At the 328th meeting on July 1, the Council rejected the Chinese proposal for the transmission of the Australian-United States working paper, there being 6 votes in favor and 0 against, with 5 abstentions (Argentina, Belgium, France, United Kingdom, United States).

On July 6, 1948, the Council received chapters II to VI (S/848/Add.1) of the Committee's third interim report. These chapters described the stage reached in the work of the Political, Social and Administrative, Economic and Financial, and Security Committees, and other matters dealt with by the Conference.

At the 329th meeting, on July 6, the representative of the Republic of Indonesia said that the Dutch, ever since their return to Indonesia, had imposed a blockade on the Republic. He analyzed the Netherlands regulations and practices and concluded that they were primarily intended to bring Republican trade and commerce under total Dutch control. The Committee had reported to the Council that the continuation of the blockade had caused severe shortages in important commodities, particularly medical supplies and, in some cases, even food. In the Committee's opinion, these shortages constituted a primary problem for the Republic. For this reason, and since delay in implementing article 6 of the Truce Agreement (stipulating the restoration of normal trade and intercourse) adversely influenced the political negotiations, he asked the Council to request a report from the Committee on the facts of the blockade and its consequences.

The representative of the Netherlands recalled that, at the 316th meeting, the Council had been informed that an agreement had been reached in the Economic and Financial Committee on the regulation of maritime goods traffic. However, the Republican delegation had subsequently rejected this agreement, and Netherlands representatives had again informally consulted with Republican representatives to find a new basis of agreement. There was no reason, in his view, for the Council to interfere with the work of the Committee, which would report in due time.

The representative of Australia noted the contradictory statements made by the representatives of the Netherlands and the Republic of Indonesia, and supported the suggestion that the Committee be requested to forward a report.

The representative of China also considered that, in order to understand the problem, the Council should ask the Committee for information on Indonesian trade and on the delay in implementing article 6 of the Truce Agreement. He submitted the following proposal:

"That the President of the Security Council cable to the Committee of Good Offices for an early report on the existing restrictions on the domestic and international trade of Indonesia and the reasons for the delay in the implementation of article 6 of the Truce Agreement."

The Chinese proposal was supported by the representatives of the U.S.S.R., Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., United States, Colombia and Canada.

The Council, after discussion of a proposal by the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. to suggest a time limit for the Committee's reply, adopted the Chinese proposal by 9 votes in favor, 0 against and 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

The President cabled this decision to the Committee on July 6, 1948.

Complying with the request of the Security Council, the Committee of Good Offices on the Indonesian Question reported by cable on July 23 (S/918) that it "does not believe that discussions looking toward political settlement suspended since [the] end [of] May can well be resumed until one party or [the] other comes forward with complete and concrete programme for [the] establishment of [a] United States [of] Indonesia based upon substantial concessions to [the] point of view of [the] other party. It would seem that such [a] programme would need to deal at least with [the] entire range of issues covered by [the] Australian-United States proposals."

The Committee of Good Offices reported further the opinion of the Indonesian Republican Government that, given the standstill in the political negotiations, no useful purpose could be served by dispatching a Republican delegation to Batavia after July 23 to engage in such negotiations; only those members of the Republican delegation required for work related to the implementation of the Truce Agreement would therefore leave for Batavia. According to the cable, the Netherlands representative regretted the conclusion of the Republican delegation that political negotiations had arrived at a standstill, stating that he was awaiting the formation of a new Netherlands Cabinet and, from it, fresh instructions which might enable him to submit new proposals. He agreed that negotiations on non-political topics should be continued, while political matters might be held in abeyance, pending the arrival of new instructions.

A second cable (S/919), dated July 24, 1948, was addressed to the President of the Security Council by the Committee of Good Offices concerning "restrictions on trade of Indonesia and reason for delay in implementation of Article 6 of the Truce Agreement".

The Committee of Good Offices, while noting the position of the two contending parties, did not attempt to pass judgment on the merits of their respective arguments. Aside from certain general factors, the Committee declared, "it is evident that an immediate and substantial reason for economic difficulties of Republican areas is inadequate implementation thus far of Article 6 of the Truce Agreement. Most important in this connection, in the Committee's opinion, are regulations governing domestic and international trade promulgated by Netherlands Indies civil and military authorities between January 1947 and the signing of the Truce Agreement, and which have been continued in effect to date." The Committee also stated that ". . . pending the conclusion of an agreement restoring economic and political unity to Indonesia, the economic plight of Republican-controlled territories cannot be substantially ameliorated until a way is found to relax existing regulations. This would require basic improvement in the attitude of the parties."

A third communication from the Committee of Good Offices (S/929), dated July 28, informed the Security Council that the movement of the Committee's military assistants had become increasingly restricted as a result of serious transportation shortages in Republican territories. The Committee requested the United Nations to arrange as soon as possible for the supply of eighteen jeeps and spare parts, to be used by its military assistants.

The three communications from the Committee of Good Offices were considered by the Security Council at its 341st and 342nd meetings, on July 29. The representative of the Indonesian Republic charged that the Government of the Netherlands deliberately brought the political negotiations to a standstill which it was now trying to prolong. He further reiterated his charges, which he considered were confirmed by the Committee's report, that the Netherlands Government was maintaining an economic blockade against the Republic, and requested the Security Council's assistance in the matter.

The representative of the Netherlands denied both of the charges: the current delay in the political negotiations was due entirely to the fact that a new Netherlands Cabinet was in process of formation; once the new Cabinet had been formed and had studied the matter, new instructions would be issued to the Netherlands representative with the Committee of Good Offices, and the political negotiations could go forward; yet the Republican Government had now suspended these negotiations indefinitely. He also held that there could be no question of a Netherlands blockade of Republican territory: such regulations as had been imposed applied to all of Indonesia and were designed, primarily, to protect the economic interests of the entire community. He regarded the Republican approach to the Security Council as an attempt to bypass the Committee of Good Offices with a view, perhaps, to inducing the Council to initiate measures going beyond its competence.

The representative of the Philippines supported the position of the representative of the Indonesian Republic, affirming that there was indeed a Netherlands blockade against the Republic and holding that the Netherlands was responsible for the breakdown of the political negotiations. In his opinion, the Netherlands strategy was to subject the Republic to a deliberate process of political attrition and economic strangulation.

The representative of China said that however much the opinion of its individual members might vary, the Security Council must strive to find a minimum common denominator. The Council was not sitting in judgment; its function was to promote peace. It was with these considerations in mind that he had prepared a draft resolution (S/931) which he felt would best serve the cause of the promotion of an early solution of the problem.

The draft resolution in question, in its operative part, called upon both parties, with the assistance of the Committee of Good Offices, to maintain strict observance of the military and economic articles in the Renville Truce Agreement and to implement early and fully the twelve Renville political principles and the six additional principles.

The Chinese proposal was supported by the representatives of the United States, Canada, Syria and Argentina during the debate. It was opposed by the representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Ukrainian S.S.R. on the grounds that it evaded the real issues and, by equating the positions of the Republic and the Netherlands, actually favored the latter at the expense of the former. For these reasons, the two representatives declared, they could not support the proposal.

The Chinese draft resolution was adopted at the 342nd meeting on July 29, by a vote of 9 to 0, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). It reads as follows:

"The Security Council,

"Having considered the Committee of Good Offices' Report on the Federal Conference opened in Bandung on 27 May 1948 (S/842), Third Interim Report (S/848 and S/848/Add.1), Report on Standstill in Political Negotiations (S/918) and Report on Restrictions on Trade in Indonesia (S/919);

"Calls upon the Governments of the Netherlands and the Republic of Indonesia with the assistance of the Council's Committee of Good Offices, to maintain strict observance of both the military and economic articles of the Renville Truce Agreement, and to implement early and fully the Twelve Renville Political Principles and the Six Additional Principles."

Regarding the Committee's request for eighteen jeeps and spare parts, the Council, likewise at the 342nd meeting, decided to ask its President to refer the matter to the Secretariat with the instruction that the request be met promptly.

At the same meeting it was also decided, in connection with a request of the representative of the U.S.S.R., that copies of the proposal made jointly to both parties in the Indonesian question by the Australian and United States members of the Committee of Good Offices should be distributed as confidential material to all members of the Security Council.

The Security Council continued its consideration of the Indonesian question.

5. The India-Pakistan Question

a. INCLUSION IN THE AGENDA

The representative of India to the United Nations, in a letter dated January 1, 1948, and addressed to the President of the Security Council (S/628), stated that a situation coming under Article 35 of the Charter, continuation of which was likely to endanger international peace and security, existed between India and Pakistan resulting from the aid that invaders, comprising Pakistan nationals and tribesmen from areas adjacent to the north-west frontier of Pakistan, were drawing from Pakistan for operations against the State of Jammu and Kashmir. He requested the Security Council to call on Pakistan immediately to stop giving such assistance, since it was an act of aggression against India. If Pakistan did not desist from such action, the Government of India might be compelled in self-defence to enter Pakistan territory to take military action against the invaders. The situation was therefore of extreme urgency, the letter stated, and called for immediate action by the Security Council to avoid a breach of international peace.

This matter was admitted to the agenda of the Security Council at its 226th meeting on January 6, 1948, when, pursuant to Article 31 of the Charter, the representatives of India and Pakistan were invited to participate in the discussion. Consideration was postponed until January 15, at the request (S/629) of the Pakistan Government, to enable the Pakistan Foreign Minister to reach New York.

Under cover of a letter dated January 15, the Foreign Minister of Pakistan submitted three documents (S/646), replying to India's charges, levelling counter-charges and calling upon the Council to take action on the latter charges. The main points of the charges concerned India's action in Jammu and Kashmir, the unlawful occupation of the State of Junagadh and other States by Indian forces, mass destruction of Muslims in a prearranged program of genocide, and failure to implement agreements between the two countries.

As a result of a letter dated January 20 (S/655) from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Pakistan to the President of the Security Council requesting consideration of matters in the Pakistan complaint other than the Jammu-Kashmir question, there was discussion at the 231st meeting on January 22 of a change in the agenda, which had up to then been entitled "Jammu and Kashmir question". This was now altered to the "India-Pakistan question", with the understanding that the Kashmir question would be discussed first as a particular case of the general India-Pakistan dispute, though this would not mean that consideration of the other issues in the Pakistan complaint would be postponed until consideration of the Kashmir question had been completed.

b. THE JAMMU AND KASHMIR QUESTION

(1) Telegram from the President to the Parties

By identical telegrams dated January 6, 1948, the President of the Security Council, prior to the Council's examination of the Indian communication of January 1 (S/628) addressed an urgent appeal to the Governments of both India and Pakistan to refrain from any step incompatible with the Charter and liable to result in an aggravation of the situation, thereby rendering more difficult any action by the Security Council. In their replies (S/639, S/640) the two Governments assured the President of the Council that they would refrain from any action which might be contrary to the Charter.

(2) Statements by the Parties

At the 227th meeting on January 6, 1948, the representative of India stated that the Government of India had been compelled to bring the Kashmir question before the Security Council by the failure to reach agreement in direct negotiations, which failure had resulted from the intransigence and lack of co-operation of the Pakistan Government. He stressed that the solution of this matter was urgent, not only to safeguard the residents of the State, but to avoid the risk of war between India and Pakistan.

After the Indian Independence Act had come into force on August 15, 1947, the representative of India explained, Kashmir had started negotiations with both India and Pakistan with regard to accession to one of them. India, while vitally interested in the decision, had not put any pressure on Kashmir to accede to the Indian Dominion, whereas Pakistan had applied coercive pressure. It had withheld supplies of vital commodities to the State, in contravention of the standstill agreement previously negotiated. Side by side with economic strangulation, armed incursions had begun to take place from West Punjab into the territory of Jammu and Kashmir State. To counteract the mass raid of tribesmen which started on October 22 and to stop their advance on Srinagar, the Kashmir Government, on October 26, 1947, supported by Sheikh Abdullah, leader of the most influential and popular organization in Kashmir, had acceded to the Dominion of India and had asked for armed aid. The Government of India had accepted the accession on the understanding that the will of the people regarding it could be made clear in a plebiscite or referendum when law and order had been restored. The Government of India had had no plan to send any military assistance to Kashmir before October 25.

The representative of India cited evidence to support the charges that the Pakistan Provincial and Central Governments were aiding the rebellion with arms and supplies and that Pakistan nationals and servicemen "on leave" were participating in the raids. He requested the Security Council to use its influence and power to persuade the Government of Pakistan to prevent its nationals from participating in the raids and to deny aid to the invaders.

At the 228th and 229th meetings on January 16 and 17, the representative of Pakistan replied to the representative of India and amplified the charges made in the documents submitted to the Council by the Government of Pakistan. He reviewed the history of the recent period leading up to partition and communal strife, which, he charged, had arisen from the acts and attitude of the Hindu extremist elements and of the Sikhs. He also outlined the development of an alleged Sikh conspiracy to secure a partition of the Punjab and to exterminate or expel the Muslims of the Eastern Punjab.

He maintained that the Government of India had not dealt properly or adequately with attacks on Muslims, even in the Indian capital.

As regards the issues in Jammu and Kashmir, he denied that Pakistan had applied pressure to the Kashmir Government, pointing out that the breakdown in supplies was due to confusion and strife in the border area arising from the attacks of the State forces and Sikh and Hindu bands on the Muslim population of Kashmir. The State Government, he said, had planned and carried out attacks on Muslims in order to create a situation favorable to its accession to India. It was in self-defence, and because of indignation aroused by these acts, that the Kashmir Muslims and those tribesmen that were helping them were fighting against the State troops.

The representative of Pakistan stated that the Kashmir Government had refused or ignored offers of friendly discussion, had ignored acceptance of its own demand for an impartial inquiry, and had called in Indian troops without informing Pakistan of its intended action. In the same way, the Indian Government, which claimed that it had tried to reach a settlement with Pakistan by negotiation, had not informed Pakistan of the movement of Indian troops into Kashmir until after it had taken place. The Indian Government had not, in fact, he asserted, really tried to settle the issues by direct negotiation.

He called for the evacuation from Jammu and Kashmir of all elements foreign to the State, including tribesmen and Indian Army troops, as the best step to a just solution of the question.

(3) Resolution of the Council of January 17, 1948

At the 229th meeting on January 17, the President, speaking as the representative of Belgium, stated that, in view of the urgent nature of the question, he was submitting the following draft resolution (S/651) before the Council came to a consideration of matters of substance:

"The Security Council,

"Having heard statements on the situation in Kashmir from representatives of the Governments of India and Pakistan;

"Recognizing the urgency of the situation;

"Taking note of the telegram addressed on 6 January by its President to each of the parties and of their replies thereto,

"Calls upon both the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan to take immediately all measures within their power (including public appeals to their people) calculated to improve the situation, and to refrain from making any statements and from doing or causing to be done or permitting any acts which might aggravate the situation;

"And further requests each of those Governments to inform the Council immediately of any material change in the situation which occurs or appears to either of them to be about to occur while the matter is under the consideration of the Council, and consult with the Council thereon."

The President added the following words to the third paragraph of the draft resolution, in accordance with a suggestion made by the representative of Colombia: "in which they announce their intention to conform to the Charter".

The representatives of Colombia, Syria and Canada supported the draft resolution. The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the proposed resolution would add nothing to what had already been done in the matter. The Security Council should study the question more exhaustively and adopt as soon as possible a resolution on the merits of the question designed to improve the situation in Kashmir and restore friendly relations between India and Pakistan. The representative of Argentina said that he would support the Belgian draft resolution though he would have preferred something more effective.

The Belgian draft resolution was adopted by 9 votes in favor, 0 against, and 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

(4) Conversations between Representatives of the Parties and the Council President

Following the adoption of the Belgian resolution the representative of the United Kingdom proposed that the President of the Council should meet with the representatives of the two Governments concerned and that under his guidance they should try to find some common ground on which the structure of a settlement might be built. The proposal met with the approval of the parties concerned and the President declared his readiness to assist. No objection was voiced to the proposal by any representative on the Security Council.

In the course of the Council's consideration of the Kashmir question, therefore, four successive monthly Presidents of the Council (the representatives of Belgium, Canada, China and Colombia) held conversations with representatives of the two parties. The proposals and draft resolutions, which were placed before the Council, and which are discussed below, were largely the outcome of these continued consultations of the Presidents with the parties concerned.

(5) Resolution of the Council of January 20, 1948
At the 230th meeting on January 20, the President, speaking as the representative of Belgium, submitted a draft resolution (S/654) which had been drawn up as a result of his talks with the representatives of the parties, as follows:

"The Security Council,

"Considering that it may investigate any dispute or any situation which might, by its continuance, endanger the maintenance of international peace and security; that, in the existing state of affairs between India and Pakistan, such an investigation is a matter of urgency;

"Adopts the following resolution:

"A. A commission of the Security Council is hereby established, composed of representatives of three members of the United Nations, one to be selected by India, one to be selected by Pakistan, and the third to be designated by the two so selected.

"Each representative on the Commission shall be entitled to select his alternates and assistants.

"B. The Commission shall proceed to the spot as quickly as possible. It shall act under the authority of the Security Council and in accordance with the directions it may receive from it. It shall keep the Security Council currently informed of its activities and of the development of the situation. It shall report to the Security Council regularly, submitting its conclusions and proposals.

"C. The Commission is invested with a dual function:

"(1) To investigate the facts pursuant to Article 34 of the Charter;

"(2) To exercise, without interrupting the work of the Security Council, any mediatory influence likely to smooth away difficulties; to carry out the directions given to it by the Security Council; and to report how far the advice and directions, if any, of the Security Council have been carried out.

"D. The Commission shall perform the functions described in Clause C:

"(1) In regard to the situation in the Jammu and Kashmir State set out in the letter of the representative of India addressed to the President of the Security Council, dated 1 January 1948, and in the letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Pakistan addressed to the Secretary-General, dated 15 January 1948; and

"(2) In regard to other situations set out in the letter from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Pakistan addressed to the Secretary-General, dated 15 January 1948, when the Security Council so directs.

"E. The Commission shall take its decision by majority vote. It shall determine its own procedure. It may allocate among its members, alternate members, their assistants, and its personnel such duties as may have to be fulfilled for the realization of its mission and the reaching of its conclusions.

"F. The Commission, its members, alternate members, their assistants and its personnel, shall be entitled to journey, separately or together, wherever the necessities of their tasks may require, and, in particular, within those territories which are the theatre of the events of which the Security Council is seized.

"G. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall furnish the Commission with such personnel and assistance as it may consider necessary."

The representative of Pakistan noted that the proposed commission would constitute machinery which could deal with all matters pertaining to the India-Pakistan dispute when the Council so desired.

The representative of India replied that this commission could only be concerned with the Kashmir issue, since the other issues had not yet been discussed by the Council. However, the commission could cover other matters if the Council so desired after discussing such matters.

The representatives of the United Kingdom, Canada, France, Syria, China and Colombia supported the draft resolution.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. noted with satisfaction that India and Pakistan had expressed readiness to settle the question by peaceful means with a view to restoring good neighborly relations between those States. The Soviet delegation could not, however, approve the principle governing the establishment of the Commission. The Commission should consist of States represented in the Security Council.

The Security Council adopted the Belgian draft resolution by 9 votes in favor to 0 against, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

At the 231st meeting on January 22, the President, on the basis of his conversations with the representatives of India and Pakistan, reported that the parties were agreed in principle on the desirability of a plebiscite to determine the accession of the State of Kashmir.

At the 232nd, 234th and 235th meetings on January 23 and 24, the Council heard further statements by the representatives of India and Pakistan. The representative of India denied the accusations of the representative of Pakistan, which, he said, had been made in the hope of obscuring the true issue, on which the Government of Pakistan had no real answer. The representative of Pakistan, on the other hand, stated that the Indian representative had denied reports which were true. He further cited evidence to show the lack of aid from Pakistan to the invaders.

(6) Proposals of the Parties; Report of the President

At the 236th meeting on January 28, the President reported on the conversations he had continued with the representatives of India and Pakistan.

In response to a suggestion by the President, the representatives of India and Pakistan had on January 27 submitted written proposals (see S/P.V. 236).

The document submitted by the representative of India stated that the first objective to be achieved was the cessation of fighting. For this purpose* the Government of Pakistan should use all its efforts to persuade invading tribesmen and others to withdraw from Kashmir, to deny to such invaders passage through Pakistan territory and to refuse them assistance in any other form. The next objective should be the restoration of peace and normal conditions, which the Government of India estimated would probably require about six months. To achieve this, (a) all citizens of the State who left it on account of the recent disturbances were to be invited to return to their homes and to exercise all their rights as citizens, (b) there was to be no victimization, (c) all political prisoners in the State were to be released and (d) no restrictions were to be imposed on legitimate political activity.

Though after the cessation of hostilities the strength of the Indian troops in the State would be progressively reduced, the Indian Government insisted that it would be necessary to maintain Indian troops in adequate strength in Jammu and Kashmir to ensure not only against possible future attacks from outside, but also to assist the civil authorities to maintain law and order. The emergency administration which had been set up under Sheikh Abdullah would immediately be converted by the ruler of Kashmir, the Maharajah, into a Council of Ministers in which Sheikh Abdullah would be Prime Minister and his colleagues would be appointed by the Maharajah on his advice. The ministry would, as far as possible, function as a responsible ministry.

Finally, the Indian proposals provided that the interim government, immediately upon the restoration of normal conditions, should convoke a National Assembly based upon adult suffrage, which Assembly should then constitute a National Government. The National Government would then proceed to have a plebiscite taken on the question of accession. The plebiscite would be taken under the advice and observation of persons appointed by the United Nations.

The Pakistan proposals, which were submitted in the form of a draft resolution (see S/P.V. 236), provided that the Security Council should direct its Commission established under the resolution of January 20, 1948, to arrange for:

(a) the establishment of an impartial interim administration in the State of Jammu and Kashmir;

(b) the withdrawal from the territories of the State of Jammu and Kashmir of the armed forces of the Indian Union and the tribesmen; also all trespassers whether belonging to Pakistan or the Indian Union;

(c) the return of all residents of Jammu and Kashmir State who left or were compelled to leave the State as a result of the disturbances;

(d) the holding of a plebiscite to ascertain the free, fair and unfettered will of the people of the State as to whether the State should accede to Pakistan or to India.

The President summed up the ideas that the above proposals had in common as: (1) the first objective was the cessation of fighting; (2) India and Pakistan must co-operate with a view to attaining this first objective; (3) the freedom of the proposed plebiscite must be ensured by adequate measures.

He reported that on the basis of these points he had submitted his own suggestions to the parties in the form of a draft resolution. This draft resolution took note of the agreement of India and Pakistan that the future of the State of Jammu and Kashmir should be decided through a plebiscite to be held under the authority of the Security Council. In this connection the Commission of the Security Council established by the resolution of January 20, 1948, was to take into consideration "that among the duties incumbent upon it, are included those which would tend towards promoting the cessation of acts of hostility and violence, and which are of a particularly urgent character". The resolution stated further that "in the pursuit of this aim, the Commission shall use every diligence to ensure that its mediatory action be exercised without delay and that its proposals to the Security Council be submitted as soon as possible". Such proposals were to include measures designed to ensure co-operation between the military forces of India and of Pakistan with a view to attaining the objectives mentioned above and to maintaining order and security in the future. The Commission was also to report to the Security Council on the results of its mediatory action and as to the fulfilment of such conditions as would be necessary to guarantee the liberty of the plebiscite.

Opening the discussion on his report to the Council, the President expressed the view that the Council should concentrate on the idea of a plebiscite, concerning which there were grounds for agreement.

The representative of India thought that it would be putting the cart before the horse to discuss a plebiscite before discussing the measures necessary to bring about the cessation of fighting.

The representative of Pakistan contended that the representative of India was over-simplifying the matter and that, in fact, the only common ground that might lead to a general settlement without great delay was a plebiscite. He considered that it should be discussed first.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that the plebiscite proposal should be discussed first. The best way to stop the fighting was to assure those engaged in it that a fair settlement ensuring their rights would be arrived at.

(7) Belgian Draft Resolutions

At the 237th meeting on January 29, the President, speaking as the representative of Belgium, stated that measures to end the violence and to conduct a plebiscite were two aspects of the same problem: that of restoring order and tranquility in Jammu and Kashmir. He therefore introduced two draft resolutions (S/661, S/662). The first stated that "the Security Council is of the opinion that such plebiscite [to determine the question of the accession of the State of Jammu and Kashmir to Pakistan or to India] must be organized, held and supervised under its authority". The second resolution contained the following provisions:

"(1) In the accomplishment of its functions, the Commission of the Security Council [established by the Council's resolution of January 20] shall take into consideration that, among the duties incumbent upon it, are included those which would tend towards promoting the cessation of acts of hostility and violence, and which are of a particularly urgent character.

"(2) In the pursuit of this aim, the Commission shall use every diligence to ensure that its mediatory action be exercised without delay."

The representatives of the United States, Canada, China, France and Syria supported the draft resolutions submitted by the President.

The representative of the United Kingdom, while supporting the two draft resolutions, suggested that the Commission should be regarded primarily as one to apply a settlement made in the Council. He thought that the crucial point regarding a plebiscite was that it would have to be considered fair by all concerned.

The representative of India opposed both draft resolutions. He considered that the one relating to the cessation of fighting was far too innocuous to achieve its aim; the concrete proposals that India had tried to make to that end had apparently been brushed aside. He asked that the aid furnished by Pakistan to invading tribesmen should be considered a threat to the peace within the meaning of the Charter.

At the 239th meeting on February 3, 1948, the representative of India suggested that the Belgian draft resolution regarding the cessation of fighting should be amended to include a recommendation from the Security Council to Pakistan to stop its aid and refuse supplies to the invaders of Kashmir and a recommendation to the Commission to regard as particularly urgent the promotion of measures to bring an end to the fighting and acts of hostility as quickly as possible.

With regard to a plebiscite, he submitted that the actual taking of the plebiscite was a matter entirely for the State of Jammu and Kashmir and its people. The Maharajah of Kashmir, he stated, was prepared to take the steps necessary for the establishment of a responsible government as soon as peace was restored. To bring in an outside administration, however, would represent an amount of encroachment on the ordinary sovereign powers of any state to which no state would be willing to agree. He therefore suggested that the Belgian resolution regarding a plebiscite be amended to the effect that "the Security Council recommends that the plebiscite be taken under the advice and subject to the observation of persons appointed by the Council".

He stated that unless both draft resolutions were agreed to in the form he had suggested it would be difficult for the Indian delegation to agree to either by itself, as, together, these resolutions would represent the maximum concessions which the Indian delegation was prepared to make.

At the 239th and 240th meetings on February 3 and 4, 1948, the representative of Pakistan stated that the views of India and Pakistan differed not on the question of stopping the fighting, but on how it might be stopped. All proposals which India had thus far advanced left a gap between the withdrawal of the tribesmen and the end of the fighting. Once the tribesmen had been withdrawn or had been forced out, the fighting would not end, as argued by the representative of India. He explained that the Pakistan proposal which had been submitted to the President on January 27, in the form of a draft resolution, was based on the expressed views of the members of the Council.

Noting that the acceptance of accession was provisional and that the final decision would be taken by means of a plebiscite, he said that it was therefore irrelevant to inquire whether the holding of a plebiscite came under international jurisdiction or not.

He objected to the Indian proposals on the ground that they called for the retention of Indian troops in Kashmir to maintain law and order, and for an interim regime to be headed by Sheikh Abdullah during the period leading up to the plebiscite.

The Pakistan delegation was prepared to accept the two draft resolutions presented by the representative of Belgium, in the light of observations and conditions expressed during the Council's discussion to the effect that hostilities had to be ended by a fair and acceptable settlement, which should be followed up by a plebiscite which would appear fair to all concerned.

The representative of Argentina said that his delegation would not be able to vote for any resolution which did not provide that a plebiscite be prepared, held and conducted under the authority of the Security Council. The matter having been referred to the Council, the latter had a perfect right to decide the solution that it wished to see adopted. He was convinced that, if the people of Kashmir were assured that they themselves would decide their future, they would lay down their arms and the tribes would withdraw.

The representative of the United States stated that an interim government need exist only for such time as was necessary to set up machinery for the holding of a fair plebiscite, after which time such a government would have no more authority. In his view, what was involved was the external sovereignty of Jammu and Kashmir. He cited authorities to support the view that the Maharajah would not lose his sovereignty through the formation of an interim administration, but would merely be exercising it to meet an emergency. India, he considered, was fully authorized to go through with all the negotiations that were necessary to bring about a solution of this problem.

At the 241st meeting on February 5, the representative of China expressed the view that the Security Council might well recommend to the Government of Pakistan that its legal and moral influence should be thrown in the direction of pacification, and that the tribesmen should be stopped from further fighting. In addition, he recommended that the Council should appeal to the Government of India to withdraw its troops gradually from Kashmir. He suggested that, after the fundamental principles had been determined by the Council, large discretionary powers should be left to the Commission.

The representative of France stated that the attention of the Security Council should be directed to the plebiscite question. He associated himself with the opinion that a plebiscite would not bring into question either the person or the sovereignty of the Maharajah. He suggested that, prior to the holding of a plebiscite, an interim authority composed of the chiefs of the National Conference and of the Muslim Conference should be established.

The representative of the United Kingdom thought that what was wanted was a real and total cessation of fighting, and considered that it would be easier for the Security Council itself to obtain the agreements and concessions which might be required on both sides. He maintained that a plebiscite was vital to end the fighting and that it must be fair in the view of all concerned. He thought that the Belgian draft resolutions were inadequate, as they did not meet with the approval of both parties.

(8) Colombian Draft Resolution

Also at the 241st meeting on February 5, the representative of Colombia presented a memorandum which was later, at the 245th meeting on February 11, submitted as a draft resolution (S/671). This resolution took note of the agreement of the parties that the question of the accession of Jammu and Kashmir should be settled by a plebiscite under international auspices. It declared that in the view of the Council the plebiscite was the most desirable and democratic method of determining the future status of the Jammu and Kashmir State, provided the will of the people was given free, fair and unfettered expression and further that an interim administration, which would command the full confidence and respect of the people of Jammu and Kashmir, was essential to the attainment of the aims and purposes of the Colombian resolution. The resolution provided that the membership of the Commission set up under the resolution of January 20 should be increased to five: one member to be chosen by India, one by Pakistan, and three by the Security Council. It provided also that the Council should recommend to Pakistan to use all efforts to persuade the invaders to withdraw. In this connection the Commission should seek to ensure co-operation between the military forces of India and Pakistan to bring about the cessation of fighting in Jammu and Kashmir and to maintain order and security until the question of accession was determined by the plebiscite. The Council should further recommend that the emergency administration of Jammu and Kashmir be reorganized on the advice of the Commission, giving adequate proportional representation to the different groups and interests in the population. After the fighting had ceased (a) all citizens of Jammu and Kashmir who had left on account of the recent disturbances were to be invited to return and to exercise their rights without any restrictions on legitimate political activity, (b) there was to be no victimization and (c) all political prisoners were to be released. The plebiscite would be organized under the advice and supervision of the Commission.

Sheikh Mohammed Abdullah, as representative of India, said that the subject of the dispute before the Council was not the administration of the State of Kashmir, but the aid being given by the Pakistan Government to tribesmen invading the State. He headed the emergency administration of Kashmir, he said, because the people of his country wished him to be at the helm of affairs. He pointed out that anyone replacing him could not be impartial, for the people of Kashmir were in favor either of Pakistan or of India. Pakistan's request for an outside administration meant that the people of the State should have no hand in the running of the country. As far as the Indian Army was concerned, he saw no reason to fear that it would interfere with the exercise of a free vote, as a Commission of the Security Council would see to it that troops would be stationed only at certain strategic points.

The representative of India, at the 242nd meeting on February 6, stated that the questions of accession and the holding of a plebiscite were matters that came within the ambit of internal sovereignty. Referring to the memorandum submitted by the representative of Colombia, he stated that the paragraph dealing with recommendations to Pakistan should be strengthened. He stated further that he could not agree that the Commission should have any jurisdiction with regard to the reorganization of the emergency administration or that the Commission could exercise any functions of an executive character.

The representative of Pakistan said that Sheikh Abdullah's statement showed how much impartiality could be expected from an administration under him. No one had expressed any desire to deprive the people of Kashmir of their due share in the administration of their own country; all that was suggested was that the authority of the administration should be in impartial hands during the interim period. He charged that the object of the Indian scheme was to prevent a plebiscite from being held until the power and authority of Sheikh Abdullah's Government had been consolidated over the whole of Kashmir. He stated further, at the 244th meeting on February 11, that the Azad Kashmir Government (the provisional Government organized by the Muslim insurgents of Jammu and Kashmir) would not lay down arms if the only part that the United Nations was to take in a plebiscite would be to observe it. A Commission that merely observed, or even supervised, the actual polling and recording of votes, would not be able to gauge what pressure might be brought upon the people.

(9) Request for Adjournment

At the 244th meeting of the Council on February 11, the President reported a request from the representative of India to adjourn proceedings on the India-Pakistan case, to enable his delegation to return immediately to New Delhi for consultation.

After some discussion at the 244th, 245th and 246th meetings about the desirability of such a precedent as would be involved in the return home of the Indian delegation during the consideration of a dispute in which India was a party, the President stated that, unless a grave emergency arose, the Council would direct its attention to aspects of the Indian-Pakistan question other than that of Jammu and Kashmir.

(10) Continuation of the Discussion of the Jammu-Kashmir Question

At the 265th meeting on March 9, after the return of the representative of India, the Council resumed its consideration of the Jammu and Kashmir question.

The representative of India, reporting on the consultations he had held with his Government, stated that it had explored all avenues of reaching a settlement. The settlement which his Government desired would put an end at the earliest possible moment to the fighting that was going on and would lay the foundations for a more permanent understanding between the two countries. He hoped that the Security Council would realize that the highest priority must still be given to the measures that should be taken to stop the fighting in Kashmir.

With regard to the proposal to substitute a neutral administration for the one now functioning, he considered that a fundamental constitutional issue was involved. Any attempt to demand that the internal administration of a sovereign state should be put into the hands of an outside agency, he stated, was an unthinkable proposition; he urged the Security Council not to press the idea. In this connection he drew attention to a proclamation which had been issued by the Maharajah of Jammu and Kashmir since the Council had last considered the matter, and which made the following points: (1) full responsible government was conceded to the people of the State; (2) suitable machinery should be set up as early as possible to frame a constitution to that end; (3) the emergency administration would be converted into a regular Council of Ministers under the existing State constitution. He had received a cable from the head of the new Council of Ministers stating that he was endeavoring to include in his Cabinet representatives of schools of political opinion other than his own.

With regard to the question of the retention of the armed forces of India, he stated that if there was anything short of complete withdrawal that could be done for the purpose of ensuring non-interference with the plebiscite, the Indian delegation would be quite prepared to receive suggestions. The retention of the armed forces was an obligation of India to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, for ensuring its defence from external aggression and for aiding it to maintain internal law and order. He was anxious, the representative of India declared, that the machinery for conducting the plebiscite should have as much independence as possible, consistent with the maintenance of the sovereignty of the Jammu and Kashmir State and of its proper relations with the Government of India.

The representative of Pakistan said that the position of the Indian delegation on the question under discussion was exactly the same as when the proceedings had been adjourned. What had been represented as a great concession—the non-interference of the armed forces of India with a plebiscite in Kashmir—had been implicit in the situation all the time. He stated that the Government of India and the Maharajah of Kashmir, in issuing the proclamation referred to by the representative of India, had taken a step which, far from contributing to a solution of the problem, made that solution much more difficult. He asserted that, if a plebiscite were held under the conditions proposed by the representative of India and the result disclosed a majority to be in favor of accession to India, it was unlikely to be accepted as a fair and just decision. He contended that it was impossible to eliminate the possibility of pressure by a partial administration.

If, among the conditions submitted by the Pakistan delegation as essential for the holding of a free plebiscite, there was any condition to which even a suspicion might attach that its acceptance would in any way put pressure upon any portion of the electorate to vote in favor of Pakistan, the Pakistan delegation would withdraw that condition. As for the conditions insisted upon by the representative of India, there was clear evidence and well-founded apprehension that they would in themselves amount to pressure and coercion upon the people to vote on the other side.

(11) Chinese Draft Resolution

At the 269th meeting on March 18, 1948, the President, speaking as the representative of China, introduced a draft resolution (S/699) which provided that the Security Council recommend to the parties acceptance of the following Articles of Settlement:

The Government of Pakistan would undertake to use its best endeavors (a) to secure the withdrawal from Jammu and Kashmir of intruding tribesmen and Pakistan nationals; (b) to prevent any further intrusion into the State by denying transit through and bases in Pakistan territory, and by forbidding the furnishing of military and other supplies to all elements engaged in hostility or violence against the State; (c) to persuade all intruders that the present Articles of Settlement, accepted by India and Pakistan, provided full freedom to all inhabitants of the State, regardless of creed, caste or party, to express their views and to vote on the question of accession of the State, and that therefore they should cease fighting and co-operate in the maintenance of peace and order.

The Government of India for its part was to withdraw its troops from Jammu and Kashmir progressively, but if, for purposes of defence and security, a certain portion was left, those troops should be stationed at such points as not to afford any intimidation, or appearance of intimidation, to the inhabitants of the State. The Government of India was to establish in Jammu and Kashmir a plebiscite administration with the sole and full authority to administer a plebiscite on the question of accession of the State. The top officers of the plebiscite administration were to be neutral international personalities nominated by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, but would consider themselves, for the time being, as officers of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. They would have the authority to nominate their subordinates and to frame the regulations which would govern the plebiscite. In order to respect the sovereignty of a Member State, however, such nominees were to be formally appointed and regulations formally promulgated by the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

Further, the Government of India was to undertake to prevent any threat, coercion or intimidation on the voters in the plebiscite and was to cause this undertaking to be known to all concerned as an international obligation binding on all public authorities in Jammu and Kashmir. The Government of India should use, and should request the Government of the State to use, its best endeavors to effect the withdrawal from the State of Indian nationals not normally resident therein who entered it for unlawful purposes since August 15, 1947.

The Government of India should also urge the State government to ensure that (a) all citizens who had left the State on account of the disturbances were invited to return and were free to exercise all their rights as citizens; (b) there was no victimization; (c) all political prisoners were released; (d) minorities in all parts of the State were accorded adequate protection.

The Commission of the Security Council was to certify to the Council after the plebiscite whether the plebiscite had been really free and impartial. The Government of India was to use its best endeavors to ensure that, in the composition of the interim government of Jammu and Kashmir, provision was made for adequate representation of all major political groups in the State. The Government of India was to appoint an official of high standing, to be stationed in the State during the interim period, who would have the power to cause to be fulfilled by the State Government all international obligations arising out of the Articles of Settlement. The Security Council, finally, was to instruct its Commission to offer its good offices and mediation in the implementation of the above Articles of Settlement.

The representative of Pakistan, referring to this draft resolution, recalled that the Government of India had undertaken that its troops, in Kashmir for the sole purpose of repelling the raiders, would not be kept there a moment after that object had been attained and law and order restored. This would have to be achieved before the plebiscite could be held. With regard to the proposals in the Chinese draft resolution for ensuring a fair plebiscite, he asked how, though overt pressure might not be applied, the Commission could ensure elimination of other forms of pressure, and on what basis the Security Council would judge whether the plebiscite had or had not been fair or impartial if some evidence of pressure did come to the notice of the Commission.

Regarding the proposal for the appointment by the Indian Government of a high official to be stationed in the State with the power to cause to be fulfilled by the State Government all international obligations arising out of the Articles of Settlement, he stated that the Commission might accept this officer's interpretation of conditions so that, given the delicacy of the situation, this proposal might operate to the prejudice of Pakistan and in favor of the Dominion of India. If the proposed resolution failed to bring about a settlement that would persuade the Azad Kashmir Government to lay down its arms, it would fail to achieve anything, the representative of Pakistan stated, and he doubted whether terms of this draft resolution could have that effect upon the Azad Kashmir Government.

The representative of India stated that, before a plebiscite could be considered, the fact that those fighting the Governments of Kashmir and India had received aid from Pakistan had to be recognized; and an undertaking had to be obtained from the Government of Pakistan that it would do its utmost to prevent such assistance. In the matter of the withdrawal of troops from the State, he took it that the Security Council recognized that, even after fighting had stopped, troops would have to be retained to maintain law and order, and that, in the circumstances, such troops could only be Indian Army troops.

The Government of India was willing, he stated further, to eliminate the influence of the administration in practically all matters relating to the conduct of the plebiscite; he thought this about the utmost that the Security Council could afford to request in this respect. While he might have something to say later about details, he thought that the Government of India was quite prepared to consider the Chinese draft resolution on its merits without serious modification.

The President, speaking as the representative of China, stated that apparently his draft resolution was opposed by the representative of Pakistan as not going far enough and not providing adequate safeguards. He thought that the Security Council should aim at the maximum agreement possible between the two delegations, but that some margin of disagreement would remain.

The representative of France considered that the Chinese draft resolution constituted a kind of synthesis of previous draft resolutions, and he hoped that the Security Council would carry on its work on the basis of amendments to this draft resolution. He thought that the territory of Jammu and Kashmir clearly had to be provided with forces necessary to guarantee the maintenance of law and order. Experience seemed to him to show that a satisfactory plebiscite could be held only where there was an authority and a force to ensure public order.

(12) Resolution of the Council of April 21, 1948

At the 284th meeting on April 17, 1948, the President, speaking as the representative of Colombia, together with the representatives of Belgium, Canada, China, the United Kingdom and the United States, introduced the following draft resolution (S/726):

"The Security Council,

"Having considered the complaint of the Government of India concerning the dispute over the State of Jammu and Kashmir, having heard the representative of India in support of that complaint and the reply and counter complaints of the representative of Pakistan;

"Being strongly of the opinion that the early restoration of peace and order in Jammu and Kashmir is essential and that India and Pakistan should do their utmost to bring about a cessation of all fighting;

"Noting with satisfaction that both India and Pakistan desire that the question of the accession of Jammu and Kashmir to India or Pakistan should be decided through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite;

"Considering that the continuation of the dispute is likely to endanger international peace and security,

"Reaffirms the Council's resolution of 17 January;

"Resolves that the membership of the Commission established by the resolution of the Council of 20 January 1948 shall be increased to five and shall include, in addition to the membership in that resolution, representatives of ... and ... [to be elected later] and that if the membership of the Commission has not been completed within ten days from the date of the adoption of this resolution the President of the Council may designate such other Member or Members of the United Nations as are required to complete the membership of five;

"Instructs the Commission to proceed at once to the Indian sub-continent and there place its good offices and mediation at the disposal of the Governments of India and Pakistan with a view to facilitating the taking of the necessary measures, both with respect to the restoration of peace and order and to the holding of a plebiscite by the two Governments, acting in co-operation with one another and with the Commission, and further instructs the Commission to keep the Council informed of the action taken under the resolution, and to this end,

"Recommends to the Governments of India and Pakistan the following measures as those which in the opinion of the Council are appropriate to bring about a cessation of the fighting and to create proper conditions for a free and impartial plebiscite to decide whether the State of Jammu and Kashmir is to accede to India or Pakistan.

"A. Restoration of Peace and Order

"1. The Government of Pakistan should undertake to use its best endeavours:

"(a) To secure the withdrawal from the State of Jammu and Kashmir of tribesmen and Pakistani nationals not normally resident therein who have entered the State for the purposes of fighting, and to prevent any intrusion into the State of such elements and any furnishing of material aid to those fighting in the State.

"(b) To make known to all concerned that the measures indicated in this and the following paragraphs provide full freedom to all subjects of the State, regardless of creed, caste, or party, to express their views and to vote on the question of the accession of the State, and that therefore they should co-operate in the maintenance of peace and order.

"2. The Government of India should:

"(a) When it is established to the satisfaction of the Commission set up in accordance with the Council's resolution of 20 January that the tribesmen are withdrawing and that arrangements for the cessation of the fighting have become effective, put into operation in consultation with the Commission a plan for withdrawing their own forces from Jammu and Kashmir and reducing them progressively to the minimum strength required for the support of the civil power in the maintenance of law and order;

"(b) Make known that the withdrawal is taking place in stages and announce the completion of each stage;

"(c) When the Indian forces shall have been reduced to the minimum strength mentioned in (a) above, arrange in consultation with the Commission for the stationing of the remaining forces to be carried out in accordance with the following principles:

"(i) That the presence of troops should not afford any intimidation or appearance of intimidation to the inhabitants of the State,

"(ii) That as small a number as possible should be retained in forward areas,

"(iii) That any reserve of troops which may be included in the total strength should be located within their present base area.

"3. The Government of India should agree that, until such time as the Plebiscite Administration referred to below finds it necessary to exercise the powers of direction and supervision over the State forces and police provided for in paragraph 8, they will be held in areas to be agreed upon with the Plebiscite Administrator.

"4. After the plan referred to in paragraph 2 (a) above has been put into operation, personnel recruited locally in each district should so far as possible be utilized for the re-establishment and maintenance of law and order with due regard to protection of minorities, subject to such additional requirements as may be specified by the Plebiscite Administration referred to in paragraph 7.

"5. If these local forces should be found to be inadequate, the Commission, subject to the agreement of both the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan, should arrange for the use of such forces of either Dominion as it deems effective for the purpose of pacification.

"B. Plebiscite

"6. The Government of India should undertake to ensure that the Government of the State invite the major political groups to designate responsible representatives to share equitably and fully in the conduct of the administration at the Ministerial level, while the plebiscite is being prepared and carried out.

"7. The Government of India should undertake that there will be established in Jammu and Kashmir a Plebiscite Administration to hold a plebiscite as soon as possible on the question of the accession of the State to India or Pakistan.

"8. The Government of India should undertake that there will be delegated by the State to the Plebiscite Administration such powers as the latter considers necessary for holding a fair and impartial plebiscite, including, for that purpose only, the direction and supervision of the State forces and police.

"9. The Government of India should at the request of the Plebiscite Administration make available from the Indian forces such assistance as the Plebiscite Administration may require for the performance of its functions.

"10. (a) The Government of India should agree that a nominee of the Secretary-General of the United Nations will be appointed to be the Plebiscite Administrator.

"(b) The Plebiscite Administrator, acting as an officer of the State of Jammu and Kashmir should have authority to nominate his assistants and other subordinates and to draft regulations governing the plebiscite. Such nominees should be formally appointed and such draft regulations should be formally promulgated by the State of Jammu and Kashmir.

"(c) The Government of India should undertake that the Government of Jammu and Kashmir will appoint fully qualified persons nominated by the Plebiscite Administrator to act as special magistrates within the State judicial system to hear cases which in the opinion of the Plebiscite Administrator have a serious bearing on the preparation for and the conduct of a free and impartial plebiscite.

"(d) The terms of service of the Administrator should form the subject of a separate negotiation between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Government of India. The Administrator should fix the terms of service of his assistants and subordinates.

"(e) The Administrator should have the right to communicate direct with the Government of the State and with the Commission of the Security Council and, through the Commission, with the Security Council, with the Governments of India and Pakistan and with their representatives with the Commission. It would be his duty to bring to the notice of any or all of the foregoing (as he in his discretion may decide) any circumstances arising which may tend, in his opinion, to interfere with the freedom of the plebiscite.

"11. The Government of India should undertake to prevent and to give full support to the Administrator and his staff in preventing any threat, coercion or intimidation, bribery or other undue influence on the voters in the plebiscite, and the Government of India should publicly announce and should cause the Government of the State to announce this undertaking as an international obligation binding on all public authorities and officials in Jammu and Kashmir.

"12. The Government of India should themselves and through the Government of the State declare and make known that all subjects of the State of Jammu and Kashmir, regardless of creed, caste or party, will be safe and free in expressing their views and in voting on the question of the accession of the State and that there will be freedom of the Press, speech and assembly and freedom of travel in the State, including freedom of lawful entry and exit.

"13. The Government of India should use and should ensure that the Government of the State also use their best endeavours to effect the withdrawal from the State of all Indian nationals other than those who are normally resident therein or who on or since 15 August 1947 have entered it for a lawful purpose.

"14. The Government of India should ensure that the Government of the State release all political prisoners and take all possible steps so that:

"(a) All citizens of the State who have left it on account of disturbances are invited, and are free, to return to their homes and to exercise their rights as citizens;

"(b) There is no victimization;

"(c) Minorities in all parts of the State are accorded adequate protection.

"15. The Commission of the Security Council should, at the end of the plebiscite, certify to the Council whether the plebiscite has or has not been really free and impartial.

"C. General Provisions

"16. The Governments of India and Pakistan should each be invited to nominate a representative to be attached to the Commission for such assistance as it may require in the performance of its task.

"17. The Commission should establish in Jammu and Kashmir such observers as it may require of any of the proceedings in pursuance of the measures indicated in the foregoing paragraphs.

"18. The Security Council Commission should carry out the tasks assigned to it herein."

Commenting on the draft resolution, the President stated that it represented the most considered views of the sponsors on the best approach they could propose to this problem.

The representative of Canada stated that this draft resolution would fail to achieve its purpose if the two parties themselves did not continue to make every effort to come together and co-operate in respect to its implementation.

The representative of China stated that he did not know of any previous plebiscite where the safeguards for freedom and impartiality had been so numerous and strict as those provided for in this draft resolution. He noted that nothing in the draft impaired the inherent right of self-defence in the event that the calculations of the sponsors were wrong and a large invasion of Jammu and Kashmir were to take place. Referring to paragraph 6 of the draft resolution dealing with the representation of major political groups in the conduct of the administration, he stated that this provision was for the purpose of ensuring that there would be no undue administrative interference with the plebiscite.

The representative of the United Kingdom doubted whether any peaceful settlement could be obtained at all unless the problem could be solved on the basis of the formula given in paragraph 6. He was convinced that the measures in this draft resolution would lead to an honest plebiscite and a fair and just result; and he was certain that there was nothing in the resolution which the Indian Government could not safely and honorably accept.

The representative of the United States stated that this plan was not a final solution. It did not pretend to be more than a recommendation, involving the creation of a subordinate organ representing the Security Council to help the two parties in accordance with their request.

The representative of France supported the draft resolution.

At the 285th meeting on April 19, the representative of India stated that it was a matter of profound disappointment to the delegation of India that the Chinese draft resolution of March 18 (S/699) had been twisted out of shape in its essential particulars. That scheme had been so attenuated in the draft resolution now before the Council that the delegation of India was unable to agree to it.

He stated that the Government of Pakistan had made no attempt since the resolution of January 17 to prevent any intrusion of raiders into the State or any furnishing of aid to those fighting in the State. The failure of the present draft resolution to mention the persistent and continuing breach of an international obligation and to call upon Pakistan to repair that breach was a grave one. The accession of Kashmir to the Dominion of India subsisted and would continue to subsist unless the plebiscite to be held went against India. Until then, Pakistan had no constitutional position in Jammu and Kashmir and there could be no case for allowing the intervention of Pakistan at any stage. The whole of the State, including the area now under the control of the rebels and raiders, would have to come under one government after the fighting ceased; and India, which under its instrument of accession was responsible for the defence of the State, would have to station garrisons on the State's western frontiers. He also opposed paragraph 6 of the draft resolution, which dealt with the representation of major political groups in the conduct of the administration, stating that to think of a coalition government in such circumstances was to invite a paralysis of the Kashmir administration during the period that was in contemplation. Reduction of the strength of the Indian Army in Kashmir should not be carried below the minimum required not only for the maintenance of law and order, but also for defence against external aggression. He could not agree to paragraph 5, which was a roundabout method of trying to introduce Pakistan forces into the Jammu and Kashmir State. He opposed the provision vesting direction and supervision of State forces and the police in the plebiscite Administrator, and that giving the Administrator the liberty of communicating directly with an outside Government.

The representative of India stated that if the draft resolution was carried despite the objections and opposition of the delegation of India, his Government would have to decide its course of action in the circumstances so created.

The representative of Pakistan contended that, with regard to the two main matters in dispute, the withdrawal of the armed forces of India and the setting up of an impartial administration, the draft resolution did not proceed on the principles which the Security Council itself had thought essential. If both Dominions were vitally interested in the plebiscite, and if fair conditions had to be brought about to prevent any prejudice to either party's position, the draft resolution was too one-sided. The continuation of Sheikh Abdullah at the head of the Kashmir Government was bound to influence heavily in favor of India the fairness and impartiality of the plebiscite.

The draft resolution, the representative of Pakistan stated further, did not provide for the contingency that the Pakistan Government, in order to discharge obligations under this resolution, might have to have at its disposal a certain number of its forces. He stated that if "forward areas" (see paragraph A 2 (c) (ii)) meant any areas at present under the control of the Azad Kashmir (Muslim) forces, they would not agree to lay down their arms and allow occupation of their areas by an Indian army. He thought there was a contradiction between paragraphs 5 and 9. He asked the meaning of paragraph 6, which he thought should be made clearer. Past victimization had to be neutralized if there was to be no victimization.

He submitted some suggestions for amendments to the draft resolution. One suggestion called for the stationing of Pakistan troops in predominantly Muslim areas, and of Indian or State troops in predominantly non-Muslim areas. He also proposed that there should be equal representation in the Government of the State for each major political group—namely, the National Conference, the Muslim Conference and the Azad Kashmir, which would each be invited to designate an equal number of responsible representatives.

At the 286th meeting on April 21, the representative of Syria stated that if the Government of Pakistan was not convinced that a free plebiscite would be guaranteed by the joint resolution, it could not be expected to convince others. In that case, the Indian forces in Kashmir would continue to fight with the tribesmen and with the opposing party, in order to try to establish peace, and the proposed resolution would not be effective in leading towards a peaceful solution of the matter. As long as the draft resolution did not have the support of both parties, he preferred to abstain from voting.

The representative of the United States stated that paragraph 6, concerning the representation of major political groups in the interim administration, did not mean that the predominantly Muslim character of the population of the State should be a criterion, or that any undue advantage should be given to one group merely because it held power at the present moment. The principle involved was that of neutralization of the Government in so far as the issue of accession was concerned.

The Council then adopted the draft resolution (S/726) paragraph by paragraph. At the 287th meeting on April 23, Belgium and Colombia, in accordance with the terms of the resolution adopted at the previous meeting, were added to the Commission by 7 votes in favor to 0 against, with 4 abstentions (Belgium, Colombia, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). At the 289th meeting, on May 7, 1948, the President designated the United States as the third member of the Commission, in view of the failure of Argentina (selected by Pakistan) and Czechoslovakia (selected by India), to agree upon a third member.

The representative of India at the 290th meeting on May 7, read a letter (S/734) addressed by the Prime Minister of India to the President of the Security Council. The Government of India regretted that it was not possible for it to implement those parts of the resolution of April 21 to which their objections had been clearly stated by the Indian delegation. If the Council should still decide to send out the Commission referred to in the preamble of the resolution, the Government of India would be glad to confer with it.

c. CONSIDERATION OF OTHER MATTERS

While the Council adjourned its consideration of the Jammu and Kashmir question to permit the representative of India to return to New Delhi for consultation, it turned to the question of Junagadh and other states, the first of the other matters in the Pakistan complaint against India,

(1) Question of Junagadh and Other States

At the 250th and 257th meetings on February 18 and 26, the Council heard statements by the representatives of India and Pakistan.

The representative of Pakistan charged that when the Dominion of India had perceived that Junagadh was contemplating accession to Pakistan, India had not only protested to Pakistan, but had taken various steps to make life intolerable within Junagadh for its people. In violation of the standstill agreement with Pakistan, the Indian Government had cut off all communications and supplies.

In the meantime, while exchanges had been taking place between the Government of India and the Government of Pakistan, a so-called provisional government of Junagadh had been set up on Dominion of India territory and had taken possession of certain Junagadh property in that territory. Under the leadership of the so-called provisional government, raids had taken place on Junagadh territory, culminating in an ultimatum which had compelled the State Prime Minister of Junagadh to ask the Regional Commissioner of the Indian Dominion for assistance in keeping law and order. Thereupon, the forces of the Dominion of India marched into and occupied Junagadh State; they had been in possession since that time. The Government of Pakistan regarded this as a direct act of hostility on the part of the Indian Government against Pakistan; as Junagadh had acceded to Pakistan, the Government had no right to intervene in the territory. A plebiscite which the Government of India had held in Junagadh had not in fact been free, the representative of Pakistan declared. He further stated that on October 22, 1947, Indian Dominion troops had occupied the neighboring State of Manavadar and had removed the ruler.

Pakistan desired that the Government of India should, of its own accord or through some action or agency of the Security Council, withdraw Indian forces from Junagadh and restore the rulers of Junagadh and Manavadar to their States so that normal administration should be restored. The Pakistan Government desired, in addition, that such people in Junagadh as had suffered at the hands of the military forces or officials of the Dominion of India should be restored to their homes and property and be compensated for any losses.

The representative of India stated that the Government of India had undertaken that, if circumstances required, a new and free plebiscite could be arranged under suitable auspices in Junagadh. He stated that it had always been understood that in assuring the option of accession to either Dominion, the Indian States concerned would not take an arbitrary decision, but would take into account considerations such as geographical contiguity. By all rules of reason, Junagadh and the other States whose accession was in dispute ought to have acceded to the Indian Union.

Reviewing the situation in Junagadh after its accession to Pakistan, he said that the ruler and his Prime Minister had fled to Karachi, the administration had soon collapsed, and the so-called economic blockade had been nothing more than the chaos resulting from the breakdown of the administration of Junagadh. Though Junagadh had acceded to Pakistan, the Government of India had been the only party in a position to render prompt and effective assistance in maintaining order; this was clear evidence of the lack of wisdom of Junagadh's so-called accession to Pakistan. With regard to the occupation of Manavadar by Indian troops, he stated that the Government of India, because it had had reliable reports that the Khan of Manavadar was importing Muslim refugees from the Indian Union with a view to setting up Muslim domination in Manavadar and to terrorizing the Hindu population, and because the situation had so developed that a communal flare-up was almost imminent, had interfered to prevent such a development.

The position of the Government of India was that, far from occupying Junagadh unlawfully, it had endeavored to settle the question of accession by peaceful means, but had received no co-operation at all from Pakistan. Even so, it had not taken over the administration or interfered with the affairs of Junagadh, or sent its forces into the State until a formal request had been received from the Prime Minister of Junagadh. He maintained that the Government of India, in all matters relating to the accession of Indian States, had throughout followed a very consistent policy—namely, that the option of accession should be exercised by a State with due regard to its geographical position and with due regard to the wishes of the majority of its people.

In a further statement the representative of Pakistan called for the same action in the case of Junagadh as in that of Kashmir—namely, to agree upon the conditions under which a plebiscite was to be held and to implement the agreement as early as possible.

At the 264th meeting, on March 8, 1948, the representative of India remarked with regard to the restoration of the administration of the State of Junagadh to the ruler, which he considered to be the main demand made by Pakistan, that there was no remnant of the old administration to be restored in Junagadh. In view of recent political developments in Kathiawar, he considered that there could not be serious talk of such a restoration.

If the Security Council had no objection, a new plebiscite might be held, however, to decide not only the question of accession, but also the questions of the restoration of the ruler and the incorporation of Junagadh in the United States of Kathiawar.

At the 289th and 290th meetings on May 7, the Council continued its consideration of the dispute over Junagadh and other States.

The representative of Pakistan drew the Council's attention to a scheme addressed to the President of the Security Council by the Pakistan delegation on April 26. This proposal, he stated, was much the same as that adopted by the Security Council with reference to Kashmir, except that the Commission and the Plebiscite Administrator were to be given the widest possible powers. He again requested the restoration of the rulers of the States concerned to their positions.

The representative of India stated that the Security Council should consider seriously whether the United Nations should undertake the trouble and expense of holding another plebiscite so that practically the same result could be obtained.

(2) Non-Implementation of Agreements

At its 289th and 290th meetings the Council also considered the matters raised by the Pakistan delegation other than the Kashmir and Junagadh questions. The representative of Pakistan stated that under the heading of non-implementation of agreements the Security Council had only one question to deal with—namely, the division of military stores. He asked that the Commission be charged with the duty of supervising the implementation of the agreement on the division of military stores, since delivery of that portion of the stores Pakistan was to receive from India was still in a most unsatisfactory condition.

The representative of India stated that he hoped that even if the Commission appointed by the Security Council went to India and Pakistan, it would endeavor to refrain from considering matters which were being daily discussed and attended to by the two Governments. The question of military stores belonged in this category.

(3) Genocide

With regard to the charge of genocide the representative of Pakistan submitted documents giving account of the organized measures of Sikh and Hindu extremists against the Muslims of the East Punjab. Atrocities and massacres, he stated, had also occurred in the West Punjab, but there was the distinction to be drawn that, in the East Punjab, the massacre of Muslims and the atrocities committed against them had been systematically carried out. Pakistan did not shirk a joint inquiry, and would agree to the same conditions being imposed on both sides. An agreement had been arrived at recently, mainly with reference to East and West Bengal, concerning the treatment to be accorded to the minorities in each Dominion; but what was actually happening, the representative of Pakistan stated, left little room for hope—unless the question was dealt with at an international level—that such massacres and atrocities would not continue to occur in various parts of the Indian Dominion.

The representative of India stated that what Pakistan called genocide had been merely a communal convulsion which had to be attributed directly to the preachings of the Muslim League for a quarter of a century. Drawing attention to agreements recently reached with the Pakistan Government at a meeting in Calcutta, he submitted that this was a matter which could be tackled by the two Governments concerned.

(4) Resolution of the Council of June 3, 1948

At the 304th meeting on May 26, the President stated that, in connection with matters in the India-Pakistan question other than the Jammu-Kashmir dispute, the best solution would be to enlarge the Commission's terms of reference to cover these matters, so that, at a later date, they could either be dealt with by the Commission or taken up again in the Council.

The representative of India, stated that he could not agree that the matters other than the Jammu and Kashmir questions were of sufficient importance to be referred to the Commission.

The representative of Pakistan contended that the issues other than Jammu and Kashmir, while less urgent, could not be regarded as of lesser significance in the totality of relations between the two Dominions.

At the 312th meeting on June 3, 1948, the representative of China said that he considered the question of Junagadh to be comparable to that of Kashmir, though priority should be given to the latter. He suggested that Pakistan should drop its charges of genocide and non-implementation of agreements.

The representative of Pakistan stated that he was unable to accept the suggestion of the representative of China that the questions of genocide and non-implementation of agreements should be dropped by his Government.

The following draft resolution was then submitted by the President, speaking as the representative of Syria, as amended by the representative of the United Kingdom (S/819):

"Reaffirms its resolutions of 17 January 1948, 20 January 1948 and 21 April 1948;

"Directs the Commission of Mediation to proceed without delay to the areas of dispute with a view to accomplishing in priority the duties assigned to it by the resolution of 21 April 1948; and

"Directs the Commission further to study and report to the Security Council when it considers it appropriate on the matters raised in the letter of the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, dated 15 January 1948, in the order outlined in Paragraph D of the resolution of the Council dated 20 January 1948."

The Council adopted this resolution by 8 votes in favor to 0 against, with 3 abstentions (China, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

At the 315th meeting on June 8, the President drew attention to a letter dated June 5, 1948, from the Prime Minister of India (S/825), expressing surprise at the decision of the Council to extend the task of the Commission to study matters other than the Jammu-Kashmir question in the Pakistan complaint.

The representative of China said that he could not help thinking that the letter was based in part upon a misapprehension. The Security Council had in fact not deliberated on these three questions, but had only instructed the Commission to gather information and report. A straightforward explanation of that kind would remove the misunderstanding to the effect that the Security Council had made up its mind or had intended to cast some slur or slight on the Government of India.

After some discussion, it was decided that the President should reply to the Prime Minister of India in accordance with the suggestions made by the representative of China. The President did so in a letter dated June 9, 1948.

d. UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR INDIA AND PAKISTAN

After holding preliminary meetings in Geneva starting on June 21, 1948, the Commission of Mediation proceeded to the sub-continent of India, where it stopped in Karachi from July 7 to 9 before proceeding to New Delhi. The Commission immediately initiated inquiries with India and Pakistan concerning the question of a cease-fire, and after hearing views from both Governments, it undertook, on August 10, to draft a cease-fire proposal.

The United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan, as the Commission of Mediation became known, on August 13, 1948, adopted a resolution (S/995) calling for a cease-fire order to apply to all forces under the control of India and Pakistan in the State of Jammu and Kashmir as of the earliest practicable date. Simultaneously with the acceptance of the proposal for the immediate cessation of hostilities, the resolution called upon both Governments concerned to accept certain principles as a basis for the formulation of a true agreement. Among these principles were the following: the withdrawal of Pakistan troops from Jammu and Kashmir; the withdrawal from the State of Jammu and Kashmir of tribesmen and Pakistan nationals not normally resident there who had entered the State for the purpose of fighting; after the withdrawal of such tribesmen and Pakistan nationals and while Pakistan forces were being withdrawn from Jammu and Kashmir, the withdrawal from that State of Indian forces in stages to be agreed upon with the Commission; the temporary maintenance in the State of Indian forces which in agreement with the Commission were considered necessary to assist local authorities in the observance of law and order; the stationing by the Commission of observers where it deemed necessary; and the undertaking by India to ensure that the Government of the State of Jammu and Kashmir would take all measures within its power to make it publicly known that peace, law and order would be safeguarded and all human and political rights guaranteed. The resolution finally called upon India and Pakistan to reaffirm their wish that the future status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir should be determined in accordance with the will of the people. To that end, upon acceptance of the Truce Agreement, the resolution called upon both Governments to agree to enter into consultations with the Commission to determine fair and equitable conditions whereby such free expression would be assured.

In a letter, dated August 20, 1948, to the Commission, the Prime Minister of India declared that his Government had decided to accept the Commission's resolution.

In a letter and memorandum dated August 19 and a letter dated September 6 (S/995) to the Commission, the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of Pakistan asked for certain clarifications and elucidations to the Commission's resolution. The letter of September 6 stated that Pakistan agreed to accept with certain reservations the proposals contained in the Commission's resolution.

In a letter, dated September 6, to the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of Pakistan, the Chairman of the Commission declared that the Commission was prepared to consider at an early occasion the questions raised by Pakistan.

At the request of the Commission, its resolution and correspondence (S/995) were distributed to the Security Council.

The Commission on September 19 adopted the following resolution (S/1009) and instructed the Secretary-General's personal representative with the Commission to transmit it through the Secretary-General to the President of the Security Council:

"The United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan, having decided to leave for Europe to prepare an interim report to the Security Council on the present situation in the State of Jammu and Kashmir, hereby resolves to appeal to the Governments of India and Pakistan to use their best endeavours during the absence of the Commission to lessen the existing tension in this dispute so as further to prepare the ground for its peaceful final settlement, which both Governments have declared to be their most sincere and ardent desire."

The matter continued to be dealt with by the Security Council after the period covered by this Yearbook.

6. The Palestine Question

a. CONSIDERATION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION OF NOVEMBER 29, 1947

The Secretary-General transmitted to the President of the Security Council, by letter dated December 2, 1947 (S/614), the text of the resolution (181(II)) concerning the "future government of Palestine" which was adopted by the General Assembly on November 29, 1947.¹⁷ In this resolution the General Assembly requested that:

"(a) The Security Council take the necessary measures as provided for in the [partition] plan for its implementation;

"(b) The Security Council consider, if circumstances during the transitional period require such consideration, whether the situation in Palestine constitutes a threat to the peace. If it decides that such a threat exists, and in order to maintain international peace and security, the Security Council should supplement the authorization of the General Assembly by taking measures, under Articles 39 and 41 of the Charter, to empower the United Nations Commission, as provided in this resolution, to exercise in Palestine the functions which are assigned to it by this resolution;

"(c) The Security Council determine as a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression, in accordance with Article 39 of the Charter, any attempt to alter by force the settlement envisaged by this resolution ..."

At the 222nd meeting on December 9, the Council took note of the letter of the Secretary-General and the General Assembly's resolution and decided to postpone discussion of the matter.

The President drew attention also to requests from Egypt (S/617) and Lebanon (S/618) to take part in the discussion of this question, and the Council agreed that these two countries should be admitted to the debate without prejudice to the participation of other interested parties.

At the 243rd meeting on February 10, 1948, the Council considered the first monthly report of the Palestine Commission (S/663). The President of the Council stated that this report was purely factual and for the information of the Council. However, the Commission was preparing a special report which would be available shortly and which would involve questions requiring determination by the Council. He suggested that the Council at this stage only take note of the first monthly progress report and postpone consideration of it until the Council would also have the special report before it. No objection was raised to this procedure and it was so decided.

b. CONSIDERATION OF THE REPORTS OF THE PALESTINE COMMISSION; RESOLUTION OF THE COUNCIL OF MARCH 5, 1948

At the 253rd meeting on February 24, when the Council began to discuss the first monthly progress report and the first special report of the Palestine Commission,¹⁸ the Chairman of the Commission and the representatives of Egypt and Lebanon were invited to take part in the discussions. The Jewish Agency for Palestine was invited to have its representative sit during the deliberations for the purpose of supplying such information and rendering such assistance as the Council might require. At the suggestion of the President, it was agreed to grant the same privilege to the Arab Higher Committee if it so requested.

¹⁸ For discussion of the work of the Palestine Commission and its reports, see pp. 256-57.

The Chairman of the Palestine Commission stated that the Commission, as an executive organ of the General Assembly, was bound to act strictly in conformity with the Assembly's resolution, and that any political guidance that might be needed by the Commission had to come from the Security Council.

In its special report, the Commission had selected the problem of security as the most important one to be solved in order to implement the partition plan. The Commission was of the opinion that in the circumstances prevailing in Palestine, and under the conditions likely to exist in the near future, the only way of implementing the plan of partition as envisaged by the General Assembly required the assistance of an effective non-Palestinian military force. An efficient pacification of the areas would be necessary in order to execute the numerous and intricate provisions of the plan. The Chairman of the Commission stressed that unless either a peaceful arrangement could be effected, or effective control could be imposed by sufficient outside forces, far-reaching consequences might arise from the situation which existed at the moment.

The representative of the United States said that it was of first importance that the precedent which would be established should be in full accord with the Charter. The Assembly's resolution of November 29 contained three requests directed to the Security Council. Request (a) he considered could clearly be fulfilled. Requests (b) and (c), however, raised the question of the Council's constitutional powers. If the Council found that there was a threat to international peace, a breach of the peace or an act of aggression against Palestine from the outside, then it was required to make recommendations or to take measures in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter; and Member States were obliged to assist the Council. But the Charter did not empower the Council to enforce a political settlement whether it was in pursuance of a recommendation made by the General Assembly or of one made by the Council itself. Concerning the current situation in Palestine he stated that the Council did not have sufficient evidence to conclude that a threat to the peace existed within the meaning of Chapter VII of the Charter. The representative of the United States then proposed certain specific steps which the Council should take. At the 255th meeting on February 25, he submitted his proposals in the form of a draft resolution (S/685), as follows:

"The Security Council,

"Having received the resolution of the General Assembly of 29 November 1947, on Palestine, and having received from the United Nations Palestine Commission its first monthly report, and its first special report on the problem of security in Palestine,

"Resolves:

"1. To accept, subject to the authority of the Security Council under the Charter, the requests addressed by the General Assembly to it in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of the General Assembly resolution of 29 November 1947;

"2. To establish a committee of the Security Council comprising the five permanent members of the Council whose functions will be:

"(a) To inform the Security Council regarding the situation with respect to Palestine and to make recommendations to it regarding the guidance and instructions which the Council might usefully give to the Palestine Commission;

"(b) To consider whether the situation with respect to Palestine constitutes a threat to international peace and security, and to report its conclusions as a matter of urgency to the Council, together with any recommendations for action by the Security Council which it considers appropriate;

"(c) To consult with the Palestine Commission, the Mandatory Power, and representatives of the principal communities of Palestine concerning the implementation of the General Assembly recommendation of 29 November 1947.

"Appeals to all Governments and peoples, particularly in and around Palestine, to take all possible action to prevent or reduce such disorders as are now occurring in Palestine."

The representative of the United Kingdom said that the British withdrawal would be completed by August 1. While the United Kingdom would not oppose the Assembly's decision, he was not prepared to take part in enforcing a settlement which was not acceptable to both parties. The United Kingdom's repeated warnings about the necessity of providing means of implementation for the solution of the problem had been ignored by the Assembly, and British public opinion would not approve further involvement which required enforcement. The United Kingdom would abstain from voting on the question of enforcement.

At the 254th meeting on February 24, the representative of Syria said that the Council must carefully scrutinize the recommendations of the Assembly, which, after hurriedly adopting the partition plan under pressure, had endeavored to shift the burden of implementation to the Council. He thought it regrettable that the Assembly had not considered the proposal to seek an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice. The Assembly, he emphasized, was not a world government empowered to create states and to violate the integrity of countries, to impose government regimes under specified constitutional forms, to dictate economic union between states or to detach territories and cities and put them under permanent Trusteeship. The partition plan, he considered, was not in conformity with international law or with the Charter and was, in any case, a mere recommendation to Members.

For its part, the Council, under the Charter, could only use force under Chapter VII to maintain international peace and security, and was not allowed to use force to maintain internal order in a country. No measures of enforcement could be taken against a state by the Council before it was seized of a formal accusation by a competent party.

The representative of Colombia submitted a draft resolution (S/684) which provided that, on the basis of the situation which had occurred subsequent to the General Assembly resolution, the Security Council should invite, in accordance with Article 106 of the Charter, the permanent members of the Council to consult with one another with a view to such joint action on behalf of the organization as might be necessary in order to deal with the situation arising from the implementation of the Assembly's resolution. Pending the outcome of such consultations, the Council should appoint a sub-committee composed of two permanent members and three non-permanent members of the Council to ascertain the possibility of an agreement between the parties concerned, and the feasibility of calling a special session of the General Assembly for reconsideration of the resolution of November 29. The Council should also request the Government of the United Kingdom to postpone the date fixed for the termination of the Mandate and the evacuation of its troops from Palestine.

At the 255th meeting on February 25, the representative of Egypt appealed to the Council to scrutinize the legal basis for the partition resolution and to consider whether this resolution served the interests of peace. Egypt considered that the Assembly was not competent to decree partition or to make a recommendation of that nature. He regretted that the Egyptian proposal to seek an advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice had not been followed and that the legal issue had been evaded.

In not complying with the Assembly's recommendation, Egypt was exercising its privilege under the Charter. To persist in enforcing partition would be injurious to the United Nations, since there was ample evidence that such a course would result in greatly increased strife, and would lead to disaster. The Palestinian Arabs and the neighboring Arab States would never accept the partition of Palestine. The arrival of the Commission would further inflame feelings, as would any attempt to send a non-Palestinian armed force into the country in order to enforce partition.

If the Security Council assisted in the implementation of the partition plan, as requested by the General Assembly, it would deal a fatal blow to world peace, the representative of Egypt concluded.

At a subsequent meeting, the 267th meeting of the Council on March 16, the representative of Lebanon expressed a similar point of view.

At the 258th meeting on February 27, the representative of the Jewish Agency said that the compromise resolution of the Assembly had entailed far-reaching sacrifices for the Jews. It had been accepted by them, nevertheless, because it satisfied their claim to statehood and a place among the family of nations. The Council was now faced with an open attempt by the Arabs to change by force the settlement decreed by the Assembly, while the Mandatory Power thwarted the plan by a policy of non-co-operation.

In trying to justify its present attitude, the United Kingdom had developed a policy of neutrality based on the spurious argument of equal guilt. But the Jews had acted solely in self-defence against Arab aggression. Although hampered by the administration, the Jews were hopeful of being able to defend the Jewish State. An international force was not essential, but it was important that the Jews be provided with arms. The Palestine Commission had therefore been asked to revise the indiscriminate arms embargoes in favor of those who were prepared to implement the partition plan, denying arms to those who opposed it. He stressed that the Jews regarded partition as the irreducible minimum which they could accept, and beyond which they could not go.

The representative of Belgium approved the United States proposal for the appointment of a committee of the permanent members. However, he could not approve those clauses providing for acceptance of the requests made in the Assembly's resolution, since such action should only be taken in the light of information to be submitted by the proposed committee. He submitted a revised text (S/688) as an amendment to the United States draft resolution. The Belgian text was identical with that of the United States draft resolution except for the deletion of paragraph 1 of the United States text and the addition of a clause to paragraph (c) to the effect that the Committee should report to the Security Council concerning the consultations envisaged in that paragraph together with any recommendations as to the action to be taken by the Council in the matter.

The representative of Colombia said that it was evident that the Security Council was not authorized to use force to partition Palestine. He asked that the Council should explore the possibility of obtaining an agreement between Arabs and Jews which would enable the Commission to discharge its functions without the use of armed force, even at the expense of some revision of the partition plan. If it was not possible for the Palestine Commission to carry out its task without delay, then the Assembly might have to provide for the administration of Palestine at the termination of the Mandate, or discuss other arrangements.

Turning to the Colombian draft (S/684), he explained that the consultation of the permanent members and the work of the proposed committee would proceed simultaneously. He hoped that the United Kingdom would be willing to revise its decision to leave Palestine on May 15; the Council should make a request to that effect. He was prepared to withdraw the Colombian draft resolution in favor of any proposals from the United States or the U.S.S.R., since these countries were mainly responsible for the partition plan.

The representative of Syria supported the Belgian amendment (S/688), since the Council should not decide its actions in advance. He thought that the United States proposal was intended to secure indirectly the implementation of partition.

He could not approve the United States proposal to establish a sub-committee of the permanent members, because the existence of a threat to international peace had to be determined by the Council as a whole. Likewise paragraph 2(c) was unacceptable, since the Council could not impose a political settlement.

At the 260th meeting on March 2, 1948, the representative of the United States stated that he considered the acceptance of paragraph 1 of his draft resolution to be an act of support for the implementation of the partition plan, and therefore he could not accept the Belgian amendment, since the representative of Belgium opposed paragraph 1 because he did not believe that the Assembly's requests should be accepted until after the proposed Committee had made its report.

He considered that the three requests were subject to the implied reservation that the Council should not exceed its authority under the Charter, and while it was true that armed force could not be used to implement partition, the Council would at any rate be obliged to take action under Chapter VII of the Charter if a threat to international peace or a breach of the peace were found to exist.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Council should examine whether a threat to the peace existed. However, this was not a task only for the permanent members. The United Kingdom could not support the United States proposal to accept the requests of the Assembly, since it was opposed to participation in implementing a plan which involved coercion of one of the communities. It could not, therefore, be a member of the proposed committee, but would assist it with all the information at its disposal.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. agreed to the principle of consultation among the permanent members of the Council, but proposed that such consultation should be carried on directly and not within a committee since the latter course would only cause delay. The results of these consultations should be submitted to the Council within ten or fifteen days. It was useless for the committee to consult with the Palestine Commission and with the Arabs and Jews, since such consultations were being carried on by the Commission and the latter had already submitted a report. He had no objections to paragraph 1 of the United States draft resolution.

At the 261st meeting on March 3, the representative of Canada supported the Belgian amendment to the United States resolution because he considered that acceptance of the Assembly's requests should be postponed until after the permanent members had had an opportunity to consult one another and the parties concerned, and until after the Council had been satisfied that this situation could not be resolved through conciliation.

The representative of Egypt welcomed the spirit of the Belgian amendment to the United States draft resolution, but suggested that the question of consultation with the Palestine Commission should also be omitted, since the Commission was intimately connected with the question of implementing the partition plan.

The President, speaking as the representative of China, supported the Belgian amendment. China was willing to participate in the proposed committee, although he would prefer a rather different composition. He believed that the distinction between the enforcement of partition and the maintenance of peace by force was, although legally important, rather unreal in the existing situation.

At the 262nd meeting on March 5, the representative of the Jewish Agency questioned the value of the proposal for new consultations with the interested parties concerning the implementation of partition. The Palestine problem had been under discussion for years, and to raise the prospect of new negotiations might endanger the very object of the Assembly's decision.

He strongly urged immediate acceptance of the Assembly's requests. The role of the Security Council was an integral part in the implementation of the partition plan and failure of the Security Council to co-operate would, by permitting Arab aggression to frustrate partition, create a dangerous precedent for the United Nations.

The representative of France supported the Belgian amendment because it stressed the necessity of making a further attempt at conciliation. However, if the amendment was not accepted, he would support the United States draft resolution.

The representative of Colombia proposed that the Council adjourn for a week with the understanding that in the meantime the permanent members should consult as to what action could be taken under Article 106 of the Charter and report to the Council.

The representative of the United States opposed the motion for adjournment and asked for a vote on his draft resolution (S/685) and the amendments thereto.

The Council rejected the Colombian motion for an adjournment by a vote of 5 to 2, with 4 abstentions.

To meet the point of view of the representative of the U.S.S.R., who objected to the establishment of a committee of the Security Council, but who had expressed his willingness to accept a resolution calling for direct consultations among the permanent members of the Council, the representative of the United States revised paragraph 2(a) of his draft resolution to read: "To invite the five permanent members of the Security Council to consult and . . .", and made the requisite drafting changes in the other paragraphs of the resolution.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. said that he would not oppose the United States draft resolution thus revised, though he thought it unnecessary to call upon the permanent members to consult with the Arabs, the Jews and the Mandatory Power, since that was the function of the Palestine Commission. He therefore would prefer if paragraphs 2(b) and (c) of the United States resolution were deleted. He would, however, abstain from voting rather than vote against the paragraphs in question. He proposed an amendment to the United States draft resolution providing that the permanent members should report on the results of their consultations within ten or fifteen days.

The representative of the United States accepted that amendment, and accordingly added a clause to paragraph 2(a) of his resolution setting a ten-day time limit.

The representative of Belgium agreed to remove from his amendment (S/688) the provision for a committee of the permanent members and to substitute a recommendation for direct consultations among the permanent members of the Security Council.

At the 263rd meeting on March 5, the representative of the United States reported on some further drafting changes he had introduced in paragraph 2(a) of his resolution in consultation with the representative of the U.S.S.R.

The revised Belgian amendment was then voted on, paragraph by paragraph, and was rejected.

The revised United States draft resolution was also voted on paragraph by paragraph and paragraphs 1, 2(b) and 2(c) were rejected.

The resolution resulting from this vote was adopted by 8 votes in favor, with 3 abstentions (Argentina, Syria, United Kingdom), and reads as follows (S/691):

"The Security Council,

"Having received the resolution of the General Assembly of 29 November 1947 on Palestine, and having received from the United Nations Palestine Commission its first monthly report and its first special report on the problem of security in Palestine,

"Resolves to call on the permanent members of the Council to consult and to inform the Security Council regarding the situation with respect to Palestine and to make, as a result of such consultations, recommendations to it regarding the guidance and instructions which the Council might usefully give to the Palestine Commission with a view to implementing the resolution of the General Assembly. The Security Council requests the permanent members to report to it on the results of their consultations within ten days; and

c. REPORT ON THE CONSULTATIONS AMONG THE PERMANENT MEMBERS

At the 270th meeting on March 19, the representative of the United States reported on the consultations which had taken place among the permanent members of the Council pursuant to the Council's resolution of March 5. The report he submitted had the agreement of three of the permanent members: China, France and the United States. The United Kingdom did not participate in the consultations, but attended two of the meetings in its official capacity of Administering Authority and furnished information. Following is the text (see S/P.V. 270) of the report submitted by the representative of the United States:

"PART I.

"The consultations among the permanent members of the Security Council and informal communications with the Palestine Commission, the Mandatory Power, the Jewish Agency and the Arab Higher Committee, held since March 5, 1948, have developed the following facts regarding the situation with respect to Palestine:

"1. The Jewish Agency accepts the partition plan, considers it to be the irreducible minimum acceptable to the Jews, and insists upon the implementation of the plan without modification.

"2. The Arab Higher Committee rejects any solution based on partition in any form and considers that the only acceptable solution is the formation of one independent State for the whole of Palestine, whose constitution would be based on democratic principles and which would include adequate safeguards for minorities and the safety of the Holy Places.

"3. No modifications in the essentials of the partition plan are acceptable to the Jewish Agency, and no modifications would make the plan acceptable to the Arab Higher Committee.

"4. The Palestine Commission, the Mandatory Power, the Jewish Agency and the Arab Higher Committee have indicated that the partition plan cannot be implemented by peaceful means under present conditions.

"5. The Mandatory Power has confirmed that a considerable number of incursions of illegal arms and armed elements into Palestine have occurred by land and sea.

"6. The gradual withdrawal of the military forces of the Mandatory Power will, in the absence of agreement, result in increasing violence and disorder in Palestine. Warfare of a guerrilla type grows more violent constantly.

"7. If the mandate is terminated prior to a peaceful solution of the problem, large-scale fighting between the two communities can be expected.

"PART II.

"1. As a result of the consultations of the permanent members regarding the situation with respect to Palestine, they find and report that a continuation of the infiltration into Palestine, by land and by sea, of groups and persons with the purpose of taking part in violence would aggravate still further the situation, and recommend:

"(a) That the Security Council should make it clear to the parties and Governments concerned that the Security Council is determined not to permit the existence of a threat to international peace in Palestine; and

"(b) That the Security Council should take further action by all means available to it to bring about the immediate cessation of violence and the restoration of peace, and order in Palestine."

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the consultations between the permanent members of the Council had produced some positive results inasmuch as some basic principles had been laid down which must underlie a decision of the Security Council on this question. The U.S.S.R.

delegation considered, however, that these consultations would have proved more fruitful if from the beginning those questions had been dealt with which really needed consideration. At the first meeting, however, the representative of the United States had suggested that the permanent members hold further negotiations with the Arabs, the Jews and the Mandatory Power, such negotiations to include the question as to whether the partition plan should be implemented or modified. The U.S.S.R. delegation had opposed such negotiations and had insisted that the General Assembly's resolution of November 29, 1947, must be implemented and that consultations among the permanent members should be directed to that end.

As to the report submitted by the representative of the United States, he was of the opinion that Part I merely noted the facts of the situation, which had been known already, and therefore was of no special interest. He questioned whether paragraph 4 of Part I really stated the position of the parties mentioned therein, particularly as regards the point of view of the Jewish Agency for Palestine.

As regards Part II, he stated that sub-paragraphs 1 (a) and (b) had been agreed to by all the members participating in the consultations. Though they were too general and vague he considered that these two paragraphs covered important points. He objected to paragraph 1 of Part II because it spoke of "infiltration into Palestine by land and by sea". He considered it clear that the danger arose from infiltration by land and not by sea. Therefore to speak of infiltration by land and by sea, placing them on an equal footing, deprived that part of the text of all meaning.

In conclusion the representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the recommendations of the permanent members contained only general principles, on the basis of which the Council must take more concrete decisions to implement the resolution of the General Assembly.

The representative of Syria, speaking on behalf of the Arab States, said that (1) the Arabs were prepared to do their utmost to see peace with justice established in Palestine; (2) they were convinced that the partition plan and attempts to implement it were the only cause of violence in that country; (3) the Jews were receiving 1,500 "legal" immigrants monthly in addition to large numbers of illegal immigrants, most of whom were militarily trained and equipped; (4) the Jews were receiving large amounts of war material from outside while the Arabs were deprived of military supplies.

He regretted that the permanent members in their report had not recognized that the three requests of the Assembly were designed to make the Council enforce partition. Since the Council did not have the power to do this, they would have been correct in asking for reference back to the Assembly.

The President, speaking as the representative of China, said that it was at his suggestion that the phrase "by land and by sea" had been introduced into paragraph 1 of Part II of the report. He believed that the introduction of arms and fighters into Palestine had to be stopped by both parties.

The representative of the Jewish Agency believed that paragraph 4 of Part I of the report was open to some misunderstanding, since the fact "that partition could not be implemented by peaceful means under present conditions" was due solely to the attempt of the Arab States to frustrate it by force, in contravention of their obligations under the Charter. Similarly, paragraph 5 of Part I was open to serious misunderstanding. While the Mandatory Power had reported on incursions of illegal arms and armed elements into Palestine by land it had not reported such incursions by sea. Consequently, paragraph 1 of Part II did not contain an accurate statement of fact. In this connection the representative of the Jewish Agency also expressed the view that armed bands entering Palestine for the sole purpose of trying to undo by violence a decision of the United Nations should not be placed on the same moral level and equated with unarmed men, women and children coming into Palestine to settle that country, as was their right under the Mandate.

At the 271st meeting on March 19, the representative of the United Kingdom stressed that his delegation had taken part in the consultations of the permanent members solely for the purpose of giving information, and was not a party to the report.

The representative of Egypt endorsed the remarks of the representative of Syria. He stated that he had no particular quarrel with the statement of the representative of the United States concerning the consultations between the permanent members of the Council, although he expressed regret that the report omitted to recognize that the Zionists were the aggressors. Criticizing the representative of the U.S.S.R. for insisting on the prompt implementation of the partition plan he urged that the Council should not carry out the Assembly's request without full debate.

The representative of the United States stated that in view of the fact that the Mandatory Power planned to give up its Mandate on May 15, there was an urgent need for clarification of United Nations responsibility towards Palestine. In the opinion of the United States delegation the United Nations did not automatically fall heir to the responsibilities either of the League of Nations or of the Mandatory Power in respect of the Palestine Mandate. No steps had been taken by the Mandatory Power to place Palestine under United Nations Trusteeship in accordance with Article 81 of the Charter. A unilateral decision by the United Kingdom to terminate the Palestine Mandate could not automatically commit the United Nations to the responsibility for governing that country, nor did the General Assembly's resolution of November 29 constitute an acceptance by the United Nations of governmental responsibility for Palestine. The limited functions which the General Assembly in this resolution offered to undertake were an integral part of the partition plan. If it proved impossible to give effect to that plan, the United Nations would have, on May 15, no administrative and governmental responsibilities for Palestine unless further action was taken by the General Assembly. Referring, inter alia, to the report on the consultations between the permanent members of the Council, he concluded that there seemed to be general agreement that the partition plan could not be implemented by peaceful means. In the light of evidence now available the termination of the Mandate on May 15 would result in chaos, fighting and much loss of life. The United Nations could not permit such a result. He therefore urged that the Security Council should take further action by all means available to bring about the immediate cessation of violence and the restoration of peace and order in Palestine. He then went on to explain that the United States Government believed that further steps must be taken immediately not only to maintain peace but also to afford a further opportunity to reach agreement between the interested parties regarding the future government of Palestine. To this end the Council should call for an immediate special session of the General Assembly to consider the establishment of a temporary Trusteeship which would be without prejudice to the rights, claims or position of the parties concerned and without prejudice to the character of the eventual political settlement.

Pending the meeting of the proposed special session of the Assembly, the Council should instruct the Palestine Commission to suspend its efforts to implement partition.

The representative of the Jewish Agency said that the United States proposal to suspend efforts to implement partition and to establish a temporary Trusteeship for Palestine represented a shocking reversal of the United States position which would incalculably hurt the prestige of the United Nations. It was clear that the proposal was a capitulation before a threat of violence on the part of some Members; but it should also be clear that the establishment of a Trusteeship would not ensure peace and would have to be maintained by force.

The President, speaking as the representative of China, supported the United States proposals as an attempt to seek a peaceful solution. The Palestine Commission had stated that the partition plan could not be implemented without force, and he was convinced that the Security Council should not furnish force for this purpose.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. did not agree that there was general agreement that partition could not be implemented by peaceful means. Moreover, he stated, the United States representative had referred to the report on the consultations of the permanent members of the Council, as though it confirmed and corroborated the proposals just submitted by the representative of the United States. The U.S.S.R. representative considered, however, that the United States proposals had nothing in common with those portions of the report which were agreed to by all four of the permanent members which took part in the consultations—namely sub-paragraphs 1(a) and (b) of Part II of the Report. These paragraphs on the contrary, he stated, provided a basis upon which the Council should proceed to take more concrete decisions to implement the partition plan.

At the 274th meeting on March 24, the representative of Canada stated that although the United States proposal for establishing a temporary Trusteeship in Palestine presented certain difficulties, the proposed cooling-off period would provide an opportunity to work out a settlement in a less unfavorable atmosphere. This period could be of short duration. The Canadian delegation was not prepared, however, to declare itself in favor of any course of action until there was some evidence that there was a meeting of minds on the part of the countries most directly concerned.

The representative of France favored the United States proposal to the extent that it contained the possibility of providing time in which agreement could be reached between the parties, and because it constituted an effort to set up a regime which could take the place of the Mandatory Power. The French delegation, however, was not then able to pronounce itself either for or against the United States proposal, which needed to be more precisely formulated and elaborated.

The representative of Lebanon felt that a detailed study of the plan submitted by the United States delegation was premature. The General Assembly, when called into special session, would have to make its own examination of the question.

The representative of Colombia thought it would be best to adjourn, with the understanding that the representatives of the permanent members of the Security Council would go on with their conversations until they were ready to report to the Security Council.

The President thought that nothing could be gained by a renewal of the consultations.

The representative of Egypt reiterated Arab opposition to partition. With regard to the United States suggestion, he stated that any decision which meant suspending the implementation of a resolution which had brought only trouble would be a decision in the proper direction.

d. DISCUSSION OF THE UNITED STATES DRAFT RESOLUTIONS

At the 275th meeting of the Council on March 30, the representative of the United States submitted the following draft resolutions (S/704 and S/705):

I

"The Security Council,

In the exercise of its primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security,

"Notes with grave concern the increasing violence and disorder in Palestine and believes that it is of the utmost urgency that an immediate truce be effected in Palestine;

"Calls upon the Jewish Agency for Palestine and the Arab Higher Committee to make representatives available to the Security Council for the purpose of arranging a truce between the Arab and Jewish communities of Palestine; and emphasizes the heavy responsibility which would fall upon any party failing to observe such a truce;

"Calls upon Arab and Jewish armed groups in Palestine to cease acts of violence immediately."

II

"The Security Council,

"Having, on 9 December 1947, received the resolution of the General Assembly concerning Palestine dated 29 November 1947 and

"Having taken note of the United Nations Palestine Commission's First and Second Monthly Progress Reports and First Special Report on the problem of security, and

"Having, on 5 March 1948, called on the permanent members of the Council to consult, and

"Having taken note of the reports made concerning these consultations, "Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with Article 20 of the United Nations Charter, to convoke a special session of the General Assembly to consider further the question of the future government of Palestine."

Concerning the first resolution (S/704) the representative of the United States explained that it was his Government's view that the immediate cessation of hostilities and the establishment of a truce in Palestine were the most urgent objectives. Both the Arabs and the Jews must be prepared, he stated, to accept truce arrangements which would not prejudice the claims of either group. The truce should include suspension of political as well as military activity.

Concerning the second resolution (S/705) he stated that although the Government of the United States believed that a Trusteeship was essential to establish order, it felt that there should be no delay by debate over details of the temporary Trusteeship. To this end, the draft resolution omitted any mention of Trusteeship.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that his Government still considered that the General Assembly's decision in favor of the partition of Palestine into two independent states—Jewish and Arab—was an equitable one. In the General Assembly, the United States delegation had actively supported the proposal for partition and had secured its acceptance by the necessary majority of states. But now the United States had not only refused to support that decision, but had raised the question of rescinding it, and for that purpose had submitted entirely new proposals.

Full responsibility for wrecking the decision on the partition of Palestine therefore lay with the United States, which in the opinion of most people was not so much interested in a just settlement of the question of the future of Palestine and the relations between Arabs and Jews as in its own oil interests and strategic position in the Near East.

The adoption of the proposal for Trusteeship would leave both the Jews and the Arabs in Palestine without a state of their own and would serve only the interests of the influential circles of some of the Great Powers, who placed their own economic and strategic interests above the common interests of the United Nations.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. opposed the calling of a special session of the General Assembly to review the decision previously adopted, and also considered that it would be wrong for the Security Council to instruct the Palestine Commission to suspend its work, which was directed towards implementing the decision on partition. The Commission had no right to stop working as long as the decision taken by the General Assembly remained in force.

At the 277th meeting on April 1, 1948, the representative of Argentina stated that he supported the United States proposals and appealed to the Arabs and Jews to reach an agreement.

The representative of Belgium considered that the Council had rejected the Assembly's requests and therefore had a duty to call a special session of the Assembly to cope with the situation.

The representative of the Jewish Agency urged that the first United States draft resolution (S/704) be amended to conform with the reality of the situation—namely, Arab aggression. The Jews were anxious to terminate hostilities, but insisted that the truce had to be accompanied by the evacuation of foreign forces from Palestine and the cessation of preparations for future aggressions. The truce had also to be carried out within the framework of the partition plan and in conformity with its time-table.

The second United States draft resolution (S/705), he stated, proposed an unwarranted reversal of the Assembly's decision. The United States had given no assurance as to how Trusteeship was to be established and enforced. The Jews, for their part, would not accept any postponement of independence. He also drew attention to the situation in Jerusalem, which threatened to develop into a battle on the termination of the Mandate.

The representative of Egypt denied that the Arab States were interfering in the Palestine strife. He was prepared to support the United States proposal (S/704) for a truce.

The representative of the United Kingdom supported the United States proposal for a truce (S/704) and stated that he would vote in favor of the second draft resolution (S/705), if only to give the Assembly an opportunity to review its decision in the light of events.

The representative of Syria supported the second proposal (S/705). He reserved his attitude on the proposal for a truce (S/704) until the attitudes of both parties concerned had been ascertained.

The representative of the United States agreed to a proposal of the Ukrainian S.S.R. to the effect that the words "with grave concern" be deleted from the second paragraph of the truce resolution (S/704).

Subject to this amendment, the resolution (S/704) was then adopted unanimously.

The second draft resolution (S/705), requesting the Secretary-General to convoke a special session of the General Assembly, was adopted by 9 votes, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

The Council then agreed that the President should discuss the possible terms of the truce in Palestine with the accredited representatives of the two parties. It was also agreed to hold informal meetings to discuss the proposals the United States delegation had in mind for Trusteeship in Palestine, with a view to enabling the Security Council to make recommendations to the special session of the General Assembly.

e. REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT ON NEGOTIATIONS FOR A TRUCE AND CONSIDERATION OF THE COLOMBIAN DRAFT RESOLUTION

At the 282nd meeting on April 15, the President reported that he had met twice with representatives of the Jewish Agency and the Arab Higher Committee to discuss the possible terms of a truce. The second meeting, he stated, led him to believe that it was fruitless to continue further conversations. He had therefore decided to consult informally with the other members of the Security Council with a view to formulating recommendations which the Council should direct to the parties. As a result of the informal consultations he submitted the following draft resolution (S/722) on behalf of the Colombian delegation:

"Considering the Council's resolution of 1 April 1948 and the conversations held by its President with the representatives of the Jewish Agency for Palestine and the Arab Higher Committee with a view to arranging a truce between Arabs and Jews in Palestine;

"Considering that, as stated in that resolution, it is of the utmost urgency to bring about the immediate cessation of acts of violence in Palestine, and to establish conditions of peace and order in that country;

"Considering that the United Kingdom Government, so long as it remains the Mandatory Power, is responsible for the maintenance of peace and order in Palestine and should continue to take all steps necessary to that end; and that in so doing it should receive the co-operation and support of the Security Council in particular, as well as of all the Members of the United Nations;

"The Security Council

"1. Calls upon all persons and organizations in Palestine, and especially upon the Arab Higher Committee and the Jewish Agency, to take immediately, without prejudice to their rights, claims, or positions, and as a contribution to the well-being and permanent interests of Palestine, the following measures:

"(a) Cease all activities of a military or paramilitary nature, as well as acts of violence, terrorism and sabotage;

"(b) Refrain from bringing into Palestine armed bands or individuals, whatever their origin, armed or capable of bearing arms, and from assisting or encouraging the entry into Palestine of such armed bands and individuals;

"(c) Refrain from importing or acquiring or assisting or encouraging the importation or acquisition of weapons and war materials;

"(d) Refrain, pending further consideration of the future government of Palestine by the General Assembly, from any political activity which might prejudice the rights, claims, or positions of either community;

"(e) Co-operate with the Mandatory authorities for the effective maintenance of law and order and of essential services, particularly those relating to transportation, communications, health, and food and water supplies;

"(f) Refrain from any action which will endanger the safety of the Holy Places in Palestine.

"2. Requests the United Kingdom Government for so long as it remains the Mandatory Power to use its best efforts to bring all those concerned in Palestine to accept the measures set forth under paragraph 1 above and subject to retaining the freedom of action of its own forces to supervise the execution of these measures by all those concerned and to keep the Security Council and the General Assembly currently informed on the situation in Palestine.

"3. Calls upon all Governments, and particularly those of the countries neighbouring Palestine, to take all possible steps to assist in the implementation of the measures set out under paragraph 1 above, and particularly those referring to the entry into Palestine of armed bands, individuals armed or capable of bearing arms and weapons and war materials.

"4. Requests the Secretary-General to appoint three members of the Secretariat who will proceed to Palestine and who will act in co-operation with the Mandatory Power as observers in the execution of the truce and report to him thereon."

The representatives of the United States and Canada supported the Colombian draft resolution.

The representative of the Jewish Agency stated that in the course of the consultations with the President of the Council the Agency had put forward as one of the essential conditions of the truce that the armed units which had been brought into Palestine from outside should be withdrawn and that no further incursions should be tolerated. The Jewish Agency still adhered to that position. He then suggested the following modifications in the Colombian draft resolution.

He proposed the deletion in the third paragraph of the preamble of all except the first phrase to the effect that the Mandatory Power was responsible for the maintenance of peace and order in Palestine, on the ground that the word "continue" in the following phrase implied that the Mandatory Power had hitherto discharged its responsibilities in maintaining peace and order, which was not the case. Moreover, in view of its recent record the Mandatory Power should not be formally assured of full international support for whatever it might do or leave undone in the future.

In paragraph 1(a) the representative of the Jewish Agency proposed the deletion of the requirement that "all activities of a military or paramilitary nature" should cease as being far too wide to be practicable, since such a requirement might be interpreted as applying to all normal defence arrangements.

In paragraph 1(b) the representative of the Jewish Agency objected to the provision against the introduction into Palestine of "individuals . . . capable of bearing arms", as this would affect Jewish immigration.

As regards paragraph 1(c) he stated that it might be interpreted as imposing, during the truce period, a world embargo on the acquisition of arms for future defence, while leaving the Arab States free to accumulate arms for future fighting in Palestine. He therefore suggested that paragraph 1(c) should read: ". . . refrain from importing weapons and war materials" and that all reference to acquisition should be deleted.

Concerning sub-paragraph 1(d) the representative of the Jewish Agency stated that the introduction of a political subject into the question of a military truce was liable to vitiate the issue and he therefore proposed deletion of this paragraph.

In connection with paragraph 1(f) he suggested that not only the safety of the Holy Places but free access to them should be ensured.

Turning to paragraph 2 of the resolution, the representative of the Jewish Agency stated that the Agency could not possibly agree that the Mandatory administration was impartial and could properly be entrusted with the task of supervising the execution of the truce provisions. If no authoritative United Nations organ was set up to supervise and ensure the observance of the truce, the Jewish Agency would consider that no adequate provision at all had been made in this regard.

As regards paragraph 3 the representative of the Jewish Agency urged that the governments of states neighboring on Palestine should be called upon to prohibit in their territories the recruitment and preparation of forces for eventual incursions into Palestine. Also, provision should be made to evacuate or at least to immobilize the foreign armed units already in Palestine.

The representative of Syria stated that paragraphs 1(b), (c) and (d) contained the points which were essential, and if these were not accepted by the Jewish Agency, all discussion would be futile. He interpreted these paragraphs to mean that any implementation of the partition plan should definitely be stopped and that there would be no Jewish immigration into Palestine at all during the truce period. He was prepared to support the draft resolution without modifications subject to the above interpretation.

The representative of Egypt had certain objections to the draft resolution, but felt that it was well intended and conceived for the re-establishment of peace. If the resolution were to mean real peace, and not a camouflage for something else, then his delegation was for it.

At the 283rd meeting on April 16, the representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that paragraph 1(a) of the Colombian draft resolution was open to different interpretations and would not provide the necessary conditions for the practical establishment of a truce. Paragraph 1(b), as well as paragraph 3, did not take account of the lawful rights of the Jews, in particular in connection with the question of immigration. Paragraph 1(c) was unacceptable to the U.S.S.R. delegation unless the Council adopted an additional provision calling for the immediate withdrawal of all armed bands which had invaded Palestine and for the prevention in the future of the invasion of Palestine by such groups. He submitted an amendment which provided for the insertion after paragraph 1(c) of a paragraph along the lines indicated. Paragraph 2 also was not clear, particularly as regards the "freedom of action" which was to be left to the United Kingdom Government. The representative of the U.S.S.R. concluded that the resolution as a whole was unsatisfactory, inasmuch as it placed the military aspect of the truce in the background and introduced political considerations which would complicate the task of bringing about a truce in the true sense, i.e., stopping the bloodshed.

The representative of France explained that paragraph 1(a) did not mean that armed organizations would be dissolved, and that paragraph 1(d) would not put a stop to all political meetings. Paragraph 1(b) should be accepted, since the restriction on immigration would be limited in time and would be compensated for by the cessation of armed Arab infiltration. Paragraph 1(c) might be more acceptable if the phrase referring to the acquisition of war materials was deleted.

The representative of the United States stressed that the truce was only a temporary measure. He believed that its terms were fair and reasonable. In the light of the comments of the representative of the Jewish Agency he proposed the following amendments:

1. To replace paragraph 1(b) by the following:
"Refrain from bringing and from assisting and encouraging the entry into Palestine of armed bands and fighting personnel, groups and individuals, whatever their origin."

2. To add to paragraph 1(f) the following:

"... and from any action which would interfere with access to all shrines and sanctuaries for the purpose of worship by those who have an established right to visit and worship at them."

3. Paragraph 3 to be amended to correspond to the revised wording of paragraph 1(b) as regards "armed bands and fighting personnel, groups and individuals".

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee insisted that any truce must be such as would lead to an assured and lasting settlement.

The required settlement, he insisted, must be based on a strict implementation of the principles of democracy and the right of self-determination. There could be no truce on the basis of the partition scheme and the Arabs could not agree to cease fighting unless they were assured that the truce and the ensuing discussions were not a preliminary to the partition scheme. He also insisted that, as a prerequisite for a truce, all Jewish immigration must stop. It would be impossible for the Arabs to stop their people from attacking newcomers. Asserting that the disorders in Palestine were due to the activities of Jewish terrorist gangs, he further demanded that these gangs should be arrested and expelled from Palestine. Finally, he declared that the recent establishment of a Jewish Administration in the Jewish area under the partition scheme had undermined paragraph 1(d) of the Council's truce proposals. This step, he stated, obviously precluded the realization of a truce under any conditions.

The Colombian draft resolution was then voted paragraph by paragraph. The preamble, paragraph 1, sub-paragraph 1(a) and the United States amendment to sub-paragraph 1(b) were adopted unanimously. The Council next voted on the U.S.S.R. amendment submitted in connection with paragraph 1(c), which was rejected by a vote of 6 to 2 (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), with 3 abstentions (Argentina, China, Colombia). Paragraph 1(c) and also paragraph 1(d) were then adopted by 9 votes in favor, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), and paragraph 1(f), as amended by the representative of the United States, was adopted unanimously. The vote on paragraph 2 and paragraph 3, amended by the representative of the United States, was again 9 in favor, with 2 abstentions. The Council failed, however, to adopt paragraph 4 of the resolution, which requested the Secretary-General to appoint three members of the Secretariat to act in co-operation with the Mandatory Power as observers in the execution of the truce. The vote was 6 in favor, with 5 abstentions (Argentina, Belgium, Syria, United Kingdom, United States). In this connection the representatives of Argentina and of Belgium had expressed the view that the Mandatory Power alone should be responsible for the supervision of the truce until the termination of the Mandate. The representative of Syria had suggested that a truce commission composed of the career consular officials of those members of the Security Council who had representatives in Jerusalem would be preferable to the appointment of observers by the Secretary-General, as the consular officers were already on the spot and knew the country. However, he did not submit a formal amendment to this effect. The representative of the Jewish Agency reiterated his view that if the supervision of the truce were to be left entirely to the Mandatory Power, the Jewish Agency would consider that no arrangement for supervision had been made at all.

The amended Colombian resolution (S/723) as a whole was adopted by a vote of 9 in favor, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). Its operative part reads as follows:¹⁹

"The Security Council

"1. Calls upon all persons and organizations in Palestine, and especially upon the Arab Higher Committee and the Jewish Agency, to take immediately, without prejudice to their rights, claims, or positions, and as a contribution to the well-being and permanent interests of Palestine, the following measures:

"(a) Cease all activities of a military or paramilitary nature, as well as acts of violence, terrorism and sabotage;

"(b) Refrain from bringing and from assisting and encouraging the entry into Palestine of armed bands and fighting personnel, groups and individuals, whatever their origin;

"(c) Refrain from importing or acquiring or assisting or encouraging the importation or acquisition of weapons and war materials;

"(d) Refrain, pending further consideration of the future government of Palestine by the General Assembly, from any political activity which might prejudice the rights, claims, or positions of either community;

"(f) Refrain from any action which will endanger the safety of the Holy Places in Palestine and from any action which would interfere with access to all shrines and sanctuaries for the purpose of worship by

As indicated above, the 283rd meeting of the Council, at which this resolution was adopted, was held on April 16. As the meeting, however, convened at 9 P.M. and did not adjourn until after midnight, the resolution is generally referred to as the Council's resolution of April 17.

Requests the United Kingdom Government, for so long as it remains the Mandatory Power, to use its best efforts to bring all those concerned in Palestine to accept the measures set forth under paragraph 1 above and, subject to retaining the freedom of action of its own forces, to supervise the execution of these measures by all those concerned, and to keep the Security Council and the General Assembly currently informed on the situation in Palestine.

"3. Calls upon all Governments, and particularly those of the countries neighbouring Palestine, to take all possible steps to assist in the implementation of the measures set out under paragraph 1 above, and particularly those referring to the entry into Palestine of armed bands and fighting personnel, groups and individuals and weapons and war materials."

f. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE TRUCE COMMISSION

At the 287th meeting on April 23, the representative of the United States asked the representatives of the Jewish Agency, the Arab Higher Committee and the Mandatory Power what steps had been taken to implement the truce resolution of April 17, 1948 (S/723).²⁰

The representative of the United Kingdom reported that the Palestine High Commissioner had publicized the Council's resolution. His attempts at bringing about negotiations between Arab and Jewish authorities in Palestine, however, had not met with success because of difficulties of communications, particularly as regards the establishment of contact with responsible Arab leaders.

The representative of the Jewish Agency stated that the Agency had informed the High Commissioner that the Jews would cease firing as soon as the Arabs did the same.

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee said that if the Jews observed the terms of the truce and the situation was frozen both politically and militarily, then the Arabs would cease fire. The Jews, however, he maintained, had shown no inclination to cease fighting and were proceeding with the establishment of an independent Jewish administration in Palestine. In these circumstances the Arabs could not in justice be asked to cease fire.

The representative of the United States then proposed a draft resolution which provided for the establishment of a truce commission for Palestine composed of representatives of those members of the Security Council, except Syria, which had career consular officers in Jerusalem, whose function would be to assist the Security Council in bringing about the implementation of the Council's resolution of April 17, 1948.

The Commission was to report to the President of the Security Council within 48 hours regarding its activities and the development of the situation, and subsequently to keep the Council informed with respect thereto.

The representative of France, supported by the representative of Syria, proposed that the resolution be amended so as to specify the members of the truce commission. He also considered that the time limit of 48 hours should be extended.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. said that the terms of the truce resolution had made its implementation impossible and that the present United States proposal was not conducive to achieving a truce.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. said that the resolution of April 17 was not realistic, since it did not include the minimum requirements of a truce—namely, the withdrawal of armed groups which had entered Palestine in order to oppose partition and the prevention of further entries. He regarded the new United States proposal as part of a policy designed to force the United Nations to adopt Trusteeship.

The representatives of Canada and Syria both supported the draft resolution.

Certain drafting changes proposed by the representatives of Belgium, Lebanon, Syria, the Jewish Agency and the Arab Higher Committee were acceptable to the representative of the United States, who submitted a draft resolution revised accordingly. In response to the suggestion of the representatives of France and Syria, the time limit was extended from 48 hours to four days.

The amended text of the United States draft resolution (S/727) was adopted by the Council by 8 votes, with 3 abstentions (Colombia, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), as follows:

"Referring to its resolution of 17 April 1948, calling upon all parties concerned to comply with specific terms for a truce in Palestine,

"The Security Council

"Establishes a truce commission for Palestine composed of representatives of those members of the Security Council which have career consular officers in Jerusalem, noting, however, that the representative of Syria has indicated that his Government is not prepared to serve on the Commission. The function of the Commission shall be to assist the Security Council in supervising the implementation by the parties of the resolution of the Security Council of 17 April 1948;

"Requests the Commission to report to the President of the Security Council within four days regarding its activities and the development of the situation, and subsequently to keep the Security Council currently informed with respect thereto.

"The Commission, its members, their assistants and its personnel shall be entitled to travel, separately or together, wherever the Commission deems necessary to carry out its tasks.

"The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall furnish the Commission with such personnel and assistance as it may require, taking into account the special urgency of the situation with respect to Palestine."

After discussion, at the 291st meeting on May 12, of two messages from the Truce Commission (S/741, S/742), dated May 9 and 10 respectively, asking whether it would be possible for the United Nations to send the officers necessary to effect the control of a truce for Jerusalem, or whether the latter should be ensured by the representative of the International Red Cross, it was decided that the President should draft a reply on the basis of the fact that the Truce Commission would be given broad discretionary powers to determine the various means of assistance it might require according to the degree of usefulness of these means of assistance.²¹

g. INTERVENTION OF THE ARAB STATES IN PALESTINE.

On April 30 the Palestine Truce Commission informed the Security Council by cablegram (S/732) that the situation in Palestine was deteriorating rapidly, that government departments were closing daily and normal activities coming to a standstill and that the intensity of fighting was increasing steadily.

By a telegram addressed to the President of the Security Council dated May 1, 1948 (S/730), the Jewish Agency for Palestine drew the attention of the Security Council to reports of the invasion of Palestine by regular forces of Syria and Lebanon in the north and by Egyptian forces in the south. It was also reliably informed, the Agency stated, that a strong column of Iraqi troops was en route towards Palestine.

By a telegram of May 15 (S/743) the Government of Egypt informed the Security Council that Egyptian armed forces had started to enter Palestine "to establish security and order in place of chaos and disorder which prevailed and which rendered the country at the mercy of the Zionist terrorist gangs who persisted in attacking peaceful Arab inhabitants".

By a telegram dated May 16 (S/748) the King of Transjordan likewise informed the United Nations that Transjordanian forces had been "compelled to enter Palestine to protect unarmed Arabs against massacres".

The Secretary-General of the Arab League, in a cablegram dated May 15 (S/745), set forth at length the reasons which had prompted the Arab States to intervene in Palestine and expressed confidence that their action would receive the support of the United Nations.

At the 292nd meeting of the Security Council on May 15, the representative of the Jewish Agency drew the Council's attention to the Agency's telegram of May 1 (S/730), cited above, and to other warnings of Arab preparations for aggression presented to the Council (S/736, S/738).

As to the Egyptian telegram of May 15 (S/743), he stated that the very idea that the armed intervention of Egyptian forces in Palestine would lead to restoration of order was grotesque. The State of Israel, which had now been established within Palestine,²² would defend itself against this wanton and unprovoked aggression but at the same time it had a right to expect immediate action by the organs of the United Nations. He urged that the Council determine the situation in Palestine to be a threat to international peace, a breach of the peace and an act of aggression and call upon the Arab States to refrain from aggression on penalty of action under Chapter VII.

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee questioned the right of the Jewish Agency to term as aggression the entry of Arab forces which had been invited by the Arab Higher Committee to maintain law and order. With the termination of the Mandate, he asserted, Palestine had become an independent nation and the Jews constituted a rebellious minority.

The representative of Syria asked that the Council examine the international status of Palestine. He considered that in the absence of a Trusteeship Agreement, Palestine had achieved its independence upon the termination of the Mandate.

The representative of Egypt reiterated that his country was intervening in Palestine solely to preserve law and order. With the termination of the Mandate, Palestine had regained complete independence and sovereignty.

h. UNITED STATES DRAFT RESOLUTION AND QUESTIONNAIRE

At the 293rd meeting on May 17, the representative of the United States said that the actual information on hand about the situation in Palestine indicated to the United States Government that there was a threat to, and a breach of, the peace within the meaning of Article 39 of the Charter. Accordingly, he submitted the following draft resolution (S/749):

"The Security Council,

"Taking into consideration that previous resolutions of the Security Council in respect to Palestine have not been complied with and that military operations are taking place in Palestine,

"Determines that the situation in Palestine constitutes a threat to the peace and a breach of the peace within the meaning of Article 39 of the Charter;

"Orders all Governments and authorities to cease and desist from any hostile military action and to that end issue a cease-fire and stand-fast order to their military and para-military forces, to become effective within thirty-six hours after the adoption of this resolution;

"Directs the Truce Commission established by the Security Council by its resolution of 23 April 1948 to report to the Security Council on the compliance with these orders."

At the same time the United States delegation, considering that additional information on Palestine was desirable, submitted a list of questions to be put to the governments of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Transjordan, Iraq, Yemen, Syria and Lebanon, a second list of questions to be put to the Arab Higher Committee and a third list of questions to be put to the Provisional Government of Israel.

At the 294th and 295th meetings, on May 18, the Council examined the questionnaire submitted by the United States delegation, and a number of amendments were adopted as a result of the discussion.

It was agreed that the replies to the questions should be received within a time-limit of 48 hours, counting from noon, May 19, New York standard time. Following is the text of the amended questionnaire (S/753) adopted by the Council:

"I. Questions to Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Transjordan, Iraq, Yemen, Syria and Lebanon:

"(a) Are armed elements of your armed forces or irregular forces sponsored by your Government now operating (1) in Palestine; (2) in areas (towns, cities, districts) of Palestine where the Jews are in the majority?

"(b) If so, where are such forces now located and under what command are they operating, and what are their military objectives?

"(c) On what basis is it claimed that such forces are entitled to enter (1) Palestine; (2) areas (towns, cities, districts) of Palestine where the Jews are in the majority, and conduct operations there?

"(d) Who is now responsible for the exercise of political functions in the areas of Palestine where the Arabs are in the majority?

"(e) Is such authority now negotiating with Jewish authorities on a political settlement in Palestine?

"(f) Have the Jewish forces violated your frontiers and penetrated your territory?

"II. Questions to the Arab Higher Committee:

"(a) Is the Arab Higher Committee exercising political authority in Palestine?

"(b) What governmental arrangements have been made to maintain public order and to carry on public services in sections of Palestine where Arabs are in the majority?

"(c) Have the Arabs of Palestine requested assistance from governments outside of Palestine?

"(d) If so, what governments, and for what purpose?

"(e) Have you named representatives to deal with the Security Council Truce Commission for the purpose of effecting the truce called for by the Security Council?

"(f) Have Jewish forces penetrated into the territory over which you claim to have authority?

"III. Questions to the Jewish Authorities in Palestine:

"(a) Over which areas of Palestine do you actually exercise control at the present time?

"(b) Do you have armed forces operating in areas (towns, cities, districts) of Palestine where the Arabs are in the majority, or outside Palestine?

"(c) If so, on what basis do you attempt to justify such operations?

"(d) Have you arranged for the entry into Palestine in the near future of men of military age from outside Palestine? If so, what are the numbers and where are they coming from?

"(e) Are you negotiating with Arab authorities regarding either the truce or a political settlement in Palestine?

"(f) Have you named representatives to deal with the Security Council Truce Commission for the purpose of effecting the truce called for by the Security Council?

"(g) Will you agree to an immediate and unconditional truce for the City of Jerusalem and the Holy Places?

"(h) Have Arab forces penetrated into the territory over which you claim to have authority?"

The representative of the U.S.S.R. expressed regret that a great deal of time had been spent in discussing the questionnaire when it was* clear that the Council had sufficient information to determine the existence of a breach of the peace.

Of the Arab States, Transjordan stated in its reply (S/760) that the United States, the author of the proposition of addressing questions to the Arab States, had not yet recognized the Government of Transjordan, although Transjordan for the past two years had met all the required conditions for such recognition. At the same time, the United States had recognized the so-called Jewish State within a few hours of its proclamation, although the factors for this recognition were lacking. The reply from the Government of Transjordan also pointed out that the Security Council had failed on several occasions to recommend Transjordan for membership in the United Nations. For these reasons the Government of Transjordan did not feel that there was room for a reply to the Council's questionnaire.

The replies of the other Arab States, i.e., Egypt (S/767), Saudi Arabia (S/772), Iraq (S/769), Yemen (S/774, Add.1), Syria (S/768) and Lebanon (S/770), indicated that armed forces of each of them, with the exception of Yemen, were operating inside Palestine; and Yemen replied that it likewise had decided to dispatch a detachment of its regular forces to Palestine. While Lebanon and Saudi Arabia merely indicated that at present their forces were not operating in areas where the Jews were in the majority, Syria, Iraq and Egypt expressed the view that Palestine must be considered as a unit and that any distinction as between different areas, towns or districts was not valid (see question (a)).

The replies to questions (b) and (c) generally agreed in stating that the armed forces of the Arab States had entered Palestine to prevent the annihilation of the Arab majority of Palestine by Zionist terrorists and to restore peace and order. The neighboring Arab Governments who were members of the Arab League, it was stated further, considered themselves responsible for the maintenance of peace and order in their area as a regional organization in conformity with the provisions of the Charter. The Arab armies, moreover, had entered Palestine in response to a request for assistance from the majority of the inhabitants of Palestine. It was their aim to assist that majority in the establishment of a united democratic state in Palestine.

The replies to question (d) indicated that the Arab armies were exercising political authority in the areas under their control.

As regards question (e) the replies were unanimous that the activities of the Zionists and the proclamation of an independent Jewish State in Palestine precluded any understanding between Arabs and Jews.

In answer to the last question, (f), the Governments of Syria and Lebanon reported some incursions into their territories by Jewish forces. The governments of the other states concerned, although stating that their respective territories had not been violated by Jewish forces, expressed the view that the activities of the Zionists and the proclamation of a Jewish State in Palestine nevertheless constituted a threat to the whole region. They also emphasized that in view of the historic, cultural and religious ties between the Palestinian Arabs and those of the neighboring countries the latter could not remain indifferent to the course of events in Palestine.

In its reply dated May 24 (S/775) the Arab Higher Committee stated in answer to question (a) that it exercised political authority over the overwhelming majority of the citizens of Palestine. Being composed of representatives of the different Arab political parties, it formed a coalition which expressed Arab public opinion in Palestine. The Arab Higher Committee concluded further that it therefore spoke in the name of the majority of all of Palestine, inasmuch as the Arabs were in the majority in all districts and sub-districts except that of Jaffa, in which Tel Aviv is located.

In answer to question (b) the Arab Higher Committee stated that at its request all Arab Government officials had continued to carry out their duties after the withdrawal of the Mandatory. When the regular Arab armies entered Palestine, however, they assumed responsibility for public security and related governmental responsibilities in the areas under their control.

Replying to questions (c) and (d) the Arab Higher Committee indicated that it had asked for assistance from the States members of the Arab League, i.e., Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Yemen, Iraq, Lebanon, Syria and Transjordan, in order to resist the "Jewish aggressive invasion" of Palestine. Contact with the Security Council Truce Commission, the answer to question (e) indicated further, was maintained by the Arab Higher Committee through the Arab League.

Finally, in answer to the last question, (f) the Arab Higher Committee stated that the Arabs claimed authority over all of Palestine. All forces opposing the Arab majority, therefore, should be regarded as unlawful.

The reply of the Provisional Government of Israel (S/766) to the questions addressed to the "Jewish authorities in Palestine" was transmitted by the acting representative of Israel at the United Nations on May 22.

In reply to questions (a) and (b) it was stated that the Provisional Government of Israel was actually exercising control of the entire area of the Jewish State as defined in the General Assembly's resolution of November 29, 1947. In addition, the Provisional Government of Israel was exercising control over certain parts of Palestine outside the territory of the State of Israel, parts which, with the notable exception of Jerusalem, formerly, for the most part, contained Arab majorities, but which had been mostly abandoned by their Arab population. No area outside of Palestine, the reply from the Provisional Government of Israel stated further, was under Jewish occupation, but sallies beyond the frontiers of the State had occasionally been carried out by Jewish forces for imperative military reasons.

