The representative of China thought that the task of administering Jerusalem rightly belonged to the Trusteeship Council. As a Mandated Territory Palestine fell within the purview of the Council. The Council, moreover, would be carrying out the fundamental idea of Trusteeship, which was that the responsible authority should be the guardian of the interests of the people. Article 81 of the Charter explicitly mentioned the possibility that the United Nations might act as an Administering Authority.

As a result of the Council's detailed examination, the draft Statute for the City of Jerusalem underwent considerable amendment. At the 35th meeting on March 10, 1948 (T/SR.62), the Council adopted a resolution (32(II)) to the effect that the draft Statute (T/118/Rev.1 and Rev.1/Add.1) was then in satisfactory form, but that the question of its formal approval should be deferred until the third part of the second session.

On a number of matters the draft Statute required the Council to issue instructions to the Governor of the City. At the 33rd meeting on March 8, 1948 (T/SR.60), the Council adopted provisional instructions to the Governor of the City of Jerusalem (T/144).

The Council considered also the financial implications of the Statute and at the 35th meeting (T/SR.62) adopted a resolution (T/151) requesting the Secretary-General to provide funds during 1948 for such activities as it might authorize, and to lay before the Council, at its next regular session, estimates for the year 1949 to enable the Council to make appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly.

The Trusteeship Council concluded the second part of its second session with the 35th meeting on March 10, 1948. The Council's 36th meeting (T/SR.63) was held on April 21, 1948, to consider further the question of the approval of the Statute for the City of Jerusalem. In view of the fact that since the Council's previous meeting the second special session of the General Assembly had been convened to consider further the question of the future government of Palestine, the representative of the United States proposed that the Trusteeship Council should inform the General Assembly that it had formulated a Statute for the City of Jerusalem and was now in a position to approve it by April 29. He proposed that the Council should refer the Statute in its latest form (T/118/Rev.2) to the General Assembly for such further instructions as the Assembly might see fit to give.

Supporting the United States proposal, the representatives of the United Kingdom, Belgium, Mexico and China expressed the view that the General Assembly's resolution 181(II) of November 29 which had formed the basis of the Trusteeship Council's work might be modified during the General Assembly's special session. It would therefore be best to leave the General Assembly itself to come to a decision with regard to the Statute for the City of Jerusalem and the appointment of a Governor. The Trusteeship Council, they considered, had fulfilled its duty by framing the Statute.

The representative of Belgium proposed that unless the Council received new instructions from the General Assembly it should not reconvene on or before April 29 to approve the Statute. He therefore moved the deletion of that part of the United States draft resolution stating that the Council was in a position to approve the Statute by April 29.

The representatives of Australia, New Zealand and France considered that adoption of the draft Statute by the Trusteeship Council could be deferred only within the terms of the General Assembly's resolution of November 29. As that resolution had not been rescinded, it was the Council's duty to adopt the Statute within the prescribed period of five months. If the Council received no further instructions from the General Assembly, failure to approve the Statute for the City of Jerusalem would be a failure to carry out the General Assembly's mandate.

The Trusteeship Council adopted the Belgian amendment to the United States draft resolution by a vote of 6 to 3, with 2 abstentions. The resolution as amended was adopted by a vote of 8 to 0, with 3 abstentions. An Australian motion that the Council should meet again on April 28 to take action with regard to the Statute for Jerusalem was rejected by a vote of 3 to 3, with 4 abstentions.

No further instructions to the Trusteeship Council were issued by the General Assembly at its second special session.

At the first meeting of its third session (T/SR.74) the Council included in its agenda the item "Present state of the question of the Statute for the City of Jerusalem". The item was taken up by the Council at the 34th and 35th meetings of its third session on July 28 and 29, 1948 (T/SR.107, 108). The representative of Belgium stated that consideration of the question of Jerusalem at this time might prove dangerous. The resolution of the problem of Jerusalem, he stated, no longer depended on the Trusteeship Council. The Security Council had been seized of the Palestine question and a Mediator had been appointed.³⁹ The Trusteeship Council therefore would be making a grievous mistake if it embarked upon a discussion which was certain to hamper the task of the Mediator.

The majority of the Council's members supported the Belgian proposal, although the representative of France, in particular, stressed that he did so purely on grounds of expediency. In the opinion of the representative of France the Council had not completed its task under the terms of the General Assembly's resolution 181(II) of November 29 and was still seized of the question of the draft Statute for Jerusalem. The representative of China, on the other hand, expressed the view that the Council had fulfilled its duty and that in the absence of further instructions from the General Assembly no action by the Council was called for.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the Trusteeship Council had failed to complete its work on the Statute and had, without any legal justification, evaded its responsibility by referring the question back to the General Assembly. He stressed that the only directive which the Council had received on the question of the Statute was the General Assembly's resolution of November 29 and that it had received no instructions modifying or suspending that resolution. He therefore proposed that the Council should at once take up the question of the Statute of the City of Jerusalem. The U.S.S.R. delegation wished to offer amendments to the Statute as soon as the Council embarked upon its consideration.

The Council, however, by a vote of 8 to 1, with 3 abstentions, adopted the Belgian motion for indefinite postponement of the consideration of the question of the Statute of the City of Jerusalem.

b. THE PROTECTION OF THE CITY OF JERUSALEM AND ITS INHABITANTS

The General Assembly at its second special session by a resolution (185(S-2)), dated April 26, 1948, referred the question of the protection of the City of Jerusalem and its inhabitants to the Trusteeship Council.

The Council submitted a separate report (A/544) on the question to the General Assembly on May 5, 1948.⁴⁰

2. South West Africa

By its resolution (141(II)), dated November 1947,⁴¹ on the question of South West Africa, the General Assembly authorized the Council to examine the report on the administration of South West Africa for the year 1946 submitted by the Government of the Union of South Africa and to submit its observations thereon to the General Assembly.

The Council, at the sixth meeting of the second session on December 1, 1947 (T/P.V.33), requested the Secretary-General to inform the Union Government that the Council would shortly be examining the report, and that if the Union Government wished to send a representative to be present during the examination he would be welcome. At the fifteenth meeting (T/P.V.42), the Council took note of the reply of the Union Government that it did not intend to send a representative to be present during the examination of the report but would be prepared, if so requested, to transmit further available data in writing for the information of the Council.

Both at the sixth and fifteenth meetings of its second session the Council discussed the manner in which it should examine the report of the Union of South Africa. The representative of China suggested that the Council should examine the report in the same manner as it would examine a report from a Trust Territory. South West Africa, he stated, was a Mandated Territory. By design and by general acceptance the functions and responsibilities of the Permanent Mandates Commission had fallen upon the Trusteeship Council. The Government of South Africa had asserted that it would continue to administer South West Africa in the spirit of the Mandate. Moreover, the Chinese representative stated, the majority of the Members of the United Nations had, for two years in succession, considered that this territory should become a Trust Territory. For these reasons the Council should examine the report before it in the same manner as it considered reports under Article 87 of the Charter.

³⁹ See p. 281.

In this connection the question of supplementary sources of information was also raised. The representatives of Mexico, the Philippines and Iraq thought that the Council was entitled to seek information from other sources than the report of the Government of South Africa. All documents connected with the question should be made available to the Council, as without such additional documents the Council would have no basis of comparison and could not formulate a true opinion in regard to conditions in South West Africa. The representatives of the Philippines and Iraq, moreover, considered that the Council was competent to hear oral testimony from persons other than a representative of the Government of the Union of South Africa.

The representative of China expressed the view that while the report of the South African Government was the only document officially before the Council, representatives were not precluded from expressing opinions based on information derived from other sources.

The representatives of Australia, Costa Rica, France, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and United States disagreed with the views indicated above. The Trusteeship Council, they urged, should adhere to the strict terms of the General Assembly's resolution. The Council, they considered, was not competent to consider anything except the actual report of the South African Government. It could not draw upon other documents as sources of information, nor could it hear oral testimony of third parties. South West Africa was not a Trust Territory. The South African Government had voluntarily transmitted a report for the information of the United Nations, and the Trusteeship Council did not have the function of supervising the administration of South West Africa. The report before the Council therefore should not be treated in the same manner as a report on a Trust Territory.

At the fifteenth meeting the Council began to examine the substance of the report, a number of representatives indicating subjects on which they thought the Council should have more complete information than was contained in the report.

The representative of Iraq submitted a draft resolution (T/P.V.42., pp. 61-65) which stated that the Council, taking into account that it was unable to exercise, in relation to South West Africa, its functions and powers under Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter, regretted, therefore, that it lacked sufficient means for a thorough appraisal of the report submitted by the South African Government, which report the Council noted was not as comprehensive as reports previously submitted by the South African Government to the Permanent Mandates Commission. The Trusteeship Council, according to the Iraqi proposal, should therefore resolve that the report did not enable the Council to determine whether South Africa was adequately discharging its responsibilities under the terms of the Mandate from the League of Nations. The Council should also note with favor the General Assembly's resolution of November 1, 1947, reaffirming its recommendation that South West Africa be placed under the International Trusteeship System.

The majority of the Council's members opposed the Iraqi resolution on the ground that it was premature for the Council to come to any conclusion. The resolution anticipated the result of the Council's examination. It could properly be considered only at the end of the Council's discussion.

The representative of the United States suggested that the Council should avail itself of the South African Government's offer to furnish additional information in writing and should delay framing its final conclusions on the report until after it had received answers to the questions to be addressed to the South African Government.

The Council agreed to this suggestion and unanimously adopted a resolution (28(II)) to the effect that the report appeared to be incomplete in certain particulars, and that the Government of the Union of South Africa should be invited to supply supplementary information on certain questions before the month of June 1948 in order that the Council might be able to formulate its observations for submission to the General Assembly at its next session.

The Council accordingly appointed a committee consisting of Australia, China, Iraq and the United States to formulate the questions to be transmitted to the Union Government.

The report of the Committee (T/96), containing a list of 50 questions to be transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Union Government, was adopted by the Council at the eighteenth meeting (T/P.V.45). The questions were transmitted to the Government of the Union of South Africa on January 6, 1948, and the replies of the Union Government were received on May 31 (T/175).

At the 31st meeting of its third session on July 23, 1948 (T/SR.104), the Council considered the replies of the Union Government and the report.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. opposed such an examination by the Council. He proposed that the report on South West Africa should not be examined by the Trusteeship Council inasmuch as the resolution of the General Assembly of November 1, 1947, provided that South Africa should submit a draft Trusteeship Agreement for South West Africa to the third session of the Assembly. He was of the opinion that a report on South West Africa could be considered only after this Territory had been included in the Trusteeship System and a Trusteeship Agreement had been approved by the Assembly. He stated that there were but two alternatives with regard to the former Mandated Territory of South West Africa — either it should become an independent state or it should be included in the Trusteeship System. He also considered that examination of the report by the Trusteeship Council could not be based on any Article of the Charter because the only Article in the Charter authorizing the Trusteeship Council to examine reports was Article 87 a, which concerned only reports on Trust Territories presented by Administering Authorities. South Africa, however, was not an Administering Authority, and South West Africa was not a Trust Territory.

The majority of the Council's members, however, were of the opinion that consideration of the report had already begun. The only question was whether it was to be continued. As the General Assembly had entrusted the Trusteeship Council with the task of examining the report, they thought that the Council would be failing in its duty if it refused to comply with the Assembly's request.

The Council decided, therefore, by a vote of 10 to 1, with 1 abstention, to proceed with the examination of the report and the replies furnished by the Union Government, and appointed a drafting committee consisting of the representatives of Belgium, China, Costa Rica and the United States to draft a report, in accordance with rules 100 and 101 of its rules of procedure, for inclusion in the annual report of the Council to the General Assembly. The draft report (T/209) prepared by the drafting committee was considered by the Council at the 41st and 42nd meetings of its third session (T/SR.114 and 115).

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that it was important to bear in mind that the Council's consideration of the report on the administration of South West Africa and its report thereon to the General Assembly were sui generis, and that the Council had no right to assume that the General Assembly would take any particular course of action on the basis of the Council's report. Moreover, he stated that in view of the very strong feeling which this question had aroused not only in South West Africa but in the Union of South Africa, it was important for the Council to avoid statements which might give offence in South Africa or South West Africa. In the best interests of the natives themselves, therefore, the Council should limit itself to observations, leaving it for the General Assembly itself to draw its own conclusions. He therefore proposed the deletion of all those paragraphs from the drafting committee's report which, in the opinion of the United Kingdom delegation, embodied conclusions or recommendations regarding conditions in South West Africa.

Supporting the United Kingdom proposal, the representative of Australia stated that the Trusteeship Council was not authorized to present conclusions; this was only within the competence of the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly. Highly critical statements concerning its administration might influence the Government of the Union of South Africa against sending further reports to the General Assembly.

The representative of the United States likewise supported the United Kingdom proposal. In view of the fact that South West Africa was not a Trust Territory, he considered that the Council's report should be limited to a brief factual statement of conditions based on information furnished by the Union of South Africa. Conclusions and recommendations should be left to the General Assembly.

The representatives of China, France and Mexico opposed the United Kingdom proposal. It was desirable, the representative of China stated, that the Council's observations should be formulated in the least offensive manner possible. But the Council should not be deterred from expressing those observations by fear that the South African Government might decide not to send any more reports on its administration of South West Africa nor to place the territory under Trusteeship. The deletions proposed by the representative of the United Kingdom would be tantamount to a refusal on the part of the Council to carry out the duty placed upon it by the General Assembly.

The representative of Mexico stated that those who maintained that the submission of a completely neutral report to the General Assembly would encourage the Government of South Africa to place South West Africa under the Trusteeship System were deluding themselves. Nothing but an aroused world public opinion would compel the Union of South Africa to take that step, and world public opinion would not be aroused unless the Council brought the actual situation to its attention. It was the Council's duty, the representative of Mexico considered, to present both an analysis and a diagnosis of conditions in South West Africa.

The representative of France stated that if the Council evaded its obligation and presented only a factual summary, the actual examination of the report would have to be referred back to the Fourth Committee, which would then have to set up a sub-committee to submit another report. The representative of France thought that the report of the drafting committee was admirable and required amendments of detail only.

The Council then considered the report, paragraph by paragraph, adopting a considerable number of amendments. At the 42nd meeting of its third session the Council adopted the report as amended by a vote of 6 to 3, with 3 abstentions.

In submitting the report to the General Assembly the Council recorded its view that notwithstanding the replies submitted by the Government of the Union of South Africa to the Council's questions, the Council was unable to make as thorough a study as it would have wished, in view of the absence of a special representative of the Union Government, from whom the Council could have elicited more information.

Subject to this limitation, the Council presented the following observations (A/603, pp. 43-45) on those aspects of the administration of the Territory of South West Africa which appeared to the Council to merit particular attention:

OBSERVATIONS

A. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

The Council notes that executive powers for the Territory are vested in the Administrator of South West Africa, who is assisted by an Executive Committee composed of himself as Chairman and four members elected by the Legislative Assembly; and also by an Advisory Council consisting of himself as Chairman, the four members of the Executive Council and three members appointed by the Administrator. There are no non-European members of the Advisory Council. Limited legislative powers are exercised by a Legislative Assembly of eighteen members, of whom six are nominated by the Administrator and twelve are elected. Franchise, however, is restricted to British subjects of European origin and to naturalized British subjects. Appointment or election to the Assembly is restricted to persons who are enrolled as voters.

The Council, being convinced of the desirability of increased participation by indigenous populations in the direction of their own affairs, notes that the indigenous inhabitants of the Territory have no franchise, no eligibility to office and no representation in the governing bodies or in the administration of the Territory.

B. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. Economic position of indigenous inhabitants

The Council notes that the financial position of the Territory has greatly improved in recent years, due to the generally increased prosperity of the Territory, the result principally of increased sales of diamonds and karakul pelts at higher prices, and the imposition of additional taxes.

The Council notes that in the opinion of the Union Government the indigenous inhabitants have to a considerable extent shared in the increased prosperity of the Territory, in such ways as obtaining higher prices for their stock and animal products, and enjoying increased hospital and educational facilities. Plans for the future include the appointment of four agricultural officers and two rural labour inspectors in the interests of the indigenous population. The sum of £50,000 has been set aside for non-European developments such as the opening up of additional water supplies.

The Council finds it impossible, from the information before it, to judge clearly the extent to which the indigenous inhabitants have shared in the increased prosperity of the Territory, or whether the measures already taken or contemplated by the Union Government are adequate for advancing the economic position of the indigenous inhabitants.

2. Expenditure on indigenous population

The Council notes that the total expenditure devoted directly to non-European administration and welfare in the year 1946-47 amounted to £246,605, and that this amount represented 10.16 per cent of the entire budget of the Territory. The Council also notes, in examining this expenditure, that the non-European population was estimated at 336,552, in 1946, as against a European population of 38,020.

The Council observes that this is an expenditure of little more than ten per cent of the budget on the indigenous inhabitants, who comprise approximately 90 per cent of the entire population.

3. Land tenure

(a) DISTRIBUTION OF LAND.—The Council notes that out of a total of 47,714,161 hectares of land, 27,789,172 hectares are occupied by Europeans, 17,361,589 hectares by indigenous inhabitants and 1,303,400 by other non-Europeans, while 1,260,000 hectares are unoccupied. The laws relating to land settlement apply equally to Europeans and non-Europeans, but on the grounds that the indigenous inhabitants generally are not sufficiently developed to benefit from individual land ownership, it is the policy of the Administration to allocate reserves to them free of charge. There is no restriction of European ownership of land outside of the reserves, except that land tax becomes progressively higher beyond 10,000 hectares.

The Council observes that the indigenous inhabitants, who comprise approximately nine-tenths of the population, occupy 42 per cent of the occupied land. The Council further observes that the interests of the indigenous inhabitants are involved in the question of the distribution of land, and points out that it lacks information as to whether the land left to the indigenous inhabitants is adequate in quality and productivity.

(b) INDIGENOUS LAND RIGHTS.—The Council notes the statement of the Union Government that all traditional land rights possessed by the indigenous inhabitants ceased to exist during the German regime except in six areas, of which five have since been proclaimed as native reserves; in the sixth area, native land rights are fully recognized.

The Council considers that the explanation by the Union Government does not elucidate the question whether these rights would be restored.

(c) RESTRICTIONS ON KEEPING OF LIVESTOCK.—The Council notes that inhabitants of the reserves in the Police Zone (the area of European development) may not graze or keep more than 100 head of large stock, 300 head of small stock and six donkeys without the special permission of the Administrator. The limitations are imposed to prevent richer owners from crowding out those possessing fewer animals.

The Council observes that the same limitations do not apply to Europeans.

(d) LAND FOR THE HEREROS.—The Council notes that various parts of the Herero tribe, which was broken up by the Germans, are accommodated in eight different reserves, and that one of the reasons why it has been impossible to reunite the tribe in a single area, according to the replies given by the Union Government, is the fact that "no area large enough to accommodate a whole tribe in the Police Zone could be made available unless private rights of occupation were violated, which was out of the question."

The Council considers that the degree to which land has been alienated is a factor in keeping the Herero tribe physically divided, and that the interests of this tribe constitute an additional reason why the whole question of land distribution should be re-examined by the Union Government.

C SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Indigenous reserves

The Council notes the explanation of the Union Government that the establishment of reserved areas to accommodate large numbers of the indigenous inhabitants followed the widespread dispersal of the people under the German regime. The basic principle was, if possible, to leave the indigenous inhabitants where they were, so long as the existence of small indigenous "islands" in European areas was obviated. Permanent claims to areas temporarily set aside for them, and claims to former traditional areas that had since been reallocated for European settlement, were rejected. In the Police Zone, 19 per cent of the 94,000 indigenous inhabitants of the zone live in reserves and their movements to and from the reserves require a written permit. The Council also notes that in rural areas outside the reserves there is a considerable population working on farms and in mines, and that their residence and movements are also controlled. In the Police Zone 57.5 per cent of the indigenous inhabitants live in these rural areas outside the reserves.

The Council is of the opinion that division of the indigenous inhabitants and their allocation to fixed areas is not conducive to their general advancement and that the system of confining indigenous inhabitants to "native reserves" is to be deplored in principle. The Council considers that by a revision of its policy the Union Government should be able gradually to eliminate whatever reasons might at present explain the existence of such reserves and of the restrictions on residence and movement.

2. Indigenous inhabitants in urban areas

The Council notes the statement of the Union Government that indigenous inhabitants of proclaimed urban areas are segregated into fixed areas or "locations", with certain exceptions such as domestic servants. In the Police Zone 23.5 per cent of the indigenous inhabitants live in urban areas. Extensive regulations control the activities of the inhabitants of the "locations". The housing conditions of most of the non-European residents of urban areas have for many years been regarded as unsatisfactory, and the Administration has decided to offer financial assistance for housing schemes.

The Council is opposed, as a matter of principle, to racial segregation. The Council, while lacking precise information as to the reasons for the urban segregation policy in the Territory, considers that great efforts should be made to eliminate, through education and other positive measures, whatever reasons may exist that explain segregation.

The Council considers also that even within the system of urban segregation great attention should be paid to the well-being of the indigenous inhabitants in the way of the improvement of housing conditions, the preservation of family life and the encouragement of a greater degree of responsibility.

3. Labour conditions in the mines

The Council notes that of some 52,000 indigenous inhabitants employed in the area of European settlement (i.e. the Police Zone) in 1946, some 34,000 were employed on farms and 3,000 in diamond and other mines. The Council also notes that diamond mine labourers are given some clothing and are entitled to rations, housing and medical care; and that in addition they are paid wages ranging from eight pence per shift in the first three months to sixteen pence per shift in the last six months of their two-year engagement, each shift comprising eight consecutive working hours at any time of day except on Sundays.

The Council notes, on the other hand, that the wages for labour recruited from the Territory for the Witwatersrand mines in the Union of South Africa range from twenty-five pence to thirty pence per shift for surface labourers and twenty-nine pence to thirty-four pence per shift for underground labourers. The Council notes at the same time a statement by the Union Government that all mine labourers' wages in the Territory are likely to be increased as a result of an investigation now in progress.

4. Penalties for breaches of contract

The Council notes that the master and servant laws applicable to civil contracts between employer and employee provide criminal penalties for breaches by the employees, and that in this connexion there were 2,100 convictions in 1946.

The Council considers that the large number of criminal convictions reveals an abnormal situation and that contractual relations between employer and labour should not be subject to criminal penalties.

5. Hiring out of convict labour

The Council notes that, while it is the policy of the administration to employ convict labour on public works, it is the practice at small gaols to hire out hard-labour convicts occasionally to private persons when the administration is unable to provide work for them.

The Council considers that the hiring out of prison labour to private persons is a practice which may lead to abuses.

6. International labour conventions

The Council notes the statement of the Union Government that no conventions of the International Labour Organisation have been applied to the Territory.

7. Medical services

The Council notes that in 1946 there were seven State-aided European hospitals in the Territory and four State-owned hospitals for indigenous inhabitants, and that the administration has decided to spend £40,000 per annum on the erection of additional indigenous hospitals. The Council notes that there are as yet no Government indigenous hospitals in areas outside of the Police Zone, where approximately 195,000 indigenous inhabitants reside, and that hospital services there are provided by subsidized missions. European hospital beds are available at the rate of 11.6 per thousand and non-European beds at the rate of 335 per thousand. The Council notes also that no provision has yet been made for the training of indigenous and "coloured" personnel as medical practitioners.

D. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Education facilities

The Council notes that, in 1946, there were, in the Territory, only six indigenous official schools, with 555 pupils, all in the Police Zone, as against 53 European official schools with 6,415 pupils. The Council notes also that indigenous education is still largely in the hands of missions, which are assisted by the Government, and which in 1946 maintained, in the Police Zone, 72 indigenous schools with 4,935 pupils and in the outside areas 154 schools, of which only 25 were conducted by European teachers and which had altogether 15,062 pupils.

The Council notes that no educational facilities are provided by the Government in the purely indigenous areas, inhabited by some 192,000 people, which lie beyond the Police Zone. The Council is of the opinion that the provision of urgently-needed educational facilities for the indigenous population is vital to their political, economic and social development.

2. Higher education

The Council notes the statement of the Union Government that facilities for indigenous secondary, technical and higher education have not yet been provided within the Territory for the reason that sufficient students are not believed to be available.

The Council considers that, if the absence of potential students is the reason, this may be due to deficiencies in primary education.

MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN RULES OF PROCEDURE⁴²

Adopted by the Trusteeship Council at the seventh and fourteenth meetings of its second session on December 2 and 11, 1947 (T/154).

Rule 3

A request for a special session may be made by the Economic and Social Council or by any member of the Trusteeship Council, and shall be addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who without delay shall communicate the request to the other members of the Trusteeship Council. On notification by the Secretary-General that the majority of the members have concurred, the President of the Trusteeship Council shall request the Secretary-General to call a special session.

Rule 8

The provisional agenda for each session of the Trusteeship Council shall be drawn up by the Secretary-General in consultation with the President and shall be communicated together with the notice summoning the Council to the Organs, Members and Specialized Agencies referred to in Rule 4.

Rule 80 bis

The President of the Council shall be authorized between sessions of the Council, through the Secretary-General, to inform any petitioner who requests an opportunity for an oral presentation or petition under Rule 80, that the Council will grant him a hearing at such time and place as the President may name. Before communicating such information to the petitioner, the President shall enquire of the Administering Authority or Authorities concerned as to whether there are substantial reasons why the matter should first be discussed in the Council. If the Administering Authority is of the opinion that such substantial reasons exist, the President shall defer action until the matter has been decided by the Council.

Rule 85

The Secretary-General shall circulate promptly to the members of the Trusteeship Council all written petitions received by him, except those which are manifestly inconsequential, a list of which, with a summary of their contents, shall be communicated to the members of the Trusteeship Council. The original documents shall be made available to the Trusteeship Council for final disposition.

⁴²For complete text of rules of procedure before these amendments, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 581-89, and Rules of Procedure of the Trusteeship Council (T/1/Rev.1).

With respect to petitions relating to a strategic area, the functions of the Trusteeship Council shall be governed by Article 83 of the Charter and the terms of the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

Rule 99

Each visiting mission shall transmit to the Trusteeship Council a report on its visit, a copy of which shall be promptly and, as a general rule, simultaneously transmitted to the Administering Authority and to each other member of the Trusteeship Council by the Secretary-General. The mission may authorize the Secretary-General to release its report in such form and at such date as it may deem appropriate. The report and the decisions or observations of the Council with respect to each such report, as well as the comments made by the Administering Authorities concerned, may be published in such form and at such date as the Council may determine.

ANNEX IV

TRUSTEESHIP AGREEMENT FOR NAURU⁴³

In pursuance of a Mandate conferred upon His Britannic Majesty the Territory of Nauru has been administered in accordance with Article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations by the Government of Australia on the joint behalf of the Governments of Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The Charter of the United Nations, signed at San Francisco on 26 June 1945, provides by Article 75 for the establishment of an International Trusteeship System for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements.

His Majesty desires to place the Territory of Nauru under the Trusteeship System, and the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom undertake to administer it on the terms set forth in the present Trusteeship Agreement.

Therefore the General Assembly of the United Nations, acting in pursuance of Article 85 of the Charter, Approves the following terms of Trusteeship for the Territory of Nauru in substitution for the terms of the Mandate under which the Territory has been administered:

Article 1

The Territory to which this Trusteeship Agreement applies (hereinafter called "the Territory") consists of the island of Nauru (Pleasant Island), situated approximately 167° longitude East and approximately 0°25' latitude South, being the Territory administered under the Mandate above referred to.

Article 2

The Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom (hereinafter called "the Administering Authority") are hereby designated as the joint authority which will exercise the administration of the Territory.

Article 3

The Administering Authority undertakes to administer the Territory in accordance with the provisions of the Charter and in such a manner as to achieve in the Territory the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System, which are set forth in Article 76 of the Charter.

Article 4

The Administering Authority will be responsible for the peace, order, good government and defence of the Territory, and for this purpose, in pursuance of an Agreement made by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, the Government of Australia will on behalf of the Administering Authority and except and until otherwise agreed by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom continue to exercise full powers of legislation, administration and jurisdiction in and over the Territory.

Article 5

The Administering Authority undertakes that in the discharge of its obligations under Article 3 of this Agreement:

1. It will co-operate with the Trusteeship Council in the discharge of all the Council's functions under Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter;

2. It will, in accordance with its established policy:

(a) Take into consideration the customs and usages of the inhabitants of Nauru and respect the rights and safeguard the interests, both present and future, of the indigenous inhabitants of the Territory; and in particular ensure that no rights over native land in favour of any person not an indigenous inhabitant of Nauru may be created or transferred except with the consent of the competent public authority;

(b) Promote, as may be appropriate to the circumstances of the Territory, the economic, social, educational and cultural advancement of the inhabitants;

(c) Assure to the inhabitants of the Territory, as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of the Territory and its peoples, a progressively increasing share in the administrative and other services of the Territory and take all appropriate measures with a view to the political advancement of the inhabitants in accordance with Article 76 b of the Charter;

(d) Guarantee to the inhabitants of the Territory, subject only to the requirements of public order, freedom of speech, of the Press, of assembly and of petition, freedom of conscience and worship and freedom of religious teaching.

Article 6

The Administering Authority further undertakes to apply in the Territory the provisions of such international agreements and such recommendations of the specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 of the Charter as are, in the opinion of the Administering Authority, suited to the needs and conditions of the Territory and conducive to the achievement of the basic objectives of the Trusteeship System.

Article 7

In order to discharge its duties under Article 84 of the Charter and article 4 of the present Agreement, the Administering Authority may take all measures in the Territory which it considers desirable to provide for the defence of the Territory and for the maintenance of international peace and security.

VII. The International Court of Justice¹

A. PROVISIONS OF THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It functions in accordance with its Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the Charter.

All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

A State which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendations of the Security Council.

Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems such action necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Nothing in the Charter is to prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

B. PROVISIONS OF THE STATUTE OF THE COURT

1. Organization of the Court

The Court is composed of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state and who are to be "elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law".

Candidates for membership of the Court are nominated by the "national groups" in the Permanent Court of Arbitration.³ The Secretary-General of the United Nations draws up a list of candidates thus nominated. From this list the General Assembly and the Security Council, voting independently, elect the members of the Court, an absolute majority in both the Assembly and the Council being required for election.

The members of the Court are elected for nine years and may be re-elected. However, the terms of office of five of the judges elected at the first election expire at the end of three years, and the terms of five more judges at the end of six years. The judges whose terms were to expire at the end of three and six years respectively were chosen by lot immediately after the first election had been completed.

The Court elects its own President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected. It appoints its Registrar and such other officers as may be necessary. The Court frames rules for carrying out its functions, and in particular lays down rules of procedure.⁴

The seat of the Court is at The Hague, but this does not prevent the Court from exercising its functions elsewhere whenever it considers this desirable. The President and the Registrar reside at the seat of the Court.

The Court remains permanently in session except during judicial vacations. A quorum of nine judges suffices to constitute it.

From time to time the Court may establish one or more chambers of three or more judges which may deal with particular categories of cases—for example, labor cases and cases relating to transit and communications. The Court forms annually a chamber of five members which may hear and determine cases by summary procedure.

Judges of the same nationality as a party to a case retain their right to sit in the case before the Court. If the Court includes on the bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. If the Court includes upon the bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of the parties may choose a judge to sit in the case before the Court.

2. Competence of the Court

Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.

The Court is open to states parties to its Statute. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states that are not parties to the Statute are laid down by the Security Council.⁵

The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters especially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force. To preserve continuity with the work of the Permanent Court of International Justice, the Statute further stipulates that whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the matter shall be referred to the International Court of Justice.⁶

The states parties to the Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

"(a) the interpretation of a treaty;

"(b) any question of international law;

"(c) the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;

"(d) the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation." (Statute, Article 36.)

These declarations may be made (1) unconditionally, (2) on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states or (3) for a certain time.⁷

The Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice had provided for similar declarations of acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction. The Statute of the International Court of Justice provides that any declarations made under the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice which are still in force shall be deemed to be acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period for which they still have to run.

The Court, whose function it is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, is to apply:

"(a) international conventions, whether general

Permanent Court of Arbitration. These "national groups" had been designated to nominate the judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice established in 1920 in conjunction with the League of Nations. Under the Statute of the International Court of Justice they are likewise to nominate the judges of this Court, which supersedes the Permanent Court of International Justice. Members of the United Nations which are not members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration are to appoint national groups for the purpose of nominating the members of the International Court of Justice in the same manner as the national groups of the Permanent Court of Arbitration are appointed.

⁴The rules of the Court, as adopted on May 6, 1946, remain unchanged, and are not therefore reproduced in this Yearbook; for complete text of the rules, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 596-608.

⁵These conditions are that the state deposit with the Registrar of the Court a declaration accepting the Court's jurisdiction and undertaking to comply in good faith with its decisions. Declarations may be either particular, accepting the Court's jurisdiction in one particular case, or general, accepting it generally in respect of all disputes or a particular class or classes of disputes. For full text of the conditions, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 411. See also International Court of Justice Yearbook, 1946-47, pp. 106-7.

⁶See ibid., Chapters III (pp. 105-16) and X (pp. 195-97).

or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;

"(b) international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;

"(c) the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

"(d) subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law." (Statute, Article 38.)

The Court may decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree to this.

3. Procedure of the Court

French and English are the official languages of the International Court of Justice, but any party which so requests is to be authorized to use another language.

Cases may be brought before the Court either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject to the dispute and the parties are to be indicated.

The Court has the power to indicate any provisional measures which it considers ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

Unless otherwise demanded by the parties, hearings in the Court are to be public. Deliberations of the Court take place in private and remain secret.

All questions before the Court are decided by a majority of judges present. In the event of an equality of votes the President has a casting vote.

The judgment is to state the reasons on which it is based and contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision. If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge is entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Decisions of the Court have no binding force except between the parties and in respect of any particular case. The judgment of the Court is final and without appeal. Revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based "upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence" (Statute, Article 61).

In the exercise of its advisory jurisdiction the Court is to be guided by the provisions of the Court applying to contentious cases.

4. Amendment of the Statute

The Statute of the International Court of Justice can be amended by the same procedure as that used in amending the Charter of the United Nations, subject, however, to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of States which are parties to the present Statute but are not members of the United Nations. The Court may propose such amendments as it deems necessary through written communications to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

C. MEMBERSHIP AND SITTINGS OF THE COURT

D. COMPULSORY JURISDICTION OF THE COURT

Fifty-six nations had accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice in some form. Seventeen of these acceptances remained in force and, under the term of its Statute, were transferred to the International Court of Justice.

In addition, nine nations accepted the Court's compulsory jurisdiction during the period covered in the Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, while a further eight nations did so during the period under review in this volume, bringing to 34 the total number of states that have accepted unconditionally, or with certain reservations, the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. All but one (Switzerland) of these states are also Members of the United Nations.

The table on the opposite page shows the states which, as of September 21, 1948, had deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations the declaration recognizing the Court's jurisdiction as compulsory or had already accepted the jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice as compulsory for a period which had not then yet expired.

E. CORFU CHANNEL CASE

On May 22, 1947, the United Kingdom addressed an Application to the International Court of Justice instituting proceedings with regard to the incidents in the Corfu Channel.¹⁴

The claim of the United Kingdom in the Application was: (1) that the Albanian Government either caused to be laid, or had knowledge of the laying of, mines in its territorial waters in the Strait of Corfu, without notifying the existence of these mines, as required by Articles 3 and 4 of the Hague Convention No. 8 of 1907, by the principles of international law and by the ordinary dictates of humanity; (2) that two destroyers of the Royal Navy were damaged by the mines so laid, resulting in the loss of lives of 44 personnel of the Royal Navy and serious injury to the destroyers; (3) that the loss and damage was due to the failure of the Albanian Government to fulfil its international obligations and to act in accordance with the dictates of humanity; (4) that the Court should decide that the Albanian Government was internationally responsible for the said loss and injury and was under an obligation to make reparation or pay compensation to the Government of the United Kingdom; and (5) that the Court should determine the reparation or compensation.

The Government of the United Kingdom, in the Application, contended that the Court had jurisdiction under Article 36, paragraph 1, of its Statute, as being a matter which was one specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations, on the grounds: (a) that the Security Council of the United Nations, at the conclusion of proceedings in which it dealt with the dispute under Article 36 of the Charter, by a resolution decided to recommend both the Government of the United Kingdom and the Albanian Government to refer the dispute to the International Court of Justice; (b) that the Albanian Government accepted the invitation of the Security Council under Article 32 of the Charter to participate in the discussion of the dispute and accepted the condition laid down by the Security Council, when conveying the invitation, that Albania accepted in the present case all the obligations which a Member of the United Nations would have to assume in a similar case; and (c) that Article 25 of the Charter provided that the Members of the United Nations agree to accept and to carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the Charter.¹⁵

Notice of the Application was given on May 22, 1947, by the Registrar of the Court to the Albanian Government by telegram and by letter.¹⁶ On the same day, the Application was transmitted by the Registrar to the Secretary-General of the United Nations in order that he might notify the Members of the United Nations and any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

On July 23, 1947, the Albanian Government deposited with the Registry of the Court a letter dated at Tirana, July 2, 1947, which confirmed the receipt of the Application, and requested the Registrar to bring a statement to the knowledge of the Court. This statement said, inter alia, that the Government of the United Kingdom, in instituting proceedings before the Court, had not complied with the recommendation adopted by the Security Council on April 9, 1947, and the Albanian Government, therefore, considered that the Government of the United Kingdom was not entitled to refer this dispute to the Court by unilateral application.

The letter went on to state that it appeared that the United Kingdom endeavored to justify its proceeding by invoking Article 25 of the Charter of the United Nations. In the opinion of Albania, that Article did not apply to recommendations made by the Council with reference to the pacific settlement of disputes, since such recommendations were not binding. Consequently, Albania maintained that Article could not afford an indirect basis for the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court.

The letter also declared that Albania considered that the United Kingdom, before bringing the case before the Court, should have reached an understanding with Albania regarding the conditions under which the two parties should submit their dispute to the Court.

In these circumstances, the letter stated, Albania was justified in its conclusion that the United Kingdom had not proceeded in conformity with the Council's recommendation, with the Statute of the Court or with the recognized principles of international law.

The Albanian Government, for its part, the letter continued, fully accepted the recommendation of the Security Council and was prepared, notwithstanding the irregularity in action taken by the Government of the United Kingdom, to appear before the Court.

Nevertheless, the letter concluded, Albania made the most explicit reservations respecting the manner in which the United Kingdom brought the case before the Court, and emphasized that its acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction for this case could not constitute a precedent for the future.

The President of the Court—as the Court was not sitting—made on July 31, 1947, an Order in which he fixed October 1 and December 10, 1947, respectively, as the final dates for the presentation of the Memorial of the United Kingdom and the Counter-Memorial of Albania.

The Memorial of the United Kingdom, presented within the time limit fixed by the Order, contained statements and submissions with regard to the incidents which occurred on October 22, 1946, in the Corfu Channel. These statements and submissions developed the points indicated in the Application as constituting the claim of the United Kingdom.

Within the time limit fixed for the presentation of the Counter-Memorial, Albania, by a document dated December 1 and filed in the Registry on December 9, 1947, submitted a Preliminary Objection to the Application on the ground of inadmissibility.

In the Preliminary Objection, the Court was requested, in the first place, to place on record that, in accepting the Security Council's recommendation of April 9, 1947, the Albanian Government had only undertaken to submit the dispute to the Court in accordance with the provisions of the Statute and, in the second place, to give judgment that the Application of the United Kingdom was inadmissible because it contravened the provisions of Articles 40 and 36 of the Statute.

The Albanian Preliminary Objection was transmitted on December 9 to the United Kingdom and was communicated on December 11 to the Members of the United Nations.

By an Order made on December 10, 1947, the President of the Court, as the Court was not sitting, fixed January 20, 1948, as the time limit for the presentation by the United Kingdom of a written statement of its observations and submissions in regard to the Preliminary Objection.

This statement, dated January 19, 1948, and received in the Registry on the same date, contained a number of arguments and concluded by stating that the Preliminary Objection submitted by Albania should be dismissed, and that Albania should be directed to comply with the terms of the President's Order and to deliver a Counter-Memorial on the merits of the dispute without further delay.

As the Court did not have upon the bench a judge of Albanian nationality, Albania availed itself of the right provided by the Court's Statute, and designated Igor Daxner, President of a Chamber of the Supreme Court of Czechoslovakia, as judge ad hoc.

In the course of public sittings, held on February 26, 27 and 28 and on March 1, 2 and 5, 1948, the Court heard oral arguments on behalf of the respective parties: Kahreman Ylli, Agent, and Professor Vladimir Vochoc, Counsel, for Albania; and W. E. Beckett, Agent, and Sir Hartley Shawcross, Counsel, for the United Kingdom.

On March 25, 1948, the Court delivered a judgment rejecting the Albanian objection on the grounds, inter alia, that the Albanian Government's letter of July 2, in the opinion of the Court, constituted a voluntary and indisputable acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction. The Court held that there was nothing to prevent the acceptance of jurisdiction, as in the present case, from being effected by two separate and successive acts, instead of jointly and beforehand by a special agreement. The Court also held that the reservations stated in the Albanian Government's letter were intended only to maintain a principle and prevent the establishment of a precedent for the future. The Court maintained that the reservation of Albania therefore did not enable Albania to raise a preliminary objection based on an irregularity of procedure, or to dispute thereafter the Court's jurisdiction on the merits.

The Court, by 15 votes against 1, rejected the Preliminary Objection submitted by Albania on December 9, 1947, and decided that proceedings on the merits should continue. It fixed the time limits for the filing of subsequent pleadings as follows: (a) June 15, 1948, for the Counter-Memorial of Albania; (b) August 2, 1948, for the Reply of the United Kingdom; and (c) September 20, 1948, for the Rejoinder of Albania.

Judge Basdevant, Vice-President, and Judges Alvarez, Winarski, Zoricic, De Visscher, Badawi Pasha and Krylov, while agreeing with the judgment of the Court, stated in a separate opinion appended to the judgment that they wished that the Court had also passed upon the merits of the United Kingdom claims that the case be treated as one falling within the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court on the grounds that the Security Council's recommendation was a decision binding upon the parties. The arguments presented on behalf of the United Kingdom had not convinced these judges that this was a new case of compulsory jurisdiction.

Igor Daxner, judge ad hoc, declared that he was unable to concur in the judgment of the Court and appended to the judgment a statement of his separate opinion.

Immediately after the delivery of judgment, the Agents for the Albanian and United Kingdom Governments announced to the Court the conclusion between their respective Governments of a Special Agreement, drawn up as a result of the resolution of the Security Council of April 9, 1947, for the purpose of submitting to the Court for decision the following questions:

"1. Is Albania responsible under international law for the explosions which occurred on the 22nd October 1946 in Albanian waters and for the damage and loss of human life which resulted from them and is there any duty to pay compensation?"

"2. Has the United Kingdom under international law violated the sovereignty of the Albanian People's Republic by reason of the acts of the Royal Navy in Albanian waters on the 22nd October and on the 12th and 13th November 1946 and is there any duty to give satisfaction?"

The Court, in an Order of March 26, 1948,¹⁷ stated:

". . . Whereas this Special Agreement now forms the basis of further proceedings before the Court in this case, and states the questions which the Parties have agreed to submit to the Court for decision;

"Whereas the United Kingdom Government, on October 1st, 1947, that is within the time-limit fixed by the Court, filed a Memorial with statements and submissions relating to the incident that occurred on October 22nd, 1946;

"Whereas the Agents for the Parties, having in view the filing of the Memorial and having been consulted by the President, declared in his presence that they agreed in requesting that the order and time-limits for the filing of the subsequent pleadings as fixed by the Judgment of March 25th, 1948, be maintained;

"The Court

"confirms the time-limits for the filing of the subsequent pleadings as follows:

"(a) for the Counter-Memorial of the Albanian Government, Tuesday, June 15th, 1948;

"(b) for the Reply of the United Kingdom Government, Monday, August 2nd, 1948;

"(c) for the Rejoinder of the Albanian Government, Monday, September 20th, 1948. . . ."

The parties filed their documents within the time limits prescribed by the Court.¹⁸

F. ADVISORY OPINIONS

1. Organs and Agencies Authorized to Request Advisory Opinions

The General Assembly and the Security Council are explicitly authorized in the Charter to request advisory opinions from the International Court of Justice on any legal question. Other organs of the United Nations, as well as the specialized agencies may, if authorized to do so by the General Assembly, request advisory opinions from the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

The following organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies had by September 21, 1948, been authorized by the General Assembly to request such advisory opinions:

Economic and Social Council
Trusteeship Council
International Labour Organisation (ILO)
Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)
United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)
International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
International Monetary Fund
International Telecommunication Union (ITU) World Health Organization (WHO)

2. Advisory Opinion on Admission to Membership in the United Nations

a. REQUEST FROM THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY FOR AN ADVISORY OPINION

In a resolution adopted on November 17, 1948 (113(II)B), the General Assembly addressed to the International Court of Justice a request for an advisory opinion concerning the conditions of admission of a state to membership in the United Nations.¹⁹ It was the first request for an advisory opinion to be addressed to the Court.

Certified true copies of the resolution, dispatched by the Secretary-General, reached the Registry of the Court on December 12, 1947, and the request of the Assembly was entered on the same date in the Court's General List under No. 3.²⁰

On the same day, the Registrar gave notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court and notified the Governments of Members of the United Nations that the Court was prepared to receive from them written statements on the issue in question, before February 9, 1948. By the date thus fixed, written statements had been received by the Court from the following states: China, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Canada, United States, Greece, Yugoslavia, Belgium, Iraq, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R. and Australia. These statements were communicated to all Members of the United Nations, who were informed that the President of the Court had fixed April 15, 1948, as the opening date of the oral proceedings. A statement from the Government of Siam, dated January 30, 1948, which was received in the Court's Registry on February 14 (i.e., after the expiration of the time limit) was accepted by decision of the President and was also transmitted to the other Members of the United Nations.

The Government of the Philippines also deposited a declaration, which, however, arrived too late to be taken into consideration.

b. ORAL PROCEEDINGS

The opening of the oral proceedings was eventually postponed for a week, the hearings actually taking place on April 22, 23, and 24, 1948.

In the course of these hearings, oral statements were presented to the Court by the representative of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and by representatives of the Governments of France, Yugoslavia, Belgium, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

The two questions put to the Court by the Assembly's resolution of November 17, 1947 (113(II)B), read as follows:

"Is a Member of the United Nations which is called upon, in virtue of Article 4 of the Charter, to pronounce itself by its vote, either in the Security Council or in the General Assembly, on the admission of a State to membership in the United Nations, juridically entitled to make its consent to the admission dependent on conditions not expressly provided by paragraph 1 of the said Article? In particular, can such a Member, while it recognizes the conditions set forth in that provision to be fulfilled by the State concerned, subject its affirmative vote to the additional condition that other States be admitted to membership in the United Nations together with that State?"

Of the fifteen Governments which had submitted written statements in connection with these questions, twelve declared that the answer to the first question should be in the negative. These twelve were: Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, El Salvador, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, India, Iraq, Siam and United States. The other three Governments—the Ukrainian S.S.R., the U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia—held that the questions addressed to the Court by the Assembly were essentially political rather than juridical, and were therefore beyond the Court's competence.

In the oral proceedings, the competence of the Court, on the same basis, was again challenged by the representatives of Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia, while the representatives of France and Belgium upheld the Court's competence to deal with the two questions, declaring that the problem involved was legal, not political, in its essence.

The French representative argued that the answer to the first question should be in the affirmative, i.e., that a state was entitled to exercise its own discretion in voting on the application of another state for membership in the United Nations. The French representative, however, held that the answer to the second question should be in the negative, since in his opinion it would be an arbitrary action for a Member State to make its affirmative vote for the admission of a state dependent upon the admission of other states, and since such an arbitrary action would go beyond the discretion reasonably allowed a Member State.

The Belgian representative was of the opinion that the answer to both questions should be in the negative.

c. ADVISORY OPINION

Having heard the oral statements, the Court considered the problem in private sittings and delivered its advisory opinion (A/597)²¹ on May 28, 1948. It read as follows:

"The Court,

"by nine votes to six,

"is of the opinion that a Member of the United Nations which is called upon, in virtue of Article 4 of the Charter, to pronounce itself by its vote, either in the Security Council or in the General Assembly, on the admission of a State to membership in the United Nations is not juridically entitled to make its consent to the admission dependent on conditions not expressly provided by paragraph 1 of the said Article;

"and that, in particular, a Member of the Organization cannot, while it recognizes the conditions set forth in that provision to be fulfilled by the State concerned, subject its affirmative vote to the additional condition that other States be admitted to membership in the United Nations together with that State."

The majority consisted of the following judges: Jose Gustavo Guerrero (President), Alejandro Alvarez, Isidro Fabela Alfaro, Green H. Hackworth, Charles De Visscher, Helge Klaestad, Abdel Hamid Badawi Pasha, Hsu Mo and Jose Philadelpho de Barros e Azevedo. Judges Alvarez and Azevedo, while concurring in the advisory opinion, availed themselves of the right conferred upon judges by Article 57 of the Statute and appended statements of their individual opinions.

The dissenting opinions were those of Judges Jules Basdevant (Vice-President), Bohdan Winiarski, Sir Arnold Duncan McNair and John E. Read, who issued a joint statement of their dissenting opinion, and of Judges Milovan Zoricic and Sergei Borisovitch Krylov, who each issued individual statements of their respective dissenting opinions.

In its opinion,²² the Court began by defining the question in the following words:

"The request for an opinion does not refer to the actual vote. Although the Members are bound to conform to the requirements of Article 4 in giving their votes, the General Assembly can hardly be supposed to have intended to ask the Court's opinion as to the reasons which, in the mind of a Member, may prompt its vote. Such reasons, which enter into a mental process, are obviously subject to no control. Nor does the request concern a Member's freedom of expressing its opinion. Since it concerns a condition or conditions on which a Member 'makes its consent dependent', the question can only relate to the statements made by a Member concerning the vote it proposes to give."

The Court also observed that it was clear that it was not called upon either to define the meaning and scope of the conditions on which admission is made dependent, or to specify the elements which may serve in a concrete case to verify the existence of the requisite conditions.

The Court then dealt with the question of its own jurisdiction. It stated that the question was a purely legal one, and further that it had competence to deal with questions couched in abstract terms.

It rejected the claim that it was not competent to deal with an interpretation of the Charter, in the following words:

"Nowhere is any provision to be found forbidding the Court, 'the principal judicial organ of the United Nations', to exercise in regard to Article 4 of the Charter, a multilateral treaty, an interpretative function which falls within the normal exercise of its judicial powers."

²² The following summary of the Advisory Opinion is taken from International Court of Justice Yearbook, 1947-48, pp. 62-64.

The Court then considered paragraph 1 of Article 4, which reads as follows:

"Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving States which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations."

The Court was of opinion that the English and French texts have the same meaning and that it was impossible to find any conflict between them. The meaning also was quite clear, so that it was not necessary to resort to a study of the preparatory work on the Charter.

"The terms 'Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving States which . . . ' and 'Peuvent devenir Membres des Nations Unies tous autres Etats pacifiques', indicate that States which fulfil the conditions stated have the qualifications requisite for admission. The natural meaning of the words used leads to the conclusion that these conditions constitute an exhaustive enumeration and are not merely stated by way of guidance or example. The provision would lose its significance and weight, if other conditions, unconnected with those laid down, could be demanded. The conditions stated in paragraph 1 of Article 4 must therefore be regarded not merely as the necessary conditions, but also as the conditions which suffice.

"Nor can it be argued that the conditions enumerated represent only an indispensable minimum, in the sense that political considerations could be superimposed upon them, and prevent the admission of an applicant which fulfils them. Such an interpretation would be inconsistent with the terms of paragraph 2 of Article 4, which provide for the admission of 'tout Etat remplissant ces conditions'—'any such State'. It would lead to conferring upon Members an indefinite and practically unlimited power of discretion in the imposition of new conditions. Such a power would be inconsistent with the very character of paragraph 1 of Article 4 which, by reason of the close connexion which it establishes between membership and the observance of the principles and obligations of the Charter, clearly constitutes a legal regulation of the question of the admission of new States. To warrant an interpretation other than that which ensues from the natural meaning of the words, a decisive reason would be required which has not been established.

"Moreover, the spirit as well as the terms of the paragraph preclude the idea that considerations extraneous to these principles and obligations can prevent the admission of a State which complies with them. If the authors of the Charter had meant to leave Members free to import into the application of this provision considerations extraneous to the conditions laid down therein, they would undoubtedly have adopted a different wording."

The Court added that this opinion was confirmed by Rule 60, paragraph 1, of the provisional Rules of the Security Council, which reads as follows:

"The Security Council shall decide whether in its judgment the applicant is a peace-loving State and is able and willing to carry out the obligations contained in the Charter, and accordingly whether to recommend the applicant State for membership."

The Court went on to state that the exhaustive character of paragraph 1 of Article 4

"does not forbid the taking into account of any factor which it is possible reasonably and in good faith to connect with the conditions laid down in that Article. The taking into account of such factors is implied in the very wide and very elastic nature of the prescribed conditions; no relevant political factor—that is to say, none connected with the conditions of admission—is excluded."

Later in the Opinion, the Court stated that paragraph 2 of Article 4 is of a purely procedural character and cannot in any way be adduced to prove that the terms laid down in Article 4, paragraph 1, are not exhaustive. Further, the political character of the Security Council does not in any way release it from the observance of the treaty provisions of the Charter, when such provisions constitute limitations on the Council's powers, or criteria for its judgment. Nor can the political responsibilities assumed by the Security Council in virtue of Article 24—in the absence of any provision—affect the special rules for admission which emerge from Article 4.

In dealing with the second part of the question, which it also answered in the negative, the Court referred to the demand on the part of a Member that its consent to the admission of an applicant should be dependent on the admission of other applicants, and observed that:

"Judged on the basis of the rule which the Court adopts in its interpretation of Article 4, such a demand clearly constitutes a new condition, since it is entirely unconnected with those prescribed in Article 4. It is also in an entirely different category from those conditions, since it makes admission dependent, not on the conditions required of applicants, qualifications which are supposed to be fulfilled, but on an extraneous consideration concerning States other than the applicant State.

"The provisions of Article 4 necessarily imply that every application for admission should be examined and voted on separately and on its own merits; otherwise it would be impossible to determine whether a particular applicant fulfils the necessary conditions. To subject an affirmative vote for the admission of an applicant State to the condition that other States be admitted with that State would prevent Members from exercising their judgment in each case with complete liberty, within the scope of the prescribed conditions. Such a demand is incompatible with the letter and spirit of Article 4 of the Charter."

d. DISSENTING OPINIONS²³

(1) Opinion of Judge Alvarez

While concurring with the opinion of the Court, Judge Alejandro Alvarez, of Chile, included his individual opinion because he did not agree with the method adopted by the Court. He was of the opinion that in answering the questions asked by the General Assembly it was not sufficient to clarify the text of the Charter; recourse must be had "to the great principles of the new international law".

The Court had decided that the question on which its advisory opinion was asked was a legal one because it concerned the interpretation of the Charter of the United Nations, but Judge Alvarez believed that the question was both legal and political, not so much because it involved an interpretation of the Charter but because it was concerned "with the problem whether States have a right to membership in the United Nations Organization if they fulfil the conditions required by the Statute of the Organization". The United Nations has a mission of universality, Judge Alvarez pronounced; and, therefore, once states have fulfilled the conditions required by Article 4 they have a right to membership. Nevertheless, Judge Alvarez pointed out that there may be some exceptions. Cases may arise in which the admission of a state is liable to disrupt the international situation. In such cases the question is no longer juridical and therefore not within the competence of the Court.

Further, while agreeing that when the conditions of Article 4 are fulfilled by an applicant, a Member cannot subject its affirmative vote to the condition that other states may be admitted together with the applicant, Judge Alvarez believed that in exceptional circumstances, for example when two or more states are created by the division of one state, applications of the new states should be considered at the same time.

(2) Opinion of Judge Azevedo

Judge Jose Philadelpho de Barros e Azevedo, of Brazil, also agreed with the findings of the Court, and the purpose of his remarks was to explain further the nature and function of an advisory opinion. He was of the opinion that in the exercise of its advisory function it might be preferable that the Court should ignore disputes that have given rise to any particular question, and thus make a purely theoretical study of the question and give an opinion of which "the effects would be applicable to all Members of the Organization".

(3) Joint Dissenting Opinion

Judge Jules Basdevant, of France, Judge Bohdan Winiarski, of Poland, Judge Sir Arnold D. McNair, of the United Kingdom, and Judge John M. Read, of Canada, concurred with the opinion of the majority of the Court as to the legal character of the first question and as to the competence of the Court to give an interpretation of the Charter. But they were unable to concur in the answer given by the majority to both questions asked by the General Assembly. Their first conclusion from reading Article 4 was that the Charter does not follow the model of multilateral treaties which created international unions and provided clauses for subsequent accession. On the contrary, the Charter specifies that a state must be admitted by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. In the working of this system the Charter requires the intervention of two principal political organs of the United Nations, one for the purpose of making recommendations and the other for the purpose of effecting the admission. The consent of the organization is expressed by a vote. The dissenting judges pointed out that the provisions of paragraph 2 of Article 4 would be meaningless if they had been restricted to mere procedural form.

A decision in regard to membership involves an examination of political factors in order to ascertain if the state fulfils the conditions prescribed by Article 4. Upon the Security Council, whose duty is to make the recommendation, rests the responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. The dissenting judges felt that the admission of a new Member was pre-eminently a political act and that the political organs making the decisions must consider questions of all sorts, political as well as juridical. Therefore, these organs are juridically entitled to base their vote upon political considerations even though not specifically prescribed by Article 4.

The judges pointed out that the conditions enumerated in paragraph 1 of Article 4 of the Charter are essential, but there is no specific statement that they are sufficient. If the Charter had considered them as sufficient, it would not have failed to say so. They felt that Members are not legally bound to admit the applicant state if the conditions are fulfilled. They based this argument on a detailed examination of the travaux préparatoires of the San Francisco Conference. In examining these records, they found no indication of intention to impose upon the organization a legal obligation to admit states which possess the qualifications mentioned in Article 4. On the contrary, of the Secretary-General at the public hearing of the Court), in the United Nations Bulletin, Vol. 4, No. 12 (June 15, 1948), pp. 492-94. See also Admission of a State to the United Nations (Charter, Article 4). Advisory Opinion. I.C.J. Reports 1948. (Quoted material is from the I.C.J. Report.)

the Conference reports showed that wide discretionary powers were conferred upon the political organs of the United Nations with respect to the admission of Members.

The dissenting judges concluded, however, that the Members of the organization do not enjoy unlimited freedom in the choice of political considerations, but since no "concrete case has been submitted to the Court which calls into question the fulfilment of the duty to keep within these limits; so the Court need not consider what it would have to do if a concrete case of this kind were submitted to it".

Having thus concluded that a Member of the United Nations is legally entitled to put forth considerations "foreign to the qualifications specified in paragraph 1 of Article 4, and, assuming these qualifications to be fulfilled, to base its vote upon such considerations", the dissenting judges declared that a Member in participating in a political discussion is also legally entitled to make its consent to the admission of a state dependent on the admission of other states.

(4) Dissenting Opinion of Judge Zorivic

Judge Milovan Zorivic, of Yugoslavia, agreed with the Court's opinion as regards its competence to interpret the Charter, but could not support the opinion because he considered that the Court should have refrained from answering the questions put, and, secondly, because he could not accept the conclusions of its reply. In substance, he agreed with the joint opinion expressed by the Dissenting Opinion.

The Assembly's resolution and the documents submitted to the Court by the Secretary-General showed that the request for an advisory opinion originated in a divergence of views as to the admission of certain states. The views expressed were of a political nature and, moreover, the circumstances under which the request was made to the Court were put forth for a definite "political purpose". In the first place, it was quite clear to him that the conditions of Article 4 were minimum conditions that must be fulfilled by new Members, but it was undeniable that there were other conditions to be considered. He did not think "that the powers and duties of the Council under Article 24 ... can be limited merely by a restrictive interpretation of Article 4". He queried how the Security Council could be limited from declaring against the admission of a state even where it would be quite obvious that such admission "would have serious consequences for general international stability and consequently the maintenance of peace". He thus concluded that in the supreme interest of the organization, the members of the Council must "have a wide discretion", and consequently the discretionary right of vote implies the right to vote without giving reasons for it.

In connection with the second question asked by the Assembly, he pointed out that although stated in the abstract, the evidence referred to a concrete case, namely, the discussion of the admission of the ex-enemy states. The arguments used by a permanent member of the Security Council that it would vote for the admission of two ex-enemy states on condition that the other three ex-enemy states be admitted was founded on a legal basis. The permanent member "maintained its interpretation of the Declaration of Potsdam and of the peace treaties". He concluded that what was fundamental was not the correctness of the interpretation made by that state but "the right of that State to rely on it. ... This right is guaranteed by the principle of sovereign equality of States which underlies the organization of the United Nations."

(5) Dissenting Opinion of Judge Krylov

Judge Sergei Borisovitch Krylov, of the U.S.S.R., was unable to concur in the opinion of the Court. He held that it was impossible to eliminate the political element from the question put to the Court and to consider it in abstract form for, in fact, it was a question "designed to censure the reasons given by a permanent member of the Security Council".

He pointed out that the Permanent Court of International Justice was never asked to give an interpretation of the Covenant of the League of Nations in the abstract. The questions asked of the Permanent Court regarding the interpretation of the Covenant dealt with concrete situations because, in his view, it was not desired to involve the Court in political disputes. He was of the opinion that in some cases it might be against the interest of the Court to urge that it should deal with disputes in which legal relations between parties are subordinated to the political considerations involved, and that in this case the Charter should have been interpreted rather by the political organs themselves than by the Court. He therefore concluded that it would have been better if the Court had not answered the questions put.

Judge Krylov then referred to a statement in the majority opinion that no relevant political factor is excluded and said that this means that a Member has the right of discretionary and political appreciation. He also considered the practice followed by the political organs of the United Nations with regard to the admission of new Members and noted that both political and legal considerations had been put forth to show that a state should or should not be admitted to membership. He added, however, that political considerations were not warranted if they were inconsistent with the principles of the Charter and therefore stated that a Member is not justified in basing his opposition on arguments which relate to matters falling essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the applicant state.

In connection with the admission of ex-enemy states, he believed that a bloc or composite vote is not forbidden by the Charter. Consequently, when it is a case of admitting states whose applications are presented in identical circumstances, particularly since the applications for admission to the United Nations of the five ex-enemy states were favored by participants of the Potsdam Agreement and by the signatories of the peace treaties, it was stated by Judge Krylov, "there was no warrant for an unjustified discrimination between the five candidates on the ground of their domestic regime".

Judge Krylov concluded therefore that a Member is entitled to declare, during the discussion and before the vote, that it takes into account "(1) the legal criteria prescribed in paragraph 1 of the said Article [Article 4], and (2) political considerations consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations".

G. OBSERVATION OF TENDE AND LA BRIGUE (TENDA-BRIGA) PLEBISCITE

In response to a request of the French Government, the President of the International Court of Justice on July 24, 1947, designated three neutral persons to participate as observers in the plebiscite held in the Tende and La Brigue (Tenda-Briga) districts, ceded to France by Italy as provided in the Italian Peace Treaty. The three neutral observers were Dr. J. A. van Hamel, President of the Special Court of Justice (War Crimes) of Amsterdam; Francois Perréard, Counsellor of State of Geneva and National Counsellor of the Swiss Confederation; and Eric Sjöborg, Minister Plenipotentiary, Swedish Foreign Office. The plebiscite was held on October 12, 1947.²⁴

VIII. The Secretariat

A. THE CHARTER AND THE SECRETARIAT¹

The Charter establishes the Secretariat as a principal organ of the United Nations.

The Secretariat comprises a Secretary-General and such staff as the United Nations may require.

The Secretary-General acts in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council and of the Trusteeship Council, and performs such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General makes an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the organization.

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, notifies the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council. He similarly notifies the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

The Secretary-General receives from those Members of the United Nations which have responsibilities for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social and educational conditions in such of those Non-Self-Governing Territories as are not placed under the International Trusteeship System.

Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the coming into force of the Charter is registered as soon as possible with the Secretariat and published by it.

In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff may not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the organization. They are to refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the organization. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

A staff is appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly. Appropriate staffs are permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs form a part of the Secretariat.

The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service is the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity. Due regard is paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

B. ADMINISTRATIVE ORGANIZATION OF THE SECRETARIAT

(As of September 21, 1948)

1. The Secretary-General

The Secretary-General is the chief administrative officer of the United Nations. He is appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

The first Secretary-General of the United Nations, appointed on the recommendation of the Security Council by the General Assembly on February 1, 1946, is Trygve Lie.

¹This section is a summary of the Charter provisions relating to the Secretariat. The main provisions are contained in Chapter XV, Articles 97-101. Other provisions are to be found in Articles 7, 12, 20, 73, 102, 105 and 110 of the Charter and Articles 5, 7, 13, 14, 18, 36, 40, 67 and 70 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

The General Assembly on January 24, 1946, decided that the terms of the appointment of the Secretary-General should be such as to enable a man of eminence and high attainment to accept and maintain the position, and that the first Secretary-General should be appointed for five years, the appointment being open at the end of that period for a further five-year term. The General Assembly noted that the General Assembly and the Security Council were free to modify the terms of office of future Secretaries-General and that, because the Secretary-General was a confidant of many governments, it was desirable that no Member should offer him, immediately upon retirement, any governmental position, and that he, on his part, should refrain from accepting any such position.²

2. General Structure of the Secretariat

The eight principal divisions of the Secretariat are:

- Department of Security Council Affairs
- Department of Economic Affairs
- Department of Social Affairs
- Department of Trusteeship and Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories
- Department of Public Information
- Legal Department
- Conference and General Services
- Administrative and Financial Services

Each of these departments is headed by an Assistant Secretary-General. One of the Assistant Secretaries-General is designated by the Secretary-General to deputize for him when he is absent or unable to perform his functions. The Secretary-General is authorized to take whatever steps may be required to ensure co-ordination between the Departments of Economic Affairs and of Social Affairs and the maintenance of appropriate administrative relationships between those Departments and the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies. To ensure this co-ordination, a Joint Division of Co-ordination and Liaison was established.

3. Executive Office of the Secretary-General

In addition to the eight departments of the Secretariat which fulfil functions in specific fields, the Secretary-General has at his disposal an Executive Office consisting of a small staff of advisers and assistants, under the direction of an Executive Assistant.

The Executive Office assists the Secretary-General in the performance of those functions which he does not delegate to the departments and for which he retains personal responsibility. These functions include consultation with governments and the heads of the specialized agencies and the supervision of special projects such as the United Nations Appeal for Children.

The Executive Office assists the Secretary-General in the formulation of policy, and reports to him on its implementation by the Secretariat.

The activities of the departments and the relations of the Secretariat with the specialized agencies are co-ordinated in the Executive Office.

As the central secretariat for the General Assembly, the Executive Office directs the departments in their work for the Assembly and assists the Secretary-General in the organization of its schedule.

In addition, the Executive Office advises on matters of protocol and maintains diplomatic liaison with delegations at the interim headquarters.

4. Department of Security Council Affairs

This department serves the Security Council in the fulfilment of its continuous functions under the Charter. It assists the Secretary-General in the performance of his responsibilities under Article 99 of the Charter (under which he is empowered to bring to the attention of the Security Council matters which in his opinion may threaten international peace and security). It also provides documentation for the General Assembly when it considers questions relating to the maintenance of peace and security.

The department arranges for such services as notification of meetings and preparation of agenda and reports for the Security Council, its commissions (including the Atomic Energy Commission) and committees (excluding the Military Staff Committee) and for the First (Political and Security) Committee of the General Assembly. In co-operation with Conference and General Services, it arranges for such services as verbatim records, summary records, translation of records and translation of proceedings for these bodies.

The department also performs the following functions. It:

- obtains information and prepares reports with reference to threats to the maintenance of international peace and security, the pacific settlement of disputes, and the general principles of co-operation; advises the Security Council on rules of procedure;

² See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 82.

prepares studies on the political aspects of military agreements, and assists in the negotiation of such agreements in co-operation with the Secretariat of the Military Staff Committee;

prepares studies on the size of armaments and traffic in arms; participates in investigations and advises on the security aspects of Trusteeship Agreements for strategic areas;

formulates plans with reference to non-military enforcement measures; and participates with the secretariat of the Military Staff Committee in work related to the application of military enforcement measures.

This department is organized into the following units:

Office of the Assistant Secretary-General
General Political Division
Administrative and General Division
Armaments and Enforcement Measures Section
Atomic Energy Commission Group

To the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General is attached the Special Unit for Trieste.

The General Political Division comprises the following five sections:

General Political European Affairs
Middle East and African Affairs
Asia and Pacific Affairs
Western Hemisphere Affairs

The Administrative and General Division comprises the Services to the Security Council Section, the Services to the Security Council Section, the Services to the Committees Section and the Administrative Section.

a. MILITARY STAFF COMMITTEE SECRETARIAT

The secretariat of the Military Staff Committee serves the Committee in its various functions as defined by the Security Council. It is organized as an independent unit of the Secretariat because of the particular status of the Committee.

The secretariat of the Military Staff Committee is organized in three small sections dealing with administration, languages and documents.

5. Department of Economic Affairs

This department is responsible for providing such services and assistance as are required by the organs of the United Nations in respect of the economic and statistical problems with which they have to deal. These organs include particularly the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the various advisory commissions, both functional and regional, which the Council has established to help it in its work. The department also provides other branches of the Secretariat with any economic and statistical information and advice which they may need. In addition, the department undertakes the publication of certain economic studies and reports.

In carrying out its responsibilities in the economic field, the department maintains close touch with the various specialized agencies established in the fields of labor, food and agriculture, trade, transport and communications, banking and finance. The department is responsible further for servicing international conferences in these fields convened under the auspices of the United Nations.

The department also undertakes to arrange the provision of expert assistance to Member Governments, in accordance with a resolution of the Economic and Social Council.³ This assistance is particularly intended for those countries whose economies stand in need of development.

The substantive work in connection with these responsibilities is performed through four units of the department at the interim headquarters, namely, the Division of Economic Stability and Development, the Fiscal Division, the Transport and Communications Division, and the Statistical Office; in addition, the secretariats of the Economic Commissions for Europe, Asia and the Far East, and Latin America, located respectively at Geneva, Shanghai and Santiago de Chile, form part of the Department of Economic Affairs. Over-all control in all cases is exercised by the office of the Assistant Secretary-General in charge of Economic Affairs.

The office of the Assistant Secretary-General consists of his immediate staff and, in addition, of a unit which serves as the secretariat to the Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements.

The Division of Economic Stability and Development consists of the following main units:

Office of the Director
Economic Stability Section
Economic Development Section
International, Financial and Commercial Relations Section
Geographical Area Units Section

The Transport and Communications Division consists of four main units:

Office of the Director
Inland Transport and Travel Section
World-wide Transport and Communications Section
Research and Documentation Section

³ Resolution 51(IV); see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 540.

The Statistical Office is divided into five main units:

- Office of the Director
- Collection, Analysis and Publication of Statistics Unit
- Research and Promotion of Internationally Comparable Statistics Unit
- International Centre of Statistics Unit
- Co-ordination of the Statistical Activities of the United Nations and Specialized Agencies Unit

a. JOINT DIVISION OF CO-ORDINATION AND LIAISON

The Joint Division of Co-ordination and Liaison was established to deal with a series of problems common to the Departments of Economic Affairs and Social Affairs. The major functions and responsibilities of the division are to provide secretariat services to the Economic and Social Council; to establish and maintain relations between the United Nations and the specialized agencies; to maintain liaison with the non-governmental organizations which apply for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and to maintain relations with such organizations as have been granted consultative status. The division is organized on the basis of three sections, namely, the Economic and Social Council Secretariat, the Specialized Agencies Section and the Non-Governmental Organizations Section.

6. Department of Social Affairs

This department is responsible for the secretariat of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee of the General Assembly; of the Economic and Social Council in so far as it deals with problems of human rights, status of women, narcotic drugs, population and other social problems including health, refugees, education and cultural activities; and that of the commissions, sub-commissions and committees of the Council covering these fields, in particular the Social Commission, the Commission on Human Rights and its sub-commissions, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Population Commission and the Commission on the Status of Women.

It prepares the meetings and work programs of all these organs and carries out, according to instructions received from them, any studies and reports or other technical assignments in the social field. It keeps in touch, through exchange of documentation and, whenever possible, through reciprocal representation, with the specialized agencies and other inter-governmental organizations in the fields of labor, health, education, science and culture, refugees and displaced persons, and connected fields, and with the non-governmental organizations working in the social field.

The department services international conferences convened under the auspices of the United Nations in these fields, assists in the preparation, drafting, and implementation procedures of international conventions on all subjects connected with its field and reports on these activities to the Economic and Social Council and to the General Assembly.

It drafts and prepares for printing by the United Nations studies or reports of a lasting value, the publication of which has been recommended by the organs of the United Nations.

It advises the Secretary-General on all questions falling within its field and keeps him, and through him the interested organs of the United Nations, informed of all major developments in this field throughout the world.

The department is organized into the following units:

- Office of the Assistant Secretary-General
- Division of Human Rights
- Division of Narcotic Drugs
- Division of Population
- Division of Social Activities

To the office of the Assistant Secretary-General is attached the Section of Cultural Activities.

The Division of Human Rights is organized into an Office of the Director and five sections: the Commission's Secretariat, the General Section, the Communications Section, the Section on Freedom of Information and the Press and the Section on the Status of Women.

The Division of Narcotic Drugs consists of three sections: one servicing the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and the other two dealing with international conventions (one with the implementation of existing conventions and one with the preparation and drafting of additional conventions).

The Division of Population is split up as and when required into specialized teams for specific assignments.

The Division of Social Activities is composed of the following units: Office of the Director, Operational Services and Technical Services.

7. Department of Trusteeship and Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories

This department serves the Trusteeship Council and the Fourth (Trusteeship) Committee of the General Assembly, as well as the Special Committee on information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter; informs the Secretary-General of problems and developments in the field of Trusteeship and Non-Self-Governing Territories; supplies other organs of the United Nations and departments of the Secretariat with information concerning Trust Territories, Non-Self-Governing Territories and non-security aspects of strategic areas; and provides documentation for the General Assembly for its consideration of questions arising under Chapters XI, XII and XIII of the Charter.

The substantive work of this department is performed by two divisions through the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General, (1) Trusteeship and (2) Non-Self-Governing Territories.

The Division of Trusteeship provides required studies and documentation for the Trusteeship Council. It assists the Trusteeship Council in: drafting and consideration of Trusteeship Agreements; formulation of questionnaires concerning each Trust Territory; examination of annual reports of Administering Authorities; acceptance and examination of petitions; and periodic official visits and surveys.

The Division of Trusteeship consists of a Director's Office and five sections: Questionnaires, Petitions, Visits, Agreements and Research.

The Division of Non-Self-Governing Territories classifies, summarizes and analyzes information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter and other supplemental official information for the consideration of the General Assembly and the Special Committee, set up under the General Assembly resolution of November 3, 1947. The Division undertakes studies on economic, social and educational matters in territories coming under Article 73 e in order that the information available may be included in relevant programs of the specialized agencies and other departments of the United Nations. It issues an annual publication comprising summaries of the information transmitted by the Administering Powers during the preceding year, analyses of the information and an account of developments in relation to Article 73 e.

The Division of Non-Self-Governing Territories is organized as a Director's Office and four sections: Specialists' Unit, Africa Section, Pacific-Asia Section and Caribbean Section.

The department assists the Department of Security Council Affairs with respect to political, economic, social and educational matters in strategic areas; and obtains the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies on matters within their fields.

8. Department of Public Information

This department advises the Secretary-General on information policy; and, working with the specialized agencies, it:

- supervises and maintains facilities at headquarters for representatives of all information media;

- maintains Information Centres away from headquarters, to disseminate United Nations information throughout the world;

- provides services for press coverage of United Nations activities and issues informative publications;

- organizes sales and distribution throughout the world of all informative material issued by the United Nations;

- broadcasts accounts of United Nations activities and provides facilities for commercial and governmental broadcasting services;

- working with the United Nations Film Board, produces and encourages the production of films on subjects connected with the United Nations and the specialized agencies;

- maintains and encourages film and photographic coverage of United Nations activities and maintains files of prints for publication purposes;

- provides United Nations information material and related services to educational agencies, lecturers and non-governmental organizations;

- prepares surveys of press and radio opinion on United Nations activities; and

- maintains the library and reference services of the United Nations.

The department is organized into the following units:

- Office of the Assistant Secretary-General and Executive Office

- Press and Publications Bureau

- Radio Division

- Films and Visual Information Division

- Special Services

- External Services

- Library Services

The Office of the Assistant Secretary-General and Executive Office consists of the immediate staff of the Assistant Secretary-General, the Executive Office and a section which carries out the sales arrangements for United Nations publications and distribution and printing operations that are performed by this department.

The Press and Publications Bureau is organized into two main services, namely, the Central Information and Press Services and the Publications and Periodicals Services.

The Films and Visual Information Division consists of the Director's Office and two sections, the Films and Television Section and the Visual Information Section.

Special Services is organized in the following sections: Lecture Services and Educational Liaison, Non-Governmental Organizations, Specialized Agencies and Admission Office.

Library Services is organized into the Office of the Director and four sections: Reference and Documentation Section (with a Documents Index Unit), Processing Section, Research Section and Opinion Survey Section.

9. Legal Department

This department advises the Secretariat and other organs of the United Nations on legal and constitutional questions; encourages the progressive development of international law and its codification; and maintains liaison with the International Court of Justice.

In fulfilling these functions, the department:

- prepares legal opinions on the interpretation and application of the Charter of the United Nations;
- assists in the negotiation and drafting of treaties and international agreements;
- serves as legal adviser to the United Nations, its Commissions, Committees, and other organs;
- advises and assists in the drafting of resolutions of the General Assembly and other organs of the United Nations and renders opinions on the interpretation of such resolutions;
- advises and assists other departments with respect to legal problems involved in their work;
- advises on legal aspects of contracts for buildings, and services and supplies;
- advises on legal aspects of disputes and claims in the field of private law involving the United Nations;
- prepares studies and recommendations and promotes conferences with respect to the development and codification of international law;
- assists in the analysis and interpretation of national laws and decrees of interest to the United Nations;
- interprets legal instruments of an international law character, such as international treaties and agreements, more especially if their subject is being studied by organs of the United Nations;
- negotiates and drafts conventions relating to privileges and immunities and deals with any dispute or question arising out of the application of such conventions;
- registers, classifies, and publishes treaties and international agreements; and
- maintains liaison with the International Court of Justice with respect to legal functions of the Court.

The department comprises the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General and three divisions: General Legal Questions, Development and Codification of International Law, and Privileges and Immunities and Registration of Treaties.

10. Conference and General Services

This department makes arrangements and provides services for meetings of the General Assembly, the Councils, commissions, committees and special conferences held under the auspices of the United Nations.

In fulfilling these functions, the department:

- co-operates with the departments concerned in scheduling conferences and meetings;
- co-ordinates the service activities and provides translation, interpretation, reproduction and graphic presentation services for conferences and for the Secretariat;
- edits and publishes the journals and official records of conferences and meetings;
- provides general services such as purchasing, stores and warehousing, commercial arrangements with regard to the printing of publications, transportation arrangements, hotel accommodations and buildings management;
- handles mail, cables, telephone and telegraph services and supervises registries and files.

Conference and General Services consists of the Office of the Assistant Secretary-General, the Bureau of Documents, with five divisions and the Documents Control Staff, and the Bureau of General Services with four divisions.

The Office of the Assistant Secretary-General consists of his immediate staff, an Overseas Offices Division and a Conference Division. The Conference Division is composed of three sections: Conference Management Section, Planning and Estimates Section and Accounts Control Section.

The Bureau of Documents consists of an Office of the Director, Documents Control Staff, Reproduction and Distribution Division, Interpretation Division, Printing Liaison Division, Translation Division and Official Records Division.

The Reproduction and Distribution Division comprises the Director's Office and two sections: Reproduction Section and Distribution Section.

The Printing Liaison Division is composed of an Office of the Director and three sections: Copy Preparation Section, Printing Control Section and Presentation Section.

The Translation Division comprises a divisional office, a Terminology Section, a Documentation and Reference Section and one Translation Section for each official language.

The Official Records Division comprises the Office of the Director, English Section, French Section, Russian Unit and Spanish Unit.

