploiting racial issues in the United Nations. They could not be ignored but their solution required great wisdom and tolerance and could only be usefully discussed by those directly concerned. He believed that the parties should be urged to open direct negotiations.

At the conclusion of the debate, the South African representative expressed appreciation of the friendly sentiments which had been expressed towards his country by a number of delegations. His Government again urged that the provisions of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter be respected. Its attitude was based on that fundamental principle which governed relations between the Organization and its Members. His delegation would have to vote against the joint draft resolution.

He repeated his Government's willingness to discuss with India and Pakistan possible ways and means of settling the matter. It was prepared to reopen direct negotiations on the understanding that these would not involve any departure from or prejudice to the standpoint of the respective Governments in regard to the question of domestic jurisdiction. Such talks, while not related to any Assembly resolutions, would permit the parties to hold a full, free and unfettered discussion.

The representative of India concluded the discussion by saying that the sponsors did not feel that the provisions of the draft resolution could be amended. She said that the representative of South Africa had implied that India had refused to reopen negotiations with the Union. However, when the preliminary talks had been held at Capetown in 1950, it had appeared that the Union had meant to discuss only the repatriation of people of Indian origin and not the removal of the discriminatory measures to which they were subject. That was one of the main reasons why negotiations had been broken off. That this was his Government's only interest was demonstrated by the South African representative's silence when asked whether his Government would be prepared to repeal the Group Areas Act if the proposed negotiations resulted in an understanding.

Concerning the charges that the Indian Government had applied economic sanctions, she recalled that trade relations between India and South Africa had been broken off in 1946 by the United Kingdom. The charge of an Indian vendetta against the Union could not be taken seriously in view of the grave concern shown during the discussion by the vast majority of the Member States.

The Ad Hoc Political Committee at its 12th meeting on 11 November adopted the joint draft resolution, paragraph by paragraph, by votes ranging from 42 to 1, with 12 abstentions, to 30 to 12, with 16 abstentions, the latter a roll-call vote on the fourth operative paragraph, concerning suspension of the Group Areas Act.

The draft resolution as a whole was adopted by 41 votes to 1, with 16 abstentions.

3. Consideration by the General Assembly in Plenary Session

The report (A/2257) of the Ad Hoc Political Committee was considered by the General Assembly at its 401st plenary meeting on 5 December 1952. The draft resolution was adopted by a roll-call vote of 41 to 1, with 15 abstentions. The vote was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, China, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United States, Yugoslavia.

Against: Union of South Africa.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Dominican Republic, France, Greece, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Peru, Turkey, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

After the vote, the representative of India said that the continuous disregard by South Africa of previous resolutions of the General Assembly was not calculated to increase confidence in the United Nations. The Assembly was aware of the grave deterioration of the situation in South Africa. His delegation still hoped that the Union would respond to the overwhelming desire of the Assembly. His delegation sought negotiation, conciliation and a peaceful settlement and would persevere in the hope that the conscience of the world would find an echo in South Africa.

The representative of the Union of South Africa concluded the discussion by restating his position. Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter denied the Organization the right to intervene in a matter which was essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of his Government. The matter with which the resolution dealt was undeniably such a matter. His Government was not prepared to settle it under the Charter. India knew that all it had to do was to come and discuss the matter outside the Organization and divorced from any resolutions taken by the Organization. That was the standing offer of his Government.

The text of the resolution adopted (615 (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolutions 44(I), 265(III), 395 (V) and 511 (VI) relating to the treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa,

"Noting that the Government of the Union of South Africa has expressed its inability to accept General Assembly resolution 511 (VI) in respect of the resumption of negotiations with the Governments of India and Pakistan,

"Noting further that the Government of the Union of South Africa has continued to enforce the Group Areas Act in contravention of the terms of General Assembly resolutions 511 (VI) and 395 (V),

"1. Establishes a United Nations Good Offices Commission consisting of three members to be nominated by the President of the General Assembly, with a view to arranging and assisting in negotiations between the Government of the Union of South Africa and the Governments of India and Pakistan in order that a satisfactory solution of the question in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights may be achieved;

"2. Requests the Good Offices Commission to report to the General Assembly at its eighth session;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the members of the Commission with the necessary staff and facilities;

"4. Calls upon the Government of the Union of South Africa to suspend the implementation or enforcement of the provisions of the Group Areas Act, pending the conclusion of the negotiations referred to in paragraph 1 above;

"5. Decides to include the item in the provisional agenda of the eighth session of the General Assembly."

At the 411th plenary meeting on 22 December the President of the General Assembly announced the appointment of Cuba, Syria and Yugoslavia as members of the Good Offices Commission.

J. THE QUESTION OF RACE CONFLICT IN SOUTH AFRICA

On 12 September 1952 Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen requested (A/2183) that the question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Union of South Africa be placed on the agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly.

An explanatory memorandum stated that this race conflict in the Union of South Africa was creating a dangerous and explosive situation, which constituted both a threat to international peace and a flagrant violation of the basic principles of human rights and fundamental freedoms enshrined in the Charter. The memorandum said that under the policy of apartheid, which implied a permanent white superiority over the 80 per cent of the population who were non-whites, the following measures were being taken: segregation of races under the notorious Group Areas Act, complete segregation in public services, suppression of democratic movements advocating racial equality under the Suppression of Communism Act, barring of non-whites from combat service, withholding of voting or other political rights from non-whites except in Cape Province, confinement of Africans to reserves and restriction of their movement, exclusion of non-whites from skilled work under the Mines Works Amendment Act and provision of vastly inferior educational and housing conditions for non-whites. The policy of apartheid not only challenged all that the United Nations stood for but was contrary to specific and repeated recommendations in Assembly resolutions 103(I), 217(III), 395 (V) and 511 (VI) urging the ending of racial discrimination. Unable to secure redress by constitutional methods, the non-whites of the Union had been compelled to launch a non-violent resistance movement against unjust and inhuman racial policies. It was therefore imperative, the memorandum concluded, that the General Assembly urgently consider the question so as to prevent further deterioration and effect a settlement in accordance with the Charter.

At the 79th meeting of the General Committee on 15 October, the representative of the Union of South Africa protested formally against the inclusion of the item in the agenda. After hearing statements from the representatives of India, Iraq and the United Kingdom the Committee recommended that the item be included.

On 17 October the General Assembly, at its 381st plenary meeting, considered the recommendation of the General Committee. The representative of the Union of South Africa, supported by the representatives of Australia and the United Kingdom, challenged the competence of the Assembly to consider the item and asked that the Assembly decide upon that question before voting on the recommendation of the General Committee to include the item in the agenda. Under rule 80⁷⁹ of the rules of procedure, he introduced a draft resolution (A/L.108) to the effect that the Assembly, having regard to Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, should decide that it was not competent to consider the item.

The representatives of Chile and Iraq stated that all questions relating to human rights were within the Assembly's competence. Moreover, the representative of Chile argued, the question before the Assembly was the Committee's recommendation for inclusion of the item in the agenda, not the question of competence which could be discussed only after the item was on the agenda. The President ruled that the proposal of the Union of South Africa was in order. After an appeal against the President's ruling, the latter was over-ruled by a roll-call vote of 41 to 10, with 8 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour: Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Abstaining: Brazil, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Greece, Iceland, Israel, Nicaragua, Turkey.

The representative from South Africa then moved that the item should be excluded from the agenda on the ground that the United Nations was not competent to deal with or even discuss the matter. The General Assembly, by a vote of 45 to 6, with 8 abstentions, decided to accept the General Committee's recommendation to include the item in the agenda.

At its 382nd meeting on 17 October, the General Assembly referred the item to the Ad Hoc Political Committee which considered the question at its 13th to 21st meetings from 12 to 20 November 1952.

1. Consideration by the Ad Hoc Political Committee

The representative of the Union of South Africa outlined the factors which, in his Government's opinion, should preclude discussion of the item. Article 2,⁸⁰ paragraph 7, absolutely prohibited any intervention by the United Nations in the domestic affairs of Member States, with the single exception of the application of enforcement measures by the Security Council under Chapter VII.⁸¹ The word "intervene" was not used, he argued, in the narrow restrictive sense of dictatorial interference but included such interference as the discussion of, and passing of resolutions by the Assembly on, the essentially domestic affairs of a Member State. Even the right of discussion conferred on the Assembly by Articles 10 and 11⁸² could not be invoked if the discussion constituted such intervention.

The Charter, he argued, left it to each Member individually to decide upon the methods of achieving such objectives mentioned in Article 55 as higher standards of living, full employment and respect for human rights. Action at an international level, on the other hand, was to be taken only by agreement between States. The pledge of international co-operation given in Article 56 to promote the purposes of Article 55 did not diminish the right of States to repel interference in their domestic affairs, or authorize the United Nations to take dictatorial action by way of discussion or resolutions.

Neither the Charter nor the Declaration of Human Rights, which set a standard for future achievement, nor any other international instrument contained a binding definition of human rights against which the actions of the South African Government could be tested.

It had been further alleged, he said, that conditions in South Africa constituted a threat to the peace. But such a threat could exist only when the territorial integrity or political independence of another State was threatened. It was both unrealistic and mischievous to allege the existence of such a threat in consequence of legitimate State action designed to deal with purely domestic matters which did not affect the legitimate in-

⁷⁹ Rule 80 states that any motion calling for a decision on the competence of the General Assembly to adopt a proposal submitted to it shall be put to a vote before a vote is taken on the proposal in question.

⁸⁰ For text of this Article, see p. 10.

⁸¹ Chapter VII concerns action with respect to threats to the peace, breaches of the peace, and acts of aggression.

⁸² For text of these Articles, see p. 11.

terests and rights of other states. If the Committee could be led to believe that racial or other forms of segregation—which existed in a large number of countries—education, housing, conditions of recruitment for the armed services, the administration of justice and other matters referred to in the memorandum were not entirely within the domestic jurisdiction of a State, then the same must hold good for matters such as tariff, immigration and fiscal policies which certainly affected relations between States but which nevertheless continued to be the sole responsibility of the individual government concerned.

Article 2, paragraph 7, he said, served as a counter-balance to the absolute right of veto of the Great Powers and granted to the small nations protection of their inherent right freely to manage their domestic affairs. But for the compromises exemplified for the Great Powers by the right of veto and for the small Powers by Article 2, paragraph 7, there could have been no Charter.

Until such time as the Charter was amended by constitutional means, it must remain inviolate. It would be wise and statesmanlike to reflect carefully before taking any steps likely to result in the disintegration of the United Nations which could still become the greatest bulwark of world peace and security.

Accordingly, the South African representative introduced a motion (A/AC.61/L.6 and Corr.1), under rule 120 of the rules of procedure, whereby the Committee, having regard to Article 2, paragraph 7, would find that it had no competence to consider the item.

The representative of India stressed that the issue of competence could not be considered until the Committee had been enabled to weigh that issue against the background of the facts of apartheid policy as practised by the Union of South Africa. Apartheid policy, she declared, sought to force the 80 per cent of the population who were non-white into perpetual economic and social servitude by racial discrimination and segregation in violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms and of the principles of the Charter.

After reviewing the principal legislative acts adopted to implement that policy, the Indian representative declared that the non-white population, deprived of legal means to seek redress of its grievances, had begun a campaign of passive resistance. Selected volunteers, after advance notice to the police authorities, defied various laws and regulations deriving from the apartheid policy.

Over 7,000 persons had sought arrest and been sentenced to imprisonment. Despite great provocation by the police and fanatical white elements, the peaceful character of the movement had been maintained.

The international implications of South African policies, she observed, were clear to all Member States which had pledged themselves to uphold basic principles of the Charter concerning the observance of human rights. The situation was imperilling the entire continent of Africa. Unless the United Nations acted rapidly, the world would be threatened with a new conflict.

India, she concluded, would welcome a study of the situation with a view to assisting the South African Government to resolve it on a humanitarian and rational basis of mutual toleration and understanding among all racial groups. It did not seek to condemn South Africa; it harboured no rancour; it sought only to end a situation as degrading to those who enforced the discrimination laws as to the victims. In addition to the South African motion (see above), the Committee had before it:

(1) An eighteen-Power joint draft resolution by Afghanistan, Bolivia, Burma, Egypt, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Pakistan, Philippines, Syria, Saudi Arabia and Yemen (A/AC.61/L.8/Rev.1), by which the General Assembly would:

(1) note the communication (A/2183) by thirteen Members on the question of race conflict in South Africa; (2) state that one of the purposes of the United Nations was to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedom for all; (3) recall its resolution 103(I) calling on all governments to take energetic steps to end religious and so-called racial persecution; (4) refer to its resolutions 395(V) and 511(VI) holding that a policy of apartheid was based on doctrines of racial discrimination; and (5) state that international co-operation could not be furthered and that international peace might be disturbed by policies of racial discrimination and persecution. In its operative part the draft resolution would have the Assembly: (1) establish a commission to study the international aspects and implications of the racial situation in the Union of South Africa in the light of the Charter and the resolutions of the United Nations on racial persecution and discrimination, and to report its findings to the eighth session of the Assembly; (2) invite the Union of South Africa to co-operate with the commission; and (3) decide to retain the question on the agenda of the eighth session.

(2) A joint draft resolution by Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (A/AC.61/L.12) which consisted of the first three paragraphs of the eighteen-Power joint draft resolution and four new paragraphs.

These four new paragraphs, which had originally been moved as an amendment (A/AC.61/L.9) to the eighteen-Power draft to replace the last two paragraphs of the preamble and all but the last paragraph of the operative part, would have the General Assembly, recognizing that the methods of Members for giving effect to their Charter pledges might vary with circumstances such as the social structure of the States concerned and the different stages of development of the various groups within the country:

(1) declare that in a multi-racial society, respect for human rights and the peaceful development of a unified community were best assured when patterns of legislation and practice were directed towards ensuring equality before the law of all persons, and when economic, social, cultural and political participation of all racial groups was on a basis of equality; (2) affirm that governmental policies not directed towards those goals were inconsistent with pledges of Members under Article 56 of the Charter; and (3) call upon all Members to bring their policies into conformity with their Charter obligations to promote the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

The representatives of Denmark, Norway and Sweden explained the position of the Scandinavian countries. While they could not subscribe to the rather extreme position taken by the South African representative on the Assembly's competence, they could not agree, also, to all the provisions of the eighteen-Power draft resolution. They felt that the United Nations, in matters of racial discrimination, could make recommendations but was not competent to prescribe specific measures to be imposed on a State. The establishment of a fact-finding commission, they considered, was a step on which the Assembly lacked jurisdiction. Moreover, such a commission was not likely to achieve any practical results. These representatives affirmed the competence of the Assembly to discuss the question, stating that the Charter imposed on Members the obligation not to bar discussion or adoption of recommendations by the United Nations on their policies in the field of human rights. They cited previous Assembly recommendations on racial policies of Member States as well as recommendations for the investigation of alleged forced labour, despite objections regarding competence.

As regards the merits of the question, the representative of Norway stated that he could not accept the South African representative's contention that the matters complained of did not constitute a violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms as laid down in the Charter. Mere reading of the Group Areas Act, he maintained, appeared to justify the claim that the Act legalized actions which all Member States had pledged to abandon.

(3) The following amendments to the eighteen-Power joint draft resolution were also placed before the Committee:

(a) An amendment by Brazil (A/AC.61/L.10) which would alter the terms of reference of the proposed commission by directing it to study the racial situation in the Union of South Africa "with due regard to the provisions of Article 2, paragraph 7", and to report its "conclusions" instead of its "findings" to the General Assembly. The representative of Brazil explained that the proposed amendment was to remove all misunderstanding concerning the powers of the proposed commission and the competence of the Assembly. The Committee, he said, must respect the limitation imposed upon it by the Charter and must not encroach upon the domestic jurisdiction of States.

(b) An amendment by Ecuador (A/AC.61/L.11) which would: (1) eliminate from the study of the proposed commission examination of "the international aspects and implications of" the racial situation in order, as its representative said, to make the proposal less controversial; (2) delete the last paragraph of the preamble which, he stated, prejudged the question to be studied by prescribing a strong criterion for that study; and (3) also delete the last operative paragraph providing for retention of the question on the agenda of the eighth session.

(c) An amendment by Israel (A/AC.61/L.13) which would have the proposed commission report "its conclusions to the Secretary-General for transmission to the Members of the United Nations" instead of report "its findings to the eighth session of the General Assembly". The representative of Israel felt that to perpetuate items by placing them on the agenda year after year, without regard to intervening developments, might be harmful and was a practice which should be discouraged.

(d) An oral proposal by Mexico which would supplement the first part of the Brazilian amendment by directing the commission to study the racial situation with due regard not only to the provisions of Article 2, paragraph 7, but also to the provisions of Article 1, paragraph 3, Article 13, paragraph 1 (b), Article 55 (c) and Article 56 of the Charter. The proposed commission would thus, the representative of Mexico said, be given balanced terms of reference; it would have an adequate legal basis on which to operate; it would be taking account of the Charter guarantee against intervention in domestic affairs, on the one hand, and of the Charter guarantees regarding human rights, on the other hand. The representative of Brazil accepted the amendment.

(e) A USSR amendment (A/AC.61/L.15) to the first operative paragraph which proposed that the commission to be set up should study the racial situation not only in the light of the Charter provisions enumerated, but also in the light of Article 1, paragraph 2, which proclaimed that one of the purposes of the United Nations was to develop friendly relations among the nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples.

The representative of India submitted, on behalf of the sponsors, and after consultation with the representatives of Brazil, Ecuador and Mexico, a revision (A/AC.61/L.8/Rev.2)⁸³ of the eighteen-Power joint draft resolution which deleted from the original text the last paragraph of the preamble and amended the terms of reference of the commission proposed in the first operative paragraph, thus incorporating the Brazilian amendment and the first two parts of the Ecuadorean amendment. The representative of Ecuador withdrew the third part of his amendment. At the same time the representative of India suggested on behalf of the sponsors that, so far as the membership of the proposed commission was concerned, the President of the General Assembly should nominate as members three persons from a panel of experts on race relations selected by the sponsors of the draft and submitted to the President before the item was dealt with in plenary meeting.

The representatives of Australia, Belgium, France, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom supported, in general, the position of South Africa on the meaning of the Charter provision on domestic jurisdiction and the nature of international commitments on human rights. They were of the opinion that the policy of apartheid in South Africa was not a threat to the peace and that the suggested Assembly action was both improper and dangerous to the United Nations and unlikely to contribute to a solution of the problem. They held that United Nations interference, even to the extent of discussion, could only exacerbate racial antagonism in the Union of South Africa and might even be harmful to international relations, thus defeating the very purposes which the sponsors of the item had hoped to achieve.

Nothing, it was stated, was more obviously a matter of a country's domestic jurisdiction than the relationship which it had decided to maintain between persons of varying races living within its borders. If the General Assembly was considered in the present instance to be competent under Articles 55 and 56, it must in strict logic be regarded as having jurisdiction to deal not only with human rights but also with the economic, social and cultural activities referred to in Article 55. In other words, no aspect of the internal affairs of a State would be free from interference by the Organization.

Clearly, the purpose of any discussion or resolution was to modify a situation and that was precisely the meaning of the word "intervention". Article 2, paragraph 7, therefore applied to such discussion.

Even if it was argued that the situation in South Africa had become a matter of world interest, it could not be seriously claimed that thereby it became removed from the sphere of domestic jurisdiction to the international jurisdiction of the United Nations. Indignation at policies of racial or social discrimination pursued by certain governments, however well-founded, was not sufficient to make a question a threat to international peace. No flood of refugees had crossed from South Africa to a neighbouring State. On the contrary, statistics indicated that each year 100,000 Africans entered the Union of South Africa of their own free will. Except for New Zealand which abstained on all draft resolutions, these representatives supported the South African draft resolution but abstained on the others.

In reply, the representative of India said that one of the purposes of the United Nations, as stated in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter, was to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. Under Article 10, the Assembly could discuss any question within the scope of the Charter and make recommendations on it to the Members. Moreover, Article 13 required the Assembly to initiate studies and make recommendations to assist in the realization of human rights for all. Under Article 14, the Assembly could recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of a situation resulting from a violation of the provisions of the Charter. Respect for human rights having been included in the Charter, any infringement of those rights was a matter within the Assembly's competence. Article 55 of the Charter also required the United Nations to promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all. Its Members had pledged themselves under Article 56 to take action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of those purposes. Finally, Article 2, paragraph 2, stated that Members should fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the Charter. Thus the provisions of the Charter clearly established the competence of the Assembly to consider the question under discussion. Acceptance of the contention that the Assembly was not competent would open to challenge the validity of all the decisions by the General Assembly relating to the infringement of human rights.

The General Assembly was also empowered to consider the question under Article 11 of the Charter because the situation in South Africa resulting from the policy of apartheid was grave and clearly constituted a threat to international peace, the maintenance of which was one of the primary purposes of the United Nations. The concept of a threat to peace was not confined to the case of a threat to the territorial integrity and political independence of a State. Flagrant breaches of human rights by the government of a State could have serious repercussions outside that State and could affect international peace.

⁸³ For text see resolution A below as adopted by the General Assembly.

Turning to the argument that Article 2, paragraph 7, precluded the General Assembly from considering the item, the representative of India said that there were two essential prerequisites to its application. First, there must be intervention by the United Nations and, secondly, the matter in question must be essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of a State.

"Intervention" in this connexion had been authoritatively defined, he said, as a legal measure applied by the United Nations and accompanied by enforcement or threat of enforcement. In his opinion, Article 2, paragraph 7, did not preclude a consideration of situations arising from violations of human rights nor prevent the Assembly from making recommendations on such situations.

Concerning the word "essential" as used in Article 2, paragraph 7, he observed that international law maintained a clear distinction between matters within the domestic jurisdiction of a State and those which had passed into the international domain. A matter ordinarily within the domestic jurisdiction of a State could cease to be so and become the subject of an international obligation if, for example, it formed part of the terms of a treaty. The Charter was a multilateral treaty; the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms had therefore passed into the international domain. Thus the policy of apartheid had become a matter of international concern and could not be treated as being essentially within the domestic jurisdiction.

As neither of the two prerequisites existed necessary to the application of Article 2, paragraph 7, the Assembly was competent to act.

A large majority of the Committee, including the sponsors of the eighteen-Power resolution, joined with India in expressing, with varying degrees of emphasis and frequently with illustrations drawn from their national experience, their moral indignation at the policy of racial inequality in the Union of South Africa. Specifying their views on how it violated the Charter and created conditions which were a threat to international peace, they affirmed the competence of the United Nations and the need for constructive action. Apart from the representatives of the eighteen-Powers sponsoring the joint draft resolution, this majority included the representatives of Bolivia, Brazil, the Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Israel, Mexico, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR, Uruguay and Yugoslavia. They opposed the South African resolution, supported the eighteen-Power draft resolution and abstained on the Scandinavian draft resolution, except for the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Mexico, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR which opposed the latter.

Speaking as a sponsor of the eighteen-Power draft resolution, the representative of Pakistan said that by lowering the status of the original inhabitants of South Africa to the advantage of a minority representing the conquerors of that country, the Government of the Union of South Africa was practising a form of colonialism against which a struggle was being waged in the United Nations. The present dispute as regards the Assembly's competence was a part of that struggle. When asked to alter their inflexible policies, the European colonial Powers and their friends immediately raised the issue of United Nations competence. On the other hand, he said, the support of most North and South American countries was heartening. The representative of Pakistan warned the colonial Powers that attempts to enforce their position by raising legal technicalities, by brute force and by inhuman laws would finally result in an inevitable bloody clash. The strong moral right of the African peoples to rebel could not be denied. Fortunately, he concluded, the United Nations possessed the means and the wisdom to transform what would otherwise be a bloody revolution into a bloodless one.

While recognizing that the situations existing in many Member States were very far from the Charter ideal, several representatives, including those of Costa Rica, Cuba, Haiti, Liberia and Uruguay stated that their Governments were doing everything in their power to remedy the situation. Unfortunately the Union of South Africa, on the other hand, it was stated, was taking action that aggravated still further the discrimination existing in that country and refused to discuss the substance of the question. To show that it was possible to achieve co-operation between all the racial groups in a country, representatives cited the examples of Ecuador, Mexico, Indonesia and Haiti. It was said that the Union Government's uncompromising attitude had made such co-operation impossible for the time being.

Many supporters emphasized that they wished to have friendly relations with the Union of South Africa and that they had no intention of intervening in its internal affairs. The eighteen-Power draft resolution, said the representative of Mexico, was not intended to offend or condemn South Africa. Mexico was not voting against any nation but for a principle and against the violation of that principle. The proposed commission, said the representative of Indonesia, was a moderate and realistic approach which would help place the problem in its true perspective.

In expressing their strong support for the eighteen-Power draft resolution, the representatives of the USSR and other Eastern European States particularly stressed the connexion between racial discrimination and colonialism.

The representatives of Czechoslovakia and the USSR stated that the racial policies of the South African Government were designed to perpetuate the colonial domination of its ruling circles over oppressed and exploited peoples. The Union Government's policy, they maintained, represented a systematic and conscious violation of the Charter and its consequences were a threat to international peace and security.

The representative of the USSR added that the proposed commission might not only contribute to a solution of the South African problem, but to the elimination of racial persecution in other countries. He expressed the position of the Eastern European governments when he opposed all amendments attempting to weaken the original text and criticized strongly the Scandinavian draft resolution which, he declared, consisted of pious hopes designed to cover up South Africa's violation of the Charter. His Government vigorously rejected its reflection of the view that, while increasing restrictions were objectionable, existing restrictions might be countenanced.

During the debate, the representative of Liberia proposed that the Committee hear a native of South Africa, Professor Z. K. Matthews, an authorized representative of the African National Congress. The Chairman appealed to him not to press his request in order not to create a precedent by granting a hearing to a private individual in a political committee and because he could have a letter from Professor Matthews circulated as a Committee document. On 19 November, at the request of the delegation of Haiti, a letter (A/AC.61/L.14) from Professor Matthews, dated 17 November, was circulated in which he stated that he had been instructed by his college in South Africa, which had been subjected to warning pressure by the Union Government, not to accept an invitation to appear.

A number of representatives, including those of Canada, China, Peru and the United States, supported the Scandinavian compromise proposal. They expressed the conviction that the United Nations was competent to discuss racial policy of a Member State but questioned the correctness or the desirability, in terms of actually improving race relations in South Africa, of doing more than appeal to all Member States to bring their policies into conformity with the Charter obligation of promoting the observance of human rights.

The representative of the United States maintained that the South African representative's interpretation of Article 2, paragraph 7, narrowed excessively the scope of the Assembly's powers to discuss the vital question of human rights. The representative of Canada added that it also impaired the Assembly's right to make recommendations for the peaceful adjustment of any situation deemed likely to impair friendly relations among nations. They, however, felt that the Assembly should proceed with great caution. The representative of the United States questioned the wisdom of the South African Government, however, in adopting a policy of racial segregation at a time when world trends were against it. He considered that a policy of increased restriction was incompatible with the generally accepted interpretation of the obligations of the Charter.

The representative of Peru felt that, until an effective legal instrument obliging nations to implement human rights had been ratified, the General Assembly, in exercise of what might be called its moral jurisdiction, could do no more than appeal to the goodwill of States to promote their observance. Any coercion would exacerbate South African nationalism and tend to stiffen the resistance of the South African Government.

A number of representatives, including those of Canada, Denmark, Iceland, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden and Turkey, remarked that they would support a request for an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the question of competence. The representative of Denmark declared that, in the absence of such an authoritative legal opinion and because of the divergence of views on competence, even if the matter was of great concern to many Member States, the General Assembly should proceed with the greatest caution.

In a final statement, the Indian representative said that the facts adduced by the sponsoring delegations of the eighteen-Power draft resolution had not been controverted. All the arguments against this draft had been on the purely legal ground of competence. Concerning doubts expressed about the establishment and effectiveness of a commission, he said that, even if the Union Government did not co-operate, the commission could still collect and examine legislation and other evidences regarding the problem. It was the duty of the United Nations to study the situation. As to the Scandinavian draft resolution, there seemed little object in reiterating declarations, however praiseworthy, which had already been made in the Charter and in many previous Assembly recommendations. The question before the Committee referred to the specific policy of apartheid in the Union of South Africa and called for a specific solution.

In his concluding remarks, the representative of South Africa described Article 2, paragraph 7, as a safeguard against the use of the United Nations as a means of prosecuting feuds and rivalries in the spotlight of a world organization. Such absolute insurance against intervention was necessary because widely divergent domestic problems could not be solved by a single universal approach. There was as yet no legally binding international instrument on human rights. The Charter called only for their promotion through international co-operation.

Certain representatives, he said, seemed to consider that the Charter might be interpreted to suit changing events. But the United Nations had no right to act as a supra-national organization and to usurp the sovereignty of individual Members. His Government recognized the dynamic nature of the United Nations, but it persisted in its adherence to certain constant principles, such as the San Francisco interpretation of the Charter.

The charge that the alleged happenings in South Africa threatened the peace was without foundation and a reprehensible attempt to persuade the United Nations to intervene in domestic affairs.

It was not true that conditions in South Africa were leading to a general conflagration on the African Continent. If, however, the South African Government were to allow the agitators and their foreign masters to go about their subversive work, the situation might indeed become serious.

On 20 November the Ad Hoc Political Committee proceeded to vote on the draft resolutions and the amendments.

The motion (A/AC.61/L.6) submitted by the Union of South Africa was rejected by a roll-call vote of 45 to 6, with 8 abstentions.

The USSR amendment (A/AC.61/L.15) to the eighteen-Power draft resolution was adopted by 29 votes to 5, with 23 abstentions. The amendment of Israel (A/AC.61/L.13) was rejected by 33 votes to 2, with 23 abstentions. The various paragraphs of the eighteen-Power draft resolution were adopted by votes ranging from 44 to 1, with 12 abstentions, to 32 to 7, with 18 abstentions. The joint draft resolution as a whole, as amended, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 35 to 2, with 22 abstentions.

The Committee then voted, paragraph by paragraph, on the joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.12) submitted by Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden. All paragraphs were adopted except the last paragraph of the preamble recognizing that the methods for giving effect to their Charter pledges might vary with circumstances such as the social structure of the State concerned. That paragraph was rejected by a vote of 20 to 17, with 21 abstentions.

The draft resolution as a whole, as modified, was approved by a roll-call vote of 20 to 7, with 32 abstentions.

2. Consideration by the General Assembly in Plenary Session

The report (A/2276) of the Ad Hoc Political Committee was considered by the General Assembly at its 401st plenary meeting on 5 December 1952. The representative of the Union of South Africa introduced a motion under rule 80 of the rules of procedure by which the Assembly would, in view of the Charter provisions on the question of domestic jurisdiction, declare itself unable to adopt either of the two draft resolutions recommended in the report. The motion was rejected by a roll-call vote of 43 to 6, with 9 abstentions. The voting was as follows:

In favour: Australia, Belgium, France, Luxembourg, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom.

Against: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United States, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Abstaining: Argentina, Canada, Dominican Republic, Greece, Netherlands, New Zealand, Peru, Turkey, Venezuela.

The Assembly then voted on resolution A recommended by the Ad Hoc Political Committee (originally the eighteen-Power draft resolution).

The first operative paragraph establishing a commission was voted on by roll-call and adopted by 35 votes to 17, with 7 abstentions. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Denmark, Dominican Republic, France, Greece, Iceland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Peru, Sweden, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom.

Abstaining: Argentina, Canada, China, Colombia, Paraguay, United States, Venezuela.

The draft resolution as a whole was adopted by a roll-call vote of 35 to 1, with 23 abstentions. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Yugoslavia.

Against: Union of South Africa.

Abstaining: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, France, Greece, Iceland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Before the voting on resolution B (originally the joint draft resolution by Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden), the representative of Mexico expressed opposition to including the first paragraph of the preamble, referring to the specific situation in South Africa, in a resolution which, he said, was a noble general declaration of principles on matters of racial discrimination. He requested a separate vote on that paragraph.

The paragraph was adopted by 25 votes to 10, with 18 abstentions.

The draft resolution as a whole was adopted by a roll-call vote of 24 to 1, with 34 abstentions. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, El Salvador, Guatemala, Iceland, Israel, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, United States, Uruguay.

Against: Union of South Africa.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Australia, Belgium, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Philippines, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

The representatives of the United Kingdom, France, India, and the Union of South Africa explained their votes.

The representatives of France and the United Kingdom stated that, in the view of their delegations, the placing of the item on the agenda and all discussion on the substance of it was out of order, as the matter was essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of South Africa. They had accordingly abstained from voting on the two draft resolutions except on the first operative paragraph of Draft Resolution A, establishing a commission. They had voted against this paragraph, since they considered it a clear violation of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter.

The representative of India declared that India had abstained on Resolution B because it did not have a direct bearing on the issue of race conflict in South Africa. The Assembly, she continued, could not shut its eyes to the fact that in South Africa there was an ever growing intensification of the policy of racial discrimination through all channels open to a government. Human rights and fundamental freedoms were being denied on the grounds of race and colour to an overwhelming majority by a small minority which retained all the resources of the State in its hands. All Member States must rally whenever the principles and purposes of the Charter were challenged. Africa and Asia would no longer accept the indignities imposed on them in the name of a white civilization. The demand was for a human civilization based on the universal standards of the Charter.

The representative of the Union of South Africa stated that, in adopting the two resolutions, the Assembly had not only denied to his Government its rights under the Charter but had clearly established a precedent in consequence of which it would in future seek to intervene by discussion and the adoption of resolutions on any matter of purely domestic concern. He had been instructed by his Government, he said, to state that it would continue to claim the protection inscribed in Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter and that it must therefore regard any resolution emanating from a discussion on, or the consideration of, the present item as ultra vires and, therefore, as null and void.

The resolutions adopted by the Assembly (616 A & B (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Having taken note of the communication dated 12 September 1952, addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations by the delegations of Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen, regarding the question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Union of South Africa,

"Considering that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

"Recalling that the General Assembly declared in its resolution 103(I) of 19 November 1946 that it is in the higher interests of humanity to put an end to religious and so-called racial persecution, and called upon all governments to conform both to the letter and the spirit of the Charter and to take the most prompt and energetic steps to that end,

"Considering that the General Assembly has held, in its resolutions 395(V) of 2 December 1950 and 511(VI) of 12 January 1952, that a policy of racial segregation (apartheid) is necessarily based on doctrines of racial discrimination,

"1. Establishes a Commission, consisting of three members, to study the racial situation in the Union of South Africa in the light of the Purposes and Principles of the Charter, with due regard to the provision of Article 2, paragraph 7, as well as the provisions of Article 1, paragraphs 2 and 3, Article 13, paragraph 1 b, Article 55 c, and Article 56 of the Charter, and the resolutions of the United Nations on racial persecution and discrimination, and to report its conclusions to the General Assembly at its eighth session;

"2. Invites the Government of the Union of South Africa to extend its full co-operation to the Commission;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Commission with the necessary staff and facilities;

"4. Decides to retain the question on the provisional agenda of the eighth session of the General Assembly."

B

"The General Assembly,

"Having taken note of the communication dated 12 September 1952, addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations by the delegations of Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen, regarding the question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid, of the Government of the Union of South Africa,

"Considering that one of the purposes of the United Nations is to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

"Recalling that the General Assembly declared in its resolution 103(I) of 19 November 1946 that it is in the higher interests of humanity to put an end to religious and so-called racial persecution, and called upon all governments to conform both to the letter and to the spirit of the Charter and to take the most prompt and energetic steps to that end,

1. Declares that in a multi-racial society harmony and respect for human rights and freedoms and the peaceful development of a unified community are best assured when patterns of legislation and practice are directed towards ensuring equality before the law of all persons regardless of race, creed or colour, and when economic, social, cultural and political participation of all racial groups is on a basis of equality;

"2. Affirms that governmental policies of Member States which are not directed towards these goals, but which are designed to perpetuate or increase discrimination, are inconsistent with the pledges of the Members under Article 56 of the Charter;

"3. Solemnly calls upon all Member States to bring their policies into conformity with their obligation under the Charter to promote the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms."

At its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the President, decided that the Commission, established under paragraph 1 of resolution 616 A (VII) should be composed of the following persons: Ralph Bunche, Hernán Santa Cruz and Jaime Torres Bodet.⁸⁴

K. THE QUESTION OF AN AUSTRIAN PEACE TREATY

On 29 August 1952 Brazil requested (A/2166) the inclusion, in the agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly, of the item: "Question of an appeal to the Powers signatories to the Moscow Declaration of 1 November 1943, for an early fulfilment of their pledges towards Austria".

An explanatory memorandum submitted on 12 September recalled that by the Moscow Declaration (to which France had subsequently adhered) the four Powers, France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States, had expressed their determination that Austria should be re-established as a free and independent State.

The four-Power occupation and the establishment of an allied control system was intended to be a temporary measure, the common task being to aid the Austrian people in the restoration and democratic reconstruction of their country. The memorandum said that, although free elections had taken place in Austria in November 1945 and a democratic government, recognized by the four occupying Powers, had been established, the occupation and allied control system were still in force seven years after the liberation of Austria. The negotiations for the conclusion of an Austrian treaty, intermittently conducted by the four Powers since 1947, had thus failed to bring about the objective that the four Powers had set themselves in the Moscow Declaration. Such a state of affairs, the memorandum stated, constituted a source of deep disappointment for the Austrian people and gave rise to a serious problem which called for the attention of the United Nations. The memorandum recalled that the General Assembly, by its resolution 190(III) of 3 November 1948, had already made an appeal to the Great Powers to compose their differences and establish a lasting peace in Austria. Brazil considered that an earnest appeal must now be addressed by the General Assembly to the Powers signatories of the Moscow Declaration to make renewed and urgent efforts to reach agreement on the terms of an Austrian treaty.

⁸⁴ On 30 March 1953 the General Assembly, on the proposal of the President, decided to appoint Henri Laugier of France and Dantes Bellegarde of Haiti to replace Ralph Bunche and Jaime Torres Bodet on the Commission, as the last two named were unable to serve on that body.

At its 380th meeting on 16 October 1952, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include the question in its agenda and at its 382nd meeting on 17 October, referred it to the First Committee. USSR proposals to delete the item were rejected in the General Committee by 12 votes to 2 and in the Assembly's plenary meeting by 48 votes to 5.

The First Committee considered the question at its 553rd to 556th meetings from 17 to 19 December. By 47 votes to 5, it decided to invite the Foreign Minister of Austria to participate in the discussions.

Opening the discussion, the representative of the USSR recalled that his delegation had objected in the General Committee and in the plenary meeting to the inclusion of the question in the Assembly's agenda. The Soviet Government considered that such a discussion by the General Assembly would be contrary to the terms of the Charter, in particular to those of Article 107.⁸⁵ The representative of the USSR maintained that according to the Moscow and Potsdam agreements the four Powers had exclusive competence on the question of Austria and that the control machinery for Austria had been established in 1946 as a result of their agreed decision. At that time, important decisions had been taken on political and economic questions relating to Austria and it had been decided to prepare the draft of an Austrian peace treaty, on which substantial work had subsequently been done; agreement had been reached on all except a few articles. The USSR had drawn the attention of the other Governments concerned to the necessity of verifying that the Austrian Government fulfilled the four Powers' decision on demilitarization and denazification.

In considering an Austrian peace treaty, the Soviet Government could not ignore the non-observance by the United States, the United Kingdom and France of other international agreements which they had concluded with the USSR, he stated. Thus the Italian Peace Treaty which provided that Trieste would become a free city governed by a special statute had not been observed and the city had become an Anglo-American base. As long as the three Powers failed to abide by their obligations in Trieste there would be no assurance that the terms of an Austrian peace treaty would be respected.

The USSR representative stated that the proposal made in March 1952 by the three Western Powers for an abbreviated peace treaty had been in contradiction with the previous agreements reached among the four Powers. After turning down a Soviet suggestion to withdraw that proposal, the three Powers had decided to bring the question before the United Nations, their aim being to divert public opinion from acute international problems, such as the reduction of armaments, the prohibition of atomic weapons, the cessation of hostilities in Korea and the proposal for the conclusion of a peace pact among the four Great Powers.

For these reasons, the USSR representative concluded, his delegation would not participate in the consideration of the question, would not take part in the vote on any proposal that might be submitted on it, and would not recognize the validity of any resolution that might emerge from the Assembly's consideration of the question.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR associated themselves with the views expressed by the USSR representative and stated that they would adopt the same position. The responsibility for the deadlock on the Austrian peace treaty, they said, lay entirely with the three Western Powers, which had raised the problem to slander the USSR. In Austria, despite the continual protests of the USSR in the Control Commission, war criminals had gone unpunished and many who had been in prison had been released; the Austrian Government had refused to return war criminals to Poland, and Hitlerite officers were again being given a place of honour. While the Soviet Union Government had consistently displayed its sincere desire to reach agreement, the three Western Powers, they said, had revealed that they wanted to continue the occupation of Austria in order to transform it into a military base.

⁸⁵ This Article allows for action in relation to ex-enemy States of the Second World War by the governments having responsibility for such action.

The representatives of Brazil, Lebanon, Mexico and the Netherlands submitted a joint draft resolution (A/C.1/L.16), by which the General Assembly, recalling its resolution 190(III) of 1948 and the Moscow Declaration and stating that inconclusive negotiations between the four Powers (France, the USSR, the United Kingdom and the United States) regarding the establishment of an independent Austria were causing deep disappointment to the Austrian people and were hampering Austria's exercise of sovereignty, would address an earnest appeal to the Governments concerned to renew efforts to agree on an Austrian peace treaty.

The sponsors of the joint draft resolution stated that the United Nations could not remain indifferent to the condition of subjection and partition of the Austrian people. In the Moscow Declaration the four Powers had recognized that Austria was "the first of the three countries which fell victim to the Hitlerite aggression". They had further affirmed their determination to restore Austria as a free and independent State, but the negotiations undertaken by the four Powers for the conclusion of an Austrian peace treaty had been fruitless. That situation had become a cause for concern to all nations and was now legitimately brought to the attention of the United Nations. Article 1, paragraph 2, of the Charter stated that one of the purposes of the United Nations was to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples. A solution of the Austrian question would certainly represent a decisive contribution to a healthier international atmosphere.

They said that the joint proposal was in line with Assembly resolution 190(III) of 3 November 1948 and expressed the deep concern of the medium and small Powers with the deadlock in which the negotiations had remained since 1947. There was no intention of dealing with the substance of the matter, nor to transfer to the 60 Members of the United Nations a question which was, in fact, the exclusive responsibility of the Great Powers. The only objective of the sponsors was to have the General Assembly address a solemn appeal to the four Powers to make a new and urgent effort to resolve their differences which would lead to an early end of the occupation of Austria and to the free exercise by Austria of the powers inherent in its sovereignty.

In his statement, the Foreign Minister for Austria recalled that after the beginning of the Second World War Allied statesmen had solemnly proclaimed that Austria would be restored as a sovereign state. The Moscow Declaration of 1943 had expressed the same objective. Despite the fact that the conditions for the withdrawal of Allied troops (free elections, formation of a constitutional government and re-establishment of public order) had been fulfilled soon after 1945, the Austrian people had already had to support eight more years of bondage and of oppressive occupation. Many Austrians had been abducted and tried by Allied military tribunals; property had been seized and dismantled; Austrian oil deposits had been exploited by a foreign Power; a large amount of Austrian land was still confiscated; and the cost of occupation borne by the Austrian people created a considerable burden for the country. But what oppressed and disheartened the Austrian people most was the fact that the end of this humiliating situation was not in sight.

Turning to the history of the negotiations for an Austrian treaty, he recalled that, after endless deliberations, the Foreign Ministers of the Four Powers had met in Paris in 1949 and had agreed to finalize the treaty draft not later than 1 September 1949. The State Treaty was actually completed with the exception of a few secondary clauses. Nevertheless, when it became evident that the Western Powers were ready to compromise on the remaining five articles, the Soviet authorities had suddenly brought up the question of Trieste. The Soviet Union had also asked for the institution of a new commission of investigation in Austria. In this connexion, the representative of Austria asserted that the charges of the remilitarization of Austria were entirely unfounded. No other country in the world was so completely disarmed as Austria. It was equally unfounded and illogical to subordinate the conclusion of the Austrian State Treaty to the settlement of the Trieste question, since the Austrian Government had not the slightest influence on such a settlement. The Western Powers had further proposed an abbreviated treaty to meet the Soviet objections. However, this new formula had been rejected by the Soviet Government as well as a new invitation to meet in London on 19 September 1952 for a Deputies' Conference.

The Austrian Foreign Minister said that the deadlocked situation would not be passively accepted by the Austrian people, who wanted a prompt treaty and a treaty which would be implemented rapidly. The Austrian people had proved their sense of responsibility towards the international community by exercising great restraint in showing their discontent, in view of the acute international situation. The risks inherent in an occupation by foreign armed soldiers in the midst of an increasingly angered population had to be recognized. The Austrian people put their trust in the United Nations to face the situation squarely and to restore confidence and hope in their country.

The representatives of the United Kingdom, United States and France spoke in favour of the joint draft resolution.

The United Kingdom representative stated that the Governments of the United Kingdom, United States and France had laboured for six years for the re-establishment of a free and independent Austria as expressed in the Moscow Declaration by the four Powers. Shortly after a democratically elected government had been established in Austria and recognized by the four occupying Powers in January 1946, the Western Powers had begun their attempts to open negotiations with the Soviet Union in order to conclude an Austrian peace treaty. It was not until December 1946 that the Soviet Union had agreed to hold a conference of Deputy Foreign Ministers which would draft the treaty. In June 1949, at the end of 163 meetings, the main points of the draft treaty had been agreed upon. After agreement had been reached by the Council of Foreign Ministers on a few important controversial points, such as Yugoslav territorial claims on Austria and Soviet claims on German assets in Austria, the four Deputy Foreign Ministers were instructed to complete the State Treaty by 1 September 1949.

The Soviet Government had then raised new difficulties in connexion with the wording of the agreement on the question of German assets, and had declined to discuss the few remaining articles until it had obtained satisfaction on its claim against the Austrian Government for supplies furnished to Austria after the war. When the four-Power negotiations had been resumed in May 1950, the Soviet Deputy had introduced a new issue by accusing the Austrian Government and the Western Powers of encouraging the revival of Nazism and of remilitarizing Western Austria. About the same time, the Soviet Union had also introduced the question of the Italian Peace Treaty in so far as it concerned Trieste. The Soviet Deputy had declared that the Western Powers were, by their attitude towards Trieste, raising doubts as to their sincerity with regard to the implementation of the Austrian Treaty. After an exchange of notes, the negotiations had been abandoned in December 1950. In December 1951 the Soviet Deputy had thwarted another effort made by the Western Powers to reopen the treaty negotiations in January 1952 by again putting forward the question of Trieste. The Western Powers thereupon had presented to the Soviet Government on 13 March 1952 an abbreviated draft treaty which contained only a minimum of articles required to end the occupation of Austria and to restore its independence. In August, the Soviet Government had rejected such an abbreviated treaty on the grounds that it failed to make any provisions for the maintenance in Austria of human rights and of democratic government and for the suppression of Nazi activities. The Western Powers had offered to meet the Soviet objections by adding to the abbreviated treaty articles 7, 8 and 9 of the original longer draft, which referred to human rights, democratic institutions and the dissolution of Nazi organizations. The Western Powers had convened a meeting of the Foreign Ministers for 29 September 1952, but a Soviet note of 28 September had maintained that the abbreviated treaty did not fully meet the Soviet objections and the scheduled meeting for 29 September had never taken place.

The Western Powers, he stated, remained convinced that no point of substance was preventing the conclusion of the Austrian treaty; Russian assent alone was lacking.

The representative of the United States declared that, contrary to the assertion of the Soviet delegation, Article 107 of the United Nations Charter was not applicable to the case in point; in the first place Austria was not a former enemy of any signatory to the Charter; secondly, the discussion of the draft resolution before the First Committee could in no way be regarded as an attempt to invalidate or preclude action taken by the four responsible Governments. Nobody was asking the First Committee to deal substantively with the problem. The present situation in Austria seriously affected the peace in the surrounding area. As one of the four occupying Powers in Austria, the United States, he said, had already tried and would continue to try to find a way to restore Austria's independence in accordance with the Moscow Declaration of 1 November 1943. The United States representative reviewed the history of this question, starting with his Government's proposal made early in 1946 at the Council of Foreign Ministers that the four occupying Powers should join in a State Treaty with the liberated Austrian State recognizing its independence. Since the Soviet Union agreed in 1947 to begin discussing the Austrian treaty, there had been 376 quadripartite meetings, but there was still no treaty. All efforts, he said, had been frustrated by the unyielding attitude of the Soviet Union, which continually conditioned its agreement upon the settlement of specific problems on its own terms. Obviously these terms were calculated to perpetuate the dependence of Austria upon the Soviet Union, even after the withdrawal of Soviet troops. The United States representative traced the development of the quadripartite negotiations, and charged that every time a concession had been made to meet the Soviet point of view, the Soviet representatives had introduced new issues, each more extraneous than the last. While the Western Powers were willing to accept any treaty in terms adequate to ensure the restoration of Austria's independence, the Soviet Union continued to use Austria as a pawn for its own imperialistic purposes, he charged. For its part, the United States was ready to meet again with USSR representatives in order to conclude the Austrian treaty.

The representative of France endorsed the statements of the United Kingdom and United States representatives. He affirmed the sympathy of his Government for the Austrian people. France, he said, was well aware of the deep disappointment suffered by Austria as a consequence of the maintenance of the occupation regime for eight years; it had done its utmost to lighten the burden of the occupation and was ready to do everything in its power to develop Austria's resources. The representative of France stated that the decision now depended upon the Soviet Union. He expressed the hope that the Soviet Union would not remain indifferent to the fate of the Austrian people and would respond to the appeal unanimously addressed to it.

The representatives of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Greece, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Peru, Sweden, Syria, Turkey, the Union of South Africa, Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia spoke in favour of the joint draft resolution. They said that it could not be forgotten that the liberation of Austria had been accomplished in the spring of 1945 and that no solution had yet been reached. While countries directly associated with Nazi aggression had each obtained a peace treaty, Austria, on the contrary, still suffered a regime of military occupation seven years after the end of the war. The sad history of the four-Power negotiations on the Austrian treaty was a matter of common knowledge, and the resulting situation was clearly a matter of concern to the United Nations. In view of the inherent threat to the peace, it was clearly within the Assembly's competence to take the limited action proposed in the draft resolution. The purpose of this draft was simply to make an urgent appeal to the four Great Powers concerned to reach agreement on an Austrian peace treaty.

The representative of Yugoslavia said that the Austrian question was of particular concern to Yugoslavia, which was Austria's immediate neighbour. There were no grounds, he emphasized, for linking the question of the Austrian peace treaty and that of Trieste; the Trieste question had been expressly dealt with in the Italian Peace Treaty and at present concerned only Italy and Yugoslavia.

Commenting at length on the question of competence, the representative of Greece concluded that Article 107 of the Charter did not justify the contention that the Assembly was incompetent to discuss the question of Austria any more than that of the unification of Germany which it had examined at its sixth session.

The representative of Pakistan indicated that he would abstain from voting on the joint draft resolution since certain delegations supporting it were inconsistent in their attitude towards similar questions affecting other countries such as Tunisia and Morocco.

At its 556th meeting on 19 December the First Committee adopted the joint draft resolution by a roll-call vote of 48 to none, with two abstentions.

The General Assembly, at its 409th plenary meeting on 20 December, by 48 votes to none, with 2 abstentions, adopted, without debate, the draft resolution recommended by the First Committee (A/2339) as resolution 613(VII).. It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling the terms of resolution 190(III) of 3 November 1948, whereby an appeal was made to the great Powers to renew their efforts to compose their differences and establish a lasting peace,

"Recalling the terms of the Moscow Declaration of 1 November 1943, whereby the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America recognized that Austria should be re-established as a free and independent State,

"Recalling further that the Government of France joined the three above-mentioned Governments in the said declaration as of 16 November 1943,

"Considering that, in the spirit of the said declaration, the four Powers accepted the responsibility of re-establishing a free and independent Austria, and, to that end, have entered into negotiations towards the conclusion of an Austrian treaty,

"Noting with concern that those negotiations, which have been under way intermittently since 1947, have hitherto failed to bring about the proposed objective,

"Taking into account that such a state of affairs, still prevailing after a lapse of seven years since the liberation of Austria at the end of the Second World War, and arising from the inconclusive stage of the aforementioned negotiations, does constitute a source of deep disappointment for the Austrian people, who have by themselves made successful efforts towards the restoration and democratic reconstruction of their country.

"Recognizing that only through the unhampered exercise by the Austrian people of their freedom and independence can these efforts attain full realization,

"Taking further into account that such a state of affairs hinders the full participation by Austria in the normal and peaceful relations of the community of nations and the full exercise of the powers inherent in its sovereignty,

"Having in mind that the solution of this problem would constitute an important step toward the elimination of other areas of disagreement and therefore towards the creation of conditions favourable to the accomplishment of world peace,

"Desiring to contribute to the strengthening of international peace and security and the developing of friendly relations among nations in conformity with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter.

"Addresses an earnest appeal to the Governments concerned to make a renewed and urgent effort to reach agreement on the terms of an Austrian treaty with a view to an early termination of the occupation of Austria and the full exercise by Austria of the powers inherent in its sovereignty."