In answer to question (c) the Provisional Government of Israel stated that its operations in areas outside the State of Israel were justified on the following grounds: (1) to repel aggression and to prevent these areas from being used as bases for attacks against the State of Israel; (2) to protect Jewish population, traffic and economic life, including Jewish settlements outside the area of the State where, owing to the absence of any duly constituted authority, life and property were in imminent danger.

In answer to question (d) the Provisional Government of Israel stated that it had made arrangements for the entry of immigrants of all ages and both sexes in accordance with its avowed policy of large-scale immigration, which policy, the Provisional Government of Israel considered, was a matter within its domestic jurisdiction.

The answer to question (e) indicated that no negotiations between Arabs and Jews were taking place, past Jewish offers to negotiate a peaceful settlement on the basis of the General Assembly's resolution of November 29, 1947, having been rejected by the Arab League and by King Abdullah of Transjordan.

The Provisional Government of Israel was continuing to maintain the liaison with the Security Council's Truce Commission formerly maintained by the Jewish Agency, and would be willing to agree to an immediate and unconditional truce for the City of Jerusalem, the answers to questions (f) and (g) stated.

In answer to the last question the Provisional Government of Israel stated that Arab forces had penetrated into certain parts of the Negeb and that in addition Arab planes and Arab artillery had repeatedly attacked Jewish settlements.

At the 296th meeting on May 19, the Council began its consideration of the draft resolution presented by the United States delegation (S/749).

The representative of the United Kingdom said that his Government supported the objectives of the United States draft resolution, though not its form. He had grave doubts about the wisdom and expediency of invoking Article 39, which was applicable solely with regard to international peace. Other difficulties connected with the present case concerned the actual judicial status of Palestine, the degree of binding force of the Assembly's recommendations and the definition of an act of aggression and of the aggressor. For these reasons, he submitted the following amendment (S/755) as a redraft of the United States draft resolution:

"The Security Council,

"Bearing in mind the change in the juridical status of Palestine consequent upon the termination of the mandate, and the necessity for further clarification of this status;

"Taking into consideration that previous resolutions of the Security Council in respect to Palestine have not been complied with and that military operations are taking place in Palestine,

"Calls upon all parties concerned in Palestine to abstain from acts of armed force against each other, and to that end to issue a cease-fire order to their military and para-military forces to become effective within thirty-six hours after the adoption of this resolution;

"Calls upon the Truce Commission and upon all parties concerned to give the highest priority to the negotiation and maintenance of a truce in the City of Jerusalem;

"Directs the Truce Commission established by the Security Council by its resolution of 23 April 1948 to report to the Security Council on the compliance with the two preceding paragraphs of this resolution;

"Requests the Committee appointed by the General Assembly on 14 May to proceed as expeditiously as possible with the appointment of a United Nations Mediator for Palestine, and calls upon all parties concerned to avail themselves of his good offices in order to seek a solution by mediation."

The representative of the United States stated that the United States could not assent to the proposed amendment since it would take the problem out of Chapter VII into Chapter VI of the Charter, and would obviate the finding of a threat to the peace.

The representative of Belgium considered that the Council must remain within the framework of Chapter VI and use all means for the pacific settlement of the dispute. He asked what measures the Council could take in respect to a state which did not obey its orders, under the existing circumstances, i.e., without armed forces at the Council's disposal, and without the probability of being able to apply Article 106.

The representative of the Jewish Agency said that the fact that armed force was being used in Palestine by the Governments of Arab States was not disputed and was openly admitted by the aggressors in their communications to the Council. Since this use of armed force constituted a violation of the Charter, it was irrelevant to examine the justifications invoked in its behalf. An unconditional cease-fire was the only possible starting point in the quest for peace. The Security Council would not have gone too far if, on the basis of available evidence, it had determined not merely a breach of peace, but also an act of aggression. He considered that it was necessary for the cease-fire to become effective immediately rather than after an interval of thirty-six hours.

The representative of China said that he could not find anything in the Charter which justified the United Nations in ordering the partition of any country or territory. He supported the representatives of the United Kingdom and Belgium in feeling that the resolution should proceed under Chapter VI rather than Chapter VII.

At the 297th meeting on May 19, the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. said that the existence of a threat to or breach of the peace in Palestine should be established on the basis of the available evidence. Documents submitted to the Council by Egypt and Transjordan clearly stated that their troops had entered Palestine.²³ These troops had a very definite military and political objective. The existence of the new Government of Israel was also an established fact; it had been recognized by eight different states, and was determined to defend its territory. He stated that the United Kingdom was responsible for the entry into Palestine of Transjordanian troops.

The representative of Syria stated that it was necessary to study the international status of Palestine to ascertain whether or not international peace was being disturbed. He failed to see how action could be taken under Article 39 of the Charter. Hence he could not accept the United States draft resolution.

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee stated that the principle of self-determination, upheld by both the Covenant of the League of Nations and the United Nations Charter, granted to the Arab majority of the people of Palestine the unquestionable right of complete sovereignty over the whole country. Under the circumstances that had prevailed in Palestine during the last six months, the Arab majority had come to the conclusion that it was necessary to have recourse to the assistance of the neighboring States members of the Arab League in order to restore peace and stability in their country.

At the 298th meeting on May 20, the representative of Canada expressed himself in favor of the United Kingdom proposal as a continuation of the efforts of the Council to achieve a just and lasting settlement in Palestine by means of negotiation, and because it did not involve measures of coercion.

The President, speaking as the representative of France, stated that it was perfectly clear that a threat to the peace existed in Palestine. By following the course outlined in the United States draft resolution, the Security Council would be giving the Truce Commission and the Mediator²⁴ the authority and powers which they required for the accomplishment of their task. He would, therefore, vote for the United States draft resolution.

The representative of Colombia stated that the amendment submitted by the United Kingdom delegation would lead the Council to repeat measures already tried unsuccessfully. The Colombian delegation, therefore, could not support it.

The representative of Argentina said he would not vote in favor of any measure of a coercive character, but would vote for any measure of a pacificatory character, since that would be in the interest of the whole population of Palestine.

At the 299th meeting on May 21, the President drew the Council's attention to a cable (S/762) from the Truce Commission to the effect that it had been concentrating its efforts on bringing about a truce in Jerusalem. The Commission felt, the telegram stated, that, taking a realistic view of the situation in Jerusalem, the only effective measure which could be taken to bring about an immediate cessation of hostilities in the Holy City was the employment of a neutral force sufficiently large and powerful to enforce its will on either or both of the parties. Failing the presence of such a neutral force in Jerusalem, the only alternatives were victory by one of the two sides or a stalemate. Both the Arabs and the Jews had expressed a desire for a cease-fire and a truce in Jerusalem on their own terms, which were unacceptable to the other side. In view of the extreme gravity of the situation the Commission recommended that the Security Council should explore all those remedies provided for in Articles 41 and 42 of the Charter which were capable of immediate and effective application.

The President also announced that the permanent members of the Security Council had decided upon the appointment of Count Folke Bernadotte of Sweden as Mediator in Palestine.²⁵

Continuing the discussion on the United States draft resolution, the representative of the U.S.S.R. said that, despite the assertions of some representatives, partition of Palestine into two independent states was valid and in force, and had to be implemented through the joint efforts of all Members of the United Nations. He criticized the attitude of the United Kingdom Government, which was openly supporting the action of Transjordan and at the same time was preventing the Council from taking effective action to suppress the existing threat to and breach of the peace in Palestine. The attitude of the Belgian and Chinese representatives in the Council was also difficult to understand. It was the view of the U.S.S.R. delegation that it would be illusory for the Security Council to place all its hopes in a Mediator who had no more rights and powers than the Truce Commission, which had proved itself utterly powerless to induce the Governments to abstain from warlike activities in Palestine. What was needed in the present situation was an effective decision with a view to putting an end to military operations in Palestine.

He considered that the draft resolution submitted by the United States delegation could be taken as a basis for the adoption of appropriate decisions by the Security Council.

The text submitted by the representative of the United Kingdom, he considered, was inadequate and would not serve to improve the situation in Palestine, although some of its paragraphs were not objectionable.

The representative of Syria said that it had been previously decided that the Security Council was not entitled to participate in, or to take any action for, the implementation of the plan of partition. Even the General Assembly had abandoned tacitly, if not openly and clearly, the resolution of November 29 last.

With regard to the United States resolution he stated that a truce was not an end in itself and that any order such as that contained in the resolution, if it was issued in that blunt fashion and without giving any satisfaction or assurance of what was to be done afterwards, would not be complied with. He insisted that the cause of the dispute must be removed before a truce could become effective. The cause of all the fighting was the partition plan, which the Arabs would never accept.

At the 301st meeting on May 21, the representative of Egypt stressed the importance of a decision to apply Chapter VII of the Charter. Before accepting the United States draft resolution, which was, in effect, a confirmation of partition, the Council had to consider the legal situation. That Palestine had emerged as an independent sovereign state on May 15, he stated, was clear from Article 22 of the Mandate which had recognized Palestine as an independent state, subject only to the "administrative advice and assistance" of the Mandatory Power. The forces of the Arab States were in Palestine, with the consent of the great majority of the population, solely to maintain law and order in the face of terroristic activities of the Jewish minority and in the light of the inability of the United Nations to find a solution. He considered that the action of the United States Government in recognizing the State of Israel, which was a rebellious minority, had no legal force or meaning.

At the 302nd meeting on May 22, the representative of the Jewish Agency appealed to the Council to adopt the United States draft resolution (S/749). Failure to take action under Chapter VII of the Charter simply because the machinery of enforcement was not yet complete would be a disastrous blow to the prestige of the United Nations. He assured the Council that the Jews would accept a cease-fire, which, he said, should be followed by the removal of armed Arab forces from Palestine.

The President ruled that the United States draft resolution and the United Kingdom amendment to it would be voted on paragraph by paragraph.

The first paragraph of the United Kingdom amendment was therefore put to the vote first and was not adopted, receiving 6 votes in favor, with 5 abstentions (Colombia, France, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., United States).

The second paragraph of the United Kingdom amendment was identical with the first paragraph of the United States resolution. This was adopted unanimously.

The next paragraph to be voted on was the second paragraph of the United States resolution, containing a finding of a threat to and breach of the peace within the meaning of Article 39 of the Charter. Before a vote on the paragraph was taken the representative of the United States expressed the view that the statements of the Arab States, their replies to the Council's questionnaire and the declaration by Syria of its intention to establish a blockade of foreign shipping off the coast of Palestine constituted indisputable evidence that the Arabs were guilty of a breach of international peace within the meaning of Article 39 of the Charter. The claim that their action qualified under the Charter as that of a regional organization could not be justified, especially in the light of Article 53.

The representative of the United Kingdom opposed such a determination under Article 39 of the Charter, on the ground that it should not be invoked unless the Council was prepared eventually to use armed force in Palestine. He also considered that the Council should persist in its attempts by various means to arrange for truce and mediation.

The Council failed to adopt the paragraph, there being 5 votes in favor (Colombia, France, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., United States), with 6 abstentions.

The third paragraph of the United Kingdom amendment, with some further changes proposed by the representatives of the United States and China, was then adopted by a vote of 10 to 0, with 1 abstention.

The last three paragraphs of the United Kingdom amendment were adopted by a vote of 9 to 0, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), the last paragraph having been revised at the suggestion of the representative of France so as to render the wording stronger.

Before a vote was taken on the resolution as a whole the representative of the United States expressed the view that the resolution before the Council as a result of the above voting was unsatisfactory. He would vote for the amended resolution solely because of the call upon the parties to issue a cease-fire order within 36 hours after the stated time. If the parties did not obey the cease-fire request, the Security Council must consider further action.

The representative of Colombia was also dissatisfied with the Council's action but hoped that it might result in a frank discussion of the situation in which the Council was placed.

The resolution as a whole (S/773) was then adopted by 8 votes in favor, with 3 abstentions (Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). Following is the text of the resolution as adopted by the Council:

"The Security Council,

"Taking into consideration that previous resolutions of the Security Council in respect to Palestine have not been complied with and that military operations are taking place in Palestine,

"Calls upon all Governments and authorities, without prejudice to the rights, claims or position of the parties concerned, to abstain from any hostile military action in Palestine and to that end to issue a cease-fire order to their military and para-military forces to become effective within thirty-six hours after midnight, New York standard time, 22 May 1948;

"Calls upon the Truce Commission and upon all parties concerned to give the highest priority to the negotiation and maintenance of a truce in the City of Jerusalem;

"Directs the Truce Commission established by the Security Council by its resolution of 23 April 1948 to report to the Security Council on the compliance with the two preceding paragraphs of this resolution;

"Calls upon all parties concerned to facilitate by all means in their power the task of the United Nations Mediator appointed in execution of the resolution of the General Assembly of 14 May 1948."

By a letter dated May 24 (S/779), the representative of the Jewish Agency informed the Security Council that the Provisional Government of Israel had issued orders to all commanders to cease fire on May 24, at noon, New York time, and not to resume firing unless the other side continued to fire.

By telegrams addressed to the Secretary-General the Governments of Lebanon, Iraq and Syria informed the Security Council that the time limit set in the Council's resolution of May 22 (S/773) was not sufficient for consultations among the Arab Governments with a view to arriving at a decision with regard to the Council's cease-fire order. At the 303rd meeting of the Council on May 24, the representative of Syria further informed the Council of a telegram he had received from the Secretary-General of the Arab League requesting the Security Council to grant to the Arab States a delay sufficient for them to exchange views at a meeting which would be held the following day at Amman, Transjordan.

The representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States and France supported the request for an extension of the time limit and, at the suggestion of the representative of France, the Council agreed to an extension of 48 hours to expire on May 26 at noon, New York standard time.

The Provisional Government of Israel protested against the extension of the time limit granted the Arab States and informed the Council (S/788) that it must review its position in the light of the Council's decision. It subsequently informed the Council (S/789) that as a result of a new decision by the Provisional Government cease-fire orders had been reissued to all commanders effective May 26 at 1 P.M., New York time.

At the 305th meeting on May 26, the representative of Egypt stated that his Government could not abide by a cease-fire recommendation unless it provided for a cessation of the immigration of recruits for the Jewish forces and to the importation of military equipment by the Jews, and unless it paved the way for an equitable solution of the Palestine question in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the population.

The representative of Iraq on behalf of all the Arab States then presented the reply of the Arab League to the Council's cease-fire order (S/792). The Arab League considered the cease-fire order unacceptable, since it gave no guarantee against Zionist attack. The League believed that the resolution of April 17 should be observed, and was prepared to consider any further proposals of the Council.

The representative of the Jewish Agency said that the Provisional Government of Israel accepted and was willing to carry out the unconditional cease-fire requested by the Council, but would not accept the terms laid down by the Arab aggressors. He said these terms would amount to surrender.

The representative of Syria pointed out that the Jews had everything to gain from a cease-fire, while the Arabs had everything to lose.

At the 306th meeting on May 26, the President read a letter from the Jewish Agency to the effect that the Jewish authorities were maintaining close liaison with the Truce Commission. He asked for clarification of the statements made by the Arab States at the previous meeting.

The representative of Iraq said that the Foreign Ministers of the Arab States were at Amman, awaiting any suggestions which the Council might make.

The representative of Syria stated that the Arabs rejected an unconditional cease-fire but they had accepted a truce on the basis of the Council's resolution of April 17, confirmed by the Assembly's resolution of May 14, which, he asserted, had been violated by the Jews.

The representative of the Jewish Agency pointed out that the resolution of April 17 had referred only to the period when the Assembly had the Palestine question under discussion.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. urged that the Council take more decisive measures to put an end to the fighting in Palestine. He considered that the cessation of hostilities was being delayed in accordance with the imperialistic interests of the United Kingdom, which was in fact participating in the hostilities by supplying arms and personnel to the Arab forces.

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee insisted that nationals of the Arab States could not be regarded as invaders in Palestine. It was only natural that the Palestinians had appealed to their neighbors for assistance in the face of mounting Jewish aggression.

The representative of the United States said that the cease-fire resolution taken under Chapter VI had proved ineffective and that the fighting was growing in intensity. He asked that other members should now make suggestions for a solution.

i. U.S.S.R. AND UNITED KINGDOM DRAFT RESOLUTIONS

The representative of the U.S.S.R. considered that the Council had to take steps designed to restore peace in Palestine. To that end he proposed a draft resolution, a revised text of which was submitted at the 309th meeting and read as follows (S/794/Rev.2):

"Considering that the Security Council's resolution of 22 May on the cessation of military operations in Palestine has not been carried out, in view of the refusal of the Arab States to comply with this decision;

"Considering that military operations in Palestine, in view of this, are increasing in intensity and that the number of casualties is growing; and

"Considering that as a result of these events the situation in Palestine constitutes a threat to peace and security within the meaning of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations;

"The Security Council

"Orders the Governments of the States involved in the present conflict in Palestine to secure the cessation of military operations within thirty-six hours after the adoption by the Security Council of this resolution."

The representative of Egypt reiterated that his Government would welcome a cease-fire on the basis of the Council's resolution of April 17, which he considered to be still operative since it had been affirmed by the Assembly's resolution of May 14. That cease-fire resolution had correctly provided for a cessation of all acts, political and military, which might jeopardize the rights, claims or position of either party, and paved the way for an equitable settlement.

The representative of the United Kingdom considered that the basis of the resolution of April 17, which aimed at political and military truce, had been removed by the proclamation of the Jewish State, and that the reaction of the Arab States to the present proposals had to be assessed in the light of past events. The Council, however, had to bring the fighting to an end in order to create conditions in which proposals for a settlement of the dispute could be considered. To that end, he proposed a draft resolution (S/795), the text of which, as revised at the 310th meeting, read as follows (S/795/Rev.2):

"The Security Council,

"Desiring to bring about a cessation of hostilities in Palestine without prejudice to the rights, claims and position of either Arabs or Jews,

"Calls upon both parties to order a cessation of all acts of armed force for a period of four weeks,

"Calls upon both parties to undertake that they will not introduce fighting personnel or men of military age into Palestine during the cease fire,

"Calls upon both parties and upon all Governments to refrain from importing war material into Palestine during the cease fire,

"Urges both parties to take every possible precaution for the protection of the Holy Places and of the City of Jerusalem,

"Instructs the United Nations Mediator for Palestine in concert with the Truce Commission to supervise the observance of the above provisions, and decides that they shall be provided with a sufficient number of military observers,

"Instructs the United Nations Mediator to make contact with both parties as soon as the cease fire is in force with a view to making recommendations to the Security Council about an eventual settlement for Palestine,

"Calls upon all concerned to give the greatest possible assistance to the United Nations Mediator,

"Instructs the United Nations Mediator to make a weekly report to the Security Council during the cease fire,

"Invites the States Members of the Arab League and the Jewish and Arab authorities in Palestine to communicate their acceptance of this resolution to the Security Council not later than 6 p.m. New York standard time on 1 June 1948,

"Decides that if the present resolution is rejected by either party or by both, or if, having been accepted, it is subsequently repudiated or violated, the present situation in Palestine will be reconsidered with a view to action under Chapter VII of the Charter."

At the 307th meeting on May 28, the representative of China stated his opposition to the Soviet Union draft resolution and supported in principle the draft resolution of the United Kingdom.

The representative of the Jewish Agency criticized the United Kingdom draft resolution as upholding the interests of the Arabs. It was intended to bring reward to the aggressors and impose sanctions upon their victims. The proposed cease-fire, conditioned upon restrictions on immigration and the cessation of the importation of men and military equipment by the Jews, would be prejudicial to them while it would not affect the Arab position. It was also contrary to Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter. Neither the Council nor the Mediator had any power to affect the sovereignty and integrity of Israel, which had been established with the sanction of the Assembly. It was significant that the United Kingdom was prepared to invoke Chapter VII in the event of the rejection of this draft resolution, while it opposed most vigorously any such action when confronted with the defiant rejection by the Arabs of the previous Council resolutions calling for a truce.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. said that, whereas the U.S.S.R. draft resolution presented a constructive approach to the problem, the draft resolution of the United Kingdom was designed to stifle the State of Israel. At the end of the four-week period, the Jews would find their resources depleted while the Arabs would be prepared for a renewed onslaught. The invaders would be permitted to retain their forces in Palestine and use it as a base for larger operations. All the large arsenals of the United Kingdom would be at the disposal of the Arabs, and a virtual blockade would be established around Israel. Jewish immigration was an internal matter for the State of Israel. The provision for enforcement action by the Security Council against any party which rejected the resolution was clearly designed to obtain sanctions against the Jews. The whole draft resolution was biased and unacceptable.

The representative of Canada opposed the draft resolution of the U.S.S.R. for the same reason as he had opposed that of the United States. The Council should not leave the methods of pacific settlement under Chapter VI of the Charter and embark upon measures under Chapter VII until the Council had been informed as a result of consultations among the permanent members "what consecutive steps in the way of diplomatic, economic or military pressure or coercion might follow should the order of the Council to cease military action fail". He supported in general the United Kingdom draft resolution as a fresh attempt to obtain a cease-fire by agreement and because that resolution, in his view, relied upon the machinery of mediation, negotiation and conciliation, which had not yet been fully tried.

The representative of the United States supported the U.S.S.R. draft resolution. He referred to several statements by Arab representatives as conclusive evidence of a breach of international peace.

At the 309th meeting on May 28, the representative of France stated that he supported the U.S.S.R. draft resolution for the same reason that he had supported the United States proposal, especially since the situation was deteriorating rapidly.

The representative of Colombia supported the U.S.S.R. draft resolution in principle. He was gratified that the U.S.S.R. and the United States were now in agreement, and he shared the Canadian view that some accord between the permanent members, in respect of enforcement action under Article 106 of the Charter, was advisable before the Council decided to act under Chapter VII.

The Council, he stated further, had spent weeks in discussions without achieving anything. He believed that negotiations should be reopened with the parties in order to find a peaceful solution. In this spirit, he suggested that the Council might wish to adopt a draft resolution inviting the permanent members of the Council to consult with one another with a view to such joint action on behalf of the United Nations as might be necessary to ensure compliance with the relevant provisions of the resolutions adopted by the Council on April 17 (S/723) and May 22 (S/773), 1948, for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

The Council should further establish a commission of five members, three to be designated by the Council itself, one by the Arab Higher Committee and another by the Jewish Agency. If the membership of the commission should not be completed within three days from the date of the resolution, the President of the Council should designate such other member or members as might be required to complete the membership of five.

The primary task of this commission would be to discuss with the representatives of the Governments and the authorities concerned the possibility of negotiating a peaceful settlement of the question of the future government of Palestine. The Governments and communities directly interested in this question were to make representatives available to the commission of the Council for the purpose of discussing such peaceful settlement and the commission itself should co-operate with the Truce Commission and the United Nations Mediator to the best of their ability in the performance of their duties.

The President, as the representative of France, referring to a communication from the Truce Commission (S/997/Corr.1) concerning the situation in Jerusalem, proposed the following draft resolution (S/798/Rev.2) concerning a truce in Jerusalem, which, he stated, need not prejudice the position of either party:

"The Security Council,

"Considering that the appeal issued by the Security Council on 22 May 1948 with a view to terminating hostilities in Palestine has not been complied with;

"That that appeal called upon the Truce Commission and all parties concerned to give the highest priority to the negotiations and maintenance of a truce in the city of Jerusalem;

"That the attack on and bombardment of Jerusalem have been going on since 15 May; that they have already caused terrible destruction, which is increasing every day; that places of priceless value for three of the greatest religions of the world, representing an important part of the spiritual and cultural heritage of humanity, are thereby endangered, if they have not already been stricken,

"Calls upon the Governments and authorities concerned to cease hostilities in the city of Jerusalem within a time-limit expiring at noon 29 May (New York standard time);

"Decides that if the present resolution is rejected by either party, or both, or if, after having been accepted, it is not implemented, the present situation in Palestine will be reconsidered with a view to taking measures provided for under Chapter VII of the Charter."

At the 309th meeting on May 29, the representative of the U.S.S.R. said that the proposals in the United Kingdom draft resolution were illegal and were contrary to the interests of both Jews and Arabs and to the Assembly's resolution of November 29, 1947. Adoption of the United Kingdom draft would be equivalent to imposing sanctions on the Jewish State, the victim of aggression. He considered that the draft resolution was an expression of the imperialistic policy of the United Kingdom, designed to prolong the conflict in Palestine by inciting Arabs to fight Jews, to make it impossible for the Jewish State to maintain its independence, or for a new and independent Arab State to emerge in the Arab part of Palestine. The existence of a state of war was indisputable. He therefore urged adoption of the U.S.S.R. draft resolution as the measure which could restore peace in Palestine.

The representative of the United Kingdom believed that the Council should not enter upon action under Chapter VII of the Charter unless it was prepared to proceed if necessary to the most drastic enforcement measures, and unless it was satisfied as to what would be the results of such action. The United Kingdom draft resolution was designed to bring pressure for peace without the use of Chapter VII. He contested the statement of the representative of the Jewish Agency that the United Kingdom draft resolution was discriminatory, and pointed out that some of the provisions which were objected to had figured in the resolution of April 17.

The representative of Belgium supported the United Kingdom draft resolution in principle. He believed that, in the long run, only mediation was capable of bringing about peace in Palestine, and that the Council should not make a determination under Article 39 of the Charter unless it, or rather the permanent members, were prepared to proceed to all the coercive measures provided for in Chapter VII.

At the 310th meeting on May 29, the representative of Syria stated that he opposed the demand of the representative of the U.S.S.R. for measures under Chapter VII on the grounds that such action would only aggravate the situation and make a solution more difficult. He did not consider that Chapter VII of the Charter was applicable since (a) Palestine was an Arab country and hence international peace was not threatened, (b) he did not recognize the existence of a sovereign Jewish State, (c) the resolution of November 29, 1947, which had never been more than a recommendation, could not create any state and (d) that resolution had been abandoned by the Assembly in its resolution of May 14, 1948.

The representative of the Jewish Agency reiterated his view that the third and fourth paragraphs of the United Kingdom draft resolution discriminated against the interests of the Jewish State. Moreover, Israel was now a sovereign state, and those paragraphs constituted a violation of its domestic jurisdiction. The French draft resolution was acceptable in principle, subject to a guarantee being given for access to the Holy Places and to the city itself.

The representative of Colombia deplored the disunity among the permanent members which, in the absence of an international force, made it difficult for the Council to apply enforcement measures in the face of a recognized threat to the peace.

The President, speaking as the representative of France, stated that he believed that Article 39 of the Charter made it imperative for the Council, under the existing conditions, to determine the existence of a threat to international peace irrespective of what measures it might be able to take.

At its 310th meeting on May 29, the Council proceeded to vote on the resolutions before it. The U.S.S.R. resolution was put to the vote first, the first paragraph being voted on in two parts at the request of the representative of Colombia. The first part of the first paragraph received 5 votes in favor (Belgium, France, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., United States), with 6 abstentions, and was not adopted. The reference to the refusal of the Arab States to comply with the Council's previous decision of May 22 was rejected by a vote of 2 in favor (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), with 9 abstentions. The vote on the remaining four paragraphs of the resolution again was 5 in favor, with 6 abstentions. The U.S.S.R. resolution therefore was not adopted.

The Council then considered the United Kingdom resolution, paragraph by paragraph, and amendments were proposed by the representatives of the United States, France, Colombia, Canada and Syria and suggestions by the Jewish Agency.

The first paragraph of the resolution was adopted by a vote of 8 in favor, with 3 abstentions.

In the second as well as in subsequent paragraphs the representative of the United States proposed the use of the phrase "all governments and authorities concerned" instead of "both parties". This was accepted by the representative of the United Kingdom. The representative of Colombia proposed that the provision of a time limit of four weeks for the truce should be deleted, as in his view fighting should be stopped once and for all and not only for a brief interval. This amendment was rejected by a vote of 3 in favor (Colombia, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), with 8 abstentions. The second paragraph of the resolution was then adopted by 10 votes, with Colombia abstaining.

As regards the third paragraph the representative of the United States proposed that the prohibition of the introduction of fighting personnel and men of military age should be applied not only to Palestine but to all the Arab States as well, which should be listed by name. This change was accepted by the representative of the United Kingdom. The representative of France then proposed that the reference to "men of military age" in this paragraph be deleted and that instead an additional paragraph should be inserted calling upon all governments and authorities concerned, should immigrants of military age be introduced into countries or territories under their control, to undertake not to mobilize or submit them to military training, and in order to ensure the fulfilment of this obligation to intern them during that period in camps placed under the control of the Mediator, who would have the authority to make any exceptions which he might deem appropriate.

In support of his amendment the representative of France stated that it was designed to keep a fair balance between a ban on the entry of all persons of military age and the possibility that immigrants of military age would be trained and mobilized for use after the expiration of the truce, thus not giving any undue advantage to either of the parties.

The representative of the Jewish Agency welcomed the spirit of the French amendment, although he did not favor the provision that immigrants of military age should be interned in camps. The representatives of the Arab Higher Committee and of Egypt, on the other hand, reiterated their opposition to any immigration whatever.

At the suggestion of the representative of the United States the reference to internment camps was deleted from the French amendment and the phrase "men of military age" was substituted for the phrase "immigrants of military age". In this form the representative of the United Kingdom accepted the French amendment. The two paragraphs as amended (paragraph 3 of the original United Kingdom draft resolution and the additional paragraph to be inserted) were then adopted by a vote of 7 in favor, with 4 abstentions (Colombia, Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

The fourth paragraph of the original United Kingdom resolution was adopted by a vote of 9 in favor, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), after the representative of the United Kingdom had accepted a United States amendment referring to the export of war material to Palestine as well as its import into Palestine, and extending the prohibition on the import and export of war materials to the Arab States.

In connection with the fifth paragraph the representative of the United Kingdom accepted a suggestion of the representative of the Jewish Agency to include a reference to the necessity of safeguarding access to the Holy Places. The paragraph was then adopted unanimously.

Paragraphs 6, 7 and 8 of the original United Kingdom resolution were adopted by 9 votes in favor, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). The wording of paragraph 7 was changed at the suggestion of the representative of Canada so as to include mention of the General Assembly's resolution as regards the Mediator's functions.

The last two paragraphs of the original United Kingdom resolution were adopted by 8 votes and 7 votes in favor respectively, with 3 abstentions (Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.) in the first vote and 4 abstentions (those three and Argentina) in the second vote.

An additional paragraph proposed by the representative of the United States calling upon all governments to take all possible steps to assist in the implementation of the resolution was adopted by a vote of 8 in favor, with 3 abstentions (Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

Following is the text of the resolution (S/801) as adopted by the Council:

"The Security Council,

"Desiring to bring about a cessation of hostilities in Palestine without prejudice to the rights, claims and position of either Arabs or Jews,

"Calls upon all Governments and authorities concerned to order a cessation of all acts of armed force for a period of four weeks,

"Calls upon all Governments and authorities concerned to undertake that they will not introduce fighting personnel into Palestine, Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Transjordan and Yemen during the cease fire, and

"Calls upon all Governments and authorities concerned, should men of military age be introduced into countries or territories under their control, to undertake not to mobilize or submit them to military training during the cease fire,

"Calls upon all Governments and authorities concerned to refrain from importing or exporting war material into or to Palestine, Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Transjordan and Yemen during the cease fire,

"Urges all Governments and authorities concerned to take every possible precaution for the protection of the Holy Places and of the City of Jerusalem, including access to all shrines and sanctuaries for the purpose of worship by those who have an established right to visit and worship at them,

"Instructs the United Nations Mediator for Palestine in concert with the Truce Commission to supervise the observance of the above provisions, and decides that they shall be provided with a sufficient number of military observers,

"Instructs the United Nations Mediator to make contact with all parties as soon as the cease fire is in force with a view to carrying out his functions as determined by the General Assembly,

"Calls upon all concerned to give the greatest possible assistance to the United Nations Mediator,

"Instructs the United Nations Mediator to make a weekly report to the Security Council during the cease fire,

"Invites the States Members of the Arab League and the Jewish and Arab authorities in Palestine to communicate their acceptance of this resolution to the Security Council not later than 6:00 p.m. New York standard time on 1 June 1948,

"Decides that if the present resolution is rejected by either party or by both, or if, having been accepted, it is subsequently repudiated or violated, the situation in Palestine will be reconsidered with a view to action under Chapter VII of the Charter,

"Calls upon all Governments to take all possible steps to assist in the implementation of this resolution."

After the United Kingdom resolution had been adopted, the President, speaking as the representative of France, withdrew his own draft resolution (S/798/Rev.2) regarding a truce in Jerusalem. The Colombian proposal for the establishment of a commission of five had not been formally submitted as a resolution and was therefore not put to a vote.

j. ACCEPTANCE BY ALL PARTIES CONCERNED OF THE RESOLUTION OF MAY 29, 1948

By letter dated June 1, 1948 (S/804), the representative of the Jewish Agency transmitted the reply of the Provisional Government of Israel to the Council's resolution of May 29. The Provisional Government of Israel, the Council was informed, had decided to respond to the Council's call and had instructed the High Command of its Defence Army to issue cease-fire orders to all its forces effective on June 2, at 7 P.M., New York daylight time, on condition that the other side acted likewise. The Provisional Government of Israel would also comply with all the injunctions and obligations imposed by the resolution, provided that a similar undertaking was entered into by the other governments and authorities concerned. The Provisional Government of Israel stated further that its acceptance of the cease-fire was subject to the following assumptions, which in its opinion were implied in the terms of the resolution, but which it wished placed on record:

"1. That the ban on the import of arms into the territory of the Arab States enumerated in the resolution should apply also to the deliveries of arms from stocks owned or controlled by foreign powers within those territories.

"2. That during the cease-fire, the armed forces of neither side will seek to advance beyond the areas controlled by them at the announcement of the cease-fire and that each side will be entitled to maintain the positions in its military occupation at that time.

"3. That freedom of access to Jerusalem will be ensured for the supply of food and other essentials, as well as for normal civilian entry and exit.

"4. That any attempt by the parties concerned to stop or impede the normal transport of goods assigned to Israel and other States concerned will be regarded as an act of armed force.

"5. That while the provisional Government of Israel is ready to comply with the injunction that persons of military age admitted during the cease-fire period should not be mobilized or submitted to military training, its freedom to admit immigrants, regardless of age, will not be impaired."

By telegram dated June 1, 1948, and addressed to the Secretary-General (S/810) the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Egypt communicated to the Security Council the reply of all the States members of the Arab League. This reply stressed that the suspension of hostilities must serve as a means of finding a just solution of the Palestine problem and expressed the confidence of the States members of the Arab League that the Truce Commission and the United Nations Mediator would realize that any solution which did not ensure political unity for Palestine nor respect the will of the majority of the population of that country would not have the least chance of success.

Referring to the question of Jewish immigration the telegram stated that it was inconceivable that the Security Council could have intended to place the Zionists in a position to profit by the period of cessation of hostilities in order to receive a reinforcement of men, who although they came to Palestine as immigrants were in reality nothing but trained fighters.

Finally, the telegram stated, the Governments of the Arab States considered it necessary that a body be set up under the necessary safeguards, charged with the most careful supervision of the provisions and conditions of the Security Council's resolution, as the Arab States did not consider that the resolution gave them full assurance that the other party would observe these provisions and conditions.

In the light of these explanations, the telegram concluded, the Arab States accepted the Security Council's invitation to cease fire for a period of four weeks from a date to be determined for this purpose.

The Security Council considered these replies at its 311th meeting on June 2. It had before it also a telegram from the United Nations Mediator (S/814) dated June 2, concerning the date to be set for the truce to come into effect. The Mediator stated that talks with the parties and his own preliminary study of the problem of controls had convinced him that a limited time must be allowed between the date of acceptance of the resolution and the date of its application. If the effective date were set so early that the controls would not be operative there would be immediate charges of violations by both sides. The Mediator therefore suggested that he be authorized to fix the effective date in consultation with the two parties and the Truce Commission. The four-week period, he assumed, would be computed from this effective date.

The representative of the Jewish Agency asked that the Council fix an early deadline for the operation of the cease-fire. He thought that the message dealing with this subject from the Mediator (S/814) showed too much regard for technical details.

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee said that, as a member of the Arab League, his Committee upheld the statement communicated by the Egyptian Government (S/810).

The representative of Iraq stressed the importance of taking measures to ensure that the cease-fire was not broken.

The President stated that it was the Council's understanding that the comments contained in the replies of the cease-fire resolution did not constitute conditions, and that the resolution had been accepted unconditionally. He asked for the members' views on the Mediator's suggestion (S/814) that he be authorized to fix a date for the cease-fire in consultation with the parties.

The representatives of Argentina and of the United Kingdom supported this suggestion.

In reply to the representative of the United Kingdom, the President said that the four-week period would be computed from the beginning of the cease-fire.

The representative of France thought that everything possible should be done to increase the Mediator's authority.

The representative of the United States considered that the Mediator should be urged not to delay the cease-fire until controls covering all aspects of the Assembly and the Council resolutions had been established. In addition, he asked that the Mediator stress the humanitarian and non-political aspect of his task.

The representative of Canada agreed that the Mediator should be asked to put the cease-fire into effect as soon as possible.

The representative of Colombia suggested that the Council inform the Mediator that it would meet within two or three days to receive his report on the situation.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that his Government would not permit the transfer of war materials to the parties from stocks in the Middle East during the period of the cease-fire. He suggested that the Mediator be authorized to reconcile differences of interpretation regarding the resolution. He should also be asked to report on measures of supervision.

With the representatives of the Ukrainian S.S.R. and the U.S.S.R. abstaining, the Council then approved the suggestion of the Mediator regarding the procedure for arranging the effective date for the cease-fire and the truce (S/814) and agreed that this time-limit should be as short as possible.

At the 313th meeting on June 3, the President drew attention to Part II, paragraph 3, of the Assembly's resolution of May 14 (A/554), which directed the Mediator to conform with such instructions as the General Assembly or the Council might issue. He asked if members wished instructions to be issued.

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee stated that the maintenance of the truce depended upon the establishment of effective controls. The Jews had, in the past, found many ways of smuggling arms and men into Palestine. Control of immigration was of the greatest importance; he appealed to all governments to restrict the movement of Jewish immigrants and sales of war materials to the Jews. He contested the assumption of the Provisional Government of Israel that there should be freedom of access for the Jews into Jerusalem. The abandonment of the siege was contrary to the standstill order, and would benefit the Jews. He reiterated that the Arabs could not enter into negotiations on the basis of recognition of the existence of a Jewish state.

The representative of the Jewish Agency said that the Council's resolution clearly ruled out any general ban on the immigration of Jews of military age. Referring to the arbitrary and unilateral United Kingdom decision not to release such men from the camps on Cyprus, he pointed out that it was for the Mediator to decide what regulation should be imposed. He stated that the Provisional Government of Israel would not take part in any negotiations concerning the existence of the Jewish State.

The representative of France stated that he was disturbed by the two preceding statements and said that the parties must co-operate in the Council's attempt at conciliation. He drew attention to the penultimate paragraph of the truce resolution, which provided for measures under Chapter VII of the Charter if the truce did not lead to results. It was up to the Mediator, he considered, to interpret the terms of the resolution. If his interpretation was challenged, it could be referred to the Council.

The President shared the views of the preceding speaker, and it was agreed that the Council should not issue any instructions to the Mediator pending examination of his first report, and that the Mediator should have full authority to act within the terms of the resolution and interpret it in any way he deemed correct. Only if that interpretation were challenged should the matter be submitted to the Council for further consideration.

k. TRUCE IN PALESTINE EFFECTIVE FROM JUNE 11, 1948

By cablegram dated June 4, 1948 (S/823), the United Nations Mediator informed the President of the Security Council that he had been negotiating with the parties concerning the effective date of the truce and that the only question obstructing agreement was that of Jewish immigration into Palestine during the truce. The difficulty had arisen with regard to the interpretation of paragraphs 3 and 4 of the resolution of May 29, 1948, referring to "fighting personnel" and "men of military age". The Mediator therefore inquired whether the Security Council had intended the resolution to permit Jewish immigration of men of military age during the truce provided that they were not mobilized or submitted to military training, or whether its purpose was to exclude during that period all men of military age. In reply the President informed the Mediator that the basic intent of the resolution could be interpreted as meaning that no military advantage should accrue to either side as a result of the truce.

of these developments at its 314th meeting on June 7.

The representative of France thought that it should be made clear to the Mediator that the truce resolution had been accepted unconditionally, and that his task was to devise means of implementing it and bring together the divergent interpretations.

The President stressed that it was for the Mediator and not the parties to interpret the truce resolution. If those interpretations were rejected, then the matter would be considered by the Council.

The representative of the Jewish Agency expressed surprise that the cease-fire order issued by the Provisional Government of Israel had met with no response either from the Arabs or the Council. The immediate task of the Mediator should be to obtain a cease-fire rather than to discuss technical details pertaining to the provisions of the resolution.

Following further negotiations with the representatives of both parties the Mediator concluded that there was no practical possibility of negotiating a detailed agreement within any reasonable period of time. He therefore decided, on June 7, to submit to the parties his own draft of the terms of the truce, requesting the parties to accept the proposal (S/829) without conditions by June 11, 1948, 6 A.M., G.M.T. As to the disputed clauses of the Security Council's resolution of May 29, the Mediator interpreted this to mean that no fighting personnel (i.e., men belonging to a military unit or bearing arms) could be introduced into Palestine or any Arab country during the period of the truce.

Regarding the entry of men of military age, his interpretation was that the resolution did not prohibit immigration nor did it appear to place any complete and positive ban on the inclusion of men of military age in such immigration. The Mediator therefore decided that free immigration of women and children and men under and above the age group of 18 to 45 should be permitted. In addition, a limited number of men of military age were to be permitted to enter, the number to be at the discretion of the Mediator and these men to be kept in non-military camps under the surveillance of United Nations observers during the period of the truce.

By a letter dated June 9 (S/833) the Government of Egypt, on behalf of the Governments of Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Lebanon and Syria, accepted the Mediator's proposal (S/829) as a proof of these States' "sincere desire for co-operation with the United Nations to achieve a peaceful and equitable solution of the problem of Palestine". Similar replies were received by the Mediator from the Governments of Iraq, Transjordan and Yemen.²⁶

The Provisional Government of Israel accepted the truce proposals by a letter dated June 10 (S/834), although it expressed dissatisfaction with certain of the clauses affecting Jewish immigration.

The Mediator informed the Security Council of the acceptance by all parties of the truce proposals by a cablegram dated June 10 (S/830).

At the 317th meeting of the Security Council, the representative of the United States expressed gratification at the announcement of the acceptance of the truce and expressed hope that it Would be extended into an enduring settlement.

The President said that the Council would now await the result of the Mediator's negotiations for a peaceful settlement. He suggested that an acknowledgement by the Council of the successful conclusion of his efforts for a truce be sent to the Mediator. He did not, however, think it necessary, as proposed by the representative of France, that the Council confirm the Mediator's interpretations of the truce resolution, since they had not been challenged by the parties.

At the 320th meeting, on June 15, the President drew attention to three messages received from the Mediator (S/837, S/839, S/840). The first (S/837) was a request that all communications from interested parties relating to the truce agreement should be submitted to the Mediator, and that the latter should exercise his discretion in reporting them to the Council. The second was a cablegram from the Mediator dated June 15 (S/839) informing the Council that in his view the truce had worked well during the first few days, taking into account all circumstances, including difficulties encountered regarding communications and getting observers to strategic points and fronts in time. The last message (S/840) contained a request that the Council call on all Member States, and on some non-member states, to report on the steps taken to implement the resolution of May 29, and urge all states to assist the Mediator in the implementation of the truce proposals. The President proposed to accept these requests. After brief discussion the Council agreed to the Mediator's requests.

Replies (S/855, Add.1-4) to the Council's inquiry, which was brought to the attention of

1. QUESTION OF TRUCE OBSERVERS

At the 314th meeting of the Council on June 7, the representative of the U.S.S.R. asked for clarification of the procedure to be adopted for providing the Mediator with military observers in accordance with paragraph 7 of the resolution of May 29. The U.S.S.R. was prepared to send observers to Palestine together with other Powers directly concerned.

The representative of the United States said that the Mediator had approached his Government, as a member of the Truce Commission, to ascertain whether it would be prepared to furnish military observers. His Government had replied in the affirmative.

The representatives of France and Belgium said that their Governments had likewise been approached.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. then expressed the view that the question was not one of interpretation to be left to the Mediator. The decision as to which countries should send observers and as to how the latter would be made available had to be made by the Council. Membership in the Truce Commission had no connection with the problem of assigning these observers to the Mediator.

At the 317th meeting of the Council on June 10, the representative of the United States stated that in his opinion it was the intent of the resolution of May 29 that the Mediator should be left free to make his own arrangements in respect of the truce and its supervision. He would, however, accept any decision which the Council might make.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. stated he did not see how the seventh paragraph of the resolution of May 29 could be interpreted to mean that only States members of the Truce Commission should send military observers.

The representative of Canada pointed out that the resolution of May 29 called upon the Mediator to supervise the observance of the truce in concert with the Truce Commission. He believed that the latter was under an obligation to provide the assistance and facilities for observation, and he could not see that any state possessed a right to participate.

At the 320th meeting of the Council on June 15, the representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed the following draft resolution (S/841):

"Considering the necessity of providing the United Nations Mediator in Palestine with an appropriate number of military observers in accordance with the Security Council resolution of 29 May 1948,

"The Security Council resolves:

"1. To attach to the United Nations Mediator military observers numbering from thirty to fifty persons.

"2. The military observers should be appointed by Member States of the Security Council wishing to participate in the designation of such observers, excluding Syria."

The representative of the U.S.S.R. did not consider that the question could be settled otherwise than by a decision of the Security Council. The Mediator was not entitled to settle the question irrespective of the Council or to request some states to supply him with observers. He saw no reason why the United States representative should object to the participation of a small group of U.S.S.R. observers, numbering not more than five. The U.S.S.R. had the same right as any other country to send observers to Palestine.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. supported the U.S.S.R. draft resolution and considered it essential that U.S.S.R. observers participate in supervising the truce. He could not understand why the United States and other members should object to such a procedure, which was necessary if the group of observers was to be fully representative of the Council, and if effective and successful implementation of the May 29 resolution was to be ensured.

The representative of Argentina said he would not have opposed the U.S.S.R. resolution had it been presented in connection with the resolution of May 29. However, he believed that the decision should now be left to the Mediator, who was acting in accordance with the resolution of the General Assembly.

The Council rejected the U.S.S.R. draft resolution by 2 votes in favor (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), with 9 abstentions.

m. TRUCE OBSERVANCE AND MEDIATOR'S PROPOSALS FOR A PEACEFUL ADJUSTMENT OF THE FUTURE SITUATION IN PALESTINE

By cablegram dated June 21, 1948 (S/849), the Mediator informed the Security Council that the truce was holding up well on the whole. Headquarters for truce supervision were now being established at Haifa, while the Mediator had established his own headquarters at Rhodes. This arrangement, the Mediator reported, was proving satisfactory and permitted him to concentrate on the mediation aspect of his work.

On June 30, 1948, the Mediator informed the Security Council by cablegram (S/860) that as a result of consultations with representatives of the parties he had, on June 28 and 29, presented to the Arab and Jewish authorities in Cairo and Tel Aviv, respectively, brief papers setting forth in outline his views and suggestions for a possible approach to a peaceful adjustment of the future situation in Palestine. The Mediator stressed that these suggestions had been presented quite tentatively with the objective of discovering if there might be found at this stage of the mediation a common ground on which further discussion and mediation might proceed.

Following are the suggestions which the Mediator presented to the parties (S/863):

"1. That, subject to the willingness of the directly interested parties to consider such an arrangement, Palestine, as defined in the original Mandate entrusted to the United Kingdom in 1922, that is including Transjordan, might form a Union comprising two members, one Arab and one Jewish.

"2. That the boundaries of the two members be determined in the first instance by negotiation with the assistance of the Mediator and on the basis of suggestions to be made by him. When agreement is reached on the main outlines of the boundaries they will be definitively fixed by a Boundaries Commission.

"3. That the purposes and function of the Union should be to promote common economic interests, to operate and maintain common services, including customs and excise, to undertake development projects and to co-ordinate foreign policy and measures for common defence.

"4. That the functions and authority of the Union might be exercised through a central council and such other organs as the members of the Union may determine.

"5. That, subject to the provisions of the Instrument of Union, each member of the Union may exercise full control over its own affairs including its foreign relations.

"6. Immigration within its own borders should be within the competence of each member, provided that, following a period of two years from the establishment of the Union, either member would be entitled to request the Council of the Union to review the immigration policy of the other member and to render a ruling thereon in terms of the common interests of the Union. In the event of the inability of the Council to reach a decision on the matter, the issue could be referred by either member to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations whose decision, taking into account the principle of economic absorptive capacity, would be binding on the member whose policy is at issue.

"7. That religious and minority rights be fully protected by each member of the Union and guaranteed by the United Nations.

"8. That Holy Places, religious buildings and sites be preserved and that existing rights in respect of the same be fully guaranteed by each member of the Union.

"9. That recognition be accorded to the right of residents of Palestine who, because of conditions created by the conflict there have left their normal places of abode, to return to their homes without restriction and to regain possession of their property."

As regards territorial matters, the Mediator proposed the following:

"1. Inclusion of the whole or part of the Negeb in Arab territory.

"2. Inclusion of the whole or part of Western Galilee in Jewish territory.

"3. Inclusion of the City of Jerusalem in Arab territory, with municipal autonomy for the Jewish community and special arrangements for the protection of the Holy Places.

"4. Consideration of the status of Jaffa.

"5. Establishment of a free port at Haifa, the area of the free port to include the refineries and terminals.

"6. Establishment of a free airport at Lydda."

Both parties rejected the Mediator's proposals (S/863) as a basis of discussion. In its reply (S/870) the Provisional Government of Israel stated that the proposals ignored the General Assembly's resolution of November 29, 1947, as well as the outstanding fact of the situation, namely the effective establishment of the sovereignty of the State of Israel within the area assigned to it by the General Assembly's resolution.

Inclusion of the Arab portion of Palestine in the territory of Transjordan, the Provisional Government of Israel considered, would fundamentally change the context of the boundary problem. Referring to the questions of economic union and immigration, the Provisional Government of Israel asserted that it could not agree to any encroachment upon or limitation of the free sovereignty of the people of Israel in its independent State. Finally, the Provisional Government objected to the suggestion that Jerusalem be included in Arab territory, which it termed disastrous. The Jewish people would never acquiesce in the imposition of Arab domination over Jerusalem, no matter what formal municipal autonomy and what right of access to Holy Places the Jews of Jerusalem might be allowed to enjoy. The Provisional Government expressed hope that in the light of its present observations, the Mediator would reconsider his whole approach to the problem.

The Arabs, in rejecting the Mediator's proposals (see S/888, p. 14), offered counter-suggestions providing for a unitary state in the whole of Palestine, and offering, in the Mediator's opinion, little or no compromise.

n. APPEALS FOR PROLONGATION OF THE TRUCE

The four-week truce which had come into effect on June 10 in accordance with the Security Council's resolution of May 29, was due to expire on July 9. By a cablegram, dated July 5 (S/865), the Mediator informed the Security Council that in his opinion the truce had, on the whole, worked well. There had been complaints from both sides as to the alleged violations of the terms of the truce agreement, the cablegram stated, but despite instances of violation all fighting on a major scale had been stopped and by July 9, 1948, neither side had gained any significant military advantage from the application of the truce.

At the same time the Mediator informed the Council that on July 3 and 5 he had submitted proposals to the parties (see below) for a prolongation of the truce (S/865). Not having received any answers to these proposals as yet, and with the expiration of the truce period imminent, the Mediator asked the United Nations to appeal urgently to the interested parties to accept in principle the prolongation of the truce for such period as might be decided upon in consultation with the Mediator.

The Security Council considered the Mediator's request at its 330th and 331st meetings on July 7.

At the 330th meeting on July 7, the President, in his invitation to representatives of the interested parties to take their seats at the Council table, included, among others, the "representative of the State of Israel".

As several representatives questioned the correctness of the President's statement, the President stated his ruling to this effect and submitted it to a vote.

Only five members were in favor of overruling the President's ruling (Belgium, Canada, China, Syria, United Kingdom). The President therefore declared his ruling sustained.

The representative of the Arab Higher Committee withdrew after stating that, as long as the terminology used by the President was applied in the Council, he could not assist in its deliberations.

Turning to the substance of the question before the Security Council, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that the Council could not ignore the Mediator's request. He urged immediate action by the Council in view of the early expiration of the truce. He submitted a draft resolution (S/867), according to which the Council, taking into consideration the Mediator's telegram of July 5, would address an urgent appeal to the interested parties to accept a prolongation of the truce.

The representative of the United States stated that the Council, when faced with the alternatives of peace and war, must support the truce. He therefore urged the Council to place itself behind the effort for prolongation of the truce.

The representative of Syria brought to the attention of the Council his Government's note referring to the exchange of diplomatic representatives between the United States and Israel during the period of the truce. The representative of Syria stated that if such actions, which he considered to be a violation of the truce agreement and the resolution of May 29, were to continue, then the prolongation of the truce period would not be of great use.

The representative of France considered that the Council should support the Mediator's request without delay.

At the 331st meeting on July 7, the representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that, in considering the possibility of prolongation of the truce, the Council must examine the suggestions which the Mediator had presented to the parties on June 28 (S/863) and which he considered violated the General Assembly's decision of November 29, 1947. In making these suggestions, he said, the Mediator, instead of contributing to a peaceful settlement, was encouraging the prolongation of the fighting and was interfering with the establishment of two independent states in Palestine. The proposed arrangements for the enlargement of Transjordan, through annexation of a part of Palestine to its territory, the infringement of the sovereignty of the Jewish State in the fields of foreign policy and defence, together with various other suggestions for territorial and constitutional changes with regard to Jerusalem, Western Galilee and the Negeb, violated the Assembly's decision and undermined the authority of the United Nations. The U.S.S.R. delegation supported prolongation of the truce, but could not accede to the conditions attached to it.

The representative of Belgium considered that the Council must unreservedly support the Mediator's request for prolongation of the truce, irrespective of such matters as violations which might have occurred or the proposals submitted by the Mediator. These could be discussed at a later stage.

The representative of Syria said that it was up to the parties on the spot to express their attitude regarding the Mediator's proposals. He considered that the Mediator had the full right to submit his proposals. The Mediator had not been sent to Palestine to enforce the General Assembly's resolution of November 29, which, in any case, had been abandoned by the General Assembly when it adopted the resolution of May 14, 1948.²⁷ Only a just solution would have a prospect of success and permanence.

The representatives of China, Argentina and Canada supported the United Kingdom draft resolution.

The President, speaking as the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R., said that in considering the United Kingdom proposal, one had to ask oneself to what end the present truce was being contemplated. A study of the proposals submitted by the Mediator provided ample answer to that question. Those proposals were aimed at the establishment of one federal state instead of two independent and sovereign states. Jerusalem, which should have been given an international status, was to be handed to the Arabs, and Transjordan was to be a component part of Palestine. All such schemes presented by the Mediator were harmful to the interests of the Jews and Arabs of Palestine, as well as to the interests of other Arab States of the Middle East, and were designed to safeguard the strategic, political and economic interests of certain Powers, particularly the United Kingdom. For these reasons, the delegation of the Ukrainian S.S.R., although favoring a truce, was unable to vote for the draft resolution and would abstain.

The United Kingdom draft resolution (S/867) was then adopted by 8 votes in favor, with 3 abstentions (Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), as follows:

"The Security Council,

"Taking into consideration the telegram from the United Nations Mediator dated 5 July 1948,

"Addresses an urgent appeal to the interested parties to accept in principle the prolongation of the truce for such period as may be decided upon in consultation with the Mediator."

At the 331st meeting on July 7, the President also brought to the attention of the Council a telegram from the United Nations Mediator (S/-869) stating that the truce should be prolonged with the definite understanding that food, water and other essential non-military supplies would be assured for Jerusalem.

After a brief exchange of views, it was decided that the President would inform the Mediator that the Council had approved the principle contained in his statement regarding supplies for Jerusalem.

The proposals (S/865) which the Mediator had presented to the parties on July 3 and 5 (see above) provided for an indefinite prolongation of the truce, or failing that, for a three-day extension in order to facilitate the evacuation of the United Nations Observers and their equipment. In addition, the Mediator had advanced certain proposals to be put into effect, if his appeal for a prolongation of the truce should be rejected by either or both sides. These provided for: (1) the demilitarization of Jerusalem; (2) an immediate cease-fire in Jerusalem to permit a final decision to be reached on the question of demilitarization; and (3) the demilitarization of the Haifa dock and port area and of the Haifa oil refineries.

The Provisional Government of Israel replied on July 7 (S/872) that it agreed to a thirty-day prolongation of the truce on the understanding that the conditions to be observed by all parties concerned should be substantially the same as those which governed the previous truce. The Provisional Government of Israel was likewise willing to accept the proposal for a three-day extension of the truce. Moreover, it was ready to discuss the demilitarization of Jerusalem and to accept an immediate cease-fire for Jerusalem. It did not favor, however, the demilitarization of the Haifa refineries, terminals and port areas.

By a telegram dated July 9 (S/876) the Mediator transmitted to the Secretary-General the text of the reply of the Political Committee of the League of Arab States to the Mediator's proposal (S/865) for a prolongation of the truce. In this reply it was stated that Arab apprehensions that the Zionists were sure to violate the truce conditions had proved well founded. The Zionists, it was charged, had continued aggression against Arabs in areas under their occupation and had steadily persisted throughout the truce in pursuing their policy of smuggling immigrants, arms and ammunition into the country; they had also occupied a number of villages and positions not in their possession at the time of the cease-fire. Despite these flagrant violations of the truce, the Arabs had refrained from resuming the fight immediately in order to permit the United Nations Mediator ample scope to carry out his endeavors to find a peaceful solution. Unfortunately the solution proposed by the Mediator, the Arab reply stated, based as it was on the continuation of the status quo and aiming at the partition of Palestine and the creation of a Jewish State, had been most disappointing to the Arabs. Further, the Zionists were steadily carrying on with the establishment and consolidation of their State and there was no hope of their co-operation in arriving at the desired peaceful settlement which was the aim of the truce. A prolongation of the truce in this manner would be detrimental to the Arab majority of Palestine. The communication from the Political Committee of the Arab League concluded that all these factors made it imperative for the Arab States not to agree to a prolongation of the truce under present conditions and to take all measures necessary to bring these conditions to an end.

Through the Secretary-General of the Arab League the Arab States informed the Mediator (see S/888, p.16; S/P.V.333, p.38) that the proposal for the demilitarization of Jerusalem as a whole was unacceptable and therefore also the proposal for an immediate cease-fire in the city for the purpose of deciding upon the demilitarization of Jerusalem. The Arabs, however, were ready to institute an immediate cease-fire in the Old City. The Arabs were also willing to consider the complete demilitarization of the entire city of Haifa, with Arab participation in the supervision of the city.

At its 332nd meeting, on July 8, the Council had before it the reply of the Provisional Government of Israel (S/872) to the Mediator's proposals cited above and a preliminary report from the Mediator (S/873) concerning the replies of both parties. The Council further had before it a cable (S/871) from the Provisional Government of Israel concerning its acceptance of the prolongation of the truce and its rejection by the Arabs. In this same cable the Provisional Government of Israel informed the Council that on July 8 at 1 A.M., G.M.T., an Egyptian force consisting of two armored columns and infantry had launched an attack against Israeli positions in southern Palestine and that a battle was currently in progress. The Provisional Government of Israel stated that it would be most interested to learn what the Security Council would decide in this emergency.

The representative of the United States welcomed Israel's acceptance of the proposal for a prolongation of the truce and remarked that, after one of the contesting parties had freely indicated its willingness to prolong the truce, the other party could not allege that a resort to force was an act of self-defence. Rejection of the truce appeal by the Arab States would leave the Security Council no other choice than to find that there was a threat to the peace under Article 39 of the Charter.

The representative of Syria stated that it was not difficult to understand Arab hesitation now to accept a prolongation of the truce, which was working against their interests and was permitting the Jews to strengthen their position and retain their spoils. Faced with such a situation and with the hostility of certain Powers, the Arabs had no other choice than to defend themselves. If, on the other hand, the Jews abandoned their present plans for the establishment of a separate Jewish State in Palestine, they would be assured of all rights on an equal footing with the rest of the population of Palestine.

The representative of Israel stated that Israel's decision to accept the Mediator's proposal was based on the Charter; its decision to defend itself was likewise based on the same premise. The case of aggression by the Arab States was beyond any doubt. When confronted with such a situation, the Council must discharge its responsibilities.

On July 9 the Mediator sent a further appeal (S/878) to all parties for a ten-day extension of the truce. He stated that he found it imperative to proceed to Lake Success for the purpose of presenting to the Security Council a full report on his negotiations and the Arab and Jewish replies to his several proposals. He planned, however, to return to the Near East within a matter of days for the purpose of resuming his efforts at mediation. In the interests of peace, therefore, he appealed to both parties with the utmost urgency to accept an unconditional cease-fire in Palestine for a period of ten days extending from 12 noon, G.M.T., July 10, 1948.

The Provisional Government of Israel accepted the new cease-fire proposal and informed the Mediator (S/884) that it was ready to issue the necessary orders as soon as it was notified by the Mediator that the proposal had been accepted by the Arab Governments and authorities concerned.

No reply to the Mediator's appeal for a ten-day cease-fire was received from the Arab States.²⁸

o. RESOLUTION OF THE COUNCIL OF JULY 15, 1948

At the 333rd meeting on July 13, the United Nations Mediator made an oral statement explaining and amplifying a written report (S/888) which he had on July 12 submitted to the Council, concerning his activities in connection with the truce and his negotiations for the peaceful adjustment of the future situation of Palestine. He concluded by stating that, for the time being, he had exhausted all the powers at his disposal, and that it was up to the Council to adopt measures to put an end to the renewal of hostilities in Palestine.

Without recommending or suggesting any course of action to the Council, the Mediator expressed the following thoughts which might be useful in the solution of the Palestinian problem. The parties must be persuaded that use of force in settling the dispute would not be tolerated; that an order for an immediate cease-fire in Palestine was indispensable; that an order for the demilitarization of Jerusalem should be issued immediately; that the Council must make clear its determination to apply the provisions of Articles 41 and 42 in case these orders were not complied with; that the cease-fire in Palestine and the demilitarization of Jerusalem might lead eventually to an armistice, at which time mediation could be effectively employed, and if found feasible, a plebiscite of the two peoples could be held; and that the Arab refugees who had fled from the Jewish-occupied areas should be ensured of the possibility of returning to their homes.

At the 334th meeting on July 13, the representative of Israel stated that he considered that the Arab States, in resuming their attack upon Israel, had committed an act of aggression within the meaning of Chapter VII. The Arabs, having rejected all the appeals made by the Council and the Mediator for prolongation of the truce, must assume responsibility for their action. On the other hand, the responsibility of the Security Council in the light of the provisions of the Charter and of its previous resolutions was quite clear. Since all previous efforts for pacific settlement under Chapter VI had failed, the Council must proceed now to take action to end the fighting by other means.

The representative of Iraq, who had asked to take part in the discussion at the 334th meeting and who was accordingly invited to the Council table, stated that in defending Palestine the Arabs were defending their honor, their national existence and their future security. The Arab States had no selfish designs in Palestine but had intervened in the highest interests of safeguarding the foundations of the peace of the Middle East. The Arab States welcomed the continuation of the efforts of the Mediator in seeking an equitable solution.

The representative of the United States said that the report submitted by the Mediator and the renewal of the hostilities made it imperative for the Council to take immediate action to stop the fighting. To that end he submitted the following draft resolution (S/890):

"The Security Council,

"Taking into consideration that the Provisional Government of Israel has indicated its acceptance in principle of a prolongation of the truce in Palestine; that the States members of the Arab League have rejected successive appeals of the United Nations Mediator, and of the Security Council in its resolution of 7 July 1948, for the prolongation of the truce in Palestine; and that there has consequently developed a renewal of hostilities in Palestine,

"Determines that the situation in Palestine constitutes a threat to peace within the meaning of Article 39 of the Charter;

"Orders the Governments and authorities concerned, pursuant to Article 40 of the Charter of the United Nations, to desist from further military action and to this end to issue cease-fire orders to their military and paramilitary forces, to take effect at a time to be determined by the Mediator, but in any event not later than three days from the date of the adoption of this resolution;

"Declares that failure by any of the Governments or authorities concerned to comply with the preceding paragraph of this resolution would demonstrate the existence of a breach of the peace within the meaning of Article 39 of the Charter requiring immediate consideration by the Security Council with a view to such further action under Chapter VII of the Charter as may be decided upon by the Council;

"Calls upon all Governments and authorities concerned [pursuant to Article 40 of the Charter]²⁹ to continue to co-operate with the Mediator with a view to the maintenance of peace in Palestine in conformity with the resolution adopted by the Security Council on 29 May 1948;

"Orders as a matter of special and urgent necessity an immediate and unconditional cease-fire in the City of Jerusalem to take effect twenty-four hours from the time of the adoption of this resolution and instructs the Truce Commission to take any necessary steps to make this cease-fire effective;

"Instructs the Mediator to continue his efforts to bring about the demilitarization of the City of Jerusalem without prejudice to the future political status of Jerusalem and to assure the protection of and access to the Holy Places, religious buildings and sites in Palestine;

"Instructs the Mediator to supervise the observance of the truce and to establish procedures for examining alleged breaches of the truce [since 11 June 1948];³⁰ authorizes him to deal with breaches so far as it is within his capacity to do so by appropriate local action; and requests him to keep the Security Council currently informed concerning the operation of the truce and when necessary to take appropriate action;

"Decides that, subject to further decision by the Security Council or the General Assembly, the truce shall remain in force in accordance with the present resolution and with that of 29 May 1948, until a peaceful adjustment of the future situation of Palestine is reached."³¹

The representative of Syria criticized the first

paragraph of the United States draft resolution for putting the blame for the renewal of fighting on the Arabs, thereby disregarding the reasons which had compelled them to reject an extension of the truce. The language used in that paragraph, accusing one party and justifying the other, did not help to secure peace for Palestine. The second paragraph, concerning the finding of the existence of a threat to international peace, was erroneous since it had never been proved that the present situation really constituted an international problem. The international status of Palestine must be clarified and to that end he submitted a draft resolution (S/894), which as slightly revised at the 340th meeting of the Council on July 27 (for discussion at the 340th meeting, see below) read as follows:

"The Security Council,

"Noting that the United Kingdom terminated its mandate on 15 May 1948, without having established any governmental organization to assume power of administration,

"Requests:

"The International Court of Justice, pursuant to Article 96 of the Charter, to give an advisory legal opinion as to the international status of Palestine arising from the termination of the mandate,

"The Secretariat and the parties concerned to supply the Court with the available documents and information on the subject.

"This request should be made provided it will not delay or impair the normal process of mediation."

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that his delegation accepted in general the United States draft resolution, which had become necessary in view of the recent developments. The first paragraph of the United States draft resolution contained a simple statement of fact that the Arab States had failed to consent to the prolongation of the truce. Circumstances compelled the Council to proceed to take action along the lines proposed by the United States delegation, and this proposal should not surprise anyone. He submitted two amendments (S/895). The first of these provided that reference should be made in the first paragraph of the resolution to "the other party" rather than to the "Provisional Government of Israel". The second amendment relating to the penultimate paragraph of the resolution was intended to authorize the Mediator to investigate breaches of the truce "since July 11, 1948," as the representative of the United Kingdom considered that it was important to investigate the responsibility for irregularities in the past.

At the 335th meeting on July 14 the representative of Belgium stated that his delegation had endorsed all previous appeals for prolongation of the truce in Palestine because it was convinced of the advantages of a peaceful settlement. He pointed out the difficulties inherent in carrying out any enforcement action pursuant to Chapter VII. Article 42 could not be applied under present circumstances except through the machinery provided for in Article 106, the application of which was extremely doubtful in the light of other events. Despite these and other reservations the Belgian delegation would support the United States draft resolution. He expressed support also for the Syrian draft resolution, considering that if the Arab States believed that a peaceful adjustment as contemplated in the General Assembly's resolution of May 14 could be more easily reached if certain legal aspects of the question were clarified, then the Security Council should endorse such a request.

The representative of Canada said that the Canadian delegation supported the United States draft resolution because it contained elements which were essential to bringing the fighting in Palestine to an end. In the present situation, the Council had no other alternative than to employ Chapter VII. He supported this resolution also in order to provide further opportunity for the Mediator to proceed with the task assigned to him by the General Assembly on May 14.

The representative of China stated that the juridical question pertaining to the status of Palestine was of considerable importance, and an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice would be extremely helpful. As regards the United States draft resolution, he considered that it offered the Arabs no alternative to war, nor a substitute for it. As the resolution was drafted, the truce was to be permanent and what remained was peaceful negotiation. Under the terms of the resolution one party would retain all its gains and would not be urged to start negotiations looking towards a compromise. The Chinese delegation therefore was not ready to accept the United States resolution as it stood.

The United Nations Mediator stated that any action on the part of the Security Council should make it absolutely clear that the United Nations would not permit the Palestine issue to be settled by force. The Council's action, moreover, should be so strong and so firm that neither party could afford to run the risk of ignoring or defying it. He stressed that if the truce were to be prolonged under conditions similar to those which governed the truce which expired on July 9, it would be necessary to have at the disposal of the Mediator within a matter of days a substantial number (i.e., about three hundred) observers, together with a considerable amount of equipment, especially for transport and communications. Referring to the United States draft resolution, he stated that he assumed that the truce called for would be on the same basis as the terms agreed upon for the truce which ended July 9, except for the provision relating to the internment in camps of men of military age who might enter Palestine during the truce. He did not think it would be fair to keep these men in camps for an indefinite period of time. He assured the Council, however, that other arrangements could be devised to ensure that these men would not be trained or mobilized to take part in the fighting, should the truce be broken.

As soon as a new truce went into effect the Mediator would proceed to Palestine to renew his efforts at mediation.

The representative of Egypt recalled that the Mediator's report recognized that the truce was working in favor of the Jewish side. He concurred with the statement made by the representative of China that the United States draft resolution offered the Arabs no alternative or substitute for war. All Arab States were in favor of peace, but they must be reasonably assured that such a peace would not amount to the surrender of their vital interests.

He also objected to the first paragraph of the United States draft resolution as inaccurate and unjust towards the Arabs, and also because of the terms used with regard to the Jewish side. The term "Provisional Government of Israel" had been insisted upon despite the contrary opinion of the majority of the Council. He urged the Council to support the Syrian draft resolution requesting an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legal status of Palestine. In conclusion he said that instead of condemning the Arabs as aggressors the Council should concentrate with the help of the Mediator upon modifying and completing truce conditions that would be acceptable to all parties.

At the 336th meeting on July 14, the representative of Israel stated that the use of force by the Arab States should certainly be described as aggression, now after the Arab refusal and the Jewish acceptance of various proposals for ceasing hostilities had been certified by the Mediator, so that no difficulty remained in determining the responsibility or initiative. The first paragraph of the United States draft resolution, however, while containing an accurate record of communications received by the Security Council, did not draw any conclusions from this record. The representative of Israel therefore considered that the paragraph in

Moreover, he stated, the resolution in its succeeding paragraphs defined as a neutral "threat to the peace" what actually was an act of aggression of one side. And, from this defect of principle, he stated, there ensued in the latter part of the resolution a false equilibrium between attack and defence and an implication that preparation for attack and defence should be equally controlled and impeded.

In particular the representative of Israel objected to the reference to the resolution of May 29, which he considered was obsolete and confusing because it took the Council back to the terms of Chapter VI of the Charter and thus established a barrier against the accurate differentiation between defence and attack, inasmuch as Chapter VI was relevant in case of a dispute between two parties and in terms of a situation for which guilt and responsibility could not be determined.

The Provisional Government of Israel, therefore, while it welcomed the fact that the cease-fire orders contained in the United States resolution were firm and unconditional, regretted that they should be obscured by accompanying appeals to renew arrangements which had been outstripped by events and especially outstripped by the fact of Arab aggression.

The representative of Israel announced that the Provisional Government of Israel had decided that if an order to cease fire were issued by the Security Council and were complied with by the Arab armies, the forces of Israel would be ordered to cease fire. The same would be the case if the Council ordered an unconditional cease-fire for Jerusalem.

The representative of France supported the United States draft resolution. He considered that it was based on the true facts of the situation and contained conclusions arising from the determination that a threat to the peace existed in Palestine. He disagreed with the Chinese representative that this resolution would offer nothing to the Arabs. He believed that if a truce were to be established in Palestine, the Mediator would be able to resume his efforts to secure an equitable settlement of the problem. He hesitated, at this stage, to support the Syrian draft resolution, although the French delegation had, in the past, supported similar proposals during the second regular session of the General Assembly. If such a proposal should be adopted, he stressed that it should be clearly understood that the mediation efforts would continue simultaneously with any procedure undertaken before the International Court of Justice.

The representative of Colombia considered that, since all previous efforts of the Mediator and the Council had failed, it was the Council's obligation to take another step to restore peace in Palestine. The United States draft resolution was adequate to meet this objective and would be supported by the Colombian delegation. It would support also the United Kingdom amendment to the first paragraph, since the question of recognition of new states was not one to be dealt with by the Council. The Colombian delegation would be prepared to support also, at the appropriate time, the Syrian draft resolution, as another procedure in the search for a peaceful solution to the problem.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. considered it essential to study how successful the last truce had been and what events had taken place while it lasted. In the course of the truce those who had started the hostilities in Palestine had in fact been preparing for the renewal of the fighting. The Mediator had advanced some suggestions which ignored previous decisions of the General Assembly regarding the future of Palestine and which, by reopening the question, had helped to aggravate the situation.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that his delegation would support any proposal which was designed to put an end to military action in Palestine and he therefore supported the appropriate paragraphs of the United States resolution, i.e., paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6. The United States resolution as a whole, however, was not fully satisfactory.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. objected to paragraph 5 of the United States resolution on the ground that it placed further responsibility for the settlement of the Palestine problem on the United Nations Mediator, although experience had shown that he was not in a position to solve it. The Council itself should take the responsibility for settling the problem.

Paragraph 7, which must be taken together with the explanations given by the Mediator, would be contrary to the decision adopted by the General Assembly on November 29, 1947, to place Jerusalem under a special regime. The representative of the U.S.S.R. submitted an amendment (S/896) to replace paragraph 7 by the following text:

"Proposes to both parties that they immediately withdraw their armed forces from Jerusalem, for which city the special Statute decided upon by the General Assembly should be put into effect."

Paragraph 8 was not acceptable to the U.S.S.R. representative because it again placed responsibility for the question of military observers on the Mediator. Past practice in this respect had led to the result that truce observation had been placed almost exclusively in the hands of United States citizens. The U.S.S.R. delegation considered this practice incorrect.

Finally the representative of the U.S.S.R. objected to paragraph 9 because it hinted at the possibility of the General Assembly's adopting another resolution regarding Palestine. This might be interpreted by some persons as paving the way for the reconsideration of the whole Palestine question at the next regular session of the General Assembly. It was the Security Council's task at the present time, however, to implement the decisions which had been adopted in the past.

The representative of China, amplifying his previous remarks, stated that both parties should be urged to make concessions, and, to that end, he proposed the following amendment (S/897) as an addition to the draft resolution:

"Calls on both parties to seek, in co-operation with the Mediator, a solution through mutual concessions both in regard to the political organization of Palestine and in regard to immigration."

The representative of Egypt considered that the first United Kingdom amendment to the United States draft resolution was inadequate as it failed to mention Jewish violations of the truce and only mentioned what was purported to be successive rejections by the Arabs of all the appeals of the Security Council and of the Mediator for a renewal of the cease-fire. There was but a single case, he stated, in which the Arabs had declined to renew or accept a cease-fire. The Arabs were still considering their answer to the Mediator's appeal for an unconditional cease-fire for ten days. The whole first paragraph of the United States draft resolution lacked equilibrium and disregarded Arab difficulties in renewing the truce. The Arabs should not be asked to accept the impossible without being given some assurance as to how this truce would be used. Past experience had shown, he said, that the Jews had profited substantially from the cease-fire. He criticized the U.S.S.R. representative's amendment and his statement, which appeared to disregard everything that had happened since November 29, 1947, and ignored completely the decisions taken by the Security Council and by the General Assembly on April 17, May 14 and May 29.

The Chinese amendment on the other hand, was, in the opinion of the Egyptian representative, a constructive step aimed at re-establishing an equilibrium in the United States resolution.

The representative of Argentina said that his delegation for the time being was opposed to the application of Chapter VII and to measures of coercion, but would vote for such measures as might lead to the suspension of hostilities. He supported unreservedly proposals concerning the safety of the city of Jerusalem.

The representative of Syria stated that so far all sacrifices were demanded from the Arabs, and the Jews were left free to act as they wished. The Jews should be put on the same level as the other side and pressed to make concessions in order to reach a settlement. In this spirit, he supported the Chinese amendment, which offered some opportunity for finding a just political settlement for Palestine.

At the 338th meeting on July 15, the representative of the United States, referring to the observations of the representative of the U.S.S.R. on the fifth and eighth paragraphs of the United States draft resolution, explained that his Government had complete confidence in the abilities of the Mediator to fulfil his task with the maximum possibility of success. With regard to the seventh paragraph he considered that the withdrawal of the forces of both parties from Jerusalem was implicit in the provisions for demilitarization. His delegation was prepared to re-phrase this paragraph if such an adjustment would satisfy the U.S.S.R. representative. With regard to the ninth paragraph he stated that it was clear that the Security Council and the General Assembly might, if circumstances required it, adopt some new resolutions on the Palestine question. The main objective of that paragraph, however, was to assure that the truce would remain in force until a peaceful adjustment of the future situation of Palestine had been reached.

The representative of Israel criticized the Chinese amendment, which implied that the Arabs should receive a reward for refraining from hostilities. Referring to certain questions of detail which had been raised in the course of the discussion concerning the contemplated truce, he stated that there was no point in considering the nature and the scope of the co-operation to be sought from all governments and authorities concerned under paragraph 5 of the United States draft resolution until the preliminary and fundamental question raised by this draft resolution had been determined, i.e., the question of the readiness of the Arab Governments to order a cease-fire. He had previously announced, he stated, the readiness of the Provisional Government of Israel to order a cease-fire and the world was now awaiting the Arab answer to that primary question.

The President, speaking as the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R., considered that the Mediator's actions and suggestions submitted to the parties were responsible to a large extent for the renewal of hostilities. They were in contradiction to the Assembly's resolution of November 29, 1947, and jeopardized the legitimate interests of one party. His latest suggestion regarding a plebiscite would be tantamount to the liquidation of Israel and, of course, could never be accepted.

He criticized United Kingdom and United States policy in Palestine, and stated that the Ukrainian S.S.R. delegation, which firmly supported the immediate cessation of military action in Palestine, could not accede to those paragraphs of the United States draft resolution which openly undermined the authority of the United Nations and its decisions. Nor could his delegation support the Syrian draft resolution, which would remove the Palestine question from the competence of the United Nations.

The Council then proceeded to vote on the United States draft resolution paragraph by paragraph.

The representative of Syria submitted an amendment (S/901) to replace the first paragraph of the United States resolution by the following text:

"Taking into consideration the report of the United Nations Mediator dated 12 July 1948 (S/888)."

This amendment was rejected by 4 votes in favor (Argentina, Belgium, China, Syria), with 7 abstentions. The United Kingdom amendment to the first paragraph of the United States resolution providing for the deletion of the reference to the "Provisional Government of Israel" was then rejected by a vote of 3 (Belgium, Colombia, United Kingdom) to 1 (Syria), with 7 abstentions. The first paragraph of the United States resolution was adopted by a vote of 8 to 1 (Syria), with 2 abstentions (Argentina, China).

The second paragraph was adopted by the same vote.

Concerning the third paragraph of the United States resolution, the Mediator expressed doubt as to whether it would be possible to have an adequate organization to supervise the truce set up within three days, the time limit which was fixed in the United States resolution for the coming into effect of the truce. The representative of Canada therefore submitted an amendment stating that the truce should "take effect at such early date as the Mediator, taking into account his responsibilities for supervising the observation of the truce, may determine and notify to the respective parties". This amendment was rejected by 5 votes in favor (Argentina, Belgium, Canada, China, Colombia) with 6 abstentions. The third paragraph of the United States resolution was then adopted by a vote of 9 to 1 (Syria), with 1 abstention (Argentina). The phrase "pursuant to Article 40 of the Charter of the United Nations" was first put to the vote separately at the request of the representative of Argentina and was adopted by a vote of 8 to 1 (Syria), with 2 abstentions (Argentina, China).

The fourth paragraph was adopted also by a vote of 8 to 1, with 2 abstentions.

The phrase "pursuant to Article 40 of the Charter" in the fifth paragraph of the resolution was again voted separately and was rejected by a vote of 6 to 1 (Syria), with 4 abstentions (Argentina, China, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). Subject to this amendment paragraph 5 was adopted by 9 votes in favor, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

Paragraph 6 was adopted unanimously.

The U.S.S.R. amendment to paragraph 7 (S/896) was rejected by a vote of 2 in favor (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.) to 1 (Syria), with 8 abstentions. The original text of the United States resolution was adopted by a vote of 8 in favor, with 3 abstentions (Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

Paragraph 8 of the United States resolution was adopted by a vote of 9 in favor, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), after the representative of the United States had accepted the United Kingdom amendment to insert a reference to breaches of the truce "since 11 June 1948".

The last paragraph of the United States draft resolution was adopted by a vote of 8 to 1, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

The Council then discussed the Chinese amendment to add an appeal to the parties to seek in cooperation with the Mediator a solution through mutual concessions both in regard to the political organization of Palestine and in regard to immigration (S/897). After some discussion the representative of China accepted an alternative text proposed by the representative of the United States, as follows:

"Reiterates the appeal to the parties contained in the last paragraph of its resolution of 22 May³² and urges upon the parties that they continue conversations with the Mediator in a spirit of conciliation and mutual concession in order that all points under dispute may be settled peacefully."

The Council adopted this text by a vote of 9 in favor, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

By 8 votes in favor, with 3 abstentions (Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), the Council finally adopted two additional paragraphs proposed by the Secretariat, which read as follows:

"Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Mediator with the necessary staff and facilities to assist in carrying out the functions assigned to him under the resolution of the General Assembly of 14 May and under this resolution; and

"Requests that the Secretary-General make appropriate arrangements to provide necessary funds to meet the obligations arising from this resolution."

The amended United States resolution (S/902) as a whole was then adopted on July 15, 1948, by a vote of 7 to 1 (Syria), with 3 abstentions (Argentina, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).³³

p. ACCEPTANCE BY THE PARTIES OF THE TRUCE RENEWAL

By a cablegram dated July 16 (S/903) the Foreign Minister of the Provisional Government of Israel informed the United Nations that the Provisional Government had decided to comply with the Security Council's request for a resumption of the truce in Palestine and for an immediate unconditional cease-fire in Jerusalem contained in the Council's resolution of July 15 (S/902). The Provisional Government of Israel would issue the necessary orders as soon as it was notified that all Arab Governments and authorities concerned had likewise accepted the truce in Palestine and the immediate cease-fire in Jerusalem and had issued orders for these arrangements to take effect.

In a cablegram dated July 17, 1948 (S/906), the Secretary-General of the Arab League informed the United Nations that as evidence of their great concern for the safety of the Holy Places the Arab States had decided to accept that part of the Security Council's resolution of July 15 concerning the cease-fire in Jerusalem.

A further telegram dated July 18 (S/908) from the Secretary-General of the Arab League, in reply to the Security Council's resolution of July 15, stated that the Arab Governments were surprised at the attitude the Security Council had adopted in regarding the situation in Palestine as a threat to the peace subject to the provisions of Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations and entailing the application of sanctions against the Arab States if they refused to cease fire in Palestine. The telegram went on to state that, had it not been for the military intervention of the Arab States in response to the appeal of the Palestinian Arabs to put an end to the anarchy caused by the Zionist terrorist bands, security throughout the Middle East would have been seriously jeopardized. To call the deliverers of Palestine, therefore, the aggressors and to describe the gradual restoration of order in Palestine by the Arab States as a breach of the peace and violation of the Charter would, in the opinion of the Arab States, be a complete reversal of the true position.

Repeating Arab charges that the Zionists had violated the previous truce and that they had benefited by it at the expense of the Arabs, the Secretary-General of the Arab League informed the Security Council that the Arab States felt that a renewed truce must be subject to conditions which would remedy the situation which obtained during the four-week truce. These conditions included the following: that all Jewish immigration should be stopped during the truce and that Arab refugees be enabled to return home and that their lives and property be guaranteed; also that the duration of the truce should be limited with a view to making a last effort to reach the peaceful solution desired.

The telegram then stated that in view of the fact that the Security Council persisted in considering the continuation of hostilities in Palestine to be a breach of the peace and because it expressly threatened to apply sanctions to the Arab States if they refused to cease fire, the Arab States had no other alternative than to accept the Security Council's resolution of July 15. The cessation of hostilities, however, would not bring true peace to that part of the world, the Arab States declared.

Finally the Arab States through the Secretary-General of the Arab League protested against the fact that the Security Council's resolution had "recognized the Zionist bands as a provisional government" and asserted that such recognition went beyond the limits of neutrality which the Security Council should observe in regard to the conflict in Palestine.

In accordance with paragraph 3 of the resolution of July 15, the Mediator informed the parties by a cablegram dated July 16 (S/907) that the cease-fire would take effect at 3 P.M., G.M.T., on July 18. In response, the Arab States and the Provisional Government of Israel informed the Mediator that they had issued the requisite cease-fire orders to their forces (S/907).

The Syrian proposal, to request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion regarding the post-Mandate status of Palestine (S/894),³⁴ was considered further by the Security

The representative of Syria declared that while there were undoubtedly political aspects to the Palestine question there was an even more fundamental legal issue regarding the exact status of Palestine in international law. The Court itself could refuse to consider the request for an advisory opinion if it agreed with those who thought the Palestine problem was first and foremost a political issue. Referring the question to the Court, moreover, need not at all delay the conciliatory efforts of the United Nations Mediator. As things now stood the Arabs felt that the United Nations had passed an illegal resolution on the partition of Palestine and they were defending what they regarded as an eminently just cause. But if, the representative of Syria concluded, the International Court of Justice should, contrary to expectations, hold that the Arabs were wrong, then, no doubt, "all the opposing and conflicting parties would submit and yield to that resolution".

The representative of Colombia proposed to add a new paragraph to the Syrian proposal to the effect that the request for an advisory opinion from the Court should be made provided it would not "delay or impair the normal process of mediation". With such a formula, he observed, the actual decision to approach the Court and the timing of that decision could, if desired, be delegated to the Mediator himself.

The Syrian representative accepted the Colombian amendment, and the amended draft resolution was supported by the representatives of Argentina, United Kingdom, China and Egypt.

Opposition to the proposal was expressed by the representatives of Canada, the United States, the U.S.S.R. and Israel. The representatives of Canada and the United States felt that the draft resolution could not but hinder and delay the process of mediation, thus serving no useful purpose. The representative of the U.S.S.R. saw in the Syrian proposal a "belated and ill-masked attempt to turn back the clock" on Palestine.

The representative of Israel held that the question of the existence of a State of Israel was not a question of law but rather of fact; besides, he stated, the question of statehood was irrelevant to the issue of aggression, since the Charter did not specify that an act of international aggression, to constitute aggression, need be directed against a state. Recalling that Syria had opposed an approach to the International Court of Justice in the disputes involving the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Indonesia and the treatment of Indians in South Africa, and further that all Arab States had withheld their support from the Assembly resolution of November 14, 1947, recommending more frequent recourse in general to the Court, the representative of Israel stated that the proposal to refer the Palestine question to the Court took on the aspect of a political manoeuvre which must inevitably further becloud the whole problem.

The Syrian resolution as amended by the representative of Colombia was then put to a vote. It failed of adoption, receiving 6 votes in favor, 1 against (Ukrainian S.S.R.), and 4 abstentions (Canada, France, U.S.S.R., United States).

q. QUESTIONS OF TRUCE VIOLATIONS

Dispersed throughout the Council's consideration of the Palestine question were discussions arising out of truce violations reported by the Mediator and allegations of such violations by the two parties concerned.

In a dispatch to the Council (S/955) on August 7, the Mediator reported that he had instructed his Observers to be guided by a number of considerations, the most important of which was that no party might unilaterally put an end to the truce, or take retaliatory measures for alleged or real local breaches of the truce, the Security Council alone being competent to decide what measures should be taken against truce violators. Should one party find itself under unprovoked attack, it should limit its self-defence to operations necessary to repulse such attack, pending action by the Observers. Whatever the result of operations undertaken in self-defence, the status quo ante must be restored.

The Mediator also reported that the situation in Jerusalem was "particularly tense", with sniping continuing. He stated that he had urged both parties to begin negotiations aimed at demilitarizing Jerusalem, under the auspices of United Nations representatives. Such negotiations would soon start.

In a subsequent communication (S/961) dated August 12, the Mediator informed the Council that he had requested both Arab and Jewish commanders in Jerusalem to issue the following order:

"Firing of any kind even in answer to firing by the other party shall be forbidden as from Friday, 13 August, at 4:00 A.M. Arab time (6 A.M. Jewish time)."

The Arabs had accepted this request, and the Mediator expected a Jewish answer the following day (August 13). The Mediator added:

"Should the request not be complied with by one party after it has been accepted, responsibilities will be easier to assess. It results from impartial reports that the Jews have generally speaking though not on all occasions been the more aggressive party since the renewal of the truce. Reports received from United Nations observers concerning last night's [August 11/12] firing support this appreciation, since firing began from the Jewish side."

As regards the water supply of Jerusalem, the Mediator, in the same report, declared that repairs to the Latrun water pumping station, then "in United Nations hands", were to start at once and were expected to be completed in two days.

The Mediator declared that he had informed the Provisional Government of Israel of his decision that the Arab inhabitants of the villages of Ajanjul and Buweiriya must be permitted to return to their homes unarmed, following the immediate evacuation of both places, which, investigation had shown, had been occupied by Jewish forces following the commencement of the second truce. He expected strongly that the Provisional Government of Israel would accept this decision.

Shortly afterwards, i.e., on the same date of August 12, the Mediator cabled (S/963) that the Latrun pumping station had been completely destroyed during the night of August 11/12, by Arab irregulars, according to first reports. Pending an investigation now in progress, he had authorized the Provisional Government of Israel to postpone compliance with his decision regarding the Israeli evacuation of Ajanjul and Buweiriya villages in the Latrun sector.

The subject matters dealt with in these communications were discussed by the Council at its 349th meeting on August 13. Eventually the Council decided, by a vote of 8 to 1, with 2 abstentions, to authorize the President to dispatch a message to the Mediator informing him that the Security Council had taken note of the telegram of August 12, concerning the destruction of the water pumping station at Latrun, and asking him to make all efforts and take steps to ensure water supply to the population of Jerusalem.³⁵

The negative vote was cast by the representative of Syria, who explained that he disagreed with the practice of singling out from the Mediator's communications the one topic of the Jerusalem water supply, rather than offer the Council's comments on all the important matters raised in the Mediator's dispatches, as, for example, the demilitarization of Jerusalem. The representatives of China and Argentina abstained, the former explaining that he regarded the dispatch of the message to the Mediator as superfluous.

The question of the truce, as such, was broached at the 352nd meeting on August 18, by the representative of the United States. Noting rumors that one or the other of the two parties to the Palestine dispute was considering an abrogation of the truce, he stated that, in the view of his Government, the truce could be terminated only by the Security Council and not by one of the states or a group of the states concerned. He was not aware, the United States representative continued, of any circumstances which would incline the Security Council to revoke or modify its resolution of July 15 unless it should be necessary to order measures under Chapter VII against any party which repudiated the truce and resorted to war.

He also emphasized that both parties were under obligation to co-operate with the Mediator regarding the demilitarization of Jerusalem. Finally, he stated his belief that the Security Council would also wish to remind all governments in the world that they were called upon by the resolution of July 15, which included a reference to the resolution of May 29, to co-operate in preventing breaches of the truce which might occur through shipments of war material to Palestine.

The representative of Canada said the Council could not let pass unnoticed a statement released to the press by the representative of Israel as coming from the Israeli Foreign Minister on August 13 which contained the suggestion that the truce in Palestine might not be continued. In this connection the Canadian representative associated himself with the remarks of the representative of the United States, as did also the representative of Belgium.

Commenting upon these statements, the representative of Israel declared, inter alia, that the Provisional Government of Israel had advocated the early replacement of the truce by peace negotiations. So long as the truce was in force, however, the Provisional Government of Israel would observe it in strict accordance with the resolution of July 15. At the same time, the Provisional Government of Israel would urge the Council to investigate the merit of fixing an early time limit, at the end of which the whole situation of the truce might be reconsidered. Before the expiration of this time limit every influence should be brought to bear upon the parties concerned to open direct and peaceful negotiations. His Government, the representative of Israel said, was most anxious and willing to begin peace negotiations at any time.

At the 354th meeting on August 19, the Council examined a cable dated August 18 from the Mediator (S/977), which stated, inter alia, that not only had firing practically never ceased in Jerusalem, but the situation there was gradually getting out of hand. Under prevailing conditions it was difficult to assess responsibilities because both parties had come deliberately to ignore the authority of the United Nations. Further deterioration of the situation in Jerusalem might lead to a general resumption of hostilities. The Mediator therefore requested that the Security Council take prompt action with a view to giving effect to its resolution of July 15. Should the action of the Security Council take the form of warning, he suggested that it should clearly be pointed out to the parties

(1) that responsibility would be assessed whether violations were due to members of opposing armies or to dissident elements or irregulars;

(2) that each party had a duty to bring to justice its own dissident elements and irregulars when they violated the truce;

(3) that reprisals and retaliations were not permitted;

(4) that no party would be allowed to gain by any violation of truce.

In connection with this cable from the Mediator, the representatives of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States jointly introduced a draft resolution (S/981) embodying the Mediator's suggestions. The resolution read:

"The Security Council,

"Taking into account communications from the Mediator concerning the situation in Jerusalem,

"Directs the attention of the governments and authorities concerned to the Resolution of the Security Council of 15 July 1948, and

"Decides pursuant to its Resolution of 15 July 1948, and so informs the governments and authorities concerned, that:

"(a) Each party is responsible for the actions of both regular and irregular forces operating under its authority or in territory under its control;

"(b) Each party has the obligation to use all means at its disposal to prevent action violating the Truce by individuals or groups who are subject to its authority or who are in territory under its control;

"(c) Each party has the obligation to bring to speedy trial and in case of conviction to punishment, any and all persons within their jurisdiction who are involved in a breach of the Truce;

"(d) No party is permitted to violate the Truce on the ground that it is undertaking reprisals or retaliations against the other party;

"(e) No party is entitled to gain military or political advantage through violation of the Truce."

Referring to sub-paragraph (d) of the joint draft resolution, the representative of Israel stated his belief that if this provision was to be interputed as not being in conflict with an earlier ruling of the Mediator, i.e., that a party finding itself under unprovoked attack should limit its self-defence to operations necessary to repulse such attack pending action by United Nations Observers, he shared the belief of the sponsors of the proposal that the substance of the joint draft resolution was not controversial. In passing he welcomed the shift of the Mediator's opinion regarding the responsibility for the hostilities in Jerusalem, noting that whereas the Mediator had previously (see above) inclined to the view that the Jews had proved to be more aggressive, he now held both parties equally responsible.

The representative of the United States confirmed the correctness of the Israeli representative's understanding of the sub-paragraph (d) of the draft resolution.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. stated that he could not see much point in adopting the draft resolution. The Mediator's cable, he declared, showed the failure of that United Nations official. The present draft resolution would not change matters greatly.

The representative of the U.S.S.R., indicating similar skepticism, declared that he could accept the resolution through sub-paragraph (b), but could not support sub-paragraphs (d) and (e), which were needlessly repetitious of earlier resolutions, while sub-paragraph (c) might be thought to be in conflict with the "domestic jurisdiction" clause of the Charter (Article 2, paragraph 7).

The representative of Egypt held that the draft resolution erred mostly by omission inasmuch as the Zionists had received huge amounts of armaments and other military assets, in violation of the truce; yet the ban on such contraband material was not singled out for emphasis in the proposal; also it contained nothing about Arab refugees, despite the urgency of their plight.

Upon being submitted to the vote, the draft resolution up to and including sub-paragraph (b) was adopted by a vote of 10 to 0, with 1 abstention (Syria). Sub-paragraphs (c) and (e) were approved by separate but identical votes of 8 to 0, with 3 abstentions (Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), while sub-paragraph (d) was approved by a vote of 7 to 0, with 4 abstentions (Colombia, Syria, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). The draft resolution as a whole was declared approved, without being submitted to a vote as such.

The representative of Syria declared that he had abstained from voting because he had opposed the resolution of July 15, to which the present resolution referred, and also because it made no mention of refugees nor of the demilitarization of Jerusalem, although the Mediator had indicated the importance of those two points, which the Syrian representative himself considered to be essential to the preservation of the truce and to any final peaceful adjustment of the future situation in Palestine.

Following the adoption of the resolution, the representative of China, referring to a communication from the Mediator (S/979) dated August 19, dealing with the demilitarization of Jerusalem, asked whether the Council was content to accept without comment the statement of the Mediator that he entertained serious doubts whether demilitarization could be obtained in the near future.

The Mediator's doubts were due to his belief that the difficulties of reaching agreement on the demilitarization resulted more from political reasons relating to the future status of Jerusalem than from mere military considerations regarding the present conflict.

The representative of China suggested that the Council might wish to request the Mediator to redouble his efforts to bring about the demilitarization of Jerusalem in spite of all the difficulties. He was supported by the representative of France, and there was no opposition to the Chinese suggestion.

The Council resolved not to meet again, except in an emergency, until its members reconvened in Paris, in September.

A further meeting—the 356th—was, however, convened on August 30 by the President to consider a communication (S/985) from the Foreign Minister of the Provisional Government of Israel, requesting an interpretation of sub-paragraphs (d) and (e) of the resolution adopted on August 19 (see above).³⁶ After an exchange of views, the Council failed to adopt the agenda, only two members (U.S.S.R., Ukrainian S.S.R.) voting in favor, the remaining nine members abstaining on the ground that the agenda did not warrant emergency consideration. Before the meeting was adjourned, the Council was informed that two French observers in Palestine—Captain Jennel of the French Air Force and Lieutenant-Colonel Queru of the French Army—had been killed at Gaza (Palestine) on August 28. The Council expressed its sympathy and condolences to the families of the two officers and to the French Government.

r. QUESTION OF REFUGEES

At the 343rd meeting of the Security Council on August 2, 1948, the representative of the United ³⁶ The Council convened at this meeting also to consider a communication (S/987) from the United Nations Commission for India and Pakistan, requesting the appointment of military observers in Kashmir.

Kingdom stated that his Government felt strongly that there were two aspects of the Palestine problem that directly affected the chances of finding a solution for it: the fate of the large number of displaced persons in Europe for whom no home had yet been found; and the existence of a large body of Arab refugees in Palestine itself and in adjacent countries.

While there remained in European displaced persons camps some 200,000 Jews, the number of Arab refugees was estimated to be at least 250,000, with other estimates ranging as high as 550,000. Of the Arab refugees about four fifths had sought shelter in Transjordan, Lebanon, Syria and Iraq, the remainder in Arab-held parts of Palestine.

The representative of the United Kingdom hoped the Security Council would impress upon the Mediator the gravity and importance of the Arab refugee problem. Although the Mediator was aware of the matter and had begun to give it his consideration, it might strengthen his hand if the Council were to lay special emphasis upon it.

The question of short-term relief for the Arab refugees, the representative of the United Kingdom considered, was particularly urgent. As a first step, he therefore suggested that the Council ask the International Red Cross to send a small party at once to Palestine and the neighboring Arab States to examine the scope of the problem and formulate recommendations. Should these recommendations, as might be anticipated, include a request for additional relief funds, the United Kingdom would be willing to provide its due share, on the assumption that other countries would also make appropriate contributions. In fact, the Government of the United Kingdom would be ready to advance up to £100,000 immediately in order to enable the investigation to start without delay or to provide urgently needed tents and medical supplies.

The President thought the Council would wish to obtain information from the Mediator in connection with the questions raised by the representative of the United Kingdom, adding that he deemed it appropriate to transmit the text of the latter's statement to the Mediator. It might then prove possible for the Mediator to solve the question with the participation of Israeli and Arab authorities, obviating the need for further Council consideration.

The United Kingdom representative indicated that this suggestion was acceptable to him, but hoped that in forwarding his own statement to the Mediator, the Council might wish to endorse what he had said about the grave importance of the question of Arab refugees.

The representative of Syria agreed that the problem of Arab refugees stood in "very intimate connection and relation with the peace and security in Palestine". The majority of the refugees, he stated, had been expelled from their homes before May 15, i.e., before the termination of the Mandate and before the Arab States had "interfered militarily in Palestine". Indeed the Arab States had expressly stated that one of the reasons for their interference had been their desire to bring about the repatriation of those refugees. He agreed with the suggestion of the President to call the Mediator's attention to the statement and suggestions made by the representative of the United Kingdom.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R., while agreeing to the President's suggestion, further suggested that requests for information, both as regards Arab and Jewish displaced persons, including Jews in camps on the island of Cyprus, be addressed to the governments and authorities concerned.

The representative of Israel stated that he intended to raise the question of the Cyprus internees before the Council. As for the Arab refugees, he said the matter was being discussed between the Mediator and the Provisional Government of Israel. The latter had already explained why, in its view, a full settlement of that problem was not feasible during the truce when a renewal of hostilities might still be expected.

The representative of France said he had no objection to the course suggested by the President and the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. He considered, however, that in communicating with the Mediator about the United Kingdom statement, the impression should not be created that he would be expected to deal with the question of refugees as a matter of priority. The question was part and parcel of the whole settlement which the Mediator was supposed to seek.

The representative of Egypt recalled that the Mediator in reply to a question had stated on July 14 in the Security Council that, in his opinion, "there should not be any conditions whatsoever for the Arab refugees to return to their homes, if they wish to do so". Apparently this view was being challenged by the "Zionist spokesman" and the representative of France, who had referred to the Arab refugee problem as being related to other aspects of the Palestine truce. The representative of Egypt held that the Mediator had been right on this point, and that there could be no question of attaching any conditions to the return of the Arab refugees who had been driven from their homes.

The Egyptian representative also referred to the "driving away from the table of the Security Council the representative of the Arabs of Palestine". This, he held, was no mere point of procedure, but one of substance: to justify the continued practice³⁷ which had led to the absence of the representative of the Arab Higher Committee on the grounds that it had become "established" appeared to be untenable. The representative of Egypt regarded this question as still open, saying he would welcome an opportunity of discussing it.

The President denied that the representative of the Arab Higher Committee had ever been driven from the Council table; on the contrary, he had been, and was being, invited to attend every meeting on the Palestine question, and if he chose not to do so, the fault was not the Council's.

At the conclusion of the 343rd meeting the President, summing up the questions which had been raised, stated that "information should be requested from the Governments and authorities concerned and of the Mediator regarding all four items which were raised today; these being the displaced persons of Jewish nationality in Europe, Arab refugees, and the matter of the Jews detained by the United Kingdom authorities in a camp in Cyprus".

Replies to letters sent by the Acting Secretary-General on August 3, 1948, requesting information regarding (i) Jewish displaced persons in Europe, (ii) Arab displaced persons in Palestine and adjacent countries, (iii) assistance to such Arab displaced persons and (iv) the Cyprus internees, were received from the United Nations Mediator (S/948, S/964), the Arab Higher Committee (S/957) and the Provisional Government of Israel (S/946, S/949, S/965). The Council also received a communication (S/962) from the representative of the United Kingdom stating that his Government had notified the Mediator of its readiness to provide for the relief of Arab refugees tentage and medical supplies from British military stocks in the Middle East up to £100,000.

The positions of those who replied to the four questions may be summed up briefly as follows:

(i) Jewish Displaced Persons.

In the opinion of the Arab Higher Committee the problem of the refugees in Europe had no relation to the Palestine problem.

In the opinion of the Provisional Government of Israel, Jewish refugees in Europe, estimated to number 250,000, should be permitted to immigrate into Palestine.

The Mediator did not comment upon the question of Jewish displaced persons in Europe in his reply to the Security Council.

(ii) and (iii) Arab Displaced Persons and Assistance to Them.

According to the Arab Higher Committee, some 550,000 Palestinian Arabs had been forced to leave their homes as a result of Jewish attacks. About 300,000 Arabs from Palestine had sought refuge in neighboring Arab countries; the remaining 250,000 were still living in Palestine. The great majority of these refugees were penniless and not in a position to earn their livelihood.

According to the Provisional Government of Israel, the number of Arab refugees was about 300,000. Most of these, it was stated, had left Palestine during recent months in the wake of the war launched against Israel by neighboring Arab States, partly in obedience to direct orders by local Arab military commanders, and partly as a result of the panic campaign spread among Palestinian Arabs by the leaders of the invading Arab States. Before a peace settlement was reached, Israel would be unable to readmit Arab refugees apart from exceptional cases on compassionate grounds, as their return would create a most acute security and economic problem. The refugee question could come up for a permanent constructive solution only as part of the general peace settlement and with due regard to Jewish counter-claims for the destruction of life and property caused by Arab aggression as well as to the position of Jewish communities in Arab countries and other relevant considerations.

The United Nations Mediator expressed the view that the right of the refugees to return to their homes at the earliest practicable date should be affirmed. At the same time he stated that he was taking active steps to give prompt aid to "the refugee victims of this conflict", and would call upon all appropriate international organizations and agencies for assistance.

(iv) The Cyprus Internees.

The Arab Higher Committee stated that the refugees in Cyprus were illegal Jewish immigrants who had tried to land in Palestine during the period of the Mandate. They should be returned to their country of origin or place of embarkation. Moreover, during the past year all women and children previously held in Cyprus had been admitted to Palestine. Those who remained were able-bodied young men who were purposely picked from militarily trained groups. It would be a violation of the letter and spirit of the Security Council's truce resolution to allow them to proceed to Palestine in order to increase Jewish manpower and fighting personnel.

According to the Provisional Government of Israel, the refusal to permit the 7,500 men between the ages of 18 and 45 years held in Cyprus to proceed to Palestine was contrary to the terms of the Security Council's resolution of May 29, which allowed men of military age to enter the country provided that they were not conscripted nor trained for military service. The Mediator had not requested detention of these refugees as essential for the maintenance of the truce. The Provisional Government of Israel therefore protested against this "lawless procedure" and breach of the truce agreement.

The Mediator expressed the opinion that the admission to Palestine of Jewish refugees detained in Cyprus must be governed by general rules in force concerning the observation of the truce, particularly regarding non-admission of fighting personnel and conditions for the admission of men of military age.

At the 349th meeting of the Security Council on August 13, the representative of Egypt and Syria supported the views contained in the reply of the Arab Higher Committee, and urged the Council to devote greater and more urgent attention to these matters. The representative of Israel elaborated upon the views expressed in the reply of the Provisional Government with regard to Cyprus. He challenged the statement by the representative of the United Kingdom that British policy concerning Cyprus was entirely consonant with the relevant terms of the successive truce resolutions of the Council.

The question of the Arab refugees was again discussed in the course of the Council's 352nd meeting on August 18. The representative of the U.S.S.R. declared that the responsibility for the plight of the Arab refugees must be shared in varying degrees by the United Kingdom, the United States and the Arab States, because of their overt or covert attempts to undermine the General Assembly's partition resolution of November 29, 1947. The refugee problem, he considered, could only be solved by implementing this resolution.

The representative of Egypt expressed the hope that the Security Council would do something about the refugee problem very soon so as not to allow "the seeds of trouble to take root and grow".

The representative of Belgium considered that the Security Council would fail in its duty if it did not try to settle this question in the very near future.

In the course of the 354th meeting on August 19, the Security Council agreed to a suggestion of the representative of the United Kingdom that the records of the Council's discussion on the displaced persons aspect of the Palestine problem be transmitted at once to the Economic and Social Council and the International Refugee Organization. The United Kingdom representative stated that his Government would shortly submit to the Council in writing certain details and figures showing what the United Kingdom had done to shoulder its share of the common burden. He urged the Council to take prompt action to furnish relief to both Arab and Jewish displaced persons lest the difficulties of the Council's task in Palestine be aggravated.

s. ABDUCTION OF FIVE BRITISH NATIONALS

In a message dated July 14, 1948 (S/898), the Palestine Truce Commission informed the Security Council that the Acting Manager and four other members of the staff of the Jerusalem Electric Corporation, all of them British nationals, had been arrested on July 6 by members of the dissident Irgun Zvai Leumi who had posed as Jewish Army personnel and that these five men had been held ever since, despite protests by the Chairman of the Truce Commission.

The Irgun Zvai Leumi was said to be collecting evidence of spying against the five British members of the Jerusalem Electric Corporation, while Jewish authorities were reported to be negotiating to have them handed over to the government at Tel Aviv.

If the Jews would not release the five staff members within a reasonable time, then the Commission would, it had informed the Jews, ask the Security Council to take such action as it deemed appropriate.

(In May 1948 the members of the Truce Commission had agreed to afford the protection of their respective flags to the Jerusalem Electric Corporation's local power station. The five officials were said to have been arrested on the premises of that power station, thus involving the question of United Nations authority.)

In a subsequent message (S/905), dated July 16, the Truce Commission informed the Security Council that no satisfactory reply had been received from the Jews and the Commission therefore was now handing the problem over to the Security Council for appropriate action.

In a further communication (S/915, p. 3(VI)), the Chairman of the Truce Commission, under date of July 17, informed the Council that the five abducted men had been turned over to the Commandant of the Jewish forces at Jerusalem the previous day, presumably to be taken immediately to Tel Aviv for trial by a military court.

The question of the abduction of the five British nationals was raised at the 340th meeting of the Security Council, on July 27, by the representative of the United Kingdom. He declared that his Government regarded the incident as being of urgent importance and one which constituted an affront to the prestige of the Truce Commission, and, through it, of the United Nations. Among the issues raised by the matter, he said, was the question of whether the Jewish authorities in Tel Aviv claimed to exercise, or did in fact exercise, any control at all over organizations such as the Irgun Zvai Leumi. If so, then the Council would surely be entitled to ask the Jewish representative whether his authorities could give any promise that the security of individuals of whatever nationality, and the inviolability of premises protected by the special authority of the United Nations, would be respected in the future. He also wished to know if the Jewish authorities in Tel Aviv had authorized the abductions, before or after they occurred, and whether they were now condoning them in any way.

The representative of the United Kingdom then presented a draft resolution (S/923) which read as follows:

"The Security Council,

"Having considered the messages sent by the Palestine Truce Commission on 14, 15 and 17 July on the subject of the five employees of the Jerusalem Electric Corporation abducted by the Irgun Zvai Leumi,

"Supports the demand of the Truce Commission for the release of the five men and calls for their surrender to the Truce Commission in Jerusalem."

The representative of Israel stated that the main concern of the Provisional Government of Israel following the taking into custody of the five men "by certain forces in Jerusalem", had been to bring these men under "authorized control". The sole point at issue, it appeared to him, was whether jurisdiction to investigate the conduct of the five detained men belonged to the Provisional Government of Israel or to the Truce Commission. He doubted that the Security Council could, at this stage, pronounce itself on this conflict of jurisdiction.

While the Provisional Government of Israel had not been in any way associated with the arrest of the five men, nevertheless, once they had come within its custody and jurisdiction, it appeared that the charges against them could not be entirely and immediately ignored, and constituted a prima facie case for further investigation.

As to the Truce Commission, the Provisional Government of Israel was of the opinion that it had no judicial rights or functions in any part of Palestinian territory, that it could not confer immunity on anybody not in its direct employ and that it was not competent to exercise functions of custody or investigation.

The wisest course under the circumstances would be, the representative of Israel stated, to allow the judicial processes now under way to take their course, the more so since they were proceeding in public. In this connection he informed the Council that when the five men had appeared before a civil court in Tel Aviv on July 27, the court had ruled that unless more specific charges could be adduced within a brief period of time, the case of the prosecution would be deemed insufficient and the men would be released forthwith.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. held that the matter was one within the domestic jurisdiction of Israel and was therefore not within the Council's competence.

The representative of the United States, noting that the safety of the five men now seemed assured, since they were in the custody of the Provisional Government of Israel and could rely on fair judicial processes, stated that the Security Council might feel that it was not necessary to adopt the resolution suggested by the representative of the United Kingdom either for the purpose of assuring the safety of these individuals or for the purposes of maintaining the authority and prestige of the Truce Commission.

The representative of Syria expressed his full support of the United Kingdom draft resolution, which he considered very moderate and which, he stated, he had never thought would meet with any opposition from any Council member. A similar view was expressed by the representative of Belgium.

The representative of the U.S.S.R., sharing the views of the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R., held that the matter was outside the Council's competence, being entirely within the domestic jurisdiction of the State of Israel. Therefore, he said, he could not support the United Kingdom proposal.

The representative of France, declaring that he was not in a position to vote on the United Kingdom draft resolution, asked that a decision thereon be postponed. He stated that the matter offered some grave difficulties from a legal point of view, one of these being that it did not seem to be the role of the Truce Commission to grant protection to British subjects any more than, for instance, to French subjects, or Ukrainian subjects or any other citizens.

The representative of the United Kingdom declared that he had no objection to a postponement of a vote on his proposal, as suggested by the representative of France.

At the 343rd meeting of the Council on August 2, two communications bearing on the question were read. The first (S/936/Corr.1) was a letter from the representative of the Provisional Government of Israel, stating that the law governing the trial of the five men was that in force during the British Mandate, since no new enactments had been made "relevant to this branch of legislation" and enumerating in detail the measures which the courts of Israel were applying.

The letter also stated that the Provisional Government of Israel regarded this case as being sub judice, and accordingly considered that it would be contrary to legal principle to comment on the merits of the case itself.

The second communication (S/937) likewise from the representative of the Provisional Government of Israel, informed the Council that, contrary to what had been stated in the previous discussion, it had now been established that the five men had not been taken from the power station of the Jerusalem Electric Corporation itself, i.e., from the building under the protection of the Truce Commission, but from their nearby private dwellings. This, the representative of Israel declared, made it clear that no issue affecting the status of the Truce Commission or of United Nations premises arose at all.

Both the representatives of the United Kingdom and of the Provisional Government of Israel declared that they had no further information on the question of the five British nationals, and the Council decided to defer consideration until a later date, after the representative of the United Kingdom, in reply to a question asked by the President and arising out of a statement by the Ukrainian representative that the latter would like to see the question dropped from the agenda, declared that he was not prepared to withdraw either his draft resolution or the matter to which it referred.

t. TRIBUTES TO COUNT BERNADOTTE AND COLONEL SEROT

On September 17, 1948, the United Nations Mediator in Palestine, Count Folke Bernadotte, and United Nations Observer Colonel André Serot (France) were assassinated in a part of the City of Jerusalem which was under Jewish control.

The following day, at the 358th meeting of the Security Council, the President stated that he felt sure that the Council as a whole would wish to express its horror at this senseless and disastrous crime. He added that it was a tragedy for the world as a whole that death had cut short the work which Count Bernadotte had so devotedly begun. The task of the United Nations in Palestine, he continued, remained to be done, and there could be no question of relinquishing it. It must rather be the Council's duty to redouble its efforts to bring peace to that distracted and desecrated land and to build on the foundation which Count Bernadotte had already laid.

In the name of the Security Council, the President said, he would send a message of condolence to Countess Bernadotte and members of the Count's family, as well as to the King and Government of Sweden. He also proposed to arrange, in consultation with the Secretary-General, for the proper representation of the Security Council at the funeral of Count Bernadotte in Stockholm.

The President also extended the sympathy of the Security Council in the loss of Colonel Sérot to the French representative and, through him, to Colonel Serot's family and to the French Government.

The President informed the Council that with his approval the Secretary-General had sent two telegrams (S/1003). The first of these empowered Ralph Bunche, of the Secretariat, to assume full authority over the Palestine Mission until further notice. The second requested General Aage Lundstrom, Chief of Staff of Truce Supervision, to make the fullest investigation of the circumstances of the shooting of Count Bernadotte, and also to cable immediately all details in his possession and to continue sending by urgent cable every additional detail as soon as received. The President further proposed, and the Council agreed, that copies of these two telegrams be sent to the Chairman of the Security Council's Truce Commission in Jerusalem, together with a request that he give his fullest co-operation to Mr. Bunche and to General Lundstrom.

The Secretary-General stated that the murder of Count Bernadotte and Colonel Sérot could only be interpreted as a direct act of attempted interference with the effort of the United Nations to settle the Palestine question. Praising the work of both men, the Secretary-General said their murder demanded an answer to the question of what should be done in future to protect those who served the United Nations as its representatives in such operations as the one which it had been required to undertake in connection with Palestine. No steps must be left untaken to prevent future recurrences of such tragedies. Sentiments similar to those expressed by the President and Secretary-General were also voiced by all the members of the Council.

The representative of Argentina proposed the following draft resolution (see S/P.V.358), which was unanimously adopted by the Security Council:

"The Security Council,

"Deeply shocked by the tragic death of the United Nations Mediator in Palestine, Count Folke Bernadotte, as the result of a cowardly act which appears to have been committed by a criminal group of terrorists in Jerusalem while the United Nations representative was fulfilling his peace-seeking mission in the Holy Land,

"Resolves

"First, to request the Secretary-General to keep the flag of the United Nations at half-mast for a period of three days;

"Second, to authorize the Secretary-General to meet from the working capital fund all expenses connected with the death and burial of the United Nations Mediator;

"Third, to be represented at the interment by the President or a person whom he may appoint for the occasion."

Following the adoption of that resolution, the Security Council members, prior to adjourning the meeting, stood for a moment in silent tribute to the memory of Count Bernadotte.

7. The Czechoslovak Question

a. COMMUNICATION DATED MARCH 12, 1948, FROM THE REPRESENTATIVE OF CHILE

By letter dated March 12, 1948 (S/694), the representative of Chile informed the Secretary-General that his Government had noted that, on March 10, 1948, Jan Papanek, permanent representative of Czechoslovakia, had sent a communication to the Secretary-General. Mr. Papanek had alleged that the political independence of Czechoslovakia had been violated by the threat of the use of force by the U.S.S.R., and that this situation endangered the maintenance of international peace and security and should be brought to the attention of the Security Council. The Secretary-General had decided that this letter could not be treated as a request from a Member Government. In accordance with Article 35, paragraph 1, the representative of Chile, therefore, requested the Secretary-General to refer to the Security Council the question raised in Mr. Papanek's letter. In the name of his Government, he requested that the Council should investigate the situation in accordance with Article 34.

b. INCLUSION OF THE COMMUNICATION IN THE AGENDA

agenda for the 268th meeting on March 17, 1948.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. protested categorically against the inclusion in the agenda of the Security Council of the Chilean application. He declared that discussion of the application would constitute gross interference in the internal affairs of Czechoslovakia and be a violation of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter of the United Nations. No one had any right, he stated, to interfere in the internal affairs of other countries or to foist upon any people a particular conception of governmental organization. The Chilean statement, he charged, was an attempt at precisely this type of interference; it contained not a single fact and was completely unfounded. It merely repeated the ridiculous assertions of those American newspapers which had made it their business to spread slanderous inventions about the U.S.S.R. and the other countries of Eastern Europe, including Czechoslovakia, and the impotent and senseless utterings of the former representative of Czechoslovakia to the United Nations—a traitor to his country and to his people—who had been dismissed by the Czechoslovak Government from his post.

He rejected the allegation in the Chilean document of interference by the U.S.S.R. as a gross libel. He stressed that the situation in Czechoslovakia was completely outside the scope of the Security Council's powers, and any consideration of the question would be a gross violation of the principles of the United Nations safeguarding the sovereignty of states and would transform the United Nations into a centre of political intrigue and provocation directed against the U.S.S.R. and other nations of Eastern Europe. The discussion of the libelous Chilean application would bring not benefit but harm to the United Nations, since the split within the United Nations, which some states represented in the Security Council were seeking, would only bring grist to the mill of the warmongers. They had already used the issue raised by Chile to aggravate still further the campaign of lies and slander against the Soviet Union, to poison relations between states—and particularly between the Great Powers—still further, to deepen still more the mistrust and suspicion between the various states and aggravate the war fever which was, he stated, seriously afflicting certain circles in some countries, especially the United States.

The representatives of the United Kingdom, Syria, Colombia, France, the United States and Belgium spoke in favor of including this item in the agenda. It was pointed out that nobody had asked the United Nations to intervene in Czechoslovakia in matters of domestic jurisdiction. On the contrary, the Council was confronted with the very serious charge that the Soviet Union had intervened with the threat of use of force, in violation of Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter. The Council had the duty to investigate such serious charges.

By a vote of 9 to 2 (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.) the Council decided to include the communication from the representative of Chile in the agenda.

It was also decided by 9 votes to 2 to invite the representative of Chile to participate in the Council's discussion.

c. GENERAL DISCUSSION

The Council opened consideration of the Czechoslovak question at its 268th meeting on March 17, and continued its discussion at the 272nd, 273rd, 276th and 278th meetings on March 22, 23 and 31 and April 6.

The representative of Chile stated that prima facie the complaint directed against the U.S.S.R. by Mr. Papanek appeared well founded.

He cited facts in corroboration of Mr. Papanek's charges, and concluded that there was adequate material available to satisfy the conditions of Article 34 and justify an investigation. He recognized that a mission would probably not be received in Czechoslovakia but it would be possible, he stated, to conduct an investigation elsewhere in Europe or at Lake Success. He requested the Council to invite Mr. Papanek to make a statement.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. objected to inviting Mr. Papanek to make a statement to the Security Council. The Council should not hear or consider slanderous statements by unattached private individuals, particularly by a person relieved of his post for treachery to his people.

The Council, however, decided by 9 votes to 2 (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.) to invite Mr. Papanek to take part in the discussion.

Mr. Papanek referred to postwar events in Czechoslovakia which in his view demonstrated persistent Communist efforts to gain control over Czechoslovakia. The February coup, he stated, had become necessary from the Communist point of view because it was clear that the Communist party would suffer losses in the coming elections. He charged that the coup was directed from the U.S.S.R., which was guilty of indirect aggression and political infiltration. In this connection, he described the circumstances attending the visit of the U.S.S.R. Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin to Prague, the roles played by President Benes and Foreign Minister Masaryk and U.S.S.R. troop movements on the border of Czechoslovakia. He concluded that, in the light of world-wide Communist ambitions, the situation in Czechoslovakia was a threat to international peace and security under Article 34, and that the Council should make an investigation.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that, in view of the grave charges and counter-charges, the Council had the duty to determine the truth of the matter and should ask for proof in support of the allegations that had been made. The United Kingdom delegation did not pretend, he stated, that they possessed absolute proof. He drew certain conclusions, however, in the light of evidence from other countries which had succumbed to ruthless Communist minorities. Everyone was aware, he stated, that the Czechs had been passionate believers in parliamentary democracy. When President Benes returned to Czechoslovakia after the war he was the symbol of the free democracy from which he drew his power. There was every evidence that he had the overwhelming majority of the nation in his support and Masaryk himself often boasted that there was no "iron curtain" in Czechoslovakia.

If the Czechoslovak people, therefore, had freely accepted the change in government there could be no doubt, the representative of the United Kingdom considered, that their leaders, Benes and Masaryk, would have told the nation why the change had been required and would have asked them to accept it. Yet Masaryk had given his life to prove to all the world that this change had been forced upon his nation and President Benes had so far made no declaration to his people or to the world. Meanwhile the propaganda of the new Czechoslovak Government tried to persuade the people that the Western Powers were the enemies of Czechoslovakia. This was, the representative of the United Kingdom concluded, the usual technique of stirring up international hatred employed in other countries of Eastern Europe, and, above all, in the Soviet Union itself.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. said that the Czechoslovak question had been raised to divert attention from the political and economic interference of the United States and the United Kingdom in the internal affairs of Czechoslovakia and from their interest in promoting a reactionary coup in that country as well as by the failure of those states to include Czechoslovakia in a military bloc of Western European states. Soviet forces had been evacuated from Czechoslovakia long ago, and the people had been left in complete freedom to choose their form of government and decide upon their political, economic and social development.