The Bureau of General Services consists of the Office of the Director, Communications and Records Division, Maintenance and Engineering Division, Purchase and Supply Division and Transportation Division.

The Communications and Records Division is composed of an administrative staff and four sections: Archives Section, Cable and Wireless Section, Mail and Messenger Section and Registry Section.

The Maintenance and Engineering Division is composed of the Office of the Chief and four sections: Space and Telephone Control Section, Security Section, Sound and Recording Section and Maintenance Section.

The Transportation Division is composed of an administrative staff, and four sections: Freight Section, Authorization and Passport Section, Passenger Section and Local Transportation Section.

11. Administrative and Financial Services

This department plans and executes the personnel, budgetary and fiscal programs of the United Nations.

It provides data required by the General Assembly, the Councils and Committees with respect to administrative, financial and budgetary questions, and maintains relationship with all departments of the Secretariat, the Registrar of the International Court of Justice and the specialized agencies on these questions. It advises the Secretary-General on proposed programs of the organization prior to their adoption with respect to their personnel, budgetary and financial implications.

It is responsible for arranging with Member nations for the payment of their contributions.

Administrative and Financial Services is organized into the following units.

Office of the Assistant Secretary-General
Bureau of Administrative Management and Budget

The Bureau of Personnel is organized as follows: Office of the Director, Appointment and Staff Relations Division, Housing Division, Staff Pensions Division, Staff Regulations and Policies Division and Training Division.

C. DEVELOPMENT OF THE SECRETARIAT FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

1. Organizational Changes

A detailed survey of all departments was made by the Management Engineering Division of the Bureau of Administrative Management and Budget. The results of this survey formed the basis for organizational changes in a number of departments. The more important changes that occurred in the responsibilities and functions of the main units of the Secretariat during the period covered by the present Yearbook are briefly outlined in the following paragraphs (A/565).

a. DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

During the period under review, the principal development in the organization of this department was the establishment and organization of the staffs of the regional economic commissions: the Economic Commission for Europe, the organization of which was virtually completed by the end of 1947; the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, established during 1947; and the Economic Commission for Latin America, established during 1948.

b. DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INFORMATION

As of January 1, 1948, the library was re-organized and all existing library and reference services except the language reference services were centralized for the time being in the Department of Public Information. This re-organized service comprises the Library and the Documents Index Unit, formerly under Conference and General Services, the reference and related services previously performed by the Reference and Publications Division of the Department of Public Information, and certain library and reference activities transferred from other departments. The Geneva library was placed under the general policy direction of the headquarters library.

Sales of all publications of the United Nations, as well as the technical operations connected with the printing of publications of the Department of Public Information, were transferred from Conference and General Services to the former Department, and are now performed by a section attached to the Executive Office of the Department of Public Information.

To the six Information Centres existing in the first half of 1947, six more were added, due consideration being given to their geographical distribution all over the world. As of September 21, 1948, the network consisted of the following Centres: Copenhagen (for Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden); Geneva (at the United Nations European Office); London (for the United Kingdom, Ireland and the Netherlands); Moscow (for the U.S.S.R., the Byelorussian S.S.R. and the Ukrainian S.S.R.); Mexico City (for Mexico and Central America); New Delhi (for India, Burma and Ceylon); Paris (for France, Belgium, Luxembourg and the French Commonwealth); Prague (for Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia); Rio de Janeiro (for Brazil); Shanghai (for China, the Philippines and Siam); Warsaw (for Poland); and Washington (for the United States).

c. CONFERENCE AND GENERAL SERVICES

In the Department of Conference and General Services, a thorough re-organization of the structure and operations of the former Bureau of Technical Services, which became the Bureau of Documents, was put into effect in April 1948. It consisted of the integration of the services responsible for producing the official records of meetings in such a way that the manuscript of those records would be completed in the working languages within a single administrative unit. Secondly, a Documents Control Staff was established to review all documents submitted for issue and to record the statistics of all divisions of the Bureau of Documents.

d. ADMINISTRATIVE AND FINANCIAL SERVICES

A re-organization of the Administrative and Financial Services was planned. Under the scheme, it was proposed to merge the Bureau of Administrative Management and Budget and the Bureau of the Comptroller, and to regroup the functions presently performed by these two bureaux into four divisions.

The second feature of the re-organization plan was the proposed establishment of an Inspection Service, comprising the present Internal Audit Division of the Comptroller's Office and the Management Engineering Division of the Bureau of Administrative Management and Budget.

Thirdly, the internal organization and procedures of the Bureau of Personnel were being revised.

The re-organization plan outlined above was to become fully operative by January 1949.

e. GENEVA OFFICE

Re-organization of the Geneva office was completed during the period under review in accordance with the suggestion, made by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions in its report on the 1948 budget (A/336), that both the system of control by headquarters and the internal organization of the office could be simplified. Greater flexibility and speed of operation were secured through a clarification of responsibilities and line of communication with headquarters, through the delegation of a considerable measure of local authority in matters of administration and finance and through the regrouping of certain services. In particular, the Director of the Geneva office was given full administrative authority over all United Nations elements of the Geneva office. Further, Conference and General Services in both the Geneva office and at the interim headquarters now have corresponding functions. The Head of Administrative and Financial Services at Geneva was given an overall responsibility for all matters relating to personnel, budget and finance. At the same time, the functions of the Geneva office were clearly defined. They may be briefly described as follows:

(1) To provide office accommodation and services for units of the United Nations Secretariat located in Geneva (the staff of the Economic Commission for Europe, the joint secretariat of the Permanent Central Opium Board and Narcotic Drugs Supervisory Body, a unit of the Department of Social Affairs, representatives of the Department of Trusteeship and of the Joint Division of Co-ordination and Liaison and the Information Centre);

(2) To act as a European centre for the holding of conferences, both of the United Nations and of specialized agencies;

(3) To provide facilities of a temporary character for United Nations commissions operating in Europe;

(4) To provide, on a reimbursable basis, office space and certain services for specialized agencies with secretariats in Geneva.

2. Staff Policies

a. RECRUITMENT AND APPOINTMENTS

Recruitment from outside the United States continued, principally through United Nations recruitment representatives who covered the European area and 23 countries in other regions of the world. These recruitment representatives, appointed by the Secretary-General, have been maintained in: Buenos Aires (for Argentina, Paraguay and Uruguay); Melbourne (for Australia); Rio de Janeiro (for Brazil); Ottawa (for Canada); Shanghai (for China); Bogota (for Colombia); San José (for Costa Rica, Nicaragua and Panama, for part of the year); Havana (for Cuba, the Dominican Republic and Haiti); Guatemala City (for Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador); New Delhi (for India); Mexico City (for Mexico); Wellington (for New Zealand); Karachi (for Pakistan); Lima (for Peru); and Pretoria (for the Union of South Africa). Honorary committees were also established in Ecuador, the Philippines and Venezuela.

The Chief of the European Recruitment Centre made a recruitment trip to Member countries in the Middle Eastern area. As a result, a register of qualified candidates from these countries has been established at headquarters and in the Geneva office.

Progress was made in the system of recruitment and promotion by competitive examination, including:

(1) Plans for recruiting by competitive examination about twenty young trainees for junior professional and administrative posts from India and Latin America were formulated. Examinations will be held during 1949 in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, India and Pakistan.

(2) Over one thousand candidates for linguistic posts (translator and precis writer) were examined in New York, Paris, London, Geneva, Brussels, Moscow, Prague and Stockholm. In addition, examinations were held for such diverse posts as statisticians, economists, radio operators, proof-readers, Chinese calligraphers, verbatim reporters, administrative assistants and clerical workers. Nearly three thousand candidates were examined in all.

(3) An examination was held within the Secretariat to find young people well fitted for advancement to junior administrative posts.

One special problem has been the staffing of missions. Partly by transfer of existing staff members and partly by initial recruitment, 248 staff members were sent—during the period covered by the Yearbook—on mission assignments with the United Nations Special Committee on the Balkans, the Committee of Good Offices on the Indonesian Question, the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan, the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea, the United Nations Truce Commission for Palestine and the Visiting Mission to East Africa.

The Personnel Selection Committee, established by the Secretary-General in the summer of 1946 for the purpose of considering and reviewing the qualifications of personnel recommended by department heads for permanent appointment in the Secretariat, had held 109 meetings by September 21, 1948, and had considered 1,180 nominations.

As of August 31, 1948, 775 members of the Secretariat had indeterminate appointments, and 237 indeterminate appointments were pending.

b. GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION

As of August 31, 1948, there were 3,982 members of the Secretariat.⁴ Their geographic distribution is represented in the table (A/652) on pages 812-13.

c. SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES

The salaries of the Secretariat members were not changed. An increased cost of living allowance was granted, however.

d. JOINT STAFF PENSION SCHEME

As of September 21, 1948, there was an active membership of 1,789 employees in the Staff Pension Scheme.⁵

e. STAFF TRAINING

The program of training and information for members of the staff emphasized special orientation for newcomers, language training and general orientation lectures.

Language training in all five official languages was developed in courses graded according to standards of proficiency. A total of 973 staff members attended the classes.

The orientation lectures included a series on American life, given in co-operation with Columbia University; a series on United Nations activities; and an informational series for staff going to Paris for the third regular session of the General Assembly.

f. INTERNE TRAINING

An eight-week internship program, enabling students (local university graduates) to receive a close insight into the workings of an international organization, was conducted from January 15 to March 5, 1948. The internees worked in the Secretariat during their vacation periods, without salary or allowances.

A similar eight-week program commenced on July 12, 1948, with 43 students from 33 countries and eleven internes chosen on a scholarship basis by Rotary International, the School of International Affairs of Columbia University, the University of Pennsylvania and Stanford and Alfred Universities.

While the internes received no remuneration for their work, arrangements were made to provide a daily living allowance and to house the whole group at Adelphi College, not far from the interim headquarters. This was made possible through the generous financial support of Rotary International, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and the Hugh Moore Memorial Fund.

Most of the internes worked as research assistants in the Departments of Economic Affairs, Social Affairs and Public Information; but some were assigned to the Legal, Trusteeship and Security Council Affairs Departments and to the Bureau of Personnel in Administrative and Financial Services and the Bureau of Documents in Conference and General Services.

A course of lectures and seminars, given by senior members of the Secretariat, was part of the program. These included discussions of the history and organization of the United Nations; practical problems of work and adjustment; the growth and development of international co-operation; the Palestine question, as an example of the problems which arise in the settlement of international disputes; particular problems of departments of the Secretariat; specific techniques of international organization; the international civil service; problems of information about the United Nations; and the development of the internship program.

STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION

I. The International Labour Organisation¹

A. ORIGIN

The International Labour Organisation was established on April 11, 1919, as an autonomous institution associated with the League of Nations. The original Constitution of the Organisation was adopted as Part XIII of the Treaty of Versailles and formed part of other treaties of peace.

The original Members of ILO were the original Members of the League, and thereafter membership in the League carried with it, but was not necessary for, membership in the Organisation.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The Preamble of the Organisation's Constitution states that universal peace "can be established only if it is based upon social justice"; that unjust conditions of labor imperil "the peace and harmony of the world"; and that an improvement in such conditions "is urgently required: as, for example, by the regulation of the hours of work, including the establishment of a maximum working day and week, the regulation of the labour supply, the prevention of unemployment, the provision of an adequate living wage, the protection of the worker against sickness, disease and injury arising out of his employment, the protection of children, young persons and women, provision for old age and injury, protection of the interests of workers when employed in countries other than their own, recognition of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, recognition of the principle of freedom of association, the organisation of vocational and technical education and other measures".

The 26th session of the General Conference (also called the International Labour Conference), held at Philadelphia in April and May 1944, adopted a "Declaration concerning the Aims and Purposes of the International Labour Organisation", generally known as the Declaration of Philadelphia. Under an amendment to the Constitution adopted by the 29th session of the Conference in October 1946, the objects set forth in this Declaration are included among those to be promoted by the Organisation, and the text of the Declaration is annexed to the Constitution.

The Declaration redefines the functions and responsibilities of the Organisation. It reaffirms the fundamental principles upon which the Organization is based and, in particular, that "(a) labour is not a commodity;

"(b) freedom of expression and of association are essential to sustained progress;

"(c) poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere;

"(d) the war against want requires to be carried on with unrelenting vigour within each nation, and by continuous and concerted international effort in which the representatives of workers and employers, enjoying equal status with those of Governments, join with them in free discussion and democratic decision with a view to the promotion of the common welfare."

The Declaration affirms that "all human beings, irrespective of race, creed or sex, have the right to pursue both their material well-being and their spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity, of economic security and equal opportunity", and adds that the "attainment of the conditions in which this shall be possible must constitute the central aim of national and international policy". The Declaration maintains that "it is a responsibility of the International Labour Organisation to examine and consider all international economic and financial policies and measures in the light of this fundamental objective", and that, in discharging the tasks entrusted to it, the Organisation, "having considered all relevant economic and financial factors, may include in its decisions and recommendations any provisions which it considers appropriate".

The Declaration recognizes the solemn obligation of the Organisation to promote programs to achieve full employment and the raising of standards of living, recognition of the right of collective bargaining, extension of social security, etc. It embodies a pledge that the Organisation will cooperate with other international bodies in the achievement of the objectives it sets forth and in the promotion of the health, education and well-being of all peoples.

C. ORGANIZATION

The organs of ILO are the General Conference of representatives of the Members, the Governing Body and the International Labour Office, which is controlled by the Governing Body.

The General Conference meets at least once a year. It is composed of four representatives of each Member State, of whom two are government delegates and the other two are delegates representing, respectively, the employers and the workers of each Member. The non-government delegates are appointed in agreement with the organizations which are most representative of employers and workers. Each delegate may be accompanied by not more than two advisers for each item on the agenda of the session.

New Members are admitted into the Organisation, if they are Members of the United Nations, by communicating to the Director-General of ILO their formal acceptance of the obligations of the ILO Constitution. Other states, to become Members of ILO, require in addition a two-thirds vote of the delegates to the Conference, including two thirds of the votes cast by government delegates to the Conference.

Each delegate has one vote in the Conference. Except as otherwise provided by the ILO Constitution, the Conference makes decisions by a simple majority of the votes cast. Decisions of the Conference mainly take the form of Conventions and Recommendations, which require a two-thirds majority of the Conference for adoption. Under the ILO Constitution, a Member is required to bring a Convention adopted by the Conference to the attention of its competent national authority for ratification. If a country ratifies a Convention, it assumes an obligation to apply the provisions of that Convention to all the territories under its administration, including Non-Self-Governing Territories; it also assumes an obligation to report annually on the measures it has taken to bring its legislation into line with these provisions. Supervisory machinery available within ILO provides not only for measures to promote the ratification of Conventions, but also for a complaint procedure in the event of violations of a Convention. With regard to Recommendations, Members of ILO are under the obligation to consider them with a view to giving effect to their provisions by legislation or other action. Member States are further required to report periodically on the position of their law and practice in relation to unratified Conventions and Recommendations.

As of September 21, 1948, a total of 90 Conventions² and 83 Recommendations had been adopted by the Conference. Collectively, the Conventions and Recommendations form an International Labour Code,³ which embodies international standards of policy.

The Governing Body is composed of 32 members. Sixteen of these represent governments, eight the employers and eight the workers. Eight of the sixteen government representatives are appointed by the eight Member States of chief industrial importance; and eight are appointed by Member States chosen by the other government delegates to the Conference in an election held every three years. The employer and worker members are elected, respectively, by the employer and worker delegates to the Conference. The Governing Body's responsibilities include the selection of items for the agenda of the Conference, the appointment of the Director-General of the International Labour Office, the general supervision of the Office and of the various committees and commissions of the Organisation, and the consideration of proposals for the Organisation's budget.

² See list of International Labour Conventions adopted by the Conference to date, pp. 828-30.

³ International Labour Code 1939. 920 pp. International Labour Office, Montreal, 1941.

The International Labour Office provides the secretariat of the Conference and of the Governing Body, prepares documents on the items of the agenda of the Conference and of the Governing Body, collects and distributes information on all subjects within the Organisation's competence, assists governments in the drafting of legislation and regulations, conducts such special investigations as may be ordered by the Conference or by the Governing Body, provides machinery to assist in ensuring the effective application of Conventions, and issues a variety of periodical and other publications dealing with problems of industry and employment. The Office also acts as the secretariat for the Inter-American Social Security Conference, organized in 1940 to promote social security in the Americas, and for the International Social Security Association, a private international association of social security institutions founded in 1927 with the support of the International Labour Office.

A number of commissions and committees exist to further the work of the Organisation in specific fields. In addition to the Governing Body committees, these include the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions, the Joint Maritime Commission, the Advisory Committee on Salaried Employees and Professional Workers, the Advisory Committee on Cooperation, the Permanent Agricultural Committee, the Committee of Social Security Experts and its Sub-committee of Experts on Actuarial Questions, the Correspondence Committee on Accident Prevention, the Correspondence Committee on Industrial Hygiene and its Sub-committee on Silicosis, the Correspondence Committee of Women's Work, the Advisory Committee on Juvenile Work, the Correspondence Committee on Recreation, the Joint Commission on Industrial Hygiene, the Joint Commission on Provision for Medical Care and Health Services, the Committee on Social Policy in Non-Metropolitan Territories, the Permanent Migration Committee, the International Development Works Committee, the Sub-committee on Automatic Coupling of Railway Vehicles, the Committee of Statistical Experts and the Committee on Indigenous Labour. There are industrial committees for the following eight industries: Coal Mines; Textiles; Building, Civil Engineering and Public Works; Metal Trades; Iron and Steel Production; Inland Transport; Petroleum Production and Refining; Chemicals.

In addition to the principal working centre of the International Labour Office at Geneva, ILO maintains a Liaison Office with the United Nations in New York, and branch offices in Canada, China, France, India, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Correspondents or agents for the sale of publications are maintained in the following countries: Argentina, Australia, Belgium-Luxembourg, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Egypt, Greece, Guatemala, Ireland, Mexico, Peru, Poland, Sweden, Syria, Uruguay and Venezuela. The correspondents serve as information centres, and distribute and sell publications.

D. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

Throughout the years between its establishment and the outbreak of the Second World War, the Organisation played a leading role in promoting the improvement of labor conditions throughout the world.

From 1919 to July 1, 1947, 29 sessions of the General Conference had been held and the 30th was in session; 102 sessions of the Governing Body had been held. Five of the Conference sessions were concerned exclusively with improving social conditions in the maritime industry. The first Conference of the Organisation was held in Washington, D. C., in 1919, and the second in Genoa, Italy, in 1920. Thereafter, until 1939, sessions of the Conference were held at the Organisation's seat in Geneva.

In 1940, in order to ensure that the International Labour Office should be able to continue to function freely, a working centre was established at Montreal. The transfer to Geneva of the services temporarily located in Canada was approaching completion in September 1948. During the war years, ILO devoted its energies to assisting the cause of the Allies. A special Conference of ILO, which marked the first large-scale meeting of Allied representatives since the outbreak of war, was held in New York in 1941, and a series of seven meetings of United States and Canadian representatives concerned with manpower mobilization problems was organized during 1941 and 1942. A meeting of the Governing Body was held in 1941, a session of the Emergency Committee of the Governing Body in 1942 and regular Governing Body sessions were resumed in 1943. Regular sessions of the General Conference were resumed in 1944, after a five-year interval, with the 26th session, held in Philadelphia. At this session, ILO considered its postwar status, policy and program and adopted the Declaration of Philadelphia, which redefined the aims and purposes of the Organisation. The Conference met again in Paris in 1945, in Seattle and Montreal in 1946 and in Geneva in 1947.

The ILO Constitution was amended by the Paris session in 1945 and again in 1946 by the Montreal session of the Conference in order to strengthen the procedure for ensuring a strict application of conventions adopted by ILO, to make the Organisation independent of the League of Nations machinery after the dissolution of the League and to facilitate full co-operation with the United Nations.⁴

An Agreement bringing the ILO into relationship with the United Nations, in accordance with Article 63 of the Charter, and defining its status as a specialized agency was unanimously approved by the 29th session of the General Conference on October 2, 1946. The Agreement came into force upon its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations on December 14, 1946.⁵

ILO gradually brought its activities back to their prewar level; the Organisation again began working towards the improvement of the working conditions of seafarers, agricultural and industrial workers, salaried employees and professional workers, and towards the improvement of conditions in Non-Self-Governing Territories. ILO also found it necessary to extend its activities to meet regional needs. It began to hold regional conferences to deal with the special problems of the American continent, and especially of Latin America, as early as 1936, and in 1947 began to develop its regional activities in Asia and the Far East and in the Near and Middle East.

The Organisation further recognized the need for new machinery to deal with the specific labor and social problems of individual industries of great international importance. It therefore decided to set up in 1945 industrial committees for the world's leading industries. The Committees bring together representatives of governments, management and labor to discuss the specific problems of these industries.

E. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

During this period, ILO has held one session of its General Conference and three sessions of its Governing Body. The Governing Body met for its 103rd session in Geneva in December 1947, its 104th session in Geneva in March 1948 and its 105th and 106th sessions in San Francisco in June and July 1948.

The 31st session of the General Conference, which met at San Francisco from June 17 to July 10, 1948, was attended by 443 delegates and advisers from 51 of ILO's Member States.

The Conference admitted Ceylon to membership in ILO. Since the previous session, Burma, El Salvador, Pakistan, the Philippines and Syria had become Members by notifying ILO of their acceptance of the obligations imposed by the Constitution.

The Conference appointed the eight government, eight labor and eight employer members holding elective seats on the Governing Body.

Earlier, the Governing Body had agreed that the United States, the United Kingdom, France, India, China and Canada should retain the seats they held as the countries of chief industrial importance. It was decided that Brazil should replace the Netherlands among these eight States. Subject to review, it was agreed that Belgium should continue to occupy the eighth non-elective seat.⁶

The agenda of the Conference included: a series of technical questions on vocational guidance; employment service organization and revision of the Convention concerning fee-charging employment agencies, 1933; wages; freedom of association and protection of the right to organize; industrial relations; and revision of Conventions, adopted at earlier sessions of the Conference, on the employment at night of women and young persons. As a result of decisions of the Conference, the total number of International Labour Conventions adopted by the Organisation was brought to 90 and the total number of Recommendations to 83.

⁴The Instrument for the Amendment of the Constitution, 1945, came into force on September 26, 1946; the Instrument for the Amendment of the Constitution, 1946, came into force on April 20, 1948. For a more detailed account of the provisions of these amendments, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 664-65. For text of Constitution, as amended, see ibid., pp. 670-79.

⁵For text, see ibid., pp. 679-83.

⁶On the decision of the 107th session of the Governing Body in December 1948, Belgium was replaced by Italy. Belgium was appointed to fill the elective seat previously held by Italy, subject to confirmation by the next session of the General Conference.

The main activities of the Organisation, together with relevant decisions of the General Conference and the Governing Body, are summarized below.

Decisions of the Conference other than those referred to below included a request that the Governing Body examine for possible action a resolution proposing that various specific rights in respect of living and working conditions should be considered as essential rights of the workers in all parts of the world, and that recognition of these rights should be fundamental to the work of ILO. The Governing Body was asked to arrange for a further study of working conditions in all branches of the glass industry and to undertake the ten-yearly review of the Conventions adopted on the question in 1934 and 1935, in order to consider whether their revision is necessary. The Conference requested that a study be undertaken, in consultation with ICAO, on working conditions of persons employed on aircraft engaged in the transport of passengers and goods. It agreed on points to be covered at its next session in the consideration of international minimum standards governing vocational guidance, labor clauses in public contracts, and the prompt payment of workers' wages. Among its other decisions, the Conference asked the Governing Body to consider placing on the agenda of an early session of the General Conference the questions of a guaranteed wage and of the status and employment of domestic workers.

1. Manpower

ILO has greatly expanded and intensified its activities in dealing with the urgent question of manpower. At its 104th session held in Geneva in March 1948, the Governing Body authorized the International Labour Office to undertake an emergency manpower program for Europe. This program has been developed in co-operation with the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, which, at a meeting of its Sub-Committee on Manpower in March 1948, invited ILO to undertake a number of tasks in the field of manpower as part of the emergency reconstruction program. ILO is also working with the Organization for European Economic Co-operation and the International Co-ordination Committee for European Migratory Movements.

The Office is acting as a centre for the exchange of information on vocational training and retraining. It is issuing a periodic annotated bibliography on vocational guidance and training, and is publishing a series of national monographs on vocational training schemes operating in selected countries. It has also begun the collection and the exchange of information concerning manpower needs and surpluses (from the point of view of migration) and, in order to facilitate the necessary interchange of workers, a list of definitions and classifications of the occupations concerned. The list of definitions of occupations used by the International Refugee Organization for classifying refugees and displaced persons was used as a practical basis, and a number of improvements suggested by ILO were adopted by IRO.

Requests for ILO assistance in dealing with the manpower problems of Asia and the Far East were made in resolutions adopted by the ILO Preparatory Asian Regional Conference in 1947, and at the second session of the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East held in November and December 1947. In 1948 the Office loaned an expert to ECAFE to survey the training facilities of that region. Meanwhile, ECAFE, at its third session in May and June 1948, reiterated its request that machinery be set up to deal with questions of training.

In the light of the progress made with the ILO manpower program for Europe, and in response to requests for assistance from Asia and the Far East, the Near and Middle East and Latin America, the Director-General prepared for submission to the 107th session of the Governing Body, scheduled to meet in Geneva in December 1948, a comprehensive picture of the work undertaken by ILO in the field of manpower, migration and technical training, together with proposals for further action to intensify this work on a worldwide basis, and to adapt it to meet the special needs of the different regions of the world.

⁷ The Governing Body in December endorsed these proposals and took steps to meet the requests for assistance.

2. Migration

Proposals for the revision of the Migration for Employment Convention, 1939, and of related Recommendations were considered by the Permanent Migration Committee of ILO, which met in Geneva from February 23 to March 2, 1948. The Committee also examined questions concerning a draft model migration agreement, technical selection and training of migrants and co-operation of ILO in measures for the co-ordination of international responsibilities in the field of migration.

On the basis of recommendations made to it by the Committee, the 104th session of the Governing Body placed on the agenda of the General Conference the revision of the 1939 Convention and Recommendations on migration. In addition to the principles concerning methods of recruitment, introduction and placement of migrants for employment included in the present Convention, the proposed revisions provide, inter alia, for more fully formulated principles concerning equality of treatment, and other aspects of the protection of the economic and social rights of migrants than now appear in the text. The Governing Body approved the Committee's proposal that there should be one Convention, one Recommendation and a Model Bilateral Agreement to be annexed to the Recommendation. Among its other decisions on migration, the Governing Body authorized the International Labour Office to take appropriate action to co-ordinate international responsibility in the field of migration, in consultation with the United Nations and other international agencies. In this connection, an agreement had already been reached between the United Nations and ILO defining the sphere of competence of the two organizations on migration questions.

The Governing Body further authorized the Office to develop its migration activities on a regional basis, and in particular to speed up its information service and to adapt the Model Agreement to present European conditions. At its 31st session, the General Conference referred to the Governing Body for appropriate action a resolution concerning the rights of migrants with respect to social security.

3. Public Employment Services

Recognizing that adequate machinery for organizing employment to meet national and local needs was required for the solution of manpower problems, the 30th session of the General Conference, meeting in June and July 1947, decided on a series of points suitable for inclusion in international regulations relating to employment service organization. After circulation of draft texts to Member Governments, the 31st session of the Conference adopted, in July 1948, a Convention requiring all states which ratify it to maintain free public employment services and approved a formal Recommendation designed to supplement the provisions of the employment service Convention.

The question of revising the 1933 Convention on fee-charging employment agencies, discussed by the 31st session, is to be considered again by the 32nd session of the Conference in 1949.

4. Night Work

The 31st session of the General Conference approved two Conventions, revising Conventions adopted at earlier sessions of the Conference to limit the employment at night of women and young persons.⁸ The revisions made more flexible the term "night" in order to facilitate the working of a double day shift, required in certain Member countries to increase production. The Conference also agreed to the substitution of the revised Conventions in the Schedule to the Labour Standards (Non-Metropolitan Territories) Convention, 1947.

5. Equal Pay

The question of international regulations requiring equal pay for work of equal value by men and women, referred to ILO by the Economic and Social Council,⁹ was discussed by the 31st session of the Conference. The Conference adopted a resolution drawing the attention of Member States to the importance of taking appropriate measures to secure the effective application of the principle of equal remuneration. It requested the Governing Body to consider placing the question of international regulations on the agenda of an early session of the Conference, preferably the 32nd. The International Labour Office was instructed to continue its studies on the subject and the Governing Body was asked to take any additional action required to secure a more widespread and effective application of the principle.

6. Freedom of Association

The fifth session of the Economic and Social Council had requested ILO to consider the question of freedom of association.¹⁰ The 30th session of the General Conference, on July 11, 1947, after discussing the matter, adopted a resolution laying down the fundamental principles on which freedom of association should be based. It stated that both employers and workers should have the inviolable right to establish or join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. Such organizations should have the right to determine their functions and activities without restrictive interference from public authorities and should not be liable to be dissolved or have their activities suspended by administrative authority. They should also be entitled to establish federations and confederations, to which the same rights should apply, and to affiliate with international organizations of employers and workers.

The Conference proposed measures for safeguarding freedom of association. It suggested, among other measures, that organized employers and workers agree mutually to respect the exercise of the right of association. If necessary, appropriate steps should be taken to provide guarantees for the exercise of the right of freedom of association so that the employment of a worker should not be conditional on his not joining or on his withdrawing from a trade union or that he should not be dismissed or discriminated against because he is a union member or official. Guarantees, if necessary, should also be provided for the exercise of the right of association by workers' organizations in such a way as to prevent any acts on the part of the employer, employer organizations or their agents with the object of: furthering the establishment of trade unions under employers' domination; interfering with the formation or administration of a trade union or contributing to its support; or refusing to give effect to the principles of trade union recognition and collective bargaining. It was agreed that a provision in a freely concluded collective agreement requiring membership in a certain trade union prior to employment or for continued employment should not be subject to the terms of the Conference resolution.

The 31st session of the General Conference again considered the question and, on July 6, 1948, adopted a Convention on freedom of association and the protection of the right to organize, which will require the governments ratifying it to make effective the right of workers and employers to form and join organizations of their own choosing. The Conference agreed on a number of points, relating to protection against wrongful interference or coercion, and supervisory measures, to be covered at its next session in considering international minimum standards governing the application of the principles of the right to organize.

It also adopted a resolution requesting the Governing Body to enter into consultations with the United Nations to examine "what developments to existing international machinery may be necessary to ensure the safeguarding of freedom of association". The Constitution of ILO already provides for a procedure for the enforcement of ratified Conventions.

7. Maritime Labor

The ILO Joint Maritime Commission held its fourteenth session in Geneva from December 2 to 5, 1947. It asked that steps be taken to speed up the ratification of the nine International Labour Conventions adopted at the maritime conference of ILO in 1946. It requested the International Labour Office to continue to study various aspects of the welfare of seafarers. The Commission adopted a resolution drawing the attention of governments and of shipowners' and seafarers' organizations to the potential danger of the transfer of vessels to foreign flags, and asked the Office to continue its study of the subject. It also examined the question of relations with other organizations.

8. Agricultural Labor

The Permanent Agricultural Committee of ILO, which had first met before the Second World War, held its second session at Geneva from August 4 to 9, 1947. It considered a general survey of developments since the first session and discussed the order of priority of problems of agricultural labor. It also examined the questions of minimum wage regulations in agriculture, medical examination of children and young persons for fitness for employment and security of employment and occupation in agriculture.

The ILO regional conferences in New Delhi and Istanbul, as noted below, took decisions designed to raise the standard of living in the rural areas of Asia and the Near and Middle East.

¹⁰ See pp. 583-86.

9. Statistics

The Sixth International Conference of Labour Statisticians was held by ILO in Montreal from August 4 to 12, 1947. Its agenda included the topics of employment and payroll statistics, unemployment statistics, cost-of-living statistics, amendments to the resolution on statistics of industrial accidents adopted at an earlier Conference and inland transport statistics. The meeting adopted resolutions which set new international standards for statistics in three major fields—employment and labor force, cost-of-living and industrial injuries.

10. Industrial Committees

Since July 1, 1947, two of ILO's eight Industrial Committees have held their second sessions, and one, the Chemicals Industries Committee, held its first session during this period.

The Committees on Iron and Steel and on the Metal Trades met in Stockholm from August 20 to 29 and September 3 to 12, 1947, respectively. They discussed the regularization of production and employment, minimum income security, and labor-management co-operation in the industries concerned. The Committees also examined general reports submitted to each Industrial Committee on action taken in the various countries to give effect to decisions reached at previous meetings, and recent events and developments in the industry.

The Chemicals Industries Committee, which met in Paris from April 7 to 16, 1948, considered the problems of the chemical industries in the light of recent events and developments, and working conditions and the organization of industrial relations in these industries.

11. Regional Activities

ILO regional activities in Asia and in the Near and Middle East to deal with the specific problems of those areas began in 1947.

A Preparatory Asian Regional Conference met in New Delhi from October 27 to November 8, 1947, prior to the first Asian Regional Conference, which was to meet in China in 1949. The Conference dealt with a wide range of questions concerning social security; labor policy in general, including the enforcement of labor measures; an action program for the enforcement of social standards embodied in ILO Conventions and Recommendations; and the general economic background of social policy, including problems of industrialization. The Conference adopted a series of resolutions on social security, labor policy, labor management co-operation, attainment of ILO social objectives, relations between Japan and ILO and ILO assistance to Asian countries. Through the Governing Body, the Conference called to the attention of the Economic and Social Council, the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, FAO and ITO the need for the provision of industrial employment for excess agricultural population, expansion of agricultural production, fair distribution of agricultural income and fair terms of exchange for export of primary products. It also suggested measures to improve existing conditions by international action.

A Regional Meeting for the Near and Middle East was held in Istanbul from November 24 to 29, 1947. Questions examined by the Meeting included conditions of life and work of the agricultural workers, and methods and machinery for the protection of industrial and commercial workers. The Meeting considered a report by the Director-General dealing with, among other questions, industrialization, the development of national resources, vocational training, industrial relations and the application of decisions of the General Conference. The Meeting adopted resolutions concerning the development of the work of ILO in the Near and Middle East, labor policy, social security, conditions of life and work of the agricultural workers and economic policies designed to further in the Near and Middle East the social objectives of ILO. As in the case of the New Delhi Conference, the measures recommended require co-ordinated action by various other international organizations.

12. Advisory Missions

A number of missions have been sent to Member countries of ILO at the request of their respective governments.

In August and September 1947 and again in March 1948, an ILO official visited Czechoslovakia and advised the Government on the reconstruction of its social insurance system into a national insurance scheme.

A mission of experts in industrial relations, trade union law, social insurance and conditions of work visited Greece in October and November 1947 to assist the Greek Government in the examination and revision of its labor legislation, including the legislation governing trade unions. The mission recommended extensive revision of the laws and regulations governing such questions as the organization and conditions of employment, social insurance services, trade unions and administrative services.

In January 1948, an ILO official went to Shanghai and Nanking to make recommendations to the Chinese Government on the questions of employment service organization and youth training.

An ILO official visited Iran from December 1947 to February 1948 and made detailed recommendations to that Government on the introduction of co-operative organizations in Iran. Two additional officials visited Iran in March and April 1948 to advise the Government on questions concerning the protection of children and young workers, the employment of women and social insurance.

In September 1948, an official of the Industrial Committees Section went to Venezuela to advise the Government on labor statistics. The Government asked that he return to Venezuela in 1949.

13. Publications

Since July 1, 1947, ILO has continued issuing its periodical publications, records of meetings, including the Minutes of the Governing Body and Documents of the International Labour Conference, and various studies, reports and pamphlets covering a wide range of social and economic questions.

The periodical publications of ILO include: the International Labour Review, published monthly in English, French and Spanish, covering economic and social topics, current events affecting industry and labor, statistics of employment and wages, cost of living, etc.; the Official Bulletin, in English and French; the Legislative Series, a bi-monthly publication of reprints and translations of laws and regulations, in English and French; the quarterly Industrial Safety Survey, in English, French and Spanish; the Yearbook of Labour Statistics, in English, French and Spanish; and the Report of the International Labour Organization to the United Nations, in English, French and Spanish.

Among the technical studies published by the Office since July 1, 1947, are the following: The Chilean Development Corporation; Labour-Management Co-operation in United States War Production; Housing and Employment; Labour-Management Co-operation in France; Second Session of the Permanent Migration Committee; Training Problems in the Far East; The Sixth International Conference of Labour Statisticians; Employment, Unemployment and Labour Force Statistics; Cost-of-living Statistics; and Methods of Statistics of Industrial Injuries.

F. BUDGET

The budget of the Organisation is approved by a two-thirds vote of the General Conference. The 30th session of the Conference, which met in Geneva from June 19 to July 11, 1947, approved a budget totalling $4,425,930 to cover the expenses of ILO during 1948. The budget for the year 1949, as approved by the 31st session of the Conference, meeting in San Francisco from June 17 to July 10, 1948, totals $5,185,539. The main details of the expenditures covered by these budgets follow:

STRUCTURE OF THE FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS

II. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations¹

The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations was the first of the permanent United Nations organizations to be launched after the war. The United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture was held in May 1943 at Hot Springs, Virginia, on the invitation of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. The 44 nations represented at this Conference agreed to work together to banish hunger and establish a stable world agriculture.

On the recommendation of the Hot Springs Conference, the United Nations Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture was set up in July 1943 to make plans for a permanent organization which would deal not only with food and agriculture but with forestry and fisheries as well. Each of the governments which attended the Conference appointed a representative on the Interim Commission. The Commission prepared a Constitution for FAO and submitted it to governments, more than twenty of which indicated their acceptance, thus making the establishment of FAO possible under the terms of its Constitution.² The Interim Commission also prepared a report on the suggested structure and functions of the Organization.

FAO officially came into being with the signing of its Constitution on October 16, 1945. This ceremony took place at the opening meeting of the first session of the Conference, which was held in Quebec, Canada, from October 16 to November 1, 1945.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The preamble to the Constitution of FAO tells the reason for its existence in a few words:

"The Nations accepting this Constitution, being determined to promote the common welfare by furthering separate and collective action on their part for the purposes of "raising levels of nutrition and standards of living of the peoples under their respective jurisdictions,

"securing improvements in the efficiency of the production and distribution of all food and agricultural products,

"bettering the condition of rural populations,

"and thus contributing toward an expanding world economy,

"hereby establish the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations . . . through which the Members will report to one another on the measures taken and the progress achieved in the fields of action set forth above."

The functions of the Organization are described in Article 1 of the Constitution as follows:

"1. The Organization shall collect, analyze, interpret, and disseminate information relating to nutrition, food and agriculture.

"2. The Organization shall promote and, where appropriate, shall recommend national and international action with respect to

"(a) scientific, technological, social, and economic research relating to nutrition, food and agriculture;

"(b) the improvement of education and administration relating to nutrition, food and agriculture, and the spread of public knowledge of nutritional and agricultural science and practice;

"(c) the conservation of natural resources and the adoption of improved methods of agricultural production;

"(d) the improvement of the processing, marketing, and distribution of food and agricultural products;

"(e) the adoption of policies for the provision of adequate agricultural credit, national and international;

 "(f) the adoption of international policies with respect to agricultural commodity arrangements.

"3. It shall also be the function of the Organization

"(a) to furnish such technical assistance as governments may request;

"(b) to organize, in co-operation with the governments concerned, such missions as may be needed to assist them to fulfill the obligations arising from their acceptance of the recommendations of the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture; and

"(c) generally to take all necessary and appropriate action to implement the purposes of the Organization as set forth in the Preamble."

C. ORGANIZATION

FAO consists of a Conference, a Council of FAO and a staff headed by a Director-General.

The Conference is composed of one representative from each Member nation. Each Member has one vote in the Conference, which meets at least once each year to review the work of the Organization, determine its policy and approve the budget for the following year. The Conference, by decision of its third session in August 1947, also reviews the food and agriculture situation and the programs and plans of Member Governments. On the basis of this annual review, the Conference recommends inter-governmental collaboration and action necessary to realize the objectives of the Organization. Decisions of the Conference are taken by a simple majority vote, except that in some instances, such as the admission of new Members or the adoption of amendments to the FAO constitution, a two-thirds majority is required.

Between sessions of the Conference, the Council of FAO, also known as the World Food Council, supervises the work of the Organization. The Council consists of eighteen Member nations elected by the Conference, each of which appoints one representative. The Council keeps the world food and agriculture situation under constant review and makes whatever recommendations it considers necessary to Member Governments, international commodity authorities and other specialized international agencies. It also directs the policy of the International Emergency Food Committee, which recommends the allocation of agricultural commodities in short world supply. Among the other standing committees of the Council are the Committee on Financial Control and the Committee on Relations with International Organizations.

The Director-General of FAO, appointed by the Conference, has full power and authority to direct the work of the Organization, subject to the general supervision of the Conference and the Council of FAO. He appoints the staff of the Organization and directs its work.

With the advice of the Council, he is responsible for analyzing, on a regional basis, regional and national plans and needs in food and agriculture, and for synthesizing this analysis into a world summary. This summary indicates trends in production, consumption and trade, and relates the proposed imports and exports of each region to the proposed global exports and imports. It forms the basis for the annual review of food and agricultural policies by the Conference.

Standing advisory committees of world experts on agriculture, economics, statistics, fisheries, forestry and forest products, nutrition, and rural welfare advise the Director-General on the work of FAO's several technical divisions.

The chairmen of these standing advisory committees, together with the chairmen of the Council and of the Committee on Financial Control, constitute the Coordinating Committee appointed by the Council, in conformity with Article V of the Constitution, to tender advice on the co-ordination of the technical work of the Organization.

National FAO Committees, established in 44 Member countries, serve as the primary points of contact between FAO and governmental and non-governmental agencies in the fields of the Organization's interests.

In addition to its temporary headquarters in Washington, D.C., FAO maintains a European regional office at Rome, the headquarters of the former International Institute of Agriculture.³ At Geneva there is a Forestry and Forest Products Office, and a temporary technical group co-operating with the Economic Commission for Europe. In February 1948, a regional office for the Near East was established at Cairo.⁴

³The International Institute of Agriculture was liquidated on January 28, 1948, its assets becoming on that date the property of FAO.

⁴A regional office for Asia and the Far East is to be opened at Bangkok, Siam, early in 1949.

D. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

Since its creation in October 1945 through June 1947, FAO has endeavored to promote national and international action to improve the world food situation. In the spring of 1946 the Special Meeting on Urgent Food Problems, called by FAO to meet in Washington, D.C., resulted in the creation of the International Emergency Food Council (I.E.F.C.) and the adoption by 22 nations of specific recommendations for making the best use of the slender food supplies then available.

The principal function of the I.E.F.C. was that of recommending the allocation of agricultural commodities in short supply for the duration of the emergency. This body continued to operate until January 1, 1948, when its allocation functions were transferred to the International Emergency Food Committee, operating under the Council of FAO.

Following the Special Meeting on Urgent Food Problems, the Director-General, recognizing the need for longer-term efforts toward preventing both shortages and surpluses, presented Proposals for a World Food Board, for consideration by the FAO Conference. The major objectives of these Proposals were endorsed by the second session of the FAO Conference meeting in September 1946 in Copenhagen. The Conference restated these objectives as follows:

"(a) developing and organizing production, distribution, and utilization of the basic foods to provide diets on a health standard for peoples of all countries;

"(b) stabilizing agricultural prices at levels fair to producers and consumers alike."

On the recommendation of the Conference, a Preparatory Commission on World Food Proposals, comprising seventeen nations, met in Washington, D.C., from October 1946 to January 1947. The Commission recommended co-ordinated national programs and international agreements for individual commodities as the most practicable course under prevailing world conditions to attain the objectives of the Proposals. It also recommended the establishment of a World Food Council, or Council of FAO, to co-ordinate this work between sessions of the full FAO Conference, as well as to supervise the affairs of the Organization itself.

To consider measures for overcoming the European timber shortage, FAO called an International Timber Conference which met at Marianske Lazne, Czechoslovakia, in April and May 1947. The ECE Timber Committee, whose secretariat is provided by FAO, has followed up the recommendations of the Marianske Lazne timber conference, which resulted in a ten per cent increase in European timber production and improved exports to meet the severe shortage.

The agricultural advisory services initiated by UNRRA were assumed by FAO early in 1947; under this program, FAO supplied technical assistance to increase food production in a number of war-devastated countries.

An FAO mission spent three months in Greece (May-August 1946) to work out long-term plans for restoring and improving Greek agriculture. The Report of the FAO Mission for Greece, published in March 1947, recommended a comprehensive 25-year development program based on the full-scale development of water and land resources.

On December 14, 1946, FAO was formally brought into relationship with the United Nations as a specialized agency, with the approval of an agreement between the two organizations by the United Nations General Assembly.⁵ The agreement had previously been approved by the FAO Conference (September 13, 1946).

E. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

The third session of the FAO Conference met in Geneva from August 25 to September 11, 1947, and amended the Constitution of FAO to provide for the creation of a Council of FAO to replace the former Executive Committee of the Organization.⁶ It admitted five new Members into the Organization: Austria, Burma, Finland, Pakistan and Siam.

A special session of the Conference was held in Washington, D.C., from April 6 to 14, 1948, to appoint a new Director-General of FAO. The Conference named Norris E. Dodd (United States) to replace Sir John Boyd Orr (United Kingdom), who had served as Director-General of FAO since the Organization came into being. The Conference also admitted Ceylon and Turkey to membership in FAO.⁷

A summary of the activities of FAO, together with applicable decisions of the Conference, appears under the subject headings below.

1. Cereals

Because of the serious world deficit of grains for the winter of 1947-48, FAO, at the request of the International Emergency Food Council, called a Special Conference on Cereals to meet in Paris on July 9, 1947. Agricultural officials of 40 countries attending this Conference stressed the urgency of the need for special measures. They recommended, in particular, that the supplies of principal cereals be used entirely, and secondary cereals as far as possible, for human consumption and that no increase in bread or cereal rations be authorized unless necessary to satisfy minimum human requirements. They also recommended other measures directed towards a more economical use of grain. Since the world grain outlook had further deteriorated by the time of the annual FAO Conference in August 1947, Member Governments of both importing and exporting countries were urged at this Conference to make extraordinary new efforts to reinforce their measures of crop collection, to economize the use of grain and to limit the feeding of grain to livestock.

2. International Allocation

During this period of extreme food shortage, an important FAO responsibility has been that of recommending allocations of scarce foods.

One of the most important decisions taken by the third session of the FAO Conference was the acceptance of the recommendations of the Preparatory Commission on World Food Proposals for establishing the Council of FAO and for formally reviewing the international food and agriculture situation.

The Conference also recommended that the functions and responsibilities of the International Emergency Food Council be assumed by the new Council. I.E.F.C. members therefore approved the dissolution of this body, and its functions of recommending allocations for export and import of foods and fertilizers in short supply were taken over by the Council of FAO on January 1, 1948. The Council, at its first session in November 1947, established an International Emergency Food Committee to carry out these functions. Six commodity committees, after assessing world supplies and needs, recommend to countries allocations for export and import of cereals,⁸ rice, feeds,⁹ cocoa beans, fats and oils,¹⁰ and nitrogen fertilizer. Although FAO has no power to enforce these recommendations, the Organization reported that as of March 1948 participating governments had secured over 90-per-cent conformance with the recommendations through the governmental regulation of exports and imports of commodities under allocation. Allocations of the following commodities recommended by commodity committees of the International Emergency Food Committee and its predecessor have been discontinued since July 1, 1947: seeds, meat and meat products, sugar, and beans and peas.

3. Regional Conferences

During 1948, a number of regional conferences arranged by FAO have been held: (a) in Cairo, a conference to plan agricultural development for the Near East; (b) in Baguio, Philippines, a series of four conferences on nutrition, fisheries, rice and regional organization in the Far East; (c) in Rome, a conference to study the program and organization of FAO activities in Europe during 1948; and (d) in Latin America, a conference on forestry and forest products and one on nutrition.

(a) The FAO Near East Conference, meeting in Cairo from February 2 to 14, 1948, considered the plans of Member Governments in this region for developing their natural agricultural resources and their immediate material requirements for the implementation of these development plans. These plans set out the areas to be irrigated and drained in the immediate future; the equipment, particularly that concerned with deep-well irrigation, required; and tentative estimates of the increase in food production that would result from the imple-

⁷ Saudi Arabia, the 58th nation to join FAO, was admitted by the fourth session of the Conference, held in Washington, D.C., November 15 to 29, 1948.

⁹ The Committee on Feeds was disbanded on December 31, 1948.

¹⁰ Flaxseed and linseed oil were de-allocated on November 4, 1948, on the recommendation of the Committee on Fats and Oils.

mentation of these plans. With regard to long-range programs, the Conference recommended that Iraq, Syria and Turkey prepare plans on an international basis for the development of the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers.

A special Nutrition Committee set up by the Near East Conference reported to the Conference that from 60 to 80 per cent of the population in the Near East showed signs of malnutrition; to deal with this situation, the Conference advocated, as a short-term policy, the importation of foods at present in deficit, the improvement of existing rationing systems and the extension of government arrangements for feeding vulnerable groups.

(b) The Nutrition Conference, meeting in Baguio from February 23 to 28, 1948, studied means for the retention of nutrients in rice, the comparative nutritional value of different varieties of rice, methods of determining the thiamine content of rice and methods of supplementing rice diets. In the report of this Conference, published in English, French and Spanish in June 1948 and entitled Nutrition Problems of Rice-eating Countries in Asia, it was recommended that a committee of experts on nutrition and allied subjects meet annually, the experts to be appointed by FAO Members in the Far East.

Meeting concurrently, the Fisheries Conference agreed on the establishment of an Indo-Pacific Fisheries Council, in accordance with a recommendation of the third annual session of the Conference of FAO in 1947, and drew up a draft agreement for the Council. The Indo-Pacific Fisheries Council will be concerned with the development and proper utilization of living aquatic resources in the Indo-Pacific area. FAO will provide the secretariat for the Council and for its four interim committees on hydrology, taxonomy, biology and technology. The Council will come into being on acceptance of the agreement by five Member Governments.¹¹

FAO is planning the establishment of similar fisheries councils for other regions for the further development of fisheries and more efficient utilization of fish.

An International Rice Conference met at Baguio from March 1 to 13, 1948, as a result of the recommendations of an FAO Rice Study Group which met at Trivandrum, India, in May 1947. The Conference reviewed national programs already undertaken or about to be undertaken by six Member countries for the expansion of rice production. This represented the first attempt to assemble and compare the plans and programs for production and distribution in the principal rice-producing countries of the Far East. The Conference recommended the establishment of an International Rice Commission and drew up a constitution for the proposed Commission. The Council of FAO at its second session, held in Washington, D.C., in April 1948, approved this recommendation of the Conference. The Rice Commission will come into existence upon the acceptance of its constitution by ten Member Governments of FAO representing at least one half of world rice production.¹² It will be primarily concerned with bringing about co-operative action on production, distribution and consumption of rice, exclusive of international trade to be governed by the proposed International Trade Organization. A report of this meeting was published in June 1948 in English, French and Spanish.

The Conference on Regional Organization held in Baguio from March 13 to 15, 1948, considered the form of organization that FAO might set up in the Far East to serve its Members individually and collectively on a regional basis. As a result of its recommendations, an FAO Regional Office for Asia and the Far East will be opened early in 1949.

(c) Seventeen European National FAO Committees met in Rome from February 17 to 21, 1948. This meeting recommended an over-all plan for increased European food production; ever-increasing co-operation between Eastern and Western European countries, and between FAO and the Economic Commission for Europe; and increased milk production for children of war-damaged countries. The meeting further suggested that FAO furnish European Member countries with additional expert advice and that a permanent FAO regional office be established in Rome with jurisdiction extending to the African dependencies of European countries.

(d) The Latin American Forestry and Forest Products Conference, the first conference in that region concerned solely with those matters, was held at Teresopolis, Brazil, from April 19 to 30, 1948. It laid out a program of forestry development during the following ten years designed to contribute a great deal to the economic welfare of Latin American countries. Among other things, the Conference recommended that governments that have not already done so should draw up detailed development plans. The Conference also decided that forest inventories were needed to obtain much more detailed knowledge of existing resources, and statistics in general needed to be gradually enlarged and improved. Foresters and other technicians needed to be brought in, and a research and training centre was needed to educate and train many technicians of Latin America. Primitive methods of forest exploitation in use needed to be modernized. Capital and equipment had to be found and expert service made available not only for this purpose but to start whole new forest industries where none existed, and to expand existing industries.

¹¹ The Council came into being on November 9, 1948, and its inaugural meeting was scheduled for March 1949 at Singapore.

¹² The International Rice Commission came into being on December 17, 1948.

The Teresopolis meeting recommended that a regional working group of FAO staff technicians be stationed in Latin America. This was to be done early in 1949. It also recommended that a Latin American Forestry and Forest Products Commission, consisting of representatives of all interested Latin American Governments, be established to implement the recommendations of the Conference and promote suitable regional policies. This Commission will meet for the first time in 1949.

The Latin American Forestry and Forest Products Conference was the second in a series of regional timber conferences sponsored by FAO. FAO planned to hold a third timber conference in the Far East early in 1949. A preliminary survey of South and East Asia and of the South Pacific has been carried out by an FAO forestry expert to examine the particular problems which this conference might study.

The Latin American Nutrition Conference, attended by nutrition experts from nineteen Member countries, met in Montevideo, Uruguay, from July 18 to 30, 1948. The Conference, after considering the nature and extent of nutrition problems, recommended practical measures for improving the diets of the Latin American populations. It suggested that a Latin American regional FAO office be established to deal with, among other matters, nutrition. As a result of a recommendation of the Conference to hold a similar meeting of nutrition experts every two years, FAO planned to hold a second nutrition conference in Brazil in 1950.

Co-ordinated action to alleviate the food crisis in Latin America through the development of agricultural production has been undertaken by FAO and the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America. A joint FAO-ECLA working party was to begin in October 1948 a field survey of existing supply shortages which limit the production and distribution of food in the Latin American republics.

4. Technical Advice and Assistance

Preparatory work for regional conferences is often carried out by technical experts assigned to the region by FAO. For example, in December 1947, prior to the FAO Near East Conference in Cairo, four experts were sent to the Near East Office. An irrigation engineer examined the feasibility of a series of deep-well irrigation projects. A specialist on crop production under irrigated conditions determined what new crops could be grown on irrigated land in the region and what further plant-breeding experiments were needed to produce the best varieties. A drainage engineer was concerned with means of utilizing local materials and manpower for drainage projects. A technician was charged with investigating the possibilities of improving the breed of sheep for those areas which could not be brought under irrigation.

Technical assistance is also furnished Member countries as a result of conferences. For example, an FAO European Commission on Forestry and Forest Products was organized in 1948 in accordance with recommendations made at the Marianske Lazne conference of 1947. It is composed of government representatives and is concerned with long-term problems, including co-ordination of national forest policies, increased production through better forestry, expansion of forest areas and reduction of waste in timber cutting and use.

The first meeting of the Commission was held in July. It compiled a tentative balance sheet of European timber resources and needs, and made proposals for reorientation of forest policies intended in the long run to bring Europe as near as possible to self-sufficiency in timber supplies.

The Commission will, further, be the focal organization around which will be centred the work of other more specialized international bodies, such as the International Poplar Commission and the proposed International Chestnut Commission. The European Forestry and Forest Products Commission recommended the establishment of a sub-commission on Mediterranean questions.

Work on Europe's timber problems has also been carried out successfully by FAO in co-operation with ECE. Following the International Timber Conference held at Marianske Lazne in 1947, a European Timber Committee, staffed by FAO, was set up at Geneva within the ECE framework.

At its first meeting this Committee reported that all the major wood-producing countries of Europe which had been represented at the Conference were carrying out the Marianske Lazne recommendation to increase the output of lumber by ten per cent. As a result, the timber-importing countries received 2.7 million standards of softwood in 1947, an increase of nearly one million standards over 1946.

At its second session in January 1948 the Committee made a preliminary assessment of the timber procurable for Europe in 1948, from both domestic production and imports. On the basis of these figures it set voluntary buying limits for the first half of the year so that available timber supplies would be equitably distributed. The Committee also discussed a proposal for increasing European timber production in 1948 and 1949 through arrangements for provision of needed equipment and supplies. The plan involved a request to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development from several countries for credit which would make available additional export supplies of timber and pitprops valued at over $120,000,000. Sweden agreed to increase exports in 1948 provided it could obtain an additional allocation of domestic coke. Arrangements for meeting this request were therefore made through the ECE Coal Committee.

At its third session held at the end of June 1948, the Timber Committee revised the buying limits to be effective for the balance of the year, and further discussed the credit proposals. As a result of previous discussions with both the importing and exporting countries carried out through the FAO-ECE secretariat, a preliminary agreement was reached by the Committee as to the basis on which these credit proposals could be organized. The Committee recessed to enable exporting countries to compile final lists of specific equipment requirements and importing countries to prepare statements of those categories of equipment which might be purchased in Europe with European currencies. The Committee was convened in mid-September for further discussions with representatives of the Bank and developed further the details of terms and conditions of the credit proposals.

Technical assistance has also been made possible by an UNRRA grant to FAO of more than $1,000,000 to finance agricultural advisory services in countries that formerly received aid from UNRRA. These services have been continued since July 1947 in Austria, China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Poland and Yugoslavia.

In China, former UNRRA technicians have been advising the Chinese Government on matters relating to livestock rehabilitation and disease control, the production and utilization of farm implements, the manufacture and use of fertilizers, crop production and allied fields, flood control and fisheries rehabilitation. A hybrid corn school, held by FAO in Italy in July and August 1947, demonstrated the latest maize-breeding techniques to scientists from nine European nations. Early in 1948, FAO arranged for hybrid corn seed to be sent to experimental stations in sixteen countries, including the leading corn-producing countries of Europe.

Since January 1948, FAO has been sending seed samples of newly developed or improved varieties of crops to Austria, China, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Italy, Poland and Yugoslavia. Seeds of trees, vegetables, forage crops, grasses, legumes, potatoes, sugar beets, cereals, sorghum, sunflower, soybeans and flax had already been sent by June 1948. Results of the 1948 tests, available only for maize by September 1948, indicated an increased yield of 35 to 50 per cent for some of the best adapted varieties.

Other technical schools were held by FAO during 1947 and 1948. An artificial insemination school, attended by European scientists, was held in Italy in August 1947. In September 1947 European veterinarians attended an FAO demonstration school in England dealing with the production of vaccines and serums. Demonstrations on the latest food preservation techniques were given during 1947 in Czechoslovakia, Greece and Italy; in November 1947 a refrigeration engineer was sent to Czechoslovakia to help officials of the Ministry of Food review the final plans for the construction of large refrigeration plants for fruit, vegetables, meat and fish. Experts from a number of European and Near East countries attended a soil conservation meeting convened by FAO on September 13, 1948, in Florence, Italy, to study and compare information on the latest scientific developments and techniques in soil conservation. At a meeting on infestation control and storage of grain held from September 7 to 18, also in Florence, experts from ten Member countries studied methods of combating food pests, such as rats, insects and fungi, and attended demonstrations conducted by FAO of modern techniques and equipment.

In July 1947, FAO, in association with the Interim Commission of the World Health Organization, convened a Committee on Child Nutrition to advise the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF). This Committee was composed of seventeen experts in nutrition and child health drawn from almost as many countries. The report which it prepared has been the basis of the UNICEF feeding program in Europe. It was this Committee which recommended that dried skim milk should be the most important item among the foods supplied. Later the Nutrition Division of FAO provided further technical advice and assistance to UNICEF both at headquarters and in the field. In Europe an FAO regional nutrition representative has acted as Nutrition Consultant to UNICEF, and in this capacity visited many of the countries in which UNICEF was operating and advised on feeding programs. Another FAO nutrition worker, stationed in Greece, helped to organize UNICEF work in that country.

Preliminary arrangements have been made for co-operation between FAO and WHO in various fields. A Joint Nutrition Committee to advise both Organizations was to meet in 1949. Consideration has also been given to co-operation between FAO and WHO in programs for the simultaneous control of malaria and the development of agricultural production.

a. SPECIAL MISSIONS

At the request of the Polish Government, FAO sent a mission to Poland to study the economic and technical problems involved in the rehabilitation and development of agriculture and forestry. The FAO mission, comprising ten agricultural and forestry scientists, spent nine weeks in Poland, from July to September 1947. It studied the economic and technical problems involved in the rehabilitation and development of agriculture and forestry and gave special attention to methods of improving the nutrition of the Polish people.

In its report, published in May 1948, the mission recommended changes in the government agricultural policy, such as the centralization of agricultural activities, rationing, and downward adjustments of farm taxation. In addition to making numerous recommendations for long-term action by the Polish Government, the mission stressed the urgency of short-term needs in reconstruction and suggested measures to improve food distribution. Among the immediate requirements, as indicated in the report, were: fertilizers; seeds; equipment for restoring and modernizing dairy plants, meat plants and fruit and vegetable processing plants; equipment for agricultural and forestry research and educational institutions; materials for plant and animal protection; equipment for the fertilizer industry and for forestry and related industries. The mission expressed conviction that food production in Poland could be increased as much as 50 per cent above prewar levels in a few years if the Government supported the recommended policies and if farmers were encouraged and assisted to adopt improved practices. Although the mission suggested that the Polish Government finance as large a part of the program as possible by making adjustments to its National Economic Plan, it recognized that short-term international loans might be necessary to carry out all its recommendations. To put into effect the most urgent recommendations of the mission, the Polish Government announced that it proposed to seek an international loan of $3,000,000.

In January 1948, a mission of eight agricultural and forestry specialists was sent to Siam, at the request of that Government, to advise on the best methods of increasing rice production and exports, developing and controlling water supplies, improving statistical services and the marketing and distribution of farm products, and developing Siam's forest resources.¹³ The report of this mission was issued in September 1948.

Another FAO mission, comprising three agricultural scientists, was sent to Venezuela in January 1948. This mission studied the possibilities of exploiting industrially the wild oil-bearing palm nuts and of introducing cultivated oil-seed plants that would thrive under local conditions.

b. INFESTATION

To discuss the world-wide problem of food loss through infestation and the most advanced methods of combating it, FAO convened an International Meeting on Infestation of Foodstuffs, which met in London in August 1947, attended by experts from 27 Member nations. The recommendations of the Meeting for positive action by governments were endorsed by the third session of the FAO Conference. The London Meeting also recommended that FAO arrange for the collaboration of experts through regional conferences. The problem of infestation was accordingly examined by governments attending the International Rice Conference in Baguio (see above). FAO had earlier estimated that cumulative losses of rice from the rice field to final consumption in the home amounted to a minimum of from eleven to twelve million tons annually, or more than twice the total amount of rice under international allocation. The Rice Conference recommended that FAO sponsor a campaign to publicize the urgency of conservation measures and that governments themselves take specific measures for infestation control, improved storage and efficient milling. The Council of FAO in April 1948 endorsed these recommendations.

¹³ In November 1948, a two-man fisheries mission was sent to Siam to advise on extension services for the development of fish culture production. Recommendations were also made on brackish and marine fisheries and marketing and distribution.

At the request of the Polish Government, an entomologist spent two months in that country during the summer of 1947 assisting in the control of insects attacking crops. The Government followed up this work by establishing a central office for general research on methods of control against the Colorado beetle, a leading potato pest. In February 1948, an entomologist was sent to Egypt to advise the Egyptian Government on the best methods of controlling rats, insects and fungi that destroy stored foods.

The Council of FAO recognized that, while national governments were responsible for controlling many localized plant pests and animal diseases, the control of such livestock diseases as rinderpest and the protection of crops from locusts were beyond the power of national governments and required international action. Accordingly, following recommendations relating to locust control made by the Near East Conference in Cairo, FAO planned to hold an international meeting in 1949 on problems concerning the Moroccan locust affecting European and Near Eastern countries. In preparation for this meeting a staff entomologist of FAO spent three months in Lebanon, Syria, Turkey and Iraq studying the locust problem at first hand. A similar study was made in Central America late in 1948 while a locust control campaign was in progress. FAO was preparing to hold a meeting in Central America during 1949 to encourage a larger measure of co-operation between countries in that area.

c. STATISTICS

In order to assist its Member Governments in setting up or improving their statistical services prior to the 1950 World Census of Agriculture, FAO is holding technical training schools for statisticians. A Training School for Agricultural Statistics, providing a six-weeks course, was established in Baghdad in February 1948 by an FAO technician. Altogether, 40 trainees were sent by the Member Governments of the region to the school. Similarly, the first Training Centre for Statistics in Latin America was set up in Mexico City in September 1948. At this Centre, four-month training courses were to be provided by FAO and the Government of Mexico in co-operation with the United Nations and the Inter-American Statistical Institute, and with the assistance of the Governments of Panama and the United States. Courses were to cover preparation for the 1950 Census of Agriculture, current agriculture statistics and general census administration. During September 1948, FAO also began assisting the Chinese Government to conduct its own statistical training school in China. At the request of the Governments of Greece and Turkey a statistician was sent to these countries to advise them on their statistical programs.

5. Publications

A basic activity of FAO is that of collecting and disseminating information covering statistics and consumption of foods and other agricultural products, or technical information along specific lines fundamental to effective action by nations or groups of nations. Most of FAO's publications are issued in three languages, English, French and Spanish. Statistical books and periodicals are bilingual English-French with Spanish explanatory notes. During the period under review, FAO published one European and two world reviews of food and agriculture: European Programs of Reconstruction and Development and the first edition of the State of Food and Agriculture, published in 1947; and the second edition of State of Food and Agriculture, published in September 1948. In addition to the Conference and Council reports of this period, the third annual report of the Director-General, entitled Work of FAO—1947/48, was published in September 1948.

The Yearbook of Food and Agricultural Statistics—1947, the 26th in a series originated by the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome in 1910, was published for the first time by FAO in 1948. The 1948 yearbook was in preparation. Also in the statistical field, the Organization began publishing, in July 1948, a Monthly Bulletin of Food and Agriculture Statistics. Other periodicals are the Fisheries Bulletin, issued monthly; and Unasylva, a bi-monthly review of forestry and forest products. The first Yearbook of Fisheries Statistics and the first Yearbook of Forest Products Statistics—1947 appeared in 1948. The 1948 forestry yearbook was in preparation.

Beginning in 1948, Commodity Bulletins were issued on wheat, dairy products, poultry and eggs, vegetables and fruits, rice, sugar, and fibres.

Seven basic studies, closely associated with the direct provision of technical assistance to Member Governments, were also issued, namely, Breeding Livestock Adapted to Unfavorable Environments, Using Salty Land, Soil Conservation: An International Study, Nutritional Deficiencies in Livestock, World Fiber Survey and Rice and Rice Diets. To assist in the campaign against infestation, a popular booklet was prepared: Thieves of Stored Grain—How to Fight Them.

Publications issued by the European Regional Office of FAO from July 1947 to September 21, 1948, included the International Yearbook of Agricultural Statistics 1941/42—1945/46; a monograph entitled The World's Coffee; General Report of the Fourth Meeting of the European National Committee: Rome, 17-21 February 1948; and two periodicals, the bi-monthly Food and Agriculture: The FAO European Bulletin, and the half-yearly publication Food and Agriculture: International Law Journal.

Special studies, such as Measures to Alleviate the World Shortage of Cereals and Other Foodstuffs, were prepared on request of the United Nations.

F. BUDGET

The expenses of the Organization are met by contributions from Member States, in proportions determined by the Conference.

The third annual Conference of FAO, which met in Geneva from August 25 to September 11, 1947, approved a budget of $5,000,000 to meet the expenses of the Organization during the calendar year 1948.

The main details of this budget, as estimated by the Conference, are as follows:

I. The Conference, Meetings of Committees and Technical Conferences	$ 315,603
II. Technical Missions	200,000
III. Salaries and Allowances	2,748,880
IV. Staff Provident Fund	330,000
V. Official Travel	200,000
VI. Office and Operational Expenses . .	393,400
VII. Printing	237,117
VIII. Contingencies	575,000
TOTAL	$5,000,000

ANNEX II

AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION OF
THE FOOD AND AGRICULTURE
ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS¹⁴

The third session of the FAO Conference, which met in Geneva from August 25 to September 11, 1947, adopted amendments to Articles V and VII of the FAO Constitution. As directed by the Conference, these amendments became effective on September 11, 1947.

Article V, as amended, reads as follows:

"COUNCIL OF FAO

"1. The Conference shall elect a Council of the Food and Agriculture Organization consisting of eighteen Member nations, which will each be represented by one member. The Conference shall appoint an independent Chairman of the Council. The tenure and other conditions of office of the members of the Council shall be subject to rules to be made by the Conference.

"2. The Conference may delegate to the Council such powers as it may determine, with the exception of powers set forth in paragraph 2 of Article II, paragraphs 1, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of Article IV, paragraph 1 of Article VII, Article XIII, and Article XX of this Constitution.¹⁵

"3. The Council shall appoint its officers other than the Chairman and, subject to any decisions of the Conference, shall adopt its own rules of procedure.

"4. The Council shall establish a Co-ordinating Committee to tender advice on the co-ordination of ¹⁴ The text of the Constitution of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations as in force prior to the amendments of September 11, 1947, is reproduced in the Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 693-98. The complete text of the Constitution as revised may be secured from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The relevant sections of these Articles are as follows: paragraph 2, Article II, empowers the Conference to admit new Members to the Organization; paragraph 1, Article VII, empowers the Conference to appoint the Director-General of FAO; Article XIII empowers the Conference to approve arrangements defining the relations between FAO and "any general international organization to which may be entrusted the co-ordination of the activities of international organizations with specialized responsibilities". Article XX empowers the Conference to approve amendments to the Constitution.

Following is the text of Article IV (Functions of the Conference):

"1. The Conference shall determine the policy and approve the budget of the Organization and shall exercise the other powers conferred upon it by this Constitution.

"2. The Conference may by a two-thirds majority of the votes cast make recommendations concerning questions relating to food and agriculture to be submitted to Member nations for consideration with a view to implementation by national action.

"3. The Conference may by a two-thirds majority of the votes cast submit conventions concerning questions relating to food and agriculture to Member nations for consideration with a view to their acceptance by the appropriate constitutional procedure.

"4. The Conference shall make rules laying down the procedure to be followed to secure:

"(a) proper consultation with governments and adequate technical preparation prior to consideration by the Conference of proposed recommendations and conventions; and

"(b) proper consultation with governments in regard to relations between the Organization and national institutions or private persons, [over] technical work and the continuity of the activities of the Organization undertaken in accordance with the decisions of the Conference."

The original Article V, superseded by the amendment reproduced above, was as follows:

"THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

"1. The Conference shall appoint an Executive Committee consisting of not less than nine or more than fifteen members or alternate or associate members of the Conference or their advisers who are qualified by administrative experience or other special qualifications to contribute to the attainment of the purpose of the Organization. There shall be not more than one member from any Member nation. The tenure and other conditions of office of the members of the Executive Committee shall be subject to rules to be made by the Conference.

"2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article, the Conference shall have regard in appointing the Executive Committee to the desirability that its membership should reflect as varied as possible an experience of different types of economy in relation to food and agriculture.

"3. The Conference may delegate to the Executive Committee such powers as it may determine, with the exception of the powers set forth in paragraph 2 of Article II, Article IV, paragraph 1 of Article VII, Article XIII, and Article XX of this Constitution.

"4. The members of the Executive Committee shall exercise the powers delegated to them by the Conference on behalf of the whole Conference and not as representatives of their respective governments.

"5. The Executive Committee shall appoint its own officers and, subject to any decisions of the Conference, shall regulate its own procedure."

Paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VII (The Director-General), as amended, read as follows:

"2. Subject to the general supervision of the Conference and the Council, the Director-General shall have full power and authority to direct the work of the Organization.

"3. The Director-General or a representative designated by him shall participate, without the right to vote, in all meetings of the Conference and of the Council and shall formulate for consideration by the Conference and the Council proposals for appropriate action in regard to matters coming before them."

The original texts of paragraphs 2 and 3 of Article VII, superseded by the amendments reproduced above, were as follows:

"2. Subject to the general supervision of the Conference and its Executive Committee, the Director-General shall have full power and authority to direct the work of the Organization.

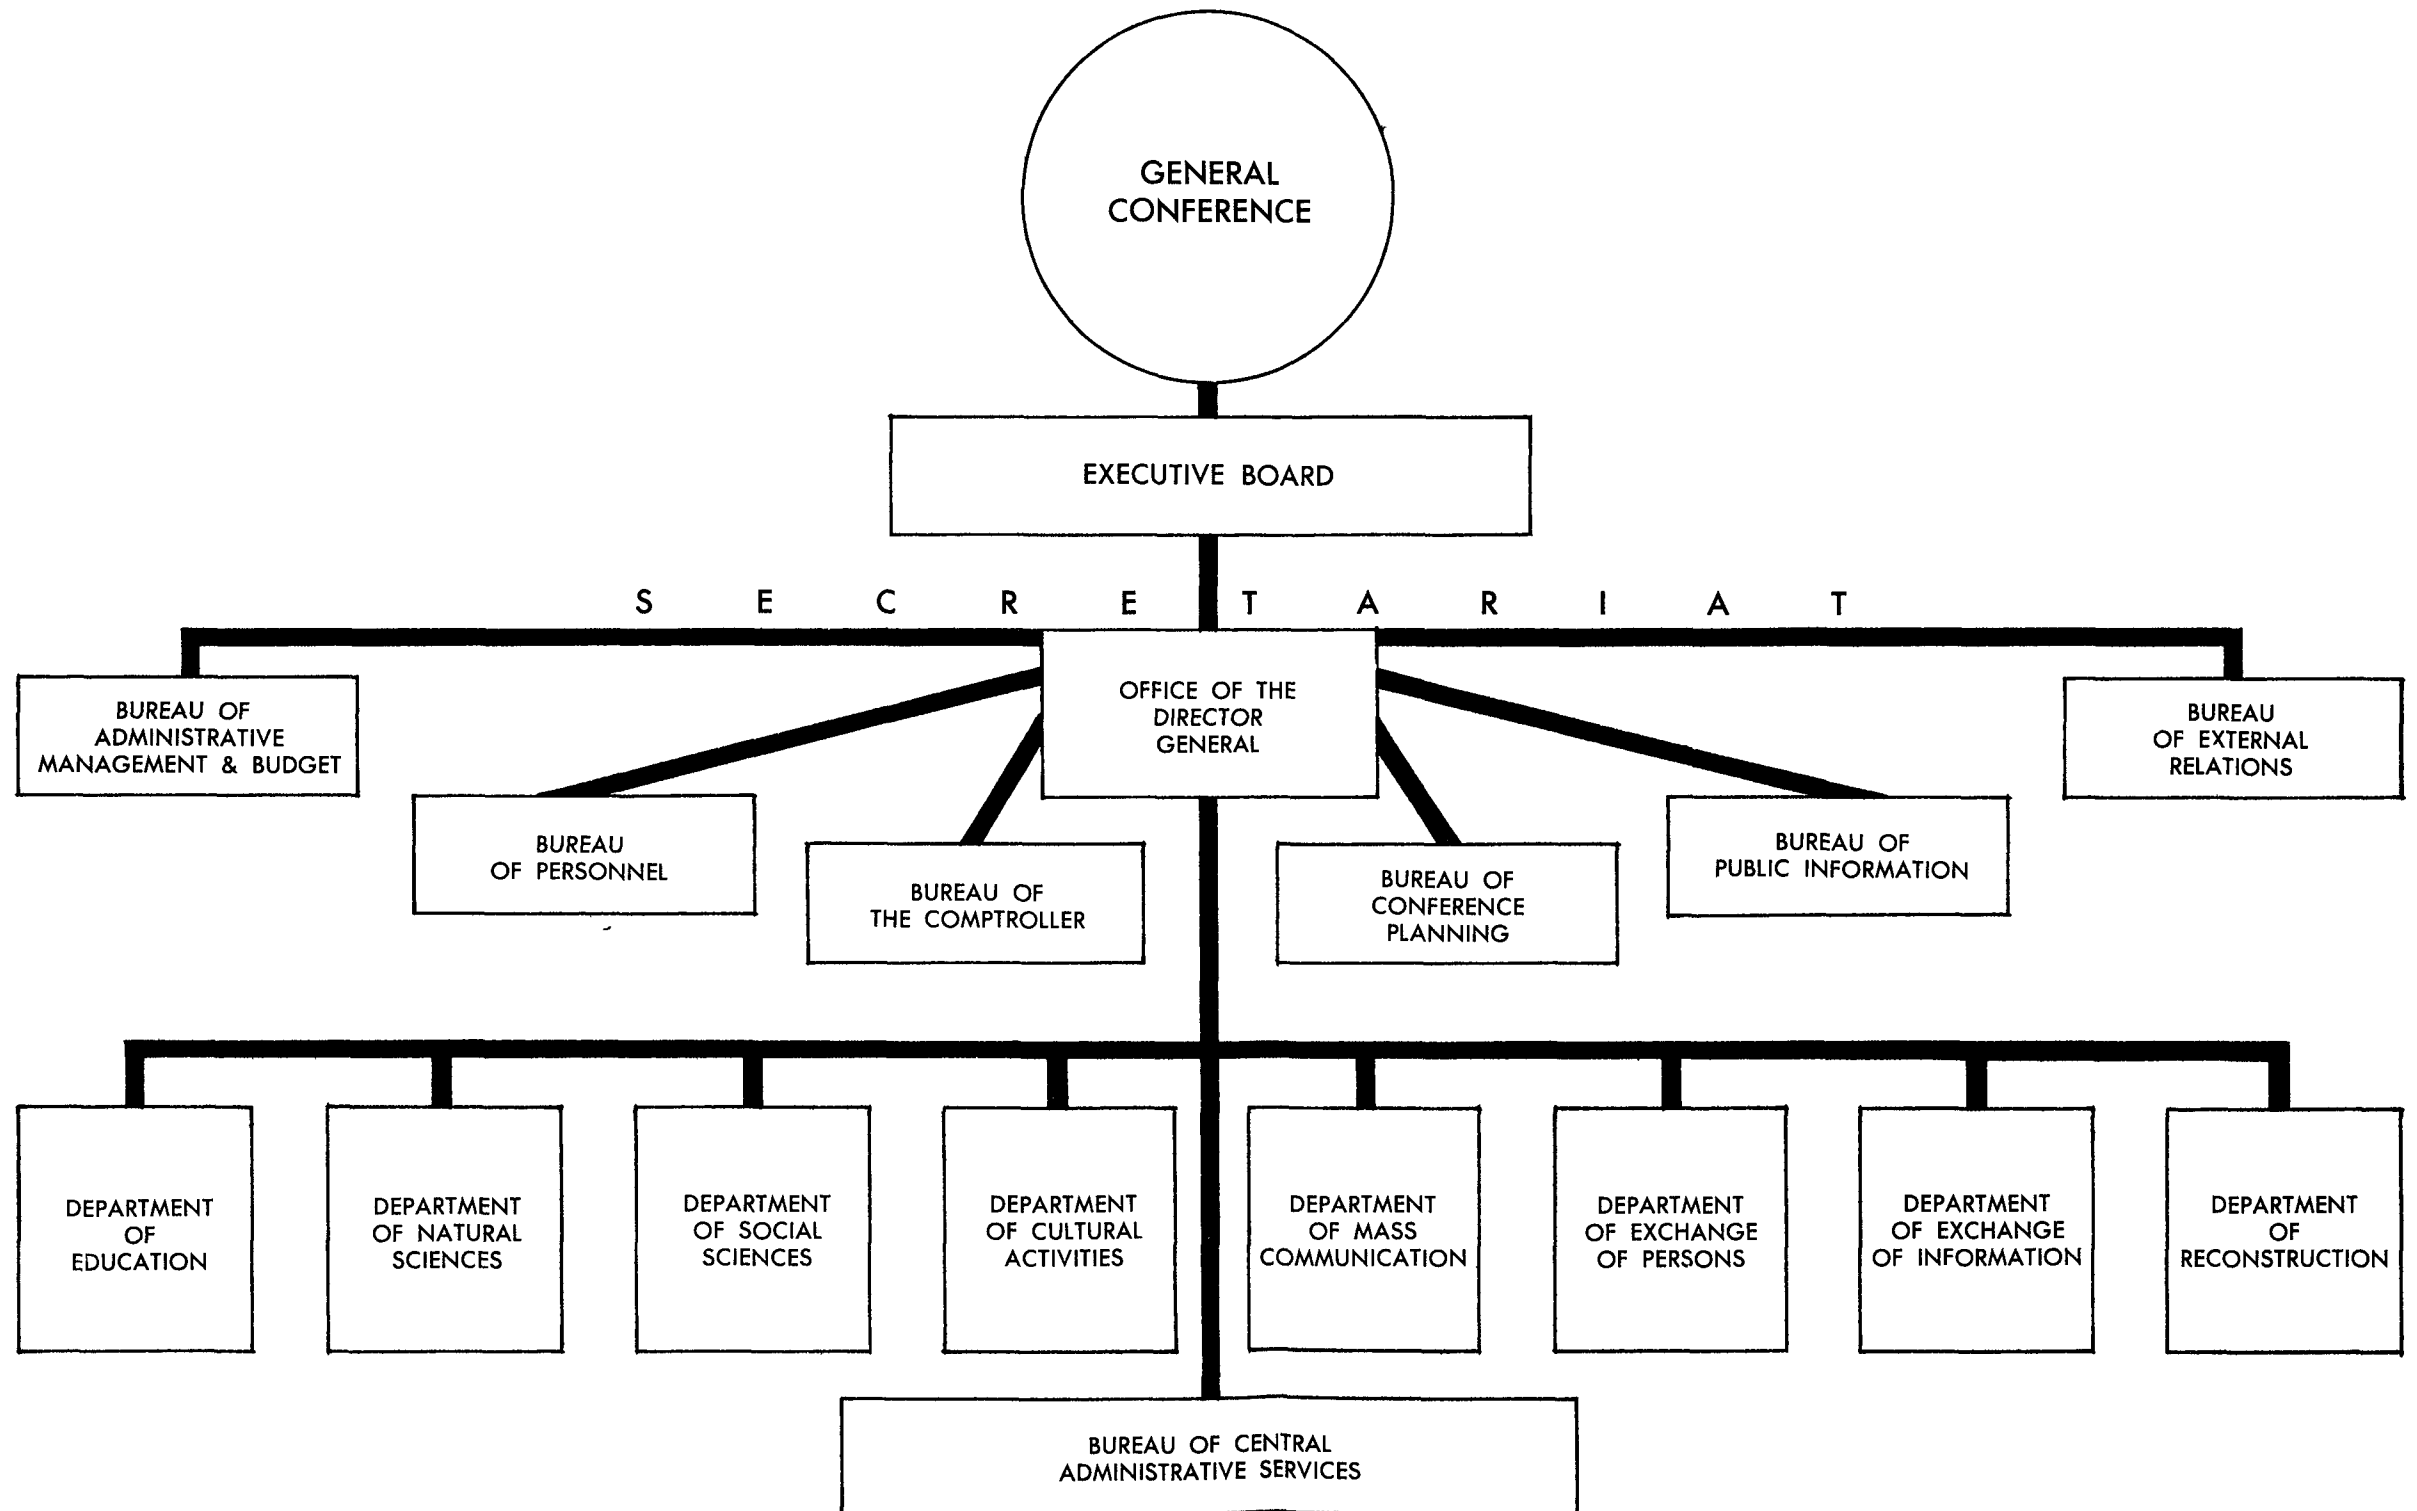

"3. The Director-General or a representative designated by him shall participate, without the right to vote, in all meetings of the Conference and of its Executive Committee and shall formulate for consideration by the Conference and the Executive Committee proposals for appropriate action in regard to matters coming before them."