L. THE QUESTION OF HOLDING FREE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY

At its sixth session, on 20 December 1951, the General Assembly adopted resolution 510(VI) by which it appointed a Commission to carry out immediately a simultaneous investigation in the Federal Republic of Germany, in Berlin, and in the Soviet Zone of Germany to ascertain and report whether conditions were such as to make possible the holding of genuinely free and secret elections throughout those areas.⁸⁶ The resolution provided that the Commission should be composed of representatives of Brazil, Iceland, the Netherlands, Pakistan and Poland. On 18 January 1952 the Chairman of the Polish delegation informed the President of the General Assembly and the Secretariat that, in conformity with the attitude which it had always maintained in this matter, Poland would not participate in the Commission and would accordingly not appoint a representative. The four other members of the Commission appointed their representatives to the Commission.

The Commission submitted two reports to the Secretary-General for the consideration of the four Powers and for the information of other Members of the United Nations. One, dated 1 May 1952 (A/2122/Add.1), covered the period from 11 February to 30 April and the other, a supplementary report (A/2122/Add.2), covered the period from May to August 1952. In its first report, the Commission stated that it had secured from the Allied High Commission in Western Germany, from the authorities of the Federal Republic of Germany and from those of the western sector in Berlin, every assurance of co-operation in its task and every facility, including the right of free travel, normal and recognized diplomatic privileges and immunities, free access to persons, places and relevant documents, the right to summon witnesses, assurances of immunity for such witnesses, the right to communicate freely with the people in various areas and the immunity of its own communications from censorship or suppression. However, in spite of its repeated attempts, the Commission had received no answer to its letters to the Chairman of the Soviet Control Commission for Germany.

The Commission therefore regretfully concluded that, at that time, there was little prospect of its being able to pursue its task.

In its supplementary report the Commission referred to an exchange of Notes on the German question between the USSR, on the one hand, and France, the United Kingdom and the United States, on the other, in which the Commission had failed to find any agreement whatsoever that it would be used to carry out an investigation throughout Germany, to determine whether existing conditions permitted "generally free elections" to be held in that country. The Commission stated that it had become obvious as a result of the exchange of Notes that, while the three Western Powers strongly preferred that the present Commission carry out its task, they were prepared to consider any other practical and precise proposals for an impartial commission of investigation which the Soviet Government might put forward, on the condition that they were likely to expedite free elections in Germany.

⁸⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 316-52.

The USSR, on the other hand, maintained its objection to the competence of the United Nations on the question of Germany and rejected investigation by the Commission. It was, however, agreeable to investigation by another impartial commission formed by the four occupying Powers. It seemed clear to the Commission, therefore, that the four occupying Powers were agreed that an essential preliminary to the formation of an all-German Government was that it should be based on free elections, and further that, before such a government was formed, it was necessary to have an investigation by an impartial body to determine whether existing conditions throughout Germany would permit the holding of free elections. The Commission expressed the hope that the USSR Government would ultimately be persuaded to repose faith in a body which had been set up by an overwhelming majority of its colleagues in the United Nations.

The Commission decided on 31 July to submit its final report and adjourn sine die, while remaining at the disposal of the United Nations and the parties concerned as long as its mandate was in force. The question was not considered by the General Assembly in 1952.

M. DISARMAMENT

The Disarmament Commission, set up under General Assembly resolution 502(VI) of 11 January 1952⁸⁷, held its first meeting on 4 February 1952 in Paris, in accordance with the provision in that resolution that it should begin its work within 30 days. At that meeting, the Commission adopted its provisional rules of procedure (DC/1), decided to continue its work in New York and disposed of other procedural matters.

1. Organization of the Work of the Disarmament Commission

The Commission continued its discussions in New York and devoted eight meetings between 14 March and 2 April to the organization of its work. It considered: the formulation of its programme of work, the question of discussing charges of the use of bacterial warfare in Korea and China, the organization of working committees and the allocation of tasks to them.

a. PROGRAMME OF WORK

At the second meeting of the Commission, on 14 March, the representative of the United States submitted a proposed plan of work (DC/3) which, he said, followed the language of resolution 502(VI) and was designed to cover the essential elements of any balanced disarmament system without prejudging the details. That plan was endorsed in principle by the representatives of France and the United Kingdom. The USSR representative, however, rejected that plan, stating that its object was to confine the activities of the Commission to the formulation of proposals for the disclosure and verification of information on armed forces and armaments, excluding atomic and other secret weapons. It would, he said, tend to impede both the reduction of armaments and the prohibition of the atomic weapon. At the third meeting, he submitted an alternative plan (DC/4/Rev.1), which would, he said, lead to concrete decisions to prohibit atomic weapons and reduce armaments and armed forces, with the attendant effects of the submission of complete official data on all armaments and armed forces and the establishment of an international control organ.

In the discussion, a number of representatives took exception to the USSR draft plan of work on the ground that it was so drawn up as to prejudge the nature of the substantive decisions to be reached. On the other hand, the United States plan consisted of general topics for discussion which, it was maintained, would permit the examination of all concrete proposals, including those of the USSR.

The representatives of the United Kingdom and Chile stressed the need for a compromise in the matter of the working programme and the representative of France offered suggestions in that regard. At the seventh meeting the latter representative submitted a substitute plan of work (DC/5), which would deal with all matters under three headings, as follows:

"A. Disclosure and verification of all armaments, including atomic armaments, and of all armed forces.

"B. Regulation of all armaments and armed forces, including:

"1. Elimination of atomic weapons and control of atomic energy with a view to ensuring their elimination;

"2. Elimination of weapons of mass destruction and control with a view to ensuring their elimination;

⁸⁷ For terms of reference of the Commission, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 176-77

"3. Limitation and balanced reduction of all other armaments and of all armed forces, and control of this limitation and reduction.

"C. Procedure and timetable for giving effect to the disarmament programme.

"Points A and B to be studied concurrently in the first stages of the Commission's work."

The USSR representative took the position that the French plan suffered from the same defects as the United States plan.

At the eighth meeting on 28 March, the USSR plan of work was rejected by 9 votes to 1 (USSR), with 2 abstentions (France, Pakistan). The French plan was then adopted by 11 votes to 1 (USSR). At the 24th meeting on 27 August, the Commission amended its programme of work by inserting the words "including bacterial weapons" in paragraph B2 (see section 3(c) below).

b. CHARGES REGARDING THE USE OF BACTERIAL WARFARE IN KOREA AND CHINA⁸⁸

At the second meeting of the Commission, in connexion with the United States proposal for a plan of work, the USSR representative asked the Commission to consider without delay, with reference to charges of the use of bacterial weapons in Korea and China, the question of the violation of the prohibition of bacterial warfare so as to prevent its further use and to bring the violators to account. In that connexion, he specified the complaints which had been made by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea and of the People's Republic of China. In reply, the United States representative repudiated the charges, drew attention to other official denials and said that the United States had asked the International Committee of the Red Cross for an impartial investigation of the charges. He asked whether the USSR Government would exercise its good offices to prevail on the Chinese Communist and North Korean authorities to accept the proposal of the Red Cross for an investigation. The USSR representative said he had proposed that the Commission consider the question of bacterial warfare; his delegation would take an active part in the elucidation of the facts.

Discussion of the charges continued from time to time until the eighth meeting. In addition to further detailed denials by the United States representative and to further specific charges by the USSR representative, statements repudiating the charges were made by the representatives of Canada, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Turkey and the United Kingdom, all States which had forces in Korea. In addition, several representatives expressed the opinion that the Disarmament Commission, which was a special organ created for a specific purpose, was not competent to investigate or even to consider the charges.

At the eighth meeting, when the representative of the United States intervened on a point of order, the Chairman ruled that the Commission was not the proper forum in which to make or consider specific charges of bacterial or any other kind of warfare. The ruling, having been challenged by the USSR representative, was upheld by 11 votes to 1 (USSR).

Subsequently, there was some discussion of the capacity of the International Committee of the Red Cross to conduct an impartial international investigation and of the propriety of the circulation as Commission documents of communications relating to charges of bacterial warfare. At the fifth meeting of Committee 1, the Chairman ruled out of order: (1) discussion of methods and agencies for the investigation of such charges; and (2) presentation or circulation of documents purporting to substantiate or prove such charges. The USSR representative challenged those rulings, which were then put to the vote. The first ruling was upheld by 11 votes to 1 (USSR) and the second by 9 votes to 1 (USSR), with 2 abstentions (Chile, Pakistan).

The representative of the USSR protested against the rulings as illegal and as preventing the Disarmament Commission from considering the impermissibility of bacterial weapons and the calling to account of the violators of the prohibition.

c. ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEES 1 AND 2

At the ninth meeting of the Disarmament Commission, the Chairman, the representative of Chile, presented suggestions (DC/7) for organizing committees and allocating work to them, suggestions which were directed towards solving the question of priority between the items of the plan of work by conducting two parallel discussions. The USSR representative said that the establishment of committees was not only unnecessary because the same representatives would serve on them as on the Commission, but would also be harmful because the system proposed would combine the important and complex questions of the prohibition of atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and the reduction of armaments and armed forces into a single item, while giving equal emphasis to the secondary question of the collection of information. Other representatives, however, favoured the suggestions as affording a more orderly method of discussion than that of discussing various topics concurrently in the Commission. After discussion and amendment, the suggestions were adopted (DC/8) by 10 votes to 1, with 1 abstention.

⁸⁸ For consideration of these charges in the Security Council, see below under Bacterial Warfare.

2. Proceedings in the Committees

Committee 1, which was charged with the consideration of paragraph B of the plan of work adopted, namely, the regulation of all armaments and armed forces, held seven meetings between 4 April and 16 May. Discussion was concerned mainly with a working paper submitted by the United States on "Essential principles for a disarmament programme" (DC/C.1/1), and with the USSR proposals referred to the Commission in resolution 504(VI).⁸⁹

Committee 2, which was charged with the consideration of paragraph A of the plan of work, namely, disclosure and verification of all armaments, including atomic armaments, and all armed forces, held five meetings between 5 April and 16 May. Its discussion was based upon a United States working paper entitled "Proposals for progressive and continuing disclosure and verification of armed forces and armaments" (DC/C.2/1).

a. DISCUSSIONS IN COMMITTEE 1

The general discussion in the Committee centred on the two alternative approaches to the questions: (a) of prohibition of the atomic weapon and the international control of atomic energy; and (b) of the regulation, limitation and balanced reduction of conventional armaments and armed forces.

Broadly speaking, the representatives of Canada, France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States considered unacceptable the USSR proposals as they stood for an immediate ban on the atomic weapon and the establishment of strict international control of atomic energy, both to come into effect simultaneously, and immediate reduction by one-third of the armaments and armed forces by the permanent members of the Security Council. They considered that the immediate prohibition coupled with the proportional reduction of armaments and armed forces, as suggested by the USSR, would decrease security and would seriously upset the equilibrium of armed strength since the atomic weapon was a counterbalance to the preponderance of the USSR in mass armies and conventional weapons. The USSR position, they said, thus ran counter to the concept of balanced reduction which the Disarmament Commission had been instructed to work out and to propose.

The representative of France noted, however, that the USSR position had changed significantly at the sixth session of the General Assembly in Paris when the USSR Foreign Minister had stated that the controlling body as far as atomic energy was concerned, would be enabled to undertake "continuous inspection" without being allowed to "interfere in the domestic affairs of States". The concept of control and prohibition coming into effect simultaneously was also, it was stated, new and possibly represented an advance over the previous USSR position which required unconditional prohibition first and the institution of control afterwards.

The main difference of views between the Western Powers and the USSR, it was stated, related to the nature of the control system envisaged. The Western Powers adhered to the plan of control approved by the General Assembly in resolution 191(III) which contemplated ownership by the controlling agency of nuclear fuel and source materials and ownership, management and operation by the same agency of dangerous facilities. Although the Western Powers, supported by the majority of the United Nations, were prepared to consider new proposals, they would continue to adhere to the United Nations plan in accordance with the latest Assembly resolution on the question, resolution 502(VI) of 11 January 1952.

The representative of France, as well as other representatives, including those of Canada, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, asked for the clarification of the new terms introduced by the USSR on the problem of atomic disarmament. What, for example, was meant by prohibition and control coming into effect simultaneously? What was meant by "continuous inspection" and the reservation thereto covered by the phrase "without interference in the domestic affairs of States"?

The Committee also discussed a United States working paper (DC/C.1/1) presenting six general principles for a disarmament programme. In addition to the first principle, that war should be made inherently impossible as a means of settling international disputes, the proposal contained in the paper called for: co-operation to establish an open and substantially disarmed world in which no State would be able to prepare for war secretly; international agreements limiting forces and types and quantities of arms; the progressive reduction of armed forces and armaments and the elimination of weapons of mass destruction; the provision of effective safeguards, particularly in connexion with the international control of atomic energy; and progressive and continuing disclosure and verification.

⁸⁹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 178.

The representatives of Canada, France and the United Kingdom welcomed the circulation of the United States paper but held that the principles would only have value if they were unanimously accepted. Other members of the Committee, including the representatives of Brazil, Chile, Greece and the Netherlands, expressed themselves in favour of the examination and adoption of principles along the lines of the United States proposal.

In several interventions during the Committee's discussions, the representative of the USSR dealt with the questions raised by the other delegations and expressed his views on the working paper submitted by the United States. He considered that the representatives of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States had indulged in long, fruitless, abstract and general discussions which were designed to divert attention from the crucial question of the prohibition of atomic weapons and the reduction of armaments. Outlining his objections to the approach of the Western Powers on questions relating to atomic disarmament, he said that the United States plan, which was miscalled the United Nations plan, was based, not on the prohibition of the production of atomic weapons, but on the continuation of such production, while the USSR was in favour of the prohibition of the atomic weapon and discontinuance of its manufacture. Moreover, this plan envisaged not control but ownership—the creation of an international atomic super-trust on a commercial basis. Under that plan, the control organ would own and operate atomic mines and extract and process atomic raw materials. The USSR, he said, was opposed to that plan but was in favour of creating a genuinely international organ, established on a political and not a commercial basis, with wide rights and powers of verification and inspection on a continuing basis. The USSR envisaged no veto affecting the day-to-day functions of the control organ, but the United States, he said, sought the practical veto inherent in monopoly control.

The second objection related to the method of implementation of the disarmament programme.

The principle favoured by the United States and the Western Powers was, the USSR representative said, that implementation should begin with disclosure and verification of conventional armaments and armed forces, to be completed in several stages beginning from the less secret areas and reaching, in the ultimate and remote future, to atomic weapons, secret weapons and weapons of mass destruction. It was not even known, he said, when the final stage would be reached and there was no guarantee that the process would continue since it was possible that the United States, after obtaining all the strategic information regarding conventional armaments and armed forces of other countries, might find some pretext to stop the disclosures.

In this connexion, he referred to a paper (DC1/C2/1) submitted by the United States in Committee 2 (see below) which proposed that the implementation of the disarmament programme should be begun with the final principle of the United States paper (DC/1/1) before Committee 1, that is, with progressive and continuing disclosure and verification of all armaments and all armed forces. Thus, he said, the entire effort of the United States was to involve the Commission in the endless and protracted task of collecting information instead of proceeding with the real work which was to bring about the prohibition of the atomic weapon, control of atomic energy and reduction of armaments. The purpose of the proposal was to replace concrete decisions by declarations that would commit no government to any course. Moreover, the General Assembly in 1946 had laid down the guiding principles in resolution 41(I), and the task of the Committee was to implement those principles through the preparation of practical measures. The United States had always shown itself ready to make a declaration on general principles but had opposed concrete decisions for their implementation. The USSR had not urged a decision on principles, it had proposed taking a concrete decision on the prohibition of atomic weapons, the reduction of armed forces and armaments, and the establishment of strict international control.

Replying to the questions addressed to him, he said that, as regards his delegation's conception of simultaneity, it meant "that after the decision is taken to announce the prohibition of atomic weapons and the establishment of control, a certain period should elapse during which an international control organ would be formed and set up. When that organ is set up and its representatives are ready to undertake immediate practical control, then the prohibition of atomic weapons and the establishment of strict international control over the observance of such prohibition are to go into effect simultaneously."

On the question of continuous inspection he said that the representatives of the international control agency would visit all countries and all atomic plants; they would study, investigate, measure, weigh and analyse all undertakings engaged in the production of atomic energy, from raw material (including mining) to the finished product. They would exercise control on a continuing basis. He said, however, that there was no point in elaborating the details of the USSR proposals on this point until the "commercial approach" to the question of international control was abandoned. This question of principle must be settled first.

The representative of the USSR said that the only concrete proposals before the Commission were those of the USSR (DC/4/Rev.1) which provided that the Commission should immediately adopt a decision on prohibition of the atomic weapons, reduction of armaments and armed forces, strict international control, immediate disclosure by all States of data concerning their armed forces and armaments, including atomic weapons, and verification of such data. He concluded by stating that he was prepared to consider any new concrete proposals. However, while the USSR had modified its position with regard to inspection, the United States continued to insist on its own old plan. There was no advantage in discussing proposals that had nothing in common with the basic objectives of the Commission.

In reply to the statements of the USSR representative, several representatives expressed the view that if they were to make progress, the USSR representative should discuss in detail, and submit amendments to, the principles proposed by the United States. The United States representative stated that no progress could be made towards decisions on the reduction of armaments and the prohibition of the atomic weapon until there was agreement on safeguards and control. If the proposed principles, which made clear the purpose of achieving a reduction in armaments and the elimination of weapons of mass destruction, could be accepted, the Commission could proceed to the necessary work of devising safeguards. He said that the term "ownership", as used in the United Nations plan for the control of atomic energy, did not contemplate any super-monopoly on a commercial basis. It had nothing to do with private profits. It did not contemplate strict control by the United States capitalists. It contemplated only a multilateral plan. If such an international plan could be branded as a United States controlled scheme, he said, there would be no form of international control not subject to the USSR veto which could not be thus branded, should the USSR find it convenient to do so.

b. DISCUSSIONS IN COMMITTEE 2

Committee 2 discussed the United States working paper (DC/C.2/1) relating to disclosure and verification which, the United States representative explained, proposed, as essential principles on which the concrete proposals were based, that the system should be continuing, progressive and complete, and that it should provide adequate safeguards and include from the outset all armed forces and all armaments, including atomic weapons. Disclosure and verification by stages was proposed in order to expedite progress from the less secret to the more secret areas through the establishment of confidence by evidence of good faith. Five stages each were proposed for conventional and atomic armaments. The proposals did not neglect atomic weapons in favour of conventional armaments; at the first stage, there would be sufficient data available to make possible the calculation of the atomic potential of all States, but without exact or full details.

A number of members, including the representatives of Brazil, Canada, China, Greece, the Netherlands and Turkey, expressed their readiness to adopt the working paper as a basis for the Committee's discussions. The representative of the United Kingdom stated that he regarded disclosure and verification as an essential part of, not a substitute for, the disarmament process. The first task, creation of confidence, could be aided by disclosures which did not prejudice the security of any country. Even a little progress might create the basis for a disarmament plan. The disclosure procedures need not be completed before a disarmament programme was inaugurated.

The representative of France stated that the disclosure process should not delay disarmament. On the basis of the United States working paper, it should be possible to evolve a compromise solution. He outlined a system for three stages of disclosure and verification, the detailed plans for which had the approval of the French Government. He did not believe that disclosure and verification could be isolated from the disarmament process, nor could they be applied before the conventions governing regulation became operative. He preferred that the two procedures of disclosure and disarmament should be dovetailed and that each phase of disclosure, if the verification proved satisfactory, should automatically lead to some regulatory procedure: limitation, reduction or prohibition. He also stated that there should be an equal measure of disclosure in both the atomic and non-atomic fields. As there was general agreement on the need for verification, that matter might be discussed first, and separately; he proposed five principles as a basis for such discussion.

The USSR representative said that the United States working paper was designed to replace the questions of the reduction of armaments and the prohibition of the atomic weapon by a proposal to collect information. Without preliminary decisions on the prohibition of atomic weapons and the reduction of armaments, no plan for disclosure and verification would have reality. The USSR position was that, upon the adoption of the decisions, all States would be required to submit full official information on all armed forces and all armaments, including atomic. If some governments rejected agreements relating to prohibition and reduction, others would hardly agree to admit inspectors from those governments within their borders. Moreover, the system of stages was designed by the United States for intelligence purposes so as to secure a complete picture of the war potential and strength of other States in armed forces and conventional armaments at the first stage, while data on atomic and other secret weapons were reserved for the fifth stage in the remote and indefinite future. The plan, he stated, would be of advantage only to the United States, which was pursuing an aggressive policy of relying on weapons of mass destruction rather than on manpower.

The French suggestions, the USSR representative said, were basically the same as those of the United States; they would have the effect of postponing information on atomic weapons. No plan of stages for disclosure would be acceptable. The USSR policy was that full official data on all armed forces and all armaments should be submitted simultaneously, as soon as decisions had been taken on the reduction of armaments and the prohibition of atomic weapons.

3. Proceedings in the Disarmament Commission

At nineteen meetings held between 28 May and 9 October the Commission discussed: (1) the working paper (DC/10) and the supplement thereto (DC/12), submitted jointly by France, the United Kingdom and the United States, setting forth proposals for fixing numerical limitation of all armed forces; and (2) matters relating to bacterial warfare, including proposals made by the United States representative and a USSR proposal (DC/13/Rev.1) for immediate consideration of that question.

a. DISCUSSION OF PROPOSALS FOR FIXING NUMERICAL LIMITATION OF ALL ARMED FORCES

The working paper submitted jointly by France, the United Kingdom and the United States presented proposals for ceilings on all armed forces. It was suggested that numerical ceilings for China, the USSR and the United States should be fixed at between 1 million and 1.5 million effectives, and for France and the United Kingdom at between 700,000 and 800,000 effectives. For other States having substantial armed forces, ceilings should be fixed with a view to avoiding a disequilibrium of power. They would normally be less than 1 per cent of the population and less than current levels, except in very special circumstances.

In introducing the working paper, the representative of the United Kingdom expressed the hope that the USSR would examine those far-reaching proposals, covering one of the important elements of the over-all disarmament problem. The proposals would, it was hoped, facilitate agreement on solutions for other component questions, since armaments could hardly be dealt with except in relation to armed forces. If there could be agreement on levels of forces, decisions regarding their equipment should be easier. The growth of confidence resulting from such agreement should make the problems of the prohibition of atomic weapons and of ensuring the effectiveness of that prohibition less formidable obstacles.

The proposals, he said, would provide a clear objective, as compared with the unknown results of the USSR plan for a reduction by one third. Moreover, the USSR proposals dealt only with the five Powers. The United Kingdom representative added that the tripartite plan would in some cases lead to a cut of more than one third.

The representative of the United States said that the aim of the three Powers was not merely to regulate the armaments used in war but to eliminate war as a means of settling disputes. Since the armed forces available affected the size of armaments, reduction of those forces should lessen the likelihood and fear of war. If armed forces could first be limited, and then armaments, all weapons of mass destruction could be prohibited. The ceilings proposed for the five Powers sought to avoid a disequilibrium in order to reduce the danger of war. For other States, the same principle would be borne in mind—both a general equilibrium and an equilibrium in particular areas.

The three-Power proposal should be related to other components of the disarmament programme and should lead to comprehensive agreements, the United States representative continued. Safeguards to ensure observance and to detect violations were necessary, as were a time schedule and provision for a future review of the levels. Moreover, although the United States was not establishing pre-conditions, there was an obvious connexion between the solution of major political issues, including a Korean settlement, and the reduction of armed forces and armaments.

The representative of France stated that if there were agreement on the principles enunciated in the paper, the remaining points could possibly be modified. The basis of the proposal, he said, was a bulk reduction which would be more substantial than one third. International tension would be relaxed by a progressive combination of disarmament and the settlement of other problems.

France, he declared, would not be content with a reduction in armed forces unless it was accompanied by a corresponding reduction in armaments, by the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction and by the establishment of controls. The Commission would have to evolve other component solutions and, after dealing with the problem of the sequence of the various measures, assemble them into a general programme. The French Government would sponsor conciliation and compromise and try to co-operate in proposing practical solutions.

In reply to an objection by the representative of the USSR that the proposal made no reference to the reduction of air forces and navies, representatives of the sponsoring Powers stated that the ceilings proposed would include all forces—naval and air as well as land forces. In reply to another statement by the USSR representative that the meaning of "China" in the context of the proposal should be made clear and that the proposals could not be considered without the participation of the Chinese Central People's Government, the representative of the United Kingdom, on behalf of the sponsoring Powers, stated that the word "China" denoted a country and not a Government and that the proposed ceilings would apply to China. As regards the participation of the Chinese People's Government, he said that the consideration of the USSR proposals involving a one-third reduction of the forces of China had not been barred on account of the absence of Chinese representatives.

In criticizing the proposals, the USSR representative said that the question of armed forces had been separated artificially from the main question: the prohibition of atomic weapons and the reduction of armaments. Although the need to create a balance of armed forces among the States and to prevent any break which would endanger international peace and security was stressed, nothing concrete was said about the reduction of armaments and the prohibition of atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction. The whole problem of strength had been reduced merely to the question of the effectives in the armed forces of States. However, the number of men in the armed forces of a State was not as important as the quantity of military aircraft and armaments it possessed and the size of its navy. The expansion of the last three had been demanded by the military and political leaders of the United States, who had constantly pointed out that those forces, being the main striking force, along with the atomic weapon, could attain victory without tremendous land armies.

By failing to include proposals for reduction of armaments, prohibition of the atomic weapon and weapons of mass destruction, the three-Power plan would place the United States in a privileged military position and would weaken the strength of other States. No balance would be created and the three Powers could increase their strength by expanding naval and air forces and intensifying the production of armaments, atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction. The proposals nowhere specified that air and naval forces were to be reduced as well as land forces, nor was there provision for a specific ratio between the various services. The emphasis was on the reduction of effectives in the land forces, including para-military and security forces, although anyone could clearly see that it was not para-military and security forces, but air and naval forces which, being kept in constant readiness for action, might be utilized for the purpose of aggression.

Indeed, the representative of the USSR went on to say, the proposals did not really offer a reduction in armed forces, but only the arbitrary imposition of ceilings. He produced data to demonstrate an enormous increase in the army, navy and air forces and armaments of France, the United Kingdom and, particularly, the United States. In the case of France, he said, the armed forces would rise above the proposed ceiling only during the current year, as a result of the rearmament programme. The ceiling proposed for the United Kingdom would require only a negligible reduction, again from a peak reached through rearmament, and that reduction only at the expense of an insignificant number of men in units of secondary importance, but not at the expense of naval and air forces. As far as the United States was concerned, the object was to legalize the increased number of air and naval forces. The purpose of the limitation, he said, was to legalize an inflated condition for those Powers.

In conformity with United States policy, the USSR representative observed, the proposals passed over the question of the prohibition of bacterial warfare. A further omission was the absence of provision for the liquidation of the ever-increasing number of military bases abroad and of the armed forces stationed at those bases, which were useful exclusively for aggression.

If, however, the Governments of the three Powers really intended to reduce their armaments and armed forces by at least one third, and if they would agree to adopt a concrete decision on that question simultaneously with a decision on the prohibition of the atomic weapon and the establishment of control, the USSR delegation foresaw no difficulty in reaching agreement on concrete indices for such a reduction of armaments and armed forces.

The USSR representative said that the tripartite proposals were inadequate and could not lead to progress. No ratio or proportion was given for naval or air forces. The USSR proposals, on the other hand, would bring about a reduction by one third in each category of armed forces—land, sea and air—and also a one-third reduction in each type of armaments, including, for example, the various types of tanks, aircraft and guns. The USSR representative asked how the reduction of United States forces would take place under the tripartite proposals; what would be the respective percentages of reduction for land, sea and air forces; and what would be the ratio between the three services at the final level? Those were matters of the highest importance and could not be regarded as details; they required clarification if the proposals were to be discussed.

In reply, the representative of the United States said that the tripartite proposals had been distorted and misrepresented. The position of the three Powers on the nature of their proposals had been made clear: the ceilings on armed forces were proposed as one element of a comprehensive disarmament programme which would also include the reduction of armaments, the elimination of atomic weapons, the control of atomic energy, the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction, and the establishment of adequate and effective safeguards. Moreover, the limitations proposed were intended to extend to all armed forces: land, sea and air.

With respect to his Government's policies, the representative of the United States stated that his country was rearming to deter future aggressions. The United States did not desire unilateral disarmament, but it had presented various proposals—regarding disclosure and verification, the principles of disarmament, and ceilings for armed forces—which the USSR refused to consider and insisted on misrepresenting. At the same time, the USSR representative refused to elaborate and explain his Government's proposals with sufficient precision to permit their evaluation and proper consideration.

The United Kingdom representative stated that it was futile to pretend that the three Powers were seeking to avoid disarmament. It had been made clear that the proposals were designed as part of a whole. It had been felt, however, that an agreement on the question of forces would facilitate agreement on other matters. Under the proposals, the size of all types of land, sea and air forces would be the subject of negotiation, and if the USSR were concerned about the effect on the balance of power, it could put forward proposals.

b. FRENCH SUGGESTIONS REGARDING SCHEDULES AND TIME-TABLES

The Commission then heard suggestions made by the representative of France regarding the schedule and time-table for giving effect to the disarmament programme. In his view, one of the reasons for the Commission's failure to make progress was the disagreement on the order in which the various substantive measures should be put into effect. The French position was that all decisions on limitations and prohibitions should be put at the head of a draft treaty, and the entry into force of each should be subject to two conditions: (1) there should be a definite sequence, and each limitation or prohibition should be undertaken only after the previous one had been certified as achieved by a designated international organ, but should then follow automatically; and (2) each limitation or prohibition should take place subject to the establishment in working order of the corresponding control mechanism. That thesis was designed to conciliate the views that, on the one hand, the prohibitions and limitations should be promulgated at the outset and, on the other hand, that they should be put into effect only after the establishment of controls.

The French ideas would synchronize operations which might be classified into three groups: disclosure and verification; armed forces and conventional armaments; and atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction. Three comprehensive stages were suggested in the synchronized system. In the first stage there would be a cessation of the armaments race consequent upon the limitations of armed forces and total military expenditures. Bacterial and chemical weapons might be prohibited. Those events would follow the successful completion of corresponding disclosures and their verification. At the end of the second stage of disclosure, which would also be related to the subsequent events, the increase in stocks of conventional weapons and the manufacture of atomic weapons and of fissionable materials in dangerous quantities would be prohibited. At the end of the third stage of disclosure, and within a specified period of time, the reduction of armed forces and armaments would be undertaken and the prohibition of atomic weapons would enter into force as soon as the supreme organ had found that conventional armed forces had been properly reduced.

On the basis of plans along the foregoing lines, the French representative said, States would retain, at the end of a stated period, only conventional armaments which had been reduced to agreed levels. Controls would be functioning to ensure against the reappearance of weapons of mass destruction. In addition, there should be provision for further reductions until States would dispose only of such armed forces as would be necessary to ensure internal security and the fulfilment of international obligations.

c. SUPPLEMENT TO THE TRIPARTITE WORKING PAPER

At the eighteenth meeting, on 12 August, the representative of the United States introduced on behalf of the three sponsoring Governments a supplement (DC/12) to the three-Power working paper relating to fixing numerical limitation of all armed forces. Presenting the paper, he said that it met the objections to the three-Power proposals expressed by the USSR representative to the effect that they did not deal with the distribution of armed forces or the reduction of armaments. The supplement made it clear that the three Powers sought to prevent undue concentration of armed forces in any category such as would prejudice a balanced reduction. It also showed the intention that agreed solutions for all aspects of a disarmament programme should be worked out and brought into a balanced relationship. The three Powers had recognized, however, that the needs and responsibilities of States differed and that their defence required differing types of forces and armaments. The object of the three Powers was to secure the greatest reduction practicable in armed forces and armaments, in order to minimize the danger and fear of war, while avoiding any serious imbalance of power.

If the proposals for fixing numerical limitations on all armed forces were accepted, a conference of the five permanent members of the Security Council could be arranged with a view to reaching a tentative agreement on the distribution by principal categories of their forces within the agreed ceilings, the types and quantities of armaments for their support, the elimination of all other armed forces and armaments (expressly including all weapons of mass destruction) and the effective international control of atomic energy. Then, under the auspices of the Commission, there would be held regional conferences of all governments and authorities having substantial military forces in the respective regions, with a view to negotiating similar tentative agreements. Such tentative agreements would be incorporated into a draft treaty comprehending all the essential components of the disarmament programme and bringing them into balanced relationship. That implied that the limitations or reductions in armed forces and armaments and the steps in the elimination of prohibited armaments would begin at the same time and be carried out progressively in a synchronized manner. It should be understood, however, that the programme could only be put into effect after safeguards to ensure its execution and observance had been agreed upon and an international control authority had been established.

The representative of France said it was important to find a system of distribution between the major categories of armed forces, as well as a system for the reduction of armaments which would satisfy the responsibilities and security requirements of each State. No disarmament programme could be imposed by a majority on a minority and the three-Power proposals accordingly had left the broadest scope for negotiation. On the important questions concerned there should first be agreement among the five permanent members of the Security Council and subsequently between the States having important armed forces in each area of the world. The timing of any programme and its co-ordination were matters to which France attached great importance. While it was not possible to make reductions before beginning the disclosure of information, or to give effect to prohibitions before there were means of control, it was not necessary to await the settlement of all details before making a beginning.

The representative of the United Kingdom emphasized that the proposals included all types of armed forces, including naval and air forces. The assertion that the ceilings were a device to enable the Western Powers to retain their naval and air forces at existing levels was demonstrably untrue. On the basis of the figures used by the USSR representative, it was mathematically impossible for the United States, even by abolishing its land forces, to reduce its armed forces below the proposed ceiling without reducing its naval and air forces by at least one third. Nor was it correct to pretend that the three Powers were seeking to secure a reduction of conventional armaments while leaving atomic weapons uncontrolled. Any agreement dealing with part of the disarmament programme was to be regarded as tentative until agreement had been reached on all parts.

In the course of the discussion, a number of questions were asked by the representatives of Chile and the USSR concerning the effect of the proposed conferences on the status and functions of the Disarmament Commission. The representative of France stated that no prejudice to the Commission had been intended. Provisional agreements on well-defined subjects would be reached in the five-Power conference and the regional conferences, and those results would be examined and harmonized by the Commission for inclusion in the general disarmament plan to be submitted to a world conference.

The representative of the USSR observed that no reply had been given by the supplementary proposals to the question of levels for land, sea or air forces or the ratios between those main categories within the global maximum levels to be set for the five Powers. Instead, there was a complex scheme of conferences which would cause confusion and delay, thereby avoiding a decision for the effective reduction of all armed forces. The three Powers did not wish the Disarmament Commission to determine either the global maximum levels or the inter-service ratios within those ceilings but to settle those matters in regional conferences. That process would enable them to increase the armaments of some States on various pretexts, as was evident from the experience of the League of Nations in its discussion of special needs and responsibilities. In particular, the process would enable the United States to avoid reducing its naval and air forces and its armaments and even to avoid the prohibition of the atomic weapon. Further, the United States was expanding its garrisons on foreign territories and forming aggressive alliances and the proposed regional conferences would give it a decisive voice in the conferences in all major regions of the world. Another intention of the regional conference plan, he said, was to avoid including in the consideration of the disarmament problem by the United Nations any representatives of the Chinese People's Republic, although their participation was essential for a solution.

The representative of the USSR emphasized the failure, both in the initial and the supplementary proposals, to meet the USSR point of view on questions of the prohibition of the atomic weapon, the nature of the controlling agency, the methods of disclosure and verification and the question of bacterial weapons. He said that the problems before the Commission could be solved only on the basis of the USSR proposals calling for the prohibition of the atomic weapon and the one-third reduction of all armaments and armed forces. Even after such reduction, he stated, the military preponderance of the three Western Powers over the USSR would remain, while all would abandon the use of the atomic weapon. Both the initial and the supplementary proposals, he said, advocated disclosure and verification instead of the reduction of armaments; they would delay vital decisions by means of a fallacious plan for setting up stages.

d. DISCUSSION OF PROPOSALS CONCERNING BACTERIAL WARFARE

At the nineteenth meeting of the Commission, on 15 August, the representative of the United States made a statement concerning his Government's position on bacterial warfare. The statement was subsequently summarized in a working paper (DC/15). The representative of the United States emphasized that the elimination of germ warfare, as well as the elimination of mass armies and atomic warfare, must be an essential part of a comprehensive disarmament programme to reduce the danger of aggression and fear of war. He affirmed that the three Western Powers considered such elimination essential and that their proposals include the elimination of bacterial weapons. He then recalled the statement on the question of ratification of the Geneva Protocol by the United States representative in the Security Council⁹⁰ in which he had given the reasons why the United States had not ratified the Protocol and why it considered it obsolete in the light of present day developments. He added that, at the time the Protocol was presented to the United States Senate in the 'twenties, the United States was retreating into isolationism and feared any involvement with the League and any treaties originating from Geneva. However, the United States had committed itself, as had all Members of the United Nations, to refrain not only from the use of poison gas and bacterial warfare, but also from the use of force of any kind contrary to the Charter. The United States intended to abide by that commitment. The United States position was that war should be made inherently, as it was constitutionally under the Charter, impossible as a means of settling international disputes and that the problem of disarmament should be approached with a view to preventing war rather than regulating the armaments to be used. However, until effective safeguards had been agreed upon, the United States did not intend to invite aggression by committing itself not to use certain weapons to suppress aggression. It might be that theoretically fool-proof safeguards could not be devised. But the disarmament programme should ensure that armed forces and armaments were reduced in a such a manner that no State would be in a position of armed preparedness to start a war, or to undertake preparations for war without other States having knowledge of those preparations. The principal safeguards to ensure the elimination of bacterial weapons, as well as the observance of other disarmament measures, were to be found in an effective and continuous system of disclosure and verification. The United States proposed that, at appropriate stages in such a system, agreed measures should become effective, providing for the progressive curtailment of production, the progressive dismantling of plants and the progressive destruction of stock-piles of bacterial weapons and related appliances.

The representative of the USSR formally moved that the section of the USSR draft plan of work (DC/4/Rev.1, see above) calling for the Commission's consideration of the question of violation of the prohibition of bacterial warfare, the question of impermissibility of the use of bacterial weapons, and the question of calling to account those who violated the prohibition, be placed on the agenda for immediate consideration. On 27 August he submitted his proposal in writing (DC/13/Rev.1).

In reply to the statement of the United States representative, he said that the United States had prevented the adoption by the Security Council of a USSR proposal appealing to all States which had not done so to ratify the Geneva Protocol. It had also prevented the Security Council from hearing concrete evidence that the United States had used bacterial warfare in Korea. It had objected to and opposed the adoption by the International Conference of the Red Cross of a resolution calling for the ratification of the Geneva Protocol. No United States proposal had been made for the prohibition of bacterial weapons. The United States had therefore been exposed as the opponent of such prohibition. He therefore pressed for the immediate consideration of the USSR proposals relating to bacterial warfare, stating that it was the duty of the Commission to ensure the prohibition of bacterial weapons.⁹¹

Several representatives, including those of Greece, Chile, Pakistan, the United States, Turkey and France, expressed the view that the programme of work adopted by the Commission provided for discussion of the problem of bacterial warfare. The representatives of Pakistan, Chile and the United States suggested that, if the USSR representative were to submit any concrete proposal concerning bacterial warfare, the Commission could decide to consider it after the conclusion of the debate on the three-Power supplementary proposals.

At the 24th meeting of the Commission on 27 August, the representatives of Chile, France and Turkey jointly submitted an amendment (DC/14) to the adopted plan of work which would add the words "including bacterial weapons" in the appropriate place in the programme. In the subsequent voting, the USSR proposal (DC/13/Rev.1) was rejected by 9 votes to 1 (USSR), with 2 abstentions (Chile and Pakistan). The joint Chilean-French-Turkish proposal was adopted by 10 votes to none, with 2 abstentions (Pakistan and USSR).

On 4 September, the United States representative submitted a working paper (DC/15) setting forth a summary of the proposals made by him for the elimination of bacterial weapons in connexion with elimination of all major weapons adaptable to mass destruction.

⁹⁰ See p. 324.

⁹¹ For a statement of the USSR views on the question before the Security Council, see p. 325; these views were also stated before the Commission.

e. REPORTS OF THE DISARMAMENT COMMISSION

The Commission adopted two reports, one (DC/11) on 28 May 1952, containing a brief procedural account of its work up to that date, and another (DC/20) on 9 October, containing the texts of the proposals and a summary of the discussions. By a letter dated 29 May 1952 (S/2650), the Chairman of the Commission transmitted the first report to the Security Council.

The item "Regulation, limitation and balanced reduction of all armed forces and all armaments: report of the Disarmament Commission" was placed on the agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly, in accordance with the provisions of resolution 502 (VI). While a number of representatives made reference to the question in the general debate and the item was referred to the First Committee, consideration of the item as such was deferred to the second part of the session in 1953.

N. THE QUESTION OF AN APPEAL TO STATES TO ACCEDE TO AND RATIFY THE GENEVA PROTOCOL OF 1925 FOR THE PROHIBITION OF THE USE OF BACTERIAL WARFARE

The following item was included in the provisional agenda of the 577th meeting of the Security Council on 18 June 1952 by the President (Representative of the USSR): "Appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial warfare". Following a proposal by the representative of the United States, the item was changed to read: "Question of an appeal to States to accede to and ratify the Geneva Protocol of 1925 for the prohibition of the use of bacterial warfare". The item, with the English title alone thus modified, was included in the agenda.

The Security Council considered the question at its 577th to 579th and 581st to 583rd meetings between 18 and 26 June 1952. Before it was a draft resolution (S/2663) by the USSR, under which the Council, having regard to the existence of differences of opinion concerning the admissibility of the use of bacterial weapons, noting that the use of such weapons had been justly condemned by world public opinion, as expressed in the signature by 42 States of the Geneva Protocol of 17 June 1925, would decide to appeal to all States, both Members and non-members, which had not yet acceded to or ratified the Protocol, to accede to and ratify it.

Introducing his draft resolution, the President, speaking as the representative of the USSR, stressed the importance of the Geneva Protocol as a factor in restraining the use of bacterial and chemical weapons by the aggressive States which had precipitated the Second World War. He said that 48 States, including all of the Great Powers, had signed or acceded to the Protocol, and only six States, Brazil, El Salvador, Japan, Nicaragua, the United States and Uruguay, had not ratified it.

The development of the production of bacterial and chemical weapons, the preparations being made in certain countries for bacterial warfare and the differences of opinion among statesmen and leaders on the use of bacterial weapons created a threat to the peace.

The United Nations and the Security Council, as its main organ bearing the responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security, must, he said, take steps to prevent the use of bacterial weapons. In this connexion, he also referred to General Assembly resolution 41(I) of 14 December 1946 which had contemplated the prohibition and elimination of all weapons adaptable to mass destruction. Later in the debate, the representative of the USSR repudiated suggestions that his proposals were in any way connected with charges of germ warfare in Korea.

During the debate in the Council, the following points of view emerged. The representatives of Chile, China, Greece, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States concurred in the view that the USSR proposals had been timed to coincide with an organized propaganda campaign on the part of the USSR and its supporters that the United Nations Forces in Korea had used germ warfare. The proposals therefore could not be accepted as a genuine effort to secure the prohibition of bacterial weapons. Moreover, these representatives maintained, however praiseworthy and humane the provisions of the Geneva Protocol might have been, they were now obsolete since they contained no safeguards or guarantees and were not accompanied by any system of international control. Mere declarations, they argued, could not secure any real or effective prohibition. What was really needed, they said, was a comprehensive plan of disarmament which would guard against aggression. They therefore supported a United States motion that the question be referred to the Disarmament Commission.

The representative of the United States said that the reasons why the United States Senate had not ratified the Protocol of 1925 were scarcely relevant at present. In 1947, in full recognition of the problems confronting the freedom-loving world, the President of the United States had withdrawn from the Senate Calendar the Geneva Protocol and eighteen other treaties which had become just as obsolete.

The United States representative said that the USSR in ratifying the Geneva Protocol had made reservations which would enable it to use germ or poison gas warfare against an enemy which used it first. While the reservations were in themselves not inappropriate, the USSR, by charging the United Nations Command with using bacterial weapons, had set the stage for using the weapons itself, should it decide to declare that the States resisting aggression in Korea were its enemies. What the world was really concerned about was the known capacities of States, whether they possessed certain weapons and had the capacity and means to employ them. The USSR, he said, had admitted that it was engaged in research on bacterial weapons.

As regards his Government's attitude towards germ warfare, he said that the United States had never used it and would never use it in Korea or anywhere else. His Government, he said, was willing to eliminate not only bacterial but all other weapons adaptable to mass destruction from its armaments provided a system of control was enforced. But it was unwilling to join in perpetrating a fraud on the world by relying solely on paper promises. It was clear that the Disarmament Commission was the only proper body to consider the matter and he had therefore proposed that the USSR draft resolution be referred to it.

The representative of France said that his Government considered that the Geneva Protocol retained all its legal value and moral authority. Although it should be merged in a wider system for the control and abolition of weapons of mass destruction, pending the achievement of that desirable result, the Geneva Protocol remained the chief international instrument which could, if respected, strip war of some of its more barbarous aspects. Its provisions were as binding as ever on the States parties to it. The USSR proposal, however, could not be isolated from the current propaganda campaign organized by the USSR Government, which rejected the most respected and acknowledged legal processes by refusing to have their accusations examined by an impartial commission of investigation. The manoeuvre was obvious. The only body competent to discuss the USSR proposal, he concluded, was the Disarmament Commission. As the French representative on that Commission had made clear, his Government included bacterial weapons among the forms of warfare to be prohibited.

The representative of the Netherlands stated that the question of the use of bacterial weapons had been raised by the USSR in many organs of the United Nations and that in the Disarmament Commission it had been raised in the form of violent and unproved charges against the United States forces currently resisting aggression in Korea. Although it had been ruled that the Commission was not the proper forum for the discussion of these charges,⁹² it did not mean that the Commission could not discuss the problem of bacterial warfare as such. That problem formed part of the larger question, not only of the prohibition but also of the elimination of all major weapons of mass destruction including bacterial weapons. He therefore considered the United States proposal to refer the Soviet draft resolution to the Disarmament Commission to be entirely logical.

The representative of Pakistan stated that he believed that the USSR had proposed the item for the best and most humanitarian reasons but it was difficult to dissociate it from the general picture of world events. He also believed that though the reasons for the non-ratification of the Geneva Protocol by the United States were obscure to him, he was convinced that they could not be sinister. The Protocol, he considered, was not an agreement to end bacterial or gas warfare; it merely regulated retaliation and reprisals. He stated that the fact that both Ethiopia and Italy had acceded to the Protocol had not prevented Italy from inflicting the horrors of gas warfare on Ethiopia. The Soviet proposal, he considered, was ill-timed. The smaller nations of the world would want much greater guarantees than those provided under that proposal. He therefore supported the United States proposal to refer the question to the Disarmament Commission.

The representative of Brazil, supporting the United States motion for referring the draft resolution to the Disarmament Commission, stated that only the fear of retaliation had prevented the use of poison gas and bacterial warfare by the aggressors in the Second World War. The standards of international morality had become such that the protection supposedly afforded by the Protocol had become illusory.

⁹² See p. 313.

In his reply, the representative of the USSR emphasized the following points.

Dealing with the argument that the prohibition of bacterial warfare should be accompanied by international guarantees and international supervision, he said that, due to the very nature of the production of bacterial weapons, there could be no international supervision. Such supervision could never be complete and was bound to remain ineffective. This had been the conclusion reached by a Special Committee of the League of Nations and by the New York branch of the American Association of Scientific Workers, which had recently voiced the demand for prohibition of bacterial weapons.

He said that the refusal of the United States to ratify the Protocol was not due to the Protocol having become obsolete but for the following reasons which had been stated in the United States Senate in 1926 and which equally applied today. First, chemical weapons were regarded as cheaper to produce and more effective to use in waging war. The second reason for refusal was distrust of other States and peoples, and that was why the United States was preparing to use weapons of mass destruction against them. The third factor was the opposition of the American Legion and other military organizations and of American chemical concerns which feared that ratification of the Protocol would affect production and profits. The USSR representative recalled that his Government had not only ratified the Protocol immediately, but had taken immediate steps to improve it. The League of Nations had adopted a USSR proposal to invite all Governments to accede to and ratify the Protocol. That decision had been ignored by the United States. A proposal for a new appeal had not been adopted in 1932 owing to the opposition of the bloc of States then headed by the United Kingdom.

Declaring that there were no United States proposals providing for the prohibition of bacterial weapons, the USSR representative said that the statement of the United States representative on the Disarmament Commission concerning the desirability, in the indefinite future, of prohibiting atomic weapons and all other types of weapons of mass destruction could not be regarded as a concrete proposal. A general disarmament programme, of which the prohibition of bacterial weapons would be a component part, was undeniably essential, and the USSR had made every effort since the establishment of the United Nations to draw up such a programme. He said that the USSR delegation had proposed that the question of the prohibition of bacterial weapons and of bringing to account those who violated the prohibition should be considered by the Disarmament Commission but that this USSR proposal had been rejected by the United States delegation. Stating that no agreement had been reached, he asked why the Council should turn its back on an already existing international agreement which was widely acknowledged to be useful and effective? He felt that the Council should support the Protocol until a more effective agreement was framed. An appeal by the Security Council, he said, would, indeed, assist the Disarmament Commission in its work.

The representative of the USSR denied the allegation that it was the USSR which had launched the accusations of the use of bacterial warfare by the United States against the Chinese and Korean peoples. He said that the protest had been made first on 22 February 1952 by the Foreign Minister of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, and it had not been until 19 March that the USSR had introduced a proposal in the Disarmament Commission for prohibiting bacterial weapons. The People's Democratic Republic of Korea and the People's Republic of China had submitted documentary proof of the use by the United States armed forces of bacterial warfare in Korea. The United States had not said one word against the use of such warfare; this silence, he said, was significant, irrespective of events in Korea.

He recalled that Germany had declared in 1939 at the outset of the Second World War that it would observe the prohibition of the use of chemical and bacterial weapons provided for in the Protocol, on condition of reciprocity. President Roosevelt had made two formal statements warning the Axis Powers against the use of poisonous substances. Those facts emphasized still further the significance of the obligations of the Geneva Protocol. He also recalled that the States signatories to the Protocol had undertaken the obligation to exert every possible effort to induce other States to accede to it. By opposing his draft resolution, he concluded, these States were failing in those obligations.

Regarding the statement by the United States representative that the USSR had made reservations to the Geneva Protocol, the USSR representative said that every State had the right to make such reservations and indeed 22 of the 42 States which had ratified the Protocol had made them, including the United Kingdom. It was an insult to those States to use that argument.

In reply, the representative of the United States stated that the USSR representative had not as yet withdrawn or abandoned the campaign of falsehoods against the United States, but had attempted to dissociate the proposal relating to the Geneva Protocol from that campaign. Was that because the introduction of those charges would inevitably invite investigation?

The United States Government, he said, considered that effective control could be devised and effected in a relatively open world such as that envisaged in the proposal before the Disarmament Commission. His Government had consistently taken the position that the elimination of bacterial weapons must be included in a comprehensive and co-ordinated disarmament programme. The USSR representative's claim that consideration of the question "of banning bacterial weapons had been opposed in the Disarmament Commission was without foundation, since the paragraph from the USSR plan of work on that subject had been rejected by the Commission in favour of a better formulation which, in fact, covered the prohibition of germ warfare: The United States representative had not criticized States for having expressed reservations regarding the Geneva Protocol, but had pointed out that those reservations became a fraud when a Government which expressed them habitually used the weapon of the lie. The Geneva Protocol, he said, could not be isolated from the vicious reality of the existence of the USSR propaganda campaign. The representative of the United States considered that the Council must concern itself with the USSR charges, in order to prevent them from continuing to poison relations among States and to obscure the significance of the United Nations action in repelling aggression in Korea.⁹³

At the 583rd meeting of the Security Council on 26 June 1952, the USSR draft resolution (S/2663) was rejected. There was one vote in favour (USSR) and 10 abstentions.

The representative of the USSR said that the representatives who had abstained had known that an abstention amounted to a negative vote. While officially declaring their loyalty to the obligation of the Geneva Protocol, those representatives, under pressure from the United States, had, he said, in effect, voted against the adoption of a draft resolution designed to strengthen the cause of peace and security. That action of the Council was yet another instance of how the United States was preventing and opposing the strengthening of peace and international security.

The representative of the United States said that the vote demonstrated the attitude of the members of the Council toward the false issue raised by the USSR. He did not think that the action of the Council could be disposed of by the USSR representative's attempt to dismiss it as an action dictated by any one of the Council's members.

The United States, he continued, had not ratified the Protocol because it was loyally engaged in a major effort to achieve genuine disarmament and genuine control of weapons of mass destruction which would make it possible to eliminate those weapons. Security must be based upon strength and safeguards, and reliance could not be placed upon treaties which did not contain effective machinery for the elimination of weapons of mass destruction. The United States representative also stated that, despite the USSR representative's claim that the issue of the ratification of the Geneva Protocol was, unconnected with the false charges of germ warfare which the USSR Government had continued to make, the two matters had been linked by Moscow and Peiping Radios.