In conclusion he rejected the contention that Czechoslovakia was no longer a democracy simply because its political structure was not in accordance with United States standards of democracy.

At the 273rd meeting on March 23, the representative of France said that it was well known that a minority had taken power in Czechoslovakia by force and manifestly against the will of the chief of state. It was clear, he considered, that, without the immediate proximity of the Soviet forces, a minority coup d'état could not even have been attempted; accordingly, the Security Council should attach full importance to the Chilean communication.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. said that in raising the "Czechoslovak question" Chile was acting as the puppet of those Wall Street kings of industry and finance who kept the reins of Chilean economy securely in their hands and completely controlled Chile's domestic and foreign policy.

In recent years, he stated, United States and United Kingdom politicians had considered Czechoslovakia as an easy potential gain. The Czechoslovak people, however, had wrecked the plans of influential circles in the United States and the United Kingdom. These plans had been based on the fallacy that certain reactionary and venal leaders in Czechoslovakia would be victorious; that they would succeed in deceiving their people and that with their help it would be possible to draw Czechoslovakia into the so-called "Marshall Plan", the object of which was the enslavement of other countries and peoples and their subordination to the interests of United States monopolies. The people of Czechoslovakia had refused to allow that yoke to be placed on their necks and as a result the Czechoslovak Government had been reorganized by including new political leaders—patriots who hearkened to the voice and the heartbeat of their people—in place of those persons who had resigned or had compromised themselves in the eyes of the people.

The economy of Czechoslovakia was being reorganized on democratic principles. Industry was being nationalized; large farms were being abolished and the land distributed among landless peasants and small holders. Rather than live on American remittances offered under the label of the "Marshall Plan", Czechoslovakia had decided to develop her economy and culture by using her own resources and co-operating with all other states desirous of co-operating with her on an equal footing in the maintenance of peace and security. She was, for example, successfully co-operating with the U.S.S.R. on the basis of trade agreements to the mutual profit of both countries.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. considered that allegations that the changes in the Czechoslovak Government had been caused by the interference on the part of the U.S.S.R. were absurd. He stated that the submission of the Czechoslovak question for discussion in the Security Council could be rightly understood in the light of Anglo-American policy in Europe. That policy, which had latterly been applied under the trade mark of the so-called "Marshall Plan", was based on the attempt to subordinate the economy and policy of other European countries to the economic requirements and policies of the United States, and, to some degree, of the United Kingdom. That question had also been raised for the purpose of further poisoning relations between the Great Powers and striking a further blow at the United Nations.

The representative of the United States said that the representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Ukrainian S.S.R. had made no answer to the many serious accusations directed against the U.S.S.R. He considered that recent events in Czechoslovakia were not in the character of the Czechoslovak people or in keeping with their tradition, and bore a too striking similarity with events in neighboring countries for the Council to be satisfied with perfunctory denials. If the charges were established, they would constitute indirect aggression. The United Nations, he concluded, would then be called upon to develop effective measures for the preservation of the territorial integrity and political independence of states, however small.

At the 276th meeting on March 31, the representative of Chile said that the representative of the U.S.S.R. had passed over the case of Czechoslovakia and raised a smoke-screen of counter-charges. He offered to supply the names of witnesses ready to present further evidence and documents. He was of the opinion that the Council possessed more than enough evidence to order an investigation and had a great moral obligation to do so. He suggested that it might be appropriate to set up an investigating body similar to the sub-committee on Spain appointed on April 25, 1946.

The representative of Canada said that no satisfactory answers had been received to the serious and pertinent questions which had been asked in the Council. Instead, members had heard counter-charges and references to the motives of those who had been trying to establish the facts. Tracing the major stages in the crisis he said that they were too similar to earlier developments in other states to avoid the conclusion that they had occurred with the knowledge and approval of and with some help from the U.S.S.R. In his opinion, it was the Council's duty to hear witnesses on this question.

The representative of China said that, after an initial reluctance, he had favored inclusion of this question in the agenda because he had felt that, if the accusations were true, the world might as well face the crisis immediately. He thought that recent events in Czechoslovakia deserved thorough investigation by the Council.

The representative of Syria considered that the Chilean Government had full authority under Article 35 to bring the situation to the Council's attention. It was necessary to obtain information that the coup had resulted from external pressure; he believed it would be convenient for the Council to constitute a fact-finding sub-committee composed of not more than three members.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R., replying to the statements of the representatives of the United Kingdom and France, said that no one—not even the United Kingdom or French representatives—had any proof in support of the Chilean calumny, and that their attempts to establish the legality of the Security Council's intervention in the domestic affairs of Czechoslovakia were based on their hostility to the internal order in Czechoslovakia. He contrasted this with the attitude adopted towards Franco Spain, which showed, he said, that the foreign policies of the United States, United Kingdom and French Governments were based on the desire to preserve and restore reactionary governments and regimes.

At the 278th meeting on April 6, 1948, the representative of the United States submitted a draft resolution inviting the Czechoslovak Government to participate in the discussion of the question without vote.³⁸

The representative of Argentina said that his country's foreign policy had always been opposed to interference in the internal affairs of any country. Because of the seriousness of the charges which had been made, the Council must do its best to determine the facts objectively and without becoming involved in the atmosphere of war psychosis.

The United States draft resolution (S/711) was adopted as amended by 9 votes in favor, with 2 abstentions, as follows:

"The Government of Czechoslovakia is invited to participate without vote in the discussion of the Czechoslovak question now under consideration by the Security Council, and the Secretary-General is instructed to notify the Czechoslovak representative to the United Nations accordingly."

This notification was made, and in his reply (S/718) the representative of Czechoslovakia stated that his Government did not find it possible in any way to take part in the discussion. The matters involved, the Czechoslovak representative's letter stated, were exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of Czechoslovakia, which rejected with indignation the unfounded complaint which had been put before the Council. Discussion of these internal questions was contrary to the Charter and was merely a pretext to promote the hostile campaign of the Western Powers against the U.S.S.R. and other states of Eastern Europe.

d. CHILEAN DRAFT RESOLUTION

At the 281st meeting on April 12 the representative of Chile submitted a draft resolution for the appointment of a sub-committee, with a membership to be determined by the Council, to receive and hear statements and testimony and to report to the Council at the earliest possible time, this action to be without prejudice to any decisions which might be taken in accordance with Article 34.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the representative of Chile, as well as those of the United States, the United Kingdom, France and some other countries, had repeated in their speeches the slanderous fabrications of a Czechoslovakian traitor; he rejected allegations that the recent changes in the Czechoslovak Government had taken place as a result of interference by the U.S.S.R., and that Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs of the U.S.S.R. Zorin, who had been visiting Prague, had exerted pressure to influence the political situation in Czechoslovakia.

He stated that Mr. Zorin's journey and its purposes had been made widely known by the reports published in the Czechoslovak press. For example, the Czechoslovak newspapers announced on February 20 that Zorin had arrived to supervise deliveries of U.S.S.R. grain to Czechoslovakia, and that he was to take part in the celebrations on the occasion of the republican conference of the Union of Friends of the U.S.S.R. and the Society for Cultural Relations with the U.S.S.R. in Czechoslovakia, which took place on February 21 and 22.

It was further announced that immediately on his arrival Zorin visited the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Masaryk, and the Minister of Supplies, Mayer, a right-wing Socialist, with whom he discussed the question of deliveries of Soviet grain to Czechoslovakia. On February 21 he visited the Minister of Communications, the Slovak Democrat

Peter, in whose Ministry a conference took place on the question of the transport of grain. On February 22, Zorin attended the republican conference on Soviet-Czechoslovak friendship, and on February 23, he visited the celebration in the House of Defence on the occasion of the thirtieth anniversary of the Soviet Army. On the evening of February 23, he attended a reception in the Soviet Embassy, organized in connection with that celebration. The Czechoslovak newspapers of February 27 published a communiqué on the conferences which had been taking place for some days with the participation of Zorin and the competent Soviet and Czechoslovak representatives, and on the decisions taken during those conferences for expediting the delivery of grain and in particular of seed wheat. The Soviet representative stated that the facts fully refuted the fabricated charges of the representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries, and demonstrated their unwarranted and slanderous nature in regard to the U.S.S.R. and Czechoslovakia.

The purpose of these fabrications and allegations of so-called "Soviet expansion" was to distract the attention of world public opinion from the imperialistic expansion of the United States in Europe and from the real plans of the United States with regard to Czechoslovakia. He also adduced numerous facts to show how the Government of the United States was attempting to exploit reactionary, mercenary politicians in Czechoslovakia in order to deal a mortal blow to the Czechoslovak Republic.

For example, the Prague newspapers Svobodni Slovo and Lidova Demokracia, which had only recently drawn attention to their close relations with influential American circles, reported on February 11, 1948, that the American Ambassador to Czechoslovakia, Steinhardt, was attempting, in accordance with his latest instructions from Washington, to interfere actively in Czechoslovak domestic politics, and the Czechoslovak right-wing parties were counting on securing their revenge, with the support of the United States, at the forthcoming parliamentary elections. These newspapers also reported that the United States Government had promised to grant Czechoslovakia a loan of twenty million dollars, and pointed out that the right-wing parties considered this loan as being specifically intended to favor them in the forthcoming parliamentary elections. These intrigues of the United States Government in connection with Czechoslovakia, and the efforts of United States agents within the country, the U.S.S.R. representative stated, had led to a crisis in the Czechoslovak Government, organized by Czechoslovak reactionaries under foreign orders. He stated further that on February 13 the representatives of the National Socialist Party, the People's Party and the Slovak Democrats in the Government had demanded changes in the leadership of the National Security Police, with a view to creating a situation which would enable them to seize power. On February 17, these representatives declared that they would refuse to participate in debates on any questions until it had been explained why their demands had not been fulfilled, thereby creating a governmental crisis. At that moment, said the U.S.S.R. representative, the United States Government openly interfered in the domestic affairs of Czechoslovakia through the agency of its Ambassador to Czechoslovakia, Mr. Steinhardt. On arriving in Prague on February 19, Mr. Steinhardt at once called a news conference of Czechoslovak correspondents and informed them that he still hoped the Czechoslovak Government would revise its decision on the Marshall Plan. That declaration showed that the reactionary elements in the right-wing groups could count upon United States support for their activities.

On February 20 the representatives of the three right-wing parties announced their resignations, in an attempt to wreck the Czechoslovak National Front Government and force a new political line on Czechoslovakia on the eve of the elections. At the same time, military committees of the right-wing National Socialist Party formed armed detachments and prepared to seize the Prague radio station and other government institutions.

The U.S.S.R. representative maintained that the facts showed convincingly that the changes in the Czechoslovak Government had been carried out by strictly constitutional means—a fact which the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries were attempting to conceal from their peoples. The newly constituted Czechoslovak Government had been approved by President Benes, and its program endorsed unanimously by the Czechoslovak National Legislative Assembly.

He stated that the allegations were part of a hostile campaign against the U.S.S.R. and Czechoslovakia, started on the initiative of the United States and the United Kingdom. That campaign concealed the true purposes of certain foreign circles in their efforts to achieve a counter-revolution in Czechoslovakia in February 1948. Their aims were to prevent the strengthening of democracy in Czechoslovakia, to wreck the independent policy of the Czechoslovak Government and to transform Czechoslovakia into a political and economic ap-pendage of the United States and, in the final resort, into a base for the military, political and economic expansion of the United States against the countries of Eastern Europe and the U.S.S.R.

The people of Czechoslovakia wrecked the United States Government's plans for Czechoslovakia.

The U.S.S.R. representative went on to point out that there were no grounds for referring to the late Mr. Masaryk, Czechoslovak Minister for Foreign Affairs, for backing in this campaign, and cited a number of facts. For example, in an interview which appeared on February 29 in the French paper L'Ordre, Mr. Masaryk stated that he was strongly opposed to the theory that the country could be ruled without the Communists or in spite of them, and emphasized that after the February crisis the Government had been established constitutionally and would rule democratically and in accordance with the Constitution.

He objected to the proposal to institute investigations in connection with the assertions contained in the Chilean statement on alleged Soviet interference in the domestic affairs of Czechoslovakia. Inasmuch as changes in the composition of the Czechoslovak Government were within the domestic jurisdiction of Czechoslovakia, there were no grounds, he considered, to demand any sort of inquiry, and all such demands should be categorically rejected.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the discussion had shown that there was much that needed investigation, and he considered that the Council should adopt some adequate means of testing any evidence that might be submitted to it.

The representative of the United States supported the proposal for the creation of a sub-committee to hear witnesses as a convenient method to make it easier for the Security Council to understand the Czechoslovak situation. He then asked a number of questions relating to events in Czechoslovakia. What were the events that led up to the death of Foreign Minister Masaryk and to the numerous resignations of Czechoslovak diplomatic representatives? Why was there along the Czechoslovak frontier an unusually heavy frontier guard? And what was the significance of the flight of numerous refugees, and particularly political figures whose reputations were not drawn into question prior to the rise of the new regime?

He then summarized certain facts on the developments in Czechoslovakia as constituting the framework of internal developments against which the charges of external interference should be considered, describing the origins of the Czechoslovak Government crisis. He stated that the Communists had seized upon this crisis as an occasion for breaking the opposition and discrediting its leaders and taking over full control of the Government. At the time of the crisis, the Communist Party was already in control of the security police and the state broadcasting apparatus, and had also obtained important influence in the armed forces. The Communists had managed to secure key posts in the Cabinet, giving them a dominant position entirely out of proportion to their popular support. With these and other illegal advantages enjoyed by the Communist Party it was yet unable to obtain a majority, for 62 per cent of the vote in the postwar election went to the non-Communist parties. Nevertheless, the Communists ignored the fact that they were a minority. They had given evidence that they would not tolerate any political opposition, which they identified as treason to the state. This was brought out at the time of the coup by the immediate formation of Action Committees, the appearance of well-disciplined and fully-armed militia in Prague and the swift and ruthless purge of the non-Communist leaders.

At the time of the coup, the tension in Czechoslovakia was heightened by reports of Soviet intervention and of the presence of a large number of Soviet agents in the country. The Czechoslovak story assumed added significance when compared with developments which had taken place throughout east-central Europe, where the general pattern had been the same. What was the significance of the fact that after the Czechoslovak Government had indicated its readiness to participate in the Marshall Plan, its decision was reversed following a telephone call to Prague from Moscow, where the Czechoslovak Prime Minister had been summoned?

All of these circumstances led to the basic question: Had the Government of Czechoslovakia been submerged with the assistance, direct or indirect, of an outside Power? Notwithstanding all these specific facts which had been cited, many of which were well known, the representative of the U.S.S.R. had spoken of fabrications and slander. If the regimes in Czechoslovakia and the U.S.S.R. had a clear conscience, surely, he stated, they would seize the opportunity of presenting their case to the Security Council and to any sub-committee. He suggested that the sub-committee should consist of representatives of five members of the Council and that it should be authorized to hear the testimony of Czechoslovak political leaders.

At the 288th meeting on April 29, the representative of Argentina asked that the Chilean proposal be put to the vote under the last paragraph of rule 38. He suggested that the sub-committee should comprise three members of the Council.

The representative of Belgium said that his delegation attached great importance to Article 2, paragraph 4, of the Charter and, in view of the grave charges which had been made, considered that an investigation was necessary. The proposed elucidation of the facts was a condition of any decision by the Council, particularly of any decision as to competence.

At its 300th meeting on May 21, 1948, the Council decided by 8 votes in favor, 2 against (U.S.S.R., Ukrainian S.S.R.) and 1 abstention (Argentina), to invite Mr. Papanek to the Council table to make a supplementary statement.

Mr. Papanek said that the representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Ukrainian S.S.R. had not succeeded in refuting the facts he had submitted. He submitted further facts concerning the Soviet Union's support of Czechoslovak Communists at the time of the crisis, Soviet pressure on the Czechoslovak delegation at the San Francisco Conference and in the General Assembly, Soviet troop movements, etc. In conclusion, he suggested a number of prominent witnesses who would be able to give evidence.

e. DECISIONS OF THE COUNCIL OF MAY 24, 1948

At the 303rd meeting, the representative of the U.S.S.R. argued that the Chilean draft resolution concerned the substance of the question. If there was any difference of opinion on this point, he demanded that the Council first decide whether the resolution was procedural or substantive.

The President agreed to this procedure, and put the following question to the vote: "Is the vote that we shall take upon the draft resolution to be considered as a matter of procedure?"

There were 8 votes in favor, 2 against (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.) and 1 abstention (France).

The President (representative of France) stated that, since he represented one of the permanent members, he could not disregard the four-Power declaration. According to the final paragraph of this declaration, an affirmative decision could be taken only with the concurring votes of the permanent members. Since a permanent member had voted against the proposal, he interpreted the above decision as a vote to regard the draft resolution as a matter of substance.

The representatives of Argentina, Canada, Belgium and Colombia opposed this interpretation.

The representative of the United Kingdom said that, in the circumstances, he did not think the President's ruling was incorrect, since there was a difference of opinion as to whether the question was one of procedure or substance. However, he felt strongly that the difference should never have arisen, since it was perfectly clear that the question was one of procedure under the Charter, the rules of procedure and the four-Power declaration of San Francisco.³⁹

The President then put his ruling to the vote.

Six votes were cast to annul the presidential ruling, 2 votes to uphold it (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.) and 3 abstentions (France, United Kingdom, United States). The President announced therefore that his ruling stood.

The Chilean draft resolution, formally submitted by the representative of Argentina (a member of the Council—see S/P.V. 303, p. 136), was put to the vote, as follows:

"Whereas the attention of the Security Council has been drawn by a Member of the United Nations, in accordance with Articles 34 and 35 of the Charter, to the situation in Czechoslovakia which may endanger international peace and security; and the Security Council has been asked to investigate this situation; and

"Whereas during the debate which took place in the Council the existence of further testimonial and documentary evidence with regard to this situation has been announced;

"Whereas the Security Council considers it advisable that such further testimonial and documentary evidence should be heard,

"Therefore, to this end, and without prejudice of any decisions which may be taken in accordance with Article 34 of the Charter,

"The Security Council

"Resolves to appoint a sub-committee of three members and instructs this sub-committee to receive or to hear such evidence, statements and testimonies and to report to the Security Council at the earliest possible time."

The result of the vote was 9 votes in favor and 2 against (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

The President stated that the draft resolution was not adopted, since one of the opposing votes had been that of a permanent member.

The representative of the United States said that his Government had not changed its attitude on the "veto" question as set forth in the four-Power declaration, but that it reserved its right to do so. The United States was convinced that the draft resolution which had just been voted upon was clearly procedural under the Charter, which could not be changed by the "double veto". Consequently, the United States would not recognize this act as a precedent. The use of the "veto" in this case was an attempt, he considered, to defeat the fundamental purpose of securing the fairest possible presentation to the world of all aspects of the Czechoslovak question. The Government of the United States therefore was prepared to obtain statements from Czechoslovak refugees who had information relevant to the case, and to make these statements available to the Council. He hoped that other members would take similar action.

In reply, the representative of the U.S.S.R. stressed the binding obligation imposed by the four-Power declaration, and said that the U.S.S.R. had used its voting right to prevent interference in the internal affairs of Czechoslovakia by the United States and the majority of the Council.

The representative of Chile said that the wish of nine of the eleven members of the Council had been frustrated by the "veto" of the representative of the country against which such serious evidence had been presented. In the name of his Government, he protested against this abuse of the United Nations and this violation of the Charter. It was clear that the draft resolution had merely been in application of Article 29 of the Charter and was of a procedural nature. Furthermore, the U.S.S.R. was a party to the dispute and should have abstained from voting under Article 27, paragraph 3.

At the 305th meeting on May 26 the representative of the United Kingdom said that he was shocked at this misuse of the "double veto". His Government stood by the four-Power declaration, but he did not know how his Government would be affected by this use of one paragraph of the declaration to nullify another. He stated that his Government would be prepared to make available to the Security Council in due course certain sworn statements by Czechoslovak personalities.

The representative of France also associated himself with the proposal to submit to the Council, in documentary form, the evidence of Czechoslovak statesmen.

The representative of Argentina submitted a draft resolution (S/782) stating that the Council considered it advisable to obtain further oral and written evidence regarding the situation in Czechoslovakia and entrusting the Council's Committee of Experts with the task of obtaining such evidence and reporting back at the earliest opportunity.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. said that this proposal could hardly be distinguished from the Chilean draft resolution, and had the same purpose of investigation. The U.S.S.R. delegation would not acquiesce in such an attempt to interfere in the internal affairs of Czechoslovakia.

Since its 305th meeting the Council had not held any further discussions on the Czechoslovak question, which remained, however, on the list of matters with which the Council was seized at the end of the period under review.

8. The Question of Hyderabad

On August 21, the Government of Hyderabad cabled the Secretary-General (S/986), asking him to bring to the attention of the Security Council "the grave dispute which has arisen between Hyderabad and India".

The Secretary-General stated that he was not in a position to determine whether he was required by the rules of procedure to submit the communication to the Council, and therefore circulated the document for information and for "such action as the Council may desire to take".

Hyderabad's communication charged that the Princely State had been exposed to violent intimidation, threats of invasion, frontier violations and a crippling economic blockade "intended to coerce it into a renunciation of its independence". These actions, the cable said, threatened the peace of the Asiatic continent and the principles of the United Nations.

The complaint cited Article 35, paragraph 2, of the Charter, which provides that a state which is not a Member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the Charter.

On September 11, Hyderabad asked (S/996) to become a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice in order to facilitate a peaceful solution on the basis of international law.

Then, on September 12 and 13, messages from Hyderabad reported first the threat of invasion (S/998) and then an actual invasion by India (S/1000). The messages urged the Security Council to take up the matter immediately.

These communications came before the Council at its 357th meeting on September 16, 1948, its first meeting in Paris.

During discussion on the adoption of the agenda, the representative of China asked for a four-day adjournment, stating that he had not yet received instructions from his Government. He took the view that the mere fact of placing a question on the agenda, while not prejudging the merits of the question, could nevertheless imply a certain view as to the competence of the Council and the juridical status of the parties to a dispute. In this case, he did not consider adoption of the agenda a simple procedural matter.

Other speakers, however, felt that in order to discuss the question of the competence of the Council, it was necessary to include the item in the agenda.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. wanted to know more about Hyderabad's status. He asked the representative of the United Kingdom for information on Hyderabad's status under the Declaration of Independence of India of August 15, 1947, and on the rights and obligations incumbent on India and Hyderabad under the agreement between them. He also thought it would be useful to have information regarding the relations between Hyderabad and the British Commonwealth of Nations, and in particular, as to whether there were any official British advisers attached to the Hyderabad Administration.

The representative of the United Kingdom replied that on August 15, 1947, the suzerainty of the Crown in the United Kingdom over Hyderabad, and all other Indian states, had come to an end. None of the powers previously exercised by the Crown had been transferred to the Governments of the two new Dominions, India and Pakistan. Hyderabad had not subsequently acceded to either of those Dominions, but on November 29, 1947, the Nizam of Hyderabad had entered into a standstill agreement with the Government of India for a period of twelve months.

One effect of that agreement, he said, had been to place, during its currency, the conduct of Hyderabad's external affairs in the hands of India. There had been frequent allegations on both sides of breaches of the agreement, but no resort had been made to the arbitration provided for in the standstill agreement.

The representative of the United Kingdom added that no British official advisers were now in Hyderabad.

The Chinese proposal for adjournment was defeated, receiving only one vote, that of the representative of China, the other ten members abstaining. The agenda was then adopted by a vote of 8 to 0, with 3 abstentions, on the understanding, as expressed by the President, that the action did not decide or affect in any way the question of the Council's competence. China, the Ukrainian S.S.R. and the U.S.S.R. abstained from voting.

Following the adoption of the agenda, the Council heard statements from the representatives of Hyderabad and India.

The representative of Hyderabad declared that since Indian mechanized forces were already operating on Hyderabad's territory, in a "premeditated act of war", immediate action by the Security Council was necessary, not only under Chapter VI of the Charter, relating to the peaceful settlement of disputes, but also under Chapter VII, which provides for enforcement measures.

He argued that Hyderabad's independence and its complete legal right to independence had been fully conceded by Great Britain, whose suzerainty over Hyderabad had come to an end on August 15, 1947. Representatives of the Indian Government had occasionally admitted that right as well.

The representative of Hyderabad reaffirmed his Government's offer of a plebiscite, under the supervision of the United Nations, on the question of accession to India in matters of defence, external affairs and communications, provided that Indian troops were first withdrawn.

He denied that this matter was exclusively within the domestic jurisdiction of India. In his view, such a contention was tantamount to a claim that India had already annexed Hyderabad. He also denied that there was no legal foundation for bringing the dispute before the Council. Such an argument would imply that, under the standstill agreement, Hyderabad had temporarily renounced the right to conduct its foreign relations, including the submission of disputes to an international agency. But one of the main purposes of the appeal to the Council, in addition to vindicating the independence of Hyderabad, was to obtain an impartial finding as to the interpretation and application of the disputed clauses of that agreement.

The representative of India, in a brief preliminary statement, presented India's view that "Hyderabad is not competent to bring any question before the Security Council: that it is not a state, that it is not independent; that never in all its history did it have the status of independence; that neither in the remote past nor before August 1947, nor under any declaration made by the United Kingdom nor any act passed by the British Parliament, has it acquired the status of independence which would entitle it to come in its own right to present a case before the Security Council".

The Indian representative stated that his Government did not consider it proper to go into the allegations made by Hyderabad, but emphasized, lest a wrong impression should be created in world opinion, that his Government had repeatedly considered whether it was necessary to intervene at all in Hyderabad until events had at last obliged it to take action.

Inquiries had amply confirmed "harrowing tales of death, of arson, of loot, of rape, by what were called the private armies in Hyderabad, private armies nevertheless encouraged or countenanced by the Government of Hyderabad".

He stated that he was not prepared to go into such details, but was limiting himself at the time to the question of the Council's competence to consider the matter at all.

When the Council met again on September 20, for its 359th meeting, the President said that the members undoubtedly had all seen press reports on the surrender of Hyderabad to Indian forces, but that he had received no official communication since the previous meeting.

The representative of Hyderabad told the Council that he had not received any instructions directly emanating from the Nizam. He suggested that the Council might postpone discussions for a few days, in view of the "confused situation".

The representative of India, however, stated that he had received a telegram containing the Nizam's instructions to the head of the Hyderabad delegation to withdraw the complaint from the Council. There had been no pressure on the part of India to withdraw the case, he said; the order had come freely from the Nizam himself.

India had had to enter Hyderabad to suppress atrocities and lawlessness which might have spread to surrounding areas, he continued. Now, order had been restored, and, in the circumstances, he considered the case closed.

During the brief discussion that followed, the representative of the United States pointed out that the use of force did not alter legal rights, and so from that point of view, the situation had not been materially affected by the events in Hyderabad.

He added that his Government had noted with interest a press report of a proclamation of the Indian Army Command to the people of Hyderabad, in these words: "As soon as our task is completed, the people of Hyderabad will be given the opportunity to decide their future both as regards internal government and relations with India."

The United States Government had no doubt that the Government of India, in giving effect to this declaration, would have in mind that all the Members of the United Nations, not just the members of the Security Council, would be watching with interest the developments in Hyderabad with the hope and expectation that the outcome would demonstrate loyal support of the principles of the Charter.

The representative of Argentina remarked that the Council was still waiting for proof of the view that it was not competent in this case. On behalf of the small and medium-sized nations, he wanted an opportunity afforded to all members of the Council to discuss the substance of the question.

The march of Indian troops into Hyderabad might remind one of the march of Italian troops into Ethiopia some years ago, also with the announced intention of bringing order to the country. It was not surprising that the Indian army in Hyderabad had received full co-operation from the authorities there, since it was not very difficult to obtain such full co-operation at the point of pistols and bayonets. The representative of India, so concerned about the rights of the Indian minority in South Africa, had not, he stated, even mentioned the rights of the minority in Hyderabad.

The representative of Colombia raised the question as to what the Council might do if confronted with "the disappearance of the Government and the State of Hyderabad", and if placed in a situation in which the question could no longer be examined by the Council and would have to be considered as closed. His delegation would oppose with energy any "solution" of that sort, on the grounds that two of the main principles of the United Nations had been completely violated: first, the principle that there should be no acquisition of territory by force; second, the principle of the self-determination of peoples.

Following this exchange of views, the Council decided without a vote to keep the case on its agenda, pending receipt of additional information from the parties concerned.

E. QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY AND THE GENERAL REGULATION AND REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS

1. Atomic Energy Commission

By resolution 1(I) of January 24, 1946, the General Assembly established an Atomic Energy Commission, composed of the States represented on the Security Council and of Canada when the latter is not a member of the Security Council, to deal with the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matters. The Commission was to receive instructions from and report to the Security Council.⁴⁰

a. FIRST REPORT OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

On December 31, 1946, the Atomic Energy Commission submitted its first report (AEC/18/Rev.1) to the Security Council. The report contained a number of "Findings" (Part II) and "Recommendations" (Part III), which proposed among other things the establishment of an international agency for the control of atomic energy whose scope and functions should be defined by a treaty or convention in which all Member States of the United Nations would participate.

The Security Council considered the Commission's report during February and March 1947. On March 10 the Council adopted a resolution (S/296) urging the Commission to continue its inquiry into all phases of the problem of the international control of atomic energy and in due course to prepare and to submit to the Council a draft treaty or treaties, or convention or conventions, incorporating its ultimate proposals. It also asked the Commission to submit a second report to the Council before the second session of the General Assembly.⁴¹

b. PREPARATION AND ADOPTION OF SECOND REPORT OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

The Atomic Energy Commission, which had not held any meetings during the Council's consideration of its first report, met on March 19 and adopted a resolution (AEC/21) requesting its committees, and in particular the Working Committee and Committee 2,⁴² to consider the questions following from the Council's resolution, and especially the question relating to the establishment of international control of atomic energy on which agreement among its members had not been reached.

The Working Committee, in turn, on March 31, adopted a resolution (AEC/C.1/14) requesting Committee 2 to "proceed on its part by means of formal or informal meetings and conversations with the study of the various questions following from the resolutions of the Atomic Energy Commission and the Security Council", and in particular to work out specific proposals for the international control of atomic energy on the basis of the Commission's first report (AEC/18/Rev.1) to the Security Council.

On April 10, 1947, Committee 2 adopted the following "Summary of Principal Subjects to be Incorporated in Specific Proposals for the International Control of Atomic Energy" (AEC/C.2/[6]) to serve as the basis of its future deliberations:

"A. Subjects required to establish the initial framework of a draft treaty or convention (many of these subjects might be discussed concurrently):

"1. Definition of terms to be used in the treaty.

"2. Operational and developmental functions of the international agency and its relation to planning, coordination, and direction of atomic activities:

"(a) Functions of the international agency in relation to research and development activities.

"(b) Functions of the international agency in relation to location and mining of ores.

"(c) Functions of the international agency in relation to processing and purification of source material.

"(d) Functions of the international agency in relation to stockpiling, production, and distribution of nuclear fuels.

"(e) Functions of the international agency in relation to the design, construction and operation of isotope separation plants.

"(f) Functions of the international agency in relation to the design, construction and operation of reactors.

"(g) Rights of, and limitations on, the agency and its personnel with respect to inspection, operation and other control functions.

⁴² Ibid., p. 445. The Working Committee was established by the Commission in June 1946 to consider all proposals and suggestions which had been made to the Commission and to appoint such other committees as seemed necessary. Committee 2 is one of the Committees which was accordingly established in July 1946 by the Working Committee. Both the Working Committee and Committee 2 include all members of the Atomic Energy Commission.

"3. Organization and administration of the international agency:

"(a) Organizational structure.

"(b) Relations to other organs of the United Nations, to other international agencies, and to individual nations and their national agencies.

"(c) Status of the agency and its personnel in its operations within individual nations.

"(d) Definition of types of operating decisions subject to review and those not subject to review.

"(e) Determination of review body or bodies and of principles governing review.

"B. Subjects which can only be discussed effectively in the framework of decisions reached on subjects listed under A above:

"1. Principles governing the geographical location of dangerous activities and stockpiling.

"2. Financial and budgetary organization:

"(a) Determination of sources of funds and types of expenditures.

"(b) Estimates of the financial burden to be borne by individual nations.

"(c) Principles governing the allocation of expenses to individual nations.

"(d) Principles governing the financing of both facilities owned and facilities not owned by the agency.

"3. Prohibitions and enforcement:

"(a) Definition of individual and national prohibitions.

"(b) Examination of the nature of direct international jurisdiction over individuals and the principles governing the application of individual punishments.

"(c) Examination of the problems related to the application of sanctions against nations, including the veto problem:

(i) Method of determining violations.

(ii) Application of economic and other non-military sanctions.

(iii) Application of military sanctions.

"4. Examination of the stages by which transition will be accomplished from conditions of national control to the final conditions of predominantly international control."

Between April 16 and May 5, Committee 2 discussed in informal meetings the items in A-1, A-2(a) and A-2(b) above. As a result of its discussion of item A-1, it established on April 16 a permanent sub-committee on definitions (AEC/C.2/19).

On May 5, Committee 2, at the suggestion of its President (United States), adopted a new working plan which consisted of appointing working groups to draw up working papers on the various topics in the "Summary of Principal Subjects". The usual procedure was to have a preliminary discussion on a topic at an informal conversation of Committee 2. A working group would then be appointed to draft a paper, which generally would then be considered at another informal conversation. The draft paper was then revised in the working group to reflect the discussion in the informal conversation.

The papers were then forwarded to Committee 2 for formal consideration.

In accordance with this plan Committee 2 held informal conversations on the items contained in Part A of the "Summary of Principal Subjects", and seven working groups were appointed; six of these working groups reported and the seventh did preliminary work on organization and administration. Committee 2 began informal discussion of the working papers on the subjects contained in Part A-2 on June 4, 1947, but formal discussion was postponed until after August 25 to enable the representatives to secure the official views of their governments on these documents (AEC/C.2/36/-Rev. 2, 37/Rev.2, 38/Rev.2, 39/Rev.2, 44/Rev.2, 61/Rev.2).

These documents concerning the "Operational and developmental functions of the international agency" (item A-2) were considered formally by Committee 2 on August 27 and 29. Certain amendments (AEC/C.2/85-105,107) were submitted by the representatives of Australia, Canada, China, France, Poland, United Kingdom and United States which were considered by Committee 2 on September 4 and voted upon on September 8. The documents were revised accordingly for submission to the Working Committee and the Atomic Energy Commission.

These documents on the "Operational and developmental functions of the international control agency" as revised and adopted by the Commission on September 11 form Part II of the second report of the Commission to the Security Council (AEC/-26). To prepare the other portions of the report the Working Committee had, on August 4, appointed a drafting sub-committee. This drafting sub-committee, which was composed of Canada (Chairman), Australia, Belgium, France, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States, in collaboration with the Secretariat, drafted the other parts of the report, as follows:

Introduction

Part I Proceedings of the Atomic Energy Commission from 1 January to 10 September, 1947.

Part III Report on the deliberations of the Working Committee of the Atomic Energy Commission concerning the amendments and additions to the first report submitted by the representative of the U.S.S.R. at the 108th meeting of the Security Council.

Part IV Report on the consideration of the proposals of the U.S.S.R. of 11 June, 1947.⁴³

These portions of the report were adopted by the Working Committee also on September 8. The whole report was considered by the Atomic Energy Commission on September 10 and 11, 1947. At the conclusion of the debate the report was adopted by a vote of 10 to 1 (U.S.S.R.), with 1 abstention (Poland). The report was then forwarded to the Security Council, which, however, did not discuss it.

The Atomic Energy Commission and its committees did not meet during the second session of the General Assembly (September to December 1947), and the next meeting which took place was that of the Working Committee on December 18, 1947, which considered the allocation of the work confronting the Commission. The Working Committee decided that Committee 2 should continue to examine the "Summary of Principal Subjects" starting with item A-3, "Organization and administration of the international agency".

In resuming its work accordingly, Committee 2, on January 19, 1948, agreed that for the time being it should confine its activity to sub-head A-3 (a), "Organizational structure", and invite appropriate experts on staffing and organization to give evidence. Two formal and a number of informal meetings were held in this connection.

At the meeting of Committee 2 held on March 30, 1948, the majority of representatives expressed the view that the question of organization could not be clearly defined unless there was prior agreement upon the functions and powers of the international control agency. Without taking a formal decision, therefore, Committee 2 adjourned sine die.

c. SUBSTANCE OF THE MAJORITY PROPOSALS

In its introduction to its second report to the Security Council (AEC/26) the Atomic Energy Commission stated that the specific proposals contained in Part II of the report dealing with the functions and powers of an international agency for the control of atomic energy gave expression to certain basic principles, including the following:

"1. Decisions concerning the production and use of atomic energy should not be left in the hands of nations.

"2. Policies concerning the production and use of atomic energy which substantially affect world security should be governed by principles established in the treaty or convention which the agency would be obligated to carry out.

"3. Nations must undertake in the treaty or convention to grant to the agency rights of inspection of any part of their territory, subject to appropriate procedural requirements and limitations."

In implementing these principles, the Commission stated further, the following basic measures were provided in the report:

"(a) production quotas based on principles and policies specified in the treaty or convention;

"(b) ownership by the agency of nuclear fuel and source material;

"(c) ownership, management, and operation by the agency of dangerous facilities;

"(d) licensing by the agency of non-dangerous facilities to be operated by nations; and

"(e) inspection by the agency to prevent or detect clandestine activities."

The report stated further that "the majority of the Commission concludes that the specific proposals of this report which define the functions and powers of an international agency, taken together with the 'General Findings' and 'Recommendations' of the first report, provide the essential basis for the establishment of an effective system of control to ensure the use of atomic energy only for peaceful purposes and to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions".

Concerning the subjects outlined in the "Summary of Principal Subjects" which were not dealt with in the second report (i.e., organization and administration of the agency, stages of transition from conditions of national to predominantly international control, geographical location of dangerous activities and stockpiling, financial and budgetary organization, prohibition and enforcement), the majority of the Atomic Energy Commission expressed the view that these could for the most part be discussed effectively only in the framework of conclusions reached with regard to the functions and powers of the international agency. Until unanimous agreement was reached on the functions and powers of the international agency, there would be limitations on the extent to which proposals on other topics could be worked out in detail.

On the basis of the "General Findings" and "Recommendations" of the first report and the Introduction and Part II of the second report, the representative of France subsequently (May 1948) circulated a "Summary of the Majority Plan of Control", which the Commission included as an annex in its third report to the Security Council (AEC/31/Rev. 1, Annex 2). The text of this summary follows:

A. SCOPE OF THE PROBLEM

"As outlined in Part IV of the first report, the fundamental technical facts are:

"1. The substances uranium and thorium play a unique role in the domain of atomic energy, since as far as is known these are the only raw materials from which the nuclear fuel required for the development of atomic energy can be obtained.

"2. Whether the ultimate nuclear fuel be destined for peaceful or destructive uses, the productive processes are identical and inseparable up to a very advanced stage of manufacture.

"The dangers that must be met are diversion of materials, clandestine operations, and seizure of materials or facilities. Since nuclear fuel once produced, even for peaceful purposes, lends itself readily to the manufacture of atomic weapons, these dangers must be effectively met if the peaceful development of atomic energy is to be promoted in an atmosphere of confidence and general trust. Seizure will always be a danger of such magnitude that it should be recognized by all nations to mean that a most serious violation of the treaty has taken place and that a nation is about to embark on atomic warfare.

B. AN INTERNATIONAL CONTROL AGENCY ESTABLISHED BY TREATY

"To cope with these dangers and to fulfil the objectives set forth in its terms of reference, the Commission has recognized that there should be a strong and comprehensive international system of control, defined by treaty.

"Such a system of control should be administered by an international control agency, the staff of which would be selected on an international basis and its scope and functions defined by the treaty.

"As the only way to eliminate national rivalries in this field and the resultant possibility of one nation or group of nations achieving potential military supremacy, it is recognized that decisions concerning production and use of atomic energy must not be left in the hands of individual nations.

"In other words, it is recognized that the development and use of atomic energy are not essentially matters of domestic concern of individual nations, but rather have predominantly international implications and repercussions.

"Signatory nations would insist that policies that substantially affect world security should be defined in the treaty. The treaty must therefore establish the policies concerning the production and use of atomic energy that the agency would be obligated to carry out.

"One of the most important examples is that policies concerning production and stockpiling of nuclear fuels should be dictated primarily by security considerations. These require that nuclear fuel should not be produced in quantity beyond that required for actual beneficial use, including research and development. Such restriction would be written into the treaty itself and would remain in force until new technical findings and considerations of world security warranted revision of this provision by amendment of the treaty.

"The treaty should lay down the general principles to be followed in the distribution of materials and facilities and should even go so far, in certain cases, as to prescribe mining and production quotas.

C. FUNCTIONS AND POWERS OF THE AGENCY

"Within the above framework, an effective control requires that the agency exercise positive functions with regard to all phases of atomic energy activities. Only in this way can the agency discharge the responsibilities placed upon it, keep abreast of developments in the field of atomic energy, and carry out necessary inspections without undue interference with normal national and private activities. Only in this way can the elimination of atomic weapons from national armaments be made effective.

1. Functions with regard to production facilities

"The effectiveness of the control of atomic energy depends upon the effectiveness of the control established over the production and use of uranium, thorium, and their fissionable derivatives. Appropriate controls to prevent their diversion to improper uses must be applied throughout the various stages of the processes from the time that uranium and thorium ores are severed from the ground to the time they become nuclear fuels and are consumed.

"From the conclusion that decisions regarding the production and use of atomic energy should not be left in the hands of nations, it follows that all activities in this field must either be carried on by the agency itself under powers of operation and management and under rights of ownership or by nations only under licence from the agency.

"After consideration of various technical factors, the Commission has determined that mines, mills, and dumps may be operated by nations or persons under licence from the agency. However, the agency would acquire ownership of all source material from the moment it is removed from its place of deposit in nature and would specify the concentration at which it would take possession. The agency would have the authority to determine, in each case, whether it would own, operate and manage any source material refinery or whether it would license the operation. The agency would own, operate and manage all chemical and metallurgical plants for treating key substances and all facilities capable of producing nuclear fuel, including isotope separation plants, primary reactors and secondary reactors. The agency would own all nuclear fuel, whether produced in its own facilities or in non-dangerous facilities licensed by the agency.

"In those instances where the treaty gives the agency the power to decide whether an activity or a facility is non-dangerous—that is to say non-dangerous in terms of world security—and can therefore be licensed, the agency would be obligated to take into account:

"(a) The quantity and quality of materials in each case;

"(b) The possibility of diversion;

"(c) The ease with which the materials can be used or converted to produce atomic weapons;

"(d) The total supply and distribution of such materials in existence;

"(e) The design and operating characteristics of the facilities involved;

"(f) The ease of altering those facilities;

"(g) Possible combinations with other facilities;

"(h) Scientific and technical advances which have been made; and

"(i) The degree to which the agency has achieved security in the control of atomic energy.

"In the case of operations licensed by the agency, the agency would carry out certain specified control measures to prevent the misuse of facilities or the diversion of materials. For example, the agency might make inspections, conduct accountings, require certain operating procedures, and maintain guards. The agency would reserve the power to modify the provisions of the lease or licence and, in case of violation, to suspend or revoke the lease or licence and take possession of the nuclear fuel involved. If a suspension or revocation should take place, the agency would have the right to maintain its control measures over any facilities involved.

"In order to assure to the agency the final right of decision in regard to the production and disposition of source materials and nuclear fuels, and the allocation, construction and operation of plants under its management, it was found necessary to vest, subject to the terms of the treaty, ownership of these materials and plants in the agency, in the sense of a trust exercised on behalf of signatory States jointly.

"Ownership by the agency of source materials or nuclear fuels includes the exclusive right to move or lease the materials, the right to use them and to produce energy from them, and the same rights for all products formed from them. The useful and non-dangerous products would be made available to nations under fair and equitable arrangements. Ownership also includes the principle that no disposition of material can be made without the permission of the agency. Ownership by the agency of facilities includes rights of possession, operation and disposition.

2. Functions with regard to the detection of secret activities

"By requiring that all activities and facilities in this field must either be managed or licensed by the agency, the detection of clandestine activities is greatly simplified. The agency need not be concerned with the motives of those carrying on unauthorized activities in this field, for it is the very existence of such activities that is illegal.

"In order to allow the exercise of the powers necessary for the detection of secret activities, nations must undertake in the treaty to grant to the agency rights of inspection of any part of their territory subject to appropriate procedural requirements and limitations designed to prevent possible abuse of the powers given to the agency. However, the amount of inspection required and the attendant interferences would be much less than would be necessary under a control system which sought to depend on inspection alone.

"The agency would, nevertheless, have to conduct various kinds of inspection. For example, in order to appraise the possibility of a nation engaging in clandestine activities, the agency would have the duty to conduct or to arrange with nations for the conduct of surveys and explorations to discover and determine world supplies of source material. It would also have rights of conducting routine air surveys over areas which are known to contain source material. For the same purpose, the agency would have the authority to require periodic reports from nations regarding specialized equipment and supplies directly related to the production and use of atomic energy and to check on such reports.

3. Functions with regard to research

"The agency should have positive research and developmental responsibilities in order to remain in the forefront of atomic knowledge so as to render the agency more effective in promoting the beneficial uses of atomic energy and in eliminating its destructive ones. The exclusive right to carry on research on the destructive properties of atomic energy should be vested in the agency.

"Research in nuclear physics having a direct bearing on the use of atomic energy should be subject to appropriate safeguards established by the agency in accordance with the treaty. Such safeguards should not interfere with the prosecution of pure scientific research, or the publication of its results, provided no dangerous use or purpose is involved.

"It is by control of the actual materials, not by the prohibition of research, that their misuse can be prevented; the strict control of all potentially dangerous materials must be the central objective of the agency. Once this is fully achieved, the futility of secrecy would be evident and there could be full publication of research and full international collaboration among scientists. The agency would promote among all nations the exchange of basic scientific information on atomic energy for peaceful ends.

D. PROHIBITION OF WEAPONS

"The terms of reference of the Commission call for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons.

"An international agreement to outlaw the national production, possession and use of atomic weapons is an essential part of any effective international system of control. But an international treaty to this effect, if standing alone, would fail (a) to ensure the use of atomic energy only for peaceful purposes, and (b) to provide for effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions, and thus would fail to meet the requirements of the terms of reference of the Commission. To be effective, such agreement must be embodied in a treaty providing for a comprehensive international system of control, and including guarantees and safeguards adequate to ensure the carrying out of the terms of the treaty and to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions.

"As an integral part of such a comprehensive system of control, the treaty would:

"1. Prohibit the manufacture, possession and use of atomic weapons by all nations parties thereto and by all persons under their jurisdiction;

"2. Provide for the disposal of any existing stocks of atomic weapons and for the proper use of nuclear fuel adaptable for use in weapons.

"The first and second reports present specific proposals which elaborate the principles summarized above.

"For the reasons given in Part I of this report, certain questions have not been extensively studied thus far. However, in the course of its work, the Commission has made certain general findings which bear upon most of these topics and, based upon those findings, has made certain recommendations in the first report which are along the following lines. (Cf. Part III of the first report.)

E. GENERAL OPERATIONAL RELATIONSHIPS

"The relations of the international control agency to the several organs of the United Nations should be clearly established and defined by the treaty.

"The treaty would provide that the rule of unanimity of the permanent members, which in certain circumstances exists in the Security Council, would have no relation to the work of the agency. No Government would possess any right of veto over the fulfilment by the agency of the obligations imposed upon it by the treaty, nor would any Government have the power, through the exercise of any right of veto or otherwise, to obstruct the course of control or inspection.

"Decisions of the agency, pursuant to the powers conferred upon it by the treaty, should govern the operations of national agencies for atomic energy. In carrying out its prescribed functions, however, the agency should interfere as little as necessary with the operations of national agencies for atomic energy, or with the economic plans and the private, corporate and State relationships in the several countries.

F. STAGES OF TRANSITION TO INTERNATIONAL CONTROL

"The treaty should embrace the entire programme for putting the international system of control into effect and should provide a schedule for the completion of the transitional process over a period of time, step by step, in an orderly and agreed sequence leading to the full and effective establishment of international control of atomic energy. In order that the transition may be accomplished as rapidly as possible, and with safety and equity to all, the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission should supervise the transitional process, as prescribed in the treaty, and should be empowered to determine when a particular stage or stages have been completed and subsequent ones are to commence.

G. ENFORCEMENT AND SANCTIONS

"The treaty should include provisions specifying the means and methods of determining violations of its terms, setting forth such violations as would constitute international crimes, and establishing the nature of the measures of enforcement and punishment to be imposed upon persons and upon nations guilty of violating the terms of the treaty.

"The judicial or other processes for determination of violations of the treaty, and of punishment therefor, should be swift and certain. Serious violations of the treaty would be reported immediately by the agency to the nations parties to the treaty, to the General Assembly, and to the Security Council. Once the violations constituting international crimes have been defined and the measures of enforcement and punishment therefor agreed to in the treaty, there would be no legal right, by veto or otherwise, whereby a wilful violator of the terms of the treaty could be protected from the consequences of violation of its terms.

"In consideration of the problem of violation of the terms of the treaty, it should also be borne in mind that a violation might be of so grave a character as to give rise to the inherent right of self-defence recognized in Article 51 of the Charter of the United Nations."

d. CONSIDERATION OF U.S.S.R. PROPOSALS

- (1) U.S.S.R. Amendments and Additions to the First Report of the Atomic Energy Commission

From the outset of the Atomic Energy Commission's deliberations, the U.S.S.R. delegation had contended that the primary and most urgent task of the Commission was the prohibition of atomic weapons and on June 19, 1946, had submitted a "draft international convention to prohibit the production and employment of weapons based on the use of atomic energy for the purpose of mass destruction" (AEC/8), the text* of which follows:

"Being profoundly aware of the vast significance of the great scientific discoveries connected with the splitting of the atom and the obtaining and use of atomic energy for the purpose of promoting the welfare and raising the standard of living of the peoples of the world, as well as for the development of culture and science for the benefit of mankind;

"Animated by the desire to promote in every way the fullest possible utilization by all peoples of scientific discoveries in the sphere of atomic energy for the purpose of improving the conditions of life of the peoples of the world and promoting their welfare and the further progress of human culture;

"Fully realizing that the great scientific discoveries in the sphere of atomic energy carry with them a great danger, above all, for peaceful towns and the civilian population in the event of these discoveries being used in the form of atomic weapons for the purpose of mass destruction;

"Recognizing the great significance of the fact that international agreements have already prohibited the use in warfare of asphyxiating, poisonous, and other similar gases, as well as all similar liquids, substances, and processes, and likewise bacteriological means, rightly condemned by the public opinion of the civilized world, and considering that the international prohibition of the use of atomic weapons for the mass destruction of human beings corresponds in still greater measure to the aspirations and the conscience of the peoples of the whole world;

"Being firmly resolved to avert the danger of these scientific discoveries being used to the detriment and against the interests of mankind;

"Resolved to conclude a convention to prohibit the production and the employment of weapons based on the use of atomic energy, and for this purpose appointed as their plenipotentiaries (here follows the list of plenipotentiaries) who, after presenting their credentials found to be in good and due form, agreed as follows:

Article 1

"The High Contracting Parties solemnly declare that they are unanimously resolved to prohibit the production and the employment of weapons based on the use of atomic energy, and for this purpose assume the following obligations:

"(a) Not to use atomic weapons in any circumstances whatsoever;

"(b) To prohibit the production and storing of weapons based on the use of atomic energy;

"(c) To destroy, within a period of three months from the day of the entry into force of the present convention, all stocks of atomic energy weapons whether in a finished or unfinished condition.

Article 2

"The High Contracting States declare that any violation of article 1 of the present convention is a most serious international crime against humanity.

Article 3

"The High Contracting States shall, within a period of six months from the day of the entry into force of the present convention, pass legislation providing severe penalties for violators of the statutes of the present convention.

Article 4

"The present convention shall be of indefinite duration.

Article 5

"The present convention shall be open for the adherence of any State whether a Member or a non-member of the United Nations.

Article 6

"The present convention shall come into force after its

*The text quoted is the edited version in the Official Records of the Atomic Energy Commission. Third Year. Special Supplement. Third Report to the Security Council. (AEC/31/Rev.1.) pp. 18-20.

approval by the Security Council and after the ratification and delivery of ratification documents to the Secretary-General for safekeeping by one half of the signatory States, including all the Member States of the United Nations named in Article 23 of the Charter of the Organization.

Article 7

"After the entry into force of the present convention it shall be binding on all States whether Members or non-members of the United Nations.

Article 8

"The present convention, of which the Russian, Chinese, French, English and Spanish texts shall be authentic, is drawn up in one copy and shall be kept in the archives of the Secretary-General of the United Nations. The Secretary-General shall communicate certified copies to all the parties to the convention."

The delegation of the U.S.S.R. had insisted further that any international system of control of atomic energy to be established subsequently by separate convention must be set up "within the framework of the Security Council", according to the resolution of the General Assembly on "Principles governing the general regulation and reduction of armaments" adopted on December 14, 1946.

In its first report to the Security Council (AEC/18/Rev.1) the Atomic Energy Commission rejected by a majority the views of the U.S.S.R. delegation on the conclusion of the above-mentioned convention as well as on a number of other issues. The U.S.S.R. delegation therefore had abstained from voting on the first report.

In the course of the Security Council's consideration of the Commission's first report, the representative of the U.S.S.R. at the 108th meeting of the Council on February 18, submitted twelve proposed amendments and additions (S/283) designed to bring Part II C ("General Findings") and Part III ("Recommendations") of the report more in line with the views of the U.S.S.R. delegation as stated in the course of the Council's discussion (see S/P.V. 106,115).⁴⁴

After considering the question of the disposition of the Atomic Energy Commission's report, it was agreed by the majority of the Council's members that no useful purpose would be served by a detailed examination in the Security Council of the U.S.S.R. amendments and additions and that it was not appropriate for the Security Council to amend the report. It was the sense of the Council that it would be preferable for the Commission to attempt to resolve the existing differences.

The Atomic Energy Commission accordingly, in its resolution of March 19, 1947 (see above), instructed its committees to study particularly those questions relating to the control of atomic energy on which agreement among its members had not yet been reached.

On March 31 the Working Committee resolved "to consider at its meetings the points of disagreement outlined in the statements of the representative of the U.S.S.R. in the Security Council" (AEC/C.1/14).

Between April 8 and July 23, 1947, the Working Committee devoted twenty meetings to a detailed discussion of the U.S.S.R. amendments and additions (AEC/C.1/12/Rev.1) to the Commission's first report. When the discussion of each amendment was completed, the results of such discussion were indicated by specific resolutions (AEC/C.1/34, 36) or by reference to the record. In instances where differences were not resolved, the issues were postponed for later consideration.

On July 23 the Working Committee instructed the Secretariat to prepare a synopsis of the discussion to date for approval by the Working Committee. On the basis of this synopsis, a detailed account of the consideration in the Working Committee of the U.S.S.R. amendments and additions was included as Part III in the second report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council (see above). In this part of the report it is indicated that no agreement was reached on the following main questions of principle raised by the U.S.S.R. amendments:

(a) The question of control and inspection on the part of an international organ, which should be applied in regard to all existing plants for the production of final atomic materials (nuclear fuel) immediately after an appropriate convention or conventions have been put into effect;

(b) The question of the necessity of establishing an effective international system of control of atomic energy by means of multilateral conventions, which must be administered within the framework of the Security Council;

(c) The question of the urgency of the conclusion of an international convention outlawing the production, possession and use of atomic weapons, as an essential part of any system of international control of atomic energy. To be effective, such a convention must provide for the establishment of a comprehensive system of international control "to ensure the carrying out of the terms of the convention";

(d) The question of the undesirability of granting to the control agency the right to conduct research on atomic weapons;

⁴⁴See Security Council, Official Records. Second Year. Supplements No. 13 and No. 22.

(e) The question of the conclusion of several treaties or conventions including a Convention on Prohibition of Atomic Weapons to be concluded as the first one;

(f) The question of the irrelevancy of the reference to the "veto" contained in the first report of the Atomic Energy Commission;

(g) The question of the stages of transition from existing conditions to international control and the question of providing for destruction of stocks of manufactured and unfinished weapons.

The introduction to the second report states that discussion of the U.S.S.R. amendments had not led the Commission to revise the "General Findings" and "Recommendations" of the first report.

(2) U.S.S.R. Proposals of June 11, 1947

At the meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission of June 11, 1947, the representative of the U.S.S.R. presented for the Commission's consideration certain "basic provisions on which an international agreement or convention on atomic energy control should be based", as follows (AEC/24):

"The Soviet Union Government, in addition to and in development of its proposal on the conclusion of an international convention on the prohibition of atomic and other major weapons of mass destruction, submitted for the consideration of the Atomic Energy Commission on 19 June 1946, presents for the consideration of the above-mentioned Commission the following basic provisions on which an international agreement or convention on atomic energy control should be based.

"1. To ensure the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only, in accordance with the international convention on the prohibition of atomic and other major weapons of mass destruction and also with the purpose of preventing violations of the convention on the prohibition of atomic weapons and for the protection of complying States against hazards of violations and evasions, strict international control shall be established simultaneously over all facilities engaged in the mining of atomic raw materials and in the production of atomic materials and atomic energy.

"2. To carry out measures of control of atomic energy facilities, there shall be established, within the framework of the Security Council, an international commission for atomic energy control to be called the International Control Commission.

"3. The International Control Commission shall have its own machinery for inspection.

"4. The terms and organizational principles of the international control of atomic energy, and also the composition, rights, and obligations of the International Control Commission, as well as provisions on the basis of which it shall carry out its activities, shall be determined by a special international convention on atomic energy control, which is to be concluded in accordance with the convention on the prohibition of atomic weapons.

"5. In order to ensure the effectiveness of international control of atomic energy, the convention on the control of atomic energy shall be based on the following fundamental provisions:

"(a) The International Control Commission shall be composed of the representatives of States members of the Atomic Energy Commission established by the General Assembly decision of 24 January 1946, and may create such subsidiary organs as it finds necessary for the fulfilment of its functions.

"(b) The International Control Commission shall establish its own rules of procedure.

"(c) The personnel of the International Control Commission shall be selected on an international basis.

"(d) The International Control Commission shall periodically carry out inspection of facilities for the mining of atomic raw materials and for the production of atomic materials and atomic energy.

"6. In carrying out the inspection of atomic energy facilities, the International Control Commission shall undertake the following measures:

"(a) Investigate the activities of facilities for mining atomic raw materials and for the production of atomic materials and atomic energy, and check their accounts;

"(b) Check existing stocks of atomic raw materials, atomic materials, and unfinished products;

"(c) Study production operations to the extent necessary for the control of the use of atomic materials and atomic energy;

"(d) Observe the fulfilment of the rules of technical exploitation of the facilities prescribed by the convention on control, and work out and prescribe the rules of technological control of such facilities;

"(e) Collect and analyse data on the mining of atomic raw materials and on the production of atomic materials and atomic energy;

"(f) Carry out special investigations in cases when suspicion of violations of the convention on the prohibition of atomic weapons arises;

"(g) Make recommendations to Governments on questions relating to the production, stock piling, and use of atomic materials and atomic energy;

"(h) Make recommendations to the Security Council on measures for prevention and suppression with regard to violators of the conventions on the prohibition of atomic weapons and on the control of atomic energy.

"7. For the fulfilment of the tasks of control and inspection entrusted to the International Control Commission, the latter shall have the right of:

"(a) Access to any facilities for mining, production, and stockpiling of atomic raw materials and atomic materials, as well as to the facilities for the exploitation of atomic energy;

"(b) Acquaintance with the production operations of the atomic energy facilities, to the extent necessary for the control of the use of atomic materials and atomic energy;

"(c) Carrying out weighing, measurements, and various analyses of atomic raw materials, atomic materials, and unfinished products;

"(d) Requesting from the Government of any nation, and checking, various data and reports on the activities of atomic energy facilities;

"(e) Requesting various explanations on the questions relating to the activities of atomic energy facilities;

"(f) Making recommendations and presenting suggestions to Governments on matters concerning the production and use of atomic energy;

"(g) Submitting recommendations for the consideration of the Security Council on measures in regard to violators of the conventions on the prohibition of atomic weapons and on the control of atomic energy.

"8. In accordance with the tasks of international control of atomic energy, scientific research activities in the field of atomic energy shall be based on the following provisions:

"(a) Scientific research activities in the field of atomic energy must comply with the necessity of carrying out the convention on the prohibition of atomic weapons and with the necessity of preventing its use for military purposes.

"(b) Signatory States to the convention on the prohibition of atomic weapons must have the right to carry on unrestricted scientific research activities in the field of atomic energy, directed towards discovery of methods of its use for peaceful purposes.

"(c) In the interests of an effective fulfilment of its control and inspectorial functions, the International Control Commission must have the possibility to carry out scientific research activities in the field of discovery of methods for the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. The carrying out of such activities will enable the Commission to keep itself informed on the latest achievements in this field and to have its own skilled international personnel, which is required by the Commission for practical execution of the measures of control and inspection.

"(d) In conducting scientific research in the field of atomic energy, one of the most important tasks of the International Control Commission should be to ensure a wide exchange of information among nations in this field and to render necessary assistance, through advice, to the countries parties to the convention, which may request such assistance.

"(e) The International Control Commission must have at its disposal material facilities, including research laboratories and experimental installations, necessary for the proper organization of the research activities to be conducted by it."

As regards the procedure to be followed in the consideration of these proposals the Atomic Energy Commission decided to refer them initially to the Working Committee, leaving further disposition to that Committee. After discussion at two meetings on June 12 and 17, the Working Committee agreed that certain portions of the U.S.S.R. proposals should be considered by Committee 2, while other questions, such as the question of the "veto", would be considered in the Working Committee.

Committee 2 accordingly, at meetings held on August 6, 8 and 11, embarked upon a preliminary debate of the U.S.S.R. proposals of June 11, in the course of which each delegation made a general statement concerning the proposals in the light of the contents of the working papers then being considered by Committee 2 at informal meetings (see above).

At meetings held on August 13 and 15, Committee 2 discussed the formulation of a statement referring to the U.S.S.R. proposals for inclusion in the Atomic Energy Commission's second report to the Security Council. On August 15, Committee 2 adopted by ten affirmative votes a resolution (AEC/C.2/73) proposed by the representative of Canada to the effect that "the proposals as they now stand and the explanations given thereon do not provide an adequate basis for the development by the Committee of specific proposals for an effective system of international control of atomic energy and therefore do not call for a change in the program of work of the committee". Noting, however, that certain points in the U.S.S.R. proposals were not covered in the working papers so far submitted to Committee 2, the resolution went on to state that these points, "as well as any new elaborations of the proposals already considered" would be taken up "in due course under the plan of work already adopted".

The representative of the U.S.S.R. objected to the adoption of this resolution on the ground that the U.S.S.R. proposals had not yet been considered point by point, and that it was therefore impossible to determine on which of the provisions of these proposals agreement had or had not been reached. Adoption of the resolution, he maintained, indicated reluctance on the part of the Committee to attempt to find common ground as between the U.S.S.R. proposals and those of other delegations and could only have a negative effect on the Committee's further deliberations.

In view of the conclusion arrived at by Committee 2 concerning the U.S.S.R. proposals, the Atomic Energy Commission in the introduction to its second report to the Security Council (AEC/26) stated that it was evident that the discussion of these proposals had not led to a reconciliation of the views of the U.S.S.R. with those of the majority of the Commission on major points of principle.

In the course of the discussion in Committee 2 of the U.S.S.R. proposals of June 11, several delegations had expressed a desire to have various points clarified. On August 11, therefore, the representative of the United Kingdom addressed a letter (AEC/C.2/71) to the representative of the U.S.S.R. containing eleven questions. These were answered by the representative of the U.S.S.R. in a letter dated September 5, 1947 (AEC/C.2/109). At the meeting of the Atomic Energy Commission held on September 10, 1947, the representative of the United Kingdom expressed the hope that the other delegations would join in a detailed study of the questions and answers, which, in his opinion, constituted an "elaboration" of the U.S.S.R. proposals within the meaning of the resolution (AEC/C.2/73) adopted by Committee 2 on August 15, 1947. Discussion of the matter, however, did not take place until after the second session of the General Assembly.

On December 18, 1947, the Working Committee decided that in the immediate future it would further study the U.S.S.R. proposals, with particular reference to the answers to the United Kingdom questions. It began this study on January 16, 1948, and devoted seven meetings to a detailed consideration of the proposals. At the conclusion of the detailed discussion the Committee proceeded to review the proposals as a whole, devoting three additional meetings to this task.

On March 29 the representative of the United Kingdom presented on behalf of his own delegation and those of Canada, China and France a joint report analyzing the U.S.S.R. proposals (AEC/C.1/76).

Any effective plan for international control of atomic energy, it was set forth in the report, must provide against the danger of misuse of atomic materials through (1) their diversion from legitimate uses and (2) secret manufacture. The U.S.S.R. proposals, the report stated, did not face these basic problems, inasmuch as the powers and functions of the proposed international control commission were to be limited to "periodic inspection" and "special investigations", the latter to be undertaken only in case of suspicion of clandestine activities.

Periodic inspection, the report stated, was an inadequate safeguard against diversion of nuclear materials from "declared" plants. Only management of the plant by the international organization itself would enable it to keep check on the nuclear fuels involved. As regards the "special investigations" in case of suspicion of violation, the report stated that in view of the restricted scope of inspection there would in practice be no opportunity for the international control commission to become suspicious.

Even if the international control commission, by the inadequate methods at its disposal, should detect violations of the convention on the control of atomic energy, it would not, the report explained further, possess any powers to prevent or correct such violations. The only power granted the international control commission under the U.S.S.R. proposals was that of making recommendations to the Security Council. It would not possess any independent powers of enforcing its decisions. At best this would result in delays during which illegal activities could continue unchecked.

Referring finally to the fact that the Government of the U.S.S.R. considered that prohibition and destruction of atomic weapons should take place before the conclusion of an international agreement to enforce that prohibition and prevent the misuse of atomic energy by means of an international control system, the report asserted that a convention on prohibition standing alone could give no assurance:

(a) that nations which are known to possess atomic weapons would in fact destroy all or indeed any of them;

(b) that nations not known to have atomic weapons, but which might have them, would carry out their obligations;

(c) that nations would be prevented from manufacturing atomic weapons in the future.

In the opinion of the authors of the report on the U.S.S.R. proposals, the prohibition of atomic weapons could only be brought about through a system of control whereby that prohibition could be enforced. The report therefore concluded that:

"The Soviet Union proposals are not an acceptable basis for the international control of atomic energy. The United Nations Atomic Energy Commission cannot endorse any scheme which would not prevent the diversion of atomic material, which provides no effective means for the detection of clandestine activities and which has no provision for prompt and effective enforcement action. The Soviet Union Government has not only proposed a scheme that is fundamentally inadequate for the control of atomic energy, but at the same time has made the overriding stipulation that they will not agree to establish even such a feeble scheme of control until all atomic weapons have been prohibited and destroyed. It is completely unrealistic to expect any nation to renounce atomic weapons without any assurance that all nations will be prevented from producing them."

In view of this conclusion the following resolution was recommended by the authors of the joint report for the consideration of the Working Committee:

"The Working Committee,

"Having examined in detail and as a whole the Soviet Union proposals of 11 June 1947 and the elaborations thereon, and in view of the conclusions set out in the preceding paragraphs,

"Finds that the Soviet Union proposals ignore the existing technical knowledge of the problem of atomic energy control, do not provide an adequate basis for the effective international control of atomic energy and the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons, and therefore, do not conform to the terms of reference of the Atomic Energy Commission.

"The Working Committee concludes that no useful purpose can be served by further discussion of these proposals in the Working Committee."

The Working Committee adopted the report on the U.S.S.R. proposals on April 5, 1948. At the same meeting the representative of the U.S.S.R. replied to the arguments contained in the report. Concerning the question of "periodic inspection" he stated that there could not be any inspection other than a periodic one. Any measures which had to be applied continuously in respect of productive facilities and to sources of raw materials could not be regarded as inspection, but must be regarded as management or supervision. The United States proposals on management, supervision and licensing of atomic facilities, which had been adopted by the majority of the Atomic Energy Commission, however, were not acceptable to the U.S.S.R. delegation.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. further stated that there was no basis for any "special investigation" in the absence of any suspicion with respect to a country or certain countries. Special investigators should not be regarded as tourists who could go to any place quite freely without any basis.

In the opinion of the U.S.S.R. representative, inspection and special investigations, together with some other measures provided for in the U.S.S.R. proposals, but not mentioned in the report adopted by the Working Committee, would provide the international control organ with the necessary powers to exercise its functions effectively and to prevent the misuse of atomic energy.

Concerning the question of the prohibition of atomic weapons, the representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that a convention prohibiting such weapons should be concluded as a first step in the system of establishment of international control, to be followed by other important steps, such as the conclusion of another convention to ensure fulfilment of the first convention through measures of control and inspection. International control of atomic energy as such would be useless in the absence of a convention prohibiting atomic weapons. If the convention on the prohibition of atomic weapons were concluded, the U.S.S.R. Government would do its best to reach the completion of negotiations on the second convention, but without knowing the terms of such a convention the U.S.S.R. Government could not give any advance assurance of its acceptance. Some delegations might advance absolutely unacceptable proposals concerning management, supervision and licensing of atomic facilities.

With regard to the criticism contained in the report adopted by the Working Committee as to the lack of powers of enforcement on the part of the international control organ, the representative of the U.S.S.R. maintained that the question of sanctions was entirely within the jurisdiction and scope of the Security Council. To entrust the international control organ, or any other organ of the United Nations, with such powers, would be contrary to the letter and spirit of the Charter of the United Nations.

e. THIRD REPORT OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL

The Atomic Energy Commission convened on May 7, 1948, to receive and discuss a statement presented by the representative of France on behalf of his own delegation and those of the United Kingdom and the United States. At the same time the representative of France circulated a "Summary of the Majority Plan of Control".⁴⁵ The joint statement was further considered by the Atomic Energy Commission on May 17, 1948, and was adopted by a vote of 9 to 2 (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). This statement adopted by the Commission forms the substance of the Commission's third report to the Security Council (AEC/31/-Rev.1), i.e., Part I, entitled "Report and Recommendations of the Atomic Energy Commission". (Part II contains a brief account of the proceedings of the Atomic Energy Commission from September 10, 1947, to May 17, 1948. The "Summary of the Majority Plan of Control" circulated by the representative of France was included in the report as an annex.)

"The Atomic Energy Commission reports that it has reached an impasse", the Commission's third report states at the outset. It goes on to state that "In almost two years of work, the Commission has accomplished much and has succeeded in making clear the essentials of a plan for the control of atomic energy, in fulfilment of the objectives of the resolution of the General Assembly of 24 January 1946. Nevertheless it considers that it cannot now prepare a draft treaty 'incorporating its ultimate proposals' as urged by the resolution of the Security Council of 10 March 1947."

Explaining the reasons for the Commission's failure, the report states that

"The difficulties which confront the Commission were first evidenced when the plan under consideration by most of the Governments members of the Commission was rejected by the Soviet Union 'either as a whole or in its separate parts,' on the ground that such a plan constituted an unwarranted infringement of national sovereignty. For its part the Soviet Union insisted that a convention outlawing atomic weapons and providing for the destruction of existing weapons must precede any control agreement. The majority of the Commission considered that such a convention, without safeguards, would offer no protection against non-compliance."

This initial divergency of view, the report states, did not deter the Commission from pursuing its task in the hope that the disagreement might be resolved as a result of further study. Accordingly, the Commission had decided to defer the consideration of the political aspects of the problem of the control of atomic energy until it had first studied its scientific and technical aspects.

The Commission now considered that the analysis of the technical requirements of atomic energy control had been pursued as far as possible. Unfortunately, this analysis, the Commission reported, had not led to agreement even on the technical aspects of control. Until agreement on the basic principles of control had been reached, however, the Commission considered that it would be unrealistic and would serve no useful purpose to discuss other aspects of the problem, such as organization and administration of the international control agency, financing, strategic balance, prohibition and enforcement and the stages of transition from conditions of national control to the final conditions of predominantly international control.⁴⁶

The majority of the Commission considered, however, that by concentrating on the technical facts, which, irrespective of any political situation, must be met by any satisfactory plan of control, the Commission had prepared findings and recommendations, which would stand as the basis of any further study of this subject.

Speaking in more general terms, the Commission stated in its third report that:

"The principles submitted in the two previous reports of the Commission provide an alternative to the armaments race that results from the absence of international control and which would not be prevented by the establishment of an inadequate system of control. These principles require that atomic energy must not be developed on the basis of national interests and needs, means and resources, but that its planning and operation be made a common enterprise in all its phases.

"Only if traditional economic and political practices are adapted to the over-riding requirements of international security, can these proposals be implemented. Traditional conceptions of the economic exploitation of the resources of nature for private or national advantage would then be replaced in this field by a new pattern of co-operation in international relations."

The report goes on to state that:

"The majority of the Commission is fully aware of the impact of its plan on traditional prerogatives of national sovereignty. But in the face of the realities of the problem it sees no alternative to the voluntary sharing by nations of their sovereignty in this field to the extent required by its proposals. It finds no other solution which will meet the facts, prevent national rivalries in this most dangerous field, and fulfil the Commission's terms of reference."

The Commission, however, had been unable to secure the agreement of the U.S.S.R. "to even those elements of effective control considered essential from the technical point of view, let alone their acceptance of the nature and extent of participation in the world community required of all nations in this field by the first and second reports of the Atomic Energy Commission". In this situation, the Commission concluded that no useful purpose could be served by continuing negotiations at the Commission level and it therefore recommended that, until such time as the General Assembly found that this situation no longer existed, or until such time as the permanent members of the Atomic Energy Commission (the permanent members of the Security Council and Canada) found through prior consultation that there existed a basis for agreement on the international control of atomic energy, negotiations in the Atomic Energy Commission be suspended.

Finally, the Atomic Energy Commission recommended that the Security Council should transmit this report, together with the Commission's two previous reports, to the next regular session of the General Assembly as a matter of special concern.

f. CONSIDERATION BY THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION'S THIRD REPORT

The Security Council considered the third report of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC/-31/Rev.1) at its 318th, 321st and 325th meetings on June 11, 16 and 22.

At the 318th meeting, on June 11, the representative of the United States stated that, immediately after the use of atomic weapons, the United States had proposed international control in order to ensure that this new discovery might be used for peaceful purposes only. The efforts of the Atomic Energy Commission had resulted in the preparation of a plan which provided for an international control agency to be established by treaty, which would own all source material and nuclear fuel, own, operate and manage all dangerous facilities, license all non-dangerous activities in this field and conduct inspections to prevent diversions of material or clandestine operations.

Further, the plan of the majority provided that a system of quotas, assigning to each signatory state its specific proportion of atomic fuels and power plants, should be written into the treaty itself, so that the international agency would have no arbitrary powers in this respect, but would simply carry out the provisions of the treaty.

The Commission, the representative of the United States stated, had examined other solutions and had rejected them because, in its opinion, these solutions did not meet the known facts of the problem created by the discovery of atomic energy. Prolonged study and many debates, however, had not enabled the majority to secure the agreement of the U.S.S.R. to the first and second reports of the Atomic Energy Commission.

⁴⁶ For "Summary of Principal Subjects", see pp. 461-62.

In view of the nature of the impasse in the Atomic Energy Commission, the representative of the United States submitted the following draft resolution (S/836):

"The Security Council,

"Having received and examined, the First, the Second, and the Third Reports of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission,

"Accepts these Reports and,

"Approves the General Findings (Part II C) and Recommendations (Part III) of the First Report, and the Specific Proposals of Part II of the Second Report as constituting the necessary basis for establishing an effective system of international control of atomic energy in accordance with the terms of reference of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission and,

"Approves the "Report and Recommendations of the Atomic Energy Commission" (Part I) of the Third Report of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, and

"Directs the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly and to the Member nations of the United Nations, the First, Second and Third Reports of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, together with the record of the Security Council's approval thereof."

The representative of the United Kingdom declared himself in favor of a suspension of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission. He emphasized the careful thought that had been given to the technical problem of atomic energy control and the significance of the first and second reports. He expressed the opinion that the Atomic Energy Commission could not by itself dissolve a deadlock which was fundamentally political, and that it was useless to continue further detailed discussion in the Commission until, at a higher level, it was possible to produce an atmosphere of confidence.

The representative of Canada felt that the situation did not call for recrimination, but for a serious effort to face realities. The divergence of views had arisen because of the insistence of the U.S.S.R. that a convention outlawing atomic weapons and providing for their destruction must precede any agreement for the establishment of a system of international control. The majority of the Commission, on the other hand, continued to hold the view that such a convention, unless accompanied simultaneously by effective safeguards, would offer no protection to the nations of the world. If the work of the Atomic Energy Commission were to be suspended, the challenge to the peoples of the world to find a solution to the problem of the control of this force, potentially so destructive to mankind, still remained. The reports of the Commission must be a stimulus to further effort.

At the 321st meeting on June 16, the representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the chief problem in connection with the control of atomic energy was that of prohibiting the production of atomic weapons. All complementary measures, including measures for inspection of enterprises which deal with the production of atomic weapons, had to be subordinated to this basic problem. In insisting on the prohibition of atomic weapons, the U.S.S.R. Government based itself on the evident fact that atomic weapons are aggressive weapons and are designed to exterminate peaceful populations, mainly those of large cities.

The prohibition of atomic weapons and the establishment of effective international control was the task of the Atomic Energy Commission and of the Security Council, which were supposed to carry out practical measures to that end. The Atomic Energy Commission had been unable to carry out its task because certain states—in particular the United States—confronted this proposal negatively, and were attempting to drown the question of the prohibition of atomic weapons and to divert the attention of the Atomic Energy Commission from this task to the consideration of all kinds of proposals which were contradictory to the General Assembly's resolution of December 14, 1946, and to the basic principles of the Charter.

The United States had adopted a negative attitude towards the draft international convention submitted on June 19, 1946, by the U.S.S.R. delegation, which provided for a ban on the production and use of atomic weapons.

The U.S.S.R. delegation considered it essential to draw the Council's attention again to the fact that there was no justification for the position of the opponents of a convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons, who made the conclusion of such a convention conditional upon the adoption of the United States plan. Such a position merely bore witness to the reluctance of some states to carry out the decision of the General Assembly for the control over atomic energy.

It was clear that the responsibility in this connection was borne by the United States, whose leading circles had their own schemes linked with the absence of international control over atomic energy and with the opportunity for unlimited production of atomic weapons.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. also stated that it was clear that the question of the prohibition of atomic weapons could not be separated from the question of the destruction of the extant stockpiles of such weapons, since it was inconceivable that the prohibition of atomic weapons would be carried through while the hoarded stockpiles of these weapons continued in existence. It would seem that, if agreement were to be reached regarding the necessity of prohibiting atomic weapons, then it must follow that the convention or the conventions must provide for the destruction of stockpiles of atomic weapons and of unfinished atomic weapons, and that the utilization of nuclear fuel contained in such weapons should be only for peaceful purposes. There were other questions on which it had been impossible to reach agreement: a time for the establishment of international control and inspection, the time limits for the stages in the introduction of atomic control and inspection over enterprises which deal with the production of finished atomic materials (nuclear fuel).

The Baruch proposals were silent on this subject, although they did contain a detailed program for the establishment of control and inspection over the sources of raw material and a broadly detailed program for the transformation of the United States, or, to be more precise, of United States monopolistic cartels and trusts, into the masters of the whole atomic industry of the world.

The United States proposals did not even attempt to raise the question of the time limits for the stages of the introduction of atomic control and inspection and, when the U.S.S.R. delegation raised this question, the United States had objected to its consideration. Therefore, not only the first report of the Atomic Energy Commission, but even the second and third reports did not deal with this question at all. The representative of the United States also decisively objected to the U.S.S.R. proposal for the simultaneous introduction of control over and inspection of all enterprises for the production of finished atomic materials, as well as of the sources of raw materials, because he wanted to confine himself only to the control over the sources of raw material.

On June 11, 1947, the delegation of the U.S.S.R. had submitted proposals for the control of atomic energy, which, together with the convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons proposed on June 19, 1946, would secure the establishment of effective control and, at the same time, would not jeopardize the sovereignty and independence of states parties to the control system.

On the other hand, the United States proposals were incompatible with the sovereignty of states. In practice, the adoption of the United States proposals would mean that the United States would receive additional opportunities to interfere in the internal economic life of other states through international control over atomic energy. The United States proposals were not even calculated to secure agreement. The experience of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission had shown that these proposals were designed to wreck the whole cause of the establishment of international control over atomic energy. The proposals were also contradictory to the principle of the unanimity of the permanent members of the Security Council. The representative of the U.S.S.R. considered that the Government of the United States, in submitting a draft resolution providing for approval by the Security Council of the conclusions and the recommendations contained in the previous reports of the Atomic Energy Commission—all unacceptable to the U.S.S.R.—was motivated by a desire to bring forth U.S.S.R. "vetoes".

The representative of France stated that the appearance of atomic weapons and the constant expansion of the field of action of bomber aircraft, as well as the burdens involved in preparation for war, which were so heavy as to threaten to undermine the social, economic and political institutions of those peoples which had so far resisted the ravages of time and war, required a new conception of international security. Although the Atomic Energy Commission had been unable to reach agreement, the representative of France considered that its efforts had not been useless. The control plan proposed by the majority constituted, in his view, a wedge driven deeply into the edifice of traditional conceptions of international relations, and although it appeared bold today, contained the true wisdom which the freeing of nuclear forces made essential on the part of the governments of the world.

Stating finally that a realistic and objective examination of the problem of atomic energy control was the only safeguard against the dangers confronting the United Nations, the representative of France supported the proposal to transmit the three reports of the Atomic Energy Commission to the General Assembly.

The representative of China stated that he was profoundly disturbed by the failure of the Atomic Energy Commission to reach agreement. The minority of the Commission had persistently opposed the majority plan of control on the ground—among others—that it involved serious violations of national sovereignty. In the view of the Chinese delegation, however, the proposals of the majority were a timid step compared with world government. Such mild limits upon the exercise of national sovereignty as were contemplated, moreover, would be imposed upon the governments of the world on the basis of strict equality.

The representative of China stated further that the United States would make greater sacrifices than any other country if the majority proposals were accepted. Any country which was responsible for the rejection of the United States proposals incurred a grave responsibility.

The representative of Belgium, referring to the U.S.S.R. proposals on atomic energy control, expressed the view that the conclusion of a convention which would confine itself to setting forth a prohibition as regards atomic weapons would constitute a vain if not dangerous gesture; such a prohibition could not possibly be dissociated from an effective system of control of which it ought to be an integral part.

As the work of the Atomic Energy Commission during the past two years had continued, the conviction was strengthened among the majority of the members, the representative of Belgium stated, that effective control of atomic energy could only be attained if a certain number of fundamental conditions were fulfilled. These conditions were set forth in the first two reports of the Atomic Energy Commission. They essentially indicated that the production and utilization of atomic energy should be removed from the province of national sovereignty and should become the object of a kind of international socialization.

The U.S.S.R. had opposed these conclusions, and inasmuch as the disagreement did not bear only on technical details, but upon fundamental principles, it had to be considered, the representative of Belgium concluded, as unbridgeable under present circumstances.

Nevertheless the representative of Belgium expressed the hope that the work of the Atomic Energy Commission would not prove utterly vain and futile. This work had allowed the data of the problem and the conditions upon which a satisfactory solution must depend to be clearly defined. It was now incumbent upon the nations represented in the appropriate organs of the United Nations to tell the world whether they were determined to inaugurate in their mutual relations the co-operation which their security and general prosperity required.

At the 325th meeting of the Security Council, the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. stated that adoption of the United States proposal calling for the suspension of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission was fraught with heavy political consequences. It would make possible more and more effective measures for war preparation which were being carried on by official quarters in the United States.

Throughout the two years of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission, the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. stated further, it had become abundantly clear that the United States did not want to achieve the prohibition of the manufacture of atomic weapons, and still less did it desire the establishment of effective control over the use of atomic energy to the end that it should be used for peaceful purposes exclusively. The authorities of the United States wished to achieve and to retain full monopolistic control over the manufacture and use of atomic energy the world over. They were, however, attempting to mask their refusal to admit any control over atomic energy under a cloak of reservations and conditions designed to make agreement on plans for the international control virtually impossible.

In the opinion of the Ukrainian delegation, the so-called Baruch plan, upon the adoption of which the United States insisted, was in direct contradiction to the Charter of the United Nations, because it would serve to cement and solidify the privileged position of the United States, it would violate the equality of large and small Powers, it would interfere with the internal affairs of states and would jeopardize their sovereignty. The only effective way to implement the decisions of the General Assembly of January 24 and December 14, 1946, was to adopt the U.S.S.R. proposals of June 19, 1946, and June 11, 1947. These proposals set forth the basic provisions of an international convention for the prohibition of atomic weapons in conjunction with effective control measures for the implementation of such a convention.

The representative of Colombia stated that the conclusions of the third report of the Atomic Energy Commission could not be more discouraging. World opinion would not be able to explain the reasons for the failure of the Atomic Energy Commission to reach agreement. Inasmuch as scientists called upon for their opinion were in accord that there were no reasons whatever of a technical character which could impede effective international control of atomic energy, the world would have to conclude that political expediency, selfish motives or secret aims were the obstacles in the way of reaching agreement. The United Nations would lose its prestige as a result.

The representative of Colombia considered that the only step left for the Atomic Energy Commission and the Security Council was to return to the General Assembly to confess their inability to reach a solution, and to enable world opinion, which alone was capable of solving problems which seem insoluble, to become acquainted with the full scope of the facts, and so to help the Great Powers to arrive at an agreement.

The United States draft resolution (S/836) was then put to the vote. The result was 9 in favor and 2 against (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), but since one of the two opposing members was a permanent member of the Security Council the resolution was not adopted.

The representative of Canada then proposed the following draft resolution (S/851):

"The Security Council,

"Having received and examined the First, the Second, and the Third Reports of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission,

"Directs the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly and to the Member nations of the United Nations, the First, Second and Third Reports of the Atomic Energy Commission, together with the record of the deliberations of the Security Council on this subject, as a matter of special concern."

The Chairman ruled that the transmittal of the reports to the General Assembly would be a procedural matter. He also ruled that the suspension of the work of the Atomic Energy Commission had not been accepted by the Security Council because it had rejected the United States draft resolution.

The Canadian draft resolution was then adopted by 9 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.).

2. Commission for Conventional Armaments

At its 105th meeting, on February 13, 1947, the Security Council established a Commission for Conventional Armaments in order to work out the practical measures for giving effect to the General Assembly's resolution 41(I) of December 14, 1946, concerning principles governing the general regulation and reduction of armaments.⁴⁷

At its 152nd meeting on July 8, 1947, the Security Council approved the following plan of work (S/387) which the Commission had adopted on June 18, 1947:

"1. Consider and make recommendations to the Security Council concerning armaments and armed forces which fall within the jurisdiction of the Commission for Conventional Armaments.

"2. Consideration and determination of general principles in connection with the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces.

"3. Consideration of practical and effective safeguards by means of an international system of control operating through special organs (and by other means) to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions.

"4. Formulate practical proposals for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces.

"5. Extension of the principles and proposals set forth in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 above to States which are not Members of the United Nations.

"6. Submission of a report or reports to the Security Council including, if possible, a Draft Convention."

It was proposed that under the six headings listed above all of the topics suggested by the various delegations for the plan of work would be considered. It was also understood that the plan of work did not limit the freedom of the individual delegations to make additional suggestions at a later time.

The U.S.S.R., which together with Poland abstained from voting, referred to its alternative plan, which had been rejected by the Commission for Conventional Armaments. This alternative plan (S/C.3/SC3/9) read as follows:

"1. The establishment of general principles for the reduction of armaments and armed forces and for the determination of the minimum requirements of each State with regard to all kinds of armaments and armed forces (land, sea and air), taking into account the prohibition of atomic weapons and other kinds of armaments adaptable to mass destruction.

"2. The establishment of the general principles which are to serve as a basis for the reduction of manufacturing war production and the determination of the maximum capacity of war production for each State, with a view to permitting the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only.

"3. The extension of the principles set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2 to States which are not Members of the United Nations.

"4. The establishment of limits for individual kinds of armaments and armed forces for each State, on the basis of the principles set forth in paragraph 1.

"5. The establishment of limits for various kinds of war production for each State, on the basis of the principles set forth in paragraph 2.

"6. The determination of the procedure and time limits for bringing the level of armaments and armed forces and also of war production for each State into conformity with the limits set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5.

"7. Problems of the distribution of armed forces and the question of the reduction of networks of military, naval and air bases.

"8. Measures relating to the prohibition of the use of non-military industry and non-military means of transport for purposes of war, beyond the limits arising out of those set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5.

"9. The organization and the procedure for the establishment of a system of control to implement measures regarding the general reduction and regulation of armaments and armed forces and also of war industry and war production, taking into account the co-ordination of the aforementioned system of control with the system of control over the use of atomic energy.

"10. The working out of a draft convention."

At its tenth meeting on July 16, 1947, the Commission for Conventional Armaments by unanimous vote established a Working Committee of the whole and decided that the Committee should have as its terms of reference the plan of work approved by the Security Council at its 152nd meeting. The Working Committee was authorized to establish such sub-committees from time to time as it might deem necessary and to define their terms of reference. The Chairman of the Commission for Conventional Armaments was to act as the Chairman of the Working Committee.

The Working Committee met for the first time in closed session on August 20, 1947. Up until September 21, 1948, it had held twenty meetings.

At the first meeting the representative of the United States opened the substantive discussion of item 1 of the plan of work by proposing a resolution (S/C.3/SC.3/7/Rev.1) which defined weapons of mass destruction, in order to determine the jurisdiction of the Commission. The United States resolution, as revised somewhat as a result of the Committee's discussion, read as follows (S/C.3/SC.3/8):

"The Working Committee resolves to advise the Security Council

"(1) that it considers that all armaments and armed forces, except atomic weapons and weapons of mass destruction, fall within its jurisdiction and that weapons of mass destruction should be defined to include atomic explosive weapons, radioactive material weapons, lethal chemical and biological weapons, and any weapons developed in the future which have characteristics comparable in destructive effect to those of the atomic bomb or other weapons mentioned above;

"(2) that it proposes to proceed with its work on the basis of the above definition."

At the fourth meeting of the Working Committee on September 9, 1947, the representative of the U.S.S.R. opposed the United States proposal, on the ground that it involved a separation of the general problem of the regulation and reduction of armaments into a problem concerning atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and a problem concerning so-called conventional armaments; this separation, the U.S.S.R. representative held, was artificial and would divert the Commission from the preparation of proposals for practical measures for the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces. The U.S.S.R. representative held that measures for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces required not only the reduction of conventional armaments, but also the prohibition of the use of atomic and other weapons of mass destruction and the destruction of existing stocks of atomic weapons. He also criticized as too restrictive the definition of weapons of mass destruction.

The Working Committee, however, at its fourth meeting on September 9, 1947, adopted the revised United States resolution by a vote of 7 to 2, with 2 abstentions.

At the first meeting of the Working Committee, the representatives of Syria and Australia had raised the issue of the General Assembly resolution concerning information on armed forces and had proposed the establishment of a sub-committee to advise the Working Committee on the scope of the information required and the measures which should be taken (S/C.3/SC.3/2). After consideration, however, this proposal was withdrawn at the second meeting, held on August 25. It was agreed that the suggestion was premature at that time, and that the question of information on armed forces should be considered in conjunction with the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces. Thereafter at the third meeting on September 6, two modified proposals were submitted by the Australian and Chinese delegations respectively (S/C.3/SC.3/5 and 6) relating to the collection of information. After further discussion, it was agreed that no vote should be taken on these draft resolutions, and that the decision should be postponed to a later date.

Discussion of item 2 of the plan of work, relating to general principles, began at the fourth meeting of the Working Committee, on September 9. The Committee considered a draft list of topics prepared by the Australian delegation (S/C.3/SC.3/4). At the fifth meeting on September 12, it was decided that the delegations should submit working papers stating the views of their governments with regard to both items 2 and 3 (the latter dealing with safeguards). Such papers were submitted by all delegations (for text, see S/C.3/27, pp. 9-35) and were later tabulated by the Secretariat in the form of a draft synopsis, which was placed before the Committee on October 10.

The subsequent meetings were devoted to a detailed discussion of the various sections of the draft synopsis, with emphasis on the relationship between the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and the factors affecting international confidence and security. At the twelfth meeting on December 9, 1947, a proposal was made by the representative of Australia to establish a drafting sub-committee to prepare a statement of those principles which had received general support. This proposal was withdrawn after some discussion, and the Committee was seized of draft resolutions summarizing the majority opinion with regard to general principles submitted by France and Syria (S/C.3/SC.3/10), Australia (S/C.3/SC.3/11), and the United Kingdom (S/C.3/SC.3/12). After discussion, these texts were withdrawn in favor of a revised United Kingdom draft resolution (S/C.3/SC.3/12/Rev. 1). Amendments to this draft resolution submitted by the United States and Canada (S/C.3/SC.3/13 and 14) were accepted by the United Kingdom.

A suggestion made by the Colombian delegation to the effect that the Members of the United Nations commit themselves to nationalize, within a stated time limit, the manufacture of armaments and directly related industries (S/C.3/SC.3/16) was not pressed as an amendment to the United Kingdom resolution.

Following is the text of the revised United Kingdom resolution embodying the Canadian and United States amendments (S/C.3/SC.3/15):

"The Working Committee recommends that the following principles should govern the formulation of practical proposals for the establishment of a system for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces:

"1. A system for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces should provide for the adherence of all States. Initially it must include at least all States having substantial military resources.

"2. A system of regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces can only be put into effect in an atmosphere of international confidence and security. Measures for the regulation and reduction of armaments which would follow the establishment of the necessary degree of confidence might in turn be expected to increase confidence and so justify further measures of regulation and reduction.

"3. Examples of conditions essential to such confidence and security are:

"(a) The establishment of an adequate system of agreements under Article 43 of the Charter. Until the agreed forces are pledged to the Security Council an essential step in establishing a system of collective security will not have been taken.

"(b) The establishment of international control of atomic energy. It is a basic assumption of the work of the Commission for Conventional Armaments that the Atomic Energy Commission will make specific proposals for the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction.

"(c) The conclusion of the peace settlements with Germany and Japan. Conditions of international peace and security will not be fully established until measures have been agreed upon which will prevent these States from undertaking aggressive action in the future.

"4. A system for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces in order to make possible the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources pursuant to Article 26 of the Charter of the United Nations, must limit armaments and armed forces to those which are consistent with and indispensable to the maintenance of international peace and security. Such armaments and armed forces should not exceed those necessary for the implementation of Members' obligations and the protection of their rights under the Charter of the United Nations.

"5. A system for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces must include an adequate system of safeguards; which by including an agreed system of international supervision will ensure the observance of the provisions of the treaty or convention by all parties thereto. A system of safeguards cannot be adequate unless it possesses the following characteristics:

"(a) it is technically feasible and practical;

"(b) it is capable of detecting promptly the occurrence of violations;

"(c) it causes the minimum of interference with, and imposes the minimum burdens on, any aspect of the life of individual nations.

"6. Provision must be made for effective enforcement action in the event of violations."

The representative of the U.S.S.R. opposed the revised United Kingdom draft resolution, stating that its acceptance would in fact amount to a refusal to implement the General Assembly's resolution of December 14, 1946. That resolution, in the view of the U.S.S.R. delegation, required the Commission to formulate promptly practical measures for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and contained no conditions or prerequisites (such as the conclusion of agreements under Article 43 of the Charter) for the formulation or implementation of such practical measures. The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated his belief that, contrary to the point of view expressed in the revised and amended United Kingdom resolution, the establishment of international confidence and security was dependent on the speedy formulation and implementation of practical measures for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces, including the prohibition of the manufacture of atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction. The stand taken by the United Kingdom and the United States, he stated, could only give rise to a new armaments race, an increase of armed forces, and increased budgetary expenditures for military purposes, and all the consequences that this would entail.

At the seventeenth meeting of the Working Committee on July 26, 1948, the representative of the U.S.S.R. introduced the following counter-proposals (S/C.3/SC.3/17) supplementing and elaborating paragraph 1 of the U.S.S.R. working paper (S/C.3/SC.3/9):

"1. The general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces should cover all countries and all kinds of armaments and armed forces.

"2. The general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces should provide for:

"(a) Reduction of armies, naval and air forces both in respect to strength and armaments.

"(b) Limitation of combat characteristics of certain kinds of armaments and the prohibition of separate kinds of armaments.

"(c) Reduction of war budgets and state expenditures on production of armaments.

"(d) Reduction of production of war materials.

"3. The general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces should provide, in the first place, for the entire prohibition of production and use of atomic and other kinds of weapons designed for mass destruction and the destruction of stocks of such weapons which have been made.

"4. In order to ensure the carrying out of measures for the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces there should be established within the framework of the Security Council and as a component part of the plan for such regulation and reduction, an international system of control, which should protect the states which fulfil their obligations against the danger of violations and evasions from the carrying out of the agreement on the reduction of armaments."

The Working Committee did not discuss the proposal of the U.S.S.R. but adopted a revised and amended United Kingdom resolution at the seventeenth meeting, after paragraph by paragraph discussion, by a vote of 9 to 2.

The Working Committee then decided to submit the two resolutions (S/C.3/24 and 25) it had adopted on September 9, 1947, and July 26, 1948, to the Commission for Conventional Armaments, together with a progress report.

The Commission began to consider the Working Committee's report (S/C.3/27) at its eleventh meeting on August 2 and continued its discussion at the twelfth and thirteenth meetings on August 9 and 12. The central issues of the discussion at these meetings, as at the meetings of the Working Committee, were: (1) the jurisdiction of the Commission in relation to atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and (2) the relationship between the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and the factors affecting the present state of international relations (S/C.3/32, p. 10). The views of the majority of the Commission on these matters were reflected in the two resolutions which it had adopted (S/C.3/24 and 25).

At the twelfth meeting of the Commission on August 9, the representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Ukrainian S.S.R. reiterated their inability to accept the aforementioned resolutions under items 1 and 2 of the plan of work for the following reasons:

(1) that the Commission's resolution concerning its jurisdiction, by excluding atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction from its purview, contravened the General Assembly resolution of December 14, 1946, which in their opinion treated the regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces as a single indivisible question and required the Commission to formulate practical measures not merely for the regulation and reduction of conventional armaments but also for the prohibition of use and manufacture of atomic weapons and other weapons of mass destruction and for destruction of existing stocks of such weapons;

(2) that the Commission's resolution on general principles contravened the General Assembly resolution of December 14, 1946, which, in their view, required the Commission to formulate promptly practical measures for the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces and contained no conditions or prerequisites for the formulation or implementation of such practical measures;

(3) and particularly, that the general regulation and reduction of armaments and armed forces must necessarily provide for the complete prohibition of the atomic weapon as well as of other weapons adaptable to mass destruction, and that the opposition of the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom to the prohibition of the atomic weapon prevented the taking of steps designed to bring about a general reduction of armaments and armed forces.

At this point, the representative of the U.S.S.R. reintroduced the proposals (S/C.3/SC.3/17) which the U.S.S.R. had submitted to the Working Committee at its seventeenth meeting.

At its thirteenth meeting on August 12, the Commission adopted the resolution (S/C.3/24) determining the Commission's jurisdiction in accordance with item 1 of the Working Committee's plan of work, by a vote of 8 to 2. The resolution concerning general principles (item 2 of the plan of work) was adopted by a vote of 9 to 2.

After adopting the two resolutions proposed by the Working Committee, the Commission for Conventional Armaments decided to submit a report to the Security Council, together with the two resolutions, and requested the Secretariat to draft the report.

The draft report prepared by the Secretariat (S/C.3/32) was considered paragraph by paragraph by the Commission at its fourteenth and fifteenth meetings on August 17, 1948, and a number of amendments were adopted. The Commission agreed to set September 15 as the deadline for any delegation to request a final reading of the report. Failing such a request, the report was to be transmitted to the Security Council by the Chairman of the Commission.

By letter dated September 14, 1947, the representative of the U.S.S.R. informed the Chairman of the Commission for Conventional Armaments that the U.S.S.R. delegation was unable to agree to the draft report of the Commission to the Security Council, as this draft did not contain certain amendments put forward by the U.S.S.R. delegation at the Commission's meeting on August 17, 1948, on the question of the growth of the armed forces and military budgets of certain states. The representative of the U.S.S.R. also recalled that he had voted against the two resolutions which the Commission had adopted on August 12 and which formed part of the report.

The Commission did not meet again to consider its report to the Security Council during the period under review.

F. OTHER QUESTIONS CONSIDERED BY THE COUNCIL

1. Admission of New Members

a. RECONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS RECEIVED IN 1946

Of nine countries which applied for membership in the United Nations during 1946, Sweden, Siam, Iceland and Afghanistan were admitted to membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The Security Council, however, failed to recommend the People's Republic of Albania, the Mongolian People's Republic, the Hashemite Kingdom of Transjordan, Ireland and Portugal for membership. The General Assembly, by resolution 35(I) of November 19, 1946, recommended that the Security Council re-examine the applications of these five countries on their respective merits in accordance with the terms of the Charter.⁴⁸

The Security Council, at the 152nd meeting on July 8, 1947, referred the General Assembly's recommendation to the Committee on the Admission of New Members, requesting the Committee to re-examine the applications of the five above-mentioned states.

The Committee, accordingly, considered the applications and submitted its report (S/479)⁴⁹ to the Security Council on August 18, 1947.

The Council considered the Committee's report at its 186th meeting on August 18, 1947. The President, speaking as the representative of Syria, invited the Council's attention to a proposal his delegation had made in the Committee on the Admission of New Members to the effect that Albania, Mongolia, Transjordan, Portugal and Ireland, as well as those states whose applications the Council had not previously examined, should all be recommended for membership in the United Nations. This proposal was supported by the Assistant Secretary-General for Legal Affairs, speaking on behalf of the Secretary-General. As the representative of China, however, expressed the view that qualifications of states for membership should be examined individually, the President stated that he would not stress his proposal.

The Council then separately discussed and voted on the five applications as follows:

(1) Albania

The representative of the U.S.S.R., in supporting the application of Albania, stressed Albania's contribution to the Allied cause during the war and expressed the belief that Albania met all the requirements of the Charter for admission to membership in the United Nations.

The representative of the United Kingdom opposed Albania's admission, stating that the majority of the Council had found that the Corfu Channel could not have been mined without the knowledge of the Albanian Government.⁵⁰ He stated further that the Commission of Investigation concerning Greek Frontier Incidents had found Albania guilty of stirring up strife in Greece.⁵¹

The representative of the United States opposed Albania's admission on the same grounds. In addition, he stated that Albania had shown a careless disregard for its prewar international obligations; for example, bilateral treaties regarding the most ordinary things, such as postal money orders.

The representative of Poland supported the application of Albania and expressed the view that Albania was a peace-loving country which would accept the formal obligations of the Charter.

The vote on the application of Albania was 3 in favor, 4 against, with 4 abstentions.

(2) Mongolia

The representative of China opposed the application of Mongolia on the ground that Mongolia had recently been guilty of armed incursions into Chinese territory.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. supported the application of Mongolia. He stated that Mongolia had participated in the fight of the Allies against Japan and considered that the objections raised by the representative of China were unfounded.

The vote on Mongolia's application was 3 in favor (Poland, Syria, U.S.S.R.), 3 against (China, United Kingdom, United States), with 5 abstentions (Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Colombia, France).

(3) Hashemite Kingdom of Transjordan

The representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States supported Transjordan's application for membership.

In opposing Transjordan's application, the representative of the U.S.S.R. expressed doubt whether that country, which until recently was under British Mandate, was truly an independent state.

The vote on the application was 9 to 1 (U.S.S.R.), with 1 abstention (Poland). As the negative vote was cast by a permanent member of the Council, Transjordan was not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

(4) Ireland

The representative of the U.S.S.R. objected to the admission of Ireland on the ground that, during the Second World War, Ireland had had very friendly relations with the Axis powers and had not given any help whatsoever to the Allies in their struggle against the Fascist states. Besides, he stated, Ireland did not have normal relations with the U.S.S.R., whose role in the struggle against the aggressors and in the victory over these aggressors was well known.

The representative of the United Kingdom was of the opinion that the criteria cited by the representative of the U.S.S.R. were not those contained in the Charter.

The vote on the application of Ireland was 9 in favor, 1 against (U.S.S.R.), with 1 abstention (Poland). Since one of the permanent members of the Council voted against the application, it was rejected.

(5) Portugal

The representative of Brazil urged Portugal's admission to membership in the United Nations.

The representative of the United States stated that he warmly supported the application of Portugal, considering that country eminently qualified for membership in the United Nations. He stated that the Portuguese people had been in sympathy with the Allied cause during the war and the Portuguese Government had given material help to the Allies.

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. opposed Portugal's admission, stating that Portugal had aided the Franco forces in the rebellion against the legal Government of Spain and was still maintaining close relations with the Franco regime.

The vote on Portugal's application was 9 to 2 (Poland, U.S.S.R.). As a permanent member of the Council voted against the application, Portugal was not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

b. APPLICATIONS RECEIVED IN 1947

The following applications for membership in the United Nations were received during 1947:

Hungary, April 22, 1947 (S/333)
 Italy, May 7, 1947 (S/355)
 Austria, July 2, 1947 (S/403)
 Roumania, July 10, 1947 (S/411)
 Yemen, July 21, 1947 (S/436)
 Bulgaria, July 26, 1947 (S/467)
 Pakistan, August 15, 1947 (S/498)
 Finland, September 19, 1947 (S/559)

The Security Council referred to the Committee on the Admission of New Members for study and report the applications of Hungary (132nd meeting, April 30, 1947), Italy (137th meeting, May 22, 1947), Austria (154th meeting, July 10, 1947), Roumania (161st meeting, July 18, 1947), Yemen (168th meeting, July 28, 1947) and Bulgaria (178th meeting, August 7, 1947).

The Committee duly considered the applications enumerated above and submitted its report (S/479) to the Security Council on August 18, 1947.

The applications of Pakistan and Finland, which were received after the Committee drew up its report to the Security Council, were considered by the Council without prior reference to the Committee on the Admission of New Members.

c. RECOMMENDATION OF YEMEN AND PAKISTAN FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THE UNITED NATIONS

At its 186th meeting on August 18, 1947, the Security Council decided unanimously to recommend Yemen and Pakistan for membership in the United Nations. The representative of India, who under Article 31 of the Charter was invited to participate in the discussion, expressed his Government's support of the application of Pakistan. As no objection was raised by any member of the Council to the application of either Yemen or Pakistan, no further discussion took place in the Council.

d. CONSIDERATION OF THE APPLICATIONS OF HUNGARY, ITALY, AUSTRIA, ROUMANIA AND BULGARIA

At its 186th meeting on August 18, 1947, the Council, as well as reconsidering the applications of Albania, Mongolia, Transjordan, Portugal and Ireland and deciding on the recommendation of Yemen and Pakistan, also embarked upon a general discussion of the applications of Hungary, Italy, Austria, Roumania and Bulgaria.

The President expressed the belief that voting on the applications of countries with which peace treaties were still pending should be deferred until after the ratification of the treaties.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed that the Council should not proceed to vote on the applications of Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria and Italy in view of the fact that peace treaties with these countries were not yet in force, nor should it vote on the application of Austria, with which country a treaty had not yet been prepared. When these treaties came into force, the U.S.S.R. would support the applications of all or at least some of these States.

The representative of the United States opposed postponing consideration of the applications. He thought that each application should be voted on individually. There was nothing which imposed upon the Security Council the obligation to postpone consideration of membership applications until the entry into force, completion and enforcement of the peace treaties.

The representative of Australia supported the proposal that the Council should deal with each application separately.

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that, although it was true that none of these States could effectively become a Member of the United Nations until the entry into force of the respective peace treaty, he would have no objection to considering their applications separately, nor would he object even to provisional recommendations.

The representative of Poland took the view that any decision or recommendation which might be made by the Security Council would be illegal. The United Nations was composed of sovereign states. Not one of these five States would be sovereign until the peace treaties had been ratified by the major Allies and by the States themselves.

By a vote of 4 (Belgium, Brazil, France, United States) to 3 in favor (Poland, Syria, U.S.S.R.), with 4 abstentions, the Council rejected a U.S.S.R. motion that consideration of these applications be postponed.

At its 190th meeting on August 21, 1947, the Security Council discussed and voted on each application separately as follows:

(1) Hungary

The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom expressed opposition to the admission of Hungary. The representative of the United Kingdom stated that apart from the fact that the peace treaty with Hungary had not yet come into force, his Government was not satisfied that the Hungarian Government intended to observe sincerely their peace treaty obligations in the field of human rights. The representative of the United States expressed doubt as to whether the newly organized Government of Hungary was either able or willing to fulfil the obligations of the Charter.

The vote on the application of Hungary was 1 (Syria) in favor, 1 (United States) against, with 9 abstentions, and Hungary therefore was not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

(2) Italy

The representative of the United States expressed the belief that Italy fully deserved immediate admission to the United Nations. In comparison with the other ex-enemy states, he considered, Italy was in a unique position. He recalled that on August 13, 1943, the Premier of the U.S.S.R., the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the President of the United States had declared Italy to be a co-belligerent in the war against Germany. He further stated that Italy, for all practical purposes, was not restricted as to the exercise of its sovereignty, as the Allied Commission had been terminated on January 31, 1947, and as there was no military occupation except for token forces in Venezia Giulia and Udine. Furthermore, a number of states had exchanged full diplomatic representation with Italy.

The representative of the United States remarked that it was difficult to understand why the U.S.S.R. had failed to recognize the special position of Italy, since it had been a party to the declaration of co-belligerency and to the termination of the Allied Commission, and since it had been the first country to afford Italy full diplomatic recognition:

Finally, the representative of the United States stated that it would be patently unjust for a well-qualified country, such as Italy, to be kept from immediate admission to the United Nations, merely because one of the Great Powers (U.S.S.R.) had not seen fit to ratify the Peace Treaty. He appealed to the sense of fairness of the Council to recommend the immediate admission of Italy.

The representative of Australia expressed the view that Italy fulfilled the requirements of the Charter for admission to membership in the United Nations. In view of the fact, however, that some countries felt unable to vote for the admission of Italy so long as the Peace Treaty was not in force, the representative of Australia submitted a draft resolution intended to remove this difficulty. This draft resolution (see S/P.V. 190, p. 71), as somewhat revised at the suggestion of the representative of Belgium, provided that the Security Council

"Having noted that the treaty of peace with Italy, though not yet in force, has been ratified by Italy,

"Finds that in its judgment Italy is a peace-loving State, able and willing to carry out the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations, and

"Recommends that Italy be admitted to membership at such time and under such conditions as the General Assembly may deem appropriate."

The representative of the United Kingdom expressed regret that his Government could not support a recommendation for the immediate admission of Italy to the United Nations, because the Peace Treaty had not yet come into force, but stated that he would gladly support the Australian draft resolution.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. reiterated his view that the Council could not take a decision on the admission of any of the ex-enemy countries before peace treaties had been negotiated and come into force. In supporting requests for the immediate admission of any of these states the United States and the United Kingdom were deviating from the Potsdam Agreement, which provided that these states could be admitted to the United Nations only after the conclusion and coming into force of peace treaties. He opposed the Australian draft resolution on the ground that it by-passed the Security Council.

The representative of France supported the Australian draft resolution, stating that the Council must take into account the role played by Italy during the last phase of the war, the aid given by Italy to the Allies, the resistance movement in the northern part of the country, and the fact that Italy since the war had rebuilt within its frontiers free and democratic institutions.

The representative of Brazil likewise supported the Australian draft resolution, considering that Italy fully met all the requirements for membership set forth in the Charter.

The vote on the Australian draft resolution was 9 to 1 (U.S.S.R.), with 1 abstention (Poland). As the negative vote was cast by a permanent member of the Council the resolution was not adopted.

(3) Austria

The representative of the United Kingdom stated that he could not support the proposal for the immediate admission of Austria to the United Nations, inasmuch as negotiations for a peace treaty had not yet been concluded. He would, however, be willing to support a resolution on the same lines as that proposed for Italy.

The representative of the United States believed that the status of Austria was such as to qualify it for immediate admission. He stressed, in the first instance, that the Allied Powers, in several international acts, had recognized Austria as a victim of Nazi aggression rather than as an ex-enemy state. He further expressed the view that although Austria was under military occupation this did not impair Austria's sovereignty in the field of international relations. The new Control Agreement for Austria, he stated, provided that Austria may establish diplomatic relations with Member Governments of the United Nations, enter into international agreements and exercise other attributes of statehood.

Finally, the representative of the United States stated that his Government had made every effort to expedite the conclusion of a peace treaty with Austria, but had been met by adamant positions on many points by one Great Power, the U.S.S.R. He concluded that the fact that one Power had not been able to come to an agreement with the other occupying Powers was no reason to penalize the people of Austria and to keep Austria from membership in the United Nations.

The representative of Australia, considering that Austria should be regarded in a similar manner to Italy, submitted a draft resolution (see S/P.V. 190, p. 81) stating that the Security Council

"Having noted that Austria is still under military occupation by the Allied and associated Powers, "Finds that in its judgment Austria is a peace-loving State, able and willing to carry out the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations, and

"Recommends that Austria be admitted to membership at such time and under such conditions as the General Assembly may deem appropriate."

The vote on the Australian resolution was 8 to 1 (U.S.S.R.), with 2 abstentions (France, Poland). As the negative vote was cast by a permanent member of the Council the resolution was not adopted.

(4) Roumania

The representative of the United States and the United Kingdom expressed opposition to the admission of Roumania on the ground that Roumania had violated the provisions of the Peace Treaty, through flagrant violation and suppression of human rights.

The vote on Roumania's application was 1 in favor (Syria), with 10 abstentions. Roumania was therefore not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

(5) Bulgaria

The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom opposed the application of Bulgaria on the same ground as they had opposed that of Hungary. In addition they based their opposition on the grounds that the Commission of Investigation concerning Greek Frontier Incidents had found Bulgaria guilty of assisting guerrillas fighting against the Greek Government and that Bulgaria had failed to co-operate with the Subsidiary Group of the Commission.

The application of Bulgaria obtained 1 vote in favor (Syria), 1 against (United States), with 9 abstentions. Bulgaria was therefore not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

e. RESOLUTION OF AUGUST 21 CONCERNING THE APPLICATIONS RECONSIDERED OR CONSIDERED BY THE COUNCIL

At the conclusion of its reconsideration and consideration of the various applications before it, the Security Council, at its 190th meeting on August 21, unanimously adopted the following resolution (A/350) prepared by the President and the Secretariat:

"The Security Council,

"Having received, and considered the report submitted by the Committee on the Admission of New Members regarding the re-examination of the applications for membership in the United Nations of the People's Republic of Albania, the Mongolian People's Republic, the Hashemite Kingdom of Transjordan, Ireland and Portugal, and the examination of the applications of Hungary, Italy, Roumania, Austria, Yemen and Bulgaria;

"Having received and considered the application of Pakistan; and

"Having taken due notice of the statements of opinion of the members of the Security Council in regard to these applications;

"Recommends

"To the General Assembly that it admit to membership in the United Nations the following applicants:

"Yemen and Pakistan."

The Council decided (A/350) that in addition to this resolution, the report of the Committee on the Admission of New Members (S/479 and Corr. 1) and the verbatim records of the discussion on all applications (S/P.V.186 and 190) should constitute the Council's report to the General Assembly concerning the admission of new Members.

f. FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS BY THE COUNCIL

By a cablegram dated September 19, 1947 (S/-559), the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Finland requested that Finland be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

The Council also received a letter dated September 20 from the deputy representative of the United States (S/562) requesting that the application of Italy be reconsidered, and a letter dated September 22 (S/563) from the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Poland requesting that the applications of Hungary, Italy, Roumania and Bulgaria be reconsidered and that Finland be admitted to membership in the United Nations.

The communications were discussed by the Council at its 204th, 205th and 206th meetings on September 25 and 29 and October 1.

The following draft resolution (S/565) was introduced by the representative of Poland:

"The Security Council,

"Having received and examined the applications for membership in the United Nations of Hungary, Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria and Finland recommends to the General Assembly that these countries be admitted for membership in the United Nations."

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. were of the opinion that since the peace treaties with Italy, Hungary, Bulgaria, Roumania and Finland had come into force, the applications of these countries for membership in the United Nations could now be considered. All these five States were not only willing but also able to fulfil the obligations laid down by the Charter. The signatory Powers of the Potsdam Agreement, the United States, the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. had undertaken to support the applications of these countries for membership in the United Nations when the peace treaties had entered into force, and all these countries should be admitted together. It was impossible to consider one case separately from other similar cases.

The representatives of Australia, the United States and the United Kingdom objected, however, to voting on the applications en bloc. They believed that every one of these cases had particular circumstances and that each should be treated individually on its merits. The Council should therefore vote separately on each application. In contesting the remarks made by the representative of the U.S.S.R. regarding the Potsdam Agreement and the peace treaties, they maintained that the pertinent provisions of the Potsdam Declaration and the peace treaties merely enabled the three Powers to support applications from the ex-enemy states, but did not bind them to do so. Each Government was accordingly free to approve or disapprove each application in the light of the applicant's qualifications for membership under Article 4 of the Charter of the United Nations.

The representatives of China, Belgium, France and Syria agreed with the suggestion that each of the applications should be voted on separately.

In accordance with the majority opinion, the Council then discussed each application separately in the order in which they had been submitted to the Security Council:

(1) Hungary

The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom opposed the admission of Hungary on the same grounds as they had previously expressed in the Security Council (see above).

The representatives of France, Colombia and Syria supported the admission of Hungary on the basis of the desirability in principle of universal membership in the United Nations. The representative of France also thought that the European continent should be properly represented in the United Nations.

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. supported the admission of Hungary, considering that Hungary fully met the requirements of the Charter for membership in the United Nations.

(2) Italy

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. considered that all five applications were in the same category and could not be dealt with separately. They supported the admission of Italy on the condition of the simultaneous admission of Hungary, Bulgaria, Roumania and Finland.

The representatives of Australia, Belgium, Brazil, China, France, United States and United Kingdom supported the admission of Italy. They held that Italy was a peace-loving State, able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter. Several representatives stated that it was contrary to the Charter to make the admission of Italy dependent on the admission of other states.

(3) Roumania

The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom opposed the admission of Roumania on the same grounds as previously expressed in the Security Council (see above).

The representatives of China, France and Syria supported the admission of Roumania on the basis of the desirability of universal membership in the United Nations.

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. supported the admission of Roumania, stating that it fulfilled the requirements for membership laid down in the Charter.

(4) Bulgaria

The representatives of China, France, the United States and the United Kingdom opposed the admission of Bulgaria. Some of these representatives observed that a majority of the Commission of Investigation concerning Greek Frontier Incidents had found that the Bulgarian Government supported the activities of the guerrillas on the northern frontier of Greece, and that the Bulgarian Government had obstructed the work of the Subsidiary Group. It was also stated that the recent actions of the Bulgarian Government, especially the execution of the leader of the Agrarian Party, Nikolai Petkov, were incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter and with the human rights and fundamental freedoms which Bulgaria had undertaken to observe under the terms of the Peace Treaty.

The representative of Syria supported the admission of Bulgaria, expressing the view that a state would feel more bound to respect the principles of the United Nations as a Member than as a non-member.

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. supported the admission of Bulgaria as a peace-loving State, willing and able to undertake the obligations of the Charter. These representatives considered that the allegations made against Bulgaria had not been supported by facts and pointed out that there was a difference of opinion as to the responsibility for the deterioration of relations between Greece and its northern neighbors. The accusations against Bulgaria were a screen to cover rude interference of certain Great Powers in the internal affairs of the Balkan States.

(5) Finland

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. considered that Finland was willing and able to fulfil the obligations of the Charter, and supported the admission of Finland, together with the admission of Hungary, Italy, Bulgaria and Roumania, but could not agree that Finland should be set apart from the other states and admitted separately.

The representatives of Brazil, China, France, Syria, United Kingdom and United States supported the admission of Finland as a peace-loving State, fully qualified for membership.

After the discussion of individual applications, the representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. expressed the view that it would be more logical and proper to begin with the more general motion, the Polish resolution for the recommendation of all five candidates, and then, if that motion were not carried, to proceed to vote upon each application separately. The Council, however, adopted the following resolution (see S/P.V.206, p. 66) submitted by the representative of Belgium:

"The Security Council

"Decides to vote separately and finally upon each application for membership."

The Council then proceeded to vote on each of the applications, and the results of the votes were as follows:

The application of Hungary obtained 5 votes in favor (Colombia, France, Poland, Syria, U.S.S.R.), with 6 abstentions. The application was not accepted, having failed to obtain the necessary majority.

The vote on the application of Italy was 9 to 2 (U.S.S.R., Poland). As one of the negative votes was cast by a permanent member of the Council, Italy was not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

The vote on the application of Roumania was 4 in favor (China, Colombia, France, Syria), with 7 abstentions. Having failed to obtain the necessary majority, Roumania was not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

There was 1 vote (Syria) in favor of the application for Bulgaria, 3 against (Belgium, France, United Kingdom) and 7 abstentions. Bulgaria was therefore not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

The vote on the application for Finland was the same as that on the application of Italy, i.e., 9 to 2 (U.S.S.R., Poland). As one of the negative votes was that of a permanent member of the Security Council, the application of Finland was not accepted.

g. RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On November 17, 1947, the General Assembly adopted resolution 113(II), in which it "determined that in its judgment" Ireland, Portugal, Transjordan, Italy, Finland and Austria were "peace-loving States within the meaning of the Charter and should therefore be admitted to membership in the United Nations". The Assembly requested the Council to reconsider the applications of the six countries concerned in the light of this determination, those of Italy and Transjordan to be re-examined before the end of the second session of the General Assembly.⁵²

h. RECONSIDERATION OF THE APPLICATIONS OF ITALY AND TRANSJORDAN

In accordance with the Assembly's request, the Security Council, at its 221st meeting on November 22, 1947, re-examined the applications of Transjordan and Italy. The President inquired whether there had been any change in the position of the members. The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the position of his delegation in regard to the applications of Transjordan and Italy remained unchanged.

Without further discussion the Council then agreed that the President should report to the General Assembly that the reconsideration of these applications indicated that none of the members had changed its position, that the recommendations of the General Assembly had therefore not produced any result and that the Security Council had postponed further reconsideration of those two applications in order to allow consultation among the permanent members.

i. FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF PREVIOUSLY REJECTED APPLICATIONS

By letters dated April 3 and 7, 1948, respectively, and jointly addressed to the President of the Security Council, the representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States requested the reconsideration of the applications of Italy and Transjordan (S/709) and of Ireland, Portugal and Austria (S/715). By letter dated April 5, 1948, addressed to the Secretary-General (S/712) the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. requested the reconsideration of the applications of Albania, ⁵² See General Assembly, pp. 44-45.

Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Italy, Mongolia and Roumania.

The representative of the United States reaffirmed the support of his Government for Italy's application. He added that Italy was entitled to special consideration since its record clearly merited its admission to the United Nations. In the opinion of his Government, the Security Council had not thus far given proper weight to the resolution on Italy's application which had been adopted at the second regular session of the General Assembly. The attempt of the U.S.S.R., in the past, to link Italy's application with the applications received from other ex-enemy states was completely unjustified. If the same tactics were again attempted by the U.S.S.R., the world could interpret the act as a lack of friendship for the people of Italy.

The representatives of France, the United Kingdom, Canada, Argentina, Belgium, China and Syria also supported the application of Italy.