"5. The Conference may make recommendations to any public international organization regarding any matter pertaining to the purpose of the Organization.

"6. The Conference may by a two-thirds majority of the votes cast agree to discharge any other functions consistent with the purposes of the Organization which may be assigned to it by governments or provided for by any arrangement between the Organization and any other public international organization."

STRUCTURE OF THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC & CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

III. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization¹

A. ORIGIN

The standing Conference of Allied Ministers of Education, which first met in London in 1942, was mainly concerned with plans for educational reconstruction after the war. In April 1944, however, the Conference, which was joined by an American educational delegation, drew up plans for an educational organization. These plans, after being sent to governments for comment, and subsequently revised, were published on August 1, 1945, as a basis for discussion at an international conference which the Conference of Allied Ministers requested the British Government to call.

In the meantime, France, which had been the host country to the League of Nations Institute of Intellectual Co-operation, inaugurated in January 1926, and which had been closely interested in the work of the Institute, recommended at the San Francisco Conference that the United Nations should call a conference to draw up a statute of an international organization on cultural co-operation.

The Conference for the Establishment of an Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of the United Nations was convened by the Government of the United Kingdom in association with the Government of France. The Conference was held in London from November 1 to 16, 1945. It was attended by representatives of 44 governments and by observers from a number of international organizations. After considering a draft constitution prepared by the Allied Ministers of Education, a draft submitted by the French Government and other proposals, the Conference drew up the Constitution of UNESCO.² It also established a Preparatory Educational, Scientific and Cultural Commission to function until UNESCO came into being. The Conference decided that the seat of UNESCO should be in Paris.

The Preparatory Commission, during its one year of existence, made arrangements for the first session of the General Conference of UNESCO. It prepared the provisional agenda of the Conference and made recommendations concerning the Organization's program and budget. It also took steps to meet some of the most urgent needs of educational, scientific and cultural reconstruction in devastated areas.

UNESCO came into being on November 4, 1946, when the instruments of acceptance of twenty signatories of its Constitution had been deposited with the Government of the United Kingdom.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The preamble to the UNESCO Constitution recognizes that "since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defences of peace must be constructed".

The purpose of UNESCO, as stated in Article 1 of the Constitution, "is to contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration among the nations through education, science and culture in order to further universal respect for justice, for the rule of law and for the human rights and fundamental freedoms which are affirmed for the peoples of the world, without distinction of race, sex, language or religion, by the Charter of the United Nations".

² The text of the Constitution of UNESCO is reproduced in the Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 712-17.

To achieve its purpose UNESCO is to accomplish the following:

"(a) collaborate in the work of advancing the mutual knowledge and understanding of peoples, through all means of mass communication and to that end recommend such international agreements as may be necessary to promote the free flow of ideas by word and image;

"(b) give fresh impulse to popular education and to the spread of culture;

by collaborating with Members, at their request, in the development of educational activities;

by instituting collaboration among the nations to advance the ideal of equality of educational opportunity without regard to race, sex or any distinctions, economic or social;

by suggesting educational methods best suited to prepare the children of the world for the responsibilities of freedom;

"(c) maintain, increase and diffuse knowledge;

by assuring the conservation and protection of the world's inheritance of books, works of art and monuments of history and science, and recommending to the nations concerned the necessary international conventions;

by encouraging cooperation among the nations in all branches of intellectual activity, including the international exchange of persons active in the fields of education, science and culture and the exchange of publications, objects of artistic and scientific interest and other materials of information;

by initiating methods of international cooperation calculated to give the people of all countries access to the printed and published materials produced by any of them."

C. ORGANIZATION

UNESCO consists of a General Conference, an Executive Board and a Secretariat.

The General Conference, which meets at least once each year, is composed of representatives of the States Members of UNESCO. It determines the policies and the main lines of work of the Organization, and it may summon international conferences on education, the sciences and humanities and the dissemination of knowledge.

Each Member is entitled to one vote in the Conference. Decisions of the Conference are made by a majority of the Members present and voting, except in cases in which the Constitution requires a two-thirds majority. The adoption by the Conference of international conventions, or of amendments to the Constitution, for example, requires a two-thirds majority vote.

New Members may be admitted into UNESCO, if they are Members of the United Nations, by signing the Constitution and depositing an instrument of acceptance. Other states, to become Members, require in addition a favorable recommendation of the Executive Board and a two-thirds majority vote of the General Conference, and their applications are subject to the approval of the United Nations.

The Executive Board consists of eighteen members elected for three-year terms by the General Conference from among the delegates appointed by Member States. Each year the General Conference elects six members of the Board, endeavoring to select persons competent in the arts, humanities, sciences and education. The Board, which meets at least twice each year, is responsible for the execution of the program adopted by the Conference and exercises any powers delegated to it by the Conference.

The Secretariat consists of the Director-General and the staff. The Director-General, appointed by the General Conference on the nomination of the Executive Board, is the chief administrative officer of UNESCO.

Four Field Science Co-operation Offices have been set up: in Cairo, for the Middle East; in Rio de Janeiro, for Latin America;³ in Nanking, for the Far East; and in New Delhi, for South East Asia.

As of September 21, 1948, National Commissions or co-operating bodies had been set up in 28 Member States and plans were well advanced for their establishment in six other states. National Commissions, composed chiefly of representatives of non-governmental organizations interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters, advise their respective delegations to the UNESCO General Conference and serve as liaison groups between UNESCO and their local communities.

The Latin American office was transferred to Montevideo in November 1948.

D. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

The first session of the General Conference of UNESCO was held in Paris from November 19 to December 10, 1946. Among the first decisions of the Conference was the approval of the agreement⁴ establishing the relationship between the United Nations and UNESCO; this agreement came into force on December 14, 1946, with its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

In addition to appointing the first Director-General, electing the Executive Board and adopting the various administrative and financial regulations of UNESCO, the General Conference approved a comprehensive program of work for the Organization during 1947. The final plan of action to be undertaken during the year, together with budget allocations, was determined in April 1947 by the Executive Board after reviewing in detail the decisions of the General Conference. The revised program involved several large-scale projects—such as reconstruction, fundamental education, education for international understanding and the establishment of a world centre of scientific liaison—and specialized activities within the fields of education, science and culture.

UNESCO began a survey of the needs of countries devastated by the war in order to help in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of their educational, cultural and scientific life. It was instrumental in establishing the Temporary International Council for Educational Reconstruction (TICER) to co-ordinate the work of non-governmental organizations active in the field of educational reconstruction. It began the publication of a Reconstruction Newsletter to assist in the campaign and published a pamphlet, The Teacher and the Post-War Child. The specialized activities of the Organization in the fields of education, natural sciences, libraries and museums and mass communications were mainly directed during this period toward furthering the reconstruction program.

In April 1947, UNESCO sent a team of scientists to Latin America to make preliminary investigations prior to a meeting to consider the establishment of a research institute in the area of the Amazon basin.

The Organization also commenced the planning of its future activities in connection with its large-scale programs for stimulating fundamental education and promoting education for international understanding, and with its programs in the specialized fields of social science, philosophy and humanities, and arts and letters.

E. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

During this period UNESCO held one regular and one special session of its General Conference. Membership in the Organization increased from 31 to 43 states as of September 21.

The second annual session of the General Conference of UNESCO met in Mexico City from November 6 to December 3, 1947. As a result of experience gained by the Organization since the 1946 session, the Conference revised the program of work of UNESCO, combining the projected activities of the Organization under six main groups. UNESCO accordingly has been concentrating its efforts and resources during 1948 in carrying out programs of reconstruction, communication, education, cultural interchange, human and social relations and natural sciences. The Conference also adopted an amendment to Article IV, paragraph 10, of the UNESCO Constitution.⁵

The Executive Board decided to recommend to the third regular General Conference the extension of UNESCO's activities to Germany and Japan, in order to reorient the people of these countries towards democracy and against all forms of aggressive nationalism and isolationism.⁶

Due to the disturbed situation in the Middle East, an extraordinary session of the General Conference met in Paris on September 15, 1948, to decide whether the third regular session of the Conference should be held in Beirut, Lebanon, as originally planned by the Mexico City Conference

⁵ For text of amendment, see Annex II, p. 854.

⁶ The General Conference in December 1948 approved this recommendation.

and voted that the session should convene as scheduled on November 17.⁷

The activities undertaken by the Organization since June 1947 are summarized below.

1. Reconstruction

After June 1947, UNESCO continued its efforts of encouraging and assisting in the restoration of educational, scientific and cultural life in countries devastated by the war. It was first necessary to determine the needs of these countries, and during 1947 and 1948 UNESCO made surveys, mainly in the field of their educational, scientific and cultural needs. The results of surveys in the following war-devastated countries were published in November 1947 as The Book of Needs: Austria, Belgium, Burma, China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Iran, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Philippines, Poland and Yugoslavia. A second volume, prepared during 1948, for publication early in 1949, contains the results of field surveys in Burma, China, India, Malaya, Sarawak, North Borneo, the Philippines and Malta, as well as new data concerning the needs of the countries included in Book I. In addition, data on war-damaged schools, colleges, universities, museums, laboratories, libraries and other cultural institutions were compiled and distributed to interested Member States and voluntary organizations. Mainly in response to UNESCO's campaign efforts, contributions of money, supplies and services, valued at approximately $50,000,000, were collected and distributed during 1948, through the Temporary International Council for Educational Reconstruction (TICER), National Commissions and voluntary organizations. UNESCO has prepared and distributed material for use in national campaigns to raise funds and materials. This includes a monthly Reconstruction Newsletter, providing a regular exchange of information on reconstruction requirements and assistance being furnished to war-devastated countries; and illustrated pamphlets, such as Universities in Need, prepared for publication in November 1948.

During the period under review, UNESCO itself allocated approximately $400,000 for the purchase of reconstruction materials, including film projectors, radio receivers, microfilm projectors and strips, educational books, music supplies, artists' materials and chemical restoratives for museum objects. These materials were sent to China, Poland, Greece, Czechoslovakia, Philippines, Italy, Hungary and Austria.

The Organization has provided suggestions and advice to teachers, librarians, museum professionals, sponsors of youth camps and others on ways of solving educational problems arising from the war. A pamphlet for teachers, entitled Improvisations in the Teaching of Science, was prepared and distributed in July 1948. Information is being collected on the educational problems of war-handicapped children and on successful attempts to solve these problems. A Conference of Directors of Children's Villages, sponsored by UNESCO, met at the Pestalozzi Village in Trogen, Switzerland, in July 1948, to discuss methods of education in children's villages. The Conference resulted in the establishment of an International Federation of Children's Communities, headed by a Committee of Directors to co-ordinate educational programs and consider administrative problems.

International voluntary work camps, with participants from different countries, assist in rebuilding schools and other reconstruction projects in war-devastated countries. UNESCO publicized this movement and assembled 27 libraries, which it distributed in July 1948 to voluntary work camps in eleven countries. Each library consists of 250 to 300 books and pamphlets on international subjects.

UNESCO also acts as a clearing house for publications. It distributed information on needs and sources of supply of publications through the monthly UNESCO Bulletin for Libraries, sent regularly to about 6,500 institutions (as of September 1948). In addition, as of the same date, 1,876 lists of publications offered or wanted for free distribution or exchange were circulated to interested libraries. By the middle of July 1948, UNESCO had allocated to war-devastated libraries a total of 545 sets of scientific periodicals (comprising about 4,466 volumes) and 20,644 volumes of miscellaneous publications. UNESCO also was instrumental in the establishment of several national book exchange and distribution centres, which select books and periodicals for exchange through the UNESCO clearing house.

2. Communications

To achieve its long-term goal of increasing international understanding across national frontiers, UNESCO stimulated and co-ordinated efforts to improve communications between peoples through the exchange of persons, through radio, films and ⁷The third regular session was accordingly held in Beirut; it lasted until December 11, 1948.

the press, and through libraries, books and publications.

a. EXCHANGE OF PERSONS

The Organization collected data on international fellowship opportunities with a view to becoming the international centre of information in this field. On the basis of the information collected, UNESCO advised governments, National Commissions, voluntary agencies and the United Nations on the administration and planning of exchange of persons programs and encouraged the development of such programs. During 1948, UNESCO was requested to administer 125 fellowships; 68 of these had been awarded by September. In addition, UNESCO itself provided the funds for 60 fellowships for which candidates were selected during 1948, mainly from war-devastated countries. UNESCO fellowships and travel grants are awarded to research workers, professors, officials, teachers, artists, writers, or experts in radio, films and the press. Study Abroad, a handbook of international study opportunities, was published late in 1948.

b. TECHNICAL NEEDS

UNESCO made a five-month survey, completed in August 1947, of the technical needs in press, film and radio of Belgium, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Greece, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, Poland and Yugoslavia. The report of the survey, together with recommendations for meeting the needs in these countries, was made available to the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information, held in March and April 1948. The Conference recommended the reduction of taxes on radio receiving sets and parts as an aid to the free flow of information. It recommended that the Economic and Social Council and specialized agencies assist UNESCO in its task of reducing the inequalities in information facilities disclosed by the survey, and of extending aid to countries suffering from an acute shortage of newsprint. The Conference also endorsed, as conducive to the improvement of the quality of information, a UNESCO proposal to establish under UNESCO auspices an International Institute of Press and Information.

A meeting of experts in international financial exchange, cultural relations and international travel, held at UNESCO House, Paris, in June 1948, suggested methods for operating a compensation scheme between soft-currency countries able to offer special cultural facilities to students, teachers and technicians, and hard-currency countries which produce mass communication and other technical and scientific equipment needed by the soft-currency countries.⁸

During 1948, the survey of technical needs was extended to cover Austria, Hungary and Italy in Europe; Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela in Central and South America; and Burma, India, Pakistan, Malaya and Singapore in the Far East. UNESCO prepared a report, for publication before the end of 1948, containing the results of these surveys as well as related recommendations made by a commission of experts meeting in August.

c. LIBRARIES

UNESCO organized, in conjunction with the Government of the United Kingdom, a summer school for public librarians, held in Manchester and London during September 1948, with the object of increasing their awareness of education and international understanding.

A meeting of archivists in June 1948 unanimously approved the establishment of a Provisional International Council on Archives.

d. PUBLICATIONS

During the year, UNESCO developed a book coupon scheme designed to overcome foreign exchange difficulties in buying and selling books and other publications. Under this scheme, UNESCO sells book coupons to countries in exchange for their national currencies. Booksellers accepting these book coupons for payment will be repaid by UNESCO in their respective national currencies. By September 1948, China, Czechoslovakia, France, India and the United Kingdom had agreed to participate in the scheme as purchasers of coupons and vendors of books; and booksellers in the United States, as vendors of books.⁹

e. COPYRIGHT

UNESCO has also undertaken a comparative and critical study of copyright problems and the methods adopted in various countries for solving them, and has participated in a number of conferences on the subject. The first two issues of a Copyright Bulletin had been prepared, for publication by UNESCO in November and December 1948.

⁸ This scheme was approved in December 1948 by the General Conference.

⁹ In December 1948, UNESCO launched the book coupon scheme on an experimental basis with the sale of $100,000 worth of coupons to six countries and the donation of $50,000 worth of coupons to ten countries. The countries involved other than those listed above were: Austria, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Indonesia, Iran, Philippines and Poland.

f. OTHER ACTIVITIES

Among its many other activities in the field of communications, UNESCO prepared in accordance with recommendations of the second General Conference: a survey of the production of cheap books, including information on trends and problems regarding low-price book publishing; analyses and studies on obstacles to the free flow of educational, scientific and cultural material and on methods by which these might be overcome; a draft convention to facilitate the international circulation of visual and auditory materials, which was sent to Members for comments;¹⁰ a volume of essays on the philosophical principles of human rights; and a bibliography of creative writing under Axis occupation. It also concluded a number of agreements with several international non-governmental organizations for the preparation by these organizations of bibliographies, abstracts and surveys in the fields of science, philosophy, history and linguistics.

3. Education

UNESCO's functions in the field of education are to determine the most significant contributions that each country or region can make to educational practice; to find out the most pressing needs of its Member States; and to devise methods of bringing persons, ideas and materials from the educationally advanced areas in any field to areas asking for assistance. UNESCO considers that its main task in this field is to become an educational "exchange and mart".

a. FUNDAMENTAL EDUCATION

Methods developed by UNESCO to encourage and help Member States to establish a minimum fundamental education for all their people include the establishment of a "clearing house", the provision of field consultants and the initiation of experimental "pilot projects".

To fill the pressing need of Member States for interchange of technical information in fundamental education, UNESCO set up a Clearing House during 1948. Data were gathered from a number of significant projects and experiments, partly by the use of published sources or correspondence, partly through the visits of UNESCO consultants and, when required, through special surveys made by experts for the Clearing House.

UNESCO classified and analyzed the information gathered by all these means, and the Clearing House makes it available in the form of publications and technical advice. The publications include periodicals, such as the Quarterly Bulletin of Fundamental Education, or reports arising from surveys made by experts. Documentation and materials are provided for international conferences and seminars, or for national bodies which are playing an important part in fundamental education.

Partly as a corollary to these activities, UNESCO maintains a number of field consultants in fundamental education, notably in China, East Africa and Latin America. In their travels, these officials fulfil a twofold function. They provide on the spot consultation and advice, and they send back to UNESCO a considerable amount of information on methods and materials used in fundamental education, at the same time defining the principal needs of their regions.

In advocating that the problems of fundamental education should be approached in a systematic and scientific way, UNESCO attaches importance to national pilot projects, which serve as centres of experimentation and focal points from which fundamental education can expand to the surrounding areas.

One such pilot project was developed by the Government of Haiti in the Marbial Valley. The original planning for this project was done jointly by UNESCO and the Haitian Government, and UNESCO participated actively in the work by enlisting outside financial support and by providing some funds and the full-time services of a field consultant. During 1948 a basic socio-economic survey of the valley was completed. A wide range of fundamental education activities was begun, all directed towards the improvement of living conditions.

In China a similar scheme for the development of a national pilot project was hampered by local difficulties. In its place UNESCO initiated an experiment in the preparation of audio-visual teaching materials in co-operation with the Chinese Mass Education Movement.

In other areas UNESCO field consultants have advised governments and local authorities on the possibilities of starting pilot projects.

The results of experiments of this kind also provide the UNESCO Clearing House with information and materials, which can then be made available to all Member States.

b. EDUCATIONAL MISSIONS

UNESCO's educational missions are designed as one means of assisting Member States which wish to improve their educational systems. At the request of the Government of the Philippines, UNESCO assigned a consultative mission to make a survey, beginning in February 1949, of adult and elementary education in that country. Afghanistan asked UNESCO to send a mission in the spring of 1949 to advise it on technical education and literacy campaigns.

c. ADULT EDUCATION

UNESCO collects and disseminates information on new techniques and methods in adult education. In June 1949, it is to convene an International Conference on Adult Education which will be held in Denmark. A pamphlet entitled UNESCO and Adult Education, outlining UNESCO's program in this field, was published in 1948, and an International Directory on Adult Education was being prepared with the assistance of UNESCO's National Commissions.

d. CO-OPERATION WITH THE INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF EDUCATION

As a result of an agreement with UNESCO, the International Bureau of Education is making investigations, at the request of UNESCO, into educational practices in a number of countries. For example, in 1948 UNESCO and the Bureau published jointly two reports, one on the Teaching of Handwriting and the other on School Psychologists. These were considered at the Eleventh International Conference on Public Education, convened by UNESCO and the Bureau in the summer of 1948. Two other inquiries, one on the introduction to natural science in the primary school and the other on the teaching of reading, were being made and reports were to be published during 1949. At the request of UNESCO, the Bureau in bringing up to date an inquiry made before the war on the professional training of primary school teachers.

e. UNIVERSITIES

In August 1948, UNESCO convened, in collaboration with the Netherlands Government, a Preparatory Conference of Representatives of Universities, which met at the University of Utrecht. It was attended by 118 participants and observers from 44 countries.

The Conference discussed from many different viewpoints the problems facing universities in all parts of the world. The success of the discussions encouraged the Conference to elect an Interim Committee of ten members to be responsible for planning the next Universities' Conference, to be held in 1950 or later, and for drafting a constitution for an international association of universities.

The Committee will also direct the work of an International Universities' Bureau, which the Conference decided "should be established immediately to act as a clearing house for information about the universities of the world".

f. EDUCATIONAL SEMINARS

After July 1947, UNESCO experimented with a special type of international conference, in the form of a seminar. At these seminars, specialists selected by Member States were brought together to make an intensive study of specific educational problems; to use the study group method on an international level; to prepare materials for national and international use; to draw up plans for action in the home countries of the participants; and to experience living in an international community.

The first of these seminars was held at Sevres, near Paris, in July and August 1947. It was concerned with how best to help young people to take a world view rather than a nationalistic one.

The three seminars held in July and August 1948 dealt with more restricted subjects: one, meeting at Ashridge College, Hertfordshire, England, was concerned with "The Education and Training of Teachers"; another, at Pödebrady, Czechoslovakia, concentrated on "Childhood Education from 3-13 Years of Age"; and the third, on "Teaching About the United Nations and Its Specialized Agencies", held at Adelphi College, Garden City, Long Island, New York, was organized in co-operation with the United Nations. All Member States of UNESCO were invited to send representatives to these seminars; Members of the United Nations which were not Members of UNESCO were also invited to the seminar on "Teaching About the United Nations and Its Specialized Agencies". As a result of these seminars the preparation of a number of pamphlets was undertaken for use in schools in different parts of the world.

g. EDUCATION FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

All UNESCO's work is designed to contribute directly or indirectly to international understanding. UNESCO is particularly concerned that school education should help pupils to become conscious of the ties which unite the peoples of the world and be ready to accept the obligations which an interdependent world imposes.

UNESCO has encouraged teaching about the United Nations and its specialized agencies since, together, these form the greatest contemporary effort, on an international, governmental scale, to move towards a world society. A booklet including some suggestions for teaching programs on the United Nations in the schools of Member States, prepared in 1948 by UNESCO, was considered at the Eleventh International Conference on Public Education, convened jointly by UNESCO and the International Bureau of Education, and at the UNESCO seminar at Adelphi College, New York.

b. IMPROVEMENT OF TEXTBOOKS AND TEACHING MATERIALS

UNESCO has undertaken a long-term program for the improvement of textbooks and teaching materials as aids to international understanding. Principles and criteria were drawn up and a model plan prepared to assist Member States to study and analyze their own textbooks. Specifications were drafted for a common study by Member States of the treatment in their textbooks of the agencies of international co-operation from 1918 to the present time.

4. Cultural Interchange

UNESCO's program of cultural interchange included activities in the fields of arts and letters, philosophy and humanities, and museums.

a. ARTS AND LETTERS

As a result of the efforts of UNESCO, an independent International Theatre Institute was established in June 1948 by a congress of Member States meeting in Prague, and several states set up national theatre centres. UNESCO has also made preliminary inquiries, in conjunction with existing international organizations in the field of music, for the establishment of an International Music Institute.

In June 1947, UNESCO began to organize an International Pool of Literature to encourage the flow of published and unpublished material between journals and reviews in different parts of the world. In response to communications proposing participation in the Pool which were sent to 332 important literary reviews in Member States, 151 replies had been received by September 1948, 136 of them favorable.

To encourage reproductions of works of art, UNESCO is preparing catalogues to inform institutions and interested individuals throughout the world where fine color reproductions of particular phases and periods of art can be obtained and to encourage the publication of additional works to illustrate these periods and phases. As of September 1948, catalogues were being prepared for publication by the end of the year on European painting from 1860 to the present time, Italian Renaissance painting and Persian art. The Organization undertook negotiations with the Vatican for the production of 25 folios of the fresco paintings in the Vatican; with the Italian Government for the production of similar folios of reproductions of Italian Renaissance paintings; with publishers in England to produce folios on Persian art; and with publishers in France who had indicated a desire to produce folios dealing with European painting from 1860 to the present time. UNESCO also prepared and distributed to Members a list of documentary films on visual art.

In July 1948, UNESCO called together in Paris a committee of experts to consider the preparation of a general catalogue of world music, to include lists of music available in recorded form and suggestions for additional recordings. The committee recommended that a centre should be established to draw up a general index of classical Western music, and that the possibility of establishing specialized catalogues of Eastern music and folk music in general should be considered.

Following the resolution (60 (I))¹¹ of the General Assembly, recognizing that the translation of the classics into the languages of Members of the United Nations would promote understanding and peace among nations, UNESCO, at the request of the Economic and Social Council (resolution 53 (IV)),¹² collected and submitted to the Council in June 1948 data on objective methods of selecting great books, the needs of various cultural regions and suggestions for general assistance in translation, publication and distribution. As of September 21, 1948, UNESCO had received official lists of works suitable for translation from Australia, Belgium, Canada and the United Kingdom, and suggestions from the PEN Club and other organizations.

b. PHILOSOPHY AND HUMANITIES

Round-table discussions, sponsored by UNESCO, were held in Amsterdam in August 1948 on the philosophic basis of humanism, the basis of freedom, and the philosophic bases of the various concepts of democracy. Subsequently, the International Institute of Philosophy, under the terms of its contract with UNESCO, secured publication of articles on these subjects in special issues of leading philosophic journals.

In consultation with a number of international non-governmental organizations, UNESCO drew up in July 1948 a draft Constitution for the establishment of an International Council of Associations for Philosophy and Humanistic Studies. The Constitution was approved in September by delegates of several of these organizations and the Council will come into existence when five of the interested organizations have given their formal assent.

c. MUSEUMS

The Organization works with museums, advising them on exhibitions available for international distribution and suggesting the creation of additional exhibitions which it feels would be in demand. From July 1947 to September 1948, UNESCO encouraged the international exchange of exhibitions among Belgium, China, Cuba, France, Mexico, Netherlands, and United States (including Hawaii).

The first Biennial Conference of the International Council of Museums, meeting at UNESCO House in June and July 1948, discussed ways in which such institutions could assist UNESCO in carrying out its program of international understanding and its other aims.

To assist museums in developing on a world basis the services which further the general aims of UNESCO, during 1948 the Organization began publishing the quarterly Museum, which replaces the technical museographical journal Museion, formerly published by the International Institute of Intellectual Co-operation. The first issue of Museum was published in July 1948.

5. Human and Social Relations

a. TENSIONS AFFECTING INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

As its major task during the period covered in the field of human and social relations, UNESCO undertook studies and inquiries on tensions affecting international understanding.

In developing this project, the Organization promotes inquiries into the distinctive character of various national cultures, ideals and legal systems, with the aim of stimulating sympathy and mutual respect among nations. These inquiries are being made by arrangement with the International Studies Conference, four of whose experts began working in 1948 in France, Norway, Poland and Switzerland, preparing monographs for a series of booklets on "The Ways of Life" in these countries. By September 1948 national sections of the International Studies Conference had begun similar work in Brazil, Canada, Hungary and India. Inquiries into the conceptions which people of one country entertain of their own and of other nations were undertaken at the request of UNESCO by public opinion institutes in Argentina, Australia, Belgium, China, France, Hungary, Italy, Norway, United Kingdom and United States. UNESCO also promoted inquiries into modern techniques which have been developed in education, political science, philosophy and psychology for changing mental attitudes and for determining the processes and forces involved where human minds are in conflict. Memoranda were prepared for UNESCO by experts and institutions with practical experience in this field. In July 1948, eight experts, representing different philosophies and nations, met at UNESCO House and prepared a series of reports on the influences which, throughout life, predispose towards international understanding on the one hand and aggressive nationalism on the other.

In connection with this program, UNESCO has maintained close liaison with the newly organized World Federation for Mental Health, which met in London in August.

UNESCO is also developing a closely related project on the philosophical analysis of current ideological conflicts.

b. POLITICAL SCIENCE

An international conference on Methods in Political Science, sponsored by UNESCO, met in September 1948 at Unesco House. The conference, attended by political scientists from Europe, North America and Asia, decided to create an International Political Science Association and set up a preparatory committee to draft a constitution. The Association is to encourage improvements in the study of political phenomena in all countries, facilitate the exchange of information on developments in political research, promote the organization of meetings and conferences, assist political scientists to obtain facilities for foreign research and develop internationally planned research.

6. Natural Sciences

a. HYLEAN AMAZON

A conference convened by the Brazilian Government to consider the establishment of an International Institute of the Hylean Amazon met in Belem do Para, Brazil, in August 1947. It set down the purposes of the Institute and requested UNESCO to make further suggestions as to its structure, functions and methods of financing. A convention establishing the Institute was later agreed upon by a conference which met in Iquitos, Peru, from April 30 to May 10, 1948, on the joint invitation of UNESCO and the Governments of Brazil and Peru. The Institute will come into being on acceptance of the convention by five of the following founding nations: Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, France, Italy, Netherlands, Peru, United States and Venezuela. In the meantime, an Interim Commission was set up, with headquarters at Manaus, Brazil, to carry out preliminary work. The Institute, as provided by a financial protocol adopted by the conference, is to be financed by monetary contributions from eight of the founding nations and contributions of equipment and material from France and Italy.

When formally established, the Institute is to co-ordinate all research activities undertaken in the vast, almost unexplored region of the Hylean Amazon. It will collate all known data on the region and stimulate and give practical aid to further exploration. Subjects to be studied include physiography, soil science, biology, zoology, botany, anthropology, ethnology, agriculture and nutrition.

b. RESEARCH LABORATORIES

Among its other activities in the field of natural sciences, UNESCO prepared a detailed report, at the request of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, on the question of establishing international scientific research laboratories.

On the recommendation of the second session of the General Conference, UNESCO organized an International Conference on High Altitude Research Stations, which met at Interlaken, Switzerland, from August 31 to September 3, 1948. The Conference agreed that if plans for research laboratories and observatories under the auspices of the United Nations were adopted, a high priority should be given to high altitude stations. In the meantime, the Conference made several suggestions for furthering such research, including the organization of existing stations, and stations to be established, into a network for the exchange of information.

c. SCIENTIFIC EQUIPMENT

UNESCO is developing an information centre on scientific apparatus to answer inquiries on types of apparatus available. It began the compilation of a series of inventories of basic scientific equipment used in schools and universities for educational purposes, and experts in science teaching in the hope of reaching international agreement on the minimum of scientific equipment necessary to teach science at all educational levels.

d. GRANTS-IN-AID

Between April 1947 and September 21, 1948, UNESCO made grants totalling $489,304 to international scientific and technological organizations, unions and societies to further international co-operation in the field of pure science. Of this amount, $231,174 was given in 1948 to the International Council of Scientific Unions and its ten federated Unions, and their seven subsidiary organizations. These grants-in-aid to the International Council will, it is estimated, help in the realization of about 120 different projects, the meeting of about 450 scientists at about 50 international scientific conferences, the publication of some 40 reports, journals and other publications, and the work of some 30 international scientific services, laboratories and stockrooms.

F. BUDGET

Contributions to the budget are made by Members of UNESCO according to the scale adopted for the administrative budget of the United Nations, with adjustments to provide for the difference in membership of the two organizations.

The second session of the UNESCO General Conference, meeting in November and December 1947, approved a budget in the amount of $7,682,637 to carry out UNESCO's program of activities during 1948, as against $6,000,000 approved by the first session for 1947. As in 1947, the Director-General was authorized under certain conditions to make transfers within the budget. The estimated distribution of funds for 1948, as decided by the General Conference, was as follows (in U. S. dollars):

Conference and meetings.....	$ 285,030
Personnel Services	3,908,527
Common Services	1,552,000
Grants-in-Aid and Emergency Grants-in-Aid	617,080
Initial Recruitment	970,000
Reserve	350,000
TOTAL	$7,682,637

ANNEX II

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF
THE UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

Article IV, paragraph 10, of the Constitution, effective December 1, 1947, the date it was amended by the General Conference, reads as follows:

"The General Conference shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall at each session elect a president and other officers."

Prior to the approval of this amendment, Article IV, paragraph 10, was as follows:

"The General Conference shall, at each session, elect a President and other officers and adopt rules of procedure."

STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

IV. The International Civil Aviation Organization¹

A. ORIGIN

Representatives of 52 states attending the International Civil Aviation Conference, which met in Chicago from November 1 to December 7, 1944, at the invitation of the Government of the United States, adopted a Convention providing for the establishment of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO).² The Conference also drew up an Interim Agreement providing for a Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization (PICAO) to operate until the formal establishment of the permanent Organization. PICAO came into being on June 6, 1945, after 26 states had adhered to the Interim Agreement. ICAO came formally into existence on April 4, 1947, 30 days after the Convention on International Civil Aviation had been ratified by the required 26 states. The Convention superseded, as between contracting states, the provisions of two earlier agreements: the Paris Convention of 1919 establishing the International Commission for Air Navigation, and the Pan-American Convention on Commercial Aviation drawn up in Havana in 1928.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The Convention on International Civil Aviation, according to its preamble, lays down "certain principles and arrangements in order that international civil aviation may be developed in a safe and orderly manner and that international air transport services may be established on the basis of equality of opportunity and operated soundly and economically".

The aims and objectives of ICAO, as stated in Article 44 of the Convention, are:

". . . to develop the principles and techniques of international air navigation and to foster the planning and development of international air transport so as to:

"(a) Insure the safe and orderly growth of international civil aviation throughout the world;

"(b) Encourage the arts of aircraft design and operation for peaceful purposes;

"(c) Encourage the development of airways, airports, and air navigation facilities for international civil aviation;

"(d) Meet the needs of the peoples of the world for safe, regular, efficient and economical air transport;

"(e) Prevent economic waste caused by unreasonable competition;

"(f) Insure that the rights of contracting States are fully respected and that every contracting State has a fair opportunity to operate international air-lines;

"(g) Avoid discrimination between contracting States;

"(h) Promote safety of flight in international air navigation;

"(i) Promote generally the development of all aspects of international civil aeronautics."

¹For further information concerning the origin and early activities of PICAO and ICAO, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 723-28. C. ORGANIZATION

The governing bodies of ICAO are the Assembly and the Council.

The Assembly, comprising representatives of Member States, is convened by the Council and meets annually. The Assembly determines its own rules of procedure and is responsible for the financial arrangements of the Organization, including the approval of an annual budget. It examines and takes action on matters referred to it by the Council and may, at its discretion, refer to the Council specific matters for the consideration of the latter body. Finally, the Assembly deals with such other matters as come within the sphere of action of the Organization but are not specifically assigned to the Council.

Each Member State is entitled to one vote in the Assembly. Decisions of the Assembly and the Council are made, with few exceptions, by a simple majority of the votes cast. Among the exceptions, the adoption by the Assembly of amendments to the Convention and the adoption by the Council of international standards and recommended practices regulating air navigation both require a two-thirds majority vote.

Members may be admitted into the Organization, provided they are signatories to the Convention, Members of the United Nations or allied states or states which remained neutral during the Second World War, by notifying adherence or depositing an instrument of ratification of the Convention. Subject to the approval of the United Nations, ex-Axis states, to become Members of ICAO, require an affirmative four-fifths vote by the Assembly and the assent of any state invaded or attacked by the state seeking admission.

The Council, which meets in virtually continuous session, is the executive body of the Organization and derives its powers and authority from the Assembly and from the Convention itself. It is composed of 21 Member States elected by the Assembly for a period of three years. In electing these States, the Assembly must give adequate representation to: (1) those Member States of major importance in air transport; (2) those Member States not otherwise included which make the largest contribution to the provision of facilities for international civil air navigation; and (3) those Member States not otherwise included whose election will ensure that all major geographical areas of the world are represented. The Council creates standards for international air navigation and collects, examines and publishes information concerning air navigation. It administers the finances of the Organization and carries out the directives of the Assembly. It may conduct research into all aspects of air transport and air navigation which are of international importance. The Council is empowered by the Convention to act as an arbiter between two or more Members of ICAO in any dispute concerning the interpretation or application of the Convention and its Annexes. The first Assembly further authorized the Council to act, when expressly requested by all the parties concerned, as an arbitral body in any dispute arising among Members relating to international civil aviation.

Among other duties, the Council is charged with providing for the establishment of subsidiary bodies, and with supervising and co-ordinating their work. Four main committees, on which all Members of ICAO may be represented, have been established: the Air Navigation Committee,³ the Air Transport Committee,³ the Legal Committee⁴ and the Committee on the Convention on International Civil Aviation.⁵ The Air Navigation Committee assigns its technical work to the following divisions: Aerodromes, Air Routes and Ground Aids; Accident Investigation; Airworthiness; Communications; Special Radio Technical; Aeronautical Maps and Charts; Meteorology; Operating Practices; Personnel Licensing; Rules of the Air and Air Traffic Control; and Search and Rescue. The Air Transport Committee is assisted by the Facilitation of Air Transport Division and the Statistics Division. Two additional committees, the Committee on Joint Support of Air Navigation Services and the Finance Committee, are composed of representatives elected by the Council from its own members.

The Council elects the President of the Council and appoints the Secretary-General of ICAO. The President of the Council convenes and presides at meetings of the Council and acts as the Council's ³An Air Navigation Commission, composed of twelve members elected by the Council, and an Air Transport Committee, composed of twelve representatives of Council Member States and appointed by the Council, will shortly replace the existing bodies.

⁴The Legal Committee, in which any Member State of the Organization may be represented, was established by the First Assembly (May 1947).

⁵The Committee on the Convention on International Civil Aviation was abolished by Council action on October 20, 1948.

permanent representative. The Secretary-General is the chief executive officer of the Organization. He is responsible to the Council for carrying out duties assigned to him by that body.

The Organization maintains five offices in the field to deal with the regional aspects of international civil aviation, particularly with air navigation problems. The supervisory headquarters of these offices, with which is combined the North American Office, is attached to ICAO headquarters in Montreal. This office maintains liaison with Member nations in North America and is also responsible for the administration and co-ordination of the other four offices: the European and African Office in Paris; the South American Office in Lima, Peru; the Middle East Office in Cairo, Egypt; and the Far East and Pacific Office in Melbourne, Australia.

D. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

During its period of operation, from August 15, 1945, until the formal establishment of ICAO on April 4, 1947, the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization secured concerted action from its Members to provide and maintain the facilities and services necessary for air transport across national borders. Much of the work involved the drafting of recommendations for Recommended Standards, Practices and Procedures designed to ensure the safety, regularity and efficiency of international air transport. PICAQ invited its 50 Member States to adopt these recommendations pending the establishment by the permanent Organization of International Standards⁶ and Recommended Practices.⁷

With the co-operation of its Members, PICAQ evolved a pattern for meteorological services, traffic control, communications, radio beacons and ranges, search and rescue organizations and other facilities required for safe international flight. It began the preparation, continued by ICAO, of a draft multilateral agreement on the exchange of commercial rights in international civil air transport.

In view of the need for meteorological information from strategic points in the North Atlantic Ocean, PICAQ called a conference of those states whose airlines were interested in flying across the North Atlantic. The Conference met in London in September 1946, and resulted in an agreement by ten states to maintain thirteen weather stations at specified locations in the North Atlantic Ocean. The establishment of a Loran (long-range navigation aid) station at Vik, Iceland, was planned by PICAQ and completed after the permanent Organization came into being. This station, financed by six Member States of the Organization, including Iceland, assists aircraft in flying across the North Atlantic.

PICAQ, and later ICAO, held regional air navigation meetings to examine the air navigation requirements and to specify particular procedures to be followed in each region of the world in which a particular type of flying operation predominates. There are ten such regions: the North Atlantic, European-Mediterranean, Caribbean, Middle East, South Pacific, South American, South Atlantic, South-East Asia, North Pacific, African-Indian Ocean. Six regional air navigation meetings, the first for the North Atlantic in Dublin in March 1946, had been held prior to July 1, 1947.

An Agreement establishing the relationship between the United Nations and ICAO came into force on May 13, 1947, with its approval by the Assembly of ICAO.⁸ The Agreement, negotiated by PICAQ, had previously been approved by the United Nations General Assembly on December 14, 1946, with the proviso that Franco Spain be debarred from membership in ICAO. To comply with this proviso, the ICAO Assembly approved an amendment to the Chicago Convention which, when it comes into force, will effect the expulsion of Spain from membership in the Organization.⁹

⁶ By definition of the first Assembly of ICAO, a standard is "any specification for physical characteristics, configuration, material, performance, personnel or procedure, the uniform application of which is recognized as necessary for the safety or regularity of international air navigation and to which Member States will conform in accordance with the Chicago Convention; in the event of impossibility of compliance, notification to the Council is compulsory under Article 38 of the Convention".

⁷ A recommended practice, by definition of the first Assembly, is "any specification for physical characteristics, configuration, material, performance, personnel or procedure, the uniform application of which is recognized as desirable in the interest of safety, regularity or efficiency of international air navigation, and to which Member States will endeavor to conform in accordance with the Convention".

E. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947 TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

During this period, ICAO was engaged in implementing the recommendations of its first Assembly held in Montreal from May 6 to 27, 1947, and in completing the administrative organization of the agency. The second session of the Assembly, which met in Geneva from June 1 to 21, 1948, reviewed the work of the Organization to that date and planned the activities to be undertaken in the future.

The Assembly voted to admit two new Members into the Organization, Austria and Finland, subject to their adherence to the Convention, and, in the case of Finland, subject also to favorable action by the General Assembly of the United Nations.¹⁰

The ICAO Assembly recommended that the Council establish as soon as possible the Air Navigation Commission and the Air Transport Committee provided for by the Convention on International Civil Aviation, or recommend appropriate amendments to the Convention. It decided that the existing Air Navigation and Air Transport Committees should continue to function until the new bodies were ready to assume their respective functions.

Following negotiations undertaken between ICAO and the United Nations during 1947 and 1948, a Supplementary Agreement to the Agreement of May 13, 1947, establishing the relationship between the two Organizations, was drafted. The Supplementary Agreement, covering the use of the United Nations laissez-passer by ICAO officials, was approved by the second session of the ICAO Assembly.¹¹

The ICAO Assembly decided that its third session, to be held in 1949, should cover, as far as possible, only regular administrative and financial items. It further decided that the 1950 session of the Assembly should start the work of revising the Convention on International Civil Aviation.

Activities of the Organization in the air navigation, air transport, and legal fields since July 1, 1947, are summarized below.

1. Air Navigation Questions

One of the most important activities of ICAO in the technical field was the review by the Air Navigation Committee of PICAO Recommendations for Standards, Practices and Procedures with a view to the adoption by the Council of international standards and recommended practices to regulate civil aviation in Member States. As of September 21, 1948, five sets of standards and recommended practices had been approved by the Council. Each standard, after approval by the Council, comes into effect in all the territories of ICAO's Member States provided a majority of the Members have not notified their disapproval by a specified date. If a state does not wish to put a standard into effect in its territory, it must notify ICAO of the differences between its own civil aviation practices and those established by the international standard. The Council in turn must notify all other Members of ICAO of these differences. In the case of recommended practices, notification of non-compliance is unnecessary, as they come into force only as recommendations desirable for the safety or regularity of international air navigation. The following standards and recommended practices, adopted by the Council in April 1948, were to come into force, as annexes to the Convention,¹² on the dates indicated:

1. May 1, 1949: Personnel Licensing, which lays down the technical requirements and experience necessary for pilots and air crews flying on international routes;
2. January 1, 1949: Rules of the Air, relating to the flight and manoeuvre of aircraft;
3. January 1, 1949: Meteorological Codes, which specifies the various agreed systems used for the transmission of meteorological information;
4. March 1, 1949: Aeronautical Charts, which provides detailed specifications for the production of all types of maps and charts required in international flying;
5. January 1, 1949: Dimensional Units to be used in Air-Ground Communications, providing for progressive measures to eliminate the confusion caused by the use of both metric and foot-pound-second units in air-ground communications.

Additional Standards and Recommended Practices under review at the close of the period here surveyed include those relating to Operation of Aircraft in Scheduled International Air Services, Aircraft Nationality and Registration Marks, Airworthiness, Telecommunications and Radio Aids to Navigation, Aerodromes and Ground Aids, Air Traffic Control and Meteorological Services to International Air Navigation.

On the request of the first Assembly, the Council is conducting a study on the trend of aircraft design and airline operation to determine their effect on runway dimensions, with a view to limiting the cost of runway construction. The second Assembly instructed the Council to continue this study on the limitation of runway requirements and asked Member States to provide the necessary information.

The second session of the Assembly further requested the Council to study a number of other problems dealing with technical matters. The Council was asked to consider the clarification of Article 33 of the Convention, which deals with the recognition by all other Member States of certificates of airworthiness and competency of airmen issued in any Member State. The Council was to draft an amendment to this Article, if it thought necessary, for presentation to the fourth Assembly. Similarly, the Council was to draft an amendment to Article 39 in order to simplify the present procedures, which require Member States to enumerate on certificates and licenses the shortcomings of any aircraft or personnel failing to meet an international standard in force. The Council was also asked to make recommendations to the 1950 Assembly for the retention, deletion or amendment of Article 41, which exempts aircraft whose prototypes are submitted for national certification within three years after the adoption of a pertinent international standard of airworthiness from the application of the provisions of that standard.

After considering the difficulties arising from cases in which airmen of one nation, while in flight, break the laws or regulations of another state, the Assembly instructed the Council to establish new procedures for the reporting of individual cases of alleged breaches of, or non-compliance with, national aeronautical regulations.

a. REGIONAL AIR NAVIGATION MEETINGS

From July 1, 1947, to September 21, 1948, ICAO held the following regional air navigation meetings: for the South Atlantic in Rio de Janeiro from July 15 to 31, 1947; for the European-Mediterranean (second meeting) in Paris from May 4 to 17, 1948; for the North Atlantic (second meeting) in Paris from May 18 to May 31, 1948; and for the North Pacific in Seattle from July 13 to July 29, 1948. A regional air navigation meeting for the South-East Asia region, in New Delhi, was scheduled to open on November 23, 1948. The South American Regional Air Navigation Meeting, convened in Lima on June 17, 1947, lasted until July 7, 1947. The work of those meetings followed the pattern set by PICAQ. The air navigation requirements for each region and the existing facilities were reviewed, and particular procedures for air navigation services were specified for each region. Procedures and Supplementary Procedures recommended by the South American and South Atlantic meetings, for example, were introduced in those regions on April 15, 1948.

A manual of air navigation for the use of airmen in the North Atlantic Region was published in English and French, and sections of a manual for the European-Mediterranean Region were issued on the basis of recommendations made by meetings in those regions in 1946. The manuals contain the air navigation procedures peculiar to the region and other information essential for international flight, such as details of facilities concerned with communications, meteorology, air traffic control, and search and rescue, together with appropriate charts. ICAO manuals are kept up to date through a bi-monthly amendment service. ICAO was considering, as of September 1948, the practicability of publishing similar manuals for the other navigation regions.

2. Air Transport Questions

One of the main efforts of the Organization in the field of air transport was directed toward the development of a multilateral agreement on the exchange of commercial rights in international civil air transport. The complete sovereignty of each state over the air space above its territory is recognized by the Chicago Convention, and no scheduled foreign airline service may be operated over or into the territory of any state without special permission from that state. As recommended by the first session of the ICAO Assembly, a special commission met in Geneva from November 4 to 28, 1947, for the purpose of drawing up a multilateral agreement to replace various bilateral agreements which now regulate these commercial rights. Representatives of 33 states attending the meeting reached a substantial measure of agreement on such important matters as capacity of aircraft, rates for passenger and freight, prohibited practices and the settlement of disputes. However, on certain important issues, particularly the granting of so-called "fifth freedom" rights, by which one nation's airlines are permitted to carry traffic between the territories of two other nations, national views varied too widely to permit the preparation of a generally acceptable text.

The second session of the Assembly requested the Council to suggest what further action might be taken to complete the task, begun at the Chicago Conference in 1944, of securing a multilateral agreement.

The Organization secured much simplification of government regulations relating to customs, immigration and public health as these regulations apply to international air transport. As a result, a number of Member Governments subsequently set up joint committees to simplify border crossings. ICAO reported that Members had also substantially implemented the recommendations of its Facilitation Division for standardized clearance procedures designed to reduce the amount of paper work required of airline operators at customs airports. This resulted in a considerable reduction of the time taken in passenger handling at international airports.

The second Assembly asked Member States to extend freedom of admission into their territory to certain categories of aircraft on non-scheduled flights, as specified in the Chicago Convention.

With the object of reducing undue economic burdens on international air transport, the Council began studies concerning insurance requirements and concerning double taxation and the taxation of fuel and equipment used outside the jurisdiction of the state imposing the taxes. The Assembly, in June 1948, requested the Council to determine the need for an international legal convention to cover all phases of insurance of international air transport risks.

The Council also began a study of charges for airports and air navigation services to enable states to work towards a uniform policy. The Assembly, in June 1948, asked the Council to consider, in studying this problem, the costs of airports and all types of air navigation services for international civil aviation, including telecommunications, radio, air traffic control and meteorological services, and to formulate recommendations for the guidance of contracting states with regard to the principles on which providers of these services may derive revenue therefrom.

At the request of the first session of the Assembly, the Council undertook a study on the organization and operation of international air transport, including joint ownership and operation of international air services. This study, prepared from information received by Members concerning their plans and present practices in this field, was to be completed and circulated to governments by the end of 1949. In connection with the study, the Council was instructed by the second session of the Assembly to formulate and circulate to Members its views on the legal, economic and administrative problems related to the application of the provisions of the Convention covering nationality of aircraft operated by international operating agencies.

ICAO undertook a study of the costs and changes for international airmail, requested by the twelfth Congress of the Universal Postal Union, which met in Paris in July 1947. The study was sent to ICAO's Member States for comments.

Under the terms of the Convention, ICAO is charged with collecting, analyzing and publishing statistical information related to international aviation services. The Organization is now responsible for all the air transport statistics being collected in the international field. This includes the publication of material concerning the costs of operation and particulars of subsidies paid to airlines out of public funds. ICAO has available from its Member States information covering the great majority of the international air services of the world. Such air transport statistics are published by ICAO in a periodical, the Statistical Summary, the first edition of which was issued in April 1948.

3. Financial and Technical Assistance

On several occasions, ICAO found it necessary to arrange for the maintenance of air transport, navigation and meteorological facilities required for the safe, regular, efficient and economical operation of aircraft flying over sparsely populated regions or regions of uncertain sovereignty. Through agreements sponsored by ICAO, Member States whose airlines use the facilities were asked to supply the financial support or technical assistance to operate such facilities. As a result of the agreement concluded in 1946 among ten Member States for the maintenance of thirteen weather stations in the North Atlantic, the following stations were in operation as at September 21, 1948:

Belgium and the Netherlands	1 jointly
Canada and the United States	1 jointly
France	1
Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom	1 jointly
United Kingdom	2
United States	2

The network was to be completed in 1949, with the maintenance of five additional weather stations assigned to the United States. These stations were scheduled to go into operation on the following dates, respectively: September 29, 1948, and January 9, February 26, May 5 and June 10, 1949.

Each station requires two or three ships for maintenance. In lieu of maintaining stations, Ireland contributes £5,000 annually and Portugal £1,000 annually toward the upkeep of the network.

Although the ocean weather stations were specifically charged with supplying meteorological information, they were also designed to provide navigation aids, communications facilities, and search and rescue facilities throughout the North Atlantic region. Their use for search and rescue was illustrated by the rescue of 69 passengers and the crew from the United States flying boat Bermuda Sky Queen, which was forced down in the North Atlantic in October 1947. The United States Coast Guard cutter Bibb, which effected the rescue, was stationed about 500 miles east of the coast of Newfoundland as part of this international chain of weather ships. Another rescue took place on January 11, 1948, when the United Kingdom ship Weather Recorder saved the 28-man crew of a Norwegian freighter foundering 30 miles off the west coast of Scotland. A third rescue took place on September 17, 1948, when the Bibb saved 40 men and a dog from a Portuguese fishing schooner foundering 300 miles southwest of Newfoundland.

The network of ocean weather stations also affords substantive incidental benefits to shipping, to the fishing industry, to agriculture and to other non-aviation activities dependent upon weather forecasts for their planning.

Ocean weather observation stations are operated also in the North Pacific. As of September 21, 1948, three stations were being operated by the United States. The question of a complete network of stations in the North Pacific under an international agreement was under consideration by the Organization.

An agreement concluded on September 16, 1948, between ICAO and the Government of Iceland provides for the international financing of air navigation facilities located in Iceland by ten Member States in proportion to the use by their airlines of the facilities provided. These air navigation facilities include weather reporting and forecasting stations, area traffic control and telecommunication networks. Iceland is to be reimbursed for the expenses incurred in maintaining these services from 1946 through 1948, and is to contribute, with the following nine States, toward the expenses arising, beginning in 1949: Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom and United States. The expenses were apportioned among these Member States at an Icelandic Conference held by ICAO in Geneva in June 1948.

4. Legal Questions

The principal achievement of ICAO in the legal field was the adoption by the Assembly, in June 1948, of a Convention on the international recognition of rights in aircraft. This Convention deals, among other things, with mortgage rights; it is designed to simplify aircraft financing and thereby to facilitate the introduction of new equipment on the world's airlines. A draft text of the Convention had previously been approved and referred to the Assembly by ICAO's Legal Committee, which met in Brussels from September 10 to 25, 1947. Prior to this meeting, legal experts had for nearly twenty years failed to reach agreement on the aspects of aircraft financing covered in this Convention. The Convention was opened for signature by the Assembly on June 19, 1948. As of September 21, twenty states had signed.

Other legal matters under active consideration by the Organization include the liability of the air carrier to passengers, liability for damages caused by aircraft to persons and property on the surface, assistance to and salvage of aircraft, aerial collisions and aviation insurance.

5. Publications

Publications compiled and issued by ICAO, in addition to the regional manuals and the Statistical Summary mentioned above, include records of meetings and recommendations; reports of ICAO divisional meetings; Procedures for Air Navigation Services; minutes and documents of the first and second sessions of the Legal Committee; minutes and documents of the Legal Commission of the second Assembly; the ICAO Monthly Bulletin, issued in English, French and Spanish; monthly lists and a Consolidated List of Agreements and Contracts Filed, with supplements every six months; and ICAO Circulars, each of which covers a technical aviation study. The secretariat compiles national aviation laws and regulations for publication. It prepared, to assist the ICAO Legal Committee in its work, studies on the progressive development of international air law. These studies include: General Notes on Aviation Insurance; General Notes on Compulsory Insurance in Air Transport; Practices of States concerning Insurance and Guarantees required of Air Carriers; Defences Available to Insurers under National Legislation, Regulations, Jurisprudence and Conventions on Private International Air Law; and lists of definitions of terms used in aviation.

F. BUDGET

The budget of the Organization for the fiscal year 1947-48, as approved by the first session of the ICAO Assembly, was $2,600,000 (Canadian).¹³ At its second session, held in Geneva from June 1 to 21, 1948, the Assembly decided to make its fiscal year coincident with the calendar year, in conformity with the budgetary practice of the United Nations.

The Assembly approved a budget in the amount of $1,339,882 (Canadian) to cover the expenses of the Organization for the period July 1 to December 31, 1948, and $2,649,685 (Canadian) for the new fiscal year 1949. It decided that these amounts should be appropriated as follows (in Canadian dollars):

	July 1 to December 31, 1948	January 1 to December 31, 1949
Meetings	$ 121,380	$ 102,100
The Secretariat	951,302	1,960,085
General Service	192,800	455,100
Equipment	14,900	88,400
Other Budgetary Provisions ..	25,000	50,000
	$1,305,382	$2,655,685
Less Casual Revenue.....	15,500	31,000
TOTAL, GENERAL FUND	$1,289,882	$2,624,685
Joint Support Emergency Fund	25,000
Working Capital Fund.....	25,000	25,000
TOTAL BUDGET ..	$1,339,882	$2,649,685

In apportioning the expenses of the Organization among Member States, the Assembly takes into consideration:

- (a) their relative capacity to pay,
- (b) their relative interest in international civil aviation, and
- (c) the war damage suffered by them.

It follows the principle that in no case should contributions fall below a minimum or exceed a maximum percentage of the total budget. The second Assembly with the agreement of the states concerned, fixed the scale of contributions for the above budgets in units as follows:

SCALE OF CONTRIBUTIONS

July 1 to December 31, 1948, and January 1 to December 31, 1949

	Units
Dominican Republic, Haiti, Liberia, Luxembourg, Austria	1/2
Afghanistan, El Salvador, Guatemala, Iceland, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Transjordan	1
Bolivia, Ethiopia, Iraq, Philippines, Siam,* Ceylon..	2
Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Greece, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Peru, Venezuela.....	3
Chile, Denmark, Ireland.....	4
Egypt, Poland, Portugal.....	5
Mexico, Union of South Africa.....	6
Belgium, Italy, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey.....	8
India	9
Australia, Brazil, Netherlands.....	10
Argentina	12
China	13
Canada, France	15
United Kingdom	30
United States	57
	305 1/2
Finland†	1

Between sessions of the Assembly, the Council, on the recommendation of its Finance Committee, fixes the amount of contribution of any new Member brought into the Organization during that period, and the Council may increase the budget of the Organization to the extent of that contribution.

¹³ For details of this budget, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 727.

¹⁴ The value of one unit during the period July 1 to December 31, 1948, was approximately $4,400 (Canadian) (based on 304½ units divided into $1,339,882). The value of one unit during the period January 1 to December 31, 1949, was approximately $8,673 (Canadian) (based on 305½ units divided into $2,649,685).

*The contribution of Siam for the fiscal period July 1 to December 31, 1948, was fixed at one unit.

†The contribution of Finland to the budget of the Organization was not to become due until Finland had become a Member of ICAO. See p. 858.

ANNEX II

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONVENTION ON INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION

The proposed amendment to the Convention on International Civil Aviation approved by the first session of the ICAO Assembly will come into force, in accordance with Article 94 of the Convention, upon ratification by at least two thirds of the Members of the Organization. As of September 21, 1948, the following Members had ratified the proposed amendment: Afghanistan, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, India, New Zealand, Pakistan and United Kingdom.¹⁸ The text of the proposed amendment is as follows:

"Article 93 bis

"(a) Notwithstanding the provisions of Articles 91, 92 and 93 above,

"(1) A State whose government the General Assembly of the United Nations has recommended be debarred from membership in international agencies established by or brought into relationship with the United Nations shall automatically cease to be a member of the International Civil Aviation Organization;

"(2) A State which has been expelled from membership in the United Nations shall automatically cease to be a member of the International Civil Aviation Organization unless the General Assembly of the United Nations attaches to its act of expulsion a recommendation to the contrary.

"(b) A State which ceases to be a member of the International Civil Aviation Organization as a result of the provisions of paragraph (a) above may, after approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations, be re-admitted to the International Civil Aviation Organization upon application and upon approval by a majority of the Council.

"(c) Members of the Organization which are suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership in the United Nations shall, upon the request of the latter, be suspended from the rights and privileges of membership in this Organization."

¹⁵ Austria became a Member of ICAO on September 26, 1948.

¹⁶ In accordance with the terms of Article 62 of the Convention, which provides that the Assembly may suspend the voting power in the Assembly and Council of any Member which fails to discharge, within a reasonable period, its financial obligations to the Organization, the second Assembly of ICAO suspended the voting privileges of these States until they pay in full their outstanding contributions due on June 30, 1947.

¹⁷ Spain will cease to be a Member of ICAO when the amendment to the Convention, Article 93 bis, comes into force.

¹⁸ The ratification of Ceylon was received by ICAO on December 9, 1948.

V. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development¹

A. ORIGIN

The Articles of Agreement establishing the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development were drawn up by the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference, which met at Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, from July 1 to 22, 1944, at the invitation of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Bank came into existence on December 27, 1945, when the Articles of Agreement had been signed on behalf of 28 governments.²

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The purposes of the Bank, as stated in Article I of its Articles of Agreement, are:

"(i) To assist in the reconstruction and development of territories of members by facilitating the investment of capital for productive purposes, including the restoration of economies destroyed or disrupted by war, the reconversion of productive facilities to peacetime needs and the encouragement of the development of productive facilities and resources in less developed countries.

"(ii) To promote private foreign investment by means of guarantees or participations in loans and other investments made by private investors; and when private capital is not available on reasonable terms, to supplement private investment by providing, on suitable conditions, finance for productive purposes out of its own capital, funds raised by it and its other resources.

"(iii) To promote the long-range balanced growth of international trade and the maintenance of equilibrium in balances of payments by encouraging international investment for the development of the productive resources of members, thereby assisting in raising productivity, the standard of living and conditions of labor in their territories.

"(iv) To arrange the loans made or guaranteed by it in relation to international loans through other channels so that the more useful and urgent projects, large and small alike, will be dealt with first.

"(v) To conduct its operations with due regard to the effect of international investment on business conditions in the territories of members and, in the immediate post-war years, to assist in bringing about a smooth transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy."

The Bank may lend funds directly, either from its capital funds or from funds which it borrows in the investment markets. It may guarantee loans made by others, or it may participate in such loans. The Bank may make, guarantee, or participate in loans to Member countries directly, or to any of their political sub-divisions, or to private business enterprises in the territories of Members. When the Member Government in whose territory the project is located is not itself the borrower, this Member Government, its central bank or some comparable agency acceptable to the Bank must guarantee the loan.

C. ORGANIZATION

The administrative organization of the International Bank consists of a Board of Governors, a Board of Executive Directors, a President and a staff.

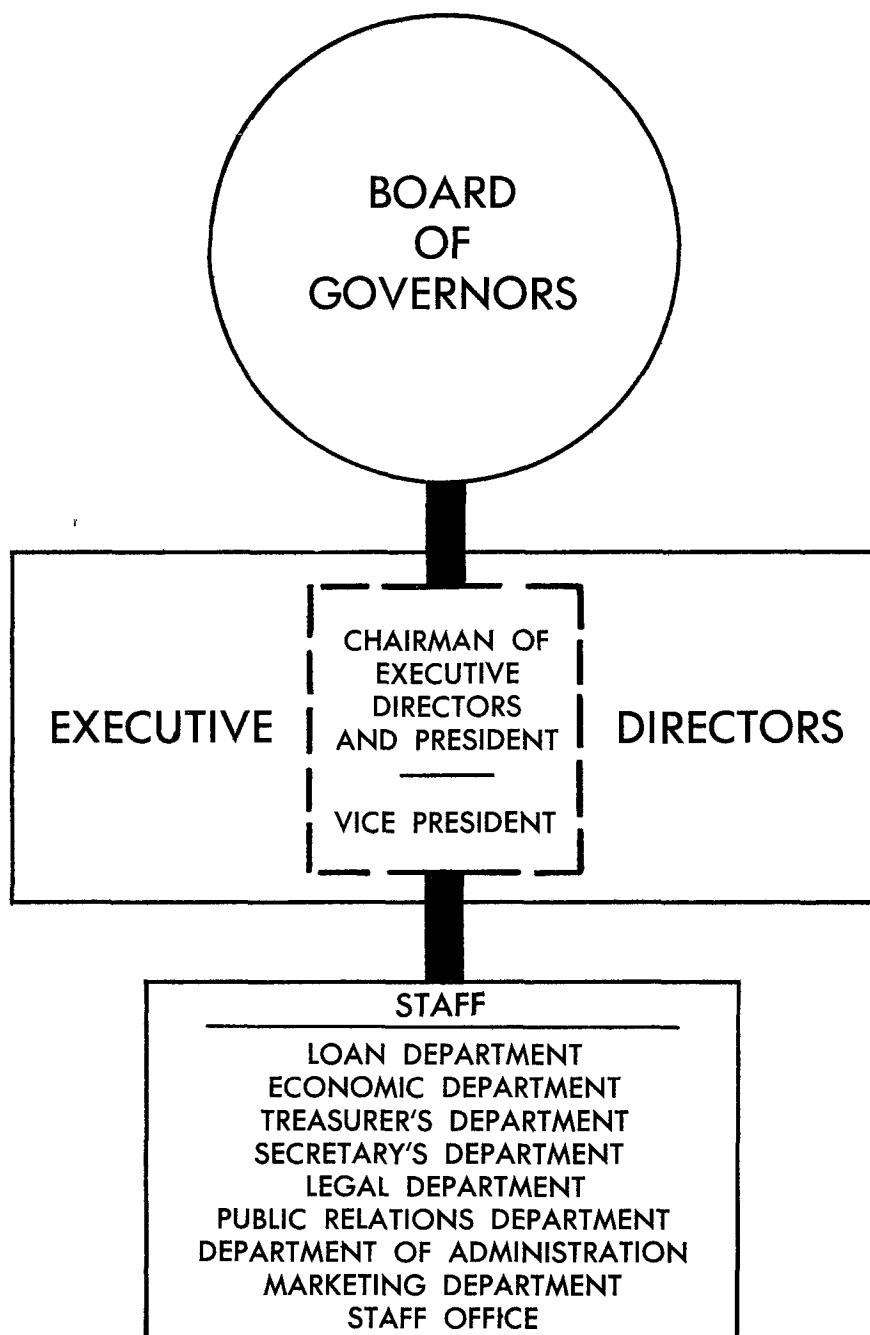

All powers of the Bank are vested in the Board of Governors, which consists of one Governor and one alternate appointed by each Member. The Board of Governors meets annually; additional meetings are held if required. The Board of Governors has delegated most of its powers to the

STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION & DEVELOPMENT

Executive Directors. As required by Article V of the Articles of Agreement, the Board of Governors has retained the power to:

- "(i) Admit new members and determine the conditions of their admission;
- "(ii) Increase or decrease the capital stock;
- "(iii) Suspend a member;
- "(iv) Decide appeals from the interpretations of this Agreement given by the Executive Directors;
- "(v) Make arrangements to cooperate with other international organizations (other than informal arrangements of a temporary and administrative character);
- "(vi) Decide to suspend permanently the operations of the Bank and to distribute its assets;
- "(vii) Determine the distribution of the net income of the Bank."

A new Member may be admitted to the Bank by approval of a majority of the voting power of the Board of Governors, provided that it accepts the conditions laid down by the Board and that it first becomes a Member of the International Monetary Fund. If a Member ceases to be a Member of the Fund, it will automatically cease after a period of three months to be a Member of the Bank, unless the Bank by three fourths of the voting power decides to allow it to remain a Member.

Each Member of the Bank has 250 votes plus one additional vote for each share of stock held. Each Governor casts all votes allotted to that Member State which he represents; a quorum of the Board of Governors consists of a majority of the Members, exercising at least two thirds of the voting power.

There are fourteen³ Executive Directors, each of whom has an alternate. Five of the Executive Directors are appointed by the five Members having the largest number of shares, and nine are elected by the Governors of the remaining Members. The Executive Directors meet normally once a week at the Bank's headquarters in Washington, D. C. Each appointed Executive Director has the same number of votes as the country that appointed him, and each elected Executive Director has the same total number of votes as the countries that elected him. The votes of each Executive Director must be cast as a unit.

Decisions of the Bank are made by a simple majority vote, except as otherwise provided by the Articles of Agreement.

The President is the chief executive officer of the Bank and is elected by the Executive Directors. He is ex officio Chairman of the Executive Directors, without vote except in case of a tie. The President is responsible for the conduct of the business of the Bank and for the organization, appointment and dismissal of its officers and staff. A loan is made only after the amount and terms and conditions of the loan have been recommended by the President to the Executive Directors and his recommendations have been approved by them.

In addition to the general organization of the Bank outlined above, an Advisory Council has been appointed in accordance with the Articles of Agreement. The Advisory Council consists of ten persons of various nationalities selected by the Board of Governors and representing banking, commerce, industry, labor, agriculture, science, economics and other activities. The Council meets once a year and advises the Bank on matters of general policy.

D. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

Following the formal establishment of the Bank on December 27, 1945, the Board of Governors held its inaugural meeting at Savannah, Georgia, in March 1946. The meeting was mainly concerned with organizational and administrative matters. It established the headquarters of the Bank in Washington, D. C. The Bank officially began operations on June 25, 1946, by decision of the Executive Directors. The first annual meeting of the Board of Governors was held in Washington, D. C., from September 27 to October 3, 1946.

Loan operations of the Bank began on May 9, 1947, with a loan of $250,000,000 to Credit National, a semi-public French company. The loan, guaranteed by the French Government, was to meet the cost of importing equipment and material for the reconstruction and modernization of industry.

³ Originally the Bank had twelve Executive Directors. The number of Executive Directors was fixed permanently at fourteen by the third annual meeting of the Board of Governors held in Washington, D. C., from September 27 to October 1, 1948.

E. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

During this period the Board of Governors of the Bank held its second annual meeting in London from September 11 to 17, 1947. The third annual meeting was to convene in Washington, D. C., on September 27, 1948.

Among the decisions of the London meeting was its approval, on September 16, 1947, of a draft agreement to establish the Bank's relationship with the United Nations. The agreement came into force on November 15, 1947, when it was approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations.⁴

The second annual meeting of the Board of Governors approved Finland's application for membership. Australia's application for membership was approved by a vote of the Board of Governors without a meeting on March 31, 1948.

1. Loan Operations

During the period from July 1, 1947, to September 21, 1948, the Bank approved loans aggregating $275,000,000 to the following countries for the purposes indicated:⁵

The Netherlands was granted $195,000,000 on August 7, 1947, to finance reconstruction of productive facilities in the Netherlands homeland. On May 25, 1948, a supplemental loan agreement was entered into providing for a new loan of 17,000,000 Swiss francs (equivalent of approximately $4,000,000) and a cancellation of an equal portion of the original loan. This transaction enabled the Bank to utilize the Swiss francs acquired for this purpose through the sale of bonds to the Bank for International Settlements (see below).

Denmark was granted $40,000,000 on August 22, 1947, to assist Danish economic recovery by financing the import, during 1947 and 1948, of essential capital goods and raw materials. The loan constitutes approximately nine per cent of Danish net capital expenditures estimated for 1947-48; the bulk of the reconstruction effort depends upon private enterprise and private financing.

Luxembourg was granted $12,000,000 on August 28, 1947, to finance the purchase of equipment for the Luxembourg steel industry and of rolling stock for its railways. Since some of the proposed expenditures under this loan were to be in Belgian francs, the Bank loaned a portion of the currency made available for lending purposes by Belgium (see below).

Two loans totalling $16,000,000 to instrumentalities of the Chilean Government were approved on March 25, 1948. Both loans were to be guaranteed by the Chilean Government. The first loan, $13,500,000, was granted to Corporación de Fomento de la Producción (Fomento), created by the Chilean Government to promote Chilean economic development, and Empresa Nacional de Electricidad, S.A. (Endesa), a subsidiary of Fomento engaged in generating and distributing electric energy. The loan was to provide foreign exchange for the construction of additional hydroelectric plants and related transmission lines, for the installation of additional generating units in existing plants and for the installation of pumping equipment for irrigation. The second loan, of $2,500,000, was granted to Fomento for the purchase of agricultural machinery to further a Chilean agricultural program designed to decrease the cost of production by increased mechanization of agricultural equipment and to increase the amount of land available for agricultural production by bringing into cultivation areas now covered by forest, turning pasture land into crop land and shortening the time required for harvesting in certain areas.

Six loans totalling $12,000,000, guaranteed by the Netherlands Government, were granted on July 29, 1948, to four Dutch shipping companies to finance the entire purchase price of six merchant vessels, each costing $2,000,000. The Rotterdam-Lloyd Line and the Nederland Line each purchased two ships, and the Holland-America Line and the United Netherlands Navigation Company each purchased one ship. On August 6, 1948, the Bank sold at par and accrued interest, with its guarantee, to a group of ten United States banks a block of $8,100,000 of serial mortgage notes received by the Bank from the Dutch shipping companies under this loan. Notes covering the balance of the principal amount of the loan, amounting to

⁵ Early in 1949 the Bank made additional loans aggregating $109,100,000. On January 6, 1949, it granted two loans totalling $34,100,000 to agencies of the Mexican Government for electric power development in Mexico; the loans are guaranteed by the Mexican Government. On January 27, 1949, the Bank granted a loan of $75,000,000 to the Brazilian Traction, Light & Power Company, Ltd., for expansion of hydroelectric power facilities and telephone installations in Brazil; the loan is guaranteed by the United States of Brazil.

$3,900,000, were retained in the Bank's portfolio.

Each borrower must pay to the Bank interest and commission on each loan, on terms decided by the Bank.

As of September 21, 1948, a total of approximately $488,000,000 had been disbursed under the loan agreements. This included the entire amount of the loans to France (granted in May 1947), the Netherlands and the Dutch shipping companies, approximately $23,000,000 under the loan to Denmark and $8,000,000 under the loan to Luxembourg.

Under the Articles of Agreement (Section 5 (b) of Article III) the Bank is required to "make arrangements to ensure that the proceeds of any loan are used only for the purposes for which the loan was granted, with due attention to considerations of economy and efficiency and without regard to political or other non-economic influences or considerations". When a loan is granted, the goods and services to be purchased with the proceeds of the loan are determined by agreement between the Bank and the borrower, and the Bank makes disbursements only when it is satisfied that the funds disbursed are to be used for agreed transactions. The Bank has established procedures whereby it keeps informed of the goods and services purchased with the proceeds of its loans, the suppliers of such goods and services and the destination to which the goods are sent. This forms the basis of the Bank's subsequent investigation of the end use to which the goods are put. The checking of the end use is generally carried out in the borrowing country by field representatives of the Bank.

Some of the principal categories of supplies and equipment to which the proceeds of the Bank's loans have been applied illustrate the sectors of the European economy in which the Bank's activities have made themselves felt.

French Loan.—Tankers, general cargo vessels, river barges, tugs and lightships; transport aircraft and spare engines; locomotives and parts for the construction and repair of locomotives and freight cars; equipment for a continuous strip steel mill, for automobile and truck manufacture, for oil drilling and for agriculture; earth-moving equipment; fuel; industrial materials, principally steel products, copper and cotton.

Dutch Loan.—Ships; equipment for the shipbuilding, metal and textile industries; fuel; feeding grains and cakes; fertilizer; industrial materials, principally steel products for the shipbuilding and food-processing industries.

Danish Loan.—Agricultural, textile and chemical equipment; rolling-mill steel products; copper and fibres.

Luxembourg Loan.—Equipment for a steel rolling-mill; locomotives and other railway rolling stock.

In its third annual report to the Board of Governors, the Bank stated that the loans it granted to these four European countries during 1947, while providing only a partial solution to Europe's problems, helped to prevent a disastrous drop in production and possible economic collapse by permitting the borrowing countries to sustain for a time the necessary volume of essential imports. The report further explained that the Bank's European operations for the next few years would necessarily be conditioned by developments in connection with the European Recovery Program. The report stated that there was a real need for Bank financing in Europe in addition to the financial assistance made available through ERP.

In other areas of the world there was a definite increase in the Bank's activities. The third annual report stated that the problems of the Bank's underdeveloped Member countries were increasingly occupying the major portion of its attention and, in the long run, would undoubtedly constitute the Bank's primary concern.

In addition to the loans already granted, the Bank had under consideration, as of September 21, 1948, projects in over twenty Member countries. Discussions were in various stages, ranging from exploratory talks to detailed negotiations. Projects under discussion covered a great variety of fields—power development, the construction of transportation and communication facilities, irrigation and other agricultural projects, migration programs, mining and industrial development and others.

2. Technical Assistance

An increasingly important activity of the Bank is that of providing or helping a Member to secure technical assistance to formulate a sound, over-all development program and methods of carrying it out.

The Bank has undertaken, upon request, broad investigations of conditions in underdeveloped Member countries. These investigations have provided the basis for general conclusions as to a particular country's development needs and possibilities, the principal obstacles to development and the internal measures required to overcome those obstacles.

The Bank has sent technical missions to some thirteen Member countries in Latin America, Europe and the Middle and Far East, and similar missions were planned for the near future.

These missions have enabled the Bank to keep itself informed at first hand of economic and financial developments in Member countries and to establish close contact with officials concerned with economic and financial affairs in those countries. The countries have in turn received the benefit of assistance of expert officials of the Bank. The Bank has also recommended, upon request, qualified independent experts to advise Member countries in such fields as agriculture, engineering, finance and taxation.

3. Resources of the Bank and Borrowing Operations

The authorized capital of the Bank is $10,000,000,000. This capital stock is divided into shares of $100,000 each, available for subscription only to Members and transferable only to the Bank. The amounts of the subscriptions of the original Members of the Bank were agreed on at the Bretton Woods Conference and are set forth in Schedule A of the Articles of Agreement of the Bank. The amounts of the subscriptions of subsequent Members, and of increases, if any, in the subscriptions of original Members, are determined by the Bank. Owing to increases in the subscriptions of a number of Members and the admission of new Members to the Bank, the subscribed capital has increased from $8,024,500,000 as of June 30, 1947, to $8,336,000,000, as of September 21, 1948. The Bank is authorized to call only twenty per cent of the subscribed capital to serve as working funds; the remaining 80 per cent of the subscription of each Member is subject to call only if needed to meet the obligations of the Bank for funds borrowed or on loans guaranteed by it.

Of the twenty per cent paid in to the Bank, two per cent, payable in gold or United States dollars, is freely available for use in the Bank's operations. The remaining eighteen per cent, payable in the currency of the subscribing Member, can be used for lending purposes only with the consent of the country whose currency is involved. The Bank, as of September 21, 1948, has received permission from the United States Government to use for lending purposes the entire amount of its paid-in capital, and from the Belgian Government to lend Belgian francs up to the equivalent of $2,000,000 out of the Belgian paid-in capital.

Loanable resources in excess of the amount made available by Members must be obtained from the sale of securities to private investors; the major part of the Bank's lending funds is to be obtained in this manner.