In view of the decision taken by the Council, the United States representative withdrew his motion to refer the USSR draft resolution to the Disarmament Commission, noting that the matter was in any case under discussion in that Commission.

The representative of Pakistan said that he had abstained because he considered that the proper forum for the discussion of the question was the Disarmament Commission. He regretted that the United States proposal had been withdrawn; he would have preferred, since the question had been raised in the Council, that the matter should be referred to the Commission, with perhaps increased emphasis. He requested that the Commission should redouble its efforts and should take the debate in the Council into consideration in dealing with the question of bacterial warfare.

The representatives of the Netherlands and of Greece stated that they had abstained, despite the fact that their Governments had ratified the Geneva Protocol, because they did not want to support an effort to use the Protocol to create an artificial division between some peace-loving and free countries and one other peace-loving and free country.

The representative of the United Kingdom considered that the United States decision to withdraw its proposal had not been unnatural since the USSR representative had made it clear that he would veto it in the event that it was put to the vote. In substance, the matter was in any case already before the Disarmament Commission, which could examine the USSR draft resolution, if it wished to do so, in the whole context of the problem of the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction. Reiterating his view that it was the fear of retaliation that had prevented the use of gas warfare by the Axis Powers during the Second World War, he stated that his Government was firmly resolved to abide by the Geneva Protocol scrupulously. That Protocol was important because it codified the sense of conscience and of decency which bound all civilized nations.

⁹³ The United States, therefore, submitted the item "Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare". For consideration of the item, see below.

The representative of Brazil said that he had abstained both because of the circumstances in which the question had been brought before the Council and because his delegation was not convinced that ratification of the Protocol would, in practice, serve the purpose of bringing about real security against the actual use of bacterial weapons.

The representative of Chile rejected the unjustified interpretation which the USSR representative had placed upon the vote cast by his delegation.

In a final statement, the representative of the USSR said that the United States had first proposed that the USSR proposal be referred to the Disarmament Commission. Other members of the Council had supported the proposal but had been betrayed and misled by the United States.

The statements made during the discussion, in the view of the USSR representative, indicated that the Geneva Protocol continued to be an important international instrument, which had become a part of international practice as well as a standard morally binding on all people. The fact that the United States representative alone in the Council scorned the Geneva Protocol, yet had decided not to vote against the USSR proposal, was the best evidence that the proposal was directed toward strengthening the cause of peace and that the Protocol had prevented, was preventing and would prevent aggressors of their time from using prohibited bacterial and chemical weapons.

In a note dated 8 October 1952 (S/2802) the representative of the USSR requested the Secretariat to issue as a document of the Security Council and to communicate to all delegations to the United Nations a "Report of the International Scientific Commission for the investigation of the facts concerning bacterial warfare in Korea and China" which his delegation had received from the Secretariat of the World Peace Council.

O. BACTERIAL WARFARE

1. Consideration by the Security Council

In the course of the Security Council's consideration of the question of ratification of the Geneva Protocol relating to bacterial warfare,⁹⁴ the representative of the United States, at the 579th meeting of the Council on 20 June 1952, requested that the Council concern itself with the false allegations made by the USSR that the United Nations forces in Korea had used germ warfare. He proposed that the item "Question of a request for investigation of alleged bacterial warfare" be placed on the Council's agenda. He submitted a draft resolution (S/2671), by which the Council would note the concerted dissemination by certain governments and authorities of grave accusations charging the use of bacterial warfare by the United Nations forces, would also note that the Government of the USSR had repeated those charges in organs of the United Nations, and would recall that the Unified Command for Korea had immediately denied the charges and had requested an impartial investigation. The Council would request the International Committee of the Red Cross to investigate the charges and to report the results to the Council as soon as possible. The Council would, further, call upon all governments and authorities concerned to accord to that Committee full co-operation, including the right of entry to, and free movement in, such areas as the Committee might deem necessary in the performance of its task.

a. QUESTION OF INVITING NORTH KOREAN AND CHINESE REPRESENTATIVES

The question appeared as the second item on the provisional agenda of the 580th meeting of the Security Council held on 23 June, when the representative of the United States moved the adoption of the agenda. The President, speaking as the representative of the USSR, stated that he agreed to the inclusion of the proposed item in the agenda, but considered that it would be absurd to discuss it without the participation of representatives of the States in whose territories the events referred to in the United States draft resolution had occurred. The views of the parties must be heard if the Council were to discuss the matter objectively. He submitted a draft resolution (S/2674) calling for a decision to invite, simultaneously with the inclusion of the item in the agenda, representatives of the People's Republic of China and of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea to the meetings of the Council at which the item would be discussed. Common justice, the Charter and previous practice required the participation of representatives of those Governments in the Council's discussion, the USSR representative said.

⁹⁴ See pp. 323-27.

The representative of the United States said that it was clear that if the Council should accept the imposition of conditions upon the adoption of the agenda, it could be faced with a situation making impossible the carrying out of its responsibilities and duties.

The representative of the United Kingdom and some other representatives, urging the adoption of the agenda, stated that only in the light of the statement to be made by the representative of the United States could the Council decide whether the matter was one on which the representatives of the Peiping Government and the North Korean authorities should be heard.

The Council resumed consideration of the matter at its 581st meeting on 25 June, when the item proposed by the United States appeared as the fourth point on the provisional agenda. The United Kingdom representative proposed the adoption of the agenda. The President, speaking as the representative of the USSR, orally submitted an amendment to the United Kingdom proposal similar in substance to the USSR draft resolution of 23 June. The representative of the United Kingdom thereupon withdrew his proposal and the President ruled that the USSR amendment be put to the vote as an amendment to an earlier proposal made by himself as President asking the Council to adopt the provisional agenda. The representative of the United Kingdom challenged the President's ruling, which was overruled by 10 votes to 1 (USSR).

The item proposed by the United States was then included in the Council's agenda by 10 votes to 1 (USSR).

At the same meeting the President, the representative of the USSR stated that he had voted against the inclusion of the item in the agenda because the Council had not agreed to settle the question of inviting representatives of the Chinese People's Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Korea at the same time as the question of including the item in the agenda was settled. He then submitted a revision of his draft resolution (S/2674/Rev.1), providing for an invitation to representatives of the People's Republic of China and of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, without specifying that the invitation should be made simultaneously with the inclusion of the item in the agenda. This draft resolution was put to the vote at the Council's 585th meeting on 1 July 1952 and was rejected by 10 votes to 1 (USSR).

The representative of the USSR stated that the United States, afraid that representatives of the People's Republic of China and the People's Democratic Republic of Korea might adduce definite evidence of the use of bacterial warfare by United States forces, had prevented their participation in the Council's meetings. The allegations of bacterial warfare had been supported by a number of foreign correspondents and international organizations—among the latter the World Peace Council and the International Association of Democratic Lawyers. Supporting documents had been issued as Security Council documents (S/2684 and Add.1). Since access had been denied to representatives of the other side, without whom a proper discussion could not be held, the USSR, its representative said, would not participate in the consideration of the item and would vote against the United States draft resolution.

b. CONSIDERATION OF THE UNITED STATES PROPOSAL

In his statement, the representative of the United States said that false and malicious propaganda of great magnitude and intensity, initiated by Chinese and North Korean Communists and intensified by the USSR, had developed over the alleged use of bacterial warfare by the United Nations forces in Korea. The object of the campaign was not only to create hatred against the United States but also to divide, confuse and paralyse the United Nations itself. The charges had been denied categorically by the United States Secretary of State, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the United Nations Commander-in-Chief, the United States Secretary of Defense and several responsible officials of other United Nations Members.

The Secretary of State of the United States, he said, had challenged the Communists to submit their charges to the test by allowing an impartial investigation. On 11 March he had requested the International Committee of the Red Cross to determine the facts. The International Committee had agreed to set up a committee of investigation, provided that both parties offered their co-operation. The Committee was to consist of persons offering every guarantee of moral and scientific independence and would also include scientific experts proposed by Far Eastern countries not taking part in the conflict. The Secretary of State of the United States had at once accepted the offer, whereas the Soviet-controlled propaganda machines all over the world had at once initiated a drive to blacken the International Committee of the Red Cross. Soviet newspapers and Communist newspapers in widely scattered parts of the world had stepped up the charges of germ warfare. So-called investigation commissions had been set up; one, carefully selected from among Chinese Communists; another staged by the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, made up of faithful followers of the Communist party line.

All independent scientists, including at least ten Nobel Prize winners, had expressed complete scepticism of the charges, the United States representative continued. The Chief United Nations Public Health Officer in Korea had recalled the successful efforts with which the United Nations had combated epidemic disease in the Republic of Korea. It was typical of the United Nations attitude toward epidemics and disease that, when the charges of bacterial warfare had first been made, the World Health Organization had offered to provide technical assistance in controlling the reported epidemics in North Korea. If the Soviet Union Government had had any regard for the truth, recourse to the Security Council had always been open to it. Instead, the representative of the USSR had brought the charges to the Disarmament Commission,⁹⁵ which was not competent to discuss them under its terms of reference.

The germ warfare charges, the United States representative said, were part of a campaign to discredit the United Nations and particularly the United States for their initiative in stopping aggression in Korea and to deceive the world into believing that the USSR had taken a peace initiative. Such a policy, he said, was a revolt against the purpose of the Charter to develop friendly relations among nations. Impartial investigation would wreck the campaign, but if the USSR, through its veto which had been threatened, rejected an investigation, it would wreck the campaign just as surely, for then it would be confessing that it knew that the charges were false.

At the 586th and 587th meetings on 2 and 3 July, the representatives of Brazil, Chile, China, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Turkey and the United Kingdom spoke in support of the United States proposal.

It was argued, inter alia, that the refusal to accept the proposal for an investigation by the International Committee of the Red Cross, without offering any reasonable alternative, lent credence to the assumption that the USSR feared that such an investigation would prove the falsity of these charges and that the charges themselves had the political purposes designed to create confusion and division in the free world, and to stir up anti-Western feelings in Asia. The United States could not be accused of being afraid of the truth since from the outset its Administration had declared that all it wanted was an impartial investigation. The United Kingdom representative expressed the hope that the USSR would not veto the United States draft resolution, but would abstain in the vote.

At the 587th meeting of the Council, the United States draft resolution was put to the vote. The vote was 10 in favour and 1 against (USSR). The negative vote being that of a permanent member, the draft resolution was not adopted.

c. SECOND UNITED STATES DRAFT RESOLUTION

Stating that the USSR veto had proved the falsity of the germ warfare charges, the United States representative submitted another draft resolution (S/2688) by which the Council would note:

(1) the concerted dissemination by certain governments and authorities of charges of bacterial warfare by United Nations forces;

(2) the denials of the charges by the Unified Command and its request for an impartial investigation;

(3) that the Chinese Communists and North Korean authorities had failed to accept the offer by the International Committee of the Red Cross to carry out such an investigation but had continued the dissemination of the charges;

(4) the offer of the World Health Organization to combat epidemics in North Korea and China and the offer of the Unified Command to co-operate in the effort;

(5) that the Chinese Communists and North Korean authorities had rejected the offer;

(6) that the USSR had repeated the charges in the United Nations but by the use of its negative vote in the Council had prevented the investigation of those charges.

⁹⁵ See p. 313.

According to the draft, the Council would conclude that the charges were false and would condemn the practice of fabricating and disseminating such false charges.

At the 588th meeting on 8 July, the representative of the United States said that, despite their rejection and repudiation of an impartial investigation, the representative and the Government of the Soviet Union were continuing their practice of fabricating and disseminating false charges. After recalling the General Assembly resolutions 110(II) of 3 November 1947, originally introduced and supported by the USSR delegation, and 381 (V) of 7 November 1950, both condemning propaganda against peace, the representative of the United States quoted a number of excerpts from USSR radio and press statements, as well as from sources in other countries, to show that the Government of the USSR was continuing to wage a world-wide campaign of hatred against the United States and the United Nations. As the trustees of the Charter, the Council could not afford to overlook that type of attack. By supporting the United States draft resolution, the members of the Council could demonstrate to the Government of the USSR the wisdom of dropping its campaign of hatred.

The representative of the USSR stated that official statements received from the Governments of the Chinese People's Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Korea which were before the Council proved that the United States forces had used bacterial weapons in Korea and China. The USSR publicity media had merely published the facts cited in those statements. The United States draft resolution, he protested, was provocative and designed to divert public attention from the question.

He said that the proposed investigation by the "International" Committee of the Red Cross had been rightly rejected since that body was in no sense international but merely a tool of United States policy. The offer from the World Health Organization had also been rejected because that organization did not possess the required international authority and, over a number of years, had failed in the task of combating disease. He referred, in this connexion, to a telegram (S/2684) from the Foreign Minister of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea to the Secretary-General which stated that his Government had successfully combated the epidemics and did not need the help of the World Health Organization. He concluded that the evidence that had been cited proved that the United States forces had used bacterial weapons in Korea and China.

Moreover, the question could not be discussed in the Council without the participation of the representatives of the Chinese People's Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Korea. That position, he said, was supported by Article 32 of the Charter and reflected in rule 38 of the Council's rules of procedure, providing for the participation of both sides in the discussion of a dispute considered by the Council. He therefore declared that he would not participate in the discussion of the second United States draft resolution.

At the 589th and 590th meetings, held on 8 and 9 July, the representatives of Greece, the Netherlands, China, France, Brazil, Chile, the United Kingdom and Turkey made statements supporting the United States draft resolution. It was argued that, in spite of the affirmations of the USSR representative and the documents he had quoted, no proof of the just basis of the Communist charges had been given. It was to be regretted that the Soviet veto had not only made an impartial investigation impossible, but had even made it impossible for the North Korean and Peiping authorities to reconsider the question. Actually, because of the Soviet veto, one could not offer absolute proof of the falsity of the accusations proffered, since such proof could only result from an investigation on the spot; and that was precisely the reason why the Soviet Union would in no circumstances permit such an investigation to take place. The Security Council, even in the face of the threatened Soviet veto, must condemn such practices which deeply troubled international relations and peace. Moreover, it was a moral duty for the Security Council to back the forces which were fighting to defend collective security, when they were subjected to attacks as unjust as they were serious.

The representative of Pakistan stated that his delegation would abstain in the vote. His Government thought that it would be somewhat difficult to treat a matter which one wanted investigated as though the investigation had taken place and as though the guilt had been proved. However, he wished to stress that, if the proposal to have an impartial investigation had been accepted, the discussion on the item would not have finished. It would have come back to the Council at a much riper stage. Therefore, accepting that proposal would not have shut the door on an invitation to the authorities of the People's Republic of China and of North Korea.

At the 590th meeting on 9 July 1952, the United States draft resolution (S/2688) was put to the vote. The vote was 9 in favour, 1 against (USSR), and 1 abstention (Pakistan). Since the negative vote was cast by a permanent member of the Council, the draft resolution was not adopted.

2. Item Submitted to the General Assembly

By a letter dated 20 October 1952 (A/2231) the Chairman of the United States delegation to the seventh session of the General Assembly requested that the item "Question of impartial investigation of charges of use by United Nations forces of bacteriological warfare" should be placed on the agenda of the session.

At its 386th meeting, on 21 October, the General Assembly decided to include the item in its agenda and to refer it to the First Committee for consideration and report. The item was not considered during the period covered by the present issue of the Yearbook. The item was considered at the second part of the seventh session in 1953 and will therefore be dealt with in the 1953 Yearbook.

P. REPORT OF THE COLLECTIVE MEASURES COMMITTEE

After the Assembly's sixth session had discussed the report of the Collective Measures Committee (A/1891), it adopted resolutions 503 A and B (VI) of 12 January 1952, which, inter alia,⁹⁶ directed the Collective Measures Committee to continue for another year its studies of methods which might be used to maintain and strengthen international peace and security in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter, taking account of both regional and collective self-defence arrangements.

The Collective Measures Committee met again on 15 April 1952. Mr. Joao Carlos Muniz (Brazil) continued as its Chairman. In order to expedite consideration of its work, the Committee appointed a Sub-Committee on Economic and Financial Measures and a Sub-Committee on Military Measures to study and report to the full committee on particular subjects.

In its report (A/2215) submitted to the Assembly's seventh session, the Committee stated that its work during 1952 had consisted primarily in an elaboration of particular subjects within the framework of the United Nations collective security system outlined in the first report of the Committee (A/1891), to which the second report should be considered supplementary.

Recognizing the importance of providing instruments and machinery ready for use in collective action, the Committee, the report stated, had drawn up three lists of materials to which selective embargoes might be applied:

(1) a list of arms, ammunition and implements of war; (2) a reference list of items of primary strategic importance, which might be as important for an aggressor as arms and ammunition; (3) a reference list of strategic items that might prove of vital importance in specific situations, containing such items as industrial equipment, metals, minerals, chemicals, petroleum and rubber.

The Committee had also studied the economic and financial aspects of the problem of equitable sharing of burdens involved in collective measures. In the Committee's view, the basis for such equitable sharing could not be formulated in advance of a specific situation, but consideration should be given at the time when collective measures were initiated to the establishment of machinery to deal with this question. The Committee further stated that it was important to recognize that the measures of assistance to victims of aggression, set forth in the first report of the Committee, might also be appropriate in cases of hostile economic pressure constituting a threat to the peace.

The Committee, the report stated, had studied the potential role of the United Nations organs and specialized agencies in application of collective measures and found that the possibilities varied greatly from agency to agency, but that the various agencies within their field of competence could play a useful and important role in the application of collective measures. Each specialized agency should be regarded as responsible for deciding the nature and extent of its participation in collective measures. However, Members of the United Nations which were also Members of the specialized agencies had an essential part to play in assuring ready co-operation and assistance on the part of those agencies.

As to collective military measures, the Committee was able only to give preliminary consideration to a proposal submitted by the Secretary-General for the establishment of a United Nations Volunteer Reserve, consisting of units of volunteers organized within the various national military establishments, trained and held in reserve for United Nations collective action.

⁹⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 182-89.

In the general conclusion to its report, the Committee expressed the view that the work initiated to strengthen the United Nations in the collective security field should be continued either by the Collective Measures Committee or by another appropriate new United Nations body. The pertinent Committee should continue to study the information furnished by States on their progress in preparing for participation in United Nations collective action, and should also, for the purpose of reporting to the General Assembly and the Security Council, continue the studies on subjects related to those covered in the first and the second report, among others the Secretary-General's proposal for a Volunteer Reserve.

The Committee's report had not yet been discussed by the seventh session when the Assembly recessed in December 1952.

Q. ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

1. New Applications for Admission

The following new applications for admission to Membership in the United Nations were submitted on the dates indicated:

- (1) Vietnam—17 December 1951 (S/2446)
- (2) Libya—24 December 1951 (S/2467)
- (3) Democratic Republic of Vietnam—27 December 1951 (S/2466) also 22 November 1948 (S/2780)⁹⁷
- (4) Japan—16 June 1952 (S/2673)
- (5) Cambodia—25 June 1952 (S/2672)
- (6) Laos—30 June 1952 (S/2706)

2. Consideration by the Security Council

On 1 February 1952, the General Assembly adopted resolutions 506 A and B (VI) which recommended, inter alia, that the Security Council reconsider all pending applications for the admission of new Members, requested the permanent members of the Council to confer with one another soon with a view to assisting the Council to come to positive recommendations in regard to the pending applications and requested the Council to report to the Assembly at its seventh session on the status of applications still pending.⁹⁸

At its 577th meeting on 18 June 1952, the Security Council had before it the following item, submitted by the President (the representative of the USSR) as item 3 of the provisional agenda: "Adoption of a recommendation to the General Assembly concerning the simultaneous admission to membership in the United Nations of all fourteen States which have applied for such admission". The USSR proposed a draft resolution (S/2664) providing that the Council recommend to the General Assembly the simultaneous admission of the following States: Albania, Mongolian People's Republic, Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary, Finland, Italy, Portugal, Ireland, Jordan, Austria, Ceylon, Nepal and Libya.

By 7 votes to 1 (USSR), with 3 abstentions (China, Pakistan, United Kingdom), the Council rejected the USSR proposal to include the matter as item 3 of the agenda. It then adopted unanimously a proposal submitted by Chile and the Netherlands which included the USSR proposed item as sub-paragraph (a) under the heading: "Admission of new Members", with the following added as sub-paragraph (b): "Consideration of General Assembly Resolution 506(VI)."

a. CONSIDERATION OF THE USSR DRAFT RESOLUTION

At the 590th meeting of the Council on 9 July, the representative of the USSR reiterated his delegation's view that the simultaneous admission of all fourteen States which had submitted applications would be a fair and objective decision on the question, without discrimination against certain countries and favouritism towards others. That proposal, he said, had been approved by a majority of United Nations Members in the First Committee and in the plenary meetings during the sixth session of the Assembly and had only failed of adoption on account of procedural tricks and pressure exercised by the United States on countries depending upon it. The USSR proposal was also in line with General Assembly resolution 506(VI) which recommended that the Council should reconsider all pending applications for membership.

The representative of Greece opposed the USSR proposal on the ground that there were other applications besides those specified in it and because the Council was to report to the next session of the Assembly on the status of applications still pending. He proposed that the Council should postpone the consideration of the question until 2 September 1952 in order to permit close examination of all the applications before the Council.

⁹⁷ Issued as a document at the request of the USSR representative on 16 September 1952.

⁹⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 201-202.

The representative of the USSR observed that the remaining applications were hardly on the same level as the fourteen listed in the USSR draft resolution. Some had been received very recently, and it was unlikely that agreement would be reached on the others. The USSR draft resolution included all those applications on which a decision was possible. He considered the Greek proposal to be unjustified, because the Council might have new problems to attend to by September. It was also possible, he said, that a special session of the General Assembly might be called in the near future at which the Assembly would be able to consider the question should the Council decide to recommend the admission of fourteen new Members.

The majority of the members of the Council supported the Greek proposal, and it was adopted at the 591st meeting on 9 July by 8 votes to 1 (USSR), with 2 abstentions (Chile, Pakistan).

The provisional agenda of the 594th meeting of the Council on 2 September included as subparagraph (c) under the heading "Admission of new Members", the following: "New applications for membership (S/2446 (Vietnam), S/2466 (Democratic Republic of Vietnam), S/2467 (Libya), S/2672 (Cambodia), S/2673 (Japan) and S/2706 (Laos))". The President (the representative of Brazil) explained that he had felt it advisable to include the sub-item so as to enable the Council to consider the applications on which it had not yet reported to the General Assembly and which it had not considered on an individual basis.

The USSR representative thought that it was inopportune to consider these applications, in particular those of Japan, Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam, for the reasons which he had previously stated (see above). There was no need, he felt, to include Libya's application under the proposed sub-item since, in addition to being covered in the USSR draft resolution, it had already been considered by the Council and by the General Assembly and was, moreover, by implication included under sub-item 2(b), since it was dealt with in General Assembly resolution 506(VI).

The Security Council included sub-item 2(c) in the agenda by 10 votes, with 1 abstention (USSR).

b. CONSULTATION OF THE PERMANENT MEMBERS

Chile and Pakistan submitted a draft resolution (S/2694) urging the permanent members of the Council to give their earnest attention to the General Assembly's request in resolution 506 A (VI) that they confer on pending applications. The permanent members, however, regarded this draft resolution as unnecessary, and expressed their readiness to hold consultations, and the joint draft was not voted on.

At the Council's 594th meeting on 2 September, the President for August (the representative of the United States) reported that a meeting of the permanent members had been held on 21 August to give them an opportunity to confer on the pending applications for membership. An effort had been made to find a basis for agreement, but agreement had not been possible and the permanent members had not changed their positions.

c. DISCUSSION OF THE USSR DRAFT RESOLUTION

The USSR draft resolution was discussed from the 594th to 597th meetings of the Security Council from 2 to 8 September.

During the discussions, the USSR representative said that the United States, the United Kingdom and France had made it clear that there was no intention of reaching agreement on the admission of the fourteen States listed in the USSR proposal to membership in the United Nations. The opposition to the admission of the people's democracies was, he charged, due to the unwillingness of the United States to admit to membership those States whose internal structure it did not like; ruling circles in the United States wished to constrain those countries to change their internal system of government. That position was not only a gross violation of the obligations assumed at Teheran and Potsdam, and under the peace treaties, but was also directly contrary to the Charter. He cited facts and statistics which, he said, showed the pacific policies and genuine democratic development of the fourteen countries listed in the USSR draft and maintained that they met the requirements for membership.

It was not the position of the USSR, he said, but the attitude of the United States which was causing the deadlock on the admission of new Members. The question had reached such dimensions that it could only be solved by admitting simultaneously the fourteen States which had applied for Membership. There was nothing in the Charter, he said, to prevent the admission of several States by a single resolution. Moreover, the United States itself had created a precedent at the 54th meeting of the Council on 28 August 1946 by proposing that the eight States which had applied for membership should be admitted simultaneously. That proposal had been supported by the Secretary-General, and also by the representatives of Brazil, China, Mexico and Egypt. The method being advocated by the USSR was the same as had been advocated by the United States in 1946 and there was no threat to the Charter at present as there had been none in 1946.

The representatives of Brazil, China, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States opposed the USSR proposal, maintaining that it was contrary to Article 4 of the Charter according to which the application of each candidate should be considered separately. They held, also, that according to the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 28 May 1948,⁹⁹ it would be wrong to attach to the admission of one applicant a condition that another applicant must be admitted at the same time. Moreover, the representatives of China, Greece, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States maintained, certain countries listed in the USSR proposal were not qualified for membership. Among the views expressed by these representatives were the following:

The representative of Greece stated that the objection to the admission of Albania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania and the Mongolian People's Republic was not due solely to their internal structure. Yugoslavia was also a Communist State but that did not prevent his country and all other non-Communist nations from having peaceful and friendly relations with it.

The representative of China stated that the USSR proposal did not include the Republic of Korea whose exclusion his Government could not accept. He requested that under rule 32 of the rules of procedure the applications of each of the countries listed in the USSR draft resolution should be put to the vote separately. A similar view regarding the Republic of Korea was also expressed by the representative of the United States who said that Austria, Ceylon, Finland, Ireland, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Nepal and Portugal, of those listed in the USSR proposal, were fully qualified and should be admitted.

Referring to the "obligations" supposedly assumed by the United Kingdom and the United States under the Peace Treaties and the Potsdam Agreement, the representative of the United Kingdom said that the relevant clauses in the Peace Treaties were merely "enabling clauses" and not mandatory ones. He quoted the preamble to the Peace Treaties as saying ". . . thereby enabling the Allied and associated Powers to support an application to become a Member of the United Nations." This, he said, was merely the statement of the fact that the signatories would be enabled to support an application.

The representative of France stated that the USSR point of view was contradictory. While basing itself on Article 4 of the Charter, which formally stated that only peace-loving States could become Members, it was nevertheless willing to recommend the admission of States which it said could not be regarded as peace-loving on the condition that its own proteges were admitted. Moreover, it was not the simultaneous admission of the fourteen States that the USSR had really proposed but their collective admission, in a manner which made the admission of any one of them conditional upon the admission of the others. France had opposed a similar USSR proposal in February 1952¹⁰⁰ and saw no reason to change its attitude.

The representative of the Netherlands stated that, since the sixth session of the General Assembly had felt that the whole problem of the admission of new Members should once again be thoroughly examined at the seventh session and since the gap between the opposing points of view in the Security Council continued to exist, little progress could be expected from further discussions in the Council. His Government therefore favoured a postponement of those discussions until the next session of the Assembly when the views of all Members could be ascertained. However, he concluded, should the Council decide to pronounce itself on the various proposals before it, his delegation would reaffirm its previous position based on Article 4, paragraph 1, of the Charter and the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of 28 May 1948.

In reply, the representative of the USSR said that he was not haggling, but was making a broad political approach to the solution of the question. The USSR was prepared to withdraw its objection to the favourites of the "American-British bloc" despite the fact that it was legally entitled under the Charter to oppose the admission of some of those States. The USSR proposal, he said, provided a basis for agreement.

In reply to the President, he stated that his delegation did not accept the Chinese proposal, under rule 32 of the rules of procedure, for a separate vote on each of the applications noted in the USSR draft resolution. He pointed out that under that rule the request could not be maintained if the representative who had submitted the draft resolution did not agree with the proposed change.

⁹⁹ See Y.U.N., 1947-48, pp. 797-801.

¹⁰⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 205.

The USSR draft resolution (S/2664) was rejected at the 597th meeting of the Council on 8 September 1952 by 5 votes to 2, (Pakistan, USSR), with 4 abstentions (Chile, France, Turkey and the United Kingdom).

d. CONSIDERATION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION 506 (VI)

The Council then discussed the General Assembly's recommendation that it reconsider all pending applications for admission. Several representatives contended that the discussion in the Council had already in effect fulfilled that recommendation. The representative of Chile, while agreeing that the situation was unfavourable for such reconsideration, stressed a number of considerations with a view to creating favourable conditions for a future change in the situation. While the application of the rule of unanimity in matters of security could have political justification, he said, it had no such justification with regard to the admission of new Members. He also believed that the requirements of Article 4 of the Charter should be interpreted in a realistic manner. It was obviously impossible to admit a State which openly and flagrantly violated the most essential principles of the Charter, as in the case of a country committing acts of aggression, but the standard generally applied must not be more rigorous than that applied to States which were already Members. Unfortunately, there were many Member States in which fundamental human rights were not observed to the extent laid down in the Universal Declaration. Further, the presence in the United Nations of applicants which were considered to be dominated by other States could only serve to hasten their progress toward independence.

After a procedural discussion, the Council decided to proceed to the examination of new applications for membership, leaving open for the time being the question of the consideration of the General Assembly's resolution.

e. CONSIDERATION OF NEW APPLICATIONS

On this question, the Council had before it the following draft resolutions: (1) a draft resolution by Pakistan (S/2483) recommending the admission of Libya; (2) a draft resolution by the United States (S/2754) recommending the admission of Japan; (3) draft resolutions by France (S/2758, S/2759 and S/2760) recommending the admission, respectively, of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia; and (4) a draft resolution by the USSR (S/2773) recommending the admission of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam.

The President, noting that none of the applications listed on the sub-item had been referred to the Committee on the Admission of New Members, raised the question of what procedure the Council wished to follow. Several representatives, including those of Chile, France, Pakistan and the USSR, considered that the normal course would be to refer the applications to the Committee. Other representatives disagreed, holding that the council should examine the applications directly. After considerable discussion at the 598th and 599th meetings on 10 and 12 September, the Council adopted the proposals for the direct consideration of the applications of Libya, Japan and Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

(1) Application of Libya

The representative of Pakistan, supported by the representatives of Brazil, Chile, China, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States, spoke in favour of the Pakistan draft resolution recommending the admission of Libya. They pointed out that the General Assembly had adopted a favourable decision on Libya's application without a single opposing vote. Libya was fully qualified for membership, and the United Nations had a heavy responsibility toward that country since it was responsible for Libya's independence.

The representative of the USSR reiterated his delegation's view that Libya's application could not be regarded as a new one and declared that the USSR had never opposed in the past and did not then oppose the admission of Libya to membership in the United Nations on the same basis as other, equally eligible, States.

The Pakistan draft resolution recommending the admission of Libya (S/2483) was voted upon at the 600th meeting of the Security Council on 16 September. There were 10 votes in favour and 1 against (USSR). The draft resolution was not adopted since the negative vote was that of a permanent member of the Council.

(2) Application of Japan

The representative of the United States, supported by the representatives of Brazil, Chile, France, Greece, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Turkey, and the United Kingdom, spoke in favour of the United States draft resolution recommending the admission of Japan. They cited Japan's record of co-operation since the war and its re-establishment as a sovereign and independent State following the Treaty of Peace which had entered into effect on 18 April 1952 as arguments in favour of Japan's admission.

The representative of the USSR reiterated his view that the time had not come to consider the application of Japan, which, he said, had been made an instrument of United States policy in the Far East, could not be regarded as an independent and self-sufficient sovereign State and was not in a position independently to fulfil the obligations incumbent on Members under the United Nations Charter.

The United States draft resolution was voted upon at the 602nd meeting of the Council on 18 September 1952. There were 10 votes in favour and 1 against (USSR). The draft resolution was not adopted since the negative vote was that of a permanent member.

(3) Applications of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, and of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam

The representative of France, supported by the representatives of Greece, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, spoke in favour of the French draft resolutions recommending the admission of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia. The representative of France stressed that these States were free, sovereign and independent States associated with the French Union. Members supporting the draft resolution considered them fully qualified for membership.

The representative of the USSR contended that the applications were those of puppet regimes set up by France with United States support and that the only State which could conceivably be considered for admission was the free and independent Democratic Republic of Vietnam, which, as it had stated, was the only legitimate Government of Vietnam.

The French draft resolutions (S/2758, S/2759 and S/2760) recommending respectively the admission of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia were voted upon at the 603rd meeting on 19 September. They received 10 votes in favour and 1 against (USSR). The draft resolutions were not adopted because in each case the negative vote was that of a permanent member of the Council.

The representative of France held that there was no need for the Council to consider the USSR draft resolution recommending the admission of the "Democratic Republic of Vietnam" which, he said, was a political faction completely lacking all the qualifications and characteristics which made the difference between a government and a mere de facto Power. This position was supported by other members of the Council, including the representatives of China, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The representative of the USSR said that the struggle that France had been forced to wage in Indo-China was the most convincing argument in support of the application of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam whose existence it clearly proved.

The USSR draft resolution (S/2773) recommending the admission of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam was rejected by 10 votes to 1 (USSR). The Security Council did not consider the pending applications of the Republic of Korea and of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

3. Consideration by the General Assembly at its Seventh Session

The question of the admission of new Members was included in the provisional agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly under resolution 506 B (VI). The General Assembly also had before it at that session the special report of the Security Council (A/2208) outlining its consideration of the question of the admission of new Members.

At its 380th plenary meeting on 16 October 1952, the General Assembly decided to include the item in the agenda of the seventh session under the title "Admission of New Members: (a) Status of applications still pending: Report of the Security Council; (b) Request for an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice: Draft resolution proposed by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua at the sixth session (A/C.1/708)." The item was referred to the Ad Hoc Political Committee for consideration and report.

a. DISCUSSION IN THE Ad Hoc POLITICAL COMMITTEE

The Ad Hoc Political Committee considered the question of the admission of new Members at its 42nd to 50th meetings from 12 to 19 December 1952. The debate in the Committee centred mainly on the relative powers and functions of the Security Council and the General Assembly in the admission of new Members, and on the various proposals for ending the existing deadlock.

(1) Draft Resolutions before the Committee

The following draft resolutions were submitted:

(a) PERUVIAN DRAFT RESOLUTION

Peru submitted a draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.30) under which the General Assembly would state, inter alia:

(i) that it appeared from the proceedings in the Security Council that vetoes had been pronounced on applicant States which had been recognized as fulfilling the conditions governing admission and that these vetoes seemed to have been influenced by motives outside the scope of Article 4 of the Charter and hence to be in conflict with the Court's advisory opinion of 28 May 1948;

(ii) that the unanimity rule had not been conceived or accepted as a means of authorizing any Power to deny the proved and recognized qualifications of the States applying for membership and so to exclude them indefinitely from the legal community to which they were entitled to belong;

(iii) that there were sound reasons for claiming that that rule, being an exception, should only be applied restrictively and hence only in the cases which involved the functions exclusively vested in the Security Council;

(iv) that in the matter of the admission of new Members, as shown by the records of the San Francisco Conference, the final decision lay with the Assembly, and that, accordingly, the Council's recommendation, though necessary, was a previous step or a procedural stage which did not require the application of the unanimity rule;

(v) that even if the rule were applicable to the Council's recommendation it would be inadmissible in cases in which it involved a violation of the Charter, such as would be constituted by accepting a veto to the admission of new Members which had been acknowledged by the Power exercising the veto as eligible within the meaning of Article 4; and

(vi) that the resolution entitled "Uniting for Peace", approved almost unanimously by the Assembly, had laid down the doctrine that the exercise of the veto by a Power could not paralyze the Organization or relieve the General Assembly of its responsibilities under the Charter. Accordingly, the Assembly would resolve to note: (1) that the opinions, votes and proposals laid before the Council concerning the admission of new Members signified that the States concerned were unanimously recognized as fulfilling the conditions required for membership under Article 4; and (2) to consider each of the applications of those States in the light of the purposes and principles of the Charter and of the above circumstances.

Among the views stated by the representative of Peru in support of his delegation's proposal, was the contention that the Security Council had interpreted the voting procedure adopted at San Francisco in a manner extending beyond its own jurisdiction and affecting indirectly other principal organs of the United Nations. The interpretation of the Charter, he said, was a matter primarily for the General Assembly, which had received its mandate directly from the peoples whose representatives had drafted the Charter at San Francisco and which exercised a right of supervision over the Council, under Article 10, since it could make recommendations to the Council on any matters within the scope of the Charter except as provided in Article 12. The judgment which the Organization was called upon to take under Article 4 of the Charter involved not only the applicant's current attitude but also its future international conduct. Such a judgment could not be discretionary, still less arbitrary. A vote determined by conditions not provided for in the Charter or which were at odds with evidence that had not been disproved was an arbitrary act. In such a vote, the unanimity rule could not apply, since it had been designed solely for legitimate purposes. Once the conditions for membership were fulfilled, it was intolerable that one single State should, by abusing its privileges, refuse admission to peace-loving States and so deprive the Organization of the universality which would alone enable it to ensure the maintenance of an equally universal peace.

The representative of Peru subsequently requested that his draft resolution be considered part of the terms of reference of the special committee whose establishment was proposed under the five-Power joint draft resolution (see below).

(b) JOINT DRAFT RESOLUTION OF COSTA RICA, EL SALVADOR, HONDURAS AND NICARAGUA

On 12 December, the representative of El Salvador withdrew, on behalf of the sponsors, the draft resolution originally submitted during the sixth session by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua (A/AC.61/L.29).¹⁰¹ A new joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.31) was submitted by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua. Under this proposal, the General Assembly, inter alia, would:

(i) state that it was essential for the purposes of the United Nations to facilitate the admission of new Members which fulfilled the conditions laid down by the Charter;

(ii) deduce from the declaration of 7 June 1945 on voting procedure in the Security Council, which had been subscribed to by the five permanent members of the Council, that the admission of new Members was not subject to veto but was to be dealt with by a "procedural vote", in other words by the vote of any seven members of the Council; and

(iii) state that the General Assembly, as the organ chiefly responsible for deciding on applications for membership, had the right and also the duty to decide on the pending applications in accordance with that criterion.

Accordingly, it would decide to consider separately each pending application and decide in favour of or against admission in accordance with the merits of each case and the results of a vote taken in the Security Council in conformity with Article 27, paragraph 2, of the Charter.

¹⁰¹ Circulated to the First Committee as document A/C.1/708. See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 200.

The representative of El Salvador, introducing the draft resolution on behalf of the sponsors, advanced, among others, the following arguments.

The statement of 7 June 1945 by the four sponsoring Powers, on the basis of which the unanimity rule had been adopted, showed that any decisions by the Security Council which did not involve the taking of direct measures for the maintenance of international peace and security were, for voting purposes, held to be procedural. It was in that spirit that Article 27, paragraph 2, of the Charter had been drafted. In that connexion he recalled that the proposal of the United States in the Interim Committee (A/AC.18/41) in March 1945 for the adoption of a list of decisions which the Security Council could take by an affirmative vote of any seven of its members included decisions on the question of the admission of new Members. The fact that the abstention of a permanent member of the Council could not by itself prevent a decision under Article 27, paragraph 3, despite the literal terms of that paragraph, argued in favour of a liberal interpretation of Article 27, paragraph 2. He pointed out that it had been decided at San Francisco that each United Nations body should have the right to interpret those provisions of the Charter for the application of which it had the responsibility. If the Council informed the Assembly that seven of its members had voted in favour of the admission of a State, but that that State had not been recommended because of the negative vote of a permanent member, it would be for the General Assembly to interpret and apply the provisions of Article 27 and to decide whether or not there was a favourable recommendation by the Council. Should the Assembly consider the question to be one to which the veto could apply, it would decide that there was no recommendation; if, on the other hand, it regarded the question as procedural, it would decide that the affirmative vote of seven members of the Council authorized it to examine the application and take its own decision on the case.

An Argentine amendment (A/AC.61/L.36) to the joint draft resolution provided, among other things:

(1) for a reference to the interpretation by the Advisory Committee of Jurists at the San Francisco Conference, an interpretation subsequently approved by Committee II and the Conference itself, to the effect that the powers of the Assembly to "reject a recommendation to the effect that a given State should not be admitted to the United Nations", and accordingly to decide favourably on its admission to membership, were expressly recognized; and (2) that the General Assembly resolve to consider each application on its merits and decide on it accordingly.

The representative of Argentina said that his country's position regarding admission had been to champion the sovereign powers of the General Assembly, the universality of the Organization and the legal equality of States. He held that there was no basis in the Charter for the theory that a favourable recommendation was an absolute prerequisite for admission or for the theory that the Security Council must take the initiative in the matter.

Once the Council had considered an application, it might be held to have participated to the extent required by the Charter in formulating the judgment of the Organization. Its opinion, favourable or unfavourable, had to be transmitted to the Assembly, which was responsible for making a decision. He also supported the view that the veto could not be used to violate the Charter itself. It was not applicable in the case of decisions relating to the admission of new Members, where the General Assembly and the Security Council had concurrent powers, but where the General Assembly was responsible for making a final decision while the Council's sole duty was to make recommendations.

The representative of El Salvador, on behalf of the sponsors of the joint proposal, later stated that the sponsors did not insist upon a vote on the joint draft resolution and requested that it be referred to the Special Committee proposed under the five-Power joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.32) (see below).

The representative of Argentina said that he would not insist upon his amendment in view of the statement of the representative of El Salvador.

(c) JOINT DRAFT RESOLUTION OF COSTA RICA, EL SALVADOR, GUATEMALA, HONDURAS AND NICARAGUA

A joint draft resolution by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua (A/AC.61/L.32) was submitted at the same time as the four-Power joint draft resolution referred to above. The representative of El Salvador explained that this draft resolution should be taken up only if the Committee found itself unable to reach a decision of substance on the question.

Under this proposal, the General Assembly, bearing in mind that the applications for admission of a large number of States were still pending, despite the fact that seven or more votes had been cast in favour of the admission of many of them in the Security Council, would resolve:

(i) to establish a special committee composed of the representatives of sixteen Member States;

(ii) to instruct that Committee to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of States to membership in the United Nations, in the light of the discussions in the Assembly and its Committees, of any suggestions which might be submitted to the special committee, and of the advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice and the principles of international law;

(iii) to request the committee to submit a report on its work and its conclusions to the General Assembly at its eighth session; and

(iv) to arrange for the item "Admission of New Members" to be included in the provisional agenda of the eighth session.

Two amendments to this joint draft resolution were submitted. One by Denmark, Norway and Sweden (A/AC.61/L.41) would insert in the preamble a reference to previous Assembly resolutions on the subject and would delete from the preamble mention of votes in the Security Council. This amendment was included in a revision of the joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.32/Rev.1/Corr.1) along with other changes made in the light of the discussion.

An amendment to this revised text was submitted by Uruguay (A/AC.61/L.44) to provide:

(1) that the special committee be composed of representatives of 25 Member States to be designated by the President of the General Assembly; and (2) that the special committee conduct its study of the question in the light of all the antecedents of the question.

The sponsors of the joint proposal submitted a second revision (A/AC.61/L.32/Rev.2) which covered the substance of the second part of the Uruguayan amendment, and the first part of the amendment was later withdrawn.

Under the second revision of the five-Power joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.32/Rev.2), the General Assembly would resolve:

(1) to establish a special committee composed of the representatives of Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, India, Lebanon, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, the Philippines, the USSR, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States; (2) to instruct this committee to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of new Members, examining the proposals and suggestions which had been made in the General Assembly and its Committees or which might be submitted to the special committee by any Members of the United Nations in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter, and the discussions in the General Assembly and its Committees, of the debates in the Security Council, and the advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice and of the principles of international law. The Special Committee was also to report on its work and its conclusions to the eighth session of the General Assembly.

(d) POLISH DRAFT RESOLUTION

Poland submitted a draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.35/Rev.1) providing that the Assembly request the Security Council to reconsider the applications of Albania, the Mongolian People's Republic, Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary, Finland, Italy, Portugal, Ireland, Jordan, Austria, Ceylon, Nepal and Libya, in order to submit a recommendation on the simultaneous admission of all these States as Members of the United Nations.

Introducing the draft resolution, the representative of Poland said that the signatories of the Charter appeared to have resolved the question of the admission of new Members in a simple, unequivocal manner under the terms of Articles 4, 18, paragraph 2, and 27, paragraph 3. Article 27 required the concurring votes of the five permanent members of the Council on all except procedural matters. It embodied the fundamental political idea of the unanimity of the Great Powers in deciding on a matter so essential as membership of the United Nations, its universality and its role in international relations. The United States and certain other States, the representative of Poland said, had been attempting ever since the inception of the Organization to distort and ultimately to destroy that key concept, with the result that a large number of States remained outside the Organization, a situation which could only have an adverse effect on the system of international relations. The United States and the United Kingdom, he said, had adopted a discriminatory attitude toward States with political systems not to their liking, with no legal or factual basis for that position. They had violated the unequivocal obligation which they had undertaken in the peace treaties to support the applications for membership of Romania, Hungary and Bulgaria. He considered that the USSR position favouring simultaneous admission of all applicant States was the only just course toward a proper solution of the problem.

Six draft resolutions were submitted on individual applications.

One by the United States (A/AC.61/L.37) would have the General Assembly determine that Japan was qualified under the Charter and should therefore be admitted to membership and would request the Council to take note of that determination.

Three draft resolutions submitted by France (A/AC.61/L.38, A/AC.61/L.39 and A/AC.61/L.40) provided for similar decisions by the General Assembly concerning the applications of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

Two draft resolutions submitted jointly by Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria and Yemen (A/AC.61/L.42/Rev.1 and A/AC.61/L.43) provided for similar decisions with regard to Libya and Jordan.

(2) Consideration and Decisions Taken by the Ad Hoc Political Committee

The majority of the representatives who spoke, including, among others, the representatives of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Iran, Iraq, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Peru, the Philippines, Sweden, Turkey, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay and Yugoslavia, supported the second revision of the five-Power joint draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.32/Rev.2) for the establishment of a special committee to consider the question of the admission of new Members. They considered that that committee would be able to consider all the elements of the problem, undisturbed by the pressure of time. Many of these representatives, however, expressed differing views on the proposals bearing on the substance of the question of the admission of new Members. In addition to the views of the sponsors of the various draft resolutions and amendments (see above), the following were among the principal views expressed.

The representatives of Sweden and Yugoslavia, among others, considered that the solution of the problem should be based on the principle of universality of the United Nations, since only thus would it be possible to overcome the obstacles which had thus far prevented the admission to membership of the long list of applicant States. There was nothing, they considered, to preclude a more liberal interpretation of Article 4. In this connexion, the representative of Yugoslavia said that certain Member States, although in the opinion of the majority they did not always live up to the spirit of that Article, nevertheless remained Members.

The representatives of India and the United Kingdom considered that the argument that the Declaration of 7 June 1945 justified the view that the veto did not apply to the admission of new Members could not possibly be sustained. The admission of new Members obviously came within the category of decisions requiring the unanimity of the permanent members of the Council. It was impossible to claim that the question of the admission of new Members, which was expressly included among the major decisions to be settled by a two-thirds majority of the Assembly, was procedural for the Security Council, while it was one of substance for the General Assembly.

The representatives of Chile, Haiti, Indonesia, the Philippines and Yugoslavia emphasized that the problem was primarily a political one arising from the tension which characterized the relations between the Great Powers and could not be solved on a legal or juridical basis. Attention should be concentrated, these representatives held, on methods to admit as many qualified States as possible within the procedure laid down by the Charter.

The representatives of Ecuador and New Zealand emphasized that any solution would be in vain if it disregarded the terms of the Charter.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR held that the four-Power Central American draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.31) and the Peruvian draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.30) contained ridiculous assertions, contrary to the Charter, concerning the manner in which new Members were admitted. With respect to the interpretation of the Charter, it had been made clear at the San Francisco Conference that each organ would interpret the sections of the Charter which applied to its powers. The sponsors of the draft resolutions had attempted to maintain that the USSR had applied the unanimity rule with regard to the admission of new Members in a manner not only illegal but contrary to the Declaration of 7 June 1945 which in their view meant that admission could be classed as a procedural matter. The Declaration made by the sponsoring Powers at San Francisco specified, however, that the questions on which the Council's decision required the concurring votes of the permanent members included not only the fundamental questions enumerated in the Charter, but also the preliminary question of whether a given matter was to be considered substantive or procedural. These representatives also contended that the wording of Article 4, paragraph 2, was similar to that used in Article 5 on the suspension of a Member and in Article 6 on the expulsion of a Member. Questions as important as those could hardly be regarded as questions of procedure. It had been clearly established, they said, that the affirmative vote of all the permanent members of the Council was a condition precedent to a favourable recommendation from the Council. If that condition had not been met, there was no recommendation. Accordingly, rules 135 and 136 of the General Assembly's rules of procedure provided that the Assembly could take no decision on the admission of a new Member in the absence of a recommendation from the Council.

In reply, the representative of El Salvador emphasized that there had been no intention in the joint draft resolution submitted by the four Central American States to allow the General Assembly to make its interpretation of Articles 4 and 27 of the Charter binding on any other organ. It could not be denied, however, that the General Assembly, acting within its competence in regard to the admission of new Members, was empowered to apply and interpret the Charter under its own responsibility. Dealing with the contention that the statement of 7 June 1945 afforded no basis for the belief that the veto was not applicable to the admission of new Members, he pointed out that that question could certainly not be characterized as a matter belonging in the first category, which included questions requiring adoption of measures for the settlement of disputes or situations likely to give rise to disputes and measures regarding threats to the peace or breaches of the peace. The first paragraph of the statement said clearly that in all questions other than those included in that first category, a "procedural vote" was applicable.

The representative of Peru declared that the voting procedure in the Security Council affected the structure of the entire Organization and must be seen in the light of the responsibilities of the General Assembly and the purposes and principles of the Charter. Every abuse of the right of veto compromised the rights and the responsibilities of the General Assembly, and it was that moral problem which created the legal problem. The overriding responsibilities of the General Assembly in the matter were also emphasized by the representatives of Colombia and Iran.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR opposed the five-Power joint draft resolution, stating that once more the method proposed was contrary to the provisions of the Charter, under which the Assembly could act only on a recommendation of the Security Council. Proposals of that kind, with minor variations, they said, were brought forward at each session of the Assembly, although their sponsors knew that they could not provide a basis for a solution of the problem, because the United States and the countries in its orbit wished to drag on the question of the admission of new Members as another way of preventing the admission of countries whose political structure was not approved by the ruling circles of the United States.

The representative of India considered that it was difficult to see how a special committee such as was proposed by the five-Power joint draft resolution would yield better results than the Security Council. If agreement was possible, there was no reason why it could not be achieved in the Council rather than in such a committee. If agreement was not likely, there was no reason to establish a special committee to ascertain the fact. The representatives of Chile and Haiti also considered that the agreement of the Security Council was a prerequisite of any solution.

The revised five-Power draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.32/Rev.2) was voted upon at the 50th meeting of the Ad Hoc Political Committee on 19 December 1952, when it was approved by a roll-call vote of 45 to 5, with 8 abstentions. The Peruvian draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.30) and the joint four-Power draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.31) were not voted on, their sponsors having declared that they should be considered part of the terms of reference of the special committee provided for in the joint five-Power draft (see above).

In the course of the debate, a number of speakers referred to the use of the veto in the Security Council in connexion with the admission of new Members. The representative of the United States said that the existing situation was due to the fact that the USSR had been systematically abusing its right of veto in the Security Council. Otherwise, the fourteen nations which had all secured seven or more affirmative votes in the Council would have been admitted to membership in the United Nations long since. Pointing out that the five Great Powers had pledged themselves at San Francisco to refrain from using the veto wilfully to obstruct the Council's work, he declared that the Soviet Union had made the exception the rule. The other permanent members of the Council, however, had supported the proposal of General Assembly resolution 267(III) that the permanent members should try to agree among themselves on what issues they would refrain from using the veto. The resolution had suggested that the admission of new Members was such an issue. The United States had declared as early as 1947 that it would not use the veto to exclude from the United Nations any of the current applicants which the General Assembly deemed qualified and that it would be willing to accept complete elimination of the veto in the Security Council in regard to the admission of future Members.

Other speakers, including, among others, the representatives of Brazil, Canada, China, Cuba, El Salvador, France, Greece, New Zealand, Peru, the Philippines, the Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom, expressed similar views and also condemned what they regarded as abuse of the veto. Several contrasted the attitudes adopted in that respect by the USSR and by other permanent members of the Council who had undertaken not to use the veto in the admission of new Members.