It was the opinion of the representative of the U.S.S.R. that the proposal to consider Italy's application at the present time amounted to a tactical manoeuvre calculated to draw votes for the rightist parties in the elections scheduled to take place in Italy on April 18, 1948. Moreover, the United States wished to compel the U.S.S.R. again to apply the "veto" in respect to the application of Italy for admission to the United Nations. This manoeuvre of the United States and the United Kingdom could not fool the Italian people. The Government of the U.S.S.R. was in favor of admitting Italy to the United Nations, but it could not agree that the legitimate rights of Bulgaria, Hungary, Finland and Roumania, States which were actually on the same footing as Italy, should be jeopardized by the admission of Italy.

In the Potsdam Declaration and the peace treaties, the Governments of France, the United States and the United Kingdom had obligated themselves to support the applications of these countries subsequent to the conclusion of peace treaties with them. In objecting to the admission of these five States to the United Nations, the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom were violating the obligations assumed under the Potsdam Agreement and the peace treaties.

The representative of the United Kingdom maintained that the Potsdam Declaration stated only that the conclusion of peace treaties would enable the signatories to support these applications. The same statement occurred in the preambles to the peace treaties. There was no obligation—only the removal of a previous disqualification. This did not imply an absolute qualification in all other respects.

The Council then voted on the proposal to recommend the admission of Italy to the United Nations.

This proposal received 9 votes in favor and 2 against (Poland, U.S.S.R.). Since one of the dissenting votes was that of a permanent member, the recommendation was not adopted.

The representative of the United States after expressing his profound regret over the third "veto" by the U.S.S.R. on the application of Italy for membership in the United Nations, stated that, in these circumstances, it would seem desirable that consideration should be given to the possibility of devising means whereby certain states might be able to have a voice in the General Assembly of the United Nations. The General Assembly was master of its own house. It could therefore choose a method which would partially do away with the present unjust disqualification of nations which possessed every moral right to become Members of the United Nations.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. reiterated that the discussion of this question at that time, before the elections in Italy on April 18 was a manoeuvre in order to force a "veto" from the U.S.S.R. by that date. As to a formula which would permit the voice of Italy to be heard in the General Assembly, he submitted that such a formula could consist only of admitting Italy to the United Nations together with other countries with which peace treaties had been signed. Those who sought a formula of a different type were like the alchemists of olden times who spent themselves in the quest for a philosopher's stone and who, as was well known, remained unsuccessful.

At the 280th meeting, also held on April 10, 1948, the President inquired whether any member had changed his position in regard to the other ten applications.

Since none of the members had changed its position with regard to these applications, the Security Council decided to report this fact to the General Assembly and adjourned its discussion on the matter indefinitely.

j. APPLICATIONS RECEIVED IN 1948

(1) Application of the Union of Burma

By letter dated February 27, 1948 (S/687), and addressed to the Secretary-General, the Ambassador of the Union of Burma to the United States applied, on behalf of his Government, for admission to membership in the United Nations. On March 17, 1948, a declaration of acceptance of the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations was also submitted. The application, together with the declaration, was circulated to the Members of the United Nations by the Secretary-General.

The Security Council, at its 261st meeting on March 3, 1948, referred the application of the Union of Burma to its Committee on the Admission of New Members, for examination and report.

The Committee on the Admission of New Members examined the application of the Union of Burma at its 24th meeting on March 29, 1948, and submitted its report (S/706) to the Security Council the following day.

At the 279th meeting on April 10, the Security Council considered the report of the Committee and adopted by 10 votes, with 1 abstention (Argentina), a draft resolution submitted by the representative of China as follows (S/717):

"The Security Council,

"Having received and considered the report submitted by the Committee on the Admission of New Members regarding the application of the Union of Burma,

"Having taken note of the unanimous approval by the members of the Council on the application of the Union of Burma for membership in the United Nations,

"Recommends

"To the General Assembly that the Union of Burma be admitted to membership in the United Nations."

Before the vote was taken, the representative of Argentina stated that his delegation had no objection to the admission of the Union of Burma to membership in the United Nations, but he regretted that, since he had not received instructions from his Government, he would have to abstain from voting.

At the request of the representatives of China and India, the application of Burma was placed on the agenda of the special session of the General Assembly.

The recommendation of the Security Council was adopted by the General Assembly at its 131st plenary meeting on April 19, 1948.⁵³

(2) Application of Ceylon

By a letter dated May 25, 1948 (S/820), and addressed to the Secretary-General, the Prime Minister and Minister of External Affairs of Ceylon applied on behalf of his Government for the admission of Ceylon to membership in the United Nations. On June 16, 1948, a declaration of acceptance of the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations was also submitted.

The application, together with the declaration, was transmitted to the Members of the United Nations by the Secretary-General in a note dated June 28, 1948.

The Security Council, at its 318th meeting on June 11, 1948, referred the application of Ceylon to its Committee on the Admission of New Members for examination and report.

The Committee met on June 29 and July 1 to examine the application, and submitted a report (S/859) to the Security Council.

The Committee's report was considered at the 351st meeting of the Council on August 18, 1948. Speaking in favor of the admission of Ceylon were the representatives of the United States, China, United Kingdom, Canada, Syria, Belgium and Colombia, all of whom held that Ceylon was an independent, peace-loving state, able and willing to carry out the obligations laid down in the Charter.

The representatives of the Ukrainian S.S.R. and of the U.S.S.R., on the other hand, expressed doubt regarding the degree of independence of Ceylon in the absence of fuller information on the matter. The representative of the U.S.S.R. formally moved (S/974) that the Council postpone a decision on the application, pending the receipt of additional information regarding Ceylon's status. The U.S.S.R. proposal, which was supported by the representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R., was rejected by a vote of 2 to 0, with 9 abstentions.

A Chinese motion for a Security Council recommendation to the General Assembly that Ceylon be admitted to membership in the United Nations received 9 votes in favor and 2 against (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.). Since one of the two negative votes was cast by a permanent member of the Council, Ceylon was not recommended for membership in the United Nations.

Following the vote, the representative of Argentina asked that all relevant documents be transmitted to the General Assembly, where, he declared, he hoped to prove that even if one of the permanent members voted against an application for membership, the Assembly still had it in his power to vote in favor thereof, thus enabling the applicant state to become a Member of the United Nations.

The President replied that in accordance with the rules of procedure the pertinent records would be transmitted to the General Assembly.

The representative of China protested against the use of the "veto" by the representative of the U.S.S.R. as arbitrary and unjustified in the case of Ceylon's application for membership. This "veto", he stated, was a great blow to the aspirations of all Far Eastern peoples.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. rejected the Chinese protest as unfounded and in contradiction to the Charter. The U.S.S.R. delegation, he stated, would not assist in "the creation among the colonial peoples of illusions built on false independence, on which the Chinese delegation insists".

2. Rules Governing the Admission of New Members

By resolution 36(I), adopted at its 49th plenary meeting on November 19, 1946, the General Assembly requested the Security Council to appoint a committee to confer with a Committee on Procedure of the General Assembly with a view to preparing rules governing the admission of new Members which would be acceptable both to the General Assembly and to the Security Council.⁵⁴

At its 81st meeting on November 29, 1946, the Security Council instructed its Committee of Experts to appoint a committee from its membership "to listen to the proposals which the committee appointed by the Assembly might have to make". The Committee of Experts was further instructed to report those proposals back to the Council for instructions.⁵⁵

The Security Council Committee met three times in May and June 1947 with the Assembly Committee. On June 30, the latter transmitted its proposals to the Security Council Committee.

The Committee of Experts devoted three meetings to consideration of the proposals submitted by the Assembly Committee, and presented its report to the Security Council on August 25, 1947 (S/520). The Committee of Experts recommended that rule 58 of the Security Council's provisional rules of procedure should be amended so as to provide that the applicant state should submit together with its application for membership a formal instrument of adherence in which it accepted the obligations contained in the Charter, and that rule 113 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly, identical with rule 58 of the Security Council rules, be similarly amended. (Under the rules so far in force the applicant state submitted its formal instrument of adherence to the Charter after the General Assembly had acted favorably on the application, and membership took effect on the day this instrument was presented). Moreover, the Committee of Experts recommended that rule 117 of the rules of procedure of the General Assembly be modified so as to specify that, if an application for membership was approved, membership would become effective on the date of the General Assembly's decision.

The Committee of Experts agreed to the adoption of a new rule 116, proposed by the General Assembly Committee and, as a necessary accompanying consequence, the addition of two new paragraphs to rule 60 of the Security Council rules of procedure (second and third paragraphs). In the new rule 116, the General Assembly asserted the right to send back to the Council, for further consideration and recommendation or report, applications which had failed to obtain the Council's recommendation. The proposed addition to rule 60 of the Security Council's rules required the Council to forward to the General Assembly a complete record of the discussions if the Council recommended an applicant state for membership, and to submit a special report to the Assembly if the Council did not recommend such a state or if it postponed consideration of the application.

Finally, the Committee of Experts agreed that rule 114 of the General Assembly rules be re-drafted, as proposed by the General Assembly Committee, to make it obligatory for the Secretary-General to send a copy of the application to the Members of the United Nations.

At the 197th meeting on August 27, 1947, the Security Council adopted by 10 votes, with 1 abstention, the report of the Committee of Experts (S/520) and also a resolution (S/528) summing up the essential points of the report and instructing the Sub-Committee of the Committee of Experts to negotiate with the General Assembly Committee for acceptance of rule 58 of the Security Council rules as amended by the Committee of Experts, and for its agreement to effect the corresponding changes necessary in rules 113 and 117 of the General Assembly rules of procedure.

At the same meeting, the Australian representative submitted four amendments to the report of the Committee of Experts (S/520/Add.1). Those amendments tended mainly to limit the Security Council's consideration of applications for membership to the two following questions:

- (a) Whether the applicant was a peace-loving state;
- (b) Whether the applicant state was able to carry out the obligations contained in the Charter of the United Nations so far as such obligations related to the maintenance of international peace and security.

⁵⁴See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 125-26.

⁵⁵Ibid., pp. 421-22.

These amendments were not adopted by the Council.

After a fourth joint meeting of the Security Council and the General Assembly Committee on Procedure, the latter accepted the changes made by the Security Council (A/384).

All these changes were accepted by the General Assembly at its 122nd plenary meeting on November 21, 1947.⁵⁶

On December 2, 1947, the Assistant Secretary-General in charge of Security Council Affairs addressed a letter (S/612) to the President of the Security Council bringing to the Council's attention the fact that the General Assembly had amended its rules of procedure concerning the admission of new Members, and suggesting that the Security Council should take action to include in its rules of procedure the rules on the admission of new Members which concern the Security Council as drafted in the Assembly Committee's report to the General Assembly (A/384). The Security Council decided at its 222nd meeting on December 9, 1947, to amend accordingly rules 58 and 60 of its rules of procedure.⁵⁷

3. Respective Functions of the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council with regard to the Trusteeship System as Applied to Strategic Areas

a. COMMUNICATION DATED NOVEMBER 7, 1947, FROM THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

At its 220th meeting on November 15, 1947, the Security Council took up the question which had arisen as a result of the entry into force, on July 18, 1947, of the Trusteeship Agreement⁵⁸ for the Territory of the Pacific Islands, formerly under Japanese Mandate. This question had been brought to the attention of the Council in a letter dated November 7, 1947 (S/599) which pointed out the necessity of formulating procedures to govern the detailed application of Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter to that strategic area.

b. DECISION OF THE COUNCIL REFERRING THE MATTER TO THE COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS

The representative of the United States expressed the view that, in adopting article 13 of the Trusteeship Agreement for the Pacific Islands, the Security Council had already availed itself of the provisions of Article 83, paragraph 3, of the Charter and that, therefore, the Trusteeship Council was already authorized to carry out the reporting, petitioning and visiting functions of the Trusteeship System with respect to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. He submitted a draft resolution whereby the Security Council would request the Trusteeship Council to take the actions called for by article 13 of the Trusteeship Agreement.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed to refer the question to the Committee of Experts to work out proposals before the taking of any action by the Council.

The representative of the United Kingdom suggested that, since the Security Council had primary responsibility in these matters, the questionnaire which the Trusteeship Council wished to send to the Administering Authority should be transmitted first to the Security Council if the Trusteeship Council wished to revise or amend its standard questionnaire. He did not, however, object to the sending of the normal standard questionnaire as a provisional and urgent measure.

The representative of Syria considered that, as far as strategic areas under the Trusteeship System were concerned, the questionnaire should contain a question with respect to fortifications and defences for military purposes. The questionnaire should therefore be submitted to the Security Council for consideration before being enacted.

The representative of the United States recalled that the Trusteeship Agreement for the Territory of the Pacific Islands went beyond the requirements of the Charter for strategic areas; inter alia, it provided that Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter were applicable to the whole of this Trust Territory, except that the Administering Authority might determine the extent of applicability in any areas which might from time to time be specified by the Administering Authority as closed for security reasons. He thought that the most expedient action was to have the Trusteeship Council proceed with its standard questionnaire without prejudice to possible changes which might be decided in the future, while referring the matter mentioned in the Secretary-General's letter (S/599) to the Committee of Experts and inviting it to report thereon within four weeks. In view of the importance of this case as a precedent likely to affect such Trusteeships in the future, it was wiser for the Security Council to take such action as related to the specific case and not to undertake to establish a general rule for all strategic Trusteeship Agreements.

⁵⁸ For text of the Agreement, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 398-400.

the sending of the standard questionnaire should be considered to be a provisional and experimental measure. The Committee of Experts should analyze the precise relationship between the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council and determine the final and formal destination of the report of the Administering Authority based on the questionnaire—i.e., whether it should be addressed to the Security Council or to the General Assembly via the Trusteeship Council.

The Security Council then decided to refer the whole matter mentioned in document S/599 to its Committee of Experts for a report thereon within a period of four weeks.

c. COMMUNICATION DATED DECEMBER 2, 1947, FROM THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES

On December 2, 1947, the representative of the United States informed the Security Council (S/613) that, effective December 1, 1947, Eniwetok Atoll, in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, would be closed for security reasons, and that the periodic visits provided for in Article 87 c of the Charter would be suspended in the closed area until further notice, as permitted by Article 13 of the Trusteeship Agreement. Other provisions of Article 87 of the Charter would, however, continue to apply. With respect to Article 88, the United States Government would report to the United Nations on the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Trust Territory.

The Security Council, at the 222nd meeting on December 9, took note of the communication and unanimously decided to defer consideration of the matter until the report of the Committee of Experts on the functions of the Security Council in relation to strategic areas had been received.

d. COMMUNICATION DATED DECEMBER 12, 1947, FROM THE COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS

On December 12, 1948, the Committee of Experts informed the Security Council (S/621) that it had encountered unexpected complications which had prevented it from reporting within the time specified (four weeks) and that the Committee would report at the earliest possible moment.

At the 224th meeting on December 19, the Security Council took note of the communication from the Committee of Experts.

At the same meeting the representative of Poland submitted a draft resolution (S/625) which would have defined closely the terms of reference of the Committee of Experts and which would have given the Committee time limits for submitting the draft of a questionnaire, as provided for in Article 88 of the Charter, as well as for drafting rules of procedure concerning the exercise by the Security Council of its functions in relation to strategic Trust Territories. The draft rules of procedure were to include detailed provisions regarding the manner and the circumstances in which the Security Council might avail itself in each individual case of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council pursuant to Article 83 of the Charter.

The President stated that the Polish draft resolution was not in order.

The representatives of Poland and of the U.S.S.R. declared that the draft resolution was in order, since it was intended to give directions to the Committee of Experts and to impart to it certain time limits for the preparation of its recommendations to the Security Council, matters which were closely connected with the agenda item then being discussed.

After an exchange of views, the President's ruling that the introduction and the discussion of the Polish draft resolution were out of order was challenged and was upheld by the Security Council.

The representative of Poland considered the action taken as contrary to the rules of procedure. He reserved his right to submit his draft resolution again as a separate item of the agenda.

e. DISCUSSION BY THE COMMITTEE OF EXPERTS

The Committee of Experts devoted seven meetings to the consideration of the matter referred to it by the Security Council.

The representatives of Australia, China, Belgium, Brazil, France, United Kingdom and United States were of the opinion that Article 83, paragraph 3, of the Charter was mandatory and that consequently the Security Council was obliged to avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council, subject to two exceptions: (1) if such assistance was excluded by the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement; (2) if such assistance was not desirable because of security considerations.

The representatives of Poland, Syria and the U.S.S.R. considered that Articles 83, paragraph 1, and 85, paragraph 1, of the Charter made it clear that all functions relating to strategic areas should be dealt with exclusively by the Security Council. Assistance of the Trusteeship Council to the Security Council was dependent on the condition that express mention of it be made in the Trusteeship Agreement, such assistance to be sought only without prejudice to security considerations. Since the Trusteeship Agreement for the Territory of the Pacific Islands did not mention the Trusteeship Council, the Security Council was free to request or not to request the Trusteeship Council's assistance.

The representative of Colombia stated that the main responsibility in the matter of strategic areas rested on the Security Council, but that Article 83, paragraph 1, of the Charter had to be interpreted in the light of Article 83, paragraph 3. A certain parallel existed between the position of the Security Council and that of the General Assembly concerning the strategic areas and the non-strategic areas under Trusteeship.

The Committee of Experts then discussed whether its terms of reference required it to make recommendations to the Security Council only in relation to the specific question of the Territory of the Pacific Islands, or whether it was entitled to recommend procedures applicable to strategic areas generally.

A majority of representatives expressed the view that, although the terms of reference of the Committee concerned the particular case of the Territory of the Pacific Islands, general rules or general principles should be laid down, and that it could then be determined whether there was a need for particular rules concerning the Territory.

The Committee eventually decided to recommend to the Security Council the adoption of a resolution generally applicable to strategic areas under Trusteeship.

The Committee of Experts also considered whether it should recommend to the Security Council the adoption of a resolution alone, or of rules of procedure alone, or of both. The Committee finally decided to discuss first a draft resolution under the terms of which the Security Council would request the assistance of the Trusteeship Council.

The majority of the Committee recommended to the Security Council the adoption of a draft resolution (S/642) requesting:

(1) the Trusteeship Council to perform, on behalf of the Security Council and subject to the latter's decisions concerning security matters, the functions specified in Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter;

(2) the Trusteeship Council to send to the Security Council a copy of its questionnaire one month before forwarding it to the Administering Authority;

(3) the Secretary-General to advise the Security Council of all reports and petitions received for strategic areas under Trusteeship, and to send copies thereof to the Trusteeship Council for examination and report to the Security Council;

(4) the Trusteeship Council to submit to the Security Council its reports and recommendations on political, economic and educational matters affecting strategic areas under Trusteeship.

The representatives of Poland and the U.S.S.R. opposed the draft resolution of the Committee of Experts, mainly because its recommendation would give the Trusteeship Council power to formulate the questionnaire, whereas they considered that it was contrary to Article 88 to give full right to the Trusteeship Council to establish a questionnaire concerning strategic areas under Trusteeship.

f. DECISION OF THE COUNCIL OF JUNE 18, 1948

At the 324th meeting on June 18, 1948, the Council decided by 9 votes, with 2 abstentions (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.), to authorize the President, together with two other members of the Security Council (Belgium, Ukrainian S.S.R.), to meet with a similar committee of the Trusteeship Council for the purpose of discussing the extent to which the Security Council might avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council with regard to the strategic areas under the Trusteeship System.

The two committees conferred on June 22, and an exchange of views took place on the respective functions of the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council in connection with the strategic Trust Territories. The President of the Trusteeship Council gave an undertaking to the Committee of the Security Council to ascertain the views of the Trusteeship Council with regard to the draft resolution recommended by the Committee of Experts.

At the 327th meeting on June 25, the Security Council agreed to postpone further discussion of this question until such time as the views of the Trusteeship Council were made known concerning the matter. The Council's Committee submitted its report to the Council regarding the views of the Trusteeship Council (S/916), but it was not discussed by the Security Council in the period under review.

4. Voting Procedure in the Security Council

By a letter dated January 3, 1947 (S/237), the Secretary-General transmitted to the Security Council resolution 40(I), adopted by the General Assembly on December 13, 1946, recommending to the Security Council "the early adoption of practices and procedures, consistent with the Charter, to assist in reducing the difficulties in the application of Article 27 and to ensure the prompt and effective exercise by the Security Council of its functions".⁵⁹

At the 197th meeting on August 27, 1947, the Security Council discussed the recommendation of the General Assembly and decided to refer the matter to the Committee of Experts. The Committee was instructed to submit to the Security Council its recommendations on the measures that the latter should adopt in view of the Assembly's recommendation.

On November 21, 1947, the Secretary-General addressed a letter (S/620) to the Security Council, transmitting resolution 117(II) adopted by the General Assembly on November 21, 1947. By this resolution the General Assembly had decided to refer the question of voting in the Security Council to the Interim Committee and had requested that Committee to consult with any committee which the Security Council might designate to co-operate in the study of the problem.

The Assembly had also requested the permanent members of the Security Council to engage in further consultation in order to reach agreement on measures which would enable the Council to function promptly and effectively.⁶⁰

At the 224th meeting on December 19, 1947, the Security Council decided that the Secretary-General's letter conveying the resolution should be received by the Security Council.

On September 2, 1947, the United States representative on the Committee of Experts submitted draft rules of procedure relating to voting in the Security Council (S/C.1/160). As of September 21, 1948, the Committee of Experts had not yet begun the examination of this question.

G. THE MILITARY STAFF COMMITTEE

On February 13, 1947, the Security Council requested the Military Staff Committee, as a first step towards the implementation of Article 43 of the Charter, to submit to the Council not later than April 30, 1947, its recommendations with regard to the basic principles which should govern the organization of the United Nations armed forces. In accordance with this directive, the Military Staff Committee prepared its report (S/336) and submitted it on April 30 to the Security Council for consideration.

The report set forth the recommendations of the Military Staff Committee in the form of 41 articles. On sixteen of these articles the Committee had been unable to reach unanimous agreement and had therefore submitted alternative proposals advanced by the various delegations.⁶¹

The Security Council examined the report of the Military Staff Committee on the General Principles which should govern the organization of the United Nations armed forces at its 139th to 143rd and its 145th, 146th, 149th and 157th meetings, from June 4 to July 15, 1947. The Military Staff Committee, while its report was under discussion by the Security Council, replied at the request of the latter to several questions having a special bearing on Articles 5 and 6 relating to the over-all strength of the armed forces to be made available by Member States (S/380), on Articles 10 and 11 relating to the contribution to be made by the permanent members of the Council (S/394, S/408) and on Article 18 relating to the manner in which the armed forces should be employed (S/395). The U.S.S.R. representative on the Military Staff Committee abstained from giving an opinion in connection with the Council's questions relating to the over-all strength of the armed forces and the contribution of the permanent members, in the absence of a decision by the Security Council on the General Principles for the organization of the armed forces. The Security Council did not, during the period under review, complete its consideration of the Military Staff Committee's report on General Principles (S/336).

Pending the completion of this examination and as a further step in its examination of Article 43 of the Charter from the military point of view, the Military Staff Committee at its meeting of May 16, 1947, agreed on a future program of work as follows (S/483):

"(1) The preliminary estimates of the overall strength and composition of armed forces to be made available to the Security Council by Member Nations of the United Nations, including the determination of the overall strength and composition of the three principal services of armed forces—land, sea and air.

"(2) The preliminary estimates of the strength and composition of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council by the five permanent members of the Security Council, including the determination of the strength and composition of the three principal services of armed forces—land, sea and air.

"(3) The preliminary estimates of the strength and composition of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council by the other Member Nations, including the determination of the strength and composition of the three principal services of armed forces—land, sea and air.

In agreeing to this program of work, the Chinese, French, United Kingdom and United States delegations considered that items 1 and 4 should be considered first and concurrently, whereas the U.S.S.R. delegation considered that item 1 should be considered first. All delegations reserved the right to request the Military Staff Committee to reconsider, at any time, the question of setting up a sub-committee to consider the preparation of a draft standard form of special agreement.

The Military Staff Committee, at its meeting of May 16, also established a sub-committee to examine item 1 of the program of work. This sub-committee was directed to commence informal discussion, in the light of the General Principles (S/336) submitted to the Security Council, on the question of the over-all strength and composition of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council by the Member Nations of the United Nations. Also, it was to make recommendations to the Military Staff Committee as to the over-all strength and composition of the armed forces, including the strength of the three services—land, sea and air—after the General Principles had been approved by the Security Council.

At its 146th meeting on June 25, 1947, the Security Council requested the Military Staff Committee to submit an estimate of the over-all strength of the armed forces which should be made available to the Security Council, indicating the strength and composition of the separate components and the proportion of that over-all strength that should be provided on the basis of equality by the five permanent members.

In response to the request, the Military Staff Committee submitted on June 30 a report (S/394) to the Council on the subject. The report gave a provisional estimate of the over-all strength and composition of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council and also dealt with the question of what proportion of this over-all strength might be supplied on the basis of equality by the five permanent members of the Security Council. Since the Military Staff Committee was unable to achieve a common view on these questions, and in view of insufficient time available for the discussion, the report included the views of the various delegations of the Military Staff Committee.

The report set forth the proposals made by the French, the United Kingdom and the United States delegations; the Chinese delegation agreed with the United Kingdom proposal. The U.S.S.R. delegation subsequently confirmed (Press Release MSC/26) that it had submitted to the Military Staff Committee estimates for preliminary and informal discussion. The table opposite shows the estimates submitted.

With a view to reconciling the provisional estimates submitted by the various delegations, the sub-committee established by the Military Staff Committee informally discussed the question from May to December 1947.

On December 23, the sub-committee submitted the results of its deliberations to the Military Staff Committee. From that date until July 1948, the Military Staff Committee formally considered the report of the sub-committee dealing with the following elements of this question:

- (a) General positions of the delegations on the over-all strength and composition of the armed forces;
- (b) Strength of the land forces;
- (c) Strength and composition of the naval forces;
- (d) Strength and composition of the air forces (A/620, p. 139).

By a letter dated July 2, 1948 (S/879), the Chairman of the Military Staff Committee reported to the Security Council that the Committee's consideration of the sub-committee's report was now completed. However, the Military Staff Committee, the letter informed the Security Council, was not in a position to undertake the final review of the over-all strength and composition of the armed forces to be made available to the Security Council by Member nations of the United Nations, and so make further progress in this matter towards the conclusion of the special agreements required by Article 43 of the Charter, until agreement had been reached in the Security Council on the divergencies of view on the General Principles given in the report submitted by the Military Staff Committee to the Security Council on April 30, 1947 (S/336).

In a further letter dated August 6, 1948 (S/956), the Chairman of the Military Staff Committee informed the Security Council on behalf of the delegations of China, France, the United Kingdom and the United States that since the dispatch of the letter of August 2 (S/879) the Military Staff Committee had met to discuss the pursuance of the tasks entrusted to it as set out in its program of work of May 16, 1947. These discussions, however, had again resulted in a stalemate.

The four delegations mentioned considered that inasmuch as unanimity could not be achieved on the question of the over-all strength and composition of the United Nations armed forces (item 1 of the program of work) it was, a priori, impossible to consider items 2 and 3 dealing with the contributions by Member nations.

The consideration of item 4 of the program of work, i.e., preparation of a draft standard form of special agreement, was then envisaged, the letter stated. However, there again the five delegations were unable to agree unanimously that such a study could be undertaken before the Military Staff Committee had received instructions from the Security Council concerning the divergencies noted on some of the General Principles contained in the Military Staff Committee's report to the Security Council (S/336).

In conclusion, the letter expressing the views of the Chinese, French, United Kingdom and United States delegations urged the importance of resolving the disagreement which prevailed on some of the General Principles which should govern the organization of the United Nations armed forces and of which the Security Council had been apprised as early as April 30, 1947.

By a letter dated August 16, 1948 (S/971), the Chairman of the Military Staff Committee transmitted to the President of the Security Council a letter from the U.S.S.R. delegation to the Military Staff Committee.

Referring to the letter of August 6 expressing the view of the other four delegations represented on the Military Staff Committee, the U.S.S.R. delegation stated that it could not agree with the assertion made in this letter that the Military Staff Committee could not continue its work. The U.S.S.R. delegation considered that the Military Staff Committee could continue its work by consecutive examination of the questions set out in the program of work adopted by the Military Staff Committee on May 16, 1947. A proposal by the U.S.S.R. delegation, that the Military Staff Committee begin informal consideration of item 2 of the plan to work, had, however, not been accepted by the delegations of China, France, the United States and the United Kingdom.

The U.S.S.R. delegation admitted that the absence of agreed General Principles which should govern the organization of the United Nations armed forces created difficulties in the work of the Military Staff Committee. The U.S.S.R. had always been of the opinion that for the successful work of the Military Staff Committee, it was necessary to agree on General Principles. It was of the opinion that, pending the consideration of the General Principles by the Security Council, the Military Staff Committee could, in an informal and preliminary manner, consider item 2 of the program of work, as it had considered item 1 dealing with the estimate of the over-all strength and composition of armed forces.

At the same time the U.S.S.R. delegation considered it inadvisable to discuss the question of the standard form of agreement (item 4 of the program of work) before the General Principles had been agreed upon.

H. MATTERS BROUGHT TO THE ATTENTION OF THE COUNCIL BUT NOT PLACED ON THE AGENDA

1. Relations of Members of the United Nations with Spain

In its resolution 114(II) of November 17, 1947, concerning the relations of members of the United Nations with Spain, the General Assembly expressed its confidence that the Security Council would exercise its responsibility under the Charter as soon as it considered that the situation in regard to Spain so required.⁶³

On December 13, 1947, the Secretary-General transmitted this resolution to the President of the Security Council. The Secretary-General's communication was placed on the provisional agenda of the 327th meeting of the Security Council on June 25, 1948.

The President stated that he had put the matter on the provisional agenda in order to ascertain whether the situation in Spain required any action on the part of the Security Council. He considered that it was sufficient for the Council to take note of the communication from the Secretary-General.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. was of the opinion that the Security Council ought to act upon this resolution of the General Assembly. The Council should not merely confine itself to taking note of the resolution of the General Assembly, but should include this item in the agenda and discuss the substance of the matter.

The representative of Argentina objected to the inclusion of this communication in the Council's agenda, and requested that the matter should be put to a vote. He considered that the internal matters of the Government of Spain should be outside the scope of the interests of the Security Council.

The representative of the United States believed that no action by the Security Council was required in this matter.

The representative of the United Kingdom thought that the resolution adopted by the General Assembly called for no particular action in the circumstances in which the Council found itself at this moment. There was nothing more to be done unless the attention of the Security Council was to be drawn to some particular new fact necessitating and justifying any action or intervention on the part of the Council.

The representative of the Ukrainian S.S.R. stated that the Security Council had received specific authority from the General Assembly to consider the question, if consideration was deemed to be required under the Charter. The Council had either to refuse to act or refrain from acting under these powers, or it had to accept the responsibility involved therein. It could not simply ignore the matter. He did not agree with the representative of Argentina that consideration of the Spanish question might be regarded as an interference in the internal affairs of a state, because the condemnation of the Franco regime was a condemnation of a regime which had collaborated with the Axis Powers.

The representative of Canada stated that, in his view, the Security Council's responsibility under the Charter in this case would not arise unless the Security Council were to determine that the situation was likely to endanger international peace and security. In so far as Spain was concerned, a danger for international peace and security did not exist. He believed, therefore, that there was no present occasion for the matter to engage the attention of the Council.

By a vote of 2 in favor (Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R.) and 1 against (Argentina), with 8 abstentions, the Council then decided not to include this item in its agenda.

MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL⁶⁴

Amended rules adopted by the Council at its 222nd meeting on December 9, 1947 (S/96/Rev.3):

Rule 58

"Any State which desires to become a Member of the United Nations shall submit an application to the Secretary-General. This application shall contain a declaration made in a formal instrument that it accepts the obligations contained in the Charter."

Rule 60

"The Security Council shall decide whether in its judgment the applicant is a peace-loving State and is able and willing to carry out the obligations contained in the Charter, and accordingly whether to recommend the applicant State for membership.

"If the Security Council recommends the applicant
State for membership, it shall forward to the General Assembly the recommendation with a complete record of the discussion.

"If the Security Council does not recommend the applicant State for membership or postpones the consideration of the application, it shall submit a special report to the General Assembly with a complete record of the discussion.

"In order to ensure the consideration of its recommendation at the next session of the General Assembly following the receipt of the application, the Security Council shall make its recommendation not less than twenty-five days in advance of a regular session of the General Assembly, nor less than four days in advance of a special session.

"In special circumstances, the Security Council may decide to make a recommendation to the General Assembly concerning an application for membership subsequent to the expiration of the time-limits set forth in the preceding paragraph."

IV. The Economic and Social Council

A. THE CHARTER AND THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL¹

The Charter establishes an Economic and Social Council as a principal organ which, under the authority of the General Assembly, devotes itself to promoting international economic and social co-operation.

The Council consists of eighteen Members of the United Nations. Its members are elected by the General Assembly for a term of three years. A retiring member is eligible for immediate re-election. Each member has one representative.

The Charter recognizes that conditions of stability and well-being are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples. With a view to creating such conditions the United Nations undertakes to promote:

(a) higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development;

(b) solutions of international economic, social, health and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and

(c) universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

All Members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the United Nations for the achievement of these purposes.

The United Nations is conceived to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these economic, social and other purposes. In the economic and social fields there are in existence various specialized agencies established by inter-governmental agreement. The Charter authorizes the United Nations to bring such agencies into relationship with the United Nations and to co-ordinate their policies and activities, and furthermore to create such new agencies as it deems necessary for the accomplishment of its economic and social purposes.

1. Powers and functions of the Economic and Social Council

The responsibility for the discharge of these functions of the United Nations in the economic and social fields is vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the Economic and Social Council.

The principal functions and powers of the Economic and Social Council are:

(a) to make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters and to make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations and to the specialized agencies concerned;

(b) to make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all;

(c) to prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence; and

(d) to call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

As regards the specialized agencies, the Economic and Social Council may:

(a) enter into agreements with any of the specialized agencies, defining the terms on which the agencies shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations, such agreements being subject to approval by the General Assembly;

(b) co-ordinate the activities of the specialized

¹This Section is a summary of the Charter provisions relating to the Economic and Social Council. The main provisions are contained in Chapter IX, Articles 55-60, which sets forth the objectives and functions of the United Nations in the realm of international economic co-operation, and Chapter X, Articles 61-72, which defines the composition, functions and powers, voting and procedure of the Economic and Social Council. Other provisions are to be found in Articles 7, 15, 17-18, 91, 96, 98, and 101 of the Charter.

agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly and to the Members of the United Nations;

(c) take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the specialized agencies, and make arrangements with the Members of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and to recommendations on matters falling within its competence made by the General Assembly; and

(d) communicate its observations on these reports to the General Assembly.

Any financial and budgetary arrangements with the specialized agencies are to be considered and approved by the General Assembly, which is also to examine the administrative budgets of such specialized agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and is to assist the Security Council upon its request. It is to perform such functions as fall within its competence in connection with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of Members of the United Nations and at the request of specialized agencies.

The Council, when so authorized by the General Assembly, may request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on legal questions arising within the scope of its activities.

The Secretary-General is to act in that capacity in all meetings of the Economic and Social Council and is to assign a permanent staff to the Economic and Social Council.

2. Voting and Procedure

Each member of the Council has one vote. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council are made by a majority of the members present and voting.

The Charter provides that the Council shall set up commissions in the economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions.

The Council is to invite any Member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that Member.

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

It may also make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence, both international and, where appropriate, national non-governmental organizations after consultation with the Member of the United Nations concerned.

The Economic and Social Council adopts its own rules of procedure. It meets as required in accordance with its rules, which include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

B. MEMBERSHIP AND OFFICERS OF THE COUNCIL

The Economic and Social Council consists of eighteen Members of the United Nations, elected by the General Assembly. Members serve for three-year terms of office and are eligible for immediate re-election.

The following were the members of the Council during the period under review (June 30, 1947, to September 21, 1948):

Cuba, Czechoslovakia, India, Norway, U.S.S.R. and United Kingdom (to December 31, 1947);

Canada, Chile, China, France, Netherlands and Peru (to December 31, 1948);

Byelorussian S.S.R., Lebanon, New Zealand, Turkey, United States and Venezuela (to December 31, 1949); Australia, Brazil, Denmark, Poland, U.S.S.R. and United Kingdom (from January 1, 1948).

The following were officers of the Council during the period under review:

Fifth Session:

President: Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar (India)

First Vice-President: Jan Papanek (Czechoslovakia)

Second Vice-President: Alberto Arca-Parro (Peru)

Sixth and Seventh Sessions:

President: Charles Malik (Lebanon)

First Vice-President: Hernan Santa Cruz (Chile)

Second Vice-President: Leonid I. Kaminsky (Byelorussian S.S.R.)

During the fifth session Mr. Papanek acted as President during the absence of Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar.

C. ORGANIZATION OF THE ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

1. Subsidiary Organs

Subsidiary organs reporting to the Council are of five types:

- (1) Functional Commissions and Sub-Commissions
- (2) Regional Commissions
- (3) Standing Committees
- (4) Ad hoc Committees
- (5) Special Bodies

a. FUNCTIONAL COMMISSIONS AND SUB-COMMISSIONS

The Council has established the following functional commissions (in order of their establishment):

- (1) Economic and Employment
Sub-Commissions:
Employment and Economic Stability
Economic Development
- (2) Transport and Communications
- (3) Statistical
Sub-Commission:
Statistical Sampling Committee on Statistical Classification
- (4) Human Rights
Sub-Commissions:
Freedom of Information and of the Press
Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities Drafting Committee on the International Bill of Human Rights
- (5) Social
- (6) Status of Women
- (7) Narcotic Drugs
- (8) Fiscal
- (9) Population

The following are the members and terms of reference of these Commissions.²

(1) Economic and Employment Commission

Members of this Commission are:

Belgium, Brazil, France, Poland and United Kingdom (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);
Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, India and Norway (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949);

Australia, Byelorussian S.S.R., Cuba, U.S.S.R. and United States (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

This Commission advises the Council on economic questions in order to promote higher standards of living. In particular, it advises the Council on:

- (a) the prevention of wide fluctuations in economic activity and the promotion of full employment by the co-ordination of national full employment policies and by international action;

(b) problems of the reconstruction of devastated areas and other urgent problems arising from the war, so as to help various Members of the United Nations whose territories have been devastated as a result of the war; and

(c) the promotion of economic development and progress, with special regard to the problems of less developed areas.

It draws the attention of the Council to the probable influence of policies and activities of the other commissions of the Council, the specialized agencies or other international organizations on these matters.

The Sub-Commission on Employment and Economic Stability is composed of seven persons selected by the Economic and Employment Commission for three-year terms. It studies national and international full employment policies and fluctuations in economic activity, and analyzes the causes of these fluctuations. It advises the Commission on the most appropriate methods of promoting full employment and economic stability.

The Sub-Commission on Economic Development is composed of seven persons selected by the Economic and Employment Commission for three-year terms. It studies and advises the Commission on the principles and problems of long-term economic development with particular attention to the inadequately developed parts of the world, with the object of:

(a) promoting the fullest and most effective utilization of national resources, labor and capital; and

(b) raising the level of consumption.

(2) Transport and Communications Commission

Members of this Commission are:

Brazil, India, Netherlands, Poland and United Kingdom (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);

Chile, China, France, Norway and Union of South Africa (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949);

Czechoslovakia, Egypt, U.S.S.R., United States and Yugoslavia (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

This Commission assists the Council in its tasks

relating to transport and communication problems. In particular it:

(a) advises the Council on the co-ordination of the work of the specialized agencies in the sphere of transport and communications;

(b) advises the Council in fields where no permanent international organization yet exists and on problems which concern more than one sphere of transport or communications;

(c) suggests to the Council the creation of new agencies, the conclusion of new conventions or the revision of existing conventions;

(d) acts as conciliator, when so authorized, in cases of dispute between states and/or specialized agencies on international transport and communications problems; and

(e) assists the Security Council and the Trusteeship Council, if requested to do so by the Economic and Social Council.

(3) Statistical Commission

Members of this Commission are:

China, Netherlands, U.S.S.R. and United States (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);

Canada, India, Mexico and Ukrainian S.S.R. (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949);

France, Norway, Turkey and United Kingdom (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

The Commission assists the Council in:

(a) promoting the development of national statistics and the improvement of their comparability;

(b) advising the organs of the United Nations on general questions relating to the collection, interpretation and dissemination of statistical information;

(c) promoting the improvement of statistics and statistical methods generally;

(d) co-ordinating the statistical work of specialized agencies; and

(e) developing the central statistical services of the Secretariat of the United Nations.

The Sub-Commission on Statistical Sampling is composed of five experts elected by the Statistical Commission for an indefinite period.

The Sub-Commission examines methods used in the application of statistical sampling and considers possible additional uses of statistical sampling methods.

The Committee on Statistical Classification is composed of eight persons elected by the Commission who also serve as representatives of their governments.

The Committee studies the methods of industrial classification of different countries for the purpose of securing comparability of classification of all branches of economic activity. It also makes recommendations to the Commission on steps to be taken towards the standardization of classification.

(4) Commission on Human Rights

Members of this Commission are:

Byelorussian S.S.R., China, Lebanon, Panama, United Kingdom and Uruguay (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);

Egypt, France, India, Iran, Ukrainian S.S.R. and U.S.S.R. (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949); Australia, Belgium, Chile, Philippines, United States and Yugoslavia (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

This Commission studies problems relating to:

(a) an international bill of rights;

(b) international declarations or conventions on civil liberties, freedom of information and similar matters;

(c) the protection of minorities; and

(d) the prevention of discrimination on grounds of race, sex, language or religion.

The Sub-Commission on the Freedom of Information and of the Press is composed of twelve persons elected by the Economic and Social Council in the first instance from a list of persons nominated by the Commission on Human Rights. Originally, members of the Sub-Commission were elected for one year to serve until December 31, 1947, but their terms of office were extended.

This Sub-Commission examines what rights, obligations and practices should be included in the concept of freedom of information and reports to the Commission on issues arising from the examination.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities is composed of twelve persons elected for two-year terms by the Economic and Social Council in the first instance from a list of persons nominated by the Commission on Human Rights.

It examines the principles to be applied in these fields and makes recommendations on urgent problems.

The Drafting Committee on the International Bill of Human Rights is composed of representatives of eight Members elected by the Commission for an indeterminate period.

The Drafting Committee was assigned the function of reviewing suggestions and observations made by members of the Commission on Human Rights and, after a careful study of the subject, submitting to the Commission a draft of an International Bill of Human Rights.

(5) Social Commission

Members of this Commission are:

Czechoslovakia, France, Greece, Union of South Africa, U.S.S.R. and United States (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);

Colombia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Peru, United Kingdom and Yugoslavia (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949);

Canada, China, Denmark, Ecuador, Iraq and Poland (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

This Commission advises the Council on:

(a) social questions of a general character, and in particular on all matters in the social field not covered by specialized inter-governmental agencies;

(b) practical measures that may be needed in the social field; measures needed for the co-ordination of activities in the social field; and

(c) such international agreements and conventions on any of these matters as may be required, and on their execution.

The matters in the social field which the Commission deals with include, inter alia, standards of living, housing and town planning, family assistance, child welfare, youth guidance, prevention of crime and treatment of offenders, social aspects of migration, and refugees.

(6) Commission on the Status of Women

Members of this Commission are:

Australia, Byelorussian S.S.R., China, Guatemala and India (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);

Mexico, Syria, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949);

Costa Rica, Denmark, France, Turkey and Venezuela (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

This Commission prepares recommendations and reports to the Council on promoting women's rights in political, economic, social and educational fields.

It may also make recommendations to the Council on urgent problems requiring immediate attention in the field of women's rights.

(7) Commission on Narcotic Drugs

Members of this Commission, elected on February 18, 1946, for three years, are:

Canada, China, Egypt, France, India, Iran, Mexico, Netherlands, Peru, Poland, Turkey, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States and Yugoslavia.

This Commission:

(a) assists the Council in exercising such powers of supervision over the application of international conventions and agreements dealing with narcotic drugs as may be assumed by or conferred on the Council;

(b) carries out such functions entrusted to the League of Nations Advisory Committee on Traffic in Opium and other Dangerous Drugs by the international conventions on narcotic drugs as the Council has found necessary to assume and continue;

(c) advises the Council on all matters pertaining to the control of narcotic drugs and prepares such draft international conventions as are necessary;

(d) considers what changes may be required in the existing machinery for the international control of narcotic drugs and submits proposals to the Council; and

(e) performs such other functions relating to narcotic drugs as the Council may direct.

(8) Fiscal Commission

Members of this Commission are:

Belgium, Czechoslovakia, India, New Zealand and United States (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);

Colombia, Cuba, Lebanon, Poland and U.S.S.R. (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949);

China, France, Ukrainian S.S.R., Union of South Africa and United Kingdom (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

This Commission studies and advises the Council in the field of finance, particularly in its legal, administrative and technical aspects.

(9) Population Commission

Members of this Commission are:

China, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States (elected for two years, to serve until December 31, 1948);

Australia, Canada, France and Ukrainian S.S.R. (elected for three years, to serve until December 31, 1949);

Brazil, Netherlands, Peru and Yugoslavia (elected for four years, to serve until December 31, 1950).

This Commission studies and advises the Council on:

(a) population changes, factors associated with such changes, and policies designed to influence these factors;

(b) inter-relationship of economic and social conditions and population trends; and

(c) migratory movements of population and factors associated with such movements.

b. REGIONAL COMMISSIONS

The Council had established the following regional commissions:

- (1) Economic Commission for Europe
- (2) Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East
- (3) Economic Commission for Latin America

The following are their members and terms of reference:³

(1) Economic Commission for Europe

This Commission consists of the European Members of the United Nations and the United States. Its members are:

Belgium, Byelorussian S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, Greece, Iceland, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Sweden, Turkey, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States and Yugoslavia.

The Commission, with the agreement of the country concerned:

(a) initiates and participates in measures to facilitate concerted action for:

- (i) the economic reconstruction of Europe;
- (ii) raising the level of European economic activity;
- (iii) maintaining and strengthening the economic relations of the European countries both among themselves and with other countries of the world.

(b) investigates and studies economic and technological problems and developments within member countries of the Commission and within Europe generally;

(c) collects, evaluates and disseminates economic, technological and statistical information.

The Commission may consult with the representatives of the Allied Control Authorities of the occupied countries on matters concerning the economies of these countries in relation to the rest of the European economy. It may also consult with other Members of the United Nations and under certain conditions with other states not members of the United Nations on matters of particular concern to them, and with specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations.

The headquarters of the Commission are at Geneva.

The Economic and Social Council is to decide before the end of 1951 whether the Commission is to continue or to be terminated, and if it is to continue, what changes, if any, should be made in its terms of reference.

The Economic Commission for Europe has established a number of subsidiary organs⁴ which act in a consultative and advisory capacity, reporting on their activities and making recommendations in their fields to the Commission. They are authorized to present certain recommendations direct to interested governments, but may not take any action with respect to any country without the approval of the government of that country.

Committees and sub-committees of the Economic Commission for Europe are composed of interested members of the Commission and such other European states as the Commission decides.

(2) Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East
Members of this Commission are:

Australia, Burma, China, France, India, Netherlands, New Zealand, Pakistan, Philippines, Siam, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States.

Any state in the area which may later become a Member of the United Nations may be admitted as a member of this Commission. Burma and Pakistan became members of the Commission under this provision.

Other Members of the United Nations may participate in a consultative capacity when the Commission considers matters of particular concern to them.

Certain territories, or parts of territories, are admitted to associate membership in the Commission without voting privileges. The following associate members have been admitted by the Commission:

Cambodia; Ceylon; Hong Kong; Laos; and Malayan Union, Singapore, North Borneo, Brunei, Sarawak (these five jointly represented as one associate member).

The terms of reference of this Commission are broadly the same as those of the Economic Commission for Europe.

The headquarters of the Commission are at Shanghai.

The Economic and Social Council is to decide before the end of 1951 whether the Commission is to continue or be terminated, and if it is to continue, what changes, if any, should be made in its terms of reference.

(3) Economic Commission for Latin America

This Commission consists of the Members of the United Nations in North, Central, and South America and in the Caribbean area, and France, the Netherlands, and the United Kingdom. Its members are as follows:

Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, France, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay and Venezuela.

³ For list, see Economic Commission for Europe, p. 524.

⁴ For names of representatives on the Commissions, see Annex II, pp. 703-05.

Other Members of the United Nations may participate in a consultative capacity in the work of the Commission when it considers matters of particular concern to them.

Certain territories, or parts or groups of territories in Central and South America and the Caribbean area may be admitted by the Commission to associate membership without voting privileges.

The Commission operates within the territories of its members and associate members in Central and South America and in the Caribbean area. With the agreement of the country concerned, it:

(a) initiates and participates in measures to facilitate concerted action for:

(i) dealing with economic problems arising out of the war;

(ii) raising the level of economic activity in Latin America;

(iii) maintaining and strengthening the economic relations of the Latin American countries both among themselves and with the other countries of the world;

(b) investigates and studies economic and technological problems and developments in Latin American territories.

The Commission makes recommendations directly to governments and specialized agencies concerned, subject to the Council's prior approval of proposals for activities affecting the world's economy. To avoid duplication, the Commission co-ordinates its activities with those of specialized agencies and inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, in particular with the Pan American Union and as may be necessary with the Caribbean Commission.

The Economic and Social Council is to decide before the end of 1951 whether the Commission is to continue or be terminated, and if it is to continue, what changes, if any, should be made in its terms of reference.

c. STANDING COMMITTEES

The Economic and Social Council has four standing committees:⁵

(1) Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies (President and eleven members)

(2) Committee on Arrangements for Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations (Council NGO Committee) (President and five members)

(3) Agenda Committee (President, the two Vice-Presidents and two members)

(4) Interim Committee on Programme of Meetings (President and five members)

d. Ad hoc COMMITTEES⁵

Apart from sessional committees (Economic, Social, Human Rights, Co-ordination), which meet only during sessions of the Council, the Council has from time to time established ad hoc committees to deal with particular problems, for example, the ad hoc Committee to study the factors bearing upon the establishment of an economic commission for the Middle East, the ad hoc Committee on Genocide, the Council's Special Committee on United Nations Appeal for Children and the ad hoc Committee on Procedure.⁶

e. SPECIAL BODIES⁷

(1) Permanent Central Opium Board

The Board is composed of eight persons appointed by the Economic and Social Council. The Council must give consideration to appointing, in equitable proportions, persons who possess a knowledge of the drug situation in producing and manufacturing countries on the one hand and in consuming countries on the other and who are connected with those countries. Members of the Board may not hold any office which puts them in direct dependence on their governments.

The Permanent Central Opium Board was established by the Opium Convention of February 19, 1925, which was amended by the Protocol of December 11, 1946. It is an independent organization connected administratively with the United Nations.

The Board is charged with the general international supervision of the narcotics trade, and receives statistics from governments which are parties to the Convention, on the basis of which it reports annually to the contracting parties and to the Economic and Social Council. If the information it receives leads it to conclude that any country is accumulating excessive quantities of narcotic drugs, the Board has the right to recommend that no further exports of narcotics shall be made to that country.

(2) Supervisory Body

The Supervisory Body was established by the 1931 Convention for the Limitation of the Manufacture and Regulation of the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, which was amended by the Protocol of December 11, 1946. It is composed of four experts, and under the Protocol, when re-appointed, they were to be nominated as follows: one by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, one by the Permanent Central Opium Board and two by the World Health Organization.

The Board examines the estimates of governments for each country's needs for narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes and prepares estimates for any territories for which data have not been provided. It publishes an annual statement fixing the limits for the following years of imports, manufacture, etc., for every territory in the world.

(3) United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF)

The United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund was established by the General Assembly on December 11, 1946. It reports to the Economic and Social Council.

The Executive Board of the Fund consists of 25 Member Governments nominated by the General Assembly in its resolution establishing the Fund and any other Government designated by the Economic and Social Council on the Board's recommendation (Switzerland has been so designated).

The Fund consists of any assets made available by UNRRA or any voluntary contributions made available by governments, voluntary agencies, individual or other sources.

It is utilized for the benefit of children and adolescents of countries which were victims of aggression and to assist in their rehabilitation; for the benefit of children and adolescents of countries which were receiving assistance from UNRRA; for child health purposes generally; and to safeguard the health of expectant and nursing mothers.

2. Specialized Agencies in Relationship with the United Nations⁸

Agreements have been signed bringing the following specialized agencies into relationship with the United Nations:

International Labour Organisation (ILO)
Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO)
United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO)
International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
International Monetary Fund

Universal Postal Union (UPU) World Health Organization (WHO)
International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

Agreements have been negotiated with the following specialized agencies, or their preparatory commissions:

International Refugee Organization (IRO)⁹
Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO)

Negotiations for agreements with the International Trade Organization (ITO) or its Interim Commission and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) have been authorized by the Economic and Social Council.

3. Non-Governmental Organizations in Consultative Status¹⁰

There are three categories of non-governmental organizations which have been granted consultative status with the Economic and Social Council.

CATEGORY A

These are organizations which have a basic interest in most of the activities of the Council, and are closely linked with the economic and social life of the areas which they represent.

They may submit items for inclusion on the provisional agenda of the Council and whenever the Council discusses such an item the organization may introduce and explain it. The President of the Council, with the Council's consent, may invite the organization to make in the course of discussion a further statement for purposes of clarification. These organizations may also send observers to public meetings of the Council and circulate written communications to Council members. They may be invited to consult with the standing committee of the Council, if the Council so desires or the organizations so request.

CATEGORY B

These are organizations which have a special competence, but are concerned specifically with only a few of the fields of activity covered by the Council.

⁸ For functions and membership of the agencies see Part Two, Specialized Agencies, pp. 817-983; for co-ordination of their activities by the Council, see pp. 663-82.

¹⁰ For list of these organizations, see p. 694.

They may send observers to public meetings of the Council. Their communications, however, are placed on a list and distributed only on the request of a member of the Council. They may be invited to consult with the standing committee of the Council, if the Council so desires or the organizations so request.

CATEGORY C

These are organizations which are primarily concerned with the development of public opinion and with the dissemination of information.

They have the same privileges as organizations in Category B.

Non-governmental organizations are excluded from relationship with the United Nations if they have legally constituted branches in Spain whose policies are determined and controlled by the Franco Government.

They are, however, eligible if:

(a) they have only individual members in Spain who are not organized into a legally constituted branch;

(b) the branches in Spain though legally constituted have a purely humanitarian character and their policies are not determined and controlled by the Franco Government; and

(c) such branches are not active at the present time.

D. SESSIONS OF THE COUNCIL AND ITS COMMISSIONS

The Council's rules of procedure during the period under review provided that it was to meet at least three times a year at the seat of the United Nations, or elsewhere if it so decided.

The Council held three sessions during the period under review:

- Fifth session: July 19-August 17, 1947.
- Sixth session: February 2-March 11, 1948.
- Seventh session: July 19-August 29, 1948.

The fifth and sixth sessions were held at the United Nations temporary headquarters at Lake Success, New York; the seventh session was held at the Palais des Nations, Geneva.

During this period the Commissions of the Council held the following sessions:

- Economic and Employment Commission
 - Third session: April 19-May 6, 1948, at Lake Success.
- Transport and Communications Commission
 - Second session: April 12-20, 1948, at Geneva.
- Statistical Commission
 - Second session: August 28-September 5, 1947, at Lake Success.
 - Third session: April 26-May 6, 1948, at Lake Success.

Commission on Human Rights

Second session: December 2-17, 1947, at Geneva.

Third session: May 24-June 18, 1948, at Lake Success.

Second session: August 28-September 13, 1947, at Lake Success.

Third session: April 5-23, 1948, at Lake Success.

Second session: January 5-19, 1948, at Lake Success.

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

Second session: July 25-August 8, 1947, at Lake Success.

Third session: May 3-22, 1948, at Lake Success.

Fiscal Commission

(No session during the period covered.)

Population Commission

Second session: August 18-27, 1947, at Lake Success.

Third session: May 10-25, 1948, at Lake Success.

Second session: July 5-16, 1947, at Geneva.

Third session: April 26-May 8, 1948, at Geneva.

Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East

Second session: November 24-December 6, 1947, at Baguio, Philippines.

Third session: June 1-12, 1948, at Ootacamund, India.

First session: June 7-25, 1948, at Santiago de Chile.

E. PROCEDURAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS

1. Rules of Procedure of the Economic and Social Council

During its fifth session, the Council considered at its 112th and 113th meetings on August 12 the report of its Committee on Procedural Questions

(E/530 and Corr.1) regarding rules of procedure of the Council. The Committee had proposed an amended version of Council rule of procedure no. 10 to provide that items submitted by Members, specialized agencies or non-governmental organizations should reach the Secretary-General not less than 28 days before the first meeting of each session. Revision of rule 10 would also make it necessary to amend rule 14, which refers to the consideration of the items submitted by the Agenda Committee.

The Committee had recommended that the Council itself should adopt at this session uniform rules of procedure for all nine functional commissions, and consider, when it had amended its own rules, whether or not these rules should be made applicable to the commissions also. It suggested that the question of giving particular rights to non-governmental organizations in category B having a special relationship to a particular commission should be studied by the NGO Committee. Since the adoption of its recommendations concerning rules of procedure for functional commissions would mean that Council rules 65 and 66 would need amending, the Committee had suggested a new formulation.

The discussion in the Council centred round a new rule (60) proposed by the Committee to the effect that when a member of a sub-commission is unable to attend a meeting an alternate shall be designated to serve in his place with the same status as the member. Some members felt that since members of the sub-commissions were appointed in a personal capacity they should not be entitled to alternates and that the rule should be deleted. Others thought the Council should approve each such appointee and that they should have no voting rights. Others claimed that to deny them voting rights would hinder the work. Several amendments to this effect were submitted and rejected, and the Council approved rule 60 as submitted by the Committee.

Resolutions 99(V) (Amendments to rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council) and 100(V) (Rules of procedure for functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council) were adopted unanimously after slight amendment at the 113th meeting.¹²

During its seventh session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a proposal (E/751 and Corrs. 1 and 2; E/930), submitted by the representative of France, suggesting a comprehensive revision of the Council's rules of procedure; also before the Council was a memorandum (E/883 and Add. 1) containing observations of the Secretary-General bearing on the same subject.

At its 225th meeting on August 28, 1948, the Council, by a vote of 13 to 0, with 3 abstentions, adopted resolution 177 (VII), based on a Venezuelan proposal (E/AC28/W.5) which had been amended by several Council members. In this resolution the Council expressed the opinion that the experience of recent sessions showed the need for a comprehensive revision of its rules of procedure; and, since it had proved impractical for the Council's Committee on Procedure to undertake such a revision during the Council's ordinary sessions, the Council decided to instruct the Committee on Procedure to prepare a revised text of rules of procedure during the interval between the Council's seventh and eighth sessions.

While thus deferring until its eighth session the question of a comprehensive revision, the Council did decide during the seventh session to amend two of its rules of procedure: rule 13 (dealing with the composition of the Council's Agenda Committee) was amended by the addition of a provision enabling the Council's First Vice-President to assume the chairmanship of the Agenda Committee if the President, who is ex officio Chairman of the Agenda Committee, should be unable to be present at Committee meetings (in the absence of both the President and the First Vice-President, the Agenda Committee chairmanship would devolve on the Second Vice-President); and rule 30 (which provides that before approving any proposal involving financial expenditures, Council members should receive from the Secretary-General a summary report of the financial implications of the proposal and estimates of the costs involved in each proposal) was amended to provide for the preparation of a summary estimate of the financial implications of all proposals coming before the Council, for its circulation to the members as soon as possible after the issue of the provisional agenda and for its revision as necessary during the session in the light of the Council's discussions.

The decision to change rules 13 and 30 resulted from a recommendation of the Committee on Procedure (E/1017) and was taken at the 224th meeting of the Council on August 28, 1948.¹³ The change in rule 13 was approved by a vote of 8 to 3, with 7 abstentions, while the modification of rule 30 was approved unanimously.

¹³ For text of the two amended rules, see Annex III, p. 706.

2. Financial Implications of Actions Taken by the Council

The modification of rule 30 (see above) was only one of the steps taken by the Council concerning the financial implications of its own actions. The Council also, at its 224th meeting on August 28, 1948, approved by a vote of 15 to 0, with 3 abstentions, a resolution based on recommendations of the Committee on Procedure (E/962). This resolution (175(VII)) provided that:

(1) in normal circumstances work on any project entailing expenditure which cannot, without detriment to other work already in hand, be met within the current budget will not be started within the current financial year;

(2) if the Council wishes to recommend, in case of exceptional urgency, the allocation of funds to a particular project, so that work can be started either before the next ordinary session of the Assembly or after the Assembly has met (but during the current financial year), a specific indication to the Secretary-General to that effect shall be included in the resolution approving such a project; and

(3) resolutions of the Council shall, wherever appropriate, contain suitable wording to indicate the degree of urgency which the Council wishes attached to the project in question.

In its report to the General Assembly's third session (A/625, p. 77), the Economic and Social Council observed that "the final summary of financial implications of proposals approved by the Council at its sixth session indicated that the direct additional costs to be incurred in 1948 were $635,238 [E/732/Rev. 1 and Corr. 1]". Similarly, proposals approved at the seventh session of the Council were estimated to lead to an additional expenditure of $43,000 in 1948, and would require supplementary estimates for 1949 in the amount of approximately $700,000.¹⁴

3. Records of the Council

At its sixth session, the Economic and Social Council examined resolution 166(II) of the General Assembly¹⁵ and the Assembly's related request that the Council consider whether it would be disposed to dispense with verbatim records of its meetings. After an exchange of views at its 122nd, 151st, 164th and 166th plenary meetings on February 2 and 24 and March 5 and 8, respectively, the Council, by a vote of 12 to 2, with 4 abstentions, adopted resolution 138(VI), based on a French proposal (E/698) as amended by several Council members. In this resolution, the Council expressed its opinion that the absence of verbatim records reduced the efficiency of the Council's work, and requested the General Assembly to provide, at its coming third regular session, the Council with facilities for preparing and distributing verbatim records of its plenary meetings in future. It also requested the Secretary-General, pending future reconsideration of the matter by the Assembly, to take all practicable steps to improve the accuracy of summary records and, where verbatim records were not provided, to make available, if possible, summary records of Council meetings as a general rule within 24 hours of the close of the meetings to which they refer.

The Council reverted to the matter during its seventh session, at its 225th meeting on August 28, 1948, when it had before it a report (E/854) of the Secretary-General on the steps he had been able to take with a view to improving the summary records. Also before the Council was a draft resolution (E/961) in which the Council's Committee on Procedure recommended that the Council request the General Assembly, in considering resolution 138(VI), to take into consideration the views of Council members expressed at the seventh session. Instead of approving this proposal, the Council, by a vote of 13 to 3, with 1 abstention, adopted an alternative draft resolution (E/916) submitted by the representative of the United Kingdom. In the resolution (176(VII)) the Council took cognizance of the improvement both in accuracy and speed of production of the summary records issued during its seventh session and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts towards this end, particularly with a view to reducing the time taken for the translation of summary records into the other working language. Furthermore, and in view of the above, the Council, in the same resolution (176(VII)) informed the General Assembly that it now considered itself able to comply with the Assembly's request to dispense for the present with written verbatim records of its meetings.

4. Relations with the Trusteeship Council¹⁶

At its fourth session, the Council appointed a committee consisting of the President and two members selected by him to confer with representatives of the Trusteeship Council on arrangements for co-operation in dealing with matters of common concern.

The President appointed the members for India and Venezuela" to be members of the Committee; and the representatives of the two Councils presented a joint report (E&T/C.1/2 later revised in E&T/C.1/2/Rev.1 and Corr. 1).

The chief recommendations of the Joint Committee dealt with the activities of the Councils in social and economic fields where there was a question of overlapping, and with the roles of the commissions of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies. The report stated:

"It is recognized that the Economic and Social Council and its commissions are empowered to make recommendations or studies of general application on matters within their special provinces. It is also recognized that such recommendations or studies may be made in respect of particular groups of territories such as those within a given geographical region or those presenting common economic or social problems. It is, however, recognized that Trust Territories should not be singled out for such specialist recommendations, except with the concurrence of the Trusteeship Council."

It also recommended that requests by the Trusteeship Council for assistance from specialized agencies should be sent directly to the specialized agency concerned, the Economic and Social Council being informed at the same time; and it recognized that the implementation of the agreements with the specialized agencies in matters of concern to the Trusteeship Council was a continuing problem to be worked out in the light of experience.

In addition, detailed recommendations were made concerning notification of meetings, communication of provisional agenda of each Council to members of the other, calling of special sessions of the Councils, reciprocal representation at meetings of Councils and their commissions, exchange of documents, representation of the United Nations at meetings of specialized agencies and the handling of petitions and communications concerning human rights and the status of women.

Finally, as regards machinery, the report recommended that the Presidents of the two Councils should confer with one another as and when necessary regarding matters of common concern, and that, if the nature of any question warranted it, they should be empowered to convene an ad hoc committee composed of an equal number of representatives (which they should decide) of both Councils.

The report was considered by the Council at its 119th plenary meeting on August 16, 1947. The Council decided to refer it to the Trusteeship Council together with the record of opinions expressed by members of the Economic and Social Council. The representatives of New Zealand, Canada and the U.S.S.R. expressed criticism of the Joint Committee's recommendations concerning petitions on human rights or the status of women emanating from Trust Territories. The Committee had recommended that as a matter of principle all such petitions should be dealt with by the Trusteeship Council, which should communicate to the appropriate commissions, for such assistance as it might desire, those parts of such petitions relating to matters of special concern to them. The Committee further recommended that the Trusteeship Council when considering such petitions should consider to which of them the procedure adopted by the Economic and Social Council for dealing with communications concerning human rights¹⁷ and the status of women¹⁸ could be applied.

The New Zealand representative considered that the Commission on Human Rights should have a brief indication of the substance of communications on human rights relating to Trust Territories, according to the formula already adopted by the Economic and Social Council for dealing with such communications, but that the Trusteeship Council should have the responsibility for handling individual complaints. He did not think that the Trusteeship Council should communicate directly with the commissions. The Canadian representative, assuming that no distinction was intended between "communications" and "petitions", thought that the same procedure should be followed for dealing with such communications from Non-Self-Governing as from self-governing territories. The U.S.S.R. representative thought that the recommendations showed a tendency to limit the competence of the Council. The French representative supported the recommendations, but felt that the composition of the Joint Committee was not a well-balanced one.

Pending the meeting of the Joint Committee, the President of the Council invited the Trusteeship Council, through its President, to nominate representatives to join with the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies in the discussion of articles in which the Trusteeship Council was concerned in draft agreements with specialized agencies. Accordingly, representatives of the Trusteeship Council participated in the negotiations with the Interim Committee of the World Health Organization, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund and the International Telecommunication Union.

F. ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

1. Surveys of Economic Conditions and Trends

a. ECONOMIC REPORT

At its second session, the General Assembly adopted resolution 118 (II) in which it noted with approval that the Economic and Social Council had made arrangements in its resolution 26 (IV) for the initiation of regular reports to the Council on world economic conditions and trends. The Assembly resolution also requested the Secretary-General to assist the Council and its subsidiary organs by providing the necessary factual surveys and analyses. It also recommended to the Council "that it consider a survey of current world economic conditions and trends annually, and at such other intervals as it considers necessary, in the light of its responsibility under Article 55 of the Charter to promote the solution of international economic problems, higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development; that such consideration include an analysis of the major dislocations of needs and supplies in the world economy; that it make recommendations as to the appropriate measures to be taken by the General Assembly, the Members of the United Nations and the specialized agencies concerned".

During its sixth session, the Council had before it the Economic Report: Salient Features of the World Economic Situation 1945-47,¹⁹ which had been prepared by the Secretariat.

The report stated that two years after the end of the war the world was producing less than it had a decade earlier for a population now 200 million greater. Shortages of food were the world's number one economic problem. While the economic potential of the United States increased enormously during the war, that of many other production centres had considerably diminished; this shift in the world's production facilities was at the root of the dollar shortage. In the long run, the report stated, this shortage could be eliminated only by increased production outside the United States and the willingness of the United States to accept imports from other countries. Production increases depended on the breaking of bottlenecks in food, fuel, steel and transport, and of these food was the most crucial because it was strategic in its influence on the rising cost of living and therefore on the almost universal inflation.

The report stated that some countries were consuming 30 per cent less food per capita than before the war while others consumed as much as 15 per cent more.

The lack of economic balance in the world was manifest not only in the shortages of supply but was also reflected in unprecedented deficits in the foreign transactions of most countries. The most striking increase in exports was that recorded by the United States. The report suggested that where inflation could not be checked by monetary and fiscal measures, direct control of investments and rationing of essential consumer goods might be necessary, even though such measures might prove difficult to institute for administrative and political reasons.

The report formed the basis of an extended debate which took place at the 145th, 146th, 148th, 149th, 150th and 151st plenary meetings of the Council on February 17, 18, 19 and 24, 1948.²⁰ The reaction of the Council members was in general favorable and the Secretariat was commended for the report. Representatives of the following countries spoke in the debate: Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Denmark, France, Lebanon, Netherlands, New Zealand, Peru, Poland, Turkey, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States and Venezuela. Some of their comments were concerned with aspects of the report which they felt could be improved; others dealt with the world economic situation and with the situation in their different countries.

102(VI) recommending that the Secretary-General take into consideration, in preparation of future reports, the views expressed by members of the Council and drawing the attention of Member Governments of the United Nations, of the Economic and Employment Commission, and of specialized agencies to the content of the report and to the discussion on this subject by members of the Council at the sixth session.

The material contained in the Economic Report was also discussed by the Sub-Commission on Employment and Economic Stability at its second session and by the Economic and Employment Commission at its third session. The Economic and Employment Commission stated in the report of its third session (E/790 and Add.1) that the "Secretariat, in preparing the Economic Report, fulfilled its task of beginning the preparation of data on current world economic conditions and trends in conformity with the wishes expressed by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and by this Commission". With regard to future issues of the Economic Report, the Commission concluded that "the Secretariat should be encouraged to proceed experimentally in the preparation of these reports", that it was inevitable that the Secretariat should be guided primarily by the schedule of meetings of the Economic and Social Council and therefore that those reports should be made available in relation to the sessions of the Council rather than to the sessions of the Commission or its Sub-Commission. The Commission further recommended that the Secretariat "endeavour to supplement its economic reports with additional data on current world trends, so that at each session of the Council and the Commission the members would be kept up to date about current world economic developments". In response to this recommendation, the Secretary-General made available to the Economic and Social Council at its seventh session a summary of the main features of recent economic trends in a printed publication entitled Selected World Economic Indices.

b. SURVEY OF THE ECONOMIC SITUATION AND PROSPECTS OF EUROPE

At its third session, the Economic Commission for Europe had before it the Survey of the Economic Situation and Prospects of Europe (E/ECE/Rev.1),²¹ prepared by the Secretariat of the Economic Commission for Europe. The Survey, which was the first in a series of reports which the Commission's Secretariat plans to publish, contained a comprehensive analysis of Europe's most pressing economic problems. At the same time, it indicated the efforts which were believed necessary in order to achieve economic recovery in Europe.

The Survey consisted of four main parts:

- (1) "The Recovery in Production"
- (2) "The Recovery in Trade"
- (3) "The Balance of Payments"
- (4) "Problems of European Reconstruction"

The fourth of these parts had chapters dealing with the problems of inflation, of intra-European trade and of production. In addition the Survey contained a number of appendices and a number of tables. Appendix A contained an analysis of the economic plans of European countries. The first part of the appendix dealt with the economic plans of the countries of central and southeastern Europe; the second part, with the fourth Five-Year Plan of the U.S.S.R.; and the third part, with the economic plans of the sixteen countries participating in the Committee of European Economic Co-operation. Appendix B contained a number of notes on sources and methods.

The Survey was the subject of an extended debate in the Economic Commission for Europe during which the representatives expressed the wish that the Secretariat prepare a similar survey each year.

c. ECONOMIC SURVEY OF ASIA AND THE FAR EAST, 1947

An Economic Survey of Asia and the Far East, 1947, was prepared by the Secretariat of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, in accordance with a resolution of the Commission at its second session requesting the Secretariat to publish a comprehensive annual survey on economic conditions and problems within the scope of ECAFE.

The Survey, which was published in July 1948, reflected the situation in the area concerned as of the end of 1947.

Topics dealt with in the Survey include questions relating to national income, population, land utilization, agricultural production, mining and industry, transport and communications, labor, currency and banking, international trade and balance of payments.

The introduction to the 234-page document stated that the Survey clearly brought out such features of the economy of Asia and the Far East as low national income, excessive dependence upon agriculture, lack of diversification of economy, a high degree of population pressure and little industrialization. Thus it became evident that "even the low pre-war levels of income have not been maintained", being offset, in the few countries where national income had increased, by growth of population.

The standard of living of the people, the Survey found, "has been very low [and] has become lower in the years during and after the war".

Transport was one of the facilities damaged in nearly all countries of the region, and its restoration had been hampered by the same difficulties which militated against the speeding up of industrial and agricultural production. Only about 53 per cent of the prewar railways in six countries of this area (Burma, China, Indo-China, Indonesia, Malaya and the Philippines) were open to traffic in 1946-47. Lack of rolling stock was another serious hindrance to recovery.

Recovery was adversely affected by strife and violence—the civil war in China, the fighting in Indonesia and Indo-China, etc.

d. ECONOMIC SURVEY OF LATIN AMERICA

At its first session, the Economic Commission for Latin America requested "the Executive Secretary, within the resources and facilities at his disposal and in collaboration with the specialized agencies in accordance with the agreements signed with the United Nations, and utilizing any relevant studies by those American non-governmental organizations which have been accorded consultative status by the Economic and Social Council, to undertake an Economic Survey of Latin America, having in mind its needs for greater development, and the strengthening of its economic relations with the rest of the world, and to present it to the next session of the Economic Commission for Latin America. To the extent applicable, its form should be that used in the Survey of the Economic Situation and Prospects of Europe prepared by the Secretariat of the Economic Commission for Europe, and following the methods and systems, as appropriate, utilized by the regional commissions for Europe and for Asia and the Far East."

e. OTHER SURVEYS

At its sixth session the Economic and Social Council also had before it a Survey of Current Inflationary and Deflationary Tendencies,²² and Economic Development in Selected Countries, Plans, Programmes and Agencies.²³

The Survey of Current Inflationary and Deflationary Tendencies analyzed for selected countries the problems of deficiency or excess in effective demand leading to unemployment or inflation respectively. The countries were so chosen as to illustrate the problems in question in all parts of the world. These countries were: (1) the United States, where the question of a possible recession or depression in the near future was examined; (2) the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Poland and Yugoslavia, where the various patterns of inflationary pressure in devastated Europe were considered; (3) India and Latin America, where inflation in under-developed countries was discussed and its implications for the problems of development were examined.

The report on Economic Development in Selected Countries, Plans, Programmes and Agencies dealt with the chief characteristics of the complex and changing organizations devised by governments to cope with the problems arising from their needs for economic development. The following countries were included in the study: Anglo-Egyptian Sudan (Condominium), Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, British African Non-Self-Governing and Non-Metropolitan Territories, Chile, Egypt and other countries in the Middle East, French North Africa and French African Overseas Territories, India, Liberia, Mexico, Peru, Poland, Venezuela and Yugoslavia.

2. Economic and Employment Matters

a. SECOND SESSION OF THE ECONOMIC AND EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION

The Economic and Employment Commission held its second session at Lake Success, New York, from June 2 to 17, 1947. The following matters were considered by it.

(1) Selection of Sub-Commission Members

The fourth session of the Economic and Social Council had stressed the importance of appointing members of two Sub-Commissions: on employment and economic stability; and on economic development.

The first session of the Economic and Employment Commission considered that it was not yet in a position to name persons for these Sub-Commissions. Each member of the Commission was therefore asked to submit a list of experts, from all over the world, who might be competent members of these Sub-Commissions because of their ability in their respective fields.

At the Commission's second session, seven members were appointed from this list to the Sub-Commission on Employment and Economic Stability. The members were individual experts from Australia, France, Norway, Poland, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States.

The members appointed to the Sub-Commission on Economic Development were individual experts from Brazil, China, Czechoslovakia, India, Mexico, U.S.S.R. and United States.

(2) Economic Development

After selecting the members of its Sub-Commissions, the Commission discussed resolution 26 (IV) of the Economic and Social Council on employment and economic development.²⁴ Part of this resolution dealt with international action in the field of economic development, but the Commission decided to await receipt from the Sub-Commission on Economic Development of its analysis of the type of international collaboration it considered essential to implement development policy.

It was generally agreed that draft resolutions to be submitted to the Council should be adapted to particular rather than general or academic problems. It was decided that recommendations would be made for definite situations that arose, and that it would be the Commission's policy, if possible, to outline to the Council specific policies for action on particular cases. The Commission expected the Sub-Commission on Economic Development to submit these cases when dealing with the items that came to its attention.

The Commission requested the Secretariat to undertake a comparative analysis of the patterns of industrialization in both well developed and less developed areas.

(3) Employment and Economic Stability

The Commission thought that the problem of economic stability and full employment should be divided into short-term and long-term situations. It was considered somewhat futile to recommend long-term policies and practices at this stage. The economies that had been disrupted by the war should first be rehabilitated, at least to the point where the countries produced for their own needs and for sufficient export surpluses to enable them to earn foreign exchange for purchases abroad. Consequently, discussion centred on the needs of the devastated areas, because of the importance in the attainment of long-term economic stability.

The Commission submitted to the Council two draft resolutions dealing with problems of reconstruction, which the Commission considered must precede the attainment of economic stability, full employment and high standards of living throughout the world. The Commission referred the study of certain long-range problems to the Sub-Commission on Employment and Economic Stability.

The first of these draft resolutions would have had the Council: urge Members to contribute toward achieving the purposes of the Charter relating to the promotion of higher standards of living, full employment and conditions of economic and social progress and development; recommend Members which had already attained high levels of output to maintain these levels so as to be in a position to assist world economy to attain full employment and economic stability; recommend to Members having commodities available for the reconstruction of countries disrupted by war, that they avoid measures tending to reduce imports from such countries and that they continue to make financial and other resources available to assist in providing them with essential goods; recommend to Members whose economies are in need of reconstruction that they increase their production to a maximum level, and adopt monetary, fiscal and labor policies to this end, and that they avoid restrictive measures in international trade that would reduce their imports and impair economic stability in other parts of the world.

The second resolution would have had the Council: draw the attention of Members to the existence of unemployment in a number of countries and call on the governments of the countries concerned to adopt measures for achieving full employment; call on Members to take measures towards lowering abnormally high prices, especially for export goods; favor loans and credits to Member nations directed exclusively towards economic stability and reconstruction in the interests of the countries receiving credit.

(4) Reports by the Secretariat

The Commission also requested the Secretariat to undertake reports on general tendencies and trends in the economic activity of the world, including the status of employment, production and prices, and related information. In anticipation of these needs, the Secretariat submitted a preliminary draft which indicated activities and trends in many of the important countries of the world.

b. CONSIDERATION AT THE FIFTH SESSION OF THE COUNCIL

The Economic and Social Council discussed the report of the second session of the Economic and Employment Commission (E/445) at its 90th, 91st, 92nd and 93rd plenary meetings on July 23 and 24, 1947, and in particular the two draft resolutions concerning short-term problems of economic stability.

Various representatives expressed approval of the report of the Commission as a whole, but some felt that it lacked concreteness. Many representatives stressed the need for taking urgent practical steps without delay and approved the Commission's plan to deal with concrete situations. The importance of the duty of the Commission in co-ordinating the activities in economic matters of the commissions, specialized agencies and other international organizations was stressed by the Czechoslovak representative.

The discussion on the questions covered in the report and the decision taken by the Council at its fifth session are summarized below.

(1) Selection of Sub-Commission Members

The Czechoslovak representative stressed the importance of the creation of the two Sub-Commissions. He felt that they should be granted the greatest freedom in the performance of their duties and expressed the hope that their work would not be hampered by political considerations, but would be aimed at benefiting world economy as a whole. The Lebanese representative criticized the absence of representation of the Near East in both the Commission and its two Sub-Commissions.

(2) Economic Development

The representatives of New Zealand and China stressed the interdependence of the development of under-developed countries and the achievement of economic stability; the harmony of interest between developed and under-developed countries was also stressed by the representatives of France and Chile. The importance of assisting the development of under-developed countries in their own interests was stressed by the U.S.S.R. representative. The Chinese representative called attention to the importance of the under-industrialized areas as a meeting place of conflicts of the industrialized Powers. The representative of Cuba stated that advanced countries should not, through capital export or commercial policies, protect inefficient branches of industry in their own or other countries. It was suggested by the representatives of France, Lebanon, Canada, United Kingdom, Norway and Chile that development should lead to an expansion in world trade rather than be directed towards making countries less dependent on foreign markets. The representative of India stressed the importance of national development and of reducing dependence on foreign markets for vital commodities and food. This could form part of a larger scheme of world co-operation under the auspices of the United Nations. The Indian representative and the Rapporteur of the Commission explained that the suggested objectives of development contained in the Commission's report reflected the different points of view expressed by representatives in the Commission, by way of instruction to its sub-commission in examining the question. The representatives of the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom and France stressed the need for a reduction in armament programs, since they hindered economic development.

(3) Employment and Economic Stability

(a) FIRST RESOLUTION PROPOSED BY THE COMMISSION

The U.S.S.R. representative felt that the recommendations contained in the first resolution were unnecessary and that certain of them dealt with questions within the scope of the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, and indicated a tendency to benefit the stronger countries at the expense of the weaker. The representative of Czechoslovakia criticized the recommendation to Member nations whose economies were in need of reconstruction, since those countries were already striving towards maximum production. The United Kingdom representative felt that the first two paragraphs of this resolution were too platitudinous and the representative of Cuba thought that the resolution was too academic.

(b) SECOND RESOLUTION PROPOSED BY THE COMMISSION

The U.S.S.R. representative expressed general agreement with the second resolution, which, he stated, dealt with urgent interests deserving the attention of the Council. The United States representative felt, however, that this resolution was an inexact statement of facts.

The representative of Turkey pointed out that inflation could best be met through measures to increase production and through sound monetary and general economic policy aimed at restoring the health of world economy rather than through stop-gap measures to stabilize or lower the price level. The prices of export goods could not be treated separately from those of domestic goods without increasing the dislocation of world economy. The United States representative questioned the meaning of "abnormally high prices, especially for export goods". In the United States, goods for internal consumption and for export were sold at the same prices, and prices were related to the supply and demand position. The representative of Venezuela pointed out that essential goods (e.g., raw materials) coming from under-developed countries sold at abnormally low prices, which were insufficient to raise standards of living in those countries, whereas imported manufactured goods were at an abnormally high level, because of the operation of trusts and cartels, especially for iron and steel, and the high prices of maritime freight, because of shipping monopolies. Under-developed countries, therefore, should not be asked to lower their prices.

Various views were expressed on the proposal that the Council should express itself in favor of "loans and credits to Member nations which are directed exclusively towards economic stability and reconstruction in the interests of the peoples of the countries receiving credit".

The U.S.S.R. representative stressed that loans and credits should be used for economic stability and not for military purposes, which undermined the independence of the countries concerned. The United Kingdom representative suggested that loans need not imply any reduction in the sovereignty of the borrower country. The representative of France stated that loans should be made for the benefit of those receiving them without entailing political advantages for the lender. The representative of Lebanon, while supporting the view that no loan should be given to any country with a view to enslaving it, pointed out that any loan should inevitably result in an arrangement mutually advantageous to lender and borrower. The representatives of the United States, Lebanon, and Canada were against singling out one type of loan, i.e., for "stability and reconstruction", as proposed by the Commission, on the ground that this would rule out other legitimate objects such as economic development. The United States representative also opposed the suggestion contained in the Commission's report to prohibit loans for military purposes, stating that this was one-sided and would permit countries with resources to rearm without limitation. The Lebanese representative suggested that requests for aid and advice in development projects should be made through the United Nations, which would delegate the appropriate duties to the appropriate specialized agency.

The general opinion with respect to the two draft resolutions as a whole was that they were too general, and, therefore, no action was taken with respect to them by the Council.

(4) Reports by the Secretariat

Approval was expressed with the progress made by the Secretariat in preparing surveys of world economic conditions and trends, but the representatives of New Zealand and Turkey doubted as to whether annual reports would be adequate.

(5) Resolution Adopted by the Council

The Council at its 93rd plenary meeting on July 24 adopted without objection resolution 61 (V), noting the report of the second session of the Economic and Employment Commission, expressing appreciation of the work of the Commission and of its future plans and drawing to the Commission's attention the views expressed by the Council's members.

c. REPORT OF THE THIRD SESSION OF THE COMMISSION AND ITS CONSIDERATION BY THE COUNCIL

The third session of the Economic and Employment Commission took place from April 19 to May 6, 1948, at Lake Success.

The report of the Commission to the Council (E/790) describes in some detail the work of the third session of the Commission. The Sub-Commission on Economic Development met from November 17 to December 16, 1947. Its report to the Commission (E/CN.11/47) was the basis of the Commission's consideration of the problems in the field of economic development. The Sub-Commission on Employment and Economic Stability met twice, from November 17 to December 9, 1947, and from March 22 to April 7, 1948. Its report to the Commission (E/CN.1/55) served as a basis of the Commission's deliberations in the field of employment and economic stability.

The Sub-Commission on Economic Development also met from June 14 to 30, 1948. In accordance with the request of the Commission, its major item of business was the question of international aids for the mobilization of the national resources of under-developed countries for their economic development. The report of this session of the Sub-Commission (E/CN.1/61) was not considered by the Commission during the period under review.

Problems of economic development and economic stability, and especially of inflation, were the major topics which the Commission considered during its third session. Among the other topics covered in its report, the question of the future organization and terms of reference of the Commission and of its two Sub-Commissions received most of the Commission's attention.

The report of the Commission was considered by the Council during its seventh session at the 23rd to 30th meetings of its Economic Committee from July 26 to August 5, and at its 217th plenary meeting on August 26. Many of the members of the Council expressed disappointment with the report and with the Commission's recommendations as being too general and lacking concrete proposals.

The decisions regarding economic and employment matters taken by the Council at its seventh session and the discussions leading to those decisions are summarized below.

(1) Economic Development

The Economic and Employment Commission in the report of its third session presented two draft resolutions on economic development (E/790, pp. 10 and 12), the first concerning technical assistance and the second dealing with the finances, equipment and supplies for economic development.

(a) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

All representatives in the Economic and Social Council were agreed on the importance of technical assistance. The Brazilian representative pointed out that there were several fields in which there existed no facilities for technical assistance by the United Nations or the specialized agencies. The Venezuelan representative thought that such assistance should already have been given, and that the Commission should now be analyzing the results. The United States representative suggested that, in some cases, single experts might meet the need as well as the teams of experts suggested by the Commission, with a consequent saving in funds, and proposed also that the teams should not necessarily be "international". This proposal was rejected in the Economic Committee by a vote of 9 to 7, with 1 abstention. The Council also rejected a U.S.S.R. amendment (E/AC.6/W.19/Rev.1 and E/1007), proposed both in the Economic Committee and in the Council, to the effect that where assistance was granted by experts of the United Nations, the expenses must be paid by countries requesting such assistance. In support of the amendment, the U.S.S.R. representative stated that it would remove financial considerations as obstacles to technical assistance. Those opposing the amendment said that it would be too restrictive. The vote against the amendment in Committee was 12 to 2, with 3 abstentions, and in the Council 15 to 2, with 1 abstention.

At its 217th plenary meeting on August 26, the Council adopted by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, the resolution proposed by the Economic and Employment Commission. In this resolution (139-(VII)A) the Council informed "those countries which require expert assistance in connexion with their economic development programmes that the Secretary-General of the United Nations may, upon request, arrange for the organization of international teams consisting of experts provided by or through the United Nations and the specialized agencies for the purpose of advising them in connexion with their economic development programmes". It also instructed the Secretary-General to make the resolution formally known to the Member countries and to transmit with it such other documents as would "help those Governments to know what kind of assistance may be available to them from or through the United Nations and its specialized agencies and the terms under which it may be available to them". It further drew attention to "the expert assistance which the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Labour Organization in so far as they are severally concerned, may be able to make available with respect to the institution and expansion of elementary and technical education, vocational training, and the dissemination of technical literature".

(b) FINANCES, EQUIPMENT AND SUPPLIES FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Discussions in the Economic Committee and in the Council were concentrated largely on the second resolution proposed by the Economic and Employment Commission. The proposed resolution (E/790, pp. 12-13) read as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"(1) Recognizing that the finances required for the economic development of any country have to come predominantly from the efforts of the peoples concerned, from the improvement in their national economic structures, and from increased national productivity, and that foreign aid can be considered only as a supplementary resource;

"(2) Recognizing, nevertheless, that substantial international loans and credits in the form of both funds and goods, as well as foreign private investments in appropriate cases, would greatly facilitate the promotion of the economic development of under-developed countries and the successful rehabilitation of the war-impaired economies as well as the maintenance of world economic stability and full employment,

"(3) Recommends that, with due regard to the principle that any assistance 'should not be used for the purpose of exploitation or of obtaining political and other advantages exclusively for countries rendering such assistance' (Economic and Social Council resolution 27 (IV)),

"(a) The Governments of the under-developed countries should continue to consult with one another and with others to consider ways and means of securing assistance for the purpose of speeding their economic development, especially of their industrialization, and avail themselves of the facilities existing in the United Nations regional economic commissions and the specialized agencies for securing economic co-operation among themselves and with other countries;

"(b) International and national governmental and private agencies should accelerate the provision of finance, food and equipment for under-developed countries;

"(c) Member countries having adequate productive capacity should pursue all practicable means to increase their exports, to countries whose economies have been dislocated, of goods needed to further permanent recovery and sound development and especially of equipment vital to the removal of bottle-necks;

"(d) The various forms of assistance referred to above should be carried out with particular attention to the economic development (including industrialization wherever practicable) of the Non-Self-Governing Territories."

The Council in its Economic Committee considered whether the draft resolution proposed by the Commission should be referred back to it for more specific recommendations. A draft resolution to that effect was proposed by the United States (E/AC.6/W.11), to which the United Kingdom suggested an amendment (E/AC.6/W.15) to refer to the importance of adopting practical measures for the development of under-developed areas. The Chinese representative, however, felt that the Council should endorse the principles stated in the Commission's draft resolution, as otherwise the Commission would have no directive. The U.S.S.R. representative also expressed opposition to referring the resolution back to the Commission, since the only method of resolving the different points of view in the Commission was to secure the guidance of the Council. He proposed a draft resolution (E/AC.6/W.13) to amend the resolution by a reference to the principle that credits and assistance granted to Member countries "must not be accompanied by any demands for political or economic advantages and must not be utilized as a means of interference in the internal affairs of the countries receiving such assistance" and that assistance must be based on respect for the independence and sovereignty of the countries receiving it. Chile proposed a draft resolution (E/AC.6/W.14), which would have referred the question back to the Commission, but in addition would have stated, inter alia, that the Council recognized that the finances required for economic development had to come from the country concerned and from foreign capital or credit and that international credits and private foreign investments facilitated economic development and rehabilitation of war-impaired economies, and would have recommended governments to consider practical methods of co-operation, using the facilities offered by the United Nations regional economic commissions and the specialized agencies. It also would have recommended Member countries producing and exporting materials necessary for development and reconstruction to study practical means to increase such production and exports. The draft resolution contained a clause recommending that Member countries "producing goods which play a vital part in world trade should endeavour to study measures likely to produce international agreements leading, as far as possible, to a stabilization of prices". Certain amendments to the resolution were proposed by the Brazilian representative (E/AC.6/W.17). Canada submitted a compromise draft resolution (E/AC.6/W.16) stating that the resolution adopted by the Commission "represents a useful interim formulation of certain of the principles which should guide the Commission in its consideration of the problem of under-developed areas", and requesting it to make more specific recommendations. The Committee also considered a Chinese amendment (E/AC.6/W.18) to this resolution to provide that the Council should approve "the general principles of development" set forth in the Commission's resolution, and U.S.S.R. amendments (E/AC.6/W.19/Rev.1) to the same effect as the U.S.S.R. resolution. After a lengthy discussion, the Economic Committee by 14 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions, and, on its recommendation, the Council at its 217th meeting by 12 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions, adopted resolution 139 (VII) B, which reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having regard to the importance of the adoption of practical measures for the development of under-developed areas,

"Takes note of draft resolution B in the report of the third session of the Economic and Employment Commission;

Considers that this represents a useful interim formulation of certain of the principles which should guide the Commission in its consideration of the problems of under-developed areas;

"Requests the Commission to consider further the problems with which it sought to deal in draft resolution B and to make recommendations which bear more explicitly on the problems of economic development faced by the Members of the United Nations; and

"Suggests that, in making these further studies, the Commission should make use of available studies, reports and analyses, prepared by the appropriate specialized agencies, by the Secretariat of the United Nations and by the regional economic commissions, which will assist the Commission to define the central problems of economic development and to make detailed recommendations for dealing with those problems."

The Council previously rejected by 9 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions, a U.S.S.R. amendment (E/-1007) to the same effect as the resolution submitted by the U.S.S.R. to the Economic Committee.

(c) ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT AND REPORT OF THE INTERNATIONAL BANK

The Council at its seventh session also considered the question of economic development in connection with the report of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.²⁵

(2) Employment and Economic Stability

During its sixth session, the Economic and Social Council had before it a resolution unanimously approved on February 4, 1948, by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment at Havana (E/635). This resolution, inter alia, stated that the Conference considered that the studies which had been initiated dealing with the achievement and maintenance of full and productive employment should be advanced as rapidly as possible and that attention should be given forthwith to methods of ensuring that high levels of employment and economic activity should be maintained even when special factors of temporary duration prevailing in many countries had ceased to operate. The resolution suggested that the Council request Members and non-members of the United Nations to submit information on the action they were taking to achieve or maintain full employment and economic stability, and request the specialized agencies to indicate the assistance they were prepared to provide if a decline in employment and economic activity threatened.

The resolution further suggested that the Economic and Social Council initiate or encourage studies and recommend appropriate action in connection with international aspects of population problems as these relate to employment, production and demand.

The resolution finally suggested that the Council, in conjunction with appropriate agencies such as the International Labour Organisation and its Permanent Migration Committee, consider the problems of temporary or seasonal migration of workers.

The Council at its 149th plenary meeting referred the matter to its Economic Committee.

Two draft resolutions on the question were presented, one by Australia (E/AC.6/19) and one by France (E/AC.6/22), both based on the resolution recommended by the Conference. But, whereas the French proposal recommended that further studies on full employment should be carried out by the Economic and Employment Commission, the Australian proposal recommended they be carried out by the Secretary-General. This suggestion was incorporated in the French proposal, which was adopted by the Economic Committee by 16 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

The report of the Economic Committee (E/-717) was considered by the Council at its 161st plenary meeting on March 3. In the discussions on the matter, the U.S.S.R. representative expressed opposition to referring the relevant section of the resolution to the International Labour Organisation without giving that Organisation any specific directives, and proposed that the entire Havana Conference resolution should be referred for preliminary consideration to the Economic and Employment Commission. In the opinion of the U.S.S.R. representative, the Economic and Employment Commission should consider possible courses of action and indicate the measure of agreement, and only then should the matter be referred to a specialized agency. The representative of the Byelorussian S.S.R. supported the U.S.S.R. proposal.

The representatives of Peru, Chile, France, United States, Australia, New Zealand and United Kingdom, however, felt that the matter had been considered of sufficient urgency to warrant the supplementary action provided for in the resolution. They pointed out that the last part of the resolution concerning migration and population problems did not fall within the terms of reference of the Economic and Employment Commission, that the Economic and Employment Commission was not being by-passed and that it was logical to refer problems that came within ILO's terms of reference to the Organisation.

The Council rejected the U.S.S.R. proposal by 14 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, and adopted the draft resolution contained in the report of the Economic Committee by 15 votes, with 2 abstentions.

The Council in this resolution (104(VI)) endorsed the opinion of the Conference concerning the need for advancement of the studies on full employment and requested the Economic and Employment Commission to expedite the studies provided for in the Council's resolution 26 (IV) of March 28, 1947, taking into account the passage in the Conference's resolution dealing with these problems. It requested the Secretary-General: to obtain information from Members and, where practicable, from non-members, on the action they were taking to achieve or maintain full employment; to obtain from the appropriate specialized agencies reports on plans they had prepared and resources they had available to assist Members of the agencies to prevent a decline in employment and economic activity; and to prepare an analytical report as soon as possible. The Council transmitted the sections of the Havana Conference's resolution dealing with population and migration problems to the International Labour Organisation and the Social and Population Commissions, inviting them to take these sections into account in the action they were taking on these questions.

During its seventh session, the Economic and Social Council took no specific action with respect to employment and economic stability. Its discussion in that field was based on part VIII of the report of the Economic and Employment Commission (E/790), which dealt with this problem but made no recommendations which required the Council's action. The Commission's report in this field was based on the report of the first two sessions of its Sub-Commission on Employment and Economic Stability (E/CN.1/55). Most of this report was devoted to the subject of inflation, and the Commission noted that in view of the economic conditions prevailing in a number of countries "it was not inappropriate for the sub-commission to devote most of its first report to the subject of inflation". Certain members of the Council expressed appreciation of the report of the Sub-Commission on Employment and Economic Stability and thought that more attention should have been given to it by the Economic and Employment Commission.

(3) Organization and Terms of Reference

At its fifth session, the Council adopted resolution 72 (V), requesting the Economic and Employment Commission "to examine and report to the Council upon the general questions involved in the creation of regional economic commissions as a means for the promotion of the aims and objectives of the United Nations". At its sixth session, the Council, in resolution 108 (VI), further added that it desired that the examination of these questions should be made at a stage when the Commission "would have at its disposal more experience than at present of the activities of the regional commissions to guide its deliberations."²⁶ Accordingly the Commission at its third session postponed consideration of these problems to a later session.

In conjunction with the Commission's discussions of the reports and future work of its Sub-Commissions and of its own future work, it pointed to the need for a review of the Commission's organizational structure and relationship to other commissions of the Council. For this purpose the Commission established a Committee on Organization consisting of the members of the Commission from Brazil, Byelorussian S.S.R., Canada, China, France, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States. This Committee was requested to report to the fourth session of the Commission any suggestions it might have concerning the future organization and terms of reference of the Commission and its two Sub-Commissions. The Commission's Committee on Organization met once during the third session of the Commission and, in order to avoid any additional expenditures for the United Nations, it was instructed to carry on its work between the third and fourth sessions of the Commission by correspondence. The members of the Commission who were not on the Committee were urged to communicate their views to the Secretariat so that they might be circulated to the members of the Committee.

At its seventh session the Council discussed the question. Certain members expressed the view that the difficulties and shortcomings of the Commission were due to the fact that circumstances had changed since its terms of reference had been decided upon—for example, under-employment and deflation had not proved to be the important problems they were then thought. Many of the tasks assigned to the Commission had been given to other organizations, such as the regional economic commissions, the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Some representatives thought that the Council should wait before considering revision of the Commission's terms of reference to see, for example, what part would be played by the International Trade Organization. A few representatives felt that the matter was urgent. Other representatives felt that to discuss the whole question of the Commission's terms of reference would be side-stepping the real issues involved, and that it was more important for the Commission to consider substantive problems. After considering a French draft resolution (E/AC.6/W.10/Rev.1) and an Australian draft resolution (E/AC.6/33), with Canadian amendments (E/AC.6/W.12) to the Australian draft resolution, the Economic Committee at its 28th meeting adopted, by 13 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, a compromise resolution which was approved by the Council at its 217th plenary meeting on August 26, 1948, by 15 votes to 2, with 1 abstention. In this resolution (139 (VII) C) the Council noted the arrangements made by the Commission, and stated further:

"Recognizing the interest of all Members in this problem, and the urgency of ensuring that the purposes for which the Economic and Employment Commission was established are effectively fulfilled,

"Decides that the question of the most effective way to fulfil the purposes for which the Economic and Employment Commission was established, including the future and the terms of reference of the Commission and its Sub-Commissions, be considered by the Council at a future session; and accordingly Invites all Members of the United Nations to communicate to the Secretary-General any views which they may wish to express on this question, for circulation to the members of the Council and to the Committee on Organization of the Economic and Employment Commission, for consideration before the ninth session of the Council."

3. United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment

On July 14, 1947, the Preparatory Committee of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment, established by the Economic and Social Council during its first session,²⁷ submitted an interim report (E/469) to the Economic and Social Council. The report, which the Council considered at its fifth session, contained three recommendations, bearing on (1) the agenda of the proposed Conference on Trade and Employment, (2) the date and place of that Conference and (3) the question of inviting non-members of the United Nations to the Conference.

Concerning (1), the Preparatory Committee recommended that the Conference should adopt as the principal item of its agenda the draft Charter for an International Trade Organization (ITO) prepared by the Committee, and that it should be guided in its work by the following chapter headings, taken from the draft Charter:

"Employment and Economic Activity"
 "Economic Development"
 "General Commercial Policy"
 "Restrictive Business Practices"
 "Inter-Governmental Commodity Agreements"

According to the recommendation of the Committee, draft Charter provisions relating to organization, membership and other miscellaneous matters should also form a part of the Conference agenda.

As for (2), the Committee recommended that the Conference should be held in Havana, Cuba, in view of the invitation extended by the Cuban Government, and that it should begin on November 21, 1947.

In connection with (3), the Preparatory Committee recommended that invitations to participate in the Conference be extended not only to Members of the United Nations, but also to the following countries: Albania, Austria, Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Portugal, Roumania, Switzerland, Transjordan and Yemen.

Furthermore, the Committee suggested that the Economic and Social Council should make provision for the attendance of persons qualified to represent the appropriate control authorities in Germany, Japan and Korea.

The Preparatory Committee also drew the Council's attention to the fact that a number of territories under the sovereignty of a Member of the United Nations—the Committee specifically mentioned Burma, Ceylon and Southern Rhodesia—were self-governing in matters provided for by the draft Charter for an ITO. The Committee therefore recommended that they be invited to participate in the work of the Conference.

The Economic and Social Council discussed these recommendations at its 96th and 97th meetings on July 28, and its 100th meeting on July 31st, its 102nd meeting on August 1 and its 119th meeting on August 16, 1947.

There was little divergency of view regarding either the proposed agenda or the date and place of the Conference. Without objection, the Council, at its 97th meeting on July 28, adopted two resolutions (62(V)), one approving the Preparatory Committee's recommendation concerning the Conference agenda, the other approving the Committee's proposal concerning the time and place of the Conference. Council members expressed their appreciation of the offer of the Cuban Government to provide conference facilities and the additional financial expenditure which might be caused by holding the Conference in Havana rather than at an established United Nations office.

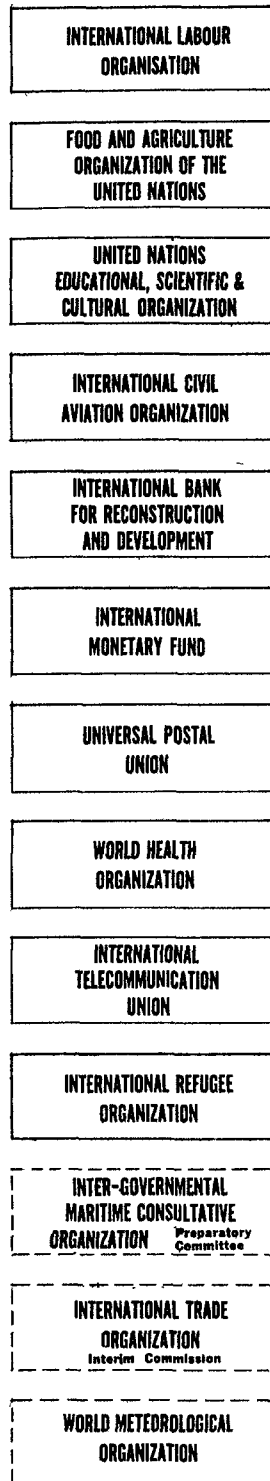

The representative of the U.S.S.R. declared that since his Government had not participated in the work of the Preparatory Committee (on the ground that the effort to establish an ITO was premature), he would abstain from the Council's discussion of the Committee's interim report and from the voting thereon.

there was general agreement with the specific list suggested by the Preparatory Committee. The name of Pakistan was added to that list, Pakistan at that time (July 1947) not being a Member of the organization.

There was, however, some divergence of opinion as to whether full voting rights should be extended to all states invited to participate in the Conference, some representatives, including those of India and the United Kingdom, being in favor of this procedure and others, including the representatives of Canada, Norway and the United States, being opposed to it. By a vote of 8 to 4, with 6 abstentions, the Council decided at its 102nd meeting to grant voting rights only to Members of the United Nations attending the Havana Conference.

The Council further resolved unanimously (resolution 62 (V)): (a) that the Allied Control Authorities in Germany, Japan and Korea be invited to send qualified representatives to the Conference in a consultative capacity; (b) that Burma, Ceylon and Southern Rhodesia, possessing "full autonomy in the conduct of their external commercial relations", should be invited to attend; and (c) that invitations to be represented at the Conference should also be sent to the specialized agencies and other appropriate inter-governmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in category A.

Opinion was also divided in the Council with respect to an Indian motion (E/504) to invite the Indonesian Republic to participate in the Conference. The proposal was rejected in the Council's Economic Committee by a vote of 4 to 1, with 13 abstentions, but accepted by the Council in plenary meeting on August 1, 1947, by a vote of 6 to 4, with 8 abstentions. On the matter being raised again by the Netherlands representative, the Acting President ruled that the question could not be re-opened. The Republic of Indonesia was accordingly invited to attend the Conference.

At its seventh session (195th meeting, on August 11, 1948) the Economic and Social Council considered the report (E/807) of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment which had been held at Havana from November 21, 1947 to March 24, 1948.²⁸ The report advised the Economic and Social Council that the Conference had completed a draft Charter for an International Trade Organization, to be submitted for appropriate action to the governments represented at the Havana Conference. The Havana Conference also established an Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization, pending action on the Charter by governments.

Praising the work of the Havana Conference, the representative of the United States held that no action was required by the Council on the report of the Secretary-General. The substance of the Havana Charter was of greatest interest, he declared, but since it was at the time under consideration by various governments, there was no need for the Council to examine the Havana Charter. He therefore proposed a draft resolution (E/952) that the Council note the report with satisfaction.

The Havana Charter was criticized by the representatives of the U.S.S.R. and Poland as affording protection to economically strong countries to the detriment of economically weak and under-developed countries. It was welcomed as a step in advance by the representatives of the United States, Brazil, Canada, Australia, Netherlands, Turkey, United Kingdom, Chile and Venezuela, though certain representatives were critical of individual parts of the Charter.

The United States draft resolution was adopted at its 195th meeting by the Council by a vote of 15 to 3. The resolution (142(VII)) as adopted reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Notes with satisfaction the report by the Secretary-General on the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment."

4. Economic Commissions

a. ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR EUROPE

The Economic Commission for Europe was established by the Economic and Social Council on March 28, 1947 (resolution 36(IV)). It held its first session from May 2 to 15, 1947,²⁹ its second session from July 5 to 16, 1947, and its third session from April 26 to May 8, 1948. The three sessions were held at Geneva. The reports of the first and second sessions were considered at the fifth session of the Council, in July-August 1947, and the report of the third session at the Council's seventh session, in July-August 1948.

(1) Committee Structure of the Commission

At the second and third sessions the Commission elaborated its committee structure, and various of its subsidiary organs themselves established working parties and ad hoc groups.

(2) Principal Activities of the Subsidiary Bodies of the Commission

The report of the first and second sessions of the Commission (E/451), the report of the Commission to the seventh session of the Economic and Social Council (E/791) and the interim report of the Commission (E/1074) contain a full account of the activities of the Commission and its subsidiary bodies from June 30, 1947, to September 21, 1948. The following were some of the activities.

(a) COAL COMMITTEE

The Coal Committee, established at the Commission's second session, has continued some of the functions performed by the European Coal Organization, and, in particular, has made regular recommendations on the allocations of solid fuels to European importing countries. Through subsidiary bodies, the Coal Committee has also dealt with questions concerning mining equipment, pitwood and statistical information.

At its fourth session in August 1948, after two subsidiary bodies, the Allocations Working Party and the Allocations Sub-Committee, had worked on the details of a new allocations procedure, the Coal Committee adopted a resolution in which it accepted European self-sufficiency in coal as the aim of its work and established a new basis for the recommendation of allocations.

The Coal Committee also agreed, at the request of the Steel Committee, to undertake a detailed analysis of the consumption of coking coals. This study has as its object the provision of the maximum quantities of coking coals for cokeries, and thus the greatest possible production of metallurgical coke.

The Allocations Sub-Committee at its second session in January 1948 made recommendations concerning the allocations of metallurgical coke from Germany for the second quarter of 1948, allocations of domestic coke for Sweden and supplementary allocations of coal to Belgium and Italy for extra nitrogen. At its third and fourth sessions in May and August 1948, it recommended the allocation of the supplies of solid fuel declared available for the third and fourth quarters of 1948.

The Allocations Working Party met at frequent intervals to consider new methods of allocation which would be appropriate to existing conditions and which would take account realistically of the need to distribute supplies not in terms of "coal" but in terms of particular qualities of solid fuels, ³⁰ A permanent ECE Committee on Agricultural Problems had been recommended for approval by the Commission. Meanwhile the Executive Secretary was authorized to convene meetings on urgent agricultural problems. The FAO and ECE Secretariats co-operate in research and servicing meetings.

³¹ A permanent ECE Committee on the Development of Trade had been recommended for approval by the Commission.

³² Meetings to be convened as necessary.

for which both the demand and the level of supplies varies. A new allocations procedure was worked out and was approved by the Allocations Sub-Committee and by the Coal Committee at its fourth session.

At the third session allocations of ten different qualities of solid fuels were recommended for the first time by the Allocations Sub-Committee, including metallurgical coke, domestic coke, foundry coke and coking fines. At the third session also, no allocation from the United States was recommended; instead the United States representative was informed of the extent of European countries' deficits in each of the qualities for which allocations had been recommended, the object being to ensure that European requirements are first met from European supplies to the maximum extent possible before countries have recourse to supplies from extra European sources. At the third session a formula was used for the first time for allocating the "fluid availability" of metallurgical coke to steel-producing countries.

At its fourth session the Allocations Sub-Committee decided that a study should be made of the methods by which the complete and efficient utilization of European fuel supplies could best be achieved.

On the recommendation of its Production Sub-Committee, the Coal Committee decided that the attention of governments and international organizations, where appropriate, should be drawn to the necessity of acting to increase export availabilities of mining equipment, taking into account the legitimate home requirements of the exporting countries, to provide adequate funds for the purchase of mining equipment and to facilitate the flow of mining supplies. A paper was prepared by the Secretariat giving a detailed technical description of the items of mining equipment required by European coal producers for 1948 and 1949.

The Pitwood Working Party reviewed the requirements and availabilities of different countries and recommended allocations for 1948. It was noted that the availabilities of Swedish pitwood might be increased as a result of the extra coke allocations recommended for that country.

Another subsidiary group, the Briquetting Pitch Working Party, at its third session in July 1948, after reviewing the past and existing situation as regards briquetting pitch and the quantities available for export in the current shipping season, agreed, in view of the increase of European supplies, that no allocations of briquetting pitch should be made for the time being, on the understanding that if difficulties arose and any country did not find the situation satisfactory, the question of allocation should be reconsidered.

(b) ELECTRIC POWER COMMITTEE

The Electric Power Committee, established at the Commission's second session, initiated and carried out studies on the best means of effecting a co-ordinated development of European power resources, kept the problem of the shortage of power equipment under constant review and facilitated the negotiation of international agreements for the supply and exchange of electrical energy.

Notably, agreements for the exchange of electric energy were reached between Austria, Czechoslovakia and Poland; and between the Occupation Authorities in Germany and Austria, Belgium and Switzerland respectively. Other agreements were still under discussion at the end of the period under review here.

Investigations in connection with the standardization of electric power equipment were undertaken in close collaboration with the Electrical Division of the International Standards Organization, whose members include both manufacturers and users of equipment. As a result of these investigations, recommendations relating to turbo-alternators were forwarded to the International Standards Organization. These recommendations were to the effect that future generator capacities of 50 and 100 m.w. should be adopted for single-shaft condensing units of 3000 r.p.m. without reheating.

In addition to reviewing the situation, the Electric Power Committee began preparatory work towards the co-ordinated development of European power resources. This involved a survey of present working capacity, capacity under construction and capacity planned or potential as set against probable requirements for electric energy.

(c) INDUSTRY AND MATERIALS COMMITTEE

The Industry and Materials Committee, established at the second session of the Commission, was empowered to initiate studies and make recommendations on the means whereby the European production of certain scarce commodities and equipment might be increased, their utilization improved and further economy in their consumption achieved. At its first session in November 1947 it set up Sub-Committees on Steel and Manpower. The Commission at its third session decided to give full committee status to these two Sub-Committees.

At its second session in June 1948 the Committee reviewed the work of its subsidiary bodies, terminating the existence of those, including its Sub-Committee on Alkalis, whose work had been completed.

The Industry and Materials Committee and its various subsidiary bodies concerned themselves with problems in the field of fertilizers, alkalis, ball-bearings, conveyor belts, refractory materials and ceramic insulators. While much of the work in these fields was of necessity concentrated on the collection and exchange of information, the work of some of the subsidiary bodies also had some effect in increasing production, notably in the case of fertilizers and silica bricks.

The work of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies resulted also in an increase in production of bearings.

It was found on the basis of production figures for the third and fourth quarters of 1947 that the increased nitrogen production resulting from special coal allocations amounted to 18,000 tons, which corresponded to a potential increase in wheat production of 220,000 tons.

In connection with transport equipment, the Committee noted that a great number of road vehicles were immobilized through lack of spare parts and components. It appeared that a portion of the required spare parts and components might be available from surplus stocks left on the Continent by the Allied Forces, and that the balance required might be produced in Europe. As a result of investigations carried out by the Executive Secretary of the Commission, an agreement in principle was reached concerning the procurement of spare parts in Italy by Czechoslovakia, Poland, Roumania and Yugoslavia.

Agreement was reached on certain measures designed to relieve the shortage of manpower, equipment and transport necessary for the increased production of silica bricks and quartzite.

The Housing Sub-Committee (until the third session of the Commission, the Housing Panel) reviewed housing needs and programs, requirements for building materials and measures to economize the use of scarce materials. It established subsidiary bodies to study, among other things, the requirements and availabilities of building materials, equipment and skills, and the possibilities of increasing building production through mass-production methods. Agreement was reached on methods of surveying requirements and availabilities of building materials, equipment and manpower. Agreement was also reached on the necessity of applying to the building industry the same methods of mass-production as used in other industries. It was further agreed that the introduction of mass-production methods in the building industry should be accompanied by the development of scientific and technical research, co-ordinated with the building industry through national research centres, which would form the bases for international co-operation in scientific and technical fields.

(d) INLAND TRANSPORT COMMITTEE

The Inland Transport Committee was established at the second session of the Commission to act in a consultative and advisory capacity in the field of inland transport in Europe and was charged with completing the essential tasks of the European Central Inland Transport Organization (ECITO) upon the dissolution of that organization. (The Commission had expressed the opinion that ECITO should be liquidated not later than September 25, 1947.)

The Committee decided that as a first step a review should be made of the various bottlenecks and of possible improvements which might result from the repair, maintenance and renewal of European transport equipment.

A subsidiary body of the Committee (Working Party on Transport by Rail), for example, examined the problems associated with the restoration of the "Regulations on the Reciprocal Use of Wagons in International Traffic" ("R.I.V."). Recommendations were made, and subsequently adopted by the Committee at its second session, on the general resumption of these regulations as from April 1, 1948. These proposals contained suggestions to meet the difficulties arising from the dispersal of railway rolling stock over a number of different countries. As a result of a fairly general acceptance of R.I.V. regulations, the supply of wagons (i.e., freight cars) was considerably eased and international traffic greatly facilitated.

A substantial achievement was the lifting of restrictions on freedom of the road. The Governments of Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Switzerland, Sweden and United Kingdom, and also the Governments of France, United Kingdom and United States with regard to their respective zones in Germany, undertook to grant or maintain for a year as from January 1, 1948, freedom of transit for all road transport of goods. Czechoslovakia accepted the same regime for six months. Several governments were also prepared to grant or maintain for the same period freedom for all other international transport of goods by road and for tourist traffic.

At conferences held by a subsidiary body (BIDAC—i.e., Bids Acceptance Committee), programs of traffic in transit through the occupied zones were accepted, differences relating to the movement of coal were removed and current problems concerning the transport of perishable goods were dealt with.

Progress was achieved with regard to inland waterway transport on certain waterways as the result of an agreement between Belgium and the Netherlands on the one hand and the United States and United Kingdom Zones of Germany on the other. This agreement aimed at facilitating a fair distribution of traffic between Belgian, Netherlands and German seaports, thus leading to a more rational use of port facilities.

(e) MANPOWER COMMITTEE

The Manpower Committee (until the third session of the Commission, a sub-committee of the Industrial and Materials Committee) formulated a number of recommendations, including several dealing with manpower statistics, which were forwarded to the International Labour Organisation and accepted by the Governing Body of that Organisation in March 1948. In addition, arrangements were suggested for the exchange of information and experience on questions related to training and retraining. The attention of the ILO was drawn to the need for the establishment of minimum standards governing migration in Europe.³⁴

(f) STEEL COMMITTEE

The Steel Committee (until the third session of the Commission, a sub-committee of the Industrial and Materials Committee) set up working parties on coke, raw materials and shortages of equipment for steel production.

The computations made by its Coke Working Party of the imports of coke and coking fines required by steel-producing countries to maximize steel production showed a heavy deficit, which could only be met by increased imports of metallurgical fuel, particularly from the Ruhr. It was agreed that imports of metallurgical coke should, for this reason, be maximized even at the expense of other quantities of fuel.

The Coal Allocations Sub-Committee subsequently accepted the recommendations of the Steel Committee for the distribution of metallurgical fuel and made recommendations for the allocation of coal in the second quarter of 1948 which were to make possible an increase in steel production for that quarter amounting to about 400,000 tons.

The Working Party on Raw Materials found that scrap shortage was a severe limiting factor in steel production which could be made good only by raising scrap collection in Europe. The governments concerned each agreed to make a detailed individual study of how scrap collection could best be increased.

At its second session in May 1948 the Steel Committee set up a panel of experts to examine the question. It also supported a recommendation of the United States Scrap Mission that the supplies of scrap in Germany be exploited to the maximum for the benefit of countries in need of scrap. An analysis of trends in Europe's supply and consumption of scrap was also prepared by the Secretariat (E/ECE/84) and submitted to the Committee's third session in September 1948.

As regards shortages of equipment, the Executive Secretary was asked to prepare, in collaboration with the governments concerned, a statement of outstanding requirements for new equipment over which difficulty was being experienced, and governments of countries producing such equipment were requested to assist their industries by giving the necessary priorities for raw materials. At its second session the Committee requested representatives from exporting countries to stress with their governments the importance of early deliveries of existing orders and to suggest measures to ease the financing of equipment purchases.

(g) TIMBER COMMITTEE

The Timber Committee (until the third session of the Economic Commission for Europe, a sub-committee of the Industry and Materials Committee) dealt with matters of common concern to FAO and ECE, and was serviced by a joint secretariat of the two organizations.

At the first session in October 1947 the Sub-Committee reviewed the softwood lumber production programs of European countries for the years 1948-1955. Prior to the meeting the European gap for 1948 had been estimated at 2.1 million standards. (A standard is 4.67 cubic meters of sawn timber.) The forecast of figures arising from these discussions showed that the principal European lumber-producing and -exporting countries, given certain extra facilities, could increase output above 1947 production by more than 400,000 standards, and thereby reduce the gap by as much as one fifth.

In view of the fact that accessible forests were insufficient to cover present and prospective requirements, the Executive Secretary of ECE was requested to arrange with FAO, and in consultation with all interested governments, for a study of the potentialities of hitherto unexploited forest resources. The Executive Secretary was further requested to bring to the attention of the International Bank, the Fund and any other interested international agencies the impact of currency difficulties on Europe's timber situation.

The second session of the Timber Sub-Committee was held in January 1948. A further review of the European timber position and outlook again revealed that currency difficulties would make it impossible for most importing countries to cover their essential requirements even if sufficient timber were available. As a result, effective import demand was found to be only 2.59 million standards, compared with import requirements totalling some 4.27 million standards. It was further found that under prevailing conditions exports available to European importing countries would reach 2.38 million standards in 1948 and 2.32 million standards in 1949.

In order to ensure a balanced distribution of available export supplies, an informal agreement was therefore reached by importing countries not to exceed specific purchasing ceilings for a period up to July 1, 1948, when the situation would again be reviewed.

The Timber Committee also considered the possibilities of increasing the timber available for export by facilitating the purchase of timber equipment from certain equipment-exporting countries by means of a loan from the International Bank.

It made recommendations regarding reforestation and the use of hardwood for mining purposes.

(h) Ad hoc COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL PROBLEMS OF COMMON CONCERN TO ECE AND FAO

The ad hoc Committee on Agricultural Problems of Common Concern to ECE and FAO at its first session in September 1948 decided to submit to governments a proposal presented jointly by the Director-General of FAO and the Executive Secretary of ECE to establish within the framework of ECE a Committee on Agricultural Problems serviced by the secretariats of the two organizations, and set up two ad hoc working parties to consider trade possibilities and technical agricultural problems.

(i) Ad hoc COMMITTEE ON INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT AND TRADE

(The first session of the ad hoc Committee on Industrial Development and Trade was not held within the period covered by the present Yearbook.)

(3) Relations with the Allied Control Authorities in Germany

At its second session the Commission, after some discussion, instructed the Executive Secretary to continue consultations with the Allied Control

Council regarding the establishment of liaison in Berlin and requested him to consult with the Control Authorities concerned regarding organizational arrangements necessitated by the transfer to the Commission of the essential activities of the European Coal Organization (ECO), the European Central Inland Transport Organization (ECITO) and the Emergency Economic Committee for Europe (EECE) (which, it had been agreed, the Commission should assume).

Accordingly, pending action by the Allied Control Council, provisional arrangements were made for the carrying out of functions previously exercised by these three organizations in respect of Germany, and an ECE liaison office was established on a provisional basis in Frankfurt.

At its third session the Commission discussed a report by the Executive Secretary on the background and existing situation regarding relations with the Allied Control Council in Germany, and requested him to renew consultations with the Allied Control Council with a view to the establishment of a main liaison office in Berlin and the termination of the Frankfurt office as an independent unit. All liaison would then be subordinated to the Berlin office (E/791).

(4) Discussions by the Council of the Commission's Reports

(a) REPORT OF THE FIRST TWO SESSIONS

The report of the first two sessions of the Economic Commission for Europe was presented to the Council's fifth session, and discussed by it at the 97th and 98th plenary meetings on July 28 and 29, 1947.

Differences of opinion were expressed on two points.

The U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives criticized the resolution of the Commission regarding consultation with the Allied Control Authorities, maintaining that the Allied Control Council alone was competent to deal with the German problem and that in matters affecting it the Economic Commission for Europe should approach the quadripartite group as a unit and not its separate elements.

The United Kingdom, United States and French representatives, on the other hand, supported the Commission's resolution, maintaining that the Commission should have adequate liaison arrangements with the Control Authorities and should be able to make representations and ask for information from them.

A U.S.S.R. proposal to reject the Commission's resolution was defeated at the Council's 98th plenary ary meeting on July 29 by 10 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions. The Council, however, agreed to record the objections of the Byelorussian S.S.R. and the U.S.S.R. in a footnote to its resolution.

The Byelorussian and U.S.S.R. representatives also opposed giving the Commission's Inland Transport Committee competence to make recommendations to the regimes of international inland waterways.