The Bank began its borrowing operations in July 1947, when two bond issues dated July 15, 1947, consisting of $100,000,000 Ten Year 2¼% Bonds and $150,000,000 Twenty-five Year 3% Bonds were sold at par and accrued interest to private investors on the United States market. These bonds were offered through more than 1,700 securities dealers. The bonds were bought by banks, insurance companies, fraternal, charitable and educational institutions, corporations, trust funds, investment trusts and individuals. Bonds were sold to purchasers in all 48 states of the United States, the District of Columbia, Hawaii and Puerto Rico and small amounts of bonds were also purchased, through dealers in the United States, by a number of investors in France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, Canada, Argentina, Panama and Cuba.

Another borrowing operation, the Bank's first borrowing of a currency other than United States dollars, was the sale on June 1, 1948, of an issue of 2½% Swiss Franc Serial Bonds of 1948 in an aggregate principal amount of 17,000,000 francs (equivalent of approximately $4,000,000). The entire issue was purchased for investment by the Bank for International Settlements at par and accrued interest. The bonds are dated April 1, 1948, and mature in 1953 and 1954.

From the time it began operations until September 21, 1948, the Bank has had a total of approximately $994,800,000 available for lending. Expressed in round numbers in terms of United States dollars, these funds consist of:

Two-per-cent portion of subscriptions of all Members paid in gold or U.S. dollars	$161,800,000
Eighteen-per-cent paid-in portion of subscription of the United States.....	571,500,000
Part of eighteen-per-cent portion of subscription of Belgium paid in local currency	2,000,000
Proceeds of two bond issues in the United States	250,000,000
Sales of Swiss Franc Bonds to the B.I.S.	4,000,000
Net available funds from operations to September 21, 1948.....	5,500,000
TOTAL	$994,800,000

After deducting loan commitments discussed above (and making allowance for the sale of the mortgage notes evidencing part of the Dutch shipping loans), the Bank, as of September 21, 1948, had available for further loans approximately $478,000,000. Although the Bank will not need to borrow until a substantial portion of these funds is committed to approved loans, it stated, in its third annual report to the Board of Governors, its intention of considering all opportunities of increasing its loanable resources by obtaining the consent of Members to the use of their paid-in capital, by selling the Bank's securities in countries other than the United States, and by selling securities out of the Bank's loan portfolio with or without the Bank's guarantee. Several projects of this nature were under consideration as of September 21, 1948.

4. Publications

Publications during the period under review included the Bank's second and third annual reports and a general booklet, Questions and Answers About the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, describing the Bank's purposes, organization and operations.

Apart from confidential studies undertaken in connection with individual loan discussions, the Bank has prepared and made available to the United Nations since July 1, 1947, a number of economic studies.

F. ADMINISTRATIVE BUDGET

As reflected in the Statement of Income and Expenses reproduced below, the Bank's operations during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948, resulted in an excess of income over expenses of $4,094,652 (exclusive of loan commissions credited to the special reserve). The excess was sufficient to cover the deficit accumulated in prior years ($125,158 as of June 30, 1946, and an additional $938,647 as of June 30, 1947) and to provide a net profit of $3,030,847 as of June 30, 1948. In addition to this net profit, $3,084,930 was set aside ($33,452 of this amount during the period ended June 30, 1947) in the special reserve to be kept available for meeting obligations of the Bank created by borrowing or guaranteeing loans. This represents the amount of commissions paid to the Bank by its borrowers and required under Article IV, Section 6, of the Articles of Agreement to be set aside as a special reserve.

ANNEX VI

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

Article I

GENERAL

1. This agreement, which is entered into by the United Nations pursuant to the provisions of Article 63 of its Charter, and by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (hereinafter called the Bank) pursuant to the provisions of section 8 (a) of article V of its Articles of Agreement, is intended to define the terms on which the United Nations and the Bank shall be brought into relationship.

2. The Bank is a specialized agency established by agreement among its member Governments and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in its Articles of Agreement, in economic and related fields within the meaning of Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations. By reason of the nature of its international responsibilities and the terms of its Articles of Agreement, the Bank is, and is required to function as, an independent international organization.

3. The United Nations and the Bank are subject to certain necessary limitations for the safeguarding of confidential material furnished to them by their members or others, and nothing in this agreement shall be construed to require either of them to furnish any information the furnishing of which would, in its judgment, constitute a violation of the confidence of any of its members or anyone from whom it shall have received such information, or which would otherwise interfere with the orderly conduct of its operations.

Article II

RECIPROCAL REPRESENTATION

1. Representatives of the United Nations shall be entitled to attend, and to participate without vote in, meetings of the Board of Governors of the Bank. Representatives of the United Nations shall be invited to participate without vote in meetings especially called by the Bank for the particular purpose of considering the United Nations point of view in matters of concern to the United Nations.

2. Representatives of the Bank shall be entitled to attend meetings of the General Assembly of the United Nations for purposes of consultation.

3. Representatives of the Bank shall be entitled to attend, and to participate without vote in, meetings of the committees of the General Assembly, meetings of the Economic and Social Council, of the Trusteeship Council and of their respective subsidiary bodies, dealing with matters in which the Bank has an interest.

4. Sufficient advance notice of these meetings and their agenda shall be given so that, in consultation, arrangements can be made for adequate representation.

Article III

PROPOSAL OF AGENDA ITEMS

In preparing the agenda for meetings of the Board of Governors, the Bank will give due consideration to the inclusion in the agenda of items proposed by the United Nations. Similarly, the Council and its commissions and the Trusteeship Council will give due consideration to the inclusion in their agenda of items proposed by the Bank.

Article IV

CONSULTATION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The United Nations and the Bank shall consult together and exchange views on matters of mutual interest.

2. Neither organization, nor any of their subsidiary bodies, will present any formal recommendations to the other without reasonable prior consultation with regard thereto. Any formal recommendations made by either organization after such consultation will be considered as soon as possible by the appropriate organ of the other.

3. The United Nations recognizes that the action to be taken by the Bank on any loan is a matter to be determined by the independent exercise of the Bank's own judgment in accordance with the Bank's Articles of Agreement. The United Nations recognizes, therefore, that it would be sound policy to refrain from making recommendations to the Bank with respect to particular loans or with respect to terms or conditions of financing by the Bank. The Bank recognizes that the United Nations and its organs may appropriately make recommendations with respect to the technical aspects of reconstruction or development plans, programmes or projects.

Article V

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

The United Nations and the Bank will, to the fullest extent practicable and subject to paragraph 3 of article I, arrange for the current exchange of information and publications of mutual interest, and the furnishing of special reports and studies upon request.

Article VI

SECURITY COUNCIL

1. The Bank takes note of the obligation assumed, under paragraph 2 of Article 48 of the United Nations Charter, by such of its members as are also Members of the United Nations, to carry out the decisions of the Security Council through their action in the appropriate specialized agencies of which they are members, and will, in the conduct of its activities, have due regard for decisions of the Security Council under Articles 41 and 42 of the United Nations Charter.

2. The Bank agrees to assist the Security Council by furnishing to it information in accordance with the provisions of article V of this agreement.

Article VII

ASSISTANCE TO THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The Bank agrees to co-operate with the Trusteeship Council in the carrying out of its functions by furnishing information and technical assistance upon request and in such other similar ways as may be consistent with the Articles of Agreement of the Bank.

Article VIII

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The General Assembly of the United Nations hereby authorizes the Bank to request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on any legal questions arising within the scope of the Bank's activities other than questions relating to the relationship between the Bank and the United Nations or any specialized agency. Whenever the Bank shall request the Court for an advisory opinion, the Bank will inform the Economic and Social Council of the request.

Article IX

STATISTICAL SERVICES

1. In the interests of efficiency and for the purpose of reducing the burden on national governments and other organizations, the United Nations and the Bank agree to co-operate in eliminating unnecessary duplication in the collection, analysis, publication and dissemination of statistical information.

2. The Bank recognizes the United Nations as the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics serving the general purposes of international organizations, without prejudice to the right of the Bank to concern itself with any statistics so far as they may be essential for its own purposes.

3. The United Nations recognizes the Bank as the appropriate agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics within its special sphere, without prejudice to the right of the United Nations to concern itself with any statistics so far as they may be essential for its own purposes.

4(a) In its statistical activities the Bank agrees to give full consideration to the requirements of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies.

(b) In its statistical activities the United Nations agrees to give full consideration to the requirements of the Bank.

5. The United Nations and the Bank agree to furnish each other promptly with all their non-confidential statistical information.

Article X

ADMINISTRATIVE RELATIONSHIPS

1. The United Nations and the Bank will consult from time to time concerning personnel and other administrative matters of mutual interest, with a view to securing as much uniformity in these matters as they shall find practicable and to assuring the most efficient use of the services and facilities of the two organizations. These consultations shall include determination of the most equitable manner in which special services furnished by one organization to the other should be financed.

2. To the extent consistent with the provisions of this agreement, the Bank will participate in the work of the Co-ordination Committee and its subsidiary bodies.

3. The Bank will furnish to the United Nations copies of the annual report and the quarterly financial statements prepared by the Bank pursuant to section 13(a) of article V of its Articles of Agreement. The United Nations agrees that, in the interpretation of paragraph 3 of Article 17 of the United Nations Charter it will take into consideration that the Bank does not rely for its annual budget upon contributions from its members, and that the appropriate authorities of the Bank enjoy full autonomy in deciding the form and content of such budget.

4. The officials of the Bank shall have the right to use the laissez-passes of the United Nations in accordance with special arrangements to be negotiated between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the competent authorities of the Bank.

Article XI

AGREEMENTS WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

The Bank will inform the Economic and Social Council of any formal agreement which the Bank shall enter into with any specialized agency, and in particular agrees to inform the Council of the nature and scope of any such agreement before it is concluded.

Article XII

LIAISON

1. The United Nations and the Bank agree to the foregoing provisions in the belief that they will contribute to the maintenance of effective co-operation between the two organizations. Each agrees that it will establish within its own organization such administrative machinery as may be necessary to make the liaison, as provided for in this agreement, fully effective.

2. The arrangements provided for in the foregoing articles of this agreement shall apply, as far as is appropriate, to relations between such branch or regional offices as may be established by the two organizations, as well as between their central machinery.

Article XIII

MISCELLANEOUS

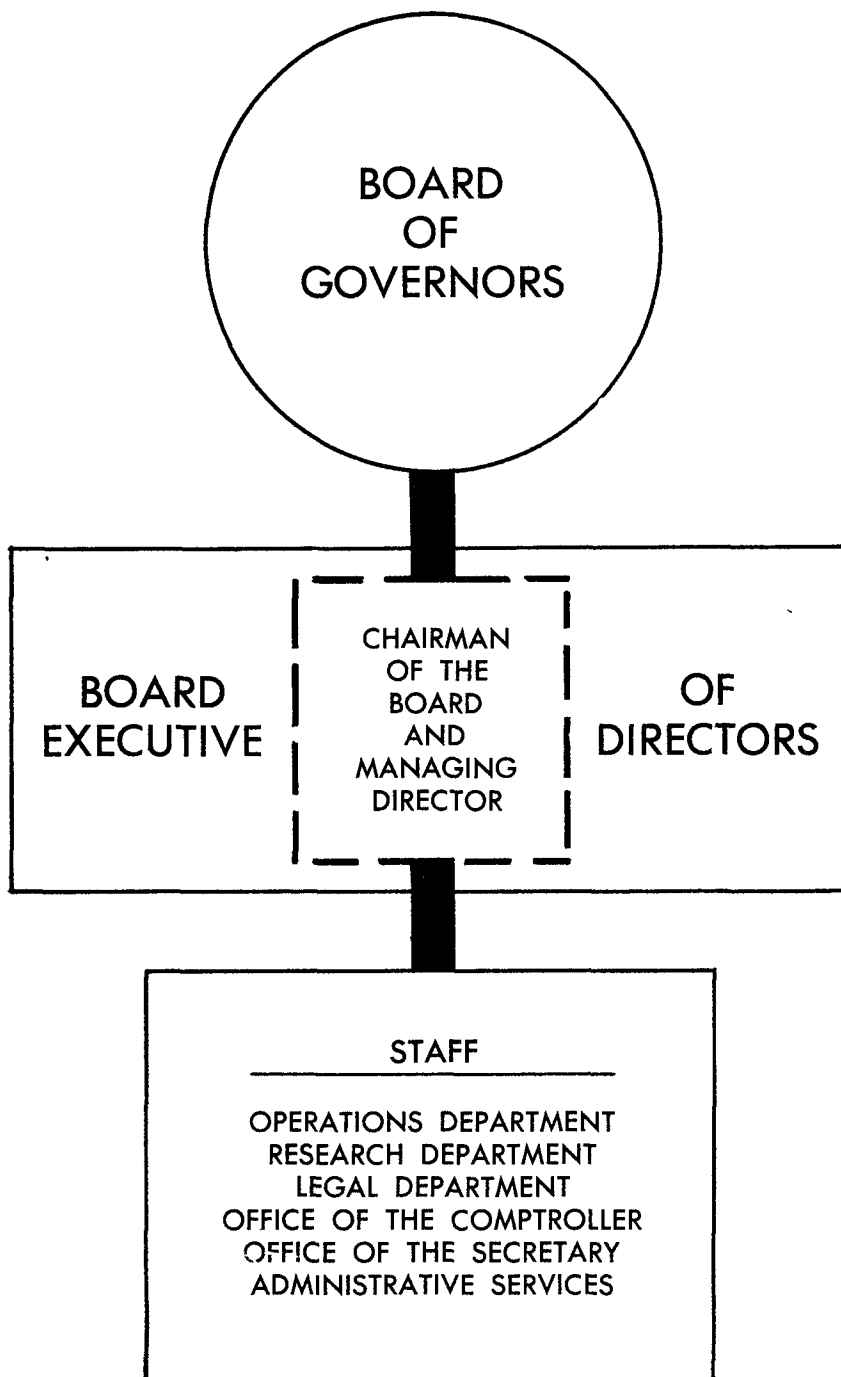

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the President of the Bank are authorized to make such supplementary arrangements as they shall deem necessary or proper to carry fully into effect the purposes of this agreement.

2. This agreement shall be subject to revision by agreement between the United Nations and the Bank from the date of its entry into force.

3. This agreement may be terminated by either party thereto on six months' written notice to the other party, and thereupon all rights and obligations of both parties hereunder shall cease.

4. This agreement shall come into force when it shall have been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the Board of Governors of the Bank.

STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

VI. The International Monetary Fund¹

A. ORIGIN

The United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference met in Bretton Woods, New Hampshire, from July 1 to 22, 1944, at the invitation of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Conference was attended by representatives of 44 countries. It drew up the Articles of Agreement providing for the establishment of the International Monetary Fund.² The Fund came into existence on December 27, 1945, when the Articles of Agreement had been signed and the instruments of acceptance deposited on behalf of 29 governments having aggregate quotas which represented approximately 80 per cent of the total resources of the Fund.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The purposes of the Fund, as stated in Article I of the Articles of Agreement, are:

"(i) To promote international monetary cooperation through a permanent institution which provides the machinery for consultation and collaboration on international monetary problems.

"(ii) To facilitate the expansion and balanced growth of international trade, and to contribute thereby to the promotion and maintenance of high levels of employment and real income and to the development of the productive resources of all members as primary objectives of economic policy.

"(iii) To promote exchange stability, to maintain orderly exchange arrangements among members, and to avoid competitive exchange depreciation.

"(iv) To assist in the establishment of a multilateral system of payments in respect of current transactions between members and in the elimination of foreign exchange restrictions which hamper the growth of world trade.

"(v) To give confidence to members by making the Fund's resources available to them under adequate safeguards, thus providing them with opportunity to correct maladjustments in their balance of payments without resorting to measures destructive of national or international prosperity.

"(vi) In accordance with the above, to shorten the duration and lessen the degree of disequilibrium in the international balances of payments of members."

C. ORGANIZATION

The Fund consists of a Board of Governors, Executive Directors and a Managing Director and staff.

All powers of the Fund are vested in the Board of Governors, consisting of one Governor and one alternate appointed by each Member. The Board of Governors had delegated most of its powers to the Executive Directors. It has retained, as required by Article XII, Section 2, of the Articles of Agreement, the power to:

"(i) Admit new members and determine the conditions of their admission.

"(ii) Approve a revision of quotas.

"(iii) Approve a uniform change in the par value of the currencies of all members.

"(iv) Make arrangements to cooperate with other international organizations (other than informal arrangements of a temporary or administrative character).

¹For further information on early activities of the Fund, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 767-72. See also: annual reports of the Executive Directors, published in 1946, 1947 and 1948; summary proceedings of the second annual meeting of the Board of Governors, 1947; schedules of par values; and quarterly financial statements. See also Bibliography of this Yearbook, Appendix III.

²The text of the Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund is reproduced in the Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 772-88.

"(v) Determine the distribution of the net income of the Fund.

"(vi) Require a member to withdraw.

"(vii) Decide to liquidate the Fund.

"(viii) Decide appeals from interpretations of this agreement given by the Executive Directors."

Each Member of the Fund has 250 votes plus one additional vote for each $100 of its quota. Each Governor casts as a unit all votes allotted to that Member State which he represents; a quorum of the Board of Governors consists of a majority of the Governors exercising at least two thirds of the total voting power.

Decisions of the Fund are made by a simple majority of the votes cast, except as otherwise provided by the Articles of Agreement. For example, to change the quota of a Member requires, in addition to the consent of that Member, approval by four fifths of the voting power of the Board of Governors; four fifths of the voting power is also required to increase the number of Executive Directors. Amendments to the Articles of Agreement may be adopted by three fifths of the Members having four fifths of the total voting power, and in a few instances require acceptance by all Members. In voting on certain matters, such as the question of waiving conditions governing the use of the Fund's resources or declaring a Member ineligible to use the Fund's resources, the voting power of each Member is adjusted by the addition of one vote for each $400,000 of sales of its currency and by the subtraction of one vote for each $400,000 of its purchases of other currency.

The Executive Directors, meeting in continuous session, are responsible for the conduct of the general operations of the Fund and exercise all the powers delegated to them by the Board of Governors.

There are fourteen Executive Directors, five of whom are appointed by the five Members having the largest quotas. The remaining Executive Directors have been elected by the Governors representing the other Members of the Fund, as follows: seven by Members other than the American Republics, and two by the American Republics. Each appointed Executive Director casts as a unit all the votes allotted to the Member which appointed him, and each elected Director casts as a unit the total number of votes allotted to those countries which elected him. A quorum of the Executive Directors consists of the majority of Directors representing at least one half of the total voting power.

The Managing Director of the Fund, who may not be a Governor or an Executive Director, is elected by the Executive Directors, and under their direction is responsible for the conduct of the ordinary business of the Fund, and for the organization, appointment and dismissal of its officers and staff. He also serves as Chairman of the Executive Directors, without the right to vote except in the case of a tie.

D. RESOURCES OF THE FUND

To carry out its operations, the Fund uses the resources subscribed by its Member Governments. The quotas of those Members which attended the Bretton Woods Conference were fixed by the Articles of Agreement but may be revised by the Fund. The quotas of other Members are fixed by the Board of Governors at the time of approval of their membership applications. Each of the original Members must pay in gold 25 per cent of its quota or 10 per cent of its net official gold and dollar holdings, whichever is the smaller; the gold contribution of new Members is fixed by the Board of Governors. The balance is paid in the Member's own currency, normally after the establishment of the par value for that currency. Non-negotiable, non-interest-bearing demand notes may be accepted from any Member whose currency is not needed for the Fund's operations in place of that Member's currency.

With the admission of new Members and increases in individual subscriptions, the aggregate quotas of all Members increased from $7,721,000,000 as of June 30, 1947, to just over $8,000,000,000 as of September 21, 1948. The subscriptions of China, Finland, Greece, Italy, Poland, Uruguay and Yugoslavia are not due until initial par values for their currencies have been established. Pending agreement on par values and the payment of subscriptions, however, these Members, according to the Articles of Agreement, will not be able to use the resources of the Fund unless special terms and conditions are agreed with the Fund.

E. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

The Articles of Agreement of the International Monetary Fund entered into force on December 27, 1945, when representatives of 30 countries participated in a ceremony of signature held in Washington, D. C.

The inaugural meeting of the International Monetary Fund was held jointly with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development at Savannah, Georgia, in March 1946. This meeting took the necessary preliminary steps to organize the Fund, including the adoption of by-laws, the selection of the metropolitan area of Washington, D. C., as the permanent site for the principal office of the Fund, and the election of seven Executive Directors, who, together with the Executive Directors appointed by the five Members having the largest quotas, constituted the original Executive Board. It was also agreed at Savannah that the first meeting of the Executive Board should be held in Washington, D. C., on May 6, 1946, and that the first annual meeting of the Board of Governors should be convened jointly with the Board of Governors of the Bank in Washington, D. C., in September 1946.

The actions taken at the first annual meeting of the Board of Governors included, inter alia, the acceptance of applications for membership in the Fund submitted by Italy, Lebanon, Syria, and Turkey, the approval of an upward adjustment in the quotas of France and Paraguay and the approval of rules and regulations previously adopted by the Executive Board governing the conduct of the business of the Fund.

During the early period, the major task of the Fund was to establish an initial pattern of par values upon which the inauguration of transactions depended. Accordingly, on September 12, 1946, all Members were requested to communicate to the Fund within 30 days the par values of their currencies based on rates of exchange prevailing on October 28, 1945. As required by the Articles of Agreement, par values are expressed in terms of gold as a common denominator or in terms of United States dollars of the weight and fineness in effect on July 1, 1944.

On December 18, 1946, the Fund published the par values proposed by 32 of the 40 Members and at the same time announced that it would be ready to begin exchange transactions on March 1, 1947. By June 30, 1947, par values had been agreed for two additional Members.

By March 1, 1947, subscriptions had been received from Members which were eligible to use the Fund's resources and had quotas amounting to at least 65 per cent of the aggregate quotas set out in Schedule A of the Articles of Agreement, and all other requirements for the beginning of exchange transactions had been fulfilled. Out of a total of 44 Members on June 30, 1947, par values had been agreed for 34. The aggregate quotas of all Members at that time amounted to the equivalent of $7,721,500,000, and the equivalent of $6,535,000,000 had been paid into the Fund on subscription account.

From March 1 to June 30, 1947, the Fund sold $50,000,000 in United States funds to France, and to the Netherlands $6,000,000 in United States funds and £1,500,000 in sterling.

F. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

During the period under review, numerous decisions were taken by the Board of Governors either by adoption of resolutions at annual meetings or through a vote without meeting.

Among the actions taken at the second annual meeting, held in London from September 11 to 17, 1947, was the approval of a temporary increase in the Executive Board to fourteen members, interim action having already been taken to increase the size temporarily to thirteen.³ Also adopted was a resolution approving the terms and conditions of the form of agreement to be established between the United Nations and the Fund.⁴ On subsequent approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations, the agreement became effective on November 15, 1947. Other decisions of the Board of Governors taken at the second annual meeting resulted in the admission of Finland to membership in the Fund and an increase in the quotas of Egypt and Iran.⁵

³ The size of the Executive Board was fixed permanently at fourteen members by the third annual meeting of the Board of Governors, held in Washington, D.C., from September 27 to October 1, 1948.

⁴ The text of the Agreement between the United Nations and the International Monetary Fund is reproduced on pp. 885-87.

In addition, during the period under review, Australia and Austria were admitted to membership. Of the 47 Member countries, par values had been established as of September 21, 1947, for 38, the aggregate of all quotas increased to slightly more than $8,000,000,000 and the total paid in on subscription account increased to the equivalent of over $6,850,000,000.

During the period July 1, 1947, to September 21, 1948, the Fund sold exchange to a total value of $571,828,380.91. These transactions benefited eleven Member countries and involved Belgian francs as well as United States dollars.

1. Par Values and Exchange Restrictions

During the period surveyed, the Fund reached agreement with five of its Members with respect to the par values of their currencies. The Fund had therefore established and published initial par values, as of September 21, 1948, for the currencies of 38 of its 47 Member countries. Although officially one of these 38 Members, Mexico suspended official dealings in foreign exchange in July 1948, and subsequently entered into consultation with the Fund regarding the establishment of a new par value. The Fund had granted additional time for the determination of par values by China, Finland, Greece, Italy, Poland, Uruguay and Yugoslavia, as well as by France for Indo-China, and the Netherlands with respect to the Netherlands East Indies. Austria, the Fund's newest Member, had not as of September 1948 been requested to submit a par value. France, one of the original Members, has no official par value because of its unauthorized change of value in January 1948.

Under the Articles of Agreement, a Member can propose a change in the par value of its currency only after consultation with the Fund, and in general only if it is necessary to correct a fundamental disequilibrium in the international balance of payments. The only application for a proposed change in par value of a Member's currency so far received by the Fund has been from France. The French Government proposed a change in the par value of the franc from approximately 119 per United States dollar, the par value agreed with the Fund on December 18, 1946, to approximately 214 francs. The proposed devaluation was linked with the institution of a premium market for the dollar and certain other currencies readily salable for dollars. The Fund agreed that a change in the par value of the franc was necessary and indicated that it was prepared to concur in a devaluation of the franc to a realistic rate which would be applicable to transactions in the currencies of all Members of the Fund. It declared that it could not agree, however, to the inclusion of any part of the proceeds of exports in a premium market limited to a few currencies, as in its judgment this entailed the risk of serious adverse effects on other Members without being necessary to achieve the trade objectives sought by France.

The Fund felt there would be scope for competitive depreciation in the application by one country of a premium rate on exports to one area while other rates remained stable and other countries maintained the parities agreed with the Fund.

The French Government found that it could not accept the modifications suggested by the Fund and on January 26, 1948, put into effect its own proposals without the approval of the Fund. The Fund accordingly considered that France had made an unauthorized change in its par value and had therefore become ineligible to use the Fund's resources. The Fund continued to work with France, however, in seeking a modification of its exchange practices in order to meet French needs within the framework of the international monetary arrangements established by the Fund Agreement.

Some of the other Fund Members, such as China and Greece, which have never agreed upon par values with the Fund, continue to operate under systems of fluctuating rates. Although the Fund has emphasized that maintenance of fluctuating exchange rates is not in accord with its long-term objectives, it has recognized that such systems might be unavoidable when prices were highly unstable. Under such circumstances, monetary authorities, by controlling the demand for exchange in a fluctuating market, could bring about a rate of exchange that would enable exporters to sell abroad despite the continuous rise in prices. Thus a breakdown in trade could be averted.

The Fund, although accepting the temporary use of a fluctuating exchange rate in such exceptional circumstances, has emphasized that at the proper time it will not be remiss in urging upon governments the desirability of agreeing upon a parity.

Multiple currency practices have been used in a number of countries for a variety of reasons, such as for the correction of balance of payments disequilibria, the restriction of imports without resort to complicated administrative machinery and for revenue purposes, and the Fund has worked out guiding principles with regard to such practices. On December 19, 1947, it sent a memorandum to its Members setting out in detail the Fund's policies together with the obligations of its Members and the jurisdiction of the Fund with respect to multiple currency practices.

The policies laid down require, in general: continuous consultation between the Fund and Members on multiple currency practices; special consideration, in dealing with multiple currency practices, of those aspects affecting exchange stability and orderly exchange arrangements among Members; and the progressive removal of multiple currency practices not necessary for balance of payments reasons. The Fund also stated that it would encourage the establishment of economic conditions which would permit the removal of multiple currency practices wherever possible.

With regard to its jurisdiction, the Fund called Members' attention* to the fact that multiple currency practices constituted systems of exchange rates, and, since exchange stability depended on effective exchange rates, the obligation of Members under Article IV, Section 4(a), of the Articles of Agreement "to collaborate with the Fund to promote exchange stability, to maintain orderly exchange arrangements with other members, and to avoid competitive exchange alterations" was fundamental to an interpretation of the rights and obligations of Members to maintain, introduce or adapt multiple currency practices. It set forth the occasions on which Members were obliged to consult with the Fund.

The following are some examples of action taken by the Fund to facilitate the removal of multiple currency practices.

In the case of Ecuador, the Fund approved in June 1947 a request from that Government for a modification of its multiple currency practices through the imposition of a surcharge on non-essential imports, the surcharge to be used for retiring government debt. A technical mission of the Fund advised the Government with regard to the readjustment of prices and costs and the institution of a comprehensive reform of monetary and credit policy. The Fund reported that if the improvement resulting from putting into effect more satisfactory fiscal and credit policies continued, conditions should eventually be established which would permit a unification of the exchange rate without the need for exchange restrictions.

Following consultations with the Government of Chile, the Fund agreed in January 1948 on a progressive program for the simplification of the existing multiple exchange rate system of that country. The Fund noted at that time that Chile had already taken steps towards balancing its budget and imposing selective restraints on bank credit which would "help to arrive at the internal financial stability necessary to achieve and maintain external stability".

In September 1948 the Fund approved proposals made by the Government of Peru designed to restore its international payments position. Included in the proposals were measures to reduce the demand for foreign exchange, to collect money for repaying the Government's debt to the Central Bank and to avoid the necessity of inflationary borrowing. Under the plan, exporters were to be given a higher return to encourage the expansion of exports, while a surcharge was to be placed on non-essential imports. The Fund indicated that the effectiveness of these measures was conditioned on the ability of the Peruvian Government to halt inflation, to secure additional revenue from sources other than exchange taxes and to limit the expansion of bank credit.

The Fund has noted in its April 1948 annual report that continuing balance of payments deficits during 1947 forced many countries to impose or reinforce foreign exchange restrictions in order to deal with a persistent drain on their reserves. These restrictions were imposed in most cases on imports from United States dollar areas in order to reduce dollar deficits or safeguard gold and dollar reserves. With the exception of El Salvador, Guatemala, Mexico, Panama and the United States, all Members of the Fund notified that agency that they were availing themselves of the provisions of Article XIV, Section 2, of the Articles of Agreement, which provides that during the postwar transitional period Members may, subject to certain safeguards, "maintain and adapt to changing circumstances . . . restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions".

Although it had not been possible under existing circumstances to effect any relaxation of these exchange restrictions, the Fund stated in its annual report in April 1948 that it was keeping the exchange control systems of its Members under review and would encourage the elimination of restrictions wherever feasible.

2. Gold Policies

Since the par values of the currencies of all Members may be expressed in terms of gold, the Fund in June 1947 stated its opposition to external purchases or sales of gold at premium prices which directly or indirectly produce exchange transactions at depreciated rates. Although a number of Members subsequently informed the Fund that their practices were in accord with the Fund's policy, and others notified changes in their practice to conform to the Fund's views, the Fund indicated that more vigorous enforcement of gold regulations was required in certain countries.

To enable it to decide on further action, the Fund in April 1948 requested its Members to furnish the text of their laws, decrees and regulations, a statement of their administrative practices regarding international transactions in gold and in articles having a large content of gold, and data on international movements of gold.

In December 1947 the Fund informed its Members that it was also opposed to the granting of any subsidies on gold production which would raise the price of gold, thereby undermining exchange stability. At the same time the Fund stated its intention of studying and reviewing the gold policies of Members and recalled the Members' obligation to consult with the Fund before introducing any new measures to subsidize their gold production.

Two countries, Canada and Australia, adopted plans to subsidize a part of their gold production, which were deemed not to contravene the obligation of Members under the Fund Agreement or to violate the Fund's policy regarding gold subsidies. The Canadian Government in January 1948 instituted a program to stimulate gold production by defraying part of the increased cost of production through subsidies to individual mines. The Australian Government introduced a plan for temporary subsidies which, without affecting the price of gold, would enable some marginal and isolated mines to continue operations despite rising costs so as to sustain the population of certain communities whose existence is wholly dependent on the gold mining industry.

3. Fund Transactions

The exchange transactions of the Fund involve the sale to a Member, either against its own currency or against gold, of the currencies of other Members.

Subject to compliance with certain general conditions, which are set out in the Articles of Agreement, a Member may purchase the currencies of other Members from the Fund against its own currency. Members must state that the currency purchased is presently needed for making payments in that currency which are in accordance with the provisions of the Fund Agreement.

Between March 1, 1947, when the Fund announced that it was in a position to begin exchange transactions, and September 21, 1948, 37 transactions involving the sale of United States dollars, pounds sterling and Belgian francs were completed with eleven Members in exchange for their own currencies, in the amounts shown below:

CURRENCY SOLD BY THE FUND

Member	U. S. Dollars	£ Sterling	Belgian Francs
Belgium	33,000,000
Chile	8,800,000
Denmark	10,200,000

Norway	Norwegian Kroner	47,460,810.02
Turkey	Turkish Liras	14,000,000.00
United Kingdom	Pounds Sterling	74,441,687-7-1

In terms of United States dollars, the aggregate of the foreign exchange transactions set out above is $633,873,380.91.

On transactions of this type with the Fund, Members are required to pay a uniform service charge at the time the transaction takes place and, if the Fund's holdings of a Member's currency exceed that Member's quota in the Fund, a charge, based on the amount and duration of the excess, is levied in addition at quarterly intervals. Certain Members mentioned in the table above were subject to this additional charge.

As regards exchange transactions involving the sale of Member currencies against gold, the Fund during 1948 made approximately $6,100,000 available to Norway against gold.

Apart from the type of transaction described above, the Fund was also able to assist one of its European Members by making gold available in New York to that Member out of the Fund's gold holdings in that centre, at the same time taking delivery in Europe of an equivalent quantity which was subsequently shipped to New York at the Member's expense. In this way, the Member was enabled immediately to sell gold in exchange for United States dollars which were urgently needed without incurring the delay involved in shipping the metal to the United States.

In considering applications for the use of the Fund's resources during the period, the Executive Directors attempted to ensure the optimum use of these resources by keeping the economic and financial situations of Members under constant review. The Fund examined the causes of balance of payments deficits, the use, by Members drawing on the resources of the Fund, of their own gold and foreign exchange resources, and the bearing of the par values of their currencies on their balance of payments position and prospects. In certain cases where the Fund had concluded that the situation existing in a country was not conducive to the proper use of the Fund's resources, it asked that Member to refrain from applying for exchange purchases pending consultations with the Fund. The Fund emphasized to Members that the purpose of the use of its resources was to give them time to make necessary readjustments and not to avoid the necessity for such readjustments.

In April 1948 the Fund asked that those Members participating in the European Recovery Program should request the purchase of United States dollars from the Fund, at least during the first period of ERP, only in exceptional or unforeseen cases.

4. Technical Assistance

Co-operation between the Fund and its Members is made effective chiefly through consultation on matters falling within the scope of the Fund Agreement and the provision of technical advice to Members. Through consultations with all its Members, the Fund has gained valuable information on the special problems of Members which enables it, when making its decisions, to take full account of the particular circumstances of individual countries.

In addition to continuing this regular consultation with Members, the Fund sent missions to confer with various Members that had requested advice on economic problems. Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Peru and Syria are some of the countries which the Fund's missions visited at the request of their monetary authorities.

5. Publications

The information collected by the Fund is made available, when not confidential, to its Members and to the public. The Articles of Agreement, the annual reports of the Executive Directors, the quarterly financial statements and some of the speeches of the Managing Director have been published. In January 1948 the first issue of a monthly bulletin, International Financial Statistics, was published, and on July 1 the first issue of a weekly International Financial News Survey was released. As further information is supplied by Members, the Fund plans other publications, including a series of statistical and analytical annual volumes on balance of payments.

Experts from approximately 30 Member and non-member countries attended, at the invitation of the Fund, a meeting on balance of payments methodology in Washington, D.C., in September 1947. Suggestions offered by these experts resulted in considerable improvements in the forms included in the Fund's comprehensive Balance of Payments Manual, which was later sent to all Members and to selected non-members as the basis for reporting balance of payments data.

G. ADMINISTRATIVE BUDGET

The second annual meeting of the Board of Governors, held in London in September 1947, changed the fiscal year of the Fund to begin on May 1 rather than on July 1 as it had in the 1946-

47 period. To cover the estimated expenses of the ten-month period from July 1, 1947, to April 30, 1948, the Board adopted an administrative budget of $3,100,000. Actual administrative expenses for this period, as indicated by the condensed statement of income and expenditure reproduced below, totalled $2,626,629.66.

An administrative budget of $4,187,000 to cover estimated expenditures for the fiscal period from May 1, 1948, to April 30, 1949, was approved by the Board of Executive Directors, and reported, for their information, to the Board of Governors, which was scheduled to convene in Washington, D.C., on September 27, 1948.

Since no administrative budget had been approved for the period from July 1, 1946, to June 30, 1947, actual expenditure during that year, as well as estimated expenses to April 30, 1949, are shown below, as follows:

ADMINISTRATIVE BUDGET FOR FISCAL PERIOD ENDING:

	June 30, 1947	April 30, 1948	April 30, 1949
Personal services	$1,321,908.71	$1,906,000	$2,568,000

ANNEX V

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Article I

GENERAL

1. This agreement, which is entered into by the United Nations pursuant to the provisions of Article 63 of its Charter, and by the International Monetary Fund (hereinafter called the Fund) pursuant to the provisions of article X of its Articles of Agreement, is intended to define the terms on which the United Nations and the Fund shall be brought into relationship.

2. The Fund is a specialized agency established by agreement among its member governments and having wide international responsibilities as defined in its Articles of Agreement, in economic and related fields within the meaning of Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations. By reason of the nature of its international responsibilities and the terms of its Articles of Agreement, the Fund is, and is required to function as, an independent international organization.

3. The United Nations and the Fund are subject to certain necessary limitations for the safeguarding of confidential material furnished to them by their members or others, and nothing in this agreement shall be construed to require either of them to furnish any information the furnishing of which would, in its judgment, constitute a violation of the confidence of any of its members or anyone from whom it shall have received such information, or which would otherwise interfere with the orderly conduct of its operations.

Article II

RECIPROCAL REPRESENTATION

1. Representatives of the United Nations shall be entitled to attend, and to participate without vote in, meetings of the Board of Governors of the Fund. Representatives of the United Nations shall be invited to participate without vote in meetings especially called by the Fund for the particular purpose of considering the United Nations point of view in matters of concern to the United Nations.

2. Representatives of the Fund shall be entitled to attend meetings of the General Assembly of the United Nations for purposes of consultation.

3. Representatives of the Bank shall be entitled to attend, and to participate without vote in, meetings of the committees of the General Assembly, meetings of the Economic and Social Council, of the Trusteeship Council and of their respective subsidiary bodies, dealing with matters in which the Fund has an interest.

4. Sufficient advance notice of these meetings and their agenda shall be given so that, in consultation, arrangements can be made for adequate representation.

Article III

PROPOSAL OF AGENDA ITEMS

In preparing the agenda for meetings of the Board of Governors, the Fund will give due consideration to the inclusion in the agenda of items proposed by the United Nations. Similarly, the Council and its commissions and the Trusteeship Council will give due consideration to the inclusion in their agenda of items proposed by the Fund.

Article IV

CONSULTATION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

1. The United Nations and the Fund shall consult together and exchange views on matters of mutual interest.

2. Neither organization, nor any of their subsidiary bodies, will present any formal recommendations to the other without reasonable prior consultation with regard thereto. Any formal recommendations made by either organization after such consultation will be considered as soon as possible by the appropriate organ of the other.

Article V

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION

The United Nations and the Fund will, to the fullest extent practicable and subject to paragraph 3 of article I, arrange for the current exchange of information and publications of mutual interest, and the furnishing of special reports and studies upon request.

Article VI

SECURITY COUNCIL

1. The Fund takes note of the obligation assumed, under paragraph 2 of Article 48 of the United Nations Charter, by such of its members as are also Members of the United Nations, to carry out the decisions of the Security Council through their action in the appropriate specialized agencies of which they are members, and will, in the conduct of its activities, have due regard for decisions of the Security Council under Articles 41 and 42 of the United Nations Charter.

2. The Fund agrees to assist the Security Council by furnishing to it information in accordance with the provisions of article V of this agreement.

Article VII

ASSISTANCE TO THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The Fund agrees to co-operate with the Trusteeship Council in the carrying out of its functions by furnishing information and technical assistance upon request, and in such other similar ways as may be consistent with the Articles of Agreement of the Fund.

Article VIII

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

The General Assembly of the United Nations hereby authorizes the Fund to request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on any legal questions arising within the scope of the Fund's activities other than questions relating to the relationship between the Fund and the United Nations or any specialized agency. Whenever the Fund shall request the Court for an advisory opinion, the Fund will inform the Economic and Social Council of the request.

Article IX

STATISTICAL SERVICES

1. In the interests of efficiency and for the purpose of reducing the burden on national Governments and other organizations, the United Nations and the Fund agree to co-operate in eliminating unnecessary duplication in the collection, analysis, publication and dissemination of statistical information.

2. The Fund recognizes the United Nations as the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics serving the general purposes of international organizations, without prejudice to the right of the Fund to concern itself with any statistics so far as they may be essential for its own purposes.

3. The United Nations recognizes the Fund as the appropriate agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics within its special sphere, without prejudice to the right of the United Nations to concern itself with any statistics so far as they may be essential for its own purposes.

4. (a) In its statistical activities the Fund agrees to give full consideration to the requirements of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies.

(b) In its statistical activities the United Nations agrees to give full consideration to the requirements of the Fund.

5. The United Nations and the Fund agree to furnish each other promptly with all their non-confidential statistical information.

Article X

ADMINISTRATIVE RELATIONSHIPS

1. The United Nations and the Fund will consult from time to time concerning personnel and other administrative matters of mutual interest, with a view to securing as much uniformity in these matters as they shall find practicable and to assuring the most efficient use of the services and facilities of the two organizations. These consultations shall include determination of the most equitable manner in which special services furnished by one organization to the other should be financed.

2. To the extent consistent with the provisions of this agreement, the Fund will participate in the work of the Co-ordination Committee and its subsidiary bodies.

3. The Fund will furnish to the United Nations copies of the annual report and the quarterly financial statements prepared by the Fund pursuant to section 7 (a) of article V of its Articles of Agreement. The United Nations agrees that, in the interpretation of paragraph 3 of Article 17 of the United Nations Charter it will take into consideration that the Fund does not rely for its annual budget upon contributions from its members, and that the appropriate authorities of the Fund enjoy full autonomy in deciding the form and content of such budget.

4. The officials of the Fund shall have the right to use the laissez-passer of the United Nations in accordance with special arrangements to be negotiated between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the competent authorities of the Fund.

Article XI

AGREEMENTS WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

The Fund will inform the Economic and Social Council of any formal agreement which the Fund shall enter into with any specialized agency, and in particular agrees to inform the Council of the nature and scope of any such agreement before it is concluded.

Article XII

LIAISON

1. The United Nations and the Fund agree to the foregoing provisions in the belief that they will contribute to the maintenance of effective co-operation between the two organizations. Each agrees that it will establish within its own organization such administrative machinery as may be necessary to make the liaison, as provided for in this agreement, fully effective.

2. The arrangements provided for in the foregoing articles of this agreement shall apply, as far as appropriate, to relations between such branch or regional offices as may be established by the two organizations, as well as between their central machinery.

Article XIII

MISCELLANEOUS

1. The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Managing Director of the Fund are authorized to make such supplementary arrangements as they shall deem necessary or proper to carry fully into effect the purposes of this agreement.

2. This agreement shall be subject to revision by agreement between the United Nations and the Fund from the date of its entry into force.

3. This agreement may be terminated by either party thereto on six months' written notice to the other party, and thereupon all rights and obligations of both parties hereunder shall cease.

4. This agreement shall come into force when it shall have been approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the Board of Governors of the Fund.

VII. The Universal Postal Union

A. ORIGIN

In 1863 the first attempt at developing a universal postal agreement was made by an International Postal Committee meeting in Paris. The fifteen American and European countries attending this meeting adopted resolutions establishing general principles designed to secure greater uniformity in the numerous bilateral agreements which at that time regulated postal relations between the countries of the world. Eleven years later, the first International Postal Congress met in Berne, attended by delegates from the following 22 countries: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Egypt, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Serbia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom and United States. The Congress adopted an International Postal Convention, signed on October 9, 1874. When the Convention came into force on July 1, 1875, it formally established the General Postal Union. The second Postal Congress, held in Paris in 1878, changed the name of the Union to the Universal Postal Union (UPU).

The Universal Postal Convention has been extended and improved by the various postal congresses, twelve of which have thus far been held: in Berne, 1874; Paris, 1878; Lisbon, 1885; Vienna, 1891; Washington, 1897; Rome, 1906; Madrid, 1920; Stockholm, 1924; London, 1929; Cairo, 1934; Buenos Aires, 1939; and Paris, 1947. In addition, a number of conferences and committees have met under the auspices of the Union to study and discuss specific technical questions as directed by the Congress.

UPU has been governed since July 1, 1948, by the Universal Postal Convention as revised by the Paris Congress of 1947.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

As stated in Article 1 of the Universal Postal Convention, the aim of the Union is to assure the organization and perfection of the various postal services and to promote, in this field, the development of international collaboration. To this end, the Members of UPU are united in a single postal territory for the reciprocal exchange of correspondence.

The Union regulates, by the provisions of its Convention, the regular-mail service, which comprises the following articles of correspondence: letters, single and reply-paid post cards, commercial papers, printed matter, raised print for the blind, samples of merchandise, small packets, and phonopost articles, e.g., phonograph records. These provisions fix the basic rates, weight limits and dimensions for the above-mentioned articles. (Articles in the Final Protocol of the Convention permit Members to deviate from the basic rates by increasing them a maximum of 40 per cent or reducing them a maximum of 20 per cent.)

By agreements annexed to the Convention, and binding only for those Members which adhere to them, the Union regulates seven other postal services: insured letters and boxes, parcel post, money orders, postal cheques, collection orders, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals and cash on delivery articles.

¹ For further details on the origin and history of UPU, see Exposé sommaire de la création, du développement et du fonctionnement de l'Union postale universelle, Berne, November 1947; for further details on activities, see the administrative report for 1947 of the International Bureau of UPU to the United Nations (E/811), and the journal of the UPU, L'Union Postale, nos. 6-10, 1947, and 4 and 5, 1948. See also Bibliography of this Yearbook, Appendix III.

C. ORGANIZATION

Prior to the coming into force of the revised Convention on July 1, 1948, UPU consisted of a Universal Postal Congress and an International Bureau; the functions and responsibilities of these organs under the revised Convention remain the same. The Paris Congress established in addition a permanent Executive and Liaison Committee.

The Universal Postal Congress, which usually meets at intervals of five years, is composed of representatives of all Members of the Union. It reviews the Universal Postal Convention and its Subsidiary Agreements on the basis of proposals submitted by Members. Proposals submitted to a Congress involving important changes in the Convention must obtain a two-thirds majority; proposals involving changes of less importance in the Convention, its Final Protocol and its Detailed Regulations, as well as all changes in the Subsidiary Agreements, their Final Protocols and Detailed Regulations, need only obtain a simple majority. Proposals made between Congresses to change provisions of the Convention, its Final Protocol and its Detailed Regulations, and of the Subsidiary Agreements, their final Protocols and Detailed Regulations, are approved on the following conditions: unanimous vote for modifications of important provisions; two-thirds majority vote for other modifications; and a simple majority vote for interpretation of the provisions.

Each Congress fixes the year and the place for the next Congress. Extraordinary sessions of the Congress may be called with the approval of two thirds of the Members of the Union.

The International Bureau of UPU, operating under the supervision of the Swiss Supervisory Authority, serves as the organ of liaison, information and consultation for Members of the Union. In particular, it assembles, co-ordinates, publishes and distributes information of all kinds concerning the international postal service; gives opinions, as requested, on questions in dispute; notifies Members of requests for amendments of the Acts of the Congress and of changes adopted; serves the postal administrations as a clearing-house for the settlement of their postal accounts; and performs other functions assigned to it by the Convention, Regulations and Agreements of the Union.

The permanent Executive and Liaison Committee consists of nineteen members elected on a geographical basis by each Congress to act until replaced by the next Congress. The Committee normally meets once a year. Its functions include the maintenance of close relations with countries Members of the Union with a view to improving the international postal service, the study of technical questions affecting that service, the establishment of working relations with the United Nations, specialized agencies and other international organizations, and the control of the activities of the International Bureau. The Secretary-General of the Committee is the Director of the International Bureau. The Committee elects its President and four Vice-Presidents, and appoints, on the recommendation of the Swiss Supervisory Authority, the Director and other high-ranking personnel of the International Bureau. Until the coming into force of the revised Convention, the Executive and Liaison Committee, by decision of the Paris Congress, functioned on a provisional basis.

(Members of UPU are further permitted to set up restricted or regional postal unions and conclude special postal agreements between themselves, provided such agreements are not less favorable for the public than those in the Universal Postal Convention and Regulations.)

D. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

The twelfth Universal Postal Congress, which was convened on May 7, 1947, continued to meet in Paris until July 5, 1947. Basing its discussions on 821 proposals received from various administrations, the Congress drew up 23 instruments, which constitute the revised legislation of the Union. These include the revised Universal Postal Convention, together with its Final Protocol and

Executive Regulations; provisions concerning the transportation of regular mails by air; and the seven postal agreements previously mentioned, with their respective executive regulations.²

² The Universal Postal Convention and the Final Protocol of the Convention are reproduced on pp. 893-906. The Executive Regulations of the Convention, the Agreements, etc., may be secured from the International Bureau of the UPU.

All Members of the Union must adhere to the Convention; they are not required, however, to become parties to the postal agreements. When a country has ratified one of the seven postal agreements, its provisions become law in that country, and the government must ensure their application.

The Congress adopted a list system in the money order service for those countries parties to the agreement concerning money orders. This permits the office of exchange in the country of origin to forward to the office of exchange in the country of destination a list of the amounts to be paid rather than, as in the past, all of the orders issued. The Congress introduced the use of airmail to notify receipt and corrections of money orders.

A new agreement concerning cash on delivery articles was adopted by the Congress. This agreement was mainly drawn up from the provisions on this subject already contained in the Convention, in the agreements concerning insured letters and boxes and concerning parcel post and in the executive regulations governing these instruments.

The agreements concerning insured letters and boxes, parcel post, postal transfers and collection of bills received only minor revisions and the agreement concerning subscriptions to newspapers and periodical publications remained unchanged.

The Congress made a number of changes in the provisions of the Convention regulating postal correspondence. Among these, it increased the maximum weight for printed papers from two to three kilograms and for single volumes from three to five kilograms. It provided for a 50-per-cent reduction in the cost of mailing newspapers and periodicals in all territories of Members of the Union. Prior to the Congress such a reduction had been in force only between those postal administrations which agreed to adopt it. The Congress also requested that the rates and regulations governing the transmission of raised print for the blind be generously interpreted.

The Congress suggested the limitations of payments to be made to air transport companies. Although it recognized that air transport costs were too high to allow at that time air mail correspondence without surtax, the Congress took a step in that direction by abolishing the surtax on all air letters sent within a radius of 2,000 kilometres.

The Congress approved an agreement establishing the relationship between the Union and the United Nations.³ This agreement, annexed to the Convention, was signed by representatives of the Union and the United Nations on July 4, 1947.

It was subsequently approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations on November 15, 1947, and came into force at the same time as the revised Universal Postal Convention, on July 1, 1948. In order to comply with the General Assembly resolution barring Franco Spain from membership in any organization brought into relationship with the United Nations,⁴ the Congress by vote suspended Spain, Spanish Morocco, and the whole of the Spanish Colonies from exercising their membership in UPU for as long as the General Assembly resolution is in force. By decision of the Congress, the membership of Germany, Japan and Korea is also suspended until such time as the responsible authorities agree to restore the former position. The provisions of Article 3 of the Convention governing the admission of new Members into the Union were amended to require the approval of applications for membership by two thirds of the current Members of the Union. Since 1878, new Members had been admitted into the Union merely by notifying the Swiss Confederation of their adherence to the Convention.

The Congress considered the problem of transit rates. A Technical Transit Committee which had been established by the Buenos Aires Congress in 1939 to deal with this question was unable to meet because of the war. The Paris Congress therefore reconstituted this Committee on a temporary basis and instructed it to find, by general and detailed inquiry, the most equitable basis on which land and sea transit rates can be computed and to suggest the best methods for simplifying the calculation of these rates. The Congress elected seventeen members on a geographical basis to constitute the Committee. The Technical Transit Committee is to prepare a report for submission to Members of the Union at the beginning of 1950.

1. The International Bureau

Throughout the period under review, the International Bureau of UPU continued issuing technical publications and performing its many other functions under the regulations of the Union.

It published new editions of its List of Air Mail Lines, Maps of Air Mail Lines, List of Airports and List of Addresses of Postal Administrations. These publications, as well as the Bureau's other technical publications, are compiled from information furnished to the Bureau by postal administrations of Member countries, and are kept up to date by means of circulars, 259 of which were published during 1947. The Bureau compiled and distributed supplements to the following publications: Official summary of all information of general interest concerning the carrying out of the Convention and its Detailed Regulations in each country, 1943 edition; Table of equivalents, 1946 edition; Table of reduced rates, 1944 edition; Collection of information concerning the organization of the Administrations of the Union and their domestic services, September 1932 edition; Statement of Domestic Rates, 1946 edition; List of prohibited Articles, January 1938 edition; List of Distances in kilometres, August 1939 edition; List of Distant Countries and Countries assimilated thereto, September 1935 edition. It continued work begun in 1945 on a new edition of a Directory of Post Offices; the last edition of this Directory was issued in April 1937. The Bureau continued publishing a monthly journal, L'Union Postale, which contains articles on innovations in postal services, improvements to premises, mechanized facilities in internal services and transport. L'Union Postale has formerly been published in English, French, German and Spanish; by decision of the Paris Congress, the journal was to be published, beginning with the January 1949 issue, in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish.

The Bureau receives postage stamps of all sorts used in the territory of each Member of the Union and is required to distribute these stamps to all other Members of the Union. During 1947, the Bureau distributed 2,702 series of postage stamps, including 2,554 ordinary postage stamps, 58 sets of stamps and 90 stamps printed or embossed on stationery.

As required by the Executive Regulations of the Convention, the Bureau supplied postal administrations during 1947 with 8,772,000 international reply coupons and with 84,715 postal identity cards. The regulations prescribe the forms for the reply coupons and the identity cards, and the Bureau must arrange for their manufacture.

E. BUDGET

The budget of UPU includes the ordinary expenses of the International Bureau and the extraordinary expenses covering sessions of the Congress, conferences or committees and special tasks of the Bureau. The Paris Congress set the sum of 500,000 gold francs (equivalent to approximately $US 157,543.39) as the annual maximum of the ordinary expenses of the Bureau for the years 1948 to 1952, inclusive, and in addition 100,000 gold francs to cover the ordinary annual expenses of the Executive and Liaison Committee during this period.

The Swiss Supervisory Authority supervises the expenses of the Bureau and makes the advances (which bear no interest for one year) necessary to meet these expenses.

The total of ordinary and extraordinary expenses is borne by the Members of the Union, which are divided for that purpose into seven classes. Each Member contributes as follows in proportion to the class in which it is placed in the Executive Regulations of the revised Convention:

⁵ Germany, Japan, Korea, Spain, Morocco (Spanish Zone) and the whole of the Spanish Colonies have not since July 1, 1948, contributed to the expenses of UPU, since, under Article XVII of the Final Protocol of the

UNIVERSAL POSTAL CONVENTION⁹

Concluded between Afghanistan, the Union of South Africa, the People's Republic of Albania, Germany, the United States of America, the whole of the Possessions of the United States of America, the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, the Argentine Republic, the Commonwealth of Australia, Austria, Belgium, the Colony of the Belgian Congo, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Bolivia, Brazil, the People's Republic of Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, the Republic of Colombia, Korea, the Republic of Costa Rica, the Republic of Cuba, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Egypt, the Republic of El Salvador, Ecuador, Spain, the whole of the Spanish Colonies, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Algeria, Indo-China, the whole of the other Overseas Territories of the French Republic and Territories administered as such, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the whole of the British Overseas Territories, including the Colonies, Protectorates and Territories under Mandate or under Trusteeship exercised by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Greece, Guatemala, the Republic of Haiti, the Republic of Honduras, Hungary, India, Iran, Iraq, Eire, the Republic of Iceland, Italy, Japan, Lebanon, the Republic of Liberia, Luxembourg, Morocco (except the Spanish Zone) Morocco (Spanish Zone), Mexico, Nicaragua, Norway, New Zealand, the Republic of Panamá, Paraguay, the Netherlands, Curaçao and Surinam, the Dutch East Indies, Peru, the Republic of the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, the Portuguese Colonies in West Africa, the Portuguese Colonies in East Africa, Asia and Oceania, Roumania, the Republic of San Marino, Siam, Sweden, the Swiss Confederation, Syria, Czechoslovakia, the Hachemite Kingdom of Transjordan, Tunis, Turkey, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Eastern Republic of Uruguay, the State of the City of the Vatican, the United States of Venezuela, Yemen and the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia.

The undersigned, plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the above-named countries, being assembled in Congress at Paris, by virtue of Article 13 of the Universal Postal Convention concluded at Buenos Aires on the 23rd of May, 1939, have, by mutual consent and subject to ratification, revised the said Convention to read as follows:

PART I. UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION

CHAPTER I.—ORGANISATION AND EXTENT OF THE UNION

ARTICLE 1. Constitution and aim of the Union

1. The countries between which the present Convention is concluded form, under the title of the Universal Postal Union, a single postal territory for the reciprocal exchange of correspondence.

2. The aim of the Union is to secure the organisation and improvement of the various international postal services, and to promote the development of international collaboration in this sphere.

ARTICLE 2. Relationship with the United Nations

The Union is brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the terms of the Agreement of which the text is annexed to the present Convention.

ARTICLE 3. New accessions: Procedure

1. Any sovereign country may at any time request to be allowed to adhere to the Convention.

2. The request is sent through the diplomatic channel to the Government of the Swiss Confederation, and by the latter to the members of the Union.

3. The country concerned is considered as having been admitted to membership if its request is approved by at least two-thirds of the countries which compose the Union.

4. Countries which, having been consulted, have not replied within a period of four months are considered as abstaining.

5. Admission to membership is notified by the Government of the Swiss Confederation to the Governments of all the countries of the Union.

ARTICLE 4. Convention and Agreements of the Union

1. The letter post is governed by the provisions of the Convention.

2. Other services, such as those relating to insured letters and boxes, postal parcels, cash on delivery, money orders, transfers to and from postal cheque accounts, collection of bills, drafts, etc., and subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, form the subject of Agreements between countries of the Union. These Agreements are binding only upon the countries which have acceded to them.

3. Accession to one or more of these Agreements is notified in accordance with the provisions of Article 3, §2.

ARTICLE 5. Detailed Regulations

The Postal Administrations of the Union Countries draw up, by mutual agreement, in the form of Detailed Regulations, the detailed rules necessary for the carrying out of the Convention and the Agreements.

ARTICLE 6. Restricted Unions: Special Agreements

1. Countries of the Union and, if their internal legislation does not forbid it, Administrations, may establish restricted Unions and make with one another special agreements concerning the matters dealt with in the Convention and its Detailed Regulations, provided that conditions less favourable to the public than those laid down by these Acts are not introduced.

2. The same right is accorded to the countries which participate in the Agreements, and if necessary to their Administrations, as regards the matters dealt with by these Acts and their Detailed Regulations.

ARTICLE 7. Internal Legislation

The provisions of the Convention and of the Agreements of the Union do not override the legislation of any country as regards anything which is not expressly covered by these Acts.

ARTICLE 8. Colonies, Protectorates, etc.

The following are considered as forming a single country or Administration of the Union, as the case may be, within the meaning of the Convention or of the Agreements as regards, in particular, their right to vote at a Congress or Conference, and in the interval between meetings, as well as their contribution to the expenses of the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union:

1. The whole of the Possessions of the United States of America, comprising Hawaii, Porto-Rico, Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States of America;
2. The Colony of the Belgian Congo;
3. The whole of the Spanish Colonies;
4. Algeria;
5. Indo-China;
6. The whole of the other Overseas Territories of the French Republic and Territories administered as such;
7. The whole of the British Overseas Territories, including the Colonies, Protectorates and Territories under Mandate or under Trusteeship exercised by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland;
8. Curaçao and Surinam;
9. The Dutch East Indies;
10. The Portuguese Colonies in West Africa;
11. The Portuguese Colonies in East Africa, Asia and Oceania.

ARTICLE 9. Application of the Convention to Colonies, Protectorates, etc.

1. Any Contracting Party may declare, either at the time of signing, of ratifying, of acceding, or later, that its acceptance of the present Convention includes all its Colonies, overseas Territories, Protectorates or Territories under suzerainty or under mandate, or certain of them only. The declaration, unless made at the time of signing the Convention, must be addressed to the Government of the Swiss Confederation.

2. The Convention will apply only to the Colonies, overseas Territories, Protectorates or Territories under suzerainty or under mandate in the name of which declarations have been made in virtue of § 1.

3. Any Contracting Party may, at any time, forward to the Government of the Swiss Confederation a notification of the withdrawal from the Convention of any Colony, overseas Territory, Protectorate or Territory under suzerainty or under mandate in the name of which it has made a declaration in virtue of § 1. This notification will take effect one year after the date of its receipt by the Government of the Swiss Confederation.

4. The Government of the Swiss Confederation will forward to all the Contracting Parties a copy of each declaration or notification received in virtue of §§ 1 to 3.

5. The provisions of this Article do not apply to any Colony, overseas Territory, Protectorate or Territory under suzerainty or under mandate which is mentioned in the preamble of the Convention.

ARTICLE 10. Extent of the Union

The following are considered as belonging to the Universal Postal Union:

- (a) post offices established by Union countries in territories not included in the Union;
- (b) other territories which, although not members of the Union, are included in it as being subordinate, postally, to a country of the Union.

ARTICLE 11. Exceptional Relations

Administrations which provide a service with territories not included in the Union are required to act as the intermediaries of the other Administrations. The provisions of the Convention and its Detailed Regulations apply to these exceptional relations.

ARTICLE 12. Arbitration

1. In case of disagreement between two or more members of the Union as to the interpretation of the Convention and the Agreements as well as of their Detailed Regulations or as to the responsibility imposed on an Administration by the application of these Acts, the question in dispute is decided by arbitration. To that end, each of the Administrations concerned chooses another member of the Union not directly interested in the matter.

2. If one of the Administrations in disagreement does not take any action on a proposal for arbitration within a period of six months, or of nine months in the case of distant countries, the International Bureau, on a request to that effect, calls on the defaulting Administration to appoint an arbitrator, or itself appoints one officially.

3. The decision of the arbitrators is given on an absolute majority of votes.

4. In case of an equality of votes, the arbitrators choose, with the view of settling the difference, another Administration with no interest in the question in dispute. Failing an agreement in the choice, this Administration is appointed by the International Bureau from among the members of the Union not proposed by the arbitrators.

5. If the disagreement concerns one of the Agreements, the arbitrators may not be appointed from outside the Administrations which participate in that Agreement.

ARTICLE 13. Withdrawal from the Union. Cessation of participation in the Agreements

Each Contracting Party is free to withdraw from the Union or to cease to participate in one or more of the Agreements by notice given one year in advance through the diplomatic channel to the Government of the Swiss Confederation and by that Government to the Governments of the contracting countries.

CHAPTER II.—CONGRESSES, CONFERENCES, COMMISSIONS

ARTICLE 14. Congresses

1. Delegates of the countries of the Union meet in Congress not later than five years after the date of the entry into force of the Acts of the preceding Congress, with the view of revising these Acts or of completing them as necessary.

2. Each country is represented at the Congress by one or more plenipotentiary delegates furnished by their Government with the necessary powers. It may, if it so desires, be represented by the delegation of another country. But it is understood that one delegation can represent only one country other than its own.

3. In the deliberations, each country has one vote only.

4. Each Congress settles the place of meeting of the next Congress. The Government of the country in which the Congress is to take place is responsible, in consultation with the International Bureau, for convening the Congress, and also for notifying to all the Governments of the countries of the Union the decisions taken by the Congress.

ARTICLE 15. Ratifications. Entry into Force and Duration of the Acts of Congresses

1. The Acts of Congresses shall be ratified as soon as possible and the ratifications shall be communicated to the Government of the country in which the Congress was held, and by that Government to the Governments of the contracting countries.

2. If one or more of the Contracting Parties do not ratify one or other of the Acts signed by them, these Acts are none the less binding on the States which have ratified them.

3. These Acts come into force simultaneously and have the same duration.

4. From the date fixed for the entry into force of the Acts adopted by a Congress, all the Acts of the preceding Congress are repealed.

ARTICLE 16. Extraordinary Congresses

1. When a request to that effect is made or approved by at least two-thirds of the contracting countries, an Extraordinary Congress is held, after arrangement with the International Bureau.

2. The regulations laid down by Articles 14 and 15 apply equally to the delegations, to the deliberations and to the Acts of Extraordinary Congresses.

ARTICLE 17. Standing Orders of Congresses

Each Congress draws up the standing orders for its work and deliberations.

ARTICLE 18. Executive and Liaison Commission (Composition, Functions, Working)

1. In the interval between Congresses, an Executive and Liaison Commission ensures the continuity of the work of the Universal Postal Union, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and the Agreements.

2. The seat of the Commission is at Berne; in principle, the meetings of the Commission are held there.

3. The Commission is composed of nineteen members who exercise their functions during the interval between two successive Congresses.

4. The countries members of the Commission are appointed by Congress. At least half of the members must be replaced on the occasion of each Congress; no country may be chosen by three successive Congresses. The Director of the International Bureau exercises the functions of Secretary-General of the Commission.

5. The representative of each of the countries members of the Commission is nominated by the postal Administration of the country concerned. The representatives of countries members of the Commission must be qualified officials of the postal Administration.

6. At its first meeting, which is convened by the President of the previous Congress, the Commission elects from amongst its members, a President and four Vice-Presidents and draws up the Standing Orders for its work and deliberations.

7. The duties of the members of the Commission are gratuitous. The working expenses of the Commission are borne by the Universal Postal Union. The representatives of overseas countries may obtain repayment of the cost of a return ticket by air or by sea.

8. The expenses mentioned in § 7 may not exceed 100,000 francs a year; they are added to those which the International Bureau is authorised to incur under the provisions of Article 27 of the Convention.

9. The Commission meets in regular session, in principle once a year, on convocation by the Chairman.

10. The Commission may invite to participate at its meetings, without the right to vote, any representative of an international organisation or any other qualified person whom it wishes to take part in its work. Consultative Sub-Commissions may be set up for the study of special questions.

11. The functions of the Commission are as follows:

- (a) to maintain the closest contacts with the countries members of the Union with the view of improving the international postal service;
- (b) to examine technical questions of any kind concerning the international postal service, and to communicate the result of these examinations to the countries members of the Union;
- (c) to make useful contacts with the United Nations, its Councils and Commissions, as well as with specialised Agencies and other international Organisations, for the study and the preparation of reports to be submitted for the approval of the members of the Union. To send, as may be necessary, one of its members to represent the Union and to take part in its name at meetings of all these international organisations;
- (d) to formulate, if necessary, proposals which will be submitted for the approval of the contracting countries in accordance with the provisions of Articles 22 and 23 of the Convention.
- (e) within the framework of the Convention and its Detailed Regulations, to ensure the control of the activities of the International Bureau, of which it appoints, if necessary, and on the proposal of the Government of the Swiss Confederation, the Director and other superior personnel; to approve, on the proposal of the Director of the Bureau, the appointment of the other officials, and to authorise the employment of additional staff considered necessary; to prepare an annual report on the work of the Bureau, which it communicates to the members of the Union.

12. The Commission sends, for information, to the postal Administrations of all the countries of the Union an analytical review at the conclusion of each of its sessions.

13. The Commission makes a report to Congress on the whole of its activities and sends it to the contracting countries at least two months before the opening of the Congress.

ARTICLE 19. Conferences

1. Conferences for the consideration of purely administrative questions may be held at the request or with the assent of at least two-thirds of the Administrations of the Union. They are convened after arrangement with the International Bureau.

2. Each Conference draws up its own standing orders.

ARTICLE 20. Commissions

Commissions charged by a Congress or a Conference with the examination of one or more particular questions are convened by the International Bureau after arrangement with the Administration of the country where these Commissions are to sit.

CHAPTER III.—PROPOSALS MADE BETWEEN MEETINGS

ARTICLE 21. Introduction of Proposals

1. In the interval between meetings, any Administration has the right to address to the other Administrations, through the medium of the International Bureau, proposals concerning the Convention, its Final Protocol and its Detailed Regulations.

2. The same right is accorded to the Administrations of the countries participating in the Agreements so far as these Agreements, their Detailed Regulations and their Final Protocols are concerned.

3. In order to be considered, every proposal introduced by an Administration in the interval between meetings must be supported by at least two other Administrations. A proposal lapses when the International Bureau does not receive, at the same time as the proposal, the necessary number of declarations of support.

ARTICLE 22. Examination of Proposals

1. Every proposal is subject to the following procedure: A period of two months is allowed to Administrations to examine the proposal and to communicate their observations, if any, to the International Bureau. Amendments are not admitted. The answers are collected by the International Bureau, and communicated to the Administrations, with an invitation to declare themselves for or against. Administrations which have not notified their vote within a period of two months are considered as abstaining. The periods quoted above are calculated from the date of the circulars from the International Bureau.

2. If the proposal concerns an Agreement, its Detailed Regulations or the Final Protocol of either, only the Administrations which have adhered to that Agreement may take part in the procedure indicated in § 1.

ARTICLE 23. Conditions of Approval

1. In order to become binding, the proposals must obtain:

(a) a unanimous vote if they involve the addition of new provisions to, or the modification of, the provisions of Parts I and II, or of Articles 35 to 39, 57 to 63, 65 to 74 of the Convention, of any of the Articles of its Final Protocol and of Articles 101, 105, 117, 152, 163 and 184 of its Detailed Regulations;

(b) a two-thirds vote if they involve a modification of the provisions other than those mentioned under (a);

(c) a simple majority if they affect the interpretation of the provisions of the Convention, of its Final Protocol and its Detailed Regulations, except in the case of disagreement to be submitted to arbitration as provided for by Article 12.

2. The conditions to be fulfilled for the approval of proposals concerning the Agreements are fixed by the Agreements themselves.

ARTICLE 24. Notification of Decisions

1. Additions to and modifications of the Convention, the Agreements and the Final Protocols of these Acts are sanctioned by a diplomatic declaration, which the Government of the Swiss Confederation undertakes to prepare and forward, at the request of the International Bureau, to the Governments of the contracting countries.

2. Additions to and modifications of the Detailed Regulations and their Final Protocols are drawn up and notified to the Administrations by the International Bureau. The same applies to the interpretations referred to under Article 23, § 1, (c).

ARTICLE 25. Execution of Decisions

No addition or modification adopted comes into force until at least three months after its notification.

CHAPTER IV.—INTERNATIONAL BUREAU

ARTICLE 26. General Functions

1. A central Office, situated at Berne, known as the International Bureau of the Universal Postal Union, and placed under the supervision of the Swiss Postal Administration, serves as a medium of liaison, information and consultation for the countries of the Union.

2. This Office is entrusted in particular with the collection, collation, publication and distribution of information of every kind which concerns the international postal service; with giving, at the request of the parties concerned, an opinion upon questions in dispute; with the preparation of a statement of the case in connexion with proposals for modifying the Acts of the Congress; with the notification of alterations adopted, and in general, with such enquiries and work in connexion with editing and arranging material as the Convention, the Agreements, and their Detailed Regulations shall assign to it, or as may be entrusted to it in the interest of the Union.

3. It acts as clearing-house for the settlement of accounts of every description relative to the international postal service between the Administrations which claim its assistance.

ARTICLE 27. Expenses of the International Bureau

1. Each Congress fixes the maximum figure for the ordinary annual expenditure of the International Bureau. These expenses, as well as the special expenditure occasioned by the meetings of a Congress, Conference, or Commission, and the costs which may arise out of special work entrusted to the International Bureau, are borne in common by all the countries of the Union.

2. To this end, the latter are divided into seven classes, each contributing to the payment of the expenses in the following proportion:

1st class: 25 units	5th class: 5 units
2nd class: 20 units	6th class: 3 units
3rd class: 15 units	7th class: 1 unit
4th class: 10 units

3. In the case of a new accession, the Government of the Swiss Confederation settles, by agreement with the Government of the country concerned, the class in which the country is to be placed for the apportionment of the expenses of the International Bureau.

PART II. GENERAL REGULATIONS

CHAPTER I

ARTICLE 28. Freedom of Transit¹⁰

1. Freedom of transit is guaranteed throughout the entire territory of the Union.

2. Freedom of transit for postal parcels forwarded by land and sea routes is limited to the territory of the countries taking part in this service.

3. Freedom of transit for air parcels is guaranteed throughout the entire territory of the Union. Nevertheless, Administrations which have not acceded to the Parcel Post Agreement cannot be required to participate in the conveyance, by land and sea routes, of air parcels.

4. Administrations which have acceded to the Parcel Post Agreement are obliged to undertake the transmission of cash on delivery parcels, even if they do not admit such parcels in their own service, or if the amount of the trade charge exceeds the maximum fixed for their own traffic.

5. Insured articles may be forwarded in closed mails through the territory of countries which do not undertake the insured letter and box service or by the sea services in respect of which responsibility for insured articles is not accepted by the countries concerned, but the responsibility of these countries is limited to that prescribed for registered articles.

ARTICLE 29. Prohibition of Unauthorised Charges

It is forbidden to impose any postal charge whatever except those prescribed by the Convention and the Agreements.

ARTICLE 30. Temporary Suspension of Services

When an Administration finds itself obliged, owing to exceptional circumstances, temporarily to suspend its services, either wholly or in part, it must at once notify the fact, if necessary by telegraph, to the Administration or Administrations concerned.

ARTICLE 31. Monetary Standard

The franc regarded as the monetary unit in the provisions of the Convention and the Agreements is the gold franc of 100 centimes of a weight of 10/31 of a gramme and of a fineness of 0.900.

ARTICLE 32. Equivalents

In each country of the Union, postage rates are fixed at the closest possible equivalent of the value of the franc in the currency of the country.

ARTICLE 33. Forms: Language

1. The forms used by the Administrations in their mutual relations must be drawn up in French, with or without an interlinear translation in another language, unless the Administrations concerned arrange otherwise by direct agreement.

2. The forms used by the public must include an interlinear translation in French when they are not printed in that language.

3. So far as the forms referred to in §§ 1 and 2 are concerned, the wording, colours, and dimensions must be those prescribed by the Detailed Regulations of the Convention and of the Agreements.

4. Administrations may by common consent decide upon the language to be used in official correspondence in their reciprocal relations.

ARTICLE 34. Postal Identity Cards

1. Each Administration may issue, to persons who apply for them, postal identity cards to serve as evidence of identity for all kinds of post office business in the countries which have not notified their refusal to admit them.

2. The Administration which issues a card is authorised to make, on this account, a charge which may not exceed 70 centimes.

3. Administrations are relieved from all responsibility when it is established that a postal packet was delivered or a money order was paid on presentation of a valid card. Administrations are not responsible for the consequences of the loss, abstraction or fraudulent use of a valid card.

4. The card is valid for three years from the date of issue.

PART III. PROVISIONS REGARDING CORRESPONDENCE

CHAPTER I.—GENERAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 35. Definition of Correspondence

The term correspondence covers letters, postcards, both single and reply-paid, commercial papers, printed papers, articles printed in relief for the use of the blind, samples of merchandise, small packets and "Phonopost" packets.

ARTICLE 36. Rates of Postage and General Conditions¹¹

1. The prepaid rates of postage for the conveyance of correspondence throughout the entire extent of the Union, including delivery at the residence of the addressees in the countries where a delivery is or shall be organised, as well as the limits of weights and dimensions, are fixed as indicated in the following table [see page 898].

2. The limits of weight and size fixed by § 1 do not apply to correspondence relating to the postal service, as specified in Article 52, § 1.

3. Each Administration has the right to allow a reduction of 50 per cent of the ordinary rate for printed papers to newspapers and periodicals published in its country; it may, however, limit this reduction to newspapers and periodicals posted directly by the publishers or their agents, or allow it only in respect of newspapers and periodicals which fulfil the conditions required for transmission at the rate applicable to newspapers in its internal service. Commercial printed papers such as catalogues, prospectuses, price lists, etc., no matter how regularly they are issued, are excluded from this reduction.

4. Administrations may also allow a similar reduction to books and pamphlets, sheets of music and maps, no matter who is the sender, provided they contain no publicity matter or advertisement other than that appearing on the cover or the fly-leaves.

5. The Administrations of the countries of origin which have allowed in principle the reduction of 50 per cent reserve the right to fix, for the articles mentioned in §§ 3 and 4 above, a minimum charge which, while falling within the limits of the 50 per cent. reduction, is not lower than the postage applicable to the same articles in their inland service.

6. Articles of correspondence, other than closed registered letters, may not contain coin, bank notes, currency notes, negotiable instruments payable to bearer, platinum, gold or silver, manufactured or not, precious stones, jewels and other valuable articles.

7. The Administrations of the countries of origin and of destination have the right to treat, according to their internal legislation, letters which contain documents having the character of current and personal correspondence, addressed to persons other than the addressee or persons living with him.

8. Except as provided in the Detailed Regulations, commercial papers, printed papers, blind literature, samples of merchandise and small packets:—

(a) must be made up in such a manner as to be easy of examination;

(b) may not bear any notes or contain any document having the character of current and personal correspondence;

(c) may not contain any postage stamp or form of prepayment, whether obliterated or not, nor any paper representing a monetary value.

9. Samples of merchandise may not contain any article having a saleable value.

10. The Small Packets and "Phonopost" packets services are limited to those countries which have announced their willingness to exchange such packets, whether in their reciprocal relations, or in one direction only.

11. The enclosure in one and the same packet of correspondence of different categories (articles grouped together) is authorised under the conditions laid down in the Detailed Regulations.

12. Apart from the exceptions prescribed by the Convention and its Detailed Regulations, articles which do not fulfil the conditions laid down in the present Article and the corresponding Articles of the Detailed Regulations are not forwarded. Articles which have been wrongly accepted must be returned to the Administration of the country of origin. Nevertheless, the Administration of the country of destination is authorised to deliver them to the addressees. In that case it must, if necessary, apply to them the rates of postage and surcharges prescribed for the category of correspondence in which they are placed by reason of their contents, weight or size. Articles of which the weight exceeds the maximum limits laid down in § 1 may be taxed according to their actual weight.

ARTICLE 37. Prepayment

1. As a general rule, all the articles mentioned in Article 35 must be fully prepaid by the sender.

2. Correspondence, other than letters and single postcards, which is unpaid or insufficiently prepaid, is not forwarded, nor are reply-paid postcards of which the two halves are not fully prepaid at the time of posting.

3. When letters or single postcards, which are unpaid or insufficiently prepaid, are posted in great number, the Administration of the country of posting has the option of returning them to the sender.

ARTICLE 38. Charge on Unpaid or Insufficiently Prepaid Correspondence

1. Apart from the exceptions laid down in Article 57, § 6, for registered articles, and in Article 136, §§ 3, 4 and 5, of the Detailed Regulations, for certain classes of redirected articles, letters and single postcards not prepaid or insufficiently prepaid are liable to a charge, equal to double the amount of the deficient postage, to be paid by the addressees; but that charge may not be less than 5 centimes.

2. The same treatment may be applied in similar circumstances to other articles of correspondence which have been incorrectly forwarded to the country of destination.

ARTICLE 39. Surtaxes

1. Over and above the rates fixed by Article 36, a surtax proportionate to the expenses incurred may be levied on every article forwarded by extraordinary services which involve special payment.

2. When the rate of prepayment for a single postcard comprises the surtax authorised by § 1, the same rate is applicable to each half of a reply-paid postcard.

ARTICLE 40. Special Charges

1. Administrations are authorised to make an additional charge, in accordance with their own legislation, on articles posted after the ordinary hour of collection.

2. Articles addressed poste restante may be taxed by Administrations of the countries of destination with the special charge prescribed by their legislation for similar articles in the inland service.

3. The Administrations of countries of destination are authorised to levy a special charge not exceeding 40 centimes on each small packet delivered to the addressee. This charge may be increased by a sum not exceeding 20 centimes when the packet is delivered at the addressee's premises.

ARTICLE 41. Articles Liable to Customs Duty

1. Small packets and printed paper packets liable to customs duty are admitted.

2. The same applies to letters and sample packets containing articles liable to customs duty when the country of destination has given its consent. Nevertheless, each Administration has the right to restrict to the registered letter service letters containing articles liable to customs duty.

3. Packets containing serums and vaccines included in the exception shown in Article 124 of the Detailed Regulations are admitted in every case.

ARTICLE 42. Customs Control

The Administration of the country of destination is authorised to submit to the Customs the correspondence mentioned in Article 41, and, if necessary, to open it officially.