The representative of the USSR, supported by the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, considered the view that the USSR was responsible for the deadlock in connexion with the admission of new Members to be absolutely unfounded. On the contrary, these representatives said, it was the United States Government which was responsible for the situation by having vetoed the simultaneous admission of the fourteen countries whose requests were still pending. Though the United States claimed to respect the views of the majority and contended that it had relinquished the right of veto in regard to the admission of new Members, it was making use of a concealed veto by joining its partners of the "Anglo-American bloc" in abstaining from voting on USSR proposals. They maintained that the United States and the Governments of many other States under its influence supported only the requests for admission of States which were either members of the Atlantic bloc or which the United States Government hoped would one day join it in an aggressive coalition. The only reason for the United States' objections to States like Albania, the Mongolian People's Republic, Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania was that those States did not comply with the imperialist policy of American ruling circles.

The Polish draft resolution was opposed by a number of representatives, including those of Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, El Salvador, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Peru, Turkey, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States. They considered that it violated the Charter and would involve disregard of the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice of May 1948 in that the admission of certain States was made conditional upon the admission of certain others rather than upon an objective and individual study of the merits of the applicants. They also said that it had been made clear that the USSR would oppose the admission of Japan, the Republic of Korea, Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam, all of which were entitled to membership, and would undoubtedly oppose the admission of Germany and Spain, should those countries apply. The Polish proposal thus could not even be regarded as an application of the principle of universality.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the provision in the peace treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania, to which the representative of Poland had referred, was only an "enabling" clause, and involved no commitment to support the applications of those countries.

Among those supporting the Polish draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.35/Rev.1) were the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, who regarded that proposal as a just and objective solution which would break the deadlock. It was based, they said, on the principle that the United Nations must be an international organization of free and sovereign States, regardless of their constitution or ideology, united by the common desire to live together in peace and to maintain international security on the basis of equality and mutual respect.

The representative of Pakistan considered that the States listed in the Polish proposal fulfilled the conditions laid down by the Charter and deserved to be admitted. He therefore supported that proposal, along with the other draft resolutions calling for the admission of Japan and of Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

The representative of India supported the Polish draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.35/Rev.1), making it clear that he interpreted "simultaneous admission" to mean a series of admissions that took place at the same time, none of which was dependent upon the admission of one or several of the others. Although it provided neither an absolute nor a complete remedy, that proposal had the advantage of increasing the membership of the Organization, thereby enabling it to be more representative of the world as it was.

Similar views were expressed by the representatives of Argentina, Burma, Egypt, Indonesia, Iraq, the Philippines and Syria. At the 49th meeting of the Committee, on 19 December, the representative of Egypt requested that a separate vote be taken on the word "simultaneous". At the 50th meeting on the same day, the Committee decided, by 12 votes to 8, with 37 abstentions, to delete the word "simultaneous" from the Polish draft resolution.

As amended, the draft resolution was then rejected by 28 votes to 20, with 11 abstentions.

Most of the representatives who spoke supported the United States draft resolution concerning the admission of Japan (A/AC.61/L.37), the French draft resolution concerning Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos (A/AC.61/L.38-40) and the draft resolutions submitted by the six Arab States concerning the admission of Libya and Jordan (A/AC.61/L.42/Rev.1 and L.43).

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR opposed these draft resolutions. They held that the time was not appropriate for considering the application of Japan, which they regarded as under United States occupation, and that the applications listed in the French draft resolutions were those of puppet regimes. There was no need for separate proposals on Libya and Jordan, in their view, because those States were covered by the Polish draft resolution.

The representatives of Guatemala, Israel and Sweden indicated that they would abstain from voting on the draft resolutions dealing with specific applicants because in their view the question should be left to the special committee that was to be established. The representatives of Burma, India and Indonesia supported the draft resolutions concerning the admission of Japan, of Jordan and of Libya. They declared their intention of abstaining with regard to the draft resolutions concerning Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, however, because of their doubts as to the status of those countries.

The representative of the Philippines said that he would abstain from voting on the draft resolution concerning the admission of Japan, because of the outstanding differences which still existed between the Philippines and that country, and on the draft resolutions concerning Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, pending clarification of his Government's policy in regard to the political status of those countries.

At the 50th meeting, on 19 December, the United States draft resolution concerning the admission of Japan (A/AC.61/L.37) was approved by a roll-call vote of 48 to 5, with 6 abstentions.

The French draft resolution concerning the admission of Vietnam (A/AC.61/L.38) was approved by a roll-call vote of 38 to 5, with 16 abstentions. The French draft resolutions concerning the admission of Cambodia and Laos (A/AC.61/L.39 and 40) were also approved by 38 votes to 5, with 16 abstentions.

The six-Power draft resolution concerning the admission of Libya was approved by a roll-call vote of 49 to 5, with 5 abstentions. The six-Power draft resolution concerning Jordan was then also approved by 49 votes to 5, with 5 abstentions.

b. RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly discussed the report of the Ad Hoc Political Committee (A/2341) at its 410th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952. The representative of Poland re-introduced the draft resolution (A/L.142) which his delegation had submitted earlier in the Ad Hoc Political Committee and which called for the simultaneous admission of fourteen countries.

The representatives of Argentina, Colombia, El Salvador, Israel, the Philippines, Poland, Sweden, the USSR and the United States reiterated the position which they had taken in the course of the debate in the Ad Hoc Political Committee. The representative of the Philippines requested that a separate vote be taken on the word "simultaneous" in the Polish draft resolution, stating that this word was used in a sense unacceptable to his delegation.

The representatives of Poland and the USSR stated that they would vote against the Polish draft resolution if it were decided to omit the word "simultaneous".

The President stated that, in view of the fact that the representatives of Czechoslovakia, India and the USSR had requested that their countries be not included in the membership of the special committee contemplated in draft resolution A proposed by the Ad Hoc Political Committee (originally the five-Power Central American draft resolution), the special committee would have 19 members instead of the 22 originally provided for.

Draft resolution A, as amended, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 48 to 5, with 6 abstentions. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Burma, India, Indonesia, Liberia, Pakistan.

The draft concerning the admission of Japan was adopted by a roll-call vote of 50 to 5, with 4 abstentions. Voting was as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Guatemala, Israel, Philippines, Sweden.

The other five draft resolutions referring to individual countries were adopted as follows:

Vietnam, by 40 votes to 5, with 12 abstentions; Cambodia, by 38 votes to 5, with 14 abstentions; Laos, by 36 votes to 5, with 14 abstentions; Libya, by 51 votes to 5, with 2 abstentions; and Jordan, by 49 votes to 5, with 3 abstentions.

The proposal to retain the word "simultaneous" in the text of the Polish draft resolution (A/L.142) was rejected by 10 votes to 9, with 25 abstentions; and the Polish draft resolution, as amended, was rejected by 30 votes to 9, with 10 abstentions.

The resolutions adopted by the General Assembly (620 A-G (VII)) read:

"The General Assembly.

"Considering that, notwithstanding the efforts that have been made for some years, it has not as yet been possible to solve the important problem of the admission of new Members to the United Nations,

"Recalling that various States Members of the United Nations have made specific proposals or put forward suggestions with a view to reaching a satisfactory solution of the problem of admission,

"Recalling that on two occasions the International Court of Justice, at the request of the General Assembly, has given advisory opinions on the above-mentioned problem,

"Recalling its resolutions 113 A (II) of 17 November 1947, 197 B (III) of 8 December 1948, 296 K (IV) of 22 November 1949, 495 (V) of 4 December 1950 and 506 A (VI) of 1 February 1952,

"Bearing in mind that the applications for admission of a large number of States are still pending,

"Resolves:

"1. To establish a Special Committee composed of a representative of each of the following Member States: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America;

"2. To instruct the Special Committee to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of States to membership in the United Nations, examining the proposals and suggestions which have been made in the General Assembly and its Committees or which may be submitted to the Special Committee by any Members of the United Nations, such study to be conducted in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the discussions in the General Assembly and its Committees, the debates in the Security Council, the advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice, the other antecedents of the question and the principles of international law;

"3. To request the Special Committee to submit a report on its work and its conclusions to the General Assembly at its eighth session and to transmit that report to the Secretary-General in time for distribution to Member States at least two months before the opening of the eighth session;

"4. To request the Secretary-General to place at the disposal of the Special Committee the staff and the facilities it requires for its work;

"5. To include the item "Admission of new Members" in the provisional agenda of the eighth session of the General Assembly."

B

"The General Assembly,

"Noting that, on 18 September 1952, ten members of the Security Council supported a draft resolution recommending the admission of Japan to the United Nations, but that no recommendation was made to the General Assembly because of the opposition of one permanent member,

"Deeming it important to the development of the United Nations that all applicant States which possess the qualifications for membership set forth in Article 4 of the Charter should be admitted,

"1. Determines that Japan is, in its judgment, a peace-loving State within the meaning of Article 4 of the Charter, is able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter, and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations;

"2. Requests the Security Council to take note of this determination by the General Assembly with respect to the application of Japan."

"The General Assembly,

"Noting that, on 19 September 1952, ten members of the Security Council supported a draft resolution recommending the admission of Vietnam to the United Nations, but that no recommendation was made to the General Assembly because of the opposition of one permanent member,

"Deeming it important to the development of the United Nations that all applicant States which possess the qualifications for membership set forth in Article 4 of the Charter should be admitted,

"1. Determines that Vietnam is, in its judgment, a peace-loving State within the meaning of Article 4 of the Charter, is able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter, and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations;

"2. Requests the Security Council to take note of this determination by the General Assembly with respect to the application of Vietnam."

D

"The General Assembly,

"Noting that, on 19 September 1952, ten members of the Security Council supported a draft resolution recommending the admission of Cambodia to the United Nations, but that no recommendation was made to the General Assembly because of the opposition of one permanent member,

"Deeming it important to the development of the United Nations that all applicant States which possess the qualifications for membership set forth in Article 4 of the Charter should be admitted,

"1. Determines that Cambodia is, in its judgment, a peace-loving State within the meaning of Article 4 of the Charter, is able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations;

"2. Requests the Security Council to take note of this determination by the General Assembly with respect to the application of Cambodia,"

"The General Assembly,

"Noting that, on 19 September 1952, ten members of the Security Council supported a draft resolution recommending the admission of Laos to the United Nations, but that no recommendation was made to the General Assembly because of the opposition of one permanent member,

"Deeming it important to the development of the United Nations that all applicant States which possess the qualifications for membership set forth in Article 4 of the Charter should be admitted,

"1. Determines that Laos is, in its judgment, a peace-loving State within the meaning of Article 4 of the Charter, is able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations; and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations;

"2. Requests the Security Council to take note of this determination by the General Assembly with respect to the application of Laos."

"The General Assembly,

"Considering that the application of Libya for admission to the United Nations is still pending before the Security Council,

"Deeming it important to the development of the United Nations that all applicant States which possess the qualifications for membership set forth in Article 4 of the Charter should be admitted,

"1. Determines that Libya is, in its judgment, a peace-loving State within the meaning of Article 4 of the Charter, is able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter, and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations;

"2. Requests the Security Council to take note of this determination by the General Assembly with respect to the application of Libya."

"The General Assembly,

"Considering that the application of Jordan for admission to the United Nations is still pending before the Security Council,

"Deeming it important to the development of the United Nations that all applicant States which possess the qualifications for membership set forth in Article 4 of the Charter should be admitted,

"1. Determines that Jordan is, in its judgment, a peace-loving State within the meaning of Article 4 of the Charter, is able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter, and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations;

"2. Requests the Security Council to take note of this determination by the General Assembly with respect to the application of Jordan."

R. OTHER MATTERS PLACED ON THE AGENDA OF THE SEVENTH SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY BUT NOT CONSIDERED DURING 1952¹⁰²

1. Measures to Avert the "Threat of a New World War and Measures to Strengthen Peace and Friendship among the Nations

In a letter dated 18 October 1952 (A/2229), the representative of Poland requested the inclusion in the agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly of an item entitled: "Measures to avert the threat of a new world war and measures to strengthen peace and friendship among the nations."

At its 386th plenary meeting on 21 October 1952, the General Assembly decided to include the item in the agenda of its seventh session and to refer it to the First Committee. Consideration of the item was postponed to the second part of the seventh session.

¹⁰² These items were discussed at the second part of the seventh session in 1953. They will therefore be dealt with in the 1953 Yearbook, when a summary of the explanatory memoranda will be given.

2. Complaint of United States Interference in the Internal Affairs of Other States

By a letter dated 15 October 1952 (A/2224/Rev.1), the representative of Czechoslovakia requested that the following question should be included in the agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly: "Interference of the United States of America in the internal affairs of other States as manifested by the organization on the part of the Government of the United States of America of subversive and espionage activities against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the People's Republic of China, the Czechoslovak Republic and other People's Democracies".

At its 380th plenary meeting on 16 October 1952, the General Assembly decided to include this question in the agenda of its seventh session. At its 382nd meeting on 17th October, the Assembly referred the item to the First Committee for consideration and report. Consideration of the item was deferred to the second part of the seventh session.

3. Greek Complaint Concerning Failure to Repatriate Members of Its Armed Forces

By letter dated 23 September 1952 (A/2204), the representative of Greece requested the inclusion of the following item in the provisional agenda of the seventh session of the General Assembly: Complaint of "non-compliance of States still detaining members of the Greek armed forces with the provisions of resolution 382 A (V), adopted by the General Assembly on 1 December 1950,¹⁰³ recommending 'the repatriation of all those among them who express the wish to be repatriated'."

At its 380th meeting on 16 October 1952, the General Assembly decided to include the question in the agenda of the seventh session and subsequently referred it to the Ad Hoc Political Committee for consideration and report. The item was not discussed during the first part of the seventh session, and at its 406th meeting on 18 December, the General Assembly decided to re-allocate the item to the First Committee, and to consider it at the second part of the session.

S. MATTERS BROUGHT TO THE ATTENTION OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL BUT NOT DISCUSSED

1. Report on the British-United States Zone of the Free Territory of Trieste

By letter dated 30 September 1952 (S/2794), the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States transmitted to the Security Council the eleventh report on the administration of the British-United States Zone of the Free Territory of Trieste.

The report described steady progress and continuing economic recovery of the Zone. In the industrial field especially good progress was reported in the ship-building industry, where activities were largely concerned with the 96,000-ton ERP construction programme initiated in 1948. Traffic through the port of Trieste was in excess of the record levels of 1950. As part of a programme aiming at increased productivity, extensive improvements were effected at the Aquila refinery, the ILVA steel mill and the jute mill. By the end of the year, sixteen factories were completed or were under construction in the Zaule area as compared to only one factory in 1950.

Unemployment in the Zone showed a slight decrease, the average monthly total of unemployed being 19.1 thousand, approximately one thousand less than in 1950.

European Recovery Programme aid utilized during the year amounted to nearly $10 million, making a total of $37.5 million since the inception of the programme. During the year 1,029 houses or apartments were completed. The report stated that in pursuance of the agreement of 1948, fiscal legislation in the Zone closely followed that of Italy, and in 1951, as in previous years, the Italian Government met the deficit in the Zone's budget.

2. USSR Note to the United Kingdom and the United States concerning Trieste

By letter dated 3 July 1952 (S/2692) the delegation of the USSR requested that the text of the USSR note of 24 June 1952 to the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States be circulated to Member States.

The note referred to a Memorandum of Understanding between the latter two Governments and ¹⁰³ For text of this resolution, see Y.U.N., 1950, p. 381.

Italy, published on 10 May 1952, according to which Italy was to be given a share in the administration of Zone A of the Free Territory of Trieste. The Soviet note protested against a provision in that agreement by which the United Kingdom and the United States troops would retain all powers of Government in the Zone. The agreement, it was said, was aimed at violating further the provisions of the Italian Peace Treaty relating to Trieste and was an attempt to perpetuate the military occupation of the zone for strategic purposes.

The note also referred to an earlier USSR communication of 17 November 1951 to the Governments of France, the United Kingdom and the United States stressing the necessity of fulfilling their obligations under the Italian Peace Treaty specially as regards the withdrawal of foreign troops, the liquidation of "Anglo-American" bases and the appointment of a Governor. In that note, the USSR had objected against reported plans of partitioning the Free Territory of Trieste between Italy and Yugoslavia, stating that the partition was intended to further the military plans of the "aggressive Atlantic bloc".

3. Communication Received from the Organization of American States

By letter dated 17 January 1952 (S/2494), addressed to the Secretary-General, the acting Chairman of the Inter-American Peace Committee brought to the knowledge of the Security Council the records of the Committee's special session, held on 25 December 1951. The records included the text of a declaration, signed by the Governments of the Republic of Cuba and the Dominican Republic, which indicated that the differences between the two Governments had been satisfactorily and amicably settled. (The differences related to the arrest and sentencing by the Dominican Republic authorities of five Cuban members of the crew of a Guatemalan vessel proceeding from a port in Cuba to one in Guatemala.)

The Council also received several other communications from the Cuban and Dominican Republic relating to the action of the Committee in the above matter, (S/2460, S/2480, S/2495, S/2511).

III. Economic and Social Questions

A. WORLD ECONOMIC SITUATION

At its fourteenth session, held at New York from 20 May to 1 August 1952, the Economic and Social Council made its annual review of the world economic situation in accordance with the recommendation of the General Assembly in resolution 118(II).

1. Reports Before the Economic and Social Council at its Fourteenth Session¹

The Council's discussion was based primarily on the Secretary-General's report on world economic conditions entitled World Economic Report, 1950-51 (E/2193/Rev.1 and Corr.1), supplemented by a detailed analysis entitled Recent Changes in Production (E/2193/Add.1/Corr.1).

The introduction to the main report stated that during 1951—the first full year of widespread rearmament activity—the world produced more goods than in any previous year. As the general increase in production between 1950 and 1951 was higher than the increase in the production of military goods alone, a rise was made possible in the total supply of civilian goods for the world as a whole. In the countries with developed private enterprise economies in North America and Western Europe, production increased considerably from mid-1950 to mid-1951. However, owing to a slackening of consumer demand, the output of consumer goods declined in the second half of 1951 and early in 1952. Although sharp increases in raw material prices caused a general upsurge of prices in all these countries, money wages tended to keep pace with the cost of living. In the countries with centrally-planned economies in eastern Europe and mainland China, output and consumption generally increased in 1950 and 1951, though consumption rose less than production. In a number of those countries the rapid pace of industrialization, combined with relatively poor harvests, caused pressure on the supplies of food; in others, however, the rise in the supply of consumer goods made it possible for consumer prices to be reduced. There was also an increase in production in many of the under-developed countries, but it was generally smaller than the world average increase. At the same time the exports of under-developed countries increased both in volume and price owing to growing demands from industrialized countries, especially from mid-1950 to mid-1951.

Dealing with international trade and payments, the report said that in 1951 the earlier tendency towards reduced deficits with the dollar area was reversed and considerable strain developed during the latter part of 1951 in the balance of payments position of Western Europe. While most of the Western European countries improved their overall balance of payments position in the course of 1951, difficulties encountered by a few of them led at the end of 1951 and during the early part of 1952 to the tightening of import restrictions.

According to the report, the trade of almost all the centrally-planned economies was increasingly affected in 1951 by the growing deterioration of their trade relations with a large part of the rest of the world. As output rose in these countries, however, the volume of their trade with one another increased.

There were renewed indications in 1951 of the exceptional instability to which the balance of payments of primary producing countries are subject. These countries, it was stated, achieved very large increases in their earnings from exports of raw materials at record high prices in the first nine months following the outbreak of hostilities in Korea. Subsequently they sustained a marked reduction in earnings as the raw material boom subsided.

The report further stated that imports of both capital and consumer goods by under-developed countries were larger in 1951 than in 1950 despite difficulties of supplies and the lengthening of delivery periods. In the latter part of 1951, however, foreign exchange receipts declined because of a slackening of foreign demand; as a result a number of countries had to reimpose restrictions on imports because of difficulties in the balance of payments.

¹ The annual report of the International Monetary Fund was also discussed under this agenda item. For its consideration see section 3, below.

The report concluded that experience during the period under review had lent new emphasis to the need for international action designed to bring about an adequate flow of capital to under-developed countries, to elaborate new techniques for stabilizing the demand for and prices of primary commodities traded internationally, or to introduce other arrangements that would, under mutually acceptable conditions, permit the industrialized countries to increase the supply of machinery and equipment to the under-developed countries, so as to enable them to make more effective use of their abundant natural resources as well as to meet the demands of their trading partners.

The Council also had before it two additional supplements to the report: (1) a Summary of Recent Economic Developments in Africa (E/2193/Add.2/Corr.1), prepared in accordance with the request of the Council in resolution 367 B (XIII); and (2) a Summary of Recent Economic Developments in the Middle East (E/2193/Add.3/Corr. 1), prepared by the Secretariat in accordance with the views expressed during the thirteenth session of the Council.

The Summary of Recent Economic Developments in Africa contained a brief account of changes in 1949 and 1950 in the exchange sector of the economy, including commercialized agricultural production, mineral production and foreign trade. Reviewing the progress of public investment in the Belgian Congo, French territories, United Kingdom territories and Portuguese territories in Africa, the Summary stated that investment in 1950 was at a higher rate than in previous years, both in the area as a whole and in most of the individual territories. It then described measures taken under the technical assistance and related programmes of the United Nations in Libya, Ethiopia, Liberia and the Trust Territory of Somaliland under Italian administration. It also dealt with the co-ordination of inter-governmental action and the work of the specialized agencies in Africa.

The Summary of Recent Economic Changes in the Middle East traced the main economic developments in that region as a whole with special emphasis on its petroleum production and foreign trade. Important developments of the past two or three years in several selected countries like Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Syria and Turkey were described in brief sections.

The Summary stated that terms of trade had tended to improve in the region as a whole, but to a varying and, often, a small degree. The improvement in terms of trade, together with the expansion of trade with Germany and the USSR, it was stated, had contributed to a reduction of the foreign trade deficit in most of the countries of the region. The deficit in trade with hard currency areas also declined and even disappeared in a few cases.

The report stated that agriculture was developing, but at a slow rate, in most parts of the Middle East. The over-all programme of industry was greater than that of agriculture in almost all countries of the region. Prices took an upward trend in 1950 and 1951, especially in countries more closely dependent on foreign trade, such as Egypt and Lebanon.

In addition to the surveys dealing with the world economic situation, in general, and Africa and the Middle East, in particular, the Council also had before it the Economic Survey of Europe in 1951 (E/ECE/140/Rev.1) prepared by the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Europe. It also had before it the annual reports of the regional economic commissions for Europe, for Asia and the Far East and for Latin America.²

The Council also had before it the Review of International Commodity Problems, 1951 (E/2181), prepared by the Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements.

The Review traced developments in the commodity field since the end of the Second World War, drawing attention to the rapid changes that occurred in the situation of various primary commodities and dealing in particular with the effects of the current period of rearmament.

The Review stated that during 1951 the prices of many important primary commodities fluctuated with unusual rapidity. In the case of countries a large part of whose trade was in a particular commodity, the adverse effect of these fluctuations was considerable. The current period of rearmament, it was stated, could be expected to accentuate the natural tendency for primary commodities to fluctuate widely. The discovery of ways and means to moderate such fluctuations continued, in the opinion of the Committee, to be a pressing need. It considered it desirable that active consideration should be given to arrangements for avoiding difficulties in the case of particular commodities.

The Review also dealt with the principles and procedures for dealing with commodity problems, described inter-governmental action and consultation on particular commodities from 1946 to 1951 and summarized information regarding international trade in primary commodities.

2. Discussions in the Economic and Social Council

The Economic and Social Council discussed the world economic situation specifically³ at its 584th and 587th plenary meetings on 29 May and 2 June, and at its 589th to 601st plenary meetings from 3 to 12 June 1952.

² See under Regional Economic Commissions.

³ For the Council's discussion under this item of the reports of regional economic commissions and of the International Monetary Fund, see under respective headings.

The representatives of Belgium, Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States emphasized the need for co-ordinated international action to combat the economic instability the world was facing today. The representative of Canada stated that economic stability and an expanding world economy could only be achieved if governments took steps to ensure stability of the economies of their own countries and recognized the relationship of domestic policy to external stability. These representatives generally agreed that a significant effort had been made to keep inflation in check and that adjustments of national economies to the heavy burden of defence were being carried out with far fewer adverse effects than had generally been expected. The supply of goods available for civilian use had been increased.

The representatives of France and the United Kingdom, however, called attention to inflationary pressures existing in many countries where increasing rearmament activities had been accompanied by a diversion of goods and services from the civilian economy. At the same time it was pointed out that deflationary pressures also existed in important sectors of national economies where demand had slackened. Attention was called to the fact that unemployment had begun to spread in certain industries producing textiles and other consumer goods. The maintenance of a stable level of employment was, therefore, emphasized as one of the major tasks of governments.

The representatives of Belgium, Canada, France and Sweden, among others, referred to the need to remedy the recurring disequilibrium between the dollar area and other areas of the world. Among the remedies suggested were: the control of inflation; increased production in industrialized European economies and under-developed economies alike; and an increase in the exports of countries with balance-of-payments difficulties.

The stability of raw material prices as a means of preventing economic upsets in both primary producing and industrialized countries was urged by several representatives, including those of Belgium, France and the United Kingdom. The representative of the United Kingdom felt that a fundamental method for stabilizing raw material prices would be to stabilize the conditions of demand and supply in particular commodities by agreements. He drew the attention of the Council to the International Materials Conference which had shown the usefulness of international action in mitigating fluctuations in commodity markets.

Reviewing the situation in his country, the representative of the United States said that the past fifteen months had been characterized by a sustained high level of economic activity, a subsiding of the severe inflationary pressures which had followed the outbreak of the war in Korea, and considerable stability in the price level. Unemployment had been small, varying seasonally by under two million, or less than 3 per cent of the labour force.

As for the future, he said that production of goods and services should continue to expand in the United States, thus increasing imports which would, in turn, increase the dollar earnings of other countries. He assured the Council that trade liberalization continued to be a major objective in United States foreign economic policy.

Representatives also stressed the urgent need for increasing world food supplies.⁴ The representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom and the United States also emphasized the need for the economic development of the under-developed countries. The representative of the United States said that every major under-developed area of the free world had received more capital goods from the United States in 1951 than in 1950. Prices of these goods, he stated, had been stabilized. Grants and loans had been augmented by $170 million in 1950 to $690 million in 1951, so that the under-developed countries could import more than their current earnings allowed.

The representatives of Cuba, Egypt, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan, the Philippines and Uruguay, among others, dwelt on the impact of world trade on the under-developed countries. They stressed the close relationship between economic stability in the industrialized countries and the economic development of the under-developed countries. They expressed the opinion that economic developments of 1951 had not been favourable to the under-developed countries; their large export earnings had declined and any progress in their development plans had been largely cancelled out by inflationary tendencies and by payments for invisible items of trade.

Representatives of the under-developed countries maintained that the gap between the production of the industrialized countries and of the under-developed countries had widened, as production in the developed countries had increased faster than in the less developed countries. The increased earnings of the under-developed countries, resulting from the high prices of raw materials, had caused inflationary pressures which were further aggravated by an increase in the prices of imported food and consumer goods. Not all under-developed countries had benefited from the boom in the primary products, it was considered, and, subsequently, demand had slackened and export earnings had dwindled. The situation in some under-developed countries, faced with declining foreign exchange reserves and with inflation, was as unfavourable as it had been before the outbreak of hostilities in Korea. This showed the instability to which the balance of payments of primary producing countries was subject. These representatives also emphasized the need to combat inflation, to increase production and to secure a reduction in the cost of living. They made a plea for a global programme of economic development with international action to increase technical and financial assistance to their countries. The outstanding problem in this respect, they maintained, was that of obtaining the capital required to finance economic development. An increase in the proportion of world savings invested in the economic development of under-developed countries and the building up of expanding international trade were essential for more rapid progress in carrying out development plans, they considered. The representative of the Philippines stated that the current system of world trade enabled the industrialized countries to determine the prices of both the goods they sold to the under-developed countries and the goods they bought from them. He considered that such a situation was anomalous in a rational world economy.

⁴ See under Food and Famine.

The representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR expressed the view that intensive rearmament activity in the United States and Western Europe had led to a decline in civilian goods production, to increased taxation which had mainly affected the working masses of these countries, to increases in consumer goods prices and even more intensive exploitation of workers. At the same time it had led to increased profits for the monopolies, they said. These representatives considered that armament programmes were preventing the economic development of the under-developed countries, causing instability in many of the capitalist countries themselves, and creating a raw material monopoly exclusively in favour of the United States. They emphasized the need for genuine international economic co-operation, and the general development of trade relations, based on the recognition of mutual interest, sovereign rights and the equality of all countries. According to these representatives, one of the indispensable conditions for improvement in the economic situation of Western European countries was the maintenance of normal economic relations with Eastern European countries.

Contrasting the economic situation in the United States and Western Europe with that prevailing in their own countries and mainland China, these representatives stated that production in the USSR and the Eastern European countries had increased in excess of the targets set for 1951. The same trend, they said, was apparent in 1952. As a result of agrarian reform, China had become almost self-sufficient in cotton and cereals. Now it was importing the goods mainly needed for its industrial development.

The representative of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU) stated that the improvement of sanitary and health conditions in under-developed countries should be accompanied by modern methods of agricultural development and stressed the need for careful planning by the under-developed countries in connexion with the financing of their development. She also reported on the activities of ICFTU delegations which had visited a number of African territories and she urged the establishment of an economic commission for Africa.

The representative of the World Federation of Trade Unions stated that rearmament activities in the United States and Western Europe had led to reduced consumption, sharp cuts in productive budget expenditure to allow for non-productive expenditure on armaments, and a serious decline in the living standards of workers. She expressed the hope that the Economic and Social Council would call upon all countries to restore free international trade and to replace the disastrous economies of war by economic programmes designed to safeguard and improve the people's living standards. On behalf of WFTU she offered several specific proposals to that end.

At the conclusion of the general debate the Council agreed to take no formal action with respect to the agenda item entitled "World Economic Situation". It was felt that the deliberations on this item, however, formed the indispensable background for the consideration of other major economic items.

3. Discussions in the General Assembly

References to the world economic situation were also made during the discussion of Chapter II of the report (A/2172) of the Economic and Social Council at the 241st to 246th meetings of the Assembly's Second Committee held from 15 to 20 December 1952.⁵

The representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR stated that the subordination of the western European economies to United States war preparations were the main cause of the economic crisis in those countries. United States economic policies, they said, had led to a fall in industrial production, particularly of articles of mass consumption and had seriously affected the trade of these countries.

Contrasting the economic situation of the capitalist countries with that prevailing in the USSR, the People's Republic of China and the people's democracies, these representatives held that the latter had embarked on a programme of peaceful reconstruction and that their economic condition was constantly improving.

In reply, the representatives of France, the Netherlands, Norway and the United Kingdom maintained that the representatives who had criticized the economies of Western European countries had made an incorrect and misleading assessment of Western European economies. In certain Western European countries living standards were improving and in Western Europe generally the fall in the production of consumer goods had been largely offset by the substantial expansion in the output of heavy metal goods which many countries needed for their development.

The representative of the United States said that his country was not living off other countries as had been suggested and that 97 per cent of its market was domestic. It had, on the contrary, helped other countries with $35,000 million since the end of the Second World War. As to the economic situation in the United States, he said that its production had increased from $325,000 million in the first half of 1951 to $336,000 million in the first half of 1952 and that employment had been at a record high level. The standard of living of United States workers had gone up instead of declining.

4. Report of the International Monetary Fund

The Economic and Social Council at its fourteenth session, at its 584th plenary meeting on 29 May 1952, considered the Annual Report of the International Monetary Fund for the fiscal year ending 30 April 1951, together with a supplement covering the period from May 1951 to 31 March 1952 (E/2169/Add.1).

Introducing the report, the Managing Director of the Fund expressed the hope that recent decisions taken by the Fund establishing certain new policies would enable the Fund to be of greater help to its members in meeting temporary exchange needs. Among such changes he noted the clarification of the conditions under which the Fund's resources would be available to its members as a second line of reserves to meet temporary exchange difficulties and the revision of the schedule of interest charges for use of Fund resources. As required by its Articles of Agreement, general consultations with many of the Fund's members had been initiated with a view to the reduction or abolition of certain types of exchange restriction and discrimination with the object of achieving wider convertibility of currencies.

In reviewing the international payments situation in the recent past, the Managing Director stated that during the period when United States imports had shown marked increase in 1950-51, many countries had acted as if the payments problem had vanished. But when the abnormal speculative demand had fallen off, the continuing weakness in the pattern of payments had been revealed and payments difficulties, which had not been confined to dollar payments, had again acquired an urgent character and they had been accentuated by the scanty reserves. The Managing Director deplored the tendency to believe that restrictions on imports and discrimination in trade provided a solution to payments difficulties. He pointed out that a great deal had already been done to meet the post-war payments problems and expressed the belief that the chief remaining task was to eliminate the current inflation, particularly by means of budgetary and credit policies, which, he noted, had recently been given renewed emphasis. The budgetary needs of many governments were increasing with rearmament. Assistance from the United States for defence and economic aid would meet this problem in part, but much more would have to be done by aided countries themselves to provide resources for defence. Measures to avoid inflation need not necessarily cause widespread unemployment, but if countries slackened their effort to eliminate inflation as soon as pockets of unemployment appeared in one or another industry, the payments problem might become permanent. Private capital, he felt, would probably flow more readily to the under-developed countries if they sought to avoid inflation, maintain a strong payments position and permit the prompt and unrestricted remittance of current earnings.

⁵ The problems of under-developed countries were discussed under a separate agenda item, see pp. 353 ff.

Discussing the prevailing difficulties of international payments the representative of the United Kingdom drew attention to the serious pressure on the balance of payments of his country, stating that his Government regarded the restrictions which it had imposed as a disagreeable necessity. The chances of attaining balance-of-payments equilibrium were remote unless the countries with persistent balance-of-payments surpluses played their part in correcting the current disequilibrium. It was vitally important, he considered, that the policies of those countries should be such as to encourage consumption of imported goods in their territories.

The representative of Czechoslovakia stated that the Fund had failed to implement its aims and had become an instrument of United States policy.

The new policy regarding the use of the Fund's resources was welcomed by other representatives.

After the conclusion of the debate, the Council unanimously adopted resolution 421 (XIV) taking note of the report of the Fund.

B. ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF UNDER-DEVELOPED AREAS

1. Technical Assistance for Economic Development

On 31 July 1950 the Secretary-General set up the Technical Assistance Administration (TAA) to provide for the efficient operation of the United Nations technical assistance programme and for its co-ordination with similar programmes of Member Governments and with those of the specialized agencies. TAA was made responsible for the operational activities under General Assembly resolutions 200(III) on technical assistance for economic development, 418(V) on advisory social welfare services, for the operational and substantive aspects of 246 (III) on training in public administration, and for the United Nations operational activities under the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance for Economic Development of Under-Developed Countries established by the Economic and Social Council under resolution 222 A (IX).⁶ The first three programmes are financed by the regular United Nations budget; the Expanded Programme is financed by voluntary contributions from governments to a Special Account. However, with the exception of the origin of the funds, the United Nations makes no administrative distinction between the technical assistance which it gives under resolution 200(III) and 246(III) and that which it gives with Expanded Programme funds. This is also true of those social welfare services provided under resolution 418 (V) that pertain directly to economic development, for example, those in the fields of housing and town and country planning, migration and population.

The Expanded Programme was established as a joint activity of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. The organizations participating in this Programme are the United Nations; the International Labour Organisation (ILO); the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO); the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO); the World Health Organization (WHO); the World Meteorological Organization (WMO); and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU). The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund, though they do not participate in the Expanded Programme and are not titular members of the Technical Assistance Board (TAB), are represented at the Board's meetings and co-operate fully with the promotion of the objectives of the Programme. The Technical Assistance Board (TAB) is an executive body composed of representatives of each of the organizations participating in the Expanded Programme. Its functions are to co-ordinate, integrate and review the activities carried out by these organizations under this Programme. A full-time Executive Chairman was appointed in 1952; prior to this, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, or his representative, acted as Chairman.

The Technical Assistance Committee (TAC), a standing committee of the Council consisting of all members of the Council, makes a critical examination of activities undertaken and results achieved under the Programme and reports to the Council concerning the reports it receives from the Technical Assistance Board.

a. CONSIDERATION BY THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AT ITS FOURTEENTH SESSION

(1) Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance (a) FOURTH REPORT OF TAC

The Council, at its fourteenth session, had before it the fourth report of TAC (E/2238), ⁶ See previous Yearbooks.

submitted after the Committee had reviewed the administration of the Expanded Programme at its 21st to 23rd meetings on 22 and 23 May 1952. The Council considered this report at its 599th and 600th plenary meetings on 11 June 1952.

In the report, TAC noted that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in its report (E/2161 and Corr.1)⁷ had indicated the need for "stronger central leadership and more continuous central guidance" to ensure the development of well-integrated and balanced programmes which would most effectively help to solve the economic and social problems of under-developed countries and make the most efficient use of the resources available for the Expanded Programme. TAC also felt that, in view of new developments since 1949, certain changes in the administration of the Programme were appropriate. It therefore proposed that paragraph 3 of resolution 222 A (IX), concerning the establishment and organization of the Technical Assistance Board,⁸ be amended in order to provide that a full-time Executive Chairman of the Board be appointed by the Secretary-General after consultation with the executive heads of the participating organizations. It made proposals for the general functions of the Chairman (see resolution, as adopted, below).

TAC also suggested an amended voting procedure for the Board according to which decisions would be made by agreement between the Executive Chairman and members of the Board or, if agreement were not reached, by reference to TAC.

TAC was of the opinion that, in the interests of greater co-ordination, resident representatives appointed by the Board in recipient countries should be directly responsible to TAB and to its Chairman. Their principal function, TAC agreed, was to co-operate with the governments concerned in the development of plans and projects and to co-ordinate the technical assistance activities of the participating agencies in a given country. Where necessary, these representatives might service more than one country.

In the debate, in which the Council generally agreed with the recommendations of TAC, the Secretary-General announced that, after consultation with the executive heads of the participating agencies, he had designated David Owen, Assistant Secretary-General in charge of the Department of Economic Affairs, as Executive Chairman of TAB. Representatives to the Council commented favourably on the designation of Mr. Owen, whose competence and integrity in discharging his duties were heartily commended.

The representative of Czechoslovakia stated that he would abstain from voting on the draft resolution proposed by TAC. Although in favour of technical assistance, he said, his delegation had always opposed and was still opposed to any method of granting such assistance which involved the execution by certain countries of prepared economic and political plans and designs, which had nothing to do with genuine technical assistance and were solely directed towards economic aggression and expansion, to the disadvantage of the economically under-developed countries. He did not consider that the appointment of an Executive Chairman of TAB or the adoption of a complicated voting procedure for the Board would facilitate the implementation of technical assistance programmes.

With regard to the proposal on voting procedure, some representatives, among them those of Mexico, the Philippines and Uruguay, felt that the powers delegated to the Executive Chairman were tantamount to veto powers. However, the Council noted the assurance contained in the TAC report that such recourse to a vote would be the exception rather than the rule, since the decisions of the Board would normally be made on the basis of general agreements.

The Council adopted by 8 votes to 3, with 7 abstentions, an amendment by Cuba (E/L.352) which would give the Council the right to alter the powers of the Chairman when it saw fit. The Council adopted the draft resolution proposed by TAC, as amended, as resolution 433 A (XIV). By this resolution the Council decided to amend its resolution 222 (IX) as follows:

Paragraph 3

In place of the sentence reading: "The Secretary-General or his representative shall be Chairman of the Board", substitute the following:

"The Secretary-General, after consultation with the executive heads of the participating organizations, shall appoint a full-time Executive Chairman of the Board who shall have such responsibilities and functions within the purposes of this resolution, as the Economic and Social Council may assign to him, and which it may alter as it sees fit."

For sub-paragraph (h), which provided that all decisions, other than on procedural matters, be taken by general agreement and in the case of disagreement referred to TAC for decision, substitute the following:

"(h) Decisions relating to recommendations or proposals made by the Executive Chairman or by members of the Board will normally be taken by general agreement between the Executive Chairman and all members of the Board. When general agreement cannot be reached recommendations or proposals shall be considered approved when a majority of the members of the Board present and voting and the Executive Chairman are in agreement. If no agreement can be reached, the matter may be referred to the Technical Assistance Committee either by a majority of the members of the Board present and voting or by the Executive Chairman."

⁷ See also pp. 537 ff.

⁸ See Y.U.N., 1948-49, p. 443.

Paragraph 4

Delete the entire paragraph concerning the terms of reference of the Executive Secretary as specified in resolution 222 A (IX) and renumber the subsequent paragraphs accordingly.

New paragraph 4

Substitute the following for former paragraph 5 which gave the Secretary-General the power to make the arrangements concerning staff:

"The secretariat of the Technical Assistance Board shall perform, under the supervision of the Executive Chairman, such functions as the efficient operation of the Board may require. Whenever the need arises, the Executive Chairman shall make arrangements whereby the executive heads of the participating organizations may assign members of their staffs to the secretariat of the Technical Assistance Board."

Finally the Council approved the terms of reference of the Executive Chairman which were set forth in the resolution of the Technical Assistance Committee as follows:

"(a) To examine programme proposals submitted by participating organizations, which may include both formal requests submitted by governments and projects which are in preliminary stages of discussion, with a view to facilitating, in agreement with the Governments, the development of integrated country programmes, consulting with agencies as appropriate;

"(b) To make such recommendations to the Technical Assistance Board as he may deem appropriate with respect to all programme proposals or projects, including earmarking or allocation of funds;

"(c) After approval of programme proposals or projects by the Board, to earmark the necessary funds, and as project plans become final, to allocate funds without further reference to the Board;

"(d) In exercising continuous supervision of the programme, to appraise the effectiveness of the activities of the participating organizations financed from the Special Account, and the results achieved, bearing in mind the desirability of keeping the proportion of administrative to operational expenditures as small as possible consistent with efficiency, and to make recommendations to the Board, availing himself to the fullest extent possible of the services of the representatives of the participating organizations;

"(e) To review the adequacy of the co-ordination and integration of activities financed from the Special Account, keeping himself fully informed of activities financed by the agencies from their own budgets and of all other technical assistance programmes both bilateral and multilateral, and to make appropriate recommendations to the Board;

"(f) To convene and preside over the meetings of the Board;

"(g) In the intervals between meetings, to act on behalf of the Board, under conditions laid by the Board; normally to consult its members before taking action on all matters of major importance, and to report to it on the actions taken on its behalf;

"(h) Under conditions agreed by the Board, to sign or authorize signature of basic and comprehensive country agreements with governments;

"(i) In agreement with the Board, to appoint resident technical assistance representatives and to determine their terms of reference; to supervise the activities of such representatives and to establish an effective system of reporting between himself and such representatives;

"(j) To establish, after consultation with the Board, administrative rules and procedures on such matters as reporting, objects of expenditures definitions, salary and per diem rates, etc.;

"(k) To report on behalf of the Board to the TAC on the operation of the programme and proposed future programmes;

"(l) To supervise the Secretariat of the Board."

(b) FIFTH REPORT OF TAC

The Council also had before it the fifth report of TAC (E/2304) prepared by the Committee following its review, at its 24th to 28th meetings from 16 to 18 July 1952, of the fourth report of TAB (E/2213, volumes I and II). In this report TAB had given an extensive description of the Programme and of selected projects, an account of the financial aspects of the Programme, proposals for 1953, and descriptive summaries, by country, of technical assistance provided during the first financial period of the Programme. The TAC review had been prepared in the light of the recommendations of the Working Party (E/TAC/L.21) established at the 23rd meeting of TAC on 23 May. The meetings of the Working Party had been attended by the representatives of all the participating organizations. The Council considered the fifth report of TAC at its 653rd and 654th plenary meetings on 22 July 1952, together with the report of the Secretary-General (E/2209) on the United Nations programme of technical assistance.⁹

In its report, the Committee suggested that more attention should be given by governments in formulating their requests, and by the participating organizations in drawing up their post-descriptions, to specifying clearly the qualifications of the experts needed. Governments, it recommended, should give more consideration in their requests to lesser-known experts who might be just as well equipped to cope with the practical problems involved as internationally known technicians, and who would be more readily available on a short-term basis. Participating organizations should, wherever appropriate, engage experts on long-term contracts. The Committee also stressed the need for adequate briefing of experts by TAB and by the participating organizations.

⁹ See pp. 357-58.

TAC agreed that, where a variety of expertise was required within a limited period, the use of consultant firms would be permissible. However, it indicated that their use should not entail a substantially higher expense than if comparable services were secured by hiring individual experts and purchasing the necessary equipment. No preferential position should be given to particular manufacturing, sales or contracting concerns. The requesting government, the Committee held, must approve the use of this type of expertise, and a wide geographical distribution of the firms so used should be sought.

The Committee noted with satisfaction that the various schemes for training local personnel had included provision that those trained were usefully employed afterwards for the benefit of their country. It expressed the hope that in the future fellowship arrangements made by the different participating organizations would be more uniform and that training facilities would be developed within the recipient countries themselves. Reference was made to "observation tours", a less costly group-fellowship arrangement under which technicians from recipient countries would visit a number of developed countries to observe how problems in their fields could be solved.

The Committee noted the policy followed by the Board under which the participating organizations determine the amount of equipment to be provided for each project. It recommended that illustrative information on projects in which equipment cost surpassed 25 per cent of the total cost be included in future TAB reports. Since delayed delivery of equipment had sometimes proved to be a major obstacle in the operation of important projects, TAC suggested that governments of equipment-supplying countries should take steps to improve the situation, provided specific cases were brought to their attention.

The Committee urged that, where non-convertible currencies contributed to the Special Account could not be used to pay for the technical assistance or equipment, it should be possible for the organizations to exchange currencies available through the Special Account for other currencies available to these organizations under their regular programmes. TAC again stressed the desirability of contributions to the Special Account being made, at least in part, in convertible currency.

The TAB report had pointed out the difficulties arising from the interpretation and application of the principle that requesting governments should make a substantial contribution to the cost of technical assistance in local currency or in kind. TAC considered the matter in detail and decided that the Executive Chairman of TAB should ensure that governments complied with this principle and that, as far as possible, uniform arrangements were made for projects which were similar in nature. It decided, however, that requesting governments need not provide the cost of lodging or travel per diem for experts on projects where they were providing extensive staff and other facilities, and that they should not necessarily be required to bear external travel costs of fellows and scholars. TAB, the Committee also determined, might exempt requesting governments from furnishing local transportation under certain conditions. Requesting governments were urged to make maximum contributions. TAC decided, in view of the difficulties created by the current method of assessing local costs, to explore alternative methods of assessing such costs.

On the basis of the fourth report and of additional information submitted by TAB and the participating organizations regarding past, current and future activities, the Working Party and TAC proceeded with an agency-by-agency review of the 1953 programme. TAC felt that requesting governments and participating organizations should further concentrate and integrate their efforts in fewer fields where experience had demonstrated that maximum results were obtainable and in projects presenting prospects of follow-up action by governments.

Where comprehensive missions involving several participating organizations were requested, TAC agreed that the Executive Chairman of TAB, in consultation with the Board, would determine the organization to which the leadership would be given. When requests involved two or more organizations, the organizations concerned could determine their respective responsibilities on a "practical non-jurisdictional basis".

In the light of the latest TAB estimates, which indicated that agreements already negotiated for future activities had committed all pledged funds for the first and second financial periods, TAC recommended a 1953 goal of $25 million in contributions and made recommendations concerning the allocation of contributions received for the third financial period. These recommendations were subsequently embodied in the resolution adopted by the Council (see below).

TAC also decided that for 1953 funds should again be made available for ITU and WMO by the United Nations out of its share of the Special Account.

During the brief debate, the majority of representatives expressed appreciation of the reports and of the work of the Technical Assistance Committee. The representative of Iran felt that more energetic attempts should be made to implement fully the Expanded Programme. The representative of Pakistan stated that he disagreed with the policy of not granting equipment and supplies unless a request was also made for technical assistance. He hoped that practical steps to remedy the situation would be taken in the coming year. The United States representative hoped that TAC would do its utmost to differentiate between activities under the Expanded Programme and under the ordinary assistance programmes. He and the representative of the United Kingdom urged that governments with contributions in arrears make every effort to fulfil their pledges. The Canadian representative expressed reservations concerning the figure of $25 million proposed as a target for contributions in 1953 and said that he could make no commitment regarding the Canadian contribution. The representative of Mexico, in explaining his abstention following the vote, doubted whether the progress achieved and the work undertaken fully justified the expansion of the Programme.

The draft resolution, as proposed by TAC (E/2304), was adopted at the Council's 654th plenary meeting on 22 July by 13 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, as resolution 433 B (XIV). It read:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the Report of the Technical Assistance Committee on the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance, together with the Fourth Report of the Technical Assistance Board,

"Convinced that the progress achieved and the activities so far undertaken fully justify the continuation and expansion of the programme as a co-operative international effort of increasing significance to the peoples of the under-developed countries,

"1. Expresses to the participating organizations and to the hundreds of experts in the field its satisfaction at the work they are accomplishing;

"2. Urges governments to make contributions to the programme for the year 1953 towards a goal of $25 million;

"3. Recommends that the General Assembly make appropriate arrangements at an early date for soliciting and receiving pledges from governments to this end;

"4. Invites the General Assembly at an early date during its seventh session to give approval to the following financial arrangements:

"Contributions received for the third financial period shall be allocated as follows:

"(i) Fifty per cent of total pledges for 1953, up to but not exceeding $10 million, shall be automatically available for allocation to the participating organizations in accordance with paragraph 8 (c) of Council resolution 222 A (IX), as amended, out of the contributions received for the third financial period;

"(ii) The balance of contributions received shall be retained in the Special Account for further allocation, as provided in the resolution of the Technical Assistance Committee of 23 May 1951, approved by the Economic and Social Council on 11 June 1952, in resolution 433 A (XIV);

"5. Urges governments which have not paid their pledges for the first or second financial periods of the Expanded Programme, to make early payment to the Special Account."

(2) United Nations Programme of Technical Assistance¹⁰

The Council at its fourteenth session had before it a report (E/2209) by the Secretary-General describing the technical assistance furnished by the United Nations to governments during the period 1 January 1951 - 31 March 1952 under the Expanded Programme as well as under the three related programmes of economic development, public administration and advisory social welfare services. Regional activities, including those carried out in collaboration with the regional economic commissions, were included in the report. The technical assistance activities of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWAPRNE) were also reported briefly.¹¹

The Secretary-General informed the Council that some progress had been made in solving a number of operational problems which had hitherto seriously slowed down the provision of technical assistance and hampered the effectiveness of the programme. Requests for assistance submitted by governments were now more clearly defined and more fully documented and an increasing number of governments had set up co-ordinating machinery designed to ensure the formulation of well-integrated requests. Although the difficulty of finding well-qualified candidates prepared to accept technical assistance assignments remained a serious problem, the rate of recruitment of experts had more than doubled during the past year. Progress in recruitment had been furthered to a considerable extent by the committees and executive offices set up by a number of governments to deal with the recruitment of experts and with other aspects of government participation in the technical assistance programme.

¹⁰ See also under Advisory Social Welfare Services.

¹¹ For technical assistance activities of the regional economic commissions and of UNRWAPRNE during 1952, see under those headings.

Representatives of the committees and bodies of this type set up by European governments had met in Paris, at the Secretary-General's invitation, to discuss with representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and specialized agencies methods of improving the recruitment of experts and other matters affecting the technical assistance programme. A series of recommendations had been drawn up, which urged closer co-operation between the committees and the participating organizations, and which were subsequently transmitted to the Technical Assistance Board (TAB).

The Secretary-General also described in his report the steps taken to place the briefing of technical assistance experts on a systematic basis, and drew the Council's particular attention to the review of the first five years of the advisory social welfare services (E/CN.5/266) which represented the first attempt to evaluate the achievements and results of technical assistance in the social field.¹² In the field of public administration, the Secretary-General reported that the number of requests for assistance was growing, and that a small substantive unit had been organized within the Technical Assistance Administration (TAA) to deal with such requests and to assist him in carrying out his responsibilities under General Assembly resolution 246(III).

The report stated that, during the period covered by the report, 165 experts of 35 nationalities had advised the governments of over 30 countries and territories; and during 1951, 451 persons from 56 countries and territories had taken up United Nations fellowship and scholarship awards. Of these, 163 had been granted in the field of economic development, 190 in the field of social welfare and 98 in the field of public administration.

The Secretary-General also brought to the Council's attention a number of regional and other projects which had been organized during 1951, in many cases in co-operation with the specialized agencies and the secretariats of the regional economic commissions.¹³

The Council, at its 653rd and 654th plenary meetings on 22 July 1952 reviewed the Secretary-General's report in conjunction with the fifth report of the Technical Assistance Committee (E/2304).¹⁴ The majority of representatives expressed their general satisfaction with the progress recorded by the Secretary-General. The representative of the United Kingdom said that, since funds and staff were limited, care should be taken to concentrate on those technical assistance activities most likely to meet the essential needs of under-developed countries and to lead to fruitful results for the development of those countries. While it was difficult, if not undesirable, to draw too sharp a line between economic and social activities, it would be a mistake to encourage the building up of expensive or ambitious social service schemes before the economic foundations that could support them had been soundly established. The representative of France stressed the value of the public administration training programme.