The Council, at its 98th plenary meeting, adopted without objection resolution 68 (V) as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Notes the report of the first and second sessions of the Economic Commission for Europe,

"Expresses appreciation of the work of the Commission, approving in particular the arrangements made by the Commission for the maintenance of the essential work performed by the Emergency Economic Committee for Europe, the European Central Inland Transport Organization and the European Coal Organization, and

"Draws to the attention of the Commission the views expressed by the members of the Economic and Social Council concerning the report."

(b) INTERIM REPORT

The Economic and Social Council at its sixth session was presented with an interim report by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Europe (E/603). This report, prepared in accordance with instructions of the Commission, incorporated comments and suggestions received from members of the Commission, but had not been considered by the Commission as a whole. The Council accordingly, at its 134th plenary meeting on February 10, decided to take no action on the report, other than taking note of it.

(c) ANNUAL REPORT, JULY 1947—MAY 1948

The regular annual report (E/791), covering the activities of the Economic Commission for Europe from its second session in July 1947 to its third session in May 1948, was submitted to the seventh session of the Council. This report was discussed at the seventh session of the Economic and Social Council during the latter's 182nd to 185th plenary meetings from July 27 to 29 and at the 187th and 190th plenary meetings on July 31 and August 4.

Much of the debate was concerned with the question of the European Recovery Program ("Marshall Plan"), which was criticized by the representatives of the Byelorussian S.S.R., Poland and the U.S.S.R., and defended by other representatives, including those of Canada, Chile, Denmark, France, Netherlands, New Zealand, Turkey, United Kingdom and United States.

tion of the Commission's report was that of the relationship between the regional and functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council. The representatives of New Zealand and Canada felt that, generally speaking, functional commissions, such as the Economic and Employment Commission, were preferable to the regional commissions with their geographically limited scope. The representative of Canada thought it might be advisable, in the case of a regional commission, to differentiate between the administrative expenses, to be borne by the United Nations, and the executive and operational expenses, which, he suggested, might more appropriately be borne by the countries situated in the geographical area covered by the regional commission in question. While most participants in the debate did not comment upon this matter, the representative of Venezuela suggested that the proper function of a functional commission lay in the realm of formulating adequate theoretical principles whose translation into practice should form the proper concern of the regional commissions; both were eminently necessary. He opposed the Canadian suggestions regarding the budgets of regional commissions, saying their work was part of the total international effort and should logically be borne by the community of nations.

Two draft resolutions were before the Council in connection with the ECE report, one submitted by the representative of the U.S.S.R. (E/884), the other by the representative of France (E/885).

The U.S.S.R. proposal (E/884) set forth six principles for the guidance of ECE in its future work. These provided, inter alia: that ECE should promote intra-European trade and trade with non-European countries; that economic assistance to Europe should be granted within the framework of the United Nations; that discrimination in the sphere of foreign trade should cease; that the efforts of European countries should be directed towards the development of the basic branches of national industry most important to their economy; that ECE should assist European countries in the organization of cheap agricultural credit to farmers with a view to rehabilitating European agriculture and improving the food situation of the continent; and that the rehabilitation and development of European economy should be carried out so as to raise the standard of living of the masses. The draft resolution in its various paragraphs stated that the Marshall Plan had increased the already abnormal dependence of the Western European countries on the United States; these measures were designed to remove that dependence.

The Economic and Social Council, according to this U.S.S.R. draft resolution, would recommend that the Economic Commission for Europe should establish the necessary working bodies to study the questions involved in the above-mentioned principles, including committees to be established for the development of intra-European trade, for the maintenance and development of branches of vital national industries and for assistance in the development of agriculture in the European countries.

The U.S.S.R. proposal was supported by the representatives of Poland and the Byelorussian S.S.R. The proposal, as such, was opposed by the other Council members, a majority of whom announced that they would abstain from voting even for those of its parts which expressed unobjectionable principles, because of the entire context of the draft resolution and what they regarded as its unwarranted attack against the United States and the European Recovery Program.

The U.S.S.R. proposal was submitted to the vote at the Council's 185th meeting on July 29. Following the adoption of its individual parts in a sentence by sentence vote by majorities ranging from 3 to 0, with 14 abstentions, to 3 to 2, with 12 abstentions, the draft resolution as a whole was rejected by a vote of 14 to 3.

The French proposal (E/885) would have placed the Economic and Social Council on record as taking cognizance of the ECE report, as approving its terms, as noting with satisfaction that ECE had decided to undertake a study of and seek a solution for the problem of intra-European trade and the closely related problem of the development of under-industrialized European countries and, finally, as inviting the ECE to pursue this work realistically with a view to obtaining concrete results as soon as possible.

Amendments to this French draft resolution were proposed by the representatives of the United Kingdom (E/894), Poland (E/895) and the U.S.S.R. (E/903/Rev.1) aimed, in general, at making the proposal more explicit. The Council referred the original proposal and the amendments to a drafting group composed of the representatives of France, Poland, the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R., which reached unanimous agreement on a draft resolution (E/915) embodying the substance of all the amendments.

The draft resolution proposed by the drafting group was unanimously adopted by the Council at its 190th plenary meeting on August 4. The resolution (143(VII)) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having taken cognizance of the report of the Economic Commission for Europe,

"Approves its terms;

"Notes with satisfaction that the Economic Commission for Europe at its third session adopted unanimously a resolution on the setting up of an ad hoc Committee on industrial development and foreign trade, which provides for consideration of questions as to the manner in which the Economic Commission for Europe can promote the reconstruction and development of industry and foreign trade of the European countries;

"Expresses the hope that this work will lead to an increase of industrial and agricultural production in Europe, particularly in those of the countries concerned in which natural resources and manpower reserves are as yet not fully utilized, and result in an expansion of intra-European trade such as to facilitate increased and better balanced trade with the other continents;

"Authorizes the Economic Commission for Europe to set up, within the Commission, such body or bodies as it may consider necessary to initiate and carry out work in the two fields mentioned;

"Invites the Economic Commission for Europe:

"(a) To approach whenever necessary the various specialized agencies of the United Nations with requests for assistance in achieving such aims as may be formulated in the course of this work;

"(b) To pursue this work realistically with a view to obtaining concrete results as soon as possible and to submit to the next session of the Council a progress report on its activities in the field of industrial development and trade, including a description of any technical means contemplated to foster the development of intra-European trade;

"(c) To submit to the Council at an early date a factual analysis of the possibilities of economic reconstruction, through the development of the under-industrialized countries and an expansion of trade between the countries of Europe."

In connection with its consideration of the report of the second session of the Transport and Communications Commission, the Council, at its seventh session, also adopted resolution 147(VII)-B, which, in part, instructed the Secretary-General to request the Economic Commission for Europe to complete the draft text prepared by its Inland Transport Committee dealing with a convention on road and motor transport and to forward it to the Secretary-General as soon as practicable so that he might be in a position to make the necessary arrangements for the convening of a world-wide conference of governments not later than August 1949 with the object of concluding a new world-wide convention.

b. ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR ASIA AND THE FAR EAST

The Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) had been established by the Eco-conomic and Social Council during the latter's fourth session, on March 28, 1947 (resolution 37(IV)).³⁵ It held three sessions up to the end of the period presently under review, as follows:

First Session Shanghai, China June 16-25, 1947
Second Session Baguio, Philippines Nov. 24-Dec. 6, 1947
Third Session Ootacamund, India June 1-12, 1948

Pursuant to a request from the Economic and Social Council, ECAFE, at its first session, appointed a Committee of the Whole to consider the questions of the Commission's geographical scope and membership and to suggest modifications, if need be, of ECAFE's original terms of reference. The Committee of the Whole met during the interval between ECAFE's first two sessions at Lake Success from July 10 to 17, 1947.

(1) Council Approves Preparatory Arrangements Made at first ECAFE Session

The report of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East concerning the first session of that body (E/452) was discussed at the 100th and 101st plenary meetings of the Economic and Social Council on July 31, 1947. The general support for this first phase of ECAFE's work was reflected in the unanimous adoption, following a brief debate, of a draft resolution submitted by the representative of China and amended by the Council's Acting President by the addition of a phrase calling ECAFE's attention to the views expressed during the Council's consideration of the Commission's report. Members of the Council participating in the debate generally praised ECAFE's preliminary work and the program it had mapped for the future, emphasizing that the work of this regional Commission must be guided by the interests of Asia and the Far East, i.e., the region it served.

The resolution (69(V)) adopted unanimously by the Council at its 101st meeting reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Notes the report of the first session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East,

"Expresses its appreciation of the work of the Commission,

"Approves the preparatory arrangements made by the Commission for the carrying out of its functions, and

"Draws to the attention of the Commission the views expressed concerning the report by the members of the Economic and Social Council."

(2) Council Action concerning Report of ECAFE Committee of the Whole

The report (E/491) of the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East was discussed at the 100th, 101st and 106th plenary meetings of the Economic and Social Council, on July 31 and August 5, 1947. Discussion centred largely around the question of ECAFE membership and geographical scope.

To meet the case of countries and territories in Asia and the Far East not responsible for the conduct of their international relations, the Committee of the Whole had evolved the concept of "associate membership". The representatives of such "Associate Members" should, the Committee of the Whole proposed, be permitted to participate, without voting rights (but with full eligibility for offices in all ECAFE subsidiary organs), in ECAFE deliberations; applications for associate membership were to be made by the Metropolitan Power responsible for the international relations of the country or territory in question. The list of countries or territories eligible, upon application by the Metropolitan Powers concerned, for ECAFE associate membership, as recommended by the Committee of the Whole, was as follows: North Borneo, Brunei and Sarawak, Burma, Ceylon, the Indo-Chinese Federation, Hong Kong, the Malayan Union and Singapore, and the Netherlands Indies. The Committee of the Whole further recommended that should any of these countries or territories become responsible for its own international relations, such a country or territory "may be admitted as an Associate Member of the Commission on itself presenting its application to the Commission".

In general, the concept of associate membership was not questioned during the Council's discussion of the report of the Committee of the Whole, although the representative of India indicated his preference for granting full voting rights to all Asian countries, whether or not Members of the United Nations. There was, however, a difference of opinion regarding how application for associate membership should be made. Several representatives, including those of India and the U.S.S.R., held that it would be preferable to authorize the Commission to consider associate membership applications submitted by the countries and territories involved rather than limit the Commission to consider such applications only if submitted by the Metropolitan Power concerned. On the other hand, a majority of Council members declared that the Metropolitan Powers could be the only logical sponsors of applications for associate membership, warning that embarrassing situations might develop if the Metropolitan Powers were by-passed in this connection.

that ECAFE membership should be open to any United Nations Member in Asia and the Far East, with the exception of Turkey, because the latter was already represented on the Economic Commission for Europe. Other Council members, however, observed that Turkey was located in both Europe and Asia and was therefore entitled to membership both on the ECE and the ECAFE, if it so desired.

A U.S.S.R. amendment (E/512), to the effect that all United Nations Member countries in Asia and the Far East, except Turkey, should be eligible for membership in the Commission and that non-members in the area should be admitted to participate without voting rights in the Commission's discussions, was rejected at the Council's 106th plenary meeting on August 5, 1947, by 9 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions. The Council then adopted by 14 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, the draft resolution (E/524) which had been prepared by its Economic Committee on the basis of the proposals made by the ECAFE Committee of the Whole.

In addition to the draft resolutions proposed by the Committee of the Whole, the Council formulated a resolution requesting ECAFE members responsible for the international relations of the countries and territories eligible for associate membership to forward applications to the Commission on their behalf.

The resolutions (69(V)) adopted by the Council read as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Resolves that the following be added to the terms of reference of the Commission as article 3a:

"3a (i) Any of the following territories, namely North Borneo, Brunei and Sarawak, Burma, Ceylon, the Indo-Chinese Federation, Hong Kong, the Malayan Union and Singapore, and the Netherlands Indies, or any part or group of such territories, may on presentation of its application to the Commission by the Member responsible for the international relations of such territory, part or group of territories be admitted by the Commission as an associate member of the Commission. If it has become responsible for its own international relations, such territory, part or group of territories may be admitted as an associate member of the Commission on itself presenting its application to the Commission.

"(ii) Representatives of associate members shall be entitled to participate without vote in all meetings of the Commission, whether sitting as Commission or as committee of the whole.

"(iii) Representatives of associate members shall be eligible to be appointed as members of any committee, or other subordinate body, which may be set up by the Commission and shall be eligible to hold office in such body.

"(iv) Any territory or part or group of territories mentioned in paragraph 3a (i) which is not a member or an associate member of the Commission may, with the concurrence of the Member responsible for its international relations, be invited by the Commission to participate in a consultative capacity in the consideration of any matter of particular concern to that territory, part or group of territories."

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note of the provisions of article 3a(i) of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East;

"Recognizing the necessity for ensuring complete co-operation between the Governments of the territories concerned, the Governments responsible for the conduct of international relations of the territories and the Commission,

"Requests members of the Commission concerned to forward such applications to the Commission."

"The Economic and Social Council

"Resolves that the following be added to the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East as set forth in the first part of the Council's resolution of 28 March 1947:

"1. The Commission is empowered to make recommendations on any matters within its competence directly to the Governments of members or associate members concerned, Governments admitted in a consultative capacity, and the specialized agencies concerned. The Commission shall submit for the Council's prior consideration any of its proposals for activities that would have important effects on the economy of the world as a whole.

"2. The Commission may after discussion with any specialized agency functioning in the same general field, and with the approval of the Council, establish such subsidiary bodies as it deems appropriate, for facilitating the carrying out of its responsibilities.

"3. The Commission shall submit to the Council once a year a full report on its activities and plans, including those of any subsidiary bodies, and shall make interim reports at each regular session of the Council.

"4. The Commission may consult with the representatives of the respective control authorities in Japan and in Korea and may be consulted by them for the purpose of mutual information and advice on matters concerning the economies of Japan and Korea respectively in relation to the rest of the economy of Asia and the Far East."

(3) Council Action on the Report of the Second ECAFE Session

The report (E/606) covering the second session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East was discussed by the Council at its 134th, 135th and 167th plenary meetings, on February 10 and March 8, 1948.

During the second ECAFE session Pakistan, having become a Member of the United Nations, had been present as a full member of the Commission, while Burma, Ceylon, Hong Kong, the Malayan Union and Singapore (all represented by the United Kingdom) and Cambodia and Laos (both represented by France) had been admitted as Associate Members. New Zealand had been represented by an observer, and its full membership in the Commission was unanimously recommended to the Council.

One of the most important parts of the report—and one that came in for much discussion in the Council—dealt with the proposed establishment of a Bureau of Flood Control, whose task it would be to combat and ultimately to prevent the destruction caused by the great rivers of Asia when in flood. The proposed Bureau would study this problem and acquaint the governments concerned with the results of its work.

The representative of China proposed (E/644, later revised in E/644/Rev.1) that the organization of the Bureau of Flood Control be studied by the Secretariat, the Secretariat recommendations to be considered at ECAFE's third session, which in turn should submit ECAFE's final recommendations to the Council for consideration at the latter's seventh session.

Several modifications of the Chinese proposal were suggested. Thus, the representative of the United States felt that it was perhaps premature to take it for granted that a semi-autonomous Bureau of Flood Control would have to be organized. Accordingly he proposed orally that ECAFE be requested to submit to the Council detailed proposals—not "concerning the organization" of the Bureau of Flood Control, although such proposals would be in order if ECAFE found that necessary, but rather "concerning the appropriate methods of dealing with the problems of flood control". This United States suggestion was accepted by the sponsor of the draft resolution.

The representative of the Netherlands felt that the Chinese suggestion to ask the Secretariat to submit the results of its studies to the third ECAFE session might not give the Secretariat sufficient time; he therefore suggested the omission of this time limit, but did not press his point.

The Chinese resolution also proposed that the Council approve the admission of New Zealand.

The revised Chinese draft resolution was approved by a vote of 17 to 0, with 1 abstention, at the 167th plenary meeting of the Council on March 8, 1948. The abstaining Council member—the representative of New Zealand—explained that he had abstained merely because he considered it improper to vote in his own cause, i.e., for the admission to ECAFE membership of his own country. He added that he was in complete agreement with the terms of the resolution adopted by the Council (105 (VI)), which reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the report of the first and second sessions of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East,

"Approves the admission of the Government of New Zealand as a member of the Commission;

"Takes note of the action taken by the Commission at its first and second sessions in furtherance of the purposes set forth in its terms of reference; and

"Requests that preliminary study be undertaken by the Secretary-General, in consultation with the specialized agencies concerned, of the recommendation that a bureau of flood control be established for Asia and the Far East, and that its results be submitted to the third session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East with a view to the preparation and submission to the seventh session of the Council by the Commission of proposals concerning the appropriate methods of dealing with the problems of flood control."

(4) Council Action on the Report of the Third ECAFE Session

The report (E/839) covering the third ECAFE session was considered at nine plenary meetings of the Economic and Social Council during the latter's seventh session (plenary meetings 186, 187, 188, 190, 192, 196, 200, 204, 206, on July 30 and 31 and August 2, 4, 7, 12, 16, 18 and 19).

(a) INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT OF ECAFE REGION

At its second session, ECAFE had established a Working Party on Industrial Development in the Commission's geographical region. This group submitted a preliminary report (E/CN.11/82) to ECAFE's third session, which authorized the Working Party (E/CN.11/114) to continue its studies of the economic and industrial development of the region, to co-opt additional members and to make detailed studies of the major aspects of economic and industrial development. It was in the first instance to study the following subjects: fuel and power, transport and transport equipment in relation to industry, fertilizers and agricultural requisites, basic materials including ores and metals, textiles, and heavy engineering industries.

The Council discussions at its seventh session concerning this subject matter centred round the problems of the development of industry, trade and agriculture in under-developed areas and the relation of foreign investment and credits to these problems. The question of the relation of the economy of Japan to economic development in the region with which ECAFE is concerned was also raised.

Two proposals, one by the U.S.S.R. (E/905/-Rev.2) and one by Chile (E/920), and a comprehensive Australian amendment (E/921) to the U.S.S.R. proposal were before the Council.

The U.S.S.R. proposal (E/905/Rev.2) would, inter alia, have the Council take into consideration that the restoration and development of the economy of countries of Asia and the Far East should be carried out in such a way as to promote conditions of stability and well-being based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and so promote the elimination of colonial or semi-colonial dependence. The Council was to recommend that: ECAFE should promote the development in these countries of their national industry, including various types of heavy industry, through mobilization of natural resources and by economic assistance from industrially-developed countries (such assistance not to be conditional on demands for privileges and to be within the framework of the United Nations); promote the development of trade between these countries and with countries of other regions, without discrimination; promote the development of agriculture by various means; increase the amount of capital and credit available from outside sources and make it available where most needed; and continue discussions of these questions in association with appropriate specialized agencies and examine the question of establishing appropriate committees within ECAFE.

The Chilean proposal (E/920), inter alia, would have the Council, after noting with satisfaction the resolutions adopted by the Commission providing for consideration of the way in which it could promote the reconstruction and development of industry and foreign trade of the countries in Asia and the Far East, express the hope that this study would lead to an increase of industrial and agricultural production in this area and authorize the Commission to set up such bodies as it considered necessary for this purpose. The proposal would have the Council invite ECAFE: to request assistance from specialized agencies; to submit to the Council's next session a progress report on its activities in the field of industrial development and trade; and to submit at an early date a factual analysis of the possibilities of economic reconstruction through the development of under-industrialized countries and an expansion of trade between countries in the region.

The Australian amendment (E/921), inter alia, proposed to delete from the U.S.S.R. proposal: the reference in the preamble to the elimination of colonial and semi-colonial dependence, certain particulars concerning the development of industry and agriculture, the reference to discrimination in the development of trade and the recommendations concerning the establishment of committees.

Sub-amendments to the Australian amendment were submitted by the representatives of France (E/922) and Chile (E/929), the former proposing certain drafting changes, the latter proposing, inter alia, the addition of a paragraph authorizing ECAFE to set up such subsidiary bodies within the Commission as it might deem necessary to implement the four objectives.

A drafting committee consisting of representatives of Australia, China, France, Poland and the U.S.S.R., established at the 190th meeting to attempt the production of an agreed draft, recommended a draft resolution (E/949) based largely on the Australian version of the U.S.S.R. proposal. U.S.S.R. amendments to the drafting committee's proposal, containing most of those parts of the original U.S.S.R. draft resolution which had failed to obtain a majority in the drafting committee, were rejected at the 204th plenary meeting of the Council on August 18 by separate votes ranging from 7 to 7, with 4 abstentions, to 13 to 3, with 2 abstentions. The U.S.S.R. representative then declared that, although dissatisfied with the proposal, he would vote for it since its weaknesses were less important than the wishes of the countries of Asia and the Far East.

The draft resolution was then adopted unanimously (144(VII)C). It reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the interim report of the third session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, and

"Taking into consideration that the restoration and development of the economy of the countries of Asia and the Far East should be carried out in such a manner as to promote conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations, based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples as set out in Articles 55 and 73 of the Charter,

"Notes with satisfaction the decisions of the third session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East on industrial development, trade promotion and agriculture;

"Recommends that the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East continue, in association with the appropriate specialized agencies, deliberations on these matters with a view to recommending policies and measures designed for the following purposes:

"1. To promote and co-ordinate the development of industry in the countries of Asia and the Far East based upon their national resources and needs and designed to raise standards of living in their own countries and regions and, through trade, in the rest of the world;

"2. To promote the development of trade between the countries of Asia and the Far East and also between these countries and the countries of other regions;

"3. To promote and co-ordinate the development of agriculture by means which will bring about greater, better, more efficient and diversified production, with special attention to the particular agrarian conditions in these countries;

"4. To increase the total amount of capital, credit, machinery, technical assistance and other resources available for the foregoing purposes from within and outside the region, and to make such capital, credit, machinery, technical assistance and other resources available, where they are most needed; and

"Recommends that the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East consider and keep under review the question of the establishment within the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, and the terms of reference, of appropriate bodies, including committees, that could promote the successful accomplishment of its tasks."

(b) FLOOD CONTROL

By resolution 105(VI) the Economic and Social Council had, at its sixth session, suggested that studies be undertaken by the Secretariat and submitted to ECAFE at the latter's third session regarding the problem of flood control of Asia's great rivers (see above). Such studies were undertaken, and ECAFE, at its third session, recommended the establishment of a Bureau of Flood Control (E/839, Annex C, p. 75).

ECAFE's recommendation was incorporated in a draft resolution proposed by the representative of China (E/893 and Add.1). The draft resolution provided for the establishment of a Bureau of Flood Control to be composed of not more than five experts with high technical qualifications. The experts would be appointed by the Secretary-General of the United Nations out of a panel of names submitted by Member Governments, except that one expert would be appointed by the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization on the latter's own initiative. The Bureau's Chairman would be appointed from among its expert members by the Secretary-General. The Bureau would be started in the first place with a minimum of three experts and would be responsible to ECAFE. The Chinese proposal further recommended that a progress report on plans of activities and of organization of the Bureau be submitted by ECAFE to the eighth session of the Council.

The Canadian representative also introduced a proposal (E/897 and Rev.1) on the same topic. He proposed that the Council instruct the Secretary-General: to promote studies and disseminate information to interested Member Governments in regard to flood control in the territories within the geographical scope of ECAFE; to appoint to the Secretariat staff adequate to perform these functions; to consult with FAO on flood control matters recognized as within FAO's particular competence, as well as with other specialized agencies; to arrange for the provision of expert advice and assistance, in the field of flood control, to Member Governments on request in conformity with the principles laid down in the General Assembly's resolution 52 (I)³⁶ and in the Council's own resolution 51(IV).³⁷ Such assistance was to include, inter alia, advice and assistance in the establishment or improvement of national organizations to deal with flood control; assistance in the form of special experts or teams of experts to advise national organizations in the solution of specific problems; and elaboration of plans to promote the training of specialists in matters of flood control by the utilization, where practicable, of existing national laboratories and services.

The discussion of the problem in the Council showed that members were unanimous in recognizing the importance of controlling the flooding of Asia's great rivers. There was, however, a divergence of views as to the best method of accomplishing this objective. Several representatives fully supported the Chinese proposal, i.e., favored the prompt establishment of a Bureau of Flood Control, staffed with three or more experts, as the best and surest means of coping with the flood control problem. They argued that this decision of principle ought to be taken at once, leaving to the near future the admittedly important problem of the precise organization of such a Bureau, which, because of the intimate relationship between Asia's great rivers and the agriculture and industry of the region, would play a vital role in Asian economics.

Supporters of the Canadian proposal, on the other hand, were not convinced that the need for the establishment of a separate Bureau of Flood Control had been conclusively demonstrated. They feared that the creation of such a body, which might easily acquire a semi-autonomous status, might yet prove to be an undesirable precedent and a departure from the global approach of the United Nations. Until the need for a Bureau had been demonstrated, they declared, the United Nations could and should do something about the flood problem by initiating Secretariat studies and by making the necessary expert advice available to Member Governments.

A drafting committee, composed of representatives of Canada, China, France, New Zealand, U.S.S.R., United States and Venezuela, to which the two proposals and a Canadian amendment (E/936) to the Chinese proposal were submitted at the 192nd meeting of the Council, failed to reconcile the two points of view and submitted two alternative drafts (E/790). A New Zealand amendment (E/992) designed to narrow the gap between the two alternatives was rejected at the 206th meeting on August 19, 1948, by the Council, which then adopted by 12 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions, Alternative B proposed by the Committee, which was similar to the original Chinese proposal. The resolution (144(VII)D) adopted by the Council, reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having noted the resolution of the third session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East regarding the establishment of a Bureau of Flood Control for Asia and the Far East based upon a preliminary study undertaken by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East in consultation with the Food and Agriculture Organization, and

"Recognizing the great importance and urgency of the problems of flood control which affect the livelihood and welfare of millions of human beings in the valleys of great rivers in Asia and the Far East who are subject to the danger of floods and consequent famines,

"Approves the Commission's purpose of dealing promptly with problems of flood control in the territories within the geographic scope of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East;

"Requests that a Bureau of Flood Control for Asia and the Far East be formed by the Secretary-General as an effective technical unit responsible to the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East for the performance of the technical tasks envisaged by the Commission, containing from three to five flood control experts of high qualifications, and utilizing the services of experienced expert consultants; and

"Recommends that the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East include in its report to the eighth session of the Council the results of its fuller consideration of its plans and activities for dealing with problems of flood control in its geographic area as well as recommendations on organizational problems connected with the formation of the Bureau."

(c) MEMBERSHIP

The third ECAFE session was the first in which New Zealand, whose membership in ECAFE had been approved at the Council's sixth session, and the Union of Burma, which had become an independent country and a Member of the United Nations, participated as full Commission members. Furthermore, representatives of Cambodia, Ceylon, Hong Kong, Laos, Malaya and Brkish Borneo participated as Associate Members. ECAFE also recommended that its geographical scope be amended by the Council to include Nepal, since the latter had requested the right to be represented by an observer at ECAFE sessions. The recommendation, embodied in a Chinese proposal (E/890), was approved by the Council at its 188th meeting on August 2, 1948, without objection.

The same resolution (144(VII)A) also placed the Council on record as approving certain minor changes in ECAFE's rules of procedure (E/839, p.8) and ECAFE's recommendation that its temporary headquarters remain in Shanghai "until such time as the site of the Office of the United Nations in Asia and the Far East shall be determined".

The question of associate membership for Indonesia and/or the Indonesian Republic had been left in abeyance at the third ECAFE session, it being decided to take a decision in this respect at the fourth session of the Commission, to be held in Australia toward the end of 1948.

Five Council members offered draft resolutions or amendments concerning the relation between ECAFE on the one hand and the Republic of Indonesia and Viet-Nam on the other. The representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed (E/907 and Corr.1) that the Council recommend that the Indonesian Republic and the Republic of Viet-Nam should be accorded associate membership in the Commission. The representative of New Zealand suggested (E/931) that the Council submit to the Security Council all of its own as well as of ECAFE's records concerning possible Indonesian membership in the Commission and seek the Security Council's assistance, since the latter was seized of the Indonesian question, and that the Secretary-General be requested to submit to the next (i.e., fourth) session of ECAFE a full statement on the constitutional and de facto situation in Indonesia. The representative of the Netherlands proposed (E/937) an amendment to the New Zealand draft resolution, deleting therefrom the request for Security Council assistance (but not deleting the transmission to the Security Council of the records on the Indonesian application) and the request to the Secretary-General that he submit to ECAFE's fourth session a statement on the de facto situation in Indonesia. The representative of Australia proposed (E/957) that the Economic and Social Council go on record as considering that ECAFE already had authority to deal with applications for membership from areas within its geographical scope and that no action was required on the matter at that session of the Council. The representative of the Byelorussian S.S.R. suggested (E/967) that the operative part of the U.S.S.R. proposal (recommending that ECAFE admit the Indonesian Republic and the Republic of Viet-Nam as associate members) be incorporated into the Australian suggestion.

At its 200th meeting, on August 16, 1948, the Council after rejecting the U.S.S.R. draft resolution (E/907) (by a vote of 9 to 4, with 5 abstentions, on the recommendation bearing on the Republic of Indonesia, and by a vote of 11 to 3, with 4 abstentions, on the recommendation regarding Viet-Nam), adopted the Australian proposal (E/957) by a vote of 12 to 3 with 4 abstentions. (The New Zealand proposal had been previously withdrawn at the 196th meeting in favor of the Australian draft resolution.) The resolution (144(VII)B) adopted by the Council reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Considering that the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East already has authority to deal with applications for membership from areas within its geographical scope,

"Decides that no action is required at this session concerning members and associate members of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East."

(d) ASIAN ECONOMY AND JAPAN

At its third session, ECAFE had adopted a resolution (E/839, p.39) on the contribution of the Japanese economy to the reconstruction and development of the ECAFE region. Several members of the Economic and Social Council warned of the danger that ECAFE might be encroaching upon the domain of the Far Eastern Commission, a body not connected with the United Nations. The representative of New Zealand proposed a draft resolution (E/900) in which the Council would have affirmed that "pending the signing of a Peace Treaty with Japan, questions of industrial levels and the trade of Japan are entirely within the competence of the Far Eastern Commission". An amendment (E/909) submitted by the representative of the U.S.S.R. would have gone further, by placing the Council on record as considering that the ECAFE resolution in question "comes outside the competency of the ECAFE and hence cannot be confirmed by the Council". There was general agreement that the competency of the Far Eastern Commission must not be placed in jeopardy. The representative of the United Kingdom suggested that now that the point raised in the New Zealand draft resolution had been discussed and noted in the Council's records, perhaps the representative of New Zealand would agree that no further action was necessary. At the 188th meeting on August 2, the representative of New Zealand said he had submitted his proposal because he had not been quite sure as to what ECAFE had had in mind when it passed the resolution concerning Japan's economy, and he had thought his proposal could be useful as a guide to ECAFE. But since the point had been made clear in the debate, he said he was willing to withdraw his proposal.

(e) INLAND TRANSPORT

One further decision taken by the Economic and Social Council at its seventh session had a bearing on ECAFE, although, unlike the other decision referred to above, it did not arise out of ECAFE's third session report. The Council, on August 28, endorsed (resolution 147(VII)C) a recommendation of the Transport and Communications Commission to the effect that ECAFE be recommended to convene an early meeting of inland transport experts of the countries represented on the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East to examine:

"1. The problems with respect to rehabilitation and co-ordinated development of inland transport facilities and services in Asia and the Far East;

"2. The means which are best suited to promote the solution of these problems, either by setting up regional machinery or otherwise (it being understood that any such machinery would be part of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East)."

c. ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR LATIN AMERICA

At the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council, the representative of Chile submitted a proposal (E/468) to establish an Economic Commission for Latin America. The matter was discussed by the Council at its 103rd, 104th, 105th, 110th and 111th meetings on August 1, 4, 5 and 11. In support of his proposal, the Chilean representative called attention to the need of Latin America for economic development in order to improve living standards and attain general economic stability. He stated that because of special circumstances, partly the result of the war, the majority of Latin American countries had been confronted with economic maladjustment that retarded their progress toward higher living standards. This situation, in turn, reflected unfavorably on the region's economic relations with the rest of the world and hence was an adverse factor in world-wide efforts to recover from the economic dislocation caused by the war.

The representative of Chile further declared that the general economic under-development of the Latin American countries and the resultant low standard of living for the majority of the population seriously undermined their vitality and prevented this wealthy and promising region from making as great a contribution as it might be expected to provide towards the welfare of other parts of the world. He felt that if the problems of Latin America were to be resolved as an integral part of world problems, United Nations action and co-ordination would be required.

All the Latin American countries expressed support of the Chilean proposal.

The representatives of Lebanon, India, China and Norway expressed sympathy for the proposal.

In addition to the arguments advanced by the representative of Chile for the establishment of an Economic Commission for Latin America, the following also were cited: (1) The representative of Cuba pointed out that Latin America had never had a co-ordinated development plan and that the proposed Commission could create such a plan in concert with world requirements. (2) The representative of Venezuela declared that the proposed Economic Commission would be able to co-operate, within the framework of the United Nations, with the other regional commissions already set up in the task of the revival and normalization of international trade.

The representatives of the United States and Canada thought that the question should be considered first by the Ninth International Conference of American States. They felt that the results of the Conference should be awaited before any decisive action was taken by the Council on the Chilean proposal. They also voiced fear of the possibility of a duplication of effort between the proposed Economic Commission and the Inter-American Economic and Social Council of the Pan American Union.

The representatives of Canada and New Zealand expressed some concern lest a regional approach to economic problems should be substituted for a world-wide functional approach.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. expressed sympathy with the desire of the Chilean representative to raise the standard of living of the Latin American nations, but said that the proposal for the establishment of an economic commission for Latin America was not dictated by necessity. He stated that the economic situation in Europe and the Far East was not analagous to that of Latin America and the creation of a Latin American commission would complicate the structure of the Council. He argued that the function of the Economic and Employment Commission was to study under-developed countries throughout the world. For those reasons, he declared, his Government could not support the Chilean proposal.

(1) Creation of an ad hoc Committee

At its 110th and 111th plenary meetings on August 11, 1947, the Council adopted without objection resolution 70 (V) establishing an ad hoc Committee, consisting of Chile, China, Cuba, France, Lebanon, Peru, United Kingdom, United States and Venezuela, to consider the factors bearing upon the establishment of an Economic Commission for Latin America within the framework of the United Nations.

The ad hoc Committee was requested to present to the Council a report with recommendations concerning the creation of such a commission. It was authorized to consult with interested agencies both within and without the United Nations. The Committee was also instructed to ascertain the views of the Ninth International Conference of American States. The Secretary-General was requested to initiate studies defining and analyzing the economic problems of Latin American countries which threatened the stability and development of their economies.

The General Assembly on October 31, 1947, adopted resolution 120 (II) in which it took note with satisfaction of the decision of the Economic and Social Council to establish the ad hoc Committee.³⁸

(2) Report of the ad hoc Committee

The ad hoc Committee met for the first time on October 9, 1947, at Lake Success, New York. It first considered the formal factors bearing upon the establishment of the proposed Commission. The Committee then considered the major causes of economic maladjustment in Latin America, in the light of a document prepared by the four Latin American countries represented on the Committee and the studies prepared by the Secretariat of the United Nations. As the Ninth International Conference of American States was postponed from January 17 to March 30, 1948, the ad hoc Committee sought the opinion of the Pan American Union on the establishment of the proposed Commission.

The Director-General of the Pan American Union on January 20, 1948, transmitted to the Chairman of the ad hoc Committee the text of a resolution which had been adopted by the Inter-American Economic and Social Council on January 15, concerning the proposed Commission. The resolution, inter alia, declared that the Inter-American Economic and Social Council resolved to support the immediate establishment of the proposed Economic Commission for Latin America.

In its report (E/630) to the Economic and Social Council, the ad hoc Committee unanimously recommended the establishment forthwith of an Economic Commission for Latin America. It also concluded that special safeguards would be necessary in order to ensure the proper co-ordination of efforts between organs of the Inter-American System and the proposed Commission.

(3) Consideration by the Council of the Report of the ad hoc Committee

The report of the ad hoc Committee was considered by the Economic and Social Council during its sixth session at its 132nd, 133rd, 153rd and 164th meetings on February 9 and 25 and March 5, and at the ninth and tenth meetings of the Economic Committee on February 10 and 12.

Unqualified support for the establishment of the proposed Commission came from several representatives. Certain objections to the establishment of the proposed Commission, however, were also made. Among the objections were the following: (1) The establishment of the proposed Commission constituted a departure from the action taken by the Council in establishing commissions for Europe and for Asia and the Far East, as the proposed Commission for Latin America was for regional economic development as distinguished from reconstruction. This view was expressed by Canada. (2) Duplication with the work of other regional organizations might result. This view was expressed by the United Kingdom and New Zealand. (3) The proposed Commission should not become an organ covering up foreign economic penetration. This view was expressed by the U.S.S.R.

In answer to the first objection, it was pointed out that the economy of Latin America had been severely dislocated by the war; it was, therefore, only just that it should receive assistance. The reports of the Economic Commissions for Europe and for Asia and the Far East supported the contention that no line could be drawn between reconstruction and development. It was argued that reconstruction of the European economy, for example, did not mean a return to the conditions of 1939, nor was reconstruction in the Far East intended to reproduce the conditions of the prewar period. It was further pointed out that urgent short-term problems were best dealt with by the regional approach, and that this could be done without encroaching upon the domain of the functional commissions, which operated on a world-wide basis.

In answer to the second objection, it was stated that the problem of duplication with the work of the Pan American Union had received careful consideration by the ad hoc Committee, which took appropriate measures, after consultation with the Pan American Union. The latter's field of activity would not be infringed upon, and co-operation of the proposed Commission with the appropriate organ of the Pan American Union was assured. Thus every effort had been made to prevent overlapping of functions.

In reply to the third objection, the representative of Chile declared that foreign investment was still necessary in the postwar period, but it would have to conform to the domestic legislation of the Latin American countries.

The representative of Brazil doubted whether dependence on their own resources alone would have resulted in fuller political development in Latin American countries, as the U.S.S.R. representative had suggested. Development through foreign capital was a natural and historic trend, of which the United States was an example, he maintained.

Representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom replied to particular Soviet charges of economic penetration.

A U.S.S.R. verbal proposal that Non-Self-Governing Territories should be allowed to submit applications for associate membership to the Council directly instead of through the Member country responsible for their international relations, was rejected in the Economic Committee at its ninth meeting on February 12 by 13 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions.

A further Soviet proposal that the U.S.S.R. should be a member of the Commission was rejected in the Economic Committee by 12 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions, and in the Council by 13 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions. It was rejected on the grounds that direct participation by the U.S.S.R. in the work of the proposed Commission, if accepted, would modify substantially the very conception of regional commissions. It was pointed out the criterion adopted in order to decide the composition of such commissions had been that membership should be open only to those countries which had interests or direct political or economic responsibilities in the various regions in which it was proposed to establish regional commissions.

(4) Establishment of the Commission

At its 153rd meeting on February 25, the Council, by 13 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, adopted resolution 106 (VI) (the final wording of paragraph 7 of the resolution being decided at the 164th meeting on March 5), defining the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Latin America.

(a) DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

The Council in its resolution assigned the Commission the following duties:

"1. The Economic Commission for Latin America, acting within the framework of the policies of the United Nations and subject to the general supervision of the Council, shall, provided that the Commission takes no action in respect to any country without the agreement of the Government of that country:

"(a) Initiate and participate in measures for facilitating concerted action for dealing with urgent economic problems arising out of the war and for raising the level of economic activity in Latin America and for maintaining and strengthening the economic relations of the Latin-American countries both among themselves and with other countries of the world;

"(b) Make or sponsor such investigations and studies of economic and technological problems and developments within territories of Latin America as the Commission deems appropriate;

"(c) Undertake or sponsor the collection, evaluation and dissemination of such economic, technological and statistical information as the Commission deems appropriate.

"2. The Commission shall direct its activities especially towards the study and seeking of solutions of problems arising in Latin America from world economic mal-adjustment and towards other problems connected with the world economy, with a view to the co-operation of the Latin-American Countries in the common effort to achieve world-wide recovery and economic stability. . . ."

The Commission was empowered to make recommendations on any matter within its competence directly to the governments of members or associate members concerned, governments admitted in a consultative capacity and the specialized agencies concerned. It was to submit for the Council's prior consideration any of its proposals for activities that would have important effects on the economy of the world as a whole.

(b) MEMBERSHIP AND GEOGRAPHICAL SCOPE OF THE COMMISSION

The Council adopted the following provisions concerning the membership and geographical scope of the Commission:

"3. (a) Membership of the Commission shall be open to Members of the United Nations in North, Central and South America, and in the Caribbean area, and to France, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. Any territory, or part or group thereof, within the geographic scope of the Commission's work, may, on presentation of its application to the Commission by the Member responsible for the international relations of such territory, part or group of territories, be eligible for admission by the Commission as an associate member of the Commission. If it has become responsible for its own international relations, such territory, part or group of territories, may be admitted as an associate member of the Commission on itself presenting its application to the Commission.

"(b) Representatives of associate members shall be entitled to participate without vote in all meetings of the Commission, whether sitting as Commission or as Committee of the Whole.

"(c) Representatives of associate members shall be eligible to be appointed as members of any committee, or other subordinate body which may be set up by the Commission and shall be eligible to hold office in such body.

"4. The geographical scope of the Commission's work is the twenty Latin-American States Members of the United Nations, participating territories in Central and South America which have frontiers adjoining any of these States, and participating territories in the Caribbean area. . . ."

(c) ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONSULTATION

As regards arrangements for consultation with non-members of the Commission, specialized agencies, non-governmental organizations and the organs of the Inter-American System, the Council decided as follows:

"6. The Commission shall invite any Member of the United Nations not a member of the Commission to participate in a consultative capacity in its consideration of any matter of particular concern to that non-member, following the practices of the Economic and Social Council.

"7. (a) The Commission shall invite representatives of specialized agencies to attend its meetings and to participate, without vote, in its deliberations with respect to items on its agenda relating to matters within the scope of their activities; and may invite observers from such other inter-governmental organizations as it may consider desirable in accordance with the practices of the Council.

"(b) The Commission shall make arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which have been granted consultative status by the Council, in accordance with the principles approved by the Council for this purpose.

"8. The Commission shall take measures to ensure that the necessary liaison shall be maintained with other organs of the United Nations and with the specialized agencies, with special attention to the avoidance of the duplication of efforts.

"9. The Commission shall co-operate with and take the necessary measures to co-ordinate its activities with the appropriate organs of the Inter-American System and as may be necessary with the Caribbean Commission in order to avoid any unnecessary duplication of effort between those organs and itself; to this end the Commission is empowered to and shall seek to make working arrangements with the appropriate organs of the Inter-American System regarding the joint or independent study or execution of economic problems within its competence and the fullest exchange of information necessary for the co-ordination of efforts in the economic field. The Commission shall invite the Pan American Union to nominate a representative to attend meetings of the Commission in a consultative capacity. . . ."

(d) ORGANIZATIONAL MATTERS

The Commission was empowered, after discussion with any specialized agency concerned and with the Council's approval, to establish such subsidiary bodies as it deemed appropriate; it was to submit a regular annual report to the Council and interim reports at each regular session of the Council.

The Council decided that the Commission's headquarters were to be at Santiago de Chile and that its first session should be held there during the first half of 1948. The Commission was to decide at each session on its next meeting place, with due regard to the principle that the countries of Latin America be chosen in rotation.

Not later than 1951 the Council was to make a special review of the work of the Commission with a view to determining whether the Commission should be terminated or continued, and if continued what modification, if any, should be made in its terms of reference.

(5) First Session of the Commission

The Economic Commission for Latin America held its first session in Santiago de Chile from June 7 to 25, 1948. Representatives from the twenty Latin American countries and from France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States were present. Also in attendance were representatives and observers from the International Labour Organisation; the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations; the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; the International Civil Aviation Organization; the World Health Organization; the International Monetary Fund; the International Refugee Organization (Preparatory Commission); the Inter-American Economic and Social Council; and the Inter-American Council of Commerce and Production.

(a) Economic Survey of Latin America.—The Commission adopted a number of resolutions at its first session (E/840). The first of these assigned to the Executive Secretary of the Commission the task of undertaking, between the first and second sessions of the Commission, an economic survey of Latin America, having in mind its needs and greater development and the strengthening of its economic relations to the rest of the world. In making the survey the Executive Secretary was instructed to:

"(a) Make a study of the current economic situation in Latin America specially dealing with agricultural activities, including pastoral, forest and fishery production of both foodstuffs and raw materials; with industrial and mineral production; with power resources; equipment; with distribution and transportation and with factors affecting the commercial and financial activities of each country;

"(b) Analyze trade relations within Latin America and between Latin America and the rest of the world;

"(c) Study and present the main characteristics and problems of the economic structure of Latin American countries."

The survey was to be undertaken in collaboration with the specialized agencies and was to utilize relevant studies by those American non-governmental organizations which have been accorded consultative status by the Economic and Social Council. Furthermore, the resolution invited the Latin American governments to provide the Executive Secretary with studies of their economies and to communicate to him their plans and proposals for the further economic development and commercial progress of their countries.

(b) Co-ordination with the Inter-American Economic and Social Council.—Another resolution dealt with the question of overlapping and of unnecessary duplication between the work of the Economics Commission for Latin America and the Inter-American Economic and Social Council. In order to avoid duplication of work, it was agreed that the Commission should direct its activities especially toward the study and the seeking of solutions of problems arising in Latin America from world economic maladjustment and towards other problems connected with the world economy, with a view to the co-operation of the Latin American countries in the common effort to achieve worldwide recovery and economic stability. Furthermore, a program of work which included all the subjects of the resolutions was drafted by the Economic Commission.

In connection with the question of co-ordination and with the economic survey, the Commission passed a special resolution on statistics, asking the Executive Secretary to collaborate with the Secretariat of the Inter-American Economic and Social Council in making up a questionnaire for the use of all the governments concerned. The resulting data, based on the statistical standards of the Statistical Commission and Statistical Office of the United Nations, would serve both for the proposed economic conference of the Organization of American States in 1949 and for the economic survey.

(c) Expansion of Food Production.—With regard to the problem of food production, the Commission approved a resolution requesting the Secretary-General of the United Nations to consult with the Director-General of FAO with a view to appointing a Joint Working Party of the Secretariat of the Commission and that of FAO. The Joint Working Party, given the task of studying co-ordinated action to increase the food production of Latin America, was to present its findings at the next session of the Commission, when the adoption of further measures would be considered.

(d) Bottlenecks in Foreign Trade.—The question of the possibility of establishing a system of multilateral compensation of payments was taken up. The Commission agreed to request the International Monetary Fund to make a study of the practicability and desirability of establishing at the earliest possible opportunity, as a transitional measure, machinery for the multilateral compensation of international payments among the countries of Latin America as well as between them and the rest of the world.

A resolution was adopted requesting the Executive Secretary to study the movements of import and export prices, the determining factors of such movements and their effects on the balance of payments. This study, to be made either in the form of a special inquiry or a part of the economic survey, was to be made in collaboration with the International Monetary Fund and other specialized agencies.

The Executive Secretary was also asked, in other resolutions, to obtain: information that would lead to the adoption of measures adequate to ensure the export and marketing of products, including food-stuffs, which comprise the main economic resources of the various Latin American countries; appropriate data on the fixing of official prices for agricultural products and crop insurance; information on existing free ports and zones in the American republics, the facilities they offer, and their present and potential significance for promoting inter-American commerce and commerce between Latin America and the rest of the world.

(e) Industrial Development.—The Executive Secretary was instructed by the Commission to give attention to the problem of the inadequate supply of industrial equipment in Latin America. Also, in relation to this matter, the Commission adopted a resolution appealing through the Inter-American Council of Commerce and Production to national chambers of commerce, producers' associations and other non-governmental organizations of America to aid in re-establishing normal credit facilities as soon as possible. The object was to replenish minimum stocks and equipment necessary for the commercial rehabilitation of Latin America.

The Commission, noting that inadequate transport and communications throughout Latin America hinder economic development in the region, recommended that the Economic and Social Council request the Transport and Communications Commission as soon as possible to make a further study of these matters, including freight rates affecting Latin America, in order to expedite their consideration by the Commission.

(f) Labor Supply and Technical Assistance.—A resolution was adopted by the Commission asking the Executive Secretary to examine the immigration problem in all its aspects, particularly in its economic aspects, and to include his findings in the economic survey. The Commission agreed that the Executive Secretary in collaboration with the competent international organizations should study the possibility and desirability of creating an Inter-American Institute of Immigration.

As regards the general shortage of well-trained technicians and of technical training facilities, the Commission decided that until concrete recommendations for correcting the situation could be made at its second session, a preliminary study should be made by the Executive Secretary of the needs for technical and administrative personnel and their present availability, including facilities for technical training. This information was to be given to the member countries, together with information on any feasible arrangements for the exchange of staffs among them. Also, lists were to be prepared containing the names of organizations—private, national and international—which might be able to render necessary technical assistance. In this task the Executive Secretary was to co-operate with the specialized agencies and with the Inter-American Economic and Social Council.

(g) Inflation.—The Executive Secretary was asked to include in the economic survey a study of all factors generating inflationary pressures.

(h) Public Health.—The Commission, accepting the offer made by the World Health Organization and the Pan American Sanitary Organization to co-operate with the Commission in dealing with the problems of public health and social welfare, invited the two Organizations to submit a concrete program of co-operation in this field before the next session of the Commission.

(i) Latin America and World Recovery.—A further resolution adopted by the Commission instructed the Executive Secretary to make a study analyzing the relationship between the economic rehabilitation of non-American countries and the development of economic and commercial activities in Latin America, as well as the effects of this relationship. This directive was complementary to that covering the economic survey.

(6) Consideration by the Council of the Commission's First Report

The report (E/840) of the Economic Commission for Latin America (ECLA) was considered by the Economic and Social Council during the latter's seventh session, at the 208th, 209th and 211th plenary meetings on August 20, 21 and 23, 1948.

During the debate, the Council members discussed various technical points related to the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America, especially the question of the way ECLA should carry out its task of promoting economic development in Latin America.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. declared that foreign capital investments—particularly by the United States—characterized that economy and prevented not only its advance from its present semi-colonial status, and its industrialization, but also tended to undermine the political independence of the area. He felt that Latin American countries should concentrate on the development of their domestic markets and seek to diversify their economic structure, characterized in many cases by reliance upon only a very few products or even one product, with the result that a fluctuation in the world market price of the few commodities concerned could affect drastically, for better or worse, the entire economy of a given Latin American country. While foreign capital investments were necessary during the transitional phase, such investments should not be blindly encouraged; rather they should be regulated so as to minimize or prevent their undesirable effects.

While conceding the dangers of foreign capital investments, the representatives of Latin American members of the Council felt that the U.S.S.R. representative had not paid sufficient attention in his criticisms to the constructive aspects of the question: whatever might have been the practices in the past, it was, they said, a fact that recent and current foreign capital investments were helping to bring about the desired industrial development of Latin American countries and to diversify their economies. Then, too, better control had been instituted, e.g., by forming mixed companies of national and foreign capital, and so affording greater protection to national interests. On the other hand, they declared, it was only fair and equitable to permit foreign investors to take out at least part of the profits resulting from their investments. Furthermore, it was undeniable that the investment of foreign capital created domestic capital which in turn could be used to further the development of industrialization. Similar views were expressed during the debate by the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States, who reiterated the desire and belief of their own Governments that the industrialization of Latin America would be beneficial to world economy as such.

A further point on which there was a difference of opinion in the Council was the role of immigration in Latin American economy. The U.S.S.R. representative criticized ECLA's policy in promoting immigration from Europe, which, he stated, needed all its available manpower for its own needs. Latin American representatives pointed out, on the other hand, that the immigration policy of Latin America, in addition to aiding the New World's economic development, met the needs of many displaced persons and refugees.

The Council approved two resolutions dealing with the work of the Economic Commission for Latin America. One of these was resolution 147 (VII) D, passed by the Economic and Social Council in connection with its consideration of the report of the second session of the Transport and Communications Commission, in which the Transport and Communications Commission was requested "to make a further study of problems of maritime shipping, including freight rates, affecting Latin America, in order to facilitate consideration of these matters as soon as possible by the Economic Commission for Latin America".³⁹

The other resolution (145(VII)), which in its original form was submitted jointly (E/978) by the representatives of Brazil, Chile, Peru and Venezuela, was approved at the 211th meeting of the Economic and Social Council on August 23, 1948, by a vote of 15 to 2, with 1 abstention, and reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the report of the first session of the Economic Commission for Latin America,

"Takes note with satisfaction of the decision taken by the Commission at its first session in furtherance of the purpose set forth in its terms of reference;

"Expresses its satisfaction with the arrangements made for the co-ordination of the Commission's work with the Inter-American Economic and Social Council;

"Approves the use of Spanish as a third working-language of the Commission and the production in Portuguese of the final text of the Commission's report and its resolutions."

d. PROPOSED ECONOMIC COMMISSION FOR THE MIDDLE EAST

The General Assembly, by its resolution 120-(II)⁴⁰ of October 31, 1947, took note of the Economic and Social Council's decision to establish an ad hoc Committee to study the factors bearing on the establishment of an Economic Commission for Latin America and of the favorable reception given to this proposal by the Second Committee; it invited the Council "to study the factors bearing upon the establishment of an Economic Commission for the Middle East".

The Council during its sixth session considered this question at its 135th, 136th and 167th meetings on February 10 and 11 and March 8, and at the twelfth and thirteenth meetings of the Economic Committee on February 21 and 24.

The representative of Lebanon urged the establishment of an Economic Commission for the Middle East for the benefit of the area and of other important regions and in the interests of the United Nations. The Middle East area, he held, provided the criteria requisite for the creation of a regional economic commission. He pointed out that regional commissions were established primarily to deal with urgent economic problems of reconstruction and development, for areas which were intrinsically economically important. The proposed Economic Commission for the Middle East, he explained, would be complementary to the functional commissions of the Council, would co-operate with the specialized agencies, and would stimulate governments within the area to concerted action. He further pointed out that the countries in the Middle East could not provide internally the capital needed to develop investment goods, all their energies being spent on the production of consumption goods, and yet to increase production of consumption goods they needed to increase production of investment goods. The area needed outside assistance in the form of finance, technology and expert advice.

Urgent measures should be taken for agricultural development, irrigation, drainage, land reclamation and soil conservation, and a program of industrialization was needed to raise the standard of living. A regional economic commission, he declared, could render a real service which no other organ of the United Nations could perform as well.

The representative of Chile, supporting the establishment of an Economic Commission for the Middle East, suggested that an ad hoc Committee should be set up to study all aspects concerning its establishment. This proposal was supported by the representatives of United Kingdom, China, France, Brazil, Turkey, United States, Netherlands, Denmark and New Zealand. The representative of New Zealand, however, thought that the Council should proceed cautiously, particularly in view of the political uneasiness in the Middle East. The representatives of Egypt and Syria, invited by the President of the Council to participate in the debate by virtue of Article 69 of the Charter, also spoke in favor of the setting up of a commission, emphasizing the need for raising the standard of living and for obtaining technical advice.

The Economic Committee at its thirteenth meeting on February 24 adopted a Lebanese proposal (E/AC.6/17) for the setting up of an ad hoc Committee, with certain amendments accepted by the Lebanese representative. The Committee discussed the question of the ad hoc Committee's composition and decided that Member States which were not members of the Council but whose collaboration was necessary in assisting the development of the Middle East should be invited to participate as full members of the ad hoc Committee.

A U.S.S.R. proposal to delete Turkey from the list of members of the ad hoc Committee, on the ground that it was a member of the Economic Commission for Europe, that the composition of the ad hoc Committee to some extent foreshadowed that of the Commission, and that none except the Great Powers were members of two regional commissions, was defeated by a roll call vote of 13 to 2 in the Economic Committee, and by a vote of 15 to 2, with 1 abstention, in the Council.

The report of the Economic Committee was considered by the Council at its 167th plenary meeting on March 8. A Lebanese amendment (E/703/Add.2) to the draft resolution submitted by the Economic Committee concerning the establishment of the ad hoc Committee (E/703) was adopted by 17 votes, with 1 abstention. This amendment inserted a reference, in the preamble of the draft, to the Council's resolution establishing the Economic Commission for Latin America. The resolution as a whole, as amended by the Lebanese delegation, was then adopted by 14 votes, with 4 abstentions.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. explained that his delegation had abstained from voting because, although it approved of the principle of establishing an ad hoc Committee, it did not approve of that Committee's composition. The Canadian representative abstained from voting because of his delegation's reservation with regard to the danger of multiplying the regional organs of the United Nations.

The resolution adopted (107(VI)) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note of General Assembly resolution 120(II) of 31 October 1947, inviting the Council to study the factors bearing upon the establishment of an economic commission for the Middle East;

"Considering that by its resolution of 25 February 1948, the Council has, at its sixth session, established an Economic Commission for Latin America;

"Recognizing that the countries of the Middle East are faced with serious post-war problems of economic adjustment threatening the economic stability of these countries, with their less developed economies; and

"Recognizing that co-operative measures among all the countries of the Middle East can be of practical assistance in raising both the level of economic activity and the standard of life in the Middle East and in strengthening the economic relations of these countries both among themselves and with other countries of the world, and that such measures would be facilitated by close co-operation with the United Nations and its subsidiary organs as well as with regional organizations in the Middle East such as the Arab League,

"Establishes an ad hoc Committee consisting of China, France, Lebanon, Turkey, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and Venezuela, and invites the following States Members of the United Nations to participate as full members of the ad hoc Committee: Egypt, Iran and Iraq;

"Decides upon the following terms of reference for the Committee:

"(i) The Committee shall consider the factors bearing upon the establishment of an economic commission for the Middle East within the framework of the United Nations and shall present to the Council, during its seventh session, a report with recommendations concerning the creation of such a commission;

"(ii) The Committee may consult with interested agencies both within and without the United Nations;

"Requests the Secretary-General to give special and immediate aid to the Committee by initiating studies defining and analysing the economic problems of the countries of the Middle East which threaten the stability and development of their economies; and

"Requests the Committee, in collaboration with the Secretary-General, to engage in speedy consultations with the Governments of the countries in the region for the purpose of ascertaining their views in this matter, and to take these views into consideration in the formulation of its recommendations."

The ad hoc Committee met during April-June 1948 and adopted a report to the Council (E/-AC.26/16) recommending that an economic commission should be established forthwith for the Middle East, with a structure similar to that of the previously established regional economic commissions.

The ad hoc Committee noted the urgent economic problems arising directly or indirectly from the World War or from current world economic maladjustments which have subjected the economy of the Middle Eastern countries to severe strain. Such problems called for concerted regional efforts towards their solution. While they might be conceived of in a sense as problems of economic reconstruction, the Committee held that that term must not be understood as implying merely a return to conditions prevailing before the war. These conditions had been far from satisfactory throughout this region, which had been characterized as a whole by marked under-development of the economy, and the economic reconstruction called for in the Middle East must be understood to include such a degree of broader development as would make it possible to expand economic activity and raise the standard of living substantially above pre-war levels in a not-too-distant future.

The Committee pointed out that the countries of the Middle East form a region with great potentialities deriving from its natural resources, capable of rendering an important contribution to world economic recovery, and sufficiently large and populous to warrant the establishment of a regional commission.

The ad hoc Committee presented in its report a draft resolution setting out the terms of reference, membership and geographical scope of the proposed Commission.

The terms of reference recommended in the draft resolution provided, inter alia, that the Commission should:

"(a) initiate and participate in measures for facilitating concerted action for dealing with urgent economic problems arising out of the war and for raising both the level of economic activity and the standard of living in the Middle East, and for maintaining and strengthening the economic relations of the Middle Eastern countries both among themselves and with other countries of the world;

"(b) make or sponsor such investigations and studies of economic and technological problems and developments within territories of the Middle East as the Commission deems appropriate;

"(c) undertake or sponsor the collection, evaluation and dissemination of such economic, technological and statistical information as the Commission deems appropriate."

The draft resolution recommended the following Members of the United Nations as members of the proposed Commission: Afghanistan, Egypt, Ethiopia, Greece, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Turkey and Yemen. It further recommended that new members might be admitted by the Council after consultation with the Commission.

With respect to Non-Self-Governing Territories, the draft resolution recommended, inter alia, that "Any Non-Self-Governing Territory in the Arabian Peninsula, the Eastern Mediterranean and North East Africa may, on presentation of its application to the Commission by the Member [of the United Nations] responsible for the international relations of such territory be admitted by the Commission as an associate member of the Commission. If it has become responsible for its own international relations, such territory may be admitted as an associate member of the Commission on itself presenting its application to the Commission."

The draft resolution recommended that the Commission might admit in a consultative capacity states not Members of the United Nations within its geographical scope.

The geographical scope of the Commission's work, it was recommended, should be the territories of the members of the Commission as well as the Non-Self-Governing Territories and the territories of states in the Arabian peninsula, the Eastern Mediterranean and North East Africa, admitted by the Commission as associate members or in a consultative capacity.

A specific provision was made for effective co-operation between the proposed Commission and the League of Arab States and for proper co-ordination of their activities, in so far as the members of the League of Arab States are concerned, to avoid unnecessary duplication of efforts.

The report of the ad hoc Committee was placed on the agenda of the seventh session of the Council. During the Council's discussion of the state of business at its 203rd meeting, it was decided that, owing to pressure of business, consideration of a number of items, including this report, should be postponed.

e. REGIONAL ECONOMIC COMMISSIONS

The Economic and Social Council at its 111th plenary meeting on August 11, 1947, considered a New Zealand draft resolution (E/537) which proposed the consideration of the whole question of regional commissions by the Economic and Employment Commission and its two sub-commissions.

The U.S.S.R. representative suggested that the question should be referred to the Economic and Employment Commission since the functions and scope of the sub-commissions had only recently been defined. The Lebanese representative considered that fears of regional economic autarchy were exaggerated, but thought it might be wiser to consider the question after the regional economic commissions had met. The Canadian representative thought the Council should consider the general principle of establishing regional economic commissions and that a world-wide policy for economic development should be established before the solution of economic problems was attempted on a regional basis.

After adopting a Canadian amendment to delete a reference to the sub-commissions of the Economic and Employment Commission, the Council by 9 votes to 7, with 2 abstentions, adopted the revised resolution (72(V)) as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note of the fact that it has already established an economic commission for Europe and an economic commission for Asia and the Far East,

"Taking note of the proposal advanced for the establishment of an economic commission for Latin America and the references made to the possible establishment at a later date of an economic commission for the Middle East,

"Requests the Economic and Employment Commission to examine and report to the Council upon the general questions involved in the creation of regional economic commissions as a means for the promotion of the aims and objectives of the United Nations."

During the sixth session of the Council, at its 132nd, 133rd and 172nd plenary meetings on February 9 and March 10, the question was again considered. The representative of New Zealand submitted verbally a draft resolution which requested the Economic and Employment Commission to note the desire of the Council that the examination of the question of regional economic commissions be made later at a stage when it would have at its disposal more experience than at present of the activities of the regional commissions to guide it.

This suggestion was supported by the United Kingdom representative. The Canadian and Chinese representatives thought that it was important to define the relationship between regional and functional commissions.

At the 172nd plenary meeting of the Council on March 10, the Council considered a new draft resolution (E/747) on the matter presented by the representative of New Zealand, who explained that it was in substitution of his previous proposal, as a new regional commission had since come into existence. The present resolution was intended to ensure that the Economic and Social Council should examine the whole field.

The Council by a vote of 16 to 0 adopted the New Zealand draft resolution. Its text (108(VI)) is as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having regard to resolution 72(V) requesting the Economic and Employment Commission to examine and report to the Council upon the general questions involved in the creation of regional economic commissions as a means for the promotion of the aims and objectives of the United Nations,

"Requests the Economic and Employment Commission to note the desire of the Council that the examination be made at a stage when it would have at its disposal more experience than at present of the activities of the regional commissions to guide its deliberations.

"Meanwhile,

"The Economic and Social Council

"Calls to the attention of the specialized agencies and of the regional economic commissions of the Council the desirability of ensuring the closest possible co-operation and, where appropriate, joint action in fields of common concern."

5. Reconstruction of Ethiopia and Other Devastated Areas Not Included in the Report of the Temporary Sub-Commission on Economic Reconstruction of Devastated Areas

In resolution 38(IV) adopted at its fourth session on March 28, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General "to make a field survey, with the concurrence of the Governments and administrations concerned and at their request, of the reconstruction problems of Ethiopia and of other devastated territories not included in the reports of the Temporary Sub-Commission on Economic Reconstruction of Devastated Areas".

The Council also requested the Secretary-General to report to its fifth session "the measures necessary to effect a speedy reconstruction" in the countries which requested a field survey.

The Secretary-General submitted a report to the Council's fifth session (E/450 and Corr. 1, and Add. 1 and 2).

On April 7, 1947, the Secretary-General transmitted copies of this resolution to all Member nations. In view of the specific reference to Ethiopia a special inquiry was addressed to the Ethiopian Government on April 16, 1947, asking if it wished to request such a field survey (E/450, Annex I). On July 16, 1947, the Ethiopian Government informed the Secretary-General (E/450/Add. 2) that sufficient progress had been made in reconstruction in Ethiopia since its liberation to warrant concentrating United Nations efforts on reconstruction in countries more recently liberated. The Government added in its cable:

"In renouncing in favor of other United Nations more immediately in need of urgent assistance Ethiopian Government wish reserve their rights and position in favor eventual long term assistance programmes."

In view of the specific references to devastated territories of North Africa in the discussion of the question at the fourth session of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General also addressed a specific inquiry on May 12, 1947, to the United Kingdom Government as to whether it wished field surveys to be made with respect to any territories in North Africa, such as Cyrenaica, Eritrea and Tripoli, falling within the terms of reference of the resolution (E/450, Annex II). On June 19, the Secretary-General was advised by the United Kingdom Government that it would be glad to have such field surveys carried out in Cyrenaica, Eritrea and Tripoli (E/450, Annex III).

The Secretary-General reported that preparations were under way for making a field survey in these territories, but that the details had not been arranged and that it was not therefore possible to present estimates of costs (E/450 and Add. 1). Owing to the brief space of time since the request had been received, it was not possible for the Secretary-General to make a substantive report to the fifth session of the Council.

The Economic and Social Council considered the Secretary-General's report at its 93rd meeting on July 24, and agreed that, as there was no substantive problem for decision, the Council should merely take note of the report (resolution 71(V)).

Subsequently, the Secretary-General received a letter from the Government of the United Kingdom, dated August 22, 1947, requesting the postponement of the survey of Eritrea, Cyrenaica and Tripoli until after the visit to the three territories of the Four-Power Commission of Investigation, to be sent out under the terms of Annex XI of the Treaty of Peace with Italy. On September 15, 1947, the Secretary-General expressed his agreement to the postponement of the survey (E/450/Add. 3).

6. Financial Needs and Foreign Exchange Position of Devastated Countries

The Economic and Social Council at its fourth session in March 1947 considered an interim report by the Secretary-General on the Needs of the Devastated Countries of the United Nations for Long-Term and Short-Term Financing of Urgent Reconstruction Requirements (E/288), submitted in accordance with resolution 5 (III) adopted at the Council's third session.

The report covered the following Member countries: Belgium-Luxembourg, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Netherlands, Poland and Yugoslavia. It covered only European areas, to avoid duplication with the Working Group for Asia and the Far East of the Temporary Sub-Commission on Economic Reconstruction of Devastated Areas. It included, however, four non-member countries—Austria, Finland, Hungary and Italy—on the grounds that the United Nations Special Technical Committee on Relief Needs after the Termination of UNRRA considered in its report all countries formerly assisted by UNRRA, and that the existing means of international credit had been drawn upon both by Members and non-members of the United Nations.

On March 28 the Council adopted resolution 34(IV), inter alia requesting the Secretary-General to extend the study to all devastated areas of the United Nations and to present a further report on Financial Needs, especially in respect of the net requirements of the devastated countries for freely convertible foreign currency.⁴¹

The Secretary-General accordingly reported to the fifth session of the Council on the action taken (E/457 and Add. 1).

A questionnaire (E/457, Annex 1) had been sent to the following Member Governments: Australia (for New Guinea and Papua), Belgium, Byelorussian S.S.R., China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Greece, India, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, Poland, Siam, Ukrainian S.S.R., U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States (for Southern Korea) and Yugoslavia. For the same reasons for which non-member countries were included in the Secretary-General's interim report, the questionnaire was also sent to the Governments of the following non-member countries: Albania, Austria, Finland, Hungary and Italy.

The questionnaire covered, inter alia, the estimates for 1947 of quantities and costs of commodities, requirements and receipts of foreign exchange, gold and foreign exchange holdings, credits and loan applications.

Up to July 27, 1947, replies had been received from the following Governments: Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, France, India, Philippines, United Kingdom, United States (for Southern Korea), Albania, Austria and Finland.

The Secretary-General's report was considered by the Council at its 93rd plenary meeting on July 24. As the Secretary-General's questionnaire had been answered by only a few countries, the Council decided simply to take note of it (resolution 64(V)).

The Secretary-General issued a full report on the Foreign Exchange Position of the Devastated Countries on September 22, 1947 (E/576), and a supplement thereto (E/576/Add. 1) on October 7. Both were later combined into a single document (E/576/Rev. 1) issued on November 20, 1947, to which an addition (E/576/Rev. 1/Add. 1) was issued on August 9, 1948.

The principal differences between the interim report (E/288 and Rev. 1) and the report are that the latter contained fuller and more recent information concerning the balance of payments estimates for 1947 and potential sources of external assistance; and that seven additional countries were included, namely, Burma, Denmark, Norway, Philippines, Siam, Southern Korea and United Kingdom.

The survey indicated that the total 1947 foreign exchange requirements on current account of the 21 countries covered in the report were estimated at the equivalent of $US20,262,000,000, including $US2,639,000,000 for non-members of the United Nations.⁴² The 1947 export and other current receipts for the same countries⁴² were estimated at the equivalent of $US13,154,000,000—with non-members of the United Nations accounting for $US1,083,000,000 of this amount—leaving a foreign exchange deficit for 1947 estimated at the equivalent of $US7,108,000,000. Resources on capital account which the countries concerned expected to become available in 1947, either from reductions of foreign assets, from the sale of gold reserves, from estimated unexpended balances of foreign credits for use in 1947, from UNRRA contributions or from other sources (appropriately reduced to allow for payments on capital account), were estimated to reduce this foreign exchange deficit by 5,469,000,000 U. S. dollar equivalents, leaving an estimated 1947 net deficit of 1,638,300,000 U. S. dollar equivalents.⁴²

The following tabulation, taken from Table 1 of the report, shows the (approximate) estimated 1947 net foreign exchange deficits for the countries concerned:

Country	U.S. Dollar Equivalents
Czechoslovakia	146,000,000
Poland	369,000,000
Yugoslavia	341,600,000
Siam	57,600,000
Albania	26,000,000
Austria	170,200,000
Finland	34,600,000
Hungary	84,800,000
Italy	236,000,000
Burma (not available)	—
Southern Korea	172,500,000
TOTAL	1,638,300,000

The other countries covered in the survey—i.e., Belgium and Luxembourg, Denmark, France (with overseas territories), Greece, Netherlands, Norway, United Kingdom, Ethiopia and Philippines—were expected to meet their anticipated 1947 foreign exchange deficits entirely through resources on capital account (see above) or from other sources.

The report also declared that, as correctly foreshadowed by the interim report, the "task of European reconstruction, not to mention that of the Far East, is far greater than was foreseen when the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund were created and when the major post-war governmental credits were granted".

The supplement (E/576/Rev. 1/Add. 1), which appeared on August 9, 1948, contained a tabulation of postwar international loans and grants up to June 1948, by recipient countries and by sources, covering the whole world, totalling the equivalent of $US27,717,000,000, but excluding certain types of loans and grants.

7. Relief Needs after the Termination of UNRRA

Pursuant to resolution 48(I) on Relief Needs After the Termination of UNRRA, adopted by the General Assembly on December 11, 1946, which called upon all Members of the United Nations to assist in the furnishing of relief and recommended that all Members keep the Secretary-General informed concerning their plans for meeting relief needs in 1947,⁴³ the Secretary-General arranged a number of informal consultations among governments concerning their relief plans and programs. On May 23, 1947, the Secretary-General formally requested all Members of the United Nations for information concerning their plans for meeting relief needs and the progress of their relief activities. A detailed report concerning the above activities, including the replies received from Member Governments, was submitted by the Secretary-General to the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council (E/462 and addenda) and was noted by the Council in resolution 63 (V) at its 107th plenary meeting on August 6. Information subsequently received was noted in the Annual Report of the Secretary-General on the Work of the Organization, July 1947-30 June 1948 (A/315).

On the basis of information made available by Member Governments (not including China), the Secretary-General estimated that the assistance planned ranged from 60 to 70 per cent of the total requirements of $US583 million as estimated by the Special Technical Committee on Relief Needs After the Termination of UNRRA.

Major contributions by the Governments of Australia, Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States are described below.

The Australian contribution of £A4 million, or approximately $US12.8 million, related to post-UNRRA relief, IRO, UNICEF and the UNESCO Reconstruction Fund; almost $5.3 million was stated to be available for general post-UNRRA relief (excluding shipping costs), and 3.2 million for UNICEF. The contribution consisted of wool, food, medical supplies, clothing and certain types of industrial equipment.

The Canadian contribution of about $US18 million included $12.5 million for post-UNRRA relief and $5 million for UNICEF, the remainder being allocated to the Canadian Council for Reconstruction through UNESCO and the Canadian Appeal for Children. The contribution consisted largely of canned and salted fish.

The United Kingdom contribution of £10 million, or approximately $US40 million, was earmarked for Austria and included $6 million in the form of a commercial credit granted for the purchase of wool. To the extent that direct contributions were spent on relief imports such as food, no stipulations were made for repayment, but in so far as the remainder of the contribution was used for the purchase of goods for reconstruction purposes, terms of repayment would be discussed later.

The United States contribution amounted to $300 million, not including $40 million allotted to UNICEF. The assistance programmed consisted of cereals (56 per cent of total value); other foods (11 per cent); fuel (13 per cent); seeds, fertilizers and pesticides (2 per cent); medical supplies (2 per cent); shipping costs (15 per cent); and other (1 per cent).⁴⁴

8. Control of World Oil Resources

The International Co-operative Alliance submitted to the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council an item concerning the control of world oil resources. The Alliance proposed the creation of a United Nations Petroleum Commission under the authority of the Economic and Social Council. This proposal was based on a resolution adopted by the International Co-operative Alliance Congress, held at Zurich in 1946, in which it emphasized

"the immediate need of placing control and administration of the oil resources of the world under an authority of the United Nations, and, as a first step in that direction, the oil resources of the Middle East, by and with the consent of the states involved, these resources to be administered in such a way that co-operative organizations can be assured of receiving an equitable share."

The matter was discussed at the 111th and 112th plenary meetings of the Council on August 11 and 12, 1947.

The ICA presented documents (E/449 and Add.1) in support of its proposal, and its representatives made an explanatory statement to the Council. The Alliance suggested that the United Nations should consider the question urgently because (a) rivalry for the acquisition of new oil fields might endanger the peace of the world; (b) equitable access to world oil resources was a vital condition for the world's economic reconstruction; and (c) there was a tendency on the part of large oil enterprises of many countries to fix prices without considering the interests of the consumer. The Alliance further suggested that a proposal from the United Nations to the states involved to sign a convention or agreement under United Nations auspices might lead to the establishment of the necessary international control. This proposal, it considered, should first be addressed to the Middle East countries, where the greater part of the unexploited oil resources of the world appeared to be situated. Such an agreement should stipulate that oil resources should be exploited in the public interest and assure to all equal access to them.

It was also suggested that the Council might decide to instruct the Secretariat to collect and study information on the subject from Member nations, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations, so as to enable the Economic and Employment Commission to consider it at its next meeting.

In the Council's discussions the view was generally expressed by representatives that if a study were made it should not be confined to only one part of the world, the Middle East. The United States representative felt that the real problem was the present world oil shortage, and that in view of the imminent establishment of the International Trade Organization, consideration of the question should be postponed until the principles of free production and the protection of the consumer, embodied in its Charter, were put into effect. The United Kingdom representative was also in favor of postponing consideration of the question on the grounds that it was not practicable and feasible to consider the question at that time. The representatives of Lebanon and the U.S.S.R. thought that if oil were controlled other raw materials should be controlled also. The French representative suggested that the matter should be studied by the Economic and Employment Commission.

By 8 votes to 2, with 8 abstentions, the Council at its 112th meeting on August 12 decided that it could do no more at its fifth session than take note of the proposals submitted by the International Co-operative Alliance (resolution 66(V)).

9. Question of the Damage Caused to the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia by the Withholding of Its Gold Reserves by the United States of America

At its 142nd meeting, on February 16, 1948, the Economic and Social Council began its deliberations concerning the "question of the damage caused to the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia by the withholding of its gold reserves by the United States of America", an item placed on the agenda of the Council's sixth session by the Yugoslav delegation.

In a memorandum (E/624) and in an oral statement made by the Yugoslav representative, who had been invited to the Council's table to participate without vote in the discussion of the case, it was said the United States had refused to restore gold entrusted to it by Yugoslavia during the war for safekeeping; that this refusal was extremely prejudicial to the Yugoslav economy, adversely affecting the achievement of higher living standards, economic and social progress and full employment; and that, because of economic interdependence, the issue in turn also affected the general European economy. The Yugoslav representative submitted a draft resolution (E/SR.142, pp. 4-5) in which the Council would resolve to recommend to the United States Government that "without further delay it cease causing damage to Yugoslavia by its further retention of the property of the National Bank of the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia now in the safekeeping of the United States".

At the same (142nd) meeting, the representative of the United States stated that the Council was not, in his opinion, an appropriate forum for dealing with the question raised by the Yugoslav Government, since it was not the Council's function to deal with disputes as such which might arise between nations, even if these disputes were of an economic nature; nor was the Council qualified, he submitted, to act as an arbitral tribunal, a conciliation agency or a court. Nevertheless, the representative of the United States added, he wished to indicate that the United States also had claims against Yugoslavia, towards which latter country, moreover, his Government had acted in exactly the same way as it had acted towards many other countries possessing assets in the United States. Whenever claims and counter-claims had been made on one side or the other, negotiations had been opened to reach a simultaneous settlement of all outstanding questions. The method of negotiation between the United States and Yugoslavia had not yet been exhausted, he added, and he hoped that such bilateral negotiations would lead to agreement. The representative of the United States reiterated his opinion that the question raised by Yugoslavia went beyond the Council's competence.

The view that the Council was not competent to consider the Yugoslav complaint was shared by the representatives of Australia, the United Kingdom, Brazil, Turkey and Canada at the 142nd and 143rd meetings of the Council on February 16. Some of these representatives argued that the Council had no right to take up any particular dispute, even if it contained important economic aspects, unless it were of general international interest; and that the Council had no right to address a recommendation to a particular country, as distinct from recommendations addressed to Members of the United Nations in general. Several representatives held that Yugoslavia should have addressed its complaint to the International Court of Justice, which, in their opinion, would be fully competent to consider the case.

At the same meetings, however, the representatives of Yugoslavia, the U.S.S.R., Poland and the Byelorussian S.S.R. held that the Council's competency to consider the matter could not be open to doubt. They also declared that there had been a precedent when the Council had approved at its third session a resolution recommending that a conference of interested states be held to consider the question of international traffic on the Danube and the restitution to Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia of Danubian barges, then under the control of United States occupation authorities.⁴⁵ They felt that the Council's competency was being questioned in the present case simply because a majority of Council members did not wish to embark upon a matter which would inevitably lead them to some criticism of the United States.

The representative of Denmark, at the 143rd meeting, suggested that the Council refer the Yugoslav case to the Economic Committee with the request that it "examine the question whether the Council is competent to deal with a matter of this kind" and that it "submit a reasoned report to the Council, serviceable for future similar cases". This Danish suggestion was adopted by a vote of 9 to 7, with 2 abstentions, while a second part of the same Danish proposal—viz., that the Economic Committee, if it did decide the matter came within the Council's competence, should also report on the substance of the Yugoslav proposal—was rejected by a vote of 10 to 5, with 3 abstentions.

The Economic Committee considered the question of the Council's competence at its 16th, 17th and 18th meetings on March 2, 3 and 4, 1948. At the Committee's request, the Secretary-General prepared a document (E/AC.6/25) setting forth the opinion of the legal department of the Secretariat, namely, that the Council "... has the right to interpret the scope of its own functions and powers, subject to this right being questioned where a conflict exists. (b) That the Council has jurisdiction to deal with the item in question and any other international economic matter from the economic aspect. (c) That the Council has also jurisdiction to deal with the item in question and any other international economic matter from the dispute aspect, provided it considers such dispute to be related to an international economic problem and to be of a nature such as would primarily be the concern of the Council. (d) That the Council would never have jurisdiction to deal with a dispute as such, but only with a dispute of an economic character of the kind outlined in this memorandum."

Also before the Economic Committee was an Australian note (E/AC.6/23), holding that the Yugoslav case was primarily a legal dispute and that it was "not appropriate" for the Council to deal with such a dispute, which should be settled by negotiation, or, if necessary, by arbitration or by reference to the International Court of Justice.

There was complete agreement, in the Economic Committee, on only one point: that it was up to the Council itself to decide its own jurisdiction in a given case. A majority of members, however, disagreed with the view that the Yugoslav case could be regarded as falling within the Council's jurisdiction, although they employed differing lines of argument to arrive at this conclusion. A minority—the representatives of Yugoslavia, the U.S.S.R., the Byelorussian S.S.R. and Poland—defended the thesis that the Council was competent in the matter.

Yugoslavia proposed a draft resolution (E/AC.6/27) to the effect that the Council "is competent to consider the case submitted by the Yugoslav delegation". It was rejected by a vote of 12 to 3, with 2 abstentions. The Committee, by a vote of 11 to 3, with 3 abstentions, then adopted a United States draft resolution, amended by the representative of France, to the effect that the Council "decides that this question does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Council" (E/743).

The representative of Poland, declaring that one of the objections raised against Council consideration of the Yugoslav case, namely, that it concerned only one or two Members of the United Nations rather than Members generally, could be met by adopting a general resolution, proposed a draft resolution (E/AC.6/28) in which the Council would have resolved "to recommend Member States to return all monetary reserves which they have received during the war for safekeeping from countries victims of aggression by Germany, Japan or their allies". The Chairman of the Economic Committee ruled that consideration of this draft resolution, which dealt with the substance of the question, would be beyond the Committee's terms of reference, and that the proposal was therefore inadmissible.

Committee was discussed by the Council at its 167th to 170th meetings on March 8 and 9. A roll-call vote at the 169th meeting on March 9 found all but four Council members supporting the conclusion that the Yugoslav case did not fall within the Council's competence. Of the four members not supporting this conclusion, three, the Byelorussian S.S.R., Poland and the U.S.S.R., voted against it, while the fourth, Lebanon, abstained. Before taking this vote, the Council had upheld a presidential ruling, challenged by the representative of Poland, that a Polish amendment (E/743/Add. 1), which would have reversed the Economic Committee's recommendation, was inadmissible.

Finally, the Council, after a series of votes on modifications proposed by the representatives of Denmark (E/760), Venezuela (E/759), and, jointly, Chile, France, the United Kingdom and Venezuela (E/763), at its 170th meeting on March 9, 1948, adopted the resolution reproduced below (111(VI)). While thus accepting the basic principle of the Council's lack of competence in the Yugoslav case, the Council, at the suggestion of the representative of Venezuela, added a paragraph expressing the hope that the United States and Yugoslavia would soon settle their dispute, the vote on this paragraph being 13 to 2, with 3 abstentions. In withholding support from this recommendation, the representatives of Turkey, Canada and Denmark explained that they thought it contradictory for the Council to express its hope for the settlement of a matter which it regarded as being outside its competence, adding that they personally shared the hope but questioned the propriety of including this paragraph, which to some extent constituted a recommendation, in the resolution.

Other representatives felt that there was no inconsistency, since the paragraph in question was an implied appeal for conciliation rather than a recommendation, and thus did not contradict the view that the Council itself was not competent to deal with the matter.

The resolution adopted at the 170th meeting on March 9 (111(VI)) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having examined the question as to whether it should consider the substance of the matter raised by the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia regarding its gold reserves in the United States of America;

"Considering that it could not examine the substance of this matter without thus being led into the consideration of the different aspects of the particular dispute existing between the United States of America and the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia;

"Considering that it has no competence to take cognizance of such aspects because of the juridical issues involved,

"Decides that this matter does not fall within the competence of the Council; and

"Expresses its hope that the United States of America and the Federal People's Republic of Yugoslavia will settle their dispute as soon as possible."

10. Joint Economic Board for Palestine

In accordance with the General Assembly's resolution 181(II),⁴⁶ the Economic and Social Council, at its 174th meeting on March 11, considered the question of the election of the three non-Palestinian members of the Joint Economic Board for Palestine. The U.S.S.R. representative, supported by the Byelorussian and Polish representatives, proposed that the Council should proceed to elect the three members at its sixth session; the proposal was rejected by the Council by 9 votes to 3, with 6 abstentions. Other representatives, including the United States representative, thought that the question should be deferred to the next session, since procedural questions had not been solved and the Council had not yet received the necessary information; moreover, the Palestine Commission had recommended that the question should be dealt with at the seventh session of the Council. The Chilean, Netherlands and New Zealand representatives considered that the question of the election itself was not on the agenda, but merely the necessary preliminary measures. The Council adopted by 14 votes, with 4 abstentions, a compromise proposal (E/773) jointly put forward by Poland and Venezuela with amendments proposed by Canada, U.S.S.R., Denmark and the United States. In this resolution (112(VI)) it requested Member States to submit to the Secretary-General, not later than June 15, 1948, the names of suitable candidates for nomination as non-Palestinian members of the Joint Economic Board, and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Council's seventh session the list of nominees for election after consulting the Palestine Commission on the terms and conditions of service.

11. Co-ordinated Action to Meet the World Food Situation

At its sixth session the Council considered an item proposed by the Food and Agriculture Organization concerning co-ordinated action to meet the continuing world food crisis (E/613, E/666).

⁴⁶ See p. 251.

The FAO drew the Council's attention to the urgent need for co-operation between all United Nations agencies in a sustained campaign to increase food production. It drew attention (E/613) to the increased pressure of demand, through population growth, full employment policies and more equitable distribution, and showed that the world production of food was not substantially on the increase. The FAO Conference at Geneva had adopted a resolution referring to the Economic and Social Council the problem of the needed parallel development in industry, and FAO outlined the types of action which it could take through its Member nations and those which were outside its scope (E/666).

The Council considered the question during its sixth session, at its 147th and 158th plenary meetings on February 20 and March 2, and the 14th and 15th meetings of its Economic Committee on February 25 and March 1.

Many representatives stressed the gravity of the problem and the necessity for concerted action by the United Nations, its economic commissions and the specialized agencies. The Australian, French, United Kingdom and United States representatives regretted that the FAO report, though valuable as an analysis, did not contain more specific recommendations. The United States representative thought that more information should be requested from FAO on the following points: a precise definition of the nature of the food crisis in its immediate and long-range aspects; an analysis of the non-agricultural factors impeding agricultural production, such as the lack of capital and of transport facilities and adverse health conditions, especially in regard to areas where food production could be increased within a relatively short period; the type of co-ordinated action possible for increasing food production, such as improving transportation or increasing fertilizer or coal shipments to a particular area; and an estimate of the potential increase of food production resulting from the application of those measures.

The U.S.S.R. representative recalled the General Assembly's recommendations (resolution 45(I))⁴⁷ on equitable food distribution regardless of political considerations, which, he stated, had not been implemented. A U.S.S.R. amendment (E/AC.6/20) to the effect that certain states had failed to carry out the recommendations of the General Assembly's resolution 45 (I) and that in consequence food prices had risen to the detriment of the consumers, was defeated by 14 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, in the Economic Committee, and upon being presented again in the Council was defeated in paragraph by paragraph votes. A drafting sub-committee of the Economic Committee considered a joint draft resolution proposed by France, the United States, Chile and Canada (E/AC.6/W.8) and amendments proposed by the representatives of Chile, China, Netherlands, Poland, U.S.S.R. and United Kingdom (E/AC.6/20). It submitted a text which was approved with one drafting amendment by the Economic Committee (E/716), and, with the addition of a Polish amendment (E/AC.6/20) by the Council at its 158th plenary meeting, by 13 votes, with 4 abstentions. This resolution (103(VI)) called on Member States to "give serious consideration to the continuing world food shortage and take measures individually and in co-operation with the FAO and, where appropriate, with other international agencies and organizations of which they are members, to contribute to the solution of these problems". The resolution also invited the specialized agencies concerned and the regional economic commissions, in consultation with FAO, to study suitable measures to increase food production, by the elimination of the supply shortage of materials directly and indirectly affecting the production of fertilizers, agricultural machinery and the availability of transport. The Council also initiated arrangements under which it would give further attention to this problem at subsequent sessions by asking FAO to report to the seventh session of the Council on progress achieved in the co-ordination of these studies and to report to "the first session of the Council following the 1948 Annual Conference of the FAO" (i.e., the Council's eighth session) on the measures taken by Member States, regional commissions and the specialized agencies to alleviate the world food crisis. FAO was also asked to recommend what further action might be taken.

At its seventh session, the Council received the report of FAO (E/817) on progress in the co-ordination of studies and suitable measures to bring about an increase in food production. The report described the arrangements and consultations held by FAO with the regional economic commissions of the Council and with the specialized agencies.

FAO had recommended to the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East the establishment of a joint Working Party on Agricultural Requisites with representatives of the Executive Secretary of ECAFE and the Director-General of FAO. It had proposed to the Economic Commission for Latin America a joint working party comprising personnel of ECLA and FAO to examine agricultural development plans with a view to determining requirements of production requisites, and working parties of experts representing Member Governments to examine and deal with the measures necessary to supply these requisites. As a result of a joint recommendation by the Director-General of FAO and the Executive Secretary of ECE, the third session of ECE had established an ad hoc committee on agricultural problems to determine problems militating against the development and rehabilitation of Europe and European agriculture, the solution of which would be facilitated by co-operative measures by FAO and ECE, and to recommend the best means of securing this co-operation. The Executive Secretary of ECE had been authorized to convene, on the basis of the findings of the ad hoc committee and in consultation with the Director-General of FAO, working parties on specific matters requiring immediate action.

Membership in the ad hoc committee was open to members of ECE and to European Members of FAO who were not members of ECE. FAO had also held consultations with ILO, WHO Interim Commission, UNESCO, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund.

The report was considered by the Council at the 32nd and 33rd meetings of its Economic Committee on August 13 and 14, and at its 222nd plenary meeting on August 27. After considering a draft resolution submitted by the United States (E/AC.6/W.20) and amendments proposed by Peru (E/AC.6/W.25), France (E/AC.6/W.26) and the U.S.S.R. (E/AC.6/W.27), the Economic Committee proposed to the Council a resolution (E/980/Rev.1) concerning the arrangements reported by FAO and, as the other proposals and verbal suggestions of representatives had to do with the substantive question of increasing food supplies, decided to adjourn further consideration of the question until its eighth session, when the further report of FAO would be received. The majority of representatives expressed approval of the steps taken by FAO.

A U.S.S.R. amendment (E/AC.6/W.27), to the effect that the co-operation of regional economic commissions with specialized agencies must be within the framework of existing agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and therefore "must take place by means of consultations and not by setting up joint committees or other joint organs", was defeated in the Economic Committee by a vote of 12 to 3, with 2 abstentions, and upon being presented again in the Council (E/1023/Rev.1) was defeated by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention.

The United Kingdom representative opposed the creation of standing joint committees and thought that co-operation between FAO and regional commissions could best be secured at the working party level by discussions between technical experts. The French representative emphasized the importance of consultation by FAO with certain non-governmental organizations.

The Council at its 222nd plenary meeting on August 27 adopted the resolution proposed by the Economic Committee (E/980/Rev.1), with amendments proposed by the United States (E/994). These amendments, which were adopted by 14 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions, provided that the Council should note the organizational arrangements which had been made, and deleted a clause authorizing the establishment where necessary of joint ad hoc working parties.

The resolution, which was adopted by the Council by a vote of 15 to 2, with 1 abstention (resolution 140 (VII)), noted with satisfaction the progress recorded in the report of FAO with regard to the co-ordination of the work in this field. The Council also noted "the organizational arrangements which have been made in connexion with this work" and requested that FAO, and other specialized agencies and regional commissions continue their efforts in the closest co-operation.

12. Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements

The Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements was established at the fourth session of the Economic and Social Council by resolution 30 (IV) to facilitate inter-governmental consultation and action with respect to commodity problems.

The Committee held its first session in Geneva in August and September 1947. It expressed the belief that duplication of effort and overlapping of function would be avoided by a wide circulation of information about the work of various commodity organizations. It therefore prepared a survey of the activities of various international organizations operating in the commodity field and of the guiding principles of the Commodity Chapter of the ITO Charter. This Review of International Commodity Arrangements was issued in November 1947 (E/CA/2).⁴⁸

Under the resolution establishing the Committee, the Chairman was to represent the Preparatory Committee of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment. However, this Preparatory Committee ceased to exist on the convening of the Conference on November 21, 1947. Accordingly, the Economic and Social Council at its sixth session (161st plenary meeting) on March 3, 1948, by 14 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, requested the Secretary-General, as suggested by the Conference, to amend the composition of the Committee to provide that the Chairman be nominated by the Interim Commission for an International Trade Organization (resolution 110 (VI)). The Interim Commission, through its Executive Board, subsequently nominated Sir James Helmore as Chairman.

The Committee co-operates closely with study groups and other international organizations concerned with commodity matters. In March 1948, a Rice Meeting was held in the Philippines under the joint auspices of ICCICA and FAO to stimulate co-operative action in dealing with the rice situation. At this meeting a constitution for an international rice organization was drafted; the resultant International Rice Commission was to hold its first session on March 7, 1949. ICCICA subsequently collaborated in developing arrangements between the various commodity groups, the FAO and the United Nations Statistical Office to prevent duplication in the collection of commodity statistics from governments. In order to avoid duplication of work, the Secretariat of ICCICA, which is provided by the Department of Economic Affairs, also performs certain services for the Interim Commission for the International Trade Organization.

The Committee met in Geneva in September 1948 and prepared a Review of International Commodity Problems, 1948.⁴⁹ The Review set out in general terms some analysis of the nature of the international problems relating to primary commodities, explained the principles and methods that had been accepted as a guide in dealing with these problems and reviewed inter-governmental action in the field.

The Review included a survey of the current situation in certain commodities, and the Committee pointed out that, while there were significant variations from commodity to commodity, an improvement over the immediate postwar supply situation had taken place in 1948. Reference was made to the glut of primary commodities during the depression of the thirties and attention was drawn to the inter-related interests of all countries in preventing such conditions. During 1948 inter-governmental discussions helped in the co-ordination of national programs and policies regarding a number of primary commodities, including wheat, rice, sugar, tin, rubber, wool and cotton, but no formal agreements relating to any of them came into force.

13. Timber Conference

At its fourth session, on March 28, 1947, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 31 (IV) welcoming the initiative taken by the Food and Agriculture Organization in calling an international timber conference to convene in Czechoslovakia on April 28, 1947, and urging Members of the United Nations, to whose economy Europe's production, import and export of forest products was important, to participate in the conference.⁵⁰

The Food and Agriculture Organization submitted to the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council a report (E/455) unanimously adopted by the Conference, which ended on May 10, 1947. The report recommended short-term measures to relieve the timber shortage and long-term measures for the restoration of forests, adequate management, improved working conditions in the forests and technical programs in forest industries.⁵¹

The Conference recommended that a European Timber Committee should be set up within the framework of the Economic Commission for Europe with the technical assistance of FAO, and that it should pay particular attention to:

"(a) increasing available timber supplies and decreasing waste of wood in order to help in meeting the needs of European reconstruction.

"(b) aiding in reducing economic difficulties mentioned in the resolution on increased production by certain countries by assisting them in obtaining necessary economic help.

"(c) the satisfactory distribution of available timber supplies."

Considering that the forest and timber problems of all European countries and of the non-European countries adjacent to the Mediterranean formed a technical whole, the Conference invited ECE to permit all such interested countries to participate in work in connection with forests and timber.

The report of FAO was considered by the Council at its 99th plenary meeting on July 29, 1947.

The French representative proposed verbally a draft resolution, in which the Council would state that, having considered the report and noted the recommendations of the Conference, it urged the governments concerned to take steps along the lines of the recommendations of the Conference, and noted with satisfaction that ECE had set up a Timber Sub-Committee and would therefore be able, with the technical assistance of FAO, to pay special attention to the three measures suggested by the Conference (see above). The French representative agreed to amend the resolution to include a suggestion from the United States representative that a request for advice from FAO be made by the prospective lender, such as the International Bank, and not at the instance of the individual country as recommended by the Conference.⁵²

The U.S.S.R. and Cuban representatives thought that the Council should take no decision on the substance of the recommendations contained in the report until it had been considered by FAO at its forthcoming annual conference. A Cuban proposal that the Council should merely take note of the report was voted on at the 99th meeting on July 29, and after one tie vote, was adopted by the Council by 7 votes to 6 (resolution 64(V)).

14. United Nations Scientific Conference on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources

The Economic and Social Council on March 28, 1947 (resolution 32(IV)), decided to call a United Nations Scientific Conference on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources for the purpose of exchanging information on techniques in this field and requested the Secretary-General to undertake the necessary preparatory work.

Accordingly the Secretary-General presented a report (E/605) to the sixth session of the Council. The Secretary-General recalled that according to the Council's resolution the Conference was to be "devoted solely to the exchange of ideas and experience on the matter among engineers, resource technicians, economists and other experts in related fields". Accordingly, the tentative agenda provided for a series of plenary sessions to discuss matters of broad general interest to technicians and administrators in the several resource fields with particular emphasis on the inter-relations of the various techniques in progress of resource development. In addition, technical sessions would give experts an opportunity to exchange information on specialized subjects, such as minerals, fuels, power, water, soils, crops, livestock, forests, grazing range, fish and wild-life. The Secretary-General recommended that the conference should be scheduled to convene on May 16, 1949, and adjourn on June 3, 1949, and that it should be held in the United States. In view of considerations advanced by the Advisory Committee which had been established under the terms of the resolution and which consisted of representatives of specialized agencies with important responsibilities in the fields related to the Conference program and other experts, the Secretary-General was exploring the possibilities of holding the Conference at a site away from the United Nations headquarters. These considerations were that another location might provide greater possibilities for observing practical applications of conservation techniques in the field, for information discussions between delegates and for saving time in travel to and from meetings.

The Secretary-General contemplated four main classes of participants in the Conference: (1) representatives from governmental services, members of non-governmental organizations and individuals to be selected from Member Governments; (2) individual specialists selected with the advice of the Preparatory Committee; (3) representatives of the United Nations and the specialized agencies; and (4) representatives of interested international organizations and learned societies and distinguished members of the professions, to be admitted at the discretion of the Secretary-General.

The Secretary-General proposed to expand the existing Advisory Committee into a Preparatory Committee and also to convene in certain regions informal meetings of experts to secure their views and advice on detailed plans. He requested the Council to establish a small temporary Consultative Committee from which he might seek advice concerning procedure and organization.

The report was considered by the Council at its 137th plenary meeting on February 11. The United States, Peruvian and Chilean representatives questioned the necessity of a temporary Consultative

⁵² The Conference had recommended that "FAO, on the request of any individual member government applying for a loan, should call the attention of the appropriate international organizations to the need of international credits" for the fulfilment of national forestry policies, improvement of exploitation facilities, development of new forest resources and technical improvement of forest industries. (Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations—Report of the International Timber Conference, Mariánské Lázně, Czechoslovakia, 28 April–10 May 1947.)

Committee in addition to the Preparatory Committee. The Peruvian and Chilean representatives stressed the importance of the proposed conference from the point of view of under-developed countries, and the Peruvian representative suggested that it might be well to provide for the participation at the Conference of representatives of the regional economic commissions established or contemplated by the Council.

The United Kingdom representative urged that the number of items on the agenda of the Conference should be limited, otherwise there would be risk of not achieving practical and useful results; if the agenda were too full, governments might not be able to spare their specialists for a long enough period. Care should be taken to avoid duplication of the work of other organizations. This view was supported by the representatives of the Netherlands, China, Canada and Brazil. The Netherlands representative stated that the Conference should be a meeting of technical experts and not of diplomats, and emphasized the importance of co-operation with the specialized agencies. The Danish representative felt that the Conference was original in idea and method of preparation.

The representatives of the United Kingdom, China, Canada and France thought that if a location other than Lake Success were chosen for the Conference the resulting costs should not be borne by the United Nations budget.

The Chinese representative considered that since each country had to consult its experts on the subject of the Conference program the time allowed was too limited, and suggested that the Conference should be postponed to the end of the year 1949 or even the beginning of 1950.

The U.S.S.R. representative proposed that in view of the vast program suggested for discussion at the Conference, the Council should specify that the Conference should confine its purpose to an exchange of experience in the field of technical methods for the conservation and utilization of resources.

The Council unanimously adopted a United States draft resolution (E/645) as amended by the U.S.S.R. and Canada. As amended it reads as follows (resolution 109(VI)):

"The Economic and Social Council

"Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the preparations being made for the United Nations Scientific Conference on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources (document E/605); and

"Requests the Secretary-General to proceed with plans for the Conference, keeping in mind that the task of the Conference is to be limited to an exchange of experience in the techniques of the conservation and utilization of resources, and to include in his progress report to the seventh session of the Council his definite recommendations concerning the arrangements for the Conference and its site, taking into consideration the discussion of the Council at its sixth session."

Accordingly the Secretary-General, proceeding with the advice of the Preparatory Committee created in accordance with the Council's resolution 32(IV), made a further report to the seventh session of the Council (E/827/Rev.1). The Council also had before it the report of the Preparatory Committee to the Secretary-General (E/869).

The Secretary-General reported that Members of the United Nations and other governments participating in the regional economic commissions of the United Nations would be invited to select individuals to attend the Conference, in addition to which the Secretary-General might invite representatives of non-governmental organizations, other interested international organizations and learned societies, and distinguished individual experts. He recommended that the Conference should be convened for fifteen working days during May and June 1949. He stated that if he could make arrangements not involving appreciable additions to costs for holding the Conference at a site within the United States that would offer particular advantages for a scientific conference devoted to resource techniques, he would recommend the selection of such a site, otherwise he proposed that the Conference should be held at the interim headquarters of the United Nations.

The Preparatory Committee consisted of experts nominated by FAO, ILO, UNESCO and the Interim Commission of WHO, and experts appointed by the Secretary-General from nine countries, to serve in their individual capacities.⁵³ It held meetings on June 7, 21 and 25 and from June 30 to July 1, 1948, and considered the provisional program of the United Nations Scientific Conference on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources (E/Conf.7/1) together with comments and suggestions from 21 governments received in response to a letter sent out by the Secretary-General on March 12. The Committee reported (E/869) that detailed suggestions had been contained in the replies received from the Governments of Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, France, India, Netherlands, Philippines, Siam, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom and United States. In formulating the Conference program the Committee had also had suggestions from FAO, UNESCO, and ILO and from the World Power Conference, which had suggested modifications of the part of the Conference program relating to the generation and utilization of power. In accordance with the suggestions of several governments, the Committee had reduced the complexity of the program by a substantial decrease in the number of section meetings. The Committee recommended that the Conference should not be held at the interim headquarters, but at some place where little time would be lost in local transportation, where the participants would be able to inspect significant resource developments and where they would be able to associate with each other informally without inconvenience.

The matter was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its 206th plenary meeting on August 19. In introducing the report, the Assistant Secretary-General for Economic Affairs stated that the plenary sessions of the Conference would review the world resource situation, basic resource techniques and resource techniques of special interest to less developed countries. Specialists would discuss more specific topics in sectional meetings, he stated—for example, power and energy resources, forests, mineral resources, or land, as well as specific techniques and practices for resource conservation and utilization as they applied to particular resources. The French, Peruvian, Canadian and U.S.S.R. representatives expressed misgivings that the scope of the Conference was too wide to give adequate consideration to the technical subjects covered.

After discussing the alternative merits of holding the Conference at or away from headquarters, the Council, by 13 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, decided (resolution 141 (VII)) that the Conference should be held in the United States, "the site to be outside the New York City area if the additional cost to the United Nations would not exceed $40,000, but otherwise at interim headquarters". The Council approved the Secretary-General's recommendation that the Conference should be held in May or June 1949 for fifteen working days and requested him to proceed with the preparatory work required.⁵⁴

The primary concern of the Conference, according to its provisional program (E/CONF.7/1),⁵⁵ would be the practical application of science to resource management and human use rather than to minute refinements in research and scientific methodology. The provisional program stated that the conservation and wise utilization of natural resources are problems of immediate concern to all nations, and that no country, however favored, has yet succeeded in exploiting to the full the possibilities which the scientific utilization of resources offers for a sustained advance in the standard of life. The requisite methods and techniques for such an advance, it was pointed out, are at hand or in process of development, as a result of the work of many experts of many kinds throughout the world. It was stated that the Conference was intended as a step in the mobilization of the world's scientific and practical knowledge so as to equip the nations of the world for the task of raising and maintaining the living standards of their people.

The revised program of the Conference (E/CONF.7/2) fell under the following main headings: the world resources situation—using and conserving resources, resource technique of special interest to less-developed countries; experience in the inter-related application of resource techniques; and summary and review of the Conference.

15. Proposed Economic Conference of the Amazon Basin Countries

At its seventh session (225th plenary meeting on August 28) the Economic and Social Council considered a Peruvian proposal (E/826) that the Council should call an International Economic Conference of the Amazon Basin Countries "with the purpose of setting up the framework for the best social utilization of its natural resources, that will benefit a world-expanding economy", and should request the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for the Conference. The proposal was supported by the Brazilian and Venezuelan representatives. At the suggestion of the Brazilian representative the Peruvian representative agreed to alter his proposal so that the Conference should be held in 1949 rather than in 1948. The New Zealand representative proposed (E/1045), in view of the large amount of preparatory work required for such a conference, that the question should be studied by the Economic Commission for Latin America, the secretariat of which was already engaged on an extensive economic survey of the whole area. The Council by 9 votes to 6, with 3 abstentions, rejected the Peruvian proposal, and adopted by 10 votes, with 8 abstentions, the New Zealand proposal, with an amendment proposed by Brazil providing for consultation with the Institute of the Hylean Amazon. In its resolution (146(VII)) the Council referred:

"to the Economic Commission for Latin America for its analysis and consideration, in consultation, where appropriate, with the International Institute of the Hylean Amazon, the proposal for an economic conference of the Amazon Basin countries."

16. Fiscal Questions

a. PROGRAM ESTABLISHED BY THE COUNCIL

The Fiscal Commission held its first session at Lake Success from May 19 to 29, 1947, and submitted a report to the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council dealing with the work which might be undertaken in its field (E/440).

This report suggested: certain general arrangements concerning the establishment within the United Nations Secretariat of an international fiscal information or reference service; the provision of technical advice to governments and international bodies; the co-operation to be obtained from governments; and the establishment of liaison with national fiscal administrations.

The Economic and Social Council considered the report at its 87th and 93rd plenary meetings on July 22 and 24, and at the fifth meeting of its Economic Committee on July 21. General approval was expressed of the report. Various representatives, including those of Canada, Czechoslovakia, Norway, the United States and the United Kingdom, felt that in view of the ambitious nature of the program and the expenditure involved in the work proposed for the Secretariat, a priority should be established among the tasks suggested. The representative of Canada proposed that priority should be given to fiscal research that had been interrupted during recent years; the representative of Norway suggested that priority should be given to the questions of double taxation and fiscal evasion; the United States representative suggested that the priority should be: (1) performance of service functions; (2) collection of data on which the Commission would base recommendations of substance; (3) compilation and publication of data; and (4) continuation of the work of the League of Nations in the field of international taxation, etc. The representatives of China and Lebanon expressed particular approval of the recommendations of the Commission concerning technical help to be given to economically less advanced countries.

The representative of the U.S.S.R., who was the Chairman of the Fiscal Commission, explained that the Commission had unanimously approved the report and the majority of the Commission had considered the work proposed as a minimum, taking into account the financial implications involved.

The Council decided to leave it to the Secretary-General to take the necessary measures to carry out the Commission's recommendations "within the limits of available financial resources".

It accordingly adopted without discussion, at the 73rd plenary meeting on July 24, resolution 67(V) as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"1. Takes note of the report of the first session of the Fiscal Commission (document E/440);

"2. Requests the Secretary-General, within the limits of available financial resources:

"(a) To take appropriate measures to build up a fiscal information service, for the purpose of providing authoritative information on fiscal problems which may be referred to the Commission by Member Governments, the Economic and Social Council and its commissions, other organs of the United Nations, the specialized agencies, and non-governmental agencies in category A;

"(b) To arrange to make available, on request, technical advice, information and assistance on fiscal matters coming within the terms of reference of the Fiscal Commission, to the Economic and Social Council, its other commissions, and other organs of the United Nations, the specialized agencies and Member Governments, with special reference, in the case of economically less advanced countries, to means of facilitating their development and raising their standards of living, in accordance with resolution No. 51 (IV) of the Council of 28 March 1947;

"(c) To report promptly to the Fiscal Commission all cases where, in his opinion, the programmes, recommendations or projects considered or approved by the Economic and Social Council or any of its other commissions contain important fiscal provisions or implications which may touch on matters coming within the purview of the Fiscal Commission;

"(d) To request Member Governments to co-operate with the United Nations by transmitting to the Secretary-General, as soon as practicable after release, for the use of the Fiscal Commission, copies of publications issued by them relating to budgets, Government revenue and other receipts, appropriations and expenditure, public debt, special studies of taxation problems and information on the most significant facts and trends relative to public finance in the course of each year;

"(e) To arrange for the compilation and publication of a Public Finance Survey, 1937-1947, in continuation of the series 'Public Finance' formerly published by the League of Nations regarding Government revenue and other receipts, classified as to sources; expenditures, classified according to principal categories; and public debt, classified according to dates of maturity, domicile, and rates of interest; and, if practicable, to make preparations for the periodic publication in the future of the information outlined above;

"(f) To arrange for the publication of the volume Public Debt, 1914-1947, which was commenced by the League of Nations;

"(g) To ascertain from other commissions whether any special studies of a technical nature should be made by the Fiscal Commission in order properly to advise them on the fiscal aspects of their enquiries (for example, fiscal methods relating to anti-depression policies);

"(h) Subject to the policies of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, to invite non-member Governments to co-operate in supplying the information listed in the preceding paragraphs;

"(i) To make a review and revision of the work which has already been accomplished by the League of Nations in the field of international tax problems, with particular reference to further action to be taken for the solution of such problems;

"(j) To collect, publish and distribute the text of treaties for the prevention of double taxation, and for mutual assistance in the collection of taxes and the exchange of information;

"(k) To obtain from Members of the United Nations and to compile information on their administrative practices, so that Members negotiating treaties may know what techniques are available for securing and exchanging information, and for co-operating in the collection of taxes;

"(l) To collect information on tax systems (including statutes, regulations and administrative practices) particularly those aspects of such systems which "(i) Have the effect of imposing more burdensome taxes on foreigners than on nationals or on international transactions than on domestic ones (for example: those systems which impose higher rates on foreigners; tax capital transfers in or out of a country; refuse foreigners the privilege accorded nationals of deducting expenses attributable to income from the taxing country; provide for presumptive or empirical tax assessments on foreigners);

"(ii) Have the effect of making special concessions to foreigners, or as respects' international transactions;

"(iii) Give taxes extra-territorial application;

"(iv) Tax international travel, transport and communications;

"(v) Make special tax provisions for foreign-held public debt;

"(m) To collect detailed documentary material on internal tax legislation in every country as far as such legislation covers foreign nationals or resources;

"(n) To collect from Members their comments on the model bilateral tax conventions prepared at the Regional Tax Conference held in Mexico City in 1943 under the auspices of the Fiscal Committee of the League of Nations and at the final session of the Fiscal Committee held in London in 1946, the comments to cover three types of treaties: double taxation of income; double taxation of estates and successions; reciprocal administrative assistance, and to circulate these comments to the members of the Fiscal Commission well in advance of the next session;

"(o) To study these problems from the point of view of their effects on international trade and investment;

"(p) To invite Member States, by questionnaires or other appropriate means, to report on fiscal problems which, in their opinion, should be given consideration by the Fiscal Commission, and to request the Secretary-General to furnish to the Commission, before its next session, a list of such problems raised, with appropriate comments.

"3. Notes that information furnished by Member States to the Secretary-General in accordance with these resolutions will be such as is available in accordance with the applicable national regulations.

"4. Requests Members of the United Nations to assist the Secretary-General in the action he may take in compliance with the above recommendations."

b. IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM BY THE SECRETARIAT

Following the conclusion of the first session of the Fiscal Commission and the approval of its recommendations by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 67(V) of July 24, 1947, the Fiscal Division of the Secretariat undertook the following activities and compilations.

(1) Fiscal Information Service.—Action was taken to secure comprehensive material on the fiscal legislation, administration and public finance developments of Member nations. The means used for that purpose were the following: circular letters and questionnaires to Members; contacts with their delegations; correspondence with national officials; missions to a number of countries; and use of Secretariat facilities and public libraries in the area of New York City and in Washington, D. C.

(2) Technical Assistance to Member Governments in the Field of Public Finance.—Exploratory work was done on the financial and administrative aspects of economic development in economically less developed countries, as well as on international tax relations, with a view to rendering technical assistance. The conclusions of this work were to be reported to the Fiscal Commission at its next session in 1949.

Technical assistance in the fiscal field was given in various forms and degrees to Venezuela and Brazil.

Upon the request of the Government of Venezuela, the Fiscal Division took part during 1947 in a program of reform of the public finances and administration of the country, giving technical assistance and advice in various fields, the most important of which were: budgeting (preparation, structure, and formulation of the budget); administrative reform (creation of a civil service); fiscal reform (reorganization of a fiscal department, etc.); and other fields (creation of a central administration of ports). (See E/CN.1/Sub.3/W.4.)

Technical advice was given to the Brazilian Government in the form of a memorandum prepared by the Fiscal Division in July 1948, reviewing certain aspects of international fiscal problems existing in Brazil.

(3) Public Finance Survey.—This work was to have consisted of a series of pamphlets containing tables presenting, on as comparable a basis as possible for some 60 countries, data on government expenditures, revenues, cash position, and debt, together with notes on budgetary procedures and comments relating fiscal developments to economic, social and administrative factors.

Work was started along these lines on various countries. Because of an increasing demand for tabular data, it appeared desirable to make available to the various organs of the United Nations, specialized agencies and Member Governments such information for as many countries as possible at the earliest possible date, without delaying their release until the analytical part of the work had been completed. Consequently, a series of mimeographed documents entitled "Public Finance Data" were prepared for issue by the end of 1948. By September 1948 data had already been collected and was being checked on the following fourteen countries: Argentina, Canada, Chile, China, India, Iran, Ireland, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, United States and Venezuela.

The Public Finance Survey as outlined above does not meet, nor was it originally intended to meet, the need for monthly data on fiscal development which various United Nations organs and specialized agencies have increasingly felt for some time in connection with their research and operations. To meet this requirement, the Fiscal Division, in consultation with the Division of Statistics of the International Monetary Fund, began preparing a questionnaire, to be sent by the Secretary-General to all Member Governments, to assist the United Nations, specialized agencies and Member Governments in analyzing the effects of government financial activities on economic variables such as price, monetary circulation and national income. The questionnaire was to request annual data for the period from 1936 to 1948 and monthly or quarterly data from 1947 regarding the following items:

1. Central government expenditure
2. Central government receipts
3. Results from government monetary operations
4. Foreign grants received
5. Domestic borrowing
6. Redemption of domestic debt
7. Foreign borrowing
8. Redemption of foreign debt
9. Cash balance
10. Aggregate outstanding domestic debt
11. Aggregate outstanding foreign debt

(4) Public Debt 1914-1946.—A volume entitled Public Debt 1914-1946⁵⁶ was published (in English) in August 1948. (The French edition was being prepared for publication in 1949.) This study presented in tabular form data on public debt for 52 countries from 1914-46 and for some twenty countries up to 1947.

For each country, with a few exceptions, two tables were prepared. Table I shows the domestic debt, subdivided into long-term and short-term, the foreign debt and total debt since 1914. Information regarding debt service is given, showing, separately, interest and amortization payments on the domestic and foreign public debt. It also contains for reference purposes data on price movements and exchange rates.

Table II shows the position of the most important loans or types of obligations outstanding, and whenever possible, their purpose, nominal rate of interest, date of issue and maturity. The major differences in concepts and definitions of public debt are discussed in a General Note. Information was provided by finance ministries of Member Governments.

(5) Review of Work of League of Nations.—The Secretariat prepared a comprehensive survey of the history and meaning of the work undertaken by the League of Nations in the field of international tax relations, of the results achieved and of the problems remaining to be dealt with.

(6) Administrative Practices related to the Assessment and Collection of Taxes.—The Fiscal Division of the Secretariat collects and publishes information on the administrative practices in Member countries relating to the assessment and collection of taxes. The compilation of the relevant legislative materials and their analytical and comparative study are designed to aid the governments in the negotiation of tax agreements by making available to them information on the means existing for exchanging information between national revenue authorities and for their co-operation in the collection of taxes.

(7) International Tax Agreements.—The Secretariat prepared for publication in November 1948 the first volume containing the texts of over 100 international tax agreements for the prevention of double taxation and fiscal evasion (E/CN.8/30).⁵⁷ This volume constitutes a continuation of the six-volume Collection of International Tax Agreements and Internal Legal Provisions for the Prevention of Double Taxation and Fiscal Evasion published by the League of Nations from 1928 to 1936. The volume contains a comprehensive index of tax agreements concluded since 1843. The agreements are divided into ten groups according to the subject matter. The three most important groups are those which include, respectively, the General Agreements on Income and Property Taxes, the Agreements on Estate and Gift Taxes and the Agreements on Administrative Assistance between Revenue Authorities. It is planned to publish supplements from time to time with texts of new agreements concluded hereafter.

(8) Survey of Trends in Recent Tax Agreements.—The Secretariat initiated a survey of the nature, meaning and import of trends in recent tax agreements and a comprehensive analysis of such agreements entered into between countries of the same region or at a comparable level of economic development.

(9) Tax Treatment of Foreign Nationals, Resources and Transactions.—The Secretariat collects and publishes information on those aspects of tax systems which accord more burdensome treatment or give special concessions to foreigners or, in respect of international transactions, give taxes extra-territorial application, tax international travel, transport and communications and make special tax provisions for foreign-held public debt. To this end, the Fiscal Division has prepared a "Questionnaire on the Tax Treatment of Foreign Nationals, Assets and Transactions" (E/CN.8/W.19), which refers specifically to each type of direct and indirect tax, listing every aspect which might possibly present differences in the treatment of persons, assets or transactions, depending on whether they are wholly domestic, foreign or international. The documents and information thus collected are intended both for the preparation of individual reports on each country covered and for over-all comparative analysis.

(10) Comments on Model Tax Conventions.—The Secretariat published and distributed statements by Member Governments on their views on the London and Mexico Model Tax Conventions for the avoidance of double taxation and fiscal evasion prepared by the Fiscal Committee of the League of Nations in 1943 and 1946. Ultimately, the Fiscal Division will publish a fully annotated edition of the Model Conventions containing all comments from the Member Governments with a review of the salient differences and problems of the two models.

(11) Effects of Tax Measures on International Trade and Investment.—Preparatory work was undertaken relating to the compilation of source material and the outline of a study on the "Incidence and Economic Effects of Taxation on the Flow of International Trade and Investment", with particular reference to relief measures contained in international tax agreements and national tax legislation.

(12) Implementation of Decisions of Other Organs of the United Nations Specialized Agencies and Non-Governmental Organizations.—In compliance with the resolution of the Economic and Social Council, the Secretariat followed the work of other organs of the United Nations, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations impinging on the field of international tax relations and prepared comprehensive documentation containing information on actions and decisions of those organs which are of interest to the Fiscal Commission.

(13) Liaison and Co-ordination.—Since the work of the Fiscal Commission is closely connected with that of other organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations, the Fiscal Division provided for close co-ordination with them and has been represented at meetings and international conferences.

17. Statistical Activities

The Statistical Commission held its second and third sessions from August 28 to September 4, 1947, and from April 26 to May 6, 1948. The first session of the Sub-Commission on Statistical Sampling was held from September 22 to 27, 1947.⁵⁸ The report of the second session of the Commission (E/577) was considered at the Council's sixth session, and that of its third session (E/795) at the seventh session of the Council. The questions dealt with are considered below.

At its third session the Statistical Commission adopted a program for its future work and decided that priorities should be given to the following studies: review and development of indices of industrial production; development of standards for price indices; revision of the League of Nations Minimum List of Commodities for International Trade Statistics; further study of statistics on national income and related subjects; assistance to governments which may request technical guidance in planning and executing their national censuses in 1950; desirability of achieving comparability in housing statistics; statistical sampling; collaboration with the statistical work of other commissions; and a program of statistical education and training.

The Commission's report was considered at the 30th and 31st meetings of the Council's Economic Committee and at the 220th meeting of the Council. Members expressed appreciation of the work of the Commission. Various members endorsed the program proposed by the Commission calling attention to particular items in it of special interest to them.

a. CO-ORDINATION OF THE STATISTICAL ACTIVITIES OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

The Economic and Social Council on March 29, 1947 (resolution 40(IV)),⁵⁹ requested that periodic reports be made to the Statistical Commission on progress achieved in developing administrative procedures and agreements through which effective statistical co-ordination may be secured between the United Nations and the agencies brought into relationship with it. At its second and third sessions the Commission considered reports from the Secretary-General on the question (E/CN.3/28 and 41) and noted with satisfaction the progress so far achieved.

Under the arrangements made, the Statistical Office has become the central statistical unit in the Secretariat responsible for the co-ordination of United Nations statistics. It conducts statistical investigations on behalf of various parts of the organization, and conducts research and supplies statistics for a wide variety of special purposes.⁶⁰

Inter-agency co-ordination is achieved among other ways through the Consultative Committee on Statistical Matters, composed of representatives of the specialized agencies and the United Nations. By September 21, 1948, the Committee had reached agreements respecting standardization of several technical statistical practices and had assisted in formulating general arrangements for the consolidation or co-ordination of statistical programs. In addition, special procedures to deal with the problems of requests to governments for statistics had been established. The Statistical Office acts as the central point for the exchange of questionnaires and for the collection and dissemination of comments by each agency on draft questionnaires. This permits the needs of international agencies for statistics to be met without duplication in requests to governments. An integrated plan for the preparation and publication of international statistical yearbooks was being worked out between the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

At its third session the Statistical Commission recommended that the United Nations and the specialized agencies plan their programs to develop systematically collected and published statistics rather than rely upon ad hoc requests from governments, with the object of providing that the monthly, quarterly and annual publications of the United Nations and the specialized agencies will include, as far as practicable, all the statistical series needed for the conduct of international affairs.

The Statistical Commission at its third session continued its study of several related aspects of the development of national statistics and the improvement of their comparability. It made proposals to provide more adequately for the recognition of statistical problems peculiar to European countries and the further implementation among European countries of international recommendations on statistical standards. In particular, it considered the special statistical interests of the Economic Commission for Europe. On the Statistical Commission's recommendation, the Council at its 220th plenary meeting on August 27, 1948, adopted by 16 votes to 2 the following resolution (149(VII)B):

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note of the desirability of obtaining the active co-operation of national statistical offices in the implementation of the recommendations of the Statistical Commission, and by providing a channel for the referral by Governments to the Statistical Commission of problems of statistical comparability, and

"Recognizing the relatively large number of European countries with closely related statistical interests, the urgent character of these interests, and the particular opportunity now available of achieving rapid and substantial progress through discussion of these common purposes,

"Requests the Secretary-General to encourage and facilitate consultation among representatives of the statistical agencies of European Governments upon statistical questions."