ARTICLE 43. Customs Clearance Fee

A Customs clearance fee not exceeding 40 centimes per article may be collected, as a postal charge, on articles submitted to the Customs in the country of destination.

ARTICLE 44. Customs Duty and Other Non-Postal Charges

Administrations are authorised to collect from the addressees the customs duty and any other non-postal charges which may be due.

ARTICLE 45. Correspondence for Delivery Free of Charges

1. In the relations between those countries which have notified their agreement to that effect, the senders may, by means of a previous declaration at the office of despatch, undertake to pay the whole of the postal and non-postal charges which are due to be collected on the delivery of the articles. In this case, the senders must undertake to pay the amounts which the office of destination may claim, and, if necessary, pay a sufficient deposit.

2. The Administration of the country of destination is authorised to collect a fee not exceeding 40 centimes per article. This fee is independent of that authorised by Article 43.

3. Any Administration is entitled to limit the service of delivery free of charges to registered articles.

ARTICLE 46. Cancellation of Customs Duty and Other Non-Postal Charges

Administrations undertake to request the appropriate services in their country to cancel the customs duty and other non-postal charges on articles returned to the country of origin, destroyed owing to the complete damage of the contents or redirected to a third country.

ARTICLE 47. Express Articles

1. Correspondence is, at the request of the senders, sent out for delivery by special messenger immediately after arrival, in the countries of which the Administrations agree to undertake this service.

2. Such correspondence, which is called "express," is subject, in addition to the ordinary postage, to a special charge which may not be less than the amount of the postage on a single-rate ordinary letter and not more than 60 centimes. This charge must be fully paid in advance.

3. When the addressee's house is situated outside the local delivery zone of the office of destination, a complementary charge not exceeding that prescribed for similar correspondence in the inland service may be collected, by the Administration of destination, for express delivery. In this case, however, express delivery is not obligatory.

4. Express packets, upon which the total amount of the charges payable in advance has not been prepaid, are delivered by the ordinary means, unless they have been treated as express by the office of origin. In the latter case, they are taxed according to the provisions of Article 38.

5. Administrations are not obliged to make more than one attempt to deliver correspondence by express. If this attempt is unsuccessful, the article may be treated as an ordinary article.

ARTICLE 48. Articles for Delivery to the Addressee in Person

In the relations with countries which have so agreed, registered correspondence accompanied by a request for advice of delivery is delivered, at the request of the sender, to the addressee in person.

ARTICLE 49. Prohibitions

1. It is forbidden to send by post the articles indicated in Column 1 of the following Table. If packets containing these articles have been wrongly admitted to the post, they must be treated as indicated in Column 2.

Articles 1	Treatment of packets wrongly admitted 2
(a) Articles which, from their nature or by their packing, may expose postal officials to danger, or soil or damage correspondence; (b) articles liable to customs duty (apart from the exceptions laid down in Article 41) as well as samples sent in quantities with the intention of avoiding the payment of this duty; (c) opium, morphine, cocaine, and other narcotics; (d) articles of which the importation or the circulation is forbidden in the country of destination; O) living animals, except: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. bees, leeches and silk-worms; 2. parasites and destroyers of noxious insects used for the purpose of controlling these insects and exchanged between officially recognized institutions; (f) explosive, inflammable or dangerous substances; (g) obscene or immoral articles.	To be treated according to the internal regulations of the Administration which discovers them; nevertheless, articles indicated under (c) may, in no case, be sent forward to destination, or delivered to the addressees, or returned to origin. To be destroyed on the spot by the Administration which discovers them.

2. If packets wrongly admitted to the post are neither returned to origin nor delivered to the addressee, the Administration of origin must be advised exactly how the packets have been treated.

3. The right is, moreover, reserved to every country to refuse to convey à découvert over its territory articles other than letters and postcards, in regard to which the legal requirements which regulate the conditions of their publication or circulation in that country have not been complied with. These articles must be returned to the Administration of the country of origin.

ARTICLE 50. Methods of Prepayment

1. Prepayment of postage is effected either by means of postage stamps valid in the country of origin for the correspondence of private individuals, or by means of impressions of stamping machines, officially adopted and working under the immediate control of the Administration, or, in the case of printed papers, by means of printed impressions or by any other process when such a system is authorised by the internal regulations of the Administration of origin.

2. The following are considered as duly prepaid: reply postcards bearing postage stamps, impressed or affixed, of the country of issue, articles properly prepaid for their first transmission and on which complementary postage has been paid before their redirection, as well as newspapers or packets of newspapers and periodicals of which the address bears the words "Abonnements-poste" and which are sent in virtue of the Agreement for subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals.

ARTICLE 51. Prepayment of Postage on Board Ship

Correspondence posted on the high seas in the letter box on board a ship or handed to postal officials on board or to the commanders of ships may, in the absence of different arrangements between the Administrations concerned, be prepaid by means of the postage stamps and according to the tariff of the country to which the said ship belongs or by which it is maintained. If the posting on board takes place during the stay at one of the two terminal points of the voyage or at any intermediate port of call, prepayment is valid only if it is effected by means of the postage stamps and according to the tariff of the country in the waters of which the ship happens to be.

ARTICLE 52. Exemptions from Postal Charges

1. The following are exempt from all postal charges:

Correspondence on Postal Service exchanged between Postal Administrations, between these Administrations and the International Bureau, between post offices of Union countries, and between these offices and Administrations, as well as correspondence of which the free transmission is expressly provided for in the Convention, the Agreements, and their Detailed Regulations.

2. With the exception of articles marked with a trade charge, correspondence intended for prisoners of war or despatched by them is also exempt from all postal charges, not only in the countries of origin and destination, but in intermediate countries.

3. The same privilege is accorded to correspondence concerning prisoners of war, despatched or received, either directly by, or through the agency of, the Central Agency of information regarding prisoners of war prescribed by Article 79 of the International Convention of Geneva of 27th July, 1929, or the Information Bureaux established on behalf of such persons in belligerent countries or in neutral countries which have received belligerents on their territories.

4. Belligerents received and interned in a neutral country, as well as civilians of enemy nationality detained in camps or in civil prisons, are treated like prisoners of war, properly so-called, in so far as the application of the above-mentioned rules is concerned.

ARTICLE 53. International Reply Coupons¹²

1. International reply coupons are on sale in the countries of the Union.

2. The selling price of a reply coupon is fixed by the Administrations concerned, but may not be less than 28 centimes or the equivalent in the money of the country of issue.

3. Each coupon is exchangeable in any country for a stamp or stamps representing the postage on a single-rate letter for abroad originating in that country.

4. Moreover, any country has the right to demand that the coupons and the correspondence to be prepaid by means of the stamps received in exchange for these coupons shall be presented at the same time.

ARTICLE 54. Withdrawal of Correspondence. Alteration of Address¹³

1. The sender of a postal packet can have it withdrawn from the post or have its address altered, so long as the article has not been delivered to the addressee, or it does not happen to fall within the provisions of Article 49, or Customs treatment does not bring to light any irregularity.

2. The request to this effect is sent by post or telegraph at the expense of the sender, who must pay, for each request, a fee not exceeding 40 centimes. If the request is to be sent by air mail or by telegraph, the sender must pay in addition the air mail surcharge or the charge for the telegram.

¹² See Protocol VI, p. 905.

¹³ See Protocol I, p. 904.

3. Only one of the fees or charges prescribed by § 2 is charged in respect of a request for withdrawal of correspondence or alteration of address concerning several packets posted at the same time by the same sender to the same addressee.

4. A request for simple correction of address (without alteration of the name or description of the addressee) may be addressed directly to the office of destination by the sender, that is to say, without compliance with the formalities and without payment of the charges prescribed by §§ 2 and 3.

ARTICLE 55. Redirection. Undelivered Correspondence

1. If the addressee changes his address, the correspondence is redirected to him, unless the sender has forbidden redirection, by means of a note to that effect on the address side of the correspondence, in a language known in the country of destination.

2. Correspondence which is not delivered must be returned immediately to the country of origin.

3. The period of retention for correspondence held at the disposal of the addressees or addressed poste restante is fixed by the rules of the country of destination. This period may not, however, exceed one month as a general rule, except in particular cases when the Administration of destination considers it necessary to prolong the period up to a maximum of two months. The return to the country of origin must take place within a shorter period if the sender has requested it by a note on the address side in a language known in the country of destination.

4. Printed papers of no value are not returned to origin, unless the sender, by means of a note on the outside of the article, in a language known in the country of destination, has asked for their return. Registered printed papers must always be returned.

5. No supplementary postage is charged for the redirection of correspondence from country to country or its return to the country of origin, apart from the exceptions provided for in the Detailed Regulations.

6. Correspondence which is redirected or which is undeliverable is delivered to the addressees or senders, against payment of the charges raised on departure or arrival or in course of transmission in consequence of redirection after the first transmission, without prejudice to the repayment of customs duty or other special charges which the country of destination does not cancel.

7. In case of redirection to another country or of non-delivery, the poste restante fee, the customs clearance fee, the commission fee, the complementary express fee, and the special fee for delivery of small packets to the addressees are cancelled.

ARTICLE 56. Applications and Enquiries

1. For an application or an enquiry in respect of any postal packet a fee not exceeding 40 centimes may be charged. When an application or an enquiry is to be sent by air mail at the request of the interested party, the same fee is charged, and, in addition, the appropriate air mail surcharge, or if the reply is to be returned by air mail, double this surcharge. If request is made for transmission by telegraph, the charge for the telegram is collected in addition to the prescribed fee.

2. Only one of the fees or surcharges prescribed by § 1 is charged in respect of an application or an enquiry concerning several packets posted at the same time at the same office by the same sender to the same addressee.

3. As regards registered articles, no fee is charged if the sender has already paid the special fee for an advice of delivery.

4. An application is only entertained if made within a year, counting from the day following the posting of the article. Every Administration is bound, however, to furnish information, if requested by another Administration, after this lapse of time, concerning packets despatched within two years.

5. Every Administration is obliged to accept applications and enquiries concerning articles posted on the territory of other Administrations.

6. When an application or an enquiry has arisen through a service error, the fee charged in this connection is repaid.

CHAPTER II.—REGISTERED ARTICLES

ARTICLE 57. Charges¹⁴

1. The articles specified in Article 35 may be registered.

2. The charge on every registered article must be paid in advance. It is made up of:

(a) the postage ordinarily prepayable on the packet according to its class;

(b) a fixed registration fee of 40 centimes at most.

3. The registration fee on the reply half of a reply-paid postcard can only be validly prepaid by the sender of this half.

4. A receipt must be issued free of charge to the sender of a registered article at the time of posting.

5. Countries prepared to undertake risks arising from causes beyond control are authorised to collect a special charge not exceeding 40 centimes for each registered article.

6. Unpaid or insufficiently prepaid registered articles which have been incorrectly forwarded to the country of destination are liable to a charge, to be paid by the addressee, equal in amount to the deficient postage.

ARTICLE 58. Advice of Delivery

1. The sender of a registered article may request an advice of delivery by paying, at the time of posting, a fixed fee not exceeding 30 centimes.

2. An advice of delivery may be applied for after the posting of the article within the period of one year and on payment of the fee prescribed for applications by Article 56.

ARTICLE 59. Responsibility

1. Except in the cases provided for in Article 60, hereafter, Administrations are responsible for the loss of registered articles.

2. The sender is entitled, in respect of the loss, to compensation, of which the amount is fixed at 25 francs per article.

3. Administrations assume no responsibility for articles seized by the Customs authorities.

¹⁴ See Protocol VII, p. 905.

ARTICLE 60. Exceptions to the Principle of Responsibility

Administrations are relieved from all responsibility for the loss of registered articles:

(a) in circumstances beyond control; the responsibility, however, still attaches to the Administration of origin which has undertaken to cover risks arising from causes beyond control (Article 57, § 5). The country responsible for the loss must decide, according to its internal legislation, whether the loss is due to circumstances constituting a cause beyond control; these circumstances are communicated to the country of origin, for information;

(b) which they cannot account for in consequence of the destruction of official documents through cause beyond control, provided that their responsibility has not been proved otherwise;

(c) of which the contents fall within the prohibitions specified in Articles 36, §§ 6 and 8 (c), and 49, S 1;

(d) when the sender has not made any application within the period of one year prescribed by Article 56.

ARTICLE 61. Cessation of Responsibility

Administrations cease to be responsible for registered articles which have been delivered under the conditions prescribed by their internal regulations for packets of the same class.

ARTICLE 62. Fixing of Responsibility

1. Until the contrary is proved, responsibility for the loss of a registered article rests with the Administration which, having received the article without making any observation, and being furnished with all the materials for inquiry prescribed by the regulations, cannot establish delivery to the addressee, or regular transfer to the following Administration, as the case may be.

2. Until the contrary is proved, an Administration, whether intermediate or of destination, is relieved of all responsibility:

(a) when it has carried out the provisions of Article 150, § 4, of the Detailed Regulations;

(b) when it can prove that it has not been notified of the application until after the destruction of its service documents relating to the article under enquiry, the period of retention prescribed by Article 169 of the Detailed Regulations having expired. This reservation does not affect the rights of the applicant.

3. Nevertheless, if the loss has occurred in course of conveyance without its being possible to ascertain on the territory or in the service of which country the loss took place, the Administrations concerned bear the loss in equal shares.

4. When a registered article has been lost in circumstances beyond control, the Administration on the territory or in the service of which the loss has occurred is only responsible to the Administration of origin if both countries undertake to cover risks arising from causes beyond control.

5. The customs duty and other charges, of which it has not been possible to secure cancellation, are borne by the Administrations responsible for the loss.

6. The Administration which has made payment of compensation takes over the rights of the person who has received it, up to the amount of this compensation, in any action which may be taken against the addressee, the sender, or third parties.

7. If a registered article considered as lost, or a part thereof, is subsequently found, the sender and the addressee are informed of this fact.

8. The sender is, in addition, informed that he may take possession of the article within a period of three months, against repayment of the amount of the compensation received. If the sender does not claim the article within that period, the addressee is notified that he may take delivery of it within a period of three months, against payment of the amount paid to the sender.

9. If the sender or the addressee takes delivery of the packet against repayment of the amount of the compensation, that amount is refunded to the Administration, or Administrations, by which the loss has been borne.

10. If the sender and the addressee decline to take delivery, the article is considered as undeliverable.

ARTICLE 63. Payment of Compensation

The payment of the compensation must be undertaken by the Administration to which the office of posting is subordinate, subject to its right to make a claim on the Administration responsible.

ARTICLE 64. Period for Payment of Compensation

1. The payment of compensation must take place as soon as possible, and at the latest within six months from the day following the date of the application. This period is extended to nine months in relations with distant countries.

2. If the Administration of the country of posting does not accept responsibility in cases of loss through a cause beyond control it may exceptionally postpone settlement of the compensation beyond the period mentioned in § 1, when the question whether the loss of the article is due to a case of this nature has not been decided.

3. The Administration of origin is authorised to settle with the sender on account of the Administration, whether intermediate or of destination, which, duly informed of the claim, has allowed three months to pass, or six months in relations with distant countries, without settling the matter. A longer period is permitted if the loss appears to be due to circumstances beyond control; these circumstances must, in all cases, be communicated to the Administration of origin.

ARTICLE 65. Repayment of Compensation to the Administration of Origin

1. The Administration responsible or on whose account payment is made in accordance with Article 64 is bound to repay to the Administration of origin within a period of six months, reckoning from the date of despatch of the notice of payment, the amount of the compensation actually paid to the sender. This period is extended to nine months in relations with distant countries.

2. If the compensation is to be borne by several Administrations in accordance with Article 62, the whole of the compensation due must be paid to the Administration of origin within the period mentioned in § 1, by the first Administration, which, having duly received the packet under enquiry, is unable to prove its regular transfer to the next service. It rests with this Administration to recover from the other Administrations responsible their share of the amount of compensation paid to the sender.

3. The repayment is made free of cost to the creditor Administration by means of either a money order, a cheque or a draft payable at sight in the capital or a commercial centre in the creditor country, or in coin current in that country.

4. When responsibility is admitted, as well as in the case provided for in Article 64, § 3, the amount of indemnity may be recovered from the country responsible by means of an Account, either directly, or through the intermediary of an Administration which exchanges Accounts regularly with the Administration responsible.

5. After the period of six months, the sum due to the Administration of origin bears interest, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, counting from the day of expiry of the said period. This period is extended to nine months in relations with distant countries.

6. The Administration of origin may only claim repayment from the Administration responsible within a period of one year counting from the date of despatch of the notification of the loss, or, if the case arises, from the date of expiry of the period prescribed by Article 64, S 3.

7. The Administration whose responsibility is duly proved and which has at first declined to pay the compensation must bear all additional charges resulting from the unwarranted delay in payment.

8. Administrations may come to an agreement to liquidate periodically the compensation which they have paid to the senders and which they have agreed to be justified.

CHAPTER III.—ALLOCATION OF POSTAGE COLLECTIONS. TRANSIT RATES

ARTICLE 66. Allocation of Postage Collections

Except in the cases expressly provided for by the Convention, each Administration keeps the whole of the charges which it has collected.

ARTICLE 67. Transit Rates¹⁵

1. Correspondence exchanged in closed mails between two Administrations, by means of the services of one or more other Administrations (third services), is subject to transit charges to be paid to each of the countries traversed or whose services take part in the conveyance, as indicated in the following table:

PER KILOGRAMME
										of letters and postcards Fr.c.	of other articles Fr.c.
1. LAND TRANSITS
Up to 1,000 kilometres										0.60	0.08
Above 1,000 up to 2,000 km.										0.80	0.12
"	2,000	"	3,000	"	1.20	0.16
"	3,000	"	6,000	"	2.00	0.24
"	6,000	"	9,000	"	2.80	0.32
" 9,000 kilometres										3.60	0.40
2. SEA TRANSITS
Up to 300 nautical miles										0.60	0.08
Above 300 up to 1,500 nautical miles										1.60	0.20
Between Europe and North America										2.40	0.32
Above 1,500 up to 6,000 nautical miles										3.20	0.40
Above 6,000 nautical miles										4.80	0.60

2. The transit rates for sea conveyance over a distance not exceeding 300 nautical miles are fixed at one-third of the amounts specified in §1, if the Administration concerned already receives, on account of the mails conveyed, the payment applicable to land transit.

3. In the case of sea conveyance performed by two or more Administrations, the charges paid for the entire sea transit may not exceed 4 francs 80 per kilogramme of letters and postcards, and 60 centimes per kilogramme of other articles. Should occasion arise, these maximum amounts are shared between the Administrations participating in the service, in proportion to the distances traversed.

4. In the absence of any other arrangement, the direct sea conveyance between two countries by means of vessels maintained by one of them is considered as a third service, as well as conveyance between two offices of the same country, by means of services maintained by another country.

5. Small packets, newspapers or packets of newspapers and periodicals sent in virtue of the Agreement concerning subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, as well as insured boxes despatched under the Agreement concerning insured letters and boxes, are considered as "other articles" as regards transit.

6. Mis-sent mails are regarded, in respect of the payment of transit charges, as if they had followed their normal route.

ARTICLE 68. Exemption from Transit Charges

The correspondence exempt from postage mentioned in Article 52, reply postcards returned to the country of origin, redirected articles, undelivered articles, advices of delivery, postal money orders, and all other documents relative to the postal service, e.g., communications concerning the postal cheque service, are exempt from all charges for land or sea transit.

ARTICLE 69. Extraordinary Services

The transit rates specified in Article 67 do not apply to conveyance by means of extraordinary services specially established or maintained by one Administration at the request of one or more other Administrations. The conditions of this class of conveyance are regulated by mutual consent between the Administrations concerned.

ARTICLE 70. Payments and Accounting

1. The transit charges are borne by the Administration of the country of origin.

2. The general accounting for these charges is based on data obtained from statistics taken once in every three years, during a period of 14 days. This period is extended to 28 days for mails exchanged less than six times a week by the services maintained by any one country. The Detailed Regulations fix the period of the statistics and the duration of their application.

3. When the annual balance between two Administrations does not exceed 25 francs, the debtor Administration is exempt from all payment.

4. Every Administration is authorised to submit for the consideration of a Commission of arbitrators the results of statistics which, in its opinion, differ too much from reality. The arrangements for arbitration are as laid down in Article 12.

5. The arbitrators are empowered to fix in a fair and reasonable manner the transit charges proper to be paid.

ARTICLE 71. Exchange of Closed Mails with Ships of War

1. Closed mails may be exchanged between the post offices of any one of the contracting countries and the commanding officers of naval divisions or ships of war of the same country stationed abroad, or between the commanding officer of one of those naval divisions or one of those ships of war and the commanding officer of another division or of another ship of the same country, through the medium of the land or sea services maintained by other countries.

2. Correspondence of every description enclosed in these mails must consist exclusively of such as is addressed to or sent by the officers and crews of the ships to or from which the mails are forwarded; the rates and conditions of despatch applicable to them are settled, according to its internal regulations, by the Postal Administration of the country to which the ships belong.

3. In the absence of any contrary arrangement, the Administration of the country to which the ships of war belong is accountable to the intermediate Administrations for the transit charges on the mails calculated in accordance with the provisions of Article 67.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 72. Non-Observance of Principle of Freedom of Transit

When a country does not observe the provisions of Article 28, relating to freedom of transit, Administrations have the right to suppress the postal service with that country. They must give previous notice of this measure, by telegraph, to the Administrations concerned.

ARTICLE 73. Undertakings Regarding Penal Measures

The contracting countries undertake to adopt, or to propose to their respective legislatures, the necessary measures:

- (a) for punishing the counterfeiting of postage stamps, even if withdrawn from circulation, of international reply coupons and of postal identity cards;

- (b) for punishing the use or the putting into circulation:

- (1) of counterfeit postage stamps (even if withdrawn from circulation) or used postage stamps, as well as of counterfeit impressions of stamping or printing machines or of impressions already used;
- (2) of counterfeit international reply coupons;
- (3) of counterfeit postal identity cards;

- (c) for punishing the fraudulent use of genuine postal identity cards;

- (d) for prohibiting and suppressing the fraudulent manufacture and the putting into circulation of impressed and adhesive stamps in use in the postal service, forged or imitated in such a manner that they could be mistaken for the impressed and adhesive stamps issued by the Administration of any one of the contracting countries;

- (e) for preventing and, if necessary, for punishing the insertion in postal packets of opium, morphine, cocaine or other narcotics, as well as explosive or easily inflammable substances, unless their insertion is expressly authorised by the Convention and Agreements.

FINAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 74. Entry into Force and Duration of the Convention

The present Convention shall come into force on the 1st of July, 1948, and shall remain in operation for an indefinite period.

In faith whereof, the plenipotentiaries of the Governments of the above-named countries have signed the present Convention in a single copy which shall remain in the Archives of the Government of the French Republic and of which a copy shall be delivered to each party.

Done at Paris, the 5th of July, 1947.

FINAL PROTOCOL OF THE CONVENTION

At the moment of proceeding to sign the Universal Postal Convention concluded this day, the undersigned plenipotentiaries have agreed as follows:

I.—WITHDRAWAL OF CORRESPONDENCE. ALTERATION OF ADDRESS

The provisions of Article 54 do not apply to Great Britain or to those British Dominions, Colonies and Protectorates whose internal legislation does not permit the withdrawal or the alteration of the address of correspondence at the request of the sender.

II.—EQUIVALENTS: MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM LIMITS

1. Each country has the right to increase up to 40 per cent. or to reduce by as much as 20 per cent. the postage rates prescribed by Article 36, § 1, as indicated in the following table [on the page opposite].

2. The rates adopted must, as far as possible, maintain the same proportions to one another as the basic rates, each Administration being empowered to round up or to round down its rates to suit its currency.

3. The rates adopted by a country apply to the charges to be collected on unpaid or insufficiently prepaid inward correspondence.

	LOWER LIMIT (gold value) centimes	HIGHER LIMIT (gold value) centimes Letters:
first unit of weight	16	28
each succeeding unit	9.6	16.8
Postcards:
single	9.6	16.8
reply-paid	19.2	33.6
Commercial papers:
first unit of weight	6.4	11.2
each succeeding unit	3.2	5.6
minimum charge	16	28
Printed papers:
first unit of weight	6.4	11.2
each succeeding unit	3.2	5.6
Blind literature, per 1,000 grammes	1.6	2.8
Samples of merchandise:
first unit of weight	6.4	11.2
each succeeding unit	3.2	5.6
Small packets:
per 50 grammes	6.4	11.2
minimum charge	32	56
"Phonopost" packets:
first unit of weight	12	21
each succeeding unit	8	14

III.—EXCEPTION AS REGARDS THE APPLICATION OF THE TARIFF FOR COMMERCIAL PAPERS, PRINTED PAPERS AND SAMPLES OF MERCHANDISE

Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 36, countries have the right not to apply to commercial papers, printed papers and samples the rate fixed for the first unit of weight, and to maintain for that weight unit the rate of 4 centimes, with a minimum of 8 centimes for samples of merchandise.

IV.—OUNCE AVOIRDUPOIS

As an exceptional measure, it is agreed that countries which, by reason of their internal regulations, are unable to adopt the metric-decimal system of weight, are empowered to substitute for it the ounce avoirdupois (28.3465 grammes) taking one ounce as equivalent to 20 grammes for letters and "phonopost" packets, and two ounces as equivalent to 50 grammes for commercial papers, printed papers, blind literature, samples and small packets.

V.—POSTING OF CORRESPONDENCE ABROAD

No country is bound to forward, nor to deliver to the addressees, correspondence which the senders domiciled in its territory post or cause to be posted in a foreign country with the object of profiting by the lower rates in force there. The rule is applied without distinction both to correspondence made up in the country where the sender resides and then carried across the frontier, and to correspondence made up in a foreign country. The Administration concerned is empowered either to return to origin the articles in question, or to tax them at its inland rates. The method of collecting the charges is left to its discretion.

VI.—INTERNATIONAL REPLY COUPONS

Administrations have the right not to undertake, or to limit, the sale of international reply coupons.

VII.—REGISTRATION FEE

Countries which cannot fix at 40 centimes the registration fee prescribed by Article 57, § 2, are authorised to charge a fee which may amount to 50 centimes or to the charge fixed for their inland service.

VIII.—AIR SERVICES

1. The provisions regarding the conveyance of letter mails by air are annexed to the Universal Postal Convention and are considered as forming an integral part of it and of its Detailed Regulations.

2. But, notwithstanding the general rules of the Convention, the modification of these provisions may be considered from time to time by a Conference composed of the representatives of the Administrations directly concerned.

3. This Conference may be summoned by the intermediary of the International Bureau at the request of at least three of these Administrations.

4. The whole of the provisions proposed by this Conference must be submitted, by the intermediary of the International Bureau, to the vote of the countries of the Union. The decision will be taken by a majority vote.

IX.—EXCEPTION AS REGARDS THE FREEDOM OF TRANSIT OF SMALL PACKETS

In modification of the provisions of Article 28, the Postal Administration of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is authorised not to permit the transit of small packets through its territories on the understanding that this restriction is applied without distinction to all the countries of the Union.

X.—SPECIAL TRANSIT CHARGES FOR CONVEYANCE BY THE TRANS-SIBERIAN AND THE TRANSANDINE RAILWAYS

1. In the modification of the provisions of Article 67,

§ 1 (Table), the Postal Administration of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is authorized to collect transit charges for the Trans-Siberian Railway for both routes (Manchuria or Vladivostok) at the rate of Fr. 4.50 per kilogramme for letters and postcards and Fr. 0.50 per kilogramme for other articles for distances exceeding 6,000 kilometres.

2. The Administration of the Argentine Republic is authorised to collect a fee of 30 centimes per kilogramme over and above the transit rates mentioned in Article 67, § 1 (1.), of the Convention, in respect of correspondence of all kinds forwarded in transit by the Argentine section of the Transandine Railway.

XI.—SPECIAL TRANSIT CONDITIONS FOR AFGHANISTAN

Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 67, §1, the Administration of Afghanistan is authorised provisionally, by reason of its special difficulties as regards means of transport and communication, to effect the transit of closed mails and à découvert correspondence across its territory on conditions specially agreed with the Administrations concerned.

XII.—SPECIAL WAREHOUSING CHARGES AT ADEN

As an exceptional measure, the Administration of Aden is authorised to collect a fee of 40 centimes per bag for all mails warehoused at Aden, provided that this Administration does not receive payment for a land or sea transit in respect of the mails in question.

XIII.—SPECIAL TRANSHIPMENT CHARGES

Exceptionally, the Portuguese Administration is authorised to collect 40 centimes per bag on all the mails transhipped at the Port of Lisbon.

XIV.—PROTOCOL LEFT OPEN TO COUNTRIES NOT REPRESENTED

The Protocol remains open to the countries of the Union not represented at the Congress, in order to permit them to accede to the Convention and to the Agreements there concluded, or only to one or other of them.

XV.—PROTOCOL LEFT OPEN TO COUNTRIES REPRESENTED FOR SIGNATURE AND ACCESSION

The Protocol remains open to those countries whose representatives have to-day signed only the Convention, or only a certain number of the Agreements drawn up by the Congress, in order to permit them to accede to the other Agreements signed this day, or to one or other of them.

XVI.—PERIOD FOR THE NOTIFICATION OF ACCESSIONS

The accessions referred to in Articles XIV and XV must be notified diplomatically by the respective Governments to the Government of the French Republic, and by it to the other States of the Union. The period allowed to the said Governments for this notification will expire on the 1st of July, 1948.

XVII.—PROTOCOL LEFT OPEN TO COUNTRIES TEMPORARILY PRECLUDED FROM ACCEDING TO THE CONVENTION AND THE AGREEMENTS

1. Spain, Morocco (Spanish Zone) and the whole of the Spanish Colonies, temporarily precluded from acceding to the Convention and the Agreements in consequence of a decision of the XIIth Universal Postal Congress taken in conformity with the resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations of the 12th December, 1946, may accede to these Acts, without submitting to the formalities prescribed by Article 3, as soon as that resolution is repealed or becomes objectless.

2. Germany, Japan and Korea, temporarily precluded from acceding to the Convention and the Agreements, may accede to these Acts, without submitting to the formalities prescribed by Article 3, when the time is considered opportune by the responsible authority.

3. The accessions mentioned in §§ 1 and 2 must be notified diplomatically by the Governments concerned to the Government of the French Republic and by it to the other States of the Union.

In faith whereof, the undermentioned plenipotentiaries have drawn up the present Protocol which shall have the same force and validity as if its provisions were inserted in the text itself of the Convention, and they have signed it in a single copy which shall remain in the Archives of the Government of the French Republic and of which a copy shall be delivered to each party.

Done at Paris, the 5th of July, 1947.

ANNEX III

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION

PREAMBLE

In consideration of the obligations placed upon the United Nations by Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations, the United Nations and the Universal Postal Union agree as follows:

Article I

The United Nations recognizes the Universal Postal Union (hereinafter called the Union) as the specialized agency responsible for taking such action as may be appropriate under its basic instrument for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth therein.

ARTICLE II

RECIPROCAL REPRESENTATION

1. Representatives of the United Nations shall be invited to attend all the Union's congresses, administrative conferences and commissions, and to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of these meetings.

2. Representatives of the Union shall be invited to attend meetings of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (hereinafter called the Council), of its commissions and committees, and to participate, without vote, in the deliberations thereof with respect to items on the agenda in which the Union may be concerned.

3. Representatives of the Union shall be invited to attend the meetings of the General Assembly during which questions within the competence of the Union are under discussion, for purposes of consultation, and to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of the main committees of the General Assembly with respect to items concerning the Union.

4. Written statements presented by the Union shall be distributed by the Secretariat of the United Nations to the Members of the General Assembly, the Council and its commissions, and the Trusteeship Council, as appropriate. Similarly, written statements presented by the United Nations shall be distributed by the Union to its members.

Article III

PROPOSAL OF AGENDA ITEMS

Subject to such preliminary consultation as may be necessary, the Union shall include in the agenda of its congresses, administrative conferences or commissions, or, as the case may be, shall submit to its members in accordance with the provisions of the Universal Postal Convention, items proposed to it by the United Nations. Similarly, the Council, its commissions and committees, and the Trusteeship Council shall include in their agenda items proposed by the Union.

Article IV

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE UNITED NATIONS

1. The Union agrees to arrange for the submission as soon as possible, for appropriate action, to its congresses or its administrative conferences or commissions, or to its members, in conformity with the provisions of the Universal Postal Convention, of all formal recommendations which the United Nations may make to it. Such recommendations will be addressed to the Union and not directly to its members.

2. The Union agrees to enter into consultation with the United Nations, upon request, with respect to such recommendations, and in due course to report to the United Nations on the action taken by the Union or by its members to give effect to such recommendations, or on the other results of their consideration.

3. The Union will co-operate in whatever further measures may be necessary to make co-ordination of the activities of specialized agencies and those of the United Nations fully effective. In particular, it will co-operate with any body which the Council may establish for the purpose of facilitating such co-ordination and will furnish such information as may be required for the carrying out of this purpose.

Article V

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION AND DOCUMENTS

1. Subject to such arrangements as may be necessary for the safeguarding of confidential material, the fullest and promptest exchange of information and documents shall be made between the United Nations and the Union.

2. Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions of the preceding paragraph:

(a) The Union shall submit to the United Nations an annual report on its activities;

(b) The Union shall comply to the fullest extent practicable with any request which the United Nations may make for the furnishing of special reports, studies or information, subject to the conditions set forth in article XI;

(c) The Union shall furnish written advice on questions within its competence as may be requested by the Trusteeship Council;

(d) The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall, upon request, consult with the Director of the International Bureau of the Union regarding the provision to the Union of such information as may be of special interest to it.

Article VI

ASSISTANCE TO THE UNITED NATIONS

The Union agrees to co-operate with and to give assistance to the United Nations, its principal and subsidiary organs, so far as is consistent with the provisions of the Universal Postal Convention.

As regards the Members of the United Nations, the Union agrees that in accordance with Article 103 of the Charter no provision in the Universal Postal Convention or related agreements shall be construed as preventing or limiting any State in complying with its obligations to the United Nations.

Article VII

PERSONNEL ARRANGEMENTS

The United Nations and the Union agree to co-operate as necessary to ensure as much uniformity as possible in the conditions of employment of personnel, and to avoid competition in the recruitment of personnel.

Article VIII

STATISTICAL SERVICES

1. The United Nations and the Union agree to co-operate with a view to securing the greatest possible usefulness and utilization of statistical information and data.

2. The Union recognizes the United Nations as the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics serving the general purposes of international organizations.

3. The United Nations recognizes the Union as the appropriate agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics within its special sphere, without prejudice to the right of the United Nations to concern itself with such statistics so far as it may be essential for its own purposes or for the improvement of statistics throughout the world.

Article IX

ADMINISTRATIVE AND TECHNICAL SERVICES

1. The United Nations and the Union recognize the desirability, in the interests of the most efficient use of personnel and resources, of avoiding the establishment of competitive or overlapping services.

2. Arrangements shall be made between the United Nations and the Union with regard to the registration and deposit of official documents.

Article X

BUDGETARY ARRANGEMENTS

The annual budget of the Union shall be transmitted to the United Nations, and the General Assembly may make recommendations thereon to the Congress of the Union.

Article XI

FINANCING OF SPECIAL SERVICES

In the event of the Union being faced with the necessity of incurring substantial extra expense as a result of any request which the United Nations may make for special reports, studies or information in accordance with article V or with any other provisions of this agreement, consultation shall take place with a view to determining the most equitable manner in which such expense shall be borne.

Article XII

INTER-AGENCY AGREEMENTS

The Union will inform the Council of the nature and scope of any agreement between the Union and any specialized agency or other inter-governmental organization, and further agrees to inform the Council of the preparation of any such agreements.

Article XIII

LIAISON

1. The United Nations and the Union agree to the foregoing provisions in the belief that they will contribute to the maintenance of effective liaison between the two organizations. They affirm their intention of taking in agreement whatever measures may be necessary to this end.

2. The liaison arrangements provided for in this agreement shall apply, as far as is appropriate, to the relations between the Union and the United Nations, including its branch and regional offices.

Article XIV

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE AGREEMENT

The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the President of the Executive and Liaison Commission of the Union may enter into such supplementary arrangements for the implementation of this agreement as may be found desirable in the light of operating experience of the two organizations.

Article XV

ENTRY INTO FORCE

This agreement is annexed to the Universal Postal Convention concluded in Paris in 1947. It will come into force after approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations, and, at the earliest, at the same time as this Convention.

Article XVI

REVISION

On six months' notice given on either part, this agreement shall be subject to revision by agreement between the United Nations and the Union.

Paris, 4 July 1947.

VIII. The World Health Organization¹

A. ORIGIN

The Constitution providing for the establishment of a World Health Organization (WHO)² was adopted on July 22, 1946, by the International Health Conference, called for the purpose by the Economic and Social Council. There were 64 states, the Allied Control Authorities for Germany, Japan and Korea, respectively, and ten international organizations represented at the Conference, which met in New York from June 19 to July 22, 1946.

The Conference also established an Interim Commission³ to carry out essential international functions prior to the coming into being of the permanent Organization and to develop plans and proposals for the first World Health Assembly. The Interim Commission consisted of representatives of the following eighteen States elected by the Conference to act for all signatories to the Constitution: Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, Egypt, France, India, Liberia, Mexico, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela and Yugoslavia. The Interim Commission held its first meeting on July 19, 1946, and continued to function until dissolved by resolution of the first World Health Assembly.

On April 7, 1948, WHO came officially into being, 26 Members of the United Nations having accepted its Constitution.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The objective of WHO, as stated in Article 1 of its Constitution, is "the attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of health". The preamble defines health as "a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity".

The functions of the Organization necessary to attain this objective are enumerated in Article 2. In general, WHO is to serve as the co-ordinating authority on international health work, to maintain certain necessary international services, to promote and conduct research in the field of health and to promote improved standards of teaching in the health, medical and related professions. The following are among its other functions:

1. To assist governments, upon request, in strengthening health services;
2. To furnish appropriate technical assistance and, in emergencies, necessary aid upon the request or acceptance of governments;
3. To promote, in co-operation with other specialized agencies where necessary, the improvement of nutrition, housing, sanitation, recreation, economic or working conditions and other aspects of environmental hygiene;

4. To promote maternal and child health and welfare and to foster the ability to live harmoniously in a changing total environment;

5. To foster activities in the field of mental health, especially those affecting the harmony of human relations;

6. To assist in developing an informed public opinion among all peoples on matters of health.

¹ For further details on the origin of WHO and the early activities of the Interim Commission, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 789-93. See also the reports of the Interim Commission to the United Nations (E/593 and E/786), report of the Interim Commission to the First World Health Assembly, resolutions of the Health Assembly, reports of expert committees, and the report of the first session of the Executive Committee (EB2/1). C. ORGANIZATION

The main organs of WHO, as provided in its Constitution, are the World Health Assembly, the Executive Board and the Secretariat.

The World Health Assembly, in which all Members may be represented, meets at least once annually. It determines the policies of the Organization. It reviews the work of WHO and instructs the Executive Board in regard to matters upon which action, study, investigation or report may be considered desirable. Among its other duties, the Assembly is empowered to adopt regulations pertaining to international quarantine and sanitary measures, uniform standards and nomenclatures and various other questions of international importance in the health field.

New Members may be admitted into WHO, if they are Members of the United Nations, by accepting the Constitution. For other states to become Members the approval of their membership applications by a simple majority vote of the Health Assembly is required. The Constitution also provides that territories or groups of territories not responsible for the conduct of their international relations may be admitted as Associate Members by the Health Assembly upon application by the appropriate authority.

Decisions of the Organization on important questions, such as the adoption of conventions or agreements, the approval of agreements bringing WHO into relationship with other international organizations, and amendments to the Constitution, require a two-thirds majority of the Members present and voting. Decisions on other questions are taken by a simple majority vote.

The Executive Board consists of eighteen technically qualified persons designated by eighteen Members elected by the Health Assembly, taking into account an equitable geographical distribution. Members are normally elected for three-year terms, but to ensure continuity it is provided in the WHO Constitution that six of the Members elected by the first Assembly should hold office for one year, six for two and six for the full three-year term. The Board meets at least twice a year. Its chief function is to implement decisions and policies of the Assembly, but it may also take emergency measures within the functions and financial resources of WHO in order to deal with events requiring immediate action, such as epidemics.

The Secretariat is headed by a Director-General, appointed by the Assembly on the nomination of the Executive Board. The Director-General appoints the technical and administrative staff required and supervises their work.

Committees composed of experts were established to further the work of WHO in specific fields. There were, as of September 21, 1948, ten such Expert Committees, on: Malaria, Tuberculosis, Venereal Infections, Maternal and Child Welfare, Health Statistics, International Epidemiology and Quarantine, Biological Standardization, the Unification of Pharmacopoeias, Habit-forming Drugs, and Insecticides. The establishment of other expert committees — on industrial hygiene, the hygiene of seafarers, parasitic diseases and virus diseases — was authorized by the Health Assembly, but funds had not yet been provided. Study groups on cholera, smallpox, plague, typhus, and trachoma were jointly set up by WHO and the Office international d'hygiène publique. Joint Committees were operating — one on Nutrition with FAO and one on Health Policy with the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF). The establishment of other joint committees was planned—for example with ILO on industrial hygiene and on the hygiene of seafarers. A standing Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations was established by the Board to carry out negotiations with such organizations.

The Organization has its headquarters in Geneva and maintains a technical liaison office in New York.

The following regional organizations were provided for by the first Health Assembly as soon as a majority of WHO Members in these areas agreed to participate: Eastern Mediterranean, Western Pacific, Southeast Asia, European, African and American. Regional organizations, each consisting of a regional committee and a regional office, are to keep informed of the various requirements in their respective areas and implement the health programs decided upon by WHO. Regional committees, composed of WHO Members and Associate Members in the area, are to formulate the policies and supervise the work of the regional offices.

A special temporary administrative office for Europe, to assist in the health rehabilitation of war-devastated areas, was authorized by the first session of the Executive Board. It was decided that this office should be established on January 1, 1949, after a meeting of European Members of WHO.

Delegates from Afghanistan, Burma, Ceylon, India and Siam agreed to meet in New Delhi in October 1948, to discuss the establishment of the Southeast Asia regional organization and programs for raising the health standards in individual countries of the area.⁴

The existing Sanitary Bureau at Alexandria, which is to be integrated with WHO, is to serve as the WHO regional organization in the Eastern Mediterranean area.

The American area is to be served by the Pan American Sanitary Organization, which is to be incorporated as the WHO regional organization when fourteen of its 21 members have ratified the WHO Constitution.⁵ The WHO regional organization for the Americas is to co-operate with the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America to ensure that adequate health measures are provided in the area concurrently with economic development. Similar co-operation is to be carried out by WHO with other regional United Nations organizations.

D. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

The Interim Commission held three sessions during this period, in July and in November 1946, and during 1947 from March 31 to April 12.

On October 16, 1946, the Interim Commission assumed the responsibilities of the Health Organization of the League of Nations concerned with biological standardization and epidemiological reporting. In April 1947 it began operating the Singapore Epidemiological Intelligence Station. The epidemiological services of UNRRA in connection with the International Sanitary Conventions of 1944 for maritime and aerial navigation were transferred to the Interim Commission on December 1, 1946. Numerous technical responsibilities of the Office international d'hygiène publique, relating to the administration and revision of existing sanitary conventions, were also taken over by the Interim Commission.

As a result of the transfer of UNRRA's health activities in Europe as from January 1, 1947, and in the Far East as from April 1, the Interim Commission continued field service programs in Austria, Byelorussian S.S.R., China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Korea, Philippines, Poland, Ukrainian S.S.R. and Yugoslavia. These services included funds for fellowships, visiting lecturers, and the acquisition of medical literature, as well as mission operations in Greece and Italy for the control of tuberculosis and malaria, and in China and Ethiopia to deal with special health problems in those countries.

Other activities undertaken by the Interim Commission before July 1, 1947, included, inter alia, preparatory work in connection with the international lists of diseases and causes of death, and special studies on venereal diseases, infant mortality and biological standardization.

E. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

During this period the Interim Commission held three sessions: its fourth, from August 30 to September 13, 1947; its fifth, from January 22 to February 7, 1948; and its sixth and final session, from June 18 to 23, 1948. At its fifth session, the Interim Commission felt assured that the required number of states would shortly accept the WHO Constitution, and therefore decided to convene the first World Health Assembly in Geneva on June 24, 1948.

The Health Assembly met in Geneva from June 24 to July 24, 1948. It elected the states to designate the members of the Executive Board, which then held its first session in Geneva, from July 16 to 26, 1948.

On the nomination of the Executive Board, the ⁴ This organization was established in New Delhi on January 1, 1949.

⁵ This condition was fulfilled early in 1949.

Assembly unanimously appointed Brock Chisholm (Canada) as Director-General of WHO for a five-year term of office. Dr. Chisholm had served as Executive Secretary of the Interim Commission since July 1946.

The Assembly approved on July 10, 1948, the agreement⁶ establishing WHO's relationship with the United Nations. This action brought the agreement into force, since it had previously been approved by the United Nations General Assembly on November 15, 1947.

The Assembly considered reports prepared by the Interim Commission on its activities since its inception and on a program of work for the permanent Organization.

The Health Assembly decided on the regional organization of WHO (see above) and drew up a program for the full Organization.

The Interim Commission had recommended that the work of WHO be directed primarily to campaigns for reducing the incidence of malaria, tuberculosis and venereal diseases, which, it was considered, could be efficiently controlled through international action, and to the improvement of maternal and child health throughout the world. The Assembly added to these programs the improvement of nutrition and of environmental sanitation. It established the policies WHO was to follow in carrying out these six campaigns, which would be undertaken in 1949 and developed over succeeding years, and recommended in each instance that governments take preventive, curative, legislative, social and other measures necessary to their success.

The Assembly approved activities on a more limited scale to deal with other medical and health problems. These include: the organization of public-health administrations; the control of five parasitic diseases, including Schistosomiasis and filariasis; the control of four virus diseases — poliomyelitis, rabies, influenza and trachoma; and activities relating to mental health, alcoholism and drug addiction.

The Interim Commission had previously prepared a survey of the size and strength of public health services in various countries and on national resources for the training of staff for these services. It had also made a preliminary survey of alcoholism and in 1948 began preliminary work with respect to the incidence, control and treatment of Schistosomiasis, which incapacitates millions of persons annually in the agricultural regions of Africa, Asia and South America.

An outline of the principal activities of the Interim Commission and WHO from July 1, 1947, to September 21, 1948, is given below.

1. Malaria

The Interim Commission decided that malaria, which attacks hundreds of millions of persons each year, causing the death of approximately 3,000,000 annually, was of sufficient importance to warrant immediate international action for its control. It accordingly presented for the approval of the Health Assembly a general plan for world malaria control prepared by its Expert Committee on Malaria.

Assistance in carrying out programs begun by UNRRA for malaria control and for the eradication of the anopheline mosquito in Greece and Italy was continued by WHO missions operating in those countries. As a result of DDT spraying and other control measures carried out in Italy and Sicily since 1946, 93 deaths from malaria were recorded for 1947 as compared with 285 in 1946 and 386 in 1945; it was hoped that by the end of 1949, malaria would have been completely wiped out in Italy. In Greece the program has reduced the incidence of malaria, which had previously averaged one million cases annually, by more than 80 per cent. It is estimated that the malaria control program in Greece has saved more than 30,000,000 man-days in agricultural work alone.

At the request of UNICEF, WHO is providing technical assistance and guidance in connection with anti-malaria projects, financed by UNICEF, to be undertaken in certain Far Eastern countries, including Siam and Indo-China.

The Organization also supplies governments, on request, with medical literature and information concerning the latest scientific developments for the prevention and treatment of malaria and gives expert advice concerning national control programs.

In its world-wide campaign to control malaria, WHO will undertake similar measures. It is selecting the areas for its operation on the basis of : (1) the feasibility of effective control; and (2) the potential increase in food production, in co-operation with FAO, since the disease is one of the main factors affecting agricultural development. According to the policies laid down by the Executive Board at its first session, in July 1948, WHO is to assist governments on request, through its regional organizations, in setting up permanent malaria control services suited to local needs. It is to provide individual experts and operational demonstration teams to advise and assist governments in developing local and national programs; these teams are to remain in the assigned areas for at least two years. The Board decided that WHO should form three such teams as soon as possible. The Organization is to assist in a training program by providing expert lecturers on request to establish schools and fellowships for training in malariaology. It is also to assist in educating the public, through various means, on the subject of malaria and its control.

In view of the effectiveness of DDT, the Board recommended that its production and distribution be stimulated. It requested the Director-General to refer to the appropriate body of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations the questions of regional production and of the waiver of customs duties to permit wider distribution.

Finally, the Board made recommendations with respect to the treatment of malaria through drug administration and decided that additional research was required in both the treatment and eradication of the disease.

2. Tuberculosis

It is estimated that the annual mortality from tuberculosis is between four and five million and that between forty and fifty million persons annually contract the disease. The Interim Commission recognized that, since tuberculosis had reached epidemic proportions in many areas of the world, international measures were required for its control. At its fifth session in January and February 1948, the Commission decided on a program to provide fellowships to train medical officers in administration, epidemiology, and laboratory and clinical work; to provide demonstration field-teams to various countries on request; to assist in developing uniform procedures and techniques in both clinical and laboratory aspects of tuberculosis prevention and treatment; and to advise governments conducting campaigns against tuberculosis on the facilities they required. It was also decided that WHO might give financial grants to governments and distribute information on recent developments of special importance. In view of the prevalence of tuberculosis among immigrants, the Commission recommended that medical examinations be made at the point of departure.

A meeting of international experts, called by the Interim Commission, was held in July 1948 to study and report on the use of streptomycin in the treatment of tuberculosis. The conference indicated that this drug could be used to treat several forms of tuberculosis, but that the streptomycin regimen suitable in each case must be designed to meet individual requirements. The drug should be used only as an auxiliary in the general treatment of the disease, the conference pointed out, as its curative effect was partially dependent on other therapeutic measures, such as bed rest and pneumothorax. The conference recommended that streptomycin be distributed only to institutions, medical centres, and teaching hospitals regularly concerned with the study, diagnosis and treatment of tuberculosis, and that further research as to the use and effects of the drug be undertaken.

At the request of UNICEF, the Interim Commission began early in 1948 to provide technical assistance and guidance in a mass immunization program being carried out jointly by UNICEF and the Danish Red Cross and its Scandinavian associates.⁷ Under this program, an estimated total of 50,000,000 children and adolescents in Europe alone were to be tuberculin-tested for tuberculosis infection. Those who registered negative to the tuberculin test, estimated at 15,000,000, were to be immunized by BCG (Bacillus Calmette Guérin) vaccination. UNICEF provided funds for the extension of this program of tuberculin testing and BCG vaccination to India, Morocco, Algeria and other countries outside Europe.

The Organization planned a large-scale medical research program on tuberculosis based on results obtained in conducting the mass immunization program. The cards kept on all persons tested and vaccinated were to be analyzed by WHO for the preparation of current and long-term studies on tuberculosis, especially as regards mortality and morbidity rates in different countries.

Several BCG laboratories were set up before September 1948 through the efforts of WHO. Since it was not practical to ship BCG to India, a team of WHO experts sent to that country in May 1948 set up a laboratory for the production of BCG, taught qualified Indian personnel how to produce the vaccine and began training personnel to administer it. The large-scale tuberculin-testing and vaccination program was put into operation by the Indian Government and WHO on August 11, 1948. Small teams of experts were sent to China and Greece in 1947 and to Ethiopia in May 1948 by the Interim Commission to demonstrate and to teach people in those countries how to administer BCG. Each country receiving assistance from WHO teams must agree beforehand to continue the work of tuberculosis control when the teams leave that country.

Among other activities to further its world-wide campaign against tuberculosis, the Interim Commission, and later the permanent Organization, assisted in the establishment of mass radiography centres in China and of a chest hospital and sanatoria in Greece, and in the provision of X-ray apparatus, equipment for 152 dispensaries and thousands of hospital beds in Italy. It trained 250 nurses in Greece for work in tuberculosis. The Organization provided scholarships and fellowships to enable doctors from a number of these countries to train in other countries in the latest methods of treatment of tuberculosis, and in the technique of the preparation and use of tuberculin and BCG. It also provided, on request, visiting lecturers, literature on the different aspects of tuberculosis, and epidemiological data to governments and interested organizations, as well as advice to governments, hospitals and other institutions on their particular problems of control and treatment of tuberculosis.

3. Venereal Diseases

On the basis of a report of its Expert Committee on Venereal Diseases, which met in January 1948, the Interim Commission recommended to the first World Health Assembly an international venereal disease program, with primary emphasis on syphilis in its early stages. World mortality from late manifestations of syphilis is estimated at millions of cases yearly, and the annual rate of acquired infections is estimated to range from a minimum of 20 million upwards to 100 million cases and more. Estimates for gonorrhea are two to three times higher.

The international venereal disease program, as approved by the Assembly, is based on WHO assistance, which includes expert advice on various aspects of venereal disease control, fellowships for advanced study, initiation of local and national programs by demonstration teams, the furnishing of basic equipment and supplies and technical information, and co-operation with the United Nations and other international organizations on social and economic aspects of the venereal disease problem. By September 1, 1948, 28 countries had requested one or more types of assistance.

The Assembly also approved WHO medical guidance and technical responsibility in large-scale attacks on syphilis among children and expectant and nursing mothers, as requested by UNICEF early in 1948. Congenital syphilis continues to be a significant cause of mortality and of mental and physical handicaps of infants and children all over the world. In under-developed areas, infant mortality from congenital syphilis is estimated at more than ten per cent.

In view of the short supply of penicillin in many areas of the world, the Assembly authorized the Director-General of WHO to make a survey of penicillin requirements and production and to take the necessary measures to ensure its wider availability. Negotiations were undertaken with UNRRA for the transfer to WHO of funds to complete the UNRRA program of penicillin production and to rehabilitate UNRRA penicillin plants located in Byelorussian S.S.R., China, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Poland, Ukrainian S.S.R. and Yugoslavia.

As of September 1948, only two countries, the United States and Poland, had launched national campaigns for the treatment of syphilis based on large-scale use of penicillin. Under the Polish program, based on expert advice given by WHO, 540,000 persons had been examined and 43,000 cases of syphilis and 27,000 cases of gonorrhea treated between April 1 and August 31, 1948.

Similar campaigns were being planned in Yugoslavia and Bulgaria; venereal disease administrations in these countries were visited in June 1948 by WHO experts, who surveyed the problem and initiated control programs. Five European countries had signified, by September 1948, their intention to participate in this plan, with which UNICEF will collaborate with a $2,000,000 allocation for the prenatal and infantile syphilis program.

The epidemiological importance of transfer of venereal disease from one country to another via the maritime communications route led to the conclusion of the Brussels Agreement of 1924 concerning facilities to be accorded merchant seamen for the treatment of venereal diseases. Revision and extension of this Agreement were begun by the Interim Commission and are being continued by WHO. In consultation with ILO, the World Health Assembly decided that the Brussels Agreement should be expanded into an international health regulation for venereal disease. This regulation will cover displaced persons, foreign laborers, emigrants and other migrants.

Another aim of the international venereal disease program of WHO is the standardization of serodiagnostic techniques in syphilis, including es-establishment of an international reference centre for test performance evaluation and the holding of International Serological Laboratory conferences, following the traditions of the Health Organization of the League of Nations.

4. Health Statistics

The work of preparing the sixth revision of the international lists of diseases and causes of death, previously undertaken every ten years under the auspices of the French Government, was continued by the Interim Commission during 1947 and 1948. The Expert Committee established for the purpose completed the lists at its second session in October 1947 for final clearance by an International Conference for the Sixth Decennial Revision of the International Lists of Diseases and Causes of Death, which met in Paris in April 1948 on the invitation of the French Government.

The Conference approved, with minor reservations, the new classification as well as several recommendations of the Committee concerning other problems relating to the international comparability of morbidity and mortality statistics. The Committee met in May to incorporate the changes suggested by the conference. In the revised lists as drawn up by the committee, diseases and injuries are classified on the same basis as causes of death. The publication of the lists was approved by the Health Assembly. The final version of the lists was to be published in December 1948 as an international Manual of the International Statistical Classification of Diseases, Injuries and Causes of Death, incorporating the classification, special lists for tabulation and the procedures to be followed in assigning the underlying cause of death.

The Manual was to come into effect on January 1, 1950, together with the Regulations adopted by the Assembly to ensure the compilation and publication of statistics according to the revised lists. The Regulations, which are to be binding on Members of WHO without the necessity of national legislation, represent the first health legislation ever adopted by an international organization. It is anticipated that with the use of these lists on a world-wide basis the relative frequency and seriousness, as well as the effectiveness of treatment, of a given disease can readily be determined.

The Expert Committee on Health Statistics, the establishment of which was authorized by the Assembly, is charged with advising, when necessary, on the practical application of the lists.

5. Epidemiological Services

The Interim Commission decided in 1947 that the entire field of the international control of epidemics should be re-examined in the light of modern scientific knowledge. An Expert Committee, therefore, began preparing the formulation of uniform sanitary Regulations to replace existing international sanitary conventions concerning cholera, smallpox, plague, typhus and yellow fever—the "pestilential" diseases. The Regulations, after approval by the Health Assembly, will become automatically binding on all countries which do not lodge an objection within a stated period.

The Organization continued to provide epidemiological intelligence services under the existing conventions, involving notifications to public health administrations on the incidence and spread of pestilential diseases. Epidemiological information from all over the world is collected in Geneva and sent to the Epidemiological Intelligence Station at Singapore, for the Far East; the Pan American Sanitary Bureau, for the Americas; and the Sanitary Bureau at Alexandria, for the Middle East. Information received from Geneva, together with that received from 334 Eastern seaports and airports, is redistributed from Singapore by twelve radio stations in daily and weekly bulletins. Beginning in January 1949, daily reports on epidemic diseases were to be broadcast, in addition, from WHO headquarters in Geneva; the Geneva station would reach Europe, Africa and the Americas, while the WHO Epidemiological Intelligence Station in Singapore would continue to cover Asia and the Far East.

The Expert Committee, in April 1948, decided to include louse-borne relapsing fever among the pestilential diseases, and to include cerebrospinal meningitis, dengue fever, influenza and poliomyelitis among the diseases for which immediate notification must be made in case of an epidemic.

The Organization advised national health authorities on the control and latest methods of treatment of the pestilential diseases, as well as on trachoma and psittacosis.

Telegraphic information sent out from Geneva is confirmed by the Weekly Epidemiological Record, airmailed to all countries of the world except Far Eastern countries. The latter receive the Weekly Fasciculus, issued by the Singapore Station to confirm and expand the information broadcast.

From June 1947 statistical information on infectious diseases, birth-rates, general and infant mortality, etc., has been published by WHO in the monthly Epidemiological and Vital Statistics Report, and preparation of the former League of Nations series of Annual Epidemiological and Vital Statistics has been continued by WHO.

6. Technical Assistance

The Interim Commission, and later WHO, provided field missions, visiting lecturers, grants for fellowships or study tours and medical literature on request to a number of countries. The Interim Commission also provided emergency assistance to Egypt to control the cholera epidemic in that country.

Following an official notification from the Egyptian Government on September 27, 1947, of the outbreak of cholera, the Commission offered its assistance in the procurement of anticholera vaccine. It surveyed vaccine production facilities in Europe and the United States, and made arrangements for the special production of additional quantities sufficient to meet the emergency. As a result, more than 32 tons of cholera vaccine, blood plasma and other urgently needed supplies were shipped by air to Egypt, and, as a safety measure, to surrounding countries, from Afghanistan, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, China, Italy, Netherlands, Spain, Turkey, U.S.S.R., Union of South Africa, United States and the Control Authorities of Japan and Southern Korea, as well as the International Red Cross. All requests for supplies were consolidated to avoid competitive bidding. Air shipping arrangements for all supplies, generally dispatched within 48 hours of the receipt of requests, were made by the Interim Commission.

The Expert Committee on Quarantine, called by the Commission for an emergency meeting in October, charted a preventive campaign and advised on sanitary measures and treatment of cases. The WHO Weekly Epidemiological Record published, and the Singapore Station broadcast, summaries of previous cholera epidemics in Egypt, reminders to health administrations of relevant provisions of the international sanitary conventions and trends of the disease in Egypt. The Interim Commission repeatedly denied reports appearing in the press of the spread of the disease to countries outside Egypt and induced health authorities to repeal unwarranted quarantine restrictions against cholera-free countries. The Organization reported that not a single case of cholera occurred abroad as a result of the Egyptian epidemic. The epidemic was brought under control within six weeks, the first time in medical history that an epidemic which spread at a rate of more than a thousand cases a day was checked in so short a time, and mortality was seven times less than during the previous epidemic.

Missions of the Interim Commission, and later of WHO, were stationed in China, Ethiopia, Greece and Italy, and liaison officers were stationed in Austria, Hungary, the Philippines and Poland.

The largest of the missions provided assistance in emergency public health measures and the training of personnel in China. It consisted of 32 staff members of the Organization, eighteen of them in teaching positions. The emergency measures included, apart from tuberculosis control, the epidemic control of plague, cholera and kala-azar (black fever) and surveys of the port-quarantine service. Assistance was given to the National Institute for the production of biologicals and pharmaceuticals, and experts helped to organize the warehousing and distribution of medical supplies. The mission also assisted Chinese Health Authorities in neuro-psychiatry, child and maternal welfare and general problems of public health administration. Training was provided for medical personnel, hospital and public health nurses, sanitary engineers and X-ray and laboratory technicians.

The WHO medical mission to Ethiopia was mainly concerned with providing elementary training for nurses and sanitary engineers. As of September 1948, a total of 94 Ethiopian students had received certificates as dressers and primary certificates had been granted to approximately 40 sanitary inspectors. When the mission first went to Ethiopia, there was only one doctor, too old to practise full-time, one qualified Ethiopian nurse and one sanitary inspector. The mission completed a survey of environmental hygiene in Addis Ababa and made recommendations for emergency and routine measures. It was instrumental in establishing permanent delousing stations. It made surveys of tuberculosis, venereal diseases and malaria in the area and conducted extensive field trials for the control of mosquito larvae. The mission in addition advised on measures to prevent the spread of cholera from Egypt.

The missions to Greece and Italy were mainly concerned with the control of malaria and tuberculosis, as described above. Other operations in Greece included assistance in occupational therapy, the welfare of the blind and orthopaedic bursaries. In Italy the mission advised the Italian Government on the control of trachoma, the establishment of port and frontier quarantine stations, the creation of a national nutrition and orthogenetic centre, and maternity and child welfare.

Special medical teams in collaboration with the Unitarian Committee of America were sent to Austria in July 1947, and to Finland and Poland in July and August 1948, to lecture and demonstrate the latest techniques in particular branches of medicine and surgery.

A WHO expert was sent to the Middle East in September 1948 to survey the health conditions among the Palestine refugees.

During the period from July 1, 1947, to September 21, 1948, the Organization supplied medical literature and periodicals to Austria, Byelorussian S.S.R., China, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Ukrainian S.S.R. and Yugoslavia.

It provided fellowships to 430 doctors and other health personnel from the following countries for specialized training and refresher courses in various fields of medicine: Austria, China, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Korea, Philippines, Poland and Yugoslavia. Recipients of these fellowships were placed for training in the United States and Canada, the United Kingdom and other countries of Western Europe and in the U.S.S.R. All fellows must agree to return to their own countries to utilize the knowledge they have acquired through this fellowship program. As of September 21, 1948, 210 had completed their studies and 220 were still studying or awaiting transportation. WHO prepared a fellowship manual based on actual experience in the organization and rehabilitation of public-health and medical education in the war-devastated countries.

On the basis of a questionnaire on technical assistance sent to its Member countries, 30 Members, as of September 1948, had requested advisory and demonstration services; 30 had requested WHO fellowships to train medical and public health personnel in modern techniques; and 22 had requested medical literature, supplies and equipment.

7. Publications

In addition to the epidemiological publications mentioned above, the Organization issues several publications designed to place at the disposal of public health administrations, and the medical and related professions, technical information on current problems and on the development of the activities of the Organization and its expert committees. These include the Official Records of the World Health Organization, containing minutes of meetings and corresponding documents and reports; the Bulletin of the World Health Organization, the chief scientific publication of WHO, which has been published since January 1948, replacing the Bulletin mensuel of the Office international d'hygiène publique and the Bulletin of the Health Organization of the League of Nations; the International Digest of Health Legislation, containing reproductions, translations or extracts from the more important health legislation throughout the world; and the Chronicle of the World Health Organization, providing monthly information on the current activities of the Organization.

Specialized monographs are also published from time to time. A monograph on cancer treatment statistics and a monograph on modern methods of treatment of venereal diseases, as well as an international list of treatment centres for venereal diseases, were as of September 1948 being prepared for publication by WHO.

8. Other Activities

a. BIOLOGICAL STANDARDIZATION

The Organization continued its study and experimental research aimed at establishing international standards for a large number of biologicals, including various blood groups and the RH factor, cholera vaccine, whooping cough vaccine, scarlet fever antitoxin, diphtheria and tetanus toxoids, purified tuberculin and BCG.

It also considered replacing the existing standards for certain substances, including digitalis and vitamins A and D, with new standards which would result in purer preparations. Numerous laboratories in Europe, America and India collaborate in conducting the necessary research on these substances, and two laboratories, the State Serum Institute at Copenhagen and the laboratory of the Medical Research Council at Hampstead (London), distribute preparations of standardized biologicals to centres in various countries for storage and redistribution within each country.

b. UNIFICATION OF PHARMACOPOEIAS

In October 1947 an expert committee began working toward the establishment of a unified system of nomenclature of drugs, so as to provide that the same name should represent in all countries a preparation of the same strength and composition. The Expert Committee on the Unification of Pharmacopoeias reviewed and approved monographs on important drugs previously adopted by the League of Nations and adopted a large number of draft monographs prepared by various members of the Committee.

The publication during 1949 of an international pharmacopoeia, similar in form to national pharmacopoeias, was authorized by the World Health Assembly. The monographs contained in the international pharmacopoeia will have authority in a country only after they have been approved by that country.

c. INSULIN PRODUCTION

Among its other activities the Organization made a survey of world requirements and production of insulin. To increase the supply of insulin, which the survey disclosed was far short of requirements, the Director-General, in August 1948, directed the attention of Member nations to a new method for producing insulin. This method, developed in Germany, makes possible the preservation of animal pancreas glands without the need for low refrigeration. Countries not producing insulin were asked to place their supplies of pancreas glands at the disposal of producing countries.

d. INFLUENZA CONTROL

As a protection against a recurrence of an influenza epidemic similar to that of 1918, the World Health Organization established a World Influenza Centre, located in the National Institute of the Medical Research Council, London. The Centre is to collect and distribute information on any influenza epidemics, to gather and diagnose strains responsible for these epidemics and to help train personnel in countries now lacking qualified workers. Twenty-seven countries, including Egypt, France, Italy, Sweden and the United States, subsequently established national influenza centres to collaborate with the Centre.

F. BUDGET

The program of the Interim Commission for 1947 was financed by: a loan of $1,300,000 by the United Nations for the period from the beginning of operations to the end of 1947; a grant of $1,500,000 from UNRRA residual funds for the continuation of the health assistance to governments formerly provided by that Administration; and the equivalent of $21,412 transferred from the Board of Liquidation of the League of Nations to constitute a working capital fund for the Epidemiological Intelligence Station at Singapore. Actual expenditures during these two years were as follows:

BUDGET (In United States Currency)
	1947	1948 ⁸
Organizational meetings	$ 70,506.95	$226,217.15
New York Office	209,671.43	188,480.78
Geneva Office	420,627.00	570,855.78
Epidemiological Intelligence Station, Singapore	15,375.47	24,818.86
Field services	573,119.29	714,238.83
Technical services	269,036.94	54,127.12
Technical meetings	44,234.77	38,066.42

The first World Health Assembly approved a total budget of $5,000,000 for WHO operations during 1949 as follows:

Organizational meetings (World Health Assembly and Execu- tive Board)	$ 264,000
Secretariat	2,411,105
Regional Offices	300,000
Epidemiological Intelligence Sta- tion, Singapore	59,365
Advisory and demonstration services to Governments	903,350
Technical services	862,500
Technical meetings	199,680
	$5,000,000

The Director-General is authorized to make transfers under certain conditions within all parts of the above budget, provided the total budget is not exceeded, and the Executive Board is authorized to make the necessary allocations of funds to give effect to the programs of WHO.

By decision of the Executive Board, Members of WHO are required to make contributions to the budget of the Organization in United States dollars or Swiss francs. Contributions to the budgets for 1948 and 1949 are assessed according to the criteria used by the United Nations in assessing its Members for 1948.⁹ In the case of Members of

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION

Preamble

Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations provides that specialized agencies established by inter-governmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities as defined in their basic instruments in economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related fields shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations.

Article 69 of the Constitution of the World Health Organization provides that the Organization shall be brought into relation with the United Nations as one of the specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 of the Charter.

Therefore, the United Nations and the World Health Organization agree as follows:

Article I

The United Nations recognizes the World Health Organization as the specialized agency responsible for taking such action as may be appropriate under its Constitution for the accomplishment of the objectives set forth therein.

Article II

RECIPROCAL REPRESENTATION

1. Representatives of the United Nations shall be invited to attend the meetings of the World Health Assembly and its committees, the Executive Board, and such general, regional or other special meetings as the Organization may convene, and to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of these bodies.

2. Representatives of the World Health Organization shall be invited to attend meetings of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (hereinafter called the Council) and of its commissions and committees, and to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of these bodies with respect to items on their agenda relating to health matters.

3. Representatives of the World Health Organization shall be invited to attend meetings of the General Assembly for purposes of consultation on matters within the scope of its competence.

4. Representatives of the World Health Organization shall be invited to attend meetings of the main committees of the General Assembly when matters within the scope of its competence are under discussion, and to participate, without vote, in such discussions.

5. Representatives of the World Health Organization shall be invited to attend the meetings of the Trusteeship Council, and to participate, without vote, in the deliberations thereof with respect to items on the agenda relating to matters within the competence of the World Health Organization.

6. Written statements of the World Health Organization shall be distributed by the Secretariat of the United Nations to all members of the General Assembly, the Council and its commissions, and the Trusteeship Council, as appropriate. Similarly, written statements presented by the United Nations shall be distributed by the World Health Organization to all members of the World Health Assembly or the Executive Board, as appropriate.

Article III

PROPOSAL OF AGENDA ITEMS

Subject to such preliminary consultation as may be necessary, the World Health Organization shall include in the agenda of the Health Assembly or Executive Board, as appropriate, items proposed to it by the United Nations. Similarly, the Council and its commissions and the Trusteeship Council shall include in their agenda items proposed by the World Health Organization.

Article IV

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE UNITED NATIONS

1. The World Health Organization, having regard to the obligation of the United Nations to promote the objectives set forth in Article 55 of the Charter, and the function and power of the Council, under Article 62 of the Charter, to make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters and to make recommendations concerning these matters to the specialized agencies concerned, and having regard also to the responsibility of the United Nations, under Articles 58 and 63 of the Charter, to make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of such specialized agencies, agrees to arrange for the submission, as soon as possible, to the Health Assembly, the Executive Board or such other organ of the World Health Organization as may be appropriate, of all formal recommendations which the United Nations may make to it.

2. The World Health Organization agrees to enter into consultation with the United Nations upon request with respect to such recommendations, and in due course to report to the United Nations on the action taken by the Organization or by its members to give effect to such recommendations, or on the other results of their consideration.

3. The World Health Organization affirms its intention of co-operating in whatever further measures may be necessary to make co-ordination of the activities of specialized agencies and those of the United Nations fully effective. In particular, it agrees to participate in and to co-operate with any body or bodies which the Council may establish for the purpose of facilitating such co-ordination, and to furnish such information as may be required for the carrying out of this purpose.

Article V

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION AND DOCUMENTS

1. Subject to such arrangements as may be necessary for the safeguarding of confidential material, the fullest and promptest exchange of information and documents shall be made between the United Nations and the World Health Organization.

2. Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions of paragraph 1:

(a) The World Health Organization agrees to transmit to the United Nations regular reports on the activities of the Organization;

(b) The World Health Organization agrees to comply to the fullest extent practicable with any request which the United Nations may make for the furnishing of special reports, studies or information, subject to the conditions set forth in article XVI;

(c) The Secretary-General shall, upon request, transmit to the Director-General of the World Health Organization such information, documents or other materials as may from time to time be agreed between them.

Article VI

PUBLIC INFORMATION

Having regard to the functions of the World Health Organization, as defined in article 2, paragraphs (q) and (r), of its Constitution, to provide information in the field of health and to assist in developing an informed public opinion among all peoples on matters of health, and with a view to furthering co-operation and developing joint services in the field of public information between the Organization and the United Nations, a subsidiary agreement on such matters shall be concluded as soon as possible after the coming into force of the present agreement.

Article VII

ASSISTANCE TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

The World Health Organization agrees to co-operate with the Council in furnishing such information and rendering such assistance for the maintenance or restoration of international peace and security as the Security Council may request.

Article VIII

ASSISTANCE TO THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The World Health Organization agrees to co-operate with the Trusteeship Council in the carrying out of its functions and in particular agrees that it will, to the greatest extent possible, render such assistance as the Trusteeship Council may request in regard to matters with which the Organization is concerned.

Article IX

NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

The World Health Organization agrees to co-operate with the United Nations in giving effect to the principles and obligations set forth in Chapter XI of the Charter with regard to matters affecting the well-being and development of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories.

Article X

RELATIONS WITH THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

1. The World Health Organization agrees to furnish any information which may be requested by the International Court of Justice in pursuance of Article 34 of the Statute of the Court.

2. The General Assembly authorizes the World Health Organization to request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on legal questions arising within the scope of its competence other than questions concerning the mutual relationships of the Organization and the United Nations or other specialized agencies.

3. Such request may be addressed to the Court by the Health Assembly or by the Executive Board acting in pursuance of an authorization by the Health Assembly.

4. When requesting the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion, the World Health Organization shall inform the Economic and Social Council of the request.

Article XI

HEADQUARTERS AND REGIONAL OFFICES

1. The World Health Organization agrees to consult with the United Nations before making any decision concerning the location of its permanent headquarters.

2. Any regional or branch offices which the World Health Organization may establish shall, so far as is practicable, be closely associated with such regional or branch offices as the United Nations may establish.

Article XII

PERSONNEL ARRANGEMENTS

1. The United Nations and the World Health Organization recognize that the eventual development of a single unified international civil service is desirable from the standpoint of effective administrative co-ordination, and with this end in view agree to develop, as far as is practicable, common personnel standards, methods and arrangements designed to avoid serious discrepancies in terms and conditions of employment, to avoid competition in recruitment of personnel, and to facilitate interchange of personnel in order to obtain the maximum benefit from their services.

2. The United Nations and the World Health Organization agree to co-operate to the fullest extent possible in achieving these ends and in particular they agree to:

(a) Consult together concerning the establishment of an international civil service commission to advise on the means by which common standards of recruitment in the secretariats of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies may be ensured;

(b) Consult together concerning other matters relating to the employment of their officers and staff, including conditions of service, duration of appointments, classification, salary scales and allowances, retirement and pension rights and staff regulations and rules with a view to securing as much uniformity in these matters as shall be found practicable;

(c) Co-operate in the interchange of personnel when desirable on a temporary or permanent basis, making due provision for the retention of seniority and pension rights;

(d) Co-operate in the establishment and operation of suitable machinery for the settlement of disputes arising in connexion with the employment of personnel and related matters.

Article XIII

STATISTICAL SERVICES

1. The United Nations and the World Health Organization agree to strive for maximum co-operation, the elimination of all undesirable duplication between them, and the most efficient use of their technical personnel in their respective collection, analysis, publication and dissemination of statistical information. They agree to combine their efforts to secure the greatest possible usefulness and utilization of statistical information and to minimize the burdens placed upon national Governments and other organizations from which such information may be collected.

2. The World Health Organization recognizes the United Nations as the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization, dissemination and improvement of statistics serving the general purposes of international organizations.

3. The United Nations recognizes the World Health Organization as the appropriate agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization, dissemination and improvement of statistics within its special sphere, without prejudice to the right of the United Nations to concern itself with such statistics so far as they may be essential for its own purpose or for the improvement of statistics throughout the world.

4. The United Nations shall, in consultation with the specialized agencies, develop administrative instruments and procedures through which effective statistical co-operation may be secured between the United Nations and the agencies brought into relationship with it.

5. It is recognized as desirable that the collection of statistical information should not be duplicated by the United Nations or any of the specialized agencies whenever it is practicable for any of them to utilize information or materials which another may have available.

6. In order to build up a central collection of statistical information for general use, it is agreed that data supplied to the World Health Organization for incorporation in its basic statistical series or special reports should, so far as is practicable, be made available to the United Nations.

Article XIV

ADMINISTRATIVE AND TECHNICAL SERVICES

1. The United Nations and the World Health Organization recognize the desirability, in the interest of administrative and technical uniformity and of the most efficient use of personnel and resources, of avoiding, whenever possible, the establishment and operation of competitive or overlapping facilities and services among the United Nations and the specialized agencies,

2. Accordingly, the United Nations and the World Health Organization agree to consult together concerning the establishment and use of common administrative and technical services and facilities in addition to those referred to in articles XII, XIII and XV, in so far as the establishment and use of such services may from time to time be found practicable and appropriate.

3. Arrangements shall be made between the United Nations and the World Health Organization with regard to the registration and deposit of official documents.

Article XV

BUDGETARY AND FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

1. The World Health Organization recognizes the desirability of establishing close budgetary and financial relationships with the United Nations in order that the administrative operations of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies shall be carried out in the most efficient and economical manner possible, and that the maximum measure of co-ordination and uniformity with respect to these operations shall be secured.

2. The United Nations and the World Health Organization agree to co-operate to the fullest extent possible in achieving these ends and, in particular, shall consult together concerning the desirability of the inclusion of the budget of the Organization within a general budget of the United Nations. Any arrangements to this effect shall be defined in a supplementary agreement between the two organizations.

3. Pending the conclusion of any such agreement, the following arrangements shall govern budgetary and financial relationships between the World Health Organization and the United Nations:

(a) The Secretary-General and the Director-General shall arrange for consultation in connexion with the preparation of the budget of the World Health Organization.

(b) The World Health Organization agrees to transmit its proposed budget to the United Nations annually at the same time as such budget is transmitted to its members. The General Assembly shall examine the budget or proposed budget of the Organization and may make recommendations to it concerning any item or items contained therein.

(c) Representatives of the World Health Organization shall be entitled to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of the General Assembly or any committee thereof at all times when the budget of the World Health Organization or general administrative or financial questions affecting the Organization are under consideration.

(d) The United Nations may undertake the collection of contributions from those members of the World Health Organization which are also Members of the United Nations in accordance with such arrangements as may be defined by a later agreement between the United Nations and the Organization.

(e) The United Nations shall, upon its own initiative or upon the request of the World Health Organization, arrange for studies to be undertaken concerning other financial and fiscal questions of interest to the Organization and to other specialized agencies with a view to the provision of common services and the securing of uniformity in such matters.

(f) The World Health Organization agrees to conform, as far as may be practicable, to standard practices and forms recommended by the United Nations.

Article XVI

FINANCING OF SPECIAL SERVICES

1. In the event of the World Health Organization being faced with the necessity of incurring substantial extra expenses as a result of any request which the United Nations may make for special reports, studies or assistance in accordance with articles V, VII, VIII, or with other provisions of this agreement, consultation shall take place with a view to determining the most equitable manner in which such expense shall be borne.

2. Consultation between the United Nations and the World Health Organization shall similarly take place with a view to making such arrangements as may be found equitable for covering the costs of central administrative, technical or fiscal services or facilities or other special assistance provided by the United Nations, in so far as they apply to the World Health Organization.

Article XVII

UNITED NATIONS "LAISSEZ-PASSER"

Officials of the World Health Organization shall have the right to use the laissez-passers of the United Nations in accordance with the special arrangements to be negotiated between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the World Health Organization.

Article XVIII

INTER-AGENCY AGREEMENTS

The World Health Organization agrees to inform the Council of any formal agreement between the Organization and any other specialized agency, inter-governmental organization or non-governmental organization, and in particular agrees to inform the Council of the nature and scope of any such agreement before it is concluded.