The Council had before it a joint draft resolution (E/L.434) by Belgium, Cuba, Egypt, France, Pakistan and the Philippines which it adopted unanimously, following the acceptance of a drafting amendment suggested by the Director of TAA. By this resolution (432 (XIV)), adopted at its 654th plenary meeting, the Council noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General on the regular United Nations programme of technical assistance.

b. CONSIDERATION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY AT ITS SEVENTH SESSION

The General Assembly considered the question of technical assistance for the economic development of under-developed countries during the Second Committee's general debate on economic development at its 195th to 209th meetings from 23 October to 12 November and, specifically, at the Committee's 209th to 212th meetings from 12 to 14 November and at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952. While reference was made to both the regular United Nations technical assistance programme and to the Expanded Programme, the debate centred on the latter.

The majority expressed their satisfaction with the technical assistance programmes and stressed the importance of technical assistance as a means of promoting the development of under-developed countries through international co-operation. The Director-General of TAA stated that technical assistance activities had been greatly expanded during 1952 and that TAA was now operating on a scale three times greater than its former rate.

The representatives of Denmark, the Netherlands, Pakistan and Sweden emphasized that the recruitment of experts was a crucial problem and thought that it would be expedient to seek skilled assistance among younger people. The representatives of Ecuador and Egypt, however, preferred experts to be persons of world-wide reputation, though this principle, they agreed, need not be followed too rigidly. The representative of Sweden also objected that social welfare experts, unlike experts in the field of economic development, were being recruited on the basis of personal interviews; she thought that more extensive use should be made of direct application to governments for such experts.

¹² See under Advisory Social Welfare Services.

¹³ For technical assistance activities during 1951, see Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 403-4.

¹⁴ See pp. 355-57.

Some representatives, among them those of Brazil, Ecuador, Iraq, Pakistan and Syria, held that local training of staff, rather than training abroad, would be less expensive and would avoid psychological and language difficulties.

If the local costs of technical assistance projects to under-developed countries could be reduced, the representatives of Chile, Cuba and the Dominican Republic, among others, considered, the technical assistance programme could be implemented more rapidly. The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States agreed that methods for establishing and levying local costs should be re-examined; they supported the Council decision in this connexion (see above).

The majority of representatives were of the opinion that there was a need for continuing and enlarging the Expanded Programme and that the reorganization of the Technical Assistance Board would lead to a more efficient and centralized administration of the Programme.

The Committee had before it a joint draft resolution (A/C.2/L.156 and Corr.1 and 2) by Brazil, Canada, Egypt, France, Pakistan, the Philippines, the United Kingdom and the United States. It proposed, inter alia, that the Assembly: (1) urge governments to contribute towards the goal of $25 million suggested by the Council; and (2) urge those governments which had not paid their pledges for the first or second financial periods to do so. The draft resolution would also approve the arrangements made by the Council for allocating the contributions for 1953.

Amendments to the joint draft were proposed by Ecuador (A/C.2/L.167). They proposed, inter alia, that the Expanded Programme be continued on a permanent basis and that the Council should draw up a proposal to establish the financial arrangements for the Programme for a four-year period, envisaging a goal of $40,000,000 for 1954.

The representatives of Argentina, Burma, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Greece, Indonesia, Pakistan and the Philippines favoured the continuation of the Programme on a permanent basis. However, the majority considered that such a proposal was premature and that the idea of long-term assistance was implicit in the Programme itself. A suitable rate of contributions for 1954 should, it was felt, be left to the Council and to the Technical Assistance Committee to work out in the light of progress reports and other relevant factors. As to the establishment of financial arrangements for four years in advance, the representatives of Argentina, Canada, Chile, China, France, Sweden and the United States, among others, pointed out that the legislative and constitutional systems of a number of governments made such a commitment impossible.

The representative of Ecuador therefore substituted for his proposal that the Programme be continued on a permanent basis an amendment which would express the Assembly's conviction that the expansion of the Programme and its continued progress could make an important contribution to the achievement of higher living standards. This amendment was accepted by the sponsors of the joint draft resolution. The amended paragraph was subsequently adopted by a roll-call vote of 47 to none, with 5 abstentions. The sponsors of the draft resolution also accepted an amendment by Ecuador which would recognize that the Expanded Programme has demonstrated, rather than if demonstrating its value.

In place of his proposal to establish financial arrangements for four years and to set a target for 1954 the representative of Ecuador substituted an amendment (A/C.2/L.167/Corr.1) to request the Council to study the feasibility of working out estimates for the Programme on a basis longer than a one-year period and to report thereon to the Assembly at its eighth session. The sponsors of the joint draft resolution also accepted this amendment.

Two further parts of the original amendment by Ecuador (A/C.2/L.167) were adopted by the Committee. It adopted by 46 votes to none, with 6 abstentions, the proposal to add to the joint draft resolution a paragraph recognizing that technical assistance programmes could be more effectively planned and administered if information on pledges were made available earlier. By 39 votes to 1, with 13 abstentions, it adopted a further paragraph to request the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds to undertake negotiations with governments regarding pledges for 1954 as soon as convenient after the close of the Council's sixteenth session.

A number of representatives, among them those of Argentina, Bolivia, Egypt, France and Syria, emphasized that in supporting the draft resolution they were not committing their governments to contribute or to increase their contributions to the Programme.

The amended draft resolution, as a whole, was adopted by the Committee (A/2332 (I)) at its 212th meeting on 14 November by 46 votes to none, with 5 abstentions. The Assembly at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952, without discussion, adopted the resolution by 52 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, as resolution 621 (VII).

The USSR representative stated that he abstained because he considered that the Expanded Programme was designed not to promote the development of under-developed countries, but as part of a system to subject the economies of these countries to United States control and to use their territories for the establishment of military bases. The resolution read:

"The General Assembly,

"Believing that the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance has demonstrated its value as an effective international means of assisting in the economic development of under-developed countries,

"Convinced that the expansion of the Programme and its continued progress can make an important contribution to the achievement of higher standards of living for the peoples of under-developed areas,

"Recognizing that governments requesting technical assistance, on the one hand, and the participating organizations of the Technical Assistance Board, on the other hand, would be able more effectively to plan and administer their programmes in the future if they had information concerning the amounts of money to be pledged by contributing governments at an earlier date than has been possible in respect of the first three years of operation under the Expanded Programme,

"1. Notes with satisfaction the action taken by the Economic and Social Council under resolution 433 A (XIV) of 11 June 1952;

"2. Approves the financial arrangements set forth in the annex hereto as agreed by the Economic and Social Council in paragraph 4 of its resolution 433 B (XIV) of 22 July 1952;

"3. Urges governments to contribute to the programme for the year 1953 towards the goal of $US 25 million suggested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 433 B (XIV);

"4. Urges governments which have not paid their pledges to the first or second financial periods of the Expanded Programme to make early payment to the Special Account;

"5. Requests the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds, appointed pursuant to General Assembly resolution 693 (VII) of 25 October 1952, to undertake, in addition to already assigned tasks and as soon as convenient after the closing of the sixteenth session of the Economic and Social Council, negotiations with governments regarding their pledges to the Special Account for the year 1954 towards the goal to be suggested by the Council at that session;

"6. Requests the Council to study the feasibility of working out estimates for the programme on a basis longer than a one-year period, and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its eighth session."

ANNEX

Financial arrangements

(AGREED BY THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL IN PARAGRAPH 4 OF ITS RESOLUTION 433 B (XIV))

Contributions received for the third financial period shall be allocated as follows:

(i) Fifty per cent of total pledges for 1953, up to but not exceeding $10 million, shall be automatically available for allocation to the participating organizations in accordance with paragraph 8 (c) of Council resolution 222 A (IX), as amended, out of the contributions received for the third financial period;

(ii) The balance of contributions received shall be retained in the Special Account for further allocation, as provided in the resolution of the Technical Assistance Committee of 23 May 1952, approved by the Economic and Social Council on 11 June 1952 in the resolution 433 A (XIV).

c. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ACTIVITIES

(1) Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance

Under the Expanded Programme, the participating organizations between July 1950 and October 1952 had provided some 1,600 experts in a wide variety of fields of knowledge to some 65 countries, and approximately 2,700 fellowships and scholarships had been awarded. In addition to the fellowships awarded by the United Nations¹⁵ as a participating organization, fellowships have been awarded in the following fields by the specialized agencies participating in the Programme:

ILO—social security; labour inspection; employment services; co-operatives; labour legislation; statistics; wage-fixing machinery; industrial safety; industrial relations. FAO—agriculture; economics; nutrition; fisheries; forestry. UNESCO—education; natural sciences; mass communications; social sciences; cultural activities. ICAO—communications and meteorology; air traffic services; air transport policies and administration; engineering and flying. WHO—public health (general); tuberculosis nursing; malaria control; venereal diseases control; maternal and child health; and other communicable diseases.

Under the Expanded Programme the fellows have studied in Alaska, Argentina, Austria, Australia, Algeria, Belgium, Brazil, British Guiana, Canada, Ceylon, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany (West), Gold Coast, Guatemala, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Lebanon, Malaya, Malta, Mexico, Morocco, the ¹⁵ See p. 358.

Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, the Philippines, Singapore, the Sudan, Sweden, Switzerland, Thailand, Turkey, the United Kingdom, the United States, Uruguay and Venezuela.

Examples of missions and regional projects for training and demonstration, which have been organized jointly by the organizations participating in the Expanded Programme, are as follows:

In June 1952 an economic development survey team of experts from the United Nations and FAO visited Pakistan to study development possibilities in the northern part of the Baluchistan States Union. The team made a comprehensive reconnaissance survey of the economic development of Kalat State. It made specific recommendations for Government action leading to development in hydroelectric power, irrigation, mineral resources, highways, agriculture, livestock and other fields. At the end of 1952 the recommendations of the team of experts were being considered by the Government.

Under agreements signed by the United Nations and the specialized agencies with the Colombian Government in November 1950, a comprehensive Mission took up residence in Colombia for a one-year period beginning in February 1951. Experts supplied by the United Nations included two taxation experts; one to advise on tax reform and budget accounting and on an over-all, long-range fiscal programme for the country, and one to advise on ways to improve the assessment and collection of taxes and the organization and administration of revenue offices. Another United Nations expert on the Mission advised on public utility operations and financial and rate problems. A fourth advised with respect to railway operation cost and rate problems, and a fifth with respect to harbour terminals. A sixth was an expert on price and production statistics who advised the Government on methods for the collection of such statistics and for preparing price indices, a cost-of-living index, import-export indices, and indices covering industrial and agricultural production. This expert also made recommendations for a complete reorganization of the statistical services of Colombia and a TAA/FAO/ILO Joint Mission, made up of seven statisticians, has been provided to the Government for the implementation of the proposed reforms.

A comprehensive Mission has been working in El Salvador since 1951, composed of a chief and assistant chief, an economist, and experts in the fields of port traffic and development; inland transportation; geological studies, including surveys of oil resources; fiscal policy; organization of the textile industry, including improvements in manual weaving methods; industrial economics; postal and telecommunications; marketing and commerce; electric power distribution, both hydraulic and thermal; town and country planning, including problems of low-cost housing construction and financing and social welfare administration. UNESCO provided an educational adviser and ILO an expert on labour problems. All have made specific recommendations for the improvement of the economy of El Salvador and the mission has also submitted a general report surveying the main economic problems of the country and making specific recommendations for agricultural and industrial improvements.

As a result of recommendations of a Joint United Nations/ILO Mission which went to Burma in the winter of 1950-51, ten experts and technicians had been appointed by the end of 1952 to advise on a variety of cottage industries in Burma. Trainees working under the guidance of the textile training expert had made substantial progress in new techniques of screen printing and stencil cutting. An earthenware pottery technician produced on a laboratory scale a high-lustre semi-porcelain which was considered to be superior to any similar product previously obtained in the Burma Pottery Works and was experimenting with tile making. An expert on the rehabilitation of Japanese war reparations machinery assisted in the organization of cleaning and repairing machinery and putting it into operation. Other phases of the programme in which experts were already at work or would shortly be appointed were power weaving, the production of hand-made paper and of enamelware, electroplating and anodizing industries and the manufacture of storage batteries and dry cells. In addition, an expert experienced in American and European marketing of silk textile products visited Burma for several months in the early part of 1952.

A regional seminar for the Western Pacific on up-to-date techniques in vital and health statistics was held in Tokyo from 4 August to 20 September 1952, under the auspices of the United Nations, WHO and the Government of Japan. The seminar, attended by more than 30 persons, emphasized the administrative and applied aspects of vital and health statistics and the exchange of technical knowledge among the participants from the different countries. The objective of the seminar was to improve national statistics services so that their data might fulfil both national and international needs.

A regional technical seminar on production and price statistics, sponsored by the United Nations, FAO and the Government of Lebanon, was held in Beirut from 1 to 14 July 1952. The seminar was arranged specifically for officials directly in charge of the compilation of production and price statistics in the Middle East. It took up the topics of statistics of industrial production, statistics of agricultural production and statistics of prices. It was attended by 22 representatives and several observers.

In Rio de Janeiro, under the auspices of the United Nations and UNESCO, special courses in public administration and a seminar on organization were held between November 1951 and March 1952. The special courses and the seminar were two inter-related aspects of a programme of training in public administration undertaken by the Brazilian Government, the Getulio Vargas Foundation and the United Nations, preliminary to the opening in Rio de Janeiro of a government-supported School of Public Administration. Through the special courses, which were held from 5 November 1951 to 20 March 1952, about 60 junior and intermediate public officials received full-time training in principles of public administration, organization and methods, personnel administration, budget formulation and execution, and comparative administration. Those attending included State and municipal, as well as national officials of Brazil, and 20 officials from other Latin American countries participated through scholarships offered by the Brazilian Government. The seminar, which the students of the special courses attended as observers, brought together 20 experts from Latin America, the United States and Europe for discussions. The seminar was held from 4 February to 5 March 1952.

(2) United Nations Programme of Technical Assistance¹⁶

With the exception of the origin of funds,¹⁷ no administrative distinction is made between the regular United Nations technical assistance programmes for economic development and for public administration and that part of the Expanded Programme which is administered by the United Nations. This is also true of those social welfare services provided under resolution 418(V) that pertain directly to economic development, for example, those in the fields of housing and town and country planning, migration and population.

During 1952 a total of 378 experts, representing 38 nationalities, were sent by the United Nations to 31 countries. For example, under a Special Agreement signed with the Bolivian Government on 1 October 1951, seven administrative assistants were recruited by the United Nations from among candidates from 22 countries and appointed as integral members of the Bolivian Civil Service for periods of two to five years. (With a change in Government a new agreement was signed on 2 May 1953 which differs from the original agreement principally in its emphasis on mining and metallurgy). Their work is in the fields of public finance; banking and monetary system; agriculture; and labour, social welfare and social security. Another administrative assistant in public administration was still to be appointed. A Special Representative of the Secretary-General was appointed on 1 February 1952 to advise on the selection of these candidates, to carry on liaison between the Secretary-General and the President of the Republic and Ministers on the development of the programme and to advise the Co-ordinator-General of the Programme appointed by the Bolivian Government.

Under the same Agreement, the United Nations agreed to supply Bolivia with the services of thirteen experts, and experts have been recruited to advise on housing, mineral production, mining cost analysis, smelting, road transport and hydroelectric power.

The Special Agreement also provided for 30 fellowships for Bolivian nationals in allied fields and for $150,000 worth of equipment from the United Nations.

In 1952 the United Nations undertook to provide to the Government of Ceylon a number of experts, known as "resident co-ordinating officers" who would take executive responsibility in individual industrial enterprises. They would be responsible to the department concerned. Expert assistance of this type has been provided in salt, sugar and rare mineral sands industries.

Among other experts furnished to various countries in 1952, one statistical expert, one specialist in the use of water resources and a number of experts in the metallurgical industry were sent to Israel. Three experts went to Yugoslavia to work on hydro-power plant construction problems, two to work on problems of base metal mining and one each on the production of road vehicles, locomotive machinery production, agricultural machinery production, mining and processing of asbestos and secondary methods of petroleum recovery. A coal consultant and a technical adviser on the construction of low-cost, earthquake-resistant housing were sent to Ecuador and an expert in public administration to Paraguay. Two shipbuilding experts went to India to assist in building up an Indian merchant marine and two criminologists advised on problems of correction and prison administration. A group of six experts were also sent to India to advise on the planning, construction and operation of a large-scale factory for the manufacture of fertilizer. The factory, when completed, will be one of the largest in the East. Iran received technical advice on: general economic and financial problems; electric power development; the development of underground water resources; the business and general accounting of industries under Iran's Seven Year Plan; textiles; railroad operation and maintenance; port development; telecommunications; and on a geological survey of the country. Two experts were appointed to advise Indonesia in matters relating to import and exchange controls; budgetary problems; and public debt and taxation.

¹⁶ For activities of the specialized agencies under the Expanded Programme and under their regular programmes, see under the respective agencies. For a summary of advisory social welfare activities under the Expanded Programme and under resolution 418(V), see pp. 509-10.

¹⁷ See p. 353.

During 1952, 729 fellowships and scholarships were awarded and taken up by nationals of some 64 countries. These awards were in the fields of: public administration; economic development; and social welfare and development.

During 1952 greater emphasis was given to assistance to training centres, demonstration projects and pilot plants within the under-developed areas. Such centres are initiated on the suggestion of the United Nations Regional Economic Commissions for Europe, for Asia and the Far East and for Latin America or of subsidiary bodies of the organizations participating in the Expanded Programme. These projects, however, have often been organized on a joint basis by the organizations since in most cases the basic problems of the under-developed countries involve simultaneous action in technical, administrative, financial, economic and social fields.

The United Nations Technical Assistance Administration, at the request of the Indian Government, recruited a team of four experts to provide training programmes in the techniques of statistical quality control to promote their application to Indian industry and to enable Indian specialists to continue these training programmes and extend them to other areas of the country. At each centre, TAA experts undertook extensive and concentrated training programmes of three to four weeks for 25 to 30 students from the industries of the area.

In response to requests from the Governments of India and Pakistan, an expert in inland water transport visited these countries and recommended a comprehensive programme for inland water transport development to both Governments.

A group of experts from Burma, Cambodia, China, India, Indonesia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand and Vietnam undertook a four-month tour of Europe, North America and Japan to study methods of railway operation and signalling.

A seminar on the production of power alcohol and its use as an automotive fuel was held in Lucknow, India, from 23 October to 6 November 1952. Organized by the United Nations and ECAFE, in collaboration with the Government of India, it was attended by specialists from India, Indonesia, Korea, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines and Vietnam. The subjects discussed include the operation of distilleries, alcohol production processes, engineering problems in power alcohol utilization and legislation adopted in various countries to encourage its use.

d. CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE EXPANDED PROGRAMME OF TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

As a result of the second technical assistance conference in February 1952, 65 governments pledged $18,795,355 for the year 1952. A summary of the contributions pledged to the Special Account for the second financial period appears on page 364.

2. Financing of Economic Development

a. CONSIDERATION BY THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AT ITS FOURTEENTH SESSION

(1) Annual Report of the International Bank For Reconstruction and Development

The Council, at its fourteenth session, had before it at its 605th and 606th plenary meetings on 16 June 1952 the annual report of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (E/2168), together with a supplement covering the period from 1 July 1951 to 31 March 1952 (E/2168/Add.1).

The President of the Bank, in a supplementary statement to the Council, stated that the Bank had steadily expanded its lending activities in providing resources for economic development. During the fiscal year 1950-51 it had made 21 loans totalling $297 million to eleven different countries and during the subsequent nine months a further fourteen loans amounting to $212 mil-

Name of Country	Local Currency	Amounts	US Dollar Equivalents
1. Afghanistan	Afghanis	119,084	7,001
2. Argentina	Pesos	1,000,000	200,000
3. Australia	Equivalent of US $		190,000
4. Austria	Schillings	500,000	19,231
5. Belgium	Belgian francs	13,500,000	270,000
6. Bolivia	Bolivianos	750,000	12,500
7. Brazil	Cruzeiros	8,500,000	459,459
8. Burma	Equivalent of US $		8,000
9. Cambodia	Equivalent of US $		5,000
10. Canada	Canadian $	750,000	750,000
11. Ceylon	Equivalent in £ sterling of US $		15,000
12. Chile	Pesos	5,400,000	174,194
13. China	United States dollars	10,000	10,000
14. Colombia	Equivalent of US $		100,000
15. Costa Rica	United States dollars	5,000	5,000
16. Cuba	United States dollars	50,000	50,000
17. Denmark	Danish kroners	750,000	108,585
18. Dominican Republic	United States dollars	6,000	6,000
19. Ecuador	Suces	94,500	6,300
20. Egypt	Egyptian pounds	28,500	81,850
21. El Salvador	United States dollars	5,000	5,000
22. Ethiopia	Equivalent of US $		20,000
23. Federal Republic of Germany	Marks	500,000	119,048
24. Finland	Finmarks	2,310,000	10,000
25. France	French francs	372,625,000	1,064,643
26. Greece	Equivalent of US $		20,295
27. Guatemala	United States dollars	7,500	7,500
28. Haiti	United States dollars	12,000	12,000
29. Honduras	United States dollars	8,000	8,000
30. Iceland	Kronas	40,714	2,500
31. India	Equivalent of US $		275,000
32. Indonesia	Rupiahs	500,000	43,860
33. Iran	Equivalent of US $		40,000
34. Iraq	Equivalent of US $		5,000
35. Ireland	Pounds sterling	5,000	14,002
36. Israel	Israel pounds	10,000	28,003
37. Italy	Equivalent of US $		93,000
38. Japan	Yen	28,800,000	80,000
39. Korea	United States dollars	5,000	5,000
40. Laos	Equivalent of US $		5,000
41. Lebanon	Lebanese pounds	15,000	6,846
42. Liberia	United States dollars	12,000	12,000
43. Luxembourg	Equivalent in Belgian francs of US $	2,500	2,500
44. Mexico	Pesos	300,000	34,682
45. Monaco	French francs	1,000,000	2,857
46. Netherlands	Netherlands guilders	1,520,000	400,000
47. New Zealand	New Zealand pounds	45,000	124,138
48. Nicaragua	Cordobas	25,000	5,000
49. Norway	Norwegian kroners	400,000	55,999
50. Pakistan	Pakistan rupees	500,000	151,103
51. Panama	Balboas	3,000	3,000
52. Paraguay	United States dollars	5,000	5,000
53. Philippines	Pesos	100,000	50,000
54. Saudi Arabia	United States dollars	15,000	15,000
55. Sweden	Swedish kroners	1,848,500	357,336
56. Switzerland	Swiss francs	947,672	218,862
57. Syria	Syrian pounds	25,000	11,410
58. Thailand	Bahts	425,000	34,000
59. Turkey	Equivalent of US $		182,000
60. United Kingdom	Pounds sterling	450,000	1,260,151
61. United States	United States dollars	11,400,000	11,400,000
62. Uruguay	Equivalent of US $		50,000
63. Venezuela	Equivalent of US $		20,000
64. Vietnam	Equivalent of US $		7,500
65. Yugoslavia	Dinars	15,000,000	50,000

 18,795,355

lion had been made to fourteen different countries. As of 31 March 1952 its total loans amounted to slightly more than $1,300 million advanced to 26 Member States for financing more than 250 large projects. The loans had been used to help finance the purchase of hundreds of tractors, trucks and locomotives, to construct roads, electric power plants and steel mills, to purchase ships and to carry out many other development projects. In most projects the Bank was providing a part of the necessary funds, the costs in local currencies being financed from domestic sources.

The President of the Bank anticipated that the pace of its activities would continue to grow. Thus far the Bank had been able to raise all the funds needed for its lending activities through the issue of bonds, most of which had been issued on the United States market. Some had, however, been issued also in the United Kingdom, Switzerland and Canada. The reluctance of many Member States, due to the prevailing conditions of financial stringency, to release a substantial portion of their 18 per cent local currency subscriptions for use in Bank lending had, however, been a seriously limiting factor in its operations. Nevertheless, some governments had been able to release parts of their national currency subscriptions and there had been some increase in the Bank's lending in non-dollar currencies. Moreover, the Canadian Government had announced in May 1952 that it would release the remaining portion of its 18 per cent subscription, amounting to $41 million, for the Bank's lending operations.

The President of the Bank pointed out that the Bank's technical assistance programme constituted its second principal field of endeavour and had mainly taken the form of general survey missions designed to help member countries to formulate long-term development programmes. In an increasing number of countries central planning and co-ordinating bodies which had been much needed were being established, while there was also a growing recognition of the importance of monetary stability for orderly economic development.

In the course of the debate in the Council several representatives, among others those of Belgium, Canada, Sweden and the United Kingdom, expressed their satisfaction at the fact that the majority of the Bank's loans had been made for basic development projects and that economic progress was being fostered by the Bank's technical assistance. The growing flexibility of the Bank's borrowing and lending techniques and the Bank's tendency to expand its loan operations in non-dollar currencies were also noted with approval by the representatives of Belgium, France, Iran, the United Kingdom and the United States. The hope was expressed that more countries would be able to release a part of their 18 per cent local currency subscriptions to the Bank in order to permit further increase in non-dollar loans. The representative of the United Kingdom stated that, in view of the position of its balance of payments, his Government could not do more at the present time, but would consider the possibility of taking a more active part in the Bank's operations in the future.

The representative of Pakistan, pointing to the difficulties experienced by the under-developed countries in paying the interest rates charged by the Bank, hoped that these countries might receive some relief in the form of lower interest rates. Other representatives, among them those of France and the United States, noted favourably that the Bank was seeking to encourage private initiative by making loans to local credit institutions, which would put them at the disposal of private borrowers engaged in small or medium-sized businesses. They also stressed the need for a close co-ordination between the Bank's technical assistance activities and those of the other specialized agencies. The representative of Iran felt that much remained to be done by the Bank in extending assistance to the under-developed countries. The Czechoslovakian representative expressed the view that the Bank had subordinated its activities to the foreign policy of the United States.

The Council unanimously adopted a formal proposal by the President (resolution 416 B (XIV)) taking note of the report of the Bank.

(2) Report of the Bank on the Establishment of an International Finance Corporation

The Council at its thirteenth session (368 (XIII)) had expressed interest in the possibility of establishing an International Finance Corporation to promote the financing of productive private enterprise in under-developed countries, through loans without government guarantee, through equity investments or through other adequate methods, and had requested the Bank to consider what contribution such a body could make and to report on the conclusions reached.

The Bank accordingly submitted its report (E/-2215) to the Council's fourteenth session. The Council at its 606th plenary meeting on 16 June 1952 decided to discuss the question jointly with that of methods of financing economic development (see below). It specifically considered the Bank's report at its 606th to 608th plenary meetings on 16 and 17 June and at its 615th plenary meeting on 23 June 1952.

The Bank pointed out, among other things, that its Executive Directors were not expressing any opinion on the merits of the proposal or any opinion on behalf of the governments they represented and that the proposal was still being studied.

The report envisaged that the corporation would be an affiliate of the Bank and would make the fullest possible use of its technical and administrative staff. The capital of the corporation, however, would be provided by the governments of its member States and not by the Bank. Membership in the corporation would be open to all members of the Bank. The report outlined the reasons for the inadequacy of private investment in under-developed countries, a situation which had led to the establishment of a number of national financial institutions of a public or semi-public character with the object of supplementing the flow of private capital through public assistance to or participation in private enterprise. It was pointed out, however, that existing national and international agencies "do not, in the aggregate, adequately meet the need for stimulating private international investment." The report referred to existing limitations on the ability of the Bank to contribute directly to the growth of private investment. It emphasized that the corporation should supplement, and not supplant, the activities of private investors and that the corporation would be empowered to make both unguaranteed loans and equity investments. It was assumed, however, that, as a matter of principle, the corporation would not accept responsibility for management or a controlling equity interest in an undertaking in which it invested. Nor would any special status or immunity attach to such undertakings by reason of the corporation's participation in them. Its policy would be to revolve its funds by selling the securities in its portfolio whenever it was possible to do so at a fair price.

In introducing the report, the President of the Bank expressed the view that an international finance corporation could stimulate the flow of private capital, and the technical and managerial skills that such capital brought with it, into private undertakings in the under-developed countries in three ways. First, it would enable private investors, domestic and foreign, to undertake projects now held back by lack of capital. Second, it would induce private investors to enter the development field by bringing to their attention investment opportunities of which they would otherwise be unaware. Third, it should be able to encourage investors to embark on projects from which they are deterred by lack of confidence, rather than lack of capital. He emphasized that the corporation should have sufficient flexibility to adapt its financing techniques to the needs of particular cases, and pointed out that the Bank's report was only a preliminary study.

A number of technical questions were raised by various representatives concerning the constitution of the board of the proposed corporation; the position of non-members of the Bank who might wish to participate in the corporation; the methods of revolving the funds of the corporation; the question of the currency transferability of the earnings of the corporation as well as of sales proceeds from holdings sold out of its portfolio; questions relating to the representation of the corporation in the management of undertakings financed by it; and the nature of convertibility of subscriptions to the corporation. The President of the Bank, replying to some of these questions in the course of the debate, assured the Council that the questions raised would be carefully studied by the Board of Directors of the Bank. He also stated that the technical questions asked by many representatives brought out the highly complex nature of the problem and it was obvious that some of the answers could be found only in the actual operation of the proposed corporation.

The representatives of France and the United Kingdom indicated that, because of balance-of-payments difficulties, no contributions could be made by their Governments to such a corporation at the present time. The latter, however, suggested that the corporation might start with a limited membership which could subsequently be extended as additional countries improved their balance-of-payments position and found it possible to contribute.

The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States were somewhat apprehensive that money subscribed for the corporation might represent funds diverted from other forms of financial assistance to under-developed countries, or might reduce the funds available to existing international institutions. The representative of Canada, however, thought that there was no reason to fear this and that, in fact, the corporation would appreciably supplement the financing of economic activity in under-developed countries. The Pakistani representative stressed that the corporation should be supplementary and not a substitute for assistance from other sources.

The representative of Chile¹⁸ urged that the establishment of a corporation should not be considered to the exclusion or detriment of other measures to promote public investment whether taken by existing institutions or through the creation of a special fund (see below). The creation of such a corporation was appropriate for countries at a certain stage of development but quite unfitted for financing basic development projects, he considered.

The representatives of Belgium, France, the the question of the proposed corporation should be studied in relation to other methods, such as fiscal incentives, and of promoting the flow of private capital to under-developed countries.

The representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom and the United States thought an international finance corporation would presumably be faced with the same problems as faced other enterprises or investors. Specifically, it might be subject to restrictions on the transferability of funds or be affected by the policies of governments of under-developed countries towards private investment enterprises with foreign participation. The representative of Iran thought that suitable measures should be taken, on the basis of normal trade agreements, in order to provide foreign capitalists with the necessary safeguards. He and the representative of the Philippines also considered that a finance corporation was only one way of providing the needed capital and that the highly developed countries could do a great deal by guaranteeing private investment and by taking legislative steps to prevent double taxation of profits. The representative of Belgium regretted that the Bank had not given greater consideration to the conditions which must be created to give investors confidence.

The Council had before it two draft resolutions concerning the creation of an international finance corporation; one by the Philippines (E/L.366) and the other jointly by Canada, Pakistan and the United States (E/L.367). The main difference between the two proposals was that the Philippine draft resolution would have the Council go on record as stating that it was aware that an important gap in the existing international machinery for economic development should be filled by the creation of a new instrumentality, thereby approving the idea of such a corporation in principle.

However, the majority felt that such action was premature. They thought that the document submitted by the Bank should be considered as a progress report, and that the Bank should be requested to continue and extend its studies and its discussions with a view to arriving at definite proposals. The representative of the Philippines therefore joined with the representatives of Canada, Pakistan and the United States in submitting a compromise draft resolution (E/L.368). The Council adopted this at its 615th plenary meeting on 23 June by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, as resolution 416C (XIV).

By this resolution, the Council commended the Bank for the useful contribution it had made to the study of the proposal for an international finance corporation. It requested the Bank, in continuing its further examination of this proposal, to take into account the comments made on the Bank's report during the fourteenth session of the Council and suggested that governments consult with national organizations and business groups having an interest in the problem of stimulating the participation of private domestic and foreign capital in the economic development of the under-developed countries. The Council requested the Bank to seek the views of the governments of its member States on the desirability of establishing such a corporation, invited other interested governments to transmit to the Bank any further comments and questions that they may have concerning this proposal, and requested the Bank to inform the Council, during 1953, of the results of its further examination of the proposal and the action taken concerning it.

(3) Methods of Financing Economic Development

The Council considered this question at its 606th to 610th, 613th to 615th and 626th and 627th plenary meetings on 16 to 18 and 20 to 23 June and 1 July 1952.

(a) SPECIAL FUND FOR GRANTS-IN-AID AND LOW-INTEREST, LONG-TERM LOANS

In resolution 368 (XIII) the Council, "without either accepting or rejecting the principle of the establishment of an international fund to assist in the financing of economic development of under-developed countries or of an international development authority", had requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the International Bank and other appropriate specialized agencies, to formulate practicable methods for dealing with the problem of granting assistance and to submit them to the session of the Council preceding the Assembly's seventh session. The ¹⁸ Under Article 69 of the Charter, the Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in the discussion of matters of particular concern to that Member. See p. 16.

General Assembly, in resolution 520 A (VI), had requested the Council to submit to its next session a detailed plan for establishing, as soon as circumstances permit, a special fund for grants-in-aid and low-interest, long-term loans to help under-developed countries, at their request, to accelerate their economic development and to finance basic non-self-liquidating development projects.

The Council, therefore, had before it a working paper (E/2234) by the Secretary-General. It also had before it, as a result of the Assembly's invitation, a note by the Secretary-General (E/2242 and Add.1) containing suggestions from various governments with respect to a detailed plan for a special fund.

In the introduction to the working paper, the Secretary-General pointed out that the paper consisted of a series of alternative approaches covering the elements of a detailed plan, none of which were to be regarded as a recommendation. The working paper dealt with the income aspects of the fund, its size and the manner of collecting contributions—including factors affecting the composition and character of funds which might be made available—and the operations and disbursements of the fund covering policies and principles as well as the methods by which the funds might be apportioned. Brief consideration was also given to questions of intergovernmental control of the fund, its administration and duration. The Council's attention was drawn to the fact that any policy which would limit financial assistance to non-self-liquidating projects might force governments to adopt fiscal measures to shift the use of their own financial resources away from what might sometimes be the most essential types of projects, and to employ them for less important purposes in order to acquire eligibility for assistance from the special fund. The working paper stated that the appropriate objective of financial assistance granted by the special fund would therefore appear to be one of meeting the general insufficiency of a country's financial resources for economic development, rather than that of financing particular types of development projects or of meeting a country's foreign exchange requirements. With respect to the administration of a special fund, the Secretary-General further expressed the view that "it would be a serious mistake to consider the setting up of still another international organization for the purpose of administering any special fund and that every possibility [should] be examined of merging the administration of the special fund either with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or with the United Nations. But whether the first or the second, the closest possible collaboration between these two existing international bodies would have to be provided for."

In addition to members of the Council, the representatives of Chile, India and Yugoslavia¹⁹ took part in the debate on this question which was considered specifically by the Council at its 608th to 610th and 613th to 615th plenary meetings from 17 to 23 June 1952.

The debate relating to the question of a special fund centred around a joint draft resolution sponsored by Cuba, Egypt, Iran, the Philippines, Burma, Chile and Yugoslavia (E/L.363 and Corr.1) which proposed the establishment of a committee to prepare a detailed plan for a special fund.

A number of representatives, including those of Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States, while supporting the proposal for establishing such a committee, drew attention to the preamble of General Assembly resolution 520 (VI), under which participation in the formulation of the detailed plan did not involve a financial commitment to contribute to the special fund, if and when such a fund were created. Some representatives stressed that because of financial difficulties and other commitments various countries would not be in a position to contribute to the fund at present. Some representatives, among them those of Argentina, Canada, China, France, Mexico, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, specifically reserved their positions regarding the possibility of contributing to the special fund, the advisability of drawing up a detailed plan now, or regarding the provision of development grants by an international agency. At the same time, these representatives wished to make it clear that their reservations related to the proposed machinery and not to the purpose or principle of external assistance to under-developed countries by grants, loans, technical assistance or by some other appropriate means.

The representative of Chile stated that the under-developed countries were prepared to agree that the question of creating an international fund should be the subject of a further preparatory study, providing they were assured that that would not involve a period of suspended animation followed by burial.

¹⁹Under Article 69 of the Charter, the Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in the discussion of matters of particular concern to that Member.

Several representatives, among them those of Iran and Pakistan, expressed hope that the members of the proposed special committee would be persons having direct experience in dealing with the type of problems likely to arise in the operation of a special fund.

During the course of the debate, the importance of particular aspects of economic development was emphasized. The representatives of Chile and India stated that in no case should rearmament or defence programmes postpone economic development; this development was an indispensable element of collective security.

The representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR stressed that the aim of technical assistance or financing programmes should be to promote the local industry of the countries concerned and should not be subject to any political, economic or military conditions. The United States and other countries, they charged, exploited under-developed countries by dictating prices of exports as well as imports; moreover, United States aid was linked closely to its military assistance. The United Nations, they held, should create conditions which would allow the under-developed countries to exploit their national resources for their own economic development.

The complementary nature of the proposed international finance corporation and the proposed special fund was stressed by the representatives of France and the United Kingdom. The representatives of Argentina and Chile stressed the relationship between loans and grants-in-aid, on the one hand, and the proceeds obtained by under-developed countries from the export of their primary products, on the other.

The need for giving due consideration to social development as well as to economic development was emphasized by the representatives of Belgium, France, Iran and the United Kingdom. The representatives of Belgium and France also felt that the whole question of economic development must be kept in perspective and that consideration must be given to the need for a harmonious balance between industrial and agricultural development and between the industrialization of under-developed countries and the economic stability of the more developed countries. The representative of Pakistan suggested that the operations of the special fund should emphasize agricultural development and, specifically, the reclamation of land.

It was pointed out by the representatives of Chile, India and Pakistan, among others, that private capital could not be expected to finance non-self-liquidating projects and that, therefore, a fund for grants-in-aid was particularly important. However, the representatives of Argentina and the United Kingdom, among others, questioned this assumption and suggested that grants-in-aid should be given only in cases when they were required to fill a gap between a country's essential development programme and the resources it could devote to investment. It was also suggested by the United Kingdom representative that grants-in-aid should be used only for capital cost and not to meet recurrent expenses. The representative of Mexico expressed some doubt about the desirability of reducing the vast problem of financing to a question of loans and grants-in-aid.

The sponsors of the joint draft resolution submitted a revised text (E/L.363/Rev.1 and Rev.1/Add.1) at the Council's 614th meeting on 20 June. This differed from the original text principally in two ways: (1) it replaced the references to the establishment of a special fund with a reference to the development of a detailed plan; and (2) asked the committee to take into consideration the Secretary-General's working paper in general rather than setting forth specific guides for the committee.

The revised draft resolution was adopted by the Council at its 615th meeting on 23 June by a roll-call vote of 15 to none, with 3 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Cuba, Egypt, France, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Abstaining: Czechoslovakia, Poland, USSR.

The resolution (416 A (XIV)) read:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered General Assembly resolution 520 (VI) on financing of economic development of under-developed countries, and, particularly, the General Assembly's request to the Council "to submit to the General Assembly at its seventh regular session a detailed plan for establishing, as soon as circumstances permit, a special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest, long-term loans to under-developed countries for the purpose of helping them, at their request, to accelerate their economic development and to finance non-self-liquidating projects which are basic to their economic development",

"Taking note with appreciation of the many alternative approaches to the establishment of the special fund set out in the Secretary-General's working paper (E/2234),

"Conscious of the fact that the preparation of the detailed plan which the General Assembly requested the Council to present to it at its seventh session requires a thorough study of the many and complex aspects of the plan, and that the single session of the Council in 1952 does not allow enough time for this purpose,

"Convinced, nevertheless, that positive steps are urgently required during the fourteenth session of the Council with respect to the development of the detailed plan referred to above if the Council, at its fifteenth session, is to be in a position to complete the task assigned to it by the General Assembly,

"Decides to establish a committee to prepare such a detailed plan and that the composition and the terms of reference of this committee shall be as follows:

"(a) The Committee shall be composed of not more than nine persons who shall serve in their personal capacities, who shall be chosen from various parts of the world so as to reflect adequately the geographical distribution of the States Members of the United Nations and who shall have the experience and high ability required by the importance and complexity of the task entrusted to them;

"(b) The Secretary-General shall appoint the members of the Committee;

"(c) The Committee shall be convened not later than December 1952 and shall complete its report to the Council not later than by 1 March 1953;

"(d) In addition to General Assembly resolution 520 (VI), the Committee shall be guided in its work by the following:

"(i) The relevant discussions in the General Assembly and the Council pertinent to the preparation of a detailed plan;

"(ii) The proposals, principles and alternatives set out in document E/2234, especially those mentioned in paragraphs 8, 14, 19, 22 to 25, 28, 29, 32, 42, 50 and 51."²⁰

(b) FISCAL INCENTIVES TO INCREASE THE INTERNATIONAL FLOW OF PRIVATE CAPITAL

The Council, during the debate on the whole question of methods of financing economic development and specifically at its 610th plenary meeting on 18 June and at its 626th and 627th plenary meetings on 1 July 1952, also considered proposals dealing with fiscal incentives to increase the international flow of private capital for the economic development of under-developed countries. The Council had before it two draft resolutions. The first, a draft resolution by Cuba (E/L.365 and Rev.1), which was subsequently withdrawn, asked the Council to declare the principle that income from foreign investments in under-developed countries should be taxed only in those countries and exempt from further taxation in all other countries, and to recommend the necessary unilateral legislative action to enforce this principle as well as its introduction in bilateral tax agreements between highly developed and under-developed countries. The second, a joint resolution by Cuba, Iran and the Philippines (E/L.383 and Corr.1), proposed as a compromise that the Council should request the Fiscal Commission to examine this proposal further, and submit the results of this study to the fifteenth session of the Council.

In introducing the joint draft resolution (E/L.383 and Corr.1), the representative of Cuba pointed out that the principle of suppressing double taxation in such a way that income was taxed only in the country in which it was earned had been supported by twenty Latin American countries, which were members of ECLA, as well as by many other countries, including capital-exporting countries.

The representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom and the United States considered that the Council had already recognized the principle that foreign capital and enterprise did not need to be attracted by more favourable tax treatment than that given to enterprises in capital-exporting countries. If they did give more favourable treatment, capital-exporting countries would, in effect, be penalizing capital invested in their own countries and in their overseas territories, and in addition would suffer a considerable loss of revenue. The representative of France also stated that experience in some European countries had shown that any regulations which provide exceptionally favourable taxation arrangements for private capital invested abroad are likely, in existing circumstances, to increase the danger of inflation in the capital-providing countries.

From the point of view of the under-developed countries themselves, the representative of France continued, it was questionable whether the granting of such treatment would not constitute a serious and heavy burden for their budgets, their public finances and the enterprises within their territories belonging to their own nationals. The Belgian representative supported this view. In addition, he considered that it was contrary to social justice to grant preferential treatment to capital invested abroad.

The representative of Canada stated that his country was liberal in regard to the taxation of income from capital invested abroad, and that such income benefitted from certain concessions. He considered that it was an appropriate time for an increase in the investment of private capital in the development of under-developed countries and suggested that double taxation might be avoided by bilateral agreements.

At the Council's 627th plenary meeting the sponsors of the joint draft resolution submitted a revised text incorporating several verbal amendments designed to clarify the original wording.

In explaining his abstention, the representative of Czechoslovakia stated that the joint draft resolution provided no safeguards against interference in the internal affairs of under-developed countries. It seemed designed exclusively to decrease taxation of foreign enterprises thus ensuring for them larger profits which were not retained in those countries and did not promote their economic development.

²⁰ These concerned composition, and questions of character of contributions; operations; policies and principles; and intergovernmental control.

The Council adopted the revised joint draft by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, as resolution 416 D (XIV). It read:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Recognizing:

"(a) The great importance for the acceleration of economic development of finding means of stimulating the flow of private investment capital from the highly developed to the under-developed countries,

"(b) That the present international flow of private investment capital is insufficient for development needs,

"(c) That in so far as international double taxation constitutes a deterrent to foreign investment this deterrent has been greatly reduced through international tax agreements and unilateral measures for the avoidance of such double taxation,

"(d) That the measures heretofore adopted for the avoidance of double taxation do not, however, appear to afford a positive incentive to foreign private investment,

"(e) That further examination is needed of: (i) the extent to which fiscal measures may afford an incentive to the flow of foreign investment from the highly developed to the under-developed countries; and (ii) the feasibility and desirability of such measures,

"1. Notes that in the field of international tax problems:

"(a) In accordance with Council resolution 378 B (XIII), the Secretary-General is continuing to study "the effects of taxation on foreign trade and investment"; and

"(b) In accordance with resolution 3 (IV) of 16 June 1951 of the Economic Commission for Latin America, a study is being undertaken jointly by the Headquarters Secretariat and the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America of "the influence that the fiscal systems of capital-exporting countries may have on the decisions of private investors in those countries to make foreign investments";

"2. Requests that, in the light of the results of the further studies being made by the Secretary-General and of the study which is being undertaken jointly by the Headquarters Secretariat and the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Latin America, the Fiscal Commission give further consideration to the problems of taxation in relation to foreign investments;

"3. Further requests the Fiscal Commission, in the consideration of such problems:

"(a) To examine further the proposal that, through bilateral agreements or unilateral measures, income from foreign investments in under-developed countries should be taxed only in these countries, with such income being exempted from taxes by countries other than those in which the foreign investments are made; and

"(b) To submit the results of such examination to the Council in a special section of its next report."

b. CONSIDERATION BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY AT ITS SEVENTH SESSION

The General Assembly considered the question of financing economic development during the Second Committee's general debate on economic development at its 195th to 209th meetings from 23 October to 12 November and specifically at its 213th to 224th meetings from 17 November to 1 December and at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952.

(1) Consideration by the Second Committee

(a) GENERAL DISCUSSION

The debate in the Committee centered in the place in economic development of private foreign investment, the importance of export trade to economic development and the establishment of a special fund for grants-in-aid and of an international finance corporation.

Representatives of under-developed countries stated, among other things, that they welcomed foreign capital which claimed no special privileges and sought investment outlets for purely industrial and economic reasons. In Asia and the Far East, it was pointed out, there was now a tendency, which should help attract capital, to liberalize laws and regulations. The fears that under-developed countries might impose restrictions on foreign private investment were groundless if industrialized countries did not seek privileged positions nor possession and exploitation of certain resources. In return for guarantees to protect foreign private investment, under-developed countries, they held, should be given guarantees to protect them against some of the harmful effects suffered in the past from private capital. The representatives of Egypt, Iran, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia suggested that a study should be made of the factors responsible for the reluctance of foreign capital to invest in under-developed countries.

The representative of France acknowledged that the interests of foreign investors sometimes clashed with national aspirations because private capital preferred investments in the extractive industries. But it would be unfortunate, he said, if such investments ceased. He agreed, however, that the countries concerned were rightly anxious to retain control of their basic resources and to use the profits from them for other development needs.

The representative of the United States pointed out that although the flow of private investment had been small in relation to need, direct investment from the United States had reached a record total in 1951 and in the eighteen months ending 30 June 1952 it had amounted to nearly $1 thousand million. The recent trend, moreover, had been for more diversified distribution of such investments. If the practices of American business had been such as to arouse suspicion abroad, they were not supported by the people nor the Government of the United States.

Among others, the representative of Sweden thought that capital-importing countries should try to create an atmosphere of confidence to encourage private capital investment and that protection against the risk of expropriation was necessary.

A number of representatives, among them those of the Philippines and Yugoslavia, stressed the importance of foreign private assistance to economic development. It was pointed out, among other things, that under-developed countries in supporting schemes for adequate financial assistance were not asking for charity but for an understanding of the dangers in a world half well fed and half hungry, half secure and half in ferment. While they agreed that every effort must be made by the under-developed countries themselves to expedite their own development, they could not do so without foreign assistance.

The representatives of the industrialized countries agreed that the investment of capital from abroad must not be regarded either as an act of charity or as a means of profiteering. Foreign private enterprise would play its part, the United States representative indicated, wherever countries were willing to encourage it; it was, however, no substitute for governmental investment or for the mobilization of local capital. Western Europe, the United States representative thought, must also take up again the role of a main source of development capital. That domestic capital must remain more important than external aid was also emphasized by, among others, the representatives of Mexico and New Zealand.

The representative of the USSR, supported by the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, stated that real assistance to under-developed countries was dependent upon the end of the armaments race and the establishment of trade relations on a basis of equality of rights and of respect for the interests of all parties and for the sovereignty of States.

Effective economic development must promote national industries. Countries providing assistance must not be granted special privileges for the use of territories or manpower. The representative of Poland emphasized that most of the capital for economic development should come from domestic resources; foreign capital and technical assistance should play only a limited role.

The representatives of Australia, Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, among others, pointed out that export trade was one of the main ways of financing development. Also, the terms of trade appeared likely to move in favour of countries producing raw materials.

Many of the representatives of the under-developed countries, however, thought that sharp drops in the prices of exports of raw materials had seriously upset the trade balance of the under-developed countries and that the need for more financial aid had been heightened by recent world trade and price trends. Among others, the representatives of Argentina, Chile, Cuba, Indonesia, Liberia and Pakistan considered that a reorientation of trade policies and tariffs in industrialized countries was needed in many cases if the efforts of under-developed countries to increase their production were not to be defeated. They pointed out, for example, that capital equipment could not be purchased from current export earnings. In this connexion, the representative of Argentina stressed the need for diversification of the economies of under-developed countries, which had hitherto been forced to rely on the production of raw materials. These representatives also expressed the view that it was necessary to establish minimum prices to protect the producer in under-developed countries, since raw material prices were too often fixed by importing rather than producing countries.

The representative of the USSR was of the opinion that the United States and other capitalist powers sought to retain under-developed countries as suppliers of raw materials and outlets for exports. The establishment of an international finance corporation would not alter the situation. The under-developed countries, he said, were debarred by trade agreements with the United States from the benefits of free and profitable trade with the USSR and the peoples' democracies. The USSR, he stated, was in a position to buy goods from the under-developed countries and to sell them the capital and other goods they needed. This view was also expressed by the rep-representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR.

The representative of Ecuador considered the USSR offer vague. The USSR, he stated, could have proved its sincerity if it had made a practical proposal to buy goods from the under-developed countries at prices higher than those paid by the United States or other industrialized countries, or to sell them capital goods at prices lower than those quoted by the capitalist countries. The representative of Haiti stated that if the picture were really as dark as it was painted by the USSR and the representatives supporting that point of view the under-developed countries would not be asking in increasing numbers for United Nations and United States technical assistance, nor would they be contributing to the United Nations Expanded Programme. He, as well as the representatives of other under-developed countries, stressed that such countries had no intention of accepting dictation from any other country.

The importance of establishing a special fund for grants-in-aid was stressed by the representatives of Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, India, Iran, Pakistan, the Philippines and Saudi Arabia, among others. In particular, some of these representatives stated, such a fund was needed for financing non-self-liquidating projects. The representative of Iran considered that a general international investment code should be drawn up to prevent the fund from being hampered by bureaucratic routine. The Swedish representative suggested that, while plans for a fund were being studied, action could be taken to liberalize rules for granting financial and technical aid so as to increase the supply of equipment for pilot plants and demonstration projects; in that way financial assistance could be co-ordinated with the technical assistance programmes.

The establishment of an international finance corporation was supported by the representatives of Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Egypt, Haiti, India, Iran, Pakistan and the Philippines, among others. The representative of Ecuador considered that this should be given priority and the representative of India stated that his Government would tentatively undertake now to subscribe to the corporation. The creation of the corporation, the representative of Iran considered, would help create a favourable climate for the investment of foreign capital. The corporation, the Brazilian representative stressed, should be supplementary to the proposed special fund; it should supplement, not replace, private capital, the representative of Egypt stated.

All sources of capital should be utilized, the representatives of India and Peru emphasized; international bodies, however, provided the most suitable source of financial aid since they obviated possible dangers from expropriation or monopolistic practices. The representatives of Brazil and Costa Rica, among others, again stressed that it was unrealistic to rely on private capital—either foreign or domestic—to finance public utilities.

(b) FINANCING OF ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The Committee had before it the following draft resolutions²¹ concerning the financing of economic development of under-developed countries:

A draft resolution submitted by Chile (A/C.2/L.154 and Corr.1) would have the Assembly:

(i) note with appreciation that the Secretary-General had prepared a working paper (E/2234) on the establishment of a special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest, long-term loans to under-developed countries;

(ii) note also that the Economic and Social Council had been unable to submit to the Assembly at its seventh session a detailed plan for such a fund and that, under its resolution 416 A (XIV), it had established a committee to complete a draft of a detailed plan not later than 1 March 1953;

(iii) request the Council to submit a detailed plan to the Assembly at its eighth session, keeping in mind that it was necessary to give special attention to the problem of international financing of economic and social development through international co-operation within the framework of the United Nations; and

(iv) request the Secretary-General to place before the committee appointed by the Council the records of the Assembly's discussion at its seventh session.

An amendment to this draft resolution was submitted by Brazil (A/C.2/L.157). Its purpose was:

(i) to stress the importance of Articles 55 and 56 of the Charter;²²

(ii) to recall that the Council had already recognized certain needs and to that end to establish a special fund; and

(iii) to provide a means of setting up the special fund within a year at the latest.