The Brazilian representative drew attention in the Council's Economic Committee to the particular requirements of countries where statistical services were less developed, and proposed that the Council's recommendation should refer to them and not merely to the particular needs of Europe. His view was supported by the representatives of the United Kingdom and Venezuela, and a joint resolution was worked out by those representatives and adopted by the Committee (E/960). The U.S.S.R. representative in this connection proposed (E/1008) that the resolution would acquire the necessary general character by the omission of the word "European" from the resolution. Other members of the Council, however, felt that the statistical problems of Europe and of the under-developed countries were not the same. The Council adopted by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, resolution 149(VII)C, inviting the Commission at its next session to consider as a matter of urgency "how statistically underdeveloped countries requiring assistance in remedying deficiencies of statistical data can be helped to improve their basic statistical services"; and requesting "the Secretary-General to collect any necessary data on existing statistical deficiencies and possible remedial measures to facilitate early consideration of the problem by the Commission".

The Council also authorized the Statistical Office to undertake a program of technical assistance to Member Governments in connection with plans for censuses of population to be taken in and around 1950. The Statistical Office will arrange for expert consultants to work with census administrations in a limited number of countries to assure adequate planning on administrative and technical matters.

The Statistical Office collaborated with FAO, the Government of Mexico and the Inter-American Statistical Institute in the conduct of a technical training institute in Mexico City from October to December 1948. More than 60 highly qualified census administrators and experts from sixteen countries attended the Institute, which provided instruction for the agriculture and population censuses to be taken in 1950.

b. STANDARD INTERNATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

At its first session, the Statistical Commission established a committee to develop an international standard classification of statistics of industrial activity. At its second session, the Commission recommended that the draft classification so developed (E/CN.3/35) be circulated to Member Governments and specialized agencies for comment. At its third session, the Statistical Commission recommended a revised draft of the International Standard Industrial Classification of all Economic Activities. The classification was considered by the Council at its seventh session at the 30th and 31st meetings of the Economic Committee on August 5 and 11, and at the 220th plenary meeting on August 27, 1948.

The U.S.S.R. representative criticized the proposed classification (E/795/Add.1), in particular, on the ground that it did not take into account activities in countries with planned economies, and suggested that the classification should be reviewed. While various representatives agreed that the classification was not perfect, and saw the difficulties inherent in drafting a classification that would permit a comparison of economic activities in both planned economies and those based on private enterprise, they emphasized the urgent need for adopting an international standard in the field of industrial statistics in order that the statistics collected by national governments in the forthcoming censuses might be organized so as to yield comparable data. A U.S.S.R. proposal (E/1008) that the classification should be referred back to the Commission and that Member Governments should be asked for their comments on it was rejected by a vote of 13 to 3, with 2 abstentions. The Council recommended by 14 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, in resolution 149 (VII) A, that Member Governments:

"... make use of the International Standard Industrial Classification of all Economic Activities either by:

"(a) Adopting this system of classification as a national standard, or

"(b) Rearranging their statistical data in accordance with this system for purposes of international comparability."

A similar program for the development of comparability in international trade statistics was being undertaken by the Statistical Commission. In addition, the work of the International Labour Organisation in developing an international standard classification of occupations was being studied by the Statistical Commission in order to integrate related aspects of the classifications. It was anticipated that these classifications would be available to governments for use in connection with their census programs for 1950. The Secretariat was given the responsibility for formulating a proposal for the development of a statistical classification of commodities for use in general economic analysis.

c. COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF STATISTICS

Three types of statistical publications arise out of the work of the Statistical Office of the United Nations as part of its program in the collection and publication of statistics and the development of statistical standards. The first consists of economic and social statistics of current interest to international organizations and Members of the United Nations published in the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics.

As at September 21, 1948, nearly two thousand separate series were being collected and maintained for publication in the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics. As part of its central responsibility, the Statistical Office collects and maintains certain series primarily for the benefit of one or more of the specialized agencies, such series appearing in their regular publications. On the other hand, many of the series appearing in the Monthly Bulletin are provided by specialized agencies such as the International Labour Organisation and the International Monetary Fund. In addition, the Statistical Office, in co-operation with several specialized agencies, undertakes the collection of monthly statistics of external trade to meet urgent needs of several agencies by a consolidated collection. A Supplement to the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics is published describing in detail the content, scope and limitations of the statistical series appearing in the Monthly Bulletin of Statistics. The Statistical Office also issues Population and Vital Statistics Reports each month. This publication contains the latest estimate of population for each area of the world, and the latest census totals. From time to time special tables dealing with population or vital statistics are also published.

A second type of statistics covering a much wider field of statistics is collected by the United Nations and published in the Statistical Yearbook, which will contain data in the following fields:

- Area, Population and Vital Statistics
- Manpower
- Agriculture, Forestry and Fishing
- Industry
- Transport and Communications
- Internal Trade
- External Trade
- Balance of Payments
- Wages and Prices
- Currency, Banking, Stock Exchange
- National Income
- Public Finance
- Social Statistics
- Education and Culture

This type of Statistics is also published in the Demographic Yearbook, which is designed to be the central source of international data on population, vital statistics and related subjects for the various countries of the world. The first edition will include statistics on area, population, labor force, mortality, natality, nuptiality and international migration, together with an explanatory text and information on sources. These publications form part of a co-ordinated plan for various yearbooks prepared by the specialized agencies and the United Nations. Annual statistics of external trade are also being prepared.

The third type of statistical publication arises out of the specific projects of research or special studies undertaken by the Statistical Office as part of its program for the development of statistics or as a result of research undertaken at the request of one of the organs of the United Nations. Such studies include a report on National Income Statistics of Various Countries, 1938-1947.

d. STATISTICAL SAMPLING

The Sub-Commission on Statistical Sampling, the establishment of which was authorized by the Economic and Social Council at its second session,⁶¹ is composed of individual experts appointed by the Statistical Commission. The Sub-Commission is responsible for advising on the use and application of statistical sampling methods in meeting the needs of the United Nations, specialized agencies and Member Governments for statistical information. At its first session it reported (E/CN.3/37) in detail on: (a) the desirability of carrying out a sample survey in conjunction with censuses proposed for 1950 in the fields of agricultural and population enquiries; (b) the conditions under which a sample survey should be made instead of a complete enumeration; (c) the opportunity for obtaining additional information through the use of the same basic sampling structure; and (d) the advantages of a series of repeated sample surveys in obtaining more detailed information and information of better quality in given fields of statistics.

The Sub-Commission issued a statement on the Uses of Sampling in Censuses of Population, Agriculture, Public Health and Commerce, which illustrates some of the more important uses of the sampling techniques and emphasizes the advantages and disadvantages, and the proper application, of scientific sampling methods. As a basis for its long-range program for the dissemination of information on sampling techniques, the Sub-Commission prepared a series of recommendations concerning the preparation of reports of sampling surveys.⁶²

The Sub-Commission considered specific problems in the application of sampling to agricultural censuses at the request of FAO and began preparing similar recommendations regarding family budget inquiries and manpower statistics at the request of ILO.

e. PROGRAM FOR THE EDUCATION AND TRAINING OF STATISTICIANS

The Economic and Social Council at its seventh session adopted by 15 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, resolution 149(VII)D, approving the recommendation of the Statistical Commission that a study be undertaken in collaboration with the specialized agencies regarding the shortages of trained statisticians and the needs for education and training in statistics which confront international and national statistical organizations, and requesting the Secretary-General to formulate an international program to meet these needs in a report of the fourth session of the Statistical Commission.

f. RESEARCH IN STATISTICAL METHODS AND DEVELOPMENT OF STANDARDS

In addition to the foregoing general program, work in certain special fields has been emphasized by the Statistical Commission and the Statistical Office. With a view to developing comparability and international standards, special programs of research were undertaken on the statistics of national income, national expenditure and related aggregates, and systems of social accounts. In similar fashion, comparability is sought in the statistics of prices, including prices of imports and exports and the construction of index numbers. In order to provide a basic tool for economic analysis, indices of industrial production and the scope and method of the construction of such indices were being studied, so that recommendations regarding their use in current national statistics might be formulated. In addition, a review was begun of the definitions and use of statistics of housing as well as studies of the problems of migration statistics.

A series of Studies of Census Methods, prepared by the Secretariat in collaboration with the statistical staffs of FAO and ILO, is published by the United Nations for the guidance of national statistical officers. Co-operation in the development and promotion of standards for population and vital statistics is part of the program undertaken by the Secretariat working with the staffs of WHO and FAO.

The Statistical Office issues from time to time a brief review and comment on the significant developments in international and national statistical activities in Statistical Notes, which is circulated to statistical offices of Member Governments and international agencies.

Three methodological studies undertaken by the Committee of Statistical Experts of the League of Nations were published by the Secretary-General as directed by the Economic and Social Council Resolution 40 (IV).

g. TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY FOR ECONOMIC STATISTICS UNDER 1928 CONVENTION

In accordance with resolution 24 (I) adopted by the General Assembly on February 12, 1946, relating to the transfer of certain functions and activities of the League of Nations,⁶³ the Statistical Commission at its first session (E/264) requested that a draft protocol amending the International Convention Relating to Economic Statistics (1928) be prepared. The draft was approved by the Commission at its second session, from August 28 to September 4, 1947, and submitted to the Economic and Social Council at the Council's sixth session. The U.S.S.R. and Ukrainian S.S.R. members on the Commission recorded reservations on the grounds that the decision to take over these functions contravened the General Assembly's resolution 54 (I) of December 14, 1946,⁶⁴ empowering the Secretary-General to take over and continue the non-political functions of the League of Nations with the exception of "those functions and activities exercised pursuant to international agreements"; the problems of international co-operation in the sphere of statistics, it was maintained, were comprehensively dealt with by the decisions of the Economic and Social Council. The Ukrainian reservation pointed out that a considerable number of countries belonging to the United Nations took no part in concluding the 1928 Convention, and the U.S.S.R. reservation stated that the actual activities of the Statistical Commission were considerably broader than those of the League of Nations Committee of Statistical Experts and included all the necessary functions previously performed by that Committee.

These arguments were raised again when the question was discussed by the Council at its 136th plenary meeting on February 11, its 158th plenary meeting on March 2, and the thirteenth and fourteenth meetings of its Economic Committee on February 24 and 25.

The Council, however, by a vote of 15 to 2 adopted a resolution (114 (VI)A) recommending that the General Assembly approve the functions and powers exercised by the League of Nations in respect of economic statistics under the 1928 ⁶³See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 111.

Convention, and submitting to the General Assembly a draft resolution and draft protocol to this end. The Council stated that it considered that "in view of the resolution of the General Assembly on the relations of the Members of the United Nations with Spain, adopted on 9 February 1946, all action under this Protocol and the Convention mentioned above should be suspended with respect to the Franco Government in Spain as long as this Government is in power".⁶⁵

h. WORLD STATISTICAL CONGRESS

The World Statistical Congress, convened in Washington from September 8 to 12, 1947, under authority of resolution 40(IV) of the Economic and Social Council, was attended by leading statisticians from all countries.

The Congress focussed the attention of its members upon the uses for and the needs of international organizations for adequate and reliable statistical information from national governments. It also brought to the attention of the United Nations the need for more trained personnel in national statistical services as well as the need for providing advice and assistance in developing national statistical systems.

i. INTERNATIONAL CENSUS PLANS

In the report of its second session (E/577), submitted to the sixth session of the Economic and Social Council, the Statistical Commission expressed general approval of the standard minimum list of subjects proposed by the Population Commission for the 1950 censuses of population (E/571, Annex II) and the supplementary list of subjects proposed for optional inclusion in these censuses (E/571, Annex III).⁶⁶ In reference to a progress report received on the work of the Committee on the 1950 Census of the Americas, it reiterated its support of this project, noting with approval the program of training in census methods.

With reference to a memorandum submitted by FAO on the proposed 1950 World Census of Agriculture (E/CN.3/32), the Commission endorsed the objectives of the project and welcomed the steps taken to conduct co-operatively such a census in all parts of the world. It requested the Economic and Social Council to draw the attention of all Member nations to the proposed 1950 World Census of Agriculture, and to stress the importance of making adequate provisions for the preparatory work in order that such a census may be taken in as many countries as possible. The Council adopted this recommendation by 14 votes, with 2 abstentions (resolution 114(VI) B).

At its third session the Statistical Commission (E/795) gave further consideration to the suggested list of subjects to be included in the 1950 census of population. It considered that the list of subjects and the accompanying definitions should be issued by the Secretary-General for the information of governments and for such use in the national censuses as might be practicable in the light of national conditions, needs and objectives. It urged, however, that the views of interested specialized agencies and other inter-governmental organizations should be co-ordinated before the list of subjects and accompanying definitions were issued. In reviewing the list of topics and the suggested definitions, the Commission considered it not practicable to regard the list of subjects⁶⁶ as a recommended minimum for all countries in view of the wide differences in national needs and statistical facilities. It considered, however, that all countries taking censuses should try to provide comparable data on the following items: total population, age, sex, marital status and types of economic activities. It also pointed out the desirability of using statistical sampling methods in population censuses.

18. Transport and Communications

The Transport and Communications Commission held its second session in Geneva from April 12 to 20, 1948. It reviewed international developments in the fields of transport and communications and of travel questions, but was particularly concerned with questions relating to: (1) regional problems and organization in the field of inland transport; (2) certain world-wide problems in the field of inland transport; (3) the facilitation of the international movement of persons and goods; (4) the co-ordination of activities in the fields of aviation, shipping and telecommunications with respect to safety of life at sea and in the air; and (5) transport statistics. In addition, the Commission, as requested by the Council at its sixth session (resolution 133(VI)), considered the applications of certain non-governmental organizations in the field of transport and communications for consultative status and considered the parts of the Provisional Questionnaire on Trust Territories which related to transport and communications.

The report of the Transport and Communications Commission (E/789) was considered during the seventh session of the Council at the 19th to 23rd, 38th and 39th meetings of the Council's Economic Committee on July 22, 23, 24 and 26 and August 24 and 25, and at the 223rd plenary meeting of the Council on August 28. The various decisions taken are given below.

a. REGIONAL PROBLEMS AND ORGANIZATION

The Commission considered studies prepared by the Secretary-General at the request of the Council (resolution 35 (IV))⁶⁷ concerning future organization in the field of inland transport in Asia and the Far East—including the Middle East—and the Americas. The Commission also took up the question of a study of future organization in the field of inland transport in Africa.

(1) Asia and the Far East.—The Council at its seventh session (223rd plenary meeting) unanimously endorsed a recommendation of the Transport and Communications Commission which had also been endorsed by the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (E/839) that the latter Commission be requested to convene an early meeting of inland transport experts of the countries represented in it to examine: (a) the problems with respect to rehabilitation and co-ordinated development of inland transport facilities and services in Asia and the Far East; and (b) the means which are best suited to promote the solution of these problems, either by setting up regional machinery or otherwise (it being understood that any such machinery would be part of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East) (resolution 147(VII)C).

(2) Middle East.—The Transport and Communications Commission similarly recommended that, if and when an Economic Commission for the Middle East is established, the Council should request it to convene an early meeting of inland transport experts of the countries represented in it for purposes similar to the above (E/789).

After discussion at the 20th, 21st and 38th meetings of the Economic Committee on July 22 and 23 and August 2, and at the 223rd plenary meeting on August 28, the Council decided to postpone consideration of this recommendation until it had taken a decision on the report of the ad hoc Committee on the proposed Economic Commission for the Middle East. As consideration of the establishment of this Commission was postponed until the eight session, the Council took no action on the recommendations at its seventh session.

(3) Latin America.—The Transport and Communications Commission had recommended that the question of the means best suited to promote the solution of problems in the field of inland transport in Latin America should be referred to the Economic Commission for Latin America (E/789). The latter Commission had recommended that problems of transport affecting Latin America, including freight rates, be further studied by the Transport and Communications Commission (E/840). The Council at its seventh session at the 21st, 22nd and 23rd meetings of its Economic Committee, from July 23 to 26, considered the two recommendations.

The representatives of Venezuela, Chile and Brazil emphasized the importance to Latin American countries of maritime freight rates. The United Kingdom representative proposed (E/AC.6/29/Rev.1) that this question should be referred to the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization as the specialized agency concerned with shipping; the Canadian and Netherlands representatives thought that that agency should be consulted. The three Latin American representatives, however, were opposed to a mention of IMCO on the ground that the Organization was largely concerned with technical matters, and that its structure was such that the interests of a large number of small countries whose shipping services were insufficiently developed could not be adequately represented on it.

At its 223rd plenary meeting on August 28 the Council adopted by 15 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, resolution 147(VII)D, in which it recognized that the question of inland transport should be studied by the Economic Commission for Latin America, with appropriate assistance from the Transport and Communications Commission. At the same time, it requested the Secretary-General, in preparing the Economic Survey of Latin America, to give particular attention to problems of transport, taking into account the previous experience of other regional commissions. It also requested the Transport and Communications Commission to make a further study of the problems of maritime shipping, including freight rates affecting Latin America, in order to facilitate consideration of these matters as soon as possible by the Economic Commission for Latin America.

⁶⁷ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 503.

Secretary-General be asked to study the question of future organization in the field of inland transport in Africa.

The representatives of New Zealand and France stated at the 21st meeting of the Economic Committee on July 23 that Africa could not be considered as a region from the point of view of transport. The Council decided to take no action on the recommendation.

(5) Co-ordination among Inland Transport Experts of Different Regions.—In accordance with a recommendation of the Transport and Communications Commission the Council at its 223rd plenary meeting on August 28 adopted by 13 votes to 1, with 2 abstentions, resolution 147(VII)E drawing the attention of the regional economic commissions to the advantages of permitting experts from other regions to participate in their work on inland transport when questions which might affect other regions are under consideration.

b. WORLD-WIDE PROBLEMS IN THE FIELD OF INLAND TRANSPORT—IN PARTICULAR, ROAD AND MOTOR TRANSPORT

The Transport and Communications Commission reviewed the recent developments in the field of road transport and recognized that the world-wide Conventions of 1926 on Road and Motor Transport were obsolete.

The Commission recommended that a conference should be called with the object of concluding a new convention on road and motor transport. In the discussion of the matter at the 20th meeting of the Economic Committee of the Council on July 22, various representatives felt that the number of conferences was proving too great a strain on the personnel of smaller countries and on the Secretariat. The Netherlands and French representatives emphasized the importance of the conference for European countries; they also proposed that the Geneva Convention on the Unification of Road Signals of 1931 should be brought up to date. The Venezuelan representative pointed out that the problem of under-developed countries as far as road and motor traffic was concerned was somewhat different,—i.e., the construction, expansion and improvement of road networks—and proposed that the co-operation of the Economic Commissions for Asia and the Far East and for Latin America should be sought.

At the 223rd plenary meeting of the Council on August 28 a discussion ensued concerning the non-member states which should be invited to the conference. Some representatives expressed the view that the non-member states invited should be specified, others thought that non-members invited to the United Nations Maritime Conference should be invited to this conference; some thought that all non-members invited should have the right to vote, some opposed in principle the granting of voting rights to non-members but thought that it should be accorded to signatories to the Conventions which were to be revised. After the discussion, the Council by 13 votes, with 4 abstentions, adopted resolution 147 (VII) B as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Instructs the Secretary-General:

"1. To convene a Conference of Governments, not later than August 1949, with the object of concluding a new world-wide Convention on Road and Motor Transport, the two world-wide Conventions of 1926, namely:

"(a) International Convention relating to Road Traffic;

"(b) International Convention relating to Motor Traffic, and the subsequent Convention of 1931 on the Unification of Road Signals, being obsolete. The draft text of the Inland Transport Committee of the Economic Commission for Europe, resulting from a study by this Committee, and the text of the 1943 Convention on the Regulation of Inter-American Automotive Traffic, inter alia, will serve as working-papers for the Conference;

"2. To request the Economic Commission for Europe to have the draft text referred to above completed and forwarded to the Secretary-General as soon as practicable;

"3. To invite the other regional commissions to submit any reports which they may desire on this subject;

"4. To circulate the above-mentioned texts to all the Governments invited to the Conference;

"5. To draw up a provisional agenda for the Conference;

"6. (a) To invite to participate in the Conference all States Members of the United Nations at the time of the convening of the Conference, and also the States not members of the United Nations which were invited to participate in the United Nations Maritime Conference; and

"(b) To request the Governments of the States invited to give their delegates full powers to sign, subject to ratification, such Convention as may be concluded at the Conference;

"7. To invite the specialized agencies, inter-governmental organizations and international organizations in this field, as may be appropriate, to send observers to the Conference;

"Decides that the right to vote at the Conference may be exercised by all States Members of the United Nations and those States not Members which are invited under paragraph 6(a) above, and which are parties to any of the Conventions cited in paragraph 1 above."

(1) Co-ordination of Inland Transport

The question of the co-ordination of the various branches of the inland transport industry had been referred to the Transport and Communications Commission at the request of the International La-hour Organisation. On the recommendation of the Commission (E/789) the Council, by 15 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, adopted resolution 147-(VII)I distinguishing the short- and long-term aspects of the question. According to this resolution the former, resulting from war and postwar difficulties, should be dealt with on a regional level by regional transport bodies, where they exist, or by any other appropriate means, while the long-term aspects should be further reviewed by the Commission at its next session on the basis of documentation to be prepared by the Secretary-General.

c. FACILITATION OF INTERNATIONAL MOVEMENT OF PERSONS AND GOODS

(1) Passports and Frontier Formalities

At its fifth session, at the 115th plenary meeting on August 13, 1947, the Economic and Social Council considered the report of the Meeting of Experts on Passport and Frontier Formalities (E/436) suggesting the simplification of passport and visa regulations.⁶⁸

During the course of the discussion, the representative of Czechoslovakia stated that the proposed regulations were acceptable to his Government except the proposal that entry visas should be granted for a period of twelve months. The U.S.S.R. representative felt that the question of passports and frontier formalities was within the direct competence of the governments concerned and it was for the latter to determine such policy as they deemed necessary. He stated that his delegation would abstain from voting on the question.

The Council approved without objection resolution 73(V), which had been proposed by the United States, requesting the Secretary-General to prepare a comparative analysis of the relation between the practices of the Member Governments and the recommendations of the Meeting of Experts, and the extent to which Members have expressed their willingness to change their present practices to conform with the recommendations. The Secretary-General was requested to transmit the analysis to the Transport and Communications Commission for the formulation of proposals to the Council for further action which might be appropriately taken to reduce, simplify and unify the passport and frontier formalities of the various nations.

The Secretary-General accordingly prepared a report (E/CN.2/28/Part I and Part I, Add. 1, and Part II and Part II, Add. 1 and Add. 2) analyzing the replies of Members of the United Nations concerning the recommendations of the Meeting of Experts to prepare for a World Conference on Passports and Frontier Formalities. After noting the report, the Transport and Communications Commission considered that neither a World Conference nor another Meeting of Experts was immediately required (E/789).

The Council discussed the question at the 23rd meeting of its Economic Committee. The U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives again expressed the view that questions relating to passports and frontier formalities were internal matters within the exclusive domestic competence of governments, on which neither the Council nor the Transport and Communications Commission was competent to make recommendations.

The Council, on the recommendation of the Commission (E/789), adopted by 14 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, at its 223rd plenary meeting on August 28, resolution 147(VII)G. It requested the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of Member Governments the Council's view that it is desirable to reduce, simplify and unify passport and frontier formalities to the extent consistent with national security, and to report at the next meeting of the Commission on the progress made by Member Governments in this respect, by such means as bilateral and multilateral agreements and with particular reference to each of the recommendations made by the Meeting of Passport Experts.

(2) Barriers to the International Transport of Goods

The Transport and Communications Commission, noting that the International Chamber of Commerce had submitted a report (E/789) on barriers to the international transport of goods, considered that it was of the greatest importance to promote the freest possible flow of trade between nations. The Council, on the basis of a recommendation of the Commission, adopted, at its 223rd plenary meeting on August 28, by 13 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, resolution 147 (VII) A. It instructed the Secretary-General to study, in conjunction with the Executive Secretary of the Interim Commission of the International Trade Organization, the respective competence of the various international bodies concerned with this problem, and to report to the next session of the Transport and Communications Commission on the aspects which might usefully be considered by the Commission.

The U.S.S.R. representative had proposed the deletion of the reference to the Executive Secretary of the Interim Commission of the International Trade Organization on the ground that the United Nations had not yet entered into relationship with the Interim Commission. The Venezuelan representative explained his abstention on the resolution on the ground that as the Havana Charter had not yet been ratified it was premature to adopt a resolution on the competence of the various international bodies concerned with the problem.

d. CO-ORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES RELATING TO SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA AND IN THE AIR

The Preparatory Committee of Experts at its meeting in January and February 1948 considered the co-ordination of activities in the fields of shipping, aviation and telecommunications with regard to safety of life. The Council at its 223rd plenary meeting adopted by 12 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, resolution 147(VII)F, instructing the Secretary-General to transmit the report of this Committee to each of the organizations represented at its meeting as an initial basis for co-operative endeavor among them; the Secretary-General was also instructed to submit to the next session of the Transport and Communications Commission a report on the action taken by the Safety of Life at Sea Conference which was held in London in April and May 1948, and on the activities undertaken by the specialized agencies in the light of the report of the Preparatory Committee of Experts. The U.S.S.R. representative opposed the resolution since the report of the Preparatory Committee of Experts in question had not been considered by the Council.

e. TRANSPORT STATISTICS

The Transport and Communications Commission considered the problem of the establishment of internationally comparable statistics in the transport field, which had been referred to it at the request of the International Labour Organisation. It recommended that the Council should set up a working group of experts which, in consultation with the specialized agencies and regional commissions, should study the problems involved (E/789). The Statistical Commission at its third session endorsed this recommendation and in addition recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to undertake a preliminary survey of the scope of the work to be done in the field of transport statistics, and that the working group begin its work by a study of inland transport statistics (E/795).

The Council at its seventh session decided, on the suggestion of the United States representative, that the study should be undertaken by the Secretary-General with the assistance of such experts as he considered advisable, rather than by a special working group. At its 223rd plenary meeting the Council adopted, by 14 votes to 3, resolution 147-(VII)H, instructing the Secretary-General, in consultation with the specialized agencies and regional commissions concerned, and assisted by such independent experts as he may consider advisable, to make a study of the problems of establishing economic and technical statistical requirements in the transport field, of achieving comparability in the information to be collected and of standardizing forms for the collection of this information. The study was to be transmitted to the Transport and Communications and Statistical Commissions for their consideration.

19. United Nations Maritime Conference

Following a recommendation of the Transport and Communications Commission at its first session, the Council at its fourth session adopted resolution 35 (IV),⁶⁹ requesting the Secretary-General to convene a Conference of interested governments to consider the establishment of an intergovernmental maritime organization. The Council decided that the draft Convention prepared by the United Maritime Consultative Council on this matter, concerning the scope and purposes of the proposed organization, should serve as the basis of discussion for the Conference, and that the latter should also consider if the scope and purposes of the organization should include the removal or prevention of unfair restrictive practices by shipping concerns. The Secretary-General was instructed by the Council to invite all the Members of the United Nations and the following Governments to participate in the Conference: Albania, Austria, Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Portugal, Rumania, Switzerland, Transjordan and Yemen.⁷⁰

At its sixth session (124th meeting on February 3, 1948) the Council discussed the question of voting rights at the Conference. The representatives of the United States, Canada, New Zealand, China and Brazil spoke in favor of adhering to the practice, adopted by the Council in respect of other conferences called by it, of not granting voting rights to non-members of the United Nations, on the grounds, that Members carried the obligations and responsibilities contained in the Charter, and political difficulties might arise if voting rights were given to non-members. The United Kingdom, Peruvian, U.S.S.R., Australian, Venezuelan, French and Lebanese representatives thought that non-members invited to conferences should be given full voting rights, since they were invited as participants. The United Kingdom, Australian and Venezuelan representatives instanced the difficulties which had occurred at the Havana Trade Conference where it had proved necessary to adopt a compromise formula in order to get over the difficulties caused by the Council's decision that non-members of the United Nations had not the right to vote. By a roll-call vote of 9 to 8, with 1 abstention, the Council decided (resolution 113(VI)) that voting rights at the Conference should be exercised by both Members and the non-members which had been invited.

The United Nations Maritime Conference met in Geneva from February 19 to March 6, 1948.⁷¹

The Council at its seventh session (169th plenary meeting on August 12) adopted without discussion by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, resolution 148 (VII), taking note of the Secretary-General's report on the Conference (E/853).

G. SOCIAL, HUMANITARIAN AND CULTURAL QUESTIONS

1. Human Rights

a. INTERNATIONAL BILL OF HUMAN RIGHTS

At its fourth session, the Economic and Social Council established a procedure and a time table for the formulation of an International Bill of Human Rights (resolution 46(IV)).⁷²

The following seven stages were laid down:

- (i) Preparation of a draft by a drafting committee on the basis of documentation prepared by the Secretariat;
- (ii) Consideration of the draft by the Commission on Human Rights;
- (iii) Submission of the resulting draft to Members of the United Nations for observations, suggestions and proposals;
- (iv) Consideration of the above observations, suggestions and proposals as a basis of a redraft, if necessary, by the Drafting Committee;
- (v) Consideration of the resulting draft by the Commission on Human Rights;
- (vi) Consideration by the Council of the resulting text;
- (vii) Submission of the draft Bill by the Council to the General Assembly.

(1) Second Session of the Commission on Human Rights

The Commission on Human Rights at its second session at Geneva from December 2 to 17, 1947, considered the preliminary draft of an International Bill of Human Rights prepared by the Drafting Committee at its first session from June 9 to 25, 1947 (E/CN.4/21).

Two views had been expressed there regarding the form which the draft Bill should take. Some representatives thought that it should be in the form of a declaration or manifesto, others that the declaration should be supplemented by a convention or conventions on specific rights. Both documents were presented to the Commission. The draft Declaration had been discussed in some detail, but consideration of the draft Convention had been limited to a general examination of the possible substantive contents of a draft convention. No decision was taken by the Drafting Committee as to whether there should be a draft declaration only or a draft declaration together with a draft convention.

The Commission decided to draw up simultaneously a draft declaration, which would be a declaration of general principles, and a draft convention, which would be a convention on such specific rights as would lend themselves to binding legal obligations, and at the same time to consider the question of implementation. The three documents—to be known respectively as the International Declaration on Human Rights, the International Covenant on Human Rights and Measures for Implementation—would together form the "International Bill of Human Rights" (E/600).

In preparing this preliminary draft of the Bill, the Commission took into account suggestions made by its Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities on five articles of the draft Declaration covering subjects within the terms of reference of the Sub-Commission (E/CN.4/52). In accordance with resolution 46(IV) of the Council, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Commission on the Status of Women were present at the second session of the Commission on Human Rights and took part in its deliberations without vote when sections of the draft Bill concerning particular rights of women were discussed.

In order to prepare the documents on the draft Declaration, draft Covenant and implementation, the Commission established three working groups. It considered in detail the resulting draft Declaration and in somewhat less detail the draft Covenant, but decided to take no decision on any specific principle or recommendation contained in the report on implementation. Thus it presented to the sixth session of the Council a draft Declaration and a draft Covenant prepared with unequal thoroughness, together with the report of its working group on measures for implementation.

The draft Declaration prepared by the Commission was a simple statement defining human rights and fundamental freedoms. Its force, upon adoption by the General Assembly, would be of a moral rather than a legal nature; the Declaration would establish standards and indicate goals rather than impose precise obligations upon states.

Among the rights and freedoms enumerated in the 33 articles of the draft Declaration were: right to life, liberty, and security of person; right to freedom from arbitrary arrest; right to a fair trial; right to privacy; right to leave one's own country; right to seek and be granted asylum from persecution; right to own property; right to a nationality; freedom of thought and conscience; freedom of worship; freedom of expression and freedom of peaceful assembly; right to petition; right to take an effective part in the government of one's country; right to hold public office; right to work; right to social security; right to education; and right to rest and leisure.

The draft Covenant, on the other hand, was visualized as an instrument which would legally bind the states acceding to it. Such states would undertake to make their national laws conform to its standards, and would agree to the imposition of sanctions in the case of violation of the rights enumerated therein. For this reason, the draft Covenant was prepared in more precise language than the draft Declaration, and its enumeration of the rights to be protected was not so far-reaching. It was anticipated, however, that in time this first convention might be followed by others, giving legal effect to other rights enumerated in the Declaration, including economic or social rights.

The 27 articles of the draft Covenant were divided into three parts: the first part described the obligations of states which adhered to the Covenant; the second part defined some of the rights and freedoms listed in the draft Declaration, in more precise terms; the third part described how accession to the Covenant would be effected and how amendments would come into force.

The measures of implementation formulated by the working group of the Commission related only to the proposed Covenant, and possible future conventions, since the Declaration was not envisaged as establishing legally enforceable obligations. Among the ideas put forward by the working group were the following: (1) that each state should incorporate into its own national law the principles of the Covenant on Human Rights; (2) that a standing committee should be appointed by the Economic and Social Council to mediate, conciliate and, if possible, rectify alleged violations of human rights; (3) that disputes not settled by this means should be forwarded to the Commission on Human Rights, which would decide whether the case should be sent to an international tribunal; (4) that an international tribunal should be empowered to give binding decisions on cases thus brought before it, establishing a body of law which would settle hundreds of similar cases; and (5) that the General Assembly, because of the powers conferred on it by the Charter with regard to questions of economic and social co-operation, should implement the decisions of the international tribunal in this field, should the necessity arise.

The Commission on Human Rights had no time to examine in detail the report of its working group on measures for implementation of the Bill of Human Rights but decided that it, together with the draft Declaration and draft Covenant, should be forwarded to governments for their comments during the first week in January 1948. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to fix the date of April 3, 1948, as the time limit for the reception of replies from governments on the draft International Bill.

(2) Consideration by the Council at Its Sixth Session

In its consideration of the report of the Commission on Human Rights (E/600) at the Council's sixth session (128th plenary meeting on February 5, 1948), it was generally felt that consideration of the draft Declaration and draft Covenant should be deferred until the Council's next session, after the Commission had had an opportunity of reviewing the draft in the light of observations from governments. The Chilean and Australian representatives, however, thought that the Council should study the question of implementation as a guide to the Commission. The Australian representative stressed the importance of including provisions for implementation in the draft Covenant and proposed (E/AC.7/42) that the Commission on Human Rights, through its Drafting Committee and at its next session, should be instructed to give particular attention to the implementation aspect of the Bill of Human Rights so as to be sure that draft articles were ready in time for submission to Member Governments well in advance of the Assembly's next session.

This draft resolution was considered at the 35th meeting of the Council's Social Committee, on February 20. The United States representative stated that his delegation entertained doubts with regard to the propriety of including that article in the Bill, and the U.S.S.R., Byelorussian and Polish representatives thought that the question should be deferred since it was bound up with the other parts of the draft Bill. The draft resolution with an amendment, accepted by the Australian representative, to give a more flexible time limit was adopted by the Social Committee by 8 votes to 3, with 7 abstentions, and by the Council at its 159th plenary meeting on March 2 by 9 votes to 3, with 5 abstentions.

In this resolution (116(VI)F) the Council directed "the Commission on Human Rights, through its Drafting Committee and at its next session, to give particular attention to the implementation aspect of the Bill of Human Rights, in order to ensure that draft articles on implementation may be submitted to Member Governments at the earliest possible date".

Following a recommendation of the Commission and after considering the matter at the 34th and 35th meetings of the Social Committee, the Council, at its 159th plenary meeting, also decided (resolution 116 (VI)E), by 14 votes, with 1 abstention, to refer to the International Labour Organisation for consideration and report Article 8 of the draft International Covenant, which referred to forced labor. The U.S.S.R., Polish and Byelorussian representatives opposed this decision, as no other specialized agencies had been consulted on the draft Bill.

(3) Second Session of the Drafting Committee

The Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights held its second session at Lake Success from May 3 to 21, 1948. It considered comments on the draft International Bill of Human Rights which had been received from thirteen Member Governments. It also took into account the suggestions of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information concerning articles on freedom of information in the draft Declaration and the draft Covenant (E/CONF.6/79),⁷³ as well as suggestions made by the Commission on the Status of Women on two articles in the draft Declaration (E/615).⁷⁴ It redrafted the entire draft Covenant; but had time to redraft only parts of the draft Declaration and did not consider the question of implementation.

(4) Third Session of the Commission on Human Rights

The third session of the Commission on Human Rights took place at Lake Success from May 24 to June 18, 1948. The Commission at that session based its work on the report of the second session of its Drafting Committee (E/CN.4/95). As this Committee had examined the draft Covenant in detail, the Commission decided to begin its work by discussing the draft Declaration, then to proceed to examine the question of implementation and finally the draft Covenant. It was able to complete a re-draft of the Declaration but had no time to consider the Drafting Committee's re-draft of the Covenant, nor to discuss implementation, as requested by the Economic and Social Council at its sixth session.

The Commission therefore presented to the seventh session of the Economic and Social Council: the draft Declaration as redrafted at its third session; the draft Covenant as redrafted by the Drafting Committee at its second session, but not re-examined by the Commission itself; and the report of the working group on implementation, drawn up at the second session of the Commission, but not examined in detail by the full Commission.

Throughout its deliberations on the International Bill of Human Rights, the Commission was assisted by specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations. Representatives of the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization, and consultants from the American Federation of Labor, the International Federation of Christian Trade Unions, the Inter-Parliamentary Union, the World Federation of United Nations Associations, the Agudas Israel World Organization, the Catholic International Union for Social Service, the International Union of Catholic Women's Leagues, the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, the Consultative Council of Jewish Organizations, the Co-ordinating Board of Jewish Organizations for Consultation with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, the International Alliance of Women-Equal Rights, Equal Responsibilities, the International Committee of the Red Cross, the International Council of Women, the International Federation of Business and Professional Women, the Women's International Democratic Federation, the World Jewish Congress, the Liaison Committee of Women's International Organizations, the World Women's Christian Temperance Union and the World's Young Women's Christian Association took part in the proceedings of the Commission at its second and third sessions.

(5) Draft Declaration

The text of the draft Declaration as forwarded to the seventh session of the Council was as follows:

DRAFT INTERNATIONAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Preamble

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world; and

Whereas disregard and contempt for human rights resulted, before and during the Second World War, in barbarous acts which outraged the conscience of mankind and made it apparent that the fundamental freedoms were one of the supreme issues of the conflict; and

Whereas it is essential, if mankind is not to be compelled as a last resort to rebel against tyranny and oppression, that human rights should be protected by a regime of law; and

Whereas the peoples of the United Nations have in the Charter determined to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom; and

Whereas Member States have pledged themselves to achieve, in co-operation with the Organization, the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms; and

Whereas a common understanding of these rights and freedoms is of the greatest importance for the full realization of this pledge,

Now therefore the General Assembly

Proclaims this Declaration of Human Rights as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of Member States themselves and among the peoples of territories under their jurisdiction.

Article 1

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed by nature with reason and conscience, and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.

Article 2

Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, property or other status, or national or social origin.

Article 3

Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of person.

Article 4

1. No one shall be held in slavery or involuntary servitude.

2. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment.

Article 5

Everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 6

All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination.

Article 7

No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention.

Article 8

In the determination of his rights and obligations and of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled in full equality to a fair hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

Article 9

1. Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.

2. No one shall be held guilty of any offence on account of any act or omission which did not constitute an offence, under national or international law, at the time when it was committed.

Article 10

No one shall be subjected to unreasonable interference with his privacy, family, home, correspondence or reputation.

Article 11

1. Everyone has the right to freedom of movement and residence within the borders of each State.

2. Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own.

Article 12

1. Everyone has the right to seek and be granted, in other countries, asylum from persecution.

2. Prosecutions genuinely arising from non-political crimes or from acts contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations do not constitute persecution.

Article 13

No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality or denied the right to change his nationality.

Article 14

1. Men and women of full age have the right to marry and to found a family and are entitled to equal rights as to marriage.

2. Marriage shall be entered into only with the full consent of both intending spouses.

3. The family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection.

Article 15

1. Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others.

2. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

Article 16

Everyone has the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion; this right includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom, either alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance.

Article 17

Everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression; this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers.

Article 18

Everyone has the right to freedom of assembly and association.

Article 19

1. Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through his freely chosen representatives.

2. Everyone has the right of access to public employment in his country.

3. Everyone has the right to a government which conforms to the will of the people.

Article 20

Everyone, as a member of society, has the right to social security and is entitled to the realization, through national effort and international co-operation, and in accordance with the organization and resources of each State, of the economic, social and cultural rights set out below.

Article 21

1. Everyone has the right to work, to just and favourable conditions of work and pay and to protection against unemployment.

2. Everyone has the right to equal pay for equal work.

3. Everyone is free to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

Article 22

1. Everyone has the right to a standard of living, including food, clothing, housing and medical care, and to social services, adequate for the health and well-being of himself and his family and to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, old age or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.

2. Mother and child have the right to special care and assistance.

Article 23

1. Everyone has the right to education. Elementary and fundamental education shall be free and compulsory and there shall be equal access on the basis of merit to higher education.

2. Education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality, to strengthening respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms and to combating the spirit of intolerance and hatred against other nations and against racial and religious groups everywhere.

Article 24

Everyone has the right to rest and leisure.

Article 25

Everyone has the right to participate in the cultural life of the community, to enjoy the arts and to share in scientific advancement.

Article 26

Everyone is entitled to a good social and international order in which the rights and freedoms set out in this Declaration can be fully realized.

Article 27

1. Everyone has duties to the community which enables him freely to develop his personality.

2. In the exercise of his rights, everyone shall be subject only to such limitations as are necessary to secure due recognition and respect for the rights of others and the requirements of morality, public order and the general welfare in a democratic society.

Article 28

Nothing in this Declaration shall imply the recognition of the right of any State or person to engage in any activity aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms prescribed herein.

Note. The Commission has not considered the following article since measures of implementation were not discussed in its third session:

"Everyone has the right, either individually, or in association with others, to petition or to communicate with the public authorities of the State of which he is a national or in which he resides, or with the United Nations."

(6) Consideration by the Council at Its Seventh Session

Because of the pressure of business at its seventh session, the Council decided, at its 202nd plenary meeting on August 17, 1948, that the report of the Commission, which had been referred to its Human Rights Committee, should be recalled to the plenary session; and that in plenary there would be an opportunity for each member to make one general statement of position, without other debate or decisions than a decision to transmit the documents to the General Assembly, together with the statements of position.

Statements were made by all members at the 215th and 218th meetings of the Council on August 25 and 26. All members stressed the importance of the draft Declaration, though it was generally regretted that it had not proved possible to complete at the same time the draft Covenant and measures for implementation since it was recognized that the three formed part of an organic whole. The Netherlands, New Zealand and Danish representatives thought that the Declaration should be referred back to the Commission, and that if any discussion took place in the Assembly it should be only a provisional examination, the Netherlands representative holding that the Declaration without measures for implementation was meaningless, and the New Zealand and Danish representatives pointing out that there had been insufficient time for governments to study the draft in detail and that the Declaration and Covenant should be adopted together. The majority, however, while agreeing on the importance of adopting the Covenant and the measures for implementation, pointed out that a long time had elapsed since work had begun on drafting the bill and thought that the adoption of the draft Declaration would mark a step forward in defining human rights and that this step should be taken without delay. They were, therefore, in favor of transmitting the draft Declaration to the third session of the Assembly.

It was generally recognized, however, that the draft Declaration in the form in which it was presented to the Council was still imperfect. The following were some of the main general criticisms:

(a) The aims of the Declaration were not sufficiently clearly stated; the Preamble was entirely abstract (Poland); the Preamble should be simplified (Canada and Venezuela).

(b) The Declaration should not be introduced by philosophical postulates from outdated theories of natural law, and therefore Article 1 should be omitted (Brazil).

(c) The Declaration was not sufficiently universal or international because it was based on domestic legislation and classic statements on human rights and did not therefore give sufficient prominence to rights which could not be enumerated in national declarations, such as the right of asylum (France).

(d) It had not proved possible to define the relations between the individual and the state, although this was a basic problem (Venezuela and Chile).

(e) As drafted, the Declaration was open to interpretation as an instrument of intervention in the domestic jurisdiction of states (Poland).

(f) The Declaration did not refer to ensuring and guaranteeing the implementation of rights and freedoms or to means of applying its provisions (U.S.S.R.).

(g) The Declaration failed to maintain consistently the principles of full equality (U.S.S.R.).

Criticisms were made that provisions had been omitted from the draft Declaration, and proposals were made for the inclusion of additional provisions, relating to the following subjects:

(a) The principle of religious tolerance (the Netherlands);

(b) The protection of the individual against threats, intimidation and oppression (Brazil);

(c) Reference to democracy and to the necessity for the eradication of Fascism (Poland and the U.S.S.R.);

(d) The prohibition of Fascist and Nazi propaganda and propaganda of racial and national hostility (U.S.S.R.);

(e) The obligations of the individual to his neighbor, family, nation and society (Poland and the U.S.S.R.);

(f) The right to native language and culture (Poland and the U.S.S.R.);

(g) An express reference to minority rights (Denmark);

(h) A guarantee of all economic rights, the right to work and to rest, and the right to education (Poland);

(i) The paternal power of parents over their minor or non-emancipated children and their obligation to provide them with sustenance and education (Brazil);

(j) A statement that the rights enumerated in the Declaration were not exhaustive (Venezuela).

Among the criticisms concerning existing articles were the following:

(a) That the permissible restrictions on the rights of association should be made more explicit (Brazil);

(b) That the scope of certain rights had been narrowed or distorted, as in the clauses referring to arbitrary arrest and equal pay (France);

(c) That it was perhaps unnecessary to include Article 5 (referring to recognition before the law) and Article 23 (referring to the right to education), the latter being more appropriately a matter for UNESCO; a simple general statement of the right to social security would be preferable to the articles on social security (Article 20), the right to work (Article 21) and the right to a standard of living (Article 22), since these articles were really a declaration of governmental responsibilities in this field (Canada).

The Turkish representative suggested that it would be necessary to effect a reconciliation between the language of the Declaration and that of the draft Covenant.

The French representative reserved his Government's right to propose that the General Assembly should (1) invite all states to take early action to bring their laws and practices into line with the Declaration and set up the administrative and judicial instances of appeal necessary for the respect of human rights, and (2) recall the need for pursuing the study of conventions intended to ensure the practical observance of human rights and recommend their adoption.

Both the French and United States representatives pointed out that the question of human rights had special facets which ought to be the subject of special conventions.

The Council adopted without vote resolution 151(VII) by which it transmitted to the General Assembly the draft International Declaration of Human Rights submitted to the Council by the Commission on Human Rights in the report of its third session, together with the remainder of the report of the Commission and the records of the proceedings of the Council on this subject.

b. COMMUNICATIONS CONCERNING HUMAN RIGHTS

(1) Procedure for Handling Communications

At its fifth session the Council established a procedure for handling communications concerning human rights, consideration of which had been deferred from the Council's fourth session.

The Commission on Human Rights, in the report of its first session (E/259) had proposed that the Secretary-General be requested:

"(a) to compile a confidential list of communications received concerning human rights before each session of the Commission;

"(b) to furnish this confidential list to the members of the Commission upon request, without divulging the contents of these communications or the identity of their authors;

"(c) to enable the members of the Commission, upon request, to consult the originals of these communications;

"(d) to inform the writers of all communications concerning human rights, however addressed, that their communications would be brought to the attention of the Commission on Human Rights."

The recommendations of the Commission were considered by the Economic and Social Council at its 87th and 106th plenary meetings on July 21 and August 19, and at the 12th, 13th, 14th and 17th meetings of its Social Committee on July 24, 28 and 30 and August 4.

The U.S.S.R. representative opposed the recommendations on the grounds that the Charter had already enumerated the bodies with which the Council, and consequently its commissions, could enter into relationship, and from which reports and information could be received. Sufficient information could be obtained from Member States of the United Nations, from the specialized agencies and from non-governmental organizations having consultative status. He felt that consideration of communications from other organizations or from individuals would take the attention of the Commissions away from their real tasks. This view was supported by the Byelorussian representative. Both representatives also opposed the consideration of anonymous communications.

Other representatives felt that the Commission might profit by receiving communications which might contain suggestions useful for its work.

The question was discussed in considerable detail in the Social Committee. A U.S.S.R. proposal to delete the relevant section of the Commission's report was rejected by 13 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions. Proposals and discussions were in general aimed at providing: (1) that the time of the Commission should not be unduly taken up with considering communications and that it should not be turned into a "complaints bureau" of the United Nations; (2) that the identity of writers of communications should be adequately protected; (3) that the form of acknowledging communications should not mislead the writers into thinking that they would automatically be considered by the Commission; and (4) that the Commission should itself decide which communications would be made available to members in the original.

A United States proposal (E/486) suggested, inter alia, that the Commission should forward petitions relating to Trust Territories to the Trusteeship Council with appropriate comments. This suggestion was, after a tie vote, referred for consideration to the Joint Committee of the Trusteeship and Economic and Social Councils.⁷⁵

A United Kingdom proposal (E/AC.7/25), "to furnish member states not represented on the Commission with a brief indication of the substance of any communication concerning human rights which refers explicitly to territory administered by them", was accepted with slight amendments by 13 votes, with 4 abstentions.

A Czechoslovak proposal (E/AC.7/27), "That the communications in order to be submitted to the procedure of examination by the Commission on Human Rights must have the following qualifications:

"(1) the intention to protect the human rights must be evident

"(2) they must not emanate from an anonymous unauthenticated or irresponsible source", was rejected by 10 votes to 4.

A New Zealand draft resolution (E/AC.7/24) which sought to combine the proposals of the Commission on Human Rights with certain amendments contained in the United States proposal in "an attempt to correlate the responsibilities of the United Nations under Article 55 of the Charter with the duties of the Commission on Human Rights" was considered at the 13th and 14th meetings of the Social Committee in a paragraph by paragraph discussion of the proposed draft resolution. At the end of its discussions the Social Committee by 14 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, approved a draft resolution based largely on that put forward by the New Zealand delegation.

⁷⁵ See pp. 510-12, 731-33.

This was adopted by the Council at its 106th plenary meeting on August 5, by 14 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions (resolution 75(V)), as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered chapter V of the report of the first session of the Commission on Human Rights concerning communications (document E/259),

"Approves the statement that 'the Commission recognizes that it has no power to take any action in regard to any complaints concerning human rights';

"Requests the Secretary General

"(a) To compile a confidential list of communications received concerning human rights, before each session of the Commission, with a brief indication of the substance of each;

"(b) To furnish this confidential list to the Commission, in private meeting, without divulging the identity of the authors of the communications;

"(c) To enable the members of the Commission, upon request, to consult the originals of communications dealing with the principles involved in the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights;

"(d) To inform the writers of all communications concerning human rights, however addressed, that their communications have been received and duly noted for consideration in accordance with the procedure laid down by the United Nations. Where necessary, the Secretary-General should indicate that the Commission has no power to take any action in regard to any complaint concerning human rights;

"(e) To furnish each Member State not represented on the Commission with a brief indication of the substance of any communication concerning human rights which refers explicitly to that State or to territories under its jurisdiction, without divulging the identity of the author;

"Suggests to the Commission on Human Rights that it should at each session appoint an ad hoc committee to meet shortly before its next session for the purpose of reviewing the confidential list of communications prepared by the Secretary-General under paragraph (a) above, and of recommending which of these communications, in original, should, in accordance with paragraph (c) above, be made available to members of the Commission on request."

(2) Modification of Procedure for Handling Communications

During its second and third sessions, the Commission on Human Rights received, in private meetings, confidential lists of communications concerning human rights compiled by the Secretary-General. At each session an ad hoc Committee of the Commission reviewed the lists of communications and submitted reports to the Commission.

At its second session, the Commission decided that the task of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities would be facilitated if the Economic and Social Council agreed to modify and extend resolution 75(V) so as to give members of the Sub-Commission, with respect to communications dealing with discrimination and minorities, and at the request of the Commission in each case, the same facilities as were enjoyed by the members of the Commission (E/600).

At its second session also, the Commission requested the Economic and Social Council to reconsider the procedure laid down in resolution 75(V). In particular, the Commission suggested that the Secretary-General should be requested to compile before each session of the Commission: (1) a non-confidential list of communications in which the authors stated that they had already divulged or intended to divulge their names, or that they had no objection to their names being divulged; and (2) a confidential list of communications which would be furnished to the Commission, in private meetings, without divulging the identity of the authors (E/600).

The Council considered the question during its sixth session, at its 128th plenary meeting on February 5 and the 32nd meeting of the Social Committee on February 19, on the basis of a draft resolution prepared by the Secretariat to give effect to the Commission's recommendations (E/AC.7/W.20).

The United States, New Zealand and U.S.S.R. representatives were in favor of retaining the original procedure as referred to in points (a) and (b) of resolution 75(V). The United States representative thought that the impression should not be created that the Commission dealt with individual complaints as such, or that it could be used as publicity for worthless facts or documents. The Lebanese representative proposed that the Secretary-General should be requested to compile three confidential lists including (1) anonymous communications and (2) signed communications, the authors of which had divulged their names or intended to do so, or had no objection to their publication and (3) signed communications, the authors of which expressed the wish that their names should not be divulged. After the first part of this proposal had been defeated in the Social Committee by 3 votes to 2, with 12 abstentions, the Lebanese representative withdrew the proposal, and the Committee by 13 votes, with 3 abstentions, adopted a Canadian proposal to amend the text of resolution 75(V) to allow the names of authors to be divulged "in cases where the authors state that they already divulged or intend to divulge their names, or that they have no objection to their names being divulged".

The amended resolution was adopted by the Social Committee by 13 votes, with 3 abstentions (E/704), and by the Council by the same vote at its 157th plenary meeting on March 1. The resolution adopted by the Council (116(VI)A) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having reconsidered the procedure for communications relating to human rights laid down in resolution 75(V), as regards points (b) and (e),

"Decides to amend the procedure provided for in point (b) of the above resolution by adding to the text of point (b) the following words: 'except in those cases where the authors state that they have already divulged or intend to divulge their names or that they have no objection to their names being divulged'; and in point (e) by adding the following words: 'except as provided for in paragraph (b) above'; and

"Resolves to give the members of the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities, with respect to communications dealing with discrimination and minorities the same facilities as are enjoyed by members of the Commission under resolution 75 (V) and the present resolution."

At the same meeting the Council unanimously decided at the suggestion of the President to request the Secretary-General to present a factual account to its next session of the practices of other organs of the United Nations in regard to communications. A memorandum on this question was prepared by the Secretary-General (E/587) and circulated to members of the Council at its seventh session.

At its third session, the Commission on Human Rights suggested that the Council should request the Secretary-General in the future to ask the Governments sending replies to communications brought to their attention in accordance with paragraph (c) of resolution 75(V) whether they wished their replies to be transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights in summary form, or presented in full as restricted or unrestricted documents (E/800).

The Economic and Social Council took no action on the question of communications at its seventh session.

c. YEARBOOK ON HUMAN RIGHTS

The Economic and Social Council on June 21, 1946, requested (resolution 2/9) the Secretary-General, inter alia, to make arrangements for the compilation and publication of a yearbook on law and usage relating to human rights, the first edition of which should include all declarations and bills on human rights now in force in the various countries.

At its third session, the Commission on Human Rights expressed the view that court decisions, being as important as provisions of constitutions, ordinary laws and international treaties, should also be included in the yearbook. It also expressed the view that the correspondents, appointed by each government to provide the Secretary-General with the necessary documents accompanied, when necessary, by appropriate explanations, should also report court decisions concerning human rights, it being understood that the Secretary-General would have the responsibility for deciding on the use to be made of the court decisions as well as the other documents supplied to it, bearing in mind the size of the yearbook, its general purpose and budgetary implications (E/800).

The first volume of the Yearbook on Human Rights⁷⁶ was presented to the seventh session of the Economic and Social Council on August 24, 1948.

The first volume contained all constitutional provisions relating to human rights. In the case of countries, such as the United Kingdom, which have no written constitution, or where the constitutions, as in Australia, Canada, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa, contain no general provisions concerning human rights, the observance of human rights being guaranteed by the ordinary law, the Yearbook contained statements by qualified jurists on the law and usage relating to human rights.

The laws and regulations of certain countries relating to human rights which came into force in 1946 were also included in the first issue. In addition, some ordinary legislation adopted before 1946 was added in the case of countries liberated in 1944 and 1945 in order to give a clear picture of the recent development of human rights in those countries. The Yearbook contained statements and studies describing and commenting on the law relating to human rights in sixteen countries, and indicating any recent changes in the law. The statements are in lieu of written constitutional texts where none exist or where the constitution does not mention human rights. The studies, on the other hand, dealt with certain countries where there are constitutional provisions relating to human rights. In addition to five statements, there were eight studies which dealt with the principles of human rights in general, and five studies which dealt with specific questions in this field or described the recent evolution of the law governing human rights.

The Economic and Social Council, at its seventh session, took no action on the first issue of the Yearbook on Human Rights.

d. PREVENTION OF DISCRIMINATION AND PROTECTION OF MINORITIES

The Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities held its first session at Geneva from November 24 to December 6, 1947. Its report (E/CN.4/52) was considered by the Commission on Human Rights at its second session and the Commission made recommendations (E/600) on it to the sixth session of the Council.

(1) Declaration of Human Rights

The Sub-Commission, inter alia, considered those articles of the draft International Declaration of Human Rights, as drawn up by the Drafting Committee of the Commission on Human Rights, which dealt with the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities, and proposed amendments to them.

The Commission at its second session endorsed the Sub-Commission's view that the machinery for the implementation of the rights stated in these articles would be of vital importance and would form but one part of the machinery for the implementation of human rights as a whole.

The Commission approved the suggestion of the Sub-Commission that "the prevention of discrimination is the prevention of any action which denies to individuals or groups of people equality of treatment which they may wish", but postponed consideration of the Sub-Commission's text on the protection of minorities.

(2) Studies

On the suggestion of the Sub-Commission, the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council (a) request the Secretary-General to organize studies and prepare analyses to help the Sub-Commission in determining the main types and the causes of discrimination and, in doing so, to consider whether or not the groups involved were of recent or of long historic origin, and whether they had been active protesting minorities; (b) adopt the necessary measures to provide the Sub-Commission with all the information required in order to distinguish between genuine and spurious minorities; (c) invite the Secretary-General to keep in mind the desirability of formulating effective educational programs in connection with the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities; (d) invite UNESCO's collaboration, suggesting that it consider the advisability of initiating and recommending the general adoption of a program of disseminating scientific facts with regard to race, and the creation of a committee of world leaders in educational theory and practice which would study the basic principles of democratic and universal education, in order to combat any spirit of intolerance or hostility as between nations and groups.

The Council considered these recommendations at its 128th and 157th plenary meetings on February 5 and March 1, and at the 33rd meeting of the Social Committee on February 19 on the basis of a draft resolution prepared by the Secretariat to give effect to the Commission's recommendations (E/AC7/W.20).

The Brazilian representative thought it important to distinguish between historical and artificial minorities. The Netherlands, French, Lebanese, Australian and United Kingdom representatives thought the studies proposed were too comprehensive, and might be too costly. The Netherlands representative thought that such studies might create an unfavorable state of mind among minorities in regions where no discrimination existed. The Australian representative, supported by representatives of the United Kingdom and the Netherlands, thought that the studies should not be undertaken until the Declaration on Human Rights had been adopted.

The French representative proposed the deletion of the references to the distinction between historical and recent, and genuine and spurious minorities, as this was a political matter which was outside the competence of the Secretariat. These deletions were approved by 12 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions, and 15 votes, with 4 abstentions, respectively, by the Committee, which also adopted by 10 votes, with 6 abstentions, a Lebanese amendment to suggest the dissemination of scientific facts "designed to remove what is commonly called racial prejudice", rather than scientific facts "concerning race".

The Committee, however, rejected four U.S.S.R. proposals to (1) provide for the participation of national social and cultural minority organizations in formulating education programs (rejected by 5 votes to 4, with 6 abstentions); (2) specify that the main types of discrimination were "for reasons of race, sex, language or religion" (rejected by 5 votes to 4, with 7 abstentions); (3) refer in place of the "causes" of discrimination to the "social and economic conditions in which groups which are discriminated against find themselves" (rejected by 8 votes to 3, with 4 abstentions); (4) delete the invitation to UNESCO to consider creating a committee of world leaders on the ground that UNESCO was a cultural organization and should not extend its activities to a political sphere (rejected by 10 votes to 2, with 4 abstentions).

After paragraph by paragraph votes, the amended resolution was adopted by 11 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, by the Social Committee, and by 11 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions, by the Council at its 157th plenary meeting. The U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and Chinese representatives abstained from voting on the ground that the resolution singled out only the educational aspect of the problem. The resolution adopted by the Council (116(VI)B) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"A. Requests the Secretary-General:

"(i) To organize studies and prepare analyses designed to assist the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities in determining the main types of discrimination which impede the equal enjoyment by all of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the causes of such discrimination, the results of such studies and analyses to be made available to members of the Sub-Commission;

"(ii) To keep in mind, in connexion with any studies he may make in the fields of the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities, the desirability of formulating effective educational programmes in these fields and to report any findings that might assist the Sub-Commission in making appropriate recommendations to this end;

"B. Advises UNESCO of the interest of the United Nations in effective educational programmes in the fields of the prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities, and

"(i) Requests UNESCO to make available to the Sub-Commission any relevant material or analyses that might result from that organization's proposed study of social tensions or from any other UNESCO programme;

"(U) Suggests collaboration between the United Nations and UNESCO in the formulation of such a programme;

"(iii) Suggests that UNESCO consider the desirability of initiating and recommending the general adoption of a programme of disseminating scientific facts designed to remove what is commonly known as racial prejudices; and

"(iv) Invites UNESCO to consider the creation of a committee of world leaders in educational theory and practice, which should make it its business to study and select the most common and basic principles of a democratic and universal education in order to combat any spirit of intolerance or hostility as between nations and groups."

(3) Minorities Treaties

The Commission on Human Rights, at the request of the Sub-Commission, drew the attention of the Council to document CL. 110. 1927, of the League of Nations, which reproduces a large number of texts of treaties and declarations relating to international obligations undertaken to combat discrimination and to protect minorities. The Commission requested the Council to consider the question whether, and to what extent, those treaties should be regarded as being still in force and suggested that an advisory opinion in the question might be sought from the International Court of Justice. The Council discussed the question at its 128th and 159th plenary meetings on February 5 and March 2, and the 34th meeting of its Social Committee on February 20. On the proposal of the United Kingdom representative, it was decided to request the Secretary-General to study the question and report to the Commission, as it was thought it would then be clearer if a reference to the International Court was necessary. The U.S.S.R. representative thought that the proposed study was unnecessary, as the treaties and declarations referred to were all part of the system established by the Treaty of Versailles and related to conditions which no longer existed. The Council at its 159th plenary meeting adopted, by 15 votes to 2, resolution 116(VI) requesting the Secretary-General to "study the question whether and to what extent the treaties and declarations relating to international obligations undertaken to combat discrimination and to protect minorities, the texts of which are contained in League of Nations document C.L.110.1927.1 Annex, should be regarded as being still in force, at least in so far as they would entail between contracting States rights and obligations the existence of which would be independent of their guarantee by the League of Nations; and to report on the results of this study to a later session of the Commission on Human Rights with recommendations, if required, for any further action to elucidate this question."

(4) Peace Treaties

On the recommendation of the Sub-Commission, the Commission on Human Rights at its second session declared that in any peace treaties still to be ratified there should be included, whenever appropriate, specific clauses seeking to protect human rights and minority rights (E/600). In the Council's discussion of the report at its sixth session (128th plenary meeting) this suggestion was supported by the Netherlands representative but objected to by the U.S.S.R. representative as outside the competence of the Council.

(5) Terms of Reference of the Sub-Commission

Finally, the Sub-Commission requested the Commission on Human Rights to re-examine the terms of reference of the Sub-Commission in order to clarify them and to extend their scope. The Commission at its second session deferred such re-examination, and at its third session postponed consideration of the question until it had drawn up a draft International Bill of Human Rights, including measures for implementation. It decided that reconsideration of the Sub-Commission's terms of reference would be on the agenda of its fourth session, and expressed the view that there was no need for the Sub-Commission to meet prior to the next session of the Commission, since the draft International Bill of Human Rights had not been completed.

e. STATELESS PERSONS

At its second session, the Commission on Human Rights (E/600) expressed the wish (a) that the United Nations make recommendations to Member States with a view to concluding conventions on nationality, and (b) that early consideration be given by the United Nations to the legal status of persons who do not enjoy the protection of any government, in particular pending the acquisition of a nationality, as regards their legal and social protection and their identity papers. The Commission recommended that such work be undertaken in consultation with those specialized agencies at present assuming the protection of some categories of persons not enjoying the protection of any government, and that due regard be paid to relevant international agreements and conventions.

The question was considered by the Council at its 128th and 159th plenary meetings on February 5 and March 2, and at the 34th and 35th meetings of its Social Committee on February 20. The United States proposed a draft resolution (E/AC.7/41), requesting the Secretary-General to undertake, in consultation with interested commissions and specialized agencies, a study of relevant international agreements and conventions; the drafting of a proposed convention on the subject of stateless persons; a study of the interim measures which might be taken by the United Nations to afford protection to stateless persons, including the issuance of necessary documents; and to make a report on these subjects, with recommendations, to an early session of the Council. The United States representative subsequently withdrew his proposal in favor of a United Kingdom draft resolution (E/AC.7/62) introduced with the object of making more specific the distinction between de jure stateless persons whom their countries had deprived of nationality and persons stateless de facto, including political exiles and non-repatriable persons. The United States, United Kingdom and Brazilian representatives emphasized that two questions were involved: that of nationality, which would need serious and detailed study; and that of taking provisional measures to protect de facto stateless persons. The U.S.S.R., Polish and Byelorussian representatives opposed the draft resolution on the grounds that provisions concerning de facto stateless persons which did not take account of the opinions of their countries of origin would constitute a violation of the sovereignty of those states and would have no legal force, and that since refugees and displaced persons were concerned, the question should not be dealt with irrespective of the General Assembly's resolution 62(I) on the subject which had laid stress on repatriation.⁷⁷

The United Kingdom draft resolution, with minor amendments, accepted by the United Kingdom representative, designed to make it more general, was adopted by the Social Committee at its 35th meeting on February 20 by 15 votes to 3 and by the Council at its 159th plenary meeting on March 2 by the same vote. In this resolution (116(VI)D) the Council took note of the suggestions of the Commission, recognized "that this problem demands in the first instance the adoption of interim measures to afford protection to stateless persons, and secondly the taking of joint and separate action by Member nations in co-operation with the United Nations to ensure that everyone shall have an effective right to a nationality," and requested the Secretary-General in consultation with interested commissions and specialized agencies

"(a) To undertake a study of the existing situation in regard to the protection of stateless persons by the issuance of necessary documents and other measures, and to make recommendations to an early session of the Council on the interim measures which might be taken by the United Nations to further this object;

"(b) To undertake a study of national legislation and international agreements and conventions relevant to statelessness, and to submit recommendations to the Council as to the desirability of concluding a further convention on this subject."

f. TRADE UNION RIGHTS (FREEDOM OF ASSOCIATION)

At the fourth session of the Economic and Social Council, the World Federation of Trade Unions proposed the agenda item "Guarantees for the exercise and development of trade union rights". In considering this item the Council had before it memoranda submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions (E/C.2/28) and by the American Federation of Labor (E/C.2/32) and adopted a resolution (52(IV)) transmitting these documents to the International Labour Organisation with a request that the item should be placed upon the agenda of its forthcoming session, and that a report should be sent to the Council for its consideration at its next session. The Council also decided to transmit these documents to the Commission on Human Rights in order that it might consider those aspects of the subject which might appropriately form part of the bill or declaration on human rights.⁷⁸

The International Labour Organisation considered this question at the thirtieth International Labour Conference, and the Conference adopted a report (E/485) for transmission to the Council as requested. This report describes the twofold action taken on this subject by the International Labour Conference. The Conference adopted unanimously two resolutions and approved a list of points as a basis for discussion at the next session of the Conference.

The resolutions adopted related to: (1) freedom of association and protection of the right to organize and to bargain collectively; and (2) international machinery for safeguarding freedom of association. The first resolution concerned the fundamental principles on which freedom of association must be based. It represented the first stage of the program of action to be undertaken by the International Labour Organisation. The next stage visualized was the embodiment in one or several international labor conventions to be submitted for adoption at the 1948 Conference of these principles and of methods for encouraging (1) the exercise of the right of freedom of association without fear of restraint; (2) collective agreements; (3) voluntary conciliation and arbitration; and (4) co-operation between public authorities and employers' and workers' organizations. In respect to the second resolution, the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation was requested to arrange for close and detailed study of the subject and to report on all its aspects to the next session of the Conference.

The Council considered the report of the Conference at its 108th and 109th plenary meetings on August 8, 1947. Representatives of the International Labour Organisation, the World Federation of Trade Unions, the American Federation of Labor and the International Federation of Christian Trade Unions participated in the discussions.

Various representatives expressed satisfaction at the promptitude with which the International Labour Organisation had considered the question at the request of the Council, and cited the case as a good example of the co-ordinating functions of the Council, since the item was suggested by a non-governmental organization and referred for consideration to a specialized agency concerned with this particular field. Representatives also called attention to the importance of the fact that the report had been adopted unanimously by the ILO Conference, consisting of representatives of governments, employers and workers.

The U.S.S.R. representative considered that the Council should take as a basis for its discussions on the question the original proposal (E/C.2/28) submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions and should regard the ILO report as complementary. His delegation endorsed the WFTU proposal, which drew the Council's attention to the fact that a policy was at present being followed in many countries to abolish the basic rights of trade unions, emphasized the importance of the development of trade unions and called for the setting up of a special committee by the Council to safeguard trade union rights. A proposal to take the WFTU proposal as a basis of discussion was rejected by the Council by 10 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions.

A Czechoslovak draft resolution (E/534) to transmit the ILO report to the Social Commission with the request that the Commission "complete and consolidate the text" transmitted by the ILO in a practical form and make recommendations to the Council on the implementation of the proposed principles was also rejected by the Council, by 9 votes to 1, with 8 abstentions. The Czechoslovak representative, in explaining the draft resolution, stated that only the general aspects of the problem had been considered by the Council, and that the appropriate body to consider the substance of the matter was the Social Commission; the Commission on Human Rights, to which it had also been referred, would also only deal with general principles. Certain members of the Council, however, felt that, as the Council had already referred the question to an expert body, the ILO, which was taking action on the question, it would only cause further delay and confusion to refer it also to the Social Commission.

The Council decided to adopt a resolution jointly proposed by the United Kingdom, the Netherlands and the United States (E/533) as amended by the inclusion of certain paragraphs from the Czechoslovak proposal. These paragraphs provided for the recognition of the principles proclaimed by the International Labour Conference and a request to the ILO to continue its efforts so that one or several international conventions might be quickly adopted. A Norwegian verbal amendment that would have had the Council transmit the report to the Social Commission, requesting it to present its comments to the Council's next session "in order that the Council may present the comments it desires for the consideration of the International Labour Conference in drafting one or more conventions in this matter", was rejected by 7 votes to 5, with 6 abstentions.

The resolution (84(V)) was adopted by the Council by 15 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, at its 109th meeting on August 8, and reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having received the report transmitted by the International Labour Organisation in pursuance of the Council's request at its fourth session that the memoranda on the subject of trade union rights submitted to the Council by the World Federation of Trade Unions and the American Federation of Labor might be placed on the agenda of the International Labour Organisation at its next session and that a report might be sent for the consideration of the Economic and Social Council at its next session,

"Takes note of the report and observes with satisfaction the action taken and proposed by the International Labour Organisation within its recognized competence,

"Decides

"(a) To recognize the principles proclaimed by the International Labour Conference;

"(b) To request the International Labour Organisation to continue its efforts in order that one or several international conventions may be quickly adopted;

"(c) To transmit the report to the General Assembly;

"Awaits further reports on the subject to be transmitted by the International Labour Organisation and awaits also the report which it will receive in due course from the Commission on Human Rights on those aspects of the subject which might appropriately form part of the bill or declaration on human rights,

"Notes that proposals for the establishment of international machinery for safeguarding freedom of association are to be examined by the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation,

"Considers that the question of enforcement of rights, whether of individuals or of associations, raises common problems which should be considered jointly by the United Nations and the International Labour Organisation, and

"Requests the Secretary-General to arrange for co-operation between the International Labour Organisation and the Commission on Human Rights in the study of these problems."

The General Assembly at its second session on November 17, 1947, in resolution 128(II)⁷⁹ approved the resolutions on trade union rights adopted by the fourth and fifth sessions of the Economic and Social Council (resolutions 52(IV) and 84(VI)).

The General Assembly, in this resolution also (1) stated its view that the inalienable right of trade union freedom of association is, as well as other social safeguards, essential to the improvement of the standard of living of workers, and to their economic well-being; (2) endorsed the principles proclaimed by the International Labour Conference and the principles recognized in the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation and the Declaration of Philadelphia made by the International Labour Organisation; and (3) transmitted the report of the International Labour Organisation to the Commission on Human Rights with the same objects as those stated in resolution 52(IV) of the Economic and Social Council, and recommended to the International Labour Organisation on its tripartite basis "to pursue urgently in collaboration with the United Nations and in conformity with the resolution of the International Labour Conference concerning international machinery for safeguarding trade union rights and freedom of association, the study of the control of their practical application".

When preparing the draft International Bill of Human Rights, the Commission on Human Rights, at its second (E/600) and third (E/800) sessions, gave consideration to general provisions on freedom of association.

The Governing Body of the International Labour Office, in a report entitled Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize (Report VII, Appendix) prepared for the 31st session of the International Labour Conference at San Francisco in June 1948, considered the question of the adoption of a Convention on Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize. The Governing Body further pointed out that there might be advantage in elaborating some machinery, in consultation with the Commission on Human Rights, in addition to the machinery provided in the ILO Constitution, for dealing with cases in which, in addition to trade union rights, other rights of a more general character were involved. The Governing Body proposed, therefore, if the Conference agreed, to undertake the consultation with the United Nations envisaged in the above-mentioned resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

On July 6, 1948, the International Labour Conference adopted a Convention in two parts, (a) Freedom of Association and (b) Protection of the Right to Organize. The Conference also adopted a resolution requesting the Governing Body to enter into consultation with the competent organs of the United Nations for the purpose of examining what developments to existing international machinery may be necessary to ensure the safeguarding of the freedom of association.

⁷⁹ See pp. 132-33.

The Economic and Social Council, at its seventh session, in view of pressure of business, decided after discussion at its 177th and 178th plenary meetings on July 20, 1948, to defer to its next session, along with other items, the question of Trade Union Rights (Freedom of Association); and also the question of Infringements of Trade Union Rights, which had been proposed as an agenda item by the World Federation of Trade Unions (E/822).

g. SURVEY OF FORCED LABOR AND MEASURES FOR ITS ABOLITION

At its sixth session the Economic and Social Council postponed to its seventh session consideration of the agenda item "Survey of Forced Labor and Measures for its Abolition", proposed by the American Federation of Labor. At its seventh session the Council decided, after discussion at its 176th and 177th plenary meetings on July 19 and 20, to defer again consideration of this item (E/596).

2. Freedom of Information and of the Press

a. CONSIDERATION AT THE COUNCIL'S FIFTH SESSION

The Economic and Social Council during its fifth session considered the report (E/441 and Add. 1) of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press at its 94th, 95th, 115th, 116th, 117th and 118th plenary meetings on July 25 and August 13, 14 and 15, 1947, respectively, and at the 16th to 21st meetings of the Social Committee on August 1, 4, 6, 7 and 8. The Sub-Commission had been established by the Commission on Human Rights and had been given two principal functions to perform: to examine what rights, obligations and practices should be included in the concept of freedom of information, and to report to the Commission on any issues that might arise from such examination; and to prepare a draft annotated agenda, and make other proposals concerning preparations for the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information. At its first session, from May 19 to June 4, 1947, the Sub-Commission decided to postpone discussion of the concept of freedom of information until its next session and to concentrate instead upon the necessary arrangements for the Conference.⁸⁰

Since the next session of the Commission on Human Rights was not scheduled to take place until after the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council, the latter authorized the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press to report directly to the Council.

The General Assembly had originally resolved (resolution 59 (I)) that a United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information should be held in 1947. The Sub-Commission found that this time schedule could not be adhered to and recommended that the Conference be held instead in March or April 1948. The Council, supporting the recommendation of the Sub-Commission, decided at its 95th plenary meeting on July 25 to choose March 23, 1948, as the opening day of the Conference and the city of Geneva as the Conference site.

By and large, the Council accepted without major modifications the substantive and procedural recommendations of the Sub-Commission. On the motion of the representative of Turkey (E/551), the Council, did, however, decide at its 115th plenary meeting on August 13, by a vote of 11 to 6, with 1 abstention, not to extend voting privileges to non-member states of the United Nations invited to attend the conference, thus reversing the recommendation of the Sub-Commission.

The proposal of the U.S.S.R. representative to invite the Mongolian People's Republic to the Conference was rejected at the same meeting by a vote of 8 to 3, with 7 abstentions.

The Council discussed the provisional agenda recommended for the Conference at its 116th, 117th and 118th plenary meetings. The main part of the discussion centred round a proposal (E/-AC. 7/30) of the representative of the U.S.S.R. which would, inter alia, have designated the organization of a campaign explicitly for unmasking the vestiges of Fascism and for eradicating all forms of Fascist ideology as one of the major tasks of the free press. An amendment based on this proposal was rejected at the 118th plenary meeting by a vote of 12 to 3, with 3 abstentions. A joint French, Norwegian and Chilean amendment (E/AC. 7/-39), offered as a possible compromise, would have called for the removing of the "remnants of Fascism and collaborationism from the media of information". In the course of the discussion, the sponsors of the amendment agreed to modify the first paragraph to read "to combat anti-democratic ideologies and remove the remnants of fascism and collaborationism from the media of information." The first paragraph was, however, rejected by a vote of 10 to 7, with 1 abstention. The Council also rejected, by a vote of 7 to 2, with 9 abstentions, a New Zealand amendment to insert in the section dealing with the tasks of the press a clause calling on the parties concerned "to forswear anti-democratic ideologies".

The Council then adopted, by a vote of 14 to 0, with 4 abstentions, a Lebanese compromise proposal imposing upon the press the duty to "combat any ideologies whose nature could endanger these rights and freedoms", i.e., the rights and freedoms of the press.

The second paragraph of the French, Norwegian and Chilean proposal (E/AC. 7/39), proposing the insertion of a new clause reading "to combat forces which incite war by removing bellicose influences from media of information", was adopted by a vote of 10 to 5, with 3 abstentions.

The provisional agenda, thus modified, was approved by the Council on August 15, 1947, by a vote of 15 to 2, with 1 abstention (resolution 74(V)).

The Council also decided to refer to the forthcoming Conference on Freedom of Information a communication from the International Organization of Journalists (E/448) regarding the desirability of drawing up a covenant on freedom of information and the need to create an instrument to implement such a covenant, and it took note of the interim report, transmitted by UNESCO, containing the results of an inquiry in certain war devastated countries concerning newsprint (E/507), and requested UNESCO to present to the Economic and Social Council any further reports on the subject which it might prepare. The Council also requested the Secretary-General to communicate with Member Governments not covered by any survey of UNESCO, in order to complete the survey made and to be made by UNESCO, and to present the results of this inquiry to the Economic and Social Council.

With these additions, and the modifications noted above, the Council, at its 118th meeting, adopted the report of the Sub-Commission (E/441 and Add. 1), together with the draft resolutions (E/547) as amended, by a vote of 16 to 0, with 2 abstentions.

In its resolution 74 (V) the Council decided that voting rights in the Conference were to be exercised only by Members of the United Nations, but the following non-member States were to be invited to participate in the Conference without voting rights: Albania, Austria, Bulgaria, Finland, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Pakistan, Portugal, Roumania, Switzerland, Transjordan and Yemen. Invitations to participate in the preparations for the Conference and to attend the Conference without voting privileges were, at their request, to be extended also to the following:

Specialized agencies which had concluded agreements with the United Nations (as of August 15, 1947): International Labour Organisation, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, International Civil Aviation Organization, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

Other inter-governmental organizations which had not then (August 15, 1947) concluded agreements with the United Nations but which might do so in the future: International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, International Monetary Fund, International Refugee Organization, International Telecommunication Union, International Trade Organization, Universal Postal Union, World Health Organization.

Non-governmental organizations in category A: American Federation of Labor, International Chamber of Commerce, International Co-operative Alliance, International Federation of Agricultural Producers, International Federation of Christian Trade Unions, Inter-Parliamentary Union, World Federation of Trade Unions.

Non-governmental organizations in category B: International Organization of Journalists.

With the exception of the last-mentioned, all of the above-named organizations were to be accorded a status vis-a-vis the Conference equivalent to the status accorded them by the Economic and Social Council. The International Organization of Journalists was, however, for the purpose of the Conference, to be regarded as having category A status.

The main items proposed by the Council for the provisional agenda of the Conference were summed up by the Council in its subsequent report (A/382) to the General Assembly in these words:

"1. General discussion on the principles of freedom of information.

"2. Consideration of certain fundamental principles to which media of information should have regard in performing their basic functions of gathering, transmitting and disseminating news and information without fetters.

"3. Measures to facilitate the gathering of information.

"4. Measures to facilitate the international transmission of information.

"5. Measures concerning the free publication and reception of information.

"6. Consideration of the drafting of a charter of rights and obligations of media of information.

"7. Consideration of possible continuing machinery to promote the free flow of true information."

The Council also decided that any further items recommended at its next (sixth) session should be included in an additional list.

The balance of the Council's resolutions dealt with such technical matters as the proposed rules of procedure of the Conference, the size of delegations and organization of the work of the Conference.

b. SECOND SESSION OF SUB-COMMISSION ON FREEDOM OF INFORMATION AND OF THE PRESS

The Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press held its second session from January 19 to February 3, 1948, and in the course of this session drafted articles on freedom of information for the proposed draft Declaration of Human Rights and for the draft Covenant on Human Rights. In so doing, the Sub-Commission had acted pursuant to the terms of reference given it by the Commission on Human Rights (E/600). The Sub-Commission also outlined certain principles upon which its drafting of the articles had been based (E/CN. 4/80).

c. CONSIDERATION AT THE COUNCIL'S SIXTH SESSION

During the sixth session, the Economic and Social Council, at its 155th plenary meeting in February 27, 1948, adopted resolution 118 (VI) A by 14 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, in which it stated that it considered that it was not necessary to discuss the report of the Sub-Commission (E/CN.4/80) in view of the approaching Conference on Freedom of Information, and it decided to transmit the report to the Conference "without discussion or expression" of the Council's views.

Resolution 118(VI) B bearing on the Conference was adopted by the Council on March 1, 1948, at its 157th plenary meeting by 11 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions. In it, the Council requested the Conference to consider, and report its conclusions on, Articles 17 and 18 of the draft International Declaration on Human Rights (E/600, Annex A), i.e., on the two articles of that draft Declaration dealing with freedom of information. The Council, in the same resolution, further requested the Conference to express its views on the two alternative versions of an article on the same subject, intended for inclusion in the International Covenant on Human Rights.⁸¹

After discussion in its 128th plenary meeting, the Economic and Social Council resolved (resolution 118(VI) B) at its 157th meeting to extend the life of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press for one additional session to enable that body to hold a meeting after the termination of the Conference on Freedom of Information. Finally, resolution 118(VI) B noted that the General Assembly had, at its second session, remitted two resolutions to the Conference: one dealing with measures to be taken against propaganda and the inciters of a new war, the other with false or distorted reports.⁸²

A further resolution (119(VI)) with regard to the Conference was adopted unanimously by the Economic and Social Council at its 153rd plenary meeting on February 25. This resolution added the names of Burma and Ceylon to the list of non-members of the United Nations to be invited to participate, without vote, in the Conference, noting that both States had become fully self-governing since the fifth session of the Council.

d. CONFERENCE ON FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

The Conference was held in Geneva from March 23 to April 21, 1948, and was attended by delegations representing 54 Governments, including both Members and non-members of the United Nations, while three additional States, Bolivia, Iran and Ireland, sent observers.

The Conference adopted as its agenda the provisional agenda approved by the Economic and Social Council at its fifth session (resolution 74(V)), with the addition of two resolutions referred to it by the General Assembly (on measures to be taken against propaganda and inciters of a new war (resolution 110(II)),⁸³ and on false or distorted reports (resolution 127(II)),⁸⁴ and two proposals made by the International Organization of Journalists relating to a Court of Honor of the Press and a Day of Friendship and Mutual Understanding in the Press (E/CONF.6/19).

The Conference prepared three draft conventions,⁸⁵ namely:

1. Draft Convention on the Gathering and International Transmission of News;
2. Draft Convention Concerning the Institution of an International Right of Correction; and
3. Draft Convention on Freedom of Information.

⁸² See General Assembly, pp. 93 and 135.

⁸³ See p. 93.

⁸⁴ See p. 135.

⁸⁵ For texts of draft Conventions, as submitted by the Council to the General Assembly (Resolutions adopted by the Economic and Social Council during its seventh session, pp. 16-27), see pp. 590-95.

In addition, the Conference prepared draft articles on freedom of information for the draft Declaration and the Covenant, respectively, of Human Rights, taking into account the recommendations of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press formulated at the second session of that body (E/CONF.6/79, Annex B). It also adopted 43 resolutions grouped under the following headings:

1. General Principles (resolutions 1 to 4);
2. Measures to Facilitate the Gathering and International Transmission of Information (resolutions 5 to 24);
3. Measures concerning the Free Publication and Reception of Information (resolutions 25 to 38);
4. Continuing Machinery to Promote the Free Flow of Information (resolution 39);
5. Miscellaneous (resolutions 40 and 41); and
6. Possible Modes of Action by Means of Which the Recommendations of the Conference Can Best be Put into Effect (resolutions 42 and 43).

The Conference referred all its decisions, i.e., the three draft conventions and the resolutions, to the Economic and Social Council, and decided that all Governments invited to the Conference be requested to forward to the Secretary-General of the United Nations before July 5, 1948, their comments on the draft conventions proposed by the Conference as well as proposals of their own for other draft conventions based on the recommendations of the Conference. The Conference further requested the Council to examine at its seventh session the three draft conventions adopted at the Geneva gathering, in the light of comments and other draft conventions submitted by governments, and to submit to the third session of the General Assembly draft conventions which might be opened at that session for signature or accession by those states entitled and willing to become parties thereto and remain open subsequently for additional accessions.

e. CONSIDERATION AT THE COUNCIL'S SEVENTH SESSION

The Council, at its seventh session (180th meeting), referred the Final Act of the Geneva Conference (E/CONF.6/79) to its Human Rights Committee, which, however, had time to examine only the draft of the first of the three draft conventions (i.e., on Gathering and International Transmission of News) at its 13th to 26th meetings held from August 7 to 21. Because of the pressure of business, the Council, after a brief discussion at its 201st and 202nd plenary meetings on August 17, decided at the latter to recall the Final Act from the Committee, and, after allowing each Council member to make one general statement of position, to transmit the documents in question to the General Assembly, together with the aforementioned statements of position, but without any other debate or decisions.

The statements of position were made at the 219th, 221st and 223rd plenary meetings on August 26, 27 and 28, 1948. All Council members recognized and emphasized the extreme importance of freedom of information as a fundamental human right. The majority supported the three draft conventions in principle, and expressed their regret that the Council had been unable to complete its examination of them. Members recognized that none of the draft conventions had reached a completely satisfactory state. The objection was made by some Council members that they contained no provisions which would explicitly promote international peace and security, or would further the development of friendly relations between states, and, in particular, no provisions which would prohibit Fascist or war propaganda or the dissemination of racial, religious or national hatred. Some members thought the draft conventions did not go far enough, but were nevertheless acceptable as a minimum and represented a step in the right direction. Members also reserved their right to make further detailed comment in the General Assembly, where, it was hoped, the draft conventions would receive the exhaustive examination which the importance of the subject merited.

The Council, at its 221st and 223rd meetings, also considered resolution 39 of the Final Act of the Conference, relating to the implementation of the draft conventions and the consequent extension of the terms of reference of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press. The Council decided at its 223rd meeting by a vote of 16 to 0, with 2 abstentions, to postpone until its eighth session consideration of this resolution, and requested the Secretary-General to collate the replies of governments to the requests for information, and to prepare a suggested program of work and priorities for submission to the third session of the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press (resolution 152(VII)A).

The Council further decided, in respect of the Final Act as a whole, to transmit it to the General Assembly with these modifications and omissions: the draft Convention on the Gathering and International Transmission of News, to be transmitted as redrafted by the Council's Human Rights Committee (E/1018); and resolution 39 (see above), to be withheld for the time being. The Council also decided to transmit to the Assembly the records of all relevant proceedings of the seventh session (resolution 152(VII)B).

f. DRAFT CONVENTIONS

The draft Conventions submitted by the Council to the General Assembly read as follows:

1. DRAFT CONVENTION ON THE GATHERING AND INTERNATIONAL TRANSMISSION OF NEWS

The Contracting States,
Desiring to implement the right of their peoples to be fully informed,

Desiring to improve understanding between their peoples through the free flow of information and opinion,
Having resolved to conclude a Convention for this purpose,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Convention:

1. "Information agency" means any Press, radio or film organization created or organized under the laws and regulations of a Contracting State, regularly engaged in the collection and dissemination of news material, and includes Press associations, news feature services, newspapers, periodicals and radio, television, facsimile and any other broadcasting organizations and newsreel companies;

2. "Correspondent" means an individual employed by an information agency or a national of a Contracting State, who in either case is regularly engaged in the collection and reporting of news material, and who, when outside his State, is the holder of a valid passport identifying him as a correspondent or of a similar document internationally accepted identifying him as such;

3. "News material" means all news material, whether of information or opinion and whether visual or auditory, for dissemination to the public.

Article 2

In order to encourage the freest possible movement of correspondents in the performance of their functions, the Contracting States shall expedite, in a manner consistent with their respective laws and procedures, the administrative measures necessary for the entry into, residence in, travel through, and egress from their respective territories of correspondents of other Contracting States together with their professional equipment, and shall not impose restrictions which discriminate against such correspondents with respect to ingress into, residence in, travel through or egress from such territories.

Article 3

Each Contracting State shall, within the limits compatible with national security, permit and encourage access to news, official and non-official, for all correspondents of other Contracting States so far as possible on the same basis as for its own correspondents, and shall not discriminate among correspondents of other Contracting States as regards such access.

Article 4

The Contracting States shall permit egress from their territories of all news material of correspondents and information agencies of other Contracting States without censorship, editing or delay; provided that each of the Contracting States may make and enforce regulations relating directly to the maintenance of national security. Such of these regulations as relate to the transmission of news material shall be communicated by the State to correspondents and information agencies of other Contracting States in its territory and shall apply equally to all correspondents and information agencies of other Contracting States.

If the requirements of national security should compel a Contracting State to establish censorship in peacetime it shall:

1. Establish in advance which categories of news material are subject to previous inspection; and publish the directives of the censor announcing forbidden matters;

2. Carry out censorship as far as possible in the presence of the correspondent or of a representative of the information agency concerned;

3. Where censorship in the presence of the person concerned is not possible:

(a) Fix the time-limit allowed the censors for the return of the news material to the correspondent or information agency concerned;

(b) Require the return of news material submitted for censorship direct to the correspondent or information agency concerned so that the correspondent or agency may know at once what has been censored in the text and what use may be made of the censored information;

(c) In the case of a telegram, base the charge on the number of words composing the telegram after censorship;

(d) Return the total telegraph charges for telegrams submitted for censorship, if the transmission has been delayed more than six hours by reason of censorship and the sender has cancelled the telegram before its transmission.

Article 5

The Contracting States, while recognizing that correspondents must conform to the laws in force in the countries in which they are operating, agree that correspondents of other Contracting States legally admitted into their territories shall not be expelled on account of any lawful exercise of their right to seek, receive or impart information or opinion.

Article 6

Correspondents and information agencies of one Contracting State in the territory of another Contracting State shall have access to all facilities in that territory generally and publicly used for the international transmission of news material and may transmit news material from one territory to another (including transmissions between the metropolitan and non-metropolitan territories of any State) on the same basis and at the same rates applicable to all other users of such facilities for similar purposes.

Article 7

Each Contracting State shall permit all news material of correspondents and information agencies of other Contracting States to enter its territory and reach information agencies operating therein on conditions which are not less favourable than those accorded to any correspondents or information agency of any other Contracting or non-Contracting State.

Article 8

The present Convention shall not apply to any correspondent of a Contracting State who, while not otherwise admissible under article 2 into the territory of another Contracting State, is nevertheless admitted conditionally in accordance with an agreement between that other Contracting State and the United Nations, or a specialized agency thereof, in order to cover its proceedings, or pursuant to a special arrangement made by that other Contracting State in order to facilitate the entry of such correspondents.

Article 9

Nothing in this Convention shall be construed as depriving any Contracting State of its right to make and enforce laws and regulations for the protection of national security and public order.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed as depriving any Contracting State of its right to make and enforce laws and regulations prohibiting obscene news material.

Nothing in the present Convention shall limit the discretion of any Contracting State to refuse entry into its territory to any particular person, or to restrict the period of his residence therein, provided any such restriction does not conflict with the provisions of article 5.

Article 10⁸⁶

Article 11

In time of war or any other public emergency, a Contracting State may take measures derogating from its obligations under the present Convention to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation.

Any Contracting State availing itself of this right of derogation shall promptly inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the measures which it has thus adopted and of the reasons therefor.

It shall also inform him as and when the measures cease to operate.

Article 12

The present Convention shall be ratified on behalf of the States signatory hereto in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall notify all signatory and acceding States of each such deposit.

Article 13

The present Convention shall remain open for the accession of all States which are not signatories. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall notify all signatory and acceding States of each such deposit.

Article 14

The present Convention shall come into force as soon as ... States have deposited their respective instruments of ratification or accession. The Convention thereafter shall come into force with respect to each other State on the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification or accession.

Article 15

1. Each Contracting State undertakes to take as soon as possible the necessary steps with a view to extending the provisions of the present Convention to the territories for whose foreign relations it is responsible.

To this end, having due regard to the position of each territory and particularly to the constitutional practice applicable thereto, each Contracting State may, at the time of its accession or at any time thereafter, by notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, declare that the present Convention shall extend to any of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible. The Convention shall extend to the territories named in the notification as from the thirtieth day after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification.

2. Each State which has made a declaration under paragraph 1 above extending the present Convention may, subject to the same conditions, at any time thereafter, by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, declare that the Convention shall cease to extend to any territory named in the notification. The Convention shall then cease to extend to such territory as from the thirtieth day after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification.⁸⁷

The present Convention shall remain in force indefinitely, but may be denounced by any Contracting State by means of six months' notice in writing given to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit a copy of the notice to each of the other Contracting States. After the expiration of this period of six months, the Convention shall cease in its effect as regards the State which denounces it, but shall remain in force for the remaining Contracting States.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the Plenipotentiaries of the respective States, being duly authorized thereto, have signed the present Convention.

⁸⁶ The delegations of France, the United Kingdom and the United States of America proposed that the following additional article be inserted:

"Any dispute between two or more Contracting States arising under the present Convention which has not been settled, and is not in process of settlement, by negotiation or otherwise, may be referred by any party to the dispute to a committee. Each State party to the dispute shall appoint a member of this committee and the Secretary-General of the United Nations shall appoint a member, a national of a State party to the Convention but not party to the dispute, who shall serve as Chairman of the committee. The committee shall investigate such dispute and issue a report and recommendation thereon, which shall be made public by the Secretary-General."

In the course of the discussions of the Human Rights Committee which are summarized in documents E/AC-27/SR.23 and 24, this proposal was withdrawn by the three delegations which had submitted it. It was agreed that this proposal and the record of the discussions be drawn to the attention of the Council so that the latter might decide whether they should be drawn to the attention of the General Assembly.

The Committee decided that its vote on the above text and the note which follows be included in its report. The above text was approved by a vote of 9 to 4, with 5 abstentions.

The delegations of Lebanon, Poland and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics had proposed the following text to replace article 14 (new article 15) as adopted by the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information:

"The provisions of the present Convention shall extend both to the metropolitan territories of States signing the present Convention and to all the territories under the authority or administration of such metropolitan powers (non-self-governing, trust and colonial territories), and the provisions in question shall apply equally both to the territories of the metropolitan powers and to the dependent territories mentioned.

"(a) The Secretary-General of the United Nations will immediately inform of the present Convention the States representing other States and Territories internationally, on behalf of such other States, such communication to be transmitted immediately to the authorities of non-self-governing, non-autonomous and similar territories.

"(b) Each State or territory for the international

DONE at this day of 1948, in the languages, each equally authentic, the original of which shall be deposited in the archives of the United Nations. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit certified copies thereof to all the signatory and acceding States.

2. DRAFT CONVENTION ON THE INSTITUTION OF AN INTERNATIONAL RIGHT OF CORRECTION

The Governments Parties to the present Convention, Considering the danger to the maintenance of friendly relations between peoples and to the preservation of peace presented by the publication of inaccurate reports,

Considering that at its second session, the General Assembly of the United Nations recommended the adoption of measures designed to promote friendly relations among nations and to combat the dissemination of false or distorted reports likely to injure the friendly relations between States,

Considering, however, that it does not at present appear possible or desirable to envisage the institution on the international level of a procedure for verifying the accuracy of a report such as might lead to the imposition of penalties for the publication of false or distorted reports,

Considering moreover that to prevent the publication of false or distorted news or to reduce its pernicious effects, it is above all necessary to sharpen the sense of responsibility of the various media of information and to promote the wide circulation of news; that an effective means to this end is to give all those directly affected by a report which they consider false or distorted and which is spread by an organ of information the possibility of ensuring commensurate publicity for their corrections or replies; that the right of reply or correction has been embodied in the legislation of a large number of States and that its legitimacy is recognized in the draft of article 17 of the Covenant on Human Rights which the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Information and of the Press decided, at its second session, to recommend to the Commission on Human Rights; that failing the adoption by all States in their own legislation of a like right available to foreign nationals under the same conditions as to their own nationals, it is particularly desirable to institute, on the international level, a right of correction; that it is necessary, however, in order to prevent any abuse, strictly to define the extent of the right of correction and clearly to specify the conditions for its exercise,

Have adopted the following articles:

Article 1

In cases where a Contracting State alleges that news reports likely to injure its relations with other States, transmitted from one country to another country by foreign correspondents or by news agencies and disseminated abroad, are false or distorted, it may submit its version of the facts (hereinafter called "communiqué") to the Contracting States within whose territories such reports have been published in one or more newspapers or periodicals or disseminated by radio. Such communiqué may be issued only with respect to news reports and must be without comment or expression of opinion. As far as possible, the communiqué should not contain a larger number of words than the news report objected to, and in no case more than double the number of words in the news report to be corrected. The communiqué must be accompanied by a verbatim text of the report as published or disseminated, and by evidence that the report objected to has been transmitted from one country to another by a foreign correspondent or by a news agency.

Article 2

1. Any Government of a Contracting State receiving such a communiqué shall, whatever be its opinion concerning the facts in question, make available to the news enterprises functioning in the territory where it exercises its authority the communiqué of the Government exercising the right of correction and, within five clear days from the date of receiving this communiqué, shall facilitate its dissemination through customary channels in accordance with its procedure for releasing news concerning international affairs.

2. In the event of the failure of any Contracting State to discharge its obligation under this article with respect to the communiqués of another Contracting State, the latter may discharge, on the basis of reciprocity, its obligation with respect to any communiqués thereafter submitted to it by the defaulting State.

Article 3

If any of the Contracting States to which this communiqué has been transmitted fails to fulfil, within the prescribed time-limit, the obligation laid down in the preceding article, the Government exercising the right of correction may submit the said communiqué to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall, within five clear days from the receipt thereof, give it appropriate publicity. This paragraph shall come into force as soon as the General Assembly of the United Nations has instructed its Secretary-General to perform this duty.

Article 4

Every Contracting State may, to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation, derogate from its obligations under the present Convention:

(a) As long as a state of war or public emergency prevails in its own territory;

(b) As long as such a state prevails in the territory of one or other Contracting States, but only with regard to those States.

relations of which another State is responsible may accede to the present Convention by notification of accession addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations through the agency of the State representing it internationally, such notification of accession to be transmitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations without delay.

"(c) The present Convention shall come into force with respect to any State or territory referred to in the preceding paragraph as from the date of deposit of its instrument of accession, even if the State which is responsible for its international relations does not ratify the Convention.

"(d) A State or territory which has acceded to the present Convention in accordance with the preceding paragraph may denounce it at any later date by means of six months' notice in writing given to the Secretary-General of the United Nations through the agency of the State representing it internationally.

"The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall transmit a copy of the notice to each of the other Contracting States. After the expiration of this period of six months, the Convention shall cease in its effects as regards the State or territory which denounces it."

A summary of the discussions of the Committee is contained in documents E/AC.27/SR.25 and 26.

Article 5

Any dispute between any two or more Contracting States concerning the interpretation or application of the present Convention which is not settled by negotiations shall be referred to the International Court of Justice for decision unless the Contracting States agree to another mode of settlement.

Article 6

The present Convention shall be open for accession to every State invited to the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information held at Geneva in March and April 1948, and to every other State which the General Assembly of the United Nations shall, by resolution, declare to be eligible.

Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 7

When any two of the States mentioned in article 6 have deposited their instruments of accession, the present Convention shall come into force between them on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of the second instrument of accession. It shall come into force for each State which accedes after that date on the thirtieth day after the deposit of its instrument of accession.

Article 8

Any Contracting State may denounce the present Convention by notification of denunciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation shall take effect six months after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification of denunciation.

Article 9

1. A State Party to the present Convention may, at the same time of its accession thereto or at any time thereafter, by notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, declare that the present Convention shall extend to any of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible, and the Convention shall extend to the territories named in the notification as from the thirtieth day after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification. The respective Contracting States undertake to seek immediately the consent of the Governments of such territories to the application of the present Convention to such territories, and to accede forthwith on behalf of and in respect of each such territory, if and when its consent has been obtained.

2. A State which has made a declaration under paragraph 1 above extending the present Convention may, with the consent of the Government concerned, at any time thereafter, by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, declare that the Convention shall cease to extend to any territory named in the notification, and the Convention shall then cease to extend to such territory six months after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification.

Article 10

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall notify each of the States referred to in article 6 of the date of the deposit of every instrument of accession and of the date on which this Convention comes into force and of any information received by him in accordance with the provisions of article 5 and of every notification received by him in accordance with the provisions of articles 7 or 8.

3. DRAFT CONVENTION ON FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

The States Parties to this Convention,

Considering that the free interchange of information and opinions, both in the national and in the international sphere, is a fundamental human right and essential in the cause of peace and for the achievement of political, social and economic progress, and

Desiring to co-operate fully with one another to promote the peace and welfare of mankind by this means, Have accepted the following provisions:

Article 1

Subject to the provisions of articles 2, 4, 5 and 6 of this Convention:

(a) Each Contracting State shall secure to all its own nationals and to the nationals of every other Contracting State lawfully within its territory freedom to impart and receive information and opinions, orally, by written or printed matter, in the form of art, or by legally operated visual or auditory devices without governmental interference;

(b) No Contracting State shall regulate or control the use or availability of any of the means of communication referred to in the preceding paragraph in any manner discriminating against any of its own nationals or of the nationals of any other Contracting State on political or personal grounds or on the basis of race, sex, language or religion;

(c) Each Contracting State shall secure to all its own nationals and to the nationals of every other Contracting State freedom to transmit and listen to information and opinions within its territories and across its frontiers by any legally operated means without governmental interference;

(d) Each Contracting State shall permit the nationals of other Contracting States as much freedom to seek information as it grants to its own nationals;

(e) The Contracting States shall encourage and facilitate the interchange between their territories of those of their nationals engaged in the gathering of information and opinions for dissemination to the public and shall deal expeditiously with applications by such persons to enter their territories.

Article 2

1. The freedoms referred to in paragraphs (a), (c) and (d) of article 1 carry with them duties and responsibilities and may therefore be subject to necessary penalties, liabilities and restrictions clearly defined by law, but only with regard to:

(a) Matters which must remain secret in the interest of national safety;

(b) Expressions which incite persons to alter by violence the system of government or which promote disorder;

(c) Expressions which incite persons to commit criminal acts;

(d) Expressions which are obscene or which are dangerous for youth and expressed in publications intended for them;

(e) Expressions which are injurious to the fair conduct of legal proceedings;

(f) Expressions which infringe literary or artistic rights;

(g) Expressions about other persons, natural or legal, which defame their reputations or are otherwise injurious to them without benefiting the public;

(h) Legal obligations resulting from professional, contractual or other legal relationships including disclosure of information received in confidence in a professional or official capacity;

(i) The prevention of fraud;

(j) The systematic diffusion of deliberately false or distorted reports which undermine friendly relations between peoples or States.

2. A Contracting State may establish on reasonable terms a right of reply or a similar corrective remedy.

Article 3

Each Contracting State shall encourage the establishment and functioning within its territory of one or more non-official organizations of persons employed in the dissemination of information to the public, in order to promote the observance by such persons of high standards of professional conduct, and in particular:

(a) To report facts without prejudice and in their proper context and to make comments without malicious intent;

(b) To facilitate the solution of the economic, social and humanitarian problems of the world as a whole and the free interchange of information bearing on such problems;

(c) To help promote respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms without discrimination;

(d) To help maintain international peace and security;

(e) To counteract the persistent spreading of false or distorted reports which promote hatred or prejudice against States, persons or groups of different race, language, religion or philosophical conviction.

Article 4

Nothing in the present Convention shall affect the right of any Contracting State to take measures which it deems necessary in order:

(a) To bring its balance of payments into equilibrium;

(b) To develop its national news enterprises until such time as such news enterprises are fully developed;

(c) To prevent agreements in restraint of the free flow of information or the cartelization in regard to information, provided that such measures may not be used as a means of preventing the entry of nationals of other Contracting States who are engaged in the gathering of information and opinions for dissemination to the public.

Article 5

Nothing in the present Convention shall prevent a Contracting State from reserving under its legislation to its own nationals the right to edit newspapers or news periodicals produced within its territory.

Article 6

Nothing in the present Convention shall limit the discretion of any Contracting State to refuse entry into its territory to any particular person or to restrict the period of his residence therein.

Article 7

As between the Contracting States which become Parties to any general agreement on human rights sponsored by the United Nations and containing provisions relating to freedom of information, the present Convention shall be superseded by such agreement to the extent that the two instruments are inconsistent.

Article 8

In time of war or other public emergency, a Contracting State may take measures derogating from its obligations under the present Convention to the extent strictly limited by the exigencies of the situation.

Any Contracting State availing itself of this right of derogation shall promptly inform the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the measures which it has thus adopted and of the reasons therefor. It shall also inform him as and when the measures cease to operate.

Article 9

Any dispute between any two or more Contracting States concerning the interpretation or application of the present Convention which is not settled by negotiations shall be referred to the International Court of Justice for decision, unless the Contracting States agree to another mode of settlement.

Article 10

1. The present Convention shall be open for accession to every State invited to the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information held at Geneva in March and April 1948, and to every other State which the General Assembly of the United Nations shall, by resolution, declare to be eligible.

2. Accession shall be effected by the deposit of an instrument of accession with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Article 11

When any two of the States mentioned in article 10 have deposited their instruments of accession, the present Convention shall come into force between them on the thirtieth day after the date of the deposit of the second instrument of accession. It shall come into force for each State which accedes after that date on the thirtieth day after the deposit of its instrument of accession.

Article 12

Any Contracting State may denounce the present Convention by notification of denunciation to the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Denunciation shall take effect six months after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification of denunciation.

Article 13

1. A State Party to the present Convention may, at the time of its accession thereto or at any time thereafter, by notification addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, declare that the present Convention shall extend to any of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible, and the Convention shall extend to the territories named in the notification as from the thirtieth day after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification. The respective Contracting States undertake to seek immediately the consent of the Governments of such territories to the application of the present Convention to such territories, and to accede forthwith on behalf of and in respect of each such territory, if and when its consent has been obtained.

2. A State which has made a declaration under paragraph 1 above extending the present Convention may, with the consent of the Government concerned, at any time thereafter, by notification to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, declare that the Convention shall cease to extend to any territory named in the notification, and the Convention shall then cease to extend to such territory six months after the date of receipt by the Secretary-General of the United Nations of the notification.

Article 14

The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall notify each of the States referred to in article 10 of the date of the deposit of every instrument of accession and of the date on which this Convention comes into force and of any information received by him in accordance with the provisions of article 11 and of every notification received by him in accordance with the provisions of articles 12 or 13.

3. Genocide

In its resolution 96(I)⁸⁸ of December 11, 1946, in which it affirmed that genocide was a crime under international law, the General Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council to undertake the necessary studies with a view to drawing up a draft convention on the crime of genocide to be submitted to the Assembly's next regular session.

Accordingly the Council at its fourth session instructed (resolution 47(IV)) the Secretary-General:

"(a) To undertake, with the assistance of experts in the field of international and criminal law, the necessary studies with a view to drawing up a draft convention in accordance with the resolution of the General Assembly; and

"(b) After consultation with the General Assembly Committee on the Development and Codification of International Law and, if feasible, the Commission on Human Rights and, after reference to all Member Governments for comments, to submit to the next session of the Economic and Social Council a draft convention on the crime of genocide."⁸⁹

a. DRAFT CONVENTION PREPARED BY THE SECRETARIAT

After consultation with three experts, the Secretary-General prepared a draft convention and study (E/447) consisting of a preamble and 24 articles. Annexed to it were provisions for establishing a Permanent International Criminal Court for the Punishment of Acts of Genocide, if it should be decided to establish such a special court. In the case of certain articles, alternative drafts were proposed. An attempt was made to embrace all the points likely to be adopted, it being left to the organs of the United Nations to eliminate those points they wished, the intention being not to recommend one political solution rather than another but to offer a basis for full discussion.

The articles of the draft convention dealt with the following matters: definitions of protected groups and of acts qualified as genocide; punishable offences; punishment of a particular offence; persons liable; command of the law and superior orders; provisions concerning genocide in municipal criminal law; universal enforcement of municipal criminal law; extradition; trial of genocide by an international court; international court competent to try genocide; disbanding of groups or organizations having participated in genocide; action by the United Nations to prevent or to stop genocide; reparations to victims of genocide; settlement of disputes on interpretation or application of the convention; language and date of the convention; what states may become parties to the convention and ways to become party to it; reservations; coming into force; duration, abrogation and revision of the convention; notifications by the Secretary-General; deposit of the original of the convention and transmission of copies to governments; and registration of the convention.

The draft convention and study drawn up by the Secretary-General was submitted to the Assembly Committee on the Progressive Development of International Law and its Codification on June 13, 1947. As it had not the comments of Member Governments on the draft convention, the Chairman stated in his letter of June 17 that the Committee felt unable at that time to express any opinion on the matter. On July 7 the Secretary-General transmitted the draft and study to Member Governments.

The question was discussed by the Council at its 86th plenary meeting on July 23, 1947, and at the 15th meeting of the Social Committee of the Council on August 2. Two divergent views were apparent in the Council's discussions of the matter: (a) that more time was needed to enable governments to comment on the report of the Secretary-General; and (b) that the Council should call a special session to meet just before, or at the beginning of, the forthcoming session of the General Assembly, and that the governments should be requested to submit their comments by September 1. The first view was expressed by the representatives of New Zealand and the United States, while the second view was held by the representatives of Norway, Chile and Venezuela. The Indian representative supported the second view, but also felt that full weight must be given to the views of governments.

Two resolutions were proposed in the Council's

⁸⁸ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 255-56.

⁸⁹ Ibid., pp. 531-32

Social Committee. The first, by Norway (E/AC.7/-22), proposed that a special session of the Council should be called immediately after the opening of the second session of the General Assembly to consider and submit to the Assembly a draft convention on genocide. A committee should be appointed by the Council to study the draft convention presented by the Secretariat and comments made by Members and by the Commission on Human Rights and report to the special session. The Council, according to the Norwegian proposal, would call on Members to submit their comments not later than September 1, 1947.

The second resolution, submitted by the United States (E/AC.7/23) provided for the submission to the General Assembly of the draft convention prepared by the Secretariat with any comments received in time from Member Governments.

Certain representatives expressed the view that September 1 was too soon for governments to submit their comments.

The Cuban representative felt that the Council should comment on the Secretary-General's report and therefore proposed that it should draft a resolution explaining the reasons why a draft convention could not be submitted to the Assembly. The Canadian representative suggested that the Council's resolution should state that it would follow any further instructions from the Assembly. The Norwegian representative withdrew his proposal for a special session of the Council in favor of the Cuban proposal, but proposed that the Council should appoint a committee to receive comments from governments and submit a draft convention to the Council's sixth session. The New Zealand representative thought that the resolution should include some mention of the urgency of the problem.

The Social Committee rejected the second Norwegian proposal by 7 votes to 5, with 5 abstentions, and adopted by 16 votes, with 2 abstentions, a resolution which was approved by the Council without objection at its 107th meeting on August 6. By the terms of this resolution (77(V)) the Council noted that the draft convention had not been considered by the Committee on the Development and Codification of International Law and the Commission on Human Rights and that comments of Member Governments had not been received in time for consideration by the Council; called on Member Governments to submit their comments as soon as possible and instructed the Secretary-General to collate these comments; and stated that the Council poses to proceed as rapidly as possible with the consideration of the question subject to any further instructions of the General Assembly; and

"Requests the Secretary-General, in the meanwhile, to transmit to the General Assembly the draft convention on the crime of genocide prepared by the Secretariat in accordance with paragraph (a) of the Council resolution of 28 March 1947, together with any comments from Member Governments received in time for transmittal to the General Assembly."

The General Assembly at its second session on November 21, 1947, adopted resolution 180(II)⁹⁰ in which it reaffirmed the resolution on genocide which it had adopted at its first session. It requested the Economic and Social Council to continue the work it had begun concerning the suppression of the crime of genocide and to proceed with the completion of a convention. It informed the Council that it need not await the receipt of observations from all Members before commencing its work.

The Council therefore discussed the question at its sixth session, at its 139th, 140th and 160th plenary meetings on February 12 and 13 and March 3, and at the 37th meeting of its Social Committee on February 21.

Various members of the Council stressed the importance of having the draft convention prepared by legal experts, and regretted that comments on the Secretariat draft had been received from only a few Member Governments. The French and Canadian representatives thought that the Council should take the necessary political decisions, e.g., on what groups should be protected, whether all or only certain forms of genocide should be considered and what agency was to punish it. The Polish and Canadian representatives emphasized the importance of a generally accepted convention. The United Kingdom representative doubted the value of the proposed convention, which, he thought, would be difficult to draft, would lend itself to diverse interpretations and would run the risk of not being ratified by all governments.

The Council and its Social Committee discussed at some length what body should be entrusted with the drafting of the convention. Venezuela proposed (E/663) that the Council establish a sub-commission to draft the convention, after consultation with the Commission on Human Rights, and taking into consideration the Secretariat draft convention, comments of Members on this draft and other drafts submitted by Members. The Secretary-General should be requested to assist the sub-commission. The United States proposed (E/-662 and Add.1) that the Secretariat should be asked to prepare a new draft convention in the light of the comments received from Member Governments and should have the collaboration of an ad hoc committee consisting of four members of the Council—France, Venezuela, Denmark and the United States—which had made substantive comments; Members which had not already done so were to be urged to submit their comments at the earliest possible date. The United Kingdom proposed an amendment (E/AC.7/65) to the Venezuelan proposal to consider the desirability of referring genocide in the strict sense to the International Law Commission and other aspects of genocide to the Sub-Commission on the Prevention and Protection of Minorities. In view of the lack of support for the proposal, the United Kingdom representative stated that he would not press it. The U.S.S.R. representative proposed verbally that the Secretariat draft convention should be referred to the Commission on Human Rights for report at the Council's next session. This was rejected in the Social Committee by 10 votes to 2, with 5 abstentions. The Committee, by 13 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, adopted the Venezuelan proposal incorporating amendments suggested by various delegations, but rejected by 9 votes to 5, with 3 abstentions, a United States amendment to have the Secretary-General prepare a second draft of the convention. The Council at its 160th plenary meeting on March 3 on the Committee's recommendation adopted by 17 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, resolution 117(VI) as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking cognizance of General Assembly resolution 180(II) of 23 November 1947,

"Requests the Members of the United Nations which have not yet done so to transmit at the earliest possible date their comments on the draft Convention, prepared by the Secretary-General (document E/477);

"Establishes an ad hoc Committee composed of the following members of the Economic and Social Council: China, France, Lebanon, Poland, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Venezuela;

"Instructs the Committee:

"(a) To meet at the Headquarters of the United Nations, in order to prepare the draft Convention on the crime of genocide in accordance with the above-mentioned resolution of the General Assembly, and to submit this draft Convention, together with the recommendation of the Commission on Human Rights thereon to the next session of the Economic and Social Council; and,

"(b) To take into consideration in the preparation of the draft Convention, the draft Convention prepared by the Secretary-General, the comments of the Member Governments on this draft Convention, and other drafts on the matter submitted by any Member Government;

"Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to enable the Committee to carry out effectively the tasks entrusted to it."

b. DRAFT CONVENTION PREPARED BY THE ad hoc COMMITTEE

The ad hoc Committee on Genocide met at Lake Success from April 5 to May 10, 1948, and prepared a draft Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide (E/794) which it submitted to the seventh session of the Council.

The draft Convention consisted of a preamble and 19 articles.

The preamble to the draft Convention emphasized that genocide is a crime against mankind and that its prevention and punishment require international co-operation.

Article 1 of the draft Convention stated that genocide is a crime under international law whether committed in time of war or of peace. Articles 2 and 3 defined this crime, first as regards physical genocide and then as regards cultural genocide. Physical genocide was defined as deliberate acts committed with the intent of destroying a national, racial, religious or political group by killing its members, impairing their physical integrity, inflicting on them conditions aimed at causing their deaths or imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group. Cultural genocide the draft Convention defined as any deliberate act committed with the intention of destroying the language, religion or culture of a national, racial or religious group, such as, for example, prohibiting the use of the group's language or its schools or places of worship.

In addition to genocide, conspiracy, incitement and attempts to commit genocide would also be punishable under the Convention as well as complicity in any of these acts. Any persons who commit these crimes would be punished whether they are heads of states, public officials or private individuals. They were to be tried by the courts of the countries where the crime is committed or by a competent international tribunal. Parties to the Convention would undertake to pass the necessary laws to give effect to its provisions and to grant extradition in cases of genocide. They were to be able to call on the appropriate body of the United Nations to take action for the prevention and suppression of genocide or bring to its attention any case of violation of the Convention.

Other clauses of the draft Convention related to the submission of disputes concerning the Convention to the International Court of Justice, the states eligible to become parties to the Convention, and its coming into force, duration and revision.

At its third session, the Commission on Human Rights was not able to consider thoroughly the draft Convention prepared by the ad hoc Committee and was therefore not in a position to make any observations concerning its substance. It expressed the opinion that the draft Convention represented an appropriate basis for urgent consideration and decisive action by the Council and the General Assembly (E/800).

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its third session, recommended that the Council ensure that the use of narcotics as an instrument to commit genocide should be covered by the proposed Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Genocide (E/799).

Because of the pressure of business at its seventh session, the Council decided at its 202nd plenary meeting on August 17, 1948, that the report of the ad hoc Committee on Genocide, which had been referred to the Human Rights Committee of the Council, should be recalled to the plenary session, that in plenary there would be an opportunity for each delegation to make one general statement of position, without other debate or decisions other than a decision to transmit the documents to the General Assembly together with the statements of position.

Statements were made at the 218th and 219th plenary meetings on August 26. Most of the members of the Council spoke in favor of the transmission of the draft Convention prepared by the ad hoc Committee to the General Assembly, and of action being taken upon it in 1948. Various members, while recognizing that there were differences of opinion on certain questions, thought that the Convention should contain the greatest possible proportion of generally accepted principles, since it would then be more likely to be ratified by a large number of governments. Opinions differed on the following matters: provisions constituting measures of incitement to commit genocide as a crime; measures relating to "cultural" genocide; measures for the specific protection of political groups as such, in addition to racial, national and religious groups; and the reference to the establishment of an international jurisdiction.

The Polish and U.S.S.R. representatives supported inclusion of provisions regarding incitement to genocide, and thought it important to add a provision to make punishable propaganda aimed at instigating racial, national or religious hatred; that preparatory acts leading toward genocide, such, for example, as study and research, should be punishable; and that parties to the Convention should pledge themselves to disband organizations which aimed at instigating racial, national or religious hatred. The United States representative was against the inclusion in the Convention of incitement to commit genocide, as he held this difficult of definition.

The Byelorussian representative thought that special attention should be paid to the prevention of genocide on cultural grounds. The Venezuelan, Polish and Brazilian representatives were in favor of including provisions concerning "cultural" genocide, but thought that it should be more carefully defined; the Polish representative stating that it should be viewed as a preliminary to physical genocide, and the Brazilian representative expressing concern lest imprecise wording should lead to the creation of minorities. The Canadian, French, United States and United Kingdom representatives opposed the inclusion in the Convention of provisions relating to "cultural" genocide, holding that this crime was not on a par with physical genocide and should be dealt with separately, and that too wide a definition of genocide would render the Convention meaningless.

The Venezuelan, Polish, Brazilian and U.S.S.R. representatives opposed the inclusion in the Convention of provisions designed to protect political groups, on the grounds that these did not lend themselves to precise definition and that such provisions might provide a pretext for interference with national measures for internal law and order. The French and United States representatives, on the other hand, attached importance to the inclusion of a provision for protecting political groups.

The Venezuelan representative, supported by the Peruvian representative, was against the establishment of the proposed international tribunal, which he thought might give rise to disputes and differences, necessitate international police action and entail practical difficulties. The U.S.S.R. representative, supported by the Byelorussian representative, opposed the creation of such a court on the ground that it would violate national sovereignty. The Polish representative was against the acceptance in principle of setting up such a tribunal without specifying its juridical competence. As it would involve compulsory jurisdiction, it might result in the violation of national sovereignty and would need substantial means of enforcement. He thought that the Security Council should be the competent organ of the United Nations entitled to deal with the prevention and suppression of genocide and with violations of the Convention. The New Zealand, Brazilian, French and United States representatives supported the approval in principle of an international tribunal and thought that the question required further study.

The Chinese, Polish and U.S.S.R. representatives stressed the importance of including a specific undertaking to enact national law in conformity with the Convention. The New Zealand representative thought that in some instances an extension of the existing practice as to extradition would assist in the punishment of offenders. The Chinese representative called attention to the importance of narcotic drugs as an instrument of genocide.

The Polish and U.S.S.R. representatives also urged that additions should be made to the draft Convention and its Preamble so as to include a declaration on the connection between Fascist ideological theories and the crime of genocide, and to the effect that the command of a superior authority should be no defence to a charge of genocide.

Reference was made in the debate to the comments which had been received from the World Federation of Trade Unions (E/C.2/104) and the World Federation of United Nations Associations (E/C.2/105). It was pointed out that these documents were available to the General Assembly.

The Council decided (resolution 153(VII)) to transmit to the General Assembly the draft Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide submitted in the report of the ad hoc Committee (E/794) together with the remainder of this report and the records of the proceedings of the Council at its seventh session on this subject.

4. Status of Women

a. QUESTIONS CONSIDERED AT THE FIFTH SESSION OF THE COUNCIL— COMMUNICATIONS

The Commission on the Status of Women in the report of its first session (E/281/Rev.1) recommended to the Economic and Social Council the following procedure for handling communications on the status of women:

"(a) That the Secretary-General be requested to compile a confidential list of communications received concerning the Status of Women, before each session of the Commission.

"(b) That this confidential list, also specifying the contents of the communications, and giving the names of any organization sending such communications, be forwarded to the members of the Commission at least fourteen days before the opening of each session.