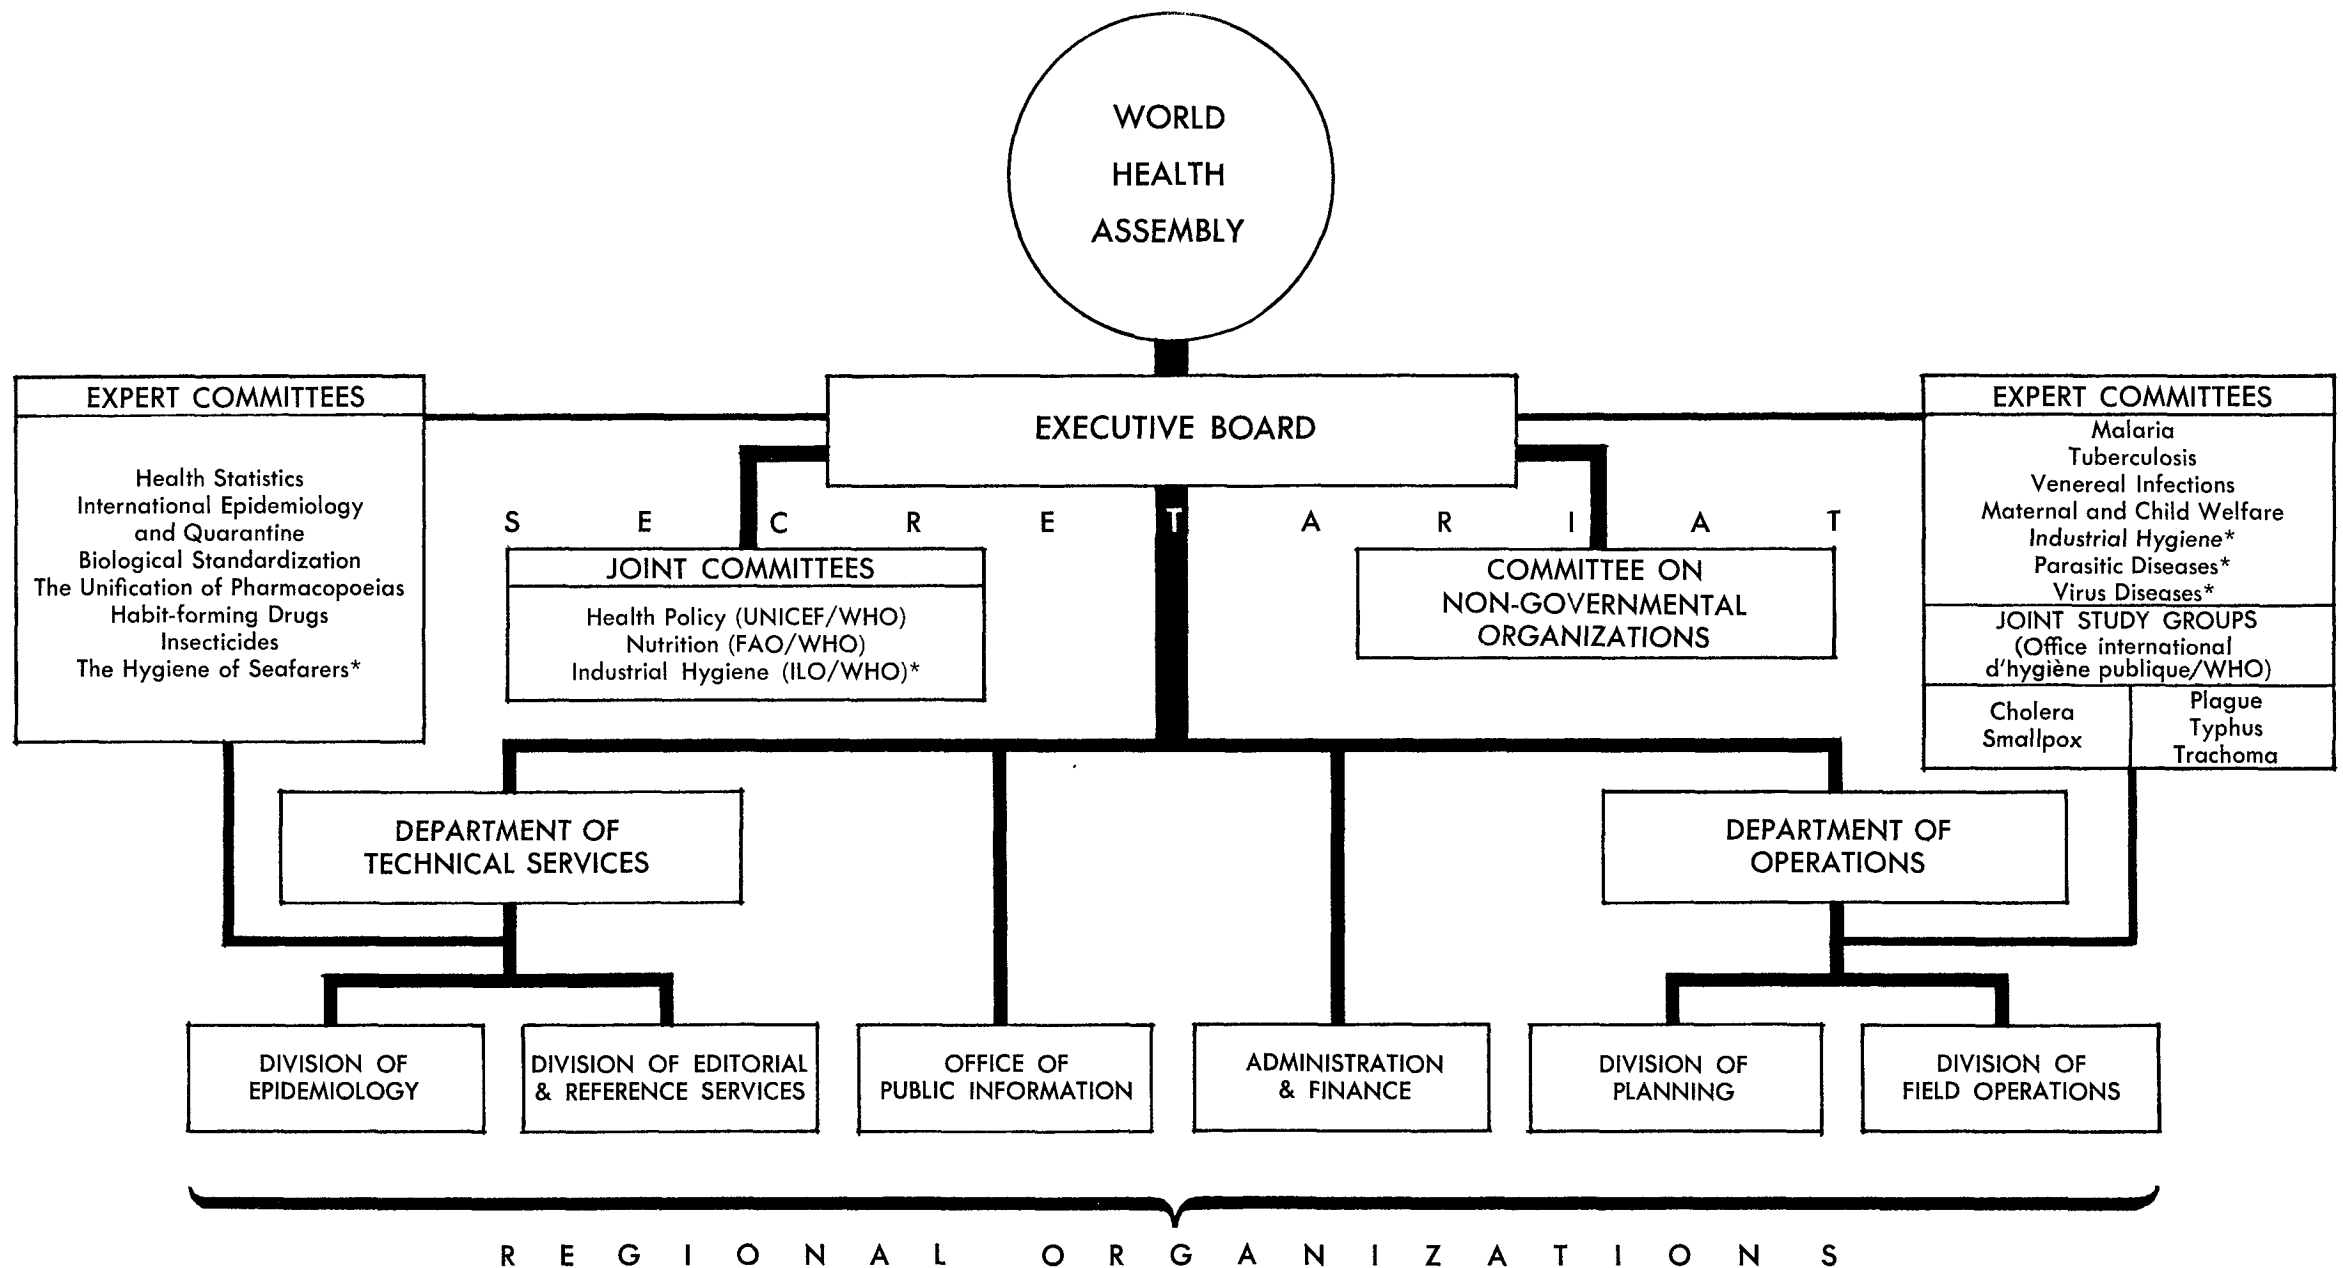

Article XIX

LIAISON

1. The United Nations and the World Health Organization agree to the foregoing provisions in the belief that they will contribute to the maintenance of effective liaison between the two organizations. They affirm their intention of taking whatever further measures may be necessary to make this liaison fully effective.

2. The liaison arrangements provided for in the foregoing articles of this agreement shall apply, as far as is appropriate, to the relations between such branch or regional offices as may be established by the two organizations, as well as between their central headquarters.

Article XX

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE AGREEMENT

The Secretary-General and the Director-General may enter into such supplementary arrangements for the implementation of this agreement as may be found desirable in the light of the operating experience of the two organizations.

Article XXI

REVISION

This agreement shall be subject to revision by agreement between the United Nations and the World Health Organization.

Article XXII

ENTRY INTO FORCE

This agreement shall come into force on its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the World Health Assembly.

IX. The International Telecommunication Union

A. ORIGIN AND HISTORY

The Convention establishing an International Telegraph Union was signed at Paris on May 17, 1865, by the plenipotentiaries of twenty founding States: Austria, Baden, Bavaria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Greece, Hanover, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Prussia, Russia, Saxony, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey and Württemberg. In 1885, at Berlin, the first regulations relating to international telephone services were inserted in the Telegraph Regulations annexed to the Union Convention.

A preliminary meeting of nine states was held in 1903 in Berlin to consider communication between ships and the land. This was followed by the first International Radio-telegraph Conference, held at Berlin in 1906, to which all the maritime countries in the world were invited. Twenty-seven states became signatories to the Radio-telegraph Convention of November 3, 1906, establishing the principle of compulsory intercommunication between vessels at sea and the land. Furthermore, 21 states made intercommunication between vessels at sea compulsory. Thus the Radio-telegraph Union came into being.

On December 9, 1932, the first International Telecommunication Convention was signed at Madrid. This Convention provided for the fusion of the International Telegraph Union and the International Radio-telegraph Union into a single organization. The new organization, the International Telecommunication Union, came into being on January 1, 1934. The Madrid Convention was revised in 1947 by a Plenipotentiary Conference held at Atlantic City, New Jersey. Signed by 72 countries on October 2, 1947, the Atlantic City Convention was to come into force on January 1, 1949. Various provisions of the revised Convention, however, came into force in 1948 on an interim basis.

Following is a full list of the conferences held to date by the International Telecommunication Union and its two predecessors: Telegraph Conferences: Paris, 1865; Vienna, 1868; Rome, 1872; St. Petersburg, 1875; London, 1879; Berlin, 1885; Paris, 1890; Budapest, 1896; London, 1903; Lisbon, 1908; Paris, 1925; Brussels, 1928; Madrid, 1932; Cairo, 1938. Radio Conferences: Berlin, 1906; London, 1912; Washington, 1927; Madrid, 1932; Cairo, 1938; Atlantic City, 1947.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The purposes of ITU, as set forth in Article 3 of the International Telecommunication Convention, Atlantic City, 1947, are:

- "(a) to maintain and extend international cooperation for the improvement and rational use of telecommunication of all kinds;
- "(b) to promote the development of technical facilities and their most efficient operation with a view to improving the efficiency of telecommunication services, increasing their usefulness and making them, so far as possible, generally available to the public;
- "(c) to harmonize the actions of nations in the attainment of those common ends."

To achieve these purposes, the Union undertakes to:

- "(a) effect allocation of the radio frequency spectrum and registration of radio frequency assignments in order to avoid harmful interference between radio stations of different countries;

¹For further details concerning the origin and activities of ITU, see the report of the International Telecommunication Union to the United Nations (E/812), Final Acts of the International Telecommunication and Radio Conferences, Atlantic City, 1947 and the Telecommunication Journal, issues from July 1947 to October 1948, inclusive. See also Bibliography of this Yearbook, Appendix III.

- "(b) foster collaboration among its Members and Associate Members with a view to the establishment of rates at levels as low as possible consistent with an efficient service and taking into account the necessity for maintaining independent financial administration of telecommunication on a sound basis;
- "(c) promote the adoption of measures for ensuring the safety of life through the cooperation of telecommunication service;
- "(d) undertake studies, formulate recommendations, and collect and publish information on telecommunication matters for the benefit of all Members and Associate Members."

C. ORGANIZATION

As originally organized, ITU was an agency which, meeting at long intervals, drew up regulations governing radio, telephone and telegraph communications. It was necessary to change the whole structure of the organization to deal with the rapid technical developments of recent years. The revised Convention adopted at Atlantic City by the Plenipotentiary Telecommunication Conference strengthens the functions and responsibilities of those organs established under the Madrid Convention, and in addition provides for continuing supervisory and co-ordination functions through an Administrative Council, and for additional technical functions through an International Frequency Registration Board (I.F.R.B.). Although the Atlantic City Convention, in accordance with its terms, was not to come into force until January 1, 1949, as decided by the Conference, these two new bodies held their first meetings in September 1947 to elect their officers, and began their operations on a provisional basis in January 1948.

As at present organized, the structure of ITU consists of a Plenipotentiary Conference, Administrative Conferences and the permanent organs of the Union: the Administrative Council, the General Secretariat, the International Frequency Registration Board, the International Telegraph Consultative Committee (C.C.I.T.), the International Telephone Consultative Committee (C.C.I.F.) and the International Radio Consultative Committee (C.C.I.R.).²

The supreme organ of the Union is the Plenipotentiary Conference, at which all Members of the Union may be represented. It considers the report of the Administrative Council on the activities of the Union; establishes the basis for ITU's budget for a five-year period; approves the accounts; elects the members of the Administrative Council; enters into and revises formal agreements with other international bodies; and deals with such telecommunication questions as may be necessary. This Conference normally meets once every five years, at a place and date fixed by the preceding Conference. Each Member has one vote in the Union. Decisions can be taken only when at least one half of the accredited delegations are present or represented. Decisions on the admission of a new Member to ITU require a two-thirds majority. All other decisions of ITU are taken by majority vote.

Administrative Conferences, at which all Members may be represented, generally meet at the same time and place as the Plenipotentiary Conference. The Administrative Telegraph and Telephone Conference and the Administrative Radio Conference revise and draft new telecommunication regulations with which they are respectively concerned. The Administrative Radio Conference, moreover, elects the members of the I.F.R.B. and reviews its activities. Regional administrative conferences and special international administrative conferences to deal with special telecommunication questions are also held.

The Administrative Council is composed of eighteen Members of ITU elected by the Plenipotentiary Conference. The Council supervises the Union's administrative functions between sessions of the Plenipotentiary Conference, reviews and approves the annual budget, appoints the Secretary-General and the two Assistant Secretaries-General of the Union and co-ordinates the work of ITU with that of other international organizations. The Council normally meets at the seat of the Union once a year and at such other times as it thinks necessary, or at the request of six of its members. The Secretary-General of the Union acts as Secretary of the Administrative Council.

In the new organization decided on at Atlantic City, the General Secretariat succeeds the Bureau of the International Telecommunication Union, which had been located at Berne since 1868 (at that time under the International Telegraph Union); Geneva was selected by the Atlantic City Plenipotentiary Conference as the new headquarters of ITU.³ Throughout 1948 the activities of the General Secretariat were under the control of the Swiss Confederation, as was the case with the Bureau, especially with regard to financial and personnel matters. On January 1, 1949, however, as provided by the Plenipotentiary Conference, the supervisory responsibilities for the administration of the Union were to be assumed by the Administrative Council. Under the direction of the Secretary-General, the General Secretariat carries out the secretariat work preparatory to and following conferences of the Union, publishes the recommendations and principal reports of the permanent organs of the Union, international or regional telecommunication agreements, a journal of general information and documentation concerning telecommunication (Telecommunication Journal), general data and other official documents of the Union. The Secretariat also prepares, for submission to the Administrative Council, an annual budget and draws up an annual financial operating account.

The International Frequency Registration Board (I.F.R.B.) consists of eleven members appointed by as many states elected on a regional basis by the Administrative Radio Conference. Each regular session of the Administrative Radio Conference determines the number of members of I.F.R.B. The Atlantic City Radio Conference elected the first members. Members serve, as stated in Article 6 of the Convention, not as representatives of their countries, or of a region, but "as custodians of an international public trust". The I.F.R.B. records all frequency assignments and furnishes advice to Members of ITU with a view to the operation of the maximum practicable number of radio channels in those portions of the spectrum where harmful interference may occur.

The International Telegraph Consultative Committee (C.C.I.T.) studies technical, operating and tariff questions relating to telegraphy and facsimile⁴ and issues recommendations on them. The International Telephone Consultative Committee (C.C.I.F.) has the same duties in relation to telephony. The International Radio Consultative Committee (C.C.I.R.) studies and issues recommendations concerning technical and operating questions relating to radio, the solution of which depends principally on considerations of a technical radio character. The work of each consultative committee is reviewed by its plenary assembly, which normally meets once every two years. The plenary assembly appoints the director of the consultative committee concerned; study groups are established by the plenary assembly to deal with particular questions. Each committee is served by a specialized secretariat and may have the use of a laboratory and of technical installations.

D. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

The principal accomplishment of ITU during this period was the revision of the International Telecommunication Convention by the Plenipotentiary Conference, which met in Atlantic City from July 2 to October 2, 1947; the revised Convention was scheduled to come into force on January 1, 1949. As heretofore, Telegraph Regulations, Telephone Regulations, Radio Regulations and Additional Radio Regulations are annexed to the Convention. The Radio and Additional Radio Regulations were revised in 1947 at Atlantic City by the Administrative Radio Conference. The Telegraph and Telephone Regulations are to be revised by the Administrative Telegraph and Telephone Conference, scheduled to convene in Paris in May 1949.

The Administrative Radio Conference, having established a new table of frequency allocations to the various services, decided that a new international frequency list was to be drawn up by a Provisional Frequency Board (P.F.B.) set up for the purpose, and by various regional and service conferences (which allot frequencies to stations in a particular service, such as the maritime service). Co-ordinated work on this frequency list was continued through 1948 by the P.F.B. with the assistance of the I.F.R.B.

The preparation of a high frequency broadcasting plan was entrusted to the Administrative High

STRUCTURE OF THE SECRETARIAT

Frequency Broadcasting Conference, which met concurrently with the Plenipotentiary Conference at Atlantic City; this task was to be completed by a similar broadcasting conference scheduled to convene in Mexico City on October 22, 1948.

The plenary assemblies of two of the Union's consultative committees met during the year to study the improvements in telegraphy and radio and make recommendations in their respective fields.

Further details of these activities are given below.

1. Plenipotentiary Conference

In addition to changing the organization of ITU, the Plenipotentiary Conference considered the question of membership in the Union. According to Article 1 of the revised Convention, new Members are admitted into the Union, if they are Members of the United Nations or if they are listed in Annex I to the Convention, by depositing an instrument of accession to the Convention with the Secretary-General of ITU. Other states must first have their applications for membership approved by two thirds of the Members of ITU. Spain, on the one hand, and the Spanish Zone of Morocco and the totality of Spanish Possessions, on the other hand, are, for the present, prevented from becoming parties to the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City, in accordance with the United Nations General Assembly resolution debarring Franco Spain from membership in any organization brought into relationship with the United Nations.⁵ The telecommunication services of the United Nations are entitled to the rights and are bound by the obligations of the Convention and of the Regulations and are accordingly entitled to be represented at all Conferences of the Union in a consultative capacity. The Convention also provides that, under certain conditions, Associate Members may be admitted into the Union.

Although the Convention provides for the appointment of the chief officers of the General Secretariat by the Administrative Council, the Plenipotentiary Conference named as the first Secretary-General Franz von Ernst (Switzerland), who had served as Director of the Bureau of ITU since 1935, and as Assistant Secretaries-General Leon Mulatier (France) and Gerald C. Gross (United States).

The Conference also approved an agreement establishing the relationship of ITU with the United Nations. The agreement came into force provisionally on November 15, 1947, with its subsequent approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations. It was scheduled to enter into force officially on January 1, 1949, at the same time as the revised Convention.

The Final Act of the Plenipotentiary Conference comprises the Convention, with its 49 articles and five annexes, the most important of which are the General Regulations and the agreement between the Union and the United Nations; a Final Protocol containing reservations made by certain signatory states; a series of additional protocols concerning, for example, the provisional application of the terms of the Convention;⁶ and a series of resolutions, recommendations and opinions.

2. Administrative Radio Conference

The Administrative Radio Conference met in Atlantic City from May 15 to October 2, 1947. Recent scientific advances had made obsolete the Radio Regulations drawn up by the Cairo Conference of 1938. The Atlantic City Radio Conference therefore revised these regulations, which, along with the Convention, were to come into force in part on January 1, 1949.

The revised Radio Regulations set up a new world-wide frequency allocation table extending up to 10,500,000 kilocycles (the Cairo Conference of 1938 had charted the spectrum only up to 200,000 kilocycles). The Conference allocated the revised frequency bands to the various services, such as fixed service, maritime service, aeronautical service, and broadcasting service. Practical machinery for putting this new allocation into effect was set up. Under the Cairo Regulations every country was free to use any frequency on the condition of creating no interference. The country had only to register its frequencies with the Bureau of ITU in Berne. With a view to developing arrangements which would economize spectrum space, the Conference established the International Frequency Registration Board (I.F.R.B.), and charged it with the registration of frequencies.

⁶ The texts of the International Telecommunication Convention, its five annexes, the Final Protocol and Additional Protocols are reproduced on pp. 932-54. The Telegraph Regulations (Cairo, 1938), Telephone Regulations (Cairo, 1938), and Radio Regulations (Atlantic City, 1947), also annexed to the Convention are not included herein but may be obtained from the General Secretariat of ITU.

3. International Frequency List

The Radio Conference further established a Provisional Frequency Board (P.F.B.), to prepare, with the advisory assistance of the I.F.R.B., a new international frequency list. When completed, this list will form the basis of the work of the I.F.R.B. During the preparation of this list, notices of frequency assignments will be made in conformity with the Cairo Radio Regulations. The list is to include all information concerning existing stations, stations under construction, and planned stations to be constructed in the near future. The P.F.B. was to assign frequencies to fixed stations, tropical broadcasting stations, and land stations, within the frequency band between ten kilocycles and 30,000 kilocycles. The P.F.B. was to take into account the existing utilization of frequencies and the undesirability of making unnecessary changes.

Frequency requirements from the different countries were assembled so that the P.F.B., assisted by the I.F.R.B., had all the material to start with the task of assigning the required frequencies to the different stations, after it had established technical and engineering guidance.

The Administrative Radio Conference at Atlantic City had decided that special conferences could be held to assign frequencies to regional or exclusive service bands and that the work of making these assignments should not be duplicated by the P.F.B. In this connection, the Radio Conference had recognized the need for a new regional broadcasting agreement and a new frequency allocation plan for broadcasting stations of the European area. It therefore decided to call a conference to draw up these instruments. The European Broadcasting Conference met in Copenhagen from June 25 to September 15, 1948. Prior to the Conference, a preparatory committee of eight states met in Brussels from January 15 to March 20, 1948, and again from May 11 to June 9, 1948, and drew up for presentation to the Conference a preliminary draft plan for the allocation of medium and long waves to broadcasting stations in the 33 countries of the European region. The European Conference fixed March 15, 1950, at 0200 hours (G.M.T.) as the date of entry into force of the European Broadcasting Convention and Plan annexed thereto.

Concurrently with the European Broadcasting Conference, a Maritime Regional Radio Conference was held in Copenhagen from June 25 to September 17, 1948, to examine the frequency requirements of the maritime services and allocate frequencies to European coastal stations from the North Sea to the Mediterranean. The Conference allocated frequencies within the 415-490 kc. and 510-525 kc. bands to these coastal stations and drew up lists showing these allocations for countries non-signatories to the International Telecommunication Convention as well as for the contracting countries. The Conference also recommended measures designed to eliminate or reduce interference between stations.

The Administrative Radio Conference recognized that frequency allocations for the aeronautical mobile service (a radiocommunication service between stations on board aircraft or between aircraft and land stations carrying on a service with aircraft stations) could best be worked out by an international aviation organization. The International Civil Aviation Organization was therefore invited to participate in the Aeronautical Radio Conference called by ITU in Geneva on May 15, 1948. Delegates of ICAO also attended the meetings of the preparatory committee of the Conference, which met from April 26 to May 14, 1948.

The P.F.B. was to integrate the allocation plans prepared by the European, maritime and aeronautical conferences with those which it prepared, the total was to be included in the draft new international frequency list, to be completed by May 17, 1949. The draft list was to be circulated to Members of ITU. Final decision with respect to the list was to be taken by a special Administrative Radio Conference, scheduled to convene on October 17, 1949. With the approval of the international frequency list by the special Administrative Radio Conference, the P.F.B. was to be dissolved.

4. High Frequency Broadcasting

The Administrative High Frequency Broadcasting Conference met in Atlantic City from August 15 to October 2, 1947. The work of this Conference was mainly devoted to preparing for the next administrative conference concerning high frequency broadcasting, scheduled to convene in Mexico City in October 22, 1948. Although delegates from 78 countries at the Administrative Radio Conference had decided to allocate larger frequency bands to international broadcasting, they failed at the High Frequency Broadcasting Conference to agree on the principles according to which these bands would be used. It was therefore decided that another administrative conference concerning high frequency broadcasting should be held in Mexico City on October 22, 1948. The Atlantic City Conference prepared the schedule, directives and agenda for the Mexico City Conference, and established a Planning Committee to prepare a draft assignment plan for the coming conference and suggest the most effective means of implementing the proposed plan.

5. International Consultative Committees

The International Telegraph Consultative Committee held its sixth meeting in Brussels from May 11 to 27, 1948. The Committee studied the improvements in telegraphy since its previous meeting in 1936. In the light of these advances, it studied questions pertaining to telegraph subscribers' services, the revision of the system of charges and a European automatic switching telegraphic network.

The International Radio Consultative Committee held its fifth meeting in Stockholm from July 12 to 31, 1948.

6. Publications

In addition to the Final Act of the International Telecommunication and Radio Conferences, Atlantic City, 1947, and the reports of other meetings held by the Union, ITU issued a large number of technical publications during the period under review. These include: Liste de fréquences, fifteenth edition; Nomenclature des stations fixe (Index à la liste des fréquences pour les stations fixes en service), with monthly supplements; Statistique générale de la téléphonie, année 1946; Statistique générale des radio-communications pour l'année 1946; General Telegraph Statistics for the year 1946; List of Aeronautical Stations and Aircraft Stations, eighteenth edition; Map of Coastal Stations open for public correspondence, fifth edition. The last three publications listed were issued in both English and French; the others were issued in French.

ITU publishes a periodic Telecommunication Journal containing general information and documentation concerning telecommunication. The Journal was issued only in French until January 1948; beginning with the January issue, the Journal has been published in English, French and Spanish.

E. BUDGET

The ordinary expenses of the Union include the expenses pertaining to the meetings of the Administrative Council, the salaries of the staff and other expenses of the General Secretariat, the International Frequency Registration Board, the international consultative committees, and the laboratories and technical installations created by the Union. These expenses are borne by all Members and Associate Members.

The extraordinary expenses include all expenses pertaining to plenipotentiary conferences, administrative conferences, and meetings of the international consultative committees. They are borne by the Members and Associate Members who have agreed to participate in these conferences and meetings. Private operating agencies and international organizations contribute to the extraordinary expenses of the administrative conferences and the meetings of the international consultative committees in which they participate, in proportion to the number of units corresponding to the class chosen by them. The Administrative Council may, nevertheless, excuse certain international organizations from contributing to these expenses.

The Atlantic City Plenipotentiary Conference authorized the Administrative Council to approve, for the period 1949 to 1952, inclusive, annual provisions for ordinary expenses up to four million Swiss francs per annum. Excess expenditure may be authorized after having been approved by the majority of the Members and Associate Members of the Union.

At its third session, held in Geneva beginning September 18, 1948, the Council adopted the following budget for 1948, within the framework set up by the Plenipotentiary Conference:

ORDINARY BUDGET:

	Sw. Francs
Administrative Council	238,000
Telegraph and Telephone Division	492,700
Radio Division	752,000
TOTAL	1,482,700

EXTRAORDINARY BUDGET:

Telegraph and Telephone Division	76,200
Radio Division	32,500
Conference and Meetings (including 1,865,000 for P.F.B. and I.F.R.B.)	2,199,000
TOTAL	2,307,700

The table of classes of contribution is as follows: 1st class, 30 units; 2nd class, 25 units; 3rd class, 20 units; 4th class, 15 units; 5th class, 10 units; 6th class, 5 units; 7th class, 3 units; and 8th class, 1 unit. Each Member or Associate Member chooses the class in which it wishes to be included and pays in advance its annual contributory share, calculated on the basis of the budgetary provisions. Publications of ITU are distributed without charge to Members of the Union, the number of copies corresponding to the units selected in each case.

Under the terms of the Additional Protocol X to the International Telecommunication Convention,⁷ Members were permitted to select different classes of contributions for the expenses of the radio service, and for the expenses of the telegraph and telephone service during 1948. Each Member is required to select a single class of contribution for meeting these expenses during 1949 and subsequent years. Members of ITU have accordingly chosen the following classes of contribution for the year 1948:

INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION CONVENTION

PREAMBLE

While fully recognizing the sovereign right of each country to regulate its telecommunication, the plenipotentiaries of the Contracting Governments have agreed to conclude the following Convention, with a view to ensuring the effectiveness of telecommunication.

⁹ See also Annex 1 to Convention, p. 941.

¹⁰ The headquarters were transferred to Geneva on October 26, 1948. The address is Palais Wilson, Geneva. (Cable address: BURINTERNA GENEVA. Telephone 21550.)

CHAPTER I.—COMPOSITION, FUNCTIONS AND STRUCTURE OF THE UNION

ARTICLE 1. Composition of the Union

1. The International Telecommunication Union shall comprise Members and Associate Members.

2. A Member of the Union shall be:

- (a) any country or group of territories listed in Annex 1 upon signature and ratification of, or accession to, this Convention, by it or on its behalf;
- (b) any country not listed in Annex 1 which becomes a Member of the United Nations and which accedes to this Convention in accordance with Article 17;
- (c) any sovereign country not listed in Annex 1 and not a Member of the United Nations which applies for membership in the Union and which, after having secured approval of such application by two-thirds of the Members of the Union, accedes to this Convention in accordance with Article 17.

3. (1) All Members shall be entitled to participate in conferences of the Union and shall be eligible for election to any of its organs.

(2) Each Member shall have one vote at any conference of the Union and at any meeting of an organ of the Union of which it is a Member.

4. An Associate Member shall be:

- (a) any country which has not become a Member of the Union in accordance with paragraph 2 of this Article, by acceding to this Convention in accordance with Article 17, after its application for Associate Membership has received approval by a majority of the Members of the Union;
- (b) any territory or group of territories, not fully responsible for the conduct of its international relations, on behalf of which this Convention has been accepted by a Member of the Union in accordance with Article 17 or 18, provided that its application for Associate Membership is sponsored by such Member, after the application has received approval by a majority of the Members of the Union;
- (c) any trust territory on behalf of which the United Nations has acceded to this Convention in accordance with Article 19, and the application of which for Associate Membership has been sponsored by the United Nations.

5. Associate Members shall have the same rights and obligations as Members of the Union, except that they shall not have the right to vote in any Conference or other organ of the Union. They shall not be eligible for election to any organ of the Union of which the Members are elected by a plenipotentiary or administrative conference.

6. For the purposes of paragraphs 2 (c) and 4 (a) and (b) above, if an application for Membership or Associate Membership is made during the interval between two plenipotentiary conferences, the Secretary General shall consult the Members of the Union; a Member shall be deemed to have abstained if he has not replied within four months after his opinion has been requested.

ARTICLE 2. Seat of the Union

The seat of the Union and of its permanent organs shall be at Geneva.

ARTICLE 3. Purposes of the Union

1. The purposes of the Union are:

- (a) to maintain and extend international cooperation for the improvement and rational use of telecommunication of all kinds;
- (b) to promote the development of technical facilities and their most efficient operation with a view to improving the efficiency of telecommunication services, increasing their usefulness and making them, so far as possible, generally available to the public;
- (c) to harmonize the actions of nations in the attainment of those common ends.

2. To this end, the Union shall in particular:

- (a) effect allocation of the radio frequency spectrum and registration of radio frequency assignments in order to avoid harmful interference between radio stations of different countries;
- (b) foster collaboration among its Members and Associate Members with a view to the establishment of rates at levels as low as possible consistent with an efficient service and taking into account the necessity for maintaining independent financial administration of telecommunication on a sound basis;
- (c) promote the adoption of measures for ensuring the safety of life through the cooperation of telecommunication service;
- (d) undertake studies, formulate recommendations, and collect and publish information on telecommunication matters for the benefit of all Members and Associate Members.

ARTICLE 4. Structure of the Union

The organization of the Union shall be as follows:

- 1. the Plenipotentiary Conference which is the supreme organ of the Union;
- 2. Administrative Conferences;
- 3. the permanent organs of the Union which are:
 - (a) the Administrative Council,
 - (b) the General Secretariat,
 - (c) the International Frequency Registration Board (I.F.R.B.),
 - (d) the International Telegraph Consultative Committee (C.C.I.T.),
 - (e) the International Telephone Consultative Committee (C.C.I.F.),
 - (f) the International Radio Consultative Committee (C.C.I.R.).

ARTICLE 5. Administrative Council

A. ORGANIZATION AND WORKING ARRANGEMENTS

1. (1) The Administrative Council shall be composed of eighteen Members of the Union elected by the plenipotentiary conference with due regard to the need for equitable representation of all parts of the world. The Members of the Council shall hold office until the election of their successors. They are eligible for re-election.

(2) If between two plenipotentiary conferences a seat becomes vacant on the Administrative Council, it shall pass by right to the Member of the Union, from the same region as the Member whose seat is vacated, who had obtained at the previous election the largest number of votes among those not elected.

2. Each of the Members of the Administrative Council shall appoint, to serve on the Council, a person qualified in the field of telecommunication services.

3. (1) Each Member of the Council shall have one vote.

(2) In taking its decisions, the Administrative Council shall follow the procedure provided in the General Regulations currently in force. In cases not covered by the General Regulations, it may adopt its own rules of procedure.

4. The Administrative Council shall elect five of its Members to assume the Chairmanship and Vice Chairmanships during the period which normally elapses between two plenipotentiary conferences. Each of these five Members shall assume the Chairmanship in turn for one year only, including the Chairmanship throughout the last meeting convened during that year. The Chairmanship shall be decided each year by agreement among these five Members or by lot.

5. The Administrative Council shall normally meet at the seat of the Union, once a year and at such other times as it deems necessary or at the request of six of its Members.

6. The Chairman of the International Frequency Registration Board, the Directors of the International Consultative Committees and the Vice-Director of the International Radio Consultative Committee shall participate as of right in the deliberations of the Administrative Council, but without taking part in the voting. Nevertheless the Council may exceptionally hold meetings confined to its own Members.

7. The Secretary General of the Union shall act as Secretary of the Administrative Council.

8. In the intervals between plenipotentiary conferences, the Administrative Council shall act on behalf of the plenipotentiary conference within the limits of the powers delegated to it by the latter.

9. Only the travelling and subsistence expenses incurred by Members of the Administrative Council in this capacity shall be borne by the Union.

B. DUTIES

10. (1) The Administrative Council shall be responsible for taking all steps to facilitate the implementation by the Members and Associate Members of the provisions of the Convention, of the Regulations and of the decisions of the Plenipotentiary Conference.

(2) It shall ensure the efficient coordination of the work of the Union.

11. In particular, the Administrative Council shall:

- (a) perform any duties assigned to it by the plenipotentiary conferences;
- (b) in the interval between plenipotentiary conferences, be responsible for effecting the coordination with all international organizations contemplated in Articles 26 and 27 of this Convention, and to this end appoint, on behalf of the Union, one or more representatives to participate in the conferences of such organizations, and when necessary, of coordinating committees established in conjunction with those organizations;
- (c) appoint the Secretary General and the two Assistant Secretaries General of the Union;
- (d) supervise the administrative functions of the Union;
- (e) review and approve the annual budget of the Union;
- (f) arrange for the annual audit of the accounts of the Union prepared by the Secretary General and approve them for submission to the next plenipotentiary conference;

- (g) arrange for the convening of plenipotentiary and administrative conferences of the Union as provided for in Articles 10 and 11;
- (h) coordinate the activities of all the other organs of the Union, consider and take such action as it deems appropriate on requests or recommendations made to it by such organs and fill vacancies thereon ad interim as prescribed in the Regulations;
- (i) perform the other functions prescribed for it in this Convention and, within the framework of the Convention and the Regulations, the functions deemed necessary for the proper administration of the Union.

ARTICLE 6. International Frequency Registration Board

1. The essential duties of the International Frequency Registration Board shall be:

- (a) to effect an orderly recording of frequency assignments made by the different countries so as to establish, in accordance with the procedure provided for in the Radio Regulations, the date, purpose and technical characteristics of each of these assignments, with a view to ensuring formal international recognition thereof;
- (b) to furnish advice to Members and Associate Members with a view to the operation of the maximum practicable number of radio channels in those portions of the spectrum where harmful interference may occur.

2. The International Frequency Registration Board shall be composed of independent members, all nationals of different countries, Members of the Union. Each ordinary administrative radio conference shall determine the number of its members, and the method of their election with a view to ensuring a balanced selection of the members from the various parts of the world.

3. Members of the Board shall be elected by each ordinary administrative radio conference according to the procedure established by that conference.

4. The working arrangements of the Board are defined in the Radio Regulations.

5. (1) The members of the Board shall serve, not as representatives of their respective countries, or of a region, but as custodians of an international public trust.

(2) No member of the Board shall request or receive instructions relating to the exercise of his duties from any Government or a member thereof or from any public or private organization or person. Furthermore, each Member and Associate Member must respect the international character of the Board and of the duties of its members and shall refrain from any attempt to influence any of them in the exercise of their duties.

(3) No member of the Board or of its staff shall participate in any manner or have any financial interest whatsoever in any branch of telecommunication, apart from the work of the Board.

ARTICLE 7. Condition to be fulfilled before serving on the Administrative Council and the International Frequency Registration Board

1. No person designated by an elected Member to serve on the Administrative Council or on the International Frequency Registration Board may exercise his functions until an instrument of ratification or of accession has been deposited by that Member or on its behalf.

2. Any country which ceases to be a Member of the Union for any reason whatsoever may not be represented in either the Administrative Council or the International Frequency Registration Board.

ARTICLE 8. International Consultative Committees

1. (1) The duties of the International Telegraph Consultative Committee (C.C.I.T.) shall be to study technical, operating and tariff questions relating to telegraphy and facsimile and to issue recommendations on them.

(2) The duties of the International Telephone Consultative Committee (C.C.I.F.) shall be to study technical, operating and tariff questions relating to telephony and to issue recommendations on them.

(3) The duties of the International Radio Consultative Committee (C.C.I.R.) shall be to study technical radio questions and operating questions the solution of which depends principally on considerations of a technical radio character and to issue recommendations on them.

2. The questions studied by each International Consultative Committee, on which it shall issue recommendations, are those submitted to it by the plenipotentiary conference, by an administrative conference, by the Administrative Council, by another Consultative Committee or by the International Frequency Registration Board. A Consultative Committee shall likewise issue its recommendations on questions the study of which has been decided upon by its Plenary Assembly or proposed by at least twelve Members or Associate Members in the interval between meetings of the Plenary Assembly concerned.

3. The International Consultative Committees shall have as members:

- (a) administrations of Members and Associate Members of the Union;
- (b) recognized private operating agencies which express a desire to have their experts participate in the work of these Committees.

4. Each Consultative Committee shall work through the medium of:

- (a) the Plenary Assembly, meeting normally every two years, provided that a meeting shall take place about one year previous to the relative administrative conference; each meeting of a Plenary Assembly normally shall be held in a place fixed by the previous meeting of that Assembly;
- (b) study groups, which shall be set up by the Plenary Assembly to deal with questions to be studied;
- (c) a Director, who shall be appointed by the Plenary Assembly for an indefinite period, but with the reciprocal right of terminating the appointment; the Director of the Radio Consultative Committee shall be assisted by a Vice-Director specializing in broadcasting, appointed under the same conditions;
- (d) a specialized Secretariat, which assists the Director;
- (e) laboratories or technical installations set up by the Union.

5. (1) Consultative Committees shall observe the rules of procedure in the General Regulations annexed to this Convention.

(2) The Plenary Assembly of a Consultative Committee may adopt such additional rules of procedure as may facilitate the work of the Committee if they do not conflict with the General Regulations.

6. The working arrangements of the Consultative Committees are defined in Part II of the General Regulations annexed to this Convention.

ARTICLE 9. General Secretariat

1. The General Secretariat of the Union shall be directed by the Secretary General, who shall be responsible to the Administrative Council for the performance of his duties.

2. The Secretary General shall:

- (a) appoint the staff of the General Secretariat in accordance with any directives of the plenipotentiary conference and the rules established by the Administrative Council;
- (b) organize the work of the General Secretariat and undertake administrative arrangements for the specialized divisions of the permanent organs of the Union; these divisions shall be under the supervision of the Secretary General for administrative purposes only and shall work directly under the orders of the Directors of the organs concerned; the appointment of technical and administrative staff to these divisions shall be made by the Secretary General in accordance with the decisions of the organ concerned and in agreement with the appropriate Director;
- (c) carry on secretarial work preparatory to, and following, conferences of the Union;
- (d) provide, where appropriate in cooperation with the inviting Government, the Secretariat of every conference of the Union, and when so requested, or provided in the Regulations annexed hereto, the Secretariat of meetings of the permanent organs of the Union or meetings placed under its auspices;
- (e) keep up to date the official master lists compiled from data supplied for this purpose by the permanent organs of the Union or by administrations;
- (f) publish the recommendations and principal reports of the permanent organs of the Union;
- (g) publish international and regional telecommunication agreements communicated to him by the parties thereto and keep up to date records of them;
- (h) prepare, publish and keep up to date:
 - 1. a record of the composition and structure of the Union;
 - 2. the general statistics and the official service documents of the Union as prescribed by the Regulations annexed hereto;
 - 3. such other documents as the conferences or the Administrative Council may direct;
- (i) distribute the published documents;
- (j) collect and publish, in suitable form, data both national and international regarding telecommunication throughout the world;
- (k) collect and publish such information as would be of assistance to Members and Associate Members regarding the development of technical methods with a view to achieving the most efficient operation of telecommunication services and especially the best possible use of

- radio frequencies so as to diminish interference;
- (1) publish periodically, with the help of information put at his disposal or which he may collect, including that which he may obtain from other international organizations, a journal of general information and documentation concerning telecommunication;
 - (m) prepare an annual budget for submission to the Administrative Council which, after approval by the Council, shall be transmitted for information to all Members and Associate Members;
 - (n) prepare a financial operating report and accounts to be submitted annually to the Administrative Council and a consolidated account immediately preceding each plenipotentiary conference; these accounts, after audit and approval by the Administrative Council, shall be circulated to the Members and Associate Members and be submitted to the next plenipotentiary conference for examination and final approval;
 - (o) prepare an annual report of his official activities which, after approval by the Administrative Council, shall be transmitted to all Members and Associate Members;
 - (p) perform all other secretarial functions of the Union.
3. The Secretary General or one of the two Assistant Secretaries General shall participate, in a consultative capacity, in the meetings of the International Consultative Committees.
4. The Secretary General, the Assistant Secretaries General and the members of the General Secretariat shall receive salaries on a basis established by the plenipotentiary conference.
5. The paramount consideration in the recruitment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing for the Union the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard must be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.
6. (1) In the performance of their duties the Secretary General, the Assistant Secretaries General and the staff must not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Union. They must refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials and shall be responsible solely to the Union.
- (2) Each Member and Associate Member undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary General, the Assistant Secretaries General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

ARTICLE 10. Plenipotentiary Conferences

1. The Plenipotentiary Conference shall:
 - (a) consider the report of the Administrative Council on the activities of the Union;
 - (b) establish the basis for the budget of the Union for the next five years;
 - (c) finally approve the accounts of the Union;
 - (d) elect the Members of the Union which are to serve on the Administrative Council;
 - (e) revise the Convention if it considers this necessary;

- (f) if necessary, enter into any formal agreement or revise any existing formal agreement between the Union and any other international body;
 - (g) deal with such other telecommunication questions as may be necessary.
2. The Plenipotentiary Conference normally shall meet once every five years at a time and place fixed by the preceding Plenipotentiary Conference.
3. The time or place of the next Plenipotentiary Conference may be changed:
 - (a) when at least twenty Members of the Union have proposed a change to the Administrative Council;
 - (b) on the proposal of the Administrative Council.
 In either case, the Administrative Council, with the concurrence of a majority of the Members of the Union, shall fix the new time or the new place, or both, and shall indicate, if necessary, the agenda.

ARTICLE 11. Administrative Conferences

1. (1) The Administrative Conferences shall:
 - (a) revise the Regulations provided for in Article 13 paragraph 2 of this Convention with which they are respectively concerned;
 - (b) deal with all other matters deemed necessary within the terms of the Convention and the General Regulations, or in accordance with any directive given by the Plenipotentiary Conference.
- (2) The radio administrative conference shall:
 - (a) elect the members of the International Frequency Registration Board;
 - (b) review its activities.
2. The administrative conferences shall meet at the same place and at the same time as the Plenipotentiary Conference, in general, every five years.
3. (1) An extraordinary administrative conference may be convened:
 - (a) by a decision of the Plenipotentiary Conference which shall determine its agenda and the time and place of its meeting; or
 - (b) when at least twenty Members of the Union have made known to the Administrative Council their desire that such a Conference shall be held to consider an agenda proposed by them; or
 - (c) on the proposal of the Administrative Council.
- (2) In the cases specified in (b) and (c) of subparagraph (1) above, the Administrative Council, with the concurrence of a majority of the Members of the Union, shall determine the time and place of the Conference as well as its agenda.

ARTICLE 12. Rules of Procedure of Conferences

1. Before entering on its deliberation, each Conference shall adopt Rules of Procedure in accordance with which the discussions and work are organized and conducted.
2. For this purpose each Conference shall take as a basis the provisions of the General Regulations annexed to this Convention, with such modifications as it thinks fit.

ARTICLE 13. Regulations

1. The General Regulations contained in Annex 4 shall have the same force and duration as this Convention, subject to the provisions of Article 12 of the Convention.

2. The provisions of this Convention are completed by the following sets of Administrative Regulations:

Telegraph Regulations,
Telephone Regulations,
Radio Regulations,
Additional Radio Regulations.

3. These Regulations shall be binding on all Members and Associate Members. However, Members and Associate Members shall notify the Secretary General of their approval of any revision of any of the Administrative Regulations by an administrative conference in the interval between two plenipotentiary conferences. The Secretary General shall inform Members and Associate Members promptly regarding receipt of such notifications of approval.

4. In case of inconsistency between a provision of the Convention and a provision of the Regulations, the Convention shall prevail.

ARTICLE 14. Finances of the Union

1. The expenses of the Union shall be classified as ordinary expenses and extraordinary expenses.

2. The ordinary expenses of the Union shall be kept within the limits prescribed by the Plenipotentiary Conference. They shall include, in particular, the expenses pertaining to the meetings of the Administrative Council, the salaries of the staff and other expenses of the General Secretariat, of the International Frequency Registration Board, of the International Consultative Committees, and of the laboratories and technical installations created by the Union. These ordinary expenses shall be borne by all Members and Associate Members.

3. (1) The extraordinary expenses shall include all expenses pertaining to plenipotentiary conferences, administrative conferences and meetings of the International Consultative Committees. They shall be borne by the Members and Associate Members who have agreed to participate in these conferences and meetings.

(2) Private operating agencies and international organizations shall contribute to the extraordinary expenses of the administrative conferences and the meetings of the International Consultative Committees in which they participate, in proportion to the number of units corresponding to the class chosen by them among the classes provided in paragraph 4 of this Article. The Administrative Council may, nevertheless, excuse certain international organizations from contributing to these expenses.

(3) Expenses incurred by laboratories and technical installations of the Union, in measurements, testing, or special research for individual Members or Associate Members, groups of Members or Associate Members, or regional organizations or others, shall be borne by those Members or Associate Members, groups, organizations or others.

4. For the purpose of apportioning expenses, Members and Associate Members shall be divided into 8 classes, each contributing on the basis of a fixed number of units, namely:

1st class: 30 units	5th class: 10 units
2nd class: 25 units	6th class: 5 units
3rd class: 20 units	7th class: 3 units
4th class: 15 units	8th class: 1 unit

5. Each Member and Associate Member shall inform the Secretary General of the class in which it wishes to be included. This decision shall be communicated to the other Members and Associate Members by the Secretary General and shall not be changed during the interval between the coming into force of this Convention and the opening of the next Plenipotentiary Conference.

6. Members and Associate Members shall pay in advance their annual contributory shares calculated on the basis of the estimated expenditure of the Union for the following financial year.

7. The amounts due shall bear interest from the beginning of each financial year of the Union with regard to ordinary expenses and from the date on which accounts for extraordinary expenses, and for documents supplied, are sent to Members and Associate Members. This interest shall be at the rate of 3% (three per cent) per annum during the first six months after the date on which the amounts are due and at the rate of 6% (six per cent) per annum from the beginning of the seventh month.

ARTICLE 15. Languages

1. (1) The official languages of the Union shall be Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish.

(2) In case of dispute, the French text shall be authentic.

2. The final documents of the plenipotentiary and administrative conferences as well as the final acts and protocols, shall be drawn up in the languages mentioned above in versions equivalent in form and content.

3. (1) All other documents of the conferences shall be drawn up in English, French and Spanish.

(2) All service documents of the Union shall be published in the five official languages.

(3) All other documents for general distribution prepared by the Secretary General in the course of his duties shall be drawn up in English, French and Spanish.

4. (1) In conferences and at the meetings of the permanent organs of the Union, the debates shall be conducted with the aid of an efficient system of reciprocal translations from and into English, French and Spanish.

(2) Other languages may also be used in the debates provided that the delegations using them make arrangements themselves for oral translation into any one of the languages mentioned in the preceding sub-paragraph. Similarly, delegates may, if they wish, arrange for speeches to be translated orally into their own languages from one of the languages mentioned in the preceding sub-paragraph.

5. Each Member and Associate Member shall share the expenses attributable to the use of the authorized languages, with respect to one of these languages only. For oral languages and working documents of conferences and meetings of organs of the Union, the Administrative Council shall lay down rules by which the Secretary General shall calculate the share of each Member and Associate Member in accordance with the number of units which it has chosen in accordance with paragraph 5 of Article 14; for other documents, the Secretary General shall calculate this share in accordance with the cost price of the copies purchased.

CHAPTER II.—APPLICATION OF THE CONVENTION AND REGULATIONS

ARTICLE 16. Ratification of the Convention

1. This Convention shall be ratified by each of the signatory Governments. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited, in as short a time as possible, with the Secretary General by diplomatic channel through the intermediary of the Government of the country of the seat of the Union. The Secretary General shall notify the Members and Associate Members of each deposit of ratification.

2. After the entry into force of this Convention in accordance with Article 49, each instrument of ratification shall become effective on the date of its deposit with the General Secretariat.

3. If one or more of the signatory Governments do not ratify the Convention, it shall not thereby be less valid for the Governments which have ratified it.

ARTICLE 17. Accession to the Convention

1. The Government of a country, not a signatory of this Convention, may accede thereto at any time subject to the provisions of Article 1.

2. The instrument of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary General by diplomatic channel through the intermediary of the Government of the country of the seat of the Union. Unless otherwise specified therein, it shall become effective upon the date of its deposit. The Secretary General shall notify the Members and Associate Members of each accession when it is received and shall forward to each of them a certified copy of the act of accession.

ARTICLE 18. Application of the Convention to Countries or Territories for Whose Foreign Relations Members of the Union Are Responsible

1. Members of the Union may declare at any time that their acceptance of this Convention applies to all or a group or a single one of the countries or territories for whose foreign relations they are responsible.

2. A declaration made in accordance with paragraph 1 of this Article shall be communicated to the Secretary General of the Union. The Secretary General shall notify the Members and Associate Members of each such declaration.

3. The provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall not be deemed to be obligatory in respect of any country, territory or group of territories listed in Annex 1 of this Convention.

ARTICLE 19. Application of the Convention to Trust Territories of the United Nations

The United Nations shall have the right to accede to this Convention on behalf of any territory or group of territories placed under its administration in accordance with a trusteeship agreement as provided for in Article 75 of the Charter of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 20. Execution of the Convention and Regulations

1. The Members and Associate Members are bound to abide by the provisions of this Convention and the Regulations annexed thereto in all telecommunication offices and stations established or operated by them which engage in international services or which are capable of causing harmful interference to radio services of other countries, except in regard to services exempted from these obligations in accordance with the provisions of Article 47 of this Convention.

2. They are also bound, in addition, to take the necessary steps to impose the observance of the provisions of this Convention and of the Regulations annexed thereto upon recognized private operating agencies and upon other agencies authorized to establish and operate telecommunication which engage in international services or which operate stations capable of causing harmful interference to the radio services of other countries.

ARTICLE 21. Denunciation of the Convention

1. Each Member and Associate Member which has ratified, or acceded to, this Convention shall have the right to denounce it by a notification addressed to the Secretary General of the Union by diplomatic channel through the intermediary of the Government of the country of the seat of the Union. The Secretary General shall advise the other Members and Associate Members thereof.

2. This denunciation shall take effect at the expiration of a period of one year from the day of the receipt of notification of it by the Secretary General.

ARTICLE 22. Denunciation of the Convention on Behalf of Countries or Territories for Whose Foreign Relations Members of the Union Are Responsible

1. The application of this Convention to a country, territory or group of territories in accordance with Article 18 may be terminated at any time, and such country, territory or group of territories, if it is an Associate Member, ceases upon termination to be such.

2. The declarations of denunciation contemplated in the above paragraph shall be notified in conformity with the conditions set out in paragraph 1 of Article 21; they shall take effect in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 2 of that article.

ARTICLE 23. Abrogation of Earlier Conventions and Regulations

This Convention and the Regulations annexed thereto shall abrogate and replace, in relations between the Contracting Governments, the International Telegraph Conventions of Paris (1865), of Vienna (1868), of Rome (1872), of St. Petersburg (1875), and the Regulations annexed to them and also the International Radio-telegraph Conventions of Berlin (1906), of London (1912) and of Washington (1927) and the Regulations annexed to them, and the International Telecommunication Convention of Madrid (1932), the Radio Regulations and the Additional Radio Regulations of Cairo (1938);

ARTICLE 24. Relations with Non-contracting States

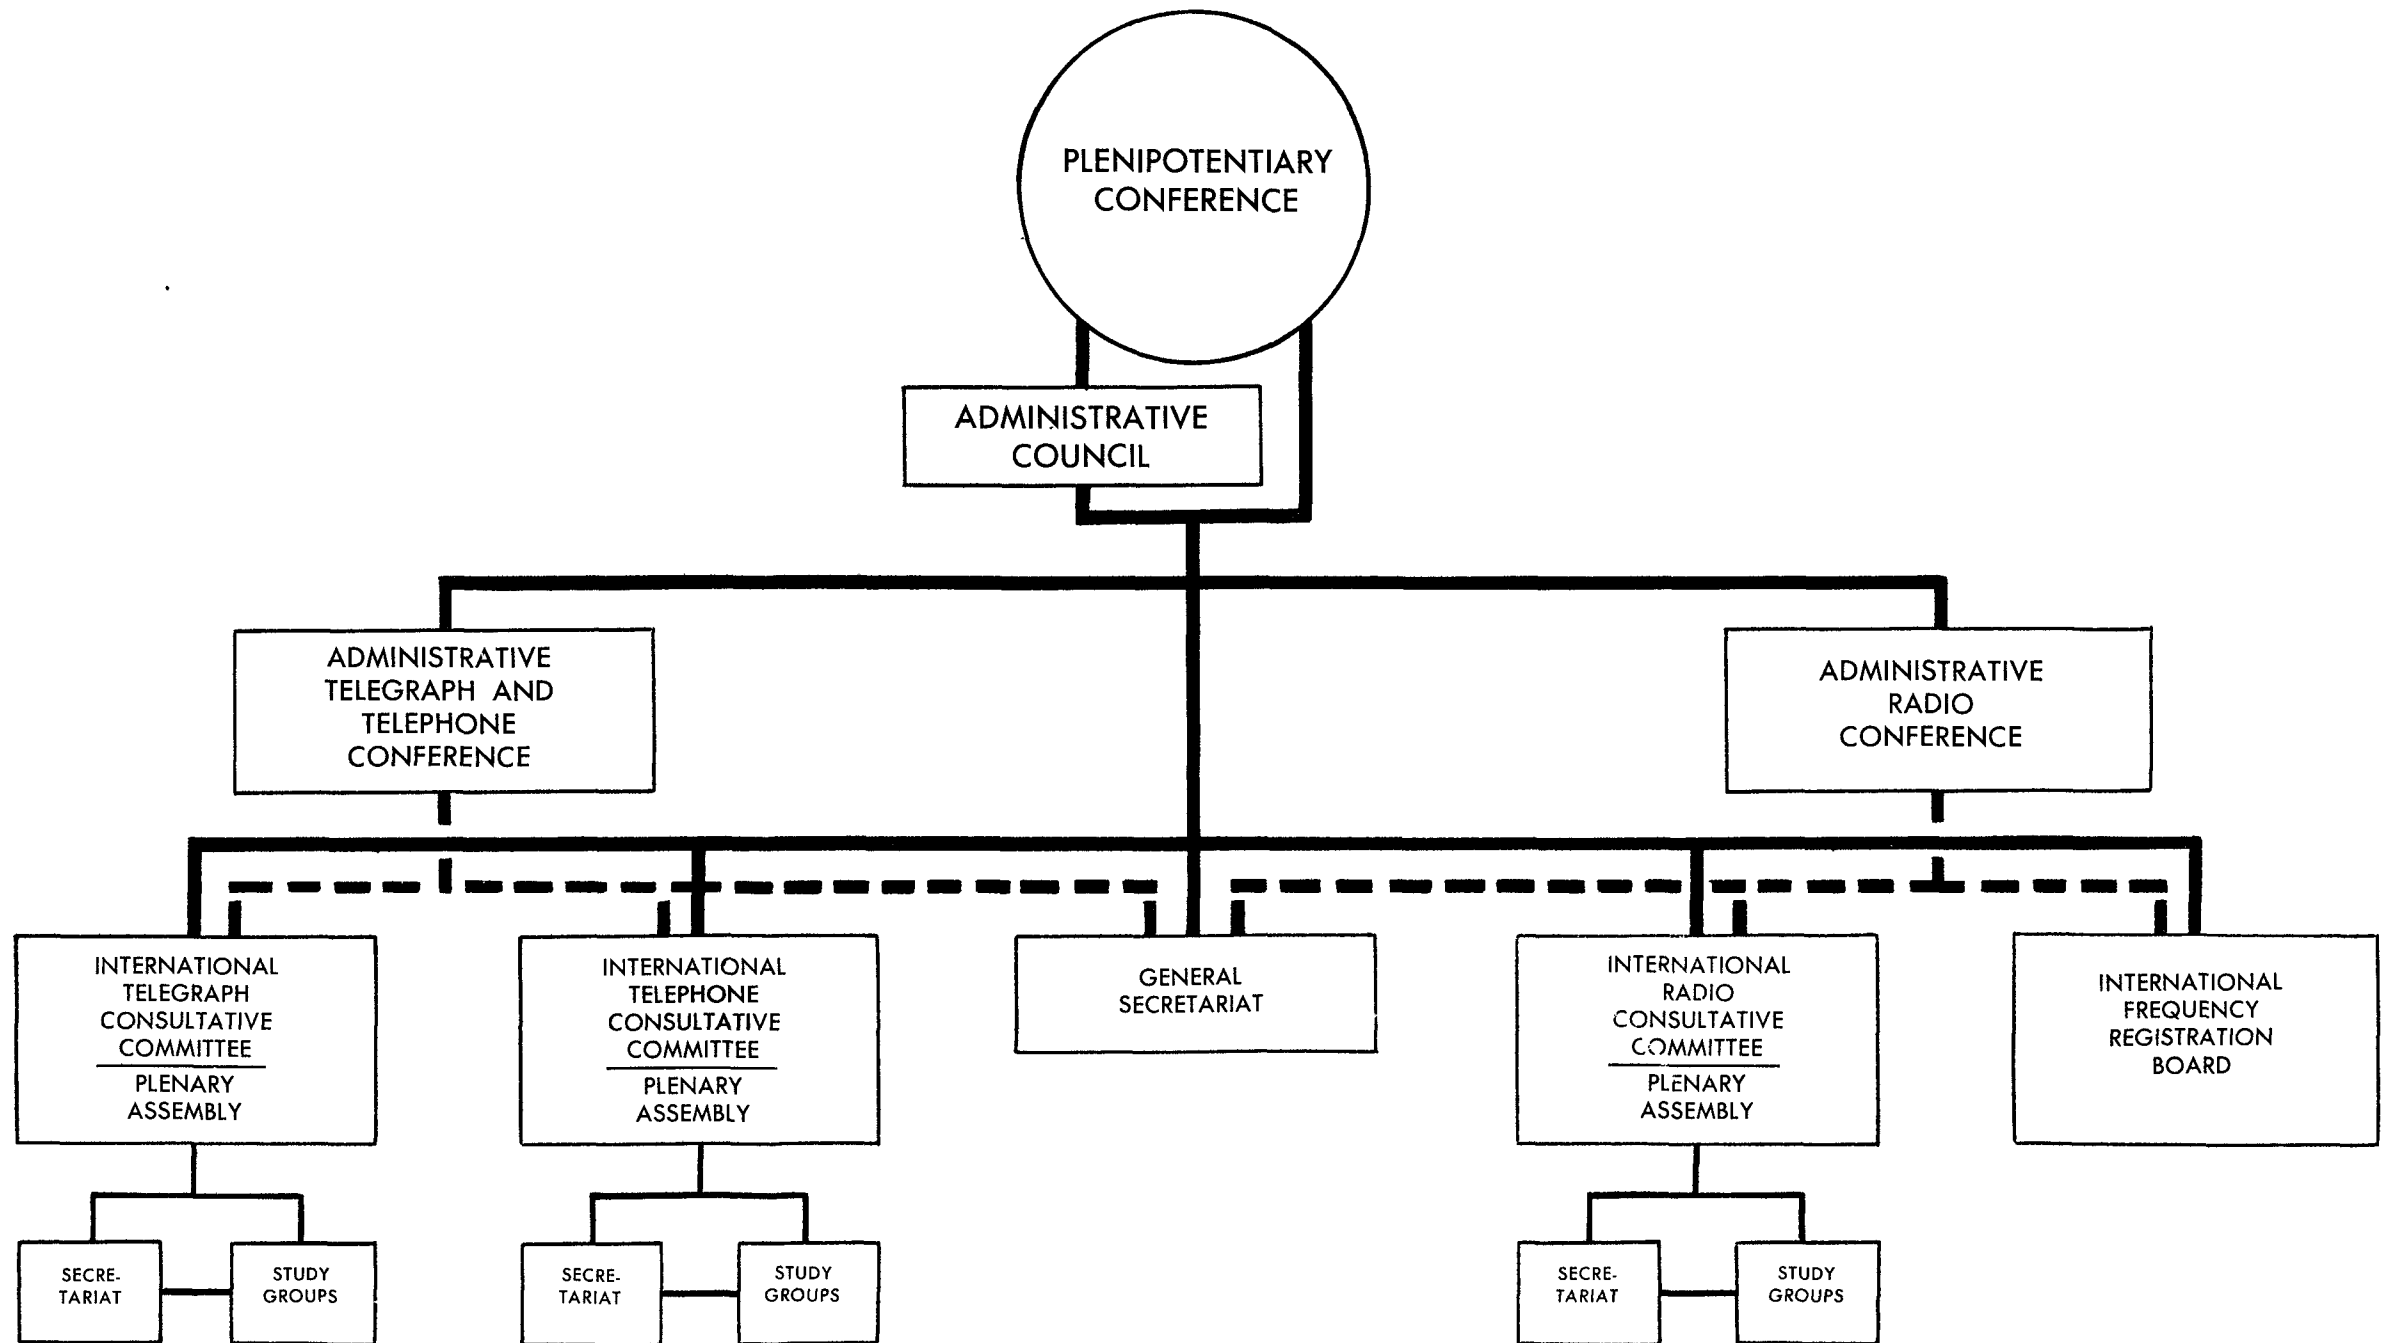

1. Each Member and Associate Member reserves to itself and to the recognized private operating agencies the right to fix the conditions under which it admits telecommunications exchanged with a State which is not a party to this Convention.

2. If a telecommunication originating in the territory of such a non-contracting State is accepted by a Member or Associate Member, it must be transmitted and, in so far as it follows the telecommunication channels of a Member or Associate Member, the obligatory provisions of the Convention and Regulations and the usual charges shall apply to it.

ARTICLE 25. Settlement of Differences

1. Members and Associate Members may settle their differences on questions relating to the application of this Convention or of the Regulations contemplated in Article 13, through diplomatic channels, or according to procedures established by bilateral or multilateral treaties concluded between them for the settlement of international disputes, or by any other method mutually agreed upon.

2. If none of these methods of settlement is adopted, any Member or Associate Member party to a dispute may submit the dispute to arbitration in accordance with the procedure defined in Annex 3.

CHAPTER III.—RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED NATIONS AND WITH INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

ARTICLE 26. Relations with the United Nations

1. The relationship between the United Nations and the International Telecommunication Union is defined in the agreement, the text of which appears in Annex 5 of this Convention.

2. In accordance with the provisions of Article XV of the above-mentioned agreement, the telecommunication operating services of the United Nations shall be entitled to the rights and bound by the obligations of this Convention and of the Regulations annexed thereto. Accordingly, they shall be entitled to attend all conferences of the Union, including meetings of the International Consultative Committees, in a consultative capacity. They shall not be eligible for election to any organ of the Union, the Members of which are elected by a plenipotentiary or administrative conference.

ARTICLE 27. Relations with International Organizations

In furtherance of complete international coordination on matters affecting telecommunication, the Union will cooperate with international organizations having related interests and activities.

CHAPTER IV.—GENERAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO TELECOMMUNICATION

ARTICLE 28. The Right of the Public to Use the International Telecommunication Service

Members and Associate Members recognize the right of the public to correspond by means of the international service of public correspondence. The service, the charges, and the safeguards shall be the same for all private users in each category of correspondence without any priority or preference.

ARTICLE 29. Stoppage of Telecommunications

1. Members and Associate Members reserve the right to stop the transmission of any private telegram which may appear dangerous to the security of the state or contrary to their laws, to public order or to decency, provided that they immediately notify the office of origin of the stoppage of any such telegram or any part thereof, except when such notification may appear dangerous to the security of the state.

2. Members and Associate Members also reserve the right to cut off any private telephone or telegraph communication which may appear dangerous to the security of the state or contrary to their laws, to public order or to decency.

ARTICLE 30. Suspension of Services

Each Member or Associate Member reserves the right to suspend the international telecommunication service for an indefinite time, either generally or only for certain relations and/or for certain kinds of correspondence, outgoing, incoming or in transit, provided that it immediately notifies such action to each of the other Members and Associate Members through the medium of the General Secretariat.

ARTICLE 31. Responsibility

Members and Associate Members accept no responsibility towards users of the international telecommunication services, particularly as regards claims for damages.

ARTICLE 32. Secrecy of Telecommunication

1. Members and Associate Members agree to take all possible measures, compatible with the system of telecommunication used, with a view to ensuring the secrecy of international correspondence.

2. Nevertheless, they reserve the right to communicate such correspondence to the competent authorities in order to ensure the application of their internal laws or the execution of international conventions to which they are parties.

ARTICLE 33. Establishment, Operation, and Protection of Telecommunication Installations and Channels

1. Members and Associate Members shall take such steps as may be necessary to ensure the establishment, under the best technical conditions, of the channels and installations necessary to carry on the rapid and uninterrupted exchange of international telecommunications.

2. So far as possible, these channels and installations must be operated by the best methods and procedures developed as a result of practical operating experience, maintained in proper operating condition and kept abreast of scientific and technical progress.

3. Members and Associate Members shall safeguard these channels and installations within their jurisdiction.

4. Unless other conditions are laid down by special arrangements, each Member and Associate Member shall take such steps as may be necessary to ensure maintenance of those sections of international telecommunication circuits within its control.

ARTICLE 34. Notification of Infringements

In order to facilitate the application of the provisions of Article 20, Members and Associate Members undertake to inform each other of infringements of the provisions of this Convention and of the Regulations annexed thereto.

ARTICLE 35. Charges and Free Services

The provisions regarding charges for telecommunication and the various cases in which free services are accorded are set forth in the Regulations annexed to this Convention.

ARTICLE 36. Priority of Government Telegrams and Telephone Calls

Subject to the provisions of Article 45, Government telegrams shall enjoy priority over other telegrams when priority is requested for them by the sender. Government telephone calls may also be accorded priority, upon specific request and to the extent practicable, over other telephone calls.

ARTICLE 37. Secret Language

1. Government telegrams and service telegrams may be expressed in secret language in all relations.

2. Private telegrams in secret language may be admitted between all countries with the exception of those which have previously notified, through the medium of the General Secretariat, that they do not admit this language for those categories of correspondence.

3. Members and Associate Members which do not admit private telegrams in secret language originating in or destined for their own territory must let them pass in transit, except in the case of suspension of service provided for in Article 30.

ARTICLE 38. Rendering and Settlements of Accounts

1. Administrations of Members and Associate Members and recognized private operating agencies which operate international telecommunication services, shall come to an agreement with regard to the amount of their credits and debits.

2. The statements of accounts in respect to debits and credits referred to in the preceding paragraph shall be drawn up in accordance with the provisions of the Regulations annexed to this Convention, unless special arrangements have been concluded between the parties concerned.

3. The settlement of international accounts shall be regarded as current transactions and shall be effected in accordance with the current international obligations of the countries concerned, in those cases where their governments have concluded arrangements on this subject. Where no such arrangements have been concluded, and in the absence of special arrangements made under Article 40 of this Convention, these settlements shall be effected in accordance with the Regulations.

ARTICLE 39. Monetary Unit

The monetary unit used in the composition of the tariffs of the international telecommunication services and in the establishment of the international accounts shall be the gold franc of 100 centimes, of a weight of 10/31 of a gramme and of a fineness of 0.900.

ARTICLE 40. Special Arrangements

Members and Associate Members reserve for themselves, for the private operating agencies recognized by them and for other agencies duly authorized to do so, the right to make special arrangements on telecommunication matters which do not concern Members and Associate Members in general. Such arrangements, however, shall not be in conflict with the terms of this Convention or of the Regulations annexed thereto, so far as concerns the harmful interference which their operation might be likely to cause to the radio services of other countries.

ARTICLE 41. Regional Conferences, Agreements and Organizations

Members and Associate Members reserve the right to convene regional conferences, to conclude regional agreements and to form regional organizations, for the purpose of settling telecommunication questions which are susceptible of being treated on a regional basis. However, such agreements must not be in conflict with this Convention.

CHAPTER V.—SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR RADIO

ARTICLE 42. Rational Use of Frequencies and Spectrum Space

Members and Associate Members recognize that it is desirable to limit the number of frequencies and the spectrum space used to the minimum essential to provide in a satisfactory manner the necessary services.

ARTICLE 43. Intercommunication

1. Stations performing radio communication in the mobile service shall be bound, within the limits of their normal employment, to exchange radiocommunications reciprocally without distinction as to the radio system adopted by them.

2. Nevertheless, in order not to impede scientific progress, the provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not prevent the use of a radio system incapable of communicating with other systems, provided that such incapacity is due to the specific nature of such system and is not the result of devices adopted solely with the object of preventing intercommunication.

3. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1, a station may be assigned to a restricted international service of telecommunication, determined by the purpose of such telecommunication, or by other circumstances independent of the system used.

ARTICLE 44. Harmful Interference

1. All stations, whatever their purpose, must be established and operated in such a manner as not to result in harmful interference to the radio services or communications of other Members or Associate Members or of recognized private operating agencies, or of other duly authorized operating agencies which carry on radio service, and which operate in accordance with the provisions of the Radio Regulations.

2. Each Member or Associate Member undertakes to require the private operating agencies which it recognizes and the other operating agencies duly authorized for this purpose, to observe the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

3. Further, the Members and Associate Members recognize the desirability of taking all practicable steps to prevent the operation of electrical apparatus and installations of all kinds from causing harmful interference to the radio services or communications mentioned in paragraph 1 of this Article.

ARTICLE 45. Distress Calls and Messages

1. Radio stations shall be obliged to accept, with absolute priority, distress calls and messages regardless of their origin, to reply in the same manner to such messages, and immediately to take such action in regard thereto as may be required.

2. The international telegraph and telephone services must accord absolute priority to communications concerning safety of life at sea or in the air.

ARTICLE 46. False or Deceptive Distress or Safety Signals. Irregular Use of Call Signs

Members and Associate Members agree to take the steps required to prevent the transmission or circulation of false or deceptive distress or safety signals and the use, by a station, of call signs which have not been regularly assigned to it.

ARTICLE 47. Installations for National Defence Services

1. Members and Associate Members retain their entire freedom with regard to military radio installations of their army, naval and air forces.

2. Nevertheless, these installations must, so far as possible, observe regulatory provisions relative to giving assistance in case of distress and to the measures to be taken to prevent harmful interference, and the provisions of the Regulations concerning the types of emission and the frequencies to be used, according to the nature of the service performed by such installations.

3. Moreover, when these installations take part in the service of public correspondence or other services governed by the Regulations annexed to this Convention, they must, in general, comply with the regulatory provisions for the conduct of such services.

CHAPTER VI.—DEFINITIONS

ARTICLE 48. Definitions

In this Convention, unless the context otherwise requires,

- (a) the terms which are defined in Annex 2 of this Convention shall have the meanings therein assigned to them;
- (b) other terms which are defined in the Regulations referred to in Article 13 shall have the meanings therein assigned to them.

CHAPTER VII.—FINAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 49. Effective Date of the Convention

The present Convention shall enter into force on January first nineteen hundred forty nine between countries, territories or groups of territories, in respect of which instruments of ratification or accession have been deposited before that date.

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the Convention in each of the English and French languages, in a single copy, in which in case of dispute, the French text shall be authentic, and which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America and one copy of which shall be forwarded to each signatory Government.

ANNEX 2¹²

DEFINITION OF TERMS USED IN THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION CONVENTION

Administration: Any department or service of a government responsible for implementing the obligations

¹¹ See Article 1, paragraph 2(a).

¹² See Article 48

undertaken in the International Telecommunication Convention and the Regulations annexed thereto.

Private operating agency: Any individual or company or corporation other than a governmental establishment or agency, which operates a telecommunication installation intended for an international telecommunication service or which is capable of causing harmful interference with such a service.

Recognized private operating agency: Any private operating agency, as defined above, which operates a service of public correspondence or of broadcasting and upon which the obligations provided for in Article 20 are imposed by the Member or Associate Member in whose territory the head office of the agency is situated.

Delegate: A person representing a government at a plenipotentiary conference, or a person representing a Government or an administration at an administrative conference, or at a meeting of an International Consultative Committee.

Delegation: The totality of the delegates, representatives and experts as the case may be of the same country. Each delegation may include one or more attaches and one or more interpreters. Each Member and Associate Member shall be free to make up its delegation as it wishes. In particular, it may include in its delegation, in the capacity of delegates or of advisers, representatives of private telecommunication operating agencies which it recognizes, and of other private enterprises interested in the telecommunication field which are recognized as such by their respective governments.

Representative: A person representing a recognized private operating agency at an administrative conference, or at a meeting of an International Consultative Committee.

Expert: A person representing a national scientific or industrial organization authorized by the Government of its country to be present at an administrative conference or at a meeting of an International Consultative Committee.

Observer: A person representing a Government, or a person representing an international organization with which the International Telecommunication Union has an interest in cooperating.

International Service: A telecommunication service between offices or stations in different countries or between mobile stations which are not in the same country or are subject to different countries.

Mobile Service: A service of radiocommunication between mobile and land stations or between mobile stations.

Broadcasting Service: A radiocommunication service of transmissions to be received directly by the general public.¹³

Telecommunication: Any transmission, emission or reception of sign, signals, writing, images and sounds or intelligence of any nature by wire, radio, visual or other electromagnetic systems.

Telegraphy: A system of telecommunication for the transmission of written matter by the use of a signal code.

Telephony: A system of telecommunication set up for the transmission of speech or, in some cases, other sounds.

Telegram: Written matter intended to be transmitted by telegraphy; this term also includes radiotelegram unless otherwise specified.

Government Telegrams and Government Telephone

Calls: These are telegrams or telephone calls originating with any of the authorities specified below:

- (a) the Head of a State;
- (b) the Head of a Government and members of a Government;
- (c) the Head of a colony, protectorate, overseas territory or territory under suzerainty, authority, trusteeship or mandate of a Member or Associate Member or of the United Nations;
- (d) Commanders-in-Chief of military forces, land, sea or air;
- (e) diplomatic or consular agents;
- (f) the Secretary General of the United Nations and the Heads of the subsidiary organs of the United Nations;
- (g) the International Court of Justice at The Hague.

Replies to Government telegrams as defined herein shall also be regarded as Government telegrams.

Service Telegrams: Those originating with telecommunication administrations of Members and Associate Members, with recognized private operating agencies or with the Secretary General of the Union and relating to international telecommunication or to objects of public interest mutually agreed upon by the administrations and private operating agencies concerned.

Private Telegrams: Telegrams other than service or Government telegrams.

Radiocommunication: Any telecommunication by means of Hertzian waves.

Hertzian Waves: Electromagnetic waves of frequencies between 10 kc/s and 3,000,000 Mc/s.

Radio: A general term applied to the use of Hertzian waves.

Harmful interference: Any radiation or any induction which endangers the functioning of a radionavigation service or of a safety service¹⁴, or obstructs or repeatedly interrupts a radio service operating in accordance with the Radio Regulations.

ANNEX 3¹⁵

ARBITRATION

1. The party which appeals to arbitration shall initiate the arbitration procedure by transmitting to the other party to the dispute a notice of the submission of the dispute to arbitration.

2. The parties shall decide by agreement whether the arbitration is to be entrusted to individuals, administrations or governments. If within one month after notice of submission of the dispute to arbitration, the parties have been unable to agree upon this point, the arbitration shall be entrusted to governments.

3. If arbitration is to be entrusted to individuals, the arbitrators must neither be nationals of the parties involved in the dispute, nor have their domicile in the countries parties to the dispute, nor be employed in their service.

4. If arbitration is to be entrusted to governments, or to administrations thereof, these must be chosen from ¹³This service may include transmissions of sounds or transmissions by television, facsimile or other means.

¹⁴A n y radio service, the operation of which is directly related, whether permanently or temporarily, to the safety of human life and the safeguarding of property, shall be considered as a safety service.

¹⁵See Article 25.

among the Members or Associate Members which are not parties to the dispute, but which are parties to the agreement, the application of which caused the dispute.

5. Within three months from the date of receipt of the notification of the submission of the dispute to arbitration, each of the two parties to the dispute shall appoint an arbitrator.

6. If more than two parties are involved in the dispute, an arbitrator shall be appointed in accordance with the procedure set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 above, by each of the two groups of parties having a common position in the dispute.