A draft resolution submitted by Brazil (A/C.2/L.159) would have the Assembly:

(i) approve the action taken by the Council in its resolution 416 C (XIV) concerning the question of the establishment of an international finance corporation; and

(ii) request the Secretary-General to place at the disposal of the International Bank for Reconstruction

²¹ For draft resolutions submitted in connexion with this agenda item relating to (1) primary commodities and (2) migration, see below.

²² See p. 15.

and Development the records of the discussion of this matter at the Assembly's seventh session.

A joint draft resolution submitted by Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia (A/C.2/L.161) would have the Assembly:

(i) request the Secretary-General to include in an early future world economic report an analysis of the international flow of private capital;

(ii) request the Council to give attention at an early session to the question of private foreign investment, particularly the adequacy of its flow into under-developed countries and the steps which might stimulate such flow; and

(iii) request the International Bank to expedite its examination and preparation of a final report on the establishment of an international finance corporation in conformity with Council resolution 416 C (XIV) so that the Council could be informed during 1953.

A draft resolution submitted by Cuba (A/C.2/L.163) would have the Assembly:

(i) request the Council to give effect during 1953 to the operative part of General Assembly resolution 520(VI) concerning a special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest, long-term loans to under-developed countries and to submit to the Assembly at its eighth session all the materials concerning the establishment of such a fund, as well as those concerning the establishment of the international finance corporation referred to in Council resolution 416 C (XIV); and

(ii) propose the inclusion in the agenda of the Assembly's eighth session of the items concerning the establishment of the special fund and of the international finance corporation with a view to ascertaining, inter alia, the desirability of convening a conference of the governments concerned regarding these matters.

The Committee, at its 213th meeting on 17 November, established a working group to draft a resolution embodying the substance of the four proposals and the amendment. The working group, consisting of the representatives of Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Egypt, India, the Netherlands, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom and the United States, met on 17 and 18 November. They unanimously recommended (A/C.2/L.170) a draft resolution consisting of three parts (A, B and C) dealing respectively with:

(i) the establishment of a special fund for grants-in-aid and long-term, low-interest loans for the economic development of under-developed countries; (ii) the establishment of an international finance corporation; and (iii) the stimulation of the international flow of private capital for the economic development of under-developed countries.

The original draft resolutions and the amendment which had been referred to the working group were then withdrawn by the sponsors.

The joint draft resolution was discussed at the Committee's 214th and 215th meetings on 19 and 20 November. An amendment by Guatemala (A/C.2/L.172) to add, at the end of the last part of the draft resolution, a sentence to state that the flow of private capital to under-developed countries should be stimulated "so that it may effectively contribute to the harmonious and adequate integration of their economies and to their economic and social development" was adopted at the Committee's 215th meeting by 44 votes to none, with 7 abstentions. Parts A and B of the draft resolution were each adopted by 46 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, and part C, as amended, by 45 votes to none, with 6 abstentions (A/2332(II)) (see below for text).

(c) QUESTION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT OF FAIR PRICES FOR PRIMARY COMMODITIES

The Second Committee also had before it at its 214th to 222nd meetings from 19 to 29 November a draft resolution by Argentina (A/C.2/L.162 and Corr. 1 and 2) on financing of economic development through the establishment of fair and equitable international prices for primary commodities and through the execution of national programmes of integrated economic development. The operative part of this draft resolution provided that the General Assembly should recommend to Member States that:

"4. ... (a) Whenever governments adopt measures affecting the prices of primary commodities entering international trade, they should duly consider the effect of such measures on the terms of trade of countries in the process of development, in order to ensure that the prices of primary commodities remain in an adequate, just and equitable relation to the prices of capital goods and other manufactured articles so as to permit the more satisfactory formation of domestic savings in the countries in the process of development and to facilitate the establishment of just wage levels for the working population of these countries with a view to reducing the existing disparity between their standards of living and those in the highly industrialized countries;

"(b) Their governments should refrain, unless unavoidably required by national security in times of war and without prejudice to technological research and progress, from encouraging the production of any synthetic or substitute materials that unnecessarily affect the international demand for natural primary commodities;

"(c) Their governments should intensify their efforts to reduce restrictions on imports of primary commodities."

It would also recommend that countries in the process of development should give effect to national programmes of integrated economic development conducive to the rational utilization of the proceeds of their primary activities, the absorption of their surplus active population and the improvement of their standards of living.

The draft resolution would also ask the Secretary-General:

(i) to include in the study being prepared in compliance with Council resolution 427 (XIV) an estimate of the financial repercussions which changes in the terms of trade in primary commodities and capital goods and other manufactured articles produce on the national income of countries in the process of development and an analysis of the distribution of that income; and (ii) to appoint a small group of experts of recognized authority to prepare, during 1953, a report on practical measures which might be adopted pursuant to the recommendations contained in the draft resolution, the report to be issued on the responsibility of the group of experts and to be transmitted to the members of the Economic and Social Council.

A number of representatives, among them those of Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, France, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States, while to some extent agreeing in principle with the draft resolution, opposed it on practical grounds as too general in scope and open to dangerous interpretations.

Among their objections were:

(1) that a system of international parity prices such as that implied in the draft could not be instituted unless foreign trade were controlled by the State; (2) that such a system would make the economic structure more rigid and would not be conducive to increased productivity; (3) that there were no objective criteria for determining an "adequate, just and equitable" relationship between prices of primary commodities and those of capital and other manufactured goods; and (4) that it would be better to deal with the problem through individual commodity agreements as the need arose.

They also objected to the recommendation that governments should not encourage the manufacture of synthetic or substitute materials. Such action, they held, would harm the interests of both under-developed and industrialized countries; it would also stand in the way of progress, from which all, in the long run, would benefit. The latter point was also made by the representatives of Cuba, Ecuador and Peru.

The draft resolution was supported, with certain minor changes, by Bolivia, Burma, Chile, Colombia, Indonesia and Mexico. At the 219th meeting of the Committee on 25 November the representative of Argentina presented a revised text (A/C.2/L.162/Rev.2) in which he had incorporated the substance of the following amendments:

A joint amendment by Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua which, in its revised form (A/C.2/L.169/Rev.1), in addition to minor changes in the preamble, proposed to add a paragraph recommending that governments conclude international agreements relating to primary commodities for the purpose of: (i) ensuring the stability of prices of these commodities in keeping with a reasonable, fair and equitable relationship between these prices and those of capital goods and other manufactured articles; and (ii) of safeguarding the continuity of the programmes of economic and social development of the countries which produce such raw materials. (The sponsors of this amendment had previously accepted two amendments by Indonesia (A/C.2/L.176): (i) to recommend that governments "co-operate in establishing multilateral arrangements" instead of "conclude international agreements" and (ii) to make clear that consumer as well as producer countries would benefit from the stability of prices of primary products.)

Amendments by Indonesia (A/C.2/L.175) which would: (i) recommend that governments study all factors causing fluctuation in terms of trade; (ii) indicate in more general terms the impact of price and terms of trade fluctuations on economic life; and (iii) indicate that price fluctuations might affect the implementation of economic development and terms of trade, but would not do so automatically.

An amendment by Chile (A/C.2/L.174) to add a paragraph concerning the transmittal of the records of the discussion on the item to the group of experts provided for in the draft resolution.

A Brazilian amendment (A/C.2/L.177) designed primarily to clarify the text and to make a distinction between "cyclical fluctuations in the prices of individual primary commodities and secular movements in their value as a group in terms of manufactured

The representatives of Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, Liberia, the USSR and Yugoslavia, among others, supported the draft resolution thus revised.

The representative of France considered that the revised draft resolution called on certain governments for a commitment too general in scope for it to be acceptable; he therefore submitted a series of amendments (A/C.2/L.179) aimed at reaching a compromise solution. These proposed, among other things, deletion of the reference to the establishment of relationships between the prices of primary commodities and of capital and other manufactured goods.

This amendment, as well as a Greek amendment (A/C.2/L.173) which would call on governments to consider concluding intergovernmental agreements for individual commodities, was withdrawn following the presentation of an eleven-power joint amendment (A/C.2/L.181 and Corr.1) drawn up by an unofficial working group. This group, set up on 26 November, was composed of Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Greece, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

The representative of Argentina stated that he had no objection to the first two amendments which were concerned with form. However, he considered the rest unacceptable since, in his opinion, they were inconsistent with the spirit of the resolution and in some instances introduced totally new ideas. The following amendments of the joint proposal were voted on at the 222nd meeting of the Committee on 29 November and rejected as follows:

(i) By 20 votes to 20, with 11 abstentions, an amendment to specify that continuing attention ought to be given to the effects of cyclical fluctuations rather than special attention to the correction of maladjustments resulting from cyclical fluctuations.

(ii) By a roll-call vote of 30 to 16, with 8 abstentions, an amendment to state that short-run fluctuations in the prices of primary commodities might (rather than did) affect terms of trade, and that any deterioration in the terms of trade might (rather than did) hamper the formation of domestic savings and the acquisition of external means of payment.

(iii) By a roll-call vote of 31 to 15, with 8 abstentions, to replace paragraph (f) (see below) with a provision to state that the implementation of integrated economic development programmes could be facilitated by encouraging savings in both highly industrialized countries and those in the process of development, and by making such savings available for economic development.

(iv) By a roll-call vote of 22 to 19, with 13 abstentions, a new paragraph to specify that one of the objectives of such programmes is to facilitate the establishment of just living wage levels for the working populations with a view to reducing disparities between their standards of living and those of highly industrialized countries.

(v) By a roll-call vote of 32 to 16, with 7 abstentions, an amendment to delete the paragraph concerning price relationships (paragraph I(a) as adopted, see below) and to recommend instead that, whenever governments contemplate measures designed to influence the prices of primary commodities entering international trade, they should duly consider how they might minimize any possible adverse effects which such measures might have on the terms of trade of countries in the process of development, particularly the ability of those countries to finance the purchasing of capital goods and other manufactured articles.

(vi) By a roll-call vote of 35 to 16, with 4 abstentions, a proposal to delete the paragraph referring to other aspects of undue fluctuations (paragraph 1(b) as adopted, see below).

(vii) By a roll-call vote of 29 to 16, with 10 abstentions, an amendment to replace the recommendations to governments concerning the establishment of multilateral international agreements (paragraph 2 as adopted, see below), with a paragraph recommending that, without prejudice to the principle specified in amendment (v) (see above), governments should give serious consideration to all other aspects of the problem of undue fluctuations in the terms of trade, including the possibility of co-operating in the establishment of multilateral agreements relating to individual primary commodities.

In view of the acceptance of the Indian amendment (A/C.2/L.182) (see below), the sponsors withdrew a proposal that the Secretary-General should study the impact of selected synthetic products on the demand for natural primary products entering international trade.

An amendment by Denmark, Norway and Sweden (A/C.2/L.180) which would refer the problems raised in the draft resolution to the Council instead of to a group of experts was rejected by 27 votes to 17, with 7 abstentions.

An amendment by Brazil (A/C.2/L.183) recommending that governments co-operate in establishing multilateral as well as bilateral arrangements for individual primary products and for groups of primary commodities and manufactured goods was adopted by roll call by 27 votes to 13, with 15 abstentions.

The representative of Argentina accepted an oral clarifying amendment by Indonesia and an Indian amendment (A/C.2/L.182) to delete the reference to the production of synthetic materials and call instead for a study of the subject. The Indian amendment was subsequently voted on and adopted by 36 votes to none, with 18 abstentions.

The draft resolution (A/C.2/L.162/Rev.2), as amended, was adopted at the Committee's 222nd meeting in paragraph-by-paragraph votes ranging from 29 to 14, with 11 abstentions, to 41 to none, with 13 abstentions.

The draft resolution as a whole was adopted (A/2332(III)) by a roll-call vote of 29 to 16, with 9 abstentions. (For text see below.)

(2) Consideration by the fifth Committee

The Fifth Committee, at its 372nd meeting held on 10 December 1952, considered the financial implications of the resolution proposed by the Second Committee concerning the financing of economic development through the establishment of fair and equitable international prices for primary commodities and through the execution of national programmes of integrated economic development (A/2332(III), see above). It had before it a statement of estimated financial implications prepared by the Secretary-General (A/C.5/532), together with a report from the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (A/2299).

According to the estimates submitted by the Secretary-General, $13,100 would be required in 1953 and $1,050 in 1954. However, he would only request a supplementary provision of $11,000 for 1953 to cover travel and subsistence of the experts to be appointed, since the printing costs could be absorbed within the amount already approved. Should it prove necessary to pay fees to some of the experts, the Secretary-General would try to absorb the additional cost within the proper section of the budget. In the event of there being no funds available within this section he would ask the Advisory Committee to consider transferring funds from another section.

The Advisory Committee, in its report, recommended a reduction of $1,750 on the ground that a period of six weeks, instead of eight weeks on which the Secretary-General's estimate had been based, constituted, in its opinion, the maximum time which "experts of recognized authority" would conveniently devote to work outside their normal duties.

Several representatives, among them those of Argentina and Brazil, questioned whether the work to be undertaken by the experts could be satisfactorily completed within the shorter period recommended, and therefore considered that the estimates as submitted by the Secretary-General should be maintained. Other representatives, among them the representative of the United States, were of the opinion that, given adequate preparatory work on the part of the Secretariat, the experts should have no serious difficulty in completing their assignment within a six-week period. An assurance was given on behalf of the Secretary-General that, should the six-week period prove inadequate, every effort would be made to find such additional funds as might be required within the total for section 3, failing which the Advisory Committee could, no doubt, be relied upon to give sympathetic consideration to any necessary transfer of funds from other sections of the budget.

Subject to this understanding, the Fifth Committee, on the proposal of the Chairman, decided by 14 votes to 9, with 15 abstentions, to inform the Assembly that adoption of draft resolution III proposed by the Second Committee would involve a supplementary appropriation of $9,250 (A/2338).

(3) Resolutions Adopted by the General Assembly

The General Assembly considered the report of its Second Committee (A/2332) at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952. It also had before it the report of the Fifth Committee on the financial implications of resolution A/2332 (III). Sections A and B of the draft resolution on financing, as proposed by the Second Committee (A/2332 (II)), were each adopted by 52 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, and Section C by 50 votes to none, with 6 abstentions (resolution 622 (VII)). The representative of the USSR explained his abstention on the basis of views he had expressed in the Committee. The representatives of Colombia and Saudi Arabia stated that they would vote for the resolutions.

Following the adoption by 34 votes to 3, with 16 abstentions, of the paragraph referring to a study of synthetic substances, the draft resolution concerning financing through the establishment of price parities and national programmes of integrated economic development (A/2332 (III)) was adopted, as a whole, by a roll-call vote of 35 to 15, with 9 abstentions (resolution 623 (VII)) as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Liberia, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Byelorussian SSR, China, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Haiti, Poland, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

The representatives of Argentina, France, Indonesia and the United Kingdom, in explaining their votes, expressed views similar to those they had already put forward in the Committee. The representative of Saudi Arabia considered that the resolution would result in positive benefits and therefore voted in its favour. The USSR representative stated that, while he supported those proposals designed to promote the development of a national and independent economy and of civilian industry in the under-developed countries, he had abstained on the resolution as a whole.

The resolution adopted by the Assembly read:

"The General Assembly,

"Taking into account the relevant passage of General Assembly resolutions 307(IV), 403(V), 404(V), 521(VI) and 523(VI), of Economic and Social Council resolutions 341(XII), 416 F(XIV) and 427(XIV), as well as the suggestions of the group of experts appointed in pursuance of Council resolution 290(XI),

"Recognizing that the problem of financing the economic development of countries in the process of development is fundamental to the maintenance of the peace of mankind, and that, therefore, high priority should be given to the consideration of its practical solution in international economic relations,

"Considering:

"(a) That the urgent and satisfactory solution of this problem requires the full utilization of all sources of financing, among which the ability to obtain adequate and stable proceeds from exports is one of the most important for all under-developed countries,

"(b) That, in formulating measures for financing economic development, consideration should be given to the influence on their economic development of the terms of trade of the countries supplying primary commodities,

"(c) That, without prejudice to the international and national measures already recommended for financing economic development, special attention should be given to the correction of maladjustments resulting from cyclical fluctuations in the prices of individual primary commodities and from secular movements in their value as a group in terms of manufactured goods,

"(d) That the economic prosperity of countries in the process of development is especially vulnerable to wide short-term fluctuations in the prices of primary commodities which affect their terms of trade, and that any deterioration in the terms of trade affects the economic development and monetary equilibrium of these countries and so hampers not only the acquisition of the necessary amounts of external means of payment but also the formation of sufficient domestic savings,

"(e) That the implementation of plans of integrated economic development contributes to the mitigation of the consequences of such fluctuations or of any deterioration in the terms of trade,

"(f) That in order to make such programmes possible it is necessary both for the highly industrialized nations and for the nations in the process of development to encourage the formation of appropriate domestic savings in the latter,

"1. Recommends to Member States that:

"(a) Whenever governments adopt measures affecting the prices of primary commodities entering international trade, they should duly consider the effect of such measures on the terms of trade of countries in the process of development, in order to ensure that the prices of primary commodities are kept in an adequate, just and equitable relation to the prices of capital goods and other manufactured articles so as to permit the more satisfactory formation of domestic savings in the countries in the process of development and to facilitate the establishment of fair wage levels for the working populations of these countries with a view to reducing the existing disparity between their standards of living and those in the highly industrialized countries;

"(b) Without prejudice to the recommendation contained in sub-paragraph (a) above, their governments should give serious consideration to all other aspects of the problem of undue fluctuations in the terms of trade;

"(c) Their governments should intensify their efforts to reduce restrictions on imports of primary commodities;

"2. Recommends that governments co-operate in establishing multilateral as well as bilateral international agreements or arrangements relating to individual primary commodities as well as to groups of primary commodities and manufactured goods, for the purpose of:

"(a) Ensuring the stability of the prices of the said commodities in keeping with an adequate, just and equitable relationship between these prices and those of capital goods and other manufactured articles;

"(b) Safeguarding the continuity of the economic and social progress of all countries, those producing as well as those consuming raw materials;

"3. Recommends that the countries in the process of development should adopt and give effect to national programmes of integrated economic development conducive to the rational utilization of the proceeds of their primary activities, the absorption of their surplus active population and the improvement of their standards of living;

"4. Requests the Secretary-General to include in the study being prepared in compliance with Economic and Social Council resolution 427 (XIV) an estimate of the financial repercussions which changes in the terms of trade between primary commodities and capital goods and other manufactured articles produce on the national incomes of countries in the process of development, and an analysis of the distribution of those incomes;

"5. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for submission to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly, a study on the impact of important synthetic products on the demand for natural primary products entering international trade;

"6. Further requests the Secretary-General to appoint a small group of experts of recognized authority on the subject to prepare, during 1953, a report on such practical measures as it may be advisable to adopt pursuant to the recommendations contained in sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of paragraph 1, and in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the present resolution, the report to be issued on the responsibility of the group of experts and to be transmitted to the General Assembly together with the Economic and Social Council's views thereon;

"7. Further requests the Secretary-General to place at the disposal of the group of experts mentioned in the preceding paragraph the records of the discussions on this item during the seventh session of the General Assembly."

3. Land Reform

The question of land reform was considered by the General Assembly during the Second Committee's general debate on economic development at its 195th to 209th meetings from 23 October to 12 November and specifically at the Committee's 224th to 230th meetings from 1 to 5 December, and at the Assembly's 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952.

The Committee had before it a progress report (A/2194) by the Secretary-General describing the work undertaken in connexion with land reform by the Secretariat and by ILO, FAO and UNESCO in accordance with Assembly resolutions 401(V) and 524(VI)²³ and Council resolution 370(XIII).²⁴ He reported that, among other things, a study on the role of co-operatives in agriculture and one on agricultural fiscal problems had been initiated. For the information of members of the Assembly, the Secretary-General also transmitted (A/2194/Add.1) the text of the land reform questionnaire which had been drawn up by the Secretariat in co-operation with the specialized agencies concerned, and sent to governments for reply by 1 June 1953. The questionnaire was designed to obtain information on progress in land reforms, including legislation and other measures, and on obstacles to the adoption of such measures, and any suggestions that governments might have concerning international action to promote land reforms.

²³ See Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 461-62 and 1951, pp. 410-11.

²⁴ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 407-409.

During the debate, many representatives outlined the steps their governments had taken to bring about land reforms.

The majority agreed that land reform was one of the most important links in the chain of economic development and of primary importance in the achievement of a better world. It was also generally agreed that land reform was one means of increasing food production. In this connexion, the representative of FAO pointed out that if land reform were ill-considered or badly co-ordinated with technical assistance, it could result in decreased production. Moreover, the question needed to be linked with the provision of rural credit. A credit system aimed at helping small cultivators improve their farms would bring about a substantial improvement in rural economic and social conditions, as would the establishment of co-operatives for marketing agricultural produce.

Among others, the representatives of France and the United States urged that full use be made of technical assistance offered by the United Nations. The representative of France also stated that, in his opinion, the International Bank should find means of placing its technical and financial assistance at the disposal of governments for the purpose of encouraging investment in agricultural development.

The representatives of Egypt, Guatemala, Iran, Pakistan, Mexico and Syria emphasized that the existing agrarian systems in many countries were the chief cause of low productivity and consequent low standards of living.

Among others, the representatives of Chile, Cuba, Iran, Peru, the Philippines, Syria and Yugoslavia stressed that land reform was considered by the under-developed countries as an integral part of their economic development. Such reform should, they held, be so carried out as to ensure that land was employed fairly from the social point of view and must not be limited to the redistribution of land. The solution varied from country to country, but in most instances special financial resources were urgently needed. Land distribution, unless accompanied by financial and technical help, they also agreed, might even be detrimental to the level of production.

The representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR held that, despite allegations that radical changes had taken place in the last two years, the problem remained the same. There was a general scarcity of statistical data on agrarian relations in the under-developed countries, but the figures available amply demonstrated the anachronistic conditions of land tenure and the continued harmful influence of foreign imperialists who used those conditions for their own aggrandizement and profit. Highest priority should be given to land reform, and if any real progress was to be achieved countries must implement immediately Assembly resolution 524(VI) on the subject. In instituting measures of land reform it was, moreover, necessary to bear in mind the needs of landless peasants and small holders who were struggling to regain land seized by foreign monopolies and who were demanding the institution of credit systems, the provision of fertilizers and equipment and the establishment of co-operatives to enable them to market their goods.

The Committee had before it two proposals:

(1) a draft resolution on land reform submitted by Pakistan (A/C.2/L.158/Rev.1) and (2) a draft resolution on land reform and development of arid land and water resources submitted jointly by Egypt, India and Indonesia (A/C.2/L.160). However, at the 225th meeting on 2 December, Egypt, India and Indonesia submitted a revision of their joint proposal. This revision (A./C.2/L.160/Rev.1) modified the original proposal in such a manner as to confine it to land reform. It also deleted the last operative paragraph which had requested the Council to submit a progress report to each session of the Assembly.

The majority of the Committee supported the draft resolution on land reform submitted by Pakistan (A/C.2/L.158/Rev.1), the operative part of which recommended that governments include in their replies to the questionnaire information on financial implications of programmes, their capacity to finance them and the extent of financial assistance needed from outside. It also provided in the last operative paragraph that the committee of experts to be set up under Council resolution 416 A (XIV)²⁵ consider financing of land reform as one of the important fields of activity for the proposed special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest loans.

The representative of the United States did not think that detailed instructions should be given in connexion with the special fund at this stage. The representative of Australia suggested that the paragraph be amended to make it clear that the committee of experts might study the feasibility of making land reform one of the fields of activity covered by the special fund. The representative of Pakistan agreed to this. He also accepted an amendment by China (A/C.2/L.186) and an oral amendment by Saudi Arabia, both of which were intended to clarify the resolution and bring it into closer conformity with the relevant Assembly resolutions.

²⁵ See pp.369-70.

The representatives of Poland and the USSR criticized the Pakistan draft resolution on the grounds that it failed to place sufficient emphasis on the urgent need for land reform and stressed only the financial implications of the problem. They, as well as the representatives of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia and the Ukrainian SSR, considered that the draft implied that land reform could not be carried out without foreign financial assistance. The adoption of such a thesis, they held, might delay the current practical solution of the problem, especially in view of the current policies of the International Bank and the general influence of foreign capital in under-developed countries. However, they stated that they would not vote against the draft resolution because it did recognize the necessity of land reform.

Following a separate vote on the last operative paragraph, which was adopted, as amended, by 42 votes to none, with 9 abstentions, the draft resolution, as a whole, was adopted by the Committee at its 230th meeting on 5 December by 47 votes to none, with 5 abstentions (A/2332 (V) A, see below for text).

The joint proposal (A/C.2/L.160/Rev.1) on land reform was also supported by the majority of the Committee. The representative of Poland stated that he would support it on the grounds that it contained a just appraisal of the current state of agricultural production in under-developed countries and represented an attempt to solve the problem of enlarging the area under cultivation. The sponsors of the draft resolution accepted a United States amendment (A/C.2/L.187) to add a paragraph on education and publicity. The joint draft resolution, as amended, was adopted unanimously (A/2332 (V) B) at the 230th meeting (see below for text).

At its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952, the General Assembly adopted both draft resolutions proposed by the Second Committee. The draft originally proposed by Pakistan was adopted by 53 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, as resolution 625 A (VII). The second draft resolution, originally proposed jointly by Egypt, India and Indonesia, was adopted unanimously (625 B (VII)), as a whole, following the adoption by 53 votes to 5 of sub-paragraph (a) of the third paragraph of the preamble. The Czechoslovak representative, explaining his vote in favour of the second resolution, as a whole, criticized this paragraph as erroneously implying that population growth was the cause of the current unsatisfactory situation.

The two resolutions read:

"The General Assembly,

"Taking note of the Secretary-General's progress report on land reform prepared pursuant to General Assembly resolution 524(VI) of 12 January 1952,

"Noting with satisfaction the activities of the regional economic commissions and of the specialized agencies in promoting land reform and in preparing studies and analyses of the various aspects of land reform,

"Recalling the belief expressed in General Assembly resolution 524(VI) that rapid improvements in existing agrarian structures and land tenure systems in many under-developed countries require large-scale financial outlays,

"Recalling also that General Assembly resolution 524 (VI) urged the governments of Member States to consider making funds available for projects of agrarian reform and invited the institutions providing international loans to give sympathetic consideration to loan applications from under-developed countries for development projects which are designed to implement their programmes of agrarian reform including projects designed to bring new lands under agricultural cultivation, and invited these institutions, consistent with their maintenance as self-supporting entities, to consider making any such loans on terms of interest and amortization designed to place the smallest feasible burden on the borrowing countries,

"Recalling the terms of reference of a committee of experts to be set up under Economic and Social Council resolution 416 A (XIV) of 23 June 1952 to prepare a detailed plan for establishing a special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest, long-term loans to under-developed countries for the purpose of helping them, at their request, to accelerate their economic development and to finance non-self-liquidating projects which are basic to their economic development,

"1. Recommends that governments include in their replies to the Secretary-General's questionnaire on land reform relevant information on the financial implications of their programmes of agrarian reform and their development projects designed to implement such programmes, on their capacity to finance such programmes internally and on the extent of financial assistance needed from outside, so as to enable the Secretary-General to consolidate, analyse and incorporate the information so received in his report to the Economic and Social Council to be submitted under paragraph 8 of Economic and Social Council resolution 370(XIII) of 7 September 1951;

"2. Requests the committee of experts to be set up under Economic and Social Council resolution 416 A (XIV) to consider the feasibility of financing programmes of agrarian reform and development projects designed to implement programmes of agrarian reform as one of the important fields of activity for the proposed special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest, long-term loans."

B

"The General Assembly,

"Recalling its resolutions 401(V) and 524(VI) of 20 November 1950 and 12 January 1952 respectively and Economic and Social Council resolution 370 (XIII) of 7 September 1951 on land reform in under-developed countries,

"Taking note of the resolutions on land reform adopted by the Sixth Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

"Considering:

"(a) That world food resources have increased less rapidly than world population so that in the world as a whole food consumption per capita is now less than it was fifteen years ago,

"(b) That the lack of land and the defective agrarian structure in several geographical areas of the world are among the factors preventing a rapid increase in agricultural production in those areas and that these factors consequently render more difficult attempts to overcome food crises and to raise the general standard of living, especially in the under-developed countries,

"Convinced:

"(a) That the expediting of the process of bringing new lands under cultivation and the rapid improvement of the agrarian structure and present land tenure systems raise serious technical or financial problems in several geographical areas,

"(b) That the isolated efforts of States Members of the United Nations to increase agricultural productivity and to bring new lands under cultivation would be more effective if they co-operated earnestly on a regional plane and if they took full advantage of available technical and financial assistance on the international plane,

"(c) That the governments of Member States and the specialized agencies should, in accordance with the recommendations contained in Economic and Social Council resolution 451 A (XIV) of 28 July 1952, make greater efforts, on the national and international plane, to grant high priority to the production and distribution of food in order to ensure a more rapid increase in the availability thereof and, by so doing, to reduce the effects of food crises by combating other natural and technical factors which lead to smaller harvests,

"1. Recommends that the governments of Member States take every possible step, on the national plane and, if appropriate, on a regional plane, to expedite the carrying out of their land reform programmes and, where appropriate, to bring new lands under cultivation and to increase their agricultural productivity, especially of foodstuffs, by following the recommendations and resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and by the Economic and Social Council on those questions;

"2. Invites the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies, in carrying out their studies and activities on the questions of land reform to place particular emphasis on:

"(a) The speeding up, at the request of the interested governments and according to the circumstances prevailing in different countries or regions, of such practical measures to encourage the promotion and the carrying out of their land reform programmes as:

"The convening of international and regional conferences on the development of natural resources, especially land resources, and on land administration,

"The organization of seminars on problems connected with the welfare and economic and social progress of rural populations in a country or in countries of a geographical region, and

"The setting up of regional centres for training experts in the several specialized fields relating to the improvement of agricultural structures;

"(b) Practical measures of technical assistance so as to increase agricultural output, especially of foodstuffs, to prevent the loss of, or decrease in, harvests of those foodstuffs and to improve production methods, increase sales and encourage equitable distribution;

"3. Reiterates paragraph 5 of General Assembly resolution 524(VI) which "Urges the governments of Member States, in working out their fiscal policies, to give active consideration to making funds available for projects of agrarian reform and invites the institutions providing international loans to give sympathetic consideration to loan applications from under-developed countries for development projects which are designed to implement their programmes of agrarian reform including projects designed to bring new lands under agricultural cultivation, and invites these institutions, consistent with their maintenance as self-supporting entities, to consider making any such loans on terms of interest and amortization designed to place the smallest feasible burden on the borrowing countries";

"4. Requests the Secretary-General to assist the governments of Member States, at their request, to give to the actions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council with regard to the question of land reform the widest possible publicity among farm organizations and other interested persons or groups, in order to ensure that the policy recommendations of the United Nations shall be widely known and understood."

4. International Co-operation on Water Control and Utilization and the Development of Arid Land

The Economic and Social Council at its fourteenth session considered, jointly, the questions of international co-operation on water control and utilization and the development of arid land at its 581st, 582nd and 584th to 586th meetings from 27 May to 2 June 1952. It had before it two reports by the Secretary-General on these subjects.

The former (E/2205 and Corr.1 and Add.1), prepared at the request of the Council at its twelfth session (346(XII)),²⁶ outlined briefly the historical development of international organizations concerned with the expanding exploitation and safeguarding of water resources. It also contained summary accounts of the principal interests and activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in connexion with water control and utilization. The report concluded that, although a substantial volume of work was being undertaken on an international basis, there were not only deficiencies in the extent to which the main aspects of the subject were covered and in the amount of work devoted to particular regional problems, but there was also no continuing machinery for overseeing the entire field and for maintaining contact among the diverse and numerous organizations concerned.

²⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 415.

The latter report (E/2191 and Add.1), prepared at the Assembly's request at its fifth session (402(V)),²⁷ described the principal activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in relation to the development of arid land, the technical and financial measures being employed for this purpose, and the co-ordination of these activities.

The Council also received for its information the Secretary-General's second report (E/2207) on specific plans and action taken regarding conservation and utilization of non-agricultural resources. The report dealt with the progress made in the study and inventory of iron ore resources and informed the Council of the plans for the study of coal and lignite resources in 1952.

The discussion in the Council emphasized the importance of effective control and utilization of water resources and the development of arid land to the economic development of various parts of the world, as well as to the increase in food production. The Council had before it a joint draft resolution by the Philippines and the United States (E/L.337) which would place upon the Secretary-General the responsibility for assuming leadership in bringing together the many scattered international interests, with a view to ensuring the multi-purpose development of water resources and for co-ordinating the activities of the various agencies responsible. The Secretary-General would also be requested, among other things, to promote the development of basic resources and the international exchange of information and experience and to report, in this connexion, on the activities relating to water resources of international and national organizations. On the basis of the proposal, an additional expenditure of $15,600 was subsequently envisaged (E/L.348), but it was indicated that this could probably be absorbed in the budget of the department concerned, if the work involved were postponed until the work currently in progress on other resources had been completed.

In introducing the joint draft resolution, the representative of the United States stressed the importance of ensuring the best possible use of water in both arid zones and areas of heavy rainfall.

The United Nations, he considered, should elaborate a policy for the development of water resources based on the concept of multi-purpose use, the objective being the realization of the greatest possible total of net benefits from the resources available, rivers, lakes, or underground water. The role of the United Nations should be to provide leadership, scientific and economic information, co-ordination and technical assistance. However, it was not the responsibility of the United Nations to send experts to every country to make comprehensive studies on the development of water resources. That, he considered, was the responsibility of governments themselves.

The United Kingdom representative stressed the need for recognizing the long-term aspects of development, and the competence of national authorities. There were, he felt, areas where governments might feel it necessary to introduce rather less ambitious projects for dealing with single aspects of water development. He considered that the most useful function that an international agency could provide at this time was that of information and co-ordination. This view was also held by the representatives of Canada and Argentina. The representatives of the United Kingdom and Canada considered it undesirable to set up at the present time a single organization to be continuously concerned with the problems of multi-purpose use of water resources on a world-wide scale; they thought that the problem could best be handled by governments with the assistance of already existing organizations.

The representative of the USSR said that States should carry out their own programmes and no conditions should be attached to the aid received from international organizations. He and the representative of Czechoslovakia considered that future reports to the Council on water resources should be broadened so as to give adequate attention to national efforts. The problem of arid land, these representatives also emphasized, was one of general economic development of any country, not just under-developed countries. It was essential to solve the problem bearing in mind the economic needs of the respective countries, the development of their economies, the increase in their production and the raising of living standards. The representative of Czechoslovakia considered the work undertaken thus far by international agencies unsatisfactory, since it was based on the question of productiveness of capital investment.

²⁷ See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 462.

The representatives of FAO and UNESCO considered that the question of leadership in a particular project should in each case depend on the primary purpose in view. They also suggested that, in determining the most effective method of co-operation between international agencies in a given project, the Secretariat should take into account the views of the agencies concerned before submitting concrete proposals to the Council.

The representative of Canada, while in favour of the resolution, thought that it went rather far with regard both to the Secretary-General's power in relation to the specialized agencies and to the eventual financial implications of the proposal. He therefore submitted jointly with the representative of Belgium several amendments (E/L.341) designed to have a more limiting effect; the amendments proposed that the Secretary-General be asked to promote the co-ordination of existing activities in water control and arid land development rather than to provide leadership in the promotion of joint plans for international activity.

The representative of France considered the draft resolution incomplete and proposed (E/L.343) that it contain more specific reference to the need for continued attention to the development of arid land.

The representative of Pakistan stated that so far as international rivers were concerned, inter-governmental agreements were essential to ensure an equitable distribution of water between riparian countries. It would be useful, he proposed, if the Secretary-General could draw up a report on the question and if the Council could be asked to lay down the fundamental principles of international co-operation for the regulation, development and apportionment of water resources between riparian countries. However, he subsequently withdrew an amendment (E/L.345/Rev.1) to this effect, as well as one designed to ensure that the Secretary-General would prepare plans as a form of technical assistance for the development of water resources, if requested to do so. An amendment (E/L.350) by Canada to the latter amendment by Pakistan, which would have provided that this assistance should be rendered within the framework of existing programmes, was also withdrawn.

At its 586th plenary meeting on 2 June the representatives of Belgium, Canada, France, the Philippines and the United States submitted a compromise draft resolution (E/L.337/Rev. 1 and Rev.1/Corr.1) which was adopted by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, following the rejection by 4 votes to 4, with 10 abstentions, of a drafting change proposed orally by Pakistan.

Resolution 417 (XIV) read as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having noted the reports by the Secretary-General entitled "International Co-operation on Water Control and Utilization", and "Development of Arid Land",

"Considering that effective use and control of water resources is important to economic development,

"Considering the great importance of effective use of available water resources in solving the problems presented by the development of the arid lands,

"Considering that optimum use of water usually requires that irrigation be combined with power development, flood control, navigation, municipal, industrial and other beneficial uses,

"Considering that range and watershed management, pollution control, development of fisheries, improved agricultural practices, and industrial development all go hand in hand with the development of water resources,

"Considering the possibilities of co-operation open to Member States with respect to the regulation and development of contiguous water resources,

"Considering that international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, have been contributing and can increasingly contribute to the effective use and control of water resources by bringing to national and local projects and activities the accumulated pertinent knowledge and experience available on a world-wide basis,

"Considering that the activities of international organizations directed towards various aspects of water resources are closely interrelated and should be so planned that water resource development shall make its maximum contribution to the over-all economic development of each country, and

"Considering that the United Nations itself should assume responsibility for promoting co-operation among the several international organizations concerned with water resource development in order that the most effective results might be obtained from the financial and personnel resources available to them, and for identifying and programming to meet deficiencies in international activities in this field so that adequate attention might be given to important aspects and geographic areas which are being neglected,

"1. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned:

"(a) To assume responsibility for the promotion and co-ordination of international activities concerning water resource development and co-operative action among national authorities and international organizations in order to secure the maximum contribution to economic development through the effective development, control and use of water resources;

"(b) To promote the development of basic water resource data in furtherance of these objectives and in implementing Council resolution 345 (XII), and to promote international exchange of information and experience; and, in this connexion, to report on activities of international organizations and national authorities relating to water resources;

"(c) To prepare reports for the Council periodically on the progress of the activities relating to water resources which are being carried out by international organizations, the reports to include such recommendations as may be appropriate for the better co-ordination and balanced development of their activities;

"(d) To prepare recommendations to the Council for the promotion of international co-operation and activity in those fields and in those geographic areas which may not be adequately covered by international organizations, giving special attention to the problems of the interrelated aspects of water resource development; and

"(e) In carrying out the task entrusted to him:

"(i) To consider the suggestions of Member States;

"(ii) To secure the co-operation of the regional economic commissions in relation to those problems which are essentially regional in character;

"(iii) To seek the advice of experts as may be necessary;

"(iv) To collaborate with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization and other specialized agencies concerned in their study of the problems presented by the arid zones;

"(v) To establish, through the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and, as appropriate, the Technical Assistance Board, inter-agency arrangements for continuing consultation with the interested specialized agencies, and, where appropriate, with scientific and technical societies and other organizations having important responsibilities, experience or interest in fields related to water resources;

"2. Recommends that Member States, specialized agencies and other interested organizations co-operate with the Secretary-General in the execution of this programme; and

"3- Decides:

"(i) To keep the question of international co-operation with respect to water resource development under review;

"(ii) To place the question on the agenda of the appropriate session in 1954; and

"(iii) To continue to give careful attention to the work of the specialized agencies on the development of arid land."

During the discussion of land reform in the General Assembly,²⁸ a draft resolution on land reform and development of arid land and of water resources was proposed jointly by Egypt, India and Indonesia. However, it was subsequently revised in such a manner as to confine it to land reform.

5. Methods to Increase World Productivity

In resolution 522 (VI)²⁹ the General Assembly had stated that, to ensure more rapid economic progress of the world as a whole, closer international co-operation was needed to facilitate the best use of the world's manpower and natural resources, as well as its productive equipment, and that the raising of living standards required the rapid economic development of the under-developed countries. The Assembly had requested the Economic and Social Council to study ways in which productivity could be increased by applying existing scientific and technical knowledge. The Council was asked to recommend, as soon as practicable, methods by which the results of these studies could be made available to the under-developed countries at their request.

At its fourteenth session the Council had before it a working paper by the Secretary-General (E/2265) containing a brief account of the salient features found in current national programmes to increase productivity, as well as a number of suggestions for international action in this field. The working paper was limited to specific aspects of the problem of promoting productivity in industry through the more efficient use of existing machinery by such measures as the development of comparative productivity statistics, national campaigns to raise productivity, the establishment of productivity and development centres suited to the existing economic and social conditions of each country, the use of improved industrial methods and techniques, and the exchange and dissemination of scientific and technical information. It was suggested that, in view of the wide differences between human, natural and capital resources that existed between industrialized and under-developed countries, international action might be directed towards adapting existing technologies or developing new ones to meet the special needs of under-developed countries.

Reference was also made to the potentialities of the technical assistance provided by the United Nations and the specialized agencies. The Secretary-General suggested that the Council might wish to reiterate its previous recommendations to governments of under-developed countries that in the long run their national productivity depended upon the establishment of integrated programmes of economic development which look towards the harmonious utilization of their resources in the interest of raising the living standards of their peoples.

²⁸ See pp. 378-81.

²⁹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 417.

The Council also had before it a paper prepared by ILO (E/2224) calling attention to the relevant parts of that organization's fifth and sixth reports and containing an account of its recent activities in the field of productivity. Among those activities were the provision of technical assistance for the training of supervisors, for vocational training, the improvement of working conditions, industrial safety and hygiene, and the organization of handicraft industries.

The Council considered the question at its 623rd, 629th, 634th and 638th plenary meetings on 27 June and 2, 8 and 10 July. It had before it a joint draft resolution (E/L.391) by Belgium, Canada, Pakistan and the Philippines recommending, inter alia, that governments of under-developed countries consider the raising of productivity as an integral part of their efforts to raise the level of their national production, and consider the establishment of national productivity centres. It would request the Secretary-General to continue to study the problem of raising productivity and to arrange, in collaboration with the specialized agencies, to prepare additional working papers on the subject.

Most members noted the Secretary-General's conclusions with satisfaction and emphasized the importance of adopting those techniques best suited to the circumstances of the countries concerned. The need for preparing working papers on agriculture, labour, mining, transport, construction industries and the distributive trades, as recommended by the Secretary-General, was also stressed by a number of representatives, among them those of France, Iran, Mexico and Sweden. An amendment (E/L.392) stressing the importance of a working paper on agriculture was submitted by France. Argentina proposed (E/L.394) that the Secretary-General, with a view to carrying out these studies, should seek the services of experts to investigate, in collaboration with technicians in under-developed areas, the obstacles encountered in the process of raising productivity and to recommend practical measures for overcoming such obstacles. The representative of Iran suggested that the Secretary-General should be asked to continue the examination of the conditions in which methods perfected in industrialized countries might be adopted by the under-developed countries.

The representative of Pakistan pointed out that one difficulty was that imported machines were of the most modern type and that underdeveloped countries lacked workers who could make the best use of them. In this connexion he thought that industrialized countries should accept advice on the best methods of adapting such machinery to the needs and skills of the under-developed countries. He also stressed the difficulties raised by the inadequacy of power and the lack of spare parts. The United States representative pointed out that the application of existing technical knowledge to production processes in under-developed countries involved relatively small capital outlay, a factor particularly important for countries having difficulty in raising additional capital.

It was generally recognized that productivity centres, where management and labour groups could obtain the necessary technical information on ways of increasing productivity, could play an effective role. The representative of Sweden, however, stated that the task of these centres must be clearly defined if concrete results were to be achieved. The representative of Pakistan suggested that the Council might consider setting up a scientific liaison centre within the United Nations to keep under-developed countries informed of progress in the technical field. The representative of Iran suggested that capital exporting countries take appropriate measures to have foreign companies assist in the training of local technicians. The Council also generally agreed that visits of "productivity teams" could provide a significant means not only of transmitting the experience and knowledge of the more industrialized countries to less developed countries, but also of promoting understanding of the differing institutional settings within which the production process was carried on in the various countries.

Several representatives, among them those of Argentina and the Philippines, pointed out that the use of technical and scientific knowledge could not produce the desired results unless consideration were given to the social implications of technology and science. The representative of Argentina submitted an amendment (E/L.394) to ensure this consideration. It was also urged by the representative of France that regional economic commissions should give attention to problems of productivity common to their areas.

The representative of ILO, in describing his organization's recent activities in this field, stated that it had always sought to relate the question of methods of increasing productivity to those of securing an equitable distribution of the gains from higher productivity and of protecting the interests of workers who might be displaced as a result of measures taken to ensure it. The organization agreed with efforts to increase productivity as long as methods adopted were based on improved techniques and not on intensification of work which would bring about a greater exploitation of workers, a lowering of living standards and adverse effects on the workers' health. In his view, an improvement of productivity should be promoted by reform of the agrarian system and programmes for rational industrialization, based mainly on the development of heavy industry.

A revised joint draft resolution (E/L.407) was presented at the 638th plenary meeting on 10 July by Argentina, Belgium, Canada, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan and the Philippines, incorporating and superseding the amendments mentioned above, as well as a joint amendment by Iran, Mexico, Pakistan and the Philippines (E/L.397) to include a recommendation for action by the industrialized countries during periods of general shortages. The authors of the revised draft resolution took into consideration the desires of the representatives of the under-developed countries that maximum use be made of the Expanded Programme of technical assistance. Provision was also made to meet the criticism that insufficient consideration had been given to the human and social elements of productivity. The Swedish representative's view that the problem of productivity should be examined not only in the sphere of production but also in that of distribution was also taken into account.

The authors of the revised text accepted a French amendment (E/L.409) Providing that countries within the same region should co-operate, in particular, through their regional economic commissions or facilities available from the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

The revised draft resolution, as amended, was adopted (416 E (XIV)) at the same meeting by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions. It read as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered General Assembly resolution 522 (VI) entitled "Methods to increase world productivity",

"Having taken note of the working paper on this subject prepared by the Secretary-General (E/2265) as well as the communication submitted by the International Labour Office (E/2224),

"Recognizing that the achievement of high levels of world productivity depends upon a world-wide increase in international trade on an equitable and stable basis, and upon the establishment by the under-developed countries of integrated programmes of economic and social development which look towards the harmonious utilization of the countries' resources in the interest of raising the living standards of their peoples, and that this, in turn, is closely dependent upon the fuller and more efficient utilization in each of these countries of the indigenous human, natural, industrial and technological resources,

"Considering that countries in the same region are frequently faced with similar economic and social problems and that joint study and action in relation to these problems would be of mutual benefit to them,

"1. Recommends that governments of under-developed countries:

"(a) Consider the problems of raising productivity as an integral part of their efforts to raise the level of their national production through the promotion of general economic development designed to raise the living standards of their populations;

"(b) Consider, within the general context of promoting economic development, the establishment of national productivity centres, adapted to the economic and social conditions existing in their countries, so as to give special impetus to research and the dissemination of information concerning improved practices and techniques and to their practical application in the various fields of economic activity, keeping in mind the international technical assistance facilities available to them;

"2. Urges governments to take full advantage of the Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance through which the United Nations and the specialized agencies are prepared to assist them, at their request, not only in their efforts to develop general economic development programmes but also to improve the operation of their already existing productive apparatus;

"3. Recommends that, in the matter of raising productivity, countries within the same region should co-operate, in particular through their regional economic commissions or through the facilities available to them from the United Nations and the specialized agencies, by joint study of their common problems and, wherever possible, by joint action;

"4. Reaffirms its recommendation contained in paragraph 1 of resolution 341 (XII) and recommends to governments the promotion of the economic integration of international markets by the extension of foreign trade on a stable and equitable basis so as to contribute to increasing world productivity;

"5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the specialized agencies concerned, to arrange for the continuation of studies concerning the problems of raising productivity in under-developed countries, particularly in such fields as agriculture, manufacture, mining, transport, the construction industries and the distributive trades, and for the preparation of working papers dealing with the problem of raising productivity in relation to programmes for the expansion of production in these fields, as well as a working paper dealing with the role of labour in any programme for increasing productivity, particularly its participation in the framing, development and implementation of such programmes and methods for ensuring a fair reward for the human effort applied to increasing productivity and the extension of purchasing power to make the increase in productivity permanent; and

"6. Decides to place the question of methods to increase world productivity on the agenda of the appropriate session in 1953."

During the general debate in the Assembly's Second Committee at its 195th to 207th meetings from 23 October to 12 November and later at its 239th meeting on 12 December 1952 several representatives expressed their views on measures to increase world productivity, the majority endorsing the Council's efforts in that direction.

The representative of Czechoslovakia stated that in his opinion two factors had to be taken into account—the means available for increasing productivity and the motives leading to such an increase. The ultimate aim should be the balanced development of a national economy and the raising of living standards of people as a whole. The motive animating imperialistic, monopolistic companies which controlled governments of the capitalistic countries was merely the desire to increase profits to the greatest possible extent. The representative of Yugoslavia hoped that in studies on the subject special attention would be given to conditions in under-developed areas. He stressed that it was erroneous to assume that the only method of expanding production was by increasing or placing greater demands on the labour force. Increased output depended equally on rationalized methods, some of which the workers themselves might discover.

6. General Aspects of Economic Development

a. EXPLOITATION OF NATURAL WEALTH AND RESOURCES

The question of the right of each country to nationalize and freely exploit its natural wealth was considered by the General Assembly during its general debate on economic development at the Second Committee's 195th to 209th meetings from 23 October to 12 November and, specifically, at the Committee's 231st to 238th meetings from 6 to 12 December and at the 411th plenary meetings on 21 December 1952.

(1) Consideration by the Second Committee

The Committee had before it a draft resolution by Uruguay (A/C.2/L.165 and Corr.1 to 3), the operative part of which would recommend that Member States respect the right of each country to nationalize and freely exploit its natural wealth as an essential factor of economic independence.

In introducing the draft resolution, the representative of Uruguay stated that the right of each nation to exploit its wealth freely was directly related to the problem of financing economic development. Foreign financing, in the form of aid, loans or private investments, was a valuable and essential factor in the development of under-developed areas, but it was not the ideal solution. The ideal for an under-developed country was to attain economic independence, to dispose freely of its own resources, and to obtain foreign exchange by selling its own products to buyers of its own choice. Technical assistance, although valuable, was only a temporary solution. The purpose of the resolution, he said, was to affirm the need for protecting the populations of under-developed countries and for justifying their governments' desire to nationalize their natural resources.

The Bolivian representative, supported by the representative of Argentina, pointed out that, in the past, there had been no way of bringing to the attention of the international community the economic, political and social conditions of smaller countries confronted by powerful financial interests which controlled the main media of information. That stage had passed and the United Nations had become a forum by which the smaller and medium-sized countries could keep public opinion informed; this was particularly valuable in promoting respect for an international right. The representative of Bolivia proposed (A/C.2/L.166) that the operative part of the resolution be amended to recommend that Member States, in deference to the right of each country to nationalize wealth, should not use their governmental and administrative agencies as instruments of coercion or political or economic intervention.

It was generally agreed during the debate in the Committee that the right of a country to nationalize its natural resources, if it so desired, was a sovereign right recognized in international law and inalienable. Some representatives, among them those of Canada, China, Haiti, Honduras and Saudi Arabia, doubted that it was necessary to reaffirm this right. Moreover, to do so, they considered, might have the effect of weakening an implicit right possessed by all sovereign States. As an alternative, the representative of Honduras suggested, the Assembly might recommend that States respect the jurisdictional right of each Member State to protect its national sovereignty and to nationalize its property under appropriate conditions. The representatives of Iran and Mexico thought it might be useful to recommend that States should not exert political or economic pressure against a government that had exercised its right to nationalize its wealth. The Yugoslav representative held that there was no harm in reaffirming a right even if no State intended to violate it.

While agreeing with the principle involved in the draft resolution, the representatives of Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Haiti, Israel, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the Philippines and the United Kingdom, among others, were of the opinion that, if the United Nations were to affirm the right of a State to nationalize its wealth and resources, it might destroy the effectiveness of efforts to encourage foreign investments in under-developed countries, particularly if the United Nations did not, at the same time, stress the obligation of countries which nationalized their wealth to grant proper indemnity to the foreign interests affected.

The representatives of Chile, Ecuador, Mexico and Uruguay, among others, pointed out that their constitutions, as well as those of many other countries, provided for just compensation in the event of expropriation and that the resolution was not intended to alter this or to imply that such compensation was undesirable.

The representative of Syria believed that a resolution couched in moderate terms would not adversely affect investment in under-developed countries.

The representative of Poland denied charges made by Chile during the course of the debate that the countries in the "Soviet bloc" were carrying on a demagogic propaganda designed to worsen economic relations between the under-developed and the industrialized countries. The most cursory study of the actions of the delegations of the USSR and the peoples' democracies, he stated, showed that they had never failed to embark on any endeavour to promote real economic collaboration; the discussion of many problems, including that of the world economic situation, had been due to their initiative, he claimed.

The representatives of Haiti, Sweden, the Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom considered that the question of the nationalization of natural resources was essentially a matter of domestic jurisdiction and not within the competence of the United Nations. The representatives of the Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom also pointed out that the legislative bodies of all countries adopted laws regulating ownership and the use of property and that nationalization was only one form of controlling natural resources.