"(c) That the members of the Commission at their request, have the right to consult the originals of these communications.

"(d) That the Secretary-General be requested to inform the writers of all such communications that these will be brought to the attention of the Commission on the Status of Women."

The Economic and Social Council considered this question at its fifth session in conjunction with the recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights for dealing with communications concerning human rights.⁹¹

The recommendations of the Commission on Human Rights were taken as the basis of the Council's consideration of the question in its Social Committee, and a drafting committee adapted the resolution referring to communications on human rights to apply to communications concerning the status of women.

This resolution (76(V)) was adopted by the Council at its 106th plenary meeting on August 5 by 13 votes to 2, with 3 abstentions.

The operative part of the resolution is identical with that concerning communications on human rights, except that under paragraph (c) the words "the principles relating to the promotion of women's rights in political, economic, civil, social and educational fields" take the place of "the principles involved in the promotion of universal respect for and observance of human rights" and in paragraphs (d) and (e) "communications concerning the status of women" are substituted for "communications concerning human rights".

b. SECOND SESSION OF THE COMMISSION

At its second session held at Lake Success from January 5 to 19, 1948, the Commission on the Status of Women considered, inter alia, women's political rights, women's economic rights and women's educational opportunities.

It passed recommendations to the Economic and Social Council on the following subjects:

- (a) Abolition of political inequality;
- (b) Participation of women in the national and international activities of governments;
- (c) Discrimination against women resulting from conflicts between national laws relating to nationality, domicile, marriage and divorce;
- (d) Educational opportunities for women;
- (e) Employment and remuneration;
- (f) Property rights of married women and their rights to act as guardians;
- (g) Influencing public opinion.

The Commission reviewed the draft International Declaration of Human Rights as requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 48 (IV) and suggested that two articles of the Declaration should be amended to read as follows:

⁹¹ See pp. 578-79.

"Article 1

"All people are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed by nature with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in the spirit of brotherhood."

"Article 13

"Men and women shall have equal rights to contract or dissolve marriage in accordance with the law."

The Commission also suggested changes in certain questions of the questionnaire formulated by the Trusteeship Council (E/615).⁹²

c. CONSIDERATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SECOND SESSION OF THE COMMISSION AT THE COUNCIL'S SIXTH SESSION

The second session of the Commission did not end in time for its report (E/615) to be put on the agenda of the sixth session of the Council six weeks in advance,⁹³ and the Commission therefore requested in a letter from its Rapporteur to the President of the Council (E/615/Add.1) that certain parts of its report requiring urgent action should be considered at that session. These matters were: report on political rights of women, to be submitted to the third regular session of the General Assembly; the question of equal pay for equal work for men and women; amendments to the draft International Declaration on Human Rights; place of meeting of the third session of the Commission; co-operation with ILO; and the problem of obtaining replies to Part I (Public Law) of the Questionnaire on the Legal Status and Treatment of Women.

The Council considered these questions at its 129th and 160th meetings on February 5 and March 3 and at the 38th and 39th meetings of its Social Committee on February 26 and 27. Certain representatives, including those of the U.S.S.R., the Byelorussian S.S.R. and Poland, considered that the Council should deal with the larger substantive recommendations contained in the report, and that there was no recorded decision on the part of the Commission as to what parts were urgent and consequently should be submitted for early consideration. The Rapporteur explained that the decision to submit these urgent items only had been taken by the Commission itself at a private meeting. The majority of the Council representatives, while stating their agreement with the substance of the Commission's recommendations, thought that only the seven procedural items formally placed on the agenda should be dealt with by the Council at the sixth session, leaving the remainder of the report to be dealt with at the seventh session.

(1) Urgent Questions Dealt With by the Council at Its Sixth Session

The Council decided against passing a special resolution providing for representation of the Commission on the Status of Women at ILO meetings dealing with subjects concerning the status of women and consultation concerning such questions, on the grounds that such consultation was already provided for in the Agreement with ILO. It unanimously decided to transmit to the Commission on Human Rights and its Drafting Committee the suggestions of the Commission on the Status of Women for amendments to the draft Declaration on Human Rights (resolution 120(VI)C). As regards the invitation from the Lebanese Government to hold the Commission's third session in Lebanon, the Council at its 160th plenary meeting on March 3 unanimously adopted resolution 120-(VI)D, requesting the Secretary-General to arrange for the session to be held in Lebanon, to last not more than three weeks, and to consult the Council at its seventh session if the arrangements would involve substantial extra costs to the United Nations over those of a meeting at headquarters. The Council took note

"with satisfaction of the suggestion of the Commission that official agencies, non-governmental organizations and others in the region develop a conference on the status of women to be held at the same time, the promotion, direction and expense of which will be the responsibility of the local agencies and not of the United Nations, and in which conference individual members of delegations to the Commission can participate."

Recognizing the need for additional factual data, the Council unanimously adopted at its 160th plenary meeting on March 3 resolution 120 (VI)E, requesting the Secretary-General to invite Member Governments which had not already done so to reply to Part I of the Questionnaire on the Legal Status and Treatment of Women before the following dates:

Sections A and B, Political Rights	June 1, 1948
Section D, Education Opportunities	June 1, 1948
Section C, Nationality	July 1, 1948
Remaining sections	Dec. 1, 1948

Other decisions taken by the Council at its sixth session are given below under the appropriate headings.

(2) Political Rights

The Commission on the Status of Women adopted a resolution on the political rights of women, which referred to the need under the principles of the Charter for abolishing the political inequality of women still prevailing in many countries and to the General Assembly's resolution 56(I) of December 11, 1946, concerning the political rights of women⁹⁴ and noted that there were still some limitations on women as to the use of the franchise and eligibility for public office. It recommended that the Council instruct the Secretary-General to inquire from governments which had not yet replied to the Questionnaire on the Legal Status and Treatment of Women and which do not grant women full political rights, what their plans were to give effect to the Charter provisions for equal rights for men and women, and to urge them to take action; and to request Members which had not already done so to grant women the same political rights as men. In this connection the Commission drew attention to the advantages of the exercise of these opportunities. The Commission also recommended that the Secretary-General's report relating to the franchise rights of women and their eligibility for public office should be brought up to date and presented to the third session of the General Assembly and to succeeding Assembly sessions until women throughout the world had the same political rights as men.

At its sixth session the Council discussed the question at the 38th and 39th meetings of the Social Committee on February 26 and 27, 1948, on the basis of a draft resolution prepared by the Secretariat (E/AC7/W.19) to give effect to the Commission's recommendation that the Secretary-General be requested to bring up to date his memorandum on the political rights of women. Some members felt, however, that the whole of the Commission's resolution should be dealt with, and not merely the one aspect that had been picked out for urgent treatment. Others held that only the question dealt with in the draft resolution prepared by the Secretariat was on the Council's agenda. A Byelorussian amendment almost identical in text with the resolution of the Commission on the Status of Women was approved by the Social Committee by 4 votes to 3, with 9 abstentions, but at the 160th plenary meeting, on the motion of the United Kingdom representative, the Council decided by varying roll call votes to delete the additional paragraphs and adopted by 15 votes, with 3 abstentions, the resolution prepared by the Secretariat with an amendment, proposed by the United States, to circulate similar material annually to Member Governments rather than bring it annually before the General Assembly. The resolution adopted by the Council (120(VI)A) requested the Secretary-General:

"(i) To bring up to date, including reference to action taken by Governments since the signing of the Charter, the memorandum supplementing his preliminary report on the political rights of women and their eligibility for public office, and present it to the third regular session of the General Assembly, in line with the resolution submitted by Denmark to the first regular session of the General Assembly on the political rights of women; and

"(ii) To circulate similar material annually to Members of the United Nations until all women throughout the world have the same political rights as men."

(3) Educational Opportunities for Women

The Commission suggested that equal educational rights might be guaranteed to women irrespective of nationality or race by such means as: (1) general compulsory education; (2) free elementary education; (3) a system of State bursaries for outstanding children in higher schools; (4) school instruction in the indigenous language of the country; and (5) the organization in enterprises and rural areas of free industrial technical and agricultural instruction for women. The Commission felt that it did not have sufficient factual data on hand to provide a basis for detailed recommendations on this subject, and it therefore recommended that the Council take the necessary steps to make such data available.

The Council at its 160th plenary meeting on March 3 unanimously adopted resolution 120(VI)B requesting the Secretary-General:

"(i) To invite Governments that have not already done so to reply to Part I, section D (Educational opportunities) of the Questionnaire on the Legal Status and Treatment of Women by 1 June 1948;

"(ii) To prepare, on the basis of these replies, supplemented where necessary by other available material, and for circulation not later than six weeks before the third session of the Commission, a detailed comparative report, arranged by subjects, showing the existing disabilities of women in the field covered by the said section of the Questionnaire; and

"(iii) To make these replies available to UNESCO, with the consent of the Governments concerned, in order to facilitate its work in areas where women and girls suffer disabilities in the field of education."

d. CONSIDERATION OF THE REPORT OF THE SECOND SESSION OF THE COMMISSION AT THE COUNCIL'S SEVENTH SESSION

At its seventh session the Council considered the report at the first to twelfth meetings of its ad hoc Committee on Human Rights from July 22 to August 6 and at its 207th and 210th plenary meetings on August 20 and 23. The Committee on Human Rights, taking as the basis of its discussions a series of resolutions based on the remainder of the report and proposed by the United States

⁹⁴ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 179.

(E/AC.7/W.25), engaged in a detailed paragraph by paragraph discussion, during which it considered proposals and amendments from Canada (E/AC.27/W.5), Chile (E/AC.27/W.12 and Corr.1 and E/AC.27/W.16), France (E/AC.27/W.8), Lebanon (E/AC.27/W.14 and Corr.1), Netherlands (E/AC.27/W.15), New Zealand (E/AC.27/W.13), Poland (E/AC.27/W.6), U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian S.S.R. (E/AC.27/W.9 and W.11), U.S.S.R. (E/AC.27/W.18), United Kingdom (E/AC.27/W.4 and W.17) and Venezuela (E/AC.27/W.23), as well as various verbal amendments.

The main point of difference in the discussions was that some representatives felt that the Council should draw attention to the existing discrimination against women in political, economic and educational fields, while others thought that the Council should confine itself to passing effective resolutions, leaving pronouncements on the situation until further replies had been received to the questionnaire sent out by the Secretary-General. The various decisions taken by the Council at its seventh session are given below.

(1) Political Rights

The question of political rights was discussed again at the Council's seventh session, when fuller consideration was given to the report of the Commission. A detailed discussion took place in the Council's ad hoc Committee on Human Rights, during which representatives of the U.S.S.R., Poland, Byelorussia and France stressed the importance of including a preamble and of basing both it and the operative paragraphs of the resolution on the recommendations of the Commission. The French, U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives submitted similar amendments to this effect (E/AC.27/W.8 and W.9). The Committee on Human Rights adopted the French amendments by varying votes. At its 207th plenary meeting the Council adopted by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, the resolution which had been recommended by the Committee on Human Rights (154(VII)-A), which reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Recognizing that the dignity and worth of the human person, the equal rights of men and women, and of nations large and small, which are referred to in the Charter of the United Nations, insistently call for the abolition of the political inequality of women which still prevails in many countries,

"Considering that the equal participation of women in national, economic, cultural, social and political life is impossible unless women are granted equal rights with men,

"Having regard to General Assembly resolution 56-

(1) of 11 December 1946 concerning the political rights of women and the replies received from some of the Member Governments,

"Notes that, although the vast number of these make no distinction between men and women as to the use of the franchise and eligibility for public office, some report limitations on women in this regard;

"Requests the States Members of the United Nations, where women have not yet been given the same political rights as men, to grant them such rights in all spheres of economic, national, cultural, social and political life;

"Requests the Secretary-General to address a communication to all Governments which have not replied to the communication sent by him pursuant to General Assembly resolution 56 (I) (b) of 11 December 1946 and, in so far as they do not now grant full political rights to women, to inquire as to their plans to give effect to the Charter affirmation of 'equal rights for men and women' in regard to the franchise and eligibility to public office; and to urge them to take appropriate and immediate action;

"Draws attention to the fact that opportunities for the exercise of these rights and a greater measure of activity by women voters in making use of their right to take part in elections, as well as the introduction of a more general system of electing women to key posts in national, public, municipal and other institutions, will serve as an effective method of stimulating the interest of women voters, will increase their interest in social and political work, and will ensure a fuller use by women voters of their right to take part in elections; and

"Further requests the Secretary-General to continue the collection of information, for the benefit of women who have recently acquired the vote, about effective programmes of political education, and to give favourable consideration to measures for technical advice to such countries; and to prepare for general use a popular pamphlet showing the extent to which women have been accorded equal political rights."

(2) Access to Public Administration Posts

The Commission on the Status of Women had adopted a resolution (E/615, p. 7) taking note that in certain countries women were not given an equal opportunity with men for positions in the civil service and that there was also discrimination as to professional opportunities and access to diplomatic, consular and judiciary posts and recommending that the Council instruct the Secretary-General to call to Members' attention the pledges undertaken when signing the Charter, with a view to granting women equal opportunities in these fields.

The question was considered by the Committee on Human Rights on the basis of a United States draft resolution (E/AC.7/W.25), which drew the attention of Members to the advantage of increased participation of women in political life, recommending that consideration should be given to appointing qualified women as representatives to international bodies and conferences and recommending that Members grant women equal opportunities with men at all levels of government activity. Amendments to the United States draft were submitted by Canada (E/AC.27/W.5), United Kingdom (E/AC.27/W.7), France (E/AC.27/W.8), Byelorussian S.S.R. and U.S.S.R. (E/AC.27/W.9), Chile (E/AC.27/W.12), Lebanon (E/AC.27/W.14 and Corr. 1) and Netherlands (E/AC.27/W.15). A drafting committee, consisting of the representatives of United States, Canada, United Kingdom, France, Byelorussia, Lebanon and Netherlands, was set up by the Committee to study the draft resolution proposed by the United States and the amendments submitted. The drafting committee submitted two alternative versions of the preamble (E/AC.27/2). The first, which had been proposed by Chile, referred to the provisions of Article 8 of the Charter and stated that this principle was applicable to Members as regards their international representation and was also applicable to all public activities and the exercise of the professions; the second, proposed by the U.S.S.R. and based on the Commission's recommendation, referred to the existing discrimination against women. The two paragraphs of the U.S.S.R. draft were rejected by the Committee by 7 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions, and 7 votes to 4, with 4 abstentions. The Committee adopted by 14 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, the first paragraph of the draft proposed by Chile, but substituted for the second paragraph a text submitted by Venezuela stating that in certain countries women were not on an equal footing with men as regards access to public office and to the professions. The Committee by 12 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions, rejected a Netherlands amendment to delete the words "whether married or unmarried" from the first paragraph of the resolution. The Netherlands representative in support of the amendment stated that in his Government's view the first duty of married women was to their families and that, as a rule, they should be debarred from public service. The amended draft resolution with a drafting change proposed by the Chairman was adopted by the Committee by 13 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, and by the Council at its 207th meeting on August 20 by 14 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions. The resolution (154(VII)B) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Considering that, in certain countries, women do not have the same possibilities as men of access to public administration posts and to the exercise of all the professions, and

"Considering that Article 8 of the Charter of the United Nations lays down that 'the United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in its principal and subsidiary organs',

"Resolves to recommend that Members:

"(a) Grant women, whether married or unmarried, access on equal terms with men to posts in the public service at all levels, including diplomatic, consular, legal and judicial office, and to all liberal and other professions; and

"(b) Consider women equally with men when appointing their delegations to organs and agencies of the United Nations and to international bodies and conferences."

(3) Nationality, Domicile, Marriage and Divorce

Noting the Commission's resolution on nationality, and its view that many discriminations result from conflicts between national laws relating to nationality, domicile, marriage and divorce, the Council in part C of resolution 154(VII), adopted by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention, at the Council's 207th plenary meeting on August 20, requested the Secretary-General to prepare (1) a report on this subject based on replies to Part I, Section G, of the Questionnaire on the Legal Status and Treatment of Women; (2) a report on existing treaties and conventions in the field of nationality; and (3) a list of questions designed to elicit any further information which, after examination of the replies of governments, he might consider to be required by the terms of the resolution on nationality. The U.S.S.R. representative objected to this resolution on the ground that the subject with which it dealt fell within the domestic jurisdiction of states.

The Commission forwarded to the Council two observations relating to marriage, one emphasizing its belief in the principle of monogamy and urging the United Nations to work for the acceptance of this principle, the second noting with satisfaction an article on the freedom of choice of a spouse contained in the draft International Declaration of Human Rights and suggesting that this right cannot be fully guaranteed unless it is recognized that individuals have the right to leave their country after marrying and to reside with the other partner in any country from which they cannot lawfully be excluded.

The Council discussed the question at the seventh to ninth meetings of the Human Rights Committee on August 2 and 4 and the 210th plenary meeting on August 23. Various representatives emphasized the importance of freedom of movement and Chile submitted a proposal (E/AC.27/W.16) calling attention to the purposes of the United Nations for achieving international co-operation by promoting and encouraging respect for human rights, stating that it was incumbent on signatories of the Charter to eliminate from their legal and social institutions anything conflicting with these principles. The proposal went on to state:

"3. Monogamy and equality of rights between men and women in the case of dissolution of marriage should be considered as covered by the United Nations declaration of faith; and,

"4. The same considerations should apply as regards freedom to choose a spouse, it being noted that full enjoyment of this right requires that the contracting parties shall have the right to leave their country of origin and reside with their spouses in any other;"

and recommending that Members endeavor as soon as possible to bring their legislation into line with these principles.

The U.S.S.R. representative maintained that freedom of movement for the nationals of any state was a question within the domestic jurisdiction of that state, and emphasized that discrimination existed within certain countries. He submitted an amendment (E/AC.27/W.18) which would have the Council condemn "the racist practice of forbidding mixed marriages between persons having the same citizenship, but differing as to color, race, nationality or religion".

The Committee on Human Rights by 10 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions, adopted a draft resolution deploring "all legislative measures which forbid mixed marriages between persons differing as to colour, race, nationality and religion," and referring to the Commission on Human Rights the observations of the Commission on the Status of Women and the Chilean and U.S.S.R. proposals.

The Chilean representative opposed the reference to the Commission on Human Rights on the grounds that the Commission on the Status of Women had asked the Council for an opinion on the question and that the matter would be delayed. He presented to the 210th plenary meeting of the Council a proposal (E/981 and Corr.1) to add to the matters deplored by the Council legislative and administrative provisions restricting the freedom to choose a spouse and those denying contracting parties the right to leave their country of origin and reside with their spouse in any other country. The U.S.S.R. presented amendments (E/1003) to the Chilean amendment which would have the Council recognize that a state refusing visas to its citizens might have sufficient grounds connected with the maintenance of public order and state security, recognize that such a matter was within the domestic competence of every state and condemn racial practices obtaining in certain states of prohibiting mixed marriages between citizens of the same state but differing as to color, race, nationality or religion. After the first paragraph of the Soviet proposal had been defeated and the third amended, the Soviet representative withdrew his proposal, and the Council adopted in a revised form the Chilean amendment.

The final resolution (154(VII)D), which was adopted by the Council at its 210th meeting on August 23 by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention, reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Deplores all legislative measures which forbid mixed marriages between persons differing as to colour, race, nationality, citizenship or religion, and in general such other legislative or administrative provisions as restrict the freedom to choose a spouse (with the exception of restrictions based on family relationships, age, the nature of the functions being exercised, or other similar reasons) as well as those legislative or administrative provisions which deny to a woman the right to leave her country of origin and reside with her husband in any other; and

"Resolves to transmit the observations of the Commission on the Status of Women contained in paragraph 29 of the report, and also the Chilean proposal contained in document E/AC.27/W.16 and the U.S.S.R. proposal contained in document E/AC.27/W.18, to the Commission on Human Rights."

(4) Economic Rights and Related Matters

The Commission on the Status of Women considered the economic rights of women and heard a statement by a representative of the International Labour Organisation. It affirmed its support of the principle of equal pay for men and women for equal work, and recommended that the Council call upon Member Governments to encourage the establishment of this principle through all possible means, especially in their own publicly supported and civil services.⁹⁵

At its seventh session, the Council deferred further consideration of the agenda item on the principle of equal pay for equal work by men and women proposed by the World Federation of Trade Unions. On the basis of the recommendations of the Commission on the Status of Women, however, the Council at its 210th meeting on August 23 by 16 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, adopted resolution 154(VII)G, which reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Recognizing that restrictions with regard to the equality of rights of men and women constitute an infringement of the fundamental rights of the human person and are incompatible with the obligations assumed by the States Members of the United Nations under the terms of the United Nations Charter,

"Noting that there exist, in a certain number of countries, discriminatory practices with regard to the economic and social condition of women, which are not compatible with the dignity of woman and which make it more difficult for her to participate in the economic life of such countries,

"Invites the States Members of the United Nations to adopt the necessary measures so that:

"(a) Whatever their nationality, their race, their language or their religion, women shall benefit by the same rights as men in regard to employment and remuneration therefor, as provided for in Council resolution 121 (VI), leisure, social insurance and professional training; and

"(b) In each country there should be legal safeguards for the rights of mothers and children;

"Draws attention to divergencies in various local systems in this field, some of them restricting the right of married women to act as guardians, to control property and earnings and to undertake independent business ventures, and to engage in various other activities."

(5) Educational Opportunities for Women

At its seventh session (210th plenary meeting on August 23) the Council by 17 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, adopted resolution 154(VII)F, as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Considering that the principle of the equality of rights of men and women enunciated in the preamble of the United Nations Charter should also be applied in the educational field and all its branches,

"Having noted that this principle is not satisfactorily applied in certain countries, especially where the technical and professional education of women is concerned, due either to the lack of legislation guaranteeing the right of women to education or to the failure to apply such legislation,

"Requests the States Members of the United Nations to grant women equal educational rights with men and to ensure that they are afforded genuine educational opportunities, irrespective of nationality, race or religion; and

"Further suggests that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization include in its annual reports information on its progress and plans for improving educational opportunities for women; and that the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, upon request, be ready to make suggestions for programmes for the education of adults in the various countries where such programmes would help to solve the problem of illiteracy, and for other educational programmes, having in mind, when elaborating every educational programme, that the widest publicity of the political, social and civic rights of women and of the historical evolution and practical results of these matters is a question of vital importance, in order to teach the principle of equality of the sexes."

(6) Public Opinion

In resolution 154(VII)E, adopted unanimously at the 210th plenary meeting on August 23, the Council, in accordance with suggestions of the Commission on the Status of Women regarding the need to influence public opinion in favor of equality between men and women, recommended that the Secretary-General (a) call upon the world press, radio, film and other information agencies to help in removing such prejudices as have been proved to exist in this respect, (b) assist all such information agencies in these efforts to the fullest possible extent and prepare suitable information material of all kinds for this purpose.

5. Principle of Equal Pay for Equal Work

At the sixth session of the Council, the World Federation of Trade Unions proposed for the agenda the item "Question of the Principle of Equal Pay for Equal Work for Men and Women Workers" (E/621). In considering this item, the Council had before it a memorandum submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions on "Declaration of Principles on the Earnings of Female Labour" (E/627/Add.1).

The WFTU memorandum outlined certain principles, such as occupational selection and guidance, apprenticeship and occupational training, rational assessment of the value of work, maternity insurance, reduction of domestic tasks, inspection and the importance of trade union organization, and gave a historical survey and assessment of the question of the payment of women workers. Statements prepared by the International Co-operative Women's Guild and the Women's International Democratic Federation (E/627/Add.2) and by the Liaison Committee of Women's International Organizations and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (E/627/Add.4), supporting the demand of equal pay for equal work, were also submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions.

The Council also had before it a resolution pertaining to the question of equal pay contained in the report of the second session of the Commission on the Status of Women (E/615, p. 12).

The question was considered by the Council at its 138th, 139th and 172nd plenary meetings on February 12 and March 17 and at the 39th, 41st and 42nd meetings of its Social Committee on February 27 and March 4 and 5. At the 39th meeting of the Social Committee on February 27 it was agreed to consider the above resolution together with the above-mentioned agenda item.

The World Federation of Trade Unions and the American Federation of Labor presented their views on the subject to the Council in oral statements.

In the discussion all members were agreed on the principle of equal pay for equal work, but some representatives, including those of New Zealand, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and Denmark, stressed the technical difficulties of putting this principle into effect. Some members were of the opinion that the Council should invite the International Labour Organisation to study the question and to report to the Council thereon. A proposal to this effect was submitted by the Netherlands representative (E/650). Other members thought that the Organisation should also be requested to report to the Council on the measures contemplated for the effective solution of the problem of securing equality of pay and a recommendation made to States Members of the United Nations to collaborate in applying that principle. The representative of France submitted a draft resolution to this effect (E/659 and Revs.1 and 2). Other members thought that the Council should itself call upon Member Governments to encourage the establishment of the principle of equal pay through all possible means, especially in their own civil services. The representative of the U.S.S.R. submitted a draft resolution to this effect (E/657). The Council also considered proposals to refer the memorandum submitted by the World Federation of Trade Unions to the Trusteeship Council and to the Commission on the Status of Women (E/657 and also E/AC.7/67, a compromise resolution submitted by Denmark, combining the French and Soviet resolutions). This resolution would have the Council call on Member Governments to apply the principle of equal pay for equal work and invite the International Labour Organisation and the non-governmental organizations in Category A to compile memoranda, stating what action they had taken in the matter, for the Council to consider at its next session.

After the various proposals had been considered by a drafting sub-committee, the Social Committee at its 42nd meeting by 13 votes, with 3 abstentions, recommended to the Council a draft resolution which was adopted at the 172nd plenary meeting on March 10, by 14 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions.

In this resolution (121(VI)) the Council reaffirmed the principle of equal rights of men and women laid down in the Preamble of the United Nations Charter; approved the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value for men and women workers; and called upon the States Members of the United Nations to implement the latter principle in every way, irrespective of nationality, race, language and religion. The resolution also transmitted the memorandum of the World Federation of Trade Unions to the International Labour Organisation, inviting the latter to proceed as rapidly as possible with the further consideration of this subject and to report to the Council on the action taken. The Council further resolved to transmit the memorandum of the World Federation of Trade Unions to the Commission on the Status of Women for its consideration and for any suggestions it might wish to make to the Council, and invited non-governmental organizations in Category A concerned to present their views on the subject to the International Labour Organisation and to the Council.

The resolution of the Economic and Social Council was accordingly brought to the attention of the International Labour Conference at its 31st session (at San Francisco, June-July 1948) in connection with the question of wages, which was already on its agenda.

The International Labour Conference adopted a resolution (E/881) in which it drew the attention of the Members of ILO to the statement on the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value contained in its Constitution, in the Minimum Wage-fixing Machinery Recommendation, 1928, and in resolutions adopted at several conferences and regional conferences; and also to the importance of taking appropriate measures to secure the effective application of this principle in the case of men and women workers, including in particular measures to extend the opportunities for employment available to women workers, and the provision of adequate facilities for vocational and technical training of women. The Conference also provided for the continuance and extension of studies on the question.

At its seventh session, the Council had on its agenda the question of the principle of equal pay for equal work for men and women workers. In view of the pressure of business and the date at which documents had been presented, the Council decided at its 178th plenary meeting on July 20 to defer consideration of this item. On the basis of the recommendation of the Commission on the Status of Women, the Council at its 210th plenary meeting on August 23 adopted resolution 154(VII)G, which invites Members to adopt measures to ensure that women shall benefit by the same rights as men in regard to employment and remuneration therefor, leisure, social insurance and professional training.⁹⁶

6. Social Activities

The Social Commission held its second and third sessions from August 28 to September 13, 1947, and from April 5 to 23, 1948. The report of the second session (E/578) was considered during the sixth session of the Council, at the 125th to 127th, 156th, 157th, 171st and 172nd plenary meetings on February 3 and 4 and March 1 and 10, and at the 23rd to 30th and the 40th and 42nd meetings of the Council's Social Committee from February 10 to 18 and on March 5.

The report of the third session (E/779 and Add.1) was considered during the seventh session of the Council at the 180th and 198th plenary meetings on July 21 and August 13, and at the 47th to 54th meetings of the Council's Social Committee from July 27 to 30 and on August 2 and 4. The various decisions taken by the Council are given below.

a. CO-ORDINATION AND WORK PROGRAM

The Social Commission at its second session approved certain principles and procedures for co-ordination between the programs of the specialized agencies and the Social Commission and decided to set up an Advisory Committee on Planning and Co-ordination to consult with the Secretary-General and the representatives of the specialized agencies, and to prepare recommendations on "practical ways and means of achieving in the general field of social policy, co-ordination of activities of the Secretariat and of the specialized agencies", in accordance with the principles it had approved and on "urgent activities in the social welfare field, particularly as regards family and child welfare", not falling within the competence of any existing specialized agency (E/578).

The Council, at its 125th to 127th plenary meetings on February 3 and 4, its 171st plenary meeting on March 10 and the 23rd and 42nd meetings of its Social Committee on February 10 and March 5, debated the advisability of setting up such a committee. Some representatives held that questions of co-ordination were the concern of the Council itself, that the tendency to create additional organs should be discouraged and that the proposed Advisory Committee, being composed of only seven members of the Social Commission, was not representative. Others maintained that the Social Commission had acted quite properly in deciding to set up the Advisory Committee, particularly in view of the Commission's large field of activity, and emphasized that co-ordination at all levels was important. The Council at its 71st plenary meeting on March 10 adopted, by 12 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, a resolution (122(VI)E) noting, the action of the Social Commission in setting up the Advisory Committee and drawing the Commission's attention to the action with respect to co-ordination, taken by the Council at its sixth session.⁹⁷ The resolution requested the Commission to submit to the Council at its seventh session:

"(a) The proposed work programme of the Commission, arranged in an order of priority;

"(b) A statement of those gaps and overlaps with respect to the proposed work programme of the Commission and of other bodies to which the Council should give attention;

"(c) Such recommendations as the Commission deems appropriate with respect to solutions concerning specific gaps and overlaps;

"(d) An evaluation of the contribution to its work made by the above-mentioned Committee and the need for re-establishing it in the future."

The Social Commission, at its third session in March 1948 considered the report (E/CN.5/46) prepared by its Advisory Committee on Planning and Co-ordination, and concluded that a study of the proposed work programs of the Commission and of other bodies operating in the social field indicated little if any overlapping (E/779)-

In respect of gaps, the Commission concluded that there were no specialized agencies which had been specifically entrusted with activities in the fields of social welfare services, including family and child welfare and prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders. It concluded that the Secretariat of the United Nations must assume primary responsibility for promoting effective interim undertakings in these fields.

The Commission therefore recommended the following order of priorities for its work program (E/779):

- (1) Social welfare services, including family, youth and child welfare.
- (2) Prevention of crime and treatment of offenders.
- (3) Prostitution and traffic in women and children and in obscene publications.
- (4) Migration.⁹⁸
- (5) Housing and town and country planning."
- (6) Standards of living.

The Council at its seventh session (50th and 51st meetings of the Social Committee on July 29 and 30) discussed the Social Commission's recommendations for its work program for 1948-49, and in its resolution 155(VII)B, adopted at its 198th plenary meeting, by 15 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, approved the Commission's recommendations. It suggested, however, that the order of priorities be altered so far as required by the Council's resolution 155(VII)E of August 13, 1948 (see below), relating to the draft Convention of 1937 for Suppressing the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others. Action taken under these headings in the period under review (July 1, 1947, to September 21, 1948) is summarized below.

b. ADVISORY SOCIAL WELFARE FUNCTIONS

The General Assembly on December 14, 1946, adopted a resolution (58(I))¹⁰⁰ authorizing the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Economic and Social Council, to make provision, with the co-operation of the specialized agencies where appropriate, for continuing the advisory social welfare functions of UNRRA. In particular, it authorized him to make provisions for: expert assistance to governments on welfare services; fellowships for training officials in social welfare; advice, demonstration and instruction in connection with the manufacture of prosthetic appliances and the vocational training of physically handicapped persons, and the furnishing of demonstration equipment; and the provision of technical publications.

(1) Criteria for Receiving Requests for Services

The Temporary Social Welfare Committee, established by the Social Commission at its first session,¹⁰¹ as requested by the Social Commission, recommended (E/CN.5/25) certain criteria as the basis for receiving requests for services from governments:

"1. The basic consideration should be the established need of the applicant country for the services in question.

"2. Great weight should be given, in assessing the need of the applicant country, to the value of continuity in the welfare services performed by UNRRA during the last quarter of the calendar year 1946.

"3. The bulk of the monies available should be used for States which received assistance from UNRRA.

"4. Some of the monies available should also be used for those United Nations Member States which received no assistance from UNRRA, but which, being less developed areas, need social welfare services.

"5. Tentative allocation of the monies available should be made by the Secretariat to each of the foregoing groups of countries, but keeping in reserve during the first few months an amount of $100,000 (out of the total amount of $670,000) for subsequent allocations to either or both groups mentioned in paragraphs 3 and 4."

(2) Progress Report Submitted to the Council's fifth Session

The Secretary-General submitted a progress report (E/458) to the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council on the implementation of the General Assembly's resolution. The report reviewed the measures taken by the Secretary-General by which eleven countries were being provided with social welfare experts, twelve with fellowships, nine with assistance in physical rehabilitation programs and six with technical publications useful in training social welfare workers. Two seminars for social welfare officials of Latin American countries were being conducted, and films for the training of social welfare workers in India were being produced.

(3) Consideration at the Council's Fifth Session of the Advisory Social Welfare Program

The report was considered by the Council at its 95th and 107th plenary meetings on July 25 and August 6, and by its Social Committee at its fifteenth and seventeenth meetings on July 30 and August 4, 1947.

In the discussions of the question in the Council and Social Committee, various representatives, including those of China, the United States, France, India and the Netherlands, felt that the social welfare program should be continued. The representative of Norway expressed the view that the program should be widened to benefit all Members of the United Nations and not merely those which had been receiving assistance from UNRRA. The representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Byelorussian S.S.R., while recognizing that, if needed, such advisory social welfare services should be continued during 1948, nevertheless thought that the expenses of such services should be covered by the countries to which the services were extended. The representatives of the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and New Zealand considered that the report should be studied by the Social Commission before any definite action was taken on it.

Proposals were submitted by China (E/AC.7/-W.16), Norway (E/AC.7/28) and verbally by India and the United Kingdom. A drafting committee of the Social Committee composed of representatives of these States, and of the U.S.S.R. and the United States, evolved a joint resolution (E/AC.7/34), which with minor textual changes was approved by 13 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, by the Social Committee of the Council (E/520). The Council, however, decided by 8 votes to 7, with 3 abstentions, to delete the second paragraph of this draft resolution, which read:

"Recognizes that the Member nations of the United Nations should, if interested, share the benefits of Advisory Social Welfare Services."

By varying votes the Council adopted the remaining paragraphs of the resolution.

The resolution as a whole (78(V)) was adopted by 16 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, at the 107th plenary meeting on August 6. It took note of the Secretary-General's report; requested the Social Commission at its next session to review the report and to make further recommendations concerning ¹⁰⁰ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 161-62.

it and concerning future programs and the best methods of financing them; and requested the Secretary-General to consult with the Social Commission and, in the light of its recommendations, to review the budgetary provision which he had made for these services in 1948.

(4) Recommendations of the Commission at Its Second Session

The Social Commission at its second session recommended (E/578) that the program provided by resolution 58(I) of the General Assembly be continued during 1948, and that, as far as the future programs were concerned, the following considerations be kept in mind: (a) the type of service to be rendered should be decided in consultation and agreement with the government concerned; (b) there should be close co-operation with the specialized agencies (including the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund); (c) continued service to individual countries, and the character of the program as a whole, should be based upon reports to the United Nations by the recipient countries and upon joint appraisal by the United Nations and the recipient countries of the value of the services rendered; and (d) the possibility of financial participation by recipient countries should be constantly explored.

(5) Consideration by the Council at Its Sixth Session

The question was discussed at the 25th meeting of the Council's Social Committee on February 11, 1948. Representatives felt that it was necessary to plan for a long-term program of advisory social welfare services. The Australian and French representatives stressed that the exchange of fellowships should be as broadly international as possible, and the French and the U.S.S.R. representatives thought that the technical consultants should be more carefully selected. The U.S.S.R. representative proposed that the Secretary-General, in rendering advisory services, should be guided by the principle that expenditure on advisory social welfare services should be refunded by the governments of countries asking for such assistance. The Council at its 157th plenary meeting on March 3, by 13 votes, with 1 abstention, adopted a resolution which had been proposed by the United States (122(VI)B), requesting

"the Social Commission to submit to the Council at its seventh session a recommendation as to whether the advisory social welfare services should be continued in 1949; and, if continuation is recommended, to submit further recommendations regarding the extent, administration and methods of financing of these services, together with supporting facts."

(6) Report on Services Rendered during 1947 and Requested for 1948

The Social Commission at its third session reviewed the measures taken by the Secretary-General to implement resolution 58(I)—i.e., the requests for services which had been received for 1948; and the appraisals of services rendered which had been submitted by recipient governments (E/CN.5/48).

During 1947, services were furnished as follows:

Services	Number of Countries
Consultants	9 ¹⁰²
Fellowships	12
Prosthetics	8
Literature	6
Films	10
Seminars	20 ¹⁰³

The details of the services were as follows (E/779):

(a) Provision of Experts to Governments.—Ten governments requested the services of experts to furnish advisory services in such fields of social welfare as:

General welfare administration;
Training in social welfare;
Public assistance;
Community organization;
Social rehabilitation of physically handicapped persons;
Administration of institutions;
Mass feeding;
Social service to invalids and convalescents.

The United Nations was able to furnish 24 social welfare consultants to meet such requests. These consultants were secured from seven different countries. They served varying periods of time, depending upon the wishes of the Government requesting the services and the nature of the assignment.

(b) Fellowships.—In the 1947 program, 124 Fellowships were awarded to twelve countries, and the Fellows observed in ten different countries. The fields of observation were as follows:

Child welfare, including maternal and child care, child guidance;
Juvenile delinquency;
Other aspects of social welfare with children;
Community organization;
Employment service;
General welfare, including welfare administration;
Psychiatric social work;
Public assistance;
Social aspects of health;
Social aspects of housing;
Social insurance;

¹⁰² Ten countries requested consultants, but one request was received late, after all available funds had been allocated.

¹⁰³ Twenty Latin American countries participated in two seminars.

Social research;
 Social welfare training;
 Vocational guidance;
 Vocational rehabilitation, including physical rehabilitation, vocational training, manufacture of prosthetics;
 Welfare programs in industry;
 Welfare legislation.

(c) Demonstration Equipment and Supplies for Training Purposes.—Demonstration supplies for the social rehabilitation of physically disabled persons were provided to eight countries in 1947.

A film, First Steps, for use in training social welfare workers in the social rehabilitation of physically disabled children, was produced by the United Nations in the following languages: Chinese, English, French, Greek, Polish, Serbo-Croatian, Spanish, Czech.

Two films for training child welfare workers were produced in India for use in that country.

Six governments of Member States, in the group of war-devastated countries, requested technical literature in various aspects of social welfare.

Two seminars on social welfare were organized and conducted in Latin America. On the invitation of the Governments of Colombia and Uruguay, the seminars were held in Medellin and in Montevideo, with all twenty Latin American countries participating. An international staff directed study groups in which welfare problems of common interest to the Latin American countries were discussed.

(d) Services Requested during 1948.—As of April 1, 1948, services had been requested as follows:

Services	Number of Countries
Consultants	13 ¹⁰⁴
Fellowships	18 ¹⁰⁵
Prosthetics	4
Literature	7
Films and/or Kf film catalogs	3
Seminars	27 ¹⁰⁶

(7) Consideration by the Social Commission at Its Third Session

The Commission, having noted the substantial increase in requests for services, not only from governments which had previously received such services, but also from other governments in need of such services, and the increased financial participation on the part of receiving governments, recommended to the Council a resolution (E/779) requesting the General Assembly to approve continuance of the Advisory Social Welfare Services during 1949, and to stipulate that the funds provided for the services in 1949 should be at least equal to those appropriated for 1948.

The Commission also recommended that the following considerations should be kept in mind in carrying out the advisory social welfare services:

"(a) The type of service to be rendered under Resolution 58(I) of the General Assembly shall be decided in consultation and in agreement with the Government concerned;

"(b) There shall be close co-operation with the specialized agencies¹⁰⁷ in order to avoid overlapping in services rendered and to ensure that all related activities are mutually benefited;

"(c) Continued service to individual countries and the character of the programme as a whole should be based upon reports to the United Nations by the recipient countries and upon joint appraisal by the United Nations and the recipient countries of the value of the services rendered;

"(d) The possibility of financial participation by recipient countries shall be constantly explored."

(8) Discussion at the Council's Seventh Session

The recommendations were considered at the 47th meeting of the Social Committee on July 27 and the 198th plenary meeting of the Council on August 13, 1948.

While the view was generally expressed that the advisory social welfare services of the United Nations were important and also that it was desirable to increase the contributions from recipient countries, opinion was divided as to the scale on which the program should be continued during 1949, and how far participating countries could contribute to it. The Chinese, Brazilian, Lebanese, Venezuelan, Australian and New Zealand representatives, while agreeing that recipient countries should pay as much as possible, emphasized the importance of continued United Nations assistance in this program, which they thought should be continued on at least the same scale as the 1948 program. The representatives of the Netherlands, Denmark, the United States, France and Venezuela drew attention to the different financial situations of various countries and thought that their capacity to pay should be taken into account. The representatives of Canada and the United Kingdom stressed the importance of putting the program on a self-supporting basis and were in favor of a token reduction in the estimates for it. The representative of Poland thought that the program should be continued in 1949, but reserved his position concerning its continuance in 1950. The representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Byelorussian S.S.R. stressed the need for economy, and considered that the program had been extended beyond its original framework of supplying aid to devastated and under-developed countries and that, if the program was continued during 1949, recipient governments should bear the cost. A U.S.S.R. proposal to this effect was defeated in the Social Committee by 13 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions. A Canadian proposal to delete the paragraph referring to the financial provision for the services, on the ground that this question should be left for consideration by the General Assembly, was defeated in the Social Committee by 9 votes to 7, with 1 abstention. A United States proposal to delete the words "at least" from the clause providing that the funds should be at least equal to those appropriated for 1948, was rejected in the Social Committee by 8 votes to 6, with 3 abstentions.

The U.S.S.R. representative doubted the wisdom of continuing the consultant services, since these functions were of a temporary character, and proposed that the Secretary-General should be asked to furnish Members with a report on the work of the consultants from 1946 to date, so that the Social Commission might study the report and the comments on it from Member Governments. This proposal was accepted in the Social Committee by 8 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions.

The Danish representative suggested that it should not be left to individual countries to choose the country of destination for their nationals holding United Nations Fellowships, but that the Secretariat, or a special committee, should make a study to determine which countries were most suitable and establish a priority among them. The French representative supported this suggestion and thought that there should be an equitable sharing of the services from the point of view of the nationality of the consultants sent and the nationality of the Fellows nominated and of the recipient countries.

The Council at its 198th plenary meeting on August 15, on the recommendation of the Social Committee, adopted by 11 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions, resolution 155 (VII) A. In this resolution the Council:

"Recommends to the General Assembly:

"(a) That the advisory social welfare services be continued during 1949;

"(b) That the programme should include the same basic services as were carried on in 1948;

"(c) That, in the administration of the programme, the policies and procedures carried on in 1948 be continued, as adapted in accordance with recommendations made by the Social Commission at its third session;

"(d) That the services provided in 1949 should be approximately within the same scope as those provided in 1948.

"Requests the Secretary-General:

"(a) To submit to all Member countries a complete report on the work of consultants in the various countries from 1946 until the present time, in order that the Social Commission at its fourth session may be able to study such a report and any comments thereon which may be made by Member countries of the United Nations;

"(b) To continue and intensify his efforts to bring about increased financial participation on the part of recipient Governments, and to report from time to time to the Council on the success of his efforts."

c. FAMILY, CHILD AND YOUTH WELFARE

(1) Child Welfare Program

The Social Commission at its second session adopted a resolution (E/578) on a child welfare program, recommending that the Secretary-General, in undertaking the functions formerly exercised by the League of Nations in the field of child welfare, continue the regular publication of the legislative series on child welfare and of the summary of the annual reports submitted by governments, and that the Secretariat in carrying out the studies necessary for the implementation of the program should give priority to the following subjects:

(1) The organization and administration of child and youth welfare services;

(2) Preparation of documentation on the Declaration of Geneva, referring in particular to any change or additions which it might be considered necessary to make with a view to its acceptance as the United Nations Charter of the Rights of the Child;

(3) The principles underlying the treatment of family and child problems; the desirability of international conventions on certain aspects of these subjects; and the status and protection of destitute and stateless children.

At its sixth session the Council, after a discussion largely concerned with the question of refugee children (see below), at its 156th plenary meeting on March 1, 1948, adopted resolution 122(VI) A approving the Social Commission's resolution on a child welfare program and requesting it to give priority to questions of child welfare. The Council requested the Secretary-General:

"to study the desirability of combining the Legislative and Administrative Series on Child Welfare published by the League of Nations with the summary of the annual reports submitted to Governments, in a single comprehensive annual report on legislative, administrative and other developments in child welfare within Member countries, and to report thereon to the Social Commission at its third session."

At its third session (E/779, p. 28) the Social Commission adopted the family, child and youth welfare work program set out by its Advisory Committee on Planning and Co-ordination (E/CN.5/46). This program provided for:

"(1) Publication of an annual report on child and youth welfare, based on information received from Governments: publication of a social welfare legislative series;

"(2) Note on the Declaration of the Rights of the Child (Declaration of Geneva);

"(3) Development of Information and Technical Reference Centre in continuation of the League of Nations Child's Welfare Information Centre;

"(4) Report on youth guidance and questionnaire to be sent to youth organizations;

"(5) Study on the welfare of child war-victims, including re-education of children physically, mentally or morally handicapped;

"(6) Study of preventive and rehabilitative family social services; special social services for children and for handicapped groups;

"(7) Study of programmes of family assistance (other than family allowances proper) such as financial assistance and other economic measures for improving the conditions of families, e.g., adjustment of taxation, housing facilities and priorities, reduced rents, reduced clothing costs, community feeding places, food stamp systems."

To this program the Commission added two projects, calling for the study of: (a) needs of homeless children in their native country, and (b) methods of administering assistance and social services for needy families.

It recommended that the Secretary-General pursue the study of the proposed Charter of the Rights of the Child "in consultation with Governments and interested organizations, in such a way that, whilst giving great weight to the principles of the Geneva Declaration, he should consider such additional significant principles as would transform the document into a United Nations Charter of the Rights of the Child, embodying the main features of the newer conception of child welfare, and report thereon to the fourth session of the Social Commission". The Commission also adopted the proposal to combine in a single publication the summary of the legislative series on child welfare and the summary of annual reports submitted by governments.

At its seventh session, the Council, in resolution 155 (VII) B, adopted by 15 votes to 0 at the 198th plenary meeting on August 13, 1948, concurred in the recommendation of the Social Commission concerning the responsibility of the Social Commission and the United Nations Secretariat in the field of family, youth and child welfare.

(2) Question of Refugee Children

At its sixth session the Council's discussions on the report of the second session of the Social Commission (at the 126th and 156th plenary meetings on February 4 and March 1, and the 23rd, 24th and 29th meetings of the Social Committee on February 10 and 17, 1948) were largely concerned with the question of refugee children.

The U.S.S.R. representative stressed the importance of the repatriation of homeless orphans who, as a result of enemy occupation of their countries found themselves in Germany and Western Europe. He proposed (E/AC.7/44) that the Council should recommend that urgent measures be taken to return such children to their homeland and requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council's seventh session on the fulfilment of such measures. This proposal was supported by the Polish and Byelorussian representatives.

The Lebanese representative proposed (E/AC.7/45) that the Secretary-General should be asked to report on the situation of such children to the seventh session of the Council, so that the Council could decide on the possibility, advisability or necessity for their urgent repatriation. The United Kingdom representative thought that any resolution on the question should refer to the General Assembly resolution 136 (II)¹⁰⁸ dealing with the question of refugees and submitted an amendment to the Lebanese proposal (E/AC.7/50) to the effect that, in order that this resolution might be implemented, the Secretary-General should ask the International Refugee Organization to supply a report for submission to the Council's seventh session giving the steps taken or contemplated for dealing with the problem and recommendations on what should be done to hasten a final solution. The United States representative thought that a study such as that proposed by the Lebanese representative should be undertaken in collaboration with IRO. He proposed a draft resolution (E/AC.7/51) to the effect that the Secretary-General should include in his report, under the General Assembly's resolution 136 (II) of November 17 on the progress of repatriation and resettlement of refugees, a specific account of the situation of children and the measures taken or contemplated on their behalf. After a sub-committee had failed to reconcile the various points of view (E/AC.7/55), the Social Committee and the Council at its 156th plenary meeting adopted by 15 votes, with 3 abstentions, a joint United Kingdom-United States draft resolution (E/AC.7/57) with certain amendments.

The U.S.S.R., Byelorussian and Polish representatives opposed the resolution on the ground that a further study of the question was unnecessary and would further delay the repatriation of the children, and that the question should be dealt with independently of the general problem of refugees. The first part of the resolution (122 (VI) A) referred to the child welfare program proposed by the Social Commission (see above). The second part of the Council's resolution reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council, furthermore,

"Recognizing the urgent need for a speedy solution of the problem of children left in foreign countries as a result of the war, and

"Taking note of the request of the General Assembly at its second session by resolution 136(II) of 17 November 1947 that 'the Secretary-General submit, in collaboration with the Director-General of the International Refugee Organization, or the Executive Secretary of its Preparatory Commission, a report on the progress and prospect of repatriation, resettlement and immigration of the refugees and displaced persons, for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its seventh session',

"Requests that there be included in this report a specific account of the situation of children removed from their country of origin during the course of the war, and on measures taken or contemplated on their behalf as provided by Annex I, Part I, paragraph 4 of the General Assembly resolution 62 (I),¹⁰⁹ and recommendations on what can be done to accelerate a final solution."¹¹⁰

d. PREVENTION OF CRIME AND TREATMENT OF OFFENDERS

(1) Topics Suitable for International Inquiry

The Economic and Social Council, at its fourth session (resolution 43 (IV)), requested the Secretary-General to submit, at a future session of the Social Commission, a report on the prevention of crime and treatment of offenders indicating proposals suitable for international action and how they could effectively be carried out. A questionnaire on the state of crime and the treatment of offenders during the last ten years was drawn up and distributed to all Member States in May 1947, and a preliminary report, prepared on the basis of the replies received, was approved in principle by the Social Commission at its second session (E/578).

The Social Commission also asked the Secretary-General, in making a study for a plan of action, to give priority to the development of a plan for the collection, analysis and distribution of information already available in Member nations regarding crime causation, prevention of crime and treatment of offenders, and urged him to call upon experts to assist the Secretariat on an ad hoc basis on specific aspects of the problem which could not be referred to any existing specialized agency.

The Economic and Social Council at its sixth session decided that no action was required from it on this resolution of the Social Commission, but engaged in a discussion on the question of co-operation between the Social Commission and the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission (see below).

The plan outlined by the Secretariat was subsequently submitted for comment to the leading organizations working in this field. Collaboration was established with the interested specialized agencies. The World Health Organization appointed an expert to prepare a report on the medical and psychiatric aspects of crime and the treatment of offenders.

On the basis of the material collected, the Secretariat drew up a list of topics which it suggested as suitable for international inquiry. The revised plan of study was reviewed and adopted with certain modifications by the Social Commission during its third session. The list of topics enumerated in the resolution approved by the third session of the Social Commission is as follows (E/779):

(a) The problem of juvenile delinquency in all its phases, including the study of advanced legislation on the subject;

(b) Medical, psychiatric and social examination of adult offenders before sentence is passed;

(c) Probation;

(d) Fines, also in connection with short-term imprisonment;

(e) Open penitentiary institutions;

(f) Habitual offenders;

(g) A general inquiry into the functions of the medical, psychological and social sciences in dealing with the problems of delinquency and crime;

(h) The training of staff for penal institutions;

(i) Criminal statistics, with a view to a report on the state of crime.

Preliminary reports were undertaken on item (c) and on item (i), based on replies from governments. A preliminary study was also undertaken relating to item (a).

At the seventh session of the Council the U.S.S.R. representative, supported by the Byelorussian representative, criticized the items proposed for study as being domestic rather than international questions. He proposed an amendment in the Social Committee and in the Council (E/AC.7/W.33) to limit the range of study to (1) questions on which relevant decisions by international organizations already existed, such as "measures to be taken against propaganda and the inciters of a new war" and genocide (which had been dealt with in General Assembly resolutions), and (2) questions on which relevant international conventions existed, such as slavery, narcotic drugs and the suppression of the traffic in women and children and of obscene publications. The United Kingdom and French representatives felt that these matters were already being dealt with and that an international exchange of views on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders would be valuable. The U.S.S.R. proposal, after being rejected in separate paragraph by paragraph votes in the Social Committee, was rejected by the Council at its 198th plenary meeting on August 13 by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention.

(2) Question of the Creation of a Committee of Experts

The Council in its resolution 122 (VI) F, adopted at its sixth session (172nd plenary meeting on March 10, 1948), requested the Social Commission to report to the Council's seventh session on how international activities in the field of prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders could best be carried out.

The Commission recommended to the Council that in order to carry out the suggested program and having regard to international and national organizations with interests and competence in this field, a group of experts should be convened not more than once a year to advise the Secretary-General and the Social Commission in formulating policies and a program.

The recommendations of the Social Commission were considered at the seventh session, at the 47th, 48th and 50th meetings of the Social Committee on July 27 and 29 and at the 198th plenary meeting on August 13, 1948.

The creation of a committee of experts was supported by the United Kingdom, United States, Venezuelan and Lebanese representatives. The U.S.S.R., Polish and Byelorussian representatives thought that it was not necessary to set up a special advisory group, since the Secretariat could, if necessary, consult experts. The Australian representative thought that a yearly meeting might be too ambitious. He also thought that it was difficult to create the committee until the organizations concerned had been consulted concerning the work they were doing and whether the necessary experts could in fact be assembled, a view shared by the French representative.

The Canadian and Danish representatives suggested that the Committee should be convened in 1949, after which it could be decided if it should be maintained. A Danish amendment to this effect was approved by the Social Committee at its 48th meeting by 9 votes to 3, with 5 abstentions.

The Social Committee rejected by 12 votes to 4, with 1 abstention, a U.S.S.R. proposal to delete the operative part of the resolution.

At its 198th plenary meeting on August 13 the Council, by 15 votes to 3, adopted resolution 155 (VII) C, as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Endorses the opinion of the Social Commission that, in view of the importance of the study, on an international basis, of the problem of the prevention of crime and treatment of offenders, the United Nations should assume leadership in promoting this activity, having regard to international and national organizations which have interests and competence in this field, and making the fullest use of their knowledge and experience;

"Requests the Secretary-General, subject to budgetary limitations, to convene in 1949 a group of internationally recognized experts not to exceed seven in number and selected by him in such a way that the constitution of the group maintains an international character, to act in an honorary capacity as an advisory body and to advise the Secretary-General and the Social Commission in devising and formulating policies and programmes appropriate to:

"(a) The study on an international basis of the problem of prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders; and

"(b) International action in this field."

(3) Question of the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission (IPPC)

At its sixth session, at the 30th and 40th meetings of its Social Committee on February 18 and March 3, and at its 172nd plenary meeting on March 10, 1948, the Council discussed the question of co-operation between the Social Commission and the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission.

The Commission had decided at its first session that it could not give effect to the Council's request that it consult with the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission (IPPC) so long as that Commission had not severed its relations with the Franco Government and this action had been approved by the Economic and Social Council at its fourth session in March 1947 (resolution 43(IV)).¹¹¹

The Commission had subsequently been informed that Spain had withdrawn from the IPPC in order that the IPPC might collaborate with the United Nations. The Polish, U.S.S.R., Byelorussian, French and Venezuelan representatives expressed the view that Spain was still a member of the IPPC, since its withdrawal was conditional on the IPPC entering into an agreement with the United Nations. It was pointed out that unless it amended its constitution the IPPC had no power to expel Spain. A Polish proposal that the question should be referred back to the Social Commission for consideration at its third session was rejected.

Various representatives, including those of New ¹¹¹See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 521.

Zealand, the United States and the United Kingdom, felt that it was clear that Spain was no longer a member of the IPPC. It was decided on the motion of the Australian representative to ask the Secretariat for a legal opinion on the question.

After taking into account the legal opinion of the Secretariat that Spain was not now a member of the IPPC (E/AC.7/66), the Council at its sixth session at the 172nd plenary meeting on March 10, 1948, adopted by 11 votes to 5, with 1 abstention, an amended form of a resolution which had been proposed by New Zealand (E/AC.7/-70). In its resolution (122(VI)F) the Council:

"Requests the Social Commission to undertake consultations with the IPPC provided and so long as the Franco Government is not readmitted to membership of the Commission;

"Draws the attention of the Social Commission to the Secretary-General's recommendation that to acquire effective control of admissions and of the right to expel members the IPPC should give consideration to the question of revising its constitutional regulations, and that the above-mentioned consultations should include consideration of such revision;

"Requests the Social Commission to report to the Council at its seventh session on the result of these consultations. . . ."

At its third session the Social Commission noted that the question of amending the constitutional rules of the International Penal and Penitentiary Commission to control the admission and expulsion of members had been placed on the agenda of its next meeting. Subsequently, the Director of the Division of Social Affairs of the Secretariat informed the Council's Social Committee that the Secretary-General of the IPPC had circularized its members concerning the proposed modifications of its constitution, informing them that if a majority signified their assent, the amendments would come into force; 23 out of 26 members had signified their assent.

In the Council's discussions at the seventh session a Danish proposal, supported by the Canadian and Venezuelan representatives, that discussion of the question of the formation of a Committee of Experts should be adjourned until after the forthcoming meeting of the IPPC was rejected by the Social Committee by 10 votes to 3. The United Kingdom representative proposed an amendment to mention the IPPC specifically in the Council's resolution in view of the IPPC's work for the rehabilitation of prisoners. The French representative, supported by other representatives, thought that this organization should not be singled out for special mention, since there were other important inter-governmental organizations which studied these questions and in view of the IPPC's questionable policy with regard to Franco Spain. The United Kingdom amendment was rejected by 9 votes to 3, with 5 abstentions, in the Council's Social Committee and the Council at its 198th plenary meeting adopted resolution 155(VII)C (see text of resolution above).

e. PREVENTION OF PROSTITUTION AND THE SUPPRESSION OF TRAFFIC IN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

(1) International Conventions on Traffic in Women and Children and on Obscene Publications

(a) TRANSFER OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS FUNCTIONS

The Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 2/10 of June 21, 1946, directed the Social Commission to "consider the best way of carrying on the functions undertaken by the League with reference to traffic in women and children and all measures designed to prevent such traffic". Acting upon the Social Commission's report of February 11, 1947, the Council requested the Secretary-General, on March 29, 1947 (resolution 43(IV)), to take the necessary steps to transfer to the United Nations the functions formerly exercised by the League of Nations under the Conventions of September 30, 1921, and October 11, 1933, relating to the suppression of the traffic in women and children, and the Convention of September 12, 1923, relating to the suppression of the circulation of and traffic in obscene publications. The Council recommended that the Secretary-General adopt the procedure followed in regard to a similar transfer of functions under the conventions on narcotic drugs.¹¹²

The Secretary-General submitted to the fifth session of the Council a memorandum (E/444) to which were appended two draft resolutions and two draft protocols intended to implement the transfer. The document had been communicated by the Secretary-General to the members of the Social Commission on June 16, 1947, with the request that they comment on it, and a number of replies were before the Council at its fifth session.

The Secretary-General's report was discussed by the Council at its 99th and 117th plenary meetings on July 29 and August 14 and by the Council's Social Committee at its 19th and 22nd meetings on August 6 and 12, 1947. A drafting committee of the Social Committee considered in detail the Secretary-General's proposal and comments on these proposals made by the United Kingdom (E/509) and the United States (E/482), and submitted a draft protocol and resolution (E/540), which was approved by the Council's Social Committee at its 22nd meeting on August 12 and by the Council at its 117th plenary meeting on August 14. The French representative stated that his delegation approved the draft protocol subject to the same conditions as the Convention of 1933. The Byelorussian and the U.S.S.R. representatives abstained from voting since their Governments were not parties to the Conventions, but reserved the right to submit amendments at later stages, since not all governments had communicated their observations.

In its resolution (81(V)) the Council recommended that the General Assembly approve the assumption by the United Nations of the functions and powers previously exercised by the League of Nations under the Convention of September 30, 1921, for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children, the Convention of October 11, 1933, for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women of Full Age and the Convention of September 12, 1923, for the Suppression of the Circulation of and Traffic in Obscene Publications.

The transfer to the United Nations of the functions exercised by the League of Nations under the Conventions of 1921 and 1933 relating to the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children, and the Convention of 1923 concerning the Suppression of the Circulation of and Traffic in Obscene Publications, was completed by the General Assembly in resolution 126(II),¹¹³ adopted on October 20, 1947.

(b) TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS FORMERLY EXERCISED BY THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT

At the Council's fifth session the French representative proposed that transfer to the United Nations should be made of the functions conferred on the Government of the French Republic under the International Agreement of May 18, 1904, for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic, the International Convention of May 4, 1910, for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic and the International Agreement of May 4, 1910, for the Suppression of Obscene Publications. A draft resolution to give effect to this proposal (E/AC.7/36) was considered by the drafting committee of the Council's Social Committee.

A resolution proposed by the drafting committee (E/540) was approved by the Council's Social Committee at its 22nd meeting on August 12 and by the Council at its 117th plenary meeting on August 14, 1947.

In this resolution (82(V)), the Council requested the Secretary-General to present to the Social Commission at its first session in 1948 a report on the questions concerning the transfer to the United Nations of the functions formerly exercised by the French Government under the relevant international agreements and conventions. It requested the Social Commission to make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council at a subsequent session as to whether such transfer was desirable and, if so, on the steps necessary to implement it.

At its seventh session, the Council discussed, at the 49th meeting of its Social Committee on July 28 and its 198th plenary meeting on August 13, 1948, the best method of effecting the transfer of the functions formerly exercised by the French Government. After considering the relative merits of effecting the transfer by protocol or by the "Hague method" and after rejecting by 13 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, a U.S.S.R. proposal that the transfer should be effected in accordance with the procedure provided for by General Assembly resolution 126(II), which had provided for the transfer of League of Nations functions in this field, the Council by 15 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, adopted resolution 155(VII)D, in which it "Directs the Secretary-General, in consultation with the French Government, to prepare a protocol for the purpose of effecting the transfer of the said functions to the United Nations and with the agreement of the French Government, to submit the protocol to the General Assembly for its approval at its next regular session;

"Recommends that, at its next regular session, the General Assembly approve the assumption by the United Nations of the functions exercised by the French Government under the aforesaid instruments, and recommends that, at its next regular session, the General Assembly consider the protocol drawn up by the Secretary-General for this purpose."

(c) UNIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS AND CONVENTIONS AND STUDY OF THE 1937 DRAFT CONVENTION

A Norwegian draft resolution (E/AC.7/37) concerning the unification of the international agreements and conventions for the suppression of traffic in women and children was considered by the Council at its fifth session.

A resolution submitted by the drafting committee of the Council's Social Committee was approved by the Social Committee at its 22nd meeting on August 12, and by the Council at its 117th plenary meeting on August 14.

The resolution adopted by the Council (83(V)) requested the Secretary-General to present to the Social Commission at an early session a report concerning the unification of the following international agreements and conventions:

¹¹³See General Assembly, pp. 121-23.

1. International Agreement of May 18, 1904, for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic;
2. International Convention of May 4, 1910, for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic;
3. International Convention of September 30, 1921, for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children; and
4. International Convention of October 11, 1933, for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women of Full Age.

Resolution 43 (IV), adopted by the Council at its fourth session,¹¹⁴ had instructed the Secretary-General to resume the study of the 1937 draft Convention regarding the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, to make any necessary amendments in order to bring it up to date and to take account of changes in the general situation. The modifications proposed by the Secretariat were communicated to Member States and to a number of international organizations for their observations.

The Council considered the question at the 48th and 49th meetings of its Social Committee on July 27 and 28, 1948. Two views were expressed—first, that it was desirable to remodel the Convention and unify it with other international instruments dealing with the suppression of the white slave traffic and of obscene publications; second, that this might cause undue delay, that the matter was urgent, and that it would be better to restrict changes to the necessary adaptation of the Convention to make it refer to the United Nations and continue efforts to introduce desirable improvements. Those supporting the view that the Convention should be remodelled felt that Members would be discouraged from signing the Convention as it stood if they knew that amendments to it were under consideration.

The Social Committee by 12 votes, with 4 abstentions, adopted a Canadian compromise amendment (E/AC7/W.34), a French amendment (E/AC-7/W.31), designed to minimize the delay, having been withdrawn in its favor. The Committee by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, also adopted a United States verbal amendment to provide for consultation with non-governmental organizations. The revised draft resolution (155(VII)E.I.) was unanimously approved by the Council at its 198th meeting on August 13, and reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Considering that in resolution 43 (IV) of 29 March 1947 the Council instructed the Secretary-General, inter alia, to resume the study of the 1937 draft Convention regarding the exploitation of the prostitution of others, to make any necessary amendments in order to bring it up to date and to introduce any desirable improvement in view of the changes in the general situation since 1937,

"Considering that in resolution 83 (V) of 14 August 1947 the Council requested the Social Commission to consider the possibility of the unification of the 1937 draft Convention and the existing instruments for the suppression of the traffic in women and children, namely:

- "1. International Agreement of 18 May 1904 for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic;
- "2. International Convention of 4 May 1910 for the Suppression of the White Slave Traffic;
- "3. International Convention of 30 September 1921 for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Children; and
- "4. International Convention of 11 October 1933 for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women of Full Age;

"Considering that developments in general conditions since 1937 make feasible the immediate formulation and conclusion of a new and comprehensive convention for the suppression of the traffic in women and children and the prevention of prostitution, and that such a convention should unify the above-mentioned instruments and also embody the substance of the 1937 draft Convention as well as any desirable improvement therein,

"Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a draft of such a convention, to ascertain the views of Governments and international organizations specialized in this field regarding this draft, and to submit the draft Convention and any views expressed to the Social Commission at its fourth session;

"Requests the Social Commission to give first priority to the examination of such a draft Convention and to submit its views thereon to the Council not later than the ninth session of the Council;

"Suggests to the Social Commission that, in the event of its finding that it cannot complete its task in the time at its disposal, it should submit for the consideration of the Council at its ninth session a revision of the text of the draft Convention of 1937, including therein any necessary formal amendments and any additional amendments which the Commission may see fit to suggest, but excluding amendments with regard to which there is not, in the opinion of the Commission, likely to be a general measure of agreement."

(2) Annual Reports from Governments on Traffic in Women and Children and on Obscene Publications

On the basis of replies received from governments to a questionnaire circulated by the Secretariat, the first summaries of annual reports to be issued by the United Nations on traffic in women and children¹¹⁵ and on obscene publications¹¹⁶ were published. These reports refer to the year 1946/47; subsequent reports were also being prepared covering the period 1947/48.

(3) Other Measures

The following preliminary steps were taken to give effect to some of the recommendations concerning the suppression of traffic in women and children contained in resolution 43 (IV), adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its fourth session:

¹¹⁴ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p.

¹¹⁵ Doc. E/TWC.1946-1947/Summary.

¹¹⁶ Doc. E/TOP.1946-1947/Summary.

(i) A report was prepared by the Secretariat concerning the establishment of a bureau in the Far East, and steps were taken to seek the views of the interested governments and organizations in order that a plan might be outlined for consideration by the Social Commission at its fourth session.

(ii) A revision of the League of Nations questionnaire on traffic in women and children, which forms the basis of the annual reports from governments on the traffic, was undertaken in the light of postwar developments.

(iii) The principal recommendations embodied in a comprehensive study undertaken by the League of Nations on the prevention of prostitution, completed in 1939, relating to the more direct measure of prevention of prostitution, were summarized and will be submitted to Member States for their comments with a view to utilization in the preparation of the comprehensive draft convention provided for by the Council in its resolution 155 (VII) E.I. (see above) and of the revised text of the questionnaire.

The Social Commission at its third session, on the proposal of the South African representative, had adopted a recommendation to governments to include in their public and voluntary social welfare services provisions for combatting prostitution, both from the angle of prevention and rehabilitation, and for taking other approved measures (E/779). In this connection the Council at its seventh session, at the 48th meeting of the Social Committee on July 27, heard a representative of WHO state what that Organization was doing on this matter. At its 198th plenary meeting the Council unanimously adopted resolution 115(VII)E.II, as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Recommends that, in anticipation of, and as a preparation for the conclusion of such convention as that referred to under I above,¹¹⁷ Member Governments be asked, where they have not already done so, to include or to encourage the inclusion in their public and voluntary social welfare services of provisions for combating the evil of prostitution both from the angle of prevention and rehabilitation, including free and confidential treatment for venereal disease in so far as medical care is not provided for otherwise; and, in so far as children and young persons are concerned, to consider the introduction of legislation, where such legislation does not already exist, which will empower the State to take re-educative and rehabilitative measures in regard to children and young persons who are in need of care and who threaten to become, or have already become, prostitutes."

f. STANDARDS OF LIVING

The Social Commission at its second session took cognizance of the preliminary note of the Secretary-General (E/CN.5/32) on the study of standards of living particularly in under-developed countries and areas, noted that a statement on certain aspects of the question would be submitted to its third session and stressed the importance of speeding up the preparation of this material. The Commission also suggested that the Secretariat pay special attention to studies carried out by the method of field survey, and particularly to material dealing with standards of living of the family unit compared with the standards of living of single persons (E/578, p. 25).

The question was discussed at the sixth session of the Economic and Social Council (126th and 127th plenary meetings on February 4, and 26th and 29th meetings of the Social Committee on February 11 and 17). In both the Commission's and the Council's discussions of the question, the U.S.S.R. representative suggested that a special study should be made of standards in colonies and dependent territories. Other representatives stated that Non-Self-Governing Territories, if they were under-developed, would be covered in any case and no special mention of them was called for. After some discussion the Council decided by 11 votes to 3, with 4 abstentions, that it was not necessary for the Council to adopt a special resolution on the subject.

The Social Commission at its third session considered the report of its Advisory Committee on Planning and Co-ordination. This report (E/CN.5/46) emphasized the indivisibility of the social and economic aspects of the problem of standards of living and found that, in view of the responsibilities of various United Nations bodies such as the Social, Economic and Employment, Population and Statistical Commissions and the Trusteeship Council in interdependent aspects of this problem, co-ordination in this respect appeared to be a matter for the Economic and Social Council.

The Commission recognized the close connection between a social policy aiming at the promotion of improved standards of living and economic planning for increased production. It requested the Secretary-General to report to the next session of the Social Commission regarding a comprehensive program of work in respect of equitable standards of living, both generally and with respect to under-developed areas and territories. It also pointed out the interests of specialized agencies and other United Nations organs in this field, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on establishment of methods of co-ordination in respect of work upon standards of living, directed as much as possible to practical considerations upon which Member Governments may profitably institute action (E/779). The question of standards of living was included in the work program of the Social Commission, as presented to the seventh session of the Council and approved in resolution 155(VII)B (see above).

g. SOCIAL PROBLEMS IN UNDER-DEVELOPED AREAS

The Social Commission at its second session discussed the special needs of under-developed areas in the field of social welfare. It recommended (E/578, p. 20) that the Economic and Social Council request the Secretariat in conjunction with the specialized agencies, and, where Trust Territories were concerned, with the concurrence of the Trusteeship Council, to initiate studies and reports on social and related problems in under-developed and economically under-privileged areas with a view to enabling both Councils to make recommendations on the question.

The Economic and Social Council discussed the question at its sixth session, in the general debate on the Social Commission's report at the 126th and 157th plenary meetings on February 6 and March 1, and at the 26th and 27th meetings of the Social Committee on February 11 and 16.

The U.S.S.R. representative had proposed in the Commission and again in the Council that a special study should be made of the conditions in colonies and Trust Territories. He submitted a draft resolution to that effect (E/AC.7/53). Other representatives, including those of the United Kingdom, France, the Netherlands and the United States, stated that Non-Self-Governing Territories, if under-developed, would automatically be included, and should not be singled out for special mention. A resolution was submitted by New Zealand (E/AC.7/52) to refer the matter back to the Social Commission requesting it to list the particular studies it wished to initiate. In order to avoid postponement of action on the question, a joint resolution was submitted by Chile, Lebanon and Venezuela (E/AC.7/59) requesting the Secretary-General to collect and disseminate information on social activities in connection with four questions which it stated were subjects of urgent priority. These were: social welfare administration, social services in relation to rural welfare, training of social welfare personnel, and child welfare including the prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

The joint draft resolution would also request the Secretary-General to ask Member Governments to advise him of any other social problems warranting special study. A redraft of the joint proposal (E/AC.7/SR.27), proposed by the United States to reconcile the text with the Commission's recommendations, was accepted by the movers of the joint resolution. It was approved by the Committee by 15 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, with drafting amendments introduced by France and Denmark and a Polish amendment (adopted by 6 votes to 2, with 7 abstentions) to replace the words "to initiate studies and reports" by the phrase "in order to initiate action to promote social amelioration to initiate immediate studies and to collect and disseminate information and reports". The Committee rejected the U.S.S.R. amendment (E/AC.7/53) by 14 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, and by the same vote rejected a Polish amendment to specify "Non-Self-Governing Territories" as well as Trust Territories.

At its 157th plenary meeting, the Council decided to delete a reference to "economically under-privileged areas" as being ambiguous, but rejected by 8 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions, a Chinese amendment to delete the reference to the prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency, submitted on the ground that not all under-developed areas had the same problems. A U.S.S.R. amendment to refer to Non-Self-Governing Territories was rejected by 13 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions.

The resolution (122(VI)C) adopted by the Council by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council

"Approving of the resolution on social problems in under-developed areas, contained in the report of the second session of the Social Commission,

"Requests the Secretary-General, in conjunction with the specialized agencies within their competence, and where Trust Territories are concerned, after consultation with and with the concurrence of the Trusteeship Council, in order to initiate action for the promotion of social amelioration, to initiate immediate studies and to collect and disseminate information and reports with respect to social welfare administration, social services in relation to rural welfare, training of social welfare personnel, child welfare including prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency in under-developed areas and territories, with a view to enabling both Councils to make such recommendations as may be within their respective jurisdictions to the General Assembly, to the Members of the United Nations and to the specialized agencies concerned, and

"Requests the Social Commission to advise the Secretary-General as to any other social problems which warrant special study and attention."

7. United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund

The General Assembly by resolution 57(I), adopted on December 11, 1946, established the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund for the benefit of children and adolescents of countries which were the victims of aggression or had been receiving help from UNRRA and for child health purposes generally.¹¹⁸

At its fourth session in March 1947, the Economic and Social Council decided that reports submitted by the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund should include an annual report and interim reports to each session of the Council in 1947 and 1948 (resolution 44(IV)).¹¹⁹

Accordingly, the Executive Board of the Fund submitted an interim report (E/459 and Add.1 and Corr.1) to the fifth session of the Council. The report reviewed the needs of children as reported from first-hand observations by the European Mission of the Children's Fund and by the senior consultant on nutrition of the European Regional Office of UNRRA in a statement on supplementary child-feeding programs. The report dealt with the question of contributions from governments, from UNRRA and from private sources. Contributions had been made by the United States, France, Canada and Australia, and statements on the amount of contributions were expected shortly from New Zealand and Norway. The initial plans of operation of the Fund were reported, indicating eligibility for assistance and the priorities to meet the most urgent needs, as well as allocations for the first six-months period of operation of the Fund. The proposed initial distribution of the Fund was calculated to provide approximately 200 calories per day to 3,250,000 children in eleven countries: Austria, Albania, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Hungary, China, France, Greece, Italy, Poland and Yugoslavia.¹²⁰ Formal agreements were to be made with countries receiving assistance from the Fund. A basic form of agreement (E/459, Annex IV) was submitted by the Executive Board to give effect to the principles for the operation of the Fund, adopted by the Economic and Social Council at its fourth session.

The basic form of agreement therefore contained provisions to ensure that all aid contributed by the Fund would be with the consent of and through the national government concerned. The government, or those voluntary agencies within the country mutually agreed upon between the Fund and the government, would act as trustees of supplies of the Fund, but title to these supplies would remain with UNICEF until their ultimate consumption. It also contained certain major policy provisions to govern distribution operations: "aid will be rendered without discrimination because of race, creed, nationality status, or political belief; International Children's Emergency Fund representatives will freely observe the distribution and use of the supplies of the Fund; supplies will bear the distinctive marking 'U.N. Children's Fund'; and complete and accurate records and accounts of supplies of the Fund and of child-aid activities in each country will be maintained" (E/459, p. 15).

The interim report also contained a provisional table of allocations approved by the Fund's Executive Board on June 19 (E/459, p. 13).¹²¹

The Economic and Social Council discussed the Fund's report at its 88th plenary meeting on July 22, 1947. The Council adopted without vote resolution 79(V), recording its appreciation of the work done by the Fund, and expressing the hope that governments and voluntary agencies would be able to contribute to the Fund as much as possible. It also drew the attention of the Fund to the views expressed by members of the Council.

Among the views expressed were the following. The French and Czechoslovak representatives expressed the hope that the work of revising the allocations would be undertaken shortly. The Byelorussian representative thought that the relations between governments and the Fund's Executive Board, in the draft agreement, should be carefully studied; the functions of missions sent by the Fund into different countries seemed too wide and encroached on the powers of governmental authorities; and installation of Fund offices would cause excessive expenditure on personnel. The Norwegian and Indian representatives emphasized the necessity of reducing administrative expenditures to a minimum.

At its sixth session, the Council had before it two reports of the Executive Board of the Fund covering the period from the end of the fifth ses-

¹¹⁹*Ibid.*, pp. 519-20.

¹²⁰Later, at a meeting of the Fund's Programme Committee, from August 18 to 23, 1947, the French representative stated that his Government had offered a reduction in the help offered to France, in the light of the tragic circumstances affecting children in certain other countries. He asked permission to re-submit the plan for France later (E/ICEF/23). France was included later in the plan of operations.

At the same meeting, the Committee recommended allotments for Bulgaria and Roumania (E/ICEF/23), which were approved, with an increased allocation for Roumania, by the Executive Board at its tenth to fifteenth meetings, held from October 2-7, 1947 (E/590).

sion of the Council to December 2, 1947 (E/590 and Corr.1 and Add.1), and the progress report by the Executive Director of the Fund covering the period from December 2, 1947, to February 12, 1948 (E/658). These reports showed that on December 2, 1947, the resources of the Fund, together with contributions or pledges from eight governments, amounted to $38,892,000, and on February 12, 1948, to $40,000,000, including $25,500,000 contributed or pledged by seventeen governments. They included accounts of the needs of the Fund, the ways in which its resources were being employed, the plans of operation submitted by various countries aiming at the provision of supplementary feeding for expectant and nursing mothers and undernourished children, the carrying out of a program of allocations for food and for medical aid to China and countries of the Far East, and measures of collaboration with other organs of the United Nations. The policy of the Fund was characterized as to "utilize and strengthen the permanent child health and child welfare programs of the countries receiving assistance".

The Council, in the light of these reports, at its 152nd plenary meeting on February 25, 1948, unanimously adopted resolution 126(VI) noting that a program of providing supplementary meals to about 3,715,000 children and expectant and nursing mothers was now in effective operations in twelve European countries, and that programs for China and other countries in the Far East were being developed; commending the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund for its concrete accomplishments on behalf of children; and drawing the attention of governments to the following facts:

1. That, with its present resources, the Fund was not able to satisfy more than a small portion of the urgent needs which it was created to meet;
2. That the Fund did not have sufficient resources to maintain its present limited program for a full twelve-months period;
3. That seventeen governments had pledged contributions; that the maintenance or enlargement of the activities of the Fund would depend upon further contributions and an extension of the number of contributing governments.

The resolution then renewed the invitation to all governments to examine the possibility of contributing to the Fund's resources in the near future.

The Executive Board of the Fund held one session in March 1948 (E/ICEF/56), and another in April 1948 (E/ICEF/59). The report of the first of these sessions was submitted to the third session of the Social Commission (April 3-23, 1948), which, in its report to the Council (E/779 and Add.1), commented on those parts of the Executive Board's report dealing with the programs of the Fund in the medical field and with co-operation between the Fund and the World Health Organization.

After a third session, held at Geneva in July, the Executive Board of the Fund submitted a comprehensive report to the seventh session of the Council (E/901).

The Council considered the report at its 207th plenary meeting on August 20, 1948, and heard a statement by the Chairman of the Executive Board of the Fund. Total contributions received or anticipated as of July 30, 1948, amounted to $85,200,000, of which $63,000,000 had come from 21 governments, $18,000,000 from the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, and $4,000,000 from the United Nations Appeal for Children and other private donations. Of this, $64,200,000 had been allocated for expenditure in 1948, and in the anticipation of further contributions, $32,000,000 has been allocated for 1949 programs. In the expectation of further contributions, the Board established in the report a target rate of expenditure for 1949 based on a budget of $78,000,000. This was calculated to include $42,000,000 for programs in Europe, $12,000,000 for China, $4,100,000 for South Asia, and $1,100,000 for programs in India, Pakistan and Ceylon. This estimate included assistance for Germany to the amount of $1,000,000 for a four-months cod-liver oil and clothing program. For the anti-tuberculosis campaign in Europe, North Africa and the Far East, and for training programs, a total expenditure of $5,000,000 was envisaged. The remaining $13,800,000 was calculated to include $8,500,000 for shipping costs and administration, leaving an unallocated reserve of $5,300,000.

The Board pointed out that in making its allocations it had considered detailed information on children's needs in each of the UNICEF receiving countries as well as over-all data relating to population, birth rates, infant mortality rates, fats and oil production and on livestock, estimated caloric intake, supplies of major foodstuffs per person, and postwar imports, relief assistance and loans and credits of various European countries. The Board has also had reports from two survey missions sent out to the Far East (other than China) and to Germany.

The Board stated that it assumed it to be well known that the relief needs of children were still large, and far beyond the resources of the Fund. The report stated that increased resources could be used to meet immediate needs, not only quickly but also without waste and in a practical and effective way, and that the Board would be anxious to extend during 1949 the programs on which the $78,000,000 budget of operations was based, and that most of these programs had been reduced in order to be attainable within resources of $78,000,000.

The report also stated that a further matching contribution of $25,000,000 from the United States had been authorized but not appropriated. If it became available, and other governments contributed the necessary $9,000,000 to enable it to be drawn, the resulting $34,000,000 contributions would raise the Fund's total 1949 resources to $112,000,000.

The report surveyed the UNICEF program by the following geographical areas: Europe; China; South-East Asia, India, Pakistan and Ceylon; Asia and the Far East (other than China); Latin America; North Africa.

In the section on Europe, the report stated that there appeared to be sufficient powdered milk to assure continuation of the UNICEF milk supply program at current levels through June 1949, at which time supplies should be available, but that the current milk shortage did not permit plans to increase the number of children receiving dried milk through the first half of 1949. Following a recommendation from the Conference on Increasing Indigenous Milk Supplies for the Benefit of Children held in Paris from May 31 to June 2, 1948 (E/ICEF/66), which was attended by technical experts from twelve countries and representatives of FAO, the Board had allocated $2,000,000 for the purchase of machinery for the production of powdered milk and of dairy plant equipment as a means of increasing the safe supply of milk. On the basis of the report of the survey team, a plan of operations was being worked out for Germany. The Board had also allocated $2,000,000 for summer camps or measures to provide special help to the most seriously undernourished children. In the section on South East Asia, the report stated that on the recommendation of the Survey Team to the Far East (E/ICEF/72), $300,000 had been allocated for regional malaria control demonstrations in Asia and the Far East other than China.

On the initiative of the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood, arrangements had been made for three Uruguayan specialists to study anti-tuberculosis vaccination in Denmark. On the initiative of the Montevideo Institute it had been arranged that Dr. Passmore, a nutritionist from Edinburgh University, would spend some months in Latin America studying and giving advice on nutritional problems in that region.

The report contained a special section on medical projects. The Anti-Tuberculosis Program carried on as a Joint Enterprise with the Danish Red Cross and its Scandinavian Associates was, with the inclusion of China, Algeria, Morocco and Tunisia, to be carried on in fifteen countries. It had also been decided to assist countries which had programs for combating syphilis in children, adolescents and expectant mothers. The French and Swiss Governments had organized special training courses for senior pediatricians, social workers and nurses.

Following a recommendation from the World Health Organization a joint UNICEF/WHO Committee on Health Policy had been created, composed of four representatives for each organization. This Committee was charged with regulating all health programs of the Fund.

The Chairman of the Executive Board pointed out in his statement to the Council that the Fund had reached only six per cent of the eligible children in Europe and an infinitely smaller proportion in China.

He reported to the Council that an urgent request had been received from the United Nations Mediator in Palestine for assistance to refugees from the combat areas on both sides. The Executive Board had met immediately, and had decided to allocate a sum not exceeding $411,000 over a period of two months.

At the Council's 207th plenary meeting, satisfaction with the work of the Fund was expressed by the representatives of Australia, the United States, New Zealand, Lebanon, Poland and France. Representatives also stressed the magnitude of the work to be done, and welcomed the arrangements for collaboration made by the Fund with the World Health Organization. The Lebanese representative expressed the hope that it would be possible in time for the Fund to extend its activities to a large number of under-developed countries. The Polish representative stressed the continuing difficulties of milk supplies in devastated countries.

The Council, by 14 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, adopted resolution 161 (VII), which had been proposed by Australia and amended by New Zealand. The resolution reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having in mind that the report of the Executive Board of the International Children's Emergency Fund shows that there exist practical and effective means of bringing relief to the continuing needs of children, if additional contributions are received, and that even these resources would meet the needs of only a small fraction of those eligible for assistance from the Fund,

"Expresses its satisfaction that twenty-one States thus far have contributed to the Fund, some of them having already made second contributions;

"Approves the report of the Executive Board and transmits it to the General Assembly, drawing particular attention to the Board's request concerning the urgent necessity for contributions from Governments of twenty million dollars for the work of the Fund in 1949;

"Notes with approval the arrangements for co-operation which have been achieved between the World Health Organization and the International Children's Emergency Fund."

8. United Nations Appeal for Children

The Economic and Social Council at its fourth session, on March 29, 1947, adopted resolution 45 (IV), which, inter alia, approved in principle the proposal for

"a special world-wide appeal for non-governmental voluntary contributions to meet emergency relief needs of children, adolescents, expectant and nursing mothers, without discrimination because of race, creed, nationality status, or political belief, by way of a 'One Day's Pay' collection or some alternative form of collection better adapted to each particular country."¹²²

The Council requested the Secretary-General to continue his exploration of the most suitable procedures for developing the plan and also to make the necessary arrangements. It authorized him to fix a date for the appeal and requested him to report to the next session of the Council.

Accordingly, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the fifth session of the Council (E/464) on the progress made in the organization of the appeal and the program laid down. The report showed that consultations with international non-governmental bodies, with representatives of Members and with voluntary agencies were continued and an organizational pattern for the world-wide appeal was developed. The projected pattern included an international voluntary committee, with "representatives from a broad group of international non-governmental organizations, important religious groups, and a number of eminent individuals to serve as members", and national voluntary committees in each participating country. The rudiments of a headquarters organization had been brought into being. Consultations had been held with all the non-governmental organizations in category A and a number of other international non-governmental organizations had been kept informed of progress. A number of resolutions had been passed by international congresses of such organizations endorsing the objectives of the appeal. These included the World Federation of Trade Unions, the International Co-operative Alliance, the International Organization of Journalists and the World Organization of the Teaching Profession. In addition, the Secretary-General reported that there was growing evidence of interest and support among the general public. The Secretary-General also submitted to the fifth session of the Council a special memorandum (E/464/Add.1) on the division of work between the Appeal and the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund.

The Secretary-General proposed that in view of the months of preparation required, the collection should take place in 1948 rather than in 1947.

a. PRINCIPLES ADOPTED AT THE FIFTH SESSION

The Council discussed the question at its 89th, 106th, 109th and 117th plenary meetings on July 22 and August 5, 8 and 14. The matter was also discussed by a drafting committee of the Council composed of representatives of Canada, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia and New Zealand. Representatives of France, India and the United States attended certain of the drafting committee's meetings, and its meeting on August 1 was also attended by the Acting Chairman of UNICEF and representatives of the following category A organizations: American Federation of Labor, International Co-operative Alliance, International Federation of Christian Trade Unions and World Federation of Trade Unions.

Various representatives, including those of the United Kingdom, United States, Canada, and India, expressed concern lest the international committee should prove too expensive and unwieldy, and the question was discussed at some length by the drafting committee, to which it was referred by the Council. The original report of the drafting committee (E/516) for an international advisory committee of eleven members appointed by the Secretary-General was revised to take account of a United States proposal (E/519) for a committee composed of representatives of National Committees and the non-governmental organizations in category A, with an independent chairman appointed by the Secretary-General. The revised report of the drafting committee (E/516/Rev.1), which, with the exception of the provisions concerning the international committee, gave general approval to the program contained in the Secretary-General's report (E/464), was approved (resolution 80 (V)) unanimously by the Council at its 109th meeting on August 8. The U.S.S.R. and Indian representatives abstained from voting because they felt that in view of the needs of their own children they would be unable to participate in the Appeal.

The resolution adopted by the Council (80(V)) took note of the Secretary-General's report, approved the program for the prosecution of the Appeal, as amended, and decided to set up a special committee of seven of its members to assist the Secretary-General between sessions of the Council in the practical application of the policies relating to the Appeal set forth in the Council's resolutions. It welcomed the support of the Appeal already pledged by important non-governmental organizations and urged the fullest participation by all peoples in this world-wide effort.

The program approved by the Council included the following points:

The Appeal should be a special world-wide campaign for non-governmental voluntary contributions, and was an appeal to all sections of the population and not to wage-earners only. It was to be called "United Nations Appeal for Children". This term was to cover the whole enterprise, and wherever the Appeal was linked with appeals for other purposes, the Secretary-General was to take steps to ensure that its international character was given due prominence. World-wide participation in the Appeal was agreed to be of the utmost importance. Countries which considered that their own needs were too great to enable them to contribute to others, should be encouraged to participate, and could respond by raising funds which would in fact, to the extent agreed with the Secretary-General, be used for their own children.

The actual fund-raising was to be undertaken through National Committees. The United Nations Appeal for Children would not lay down rules as to the composition of these Committees or the manner in which their members were to be selected. However, since it was an appeal for non-governmental contributions, the National Committees should be composed of volunteers. It was assumed that they would include representatives of all the leading organizations in the country which could be helpful in prosecuting the Appeal. The appointment of individuals associated with government was not, however, precluded, and it was, in fact, recognized that governments would have an important part to play in facilitating the implementation of the Appeal in each country. The functions of the National Committees were to be:

"(i) To decide the method and machinery for the Appeal in their countries, within the limits of the common basic principles established by the international committee.

"(ii) To adapt the 'One Day's Pay' principle to conditions in their countries.

"(iii) To enter into agreement with the Secretary-General, particularly as regards the disposal of the funds collected by the committee.

"(iv) To put the Appeal into effect according to the agreements with the Secretary-General."

As regards the timing of the Appeal it was agreed that a fairly broad period might be set, within which each country could select the most suitable time for its campaign, but that the Secretary-General should consider selecting a central date in the early part of 1948 to symbolize the world-wide nature of the Appeal.

The Secretary-General would consult with each government on the question of whether the agreement referred to in the Council's resolution 45-(IV) of March 29 should be concluded with that government or with the National Committee in the country or with both jointly. The agreements were to cover the purchase of supplies within the country for use elsewhere and the disposal of the proceeds of the Appeal. On the latter point, it was emphasized that care should be taken to ensure that any appeals with which the United Nations Appeal for Children might be linked in any country should be consistent with the general purposes and objectives of the Appeal and that in principle the major part, at any rate, of the amounts raised by the National Committees should go to the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund or be distributed in agreement with the Fund.

As regards the question of an international committee, it was felt that the objectives of publicity and prestige could be met "if the Secretary-General were to invite distinguished individuals representing various racial, religious, cultural and geographical groups to give inspiration and support to the Appeal". For more direct participation in the work of the Appeal and to advise the Secretary-General, the Council decided to establish two committees. The first, an International Advisory Committee, was to consist of the Chairman, or one other member, of each of the non-governmental organizations in category A willing to take an active part in the campaign. The Secretary-General was to appoint an independent chairman and might appoint up to three additional members so as to ensure its representative character. The expenses of those members of the Committee appointed by National Committees and non-governmental organizations were not to be borne by the United Nations. The functions of the International Advisory Committee was to help in the co-ordination of the world-wide campaign and to advise the Secretary-General on matters falling within his responsibility.

The second body was to be a committee set up by the Council composed of seven of its members, to assist the Secretary-General between sessions of the Council in the practical application of the policies laid down in the Council's resolution. At its 117th meeting on August 14 the Council elected as members of this committee Canada, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, France, New Zealand and the United States.

While the United Nations Appeal for Children was considered mainly as an appeal for private contributions in aid of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, it was to be conceived also as United Nations sponsorship of contributions in favor of all effective non-governmental efforts on behalf of child relief. If there were to be beneficiaries other than UNICEF, the agreements entered into by the Secretary-General with each country concerning the disposal of national collections should deal with the proportion of the proceeds of the collection going to the Fund. Fund-raising activities and the publicity for this purpose would be the responsibility of the Appeal, and the Fund would complement this by continuing to produce information and reports of work in the field.

Under the Director of the United Nations Appeal for Children, the paid staff would be part of the office of the Secretary-General. It would be kept as small as possible and maximum use would be made of other departments of the United Nations. A few highly qualified regional specialists would be appointed to assist National Committees and maintain liaison with them, and certain special representatives would be appointed to maintain liaison with various specialized groups and organizations. The help of individual specialists from outside the United Nations would be called on as required to deal with particular problems.

b. CONSIDERATION AT THE SIXTH SESSION

At its sixth session the Economic and Social Council had before it reports from the Special Committee of the Council on UNAC (E/629 and Corr.1) and from the Secretary-General (E/643). The Special Committee had held four meetings, on December 17 and 22, 1947, and on January 14 and 23, 1948. In its report the Committee emphasized two questions with which it had dealt. The first was how far UNAC was justified in emphasizing that it was for the benefit of all underprivileged children as against meeting the emergency relief needs of children. The Committee agreed that the efforts of UNAC should be concentrated as far as possible towards assisting UNICEF in amassing the greatest resources possible and that the emergency character of the Appeal should be stressed. The second question was how far the Secretary-General should permit appeals "under the aegis and title of the United Nations" in which none or only a token share of the proceeds would go to UNICEF and if such appeals were permitted, what conditions and safeguards should be required. The Committee established the following principles as a guide to the Secretary-General:

"1. The collection in the name of the UNAC should be made only in agreement between the Secretary-General and the government or the national committee or both.

"2. The Secretary-General should attempt to ensure that in principle a major part of the amounts raised by the national committees which use the United Nations title should go to the ICEF or be distributed in agreement with the Fund.

"3. To the extent that this is impossible, and taking into consideration the useful effect of such a drive or such a campaign on the promotion of the welfare of children, the Secretary-General should be satisfied that funds will be distributed without discrimination in accordance with the purposes and objectives of the UNAC as stated in the various United Nations documents with particular emphasis on those stated in the General Assembly Resolution 57 I (1), a, b, and c."¹²³

A resolution had been passed at the UNESCO General Conference at Mexico City in 1947, which requested members to avoid duplication between UNAC and the UNESCO appeal for reconstruction needs and recommended that wherever possible there should be joint national appeals, the proceeds of which would be divided proportionately between UNICEF and UNESCO. The Committee, while recognizing that duplication should be avoided, also felt that any action should be avoided which might divert resources from the purpose of meeting the critical food and health situation of millions of children.

In his progress report the Secretary-General stated that he had received communications officially announcing the formation of National Committees from fifteen countries as follows:

"(1) . . . Belgium, Bolivia, Canada, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Finland, Greece, Honduras, Iceland, New Zealand, Norway, the Philippines, San Marino and the United States. Only three such communications had been received up to the end of December 1947.

"(2) The Secretary-General has been advised by the United Nations regional representatives that national committees have been formally constituted in six additional countries, namely: Chile, Hungary, Italy, Liechtenstein, Turkey and the United Kingdom.

"(3) Practical steps have been taken, and progress is being made, toward the formation of national committees in twenty-three other countries, as follows: Afghanistan, Australia, Austria, China, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, France, Guatemala, India, Luxembourg, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay and Venezuela."

Five agreements had been negotiated or were in the final stage of negotiation with the United Kingdom, the Philippines, the United States, Finland and Switzerland. The campaigns would be launched from February to June 1948 and the Secretary-General had selected February 29, 1948, to be United Nations Appeal for Children Day throughout the world. A regional meeting was being held in Geneva on February 17 and 18 under the auspices of the International Advisory Committee attended by representatives of National Committees and observers from governments of European countries, representatives of category A organizations and observers from a large number of other non-governmental organizations supporting the Appeal.

The matter was discussed by the Council at its 152nd and 153rd plenary meetings on February 25 and 26. Supplementing the Secretary-General's report, the Director of the Central Office of UNAC announced that 32 National Committees had been formed and that the regional conference at Geneva had adopted resolutions pledging full co-operation with the Appeal.

The Council at its 153rd plenary meeting adopted by 16 votes, with 2 abstentions, resolution (127(VI)), in which it noted the encouraging response already given to the United Nations Appeal for Children, urged that governments which had not already done so should make arrangements for participating in the Appeal and for observing February 29, 1948, as UNAC Day and requested the Secretary-General to continue to furnish assistance in the prosecution of the Appeal, bearing in mind the necessity of reducing the headquarters staff by progressive steps.

The Secretary-General's report (E/861) to the seventh session of the Council noted national campaigns in 52 countries, as well as a large number of Non-Self-Governing Territories, and indicated that additional countries were contemplating campaigns. The Appeal, it was observed, had had the strong support of non-governmental organizations and the enthusiastic co-operation of individual men and women throughout the world. The role of governments had, in the main, been confined to paving the way for voluntary efforts and to the granting of facilities to the National Committees. The voluntary nature of the Appeal had thus been ensured.

The desirability of concentrating the Appeal within as short a period as possible had constantly been borne in mind, but practical considerations had made it necessary to extend the campaign period. In eight countries campaigns were launched between February 1, 1948, and UNAC Day, February 29, 1948. In 26 other countries, campaigns had been launched between March 1, 1948, and July 21, 1948. In eighteen others, campaigns were being started in the near future. It was expected that all campaigns would be terminated by the end of November 1948.

In conformity with the directions of the Council, it had constantly been urged that the major part of the proceeds should be allocated to, or distributed in agreement with, the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund. All agreements concluded by the Secretary-General with National Committees included a clause pledging distribution of proceeds without discrimination as to "race, creed, nationality status, or political belief".

A final summary of the financial results of the Appeal was not yet possible at the time of the seventh session of the Council, since a majority of campaigns were still under way and some had not yet been begun. But final results were available for seven countries and preliminary returns for seventeen others. Three indicated a collection in various national currencies amounting to the equivalent of 16.5 million U.S. dollars at the official rate of exchange. Considerably more than half of this amount was being directly allocated to UNICEF for foreign relief, to UNICEF for domestic relief, or to national agencies for foreign relief in agreement with UNICEF. Twenty-eight countries, including some of the largest, had still to report.

The headquarters and regional staffs were being reduced to half-a-dozen officers and a few clerical staff members by the end of August.

The Special Committee of the Council on UNAC submitted a report to the seventh session of the Council (E/825), summarizing the action taken with regard to the practical application of the Council's policy. This summary was amplified by a statement by the Chairman of the Committee. Between the sixth and seventh sessions, the Committee held three meetings. Among the matters on which it had advised the Secretary-General were the following: that collections in the name of UNAC should be made only in agreement with the Secretary-General and/or the government and National Committee concerned; that the Secretary-General should attempt to ensure in principle that the major parts of the amounts raised should go to UNICEF and that, where this was impossible, the Secretary-General should be satisfied that funds would be distributed without discrimination.

The Committee, furthermore, at the request of the Secretary-General, indicated a certain number of criteria to which such private agencies as expend proceeds of national campaigns not under any agreement with UNICEF should conform. It advised the Secretary-General to arrange for obtaining from the National Committees detailed information on these agencies.

The Council discussed the two reports at its 189th and 197th plenary meetings on August 3 and 12, with particular reference to the advisability of continuing the Appeal during 1949. Two resolutions, both of which bore on this subject, were proposed: the first, submitted by New Zealand (E/904), envisaged the winding up of the existing Appeal organization at the end of 1948, while leaving open the question of any future United Nations action until a full report on the results of the existing Appeal were available; the second, submitted by Australia (E/953), envisaged an immediate decision by the Council that the Appeal should be repeated during 1949 and requested the Secretary-General to provide the necessary facilities. A New Zealand revised resolution (E/904/Rev.1 and Corr.1), designed to meet as far as possible the Australian point of view, by providing that National Committees in agreement with the Secretary-General could conduct fund-raising campaigns on behalf of children under the name of "United Nations Appeal for Children", providing for the continuation of the Advisory Committee and requesting the Secretary-General to maintain facilities after 1948 for maintaining liaison and negotiating agreements with National Committees and reporting on the results of national campaigns, was withdrawn in view of the lack of support for it.

In the course of the discussion general appreciation was expressed of the work which had been accomplished and of the importance of the Appeal in the general framework of the United Nations' activities and as a contribution to world solidarity. It was also generally recognized that the needs of the children were still great. Several representatives indicated that renewed campaigns were contemplated in their respective countries. The desirability of linking UNAC more closely to UNICEF was also stressed by several representatives.

The representatives of Australia, Netherlands,

Peru and Poland thought that the central role played by the United Nations in organizing the worldwide Appeal should be continued. In this connection reference was made to resolutions of ILO and WHO and also of non-governmental organizations that UNAC should be continued (E/862/Rev.1).

The representative of Chile thought that a common formula could be found to preserve the Appeal's international significance, keep in sight the world as a whole and keep administrative expenses as low as possible bearing in mind the need for implementing the plan. The representative of Poland thought it would be sufficient to give two directives to the Secretariat, one stressing the need for economy and the other the need for administrative simplicity. On the other hand, the representatives of New Zealand, Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States expressed the view that while it would still be necessary to raise funds, the groundwork having been laid, the responsibility for organizing national campaigns should be left to the individual countries.

The representatives of Denmark and France stressed the need for considering the problem as a whole in the light of all the necessary information before deciding whether the Appeal should be terminated or continued. The Danish representative stressed the importance of the needs of the children, and the French representative stated that the results of the campaign should be compared with those of similar campaigns so that full consideration could be given to the question of present costs.

The New Zealand draft resolution was adopted by the Council at its 197th plenary meeting by 8 votes to 7, with 3 abstentions. The Australian representative protested that no part of his draft resolution had been voted on and requested that since certain representatives had not interpreted the New Zealand resolution as excluding the continuation of the Appeal during 1949, he should be allowed to move as a separate resolution the relevant paragraphs of his resolution. The Chairman, however, stated that he interpreted the adoption of the New Zealand resolution as excluding the principle of continuing the United Nations Appeal for Children, and ruled that the procedure suggested was out of order.

The resolution adopted by the Council (162-(VII)) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the report of its Special Committee on the United Nations Appeal for Children and the Secretary-General's report on the closing stages of the Appeal,

"Noting with gratification the widespread nature of the response to the Appeal, the large number of countries which have co-operated in the establishment of national committees for this purpose and the close co-operation and support for the Appeal by non-governmental organizations in every country,

"Noting further that, in a number of countries, the national committees and the Governments concerned are continuing the Appeal,

"Invites the co-operation of Governments in giving every possible encouragement and assistance to national committees which are continuing to engage in activities concerning the Appeal;

"Draws the attention of Governments and national committees to the desirability of continuing the policy contained in General Assembly and Council decisions of recognizing the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund as the main recipient of the proceeds of national appeals;

"Requests the Secretary-General:

"1. To provide for a continuation of present administrative arrangements for a further period not to extend beyond 31 December 1948, for the purpose of completing and finally reporting on the results of the Appeal;

"2. To consult with the Special Committee of the Council on policy aspects concerning the completion of the Appeal;

"3. To report to the eighth session of the Council on the financial results of the Appeal, the distribution of the proceeds by the various recipient agencies (inter-governmental and private), the distribution within the recipient countries, the groups receiving assistance and the type and amount of assistance received."

In a letter dated August 20, 1948 (E/AC.22/2), the Chairman of the Special Committee reported that the Committee had held two meetings on August 17 and 18, in which it had considered the resolution (162(VII)) adopted by the Economic and Social Council on August 12, a report (E/AC.22/1) from the Secretariat on unfinished business and a note (E/904/Rev.1/Add.1) from the Secretariat on Financial Implications of Council Action with respect to UNAC. He stated that the Committee, among other things, had expressed concern that agreements still had to be signed with at least 27 existing National Committees and with a number of National Committees which might be formed. It had noted some campaigns had been completed without agreements having been signed with the Secretary-General concerning the disposal of the proceeds and thought that such agreements should be concluded as soon as possible. The Committee had agreed that there should be no further promotional work concerning the Appeal, that the latest date for the completion of the campaign should be November 30, 1948, and that for the recognition of National Committees, September 15. Agreements with countries which had not yet formed National Committees should be signed as far as practicable by October 15, 1948. The Committee reaffirmed the policy laid down by the Council that the major part of the proceeds of the campaigns should be allotted to UNICEF or distributed in conjunction with UNICEF. It was also agreed that those committees which were still proceeding with or had not yet begun their campaigns should receive UNAC publicity material and that all other publicity should be rapidly tapered off.

9. Narcotic Drugs

The second session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs was held from July 24 to August 8, 1947. An urgent recommendation of the Commission concerning the drafting of a new international instrument for the control of synthetic drugs (E/529/Add.1) was considered by the Council at its fifth session, at its 115th plenary meeting on August 25 (see below). The report of the session as a whole (E/575) was considered by the Council at its sixth session, at its 130th, 131st and 159th plenary meetings on February 6 and March 2 and at the 35th and 36th meetings of its Social Committee on February 20 and 21.

The third session of the Commission was held from May 3 to 22, 1948, and its report (E/799 and Add. 1 and 2, and Corr.1) was considered by the Council at its 189th and 193rd plenary meetings on August 3 and 10, 1948, and by its Social Committee at its 43rd to 46th, 50th, 54th and 55th meetings on July 22 to 24, 26, 29 and August 4 and 5, 1948.

The questions dealt with by the Commission and the Council are reviewed below.

a. APPLICATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS AND CONVENTIONS

(1) Re-establishment and Improvement of the International Control of Narcotic Drugs

At its second session the Commission examined the annual reports received from governments, not only for 1946, but for earlier years, including 1942 to 1945. The Commission noted that a number of governments, some of which were no doubt still suffering from wartime difficulties, had not submitted their annual reports in accordance with their obligations under the Conventions; for example, for the calendar year 1945 only 28 reports had been received from countries and 38 territories, slightly more than one third of the possible total of 180. The Commission decided to ask the Council to remind of their treaty obligations those governments which had not submitted reports.

At its 159th plenary meeting on March 2 the Council, by 14 votes to 0, adopted resolution 123(VI)A, in which it reiterated its appeal to governments to submit their annual reports regularly in accordance with the form drawn up and adopted by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. Although this appeal, which was communicated to governments on March 27, 1948, had not had time to bear fruit, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in the report of its third session (E/799) noted that although the situation was not yet completely satisfactory there had been some improvement in the number of annual reports rendered. By that time, a total of 72 reports for 1945 and 94 reports for 1946 had been received.

At its second session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs reconsidered the question of the control of narcotic drugs in Japan and Germany. As a result of an approach made by the Secretary-General in pursuance of the Commission's recommendations, annual reports for 1945 and 1946 were submitted by the Occupying Authorities in respect of Japan. As regards Germany, the Secretary-General received reports on the position in the British Zone in the years 1945 and 1946 and on the position in the four zones in respect of the latter year. These reports were studied by the Commission.

(2) Illicit Traffic

The Commission also carefully examined the summaries of seizure reports received from various governments and decided on a simplified procedure for the circulation of these reports. While studying the trends of the illicit traffic, the Commission heard a number of statements on the situation in various countries. It was noted in particular that in some areas narcotic drugs, forming part of surplus army stores, had escaped into the illicit traffic. In this connection, the Commission recalled that, in 1939, drugs which could be traced back to army stocks left over from the First World War were still being found in the illicit traffic. This had led to a serious increase in drug addiction between the two world wars, and the Commission was therefore anxious to avoid a repetition of this situation by ensuring the earliest possible resumption of an effective national and international control of narcotic drugs, especially in countries affected by the last war.

It pointed out that the provisions on import certificates and export authorizations, as contained in the 1925 Convention, had not been respected in certain transfers from one country to another of narcotic drugs originating from surplus military stores.

At its 159th plenary meeting on March 2, 1948, the Council by 16 votes to 0 adopted a resolution

(123(VI)B) requesting the Secretary-General to invite governments to draw the attention of the competent authorities

"to the importance of observing the provisions of the Geneva Convention of 1925 in regard to the issuance of import and export certificates to cover narcotic drugs contained in surplus military stores which are transferred from one country to another," and approving the Commission's recommendation that narcotic drugs not covered by import and export certificates which come to light from such sources should be treated as seizures of illicit traffic.

The Commission at its third session noted with concern that, of 94 countries which had acknowledged in their annual reports under the 1931 Convention, the existence of illicit traffic only seventeen had submitted special reports during 1946 and 1947 on the illicit traffic. It reported to the seventh session of the Council that the illicit traffic in narcotics appeared to be developing on the dangerous lines of the prewar years and recommended that the Council adopt a resolution to strengthen the system of reports on the illicit traffic. The Council unanimously adopted at its 189th plenary meeting on August 3, 1948, resolution 159(VII)IIA recommending "to all states parties to the 1931 Convention to pay particular attention to all the provisions of article 23 of the Convention and to the relevant recommendations of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in submitting the reports on the illicit traffic . . ." and requesting the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of all parties to the international conventions on narcotics the chapter of the Commission's report dealing with the illicit traffic.

In the course of its study of the illicit traffic at its second session, the Commission's attention was drawn to the clandestine production of opium in Mexico and its smuggling abroad. The Commission recommended the Council to study suitable means which might be taken to remedy the situation. At its sixth session the Council heard the representative of Mexico, who had been invited to participate in its deliberations on that matter in conformity with Article 69 of the Charter; he explained the measures taken in Mexico with respect to the illicit cultivation of the raw materials for, and the traffic in, narcotic drugs. After taking note of the statement made by the Mexican representative, who undertook to send a full account of such measures as part of the annual report communicated under the provisions of the 1931 Convention, the Council requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to study the Mexican report in the light of the discussions in the Council. As the Government of Mexico submitted its annual report in respect of 1946 (E/NR.1947/1) before the third session of the Commission, the Commission was able at that session to study the problem fully. The Chairman of the Commission, in summing up the discussion, gave expression to the Commission's general satisfaction with the measures taken by the Government of Mexico and to the hope that in 1949 successful results of the measures adopted would become apparent. That statement was inserted in the Commission's report on its third session (E/799), which was noted by the Council.

(3) Methods of Determining the Origin of Opium Seizures

The Commission examined at its third session a report submitted by the representative of the United States on methods of determining the origin of opium by chemical and physical means (E/CN.7/117). Since these methods would be of assistance in establishing the sources of illicit traffic, the Council, on the Commission's recommendation at its 189th plenary meeting on August 3, 1948, unanimously adopted resolution 159(VII)IIC in which it decided:

"1. To instruct the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments all available documentation on this matter;

"2. To invite Governments to send to the Secretary-General all pertinent information in their possession and, in particular, those Governments which have the necessary experts and laboratory facilities, to inform the Secretary-General whether they are willing to participate in a joint programme of research and to submit proposals concerning the methods of co-operation which they may recommend;

"3. To invite the Governments of the producing countries to furnish, subject to the provisions of chapter V of the Geneva Convention of 1925, samples of the opium produced in their countries, on the request of the Governments which are participating in the joint research programme".

At the same meeting the Council unanimously decided (resolution 159(VII)III) to refer to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs a communication from the World Health Organization (E/799/Add.1) in which it expressed its wish to be associated with research work on methods of determining the origin of opium.

(4) Digest of Laws and Regulations

At its fourth session the Economic and Social Council in resolution 49(IV) approved the decision of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its first session to initiate the preparation of a digest of laws giving an analytical survey of national legislation in countries parties to the Conventions with a view to ascertaining if the legislation on narcotic drugs was in accordance with the Conventions.¹²⁴

The Commission at its second session approved a plan of study (E/399) to be undertaken by the Secretariat in pursuance of this resolution. One of the first steps would be to request governments to forward information concerning laws and regulations in force with a view to completing the material at the disposal of the Secretariat. The Commission thought it would be useful to be able to determine whether and how far international treaties on narcotics were self-executory or needed implementing legislation according to the provisions of the national constitutions.

At its third session the Commission considered the Summary of Laws and Regulations prepared by the Secretariat (E/CN.7/118), which was based on information communicated to the Secretary-General between June 30, 1946, and March 15, 1948, and referred to 121 laws and regulations enacted in 49 states and territories. The Summary was approved by the Commission. It was thought that it would be useful if certain basic information could be included, without which much of the significance of the particular laws and regulations was lost, and it was suggested that the gist of the laws and regulations to which reference was made should be given.

b. TRANSFER OF THE FUNCTIONS OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Protocol of December 11, 1946

All the amendments made to international agreements, conventions and protocols on narcotic drugs by the Protocol of December 11, 1946 came into force during the concluding months of 1947 and the early months of 1948. As of August 15, 1948, the following 42 countries were parties to the Protocol: Afghanistan, Albania, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Byelorussian S.S.R., Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Czechoslovakia, Dominican Republic, Finland, France, Honduras, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Lebanon, Liechtenstein, Mexico, Monaco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Siam, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria, Turkey, Ukrainian S.S.R., Union of South Africa, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States and Yugoslavia.

c. NEW INTERNATIONAL DRAFT CONVENTIONS

Draft Protocol to Bring under Control Drugs outside the Scope of the 1931 Convention

At its second session the Commission considered the development of new synthetic drugs of a habit-forming character which were within the scope of the existing conventions. Considering this to be a matter of urgency, the Commission put forward a recommendation to the Council at its fifth session, which was being held concurrently, that a new international instrument should be drafted and circulated to governments as soon as possible for their early observations. The proposed instrument would apply to these new drugs the full international control of the 1931 Convention. The Commission concluded that unless effective measures on those lines were taken as rapidly as possible, the satisfactory results so far attained in the campaign against drug addiction might be seriously jeopardized.

The Council at its fifth session, at its 115th plenary meeting on August 25, studied the Commission's recommendation for a new international instrument for the control of these drugs. It adopted without objection a resolution submitted by the Secretary-General to give effect to the Commission's recommendations (E/529/Add.1) with amendments suggested by the United Kingdom representative. In this resolution (86(V)) the Council instructed the Secretary-General to draft a protocol and to circulate it to all governments concerned and to the Interim Commission of the World Health Organization for their observations. The Commission on Narcotic Drugs was to consider these observations at its third session and submit them to the Council at the latter's seventh session with a view to the protocol's being brought into force at the earliest possible moment.

A draft Protocol was accordingly prepared by the Secretariat and was considered together with the various observations of governments by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its third session. The Commission submitted a revised text (E/798) to the Council at its seventh session.

The Commission's report and the draft Protocol (E/798 and E/799) were considered by the Council's Social Committee at its 43rd to 45th meetings on July 22 to 24 and by the Council at its 189th plenary meeting on August 3, 1948. Amendments to various articles were adopted by the Committee. The main point of difference in the Social Committee concerned the draft of Article 8, which would have permitted a state to declare at the time of signature or acceptance that the Protocol would not apply to a dependent territory. The U.S.S.R. representative, supported by the Polish representative, thought that the article should be omitted since its inclusion would create conditions allowing the uncontrolled use of narcotics, particularly in those countries where their unlawful use was most widespread. He proposed the deletion of the article.

The United Kingdom, French and Netherlands representatives, on the other hand, felt that the inclusion of the draft article would hasten the entry into force of the Protocol since administering countries could accept it without waiting for the consent of dependent territories, in cases where such consent was constitutionally necessary. The Chinese and United States representatives thought that the inclusion of the article should not be considered as a precedent, and that it should be placed on record that there was a moral obligation on all countries to sign the Protocol as soon as possible.

A redraft of Article 8 (E/AC.7/W.26) was submitted by the representatives of China, France, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States, which would enable a state with colonial possessions to declare, at the time of signature or acceptance or later, that the Protocol shall be extended to any particular territory for the foreign relations of which it is responsible. This was accepted (with an amendment introduced by China to provide that the declaration refer to all or any territory) by the Social Committee by a vote of 9 to 3, with 5 abstentions, after the Committee by the same vote had rejected a U.S.S.R. proposal to delete the draft article.

An amended version of Article 9 providing that a state may denounce the Protocol on behalf of a dependent territory and an amended version of Article 10 under which the notification of acceptance on behalf of dependent territories must be sent to all parties to the Protocol, submitted at the same time by these five representatives (E/AC.7/W.26), were also adopted.

On the proposal of the Lebanese representative, who had withdrawn an amendment for the inclusion of similar words in Article 8, an additional clause was added to the Preamble (by 13 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions) stating that the Council realized the importance of the universal application of the agreement and its earliest possible entry into force.

The Committee also adopted with some changes an amendment presented by the representative of China to the draft resolution of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/798) to emphasize the urgency of immediate action in applying the Protocol universally.

The Council at its 189th plenary meeting, after rejecting by 11 votes to 3, with 4 abstentions, a U.S.S.R. proposal to delete Article 8, approved by 15 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, the resolution and draft Protocol proposed by its Social Committee. The resolution (159(VII)I) recommended to the General Assembly that it approve the draft Protocol, taking into account any further observations which might be received from governments, and urged all states to adhere to the Protocol as soon as possible and to take the necessary steps with a view to extending its application to territories for whose foreign relations they are responsible.

The Protocol will come into force 30 days after 25 states become parties to it, provided that such states shall include five of the following: China, Czechoslovakia, France, Netherlands, Poland, Switzerland, Turkey, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom, United States and Yugoslavia. It will enlarge the field of operations of international control of narcotic drugs. Whereas the Conventions of 1912 and 1925 defined drugs coming within their jurisdiction according to their chemical formulae, and the 1931 Convention, while adopting the same system, additionally brought under control drugs derived from certain raw materials, the new draft Protocol will cover all drugs capable of producing addiction.

d. AMENDMENTS TO THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF NARCOTIC DRUGS

(1) Drafting of a Single Convention to Replace the International Instruments relating to the Control of Narcotic Drugs

The question of the limitation of the production of raw materials used in the manufacture of narcotic drugs was discussed at the third session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. It appeared that an international convention to limit the production of raw materials, whatever its immediate value, would have the effect of adding one more element to the present complicated mechanism of international control of narcotic drugs. The Commission examined the draft resolution submitted by the United States representative, requesting the Secretariat to proceed with the drafting of a single convention to include the provisions of the existing instruments and to simplify the organization of international control. The convention would also include provisions for the limitation of the production of raw materials. The Commission recommended the resolution to the Council, which at its 189th plenary meeting on August 3, 1948, unanimously adopted it. The resolution (159(VII)IID) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,
"Being advised by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs that the international instruments relating to the control of narcotic drugs are:

"The International Opium Convention signed at The Hague on 23 January 1912 and Protocols of Cloture signed at" The Hague on 23 January 1912, 9 July 1913 and 25 June 1914, respectively, as amended by the Protocol of 11 December 1946;

"The Opium Agreement, Protocol and Final Act signed at Geneva on 11 February 1925, as amended by the Protocol of 11 December 1946;

"The Convention, Protocol and Final Act signed at Geneva on 19 February 1925, as amended by the Protocol of 11 December 1946;

"The Convention for Limiting the Manufacture and Regulating the Distribution of Narcotic Drugs, Protocol of Signature and Final Act signed at Geneva on 13 July 1931, as amended by the Protocol of 11 December 1946;

"The Opium Agreement and Final Act signed at Bangkok on 27 November 1931, as amended by the Protocol of 11 December 1946;

"The Convention for the Suppression of the Illicit Traffic in Dangerous Drugs, Protocol of Signature and Final Act, signed at Geneva on 26 June 1936, as amended by the Protocol of 11 December 1946;

"The Protocol to bring under international control drugs outside the scope of the 1931 Convention;

"Taking note of the complexity of these instruments and the desirability of simplifying the organization of international co-operation for controlling the traffic in narcotic drugs,

"Requests the Secretary-General to begin work on the drafting of a new single convention in which provision shall be made for a single body to perform all control functions, excepting those which are now or may hereafter be entrusted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. This single convention shall replace the above-mentioned instruments relating to narcotic drugs and also include provisions for the limitation of the production of narcotic raw materials."

At the same meeting the Council unanimously decided (resolution 159(VII)III) to transmit to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs the resolution of the World Health Assembly (E/799/Add.1) calling to the Council's attention the interest of WHO in appointing a technical member or members to any narcotics-control body which might be set up under the proposed new single convention to replace the Supervisory Body and the Permanent Central Opium Board.

(2) Interim Commodity Agreement on Raw Opium

Since the drafting and the putting into force of a single general convention comprising a special chapter on the limitation of the production of raw materials was bound to occupy a considerable time, the view was expressed at the third session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs that important immediate results might be obtained with raw opium by the convening of a conference of opium-producing countries and of countries using opium in the manufacture of drugs for medical or scientific needs. The purpose of this conference would be to reach an interim commodity agreement on raw opium, limiting the production and exports of raw opium to the satisfaction of these medical or scientific needs. In its report on its third session (E/799), the Commission recommended the Council to request the Secretary-General to initiate studies and inquiries on the desirability of convening such a conference.

The Council discussed the question at the 45th meeting of its Social Committee on July 24 and its 189th plenary meeting on August 3.

The Polish representative considered that a conference on the subject was premature as in the present circumstances it was impossible to assemble sufficient data to decide whether or not it was desirable. The Canadian representative wished to press forward with a general convention. Other representatives expressed support for the Commission's recommendation for studies on the desirability of calling a conference. A Polish amendment to remit the resolution back to the Commission was rejected in the Social Committee by 11 votes to 6. The Social Committee by 11 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions, and the Council by 13 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions, adopted the resolution proposed by the Commission. In this resolution (159(VII)IE) the Council requested the Secretary-General:

"1. To initiate studies and enquiries on the desirability of convening a conference of the opium-producing countries and of countries using opium in the manufacture of drugs for medical and scientific needs, for the purpose of reaching an interim commodity agreement limiting the production and export of opium to these needs, pending the adoption of an international convention on the limitation of raw materials used in the manufacture of narcotic drugs;

"2. To submit the results of these studies and enquiries to the next session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs."

e. OTHER SUBJECTS

(1) Commission of Inquiry into the Effects of Chewing the Coca Leaf

The request of the Peruvian Government for an inquiry into the effects of the chewing of the coca leaf on the population of certain regions in South America was considered by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its second session. The Commission recommended (E/575) that a commission of inquiry should be sent to Peru and such others of the countries concerned as might give their approval, and expressed the opinion that the scope of the inquiry might be broadened so as to cover the limitation of the production and the control of distribution of the coca leaf. In the discussion of the matter at the Council's sixth session (130th and 131st plenary meetings on February 6, 35th meeting of the Social Committee on February 20 and 159th plenary meeting on March 2) the representatives of Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, France, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States and Venezuela were in favor of the proposal. Certain of the representatives outlined the steps taken by their Governments to deal with the problem, and emphasized the international character of such an inquiry. The U.S.S.R. representative, while considering that it was the duty of the United Nations to assist any country which needed expert advice to better its social conditions, thought that any expenses involved should be borne by the country requiring the assistance. A U.S.S.R. proposal to this effect was rejected in the Social Committee by 12 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions. The Social Committee by 14 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions, and the Council by 15 votes, with 1 abstention, adopted a resolution (123(VI)C) approving in principle the dispatch of a commission of inquiry to Peru, and requesting the Secretary-General to submit to its next session a detailed plan for it, taking into account any request which might be received from other countries concerned.