7. The two arbitrators thus appointed shall choose a third arbitrator who, if the first two arbitrators are individuals and not governments or administrations, must fulfill the conditions indicated in paragraph 3 above, and in addition must not be of the same nationality as either of the two arbitrators. Failing an agreement between the two arbitrators as to the choice of a third arbitrator, each of these two arbitrators shall nominate a third arbitrator who is in no way concerned in the dispute. The Secretary General of the Union shall then draw lots in order to select the third arbitrator.

8. The parties to the dispute may agree to have their dispute settled by a single arbitrator appointed by agreement; or alternatively, each party may nominate an arbitrator, and request the Secretary General of the Union to draw lots to decide which of the persons so nominated is to act as the single arbitrator.

9. The arbitrator or arbitrators shall be free to decide upon the procedure to be followed.

10. The decision of the single arbitrator shall be final and binding upon the parties to the dispute. If the arbitration is entrusted to more than one arbitrator, the decision made by the majority vote of the arbitrators shall be final and binding upon the parties.

11. Each party shall bear the expenses it shall have incurred in the investigation and presentation of the arbitration. The costs of arbitration other than those incurred by the parties themselves shall be divided equally between the parties to the dispute.

12. The Union shall furnish all information relating to the dispute which the arbitrator or arbitrators may need.

ANNEX 4

GENERAL REGULATIONS ANNEXED TO THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION CONVENTION

PART I. GENERAL PROVISIONS REGARDING CONFERENCES

CHAPTER I.—INVITATION AND ADMISSION TO PLENIPOTENTIARY CONFERENCES

1. The inviting Government, in collaboration with the Administrative Council, shall fix the definitive date and the exact place of the Conference.

2. One year before this date, the inviting Government shall send invitations to the Members and Associate Members.

3. The replies of the invited Members and Associate Members must reach the inviting Government not later than one month before the date of opening of the Conference.

4. Immediately after the inviting Government has sent the invitations, the Secretary General shall request the administrations of all Members and Associate Members to forward their proposals for the work of the Conference within a period of four months. The Secretary General shall assemble them and forward them, as soon as possible, to all Members and Associate Members.

5. The Administrative Council shall notify the United Nations of the place and date of the Conference in order that this Organization may participate in accordance with Article 26 of the Convention if it so desires.

6. Any permanent organ of the International Telecommunication Union shall be admitted, as of right, to the Conference and take part in its work in an advisory capacity.

7. The inviting Government, in agreement with the Administrative Council, may invite non-contracting Governments to send observers to take part in the conferences in an advisory capacity.

8. Delegations as defined in the Annex 2 to the Convention, and according to circumstances, the observers contemplated in paragraph 7 are admitted to the conference.

9. The provisions of the foregoing paragraphs shall apply, so far as practicable, to extraordinary plenipotentiary conferences.

CHAPTER 2.—INVITATION AND ADMISSION TO ADMINISTRATIVE CONFERENCES

1. The inviting Government, in agreement with the Administrative Council, shall fix the definitive date and the exact place of the conference.

2. One year before this date, in the case of an ordinary conference, and at least six months before in the case of an extraordinary conference, the inviting Government shall send invitations to the Members and Associate Members, which may communicate the invitation to the private operating agencies recognized by them. The inviting Government, in agreement with the Administrative Council, shall itself send a notification to the international organizations which may be interested in this conference.

3. The replies of the invited Members and Associate Members, regarding the Delegations of Governments and the representatives of recognized private operating agencies, must reach the inviting Government at the latest one month before the date of the opening of the conference.

4. (1) Applications made by international organizations for admission to the conferences must be sent to the inviting Government within a period of two months from the date of the notification as provided in paragraph 2.

(2) Four months before the meeting of the conference, the inviting Government shall forward to the Members and Associate Members the list of international organizations which have made application to take part in the conference, inviting them to state, within a period of two months, whether or not these applications should be granted.

5. The following shall be admitted to administrative conferences:

(a) Delegations as defined in the Annex 2 to the Convention;

(b) Representatives of recognized private operating agencies;

(c) Observers of international organizations if at least half of "the Members whose replies have been received within the period prescribed in paragraph 4 have pronounced favourably.

6. Any admission of other international organizations to a conference shall be subject to a decision of the conference itself, taken at the first session of the Plenary Assembly.

7. The provisions of paragraphs 4, 5, 6 and 7 of Chapter 1 of the General Regulations are applicable to Administrative Conferences.

CHAPTER 3.—VOTING AT CONFERENCES

1. Each Member of the Union shall have one vote in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention.

2. (1) Each delegation shall present credentials. In the case of a plenipotentiary conference, these must be full powers signed by the Head of the Government or by the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Member of the Union concerned.

(2) A special committee shall verify the credentials of each delegation during the first week of the conference.

(3) No delegation may exercise the right to vote until its credentials are declared to be in order by the special committee referred to above.

3. A duly accredited delegation may give a mandate to another duly accredited delegation to exercise its vote at one or more sessions at which it is unable to be present. In no case may one delegation exercise more than one such proxy vote.

CHAPTER 4.—PROCEDURE FOR CALLING EXTRAORDINARY ADMINISTRATIVE CONFERENCES OR FOR CHANGING THE TIME OR PLACE OF A CONFERENCE

1. When a Member or Associate Member of the Union communicates to the Chairman of the Administrative Council a desire for (a) an Extraordinary Administrative Conference, or (b) a change in the time and/or place of the next Plenipotentiary or Administrative Conference, it shall suggest a time and place.

2. On receipt of twenty or more requests, the Administrative Council shall inform all Members and Associate Members, give particulars and allow a period of six weeks for receipt of their comments. If there is unanimity of opinion among the Members on place and date, the Council shall ascertain whether the Government of the country in which the proposed meeting place is situated is prepared to act as inviting Government. If the answer is in the affirmative, the Council and the Government concerned shall arrange accordingly. If the answer is in the negative, the Council shall so inform the Members and Associate Members desiring the Conference, and invite alternative suggestions. On receipt of these suggestions, the Council shall, where appropriate, follow the consultation procedure set out in paragraph 3 below.

3. If more than one meeting place or date for the Conference is suggested, the Council shall consult the Government of each of the countries where the places are situated. When the views of the Governments have been ascertained, the Council shall invite all Members and Associate Members to choose one of the meeting places and/or dates which have been ascertained to be available. According to the wishes of the majority of the Members, the Council shall then arrange the Conference in collaboration with the inviting Government.

4. All Members and Associate Members shall dispatch their replies to a communication from the Administrative Council regarding the date and meeting place for a Conference in time for the replies to reach the Council within six weeks of the date of the communication from the Council.

CHAPTER 5.—METHOD OF PRESENTATION OF PROPOSALS FOR CONSIDERATION AT CONFERENCES

To be considered by the Conference, all proposals, the adoption of which will require revision of the text of the Convention or Regulations, must carry references identifying by Chapter, Article or Paragraph number those parts of the text which will require such revision.

CHAPTER 6.—RULES OF PROCEDURE OF CONFERENCES

RULE 1. Order of Seating

At sessions of the Plenary Assembly, the delegates, representatives, experts and attaches shall be grouped in delegations, and the delegations shall be seated in the alphabetical order of the French names of the countries represented.

RULE 2. First Session of the Plenary Assembly

The first session of the Plenary Assembly shall be opened by a person appointed by the inviting Government.

RULE 3. Election of the Chairman and Vice-Chairmen

The chairman and the vice-chairmen of the Conference shall be elected at the first session of the Plenary Assembly of the Conference.

RULE 4. Powers of the Chairman

1. The Chairman shall open and close the sessions of the Plenary Assembly, direct the deliberations and announce the results of the voting.

2. He shall also have the general direction of all the work of the Conference.

RULE 5. Secretariat of the Conference

The secretariat of the Conference shall be constituted at the first session of the Plenary Assembly and shall be composed of the personnel of the secretariat of the Union, and, if necessary, of personnel of the administration of the inviting Government.

RULE 6. Appointment of Committees

The Plenary Assembly may appoint committees to examine questions submitted for the consideration of the Conference. These committees may appoint subcommittees, which, in their turn, may appoint sub-subcommittees.

RULE 7. Composition of Committees

1. In plenipotentiary conferences, the committees shall be composed of Delegates of Members and Associate Members which have made application or which have been appointed by the Plenary Assembly.

2. (1) In administrative conferences, the committees may also include representatives of recognized private operating agencies.

(2) Experts of scientific or manufacturing telecommunication organizations, observers of international organizations and persons appearing on behalf of societies, associations, or individuals may participate without vote in the committees, subcommittees, and sub-subcommittees of administrative conferences subject to the provisions of Chapter 2 and Chapter 6, Rule 9, of the General Regulations.

RULE 8. Chairmen, Vice-Chairmen and Reporters of Committees

1. The Chairman of the Conference shall submit for the approval of the Plenary Assembly the choice of the chairman, and of the vice-chairman or vice-chairmen of each committee.

2. The Chairman of each committee shall propose to his committee the nomination of the reporters and the choice of the chairmen, vice-chairmen, and reporters of the subcommittees of that committee.

RULE 9. Participation of Private Societies in Administrative Conferences

Societies, associations or individuals may be authorized by the Plenary Assembly or by committees to present petitions or submit resolutions provided that such petitions or resolutions are countersigned or supported by the Head of the Delegation of the country concerned. Such societies, associations or individuals may also attend certain sessions of these committees, but the speakers shall take part in the discussions only in so far as the Chairman of the Committee, in agreement with the Head of the Delegation of the country concerned, may deem desirable.

RULE 10. Summons to Sessions

The sessions of the Plenary Assembly and the sessions of committees and of subcommittees shall be announced either by letter or by notice posted in the meeting place of the Conference.

RULE 11. Order of Discussion

1. Persons desiring to speak may do so only after having obtained the consent of the Chairman. As a general rule they shall begin by announcing the name of their country or the name of their company and the country where its headquarters are located.

2. Any person speaking must express himself slowly and distinctly, separating his words and pausing frequently so that all his colleagues may be able to follow his meaning clearly.

RULE 12. Proposals Presented Before the Opening of the Conference

Proposals presented before the opening of the Conference shall be allocated by the Plenary Assembly to the appropriate committees appointed in accordance with Chapter 6, Rule 6, of the General Regulations.

RULE 13. Proposals Presented During a Conference

1. No proposal or amendment shall be submitted unless it is countersigned or supported by the Head of the Delegation of the country concerned or by his deputy.

2. The Chairman of the Conference shall decide whether the proposal or the amendment shall be announced to all delegations by distribution of copies or merely by oral statement.

3. At sessions of the Plenary Assembly, any authorized individual may read or request to be read, any proposal or amendment presented by him during a conference and may be allowed to explain his reasons therefor.

RULE 14. Proposals Presented to Committees During a Conference

1. Proposals or amendments presented after the opening of a conference must be delivered to the Chairman of the appropriate committee, or in case of doubt as to the appropriate committee, to the Chairman of the Conference.

2. Every proposal or amendment for modification of the Convention or the Regulations must be presented in the definitive form of words to be included in those documents.

3. The Chairman of the Committee concerned shall decide whether the proposal or amendment shall be announced to all members of the Committee by distribution of copies or merely by oral statement.

RULE 15. Postponed Proposals

When a proposal or an amendment has been reserved or when its examination has been postponed, the Delegation sponsoring it shall be responsible for seeing that it is not subsequently overlooked.

RULE 16. Voting Procedure in Sessions of the Plenary Assembly

1. In sessions of the Plenary Assembly each proposal or amendment shall be submitted to a vote after discussion.

2. For a valid vote to be taken at a session of the Plenary Assembly at least one-half of the delegations accredited to the Conference and having the right to vote must be present or represented at the session during which the vote is cast.

3. Voting shall take place by a show of hands. If a majority is not clearly apparent even after a recount has been taken, or if an individual count of the votes is requested, there shall be a roll call in the alphabetical order of the French names of the Members.

4. In sessions of the Plenary Assembly, no proposal or amendment shall be adopted unless it is supported by a majority of the delegations present and voting. In determining the number of votes required for a majority, abstentions shall not be taken into account. In case of a tie the measure shall be considered rejected.

5. Exceptions to the above rule shall be made with respect to membership in the Union, in which case the procedure shall be in accordance with that prescribed in Article 1 of the Convention.

6. If the number of abstentions exceeds one-half of the number of delegations present and voting, the measure shall be reconsidered at a subsequent session, at which time the abstentions shall not be taken into consideration.

7. If five or more delegations, present and entitled to vote, request, when a vote is about to be taken, that it shall be taken by secret ballot, this shall be done. The necessary steps shall be taken to guarantee secrecy.

RULE 17. Right of Vote and Voting Procedure in Committees

1. The right of vote in Committees shall be governed by Chapter 3 of the General Regulations.

2. Voting procedure in Committees shall be governed by the provisions of paragraphs 1, 3, 4, and 6 of Rule 16, of Chapter 6, of the General Regulations.

RULE 18. Adoption of New Provisions

1. As a general rule, delegations which cannot have their opinion regarding a provision accepted by the others must endeavour to adopt the opinion of the majority.

2. However, if the measure proposed appears to a delegation to be of such a nature as to prevent its Government from ratifying the Convention or approving the Regulations, the delegation may express reservations final or provisional, regarding this measure.

RULE 19. Minutes of the Sessions of the Plenary Assembly

1. The minutes of the sessions of the Plenary Assembly shall be drawn up by the secretariat of the Conference.

2. (1) As a general rule, the minutes shall contain only the proposals and conclusions, with the chief reasons for them in concise terms.

(2) However, each delegate, representative or observer, shall have the right to require the insertion in the minutes, either summarized or in full, of any statement which he has made. In such case, he must himself supply its text to the secretariat of the Conference within two hours after the end of the session. It is recommended that this right shall only be used with discretion.

RULE 20. Reports of Committees

1. (1) The debates of the committees and subcommittees shall be summarized, session by session, in reports in which shall be brought out the essential points of the discussion, the various opinions which are expressed and which it is desirable that the Plenary Assembly should know, and the proposals and conclusions which emerge.

(2) However, each delegate, representative or observer shall have the right to require the insertion in the report, either summarized or in full, of any statement which he has made. In such case, he must himself supply to the reporter the text to be inserted within two hours after the end of the session. It is recommended that this right shall only be used with discretion.

2. If circumstances warrant, the committees or subcommittees shall prepare at the end of their work a final report in which they shall recapitulate in concise terms the proposals and the conclusions which result from the studies which have been entrusted to them.

RULE 21. Adoption of Minutes and Reports

1. (1) As a general rule, at the beginning of each session of the Plenary Assembly, or of each session of a committee or of a subcommittee, the minutes or the report of the preceding session shall be read.

(2) However, the Chairman may, if he considers such procedure satisfactory, and if no objection is raised, merely ask if any members of the Plenary Assembly, the Committee or the subcommittee, have any remarks to make on the content of the minutes or of the report.

2. The minutes or the report shall then be adopted or amended in accordance with the remarks which have been made and which have been approved by the Plenary Assembly, or by the committee or subcommittee.

3. Any final report must be approved by the respective committee or subcommittee.

4. (1) The minutes of the closing session of the Plenary Assembly shall be examined and approved by the Chairman of the Conference.

(2) The report of the last session of a committee or of a subcommittee shall be examined and approved by the Chairman of the committee or subcommittee.

RULE 22. Editorial Committee

1. The texts of the Convention or of the Regulations, which shall be worded so far as practicable in their definitive form, by the various committees, following the opinions expressed, shall be submitted to an editorial committee charged with perfecting their form without altering the sense and with combining them with those parts of the former texts which have not been altered.

2. The whole of the revised texts shall be submitted for the approval of the Plenary Assembly of the Conference which shall decide on them, or refer them back to the appropriate committee for further examination.

RULE 23. Numbering

1. The numbers of the chapters, articles and paragraphs of the texts subjected to revision shall be preserved until the first reading at a session of the Plenary Assembly. The passages added shall bear provisionally the numbers bis, ter, etc. and the numbers of deleted passages shall not be used.

2. The definitive numbering of the chapters, articles and paragraphs shall be entrusted to the Editorial Committee after their adoption following the first reading.

RULE 24. Final Approval

The texts of the Convention and of the Regulations shall be final after they have been read a second time and approved.

RULE 25. Signature

The final texts approved by the Conference shall be submitted for signature to the delegates provided with the necessary powers in the alphabetical order of the French names of the countries.

RULE 26. Press Notices

Official releases to the press about the work of the Conference shall be issued only as authorized by the Chairman or a Vice-Chairman of the Conference.

RULE 27. Franking Privileges

While attending conferences and meetings provided for in the Convention, Delegates and Representatives, as defined in the Annex to the Convention, the Secretary General, Assistant Secretaries General, Officials of the Secretariat of the Union and Members of the Administrative Council, shall be entitled to postal, telegraph and telephone franking privileges, to the extent arranged by the Government of the country in which the conference or meeting is held, in agreement with the other contracting governments and with the private operating agencies concerned.

PART II. INTERNATIONAL CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEES

CHAPTER 7.—GENERAL PROVISIONS

1. The provisions of Part II of the General Regulations supplement Article 8 of the Convention defining the scope and structure of the International Consultative Committees.

2. Consultative Committees shall also observe the applicable Rules of Procedure of Conferences contained in Part I of the General Regulations.

CHAPTER 8.—CONDITIONS FOR PARTICIPATION

1. (1) The International Consultative Committees shall have as members:

- (a) as of right; Administrations of Members and Associate Members;
- (b) upon request; such recognized private operating agencies as have expressed a desire to have their experts participate in the work of the Committees, subject to the procedure indicated below.

(2) The first request from a recognized private operating agency to take part in the work of a Consultative Committee shall be addressed to the Secretary General who shall inform all the Members and Associate Members and the Director of the Consultative Committee concerned. A request from a private operating agency must be approved by the Administration of the Government recognizing it.

(3) Any private operating agency, member of a Consultative Committee, shall have the right to withdraw from participation in the work of this Consultative Committee when it so desires, by notifying the Director of the Committee. The withdrawal shall become effective one year from the date of the notification.

2. (1) International organizations, which are coordinating their work with the International Telecommunication Union and which have related activities, may be admitted to participate in the work of the Consultative Committees in an advisory capacity.

(2) The first request from an international organization to take part in the work of a Consultative Committee shall be addressed to the Secretary General who shall invite by telegram all the Members and Associate Members to say whether the request should be granted; the request shall be granted if the majority of the replies of the members received within a period of one month are favourable. The Secretary General shall inform all the Members and Associate Members and the Director of the Consultative Committee concerned of the result of the consultation.

3. (1) Scientific or manufacturing organizations, which are engaged in the study of telecommunication problems or in the design or manufacture of equipment intended for telecommunication services, may be admitted to participate in an advisory capacity in meetings of the Study Groups of the Consultative Committees, provided that their participation has received the approval of the administrations of the countries concerned.

(2) The first request from a scientific or manufacturing organization for admission to meetings of Study Groups of a Consultative Committee shall be addressed to the Director of the Consultative Committee; such a request must be approved by the administration of the country concerned.

CHAPTER 9.—DUTIES OF THE PLENARY ASSEMBLY

The duties of the Plenary Assembly shall be to approve for issue, to modify or to reject recommendations submitted to it by the Study Groups and to draw up lists of new questions to be studied, in accordance with paragraph 2 of Article 8 of the Convention. It shall submit to the Administrative Council a statement of the financial accounts of the Consultative Committee concerned.

CHAPTER 10.—MEETINGS OF THE PLENARY ASSEMBLY

1. The Plenary Assembly shall normally meet every two years, provided that a meeting shall take place about one year previous to the meeting of the relative Administrative Conference.

2. The date of the meeting of a Plenary Assembly may be advanced or postponed, with the approval of at least twelve participating countries, according to the state of progress of work of the Study Groups.

3. Each meeting of a Plenary Assembly shall be held in a place fixed by the previous meeting of the Plenary Assembly.

4. At each of these meetings, the Plenary Assembly shall be presided over by the Head of the Delegation of the country in which the meeting is held; the Chairman shall be assisted by Vice-Chairmen elected by the Plenary Assembly.

5. The Secretariat of the Plenary Assembly of a Consultative Committee shall be composed of the specialized Secretariat of that Committee, with the help, if necessary, of the personnel of the administration of the inviting Government and of the General Secretariat.

CHAPTER 11.—LANGUAGES AND METHOD OF VOTING IN SESSIONS OF THE PLENARY ASSEMBLIES

1. The languages used in the Plenary Meetings and in the official documents of the Consultative Committees shall be as provided in Article 15 of the Convention.

2. The Members which are authorized to vote at sessions of Plenary Assemblies of the Consultative Committees shall be as provided in Article 1, paragraph 3 (2) of the Convention. However, when a country is not represented by an administration, the representatives of the recognized private operating agencies of that member country shall, as a whole, and regardless of their number, be entitled to a single vote.

CHAPTER 12.—COMPOSITION OF STUDY GROUPS

The Plenary Assembly shall set up the necessary Study Groups to deal with questions to be studied; it shall designate the administrations, private operating agencies, international organizations and scientific and manufacturing organizations which shall take part in the work of the Study Groups; it shall name the Group Chairman who shall preside over each of the Study Groups.

CHAPTER 13.—TREATMENT OF BUSINESS

1. If a Study Group cannot solve a question by correspondence, the Group Chairman may, with the approval of his Administration suggest a meeting at a convenient place to discuss the question orally.

2. However, in order to avoid unnecessary journeys and prolonged absences, the Director of a Consultative Committee, in agreement with the Group Chairmen of the various Study Groups concerned, shall draw up the general plan of meetings of groups of Study Groups which are to meet in the same place during the same period.

3. The Director shall send reports made as a result of correspondence or of meetings, to the participating administrations, and to the private operating agencies which are members of the Consultative Committee. These shall be sent as soon as possible and, in any event, in time for them to be received at least one month before the date of the next meeting of the Plenary Assembly. Questions which have not formed the subject of a report furnished in this way shall not appear in the agenda for the meeting of the Plenary Assembly.

CHAPTER 14.—DUTIES OF THE DIRECTOR. SPECIALIZED SECRETARIAT

1. (1) The Director of a Consultative Committee shall coordinate the work of the Study Groups and of the Plenary Assembly.

(2) He shall keep a file of all the correspondence of the Committee.

(3) The Director shall be assisted by a secretariat composed of a specialized staff to work under his direction and to aid him in the organization of the work of the Committee.

(4) The Director of the International Radio Consultative Committee shall also be assisted by a Vice-Director in accordance with Article 8 of the Convention.

2. The Director shall choose the technical and administrative members of the secretariat within the framework of the budget as approved by the Plenipotentiary Conference or the Administrative Council. The appointment of the technical and administrative personnel is made by the Secretary General in agreement with the Director.

3. The Director shall participate as of right, but in an advisory capacity, in meetings of the Plenary Assembly and of the Study Groups. He shall make all necessary preparations for meetings of the Plenary Assembly and of the Study Groups.

4. The Vice-Director of the International Radio Consultative Committee shall participate as of right in an advisory capacity in meetings of the Plenary Assembly and of the Study Groups when questions in which he is concerned are on the Agenda.

5. The Director shall submit to the Plenary Assembly a report on the activities of the Consultative Committee since the last meeting of the Plenary Assembly. After approval, this report shall be sent to the Secretary General.

6. The Director shall submit for the approval of the Plenary Assembly an estimate of the expenditure proposed for each of the next two years; after its approval by the Plenary Assembly, the Director shall send this estimate to the Secretary General; to be embodied in the annual estimates of the Union.

CHAPTER 15.—PREPARATION OF PROPOSALS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE CONFERENCES

One year before the appropriate Administrative Conference, representatives of the interested Study Groups of each Consultative Committee shall correspond with or meet with representatives of the General Secretariat in order to extract, from the recommendations issued by it since the preceding Administrative Conference, proposals for modification of the relative set of Regulations.

CHAPTER 16.—RELATIONS OF CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEES BETWEEN THEMSELVES AND WITH OTHER INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

1. International Consultative Committees may form joint Study Groups to study and make recommendations on questions of common interest.

2. Any Consultative Committee may appoint a representative to attend, in an advisory capacity, meetings or other committees of the Union or other international organizations to which this Consultative Committee has been invited.

3. The Secretary General of the Union, or one of the two Assistant Secretaries General, the representatives of the International Frequency Registration Board, and the Directors of the other Consultative Committees of the Union or their representatives may attend meetings of the Consultative Committees in an advisory capacity.

CHAPTER 17.—FINANCES OF INTERNATIONAL CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEES

1. The salaries of the Directors of the International Consultative Committees, including the salary of the Vice-Director of the International Radio Consultative Committee, and the ordinary expenses of the specialized secretariats shall be included in the ordinary expenses of the Union in accordance with the provisions of Article 14 of the Convention.

2. The expenses of the meetings of the Plenary Assemblies and of the meetings of the Study Groups, including the extraordinary expenses of the Directors, the Vice-Director of the International Radio Consultative Committee, and of the whole of the Secretariat employed at such meetings shall be borne in the manner described below, by the administrations, private operating agencies and scientific or manufacturing organizations participating in such meetings.

3. An administration wishing to take part in the work of a Consultative Committee shall address a declaration to that effect to the Secretary General. This declaration shall include an undertaking to contribute to the extraordinary expenses of that Committee as set forth in the preceding paragraph, and also to pay for all documents supplied. This undertaking shall take effect as from the close of the meeting of the Plenary Assembly preceding the date of the declaration and shall remain in force until terminated by the administration concerned. Any notice of termination shall take effect as from the close of the meeting of the Plenary Assembly following the date of such notice. An administration giving notice of termination shall, however, be entitled to receive all documents pertaining to the last meeting of the Plenary Assembly held during the period of validity of its undertaking.

4. (1) Any private operating agency member of a Consultative Committee must contribute to the expenses referred to in paragraph 2 above and must pay for the documents with which it is supplied as from the close of the meeting of the Plenary Assembly immediately preceding the date of its application as provided for in Chapter 8, paragraph 1 (2) of the General Regulations. This obligation shall continue until any notice of withdrawal, made in accordance with Chapter 8, paragraph 1 (3) of the General Regulations, becomes effective.

(2) The provisions of paragraph 4 (1) above shall apply to scientific or manufacturing organizations and also to international organizations unless these latter are specifically exempted by the Administrative Council in accordance with Article 14 of the Convention.

5. The expenses of the Consultative Committees defined in paragraph 2 above shall be apportioned among the administrations which have undertaken to contribute, in proportion to the number of units which the respective Governments contribute to the ordinary expenses of the Union under Article 14 of the Convention. Private operating agencies, international organizations and scientific or manufacturing organizations which have undertaken to contribute shall declare the class in which they wish to be placed for this purpose.

6. Each administration, private operating agency, international organization and scientific or manufacturing organization shall defray the personal expenses of its own participants.

ANNEX 5

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION¹⁵

* * *

FINAL PROTOCOL TO THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION CONVENTION

(Atlantic City, 1947)

At the time of signing the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City, the undersigned plenipotentiaries take note of the following statements:

I

For Canada:

The signature of Canada to this Convention is subject to the reservation that Canada does not accept Paragraph 3 of Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention. Canada agrees to be bound by the Radio Regulations annexed to this Convention but does not at present agree to be bound by the Additional Radio Regulations nor by any Telegraph Regulations or Telephone Regulations.

II

For the Republic of Chile:

The Chairman of the Delegation from Chile in signing the Radio Regulations of Atlantic City makes a provisional reservation in regard to the provisions of paragraphs 990, 991, 992, 994, 995, 996 and 997 of Section II of Article 41 of said Regulations.

The Chairman of the Delegation from Chile in signing the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City, makes a provisional reservation in regard to the provisions of Article 39 of the Atlantic City Convention.

III

For the Republic of Colombia:

The Republic of Colombia formally declares that the Republic of Colombia does not, by signature of this Convention on its behalf, accept any obligation in respect to the Telephone Regulations referred to in Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention.

IV

For the Republic of Ecuador:

The Republic of Ecuador formally declares that by signature of this Convention, it does not accept any obligation in respect to the Telegraph Regulations, the Telephone Regulations, or the Additional Radio Regulations, referred to in Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention.

V

For the United States of America:

Signature of this Convention for and in the name of the United States of America constitutes, in accordance with its constitutional processes, signature also on behalf of all territories of the United States of America.

The United States of America formally declares that the United States of America does not, by signature of this Convention on its behalf, accept any obligation in respect of the Telegraph Regulations, the Telephone Regulations, or the Additional Radio Regulations referred to in Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention.

VI

For the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics:

When signing the International Telecommunication Convention, the U.S.S.R. Delegation declared formally its disagreement with paragraph 2, article 1 of the Convention which it finds legally unfounded and contradictory to the other articles of the Convention and to the resolution of Madrid Telecommunication Conference.

At the same time the U.S.S.R. Delegation considers it unjustified that the following sovereign states, fully fledged participants of the Madrid Convention were without any legal foundation not included in the list of members of the Union set forth in Annex 1: the Latvian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Lithuanian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Estonian Soviet Socialist Republic and the People's Republic of Mongolia.

The U.S.S.R. Delegation is of the opinion that the whole status of Membership in the International Telecommunication Union should be brought up for revision at the next plenipotentiary conference.

VII

For the Republic of China:

The Republic of China formally declares that the Republic of China does not, by signature of this Convention, accept any obligation in respect of the Telephone Regulations referred to in Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention.

VIII

For the Republic of the Philippines:

The signature of the Republic of the Philippines to the Atlantic City Convention is subject to the reservation that, for the present, it cannot agree to be bound by the Telephone and Telegraph Regulations referred to in Paragraph 3 of Article 13 of the above-mentioned Convention.

IX

For Pakistan:

The Delegation of Pakistan formally declares that Pakistan does not, by signature of this Convention on its behalf, accept any obligation in respect of the Telephone Regulations referred to in Article 13 of this Convention.

X

For the Republic of Peru:

The Chairman of the Delegation of Peru, in signing the Atlantic City Convention, makes a provisional reservation with respect to the obligations established in Article 13 of the said Convention, in relation to the Telegraph Regulations, Telephone Regulations and Additional Radio Regulations.

¹⁵ For text, see pp. 952-54.

XI

For the Republic of Cuba:

Signature of this Convention for and in the name of Cuba is subject to the reservation that Cuba does not accept, in regard to the Telephone Regulations, Paragraph 3 of Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention.

XII

For the United States of Venezuela:

The United States of Venezuela formally declares that the United States of Venezuela does not, by signature of this Convention on its behalf, accept any obligation in respect to the Telegraph Regulations, the Telephone Regulations or the Additional Radio Regulations referred to in Article 13 (Regulations).

XIII

For the Oriental Republic of Uruguay:

The Delegation of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay formally declares that by signature of this Convention the Oriental Republic of Uruguay does not accept any obligation in respect of the Telegraph Regulations, Telephone Regulations, or Additional Radio Regulations referred to in Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention.

XIV

For the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia:

The Saudi Arabian Delegation, in signing this Convention, reserves for its Government the right to accept or not accept any obligation in respect of the Telegraph Regulations, Telephone Regulations, the Radio Regulations or the Additional Radio Regulations referred to in Article 13 of the Atlantic City Convention.

XV

For the Republic of Panama:

The Republic of Panama formally declares that by signature of this Atlantic City Convention of 1947, it does not accept any obligation in respect of the Telegraph Regulations, the Telephone Regulations, or the Additional Radio Regulations referred to in Article 13.

XVI

For Mexico:

The Mexican Delegation states that the signing of the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City does not oblige the Mexican Government to accept the Telegraph Regulations, nor the Telephone Regulations, nor the Additional Radio Regulations referred to in Article 13 of the above-mentioned Convention.

XVII

For Ethiopia:

The Delegation of Ethiopia formally declares that it makes a temporary reservation in relation to Protocol I, concerning the Transitional Arrangements, as its powers are expressly subject to the limitation that all its signatures are subject to ratification.

XVIII

For Iraq:

Signature of this Convention on behalf of Iraq is subject to reservation in regard to the right of Iraq to accept or not accept the Telephone Regulations and Telegraph Regulations referred to in Article 13.

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed this Final Protocol of Signature in each of the English and French languages, in a single copy, which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America and one copy of which shall be forwarded to each signatory government.

Done at Atlantic City, October 2, 1947.

ADDITIONAL PROTOCOLS TO THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION CONVENTION

(Atlantic City, 1947)

At the time of signing the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City, the undersigned plenipotentiaries have signed the following additional protocols:

I.—PROTOCOL CONCERNING TRANSITIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

The International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City has agreed to the following arrangements to ensure the satisfactory functioning of the Union and to facilitate the application of the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City upon its coming into force on January 1, 1949:

1. (1) The Administrative Council shall be set up forthwith in accordance with the provisions of Article 5 of the Atlantic City Convention and shall forthwith function on a provisional basis until the coming into force of that Convention. It will hold its first meeting at Atlantic City.

(2) At that meeting the Administrative Council shall elect its Chairman and Vice-Chairmen and shall plan its work for the transitional period ending December 31, 1948, with a view to taking over, on January 1, 1949, its permanent functions.

2. (1) The International Frequency Registration Board shall be set up forthwith in accordance with the provisions of Article 6 of the Atlantic City Convention and shall function on a provisional basis until the coming into force of the said Convention.

(2) It will hold its first meeting at Atlantic City. For that meeting the Members of the Board may make temporary unpaid appointments of technically qualified persons without regard to all the conditions laid down in Article 6 of the Convention.

(3) At that meeting the Board shall be organized and its work shall be planned for the transitional period between January 1, 1948 and December 31, 1948, in accordance with the decisions taken by the International Radio Conference of Atlantic City with a view to its permanent establishment as provided for in the Convention of Atlantic City.

3. (1) The General Secretariat shall be set up forthwith in accordance with the provisions of Article 9 of the Atlantic City Convention. Until the coming into force of that Convention, it shall function on a provisional basis. With the consent of Swiss Government, its costs shall be filled as far as possible by the corresponding officials of the present Bureau in order to facilitate the transfer of duties upon the date of the coming into force of the Atlantic City Convention.

(2) Exceptionally, in derogation of that Convention, the International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City appoints the first holders of the posts of Secretary General and Assistant Secretaries General. The present Director of the Bureau, Mr. F. von Ernst, is hereby appointed as Secretary General and the present Vice-Directors, Mr. Leon Mulatier and Mr. Gerald C. Gross, are appointed as Assistant Secretaries General. These officials shall perform the functions as provided for them in the Convention.

4. During the interim period the Secretary General shall send to all Members of the Union notification of the deposit of instruments of ratification and accession as provided in Articles 15 and 17 of the Convention.

II.—PROTOCOL CONCERNING GERMANY AND JAPAN

It is hereby agreed that Germany and Japan may accede to the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City by fulfilling the provisions of Article 17 thereof at such time as the responsible authorities consider such accession appropriate. The formalities prescribed by Article 1 of that Convention shall not apply to these two countries.

III.—PROTOCOL CONCERNING SPAIN, THE SPANISH ZONE OF MOROCCO AND THE TOTALITY OF SPANISH POSSESSIONS

It is hereby agreed that Spain, on the one hand, and the Spanish Zone of Morocco and the totality of Spanish Possessions, on the other hand, may accede to the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City, in the capacity of Members having the right to vote, by complying with the provision of Article 17 when the Resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations dated December 12, 1946, shall be abrogated or cease to be applicable.

The formalities provided in Article 1 of the Convention shall not apply to Spain, on the one hand, and to the Spanish Zone of Morocco and to the totality of Spanish Possessions on the other hand.

IV.—PROTOCOL CONCERNING THE TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE REGULATIONS

For those Members who have not yet approved the Telegraph and/or the Telephone Regulations, the provisions of Paragraph 3 of Article 13 of the Convention shall become binding only on the date of the signature of the Telegraph and Telephone Regulations as revised by the next telegraph and telephone administrative conference.

V.—PROTOCOL CONCERNING THE ORDINARY EXPENDITURES OF THE UNION IN 1948

In accordance with the Resolution of the International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City, the Government of the Swiss Confederation is invited to advance to the Union, as and when requested by the Administrative Council or by the Secretary General of the Union with the approval of the Administrative Council, a sum not exceeding 1,500,000 Swiss francs for the ordinary expenses of the Union for the fiscal year 1948.

The Secretary General of the Union is authorized, with the approval of the Administrative Council, to incur ordinary annual expenditures during the fiscal year 1948 not exceeding 1,000,000 Swiss francs for the radio division and 500,000 Swiss francs for the telephone and telegraph division.

VI.—PROTOCOL CONCERNING ORDINARY EXPENDITURES OF THE UNION FOR 1949-1952

The International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City, in accordance with its resolution, hereby authorizes the Administrative Council to incur, after approval by a majority of the Members and Associate Members of the Union prior to the fiscal year in which the expenditure is to be incurred, such higher expenditures as may be required for the conduct of essential functions of the Union above the annual ordinary expenditures of 4,000,000 Swiss francs, the sum estimated for the ordinary annual expenses of the Union for the period 1949-1952.

VII.—PROTOCOL AUTHORIZING EXTRAORDINARY EXPENDITURES FOR THE PROVISIONAL FUNCTIONS OF THE INTERNATIONAL FREQUENCY REGISTRATION BOARD

In accordance with the resolution approved by the International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City, the Secretary General of the Union is authorized to defray the extraordinary expenses attributable to the costs of the International Frequency Registration Board and the salaries and expenses of its members during the period prior to the effective date of the Atlantic City Convention.

VIII.—PROTOCOL AUTHORIZING EXPENDITURE FOR THE PROVISIONAL FUNCTION OF THE ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL

In accordance with the resolution approved by the International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City, the Secretary General of the Union is authorized to defray the official travel and subsistence expenses of Members of the Administrative Council and the expenses of its sessions during the period prior to the effective date of the Atlantic City Convention.

IX.—PROTOCOL AUTHORIZING THE EXTRAORDINARY EXPENDITURES OF FUNDS OF THE UNION FOR THE WORK OF THE PROVISIONAL FREQUENCY BOARD

The International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City, in accordance with its resolution, hereby authorizes the Secretary General of the Union to incur, as extraordinary expenses of the Union, expenditures in connection with the work of the Provisional Frequency Board. Each country shall, however, defray the salary and expenses of its representative who will serve as a national member of the Board and of his advisers; the expenses of representatives of international regional organizations shall be defrayed by the organization concerned.

X.—PROTOCOL CONCERNING THE PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED BY THE COUNTRIES WISHING TO MODIFY THEIR CLASS OF CONTRIBUTION TO THE EXPENDITURES OF THE UNION

The International Telecommunication Conference of Atlantic City, agrees as follows:

1. In derogation of the provisions of the Madrid Convention, the classification of units of contribution provided in Article 14, paragraph 4 of the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City shall go into effect as of January 1, 1948.

2. Each Member shall, prior to September 1, 1948, notify the Secretary General of the Union of the class of contribution it has selected, from the classification table set forth in Article 14, paragraph 4 of the International Telecommunication Convention of Atlantic City. For meeting expenses for the fiscal year 1948, such notification may indicate the selection of a class of contribution for the expenses of the radio service, and a different class for the expenses of the telegraph and telephone service. For meeting expenses for the fiscal year 1949 and subsequent fiscal years, such notification shall indicate the single class selected for meeting the consolidated expenses of the radio service and the telegraph and telephone service.

3. Members failing to make decision prior to September 1, 1948 in accordance with the foregoing paragraph shall be bound to contribute in accordance with the number of units to which they have subscribed under the Madrid Convention, provided, however, that if such Members have, under the Madrid Convention, subscribed to a class of contribution for the radio service which is different from the class subscribed by them for the telegraph and telephone service, they shall, for the fiscal year 1949 and subsequent years, be bound to contribute in accordance with the higher of these two classes.

In witness whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these Additional Protocols in each of the English and French languages, in a single copy, which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America and one copy of which shall be forwarded to each signatory government.

Done at Atlantic City, October 2, 1947.

ANNEX III

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION

Preamble

In consideration of the provisions of Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations and of article 26 of the Convention of the International Telecommunications Union of Atlantic City 1947, the United Nations and the International Telecommunications Union agree as follows:

Article I

The United Nations recognizes the International Telecommunications Union (hereinafter called the Union) as the specialized agency responsible for taking such action as may be appropriate under its basic instrument for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth therein.

Article II

RECIPROCAL REPRESENTATION

1. The United Nations shall be invited to send representatives to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of all the plenipotentiary and administrative conferences of the Union. It shall also, after appropriate consultation, be invited to send representatives to attend international consultative committees or any other meetings convened by the Union, with the right to participate, without vote, in the discussion of items of interest to the United Nations.

2. The Union shall be invited to send representatives to attend meetings of the General Assembly of the United Nations for the purposes of consultation on telecommunication matters.

3. The Union shall be invited to send representatives to be present at the meetings of the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations and of the Trusteeship Council and of their commissions or committees, and to participate, without vote, in the deliberations thereof with respect to items on the agenda in which the Union may be concerned.

4. The Union shall be invited to send representatives to attend meetings of the main committees of the General Assembly when matters within the competence of the Union are under discussion, and to participate, without vote, in such discussions.

5. Written statements presented by the Union shall be distributed by the Secretariat of the United Nations to the members of the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and its commissions, and the Trusteeship Council as appropriate. Similarly, written statements presented by the United Nations shall be distributed by the Union to its members.

Article III

PROPOSAL OF AGENDA ITEMS

After such preliminary consultation as may be necessary, the Union shall include in the agenda of plenipotentiary or administrative conferences or meetings of other organs of the Union, items proposed to it by the United Nations. Similarly, the Economic and Social Council and its commissions and the Trusteeship Council shall include in their agenda items proposed by the conferences or other organs of the Union.

Article IV

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE UNITED NATIONS

1. The Union, having regard to the obligation of the United Nations to promote the objectives set forth in Article 55 of the Charter, and the function and power of the Economic and Social Council under Article 62 of the Charter to make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters and to make recommendations concerning these matters to the specialized agencies concerned, and having regard also to the responsibility of the United Nations, under Articles 58 and 63 of the Charter, to make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of such specialized agencies, agrees to arrange for the submission as soon as possible to its appropriate organ, for such action as may seem proper, of all formal recommendations which the United Nations may make to it.

2. The Union agrees to enter into consultation with the United Nations upon request with respect to such recommendations, and in due course to report to the United Nations on the action taken by the Union or by its members to give effect to such recommendations, or on the other results of their consideration.

3. The Union will co-operate in whatever further measures may be necessary to make co-ordination of the activities of specialized agencies and those of the United Nations fully effective. In particular, it agrees to co-operate with any body or bodies which the Economic and Social Council may establish for the purpose of facilitating such co-ordination, and to furnish such information as may be required for the carrying out of this purpose.

Article V

EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION AND DOCUMENTS

1. Subject to such arrangements as may be necessary for the safeguarding of confidential material, the fullest and promptest exchange of appropriate information and documents shall be made between the United Nations and the Union to meet the requirements of each.

2. Without prejudice to the generality of the provisions of the preceding paragraph:

(a) The Union shall submit to the United Nations an annual report on its activities;

(b) The Union shall comply to the fullest extent practicable with any request which the United Nations may make for the furnishing of special reports, studies or information;

(c) The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall, upon request, consult with the appropriate authority of the Union with a view to providing to the Union such information as may be of special interest to it.

Article VI

ASSISTANCE TO THE UNITED NATIONS

The Union agrees to co-operate with and to render all possible assistance to the United Nations, its principal and subsidiary organs, in accordance with the United Nations Charter and the International Telecommunications Convention, taking fully into account the particular position of the individual members of the Union who are not members of the United Nations.

Article VII

RELATIONS WITH THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

1. The Union agrees to furnish any information which may be requested by the International Court of Justice in pursuance of Article 34 of the Statute of the Court.

2. The General Assembly authorizes the Union to request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on legal questions arising within the scope of its competence other than questions concerning the mutual relationships of the Union and the United Nations or other specialized agencies.

3. Such request may be addressed to the Court by the Plenipotentiary Conference or the Administrative Council acting in pursuance of an authorization by the Plenipotentiary Conference.

4. When requesting the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion the Union shall inform the Economic and Social Council of the request.

Article VIII

PERSONNEL ARRANGEMENTS

1. The United Nations and the Union agree to develop, as far as is practicable, common personnel standards, methods and arrangements designed to avoid serious discrepancies in terms and conditions of employment, to avoid competition in recruitment of personnel, and to facilitate any mutually desirable interchange of personnel in order to obtain the maximum benefit from their services.

2. The United Nations and the Union agree to co-operate to the fullest extent possible in achieving these ends.

Article IX

STATISTICAL

1. The United Nations and the Union agree to strive for maximum co-operation, the elimination of all undesirable duplication between them, and the most efficient use of their technical personnel in their respective collection, analysis, publication, standardization, improvement and dissemination of statistical information. They agree to combine their efforts to secure the greatest possible usefulness and utilization of statistical information and to minimize the burdens placed upon national Governments and other organizations from which such information may be collected.

2. The Union recognizes the United Nations as the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization, improvement and dissemination of statistics serving the general purposes of international organizations.

3. The United Nations recognizes the Union as the central agency responsible for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization, improvement and dissemination of statistics within its special sphere, without prejudice to the rights of the United Nations to concern itself with such statistics so far as they may be essential for its own purposes or for the improvement of statistics throughout the world. All decisions as to the form in which its service documents are compiled rest with the Union.

4. In order to build up a central collection of statistical information for general use, it is agreed that data supplied to the Union for incorporation in its basic statistical series or special reports should, as far as is practicable, be made available to the United Nations upon request.

5. It is agreed that data supplied to the United Nations for incorporation in its basic statistical series or special reports should, so far as is practicable and appropriate, be made available to the Union upon request.

Article X

ADMINISTRATIVE AND TECHNICAL SERVICES

1. The United Nations and the Union recognize the desirability, in the interests of the most efficient use of personnel and resources, of avoiding, whenever possible, the establishment of competitive or overlapping services, and when necessary to consult thereon to achieve these ends.

2. Arrangements shall be made between the United Nations and the Union with regard to the registration and deposit of official documents.

Article XI

BUDGETARY AND FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

1. The budget or the proposed budget of the Union shall be transmitted to the United Nations at the same time as such budget is transmitted to the members of the Union, and the General Assembly may make recommendations thereon to the Union.

2. The Union shall be entitled to send representatives to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of the General Assembly or any committee thereof at all times when the budget of the Union is under consideration.

Article XII

FINANCING OF SPECIAL SERVICES

1. In the event of the Union being faced with the necessity of incurring substantial extra expense as a result of any request which the United Nations may make for special reports, studies or assistance in accordance with article VI or with any other provisions of this agreement, consultation shall take place with a view to determining the most equitable manner in which such expense shall be borne.

2. Consultation between the United Nations and the Union shall similarly take place with a view to making such arrangements as may be found equitable for covering the costs of central administrative, technical or fiscal services or facilities or other special assistance requested by the Union and provided by the United Nations.

Article XIII

UNITED NATIONS "LAISSEZ-PASSER"

Officials of the Union shall have the right to use the laissez-passer of the United Nations in accordance with special arrangements to be negotiated between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the competent authorities of the Union.

Article XIV

INTER-AGENCY AGREEMENTS

1. The Union agrees to inform the Economic and Social Council of the nature and scope of any formal agreement contemplated between the Union and any other specialized agency or other inter-governmental organization or international non-governmental organization, and further will inform the Economic and Social Council of the details of any such agreement, when concluded.

2. The United Nations agrees to inform the Union of the nature and scope of any formal agreement contemplated by any other specialized agencies on matters which might be of concern to the Union and further will inform the Union of the details of any such agreement, when concluded.

Article XV

LIAISON

1. The United Nations and the Union agree to the foregoing provisions in the belief that they will contribute to the maintenance of effective liaison between the two organizations. They affirm their intention of taking whatever measures may be necessary to this end.

2. The liaison arrangements provided for in this agreement shall apply, as far as is appropriate, to the relations between the Union and the United Nations, including its branch and regional offices.

Article XVI

UNITED NATIONS TELECOMMUNICATION SERVICES

1. The Union recognizes that it is important that the United Nations shall benefit by the same rights as the members of the Union for operating telecommunication services.

2. The United Nations undertakes to operate the telecommunication services under its control in accordance with the terms of the International Telecommunications Convention and the regulations annexed thereto.

3. The precise arrangements for implementing this article shall be dealt with separately.

Article XVII

IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENT

The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the appropriate authority of the Union may enter into such supplementary arrangements for the implementation of this agreement as may be found desirable.

Article XVIII

REVISION

On six months' notice given on either side, this agreement shall be subject to revision by agreement between the United Nations and the Union.

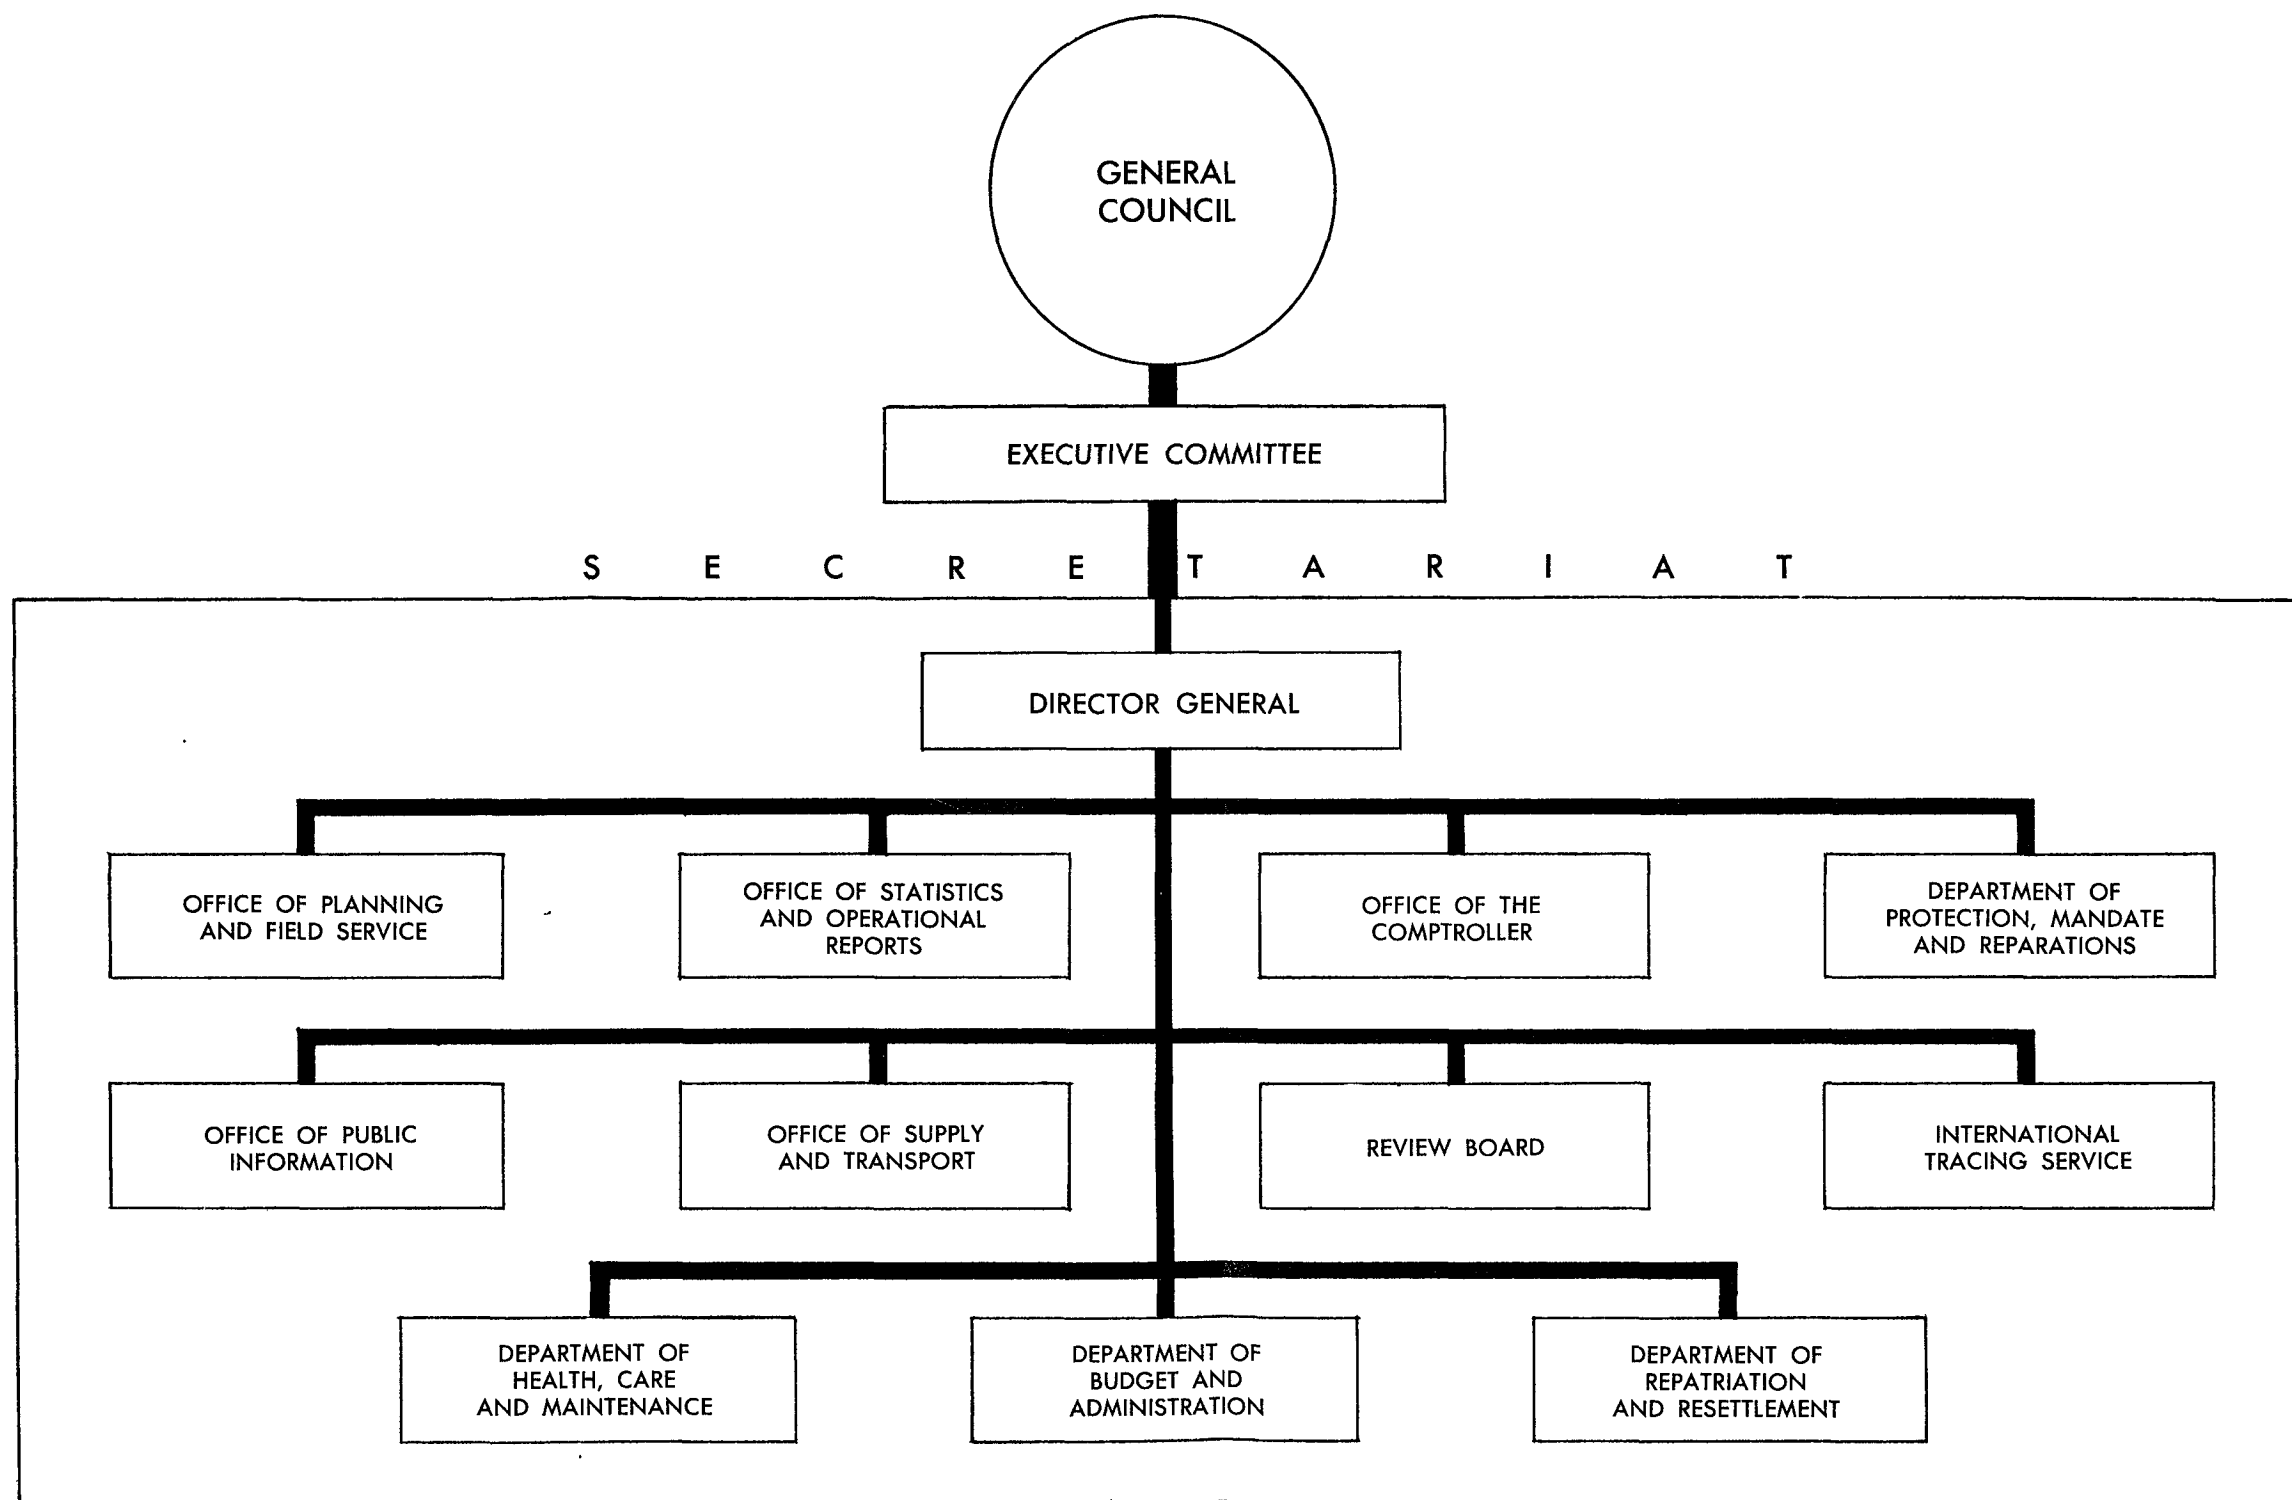

Article XIX

ENTRY INTO FORCE

1. This agreement will come into force provisionally after approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the Plenipotentiary Telecommunications Conference at Atlantic City in 1947.

2. Subject to the aforementioned approval, the agreement will formally enter into force at the same time as the International Telecommunications Convention concluded at Atlantic City in 1947, or at some earlier date as may be arranged for by a decision of the Union.

STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL REFUGEE ORGANIZATION

X. The International Refugee Organization¹

A. ORIGIN

On December 15, 1946, the General Assembly of the United Nations approved a Constitution² providing for the establishment of the International Refugee Organization (IRO). The Assembly also approved an Agreement on Interim Measures,³ under which a Preparatory Commission for IRO (PC-IRO) was to be established, pending the entry into force of the Constitution.

The Preparatory Commission came into being on December 31, 1946, when the requisite eight governments had signed the Constitution. The Agreement establishing it provided that PC-IRO should take all necessary measures for bringing IRO into effective operation as soon as possible; convene and prepare the agenda for the first meeting of the General Council of IRO; suggest plans for the first year's program of IRO; and prepare draft financial and staff regulations and draft rules of procedure for the General Council and the Executive Committee. The Agreement also provided that PC-IRO could under certain conditions take over the functions, activities, assets and personnel of any organizations dealing with refugees and displaced persons after concluding appropriate agreements with such organizations.

IRO itself was officially established on August 20, 1948, when fifteen states with contributions amounting to 75 per cent of the operational budget had become parties to the Constitution.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

In the Preamble to the Constitution of IRO, the Governments accepting the Constitution recognize:

"that as regards displaced persons, the main task to be performed is to encourage and assist in every way possible their early return to their country of origin;

"that genuine refugees and displaced persons should be assisted by international action, either to return to their countries of nationality or former habitual residence, or to find new homes elsewhere, under the conditions provided for in this Constitution; or in the case of Spanish Republicans, to establish themselves temporarily in order to enable them to return to Spain when the present Falangist regime is succeeded by a democratic regime. . .".

According to Article 2 of the IRO Constitution, the functions of IRO, "to be carried out in accordance with the purposes and the principles of the Charter of the United Nations", are: "the repatriation; the identification, registration and classification; the care and assistance; the legal and political protection; the transport; and the re-settlement and re-establishment, in countries able and willing to receive them, of persons who are the concern of the Organization. . .".

These functions are to be exercised with a view to:

(1) encouraging and assisting the repatriation of persons the concern of the Organization, having regard to the principle that no person shall be compulsorily repatriated;

(2) promoting repatriation by all possible means, especially by providing repatriated persons with adequate food for a period of three months, provided that they are returning to a country suffering as a result of enemy occupation during the war, and provided such food is distributed under the auspices of IRO;

(3) facilitating the re-establishment in new homelands of non-repatriated refugees and investigating, promoting or carrying out group resettlement or large-scale resettlement projects.

The term "refugee", as defined in Annex I to the Constitution, applies to a person who is outside of his country of nationality or of former habitual residence and who is a victim of the Nazi, Fascist or Falangist regimes, or who was considered a refugee before the outbreak of the Second World War for reasons of race, religion, nationality or political opinion.

The term "displaced person" applies to an individual who has been deported from his country of nationality or of former habitual residence to undertake forced labor, or has been deported for racial, religious or political reasons.

The Constitution specifically excluded from IRO aid to certain groups, such as war criminals, quislings and traitors, persons receiving financial assistance from their governments, and persons of German ethnic origin who (a) have been or may be transferred to Germany from other countries; (b) have been, during the Second World War, evacuated from Germany to other countries; (c) have fled from or into Germany or from their places of residence into countries other than Germany in order to avoid falling into the hands of Allied armies.

C. ORGANIZATION

Under the terms of the Constitution, the principal organs of IRO are a General Council, an Executive Committee and a Secretariat headed by a Director-General.

The General Council, in which each Member is represented, is the ultimate policy-making body of IRO. Each Member of IRO has one vote in the General Council, which meets twice a year. Decisions in the Council and in the Executive Committee are made by a majority of the votes cast, unless otherwise provided by the Constitution or the General Council. Adoption of an amendment to the Constitution, for example, requires a two-thirds vote of the General Council and ratification by two thirds of the Members.

New Members are admitted into the Organization, if they are Members of the United Nations, by accepting the Constitution. Other states require in addition a two-thirds vote of the General Council, taken on the recommendation of the Executive Committee. On certain conditions, states may be admitted to membership without signing or depositing an instrument of acceptance of the Constitution.

The Executive Committee, composed of nine Members of IRO elected by the General Council, meets as often as necessary. It performs the functions necessary to give effect to the policy decisions of the General Council, and has the power to make policy decisions of an emergency nature subject to reconsideration by the General Council. It may investigate situations in the field by visiting camps, hostels or assembly centres under the control of IRO and give instructions to the Director-General on the basis of such investigations.

The Director-General, nominated by the Executive Committee and appointed by the General Council, is the chief administrative officer of IRO. He carries out the administrative and executive functions of IRO in accordance with decisions of the General Council and the Executive Committee, and is responsible for appointing the Secretariat under regulations established by the General Council.

A Review Board for Eligibility Appeals and an International Tracing Service also work within the framework of IRO. The Review Board is composed of a Chairman and four other members, appointed by the Director-General subject to the approval of the Executive Committee. It hears and determines individual appeals of eligibility taken by IRO field officers, and advises the Director-General on any eligibility matter which he may refer to the Board.

The International Tracing Service (ITS), headed by a Director, has its central headquarters at Arolsen, in the United States Zone of Germany. The ITS seeks to determine the fate of all persons who disappeared between September 1939 and May 1945 and to assemble, at its central headquarters, all documents and other information concerning such persons. The ITS is also charged with tracing children kidnapped by the Nazis in support of their Germanization program, determining their nationality and arranging for their return to their families where possible.

In addition to its headquarters in Geneva, IRO maintains 25 principal offices and numerous sub-offices throughout Europe, the western hemisphere, China and the Middle East areas.

D. ACTIVITIES PRIOR TO JULY 1, 1947

PC-IRO came into being on December 31, 1946, and held the first part of its first session in Geneva from February 11 to 17, 1947. At the second part of its first session, held in Lausanne in May 1947, PC-IRO recognized that it was unlikely that IRO would come into being by June 30, 1947, when both UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees were to terminate their activities on behalf of refugees and displaced persons. UNRRA had been charged with administering the camps in which the great majority of refugees and displaced persons were cared for and with repatriating displaced persons. It was the responsibility of the Intergovernmental Committee, established in 1938 by the Evian Conference in France, to provide for the legal protection, maintenance and resettlement of the refugees and displaced persons under its jurisdiction.

In order to avoid any breach in the continuity of operations, PC-IRO decided to assume, on July 1, 1947, operational responsibility for the refugees and displaced persons eligible for assistance under the terms of the IRO Constitution. It requested the Governments Members of PC-IRO to make available, in advance, a portion of their contributions, and asked UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees to consider transferring to PC-IRO any surplus funds they might have available on June 30.

E. ACTIVITIES FROM JULY 1, 1947, TO SEPTEMBER 21, 1948

PC-IRO held the third part of its first session in July 1947, the fourth part in October 1947, the fifth part in January 1948 and the sixth part in May 1948. By May 1948, 21 governments had signed the Constitution, fourteen of them having formally accepted it, and it was necessary for only one more government to complete the formalities of accepting the Constitution to bring it into force. PC-IRO, therefore, at the sixth part of its first session, took preliminary steps to arrange for the convening of the General Council of IRO.

On August 20, 1948, with the acceptance of the Constitution by the fifteenth government, IRO came into being.

The first General Council of the new Organization opened in Geneva on September 13, 1948.⁴ Among its decisions was the approval, on September 15, of an agreement establishing the relationship between the United Nations and IRO. The necessary preliminary negotiations with the United Nations had been undertaken by PC-IRO. It was provided that the agreement would come into force when approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations.⁵

The General Council elected nine Members to constitute the Executive Committee of IRO. As Director-General of the Organization, it unanimously appointed William Hallam Tuck (United States), nominated for that post by the Executive Committee. Mr. Tuck had served as Executive Secretary of PC-IRO since July 1947. Sir Arthur N. Rucker (United Kingdom) was appointed as Deputy Director-General. The General Council selected Geneva as headquarters for IRO.

The activities of PC-IRO after July 1, 1947, when it assumed operational responsibilities for the refugees and displaced persons under the mandate of the Organization, and later of IRO, together with the relevant decisions of the General Council, are summarized below.

⁴ The session lasted until September 25, 1948.

⁵ The General Assembly approved the agreement on November 18, 1948.

1. Care and Maintenance

When PC-IRO assumed responsibility, on July 1, 1947, for the refugees and displaced persons eligible for assistance under the terms of its Constitution, it took over the care and maintenance of a total of over 705,000 persons.

Of these, 626,000 were in assembly centres taken over from UNRRA (28,000 in Austria, 552,000 in Germany, 18,000 in Italy and 28,000 in the Middle East); 61,000 were in camps taken over from the Military Occupation Authorities (49,000 in the British and 1,000 in the French Zone of Germany and 11,000 in Italy). These 687,000 refugees and displaced persons were as follows (nationalities refer to country of citizenship or of last habitual residence):

Poles (excluding Jews)	192,000
Ukrainians	107,000
Estonians	25,000
Latvians	83,000
Lithuanians	50,000
Yugoslavs	29,000
Stateless and "Nansen" refugees	22,000
Jews	156,000
Others	23,000

PC-IRO also assumed responsibility from the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees for 8,980 persons not residing in assembly centres (1,800 in Belgium, 6,300 in France, and 880 in the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain; between 4,000 and 5,000 of these were Spanish Republican refugees).

The American Joint Distribution Committee turned over to PC-IRO on July 1, 1947, the care of 9,300 refugees in China, most of whom were European Jews who had been cared for by the Committee with the assistance of UNRRA in Shanghai.

In addition to the total of approximately 705,000 persons for whom PC-IRO assumed care and maintenance responsibilities, there were considerable numbers of persons in various countries, principally in Germany, Austria and Italy, who were eligible under the IRO Constitution for IRO care and maintenance, legal protection, or aid and assistance in being repatriated or resettled. Because of a limited budget and the uncertainty of receipts of advance contributions from governments, the Executive Secretary of PC-IRO decided, on July 2, 1947, to restrict further admissions to care and maintenance to those refugees and displaced persons who could prove that the withholding of such assistance would constitute a genuine hardship. This "freeze order" was reviewed and approved by PC-IRO in October 1947, but the Executive Secretary was asked to give the most liberal interpretation practicable to the term "hardship". In January 1948, PC-IRO directed the Executive Secretary to take all measures possible to relax restrictions on assistance, and stated that legal and political protection should, in all cases, be granted to eligible refugees and displaced persons.

A report submitted by the Executive Secretary to the first session of the General Council of IRO indicated that, on the basis of an estimate made by PC-IRO Field Offices in the spring of 1948, a minimum of 120,000 eligible refugees and displaced persons would request care and maintenance from the Organization if the "freeze order" were lifted. The report stated that there were in addition approximately 30,000 eligible Jewish refugees and displaced persons in France, Belgium and the Netherlands, for whom the American Joint Distribution Committee requested PC-IRO to accept responsibility. Care of these persons had not been taken over by PC-IRO when it began operations on July 1, 1947, because they had not been receiving care from either UNRRA or the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees. The estimate of 120,000, the report stated, was only a segment of the potential load facing the Organization, since there were a total of approximately 900,000 refugees, some of whom would not apply for assistance; with respect to the others, the type of assistance they might desire was uncertain. The General Council in September 1948 instructed the Director-General of IRO, in view of the continued limitations on the funds available to the Organization, to continue the policy established by PC-IRO of restricting care and maintenance to hardship cases and, at his discretion, to remove the restriction at the earliest possible date.

PC-IRO established in November 1947 a Review Board for Eligibility Appeals to review appeals from refugees and displaced persons who had been determined ineligible for PC-IRO assistance by PC-IRO field officers. Cases are heard in the field by individual Review Board members, and most decisions are made on the spot; more doubtful cases are decided upon by the full Board at Geneva. From the time when it began operations in January 1948 to the end of August 1948, the Board registered 3,254 appeals from refugees and displaced persons in ten countries and disposed of 2,432 of these cases. In addition there were about 2,500 appeals awaiting in the field.

Decisions on appeals were as follows:

Within the mandate of IRO (first instance decision reversed	869
Eligible for repatriation only	52

Not within the mandate of IRO (first instance decision confirmed)	1,336
Volkdeutsche for whom no final decision has been made ("in suspense")	105
Cases dismissed (as not being eligibility appeals, whereabouts unknown, etc.)	54
Cases re-opened on second appeals	16
Appellants interviewed (personal hearing)	1,828
Number of persons involved in 2,432 decisions (approximate)	6,000

Decisions with regard to Volksdeutsche were postponed pending a decision by the General Council as to their eligibility. They are persons of German ethnic origin who were forced from their countries of former residence in Eastern Europe following the Second World War. Although many were returned to Germany by decision of the Allied Control Council for Germany, several thousands on whom no such decision had been made remained in Austria. PC-IRO, in January 1948, directed the Executive Secretary to undertake eligibility examinations of individual Volksdeutsche as soon as the eligibility of all other groups claiming IRO assistance had been determined. In September 1948, the General Council of IRO decided that, in view of its other more urgent problems, the Organization was still in no position to resolve this problem.

Although a total of approximately 309,596 persons were repatriated and resettled during the period from July 1, 1947, to August 31, 1948, the number of persons receiving IRO care and maintenance decreased by only 128,284—from over 705,000 to approximately 576,716. This was due to the following reasons: many of those repatriated or resettled were persons who, although eligible, were not receiving care and maintenance; there was an excess of births over deaths in the camp population; and substantial numbers of refugees, who had been in the areas of operation awaiting assistance or had entered those areas, were admitted to care.

IRO care and maintenance involves a comprehensive program offering food, clothing, personal items, health services, hospital care, employment and vocational training, education, individual counselling, child welfare services and assistance from voluntary societies. In the Western Occupation Zones of Germany, in Austria, Italy and the Middle East these services are provided in camps or assembly centres; in other areas, principally the countries of Western Europe, they are provided through cash grants to individuals and families. Of the total of approximately 576,716 persons receiving IRO care and maintenance as of August 31, 542,020 were in IRO assembly centres and 34,696 were outside such centres. Another group of 126,847 persons was at the time receiving a variety of IRO services outside camps, including such services as repatriation or resettlement assistance, legal and political protection.

As of September 21, 1948, IRO was operating a total of 672 installations, including 538 assembly centres, the largest number of which (330) were located in the United States Zone of Germany. In addition to the IRO assembly centres, which may be camps, groups of camps, communities of detached dwellings or any other group or individual housing arrangements for which IRO assumes responsibility, there were, under IRO administration, 58 hospitals and sanatoria, 3 convalescent homes, 2 rehabilitation centres, 8 vocational training centres, 22 children's centres, 8 children's convalescent and nutritional centres, 5 admission control centres, 6 repatriation centres, 7 resettlement selection centres, and 15 installations classified as embarkation centres, staging areas and transit centres.

Epidemics among the refugee population have been prevented by routine immunization against smallpox, typhoid, diphtheria and, when necessary, against typhus, cholera and yellow fever epidemics. In addition to giving daily medical services to persons under its care, IRO has concentrated more specifically on problems of tuberculosis control, nutrition, repatriation of the sick, medical processing of refugees for resettlement, resettlement of displaced medical personnel and the vocational training and rehabilitation of the disabled. In carrying out its health program, the small staff of IRO medical personnel has been assisted by more than 2,500 refugee physicians and 2,000 refugee nurses.

The Organization has attempted to furnish a satisfactory refugee dietary level of 1,900 calories daily for its camp population. In a report to the General Council, the Executive Secretary of PC-IRO stated that, as of June 30, 1948, this standard had not been realized in all Zones, since the caloric levels were set by agreement with the Occupation Authorities of each Zone in which camps were located. Schools, children's centres, summer camps and youth clubs, in order to remedy deficiencies which existed in children's diets, began in 1948 to furnish children with supplemental rations provided by IRO. Apart from the caloric levels, the Organization entered into negotiations with the Occupation Authorities to include in the diets of refugees the necessary qualitative elements, such as fats and proteins. By the time the General Council met, in September 1948, the Director-General reported that the caloric diet in the countries in which refugee camps were located had been raised to such levels that a differential ratio was no longer required and the General Council directed that the diets of persons in refugee camps should be no higher than that prevailing in surrounding areas.

More than half of the 555,300 persons receiving care and maintenance from IRO as of the end of September 1948 were trained and available for full-time employment. Many were employed by IRO in the running of the camps and many others were working on temporary projects in the occupied areas under the supervision of the Military Authorities. A comprehensive survey conducted by IRO in September 1948 revealed that one third of the male displaced persons of working age in Europe were skilled workers, one fourth agricultural workers, and about one eighth professional or managerial workers. Skilled workers were found in approximately 60 occupations ranging from airplane mechanic to woodworker; the occupations most frequently encountered were those of tailor, shoemaker-saddler, locksmith, carpenter and automobile mechanic. Among the employable women surveyed, 20 per cent of the total were classified as skilled workers, including a large proportion of seamstresses; 16.7 per cent were agricultural workers; and 14.4 per cent were workers in service occupations, including a large percentage of domestic workers. A related survey revealed that 83 per cent of the persons in camps were under 45 years of age. Among men, 26 per cent were under eighteen years of age, 57 per cent between eighteen and 45 and 17 per cent over 45. Among women, 29 per cent were under eighteen, 55 per cent between eighteen and 45 and 16 per cent over 45.

To provide elementary training to young workers and to refresh skills which have been dulled through disuse, IRO has conducted vocational training courses, generally of three months duration. Training courses for men were conducted in languages and in the skills of automobile mechanic, blacksmith, bricklayer, carpenter, electrician, machinist, plumber, radio mechanic, shoe repairman, surveyor, tailor and welder. Women were trained as domestics, nurses, seamstresses, textile workers and typists. More extensive vocational courses, designed to train finished craftsmen, were conducted by international voluntary societies.

2. Agreements

A number of agreements were concluded by PC-IRO, and later by IRO, with the governmental authorities of the areas in which the Organization operates and with a number of countries of resettlement.

The agreements with the Occupation Authorities define the status of IRO and of refugees and displaced persons, and provide for the facilities, supplies and services required by IRO. The agreements set out the reciprocal undertakings of the Occupation Authorities with respect to the procurement of indigenous supplies, furnishing of local currency, maintenance of law, order and security and similar matters. The agreements with the Occupation Authorities in the United States Zones of Germany and Austria provide that IRO is to be directly responsible for the care and maintenance of refugees and for the operation of assembly centres. The agreements concluded with the British and French Occupation Authorities in Germany and Austria, on the other hand, provide that the Authorities are to carry out the administration of assembly centres with policy supervision by IRO.

Operation agreements and arrangements had also been concluded as of September 21, 1948, with Australia, Brazil, Denmark, France, Guatemala and Italy, and with the United Kingdom with respect to certain areas in the Middle East. These agreements provide for the conduct of IRO operations in the areas concerned in accordance with the principles of the IRO Constitution and local practical requirements.

In addition, resettlement agreements or informal arrangements had been concluded as of September 21 with the Governments of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, France, Netherlands, Peru, Turkey, United Kingdom and Venezuela. In general, these agreements provide for recognition of the status and functions of IRO and of its right to determine the eligibility of refugees and displaced persons under the Constitution; the selection of refugees by the government of the country or reception; the acceptance of close relatives; the establishment of civil rights for refugees and recognition of IRO's function of legal and political protection.

When it began operations, PC-IRO also extended provisionally the agreements and working arrangements in force between UNRRA and the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees and approximately 60 voluntary societies active in refugee assistance programs in Germany, Austria and Italy, in the western European countries and in China.⁶ New agreements and working arrangements were later negotiated with many of these societies. Organizations operating in Germany, Austria and Italy have provided supplementary services in welfare, relief, tracing, child search, special training and employment projects, and in emigration and repatriation assistance in collaboration with the IRO-operated programs in these countries. Societies in France, Belgium and the Netherlands have furnished many services supplementary to the scope of the IRO program and have also operated relief programs and special projects on behalf of IRO. In Spain and Portugal several international relief societies have served as agents of IRO, and in China similar societies have given supplementary help and operated special relief projects on behalf of IRO.

3. Repatriation

Between July 1, 1947, and August 31, 1948, the Organization had repatriated 55,324 refugees and displaced persons, who returned to their former homes in the following countries:

Austria	1,115
Czechoslovakia	389
Germany	679
Hungary	1,212
Italy	434
Latvia	1,691
Lithuania	843
Poland	31,384
U.S.S.R.	2,106
United States	2,039
Yugoslavia	4,794
7,536 overseas Chinese repatriated from China to their prewar homes in:
Burma	3,689
Singapore and Malayan Union	2,414
Netherlands East Indies	1,280
Other countries	153
All other countries	2,002

As of September 1, 1948, there were still in China an estimated 13,700 persons, taken over by PC-IRO from UNRRA; these overseas Chinese receive only repatriation services from IRO. The Organization concluded arrangements in 1948 with the Burmese Government, where the majority of these persons resided before the war, and with local authorities in Singapore, the Malayan Union, the East Indies and Indo-China for the return of former Chinese residents. Negotiations towards a similar arrangement with the Philippine Government, however, were unsuccessful, since that Government does not recognize a right of former Chinese residents to return except under the normal annual Chinese quota.