On the basis of the discussion, and taking into account the Bolivian amendment (A/C.2/L.166) which was withdrawn, the representatives of Bolivia and Uruguay submitted a joint revised draft resolution (A/C.2/L.165/Rev.1) at the Committee's 234th meeting on 9 December. The operative part of this draft would recommend that Member States

"maintain proper respect for the right of each country freely to use and exploit its natural wealth and resources as an indispensable factor in progress and economic development, and therefore to refrain from the use of any direct or indirect pressure such as might jeopardize, on the one hand, the execution of programmes of integrated economic development or the economic stability of the under-developed countries, or, on the other hand, mutual understanding and economic co-operation between the nations of the world."

The representatives of Argentina, Chile, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Poland, the USSR and Yugoslavia supported the joint revised draft resolution. The representatives of Ecuador and Ethiopia, however, were of the opinion that the corresponding principle of just and prior compensation ought to be included in the text to remove any apprehensions which might be felt by certain delegations. The representative of China, as well as the Ethiopian representative, thought that it might also be better to postpone further consideration of the question. The representative of Poland stated that, although the resolution had become merely an affirmation of already recognized principles, he nevertheless would vote for it. The New Zealand representative considered that the draft resolution was open to misinterpretation and would not assist in promoting economic development. The Canadian representative opposed it on the ground that it implied that centralized government planning of economic affairs was a necessity. In his opinion, a particular device could not be turned into a universal principle. Although approving the resolution in principle, the representative of Turkey thought the subject too difficult to be dealt with in the form of a simple resolution.

The representative of the Netherlands felt that if the purpose was to affirm the right to nationalize wealth and resources then the question should be considered by the Third Committee which was studying problems of self-determination. If the intention was to define or determine that right, then it was a legal matter and should be entrusted to a legal body. The Canadian representative stated that he thought it essentially a legal problem. The representatives of Denmark, France, the Philippines and Turkey thought that the Second Committee should wait until the Human Rights Commission had submitted to the Assembly the draft covenant on economic, social and cultural rights. The covenant, they pointed out, would include not only a declaration of economic rights, but provision for their implementation. The representative of Denmark, therefore, at the 236th meeting on 10 December moved the adjournment of the debate on the revised joint draft resolution. This motion was rejected at the 237th meeting by a roll-call vote of 28 to 16, with 7 abstentions. However, a motion to take an immediate vote on the draft resolution was proposed by the representative of Saudi Arabia and adopted by 25 votes to 3, with 16 abstentions. In explaining his vote, the representative of the Union of South Africa later stated that there had not been sufficient time to consider the revised proposal and the amendments to it. He and a number of other representatives expressed regret that the debate had been closed so abruptly.

The Committee had before it a United States amendment (A/C.2/L.188) to substitute for the operative paragraph four new paragraphs which would have the Assembly:

(1) refer to the need to maintain mutual understanding and economic co-operation; (2) recommend proper respect for the right of a country to decide freely whether its natural wealth and resources could best be developed by private initiative or by government enterprise or by both; (3) recommend that when countries decided to exploit their natural wealth and resources, Member States should "refrain from consequential action of a nature contrary to the principles of international law and practices, and to the provisions of international agreements"; and (4) recommend that countries deciding to develop their natural wealth and resources refrain from action, on the same basis, against "the rights or interests of nationals of other Member States in the enterprise, skills, capital, arts or technology which they have supplied".

The first three paragraphs were adopted, by 34 votes to none, with 13 abstentions, 21 votes to 19, with 7 abstentions, and 20 votes to 18, with 8 abstentions, respectively. The last paragraph was rejected by a roll-call vote of 27 to 15, with 8 abstentions.

The sponsors of the draft resolution then accepted an amendment by India (A/C.2/L.189) substituting a new paragraph for the operative paragraph of the revised joint draft resolution. As amended, the resolution would recommend all Member States, in exercising their right freely to use and exploit their natural wealth and resources wherever they considered it desirable for their own progress and economic development, to have due regard, consistently with their sovereignty, to the need for maintaining mutual confidence and economic co-operation among nations. It would further recommend all Member States to refrain from acts, direct or indirect, designed to impede the exercise of the sovereignty of any State over its natural resources.

The United States amendment therefore automatically became an amendment to the Indian proposal and a vote was taken on the adopted paragraphs as a whole. The amendment, as a whole, was rejected by a roll-call vote of 28 to 17, with 5 abstentions.

The revised draft resolution (A/C.2/L.165/Rev.1), as amended by India (A/C.2/L.189,) was adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 1, with 19 abstentions.

In explaining his vote against the resolution, the representative of the United States said that he considered the resolution unbalanced, since it failed to recognize any reciprocal responsibility towards private investors. This point, as well as those elaborated during the debate, were among the reasons given by the representatives of Australia, Belgium, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the Philippines in explaining their abstentions.

The representatives of Brazil, Colombia, Egypt, Iran, Indonesia, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Mexico and Yugoslavia supported the resolution giving, among others, the following reasons: (1) that it was a country's duty to consider the best interests of its people and it was useful to recommend that Members refrain from acts designed to impede the exercise of a State's sovereignty over its natural resources; and (2) that, in emphasizing the need for measures to promote understanding and co-operation among nations, the resolution was in line with the principles of the Charter and would encourage economic and social progress.

(2) Consideration by the General Assembly
in Plenary Session

The General Assembly considered the draft resolution (A/2332 (VI)) proposed by the Second Committee at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952. It also had before it an amendment by India (A/L.143) to the first operative paragraph of the draft which would recommend that States in the exercise of their right to exploit their natural wealth and resources have due regard for maintaining the flow of capital in conditions of security, confidence and economic co-operation among nations. The Indian representative stated, as had others in the Second Committee, that to ask for recognition of a right which was considered inherent in every State would imply the power to deny that right. He agreed, however, that there were certain broad considerations concerned with the conduct of nations which should be dealt with in general terms and thought this had been facilitated by the omission of the word "nationalization" from the final version of the draft resolution recommended by the Second Committee. Had this not been omitted, India would have insisted on the inclusion of a provision for compensation, arbitration and the like. His Government had submitted an amendment in the Second Committee because it believed that under-developed countries, anxious to maintain the flow of private or public capital, had to maintain conditions of stability and security without which capital would not be forthcoming. His amendment, he explained, was designed to amplify and clarify this point further.

The representatives of Colombia, Costa Rica, and Saudi Arabia, among others, supported the amendment. In explaining their votes in favour of the resolution, the representatives of Colombia and Costa Rica declared that fears that the resolution was in any way directed against foreign firms were unfounded; the resolution emphasized the need for mutual confidence and international co-operation.

The representative of Haiti stated that he would abstain for reasons already expressed in the Second Committee.

The amendment by India was adopted by the General Assembly by a roll-call vote of 39 to 5, with 16 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, France, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen.

Against: Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, China, Cuba, Denmark, Greece, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Sweden, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia.

The draft resolution, as a whole, as amended, was adopted as resolution 626 (VII) by a roll-call vote of 36 to 4, with 20 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Mexico, Pakistan, Paraguay, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Uruguay, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

Against: New Zealand, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, Cuba, Denmark, France, Greece, Haiti, Iceland, Israel, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Peru, Philippines, Sweden, Turkey, Venezuela.

The resolution read:

"The General Assembly,

"Bearing in mind the need for encouraging the under-developed countries in the proper use and exploitation of their natural wealth and resources,

"Considering that the economic development of the under-developed countries is one of the fundamental requisites for the strengthening of universal peace,

"Remembering that the right of peoples freely to use and exploit their natural wealth and resources is inherent in their sovereignty and is in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

"1. Recommends all Member States, in the exercise of their right freely to use and exploit their natural wealth and resources wherever deemed desirable by them for their own progress and economic development, to have due regard, consistently with their sovereignty, to the need for maintaining the flow of capital in conditions of security, mutual confidence and economic co-operation among nations;

"2. Further recommends all Member States to refrain from acts, direct or indirect, designed to impede the exercise of the sovereignty of any State over its natural resources."

b. INTEGRATED ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

In resolution 521 (VI)³⁰ the General Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council:

(1) to promote studies of a programme of rapid industrialization of under-developed countries, including the economic, social, fiscal, technical and organizational problems involved, and the role that the industrially advanced and the under-developed countries have to play in such a programme; and (2) to submit to the Assembly as soon as practicable concrete proposals for measures that may aid such countries in connexion with these problems.

During the discussion of this question, the Council at its 638th to 640th plenary meetings on 10 and 11 July 1952 had before it a proposal by Argentina (E/L.400) which would have the Council:

(1) recognize that a co-ordinated and integrated policy of economic development should make provision for industrial diversification with a view to ensuring the economic independence of the countries concerned and promoting the social well-being of their inhabitants; (2) recall Assembly resolution 519 A (VI) concerning technical assistance; (3) request the Secretary-General to appoint a small group of experts to prepare a report, for submission to the Council at its fifteenth session, containing recommendations on the concrete proposals referred to in General Assembly resolution 521 (VI); (4) ask the Secretary-General to continue his general and concrete studies of economic development of under-developed countries, with special attention to the barriers hampering or impeding rapid industrialization; (5) recommend that the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies give priority to those requests for technical assistance which in the opinion of the governments of the under-developed countries would be conducive to the rapid industrialization of these countries; and (6) draw the attention of governments to the technical assistance services provided by the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

On the basis of amendments by Pakistan (E/L.411), this proposal was subsequently revised (E/L.400/Rev.1) to modify the request for studies so that special attention would be given to the problems mentioned in General Assembly resolution 521 (VI) and to omit the request addressed to the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies concerning technical assistance.

³⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 416.

The majority of representatives considered that the subject as outlined was too vast and too complex to be undertaken by a group of experts without a more precise definition of the problem to be studied and precise terms of reference. Others, among them the representatives of China, the Philippines and Sweden, thought that the General Assembly resolution was not too vague regarding the nature of the proposed studies, and were in favour of such a study by a group of experts, a procedure which had been used effectively in the past. The experts, it was held, would not attempt to draw up a general programme to be carried out by an international agency or to impose programmes of development on under-developed countries. They would instead be requested to prepare a study, dealing with the problem from a technical point of view, which could then serve as a concrete basis for recommendations as called for in Assembly resolution 521 (VI). Some representatives, including the representative of Canada, thought that since it was unlikely that a group of experts would be able to submit a report before the Council's sixteenth session, it might be preferable first to have the Secretary-General prepare a preliminary report which would enable the Council to define the problem and enable a group of experts to carry out its task more effectively, if the Council should so decide. It was also suggested by the representative of Uruguay that a working party of Council members, with which the Secretary-General would be requested to co-operate, might be set up for the preparation of such a study.

Some representatives, including those of Canada, France and Sweden, felt that, in view of the increasing emphasis which had been placed on the need for promoting agricultural productivity in under-developed countries, it would be inadvisable to stress only the industrial aspect of economic development. In this connexion, the representative of France proposed an amendment (E/L.410) by which the Council would recognize that ample provision should be made for industrial diversification in keeping with the development of agricultural production and international trade.

Some discussion also centred in the meaning of the term "ensuring the economic independence" which occurred in the preamble of the draft resolution (E/L.400). Representatives supporting the proposal, including those of Pakistan, the Philippines and Uruguay, explained that the term did not mean that under-developed countries were seeking economic self-sufficiency. It implied the development by a country of the sectors of its economy essential to its progress in accordance with the desires of its people and to its participation on the basis of equality in the world community. The essential point, in their view, was that in the interests of world trade and economic stability the economies of all countries should be diversified. The representative of the Philippines suggested substituting instead the words "strengthening the economic position" (E/L.411).³¹

The representative of the USSR deplored the fact that the revised draft (E/L.400/Rev.1) omitted any reference to a study of the barriers to the rapid industrialization of under-developed countries. Rapid industrialization, he held, was an important prerequisite to the solution of problems of economic development. The representative of Argentina thought it unnecessary to reiterate ideas so clearly stated in Assembly resolution 521 (VI), which was referred to in the preamble of the revised draft.

At the conclusion of the discussion, a joint draft resolution (E/L.412) was presented by Argentina, Pakistan, Sweden and the United Kingdom. It took into account the amendments by the Philippines and French representatives and reconciled several of the different views expressed during the debate. It was adopted by the Council at its 640th plenary meeting on 11 July by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, as resolution 416 F (XIV). By this resolution, the Council recognized that co-ordinated and integrated policies of economic development must make provision for industrial diversification in harmony with the development of agricultural production, with a view to ensuring the economic independence of the countries concerned, taking full advantage of the benefits of international trade, and promoting the social welfare of their inhabitants.

The Secretary-General was requested to prepare a working paper for submission to the Council, as soon as possible, regarding the concrete proposals referred to in Assembly resolution 521 (VI), and to continue his general and concrete studies of the economic development of the under-developed countries, giving special attention to the problems dealt with in that Assembly resolution.

³¹ Put forward in an amendment by Pakistan.

The resolution also drew the attention of governments, in connexion with Assembly resolution 519 (VI), to the technical assistance services of the United Nations and the specialized agencies available to them.

c. MIGRATION AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

The question of migration and economic development was discussed by the Second Committee during its debate on financing of economic development³² and specifically at its 223rd and 224th meetings on 1 December 1952.

During the Second Committee's general debate on economic development at its 195th to 209th meetings from 23 October to 12 November, the representative of Uruguay had pointed out that in countries like Uruguay, which relied mainly on self-financing systems, the main obstacle to full development was under-population. He therefore proposed (A/C.2/L.164) that the Assembly should recommend the conclusion of bilateral agreements to encourage migration and ask the International Bank for financial co-operation. This, he stated, would help countries with surplus population problems as well as those with much cultivable land and great natural resources condemned to a low standard of living because of under-population.

At the 223rd meeting of the Committee, the representative of Uruguay presented a revised text (A/C.2/L.164/Rev.1) in which he had taken into account amendments tabled by:

(1) Australia (A/C.2/L.171) to include a reference to the inadequacy of capital as a factor in retarding economic development;

(2) Greece (A/C.2/L.178) to refer to unemployment and under-employment as two characteristic complaints of over-populated countries and to recall that ILO had made a large contribution toward the solution of the problem of migration; and

(3) Belgium and France jointly (A/C.2/L.168) to give the text a more general character by including a request for assistance from all competent international agencies and by referring to the conclusion of arrangements for multilateral as well as bilateral agreements.

The majority of the Committee favoured the resolution, in principle, and agreed generally with the statements of the representative of Uruguay. In particular they agreed that the problem of migration could only be solved by the under-populated countries, and that the question was closely linked with that of economic development. Lack of international financing was one of the main factors retarding European emigration, they stated. The representatives of Australia, Canada, Chile, New Zealand and the United States stressed the importance of it being understood that migration under private agreements would not be ruled out under the resolution.

Following the brief discussion, a second revised text (A/C.2/L.164/Rev.1/Corr.1) of the draft resolution was submitted to include an oral drafting amendment by China, a French drafting amendment (A/C.2/L.185) and a Greek oral amendment to provide for technical training of emigrants in countries of emigration as well as of immigration.

At the Committee's 224th meeting on 1 December an amendment by Haiti (A/C.2/L.184) to specify that there should be no racial or religious discrimination in international action regarding migration was adopted by a roll-call vote of 21 to none, with 28 abstentions.

The first five paragraphs of the draft resolution were adopted by 28 votes to none, with 19 abstentions, and the last paragraph by 28 votes to none, with 21 abstentions. The draft resolution, as a whole, as amended, was adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to none, with 20 abstentions.

The General Assembly at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December adopted the draft resolution as proposed by the Second Committee (A/2332-IV) by a roll-call vote of 36 to none, with 24 abstentions, as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, France, Greece, Haiti, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iran, Israel, Liberia, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

Abstaining: Afghanistan, Australia, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Iceland, Iraq, Lebanon, Mexico, New Zealand, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand, Turkey, Ukrainian SSR, Union of South Africa, USSR, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

The representative of Uruguay spoke in favour of the resolution. The USSR representative, explaining his abstention, stated that the resolution was based on the erroneous theory that the unemployment and poverty are due, not to prevailing social conditions, but to over-population or under-population.

The resolution (624(VII)) read:

"The General Assembly,

"Considering that the under-developed countries vary considerably in density of population,

"Considering that in many of these and other countries, owing to the insufficiency of suitable land and of opportunities of employment, over-population is reflected in unemployment, under-employment, poverty and under-consumption, ³² See pp. 371 ff.

"Considering further that, in many countries with vast areas of cultivable land, sparseness of population and inadequacy of capital have been factors retarding economic development,

"Noting that the Director-General of the International Labour Office in his reports to the Economic and Social Council deals with the International Labour Organisation's proposal for further action regarding methods of assisting European migration,

"1. Recommends Member States and non-member States, classified variously as countries of emigration and of immigration, to conclude bilateral or multilateral agreements with a view to the equipment, transfer and resettlement of groups of emigrants, without racial or religious discrimination, as a part of their general economic development;

"2. Requests the Secretary-General, the specialized agencies, in particular the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and other interested international organizations to continue their active cooperation in the equipment, transfer and technical training of groups of emigrants in the countries of emigration or immigration or both, by rendering such economic financial or administrative assistance as is consistent with their respective constitutional provisions."

C. FULL EMPLOYMENT

At its fourteenth session, held from 20 May to 1 August 1952, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of full employment with particular reference to:

(1) the analysis and recommendations contained in a report entitled Measures for International Economic Stability,³³ prepared at the Council's request by a group of experts appointed by the Secretary-General; (2) the Council's agenda sub-item on integrated economic development and commercial agreements (Assembly resolution 523(VI)),³⁴ which, among other things, dealt with action taken by governments to bring about adequate production and equitable regulation of distribution and prices, and measures taken to combat inflation; and (3) the provisions of Council resolution 290(XI)³⁵—that the subject of full employment be kept under continuous review.

Other aspects of the question of full employment were considered by the Council in the light of the replies of Governments (E/2232 and Addenda) to the annual questionnaire circulated by the Secretary-General concerning full employment objectives, policies and measures. An account of the Council's discussion of the replies of governments is given separately below, following an account of its consideration of the experts' report and of Assembly resolution 523 (VI).

1. Measures for International Economic Stability

a. REPORT OF GROUP OF EXPERTS

In accordance with Council resolutions 290-(XI) and 341 (XII),³⁶ the Secretary-General appointed the following experts:

James W. Angell, Professor of Economics and Executive Officer of the Department of Economics, Columbia University; G.D.A. MacDougall, Fellow of Nuffield College and Reader in International Economics, Oxford University; Javier Marquez, Alternate Executive Director, International Monetary Fund, formerly Professor of Economics, National School of Economics, Mexico; Hla Myint, Lecturer in Colonial Economics, Oxford University, formerly Professor of Economics, Rangoon University; and Trevor W. Swan, Professor of Economics, Australian National University.

The group met from August to October 1951 and submitted a unanimous report, Measures for International Economic Stability, which was considered by the Council in 1952.

In their report the experts stated that they had been concerned to suggest policies which would help to improve international economic stability, and to discuss the conditions under which such policies might be made practicable and effective, rather than to draw up blueprints for rigid and automatic stabilization devices. They had also tried to rely as far as possible on the use of existing international agencies, they added, and to point to what it might be possible to achieve with the present constitutions and resources of such agencies, as well as to indicate the directions and circumstances in which these might need to be altered. The measures suggested fell under three main headings: (a) international commodity arrangements; (b) international flow of capital; and (c) international monetary reserves.

With respect to international commodity arrangements the experts stated that the essential objective should be, not the introduction of restrictions to help remove "burdensome surpluses", but the stabilization of world commodity markets in the face of the temporary ups and downs of demand and supply. It was suggested that schemes under which industrial countries continued to buy steadily from under-developed countries, at times when private demand declined temporarily, were more satisfactory for both parties than financial grants or loans which might otherwise be thought necessary to avoid a breakdown. The

³³ U.N.P., Sales No.: 1951. II. A. 2.

³⁴ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 418-19.

³⁵ See Y.U.N., 1950, pp. 472-74.

³⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 366-67.

details of commodity arrangements would have to be worked out separately for each commodity by those with expert knowledge of the commodities and by those with power to negotiate on behalf of their governments.

While the experts did not rule out any particular type of international commodity arrangement, they gave reasons why certain types should be avoided. They favoured multilateral long-term agreements on prices and quantities, of the kind exemplified by the International Wheat Agreement, and international buffer stocks. Attention was drawn to the usefulness of combining arrangements of these two types. Mention was made of the possibility of reducing the funds required for the financing of buffer stock schemes through the operation of buffer stock agencies in futures markets that would induce appropriate changes in stocks privately held. The capital required by such schemes, they suggested, should be provided by both importing and exporting countries. It was also suggested that a portion (perhaps 50 per cent) of the capital should be derived from an international source of finance, and specific mention was made of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

The experts stated that they did not believe that any new international agency to administer a comprehensive scheme for a range of different commodities was necessary or practicable. For co-ordination of general structure and policy among the various schemes, use should be made of existing international bodies, they recommended.

With respect to the international flow of capital it was stated that a strong case could be made for loans to some of the under-developed countries on especially easy terms or for outright grants, particularly in the event of a major recession; but these were issues which the experts did not consider themselves called on to examine. A basic objective of foreign investment policy, as of commodity policy, should be to keep the international flow of goods and services as steady as was consistent with long-term trends and with the inevitable structural changes in the world economy, they stated. The experts added that steadiness in the rate of economic development might be impossible to achieve without variations in the rate of foreign financing.

Governmental or intergovernmental agencies which supplied capital funds for foreign economic development, the report suggested, should be prepared to vary the rate at which they provided these funds, in the light of fluctuations in the foreign exchange receipts of the borrowing countries on current account and on other capital account and within a total burden of external debt which the borrowing country could reasonably assume.

The International Bank should stand ready to provide an increased outflow of funds to Member countries for development purposes in times of recession, the report recommended. The chief requisites for a practical programme of that nature were:

(a) that a general development programme be established well in advance, normally in co-operation with the Bank, so that, if necessary, the rate of the Bank's lending could be expanded without undue delay; and (b) that the Bank's resources be adequate to meet the additional demands. Specific proposals were made with a view to increasing these resources.

The monetary reserves of countries other than the United States, even when supplemented by recourse to the International Monetary Fund, were, the experts stated, insufficient to enable countries to maintain imports in the face of a recession in one or more major countries that sharply, though only temporarily, reduced the demand for exports throughout most of the world; hence the experts examined the various ways in which reserves might be increased. The possibility of achieving this by an increase in the price of gold (uniformly in terms of all currencies) was discussed, but in view of the political problems such a step would involve, the experts restricted their detailed analysis to measures whereby funds could be made available by an international authority at its discretion, limited only by agreed general principles and by its total resources.

Reference was made in the report to various methods of overcoming a shortage of monetary reserves, including the plan proposed by the previous Group of Experts in the report on National and International Measures for Full Employment under which countries experiencing a fall in their own effective demand would make their currency available to the rest of the world. It was pointed out that additional dollar reserves were unlikely to be provided unless there were firm assurances that the resulting contributions to international reserves would not be dissipated but would constitute a truly revolving fund.

It was further suggested that the Fund should be used to achieve the objects in question. A series of proposals was made for the effective use of the Fund's resources at the onset of a recession. It was also recommended that the Fund's resources be increased at the earliest possible moment and methods to effectuate such an increase were suggested.

b. CONSIDERATION BY THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AT ITS FOURTEENTH SESSION

The Council considered the question at its 624th, 625th, 627th to 631st and 635th to 638th plenary meetings, held on 30 June and 1, 2, 3, 9 and 10 July 1952.

It had before it the following documents:

(1) a draft resolution on world economic stability and international arrangements concerning trade in primary commodities, submitted by Cuba³⁷ at the sixth session of the Assembly³⁸ and referred to the Council by the Assembly's Second Committee (E/2189); (2) replies from Member Governments³⁹ in response to Assembly resolution 523 (VI)⁴⁰ (concerning integrated economic development and commercial arrangements) on action taken concerning production, distribution and prices of commodities and measures to combat inflation (E/2243 and Addenda); (3) a note from the Secretary-General on various intergovernmental consultations and conferences sponsored by the regional economic commissions, as well as on several activities and studies undertaken by the Secretariat (E/2257) related to the objectives of Assembly resolution 523 (VI); (4) a communication dated 4 January 1952 from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) on commodity control arrangements, giving the views of the FAO Conference (E/2194); and (5) a note by the Secretariat (E/L.313) summarizing the main suggestions in the experts' report.

Representatives of FAO, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund took part in the debate, particularly with respect to recommendations and suggestions within their fields of competence. The Council also heard statements by representatives of the World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU) and the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions (ICFTU).

(1) Views Expressed in the Council

In the course of the debate, most representatives expressed appreciation of the report. A number of representatives, including those of Argentina, Belgium, Canada, Cuba, Egypt, Pakistan, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay, expressed agreement with the general tenor of the analysis and policies contained in the report, and appreciation of the effort of the authors to offer practical and realistic suggestions. The view was advanced by the representatives of Belgium, Canada, China and France, among others, that while the current situation was not, in fact, characterized by the problems of economic recession with which the experts' report dealt, it was important to formulate policies well in advance to deal with such a contingency, particularly in the case of under-developed countries.

There were differences of view, however, with regard to the extent to which reliance should be placed on international rather than on national action for the mitigation of the effects of disequilibrium in international payments due to economic fluctuations. Among representatives who considered that greater emphasis should be placed on national measures were those of Canada, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. (The United Kingdom presented a proposal embodying such recommendations (E/L.387—see below)).

The representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland and the USSR expressed disagreement with both the analysis and the recommendations contained in the report. The representative of Poland, in particular, criticized the report on the grounds that it proposed financial manipulations to solve basic contradictions of capitalism, maintaining that its proposals would increase the dependence of the rest of the world on the United States, and criticizing the failure of the report to include, in its analysis, the peoples' democracies.

These representative found the report defective in not recommending a decrease in the United States armament programme and an increase in East-West trade as solutions to the unemployment which they found in Western Europe. They also considered the report's acceptance of a definition of full employment, which allowed for 2 to 5 per cent unemployment, inconsistent with the Charter. (Proposals embodying these points were made by the USSR (E/L.388/Rev.1—see below)).

The discussion of the experts' recommendations on international commodity arrangements showed a considerable range of opinion concerning the usefulness and practicability of such agreements.

Most representatives of industrialized countries, including the representatives of Belgium, Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, supported international commodity arrangements as a useful stabilizing device and expressed their willingness to enter into such agreements under appropriate conditions. They ³⁷ At the 625th plenary meeting on 30 June, Cuba withdrew this draft, reserving the right to submit a proposal later.

³⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 374-75.

³⁹ Australia, Belgium, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Haiti, India, Iraq, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom and United States. For an analysis of replies received before 1 August 1952, see Governmental Policies Concerning Unemployment, Inflation and Balance of Payments 1951-52 — U.N.P., Sales No.:1952:II.A.2. The replies also contained data relating to problems of economic stability.

⁴⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 418-19.

expressed an awareness of the difficulties, both technical and political, attending the negotiation of international commodity agreements, but at the same time were confident of the possibility of overcoming these difficulties. They saw no practical basis for the negotiation of agreements covering a number of commodities simultaneously; nor did they support arrangements involving the stabilization by international agreement of price relationships between primary products and manufactured products entering into international trade. It was held that no new international machinery was required to facilitate the negotiation of commodity agreements, in view of the existence of the Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements (ICCICA). It was proposed, accordingly, that governments give serious consideration to the possibility of entering into intergovernmental commodity agreements for individual primary commodities. In so far as governments desired international consultation and action with respect to such agreements, it was recommended that they should call upon the Secretary-General and ICCICA to facilitate such action and consultation in accordance with the procedures and principles approved by the Council in resolution 30 (IV) of 28 March 1947, 296 (XI) of 15 August 1950 and 373 (XIII) of 13 September 1951.⁴¹ These proposals were later presented in the form of a joint draft resolution, sponsored by Belgium, Canada, Cuba, France, the United Kingdom and the United States (E/L.401—see below). The representatives of China and Sweden considered, however, that there was need for further study of commodity agreements and their implications, before the Council could take any decision on the issue. The representative of Sweden formally submitted a proposal to this effect (see below).

Representatives of under-developed countries whose economies are heavily dependent on the export of primary products were divided on the question of the reliance to be placed on international commodity agreements and also on the type of commodity agreements that might be most suitable.

Some of these representatives, including those of Egypt and Pakistan, felt that, even if there should be full employment and diversified development of under-developed countries, such commodity arrangements would only be relatively useful. In the event of a severe depression with extensive unemployment in developed countries, they might even break down completely; for demand for primary products would then suffer such a setback that even the severest restriction of output would fail to keep up prices. Restrictions of output would, in turn, aggravate the chronic under-employment in countries producing raw materials. These representatives also felt that fixing quotas would tend to perpetuate uneconomic conditions of production by preserving, for high-cost producers, markets which they would otherwise lose. They stated further that under-developed countries, interested in obtaining manufactured goods in reasonable quantities at fair prices, would like to see international arrangements not only for primary products but also for capital goods.

The representatives of some under-developed countries, however, including those of Argentina and the Philippines, supported commodity recommendations of the type endorsed by the experts. The representatives of Cuba and Pakistan submitted proposals (E/L.405/Rev.1 and E/L.404/Rev.2, respectively—see below) which, while recognizing that the negotiation of intergovernmental commodity arrangements could be facilitated by the adoption of the procedures and principles established by the Council in resolution 30(IV), 296(XI) and 373(XIII), would not limit governments to any particular procedures or principles in negotiating intergovernmental commodity agreements that the governments concerned might deem appropriate.

The representative of the USSR stated that the experts' proposals on international commodity arrangements, like other recommendations in the report, were aimed at giving the United States a stronger hold on the economies of other countries. The representative of the United States, who stated that what was being sought was stability within the framework of a more dynamic economy, dismissed as propaganda the charges made by the USSR representative.

The representative of FAO recalled that, at the last Conference of that Organization, FAO had reaffirmed its support of international commodity agreements as a permanent instrument of stabilization. It felt, however, that the experts' report did not give sufficient emphasis to the political and technical difficulties in the conclusion of intergovernmental commodity agreements; he noted that despite a wide range of consultative activity, the International Wheat Agreement still remained the only fully intergovernmental agreement in existence. The representative of FAO stressed the difficulty of finding a formula for such agreements which would assure stability in real terms under conditions of substantial inflation or deflation. In considering intergovernmental corn-modity stabilization techniques, he said, account must be taken of the extent to which price fluctuations of primary products performed a useful function. Several problems touched upon in the report would require further examination, particularly the determination of an appropriate price formula, the relationship of international stabilization measures to national policies and the question of quotas. The experts' conclusion that existing intergovernmental machinery was generally adequate was supported by FAO.

⁴¹ See previous Yearbooks.

In connexion with the experts' suggestion that the Bank might provide a portion of the finance of international buffer stocks, some representatives, including those of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, shared the doubts of the representative of the Bank that international financing mechanisms would be required, and suggested that financing for such schemes should be obtained from national sources and should be provided by the participants. On the other hand, the representatives of China, Cuba, Pakistan, the Philippines and Uruguay recommended further study of the possibilities of financing mechanisms.

The representative of the International Monetary Fund stated that the Fund could not make its resources available to finance an international buffer stock scheme.

The discussion also revealed some differences of opinion regarding the desirability and the practicability of the suggestions made by the experts concerning long-term capital flow and, in particular, the policy of the International Bank in the event of a recession.

The representative of the Bank stated that the Bank viewed with sympathy the objective of avoiding periodic disruptions in the rate of economic development, but nevertheless doubted whether it could play a major part in anti-cyclical measures. Such a policy required the existence of a reserve of high priority projects, suitable for Bank financing, but the Bank's experience indicated that such a reserve existed hardly anywhere. Other factors in the under-developed countries also limited the scope for such action. The Bank, therefore, did not believe it would be in a position to adjust its rate of lending in any substantial degree as suggested by the experts; accordingly, the question of increasing the Bank's resources for this purpose did not arise. The Bank's main contribution to stability in under-developed countries would be to continue to invest at a steady pace, as it intended.

Some representatives, among them those of Canada and the United States, felt that the proposal of the experts might conflict with the primary function of the Bank, which was to provide long-term capital on a continuous basis for economic development. There was support, however, from the representatives of Argentina, Belgium, Cuba, Egypt, the Philippines, Sweden and the United Kingdom, among others, for the experts' suggestion that the Bank's disbursements of loans committed to particular programmes might well be accelerated during a recession or that the Bank might increase its participation in a country's development programme, provided the country's long-run prospects were sufficiently good to warrant the assumption of increased debt. As regards the experts' suggestion that the Bank's resources be increased, the representative of France saw little probability of the Bank pressing against the limit of its resources. The representatives of Argentina and the Philippines were in favour of an increase in capital. The representatives of Sweden and the United Kingdom felt that more attention should have been given to the possibility of national lending policies of the sort proposed by the experts, in contrast to the emphasis on loans through the International Bank.

The representatives of certain under-developed countries, including those of Argentina, Pakistan and the Philippines, expressed their support of the experts' suggestions concerning the role of the International Bank as being both desirable and practical. They urged particularly that the Bank's assessment of credit-worthiness should not be governed by temporary difficulties affecting a country's balance of payments.

The representatives of Poland and the USSR sharply attacked the experts for counselling dependence on the Bank which, in their opinion, was an instrument of the policies of the United States. These representatives asserted that both the Bank and the Fund were being used to turn the economies of under-developed countries still further in the direction of primary production, and charged that the Bank had been according credits mainly to countries which were of strategic or economic importance to the United States.

The debate revealed two main lines of approach to the experts' analysis and suggestions concerning the adequacy of international monetary reserves and, in particular, the role of the International Monetary Fund. Some representatives, including those of Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States, felt that more attention should have been given to the corrective measures that individual governments might themselves be able to take to improve their reserve position. These representatives argued that the Fund's resources were to be considered only as a second line of reserves and that the granting of assistance by the Fund should properly be on a case-by-case basis rather than by any automatic procedure. They feared that, in the absence of a domestic monetary policy and of international trade policies designed to correct a disequilibrium in the balance of payments, additional resources provided through the Fund might be rapidly dissipated. Expressing the view that the existing resources of the Fund were not inconsiderable, these representatives, together with those of Belgium and Sweden, stated that the Fund itself presented the best forum for a detailed discussion of the question of the adequacy of its resources in the event of a recession. Recommendations based on this view were presented jointly by Cuba and the United States (E/L.389—see below).

There was support, on the other hand, from the representatives of Cuba, Pakistan and the Philippines, among others, for the view that, while primary reliance in meeting temporary balance-of-payments difficulties must be placed on a country's own reserves, existing monetary reserves were seriously inadequate. The representative of the United Kingdom, supporting the experts' recommendations on the policies to be adopted by the Fund at the onset of a recession, stressed the desirability of such action as an alternative to restrictive measures which might tend to relieve one country's payments difficulties at the expense of another. Several representatives holding this view, including those of Sweden and the United States, nevertheless regarded it as premature to arrange for an increase in the Fund's resources at the present time. The representative of Pakistan stated that additional resources would be of little avail unless the Fund, contrary to its current policy, regarded drawing rights as automatic, this policy being, in his Government's view, the correct interpretation of the Fund's Articles of Agreement.

The representatives of Poland and the USSR criticized the experts for recommending an expanded role for the Fund which, in their opinion, had proved to be an instrument of intervention by the United States in the internal affairs of other countries.

The representative of the International Monetary Fund recalled that the Fund's Articles of Agreement assigned it the important function of providing a second line of international reserves to be used in accordance with the Fund's purposes and policies to help Members meet balance-of-payments deficits due to the onset of a depression abroad. The basic difficulties caused by depression could not be overcome, however, merely through the freer availability of credit to be repaid in the next boom, whether the credit came from the Fund or from any other source, he said. With regard to the experts' proposal that the Fund's resources be enlarged, the representative of the Fund stated that the question of increasing the quotas had been under consideration, but that the conclusion had been reached that an increase in its resources was not a question for action at that time. The Fund's existing resources were by no means small as a source of aid for financing cyclical deficits in the balance of payments, especially if it were borne in mind that these resources constituted secondary reserves.

With regard to the suggestion that the Fund should protect the revolving character of its resources by more definite repayment obligations, the representative of the Fund pointed out that the Executive Board of the Fund had recently adopted policies and procedures which, while not identical with those suggested by the experts, should achieve the general objective suggested. The Executive Board of the Fund would give careful consideration to the other recommendations concerning its practices contained in the report, he stated. After reviewing the problem of the use of its resources in the light of the experts' report, the Fund was of the opinion that it could operate with sufficient flexibility to permit it to be helpful in a depression without changes in its Articles of Agreement.

(2) Proposals before the Council

At its 635th to 638th plenary meetings, held on 9 and 10 July, the Council considered the proposals before it.

(a) DRAFT RESOLUTION BY THE USSR

The Council first considered a draft resolution by the USSR (E/L.388/Rev.1). In its preamble, the Soviet draft would have the Council state that it considered that the policy of militarizing an economy, as pursued in the United States, the United Kingdom and a number of other countries, not only did not promote a solution to the problem of full employment in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Charter, but was in opposition to those provisions, led to the curtailment of the production of goods for civilian purposes, and increased the number of unemployed and partially unemployed in many countries and in many branches of industry. The preamble to the draft would also have the Council take into account that the militarization of the economy in those countries adversely affected the flow to the under-developed countries of equipment and other goods necessary for their economic development, thereby preventing increased employment in those countries.

In its operative part, the draft resolution by the USSR would have the Council recommend that Member States take effective measures to put an end to the curtailment of civilian production wherever it had taken place and to ensure an increased output of goods for civilian consumption, and also take measures to improve the situation of the unemployed and the partially unemployed, in particular by establishing state unemployment insurance and free medical care, by providing allowances and by improving housing conditions and living conditions in general. It would further have the Council recommend that the industrially developed countries, with a view to promoting increased employment in under-developed countries, take measures to increase the export of equipment and other goods necessary for the economic development of the under-developed countries. Finally, the Soviet draft would have the Council invite the Secretariat to submit to the Council at its fifteenth session a report on the implementation of the recommendations.

At its 635th plenary meeting on 9 July, the Council rejected, by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention, each paragraph of the preamble to the Soviet draft. It further rejected, by 10 votes to 3, with 5 abstentions, and 9 votes to 3, with 5 abstentions, the first two paragraphs of the operative part. Accordingly, it did not vote on the final paragraph of the draft, and the resolution as a whole was considered as rejected.

(b) SIX-POWER DRAFT RESOLUTION

Belgium, Canada, Cuba, France, the United Kingdom and the United States submitted a joint draft resolution (E/L.401), which superseded draft resolutions submitted by the United Kingdom (E/L.387) and by Cuba and the United States jointly (E/L.389), as well as an amendment to the United Kingdom draft submitted by France (E/L.390). The six-Power joint draft made a number of recommendations and requests to governments as well as to the Bank and the Fund, concerning measures to be taken on the question.

In terms of the preamble to the joint draft resolution, the Council would note the experts' report, the communication from FAO and the replies from governments and would recognize that domestic policies designed to maintain high and stable levels of employment, while an essential requisite for international economic stability, might not be sufficient to ensure such stability.

The draft would have the Council further express the view that, while main reliance for mitigating the effects of any disequilibria in international payments must be placed on appropriate national action by all countries concerned, there were fields in which international action might be of considerable assistance.

Concerning the role of the International Bank in the event of a recession, the six-Power draft resolution would have the Council recall that, in resolution 290 (XI), it had urged the Bank, while achieving and maintaining in ordinary times a high level and steady rate of flow of international investments for economic development, to utilize in case of recession all practical resources in order to expand the volume of its lending, among other things, by making the fullest use of its borrowing capacity. The draft would also have the Council recommend that governments which anticipated that, in case of recession, they might be in need of additional international financing in connexion with their economic development operations should prepare, in co-operation with the Bank, as appropriate, programmes which might better enable them to obtain such finance. It would also have the Council request the Bank, with the object of maintaining as rapid a rate as possible of sound economic development, to consider the desirability, where practicable, of meeting increased needs for financing by the Bank which might arise in times of recession because of temporary declines in other sources of finance for economic development, bearing in mind the long-run economic prospects of the borrowing countries.

The six-Power draft would also have the Council take note of the views of the experts that the monetary reserves of most Member States appeared to be inadequate to meet possible payments difficulties, even when account was taken of the possibility of supplementing national reserves by recourse to the International Monetary Fund. Noting the recent decisions taken by the Fund with respect to the use of its resources, the Council would express its confidence that the Fund would act with determination to assist its members in lessening the balance-of-payments impact of any future recession. It would urge the Fund, in supporting the efforts of its members to meet balance-of-payments difficulties arising from recession, to apply its rules flexibly and give careful consideration to the suggestions made in this connexion in the experts' report. It would also reaffirm its request to the Fund, made in resolution 290 (XI), that the Fund be prepared to use its resources as promptly and as fully as was consistent with its Articles of Agreement. The Council would also request the Fund to keep under continuous review the adequacy of monetary reserves for the purpose of helping countries to meet temporary disequilibria in their balances of international payments, keeping in mind the desirability of:

(a) avoiding, to the extent practicable, recourse to restrictions on trade and payments imposed for balance-of-payments reasons, and of promoting general convertibility of currencies and liberalization of trade; and (b) creating conditions favourable to a steady expansion of international trade and to high levels of production and consumption. The Fund would be requested to furnish an analysis of this question to the Council in 1953.

Regarding international consultation, the draft resolution would also have the Council state that it considered that the method of initiating inter-governmental consultation and action, as well as the procedures and principles governing such action, already recommended in Council resolutions 30 (IV), 296(XI) and 373(XIII), should facilitate the negotiation of such agreements as the governments concerned might deem appropriate, with a view to alleviating pronounced fluctuations in the prices of primary commodities. It would further recommend that, for the purpose of reducing actual or anticipated instability in the world commodity markets, governments should:

(a) give serious consideration to the possibility of entering into intergovernmental commodity agreements for individual primary commodities; (b) in so far as they desired international consultation and action with respect to such agreements, call upon the Secretary-General and ICCICA to facilitate such consultation and action in accordance with the procedures and principles approved by the Council in resolutions 30(IV), 296 (XI) and 373(XIII); and (c) take into account at the appropriate time and place the suggestions relating to such agreements contained in the report of the experts.

(c) AMENDMENT BY PAKISTAN TO THE SIX-POWER DRAFT

Pakistan submitted an amendment which, in its revised form (E/L.404/Rev.2), superseded two earlier amendments (E/L.398 and E/L.404/Rev.1).

The first part of the amendment would add to the preamble of the joint draft resolution (E/L.401) a paragraph which would have the Council note the importance attached by the experts in their report to the need for governments to pursue stable economic policies, particularly in the matter of their external currency disbursements and for maintaining an adequate international flow of capital for the financing of economic development in under-developed countries. (The Council, by a vote of 11 to 1, with 6 abstentions, adopted this part of the amendment.)

The second part of the amendment would, among other things, delete from that part of the joint draft referring to intergovernmental consultations the reference to the aim of alleviating pronounced fluctuations in the prices of primary commodities. (This was not adopted by the Council; 6 Votes being cast in favour, 6 against, and 6 abstentions.)

The third part of the amendment would add to the preamble a paragraph stating that the Council believed that a further study should be made of the relative movements of prices of various classes of goods moving in international trade. (This was adopted by the Council by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions.)

The fourth part of the amendment would replace that part of the joint draft concerning measures recommended to governments for the purpose of reducing actual or anticipated instability in the world commodity market. In terms of the amendment, the Council would recommend that governments of developed countries, in pursuing their domestic economic policies, should bear in mind not only the possible effects of these policies on their own economies and balances of payments, but also on those of other countries, and the general advantages of a greater measure of stability on the international flow of finance capital and trade. (The Council adopted this by 13 votes to none, with 5 abstentions, after it had decided, by 9 votes to 8, with 1 abstention, to delete the original paragraph in the joint draft.)

Another part of the amendment by Pakistan sought to replace that part of the joint draft which would have the Council:

(1) recommend that governments anticipating, in case of recession, that they might be in need of additional international financing in connexion with their economic development programmes, should prepare, in co-operation with the Bank, programmes which might better enable them to obtain such finance; and (2) request the Bank, with the object of maintaining as rapid a rate as possible of sound economic development, to consider the desirability of meeting increased needs for financing by the Bank which might arise in times of recession.

In terms of the amendment, the Council would, instead, invite the Bank, with the object of maintaining the pace of economic development of under-developed countries, in assessing the creditworthiness of a country not to be unduly influenced by the economic situation of that country in time of temporary recession, but to give full consideration to the country's long-run prospects. It would also invite governments, independently or in co-operation with the International Bank, to prepare programmes for additional investments to be made in case of a recession or depression. (The Council adopted the amendment by 17 votes to none, with 1 abstention, after deciding, by 10 votes to 7, with 1 abstention, to delete the original paragraphs of the joint draft.)

A final amendment by Pakistan would add to the joint draft a paragraph in terms of which the Council would request the Secretary-General to prepare, for consideration at an early session of the Council, a study of the relative movements of prices of various classes of goods moving in international trade. (The Council, by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, adopted this part of the amendment.)

(d) AMENDMENT BY CUBA

Cuba proposed a two-part amendment to the joint draft.

The first part sought the deletion of that part of the joint draft which would have the Council state that it considered that the methods which it had earlier recommended should facilitate the negotiation of intergovernmental agreements which the governments concerned might deem appropriate with a view to alleviating pronounced fluctuations in the prices of primary commodities. The representative of Cuba proposed that the new text should state that these methods should facilitate the negotiation of such "intergovernmental commodity agreements, relating to the several primary commodities, as the governments concerned may deem appropriate." (The Council rejected this part of the Cuban amendment by 7 votes to 4, with 7 abstentions. In a separate vote, however, it rejected, by 11 votes to 7, that part of the original joint draft with which the representative of Cuba was not in accord, but adopted the first part of the paragraph by 12 votes to 4, with 1 abstention. It later rejected, in its entirety, the paragraph of the preamble, by 10 votes to 5, with 2 abstentions.)

The second part of the Cuban amendment would have the Council recognize that the under-developed countries did not generally have at their disposal, within the possibilities of domestic action, the means required for controlling the factors determining the recessions which occurred in their economies owing to great declines in the demand for, or in the prices of, their primary export products or to a deterioration of the terms of trade in relation to the manufactured products which they imported and that, in these cases, international action was essential. (The Council adopted this part of the Cuban amendment by 8 votes to 6, with 4 abstentions.)

(3) Resolution Adopted by the Council

The Council was thus unable to agree on one major policy issue raised in the experts' report—the question of international commodity arrangements—and accepted none of the proposals made in this connexion (see above). The principal objection of the under-developed countries to the joint draft resolution was that it advocated international agreements for primary commodities and failed to give attention to the relation of the prices of primary products to manufactured goods or to the importance to the under-developed countries of the pursuit of stable economic policies by the industrialized countries. The resolution adopted by the Council, however, embodied a broad consensus of the major issues of policy raised in the experts' report.

At its 638th plenary meeting on 10 July, in a series of eleven separate votes, ranging from 16 votes to none, with 2 abstentions, to 9 votes to 8, with 1 abstention, the Council adopted the remaining parts of the joint draft resolution. It adopted the joint draft resolution as a whole, as amended, by 13 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions (resolution 427(XIV)). It read:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the report entitled Measures for International Economic Stability (E/2156) prepared by a group of experts appointed by the Secretary-General in accordance with Council resolutions 290(XI) and 341(XII),

"Noting the importance attached by the experts in their report to the need for governments to pursue stable economic policies, particularly in the matter of their external currency disbursements and for maintaining an adequate international flow of capital for the financing of economic development in under-developed countries,

"Noting the communication dated 4 January 1952, received from the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization on the subject of commodity agreements, and the importance attached by the experts in their report to inter-governmental commodity agreements for major primary commodities,

"Noting the replies of governments and the actions taken by the regional economic commissions in response to General Assembly resolution 523(VI) on integrated economic development and commercial agreements,

"Recognizing that domestic policies designed to maintain high and stable levels of employment, while an essential pre-requisite for international economic stability may not be sufficient to ensure such stability,

"Recognizing moreover that, while main reliance for mitigating the effects of any disequilibria in international payments must be placed on appropriate national action by all countries concerned, there are fields in which international action may also be of considerable assistance,

"Recognizing furthermore, that, as a rule, the under-developed countries do not, within the possibilities of domestic action, dispose of the means necessary for controlling the factors responsible for the recessions which occur in their economies by reason of heavy declines in the demand for or in the prices of their primary export commodities or by reason of a deterioration in the terms of trade with respect to the manufactured goods which they import, and that in these cases international action is essential,

"Bearing in mind the recommendations of the Council to governments in paragraphs 9, 15 and 16 of resolution 290 (XI), its requests to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in paragraph 17 and to the International Monetary Fund in paragraph 18 of the same resolution,

"Noting the views of the experts in their report (E/2156) that the monetary reserves of most Member States appear to be inadequate, even when account is taken of the possibilities of supplementing national reserves by recourse to the International Monetary Fund, to help countries meet possible payments difficulties,

"Believing that a further study should be made of the relative movements of prices of various classes of goods moving in international trade,

"1. Recommends that governments of developed countries, in pursuing their domestic economic policies, should bear in mind the possible effects of these policies not only on their own economies and balance of payments but also on the economies and balance-of-payments of other countries, and the general advantages of a greater measure of stability for the international flow of finance capital and trade;

"2. Invites the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, with the object of maintaining the pace of economic development of under-developed countries, in assessing the credit-worthiness of a country, not to be unduly affected by the economic situation of that country in time of temporary recession, but to give full consideration to the country's long-run economic prospects;

"3. Invites governments, independently or in cooperation with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, to prepare programmes for additional investments to be made in the case of a recession or depression;

"4. Notes the recent decisions taken by the International Monetary Fund with respect to the use of its resources; expresses its confidence that the Fund will act with determination to assist its members in lessening the balance of payments impact of any future recession and welcomes the statement made in this connexion by the representative of the Fund to the Council on 30 June 1952;

"5. Urges the International Monetary Fund, in supporting the efforts of its members to meet balance of payments difficulties arising from recession:

"(a) To apply its rules flexibly and, in this connexion, to give careful consideration to the suggestions contained in chapter IV of the report entitled Measures for International Economic Stability; and

"(b) To be prepared to use its resources as promptly and as fully as is consistent with its articles of agreement;

"6. Requests the International Monetary Fund:

"(a) To keep under continuing review the adequacy of monetary reserves for the purpose of helping countries to meet temporary disequilibria in their balances of international payments, having in mind the desirability of:

"(i) Avoiding, to the extent practicable, recourse to restrictions on trade and payments imposed for balance of payments reasons, and of promoting general convertibility of currencies and liberalization of trade;

"(ii) Creating conditions favourable to a steady expansion of international trade, and to high levels of production and consumption, employment and real income; and

"(b) To furnish an analysis of this question to the Council in 1953; and

"7. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, for consideration at an early session of the Council, a study of the relative movements of prices of various classes of goods moving in international trade."

2. Replies of Governments Concerning Full Employment Objectives, Policies and Measures

At its 635th to 638th plenary meetings on 9 and 10 July, the Council had before it the replies of governments⁴² to a questionnaire concerning their full employment objectives, policies and measures for the period 1951-52 (E/2232 and Addenda). In accordance with Council resolution 371 B (XIII),⁴³ the questionnaire had been amended by the Secretary-General in order to obtain data to facilitate the Council's discussion of the problem of reducing structural unemployment and under-employment in the under-developed countries and of eliminating obstacles to economic development.

The replies of governments were not received in sufficient time to permit an analysis of them to be made for the Council's consideration at the fourteenth session. The analysis was published subsequently under the title *Governmental Policies Concerning Unemployment, Inflation and Balance of Payments, 1951-52*⁴⁴

In the discussion of the substantive problems of full employment and economic stability, most representatives were concerned particularly with the need for reconciling the attainment and maintenance of full employment with the avoidance of ⁴² Before the Council were replies from: Australia, Belgium, Burma, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden, Union of South Africa, USSR, United Kingdom, United States and Yugoslavia (E/2232 & Add.1-4). For replies of Austria, Ceylon, China (Taiwan), Cuba, Ecuador, Finland, France, Italy, Philippines, Romania, Switzerland, Thailand and Vietnam, see E/2232, Add.6-10.

⁴³ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 422-23-

⁴⁴ U.N.P., Sales No.: 1952.II.A.2.

the dangers of inflation. It was felt that further consideration should be given to this matter. The consensus was that it would not be appropriate to appoint a committee of experts to make recommendations on this problem at this time; but rather that data should be collected and prepared to be available if it were decided at a later date to appoint such a group of experts so as to assist them in formulating their recommendations.

The representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland, and the USSR stated that certain countries relied on production for military purposes as a means of solving the full employment problem, but that this actually led to a curtailment in supplies of consumer goods and to an increase in unemployment and partial unemployment. This policy, they felt, also adversely affected the flow of equipment and other necessary goods to under-developed countries and thus prevented increased employment in these countries.