It is one of the functions of IRO to facilitate the provision of information to the displaced persons concerning conditions in their countries of origin. The Organization relays and distributes such information in various ways with a view to assisting the displaced persons in arriving at an independent decision as to whether or not to return home. In order to facilitate their repatriation, IRO also endeavors to establish relations with the countries of origin of the displaced persons. For this purpose IRO offices in Warsaw, Prague and Belgrade were established at the commencement of the PC-IRO operation and, with the exception of the latter, which was closed at the request of the Yugoslav Government in August 1948, they remain in operation.

As an incentive to repatriation, the IRO Constitution provides for the issuance of a three-months supply of food to displaced persons returning to countries suffering as a result of enemy occupation during the war, though, for financial reasons, the Organization was unable initially to implement this section of the Constitution. Early in 1948, however, PC-IRO decided that it was possible to provide such assistance on a more modest scale and accordingly arranged that from June 1, 1948, every eligible displaced person returning to Poland, Yugoslavia or the U.S.S.R. from Germany or Austria would be provided with twenty-days' supply of food. In view of improved conditions in the countries of origin, IRO felt that this amount was sufficient to tide the repatriants over the initial period before they became reintegrated into the local economy. The first session of the IRO General Council approved this policy.

Other steps taken by the Organization to facilitate repatriation included the provision of transportation and documentation. Special hospital trains, for example, were arranged for the 2,800 chronically sick refugees and displaced persons and their relatives who were repatriated. In addition to this, arrangements were made for a variety of individual repatriation movements and other services were provided by the Organization.

4. Resettlement

From July 1, 1947, to August 31, 1948, PC-IRO resettled 163,325 refugees in new homelands; 90,947 others were resettled by governments and voluntary societies acting independently. These refugees and displaced persons were received as immigrants by more than 70 countries and territories on five continents. The following countries received the largest numbers:

Argentina	14,924
Australia	9,209
Belgium	20,070
Brazil	4,505
Canada	31,944
Chile	1,567
France	20,111
Netherlands	3,864
Palestine	33,130
Paraguay	3,591
Peru	1,370
Sweden	2,151
United Kingdom	75,828
United States	18,074
Venezuela	7,487
All other	6,447

254,272

Most of the resettlement work of IRO has been carried out through "mass resettlement" schemes, whereby a government makes special provision for the admission of substantial numbers of refugees and displaced persons as immigrants. In such cases, visas are usually granted by a special consul or mission, or under other arrangements specifically set up for this purpose. The following fourteen countries and dependent territories were as of September 21, 1948, recruiting for mass resettlement: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, France, Netherlands, Morocco, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom and Venezuela. Between them, these countries received a total of 114,611 refugees under schemes in which IRO participated, as well as 66,172 refugees under schemes in which IRO did not participate.

The refugees resettled by IRO as individual migrants were sent to 75 different countries, where permission for them to enter was arranged through relatives, friends or other contacts.

The number of persons resettled through both "mass resettlement" schemes and individual migration, with and without IRO participation, as of August 31, 1948, was as follows:

	Total	IRO Partici- pation	Without IRO Partici- pation
Total Resettlement	254,272	163,325	90,947
Mass Resettlement	180,783	114,611	66,172
Individual Migration	73,489	48,714	24,775

The Organization chartered a fleet of ships for the transportation of refugees resettled overseas. In addition, it booked space on ordinary commercial vessels and aircraft for a large number of persons. For the inland transportation of refugees and displaced persons the Organization had used, as of September 21, 1948, an average of 27 trains per month since it began operations.

In his report to the first General Council of IRO the Executive Secretary of PC-IRO called attention to the emphasis being placed in mass resettlement schemes on the labor requirements of the participating countries, with the subsequent marked preference for young single workers and the reluctance to accept family groups. He pointed out that such a trend would "produce a population of displaced persons comprised entirely of the old, the very young and the large family groups".

PC-IRO repeatedly urged that governments accept a "fair share" of non-repatriable refugees and displaced persons in order that, by the time IRO ceased to exist, on June 30, 1950, all of the refugees and displaced persons would have been repatriated or re-established. PC-IRO estimated that, if government selection standards were not considerably reduced, approximately 184,000 refugees would remain in Germany, Austria or Italy and special provisions would have to be made for these persons after the termination of IRO.

Among the refugees and displaced persons as of June 30, 1948, there were approximately 40,000 specialists in intellectual, scientific, technical or artistic occupations. Some received vocational training in IRO assembly centres and were resettled in manual occupations. Through a program of education and publicity, IRO has succeeded in re-establishing a very small number of these specialists in their own professions.

PC-IRO had attempted to persuade each individual government to widen its selection and lower the various standards of acceptability. By the end of June 1948, the Executive Secretary reported that, as the suitability of refugees and displaced persons became better realized, these standards began gradually to be relaxed and certain countries, particularly in Latin America, adopted a more liberal attitude toward family groups.

The IRO Constitution provides for the establishment of a "large-scale resettlement" fund of $5,000,000 through voluntary contributions from Members of IRO for the establishment of groups of refugees in self-contained industrial or agricultural communities in undeveloped portions of the world. As of September 21, 1948, one nation had contributed to this fund. Several large-scale resettlement projects were under consideration by IRO: in Brazil, Canada, Venezuela and French Guiana.

On the basis of various reports concerning the activities and policies of PC-IRO with regard to resettlement, the first session of the IRO General Council, on September 21, 1948, adopted a resolution appealing to individuals and nations to participate in achieving a broad resettlement program. It expressed the hope that the United Nations would support this program and that all nations, whether or not Members of IRO, would participate. The Council requested the Director-General to discuss directly with Members of IRO, and with all other governments of good will, the maximum share of refugees and displaced persons which they would admit to their territories; to pursue the aims of PC-IRO with regard to the relaxation of technical immigration requirements and, in particular, to the recognition of the principle of resettlement in family units; to continue the study of and to put into operation schemes for large-scale resettlement; and to draw the attention of governments to the special problem of intellectual refugees and displaced persons, and to the importance of permitting them to continue to follow their intellectual pursuits. Finally, the Council requested the Director-General to submit to its second session, in March 1949, a plan for the disposition of such refugees and displaced persons as may then appear to require special measures of assistance in order to complete the mandate of the Organization.

5. Legal and Political Protection

Legal and political protection, as entrusted to the Organization by the Constitution, is one of its prime functions. It covers manifold activities, since the position of persons who as a rule are stateless and have been persecuted during the war necessarily involves legal problems and difficulties of various kinds.

In this connection the Organization has been faced with such matters as economic rehabilitation of refugees (e.g., restitution of property, indemnification for damage arising from persecution by Nazi and Fascist measures, unblocking of seized assets), and the safeguarding of the civil status of refugees in cases of marriage, divorce, adoption, guardianship, death, etc.

Four of the most important aspects of the work of legal and political protection with which the Organization has dealt concern human rights, statelessness, declaration of death and the issuance of travel documents.

In December 1947, PC-IRO submitted for the consideration of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights a memorandum dealing with problems which it believed of particular importance to refugees. This memorandum included suggestions concerning: equality before the law, prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities; nationality and statelessness; and emigration, expulsion and asylum. A number of the suggestions made by PC-IRO were adopted by the Commission and included in the draft Declaration of Human Rights.

Following a resolution adopted by the Economic and Social Council on March 2, 1948,⁷ on the basis of action taken by PC-IRO, Members of the Secretariats of the United Nations and of IRO have discussed the problems relating to the protection of stateless persons and the desirability of concluding a new convention on the subject.

IRO is continuing the work initiated by the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees with respect to the legal problems created by the disappearance, as a result of the Second World War or of persecution, of millions of persons whose deaths cannot be conclusively established. It has collected material covering the legislation of 37 countries on the subject. Recognizing the urgency of the problem, PC-IRO had directed its Executive Secretary to prepare a survey for transmission to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. After considering this survey, the Economic and Social Council at its seventh session in August 1948 resolved that a draft convention on the subject be prepared by the Secretariat of the United Nations in collaboration with IRO and other organizations concerned. It requested that this draft be submitted to Members of the United Nations for their comments and be presented, together with these comments, to the Council at its next session.⁸

As a result of considerable work undertaken by the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, an international convention was adopted in London on October 15, 1946, concerning the issuance of a travel document to refugees and displaced persons coming within the mandate of IRO. This convention covers those refugees who were unable to obtain a travel document because they did not come under prewar international arrangements which were concluded for the benefit of the so-called "Nansen" refugees. The two main advantages of the London document are that it indicates that the holder is the concern of IRO, a fact which gives it a certain protective value, and that it contains a clause authorizing the holder's return within a certain period to the country of issue, which makes it more readily acceptable to the governments of the countries of destination. Some 28 governments as of September 21, 1948, were issuing these travel documents or recognized those issued by other countries, and IRO was negotiating with other governments with a view to their adopting this convention.

⁷ See p. 583.

⁸ See pp. 646-48.

6. Tracing of Missing Persons

On July 1, 1947, PC-IRO took over from UNRRA the work of the Central Tracing Bureau, which had been engaged in the tracing of millions of persons who had disappeared during the Second World War. Since the operations of the Central Tracing Bureau were limited to Germany, PC-IRO in October 1947 decided to replace the Bureau with an International Tracing Service, to operate on a world-wide scale and to co-ordinate the activities of National Tracing Bureaux. The International Tracing Service (ITS) came into being on January 1, 1948.

Inquiries concerning missing persons are received at ITS headquarters at Arolsen, Germany, where it maintains a central index containing information on approximately 2,500,000 individuals; this index constitutes ITS's most important source of information. Inquiries are referred to the zonal bureaux in Germany if the headquarters office has no information on the individuals concerned. Lists of missing persons are published by ITS in displaced persons camps and in the press, and are broadcast both over German radio stations and over Radio Vatican at Rome. In addition, ITS arranges for the showing of photographic slides of missing persons in thousands of cinemas.

From the inception of ITS up to September 1948, 44,673 requests for information concerning missing persons were received, most of them from displaced persons still in Europe or resettled elsewhere. The ITS was able to give some information in response to 32,618 of these inquiries, and in 15,773 cases it was able to find the individual or to establish proof of his death.

In May 1948, PC-IRO added to the mandate of the International Tracing Service the task of searching for children kidnapped by the Nazis in support of their Germanization program. From evidence already uncovered, together with that being received daily from countries which suffered these losses, the number of children yet to be found amounts to hundreds of thousands. There are on file over 19,000 "unsolved" inquiries. The work of Child Search is to identify these children so that they may be returned to their families where possible. By the end of June 1948, UNRRA and IRO in Germany and Austria had located and repatriated, resettled and reunited with their families 16,413 children of 23 different nationalities. This figure is in addition to the many hundreds repatriated immediately on the conclusion of the Second World War.

The General Council in September 1948 asked the Director-General to continue the International Tracing Service and instructed him to consider how the task of tracing missing persons could be transferred to another organization after the cessation of the work of IRO.

F. BUDGET

The budget for the first financial year of the Organization was established by the Constitution as a total sum, expressed in terms of U.S. dollars, of $155,860,500, comprising $4,800,000 for administrative expenses and $151,060,500 for operational expenses, together with a further sum of $5,000,000 for large-scale resettlement expenditure, the latter to be made available through voluntary contributions from Members.

Pending the formal establishment of IRO, the work of PC-IRO was financed from advance contributions made by Members of PC-IRO. To commence its operations, PC-IRO received loans, repayable in three months, of $2,000,000 from UNRRA and $500,000 from the United Nations.

Other assets to be made available to IRO, under the terms of the Final Act of the Paris Conference on Reparations of 1945 and the Five Power Agreement of 1946, include: $25,000,000 to be secured from German assets in neutral countries; all the non-monetary gold found by the Allied forces in Germany; and assets in neutral countries of victims of Nazi action who died and left no heirs. These reparations funds are not mingled with other IRO resources but are allotted specifically for rehabilitation of those who survived Nazi persecution—90 per cent to Jewish persecutees, ten per cent to non-Jewish persecutees.

Because of the delay in receipt of resources, PC-IRO decided on a budget of $119,088,320 for the year 1947-48 to cover administrative and operational expenditure, together with an additional provision for the equivalent of $5,000,000 for large-scale resettlement programs. Since care and maintenance could not be reduced or deferred, and the rate of re-establishment of refugees during the initial months of operation was slow, PC-IRO allocated $75,281,927, 63 per cent of its anticipated resources for health, care and maintenance and $24,600,760, or 21 per cent, for re-establishment, repatriation and resettlement. By decision of the General Council of IRO, the emphasis in the budget for the year 1948-49 has been reversed to provide approximately $70,000,000, or 43 per cent, for the task of re-establishment and $54,065,811, or 33 per cent, to meet the needs of refugees and displaced persons remaining in the camps. XI. The Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization¹

(Not yet established)

When the Temporary Transport and Communications Commission of the United Nations met in April and May 1946, it noted the existence of a great number of international conventions and agreements governing many subjects related to shipping. There were also several international organizations each dealing with some aspect of shipping. Other than the United Maritime Consultative Council (UMCC), however, which had no administrative staff, and whose existence was provided for only until October 31, 1946, there was no standing inter-governmental organization in the shipping field. The Temporary Commission felt that a central maritime organization was required to provide for exchange of information, to determine the need for revising existing agreements and conventions or for adopting new ones and to deal on behalf of shipping with other organizations in such related fields as telecommunication and aviation. The Commission also expressed the hope that the life of the UMCC would be extended until the creation of a more permanent organization. The Temporary Commission therefore recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the United Nations sponsor the establishment of a world-wide inter-governmental shipping organization to deal with technical matters.

On the basis of the Temporary Commission's report, the Economic and Social Council, on June 21, 1946, requested its permanent Transport and Communications Commission to examine the question of establishing such an organization and authorized the Secretary-General to seek the views of the UMCC.

The UMCC prepared and, on October 30, 1946, at its second and final session, adopted a draft convention suggesting the scope and purpose of the proposed organization and recommended to its fourteen member governments the establishment of an inter-governmental maritime consultative organization. The UMCC was superseded by a Provisional Maritime Consultative Council to function until the establishment of the permanent maritime organization.

The Transport and Communications Commission at its first session considered the draft Convention prepared by the UMCC and recommended to the Economic and Social Council the convening of a maritime conference. On the basis of this recommendation the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to convene a conference to consider the establishment of an inter-governmental maritime organization. The Secretary-General was asked to invite to the conference all Members of the United Nations and in addition Albania, Austria, Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Portugal, Roumania, Switzerland, Transjordan and Yemen. (The last country subsequently became a Member of the United Nations.)

The United Nations Maritime Conference met in Geneva from February 19 to March 6, 1948. The Governments of the following States were represented at the Conference by delegates:

Argentina	Egypt	Pakistan
Australia	Finland	Panama
Belgium	France	Peru
Brazil	Greece	Poland
Canada	India	Portugal
Chile	Ireland	Sweden
China	Italy	Switzerland
Colombia	Lebanon	Turkey
Czechoslovakia	Netherlands	United Kingdom
Denmark	New Zealand	United States
Dominican Republic	Norway

The Governments of the following States were represented by observers:

Cuba	Iran
Ecuador	Union of South Africa

The following international organizations were represented by observers:

- International Chamber of Commerce
- International Co-operative Alliance
- International Labour Organisation
- International Civil Aviation Organization
- International Law Association
- International Meteorological Organization
- International Telecommunication Union
- International Transport Workers' Federation
- World Health Organization

The Conference used as a basis for its discussions the draft convention prepared by the United Maritime Consultative Council. On the basis of this draft, a Convention on the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) was drawn up by the Conference and opened for signature and acceptance on March 6, 1948.²

As provided by the Convention, Members of the United Nations and other States invited to the Conference may become Members of IMCO by becoming parties to the Convention. States other than these may become Members subject to the prior approval of their applications by two thirds of the States Members of IMCO. Territories or groups of territories may, under certain conditions, become Associate Members of the Organization.

IMCO will come into being when 21 states, of which seven must each have a total tonnage of at least one million gross tons of shipping, have become parties to the Convention. As of September 21, 1948, one acceptance of the Convention had been received, that of Canada.

To make the necessary preparations for the first session of the Assembly of IMCO, the Conference established a Preparatory Committee,³ which will cease to exist upon resolution of the first session of the Assembly of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization.

The Conference also prepared a draft agreement on the relationship between the United Nations and IMCO to establish the latter organization as a specialized agency of the United Nations. The draft agreement was discussed and slightly amended at a joint meeting of the United Nations Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies and representatives of the Preparatory Committee of IMCO.

The Economic and Social Council during its seventh session adopted a resolution on August 27, 1948, recommending to the General Assembly of the United Nations the adoption of the agreement.⁴

Finally, the United Nations Maritime Conference recommended that the Conference on Safety of Life at Sea, held in London in April 1948, include in its final act provisions which would take into account the duties and functions accorded to IMCO in the field of maritime safety.

B. PURPOSES AND FUNCTIONS

The purposes and functions of IMCO are laid down in Parts I and II of the Convention. Briefly, the Organization is to:

1. provide machinery for co-operation among governments in the field of governmental regulation and practices relating to technical matters, including those concerning safety at sea;
2. encourage the removal of discriminatory action and of unnecessary restrictions by governments;
3. consider matters concerning unfair restrictive practices by shipping concerns;
4. consider any matters concerning shipping that might be referred to it by any organ or specialized agency of the United Nations;

5. provide for the exchange of information among governments on matters under consideration by the Organization.

IMCO is also to provide for the drafting of conventions and agreements, and to recommend these to governments and to inter-governmental organizations, and to convene such conferences as may be necessary.

The Organization is to function in a consultative and advisory capacity.

C. ORGANIZATION

As provided by its Convention, the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization will comprise an Assembly, a Council, a Maritime Safety Committee and a Secretariat.

The Assembly, which is to consist of representatives of all Members of the Organization, is to meet at least once every two years. Among its duties as the policy-making body of IMCO, the Assembly is to adopt the budget of the Organization and elect the members of the Maritime Safety Committee and four of the members of the Council, and may establish, on recommendation of the Council, permanent subsidiary bodies. It will recommend to Members the adoption of maritime safety regulations or of amendments to them.

²The text of the Convention will be reproduced in a forthcoming volume of the Yearbook after the Organization has come formally into existence.

³The text of the resolution establishing the Preparatory Committee of IMCO is reproduced on pp. 971-72.

⁴The agreement was subsequently approved by the General Assembly on November 18, 1948; to become effective it requires the approval of the IMCO Assembly.

Each Member of the Organization will have one vote; Associate Members will not be entitled to vote. Decisions will be taken, as provided by the Convention, by majority vote, with certain exceptions. For example, to assume the duties and resources of another organization will require a two-thirds majority vote of the Assembly, and to amend the Convention will require a two-thirds majority vote of the Assembly, including the concurring votes of a majority of members of the Council.

The Council is to consist of sixteen members, eight of which must represent countries having an interest in providing international shipping services (six of these countries must have the largest interest in these services), and eight of which must represent countries having an interest in international seaborne trade (six of these countries must have the largest interest in this field). It will be the Council's function to determine which of the Members of IMCO have the largest interest in providing shipping services and which the largest interest in seaborne trade. The Council is to appoint, with the approval of the Assembly, the Secretary-General of the Organization. It is to perform, between sessions of the Assembly, all functions of the Organization except that of recommending to Members the adoption of maritime safety regulations.

The Maritime Safety Committee is to consist of fourteen members elected from among those Members having an important interest in maritime safety, of which at least eight are to be the largest ship-owning nations. It is to consider such questions as the construction and equipment of vessels, the handling of dangerous cargoes and maritime safety procedures and requirements. The Committee is to promote the co-ordination of activities in the fields of shipping, aviation, telecommunication and meteorology as they relate to safety and rescue.

The Secretariat is to consist of a Secretary-General, a Secretary of the Maritime Safety Committee and necessary staff. Its duties are to include, inter alia, the provision of any information required for the work of the other organs of IMCO.

D. PREPARATORY COMMITTEE OF IMCO

The Preparatory Committee established by the United Nations Maritime Conference held its first meeting in Geneva on March 6, 1948. The Committee decided to appoint as its chairman the representative of Canada, subject to the approval of the Government of that country.

ANNEX II

RESOLUTION ON ESTABLISHMENT OF THE PREPARATORY COMMITTEE OF THE INTER- GOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE ORGANIZATION

The United Nations Maritime Conference convened on 19 February 1948 in Geneva by the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations;

Having agreed that an international organization to be known as the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization shall be established, and Having agreed upon a Convention for the Organization,

Hereby resolves that a Preparatory Committee should be established,

And resolves, further, that:

1. The Preparatory Committee of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization shall consist of representatives of the following twelve States: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, France, Greece, India, Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, and United States of America.

2. The functions of the Preparatory Committee shall be:

(a) To convene the first session of the Assembly of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization within three months from the date on which the Convention of the Organization comes into force;

(b) To prepare and submit to the Governments represented at the United Nations Maritime Conference, and to any other Governments which have signed or accepted the Convention, at least six weeks before the first session of the Assembly of the Organization, the provisional agenda for that session and necessary documents and recommendations relating thereto, including:

(i) Proposals for the implementation of the functions of the Organization and a budget for the first two years of the Organization,

(ii) Draft rules of procedure,

(iii) Draft financial and staff regulations;

(c) To suggest a scale of contributions by members to the budget of the Organization;

(d) To prepare a draft annex to the General Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies in accordance with Part B of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations on 21 November 1947 relating to this subject;

(e) To enter into negotiations with the United Nations with a view to the preparation of an agreement as contemplated in Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations and in article 45 of the Convention, using as a basis the draft agreement approved by the United Nations Maritime Conference.

In carrying out the functions of this section due consideration shall be given to the deliberations and decisions of the United Nations Maritime Conference.

3. The first meeting of the Preparatory Committee shall be held in Geneva immediately after the conclusion of this Conference.

4. The Preparatory Committee shall elect a Chairman and adopt its own rules of procedure.

5. The expenses of the Preparatory Committee other than those of the members of the Committee shall be met from funds which Governments may advance to the Committee or from funds which may be loaned by the United Nations. The Preparatory Committee shall explore the feasibility of obtaining a loan from the United Nations and, if mutually acceptable, may enter into a loan agreement. The obligation under any such loan would be considered by the Governments represented at the Conference as a first claim for repayment by the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization within the first two years of its existence. In the event of advances of funds to the Preparatory Committee from Governments, such advances may be set off against the contributions of the Governments concerned to the Organization.

6. The Preparatory Committee may enter into agreement with the Secretary-General of the United Nations concerning the possible provision of personnel and other secretarial services under mutually satisfactory arrangements.

7. The Preparatory Committee shall cease to exist upon resolution of the first session of the Assembly of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization.

XII. The International Trade Organization (ITO)¹

(Not yet established)

A. THE PREPARATORY COMMITTEE

On February 18, 1946, the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, pursuant to a proposal submitted by the representative of the United States, resolved (13(I)) to convene an International Conference on Trade and Employment.² The aim of the Conference would be to devise ways and means for the expansion of the production, exchange and consumption of goods. The Council, at the same time, decided to establish a Preparatory Committee, composed of one representative each of Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Union of South Africa, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States, to prepare for the consideration of the Conference an agenda and a draft convention for an international trade organization. The Government of the U.S.S.R. subsequently indicated that it was unable to participate in the work of the Preparatory Committee because it had not been possible to devote sufficient time to the preliminary study of the important questions with which the Committee would have to deal. The remaining eighteen nations accepted membership on the Committee and designated representatives.

The Preparatory Committee held a first series of meetings in London between October 15 and November 26, 1946. Before the Committee was a "Suggested Charter for an International Trade Organization", published by the United States Government in September 1946. This "Suggested Charter" represented a further elaboration of "Proposals for Expansion of World Trade and Employment", made public by the United States Department of State on December 6, 1945. The "Proposals" were the outcome of financial and trade discussions between the United Kingdom and United States. Also before the Committee were a detailed Indian commentary on the United States proposals, a United Kingdom memorandum on employment policy, a draft charter for an international trade organization submitted by Brazil and various other documents submitted by other delegations. Out of the consideration of these proposals and suggestions, there emerged a first draft Charter for the International Trade Organization (ITO).

Further work on this first draft Charter was carried out by a Drafting Committee established by the Preparatory Committee at its London session. The work of the Drafting Committee was reviewed and revised by the Preparatory Committee during its second session in Geneva between April 10 and August 22, 1947.

The draft Charter finally adopted by the Preparatory Committee formed the basis for the work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (Havana Conference) which met at Havana from November 21, 1947, to March 24, 1948.

B. THE HAVANA CONFERENCE

The Havana Conference was attended by representatives of 56 Governments:

Afghanistan	Canada
Argentina	Ceylon
Australia	Chile
Austria	China
Belgium	Colombia
Bolivia	Costa Rica
Brazil	Cuba
Burma	Czechoslovakia

Denmark	Ecuador
Dominican Republic	Egypt

Finland, Paraguay and the Allied Control Authorities for Japan sent observers to the Conference. Representatives from the following inter- and non-governmental organizations also attended the Conference:

International Labour Organisation
Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
International Monetary Fund

International Federation of Agricultural Producers World Federation of Trade Unions
International Co-operative Alliance
International Organization of Industrial Employers
International Chamber of Commerce

The Conference prepared a Charter for an International Trade Organization (to be officially known as the Havana Charter) to be submitted to the Governments represented, authenticated the text of the Charter in a Final Act, signed on March 24, 1948, by representatives of all but three (Argentina, Poland, Turkey) of the 56 participating Governments, and adopted six resolutions. The Government of Turkey signed the Final Act subsequently.

The resolutions adopted referred to:

- (1) Establishment of an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (see below).
- (2) Relation of the International Trade Organization and the International Court of Justice;
- (3) Chairmanship of the Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements;
- (4) Study of international employment situation;
- (5) Role of the United Nations in the fields of economic development and reconstruction; and
- (6) Expression of gratitude to Cuban Government and people as well as others, for their co-operation with the Havana Conference.

C. PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES

The Havana Charter consists of nine chapters, comprising 106 articles, and sixteen annexes.³ The chapters deal respectively with:

- I. Purpose and Objectives
- II. Employment and Economic Activity
- III. Economic Development and Reconstruction
- IV. Commercial Policy
- V. Restrictive Business Practices
- VI. Inter-Governmental Commodity Agreements
- VII. The International Trade Organization
- VIII. Settlement of Differences
- IX. General Provisions

The purpose and objectives of the proposed ITO are stated in Chapter I of the Havana Charter. They may be summarized as follows:

A balanced and expanding world economy;

Promotion of industrial and general economic development of economically under-developed countries;

Access on equal terms by all countries to the markets, products and productive facilities needed for their development;

Reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers and elimination of discriminatory treatment in international commerce;

Elimination of measures disruptive of world commerce, productive employment or economic progress;

Promotion of mutual understanding, consultation and co-operation to facilitate the solution of problems relating to international trade in the fields of employment, economic development, commercial policy, business practices and commodity policy.

D. ORGANIZATION

Article 73 of the Havana Charter provides that the proposed ITO shall consist of a Conference, composed of all ITO Members; an Executive Board, composed of eighteen members, eight of which are to represent nations or customs unions of chief economic importance, as determined by the Conference, having regard to their shares in world trade and to the representation of the different types of economies or degrees of economic development found among ITO Members, and ten of which are to be elected by the Conference; such commissions as may be established by the Conference; and a staff headed by a Director-General.

The text of the Charter will be reproduced in the Yearbook after the Organization has come into existence.

In both the Conference and the Executive Board, voting will be on the principle of one vote per member, and, except where otherwise provided in the Charter, decisions will be made by simple majority.

The Havana Charter further provides (Article 77) that the powers and duties attributed to the International Trade Organization by the Charter and the final authority to determine the policies of ITO shall be vested in the Conference, which, however, may vote by a simple majority to assign to the Executive Board any power or duty of ITO except those specifically conferred or imposed upon the Conference by the Charter. The Conference may also, by a two-thirds majority, decide to waive, in exceptional circumstances, an obligation imposed upon a Member by the Charter. It may prepare or sponsor agreements concerning any matter within the scope of the Charter and, by a two-thirds majority, may recommend acceptance of such agreements. It may make recommendations to inter-governmental organizations on any subject within the scope of the Charter. The Conference is also to approve the budget of the Organization and apportion the expenditures of the Organization among Members according to a scale of contributions to be fixed from time to time. It is to determine the seat of the Organization and establish such branch offices as it may consider desirable.

The Executive Board, according to Article 81 of the Charter, is to be responsible for the execution of the policies of the Organization and is to exercise the powers and perform the duties assigned to it by the Conference. It is also to supervise the activities of the commissions and to take such action upon their recommendations as it may deem appropriate. The Board may also make recommendations to the Conference, or to inter-governmental organizations, on any subject within the scope of the Charter.

The Conference is to meet in regular session once a year and in extraordinary session as may be necessary. The frequency of Executive Board meetings is to be agreed upon in the rules of procedure which the Board will adopt.

E. ENTRY INTO FORCE OF THE HAVANA CHARTER

The Havana Charter will enter into force 60 days after more than half the governments which signed the Final Act have deposited instruments of acceptance with the Secretary-General of the United Nations. This would require 28 ratifications. If the Charter has not come into force in this manner by March 24, 1949, it will become effective 60 days after twenty governments have deposited instruments of acceptance. Should this second alternative fail to bring the Charter into force by September 30, 1949, the Secretary-General of the United Nations will consult with those governments which have deposited instruments of acceptance to see whether and on what conditions they wish to bring ITO into being.

F. INTERIM COMMISSION FOR ITO

Pending the entry into force of the Havana Charter and of ITO, 52 of the 56 governments (i.e., all but Bolivia, Ireland, Portugal and Switzerland) represented at the Havana Conference approved a resolution establishing an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization composed of the 52 members which approved the resolution.

The Interim Commission was given functions which may be summarized as follows:

To convoke the first session of ITO after the Charter has entered into force;

To prepare the agenda of the first ITO session, including therein proposals concerning: a plan of work for the first year of the Organization, the budget, the site of ITO headquarters, relations with the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other inter- and non-governmental organizations;

To publish the reports of the main committees of the Havana Conference;

To consult with the International Court of Justice concerning procedural matters arising out of the fact that, under the Havana Charter, ITO may request advisory opinions from the Court;

To prepare for the first session of ITO a report on the entire field of industrial and general economic development and postwar reconstruction, with particular reference to the role of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations;

To consult with the Government of Switzerland concerning certain problems facing the Swiss economy in connection with the provisions of the Havana Charter.⁴

The Interim Commission held its first meeting in Havana on March 20, 1948, and Max Suetens (Belgium) was chosen as Chairman. The Commission then elected an Executive Committee consisting of eighteen members, namely, Australia, Benelux (Belgium, Netherlands, Luxembourg, as a Customs Union, represented as one member), Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Greece, India, Italy, Mexico, Norway, Philippines, United Kingdom and United States. L. Dana Wilgress (Canada) was elected Chairman by the Executive Committee at the Committee's first meeting in Havana on March 24, 1948. Geneva was chosen as the seat of the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee was entrusted with carrying out the tasks assigned to the Interim Commission.

The Executive Committee held its second meeting at Geneva from August 25 to September 15, 1948, and considered a number of procedural and organizational matters relating to such items as the relationship of ITO, when established, with other specialized agencies and the expenses incurred during the meetings of the Preparatory Committee. The Executive Committee decided that it would not meet again until the time when twenty countries had accepted the Havana Charter, or on September 30, 1949, whichever was earlier.

A working group, established during the second session of the Executive Committee to consider how best to proceed with examining the case of Switzerland, was unable to effect arrangements which were acceptable to the Swiss Government. The Executive Committee decided that, while the way should remain open for future consultations, the plan for nominating expert advisers to study the problem of the Swiss economy should be abandoned until the third session of the Executive Committee.

General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)

The second session of the Preparatory Committee in Geneva⁵ in fact undertook two entirely separate functions. In addition to completing the draft Charter for an International Trade Organization, it also sponsored the negotiations for the reduction of tariffs and the discussions which led to the formulation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). It was considered that this would promote the objectives of the proposed International Trade Organization. This part of its work began on April 10, 1947, in Geneva, and concluded on October 30, 1947, when the Final Act of GATT was signed.

Although the tariff negotiations were sponsored by the Preparatory Committee, and although the results of the negotiations, incorporated in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, were closely related to one of the main objectives of the Havana Charter and the International Trade Organization, the countries concerned in the negotiations maintained an entirely independent status.

During the negotiations and in the later stages as Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the countries concerned took part neither as an operating unit of the United Nations nor as an independent organization. As Contracting Parties they are a group of important trading countries bound by an Agreement negotiated among themselves, meeting from time to time to settle matters arising out of the Agreement calling for common action.

⁴ The consultations with Switzerland concern the possible effect of the Charter on the trading position of that country. Switzerland does not suffer today from balance of payments difficulties, but exports a great deal to countries that do experience such difficulties. The Charter would allow these latter countries to restrict their imports temporarily to safeguard their precarious balances of payments. This in turn might lead to a decline in Swiss exports, with the result that Switzerland might be threatened with unemployment. The problem was briefly examined at the Havana Conference but it was not possible to study all aspects of the matter in sufficient detail and to find a solution. It was therefore decided to authorize the Interim Commission to take up the Swiss case and to submit recommendations thereon to the first ITO Conference.

The countries participating in these successful negotiations were, first, certain members of the Preparatory Committee itself, namely Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, India, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom and United States; and, second, certain states participating in the negotiations because of their close economic connection with certain members of the Preparatory Committee, namely, Burma, Ceylon, Pakistan, Southern Rhodesia and Syria (Benelux and Syria-Lebanon each participated as a Customs Union).

A total of 123 bilateral sets of negotiations were completed among the above-mentioned countries, and the results were incorporated into the Schedules of GATT. The negotiated tariff reductions and concessions cover some 45,000 items, affecting two thirds of the import trade of the participating countries, and about half of the over-all world imports, representing a total value in excess of $US10,000,000,000 (based on 1938 prices).

GATT is, in effect, a framework to protect the tariff concessions. However, it goes further in that it contains a very comprehensive set of general rules for regulating normal commercial relations between the parties to GATT. Out of the 35 articles of GATT, these rules take up 21 articles. They are similar in outline to the set of rules on commercial policy later incorporated in the Havana Charter. GATT is not a charter but a multilateral trade agreement. It is an arrangement which is intended to provide a binding structure for the Geneva tariff negotiations, and to provide a basis for extending further tariff reductions all over the world.

Although the negotiations were bilateral in form, GATT is multilateral in character, since a concession granted by country A to country B in connection with a given item becomes automatically available to all other countries that are parties to GATT, in accordance with the most-favored-nation principle.

At the end of the Geneva negotiations, on October 30, 1947, the 23 participating countries signed a Final Act which simply authenticated the text of GATT.

In order to bring GATT into effect, each participating country was invited to sign a Protocol of Provisional Application. This Protocol states that each signatory country will bring into effect the Schedules of Tariff Concessions and Part III of GATT, and will apply Part II of GATT to the fullest extent not inconsistent with existing legislation. (Part II of GATT deals largely with commercial policy rules.) The countries which signed the Protocol of Provisional Agreement and are thus applying GATT provisionally are known as the Contracting Parties. Of the 23 countries participating in the tariff negotiations all except one, namely Chile, had signed the Protocol of Provisional Application by the closing date of June 30, 1948. An extension of time was granted to Chile at the second session of the Contracting Parties. GATT will enter into definite force when governments whose external trade totals 85 per cent of the total trade of the 23 countries have accepted GATT.

The Contracting Parties held their first session in Havana from February 28, 1948, to March 24, 1948. The session was mainly concerned with the question of the replacement of certain parts of GATT by the relevant parts of the Havana Charter when the latter comes into force. At the end of the first session, four protocols were signed.

The second session of the Contracting Parties was held in Geneva from August 16 to September 14, 1948. Two protocols were signed bringing into effect certain changes in the articles of GATT. The most important change was the inclusion of the provisions worked out at Havana covering the use by under-developed or war-damaged countries of protective measures such as import quotas to help economic development and reconstruction of particular industries or branches of agriculture. A Protocol of Rectifications corrected detailed errors in GATT Tariff Schedules. An additional protocol allowed Chile up to February 17, 1949, to apply GATT.

The Contracting Parties agreed to hold a further series of tariff negotiations, with a view to enabling additional governments to accede to GATT. A detailed time schedule was adopted, with the final stage of multilateral negotiations set to open at Geneva on April 11, 1949. In conjunction with the original 23 Governments, the following Governments were to participate: Denmark, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Finland, Greece, Haiti, Italy, Liberia, Nicaragua, Sweden and Uruguay.

Requests were received from several Contracting Parties for release or waiver of obligations under GATT for reasons related to their particular economic problems. Decisions affecting items which had been negotiated in 1947 were made in respect of the Tariff Schedules relating to Ceylon and Pakistan in view of current economic difficulties. Permission was given to Brazil to increase certain import duties in view of the fact that Brazil was applying lower duties than those provided in GATT over a broad range of items and would in addition negotiate definite compensating concessions. Permission was also given to the United States to accord preferential treatment to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

An important case involving restriction of imports of textiles by the Cuban Government was referred to the Contracting Parties by the United States. This was resolved through an undertaking by the Government of Cuba to relieve the immediate difficulties affecting imports of textiles and to negotiate for a solution in accordance with normal commercial principles and through measures which will not restrict trade. In response to a request made to the Contracting Parties by Cuba, the United States Government undertook to renegotiate with Cuba certain tariff concessions, which had been granted by Cuba under GATT, in return for adequate compensation.

RESOLUTION ESTABLISHING AN INTERIM COMMISSION FOR THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment,

Having prepared the Havana Charter for an International Trade Organization (hereinafter referred to as "the Charter" and "the Organization" respectively),

Considering that pending the establishment of the Organization certain interim functions should be performed, Hereby resolves to establish an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization (hereinafter called "the Commission") consisting of the governments the representatives of which have approved this resolution and which are entitled to original membership of the Organization under Article 71 of the Charter. The terms of reference and structure of the Commission are set out in the Annex to this resolution which forms an integral part thereof.

The following delegations approved the resolution establishing the Interim Commission:

Afghanistan	Egypt	Nicaragua
Argentina	El Salvador	Norway
Australia	France	Pakistan
Austria	Greece	Panama
Belgium	Guatemala	Peru
Brazil	Haiti	Philippines
Burma	India	Poland
Canada	Republic of	Southern Rhodesia

Dominican Republic	Netherlands	Venezuela
Ecuador	New Zealand

ANNEX

1. The Commission shall elect an Executive Committee of eighteen members to exercise any or all of its functions as the Commission may determine on electing the Committee.

2. The Commission shall have the following functions:
(a) to convoke the first regular session of the Con-

- ference of the Organization (hereinafter referred to as "the Conference") not less than four months and, as far as practicable, not more than six months after the receipt of the last acceptance needed to bring the Charter into force;
- (b) to submit the provisional agenda for the first regular session of the Conference, together with documents and recommendations relating to all matters upon this agenda, including:
 - (i) proposals as to the programme and budget for the first year of the Organization;
 - (ii) studies regarding selection of headquarters of the Organization;
 - (iii) draft financial and staff regulations.
 - (c) to prepare, in consultation with the United Nations, a draft agreement of relationship as contemplated in paragraph 1 of Article 86 of the Charter for consideration by the first regular session of the Conference;
 - (d) to prepare, in consultation with inter-governmental organizations other than the United Nations, for presentation to the first regular session of the Conference, documents and recommendations regarding the implementation of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 3 of Article 87 of the Charter;
 - (e) to prepare, in consultation with non-governmental organizations, for presentation to the first regular session of the Conference recommendations regarding the implementation of the provisions of paragraph 2 of Article 87 of the Charter;
 - (f) to prepare, with a view to recommendation by the Economic and Social Council to the first regular session of the Conference, the Annex referred to in paragraph 3 of Article 90 of the Charter [regarding the General Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies];
 - (g) to carry out the functions and responsibilities referred to in the following documents of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment:
 1. Paragraph 2 of the Final Act of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (to which the present resolution is annexed).
 2. The Resolution of the Conference regarding the relation of the International Trade Organization and the International Court of Justice (annexed to the Final Act).
 3. The Resolution of the Conference relating to Economic Development and Reconstruction (annexed to the Final Act).
 4. The Report of Sub-Committee G of the Third Committee on the Proposal made by the Delegation of Switzerland (E/CONF.2/C.3/78) together with the sections relating to that matter in the Report of the Third Committee (E/CONF.2/70).
 - (h) to enter into consultations with the Secretary-General of the United Nations regarding the expenses incurred by the Preparatory Committee of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment and by that Conference and, in the light of such consultations, to present a report to the first regular session of the Conference;
 - (i) generally to perform such other functions as may be ancillary and necessary to the effective carrying out of the provisions of this annex.
3. The Commission shall elect an Executive Secretary who shall be its chief administrative officer. The Executive Secretary shall appoint the staff of the Commission observing, as far as possible, the principles of paragraph 2 of Article 85 of the Charter and using, as he considers desirable, such assistance as may be extended to him by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Executive Secretary shall also perform such other functions and duties as the Commission may determine.
4. The Commission shall approve the budget estimates for the operation of the Commission. The Executive Secretary shall prepare the draft of such estimates. The expenses of the Commission shall be met from funds provided by the United Nations and for this purpose the Commission shall make the necessary arrangements with the Secretary-General of the United Nations for the advance of such funds and for their reimbursement. Should these funds be insufficient, the Commission may accept advances from Governments. Such advances from Governments may be set off against the contributions of the Governments concerned to the Organization.
5. Arrangements may be made with the Secretary-General of the United Nations regarding the provision of such personnel as may be required to carry on the work of the Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements.
6. The Executive Committee shall hold its first meeting in Havana immediately after its establishment. Its subsequent meetings shall be held in Geneva unless it decides otherwise.
7. The Executive Committee shall submit a report of the activities of the Commission to the first regular session of the Conference.
8. The benefit of the privileges and immunities provided in the Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the Specialized Agencies adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations shall, as far as possible, be extended to and in connection with the Commission.
9. The Commission shall cease to exist upon the appointment of the Director-General of the Organization, at which time the property and records of the Commission shall be transferred to the Organization.

XIII. The World Meteorological Organization

(Not yet established)

A. THE INTERNATIONAL METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION

International co-operation in the field of meteorology was first established by an international conference held in Brussels in 1853 primarily for the purpose of dealing with the weather and climate of the oceans. In 1872, an unofficial Conference of Directors of Meteorological Institutes was held at Leipzig, followed by an official International Meteorological Congress in Vienna in 1873. This Congress established a permanent International Meteorological Committee to prepare a scheme of organization for an international meteorological agency. This scheme, prepared by a Committee meeting held at Utrecht in 1878, provided for the establishment of an International Meteorological Organization (IMO) to study the atmosphere as a unit and to secure, through international co-operation, uniformity and accuracy in meteorological observations and calculations. IMO therefore considers the year 1878 as the year of its coming into being.

The Members of IMO since 1878 have been the directors (101 as of September 1948) of independent official meteorological services of various states and territories. The structure of the Organization comprises the Conference of Directors, meeting at least every six years; the International Meteorological Committee, meeting at least every three years; the Secretariat, the work of which is directed by an Executive Council; and various technical and regional commissions.

The first Conference of Directors of the Organization met in Rome in 1879. Including the preliminary Conferences of 1872 and 1873, twelve Conferences of Directors have been held up to September 1948. The Organization is governed by Statutes adopted in Paris in 1919 by the Conference of Directors, and revised in Utrecht in 1923, Copenhagen in 1929, Locarno in 1931, Warsaw in 1935, Paris in 1946 and Washington in 1947.

To strengthen the position of the meteorological services with the governments of their respective countries as well as the authority of IMO in its relations with other international organizations, IMO decided in 1939 to transform itself into an inter-governmental organization, to be known as the World Meteorological Organization (WMO), whose Members would consist of states and territories with independent meteorological services rather than, as in the case of IMO, the directors of such services.

The Twelfth Conference of Directors of the International Meteorological Organization

The twelfth Conference of Directors, meeting in Washington, D.C., from September 22 to October 11, 1947, drew up and adopted a Convention creating the World Meteorological Organization.²

STEPS TO ESTABLISH THE WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION

The Conference decided that states represented at the Conference³ or Members of the United Nations could become Members of WMO by acceding to or ratifying the Convention; territories listed in Annex II to the Convention⁴ could become Members by accession or ratification on their behalf by the states respectively responsible for their international relations; and Trust Territories administered by the United Nations could become Members upon application of the Convention to such Territories by the United Nations. Other states and territories, the Conference decided, could become Members upon the prior approval of two thirds of the States Members of the WMO.

The Conference further decided on the question of voting in WMO. In IMO, each member, whether the director of a meteorological service of a state or of a territory, has one vote on any question. In the Congress of the proposed WMO, however, only Members which are States will be ³These states are listed on p. 983.

⁴These territories are listed on p. 983.

entitled to vote on certain categories of questions, such as amendments to the Convention, membership in the Organization or relations with the United Nations.

To comply with the resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations barring Franco Spain from membership in any organization brought into relationship with the United Nations,⁵ the Conference resolved to exclude Spain from becoming a party to the Convention of WMO until the General Assembly resolution should be abrogated or cease to be applicable. Likewise, the Director of the Spanish Meteorological Service, by decision of the Conference, may not exercise the rights of membership in the Conference of Directors of IMO.

As provided in the Convention, WMO will come into being 30 days after the deposit with the Government of the United States of the thirtieth instrument of ratification of or accession to the Convention. The Conference directed the President of the International Meteorological Committee of IMO to convene the first session of the Congress of WMO as soon as practicable after that date. It decided that an extraordinary session of the Conference of Directors of IMO would be held concurrently with the Congress, in order to dissolve IMO and ensure the transfer of its functions and assets to WMO. The Executive Committee of IMO was directed to prepare the necessary documentation, including a draft agreement with the United Nations, for circulation to the Members of WMO at least six months prior to the first Congress of the new Organization.

In order to ensure the continuity of international collaboration by the various meteorological services, the Conference resolved that IMO would continue to function until the formal establishment of WMO.

TECHNICAL QUESTIONS

The twelfth Conference also dealt with a large number of technical questions, basing its work on 405 resolutions adopted by its technical commissions, which met in Toronto in August and September 1947. It made recommendations: for the international comparison of meteorological instruments; for the standardization of methods of meteorological surface and upper air observations and measurements and for the graphical representation, computation and publication of the results of the observations; for the international exchange of meteorological documents and concerning the system of their universal decimal classification.

The Conference approved definitions and numerical values of physical constants and functions used in meteorology. It adopted for introduction on January 1, 1949, a universal code for the transmission of meteorological surface reports and codes for reports from and to aircraft and ships, for technical information and forecasts, and for monthly climatic messages. It improved the system of international weather broadcasts and especially that for exchange of meteorological information between continents.

The Conference stressed particularly the need for increased collaboration of IMO with the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO). It provided that the IMO General Regulations for the Provision of Meteorological Service for International Aeronautics should be uniform with the ICAO International Standards and Practices in Meteorology. (The latter were based to a large extent on general regulations adopted by the International Meteorological Committee of IMO in Berlin in 1939.) The Conference recommended the establishment by interested meteorological services of stationary meteorological ships in the South Atlantic Ocean, such as were established under the sponsorship of ICAO in the North Atlantic, to promote safety in the air for international air lines travelling that route. To meet the most immediate needs of aeronautical meteorology, as specified by ICAO, the Conference recommended the preparation by various meteorological services of climatological statistics for all international airports.

The Conference recommended closer collaboration with the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) to facilitate the collection of weather observations from the oceans, to represent IMO in regard to frequency requirements for maritime purposes, to assist in making telecommunication arrangements for transmitting weather information and storm warnings to ships at sea and generally to further meteorological interests in the field of telecommunication.

Among other resolutions on technical questions adopted by the Conference were recommendations for special studies relating to such subjects as river and flood forecasting, frost warning and protection, tropical cyclones, sandstorms, soil moisture, soil formation, erosion and conservation, and the types of crops and domestic animals which exist under specific weather conditions.

⁵ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 129-30.

B. PURPOSE OF THE WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION

As stated in Article 2 of the Convention of WMO, the purposes of the Organization will be as follows:

"(a) To facilitate worldwide cooperation in the establishment of networks of stations for the making of meteorological observations or other geophysical observations related to meteorology and to promote the establishment and maintenance of meteorological centers charged with the provision of meteorological services;

"(b) To promote the establishment and maintenance of systems for the rapid exchange of weather information;

"(c) To promote standardization of meteorological observations and to ensure the uniform publication of observations and statistics;

"(d) To further the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, agriculture, and other human activities; and

"(e) to encourage research and training in meteorology and to assist in coordinating the international aspects of such research and training."

C. ORGANIZATION OF THE WORLD METEOROLOGICAL ORGANIZATION

As provided by the Convention, WMO is to consist of a World Meteorological Congress, an Executive Committee, regional meteorological associations and technical commissions set up by the Congress and a permanent secretariat under the direction of a Secretary-General. The Organization is to be headed by a President and two Vice-Presidents, who will be the President and Vice-Presidents of the Congress and the Executive Committee.

The Congress, in which all Members may be represented, is to meet at least once every four years. Each Member is to designate as its principal delegate to the Congress the director of its meteorological service. The Congress is to be the policy-making body of the Organization. It is to adopt technical regulations covering meteorological practices and procedures and to determine the general policies for the fulfilment of the Organization's purposes. Decisions of the Congress are to be taken by a two-thirds majority of the votes cast, except that in the election of officers of the Organization, a simple majority is required.

The Executive Committee is to be composed of the presidents of regional associations and an equal number of directors of the meteorological services of Members in addition to the President and Vice-Presidents of WMO. It will meet at least once a year. As the executive body of the Organization, the Committee will supervise the carrying out of Congress resolutions. It will, among other duties, make studies and recommendations and provide Members with technical information, counsel and assistance in the field of meteorology.

The regional meteorological associations, to be established by the Congress, will be composed of Members of WMO whose networks lie in or extend into the respective regions. The geographical limits of the various regions are to be defined by the Congress. Six Regional Commissions now operate under the International Meteorological Organization: for Europe, for Asia, for Africa, for North and Central America, for South America and for the Southwest Pacific.

Various technical commissions, to be established by the Congress, will be composed of experts. The following Technical Commissions now operate under IMO:

Aerological Commission (CAé)

Commission for Agricultural Meteorology (CAGM)

Commission for Bibliography and Publications (CBP)

Climatological Commission (CCI)

Hydrological Commission (CHy)

Commission for Instruments and Methods of Observation (CIMO)

Commission for Aeronautical Meteorology (CMAé)

Commission for Maritime Meteorology (CMM)

Commission for Polar Meteorology (CPM)

Commission for Radio-Electric Meteorology (CREM)

Commission for Synoptic Weather Information (CSWI)

The Commissions for Polar Meteorology and Radio-Electric Meteorology were established by the twelfth Conference of Directors.

CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

WE THE PEOPLES OF THE UNITED NATIONS DETERMINED

to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained, and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, to practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbors, and to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, and to ensure, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods, that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

AND FOR THESE ENDS

HAVE RESOLVED TO COMBINE OUR EFFORTS TO ACCOMPLISH THESE AIMS.

Accordingly, our respective Governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present Charter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

CHAPTER I

PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES

Article 1

The Purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;
2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;
3. To achieve international cooperation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural, or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion; and

4. To be a center for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

Article 2

The Organization and its Members, in pursuit of the Purposes stated in Article 1, shall act in accordance with the following Principles.

1. The Organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its Members.

2. All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.

3. All Members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All Members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Purposes of the United Nations.

5. All Members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The Organization shall ensure that states which are not Members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the Members to submit such matters to settlement under the present Charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

CHAPTER II

MEMBERSHIP

Article 3

The original Members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San

Francisco, or having previously signed the Declaration by United Nations of January 1, 1942, sign the present Charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

Article 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the Organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

A Member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

Article 6

A Member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the Principles contained in the present Charter may be expelled from the Organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

CHAPTER III

ORGANS

Article 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: a General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as may be found necessary may be established in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs.

CHAPTER IV

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Composition

Article 9

1. The General Assembly shall consist of all the Members of the United Nations.

2. Each Member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

Functions and Powers

Article 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present Charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the present Charter, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations to the Members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or to both on any such questions or matters.

Article 11

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of cooperation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulation of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the Members or to the Security Council or to both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any Member of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a state which is not a Member of the United Nations in accordance with Article 35, paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or to both. Any such question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set forth in this Article shall not limit the general scope of Article 10.

Article 12

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present Charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the Members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

Article 13

1. The General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

a. promoting international cooperation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;

b. promoting international cooperation in the economic, social, cultural, educational, and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions, and powers of the General Assembly with respect to matters mentioned in paragraph 1 (b) above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

Article 14

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present Charter setting forth the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

Article 15

1. The General Assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has decided upon or taken to maintain international peace and security.

2. The General Assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other organs of the United Nations.

Article 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the international trusteeship system as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

Article 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the Organization.

2. The expenses of the Organization shall be borne by the Members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

3. The General Assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

Voting

Article 18

1. Each member of the General Assembly shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These questions shall include: recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the non-permanent members of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with paragraph 1 (c) of Article 86, the admission of new Members to the United Nations, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, questions relating to the operation of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions.

3. Decisions on other questions, including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority, shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Article 19

A Member of the United Nations which is in arrears in the payment of its financial contributions to the Organization shall have no vote in the General Assembly if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a Member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the Member.

Procedure

Article 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the Secretary-General at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the Members of the United Nations.

Article 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its President for each session.

Article 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

CHAPTER V

THE SECURITY COUNCIL

Composition

Article 23

1. The Security Council shall consist of eleven Members of the United Nations. The Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other Members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its Members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.

2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII, and XII.

3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

Article 25

The Members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the present Charter.

Article 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee referred to in Article 47, plans to be submitted to the Members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

Voting

Article 27

1. Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.
2. Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members.
3. Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI, and under paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

Procedure

Article 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization.
2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.
3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the Organization as in its judgment will best facilitate its work.

Article 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

Article 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

Article 31

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council may participate, without vote, in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that Member are specially affected.

Article 32

Any Member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state which is not a Member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under consideration by the Security Council, shall be invited to participate, without vote, in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it deems just for the participation of a state which is not a Member of the United Nations.

CHAPTER VI

PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTES

Article 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, enquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

Article 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 35

1. Any Member of the United Nations may bring any dispute, or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 34, to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present Charter.

3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under this Article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

Article 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.

2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.

3. In making recommendations under this Article the Security Council should also take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the Statute of the Court.

Article 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that Article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.

2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

Article 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33 to 37, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a pacific settlement of the dispute.

CHAPTER VII

ACTION WITH RESPECT TO THREATS TO THE PEACE, BREACHES OF THE PEACE, AND ACTS OF AGGRESSION

Article 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Article 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 39, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims, or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

Article 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon the Members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

Article 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea, or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade, and other operations by air, sea, or land forces of Members of the United Nations.

Article 43

1. All Members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance, and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and Members or between the Security Council and groups of Members and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

Article 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a Member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfillment of the obligations assumed under Article 43, invite that Member, if the Member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contingents of that Member's armed forces.

Article 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, Members shall hold immediately available national air-force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

Article 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committee shall consist of the Chiefs of Staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any Member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the Committee shall be invited by the Committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the Committee's responsibilities requires the participation of that Member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be worked out subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional subcommittees.

Article 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the Members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the Members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

Article 49

The Members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

Article 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a Member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

Article 51

Nothing in the present Charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by Members in the exercise of this right of self-defense shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present Charter to take at any time such action as it deems necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

CHAPTER VIII

REGIONAL ARRANGEMENTS

Article 52

1. Nothing in the present Charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the Purposes and Principles of the United Nations.

2. The Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council shall encourage the development of pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This Article in no way impairs the application of Articles 34 and 35.

Article 53

1. The Security Council shall, where appropriate, utilize such regional arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as defined in paragraph 2 of this Article, provided for pursuant to Article 107 or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the Organization may, on request of the Governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term enemy state as used in paragraph 1 of this Article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present Charter.

Article 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

CHAPTER IX

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COOPERATION

Article 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

a. higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;

b. solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational cooperation; and

c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

Article 56

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 57

1. The various specialized agencies, established by intergovernmental agreement and having wide international responsibilities, as defined in their basic instruments, in economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

2. Such agencies thus brought into relationship with the United Nations are hereinafter referred to as specialized agencies.

Article 58

The Organization shall make recommendations for the coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies.

Article 59

The Organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the states concerned for the creation of any new specialized agencies required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

Article 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the functions of the Organization set forth in this Chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

CHAPTER X

THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Composition

Article 61

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of eighteen Members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, six members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. At the first election, eighteen members of the Economic and Social Council shall be chosen. The term of office of six members so chosen shall expire at the end of one year, and of six other members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

4. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.

Functions and Powers

Article 62

1. The Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

2. It may make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all.

3. It may prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence.

4. It may call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

Article 63

1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into agreements with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations. Such agreements shall be subject to approval by the General Assembly.

2. It may coordinate the activities of the specialized agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly and to the Members of the United Nations.

Article 64

1. The Economic and Social Council may take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies. It may make arrangements with the Members of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and to recommendations on matters falling within its competence made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observations on these reports to the General Assembly.

Article 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

Article 66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions as fall within its competence in connection with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly.

2. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of Members of the United Nations and at the request of specialized agencies.

3. It shall perform such other functions as are specified elsewhere in the present Charter or as may be assigned to it by the General Assembly.

Voting

Article 67

1. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 68

The Economic and Social Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights, and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions.

Article 69

The Economic and Social Council shall invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

Article 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

Article 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

Article 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

CHAPTER XI

DECLARATION REGARDING NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Article 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present Charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories, and, to this end:

a. to ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social, and educational advancement, their just treatment, and their protection against abuses;

b. to develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;

c. to further international peace and security;

d. to promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to cooperate with one another and, when and where appropriate, with specialized international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic, and scientific purposes set forth in this Article; and

e. to transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social, and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII apply.

Article 74

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy in respect of the territories to which this Chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighborliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic, and commercial matters.

CHAPTER XII

INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

Article 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an international trusteeship system for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereinafter referred to as trust territories.

Article 76

The basic objectives of the trusteeship system, in accordance with the Purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article 1 of the present Charter, shall be:

- a. to further international peace and security;
- b. to promote the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;
- c. to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and
- d. to ensure equal treatment in social, economic, and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

Article 77

1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements:
 - a. territories now held under mandate;
 - b. territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
 - c. territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.
2. It will be a matter for subsequent agreement as to which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

Article 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become Members of the United Nations, relationship among which shall be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

Article 79

The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a Member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

Article 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeship agreements, made under Articles 77, 79, and 81, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this Chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which Members of the United Nations may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this Article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as provided for in Article 77.

Article 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which will exercise the administration of the trust territory. Such authority, hereinafter called the administering authority, may be one or more states or the Organization itself.

Article 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

Article 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the Security Council.
2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.
3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the trusteeship system relating to political, economic, social, and educational matters in the strategic areas.

Article 84

It shall be the duty of the administering authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the administering authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations towards the Security Council undertaken in this regard by the administering authority, as well as for local defense and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

Article 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly.

2. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

CHAPTER XIII

THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

Composition

Article 86

1. The Trusteeship Council shall consist of the following Members of the United Nations:

- a. those Members administering trust territories;
- b. such of those Members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and
- c. as many other Members elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer trust territories and those which do not.

2. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall designate one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

Functions and Powers

Article 87

The General Assembly and, under its authority, the Trusteeship Council, in carrying out their functions, may:

- a. consider reports submitted by the administering authority;
- b. accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the administering authority;
- c. provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering authority; and
- d. take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the trusteeship agreements.

Article 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the administering authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

Voting

Article 89

1. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council shall be made by a majority of the members present and voting.

Procedure

Article 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President.

2. The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

Article 91

The Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

CHAPTER XIV

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. It shall function in accordance with the annexed Statute, which is based upon the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and forms an integral part of the present Charter.

Article 93

1. All Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice.

2. A state which is not a Member of the United Nations may become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 94

1. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

Article 95

Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future.

Article 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the Court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

CHAPTER XV

THE SECRETARIAT

Article 97

The Secretariat shall comprise a Secretary-General and such staff as the Organization may require. The Secretary-General shall be appointed by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the Organization.

Article 98

The Secretary-General shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council, and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The Secretary-General shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the Organization.

Article 99

The Secretary-General may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security.

Article 100

1. In the performance of their duties the Secretary-General and the staff shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the Organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials responsible only to the Organization.

2. Each Member of the United Nations undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

Article 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the Secretary-General under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required, to other organs of the United Nations. These staffs shall form a part of the Secretariat.

3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

CHAPTER XVI

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Article 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any Member of the United Nations after the present Charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.

2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 1 of this Article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

Article 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the Members of the United Nations under the present Charter and their obligations under any other international agreement, their obligations under the present Charter shall prevail.

Article 104

The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfillment of its purposes.

Article 105

1. The Organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its Members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfillment of its purposes.

2. Representatives of the Members of the United Nations and officials of the Organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the Organization.

3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article or may propose conventions to the Members of the United Nations for this purpose.

CHAPTER XVII

TRANSITIONAL SECURITY ARRANGEMENTS

Article 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 42, the parties to the Four-Nation Declaration, signed at Moscow, October 30, 1943, and France, shall, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 5 of that Declaration, consult with one another and as occasion requires with other Members of the United Nations with a view to such joint action on behalf of the Organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

Article 107

Nothing in the present Charter shall invalidate or preclude action, in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present Charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the Governments having responsibility for such action.

CHAPTER XVIII

AMENDMENTS

Article 108

Amendments to the present Charter shall come into force for all Members of the United Nations when they have been adopted by a vote of two thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

Article 109

1. A General Conference of the Members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. Each Member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any alteration of the present Charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the Members of the United Nations including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the coming into force of the present Charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

CHAPTER XIX

RATIFICATION AND SIGNATURE

Article 110

1. The present Charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. The ratifications shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the Secretary-General of the Organization when he has been appointed.

3. The present Charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the Republic of China, France, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of the ratifications deposited shall thereupon be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory states.

4. The states signatory to the present Charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become original Members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications.

Article 111

The present Charter, of which the Chinese, French, Russian, English, and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that Government to the Governments of the other signatory states.

IN FAITH WHEREOF the representatives of the Governments of the United Nations have signed the present Charter.

DONE at the city of San Francisco the twenty-sixth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

STATUTE OF THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

Article 1

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE established by the Charter of the United Nations as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations shall be constituted and shall function in accordance with the provisions of the present Statute.

CHAPTER I

ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT

Article 2

The Court shall be composed of a body of independent judges, elected regardless of their nationality from among persons of high moral character, who possess the qualifications required in their respective countries for appointment to the highest judicial offices, or are jurisconsults of recognized competence in international law.

Article 3

1. The Court shall consist of fifteen members, no two of whom may be nationals of the same state.

2. A person who for the purposes of membership in the Court could be regarded as a national of more than one state shall be deemed to be a national of the one in which he ordinarily exercises civil and political rights.

Article 4

1. The members of the Court shall be elected by the General Assembly and by the Security Council from a list of persons nominated by the national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, in accordance with the following provisions.

2. In the case of Members of the United Nations not represented in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, candidates shall be nominated by national groups appointed for this purpose by their governments under the same conditions as those prescribed for members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration by Article 44 of the Convention of The Hague of 1907 for the pacific settlement of international disputes.

3. The conditions under which a state which is a party to the present Statute but is not a Member of the United Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

Article 5

1. At least three months before the date of the election, the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration belonging to the states which are parties to the present Statute, and to the members of the national groups appointed under Article 4, paragraph 2, inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the Court.

2. No group may nominate more than four persons, not more than two of whom shall be of their own nationality. In no case may the number of candidates nominated by a group be more than double the number of seats to be filled.

Article 6

Before making these nominations, each national group is recommended to consult its highest court of justice, its legal faculties and schools of law, and its national academies and national sections of international academies devoted to the study of law.

Article 7

1. The Secretary-General shall prepare a list in alphabetical order of all the persons thus nominated. Save as provided in Article 12, paragraph 2, these shall be the only persons eligible.

2. The Secretary-General shall submit this list to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Article 8

The General Assembly and the Security Council shall proceed independently of one another to elect the members of the Court.

Article 9

At every election, the electors shall bear in mind not only that the persons to be elected should individually possess the qualifications required, but also that in the body as a whole the representation of the main forms of civilization and of the principal legal systems of the world should be assured.

Article 10

1. Those candidates who obtain an absolute majority of votes in the General Assembly and in the Security Council shall be considered as elected.

2. Any vote of the Security Council, whether for the election of judges or for the appointment of members of the conference envisaged in Article 12, shall be taken without any distinction between permanent and non-permanent members of the Security Council.

3. In the event of more than one national of the same state obtaining an absolute majority of the votes both of the General Assembly and of the Security Council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected.

Article 11

If, after the first meeting held for the purpose of the election, one or more seats remain to be filled, a second and, if necessary, a third meeting shall take place.

Article 12

1. If, after the third meeting, one or more seats still remain unfilled, a joint conference consisting of six members, three appointed by the General Assembly and three by the Security Council, may be formed at any time at the request of either the General Assembly or the Security Council, for the purpose of choosing by the vote of an absolute majority one name for each seat still vacant, to submit to the General Assembly and the Security Council for their respective acceptance.

2. If the joint conference is unanimously agreed upon any person who fulfils the required conditions, he may be included in its list, even though he was not included in the list of nominations referred to in Article 7.

3. If the joint conference is satisfied that it will not be successful in procuring an election, those members of the Court who have already been elected shall, within a period to be fixed by the Security Council, proceed to fill the vacant seats by selection from among those candidates who have obtained votes either in the General Assembly or in the Security Council.

4. In the event of an equality of votes among the judges, the eldest judge shall have a casting vote.

Article 13

1. The members of the Court shall be elected for nine years and may be re-elected; provided, however, that of the judges elected at the first election, the terms of five judges shall expire at the end of three years and the terms of five more judges shall expire at the end of six years.

2. The judges whose terms are to expire at the end of the above-mentioned initial periods of three and six years shall be chosen by lot to be drawn by the Secretary-General immediately after the first election has been completed.

3. The members of the Court shall continue to discharge their duties until their places have been filled. Though replaced, they shall finish any cases which they may have begun.

4. In the case of the resignation of a member of the Court, the resignation shall be addressed to the President of the Court for transmission to the Secretary-General. This last notification makes the place vacant.

Article 14

Vacancies shall be filled by the same method as that laid down for the first election, subject to the following provision: the Secretary-General shall, within one month of the occurrence of the vacancy, proceed to issue the invitations provided for in Article 5, and the date of the election shall be fixed by the Security Council.

Article 15

A member of the Court elected to replace a member whose term of office has not expired shall hold office for the remainder of his predecessor's term.

Article 16

1. No member of the Court may exercise any political or administrative function, or engage in any other occupation of a professional nature.

2. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 17

1. No member of the Court may act as agent, counsel, or advocate in any case.

2. No member may participate in the decision of any case in which he has previously taken part as agent, counsel, or advocate for one of the parties, or as a member of a national or international court, or of a commission of enquiry, or in any other capacity.

3. Any doubt on this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 18

1. No member of the Court can be dismissed unless, in the unanimous opinion of the other members, he has ceased to fulfil the required conditions.

2. Formal notification thereof shall be made to the Secretary-General by the Registrar,

3. This notification makes the place vacant.

Article 19

The members of the Court, when engaged on the business of the Court, shall enjoy diplomatic privileges and immunities.

Article 20

Every member of the Court shall, before taking up his duties, make a solemn declaration in open court that he will exercise his powers impartially and conscientiously.

Article 21

1. The Court shall elect its President and Vice-President for three years; they may be re-elected.

2. The Court shall appoint its Registrar and may provide for the appointment of such other officers as may be necessary.

Article 22

1. The seat of the Court shall be established at The Hague. This, however, shall not prevent the Court from sitting and exercising its functions elsewhere whenever the Court considers it desirable.

2. The President and the Registrar shall reside at the seat of the Court.

Article 23

1. The Court shall remain permanently in session, except during the judicial vacations, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court.

2. Members of the Court are entitled to periodic leave, the dates and duration of which shall be fixed by the Court, having in mind the distance between The Hague and the home of each judge.

3. Members of the Court shall be bound, unless they are on leave or prevented from attending by illness or other serious reasons duly explained to the President, to hold themselves permanently at the disposal of the Court.

Article 24

1. If, for some special reason, a member of the Court considers that he should not take part in the decision of a particular case, he shall so inform the President.

2. If the President considers that for some special reason one of the members of the Court should not sit in a particular case, he shall give him notice accordingly.

3. If in any such case the member of the Court and the President disagree, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 25

1. The full Court shall sit except when it is expressly provided otherwise in the present Statute.

2. Subject to the condition that the number of judges available to constitute the Court is not thereby reduced below eleven, the Rules of the Court may provide for allowing one or more judges, according to circumstances and in rotation, to be dispensed from sitting.

3. A quorum of nine judges shall suffice to constitute the Court.

Article 26

1. The Court may from time to time form one or more chambers, composed of three or more judges as the Court may determine, for dealing with particular categories of cases; for example, labor cases and cases relating to transit and communications.

2. The Court may at any time form a chamber for dealing with a particular case. The number of judges to constitute such a chamber shall be determined by the Court with the approval of the parties.

3. Cases shall be heard and determined by the chambers provided for in this Article if the parties so request.

Article 27

A judgment given by any of the chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 shall be considered as rendered by the Court.

Article 28

The chambers provided for in Articles 26 and 29 may, with the consent of the parties, sit and exercise their functions elsewhere than at The Hague.

Article 29

With a view to the speedy despatch of business, the Court shall form annually a chamber composed of five judges which, at the request of the parties, may hear and determine cases by summary procedure. In addition, two judges shall be selected for the purpose of replacing judges who find it impossible to sit.

Article 30

1. The Court shall frame rules for carrying out its functions. In particular, it shall lay down rules of procedure.

2. The Rules of the Court may provide for assessors to sit with the Court or with any of its chambers, without the right to vote.

Article 31.

1. Judges of the nationality of each of the parties shall retain their right to sit in the case before the Court.

2. If the Court includes upon the Bench a judge of the nationality of one of the parties, any other party may choose a person to sit as judge. Such person shall be chosen preferably from among those persons who have been nominated as candidates as provided in Articles 4 and 5.

3. If the Court includes upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the parties, each of these parties may proceed to choose a judge as provided in paragraph 2 of this Article.

4. The provisions of this Article shall apply to the case of Articles 26 and 29. In such cases, the President shall request one or, if necessary, two of the members of the Court forming the chamber to give place to the members of the Court of the nationality of the parties concerned, and, failing such, or if they are unable to be present, to the judges specially chosen by the parties.

5. Should there be several parties in the same interest, they shall, for the purpose of the preceding provisions, be reckoned as one party only. Any doubt upon this point shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

6. Judges chosen as laid down in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this Article shall fulfil the conditions required by Articles 2, 17 (paragraph 2), 20, and 24 of the present Statute. They shall take part in the decision on terms of complete equality with their colleagues.

Article 32

1. Each member of the Court shall receive an annual salary.

2. The President shall receive a special annual allowance.

3. The Vice-President shall receive a special allowance for every day on which he acts as President.

4. The judges chosen under Article 31, other than members of the Court, shall receive compensation for each day on which they exercise their functions.

5. These salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be fixed by the General Assembly. They may not be decreased during the term of office.

6. The salary of the Registrar shall be fixed by the General Assembly on the proposal of the Court.

7. Regulations made by the General Assembly shall fix the conditions under which retirement pensions may be given to members of the Court and to the Registrar, and the conditions under which members of the Court and the Registrar shall have their traveling expenses refunded.

8. The above salaries, allowances, and compensation shall be free of all taxation.

Article 33

The expenses of the Court shall be borne by the United Nations in such a manner as shall be decided by the General Assembly.

CHAPTER II

COMPETENCE OF THE COURT

Article 34

1. Only states may be parties in cases before the Court.

2. The Court, subject to and in conformity with its Rules, may request of public international organizations information relevant to cases before it, and shall receive such information presented by such organizations on their own initiative.

3. Whenever the construction of the constituent instrument of a public international organization or of an international convention adopted thereunder is in question in a case before the Court, the Registrar shall so notify the public international organization concerned and shall communicate to it copies of all the written proceedings.

Article 35

1. The Court shall be open to the states parties to the present Statute.

2. The conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall, subject to the special provisions contained in treaties in force, be laid down by the Security Council, but in no case shall such conditions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court.

3. When a state which is not a Member of the United Nations is a party to a case, the Court shall fix the amount which that party is to contribute towards the expenses of the Court. This provision shall not apply if such state is bearing a share of the expenses of the Court.

Article 36

1. The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it and all matters specially provided for in the Charter of the United Nations or in treaties and conventions in force.

2. The states parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes concerning:

- a. the interpretation of a treaty;
- b. any question of international law;
- c. the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation;
- d. the nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

3. The declarations referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain states, or for a certain time.

4. Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.

5. Declarations made under Article 36 of the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice and which are still in force shall be deemed, as between the parties to the present Statute, to be acceptances of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice for the period which they still have to run and in accordance with their terms.

6. In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

Article 37

Whenever a treaty or convention in force provides for reference of a matter to a tribunal to have been instituted by the League of Nations, or to the Permanent Court of International Justice" the matter shall, as between the parties to the present Statute, be referred to the International Court of Justice.

Article 38

1. The Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply:

- a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
- b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
- c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;
- d. subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

2. This provision shall not prejudice the power of the Court to decide a case ex aequo et bono, if the parties agree thereto.

CHAPTER III

PROCEDURE

Article 39

1. The official languages of the Court shall be French and English. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in French, the judgment shall be delivered in French. If the parties agree that the case shall be conducted in English, the judgment shall be delivered in English.

2. In the absence of an agreement as to which language shall be employed, each party may, in the pleadings, use the language which it prefers; the decision of the Court shall be given in French and English. In this case the Court shall at the same time determine which of the two texts shall be considered as authoritative.

3. The Court shall, at the request of any party, authorize a language other than French or English to be used by that party.

Article 40

1. Cases are brought before the Court, as the case may be, either by the notification of the special agreement or by a written application addressed to the Registrar. In either case the subject of the dispute and the parties shall be indicated.

2. The Registrar shall forthwith communicate the application to all concerned.

3. He shall also notify the Members of the United Nations through the Secretary-General, and also any other states entitled to appear before the Court.

Article 41

1. The Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measures which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party.

2. Pending the final decision, notice of the measures suggested shall forthwith be given to the parties and to the Security Council.

Article 42

1. The parties shall be represented by agents.
2. They may have the assistance of counsel or advocates before the Court.
3. The agents, counsel, and advocates of parties before the Court shall enjoy the privileges and immunities necessary to the independent exercise of their duties.

Article 43

1. The procedure shall consist of two parts: written and oral.
2. The written proceedings shall consist of the communication to the Court and to the parties of memorials, counter-memorials and, if necessary, replies; also all papers and documents in support.
3. These communications shall be made through the Registrar, in the order and within the time fixed by the Court.
4. A certified copy of every document produced by one party shall be communicated to the other party.
5. The oral proceedings shall consist of the hearing by the Court of witnesses, experts, agents, counsel, and advocates.

Article 44

1. For the service of all notices upon persons other than the agents, counsel, and advocates, the Court shall apply direct to the government of the state upon whose territory the notice has to be served.
2. The same provision shall apply whenever steps are to be taken to procure evidence on the spot.

Article 45

The hearing shall be under the control of the President or, if he is unable to preside, of the Vice-President; if neither is able to preside, the senior judge present shall preside.

Article 46

The hearing in Court shall be public, unless the Court shall decide otherwise, or unless the parties demand that the public be not admitted.

Article 47

1. Minutes shall be made at each hearing and signed by the Registrar and the President.
2. These minutes alone shall be authentic.

Article 48

The Court shall make orders for the conduct of the case, shall decide the form and time in which each party must conclude its arguments, and make all arrangements connected with the taking of evidence.

Article 49

The Court may, even before the hearing begins, call upon the agents to produce any document or to supply any explanations. Formal note shall be taken of any refusal.

Article 50

The Court may, at any time, entrust any individual, body, bureau, commission, or other organization that it may select, with the task of carrying out an enquiry or giving an expert opinion.

Article 51

During the hearing any relevant questions are to be put to the witnesses and experts under the conditions laid down by the Court in the rules of procedure referred to in Article 30.

Article 52

After the Court has received the proofs and evidence within the time specified for the purpose, it may refuse to accept any further oral or written evidence that one party may desire to present unless the other side consents.

Article 53

1. Whenever one of the parties does not appear before the Court, or fails to defend its case, the other party may call upon the Court to decide in favor of its claim.
2. The Court must, before doing so, satisfy itself, not only that it has jurisdiction in accordance with Articles 36 and 37, but also that the claim is well founded in fact and law.

Article 54

1. When, subject to the control of the Court, the agents, counsel, and advocates have completed their presentation of the case, the President shall declare the hearing closed.
2. The Court shall withdraw to consider the judgment.
3. The deliberations of the Court shall take place in private and remain secret.

Article 55

1. All questions shall be decided by a majority of the judges present.
2. In the event of an equality of votes, the President or the judge who acts in his place shall have a casting vote.

Article 56

1. The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.
2. It shall contain the names of the judges who have taken part in the decision.

Article 57

If the judgment does not represent in whole or in part the unanimous opinion of the judges, any judge shall be entitled to deliver a separate opinion.

Article 58

The judgment shall be signed by the President and by the Registrar. It shall be read in open court, due notice having been given to the agents.

Article 59

The decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case.

Article 60

The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any party.

Article 61

1. An application for revision of a judgment may be made only when it is based upon the discovery of some fact of such a nature as to be a decisive factor, which fact was, when the judgment was given, unknown to the Court and also to the party claiming revision, always provided that such ignorance was not due to negligence.
2. The proceedings for revision shall be opened by a judgment of the Court expressly recording the existence of the new fact, recognizing that it has such a character as to lay the case open to revision, and declaring the application admissible on this ground.

3. The Court may require previous compliance with the terms of the judgment before it admits proceedings in revision.

4. The application for revision must be made at latest within six months of the discovery of the new fact.

5. No application for revision may be made after the lapse of ten years from the date of the judgment.

Article 62

1. Should a state consider that it has an interest of a legal nature which may be affected by the decision in the case, it may submit a request to the Court to be permitted to intervene.

2. It shall be for the Court to decide upon this request.

Article 63

1. Whenever the construction of a convention to which states other than those concerned in the case are parties is in question, the Registrar shall notify all such states forthwith.

2. Every state so notified has the right to intervene in the proceedings; but if it uses this right, the construction given by the judgment will be equally binding upon it.

Article 64

Unless otherwise decided by the Court, each party shall bear its own costs.

CHAPTER IV

ADVISORY OPINIONS

Article 65

1. The Court may give an advisory opinion on any legal question at the request of whatever body may be authorized by or in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to make such a request.

2. Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request containing an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

Article 66

1. The Registrar shall forthwith give notice of the request for an advisory opinion to all states entitled to appear before the Court.

2. The Registrar shall also, by means of a special and direct communication, notify any state entitled to appear before the Court or international organization considered by the Court, or, should it not be sitting, by the President, as likely to be able to furnish information on the question, that the Court will be prepared to receive, within a time limit to be fixed by the President, written statements, or to hear, at a public sitting to be held for the purpose, oral statements relating to the question.

3. Should any such state entitled to appear before the Court have failed to receive the special communication referred to in paragraph 2 of this Article, such state may express a desire to submit a written statement or to be heard; and the Court will decide.

4. States and organizations having presented written or oral statements or both shall be permitted to comment on the statements made by other states or organizations in the form, to the extent, and within the time limits which the Court, or, should it not be sitting, the President, shall decide in each particular case. Accordingly, the Registrar shall in due time communicate any such written statements to states and organizations having submitted similar statements.

Article 67

The Court shall deliver its advisory opinions in open court, notice having been given to the Secretary-General and to the representatives of Members of the United Nations, of other states and of international organizations immediately concerned.

Article 68

In the exercise of its advisory functions the Court shall further be guided by the provisions of the present Statute which apply in contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable.

CHAPTER V

AMENDMENT

Article 69

Amendments to the present Statute shall be effected by the same procedure as is provided by the Charter of the United Nations for amendments to that Charter, subject however to any provisions which the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council may adopt concerning the participation of states which are parties to the present Statute but are not Members of the United Nations.

Article 70

The Court shall have power to propose such amendments to the present Statute as it may deem necessary, through written communications to the Secretary-General, for consideration in conformity with the provisions of Article 69.