On the other hand, it was maintained by the representatives of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, among others, that defence programmes, which automatically led to increased demand for goods, could not be said to cause unemployment; that, in fact, as pointed out in the discussion of the world economic situation, though some unemployment had appeared in certain sectors, an unemployment crisis did not, in fact, exist; production of both capital and consumer goods, they said, had increased, and so had the supplies of these goods to under-developed countries. At the same time these representatives agreed that efforts must be continued to improve national and international measures to maintain economic stability without introducing elements of rigidity that would hamper economic progress and development.

The Council had before it two proposals:

(1) A draft resolution by Sweden (E/L.396), which proposed a study be made by a group of experts appointed by the Secretary-General. The study would be of international and national measures designed to attain and maintain full employment while avoiding the harmful effects of inflation.

Opposition to the Swedish draft resolution was expressed by the representatives of Czechoslovakia and the USSR, who considered it a retrograde step. The representatives of Canada, China, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, however, supported the Swedish proposal. The representatives of Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States, nevertheless, considered that preliminary studies should be made by the Secretariat before independent experts were called upon or recommendations proposed. The representative of Sweden, who declared his preference for direct study by a group of independent experts, subsequently revised (E/L.396/Rev.1 and E/L.396/Add.2) his proposal in the light of this suggestion.

At its 638th plenary meeting on 10 July the Council adopted the revised draft resolution by 11 votes to 3, with 3 abstentions, as resolution 426 B (XIV). It read:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Bearing in mind that the attainment and maintenance of full employment are among the principal objectives of the United Nations,

"Appreciative of the reports thus far prepared in accordance with Council resolution 290 (XI) concerning certain aspects of the problems connected with full employment,

"Considering that, to attain and maintain a stable condition of full employment, it is necessary not only to prevent depression and structural unemployment but also to combat inflation,

"Considering, further, the possibility that full employment or rapid increases in employment rates may strengthen or give rise to inflationary tendencies unless adequate measures are taken to check such tendencies,

"Concluding that the problem of how to attain and maintain full employment without inflation needs further consideration,

"Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the appropriate specialized agencies, to prepare in the light of recent experience in various parts of the world and of pertinent United Nations and other reports and studies already available, a report on national and international measures designed to reconcile the attainment and maintenance of full employment with the avoidance of the harmful effects of inflation, for presentation to the Council in 1953."

(2) A draft resolution by Mexico and Uruguay (E/L.406/Rev.1). The sponsors of this draft felt that an analysis by the Secretary-General of the replies of governments to the questionnaire concerning full employment objectives, policies and measures should be made available to the Council regularly and in sufficient time for its annual discussion of the problem of full employment. They accordingly proposed, and the Council accepted, by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, at its 636th plenary meeting on 9 July, as resolution 426 A (XIV), that the Secretary-General submit future questionnaires to governments as early as possible. By the same resolution, the Council also invited governments to submit adequate and timely replies, enabling the Secretary-General to prepare an analysis of such a nature as to facilitate the Council's consideration of the full employment problem.

D. WORLD FOOD SUPPLIES

At its sixth session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 525 (VI)⁴⁵ urging governments to adopt a variety of measures to increase food production and facilitate food distribution. It also requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Directors-General of FAO and WHO and the executive heads of other organizations concerned, to prepare for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its fourteenth session recommendations for procedures to ensure prompt concerted and effective action by governments, intergovernmental organizations and voluntary agencies in the event of actual or potential famines of an emergency character arising from natural disasters.

1. Consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its Fourteenth Session

a. FOOD AND FAMINE

The Secretary-General accordingly presented a report (E/2220) to the Council's fourteenth session. The report suggested basic procedures which might be adapted to varying types of emergency circumstances. It reviewed:

The measures which could be taken in advance or on short notice by governments of countries subject to famine emergencies; the role of FAO in assessing potential famine situations and notifying the Secretary-General; the procedures available to the United Nations in co-ordinating assistance from governments, intergovernmental organizations and voluntary agencies; and possible procedures for assisting in the financing of emergency famine relief.

The Council also had before it, for information, a communication dated 14 June 1952 from the Director-General of FAO (E/2261) containing an extract from the report of the fifteenth session of the Council of FAO dealing with the question of food shortages and famine and, in particular, the establishment of an emergency food reserve. This report stated that a working party of experts would give further study to the problem involved in such a reserve and that a report of the Working Party and the secretariat would be presented to the next session of the FAO Council.

The Council discussed the Secretary-General's report and the communication from the Director-General of FAO at its 622nd and 623rd plenary meetings on 27 June and at its 625th plenary meeting on 30 June 1952.

It had before it a joint draft resolution by Iran, the United States and Uruguay (E/L.373/Rev.3) based on the Secretary-General's report which had been revised to incorporate drafting changes orally suggested by Argentina and the United Kingdom.

The joint draft resolution (for text adopted by the Council see below) provided that the Council would recommend: arrangements to be made by governments of countries which might be subject to famine emergencies; encouragement of relief activities; the development of FAO arrangements for famine detection; and co-ordination by the Secretary-General of famine emergency relief activities.

The USSR submitted an amendment (E/L.385) to the joint three-Power draft resolution which would state, as a guiding principle, that the rendering of assistance to areas suffering from food shortages and famine should not be made conditional on the granting of political, economic or military privileges to the countries rendering assistance.

Cuba submitted an amendment (E/L.386) to the USSR amendment, to refer to Assembly resolution 525(VI) which had already contained the guiding principle embodied in the USSR amendment.

The representatives of Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Egypt, France, Iran, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States, among others, made statements stressing the need for international action to combat famine and expressing their government's support for such action. There was general appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General and of the decision of FAO to continue its study of the problems presented by the possible establishment of an emergency food reserve. General support was also expressed for the joint three-Power draft resolution.

The representative of the USSR, after reviewing the progress achieved by his country in agricultural production and in combating famine, stated that some countries with food surpluses had agreed to help famine-stricken countries in exchange for political, economic or military privileges. He had therefore submitted his amendment which was designed to ensure that assistance would be genuinely humanitarian.

Several representatives, among them those of Canada, China, Cuba, Iran, the Philippines and the United States, considered that the USSR amendment cast a slur on the integrity of Members and was designed for propaganda purposes.

⁴⁵ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 435-36.

The principle stated in the USSR amendment had already been adopted by the Assembly in paragraph 8 of resolution 525(VI) and did not need to be repeated by the Council.

The representative of Cuba orally revised his amendment to the USSR amendment. The revised sub-amendment would have the Council "reaffirm" the guiding principle already adopted by the Assembly in resolution 525(VI) and then restate the principle as proposed by the USSR. The representatives of Iran and the United States said they could agree to the USSR amendment as amended by Cuba.

The representative of the USSR accepted the Cuban amendment to his amendment. The representative of Uruguay, however, proposed that the USSR amendment should be altered to refer only to areas suffering from famine and not to areas suffering from "food shortages and famine". His proposal was adopted by 7 votes to 3, with 8 abstentions.

At the request of the USSR, the vote on the USSR amendment, as amended by Cuba and Uruguay, was taken by roll call and was unanimously adopted, as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, France, Iran, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Poland, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom, United States and Uruguay.

Against: None.

Abstentions: None

The joint draft resolution (E/L.373/Rev.3), as amended, was also adopted unanimously as resolution 425(XIV). It read:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Being deeply conscious of the wish of the peoples of the United Nations, as expressed in resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization, to be prepared to come to the aid of people in any country whenever the vagaries of nature may visit upon them famine emergencies with which their governments are unable to cope,

"Recognizing that such famine emergencies may sometimes occur despite every effort to solve the continuing problem of world food shortages through increases in food production,

"Having before it the report prepared by the Secretary-General on procedures for international action in the event of emergency famines arising from natural causes,

"1. Recommends:

"(a) That governments, inter-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies prepare themselves to act in concert promptly and effectively in the event of such famine emergencies, and, in particular, that governments of countries which may be subject to famine emergencies requiring international relief assistance make appropriate advance arrangements for the designation of ministries or agencies to be responsible when need arises for carrying out famine relief activities in their territories; these activities should include: (i) the mobilization of local resources; (ii) liaison with other governments and organizations; (iii) the co-ordination of the activities of national voluntary agencies; (iv) the provision of transport, direct distribution mechanisms and other facilities for delivering available food to famine areas; (v) suitable publicity to assure fullest public co-operation in local and international relief activities; and (vi) the preparation of reports to the United Nations;

"(b) That governments obtain authority for the suspension of customs duties and other barriers to the emergency importation of food into their territories;

"(c) That, in these arrangements, the famine relief activities of local and international voluntary agencies be given fullest opportunity and encouragement, and support be given for the establishment and co-operation of duly organized voluntary organizations such as the national Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies noted in General Assembly resolution 55 (I);

"(d) That the Food and Agriculture Organization continue to develop and perfect its arrangements to detect famine emergencies as early as possible, ascertain their scope and probable duration, and advise the Secretary-General promptly when international action is needed; and

"(e) That the Secretary-General, as circumstances may require, arrange for co-ordination of the famine emergency relief activities, and seek the co-operation of inter-governmental organizations, governments and voluntary agencies through consultation and other appropriate mechanisms, and report to the Economic and Social Council on action under this resolution;

"2. Reaffirms the guiding principle already adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 525 (VI), namely that the rendering of assistance to areas suffering from famine should not be made conditional on the granting of political, economic or military privileges to the countries rendering such assistance; and

"3. Commends the Food and Agriculture Organization for the study, begun by its secretariat and being carried forward by a committee of experts set up by its Council, to determine whether suitable ways and means can be found for establishing an emergency food reserve which would increase the ability of the United Nations to come to the aid of peoples threatened by famine emergencies."

b. INCREASE IN FOOD PRODUCTION

The Council at its fourteenth session also discussed ways and means of increasing food production. It had before it the report (E/2195/Add.1-3) of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). The report consisted of four parts:

(1) a covering report to the Council (E/2195); (2) the report of the Director-General on the work of FAO (E/2195/Add.1); (3) programme of work (E/2195/Add.2); and (4) report of the sixth session of the Conference held in November 1951 (E/2195/Add.3).

The world food situation was also referred to during the discussion of the World Economic Report at the Council's 589th to 594th and 598th to 601st plenary meetings from 3 to 6 and from 10 to 12 June. At that time the representatives of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, in particular, maintained that urgent steps were necessary to increase world food supplies, which had lagged behind industrial production. The representative of the United States emphasized the necessity of increasing food supplies not only by reclamation of land but also by increasing the yield of land already in use.

The report of FAO stated that in 1937 the Mixed Committee of the League of Nations on Nutrition in Relation to Health, Agriculture and Economic Problems had reported that not less than half of the world's population suffered from malnutrition and in some degree from under-nutrition. It referred to papers presented at the sixth session of the FAO Conference which showed that the aggregate production of the principal food crops in all countries, excluding the USSR, was estimated in 1948-50 to be 7 per cent above pre-war 1934-38. Furthermore since from 1936 to 1948-50 the estimated population increased by 12 per cent, aggregate supplies per head in 1950-51 were still below pre-war level, which, as the findings of the Committee of the League of Nations showed, were seriously insufficient. The report then discussed the dependence of large areas of the world like the Far East and the Near East and, to a certain extent, Europe on food surplus areas like Argentina, Australia, Canada and the United States. It stated that if the position of food-importing countries was to be safeguarded, increases of food production in countries having considerable potential food resources were urgently required. Nevertheless, large supplies in exporting countries alone could never bridge the gap between food requirements and the level of food production. The entire scale of food production, especially in the less developed areas, must, the report said, be raised if the problem was to be solved.

The Council discussed FAO's report at its 604th, 610th and 611th meetings, held respectively on 13, 18 and 19 June, 1952.

The report was supplemented by a statement of the representative of FAO in which he said that the Conference of FAO at its sixth session, recognizing the gravity of the food problem, had called upon governments to secure an increase in food production in excess of the rate of population growth. Although it was technically possible greatly to expand world food production, there were often considerable administrative, social and political difficulties. FAO tried to play its part in assisting governments to overcome those difficulties and it relied on the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly to stress more insistently the need for improvements in the administrative and social fields so that food production could be increased. The growing awareness that inequitable land tenure systems were one of the main obstacles to increased food production was, he said, largely due to debates in the Council and the Assembly and to their recommendations to governments on that subject. The Conference had also recommended that all FAO member States should prepare five-year agricultural development plans suited to the conditions in their countries to meet the new production targets and carry them out without delay; it had further instructed the Director-General of FAO to assist governments, upon request, in the preparation of such plans. However, he stated, these plans could be put into effect only if action was taken in each country at the farm level. With this in view the FAO Conference had urged the need for the establishment and development of demonstration services. The representative of FAO also suggested that the Council consider price incentives to encourage production in order to enable farmers to sell their products in stable markets and at profit.

A majority of representatives, among them those of Argentina, Belgium, France, Iran, Pakistan, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States, generally commended FAO for its programme and urged the need for technical assistance to increase the output for food in underdeveloped countries. Pilot projects were mentioned as a useful means of demonstrating new production techniques to farmers. However, some representatives noted that the application of these new techniques often carried financial burdens which the farmers in many areas were not in a position to assume without financial assistance. The representative of Pakistan referred to the probability that the introduction of expensive machinery might prove difficult in some areas already under cultivation because it would involve outlay for imports and might cause unemployment.

The representative of France stated that in order to increase production it was necessary to give farmers an assurance of adequate returns.

The representative of Argentina noted that currency difficulties prevented the expansion of international trade in foodstuffs. The representative of the United States stressed the importance of land reform and welcomed the effort made in that direction by the United Nations, FAO and other specialized agencies.

The representative of Poland stated that FAO had failed in its task of ensuring better production and distribution of agricultural products and foodstuffs and of raising the standards of living of rural populations. He held that FAO's technical activities had not yet contributed effectively to improving the food situation of many countries.

France and Iran submitted a joint draft resolution (E/L.362/Rev.1) which was adopted by the Council with a minor change, at its 611th plenary meeting on 19 June, by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions as resolution 424 (XIV). The only change was one proposed by the United Kingdom and accepted by the sponsors to note the FAO report "with satisfaction." The resolution read:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to the Council at its fourteenth session.

"Noting the statement of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization to the effect that the production of foodstuffs is not increasing at the same rate as the population, and noting that food supplies per capita are still less than before the Second World War, when more than half the population of the globe was already suffering from malnutrition,

"Noting the opinion expressed by the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization that it is necessary to increase the production of the principal foodstuffs and other essential agricultural products in a co-ordinated manner and at an annual rate which exceeds by from 1 to 2 per cent the rate of increase of the population, and that the result thus to be attained is the minimum necessary to achieve some improvement in nutritional standards,

"1. Recommends that all Member States should help to achieve this general objective by preparing and executing agricultural development programmes adapted to conditions in their respective countries;

"2. Recommends that the Food and Agriculture Organization should continue to give special attention to any requests made by under-developed countries for technical assistance in the preparation and execution of such programmes."

2. Consideration by the General Assembly at its Seventh Session

The food situation was again discussed by the General Assembly at its seventh session during its consideration of Chapter II of the report (E/2172) of the Economic and Social Council. The problem was discussed at the 240th to 244th meetings of the Second Committee from 13 to 18 December and at the Assembly's 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952.

Discussion in the Second Committee centred on a draft resolution (A/C.2/L.194/Rev.1) submitted by Ecuador. According to this draft, the Assembly would note the statements of the Director-General of FAO that food production was not increasing at the same rate as population and recognize the urgency of the problem and the necessity of devising measures to increase food production with a view to fostering the economic development of the producing countries and relieving hardships in countries threatened by food shortage. Considering that such measures called for international action by all relevant international bodies, particularly the United Nations, the Assembly would draw the attention of the Economic and Social Council, of the specialized agencies and the Technical Assistance Board to the need for joint action. It would also request the Economic and Social Council to include in its annual reports a special section describing the action taken by the United Nations and the specialized agencies to deal with the problem.

Outlining the purpose of his draft resolution, the representative of Ecuador stressed the gravity of the world food situation and expressed the willingness of his Government to receive immigrants to develop the fertile coastal areas of Ecuador. He suggested also that a conference of representatives of governments and international organizations should be convened to discuss the problem.

The representative of Pakistan stated that while agricultural production was of great importance the fact should be kept in mind that industrial production also contributed to increases in agricultural output. For example, he said, development of hydro-electricity makes it possible for large areas to be irrigated and made productive.

The representative of Australia, while in favour of the draft resolution, suggested that the paragraph referring to specialized agencies should specifically mention FAO. The representative of Ecuador accepted the suggestion.

The representative of the USSR, while agreeing with the necessity of increasing food production, stated his opposition to the "neo-Malthusian" argument which, he said, ascribed the shortage of food to the increase in population. He suggested that land reform and the use of modern agricultural methods were the remedies. He considered the wording of the draft resolution open to misinterpretation as it might suggest that all food producing countries, including some industrialized countries, needed help in their economic development.

After further discussion, the representative of Ecuador accepted a suggestion by the representative of the Philippines to replace the words "producing countries" in the draft resolution by the words "under-developed countries".

At its 244th meeting on 18 December the Second Committee adopted the Ecuadorean draft resolution, by paragraphs, and then as a whole. The separate paragraphs and sub-paragraphs were adopted by votes, ranging from 36 votes to none, with no abstentions, to 31 votes to none, with 5 abstentions. The draft resolution as a whole, as amended, was adopted by 31 votes to none, with 5 abstentions.

The report (A/2350) of the Second Committee containing the draft resolution adopted by it was considered by the General Assembly at its 411th plenary meeting on 21 December 1952. The General Assembly adopted the draft resolution recommended by the Second Committee by 50 votes to none, without debate, as resolution 628 (VII). It read:

"The General Assembly,

"Bearing in mind the resolutions of the General Assembly and of the Economic and Social Council relating to the need for promoting the increased production of food in the world,

"Noting the statements of the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations to the effect that the production of foodstuffs is not increasing at the same rate as the population, and noting that food supplies per capita are still less than before the Second World War when more than half the population of the globe was already suffering from malnutrition,

"Recognizing:

"(a) That the problem of the shortage of foodstuffs is of extreme importance and the greatest urgency to all mankind since it affects its very existence—and particularly to the peoples of the countries most immediately threatened by food shortage,

"(b) That it is necessary to devise effective measures for increasing the aggregate production of foodstuffs with a view to fostering the economic development of under-developed countries and the relief of hardships caused by food shortages, particularly in the countries most immediately threatened,

"Considering:

"(a) That such measures call for co-ordinated, joint and effective international action by the Food and Agriculture Organization and all other international bodies which may be in a position to assist in increasing agricultural production, particularly of foodstuffs,

"(b) That it is incumbent upon these organizations, and particularly the United Nations, to give special attention to co-ordinated international action in this field,

"1. Calls the attention of the Economic and Social Council, of the specialized agencies concerned, and of the Technical Assistance Board to the increased need for co-ordinated and joint action with regard to the problem of increasing food production, particularly in the countries most immediately threatened by food shortage;

"2. Requests the Economic and Social Council to include in its annual reports to the General Assembly a special section with regard to action taken by the United Nations and the specialized agencies on the problem of continuing lack of an adequate production of foodstuffs."

E. SHORTAGE OF INSECTICIDES

At its fourteenth session, the Economic and Social Council considered the report (E/2183 and Corr. 1) of the working party it had requested (resolution 377 (XIII)) to examine the world position regarding the supply and requirements of the insecticides DDT and BHC and to make recommendations if a significant shortage were disclosed. The Council considered the question at the 124th meeting of the Economic Committee on 24 June and at its 628th plenary meeting on 2 July.

The working party met in Geneva in February; it consisted of representatives of the following producing or consuming countries: Argentina, Brazil, Ceylon, Egypt, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and the United States and was assisted by representatives from WHO, FAO and UNICEF. On the basis of available statistics for production, capacity, exports and requirements for 1951 and estimates for 1952, the working party found that supplies of these insecticides had increased considerably since the middle of 1951 and that a significant shortage no longer existed. Further increases of supply could be anticipated both in the major producing countries and in countries such as Argentina, Ceylon, Egypt, India, Pakistan, and the Union of South Africa, where manufacturing plants are projected or nearing completion. The working party stressed, however, the inadequacy of its data, particularly as to agricultural requirements of insecticides and the increasing demand to be expected for both health and agricultural uses.

Since an immediate shortage was not disclosed, under its terms of reference the working party made no recommendations but instead offered various observations. It noted the increasing availability of raw materials for these insecticides and the need for the continuation and extension of research in the entire field to meet problems such as that raised by the appearance of resistant insect strains. It expressed the hope that there would be a continuation of the tendency to reduce barriers to trade in insecticides. Certain trade difficulties, it considered, might be removed if: (1) different agencies co-ordinated their requests and thus avoided duplication of orders; (2) consumers placed their orders earlier to ensure continuous production and a lower and less fluctuating cost and maintained sufficient stocks to prevent short-term difficulties; (3) the terminology and specifications recommended by the WHO Expert Committee on Insecticides were adopted for health purposes and, perhaps, similar standards for agricultural requirements worked out; and (4) supplying countries eased the issuance of export licences. The working party also suggested the Statistical Office of the United Nations might consider whether some improvement could be made in the collection and dissemination of data on supplies and requirements of insecticides, and that a meeting in 1953 of a working party with wider terms of reference might be advisable.

In discussion of this report in the Council's Economic Committee the representatives of Canada, Egypt, France, Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed agreement with the finding that no great shortage currently existed. They considered that the working party should not be reconvened at present, and that FAO and WHO were the appropriate agencies to watch developments. They agreed on the need for better statistical information. The representative of Czechoslovakia criticized the report for not making recommendations for the prevention of all discrimination in the granting of export licences, stating that many countries, especially the United States, secured a political advantage from a shortage of insecticides. The representatives of Argentina, China and Egypt stressed the need for an adequate supply of insecticides for both health and agricultural purposes, particularly in underdeveloped countries where, they suggested, the erection of manufacturing plants might be encouraged under the Expanded Programme of technical assistance as well as by current assistance from UNICEF and WHO. The representative of the United Kingdom reminded the Committee of the existence of the Joint Working Party of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE), UNICEF, WHO and FAO which was studying the supply and needs for insecticides and considering the possibility of building new factories in the ECAFE area.

A draft resolution (E/AC.6/L.53) was proposed jointly by Argentina, Pakistan, the Philippines and the United States, who accepted an oral amendment proposed by the representative of Egypt to delete the reference in the fourth paragraph (see below) to the continuation of the "present favourable" situation. The representative of Egypt considered that the situation with regard to insecticides was not as favourable as was implied.

The draft resolution, as amended, was adopted by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, by the Economic Committee (E/2273) and by the Council by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, as resolution 422 (XIV). It read:

"The Economic and Social Council

"1. Takes note of the report of the Working Party which was convened in accordance with Council resolution 377 (XIII) to examine the world position regarding the supply of DDT and BHC;

"2. Expresses its appreciation to the members of the Working Party for their study of this question;

"3. Notes the finding of the Working Party that at the present time a significant shortage of these insecticides does not exist;

"4. Commends the report of the Working Party to the Members of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies concerned for their serious consideration and detailed examination, and urges them most strongly to pay particular attention to the implementation, in so far as possible, of the recommendations of the Working Party, particularly those relating to the need for continued research on the use of newer insecticides with special emphasis on the problem of the development of resistant insect strains, the time of placing of orders, and the further removal of restrictive trade barriers, in order that the situation may be further improved; and

"5. Decides to consider at some future date the need for any further meeting of the Working Party in the light of any significant change in the demand-supply situation in respect of insecticides."

F. PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION OF NEWSPRINT

At its 654th plenary meeting on 22 July 1952, the Economic and Social Council considered the question of the production and distribution of newsprint and printing paper. It had before it the report of the Secretary-General (E/2241), submitted in accordance with resolution 374 (XIII),⁴⁶ describing the measures that had been taken to alleviate the immediate crisis in supply and to improve the long-term situation.

⁴⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951 pp. 428-29.

The report stated that UNESCO had intensified its campaign to warn the public of the serious consequences arising from a shortage of newsprint, and that to meet the immediate crisis the Pulp and Paper Committee of the International Materials Conference (IMC) had recommended emergency allocations during the eight months ended 31 January 1952. At its April 1952 meeting the Pulp and Paper Committee concluded that the shortage had been largely relieved and allocations were no longer necessary at that time, and in May the Timber Committee of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) noted the improvement in over-all supply since the third quarter of 1951.

As to long-term efforts aimed at increasing world supplies of newsprint and printing paper, the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) meeting from November to December 1951 had concluded that FAO bore a major responsibility in this field and recommended actions to be taken by the organization and its Member Governments. Following the Conference, FAO initiated action concentrated mainly on: (1) the appraisal of future demand; (2) the expansion of capacity in the traditional producing areas; (3) technical progress in pulp-making methods; and (4) local exploration of conditions for the establishment of pulp and paper industries and selection of appropriate sites.

Included in the action reported was the issue by UNESCO to 147 countries and territories of a questionnaire prepared in consultation with FAO which requested information on consumption and on immediate and future requirements for newsprint and printing paper. A joint ECE/FAO study on European timber trends and a joint ECLA/FAO study on trends in pulp supply and requirements in Latin America were in hand. Surveys and inquiries were being conducted in a number of industrialized countries to secure information on plans for increasing pulp and paper capacity. FAO planned to hold a meeting of experts towards the end of 1952 to review the current state of knowledge regarding the manufacture of pulp and paper from available raw materials and the possibilities of applying new processes on an industrial scale.

Governments of countries not currently major producers but which seemed to offer reasonable possibilities for the establishment of pulp and paper factories were advised by FAO of its willingness to send short-term exploratory missions. Arrangements for the dispatch of such missions were concluded with sixteen countries; seven others, where forestry missions were already at work, had requested pulp and paper experts. Competent authorities in the United Kingdom, France and Belgium were approached by FAO with regard to investment possibilities in their dependent territories, particularly in Africa. Paper experts for Burma and the Philippines had been provided by the United Nations, which also awarded or recommended thirteen fellowships for study in the field, and included special lectures on forestry in the training centres conducted by it in various regions. In the course of its normal duties the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development made or considered loans to assist in increasing pulp production or the manufacturing capacity of paper mills including a loan of $20 million to the Bank of Finland.

The Council had before it also a draft resolution (E/L.438) proposed jointly by Canada, Egypt, France, Mexico and the United States. After referring to the report, the draft resolution would have the Council:

(1) note the improvement in supply since its previous session and the favourable short-term prospects; (2) express the opinion that, consequently, no immediate international action was necessary; (3) request the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies to continue their efforts in connexion with the long-term action requested in Council resolution 374 (XIII); and (4) ask the Secretary-General to report to the Council in 1954 unless fresh developments justified an earlier report.

The resolution was adopted by the Council as resolution 423 (XIV) by 15 votes to none, with 3 abstentions.

G. TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS⁴⁷

The Transport and Communications Commission, in accordance with Council resolution 414 (XIII), did not hold a session in 1952. Activities in the field of transport and communications continued and the preparatory work for the sixth session of the Commission, scheduled to be held in February 1953, was carried on in accordance with the decisions taken by the Council in resolution 379 (XIII).⁴⁸

⁴⁷ For ratifications of Convention on the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, see under that heading, Part II Specialized Agencies.

⁴⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 436-43.

1. Entry into Force of the Convention on Road Traffic

The Convention on Road Traffic, opened for signature at the United Nations Conference on Road and Motor Transport in Geneva in 1949, entered into force on 26 March 1952. The following twelve States had ratified or acceded to the Convention as of 18 December 1952 (E/CN.2/138): Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, Monaco, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Sweden, the Union of South Africa and the United States. Cuba, France, Italy, Luxembourg, the Union of South Africa and the United States had also ratified the Protocol Concerning Countries or Territories at Present Occupied.

The Protocol on Road Signs and Signals, concluded at the same Conference, had, as of 7 December 1952, been ratified by Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and Sweden and acceded to by Monaco. By the end of 1952 the Protocol had received the required number of ratifications or accessions and, in accordance with its Article 58, is to enter into force on 20 December 1953.

2. Road Signs and Signals

The Group of Experts on Road Signs and Signals, established in accordance with Council resolution 272(X), held its third session from 23 June to 18 July 1952 in New York and completed its study of the problem of devising a unified world-wide system of road signs and signals. It prepared a draft convention embodying such a system which was included in the final report of the Group of Experts to the Transport and Communications Commission (E/CN.2/119; E/CN.2/CONF.1/12). The system contained in the draft convention has many uniform features but in some cases permits the use of alternative solutions.

The Group of Experts, in their report, expressed the opinion that a gradual application of a uniform system would be the best method of securing eventual acceptance and thus uniformity on a world-wide scale, and therefore decided to omit from the draft convention any indication of a period of time during which the introduction of uniform signs and signals should be accomplished by governments.

Article 41 of the draft convention provides that it shall terminate and replace in the relations between Contracting States the provisions of the 1931 Convention Concerning the Unification of Road Signals and the 1949 Protocol on Road Signs and Signals.

3. Licensing of Motor Vehicle Drivers

The Committee of Experts on Licensing of Motor Vehicle Drivers, established in accordance with Council resolution 379 B (XIII) met from 29 September to 24 October and prepared a report (E/CN.2/133; E/CN.2/CONF.2/3 and Corr. 1 and 2 and Add.1) for submission to the Commission. The report contained draft uniform minimum regulations for the licensing of motor vehicle drivers, which were recommended for consideration by governments in connexion with their domestic laws and regulations; it also contained certain draft general provisions applicable to international traffic for consideration as an annex to the Convention on Road Traffic.

The Committee noted that its recommendations with regard to mental and physical fitness of drivers were provisional and recommended that the assistance of the World Health Organization (WHO) be sought with respect to the requirements and methods of determining mental and physical fitness of applicants for driving permits.

4. Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 379 E (XIII), instructed the Secretary-General to examine, in consultation with international and, where appropriate, national bodies, the various aspects of the problem of the transport of dangerous goods with a view to determining which of these aspects are appropriate for uniform, or approximately uniform, regulation with respect to the various means of transport. He was asked to report to the Commission at its sixth session on the results of the examination.

The Secretary-General carried out this examination during 1952 in consultation with the competent organizations. The results of the examination and recommendations for further action were embodied in a report to the Commission (E/CN.2/126 and Corr.1).

5. Customs Formalities for the Temporary Importation of Private Vehicles and for Tourism

Council resolution 379 D(XIII) instructed the Secretary-General to circulate to governments the draft International Customs Convention on Touring, prepared under the auspices of the Economic Commission for Europe, together with the proposals submitted jointly by the World Touring and Automobile Organization (OTA) and the International Union of Official Travel Organizations (IUOTO). He was asked to request the views of governments on:

(1) the desirability of concluding international conventions on customs formalities for: (a) the temporary importation of private vehicles and their equipment, and (b) tourism (i.e., the personal effects of tourists travelling by any means of transport); and (2) the suitability of the drafts mentioned above as a basis of discussion for concluding such conventions.

The Secretary-General, accordingly, circulated the documents to governments for comment, and prepared a report containing these documents, together with the comments from governments for consideration by the Commission at its sixth session (E/CN.2/135).

H. FISCAL QUESTIONS

The Fiscal Commission, whose fourth session is scheduled to be held from 27 April to 8 May, 1953, did not meet in 1952. Accordingly, the Secretariat continued in the fiscal field to carry out the work programme recommended by the Fiscal Commission at its third session and approved by the Economic and Social Council in its resolution 378(XIII).⁴⁹ In implementing this programme, the Secretariat, in compliance with the priorities set up in this resolution, was mainly concerned with:

(1) rendering technical assistance to under-developed countries in the fiscal field; (2) expanding and developing its activities as an international fiscal information service; (3) carrying on work on budgetary management for economic development; and (4) investigating the impact of tax factors on private foreign investment.

In addition, the Secretariat initiated, jointly with the Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO), a study on the tax burdens of agriculture and undertook a certain number of tasks in connexion with the requirements of regional economic commissions.

In the field of technical assistance, new requests for experts on budgetary and tax policy and fiscal administration were acted upon during the year; United Nations missions sent to El Salvador, Libya and Afghanistan included fiscal experts. Expert advice was given to the Government of Israel. Missions to Colombia, Ecuador and Haiti, organized in previous years, continued their work on fiscal problems.

To evaluate the growing fund of knowledge and experience accumulated by technical assistance missions in the fiscal field, a conference on comparative fiscal administration was organized in Geneva from 16 to 25 July, 1951.⁵⁰ The conference brought together experts who had given technical assistance and those from countries which had received such assistance. They jointly undertook a comparative evaluation of proposed fiscal techniques so as to provide significant factual information and develop policy approaches that could serve as guidance for future missions. The report on this conference, published in 1952, summarizes the discussions at the conference, which covered mainly the fields of personal income taxation, taxation of business, capital gains taxation, net worth taxation, taxation of agriculture and the technique of indirect taxation. The report also contains digests of fiscal recommendations included in reports of selected technical assistance missions.

The Fiscal Division of the Department of Economic Affairs of the Secretariat also co-operated during the year with the Technical Assistance Administration in the selection, briefing and training of fellows and scholars in the fiscal field.

Through its fiscal information service, established originally in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 67(V), the Secretariat continued to publish and work for the improvement of public finance statistics. In preparing the country tables contained in the public finance chapter of the Statistical Yearbook, 1951-1952, further refinements and additional data were provided. In addition, a study, "Public Finance Statistics, 1938-1950", was initiated, giving more detailed information on government expenditure, receipts and public debt outstanding. Such information has hitherto been available only for countries covered by Public Finance Surveys and Public Finance Information Papers.⁵¹

In the budgetary field, a study was published, entitled *Government Accounting and Budget Execution*⁵² dealing with the general requirements for an adequate system of central government accounting and budget execution. The study

⁴⁹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 443-46.

⁵⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 443.

⁵¹ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 445. Public Finance Surveys: Venezuela, India, U.N.P. Sales Nos.: 1951.XVI.2 and 1952.XVI.1; Public Finance Information Papers: Iran, Iraq, Egypt, Colombia, Italy, Peru, U.N.P. Sales Nos.: 1951.XVI.4,6,7,8 and 9, and 1952. XVI.2, respectively.

⁵² U.N.P. Sales No.: 1952.XVI.3.

examines the nature of accountability and sets forth the accounting practices which are necessary for effective management and control of government operations. In a separate section a detailed examination was made of the execution and accounting systems employed in France, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United States.

Work was also initiated on a "Manual for the Classification of Government Accounts", which is to serve as a working tool for budget administrators, especially in connexion with technical assistance requirements. The Manual will contain recommendations on the practical application of the principles analysed in an earlier study published in 1951, entitled Budgetary Structure and Classification of Government Accounts,⁵³ Model sets of accounts will be provided with item-by-item classifications of government expenditures and receipts, according to their object and character, as well as model sets of accounts for public undertakings and social insurance schemes.

The practice of publishing a regional public finance survey each year as a separate chapter of the Economic Survey for Asia and the Far East, at the request of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, was continued. The chapter in the 1951 survey placed particular emphasis on the effects of fiscal policy in combating the inflationary pressures arising from the Korean conflict.

In pursuance of its continuing inquiry into the role of taxation in promoting the flow of private investment capital to under-developed countries, the Secretariat initiated a study, entitled "Taxation in Capital-Exporting and Capital-Importing Countries of Foreign Private Investment in Latin America." The special orientation toward Latin America was in accordance with requests by the Economic Commission for Latin America (resolution 3(IV) and the Economic and Social Council (resolution 416 D (XIV)).⁵⁴

A first volume of this study, entitled United States Income Taxation of Private United States Investment in Latin America, was prepared for publication in March 1953. It is the purpose of this volume to evaluate the impact of United States tax law on income derived from outside the United States, both from the viewpoint of the United States investor—using different forms of doing business with varying tax results—and from the perspective of the Latin American countries and their tax systems. The study also analyses the proposals currently under discussion for changes in the relevant provisions of the United States Internal Revenue Code.

It is intended to continue this study through similar inquiries into the tax systems of other capital exporting countries and of selected countries in Latin America. Among the latter, studies on Brazil, Chile and Mexico were in preparation at the end of the year.

A new study on "Corporate Tax Problems" (E/CN.8/66 and Addenda),⁵⁵ in the nature of a progress report, was issued late in 1952. This study, which is a continuation of the first preliminary report submitted to the third session of the Fiscal Commission under the title "Comparative Approach to National and International Corporate Tax Problems" (E/CN.8/55), deals with corporate tax problems in both developed and under-developed countries, and gives special consideration to the contribution of corporate taxation to economic development.

In the field of international tax problems, the Secretariat has continued the analysis of the taxation of foreign nationals, assets and transactions undertaken under Economic and Social Council resolution 378 B II (XIII).⁵⁶ A first comparative study (E/CN.8/68), "Taxation of Foreign Taxpayers and Foreign Income", presents an integrated picture of the tax treatment in selected countries of foreign taxpayers and foreign income as it results from the combined impact of national legislation and international tax agreements. This study is limited to taxation of income and profits and covers Argentina, Canada, Israel and New Zealand.

The Secretariat continued the publication of the series, International Tax Agreements, which contains the texts of all international agreements for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion. Volume IV, scheduled for publication toward the end of 1953, will contain some 50 new agreements signed since the beginning of 1951 and a few earlier agreements not previously published. It will also bring up-to-date the preceding volume, World Guide to International Tax Agreements, 1843-1951,⁵⁷ which contains comprehensive and detailed tables giving the current legal status of all known tax agreements.

⁵³ U.N.P. Sales No.: 1951.XVI.3 See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 496.

⁵⁴ See p. 371.

⁵⁵ The addenda provide summaries of the corporate tax systems of Argentina, Belgium, Canada, France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and New Zealand. Further summaries on Egypt, India, Israel and the United States were in preparation.

⁵⁶ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 444.

⁵⁷ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 445.

A review of fiscal developments, 1951-1952 (E/CN.8/74) was issued in December 1952, providing a brief factual summary of outstanding fiscal changes in Member countries during 1951 and 1952, including important legislative and administrative developments.

In accordance with Council resolution 378 I 2. (XIII)⁵⁸ investigations were pursued jointly during 1952 with the Food and Agriculture Organization on the tax burdens of agriculture. The first—fact-finding—stage covers the structure and yield of the principal types of taxes levied in different countries on land income and land produce. It is intended to undertake an analysis of these tax systems in terms of their adjustment to institutional and economic changes in the post-war period and to the needs of economic development.

The Secretary-General accepted an offer of co-operation in the World Tax Service project tendered by Harvard University in response to Economic and Social Council resolution 378 G (XIII). Through the Harvard Law School Program in International Taxation, the University plans:

(1) to undertake studies in comparative and international tax problems which fit into the over-all research plan of the Secretariat; (2) to provide specialized training to tax specialists from under-developed countries who have received United Nations technical assistance scholarships; and (3) to consider the publication of a World Tax Service designed to provide a continuous service of internationally comparable information on national tax laws and administration.

I. STATISTICAL ACTIVITIES

During 1952 the efforts of the United Nations in the field of statistics were directed toward carrying out the programme approved by the Economic and Social Council as incorporated in the previous reports of the Statistical Commission. There was no session of the Commission in 1952.

Because of the increased need expressed in many countries for adequate statistical data on which to base programmes of economic and social development, the Secretary-General in carrying out the recommendations of the Statistical Commission placed increased emphasis during 1952 on assisting countries in the development of national statistics. The rendering of this assistance was made possible to an increased extent by the availability of funds under the United Nations expanded programme of technical assistance.

The responsibility of the United Nations for the improvement of international comparability and the development of international standards in the field of statistics was carried forward concurrently, as was the regular collection and dissemination of statistical data.

1. Improvement of National Statistics

During 1952 the assistance given the statistically under-developed countries by the Statistical Office in co-operation with the Technical Assistance Administration was considerably expanded. The efforts of the United Nations in this direction were co-ordinated with the technical assistance activities of the specialized agencies. The nature of the assistance given varied, depending on the particular needs of a country or area, while at the same time efforts were made to improve national statistical services on a more general basis; for example, work was carried forward in preparing guides and manuals for the collection of economic data designed to improve basic statistical methods and procedures.

Direct assistance to requesting countries takes the following forms:

(1) The assignment of individual experts to a requesting country. Depending on the over-all needs of the country, the expert's assignment may cover the development of a specific field of statistics, his task may be the initiation or the improvement of a statistical service, or he may be requested to devote his time principally to the training of government statisticians through a national training centre.

During 1952, statistical experts were assigned to the following countries: Afghanistan, Burma, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Greece, Haiti, Israel, Jamaica (British West Indies), Libya, Panama, Philippines and Thailand.

(2) The convening of regional training centres, conferences and seminars. The purpose of regional training centres is to bring together the technicians in a given area dealing with a particular type of statistics so as to examine, by demonstration, discussions and lectures, recommended methods and techniques in collecting and processing statistical data. During August and September 1952 the Training Centre on Vital and Health Statistics for the Western Pacific area was held in Tokyo, in co-operation with the World Health

⁵⁸ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 446.

Organization and the Japanese Government; 32 technicians from eight countries participated. The United Nations co-operated with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) in the Latin American Training Centre on Agricultural Statistics held from July to October 1952 in Quito, Ecuador; the Centre was attended by 60 participants from eleven countries. The United Nations continued its assistance to the International Statistical Training Centre in Calcutta, India, by the assignment of short-term lecturers.

In August 1952 the Inter-American Centre on Biostatistics was initiated in Santiago, Chile; this Centre was organized by the United Nations with the co-operation of the World Health Organization and the Government of Chile. It provides training in vital and health statistics to selected government statisticians from Latin America and is designed as a long-term project.

Seminars and conferences are intended to bring together senior government officials for the purpose of discussing common problems in a particular field of statistics. In July 1952 a seminar on Production and Price Statistics was held in Beirut, Lebanon, in co-operation with FAO. At this seminar 23 government officials from eight Middle Eastern countries discussed selected problems connected with the collection and processing of production and price data, as well as United Nations standards and recommended practices in this field.

The Second Regional Conference of Statisticians for the Asia and Far East Area, held in Bangkok in September 1952, dealt with the same subject and was sponsored by the secretariat of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE), FAO and the United Nations; 41 statisticians from seventeen countries participated.

In executing programmes of assistance in specific fields of statistics, it had become clear that a discussion of over-all organizational problems by officials directly responsible for their national statistical services would prove extremely useful. To this end, the United Nations (Technical Assistance Administration and the Statistical Office) in co-operation with the Canadian Government organized the United Nations International Seminar on Statistical Organization in Ottawa in October 1952. Thirty-two senior statistical officials from 27 countries which had previously requested United Nations assistance in statistics attended this Seminar. The lecturing staff was provided by the United Nations Statistical Office, the specialized agencies and several national statistical offices.

(3) The award of United Nations fellowships in statistics to promising statisticians from under-developed countries. The award enables the fellow to observe statistical methods and procedures in the statistically more advanced countries and has been found to meet some of the needs of the under-developed countries for personnel trained both in the theoretical as well as in the practical operational aspects of statistics. During 1952, 41 fellowships in statistics were awarded under the United Nations programme of technical assistance.

2. Development of Recommended Practices and Improvement of the International Comparability of Statistics

During the year progress was made in establishing recommended standards and practices in the following fields: the Standard International Trade Classification, definitions for trade statistics, basic industrial statistics, wholesale price index numbers, national income and social accounts, vital statistics, social statistics, and statistical sampling.

By the end of 1952 countries accounting for more than 60 per cent of the world's trade were reporting their trade figures according to the Standard International Trade Classification, adopted by the Economic and Social Council in July 1950.⁵⁹ Direct assistance was given to countries in the Far East and in Central America with a view to arriving at a rearrangement of trade data enabling international comparisons according to the Classification. As requested by the Statistical Commission, the preparation was begun of a coding manual and alphabetical index to the Classification to assist countries in coding their trade data according to the Classification.

At its sixth session held in May 1951 the Statistical Commission had recommended that the Secretary-General in consultation with qualified experts prepare a report on definitions to be applied to external trade statistics.⁶⁰ At the invitation of the Secretary-General, a group of experts met in June 1952 at United Nations Headquarters and presented a set of principles to be applied to questions of coverage, valuation, origin and destination and other aspects of trade statistics for consideration by the Statistical Commission at its seventh session in February 1953.

Following the consideration by the Statistical Commission at its fifth session in May 1950 of various aspects of the collection of basic industrial statistics, proposals containing basic definitions covering items previously recommended and clarifying a number of points were prepared for submission to the Commission's seventh session.

⁵⁹ See Y.U.N., 1950, p. 493.

⁶⁰ See Y.U.N., 1951, p. 448.

The recommendations of a group of experts upon systems of wholesale price index numbers were circulated to national statisticians and proposals were prepared for consideration by the Statistical Commission.

In view of the fact that many countries have recently started compiling statistics of their national income and expenditure, the Statistical Commission at its sixth session had recommended that the Secretary-General should formulate guiding concepts, classifications and definitions for the measurement of national income and the construction of social accounts.

At the invitation of the Secretary-General a group of experts met at Headquarters in July 1952 and submitted a report entitled "A System of National Accounts and Supporting Tables." Following consultations with national offices and interested agencies, this report, with appropriate comments, was to be submitted to the Commission's seventh session, as well as recommendations regarding methods of collecting capital formation statistics.

As a consequence of recommendations made by the Population Commission and the Statistical Commission, the Secretary-General prepared for submission to the Commission a memorandum on the principles for a vital statistics system. These proposals incorporate comments previously made by the Commission as well as comments received from national statisticians; the principles as set forth in this memorandum are not designed as regulations or mandatory requirements but are intended to serve as guides to the establishment of vital statistics records and to improve comparability of data collected.

A preliminary study of the needs for various kinds of social statistics was also prepared for submission to the Commission's seventh session.

During 1952 the Statistical Office continued its advice to national governments upon sampling matters and published another issue of "Sample Surveys of Current Interest".

3. Collection and Dissemination of Statistical Data

During 1952 the Statistical Office continued the regular collection and publication of data in the fields of external trade, production and prices, transport, national income, population and vital statistics as well as such other special fields as were required. The data published are obtained from official government returns.

The Statistical Yearbook 1952 containing major economic data and the Demographic Yearbook 1952, which gives a summary of demographic data, were prepared, as well as the Yearbook of International Trade Statistics 1951, presenting commodity and trade by country data for 52 countries. These three annual publications present summary data on selected subjects and are designed as basic reference works; the need for more up-to-date information is being met by the following periodicals: Monthly Bulletin of Statistics containing current statistical information on economic and social conditions for more than 70 countries; Commodity Trade Statistics (quarterly) presenting value of imports and exports classified according to the Standard International Trade Classification; Direction of International Trade (quarterly) published jointly with the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and containing monthly trade origin and destination figures for some 95 countries; Population and Vital Statistics Reports (quarterly) presenting most recently available birth and death rates and population totals for some 250 countries and territories; Statistics of National Income and Expenditure (semi-annual) presenting available up-to-date data in this field.

In addition, several publications appeared on special subjects, such as: World Energy Statistics in Selected Years 1929-1950, Retail Price Comparisons for International Salary Determination and several reports of training centres.

J. ACTIVITIES OF THE REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS

Increasingly effective co-ordination of global and regional economic activities, through collaboration between Headquarters, the secretariats of the regional economic commissions and several of the specialized agencies, was achieved during the year. Active co-operation between the three regional economic commissions themselves—the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE), and the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA)—also increased, notably in regard to inter-regional trade and the development of the iron and steel industry.

1. Economic Commission for Europe (ECE)⁶¹

The Economic Commission for Europe held its seventh session from 3 to 18 March 1952 at Geneva (E/2187, Parts III and IV). Representatives of 25 European countries, the United States and various specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations participated.

Before the Commission were:

(a) a Note by the Executive Secretary on the decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly bearing upon the Commission (E/ECE/144); (b) the Economic Survey of Europe in 1951 (E/ECE/140/Rev.1); (c) reports of the committees of the Commission on their activities from 13 June 1951 to 18 March 1952 (E/ECE/142-A-G) and an additional Note to the reports of the committees by the Executive Secretary (E/ECE/142-H); and (d) a Note by the Executive Secretary on other activities of the Commission and its secretariat (E/ECE/143). The latter dealt principally with ECE co-operation with ECAFE and ECLA; special studies; technical assistance; relations with specialized agencies; intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations; and relations with the Allied Control Authorities in Germany.

The Commission noted, inter alia, the decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council concerning the continuation of the Commission, the amendments to its terms of reference and noted their decisions and the recommendations of the Council regarding its rules of procedure.⁶² It accordingly requested its subsidiary bodies to grant voting rights to European nations not Members of the United Nations admitted to participate in the work of the Commission. The Commission also decided to ask the Executive Secretary to inform the competent authorities of the urgent necessity for taking appropriate steps to ensure the complete implementation of its rule of procedure designating English, French and Russian as working languages.

Following a discussion of the General Assembly's resolution on integrated economic development and commercial agreements (523(VI))⁶³ the Commission unanimously noted the joint trade studies already being carried out by ECE, ECLA and FAO on the one hand, and ECE, ECAFE and FAO on the other hand, as well as the work relating to inter-regional co-operation being undertaken by the committees of the Commission. Further, it decided to seek closer collaboration with ECLA and ECAFE and instructed its committees to carry out the terms of the General Assembly's resolution within their respective fields. The Commission invited the Executive Secretary to maintain contact with interested governments and to continue consultations on the secretariat level with Headquarters and with the Executive Secretaries of the other Regional Economic Commissions, with a view to finding ways of giving effect to the recommendations of the General Assembly's resolution, and to report on this subject to the next session of the Commission.

The Commission reviewed the economic situation in Europe, using as a basis the Economic Survey for Europe in 1951, issued by the Commission's secretariat. In the course of the general review of the work of its committees, prefaced by a statement of the Executive Secretary which emphasized especially the importance of fuller participation, particularly of Eastern European Governments, in the committees' activities, the delegates reiterated their belief in the actual and potential importance of the Commission's subsidiary bodies in terms of all-European economic co-operation.

The Commission discussed separately the report by each committee on its past and planned activities and unanimously adopted resolutions with respect to the Industry and Materials Committee and the Committee on the Development of Trade.

In the first resolution the Commission stated that consideration of fundamental problems relating to the supply of raw materials and equipment for investment and consumer goods industries, indispensable for raising the standard of living, constituted an important task of the Industry and Materials Committee. It outlined procedures for the possible convening of a plenary meeting of the Committee and decided to continue to convene ad hoc working parties to deal with specific economic, industrial, legal and institutional problems, or with a series of problems relating to a particular branch of industry.

The second resolution followed a full exchange of views on the problem of East-West trade, based, inter alia, on a Note by the Executive Secretary reviewing his consultations with governments since the Commission's previous session (E/ECE - 142-H).

⁶¹ For the work of the Commission prior to 1 January 1952, see previous issues of the Yearbook. (For the revised terms of reference of the Commission, see E/2152, Appendix II).

⁶² See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 66-67.

⁶³ See Y.U.N., 1951, pp. 418-19.

The Commission unanimously adopted a resolution expressing its belief that the expansion, by means of mutually satisfactory agreements, of trade between, on the one hand, countries of Eastern Europe and, on the other, countries of Western Europe, would benefit all European countries. It noted with satisfaction the steps already taken by the Executive Secretary to explore the possibilities of such an expansion and the statements made by the representatives of governments participating in the work of the Commission about their willingness to achieve that expansion.

It invited the Executive Secretary to continue to explore with interested Governments the practical possibilities of trade expansion, on a mutually advantageous basis, including deliveries and counter-deliveries, and if his explorations indicated a reasonable prospect of concrete results, to convene in the autumn of 1952 a consultation of trade experts at the end of which consideration would be given to the desirability of an ad hoc Meeting on Trade.

The Commission further instructed its committees to assist the Executive Secretary in his task by examining export availabilities and import requirements in their respective fields, and reminded governments that the services of the secretariat were available to facilitate the intergovernmental solution of specific trading problems or to explore trade proposals which governments might wish to put forward.

The Commission outlined certain desiderata concerning what the experts attending the Consultation should be prepared to do.

a. WORK OF THE SUBSIDIARY BODIES OF THE COMMISSION

(1) Committee on Agricultural Problems

Due to the fact that Eastern and Western European countries could not agree on a programme of common interest, the Committee on Agricultural Problems did not meet during the year 1952 (E/ECE/142-A and E/ECE/153-A).

Work on standardization of perishable foodstuffs, however, continued. The second and third sessions of the Working Party dealing with this problem were held in Geneva in February and September. At the third session a number of recommendations were approved regarding the general provisions to be applied in Europe for the commercial standardization and quality control of certain foodstuffs. It was agreed that the Executive Secretary would contact Governments after a period of a year in order to have their opinion on the possibility of going further with these recommendations by incorporating them in a convention.

The secretariat continued the study on prices decided upon at the Committee's second session and issued a paper Prices of Agricultural Products and Fertilisers in 1951/2 (AGRI/41) for general distribution.

(2) Coal Committee

The Coal Committee held its 23rd to 26th sessions in February, May, August and November 1952 (E/ECE/142-B and E/ECE/153-B). The work of the Committee during the year was concerned with European coal trade, coal production and consumption, efficient utilization of solid fuels, coal classification and coal statistics.

During 1952, the increase in coal production over 1951 in most countries, both in Eastern and Western Europe, fell below expectations. The total increase in Western Europe was 11 million tons, compared with 21 million tons in the previous year. In Poland and Czechoslovakia planned increases were not achieved.