The Commission at its third session heard a statement from the Peruvian representative saying that his Government continued to look upon the problem as one needing an urgent solution. He pointed out that the controversial nature of the question as to whether the habit of the chewing of the coca leaf is harmful or not was illustrated by the conflicting views of the Government of Bolivia, which held that it was not, and of the Government of Colombia, which held that it was. He referred to the steps already taken by the Peruvian Government in setting up laboratories and by scientific institutions such as the University of San Marcos of Lima in sponsoring and financing studies on the spot, and stressed the international character of the problem (E/799).

At its seventh session the Economic and Social Council considered a detailed plan submitted by the Secretary-General (E/860) for the commission of inquiry. The plan followed recommendations on the subject made by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its second session (E/575, pp. 16-19). The Commission had expressed the opinion that it would be advisable to combine the inquiry into the effects of the chewing of the coca leaf with an inquiry on the spot "into the possibilities of limiting the production and regulating the distribution of coca leaves with a view to furthering the preparation of an international conference on the limitation of raw materials", and, in particular, the effects of the limitation of the production on industry, agriculture and labor. It was of the opinion that the commission should be composed of four members, comprising two teams: a team of two medical experts and a team of two experts on international administration, with a possible fifth member as a chairman. It would require a secretariat of four or five members, according to whether a chairman was or was not appointed. It was thought that the inquiry in Peru would take not less than two months, and the estimated cost was $35,000. The Secretary-General reported that so far no other requests had been received from any government and suggested that if the Council decided to recommend to the General Assembly the dispatch of the commission to Peru he might be authorized to transmit to the Assembly any request which might be received from any country concerned and revise the financial estimate in the light of any such request.

The Council considered the plan at the 54th and 55th meetings of its Social Committee on August 4 and 5. Members expressed general support for and agreed on the importance of the proposed inquiry. The Danish representative suggested that if similar requests were received in the future it might be possible to achieve the same results at less cost by the loan of one or two experts. The United States representative supported the inquiry into both the effects of chewing the coca leaf and the question of the possible limitation of production; he thought that in the case of future similar inquiries it might not be necessary to send scientific teams but that it might be necessary to send teams to consider the question of limitation of production, since administrative and industrial considerations differed from country to country. The French representative thought that the task of the commission should be strictly defined. He felt that the problem was a scientific one concerning the effects of chewing the coca leaf and that the study of the limitation of production and of regulations for the distribution of coca leaves in Peru was purely a national problem. It would be impossible for the commission to study in the short space of time at its disposal the international repercussions of the restriction of the cultivation of coca leaves, and this study might be undertaken by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives thought that the expense of the inquiry should be borne by the Peruvian Government. They considered that the problem was a purely local one. Other representatives felt that the proposed study was one of international significance.

The representative of Peru proposed a draft resolution (E/AC7/W.38) to approve the plan submitted by the Secretary-General and also the dispatch of a commission of inquiry to investigate the effects of chewing the coca leaf to Peru "and any other country which may request it", to authorize the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly any request received from any country concerned and revise the financial estimate submitted in the light of any such request and to recommend that the General Assembly appropriate the necessary funds.

Certain verbal amendments to the Peruvian draft resolution were proposed in the Social Committee by the New Zealand, United States and Venezuelan representatives and were accepted by the Peruvian representative and endorsed by various other members of the Council. They provided for: omitting an endorsement of the Secretary-General's plan, since this plan presented alternative schemes; omitting a reference to future commissions to be sent to any other country, or financial provisions for such commissions, since it was agreed that other requests could be studied separately when they were received; including in the terms of reference of the commission the examination of the problems of the production and distribution of the coca leaf in Peru; and stating that it should be dispatched as soon as possible. The Social Committee went on record as approving a commission of four rather than of five members.

The resolution, which was adopted by the Social Committee at its 55th meeting and by the Council at its 193rd plenary meeting on August 10, in both cases by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (resolution 159 (VII) IV), reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having taken note of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 17 November 1947 concerning the problem of the coca leaf, and of the 'Detailed Plan' submitted by the Secretary-General,

"Approves the despatch of a commission of enquiry to Peru at the earliest possible date to investigate the effects of chewing the coca leaf and the possibilities of limiting its production and controlling its distribution; and

"Recommends that the General Assembly appropriate the necessary funds for the Commission of Enquiry."

(2) Indian Hemp

At its third session, the Commission considered the problem of the control of Indian hemp, using as the basis for its discussions a study prepared by the Secretariat (E/CN.7/113). It was pointed out in the Commission that the medical uses of Indian hemp were almost non-existent but that there were many practical difficulties involved in a total suppression of its cultivation.

The Commission in its report on its third session (E/799) informed the Council that it had authorized the Secretariat to continue its studies on Indian hemp and to employ an expert if necessary.

(3) Abolition of Opium-Smoking in the Far East

At its third session, the Commission took cognizance of several reports on the situation in the Far East with regard to the abolition of opium-smoking, and noted that although a number of countries had declared their intention of suppressing opium-smoking in their territories in the Far East the situation in some of these territories had shown little improvement.

On the Commission's recommendation, the Council at its 189th plenary meeting on August 3, 1948, without discussion, unanimously adopted resolution 159(VII)IIB, inviting all countries in which opium-smoking has been at any time prevalent to adopt the policy of suppression, and requesting those governments which have declared their intention to suppress opium-smoking to forward to the Secretary-General before March 31 of each year a report on the progress achieved in this respect. It further requested those governments to prohibit the import of raw opium into their territories except for medical and scientific purposes and recommended that export authorizations should not be issued for opium shipments to countries where opium-smoking was still prevalent, except for medical and scientific purposes.

(4) Drug Addiction

At its second and third sessions the Commission continued the study of the problem of drug addiction. It considered replies which had been received from governments (E/CN.7/114) to the circular letter and questionnaire which had been sent out by the Secretary-General (E/CN.7/64) in pursuance of the Council's resolution (49(IV)) of March 28, 1947, regarding the legal and practical measures in effect for dealing with the problem of drug addiction and drug addicts.

The Commission asked the Secretariat to make an analytical study of the replies.

(5) Narcotic Drugs and Genocide

A number of details of the factory for the manufacture of narcotic drugs built by the Japanese authorities in Mukden during the Japanese occupation of Manchuria were submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its third session. The Commission recommended that the Council should ensure that the use of narcotics as an instrument for the purpose of undermining the physical and moral resistance of entire peoples be covered by the proposed Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Genocide.

(6) Publication of a Periodical on Narcotic Drugs

Several members of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs having emphasized that a United Nations periodical should be published on narcotic drugs, the Secretariat prepared a program with this end in view. The program suggested (E/CN.7/139) was for a quarterly periodical in English and French giving up-to-date information on the results achieved by governments, the United Nations and the bodies created under the international conventions in controlling narcotics and in fighting drug addiction. It would include an account of the work of the United Nations organs, technical and scientific articles on narcotic drugs from a medical, chemical, legal or administrative view, and articles on drug addiction, its prevention and treatment. It would also include information and articles on national laws and regulations on the subject, on the state of ratifications and adherence to the international instruments and on non-governmental agencies interested in narcotics control, as well as reviews of scientific and popular articles and publications on narcotic drugs.

The Commission approved the program and recommended that the Council approve the publication of the periodical.

The Council discussed the question at the 45th and 46th meetings of its Social Committee on July 24 and 26 and at its 189th plenary meeting on August 3, 1948. The Chinese representative urged that the periodical should not be too technical so that it might appeal to the average educated layman, and hoped that it might be published in Chinese, even in abridged form. The Chilean representative suggested that the bulletin should be published in the five official languages, but if this were not possible on grounds of expense, that it should be published in English and French and an analysis of the matters dealt with should be given in the other three official languages. The Lebanese representative emphasized the importance of giving the bulletin the widest possible circulation in all the languages of Members of the United Nations, if it were intended to educate the masses on questions regarding narcotic drugs, and suggested that it might contain a summary in these various languages. On the proposal of the United States, it was agreed to issue the periodical in English and French with summaries or reprints of special articles in the other official languages. Accordingly, the Social Committee at its 46th meeting by 15 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, and the Council at its 189th plenary meeting by 17 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, adopted a resolution (159(VII)F) recognizing the value to international co-operation in the control of narcotic drugs of a technical publication and approving its issue.

f. PERMANENT CENTRAL OPIUM BOARD

During its sixth session, the Council by 15 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, adopted at its 159th plenary meeting on March 2 resolution 123(VI)D endorsing the opinion expressed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs as to the interpretation to be given to the provision in Article 19 of the 1925 Convention, which requires that members of the Permanent Central Opium Board shall not hold any office which puts them in a position of direct dependence on their governments.

This opinion was as follows:

"The provision of article 19, paragraph 5 of the 1925 Convention is fulfilled if a candidate who, at the time of appointment to the Permanent Central Board, was in a position of direct dependence on his Government will, following his appointment, not hold such position for the duration of his membership of the Board.

"In this way the clause in question would enable the Council to appoint to the Board a judge, a university professor, a medical practitioner, a lawyer, or specialists of other professions without requiring that the person appointed give up his position or cease to exercise his profession while serving on the Board.

"In this way it would also be possible for the Council to appoint to the Board an official in active service of his Government provided (i) that following his appointment he ceases temporarily, i.e., for the duration of his membership of the Permanent Central Board, to exercise his functions as an official of the Government (by taking, for instance, leave of absence), and (ii) while exercising his powers and functions as a member of the Board he will not act under the instructions of his Government."

In the Council's discussions of the question (at the 131st plenary meeting on February 6, the 36th meeting of the Social Committee on February 21 and the 159th plenary meeting on March 2) the U.S.S.R. representative expressed the view that the interpretation did not basically change the situation and explained that in the U.S.S.R. all scientific experts were employees of the government and as such would be ineligible for election to the Board. The United Kingdom representative also stressed the difficulty of making available experts who were not in government positions, but thought that confidence in the impartiality of the Board's members might be shaken if they were not independent of their governments; he was, however, against any attempt to extend the meaning of Article 19 of the 1925 Convention by an interpretation, without formally amending it, therefore he abstained from voting on the resolution.

The question of remuneration of members of the Central Board having been raised in the report of the second session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, the Council at its sixth session in resolution 123 (VI) D requested the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions to examine that question and submit recommendations thereon to the General Assembly.

After discussing at the 36th meeting of the Social Committee on February 21 what privileges and immunities should be granted to members of the Central Board, the Council, at its 159th plenary meeting on March 2, by 16 votes to 0, adopted resolution 123(VI)E recommending that governments should extend to the members of the Permanent Central Board privileges and immunities on the lines laid down in the Convention on Privileges and Immunities as approved by the General Assembly on February 13, 1946 (resolution 22(I)).¹²⁵ The Council invited governments to report as soon as possible what measures they have taken to carry out this recommendation.

By its resolution 124(VI), adopted at the 159th plenary meeting on March 2, the Council took note of the report of the Central Board for 1947 (E/OB/2). The Council decided to defer, until its first session after the newly-constituted Board convened, the consideration of the Board's proposals on the administrative arrangements to be concluded with the Council under Article 20 of the Geneva Convention of 1925.

The entry into force of the amendments to the Geneva Convention of February 19, 1925, by the Protocol of December 11, 1946, permitted the Council at its sixth session to renew the membership of the Central Board.

At its 151st plenary meeting on February 24, 1948, the Council appointed a committee consisting of the representatives of Australia, China, France, Poland, Turkey and Venezuela to make proposals on appointments to the Permanent Central Opium Board. The Committee considered the names of 33 candidates proposed by 23 governments and, by a majority of two thirds or more, proposed eight candidates to the Council, two other candidates receiving the support of less than two thirds of the Committee (E/719). At its 159th plenary meeting on March 2, the Council by secret ballot elected the following eight members of the Board, who had been proposed by the Committee: Hans Fischer (Switzerland), Sir Harry Greenfield (United Kingdom), Herbert L. May (United States), Pedro Pernambuco Filho (Brazil), Paul Reuter (France), Milan Ristic (Yugoslavia), Sedat Tavat (Turkey), Y. N. Yang (China).

The members were appointed to hold office "until such time as the membership of the Board be renewed by the Council to take effect on or as soon as possible after 2 March 1953" (resolution 125 (VI), adopted by 15 votes to 0, with 1 abstention).

g. SUPERVISORY BODY

As all the amendments to the international conventions on narcotic drugs contained in the Protocol of December 11, 1946, had come into force on February 13, 1948, the Commission was in a position at its third session to proceed with the appointment of a member to the Supervisory Body, and unanimously appointed Colonel C. H. L. Sharman (Canada) to this position.

The Commission recommended that the terms of office of members of the Supervisory Body be fixed at five years to be identical with the term of office of members of the Permanent Central Opium Board, and requested the Secretary-General to approach the other appointing bodies (WHO and the Opium Board) in this connection.

h. MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMISSION ON NARCOTIC DRUGS

The question of the renewal of the Commission's membership was considered by the Commission at its third session. Taking into account the special composition of the Commission, which consists of representatives from producing or manufacturing countries and countries in which illicit traffic in narcotic drugs constitutes a serious problem, the Commission did not feel it practicable for it to be elected one third at a time as in the case of other functional commissions. It emphasized, however, the desirability of continuity and stated that its experience had shown that a membership of fifteen was suitable.

It recommended (E/799) that the Council (1) renew the membership every three years at its first session in the year beginning in 1949; (2) fix the terms of office of the members to run for three years beginning with the opening day of its first meeting and ending on the eve of the first meeting of the session following the election of their successors; and (3) take the necessary steps to ensure that there be no interval between the term of office of the present members and their successors, and draw the attention of governments when appointing representatives to the Commission to "the particular character of the fundamental problems of the international control of narcotic drugs which can be solved over a period of years".

These recommendations were considered by the Economic and Social Council at its seventh session, at the 46th and 55th meetings of the Social Committee on July 26 and August 5 and at the 189th and 193rd plenary meetings on August 3 and 10. The Social Committee at first recommended at its 46th meeting by 16 votes, with 3 abstentions, a resolution (E/910) adopting the Commission's first two recommendations, and including under the second recommendation the terms of office of present members. This resolution omitted, however, any reference to the recommendation (number (3) above) to governments concerning their appointment of representatives. Certain members felt that such a recommendation would not be appropriate since the appointment of representatives was an affair for the governments themselves. A proposal by the representative of the United Kingdom to retain this recommendation to governments was rejected by 7 votes to 6, with 5 abstentions.

At the 189th plenary meeting, however, the Canadian representative introduced verbally a resolution to provide that the Council confirm the terms of office of present members as extending to December 31, 1949, and that in electing members to replace them it should follow the procedure adopted in the case of other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council, electing five members for one year, five for two and five for three years. After discussing the appropriate procedure for dealing with the resolution the Council decided to refer back to the Social Committee the draft resolution it had proposed and the Canadian draft. The question was discussed further at the 55th meeting of the Social Committee and the view was expressed that the question required further study. On the recommendation of the Committee the Council at its 193rd plenary meeting by 14 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, adopted resolution 159(VII)IIG confirming the term of office of the present members of the Commission as extending to December 31, 1949, and deferring to the next session the procedure to be followed in the election of members of the Commission.

10. Population Questions (except Migration)¹²⁶

The Population Commission held its second and third sessions at Lake Success from August 18 to 27, 1947, and from May 10 to 25, 1948, respectively. The report of the Commission's second session (E/571) was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its sixth session (129th and 157th plenary meetings on February 5 and March 1, and 31st and 32nd meetings of the Social Committee on February 18 and 19). Members of the Council expressed approval of the report, and the Council adopted a resolution (115(VI)) noting that "the report is devoted chiefly to the implementation of previous decisions of the Council regarding work in the population field". The Council decided not to agree to the Commission's recommendation that its rules of procedure be amended by permitting the Chairman to appoint an alternative representative, members of the Council holding that it was perfectly possible for the Chairman to state his country's position. The report of the third session (E/805) was considered by the Council at its seventh session (51st meeting of the Social Committee on July 30, and 193rd plenary meeting on August 10). The Council unanimously adopted resolution 150(VII) noting the Committee's report.

¹²⁶ For Migration, see pp. 641-44.

a. TERMS OF REFERENCE OF THE COMMISSION

In response to a request made by the Council at the time when the Population Commission was established, the Commission at its second session discussed possible modifications of its terms of reference, and made proposals concerning its terms of reference to the sixth session of the Council. The U.S.S.R. representative proposed at the 31st meeting of the Council's Social Committee that two of the items suggested by the Commission—namely, "(b) the influence of demographic factors, including migration, on economic and social conditions" and "(c) the influence of economic and social conditions on the size and structure of populations, and on the changes therein"—should be combined as they were both aspects of the same question. The Council unanimously decided at its 157th plenary meeting to accept the recommendation of its Social Committee to refer this question back to the Population Commission and that meantime it should continue to work according to its original terms of reference (resolution 115(VI)).

A revision of the terms of reference, designed to make them more specific, was formulated by the Commission at its third session and unanimously adopted by the Council in resolution 150(VII) at its seventh session (193rd plenary meeting on August 10). This resolution provides that:

"The Population Commission shall arrange for studies and advise the Economic and Social Council on:

"(a) The size and structure of populations and the changes therein.

"(b) The interplay of demographic factors and economic and social factors;

"(c) Policies designed to influence the size and structure of populations and the changes therein;

"(d) Any other demographic questions on which either the principle or the subsidiary organs of the United Nations or the specialized agencies may seek advice."

b. DEMOGRAPHIC YEAR-BOOK

Pursuant to the recommendation of the Council that the Secretary-General should publish a Demographic Year-Book (resolution 41(IV)),¹²⁷ the Commission at its second session drew up a list of topics to be covered by the Year-Book (E/571, Annex 1). These topics were:

I. Area and Population—Area; Total Population; Population Density; Annual Percentage Rate of Population Change; Population of Major Cities; Population by Age and Sex—Absolute Numbers and Proportions; Population by Age, Sex and Marital Condition—Absolute Numbers and Proportions; Population by Urban and Rural Divisions; Population by Race and Nationality (or Citizenship); Population by Age, Sex and Literacy; Households—Number and Distribution by Size; Women by Number of Children Ever Born and by Number of Children Living.

II. Economically Active Population—Active Population (Labor Force) by Age and Sex; Active Population by Industry; Active Population by Industrial Status (Class of Worker).

III. International Migration—Emigrants by Country of Destination; Immigrants by Country of Origin and Nationality; Emigrants and Immigrants by Age, Sex and Occupation.

IV. Natality—Total Number of Births; Crude Birth Rates; Births by Month of Occurrence; Births by Age of Mother and Father; Fertility Rates by Age of Mother; Births by Parity; Births by Legitimacy; Births by Duration of Marriage; Stillbirths; Gross and Net Reproduction Rates; Ratio of Children under 5 Years of Age to Women Aged 15 to 49 Years.

V. Mortality—Total Deaths; Crude Death Rates; Deaths by Month of Occurrence; Deaths by Age and Sex; Death Rates by Age and Sex; Infant Mortality Rates; Deaths by Cause; Maternal (Puerperal) Mortality Rates; Life Table Death Rates; Life Table Survivors; Mean Expectation of Life.

VI. Morbidity—General Morbidity.

VII. Marriage and Divorce—Total Marriages; Crude Marriage Rates; Marriage by Ages of Partners; Marriage Rates by Age and Sex; Total Divorces; Crude Divorce Rates; Divorces by Duration of Marriage and Number of Children.

Emphasizing the importance of world-wide coverage, the Commission urged the Secretary-General to make every effort to obtain the information listed for as many countries as possible, and expressed the hope that the publication of the Year-Book itself would stimulate governments to make available more detailed and more adequate data. In addition to population statistics, the Commission asked the Secretary-General to consider the advisability of publishing data on closely related economic and social subjects, and digests of legislation in the field of population.

In the discussion of the Population Commission's report at the sixth session of the Economic and Social Council (129th plenary meeting), the U.S.S.R. representative suggested that the Demographic Year-Book should also contain data on unemployment and occupational diseases. The French representative, however, thought that these were dealt with by the International Labour Organisation. The U.S.S.R. representative also asked that the method of obtaining population data for the Demographic Year-Book should be in accordance with the previous recommendation of the Council—i.e., that it should be data supplied by governments or obtained as the result of inquiries carried out in agreement with the governments.

At its third session, the Commission (E/805) noted with satisfaction the progress which had been made in compiling the first issue of the Year-Book and considered various proposals for adding to the list of the topics previously recommended. It endorsed the inclusion of data on unemployment, detailed classification of infant mortality, and social and occupational diseases, provided that this would not cause undue duplication in international publications or delay the publication of the first issue of the Demographic Year-Book.

c. STUDIES OF THE POPULATION OF TRUST TERRITORIES

At the second session, the Commission noted the progress made by the Secretariat in the studies of the population of Trust Territories which were recommended by the Council at its fourth session (41(IV)),¹²⁸ and suggested that the Secretary-General distribute the studies, as they were completed, to Member Governments. At the third session, the Commission urged that this work be carried forward as quickly as possible and with due regard to other projects, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare, for consideration at its next session, a statement of further progress and a discussion of the methods of study used.

The Population of Western Samoa, the first in a series of reports prepared by the Secretariat on the population of Trust Territories, was issued in January 1948.¹²⁹ The purpose of the reports is to summarize existing knowledge regarding characteristics of the population, trends of population growth and the relation of population to economic resources in each of the Territories, for the use of the United Nations and of the Administering Authorities in stimulating the economic, social and political advancement of the people under the Trusteeship System.

d. STUDIES OF INTER-RELATIONSHIPS OF DEMOGRAPHIC, ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL FACTORS

The Commission gave considerable attention at its second session to the implementation of the resolutions adopted by the Council at its fourth session (41(IV)),¹³⁰ which were designed to encourage analyses by Member Governments of the inter-relationships between demographic changes in various economic and social circumstances. The Commission (E/571) expressed the opinion that the best way to encourage Member Governments to undertake such studies would be to draw up study plans illustrating the technical problems and the kinds of results that might be obtained under various economic, social and demographic conditions. The Commission felt that such study plans should also provide, by carefully chosen examples, a preliminary insight into the nature of the demographic problems to be met in raising standards of living and improving the health and cultural development of populations in varying economic and social situations. Accordingly, the Commission requested the Secretary-General to prepare, for consideration at a subsequent session, proposals regarding the selection of major demographic situations in typical economic and social settings for which study plans could be constructed, and a proposed plan of study for one or two types of situations in varied economic and social frameworks.

e. DEVELOPMENT OF POPULATION DATA

(1) Recommendations regarding Censuses of Population to be Taken during or about 1950

The Commission made recommendations to the Secretary-General at both its second and third sessions regarding the manner of carrying out the program outlined by the Council at its fourth session, in relation to the censuses of population to be taken by various Governments during or about

1950 (41(IV)).¹³¹ The purpose of this program is to render advice and technical assistance to Member Governments and interested international agencies, with a view to improving the quality and international comparability of results.

At the second session, the Commission drew up tentative lists of subjects for which comparability was desirable in population censuses of various countries (E/571) and requested the Secretary-General to submit these lists to Member Governments and to invite their comments. These lists included a suggested minimum list of subjects (E/571, Annex II) and a suggested supplementary list of topics (E/571, Annex III) on which the Commission believed it desirable to obtain comparable information, so far as practicable at the forthcoming censuses.

At the third session, the Commission studied the comments received from Member Governments, together with a series of reports on census methods in various countries which had been prepared by the Secretariat,¹³² the recommendations of the Statistical Commission regarding the content of population censuses to be taken about 1950¹³³ and certain recommendations on this subject proposed at the third session of the Social Commission (E/CN.5/62). The Population Commission thereupon prepared a detailed set of recommendations as to subjects for inclusion in population censuses, types of data to be obtained on each subject, and techniques for improving the comparability of results.

The recommended list of subjects (without regard to relative importance) was as follows (E/805, Annex A):

1. Total population
2. Sex
3. Age
4. Marital status
5. Place of birth
6. Citizenship (legal nationality)
7. Mother tongue
8. Educational characteristics
9. Fertility data
10. Economic characteristics
 - (a) Total economically active and inactive population
 - (b) Occupation, industry and industrial status
 - (c) Population dependent on various types of economic activities
 - (d) Agricultural population
11. Urban and rural population
12. Households (including relationship to household's head)

The Commission requested that its recommendations, together with those of the Statistical Commission, be communicated by the Secretary-General to the interested specialized agencies and inter-governmental organizations and to all countries planning population censuses about 1950.

The Commission further requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the specialized agencies, to study and report at the next session on (a) the possibility of including data on the physically and mentally handicapped in the list of recommended subjects, and (b) the development of standard definitions of employees, employers, workers on own account and unpaid family workers for census classifications of industrial status (E/805).

(2) Program of Work on Population Estimates

As requested by the Council in a resolution adopted at the fourth session (resolution 41 (IV)), the Secretary-General submitted to the second session of the Population Commission a report on the progress achieved in providing the population estimates and forecasts needed by the United Nations and the specialized agencies. Noting that the requirements for such estimates and forecasts were extremely large, the Commission (E/571) adopted a scheme of priorities designed to make available as soon as possible the estimates and forecasts which were most essential for the work of the various organs of the United Nations. The Commission considered that the first object should be to compile current estimates of the total population, as of a uniform, recent date, for all countries of the world. Other data which it recommended should have a high priority were estimates of population by sex and age groups for recent dates, forecasts of total population and sex and age groups for dates in the near future (1948, 1949 and 1950), and longer-range forecasts.

(3) Infant Mortality Data

At its second session, the Commission requested (E/571) that the Secretary-General examine, in consultation with WHO and other interested agencies, the possibilities of improving the international comparability of data on infant mortality. At the third session the Secretary-General submitted a preliminary report on this problem (E/CN.9/17). The report listed the following principal reasons for the inadequacy and lack of comparability of infant mortality data:

"1. Lack of the application of a universal definition of a stillbirth and of an infant death.

"2. Incompleteness in the registration of births and infant deaths.

"3. Failure to refer the infant deaths to the actual group of births from which the infant deaths come.

¹³¹ Ibid., p. 511.

¹³² Studies of Census Methods, Nos. 1-6.

¹³³ See p. 567.

"4. Failure to relate the statistics of births and deaths to the social-economic conditions of families."

The report, furthermore, recommended procedures for overcoming these difficulties. The Commission recommended that this work be continued and that another report be submitted at a later session.

(4) Vital Registration

The Commission requested, at its third session (E/805), that the Secretary-General initiate, in collaboration with WHO, studies of vital registration systems in various countries, and of their effectiveness in providing the information regarding the dynamics of population needed for national and international purposes.

f. RECOVERY OF THE BIRTH RATE

Referring to the importance of realistic assumptions regarding future trends of fertility as a basis for future population estimates, as well as for other work in the field of population, the Commission recommended, at its third session (E/805), that the Secretary-General initiate an analysis of the recent rise of the birth rate, which has been evident in many countries, and present a report on that subject for consideration by the Commission at a future session.

g. DEMOGRAPHIC DICTIONARY

In connection with its work of improving the comparability of population data and furthering international understanding of demographic processes, the Commission requested, at its third session (E/805), that the Secretary-General prepare a dictionary of demographic terms in various languages. It recommended that this work be based on the contributions of Member Governments, the results to be submitted to the Commission for consideration at its next session.

11. Migration Questions

a. ALLOCATION OF FUNCTIONS AMONG VARIOUS INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

The Economic and Social Council at its fourth session adopted resolution 42 (IV)¹³⁴ inviting its Population and Social Commissions to consider and report to it on a practical plan for the allocation of functions, without duplication of work, among the various organs concerned in the field of migration, and requesting the Secretary-General to make such preliminary studies as would facilitate and expedite the work of the Commissions.

In compliance with the latter request, the Secretary-General, after having consulted the interested specialized agencies, prepared a report which was submitted to the two Commissions and, in a revised form (E/806), to the Council.

The Secretary-General's report contained three chapters and two annexes. Chapter I described functions in the field of migration which require a large measure of international co-operation. These functions are: (a) information, comprising data for the guidance of migrants, migration statistics for general use and analytical reports and compilations necessary for understanding the social, economic and demographic causes and effects of migratory movements; (b) advising on migration schemes and the financing necessary for achieving the best possible results from migratory movements of recognized utility; (c) international placement of manpower; (d) simplification of formalities and reduction of costs involved in migration; (e) protection of economic and social rights of migrant workers in connection with their recruitment, placing, selection, professional training, travel, working conditions, social insurance, admission to employment, enforcement of labor regulations, and repatriation; and (f) protection of the rights of migrants as citizens and aliens in connection with freedom of migration and with such problems as discrimination in matters of taxation, property rights, residence and assistance in case of indigency.

Chapter II of the report dealt with the existing international machinery, describing bilateral and plurilateral arrangements, the competence of the respective Commissions and departments of the United Nations and of ILO as well as the competence of and interest taken in these matters by other specialized agencies (IRO, UNESCO, FAO, WHO and the Bank) and by non-governmental organizations engaged in developing or promoting international policies in the field of migration or providing assistance to migrants. The report stated that from the survey of existing international machinery, it was apparent that the constitutional competence of many specialized agencies was likely to lead to duplication of functions; this made it essential for there to be co-ordination through the existing United Nations machinery for this purpose.

Chapter III of the report described the action taken by the Social and Population Commissions with respect to the allocation of functions in matters of migration.

¹³⁴ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 513.

Annex I of the report contained some remarks on the development and significance of the problems arising in connection with migration, while Annex II gave the text of the working arrangement regarding the principles for a division of responsibilities and co-ordination of activities in the field of migration, concluded on November 22, 1947, between the United Nations Secretariat and the International Labour Office.

The Social and Population Commissions, at their respective third sessions, considered the Secretary-General's report. The Social Commission adopted a resolution (E/779, p.19) which, inter alia, resolved that the Commission's responsibilities in the field of migration were to arrange for studies and to advise the Economic and Social Council on the social aspects of migration with a view, particularly, to ensuring to the migrants social and economic rights equal to those of local populations. The resolution stated that such studies and advice were to have reference especially to the following topics: (a) the social position, rights and benefits of immigrants including their rights and benefits when they happen to be indigent; (b) family and community relationships of immigrants; and (c) advance planning by government authorities with a view to the provision of social services, and facilities for health and education. The Commission also requested the Secretary-General to consult with those non-governmental organizations which are interested in migration problems and particularly with trade union organizations, and to seek their advice in order to ascertain whether these organizations could make arrangements for co-ordinating their respective activities.

The Population Commission approved a resolution (E/805, p. 6) which, among other things, stated that the Commission should arrange for studies and should advise the Economic and Social Council on the demographic aspects of migration, on the relationships between demographic, economic and social factors in migration and on the overall co-ordination of international research and study in this field by the United Nations and the specialized agencies. The resolution stated that these studies should cover the trends, causes and consequences of migration, and should take into account in this connection the influence of economic and social factors, legislative and administrative measures, the social and economic conditions of migrants, and such other factors as are important determinants in, or consequences of, migration.

The Economic and Social Council at its seventh session considered the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations of the Social and Population Commissions at its 180th and 193rd plenary meetings, on July 21 and August 10, and at the 51st, 52nd and 53rd meetings of its Social Committee on July 30 and 31, and August 2, 1948.

Draft resolutions were proposed by New Zealand (E/AC.7/W.27) and by the U.S.S.R. (E/-AC.7/W.37). The first proposed a text consolidating the respective resolutions of the Social and Population Commissions. The second would have the Council consider that: (1) the Governments of all States Members of the United Nations have the task of creating a higher standard of living for all inhabitants of their countries; (2) migratory movements of workers from one country to another may be conceded by way of exception in individual cases; and (3) the problem of refugees and displaced persons should be considered separately from questions of migration.

After adopting the first paragraph of the U.S.S.R. proposal by 10 votes to 4, with 4 abstentions, the Committee rejected the other paragraphs by varying votes and rejected the resolution as a whole by 10 votes to 6, with 2 abstentions.

The New Zealand proposal was voted on as two separate resolutions, to the second of which was added a preamble proposed by the United States. Both resolutions were approved by the Social Committee and were adopted by the Council at its 193rd plenary meeting by 14 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions (resolution 156(VII)A), and by 13 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions (resolution 156(VII)B), respectively.

The U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian S.S.R. representatives, in voting against the two resolutions, stated, inter alia, that they limited the rights of immigrants. They also objected to the agreement between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the International Labour Office regarding the allocation of functions, and stated that the second resolution was an attempt to make mandatory on governments a decision on questions affecting the sovereign rights of states.

The representatives of Brazil, Chile, Peru and Venezuela objected to the inclusion of paragraph 5 in the first resolution (see below). They felt that the paragraph sought to define the responsibilities of governments, and that if they were bound by it, they might find themselves compelled to set up for displaced persons a special regime outside the framework of their general immigration laws, an obligation which their Governments could not accept.

The representatives of the Byelorussian S.S.R.,

Poland, the United Kingdom and the United States, on the other hand, supported the retention of the paragraph, stating that it was merely a statement of fact and did not imply the establishment of a special regime for migrating refugees. They declared that it was necessary to point out the difference between the problems of displaced persons and refugees and those of migration in general, since the organizational treatment would differ in the two cases.

On putting the question to a vote, the Council decided by 14 votes to 4 to retain paragraph 5.

The representatives of France and Turkey declared that in their opinion the principle that equal treatment should be granted to both national and foreign workers meant that a foreign worker and a national worker who did the same kind of work would enjoy the same wages and benefit from the same social legislation, but did not mean that an immigrant worker arriving in a country had the right to exercise any profession he chose.

The texts of the two resolutions approved are as follows:

"A. ALLOCATION OF FUNCTIONS

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the report and recommendations of the Population Commission and the Social Commission outlining their proposals for a practical plan for the allocation of functions, without duplication of work, among the various organs concerned in the field of migration, submitted in accordance with the Council's resolutions of 29 March 1947, 13 August 1947 and 3 March 1948, and

"Taking into account the Secretary-General's report on that question,

"1. Notes that the Secretary-General has consulted the relevant specialized agencies on the respective functions of these agencies in the field of migration and on their interests in this field;

"2. Notes with satisfaction the working arrangement concluded between the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the International Labour Office on their respective responsibilities in matters of migration;

"3. Endorses the opinion of the Social Commission that the conclusion of the above working arrangement provides a favourable opportunity to define responsibility for the various matters of migration among the various organs of the Council;

"4. Notes the opinion of the Social Commission that migration includes aspects beyond those covered in the arrangement between the Secretary-General and the Director-General of the International Labour Office and that the problem of migration is broader than the labour problem, which is only one aspect of it;

"5. Notes that the problem of refugees and displaced persons must be distinguished from the general question of migration as a special question which is to be settled separately in connexion with General Assembly resolution 136(II);

"6. Notes that, for the solution of questions of common interest, it is desirable for the economic aspects of migration involving Trust Territories to be considered jointly by the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council;

"7. Decides that the Population Commission shall arrange for studies and advise the Council on the demographic aspects of migration, on the relationships between demographic, economic and social factors in migration and on the overall co-ordination of international research and study in this field by the United Nations and the specialized agencies. These studies shall cover the trends, causes and consequences of migration and shall take into account in this connexion the influence of economic and social factors, legislative and administrative measures, the social and economic conditions of migrants, and such other factors as are important determinants in or consequences of migration;

"8. Resolves that the Social Commission's responsibilities in this field are to arrange for studies and advise the Council on the social aspects of migration with a view, particularly, to ensuring to the migrants equal social and economic rights with those of local populations, such studies and advice to have reference especially to the following topics:

"(a) The social position, rights and benefits of immigrants, including their rights and benefits when they happen to be indigent;

"(b) Family and community relationships of immigrants;

"(c) Advance planning by Government authorities with a view to the provision of social services and facilities for health and education, which are necessary for immigrants and their families arriving in a new community;

"9. Recalls that, in addition to the Population and Social Commissions, all the other functional commissions of the Council may have to deal with aspects of migration which fall within their respective assignments, the co-ordination of the activities of the commissions being the task of the Council;

"10. Invites the regional economic commissions and the functional commissions of the Council to consult together, when desirable, through the Secretary-General, on migration problems which may be put to them, and to keep the Population and Social Commissions informed of such consultations;

"11. Requests the Secretary-General to consult with those non-governmental organizations which are interested in migration problems and particularly with trade union organizations, and to seek their advice in order to ascertain whether these organizations can make arrangements for co-ordinating their respective activities;

"12. Invites the specialized agencies and the Secretary-General to submit to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination set up under the resolution of 21 September 1946 any migration problems which may arise in such circumstances or in such a form that overlapping might occur or that important aspects of these questions might be neglected.

"B. PROTECTION OF MIGRANT AND IMMIGRANT LABOUR

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the allocation of functions among the various organs concerned in the field of migration, and the report and recommendations of the Social Commission relating to migration, and taking into account the memorandum on migration submitted by the International Labour Organisation in accordance with Council resolution 85(V) of 13 August 1947,

"Notes with satisfaction that the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, conscious of the importance and the urgency of the problem, has placed revision of the Migration for Employment Convention, 1939, and its related recommendations on the agenda of the thirty-second session of the International Labour Conference;

"Expresses the wish that, pending the adoption and ratification of an international convention providing adequate protection of migrant and immigrant labour, Member Governments, in determining their respective policies in this field, should be guided by the principle of equality of treatment in social and economic matters of national and foreign workers;

"Expresses also the wish that international arrangements in matters of migration include as soon as possible:

"(a) Broadening of the present system of international information in matters of migration so as to assure the immediate availability of knowledge on migration possibilities and conditions for use by government and voluntary organizations and by migrants or prospective migrants;

"(b) Means for the improvement of statistics on international migration so as to increase their adequacy and comparability."

b. PROTECTION OF MIGRANT AND IMMIGRANT LABOR

The American Federation of Labor proposed that an item dealing with the protection of migrant and immigrant labor be included on the agenda of the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council and submitted a memorandum on the subject (E/454 and Add.1 and 2). The American Federation of Labor urged the adoption of a resolution by the Council which would (1) recommend that the Economic Commissions for Europe and for Asia and the Far East promote the use of standards recommended by the International Labour Organisation in expediting efficient mobilization of manpower in the reconstruction of countries; and (2) urge the International Labour Organisation to expedite the reconsideration of its Convention and recommendations on migrant workers.

The Council considered the question at its 113th and 114th plenary meetings on August 12 and 13, 1947. It adopted a resolution jointly submitted by the delegations of Norway and the United Kingdom (E/546), as amended by the representatives of Czechoslovakia and the United States. The amendments provided for calling the matter to the attention of the Council's Social and Population Commissions. The majority of representatives agreed on the importance of the problem and expressed support of the proposed resolution and amendments. The U.S.S.R. representative, however, thought that the separate problems of immigration and of refugees and displaced persons had been merged in the document submitted by the American Federation of Labor, and that the latter problem could best be settled by repatriation, to which no reference had been made by the American Federation of Labor. He therefore urged the rejection of the proposal.

The resolution 85(V), adopted by the Council on August 13, by 15 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having taken note of the item regarding the protection of migrant and immigrant labour placed on its agenda at the request of the American Federation of Labor, and the memorandum submitted by the Federation,

"Noting also that the International Labour Organisation is now considering the revision of its existing convention and recommendations on migration,

"Resolves to transmit this memorandum to the International Labour Organisation as the competent specialized agency concerned and, in view of the urgency of the problem,

"Requests the International Labour Organisation actively to pursue its consideration of the subject and to inform the Economic and Social Council as soon as possible of the progress made, and

"Calls the attention of the Social and Population Commissions to this memorandum in their consideration of the problems assigned to them by the Council by its resolution on migration of 29 March 1947."

With reference to that decision, the Council, at its sixth session, considered two sections of the resolution of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment which dealt with population and migration problems (E/635). The Council transmitted these sections to ILO, the Social Commission and the Population Commission and invited them to take these sections into account in the action on those aspects of population and migration which fall within their respective fields (resolution 104(VI)).¹³⁵

The question of the protection of migrant labor was considered by the Social Commission and the Population Commission at their third sessions simultaneously with their study of the question of the allocation of responsibilities in the field of migration. The Social Commission (E/779) recommended that the Council take note of the steps which had already been initiated in this matter by ILO and expressed the wish that interim steps be taken by governments pending the adoption and ratification of an international convention.

The Economic and Social Council at its seventh session, in connection with its general discussion on migration problems (51st to 53rd meetings of its Social Committee on July 30 to August 2, and 193rd plenary meeting on August 10), considered this recommendation as well as a memorandum submitted by the ILO (E/888).

¹³⁵ See pp. 135-36.

The latter explained the measures taken by ILO in considering the question of the protection of migrant and immigrant labor.

The recommendation of the Social Commission was approved by the Council at its 193rd plenary meeting on August 10 (see resolution 156-(VII)B).

c. PROGRAM OF WORK ON DEMOGRAPHIC ASPECTS OF MIGRATION

The Population Commission, in accordance with its recommendation that it should be responsible for studies and advice to the Economic and Social Council on the demographic aspects of migration, established at its third session (E/805) a program of work regarding this aspect of the problem of migration. The program was to be carried out by the Secretary-General in consultation and collaboration with the specialized agencies.

It consisted of five items: (1) improvement of migration statistics; (2) analysis of change in the size and structure of populations in the countries of origin and destination, resulting from migration; (3) analysis of the influence of migration on the size and characteristics of the labor force in countries of immigration and emigration; (4) analysis of the influence of economic and social factors on migration; and (5) influence of legislation on migration.

12. Refugees and Displaced Persons

The General Assembly, at its second regular session, adopted resolution 136(II)¹³⁶ which, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to submit, in collaboration with the Director-General of the International Refugee Organization or the Executive Secretary of the Preparatory Commission, a report on the progress and prospect of repatriation, resettlement and immigration of refugees and displaced persons. The report in question (E/816 and Add.1), dated June 10, 1948, was circulated among Member Governments prior to the convening of the seventh session of the Economic and Social Council.

The report noted, inter alia, that, although during the first year of PC-IRO operations some 51,000 persons who had been in receipt of care and maintenance had been repatriated to their countries of origin, and another 157,000 persons eligible for help had departed for resettlement, there still remained on June 30, 1948, approximately one million refugees and displaced persons believed to be eligible for the Organization's assistance. Of this number, approximately 600,000 were in the camps and assembly centres of PC-IRO.

The report observed that, if the forecasts of PC-IRO as to resettlement and repatriation were realized, there would still remain some 600,000 refugees eligible for the Organization's assistance, whether as to repatriation or resettlement, on July 1, 1948. While noting the efforts made by a number of countries to give assistance in solving the problem, the report emphasized the unfortunate consequences that followed the tendency of certain governments, members of the PC-IRO, to exclude from resettlement in their countries any but the most able-bodied refugees and displaced persons applying for immigration. This would inevitably leave the organization with the problem of what to do with a relatively large "hard core" of older, handicapped or disabled refugees. The report condemned this policy, and called upon all States Members of the United Nations to open their doors to family groups which would include the old, the maimed and the chronically ill.

The report also urged Member States which had not yet joined IRO to ratify its Constitution with the least possible delay, so as to bring the Organization into legal operation at the earliest possible moment.

Finally, as requested by a resolution adopted at the sixth session of the Economic and Social Council,¹³⁷ the Secretary-General's report submitted information as to the situation of children removed from their countries of origin during the course of the Second World War, and on measures taken or contemplated on their behalf, and recommendations on what could be done to accelerate a final solution of this tragic problem.

The report of the Secretary-General was considered by the Social Committee of the Economic and Social Council at its 57th to 60th meetings from August 12 to 19, and by the Council at its 212th and 214th plenary meetings on August 24, 1948.

The representative of the U.S.S.R., supported by the representatives of the Byelorussian S.S.R. and Poland, charged that displaced persons camps in the Western Zones of Germany and Austria were frequently hotbeds of propaganda and terrorism directed against the present governments of certain Eastern European states, including the U.S.S.R.; that known quislings and war criminals were frequently found in positions of authority in the administration or leadership of such camps; that children were being prevented from returning to their countries of origin; that representatives of the Eastern European governments involved were frequently prevented from freely consulting their nationals who were inmates of the displaced persons camps; and that several states were seeking to exploit the displaced persons as a supply of cheap manpower. It was further charged that, despite previous Assembly resolutions, the emphasis had been shifted from repatriation to resettlement of the refugees and displaced persons.

¹³⁷ See p. 613.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. submitted a draft resolution (E/AC.7/W.39) designed to curb the alleged tendencies and practices which he had outlined in his criticism of the manner in which the problem was being handled.

Several representatives declared that, while they would abstain during the voting on some individual paragraphs of the Soviet proposal since they regarded these as unobjectionable, they would vote against the proposal as a whole because it implied criticism of PC-IRO and also because a constructive alternative was available in the joint draft resolution (see below).

The Soviet resolution, after paragraph by paragraph votes, was rejected as a whole by the Social Committee by 13 votes to 4, with 1 abstention, and when re-submitted at the plenary meeting was rejected by the Council by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention.

A majority of Committee members, while agreeing with a number of principles put forward by the U.S.S.R. representative, denied the general validity of the charges levelled at the displaced persons camp administration and the validity of the charge of systematic exploitation of displaced persons as reservoirs of cheap manpower. The majority expressed their support of a draft resolution submitted jointly by the representatives of Brazil, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States (E/946) which, they felt, represented a well-balanced organic whole and a constructive approach to the entire problem. This resolution was adopted, with minor drafting changes, by the Social Committee by a vote of 14 to 3, and by the Economic and Social Council at its 214th plenary meeting by a vote of 15 to 3. It (157-(VII)) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Noting with appreciation the report on the progress and prospect of repatriation, resettlement and immigration of refugees and displaced persons submitted by the Secretary-General in collaboration with the Executive Secretary of the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization pursuant to General Assembly resolution 136 (II) of 17 November 1947 and Council resolution 122 (VI) A.

"Having in mind the recommendation of General Assembly resolution 136 (II) to 'each Member of the United Nations to adopt urgent measures for the early return of the repatriable refugees and displaced persons to their countries of origin, having regard to the General Assembly resolution of 12 February 1946, and for settling a fair share of the non-repatriable refugees and displaced persons in its country',

"Recognizing that the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization, by means of the machinery it has developed during its first year of activity, can substantially accomplish its purpose of repatriating or re-establishing all the refugees and displaced persons who are its concern within a period of, at most, two years, provided that it is assured of the effective co-operation of Governments,

"Considers that, to accomplish this objective, a substantial number of Governments which have not already done so should take early action for membership in the International Refugee Organization;

"Urges the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization to continue its efforts for the repatriation of refugees and displaced persons to their countries of origin in accordance with the constitution of the International Refugee Organization;

"Stresses the need for accelerated resettlement of non-repatriable refugees and displaced persons and urges all States to admit them to the maximum limit of their capacity;

"Expresses its view that the policy which should be followed with regard to unaccompanied children is:

"(a) To unite children with their parents wherever the latter may be; and

"(b) In the case of orphan or unaccompanied children whose nationality has been established beyond doubt, to return them to their country, always providing that the best interests of the individual child shall be the determining factor;

"Recommends to the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization:

"(a) That it consult immediately with Members of the United Nations concerning resettlement of all non-repatriable refugees and displaced persons on the basis already approved by the General Assembly in resolutions 62(I) and 136(II), including recognition of the importance of resettling refugees and displaced persons in family units as recommended by the report submitted by the Secretary-General; and

"(b) that it report thereon to the Council at its eighth session;

"Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the report, together with this resolution and such additional relevant data as may be available from the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization, to the General Assembly at its third regular session for its information, sympathetic consideration and such further action as it may deem appropriate."

13. Action for the Solution of Legal Difficulties Arising from the Absence, due to War Events or Persecution, of Persons Whose Death Cannot Be Conclusively Established

In a communication to the Secretary-General dated June 3, 1948, the Executive Secretary of the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization requested that the item "Action for the solution of legal difficulties arising from the absence, due to war events or persecution, of persons whose death cannot be conclusively established" be placed on the agenda of the seventh session of the Economic and Social Council. This request, he declared, was in accordance with a resolution adopted by the Preparatory Commission for IRO, at the sixth part of its first session. At the same time a memorandum (E/824) on the necessity of co-ordinating procedures for declarations of death was submitted.

The memorandum stated that, as a result of mass deportations and the technique of modern warfare, thousands of human beings had disappeared and it had not been possible in the ordinary way formally to establish the fact of their death. It stated that the legal consequences of death (cessation of legal personality, succession to the estate, dissolution of marriage, termination of paternal authority) were so important that a death certificate was normally required in order to establish rights resulting from death. Failure to furnish such evidence of death gave rise to such serious difficulties as the following: heirs cannot establish title and so obtain possession of the property of missing persons; a surviving husband or wife cannot remarry; and the guardianship of orphan children cannot be definitely established.

The memorandum went on to state that the laws of the various countries relating to missing persons did not in general provide for a simple and rapid procedure in cases when proof of death of a missing person could not be established under normal certification procedures.

The memorandum concluded by stating that an international convention appeared to be the appropriate means of eliminating the present difficulties within a reasonable time.

The Economic and Social Council, at its 180th plenary meeting on July 21, 1948, referred the item to its Social Committee, which considered it at its 60th and 61st meetings on August 19 and 20, 1948.

The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom submitted to the Social Committee a joint draft resolution (E/933) requesting the Secretary-General to prepare, in collaboration with IRO, a preliminary draft convention on the subject; and to submit the draft convention, not later than October 20, 1948, to Members of the United Nations for their comment. The General Assembly, the draft resolution stated, was to take definitive action on the matter at its fourth regular session.

The representatives of the Netherlands, New Zealand, Venezuela and Turkey supported the joint draft resolution. The representative of Australia wondered whether a committee of the Economic and Social Council was competent to deal with the proposed convention. He thought that there should be some provision made for consultation with a more technical body.

The representative of Canada submitted an oral amendment to the joint draft resolution, providing for the participation of other organizations which might be interested in, and competent to deal with, the matter. The amendment, supported by the representative of Denmark, was accepted by the representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States.

The representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Byelorussian S.S.R. opposed the joint draft resolution. The representative of the U.S.S.R. maintained that the question was not sufficiently advanced for a final decision. Both representatives declared that the problem was closely linked with the question of the conclusion of peace treaties with Germany and Japan. Until positive steps had been taken towards the signature of those treaties, action on the matter was premature, they maintained, and the measures proposed by the Preparatory Commission for IRO were doomed to failure. The representative of the Byelorussian S.S.R. doubted whether international action was necessary. The representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed that the whole question be deferred to the next session of the Council.

The Social Committee at its 61st meeting by 12 votes to 2 rejected the U.S.S.R. proposal to defer the item to the next session of the Council and adopted by 12 votes to 2, with 1 abstention, the United Kingdom—United States draft resolution as amended.

The report of the Social Committee (E/995) was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its 214th plenary meeting on August 24.

The representative of the United States, speaking in favor of the Social Committee's draft resolution, declared that the problem was not limited to refugees, but affected the relatives of all who had disappeared during the war, including those of some six million Jews who had disappeared as a result of Nazi persecution.

The representative of the Byelorussian S.S.R. argued that a draft convention should await the conclusion of peace treaties with Germany and Japan. He thought the Council should limit its action to transmitting to the governments concerned the records of the discussion that had taken place.

The representative of Poland thought that there was general agreement on the urgency and importance of the problem, and that international action was needed. The main difference among Council members, he held, concerned the proper method of coping with the problem. He himself doubted that there was a need for the preparation of a draft convention, as envisaged in the Committee's draft resolution, and thought that a suitable recommendation to the Members by the General Assembly might be sufficient. Accordingly, he proposed to delete from the preamble of the draft resolution the third paragraph, which read "[the Economic and Social Council] considering that these difficulties might best be solved by an international convention", and to substitute in the operational part of the draft resolution the expression "a proposal for an international regulation of the subject" for "a preliminary draft convention".

The Polish amendments were rejected by separate but identical votes of 15 to 3.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. regarded the draft resolution submitted by the Social Committee as premature. The entire problem was, he said, linked with that of refugees and displaced persons, and would probably cease to exist once the latter question had been properly settled by the repatriation of all displaced persons desiring repatriation.

The Committee's draft resolution was strongly supported by the representatives of China, Australia, Chile, United Kingdom and France, who regarded it as offering an adequate program for dealing with the problem.

The Social Committee's draft resolution was adopted by the Council at its 214th plenary meeting on August 24 by a vote of 15 to 2, with 1 abstention. The text of the resolution (158(VII)) is as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note of the memorandum on the necessity of co-ordinating procedures for declarations of death,

"Recognizing that the solution of the legal difficulties arising from the absence, because of war events or persecution, of persons whose death cannot be conclusively established, is an urgent and important problem,

"Considering that these difficulties might best be solved by an international convention,

"Requests the Secretary-General:

"(a) To prepare, in collaboration with the Preparatory Commission for the International Refugee Organization or the International Refugee Organization and with other competent organizations, a preliminary draft convention on the subject;

"(b) To submit the draft convention, not later than 20 October 1948, to Members of the United Nations for comment by them;

"(c) To submit the draft convention to the Council at its eighth session, together with such comments as may have been received from Members of the United Nations, in order to enable the Council to take such action as may be appropriate, with a view to definitive action on this matter by the General Assembly at its fourth regular session."

14. Cultural Activities

a. UNITED NATIONS SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH LABORATORIES

The Economic and Social Council during its third session, on October 3, 1946, adopted resolution 22 (III), which invited the Secretary-General to consult UNESCO and the other specialized agencies concerned and to submit to the Council a general report on the problem of establishing United Nations research laboratories.¹³⁸

In accordance with that resolution, the Secretary-General prepared a comprehensive report (E/620 and Add. 2) which contained studies, views and suggestions submitted by various specialized agencies, particularly UNESCO, and by international governmental and non-governmental scientific organizations, national research institutions and outstanding scientists. The report stated that the inquiry opened by the Secretary-General endeavored to cover two aspects of scientific research problems. It attempted in the first place to ascertain the state of mind existing in the scientific world on the question of international action for the improved organization of research. Secondly, it was deemed necessary to seek out those fields not yet covered by existing or projected instruments of co-ordination; and to define the fields in which international co-operation would appear to offer the greatest promise and to be most immediately desirable.

In the report submitted by UNESCO (UNESCO/Nat.Sci.24/1947) and reproduced in the Secretary-General's report to the Council (E/620, pp. 49-145), seventeen subjects were recommended for first priority, as follows:

"1. An Institute for the study of the Chemistry and Biology of the Self-Reproducing Substances, including Cancer Research.

"2. A chain of Laboratories and Field Teams in Nutritional Science and Food Technology, (a) in China, (b) in the arid and arid-tropical zone, (c) in the humid equatorial zone.

"3. The Study of the Life and Resources of the Humid Equatorial Zone, beginning with an Institute of the ¹³⁸ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 541.

Amazon (Hylea), and expanding into a chain of equatorial zone Stations.

"4. One or more Institutes of Oceanography and Fisheries in Asia, their work to be correlated with that of the Nutritional Laboratories.

"In addition to these proposals, and owing to the urgent need for correlation of activities already begun by independent organizations, the Secretariat recommends:

"5. An Antarctic Research Institute, including a Meteorological Institute for the Southern Hemisphere if sufficient support is forthcoming from ICAO.

"And in view of the very small cost involved:

"6. A United Nations Ornithological Observatory on Heligoland.

"In the opinion of the Secretariat [of UNESCO], Second Priority is indicated for the following:

"7. An Astronomical Observatory in the Southern Hemisphere.

"8. An Institute for Research on Tuberculosis.

"9. Computing Laboratories in Asia.

"10. An Institute or a series of Laboratories for Human Biological and Genetical Analysis.

"11. A High Altitude Station in the Himalayas.

"12. An Institute of Human Evolution in Africa.

"13. An Arctic Research Institute.

"14. Institutes and Stations for the Study of the Arid Zone (Desert and Arid Tropical Zones).

"15. An Institute of Individual and Social Psychology.

"In the meantime, UNESCO will be actively concerning itself with:

"16. The Creation of International Pool Facilities for Scientific Standards and Type Collections.

"17. Improvement in Scientific Documentation Services."

The report also revealed that the Secretary-General had received numerous suggestions from scientific organizations and individual scientists. Specific proposals were made for the establishment of the following research institutions:

- International Astronomical Observatories
- International High Altitude Stations
- International Meteorological Observatories
- International Geophysical Observatories
- International Floating Laboratories
- International Marine Biological Station
- International Cartographic Centre
- International Institute of Human Science
- International Health Institute
- International Research Institute for the Middle East
- International Institute for New Food Plants
- International Brain Institute
- International Research Centre on Tuberculosis
- International Institute of Nuclear Research
- International Centre for Pure Products
- International Construction Materials Laboratory

Other suggestions concerned questions that might be studied at the international laboratories if they were established. In brief, these were as follows:

- Oceanography
- Seismology
- Vulcanology
- Solar and terrestrial relationship
- Cosmic rays
- Soil erosion

- Fluid and soil mechanics
- Applied mathematics and physics
- Photogrammetric research
- Synthesis based on chemical elements
- Arctic regions
- Nutritional research
- Biotypology
- Biological vegetable and animal resources
- Standardization of biological substances of pharmacological activity
- Industrial hygiene
- Urban hygiene
- The improvement of agriculture and standards of life in tropical regions
- The adaptation of man to his environment
- Impact of war and its disorganizing effect on children and the development of therapies
- Typhus
- Onchocercosis
- Malta Fever
- Malarial disease

It was pointed out in the report that many of the institutions and persons consulted signified their warm approval of the idea itself, and in many cases they expressed their gratification at the fact that the United Nations was examining the problem. Generally speaking, it appeared that all countries wished to see certain scientific problems studied on the international plane, and that improved unification or co-ordination of effort was desired by specialists in every field.

Some of the persons consulted expressed the view that multiplicity of research centres is a sine qua non for maintaining freedom of research, the spirit of competition and therefore scientific progress, and that the international laboratory should therefore deal only with the type of problem which, in present conditions, is not satisfactorily covered by the existing national laboratories.

The report stated that, on the basis of the results of the inquiry, it would be easy to make a list of fourteen or fifteen scientific problems for which international research laboratories seem desirable, and likely to promote the peaceful activities of modern societies. It added, however, that the degree of urgency and the allocation of priorities demand detailed analysis and debate by competent persons. The report suggested the desirability of conferences or study groups examining the preliminary data which had been assembled before any final decisions were made.

The Economic and Social Council examined the report of the Secretary-General during its seventh session, at its 193rd and 194th plenary meetings on August 10, 1948. The French representative submitted a draft resolution (E/858) which, after taking account of the work done, and affirming the importance of pursuing the studies, would have invited the Secretary-General (1) to communicate to governments, specialized agencies and leading international scientific organizations the Council's desire to have the problem of establishing international United Nations research laboratories discussed and (2) to form a small committee of experts to examine the advisability and appropriate procedure for convening an international conference of scientists to report on the possible establishment of international research laboratories. The Secretary-General was to submit to the Council this preparatory committee's report and the result of consultations with governments, specialized agencies and scientific organizations.

This proposal was supported by the representatives of the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Netherlands, Denmark, Peru, Poland, Brazil, Chile, Lebanon, and Turkey. Those of the United States, Canada, Poland, Chile and Lebanon thought that more emphasis should be placed on the role of UNESCO. The Canadian representative suggested that the expert committee should be convened under UNESCO's auspices. The Australian representative pointed out that other specialized agencies, such as ICAO and WHO, might also be interested in some of the projects. The United States representative thought that the function of the United Nations was to stimulate research, which could be better done by co-ordinating the work of existing national agencies through interchanges of scientific personnel and the dissemination of scientific knowledge than by the creation of international agencies; the Polish representative, however, thought that the establishment of new research laboratories under United Nations auspices would fulfil a definite need, as many small countries for financial reasons found it difficult to carry out research. The Netherlands representative hoped that the committee would be guided by the following considerations: (1) that only work which, because of expense, could not be carried out by national laboratories should be assigned to international research laboratories; (2) that work done by certain national laboratories should be taken into account and measures adopted to transform national laboratories into international laboratories with a view to avoiding expense and duplication of work; and (3) that the work of existing national laboratories should not be duplicated, and that effective co-operation with interested agencies should be developed. The Danish representative felt that the committee should include experts in the field of scientific organization, and that it should be in a position to draw upon the voluntary help of scientists. The U.S.S.R. representative thought that it was not practical to consider the question at present, since the financial expenditure would be high and there was already a great shortage in national research organizations of the highly qualified staff necessary. He therefore opposed the resolution. The Australian representative considered that it would be preferable to embark on a small number of top priority projects rather than consider an elaborate program, and referred in this connection to the items suggested by UNESCO.

The Council was addressed by the Director-General of UNESCO, who gave an account of UNESCO's activities for promoting scientific research, and by a representative of WHO, who urged the fuller utilization of existing research laboratories.

The French draft resolution, with amendments introduced verbally by Chile, the United States and the United Kingdom and accepted by the French representative, was adopted by the Council at its 194th plenary meeting by 14 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions. The principal changes introduced provided for the co-operation of UNESCO in the formation of the committee, the consultation of the committee with the specialized agencies and the examination by the committee of the question of the possible establishment of international research laboratories.

In its resolution (160(VII)) the Council noted the Secretary-General's report, conveyed its thanks to the specialized agencies, organizations and scientists for their co-operation in its preparation and affirmed its interest in furthering the development of research. It invited the Secretary-General:

"1. To communicate to all Governments the Council's desire to have the problem of establishing international United Nations research laboratories discussed by the governing bodies of all the important national scientific institutions for higher education and research, and to be apprised of their findings through the intermediary of the Secretary-General of the United Nations;

"2. To send a like communication to the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the other specialized agencies concerned and to the leading international scientific organizations;

"3. To form, during next year, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, a small committee of experts in the basic sciences (exact, natural and social) to examine, in consultation with the specialized agencies, the question of the possible establishment of international research laboratories, including the advisability of, and appropriate procedure for, convening an international conference of scientists with instructions to submit a general report to the Council on this subject;

"4. To submit to the Council in due course this preparatory committee's report and the result of the further consultations referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 above."

b. TRANSLATION OF THE CLASSICS

In pursuance of General Assembly resolution 60(I)¹³⁹ on the translation of the classics, the Council decided at its fourth session to request UNESCO to submit by June 1, 1948, to the Economic and Social Council a report giving recommendations for needed action including particularly data on objective methods of selection of great books, the needs of various cultural regions, and suggestions for general assistance in translation, publication and distribution.¹⁴⁰

The second General Conference of UNESCO held at Mexico City in November 1947 adopted a scheme of work on this subject, prepared by the UNESCO Secretariat, forming part of a wider project conceived as extending to the translation of contemporary works not only in the fields of literature and philosophy but also in those of the natural and social sciences. On the basis of this scheme, UNESCO addressed a questionnaire to the bodies designated by Member Governments for the purpose, and at the same time consulted various international organizations. UNESCO then convened a conference of experts, which met in Paris in May 1948 and which examined the material which had been collected. The report of UNESCO to the Council (E/823), prepared on the basis of the consultations mentioned, and on the work of the Committee of Experts, examined the following groups of problems:

- (i) Problems concerning the selection of classics; the definition of a classic, the public for which they are intended, the methods of choosing classics;
- (ii) Problems of translation;
- (iii) Problems of publication and dissemination.

The report concluded that the help of governments and of international professional and expert bodies would make it possible to produce in the fairly near future lists of works regarded as classics; that UNESCO would take responsibility for this plan; that the special problems, however, of publication and distribution in the many countries suffering from economic handicaps could not be solved by UNESCO alone; and that a satisfactory solution worthy of the importance of the project lay in the effective collaboration between the governments concerned and the competent agencies of the United Nations.

The report (E/823) was presented to the Council at its seventh session. At its 203rd plenary meeting on August 18 the Council decided by a vote of 9 to 6, with 2 abstentions, to defer consideration of it, along with other items, to the next session.

c. TEACHING OF THE PURPOSES AND PRINCIPLES, STRUCTURE AND ACTIVITIES OF THE UNITED NATIONS IN SCHOOLS OF MEMBER STATES

In implementation of General Assembly resolution 137(II)¹⁴¹ on the teaching of the purposes and principles, structure and activities of the United Nations in the schools of Member States, the Secretary-General of the United Nations, in co-operation with UNESCO, submitted to the seventh session of the Council an interim report (E/837 and Add. 1 and 2) on the activities and results accomplished by the United Nations, UNESCO and a number of non-governmental organizations.

This interim report was divided into two parts. The first, prepared by the Secretary-General, included information on the steps they had taken to implement the Assembly's resolution transmitted to the Secretary-General or to UNESCO by Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Byelorussian S.S.R., Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, France, Greece, India, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Philippines, Siam, Sweden, Switzerland, Union of South Africa, U.S.S.R. and United States; an analysis of the experience of the League of Nations in the promotion of teaching about international co-operation; and an enumeration of the programs and activities of non-governmental organizations in this field. The second part was prepared by UNESCO and dealt with its own functions and activities in regard to teaching about the United Nations.

The Council's discussions, in the 198th plenary meeting on August 13, centred around a draft resolution proposed by China (E/944) (see below).

It was generally agreed that the importance of teaching about the United Nations was universally recognized.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that while his Government had supported and implemented the Assembly resolution, he could not support the Chinese draft resolution, which, by extending the scope of the resolution to teaching about the specialized agencies, would take the United Nations further than had been intended by the Assembly resolution.

The Council adopted by 15 votes, with 1 abstention¹, the Chinese draft resolution with amendments suggested by France and China respectively, which would have the Council recommend Member States to intensify their efforts in this direction, and would include teaching about the specialized agencies as well as about the United Nations.

In its resolution (170(VII)) the Council commended the program developed by the United Nations and UNESCO on the subject; requested the Secretary-General and UNESCO to continue in close collaboration their efforts in this direction and to report jointly and regularly to the Council; and recommended Member States to make full use of the information and advice which the United Nations and UNESCO can provide on the subject, and to intensify efforts to promote in their respective territories the teaching of the purposes, the principles, structure and activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

d. INTERNATIONAL FACILITIES FOR THE PROMOTION OF TRAINING IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION

The Council at its sixth session had before it an item proposed by the representative of Brazil on international facilities for the promotion of training in public administration (E/610 and Rev.1 and Add.1).

The Council discussed the proposal at its 151st plenary meeting on February 24, 1948. The U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives opposed the idea of establishing an international institute, on the grounds that the economic and social structures of different countries were so dissimilar as to make it impossible to draw up general principles of administration. The Canadian representative felt that it was inadvisable to ask the Secretariat to undertake further special studies before substantial results had been achieved on other subjects initiated by the Council a long time ago. The Belgian representative, on the suggestion of the Netherlands representative, was invited to explain to the Council the work of the Institut de Bruxelles. He suggested that the purpose of the Institut was the same as that envisaged in the Brazilian proposal, and that its activities might be extended to carry out the program proposed by Brazil. The United Kingdom and French representatives felt that there were sufficient points in common between different national administrative systems for an international survey to be valuable; the Polish representative, while recognizing that notable differences did exist between the administrative systems of different countries, accepted the idea of a survey.

The United States representative supported in principle the Brazilian proposal, and suggested that account should be taken of the studies already begun by UNESCO and the existence of the Institut, which was doing similar work in Belgium. He introduced amendments, which were accepted by the Brazilian representative, providing for consultations with appropriate public and private international organizations and providing that the study should be concerned with the "means for promoting the science of administration on the international plane" instead of "the establishment of an international centre especially devoted to the science of administration" as proposed by Brazil.

By 12 votes to 2, with 3 abstentions, the Council adopted the Brazilian draft resolution with amendments introduced by the United States, the United Kingdom and Denmark.

This resolution (123(VI)) recommended that the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, the International Civil Service Advisory Board and appropriate public and private international organizations, should prepare a study concerning the development of international facilities for the promotion of the science of administration, so as to provide adequate training for an increasing number of candidates of proved ability recruited on the widest possible geographical basis, but mainly from the countries in greatest need of access to the principles, procedures and methods of modern administration.

The Secretary-General presented to the seventh session of the Council a report (E/849) in which he stated that study of available documentary materials had been initiated, contact established with various authorities in the field of public administration, and discussions begun with representatives of the specialized agencies to ascertain what facilities they might offer within the broad field covered by the Council's resolution.

The report stated that the question was to be discussed also by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions during its meeting in the autumn. The Secretary-General pointed out, however, that the scope of the study and the desirability of consulting the International Civil Service Advisory Board made it probable that the Secretary-General's complete report could not be made before the spring of 1949.

The subject was also on the agenda of the seventh session, but in view of the pressure of business in the Council and the situation described in the progress report, the representative of Brazil withdrew the item from the agenda of that session.

e. CO-ORDINATION OF CARTOGRAPHIC SERVICES OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES AND INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

During its sixth session (at the 149th meeting on February 19) the Council considered a Brazilian proposal (E/695) for the co-ordination of cartographic services of specialized agencies and international organizations. The proposal contained a reference to communications which had been received during 1947 from the United States delegation (E/257), the French delegation (E/258) and the Danish delegation (E/483, forwarding a communication from the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea). The U.S.S.R. representative suggested that the proposal should be deferred in view of more urgent tasks. The Council, however, adopted by 12 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions, the Brazilian proposal, with the addition of clauses providing that the action recommended to the Secretary-General should be taken within the limits of budgetary availabilities and that in co-ordinating the plans and programs of the United Nations and specialized agencies in the field of cartography he should take into account the work of the various governmental and non-governmental organizations, and that he should report to a subsequent session of the Council. The resolution (131(VI)) adopted by the Council reads as follows:

"Whereas accurate maps are a prerequisite to the proper development of the world resources which in many cases lie in relatively unexplored regions;

"Whereas such maps facilitate international trade, promote safety of navigation, by air and sea, and provide information required for the study of measures of peaceful adjustment under Chapter VI of the Charter, and for the application of security measures contemplated in Chapter VII of the Charter;

"Whereas the co-ordination of the cartographic services of the United Nations and specialized agencies, as well as those of the Member nations, will result in significant economies in cost, time and personnel, and will contribute to the improvement of cartographic techniques and standards;

"Whereas several Member Governments have already indicated their interest in a co-ordinated programme of international cartography,

"The Economic and Social Council therefore

"Recommends:

"(i) That the Member Governments stimulate the accurate survey and mapping of their national territories;

"(ii) That the Secretary-General take appropriate action within the limits of budgetary availabilities:

"(a) To further such efforts by promoting the exchange of technical information and other means, including the preparation of a study on modern cartographic methods and development of uniform international standards;

"(b) To co-ordinate the plans and programmes of the United Nations and specialized agencies in the field of cartography, taking account of the work in this field of the various inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and to report on these matters to a subsequent session of the Council;

"(c) To develop close co-operation with cartographic services of interested Member Governments."

f. WORLD CALENDAR

At the fourth session of the Economic and Social Council, the representative of Peru submitted a draft resolution on the appointment of an ad hoc committee to study the question of a "World Calendar" (E/291). After a preliminary study of the problem, the Council postponed further discussion of the proposal until its next session, and invited the Secretary-General to prepare whatever material was readily available for the consideration of the Council on the subject of revision of the calendar, and to communicate to Member Governments of the United Nations the proposed resolution (resolution 54(IV)).

At the fifth session of the Council, the Secretary-General submitted a note (E/465 and Add. 1, 2 and 3) on the work done in the field of calendar reform by international organizations, especially by the League of Nations. Relevant documents and an extensive bibliography on this question which had been compiled by the Secretariat, were submitted to the Council. On July 21, 1947, at its 86th plenary meeting, the Council adopted a resolution proposed by the United States and supported by India, the U.S.S.R. and the United Kingdom, to postpone the consideration of the question of universal adoption of a World Calendar (resolution 97 (V)).

g. METRIC SYSTEM

The Economic and Social Council, at its 86th plenary meeting on July 21, 1947, considered a Norwegian proposal (E/472) for the examination of the question of the universal adoption of the International Metric System of Measures and Weights and of the Decimal System of Currencies and Coinage. The representative of Norway argued that the universal adoption of one system would further world trade and speed reconstruction. He proposed that the Secretariat be asked to study the question in preparation for the next or a later session of the Council, so that a report could be presented to the governments for their decision.

The representatives of the United Kingdom, India and New Zealand suggested postponement of the study in view of the pressure of work on the Secretariat. The United Kingdom representative suggested that the item should be dropped from the agenda for the time being; it could be brought up again by a member of the Council at a later session. The French representative suggested that the Secretariat be asked to make a preliminary study, for example, on costs and distribution of work in order to give the Council a basis on which to take action during the next session. The representative of the United Kingdom could not accept the French amendment, stating that his original stand for postponement was not prompted by financial considerations alone but by the fact that he felt that the proposal should be made at a more propitious time.

By a vote of 8 to 4, with 6 abstentions, the Council decided to drop the item from the agenda for the time being.

H. OTHER ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS

1. Implementation of Recommendations on Economic and Social Matters

In its resolution 119(II) of October 31, 1947, the General Assembly

"Calls upon all Member States to carry out all recommendations of the General Assembly passed on economic and social matters;

"Recommends, furthermore, that in fulfilment of Article 64 of the Charter of the United Nations, the Secretary-General report annually to the Economic and Social Council and that the latter report to the General Assembly on steps taken by the Member Governments to give effect to the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council as well as to the recommendations made by the General Assembly on matters falling within the Council's competence."

The Secretary-General brought the General Assembly's resolution to the attention of the members of the Council on January 22, 1948. This matter was also on the agenda of the Council at its sixth session, but it was decided on February 27, 1948, to defer consideration of this subject to the seventh session. Subsequently, on May 17 and 27, the Secretary-General requested Members of the United Nations to notify him of action which they had taken to implement the recommendations referred to in General Assembly resolution 119(II).

This question was on the agenda of the Council at its seventh session. The Council had before it a report from the Secretary-General (E/963) and the information received from Member Governments up to August 28, 1948, the date on which this question was considered (E/963/Add. 1-19). In view of the fact that in the time available it had not been practicable to ensure that the information was full and up to date, and that the Council had not time to discuss the question in sufficient detail, the Council after a short discussion at its 128th plenary meeting on August 28, on the basis of a draft resolution presented by the President (E/1021), adopted resolution 177 (VII), which stated that the great importance of this question warranted a more extensive examination than the Council had been able to give to it in 1948. The Council also decided to forward to the General Assembly for its information the report of the Secretary-General and the statements by Member States, and to consider this matter at its eighth session.

2. Housing and Town and Country Planning

The Social Commission, at its second session (E/578/Rev.1, resolution No. 8), endorsed the Secretary-General's proposals (E/CN.5/31) as to the program of its future activities in the field of housing and town and country planning. At the same time it noted the interests of some other commissions, notably of the Economic and Employment Commission, of the Population Commission, of the Statistical Commission and of the Economic Commission for Europe, as well as of several specialized agencies, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, in certain aspects of the problem of housing and town and country planning. It requested the Secretary-General to study the problems of housing and town and country planning, to co-ordinate the activities of the various bodies interested in these problems and to report the results of these studies and co-ordination efforts to the third session of the Social Commission. It also requested the Secretary-General to proceed with the preparations for a publication of an international housing review and of information concerning housing legislation in various countries; and approved the Secretary-General's proposals concerning the calling of small meetings of experts on particular technical matters in the housing field.

The question was discussed by the Council at its sixth session at the 28th meeting of the Social Committee on February 17 and the 157th plenary meeting on March 1. The representative of Venezuela expressed gratification at the satisfactory results of a meeting of a small group of experts held at Caracas, Venezuela, in December 1947 to discuss tropical housing, and hoped that similar meetings would be held elsewhere. The United Kingdom representative also felt that small meetings of experts could be useful. The Danish representative questioned the value of holding international conferences on the subject, and felt that other forms of collaboration, such as establishing liaison between building research institutions in the various countries, might be useful. He questioned the necessity for an international review of housing and town and country planning problems in view of the number of private publications on the subject. This view was shared by the Australian representative.

The United States representative felt that the first step in implementing the program on housing should be a detailed report by the Secretariat indicating what was being done by the many inter-governmental organizations interested in the problem.

The United States and United Kingdom proposed two draft resolutions (E/AC.7/56 and 58). Both resolutions called for a report from the Secretary-General, but the United Kingdom resolution in addition would have authorized the Secretary-General to call small meetings of experts within the limits of budgetary possibilities and would have approved the decision of the Commission to turn its attention first to housing in tropical areas.

The Polish representative proposed (see E/AC.7/SR.28, p. 6) that priority should be given to "studies of the problem of housing and town and country planning in war-devastated areas where immediate action in co-ordination with the regional economic commissions can be taken". The United States resolution was accepted by 15 votes to 1 by the Council, with certain amendments suggested by the United States representative to take account of points put forward in the Polish and United Kingdom proposals. In its resolution 122(VI)D, adopted on March 1, 1948, the Council approved the principles set forth in the Social Commission's resolution, and requested that the Secretary-General submit to the seventh session of the Council a report outlining the several activities of the specialized agencies, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and subsidiary organs of the Council in this field, and the measures taken toward their co-ordination. It also suggested to the Secretary-General that he include in his budgetary estimates for 1949 provision for not more than two small meetings of experts on particular technical matters in the housing field, and draw the attention of the then existing regional economic commissions to the importance of giving further consideration to the problems of housing in the war-devastated countries.

At its third session the Social Commission discussed the report of the fifth session of the Inter-departmental (Technical ad hoc) Committee on Housing and Town and Country Planning, a body consisting of the officers working on the subject in the Secretariat of the United Nations and the various specialized agencies, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations concerned (E/CN.5/51). It also discussed an outline of the Secretary-General's report to the seventh session of the Council on the several activities of these organizations. The Commission considered the form of the report and requested the Secretariat, when completing it, to take into account the opinions that had been advanced by members of the Commission. During the discussion, particular emphasis was laid on the desirability of hastening the publication of the review on housing and town and country planning, designed to disseminate technical information on housing legislation as well as on the results of research into constructional methods and the availability of building materials (E/779).

The Social Commission also emphasized that the two meetings of experts authorized by the Council at its sixth session would require long and careful preparation.

The Secretary-General's report (E/802) was presented to the seventh session of the Council. It dealt with the activities and interests in the field of these specialized agencies: Food and Agriculture Organization, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, International Labour Organisation, International Refugee Organization, United National Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and World Health Organization; of these subsidiary organs of the Council: Social, Population, Human Rights, Status of Women, Statistical and Economic and Employment Commissions, the Economic Commissions for Europe, for Asia and the Far East, and for Latin America and the forthcoming Scientific Conference on Conservation and Utilization of Resources; of the Trusteeship Council and the Special Committee to Examine Information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter; of these non-governmental organizations: American Federation of Labor, International Co-operative Alliance, International Federation for Housing and Town Planning, International Union of Local Authorities and World Federation of Trade Unions; and of these inter-governmental organizations: Caribbean Commission, Pan American Union and South Pacific Commission. It also showed what steps had been taken to co-ordinate these activities.

The questions being studied included: housing standards, housing needs, health and welfare, housing in special areas including problems of reconstruction, housing of special groups, land planning, finance, building materials, methods of construction, housing costs, organization of the building industry, training, employment and industrial relations, collection and dissemination of information, and research, advice and conferences.

The Council discussed the question at the 51st meeting of the Social Committee on July 30 on the basis of a joint draft resolution submitted by the United States, Venezuela, Chile and Brazil (E/AC.7/W.32). This provided that the Council should request the Secretary-General to continue the activities in the field of housing and town and country planning previously authorized and submit to the Council's next session an "effective and integrated" program of study and activity in this field reflecting the interests and activities of the specialized agencies, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations, and to take into consideration any advice from interested commissions.

The French representative, stressing the importance of the publication of the review on housing and town and country planning, proposed a verbal amendment which was accepted by the authors of the resolution, to add a provision that this should be undertaken as soon as possible.

The French and Venezuelan representatives also stressed the importance of the meetings of experts on housing in tropical areas. The Danish representative, however, expressed concern at the large number of international organizations active in this field, and the U.S.S.R. representative thought that an excessive number of commissions was dealing with the subject. The Danish and Australian representatives expressed the view that on the international plane the question could more appropriately be handled by the regional commissions. The United Kingdom and Danish representatives also raised the question of the costs of the proposed program. After various amendments had been adopted in the Social Committee with the object of clarifying the text, the Council at its 198th plenary meeting on August 13 adopted by 15 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, resolution 155(VII)F, which reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on activities in the field of housing and town and country planning,

"Considering that a programme in this field should be initiated at the earliest possible opportunity,

"Requests the Secretary-General:

"(a) To continue the activities regarding the field of housing and town and country planning previously authorized by Council resolution 122 (VI) D;

"(b) To begin as soon as possible the publication of a bulletin on housing and town and country planning, the establishment of which had already been decided by Council resolution 50 (IV) of 28 March 1947; and

"(c) To develop and submit to the Council at its next session suggestions for an effective and integrated programme of study and activity in this field, which should reflect the interests and activities of the interested commissions, specialized agencies, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations."

3. Technical Assistance to Member Governments

On December 14, 1946, the General Assembly adopted resolution 52(I)¹⁴² referring to the Economic and Social Council for study

"the question of providing effective ways and means for furnishing, in co-operation with the specialized agencies, expert advice in the economic, social and cultural fields to Member nations who desire this assistance."

The Economic and Social Council at its fourth session, on March 29, 1947, adopted resolution 51 (IV),¹⁴³ instructing the Secretary-General to establish machinery within the Secretariat to render assistance to Member Governments in obtaining information on expert personnel, research facilities and other resources that could be made available to them by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and on the elaboration of plans and programs for utilizing such personnel, facilities and resources. The Secretary-General was also to assist Members in securing expert advice, particularly in the form of teams of experts who would study specific problems and recommend solutions to the Governments concerned.

¹⁴³ Ibid., p. 540.

The Secretary-General was instructed to work in close co-operation with the specialized agencies and to obtain a report on the subject from the Co-ordination Committee for submission to the Council's fifth session if possible. He was further instructed to study, in co-operation with the Co-ordination Committee, the general procedures and terms, including financial arrangements, that might be followed by the United Nations and specialized agencies with respect to such technical assistance.

Accordingly the Secretary-General submitted to the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council an Interim Report on Expert Assistance to Member Governments (E/471 and Adds. 1, 2 and 3).

a. INTERIM REPORT ON EXPERT ASSISTANCE

In his report the Secretary-General pointed out that expert assistance was a normal service which the United Nations and the specialized agencies performed for their Member States; in the case of some of the specialized agencies this was an important and basic function. As the provision of advice by correspondence or personal contact entailed no separable costs or special administrative arrangements, the report related more particularly to types of requests involving special arrangements or costs, such as the provision of experts for a substantial period of time.

The Secretary-General reported that he had made provision within the Secretariat for handling requests from Member Governments, as requested in the Economic and Social Council's resolution of March 28, 1947, and that the specialized agencies had also established channels for the prompt handling of such requests.

With regard to the general report from the Co-ordination Committee requested by the Council, consultations were taking place with a view to preparing a paper with regard to problems and procedures for submission to the Co-ordination Committee which it was expected would meet in September or October 1947. Meanwhile the Secretariat was continuing consultation with appropriate technical representatives of the specialized agencies on the requests received in addition to those made under the General Assembly resolution 58(I) transferring to the United Nations the advisory social welfare functions of UNRRA.¹⁴⁴

As regards the third part of the Council's resolution instructing the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Co-ordination Committee, to study the general procedure and terms which the United Nations and the specialized agencies might follow in providing expert advice, the Secretary-General reported that to provide a basis for the preparation of a working paper for submission to the Co-ordination Committee, he had requested the specialized agencies to transmit statements of their experience to date and descriptive analyses of their handling of certain general problems.

In his report the Secretary-General listed certain fields in which the Secretariat of the United Nations was equipped to provide expert assistance or arrange for its provision. These were as follows:

Economic: including among others the fields of economic development, reconstruction, stability, employment, international trade, currency, balances of payments and international investments.

Social: including among others the fields of social welfare (social welfare administration, child welfare, physical rehabilitation, fellowship programs, prevention of crime and treatment of offenders, standards of living, housing, etc.).

Statistical: including such fields as social, population and vital statistics, the statistics of national income and expenditure, industry, agriculture, trade, transport and finance; the development of adequate national statistical programs; the organization of national statistical systems and offices, including survey and data collection methods, questionnaire and form design, census and registration procedures, processing and tabulation methods; and the application of statistical methods, including sampling theory and practice.

Human Rights: including freedom of information, freedom of discussion, status of women, freedom of minorities.

Narcotic Drugs: including control of traffic in drugs, production of raw materials, and measures to combat drug addiction.

Fiscal: including, among other fields, standards of public finance organization and management, relations between public spending and financing; structure and administration of tax systems, international double taxation, fiscal evasion and other international tax problems.

Transport and Communications: including the fields of telecommunications, aviation, maritime navigation, inland transport (railways, roads, waterways, pipelines, power), passport and frontier formalities, postal matters.

Legal Affairs: including projects relating to the development and codification of international law in public, private or penal fields, and projects of a legal character involving comparative law studies in private and public law.

Non-Self-Governing Territories: particularly as regards economic and social conditions subject, in the case of Trust Territories, to the control of the Trusteeship Council.

Public Administration: including civil service systems, accounting methods, and budgetary and financial practices.

Under the General Assembly's resolution 58(I) assistance had been extended in the fields of social welfare administration, child welfare, physical rehabilitation and fellowships to the following countries: Albania, Austria, China, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Greece, Italy, Philippines, Poland and Yugoslavia. The Secretariat had made available an expert on fiscal matters to Venezuela and was considering a request from Peru for technical assistance in connection with that Government's narcotic drug control system. At the request of the Canadian Government, advice was given to a special joint parliamentary committee of the Canadian Legislature concerned with the preparation of an international bill of rights.

During the period under review, the following arrangements for financing the cost of technical assistance were in effect.

Where the assistance provided through the United Nations Secretariat was limited to documentation or correspondence, no separable costs were envisaged. The costs for expert assistance in the social welfare field provided for in the General Assembly resolution 58(I) were provided for in the 1947 budget of the United Nations. In other instances where experts were assigned from the staff of the United Nations Secretariat, the Secretary-General proposed (E/471/Add.1)

"to follow the general policy that the United Nations will pay the salaries of such staff so long as replacement is not required and to request Governments to reimburse the United Nations for other costs. Where provision of experts from the staff of the United Nations necessitates temporary replacement of personnel, the Secretary-General proposes to request the Governments seeking assistance to pay for the cost involved in making such replacements."

Sums for advances to be made to Member Governments for expenses other than salaries would be made available either from normal budgetary appropriations, if expenses were small, or from the Working Capital Fund, through the revolving fund created to finance self-liquidating activities.

Statements on expert assistance from the following specialized agencies were also presented: Food and Agriculture Organization; United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; International Civil Aviation Organization; Interim Commission of the World Health Organization; International Bank for Reconstruction and Development; International Monetary Fund; International Labour Organisation. These statements outlined the functions of these agencies in regard to providing expert assistance, and reviewed their activities in this field.¹⁴⁵

b. CONSIDERATION OF THE REPORT AT THE COUNCIL'S FIFTH SESSION

The Secretary-General's report was considered by the Council at its 113th plenary meeting on August 12, 1947. The representative of Venezuela felt that the Secretary-General's note departed in substance from the intention of the Council's resolution; he believed that some machinery should have been created for rendering expert assistance. This view was shared by the Chilean representative. The U.S.S.R. representative could not see how, with limited personnel, the Secretariat could implement the provisions concerning expert assistance outlined in the report. He also felt that it would be more appropriate if arrangements for advances by the United Nations to Member Governments to facilitate the rendering of expert assistance were made in each particular case rather than that a general policy governing the whole question should be laid down. The Acting President pointed out that in view of budgetary and other problems it would be difficult to create special machinery in the Secretariat at the present time. He also pointed out that the views of the U.S.S.R. representative would be brought to the attention of the Secretary-General, since the report submitted by the Secretariat was only an interim one. The Indian representative suggested that one or more officials be designated within the Secretariat to handle requests for expert assistance so as to achieve co-ordination; some reference might be made to that aspect of the matter in the Secretary-General's final report.

The Council decided without a vote to take note of the Secretary-General's interim report (resolution 96(V)).

c. SUMMARY OF TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AVAILABLE OR CONTEMPLATED IN THE FIELD OF DEVELOPMENT, MID-1948

The United Nations Secretariat at the request of the Sub-Commission on Economic Development—a Sub-Commission of the Economic and Employment Commission—prepared in the middle of 1948 a summary of the technical assistance then available or contemplated in the field of development through the United Nations and the specialized agencies (E/CN.1/61, pp. 22-28).¹⁴⁶ This summary, based on information supplied by the United Nations and by the specialized agencies, listed the following forms of technical assistance available at the end of June 1948.

(1) Technical and Educational Missions

Experts had been sent out by the United Nations and most of the specialized agencies to ¹⁴⁵For the functions of the specialized agencies and their activities in the period under review, see pp. 817-983.

¹⁴⁶See also Part Two: The Specialized Agencies, pp. 817-983.

provide, upon the request of Member Governments, technical assistance in economic development. The fields of activity, origins and destinations of individuals and groups sent out for this purpose are indicated in the table on page 661.

(2) Fellowships and Technical Training

Fellowships for study abroad were provided by WHO and UNICEF in public health, by UNESCO in various branches of education and by the United Nations in the field of social welfare administration. Opportunities for training in their home countries or nearby countries had been made available by the United Nations and a number of the specialized agencies, among them FAO, which had conducted regional seminars on certain aspects of agriculture and which had set up in Baghdad a school for training in agricultural statistics; WHO, which had offered to students from Member countries opportunities for study at research centres operated by the Organization; and the United Nations, which had conducted regional seminars in Latin America for social welfare. These studies result in publication, from time to time, of special technical reports and sometimes special texts or methodological guides on selected aspects of development.

In addition to such occasional publications by each of the agencies, FAO produces periodical publications in the fields of agriculture, forestry, and fisheries; the United Nations in the field of transportation; ITU in the field of communications; ILO in the field of labor and employment; and WHO in the field of public health. Bibliographies of current literature in their respective fields are published by FAO, ICAO and ITU, and the United Nations was proposing the publication of a periodical to include current bibliographies in the field of housing. UNESCO was preparing various technical bibliographies including, for example, bibliographies of films for technical training in various fields.

(3) National Committees and Regional Dissemination Centres

Facilities for the internal dissemination of technical advice had been organized by two agencies: FAO, in the fields of agriculture, forestry and fisheries; and UNESCO, in the field of education in general. For this purpose, FAO now has national committees operating in a large number of Member countries. UNESCO had set up Field Science Co-operation Offices in Rio de Janeiro, Nanking, Cairo and New Delhi to serve, among other things, as reception and distribution offices for scientific information.

(4) International Conferences

In addition to the regular conferences of the deliberative bodies of the international organizations, a number of the agencies—particularly FAO, WHO, ILO and the Fund—had established international panels of experts to consult on particular problems in their respective fields. A number of agencies, as well as the United Nations, had convened or were planning special international conferences of experts. Among these may be mentioned, for example, the United Nations Scientific Conference on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources, the World Statistical Congress and the 30-country conference on balance of payments statistics.

Regional conferences played an important part in the programs of FAO, ILO and the regional economic commissions of the United Nations, but were not limited to these agencies.

(5) Regional Economic Commissions

Machinery for technical assistance in certain regions of the world is available in the Economic Commissions for Europe, for Asia and the Far East, and for Latin America. These Commissions are empowered, inter alia, to initiate and participate in measures for facilitating concerted action for raising the level of economic activity within the respective areas, and to make or sponsor such investigations and studies of economic and technological problems of and development within member countries and territories as they may deem appropriate. The Economic Commission for Europe had created a number of committees, subcommittees and other bodies to consider particular problems of reconstruction and development, and through them had provided information and analyses on such subjects as coal, electric power, industry, inland transport and housing.

The Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East had undertaken studies of more pressing problems in the region with which it is concerned, including, for example, the problem of technical training and technical assistance to member countries of the region.

(6) International Laboratories

In connection with the administration of biological standards, WHO was continuing the agreement established by the League of Nations Health Organization whereby the State Serum Institute at Copenhagen and the laboratory of the Medical Research Council at Hampstead (London) actually prepare and distribute standard medical substances, as well as engage in experimental work incident to the establishment of biological standards. WHO had also enlisted the co-operation of established laboratories in various parts of the world for experimental research in connection with its program on biological standardization.

(7) Provision of Equipment and Supplies

UNESCO had provided certain types of essential supplies and equipment to Members, chiefly in the form of laboratory equipment and technical publications. WHO had provided medicines and medical literature, largely in connection with its technical missions. FAO had distributed hybrid corn seed in connection with the promotion of improved agriculture in certain of its Member countries. The United Nations, in the closely related field of social welfare, had made available demonstration equipment, chiefly for the rehabilitation of the disabled.

(8) Fields and Countries Receiving Technical Assistance

The summary (E/CN.1/61) prepared by the United Nations Secretariat contained a table showing the fields and countries in which technical assistance for the promotion of economic development had been or was soon to be rendered by experts sent out by the United Nations and the specialized agencies. (This table is reproduced in substance on p. 661.)

d. ACTION OF THE COUNCIL AT ITS SEVENTH SESSION

The question of technical assistance was again considered by the Economic and Social Council at its seventh session in conjunction with the report of its Economic and Employment Commission.¹⁴⁷ In addition to the resolutions adopted by the Council on the basis of this report, the Council also adopted resolution 149(VII)C¹⁴⁸ inviting the Statistical Commission to consider how statistically under-developed countries requiring assistance in remedying deficiencies of statistical data could be helped to improve their basic statistical services.

4. Social Aspects of the Activities of the Regional Economic Commissions

The Social Commission, at its third session, discussed the close relationship between social problems and the economic problems falling within the scope of the regional economic commissions. It recommended (E/779) to the Council that it request these commissions to communicate with the Social Commission questions of this kind for the purpose of obtaining its opinion.

In accordance with this recommendation, the Council at its seventh session, after adopting at the 50th meeting of the Social Committee on July 29 an amendment proposed by the United States representative that the request should be made to the Secretary-General in view of his over-all responsibilities, at its 198th plenary meeting on August 13, 1948, adopted by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, resolution 155(VII)G. In this resolution the Council requested the Secretary-General to keep the Social Commission informed of such matters considered by the regional economic commissions as should, in the judgment of such commissions or of the Secretary-General, be brought to the attention of the Social Commission.

5. Provisional Questionnaire of the Trusteeship Council

In resolution 7(I), adopted during its first session, on April 28, 1947, the Trusteeship Council had decided to transmit its Provisional Trusteeship Questionnaire (T/44) to the Economic and Social Council and to the specialized agencies for their advice and comments on those sections which dealt with subjects of special concern to them.

During its fifth session, on August 16, 1947 (resolution 88(V)), the Economic and Social Council resolved to transmit the pertinent parts of the Provisional Trusteeship Questionnaire to its various functional commissions for their consideration and recommendations.

The Council's Economic and Employment Commission considered the Questionnaire at its third session (April 19 to May 6, 1948) (E/790) but felt that it did not have sufficient time to make a thorough examination. The task of thoroughly examining the document in question was entrusted to a committee composed of the representatives of Belgium, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, France, Poland, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States, which was instructed to formulate definite suggestions on the Questionnaire for the consideration of the Economic and Employment Commission at the latter's fourth session, to be held between the Economic and Social Council's first and second sessions in 1949.

At its third session, the Statistical Commission informed (E/795) the Economic and Social Council on May 26, 1948, that the present status of experience in the use of the statistical aspects of the Provisional Trusteeship Questionnaire did not yet permit the formulation of definitive proposals for revisions. It suggested that the matter be deferred until such a formulation might prove possible and that the Secretariat continue its examination of replies to the Provisional Questionnaire, with a view to suggesting modifications.

The Transport and Communications Commission, during its second session, held from April 12 to 20, 1948, adopted a resolution (E/789, p.18) recommending certain modifications in the sections of the Provisional Questionnaire dealing with transport and communications.

Similarly, the Commission on the Status of Women, at its second session held from January 5 to 19, 1948, suggested certain modifications in those parts of the Trusteeship Questionnaire which dealt with the status of women in Trust Territories. The Commission's report to the Economic and Social Council (E/615) also noted that some members of the Commission had expressed the wish that a Commission representative be permitted to participate, without vote, in Trusteeship Council discussions involving the rights of women, and, if this were not possible, that some other appropriate means of participation be found.

The Social Commission reported (E/779, p.14) to the Economic and Social Council that at the Commission's third session, held from April 5 to 23, 1948, it had been decided to refer to the Council for consideration a series of recommendations regarding changes in questions relating to the social sphere of the Provisional Trusteeship Questionnaire. These recommendations had been proposed by the representatives of Czechoslovakia, the Netherlands, Poland and the United States, respectively, and had been collated in a single document (E/CN.5/80).

Modifications in the parts of the Provisional Questionnaire dealing with demographic topics were suggested (E/805) by the Population Commission during the latter's third session, held from May 10 to 25, 1948.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its third session, held from May 3 to 22, 1948, suggested (E/799) that a section of the Provisional Questionnaire be headed "Narcotic Drugs" and that it should include a number of specific questions as drafted by the Commission.

The Commission on Human Rights, at its second session, held from December 2 to 17, 1947, suggested (E/600) a draft resolution in which the Economic and Social Council would request the Trusteeship Council to consider the Human Rights section of its Questionnaire as provisional "until the Commission on Human Rights is able to review it in the light of an approved Bill of Human Rights". The Commission noted that the representative of the U.S.S.R. had suggested a number of specific questions for inclusion, as addenda, in the Provisional Questionnaire. (The questions suggested by the representative of the U.S.S.R. were contained in the Commission's report to the Economic and Social Council, (E/600, p. 14)).

Consideration of these recommendations and observations of the Commissions by the Economic and Social Council at the latter's seventh session was brief and did not involve any major differences of opinion, nor was there in most cases prolonged debate in the Economic, Social and Human Rights Committees, to which the Council referred all but one of the observations of the functional commissions. The exception was the relevant section of the report of the Commission on Human Rights (E/600), which was transmitted to the Trusteeship Council without reference to committee.

At its 225th plenary meeting, on August 28 to 29, 1948, the Council had before it a draft resolution (E/1037) presented by the President, which would have the Council adopt the relevant observations and suggestions of the functional commissions and transmit them to the Trusteeship Council. The representatives of the United Kingdom, France, the United States and Canada felt that the word "adopts" was not altogether justified since there had been little or no discussion by the Council of the observations on, and proposed modifications of, the Provisional Trusteeship Questionnaire, although they stressed that they had few if any objections regarding the substance of the proposed modifications. The representative of the U.S.S.R. favored retention of the President's draft, saying that the Council could, if it wished, discuss the substance of the recommendations. He also proposed the addition of the report of the second session of the Commission on Human Rights to the list of documents to be forwarded to the Trusteeship Council, a proposal which was adopted unanimously.

The Council, by a vote of 14 to 3, with 1 abstention, adopted a United States amendment, as revised by Canada, to make the pertinent passage of the draft resolution omit the word "adopts", making it read "decides to transmit their observations thereon". The amended resolution was adopted unanimously.

In its operative part, the resolution (163(VII)) recorded the Council's decision to transmit to the Trusteeship Council the observation and recommendations of the eight functional commissions mentioned above, together with copies of the summary records of the Council's various committees at which they were considered.

6. Draft Rules for the Calling of International Conferences

The General Assembly at its second session invited the Secretary-General "to prepare, in consultation with the Economic and Social Council, draft rules for the calling of international conferences, as provided in paragraph 4 of Article 62 of the Charter, for consideration at the third session of the General Assembly" (resolution 173(II)).¹⁴⁹

During its sixth session (125th plenary meeting on February 3) the Council adopted without discussion a resolution (135(VI)) instructing the Secretary-General to prepare in accordance with the General Assembly's resolution 173(II) of November 17 draft rules for the calling of international conferences.

The Secretary-General prepared a paper on the subject (E/836) to serve as a basis for discussion in the Council. The Council during its seventh session (178th plenary meeting on July 20) decided by 9 votes to 8 to defer the consideration of the draft Rules for the Calling of International Conferences.

I. CO-ORDINATION OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

1. Agreements between the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies

Under Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter, the Economic and Social Council, through its Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies, had, as of September 21, 1948, negotiated agreements with eleven agencies. Four of these agreements—with the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO)—were concluded and entered into force before the second session of the General Assembly in September 1947. Four further agreements subsequently came into force—with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Monetary Fund, the Universal Postal Union (UPU) and the World Health Organization (WHO). A fifth, with the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), was to come into force on January 1, 1949, at the same time as the revised International Telecommunication Convention. Agreements with two other agencies—the International Refugee Organization (IRO) and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO)—were negotiated during the period between the second and third regular sessions of the General Assembly, and negotiations had been authorized with the International Trade Organization (ITO) (or its Interim Commission) and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO).

a. AGREEMENTS WITH THE WHO, UPU, ITU, INTERNATIONAL BANK AND INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

(1) Draft Agreement with the World Health Organization (WHO)

At its third session, the Council adopted a resolution (14(III)) directing the Secretary-General to initiate as soon as possible conversations with the Interim Commission of WHO for the purpose of preparing an agreement to be negotiated at an early session of the Council. During the fifth session, on August 4, 1947, the Committee met with the Negotiating Committee of the Interim Commission of WHO and negotiated a draft agreement.

The Committee submitted a report and a draft agreement (E/541) to the Council at its fifth session. The Council at its 114th plenary meeting on August 13 without discussion approved the draft agreement for submission to the General Assembly (resolution 91(V)).¹⁵⁰

(2) Draft Agreement with the Universal Postal Union (UPU)

In accordance with a decision of the second session of the Council, the Secretary-General convened a meeting of postal experts in December 1946, at which the text of a draft agreement between the United Nations and UPU was adopted (E/CONF/POST/PC/W.17) and recommended to Member Governments. At its fourth session, the Council (resolution 35(IV)) authorized the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies to enter into negotiations at the appropriate time with the UPU with the purpose of bringing it into relation with the United Nations. The Committee met in Paris from June 17 to 20, 1947, with the Negotiating Committee of the Universal Postal Congress and negotiated a draft agreement, which was submitted to the fifth session of the Council (E/488).

The Committee's report and the draft agreement were considered by the Council at its 104th plenary meeting on August 4. The Norwegian delegation proposed a resolution (E/498) as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having examined the agreement entered into between its Committee on Negotiations with Specialized Agencies and the Universal Postal Union, and

"Bearing in mind that the General Assembly in its resolution No. 50 (I) of 14 December 1946, considered it essential that the policies and the activities of the Specialized Agencies and of the organs of the United Nations should be co-ordinated,

"Takes note of the special circumstances which made it impossible for the time being to reach an agreement with the Union in more close conformity with other agreements with Specialized Agencies, already approved by the General Assembly, and

"Considers that the agreement should be reviewed and revised at the earliest opportunity,

"States that the agreement with the Union should not be regarded as a precedent for future agreements with Specialized Agencies, and

"Recommends to the General Assembly that the agreement with the Universal Postal Union be approved with the above-mentioned reservations."

The Norwegian representative stated that the leading principle in concluding agreements with specialized agencies must be the co-ordination of the policies of the agencies, so that the agreements should be drawn up in such a way that the rights of the United Nations, as the supreme policy-making authority in the international field, should be clearly recognized. He also stressed that the agreements should make it possible for the General Assembly to co-ordinate the budgets of the various specialized agencies. The agreement with UPU was considerably weaker and less comprehensive than those concluded with ILO, FAO and UNESCO, and he hoped that co-operation between the two organizations would prove that a revision of the agreement was desirable and possible for both of them. He recommended that the agreement be approved, but that it should be made clear that the approval was given because of the special position of the UPU and should not be regarded as a precedent.

The French, United Kingdom and United States representatives emphasized that the agreement was the best that could be reached after negotiations with UPU and that it should be accepted without reservations. It might be possible to revise it in the light of experience but not until the next Universal Postal Congress, which would not meet for five years. The United Kingdom representative suggested the deletion of paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of the Norwegian draft resolution. At the suggestion of the United States representative the Norwegian representative agreed to deleting the words "with the above-mentioned reservations" from the last paragraph of the draft resolution. The Cuban representative felt that it would be regrettable if agreements were concluded with inter-governmental agencies which varied in their text and spirit from those already entered into.

At the suggestion of the Canadian representative the Norwegian draft resolution was voted on paragraph by paragraph, and all the paragraphs with the exception of the fourth were approved. The U.S.S.R. representative recorded an abstention on the sixth paragraph on the ground that the references in Article IV, paragraph 1, of the agreement to recommendations to Members of UPU were contrary to the Charter provisions, and that Article VI, paragraph 2 (providing that "no provision in the Universal Postal Convention or related agreements shall be construed as preventing or limiting any State in complying with its obligations to the United Nations"), was unnecessary.¹⁵¹

The Council at its 104th plenary meeting on August 4, 1947 by 16 votes to 0, with 1 abstention, adopted resolution 89(V), which reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having examined the draft agreement entered into between its Committee on Negotiations with Specialized Agencies and the Universal Postal Union, and

"Bearing in mind that the General Assembly in its resolution No. 50 (I) of 14 December 1946, considered it essential that the policies and the activities of the specialized agencies and of the organs of the United Nations should be co-ordinated,

"Takes note of the special circumstances which have made it impossible for the time being to reach an agreement with the Union in closer conformity with other agreements with specialized agencies, already approved by the General Assembly,

"States that the agreement with the Union should not be regarded as a precedent for future agreements with specialized agencies, and

"Recommends to the General Assembly that the draft agreement with the Universal Postal Union be approved."

(3) Draft Agreement with the International Telecommunication Union (ITU)

A decision of the second session of the Council provided for the calling of a preparatory conference of experts on telecommunications. This meeting was later cancelled, by agreement with the members of the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies. Particular regard was given to the fact that concurrent meetings of the Council during its fifth session and of the Plenipotentiary Conference of the ITU would take place in July and August 1947. By resolution 35(IV), adopted at its fourth session, the Council authorized its Committee to enter into negotiations at the proper time for the purpose of bringing ITU into relationship with the United Nations. The Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies met with the Negotiating Committee of ITU on August 12, 13 and 14, during the fifth session of the Council, and negotiated a draft agreement.

The Committee's report and draft agreement (E/551/Rev.1) were considered by the Council at its 120th plenary meeting on August 16. The Council adopted without objection a resolution which had been proposed by Norway (resolution 90(V)), similar to that previously adopted in the case of the draft agreement with the UPU.¹⁵²

- (4) Draft Agreements with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and with the International Monetary Fund

During the third session of the Council, the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies recommended (E/205) that every possible effort should be made to negotiate with the Bank and with the Fund, at an early session of the Council, draft agreements which would take into account the special characteristics of these organizations, and to submit these draft agreements to the second regular session of the General Assembly in 1947. At its third session, the Council (resolution 14(III)) directed the Secretary-General to strengthen and extend working relationships between the United Nations and the two organizations and to continue consultations with them with a view to initiating formal negotiations as soon as practicable. Relations with these organizations were developed during the year in accordance with these instructions. In July, the Bank and the Fund proposed a tripartite negotiation and transmitted drafts of agreements at the same time. During the fifth session, the Committee on Negotiations with the Inter-Governmental Agencies met with the Negotiating Committees of the Bank and the Fund, and negotiated draft agreements.

The Committee had regard to the responsibilities placed upon the two organizations by their Articles of Agreement in regard to the nature and method of their operations and the confidential character of some of their transactions, and to the fact that their budgets are financed from their general operating funds and not from annual contributions from Member Governments. The draft agreements were drawn up in a form that differed in a number of respects from that of previous agreements and refer specifically to the responsibilities of the two organizations. A number of other provisions were modified as compared with previous agreements. In the case of the draft agreement with the Bank, the United Nations recognized that the action to be taken by the Bank on any loan is a matter to be determined by the independent exercise of the Bank's own judgment in accordance with its Articles of Agreement; and that it would therefore be sound policy to refrain from making recommendations to the Bank with respect to particular loans.

The reports of the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies on these negotiations (E/558 and Corr.1 and E/559) were considered jointly by the Economic and Social Council at its 120th plenary meeting on August 16. The Norwegian and U.S.S.R. representatives strongly criticized the proposed agreements, in particular the draft agreement with the Bank. Both representatives criticized as being contrary to the relevant article of the Charter the provision (Article II, paragraph 1) which states that in addition to attending meetings of the Bank's Board of Governors, representatives of the United Nations may participate without vote "in meetings specially called by the Bank for the particular purpose of considering the United Nations point of view in matters of concern to the United Nations". Both also criticized as being contrary to the Charter the provision (Article X, paragraph 3) that the United Nations would agree in interpreting Article 17, paragraph 3, of the Charter (approval of budgetary arrangements with specialized agencies and examination of their administrative budgets) "to take into consideration that the Bank does not rely for its annual budget upon contributions from its Members, and that the appropriate authorities of the Bank enjoy full autonomy in deciding the form and content of such budget". The Norwegian representative also criticized the provisions of Article VI (Security Council). The U.S.S.R. representative criticized the provisions in Article IV to the effect that the United Nations would not make recommendations to the Bank in respect of loans, and also the provision in this article and the comparable article in the draft agreement with the ¹⁵² For text of agreement, see pp. 952-54.

Fund that the United Nations could not make recommendations to these two organizations if they did not wish to receive recommendations. The Norwegian representative recognized the special position of the Bank, but felt that it could have friendly relations with the Council without becoming a specialized agency.

The Chilean and Venezuelan representatives stated that they would vote in favor of the agreements, but expressed some criticisms. The Chilean representative feared lest the practically independent status which the Bank would obtain under the agreement might result in some loss of its capacity to pursue purposes differing widely from those of private trade institutions. The Venezuelan representative thought that it was unnecessary for the Bank to state its independence as categorically as it had in Article I and also took exception to the clause in Article IV reading "The United Nations recognized, therefore, that it would be sound policy to refrain from making recommendations to the Bank with respect to particular loans or with respect to the terms and conditions of financing by the Bank".

The United States, Netherlands, United Kingdom and Canadian representatives stressed the importance of concluding agreements with the two organizations and the necessity for allowing them the necessary amount of independence with which to carry on their work, in view of their special character, and held that relationship agreements must vary according to the type of agency. The United States representative pointed out that the Charter only provided for recommendations to specialized agencies; it did not transfer to the United Nations budgetary control over any of them. The Norwegian representative, however, stated that Article 17, paragraph 3, of the Charter constituted a very clear recommendation regarding budgetary control, and indicated the discrepancies between Article X of the draft agreement and the conditions laid down in the Charter; his delegation reserved the right to raise the question before the General Assembly as to whether the Council was entitled so to depart from the provisions of the Charter.

Voting by roll call, the Council:

(1) rejected by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention, a U.S.S.R. proposal that the draft agreements be sent back to the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies;

(2) rejected by 12 votes to 4, with 2 abstentions, a Norwegian proposal (E/563) requesting the Secretary-General "to transmit the draft agreements to the Member Governments in order to enable them to present their comments thereon at the next session of the General Assembly" and recommending that the General Assembly draw up "general directives concerning the principles which should govern the relations with specialized agencies" in the light of which the Economic and Social Council would review the two draft agreements in detail at its next session;

(3) rejected by 8 votes to 2, with 8 abstentions, a Norwegian proposal similar to that adopted in the case of UPU and ITU, taking note of the special circumstances which made it impossible to reach agreements with the Bank and Fund in more close conformity with other agreements with specialized agencies, and stating that the agreements should not be regarded as precedents for the future;

(4) adopted by 13 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions, a resolution which had been proposed by the United States (92(V)) stating that the Council, having considered the draft agreements, recommends to the General Assembly that it approve them.¹⁵³

(5) Approval and Entry into Force

The General Assembly, in resolution 124 (II) of November 15, 1947, approved the agreements with the World Health Organization (WHO), the Universal Postal Union (UPU), the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund.

The agreements with the two latter agencies, having already been approved by their Boards of Governors on September 16 and 17, 1947, respectively, came into force immediately. The agreement with WHO was approved subsequently by the first World Health Assembly on July 10, 1948, and accordingly came into force on that date; while the agreement with UPU came into force at the same date as the Universal Postal Convention of Paris, July 1, 1948.

The agreement between the United Nations and ITU was to enter formally into force when the ITU Convention entered into force on January 1, 1949. However, it came into force provisionally (in accordance with its Article XVIII) on November 15, 1947, when it was approved by the General Assembly, having previously been approved by the Plenipotentiary Conference of ITU at Atlantic City.

¹⁵³ For texts of agreements, see pp. 873-74, 885-87.

b. NEGOTIATIONS WITH IRO, WMO, ITO and IMCO

During its sixth session (172nd plenary meeting on March 10) the Council considered the report of its Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies (E/C.1/36) and approved (resolution 130(VI)) by the following votes its recommendations that negotiations should be entered into with the following agencies:

(1) International Refugee Organization or its Preparatory Commission, 15 votes to 2. (The U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives felt that the Council should not enter into relationships with a temporary organization, and also criticized the Organization's activities.)

(2) World Meteorological Organization, 15 votes with 2 abstentions. (The Australian representative wanted further information about this organization, and the Netherlands representative wondered if it fulfilled the condition of "having wide international responsibilities".)

(3) International Trade Organization or its Interim Commission, if established, 14 votes with 3 abstentions. (The Polish representative expressed the view that the Council should only negotiate with fully constituted organizations.)

(4) Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, 14 votes with 4 abstentions.

(1) Draft Agreements with IRO and IMCO

On July 21, 1948, the Committee held a negotiating session at Geneva with representatives of PC-IRO, as a result of which a draft agreement was proposed and considered by the Economic and Social Council at its 214th plenary meeting on August 24, 1948.

The representatives of the U.S.S.R., Poland and the Byelorussian S.S.R. opposed accepting the agreement. They thought that it was unwise, as well as unconstitutional, to conclude an agreement with an organization which was entirely temporary in character and that, additionally, the Organization had failed in its purpose since it was more interested in resettlement than repatriation. The representative of the U.S.S.R. further claimed that the Organization was not an authoritative body, since its Constitution had only been ratified by fifteen states.

The President stated that to conclude the agreement was proper and constitutional, in fact obligatory, since the General Assembly had approved Article 3 of the Constitution of the Organization, which provided for an agreement to establish the relationship between the two organizations. The United States representative also maintained that the agreement was perfectly constitutional.

The Byelorussian representative suggested that if, in spite of objection, the Council approved the agreement, it should be with the provision that it would be valid for one year only.

As formulated, the Byelorussian proposal, that the Council request its Negotiating Committee to reopen negotiations with PC-IRO with a view to attaching a time limit of one year to the validity of the draft agreement, was rejected by 15 votes to 3.

The Council adopted by 15 votes to 3 resolution 164(VII), recommending to the General Assembly that it approve without change the draft agreement entered into between the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies and the Negotiation Committee of the PC-IRO.

A similar negotiating session was held at Geneva on August 10, 1948, between the representatives of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization and the Negotiating Committee, and a draft agreement was prepared. At its 222nd plenary meeting on August 27 the Economic and Social Council adopted without discussion by 12 votes to 0, with 6 abstentions, resolution 165(VII) recommending the General Assembly to approve without change the draft agreement between the United Nations and the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization.

(2) WMO and ITO

The Interim Commission of the International Trade Organization (IC-ITO) and the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) were the remaining two agencies with which negotiations had been authorized by the Council. IC-ITO and the International Meteorological Organization on behalf of WMO expressed the hope that they would shortly be in a position to enter into negotiations with the United Nations.

c. SUPPLEMENTARY AGREEMENTS REGARDING THE USE OF THE UN Laissez-Passer

The Council at its sixth session (127th and 153rd plenary meetings on February 4 and 25) considered the request of ICAO for the extension to its officials of the right to use the United Nations laissez-passes. The Council appointed an ad hoc committee, consisting of representatives of Australia, Denmark, the U.S.S.R. and the United States, which met on February 17 and 18 and considered various suggestions, including a U.S.S.R. proposal (E/680) to postpone the matter until the Council's next session (on the ground that ICAO had not yet expelled Franco Spain), a United States draft resolution (E/AC.23/W.1) and amendments proposed by the representatives of Australia and Denmark (E/AC.23/W.2). The ad hoc Committee proposed a resolution (E/683) which was adopted by the Council at its 153rd plenary meeting by 13 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions. Before adopting the resolution the Council rejected by 9 votes to 4, with 5 abstentions, a U.S.S.R. proposal to add in paragraph (a) of the operative part of the resolution (see below) the words "with the exception of such organizations as include Franco Spain as a member".

In its resolution (136(VI)) the Council requested the Secretary-General

"(a) To conclude with any specialized agency which may so desire a supplementary agreement to extend to the officials of that agency the provisions of article VII of the Convention on Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations,¹⁵⁴ and to submit such supplementary agreement to the General Assembly for approval, and

"(b) Pending the entry into force of such agreement, to make arrangements for the use of the United Nations laissez-passers by officials of the specialized agency concerned, such laissez-passers to be issued on a provisional basis for use only in those countries which have previously undertaken to recognize the validity of laissez-passers so issued."

The supplementary agreement requested by ICAO, and a similar agreement requested by UPU, were accordingly drawn up for submission to the General Assembly at its third session.

The agreements with WHO, ITU, the Bank and the Fund had included articles concerning the laissez-passers; while the most recent agreements negotiated—those with PC-IRO and IMCO—also include provision for the use of the United Nations laissez-passers by officials of the agencies concerned.

d. ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO THE COMMITTEE ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH INTER-GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES

At its 172nd meeting on March 10, 1948, the Council elected Denmark, the Netherlands, Poland and Venezuela to fill the vacancies in the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies (E/SR.172), since of the original members appointed at the Council's first session, Belgium and Colombia had ceased to be members of the Council in 1947, and Czechoslovakia and Norway in 1948.¹⁵⁵

2. Reports of Specialized Agencies

a. REPORTS CONSIDERED AT THE SIXTH AND SEVENTH SESSIONS

At its sixth session, the Council held a special debate in which it discussed together all the reports of the specialized agencies of which it had deferred consideration at its fifth session. The following reports had been submitted:

International Labour Organisation: report covering period from establishment of the United Nations to July 15, 1947 (E/586), with appendices (E/586/Add.1), and supplementary note (E/586/Add.2) completing an account of its activities up to the end of 1947, and giving an indication of the main activities of ILO for 1948.

Food and Agriculture Organization: second annual report to the Conference of FAO covering the period July 1, 1946, to June 30, 1947 (E/597), and supplementary report (E/597/Add.1) dated January 8, 1948, dealing with current work program and relations with other specialized agencies.

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization: report covering period November 4, 1946, to June 30, 1947 (E/461), and supplementary note completing account of activities up to end of 1947 (E/461/Add.1), attached to which was work program for 1948 as adopted by General Conference of UNESCO.

International Civil Aviation Organization: second annual report of its Interim Council to the first Assembly of ICAO covering period June 8, 1946, to March 31, 1947, and resolutions adopted by the first Assembly of ICAO, May 1947 (E/456), a supplementary report covering ICAO's activities until the end of 1947 (E/456/Add.1/Rev.1), and a supplementary report on activities from March 1 to May 31, 1948.

World Health Organization: Interim Commission—report of its activities in 1947 (E/593).

In its general debate on the co-ordination of specialized agencies, at its 141st and 144th plenary meetings on February 13 and 17, 1948, the Council included consideration of the reports of the specialized agencies, but most of the views expressed referred to matters of co-ordination, and the Council at its 163rd and 165th meetings on March 4 and 5 considered the reports in detail (see below). (The debates in question have been reproduced in extenso in documents E/784 and E/785.) Representatives of the five agencies were present and addressed the Council.

At its 165th meeting, after a U.S.S.R. proposal to delete the reference to ICAO had been rejected by 11 votes to 4, with 1 abstention, the Council adopted by 14 votes, with 3 abstentions, a resolution (129(VI)A), which had been proposed by the United States, expressing appreciation of the reports submitted by ILO, FAO, UNESCO, ICAO and the Interim Commission of WHO, and requesting the Secretary-General to transmit to these specialized agencies summaries of the Council's discussion of the reports.

At its seventh session the Council had before it the following reports from the specialized agencies:

International Labour Organisation: second report to the United Nations (E/810), covering the period from July 1947 to March 1948.

Food and Agriculture Organization: supplementary report of FAO (E/797), covering the principal activities of the period from January 1 to May 1, 1948.

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization: supplementary report to that considered by the Council at its sixth session, covering the activities of UNESCO during the first four months of 1948 (E/804) and a General Organization Chart (E/804/Add.1/-Rev.1).

International Civil Aviation Organization: report of the Council of ICAO to the second Assembly of the Organization, covering the activities of ICAO for the period from June 1, 1947, to March 1, 1948, the budget estimates for the period from July 1, 1948, to December 31, 1949, submitted by the ICAO Council to the Assembly (E/808), an addendum covering the proceedings of the second Assembly of ICAO (E/808/Add.1), and a supplementary report on activities from March 1 to May 31, 1948.

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development: second annual report of the Bank to the Board of Governors for the year ending June 30, 1947, a memorandum relating to its financial statements as of March 31, 1948, and a statement on "Activities and Organization, 31 March 1948" (E/803).

International Monetary Fund: annual report of the Executive Directors of the Fund, dated June 30, 1947, and quarterly financial statements for November 28, 1947, and February 29, 1948 (E/801), and a memorandum giving information on the Fund and its activities for the period from its last report until the end of March 1948 (E/801/Add.1 and Corr.1).

Universal Postal Union: administrative report, 1947 (E/811).

World Health Organization: Interim Commission report of its activities (E/786 and Corr.1).

International Telecommunication Union: descriptive report of the organization and its historical background (E/812).

The Council decided to allocate the reports to its committees as follows: the reports of FAO, the Bank, the Fund, ICAO, UPU and ITU to the Economic Committee, and the reports of ILO, UNESCO and WHO to the Social Committee. It was later decided to discuss the report of ILO in plenary meeting since it touched on the work of different committees, and also to consider the work of ICAO in plenary session simultaneously with the question of ICAO's implementation of the General Assembly resolutions concerning Franco Spain.

b. INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANISATION

In the Council's discussions of the ILO reports at its sixth session (163rd and 165th plenary meetings), the United States representative suggested that future ILO reports should emphasize current and future projects and that an evaluation of the experience of ILO's industrial committees should be furnished.

Various representatives congratulated ILO on the work it had accomplished. The U.S.S.R. representative criticized the Organisation as responding to the interests of the employers rather than of the workers. The Polish representative suggested that the Organisation should deal more with certain basic questions, such as raising the standard of living of the working classes particularly in under-developed areas and in Non-Self-Governing Territories.

The report of ILO was discussed during the seventh session at the 199th, 203rd and 205th plenary meetings on August 14, 18 and 19, 1948.

Members expressed appreciation of the work of the Organisation, with particular reference to the extension of its regional activities. The Brazilian representative thought that the Organisation should give more attention to the geographical distribution of its staff.

The main discussion in the Council centred round a draft resolution proposed by the U.S.S.R. (E/973), and supported by the Polish and Byelorussian representatives, calling upon the Council to recommend to the Members of the United Nations which were also Members of ILO to take the necessary steps to increase the representation of the workers to half in the Conferences and the Governing Body of the Organisation, the other half to consist of the representatives of the governments and the employers.

It was argued by representatives supporting the resolution that the present structure of ILO—which had been established at the close of the First World War—rendered it unable to deal with the social problems arising at a time of vast economic and social changes. The Organisation, as at present constituted, it was argued, did not, in view of the predominant representation of employers and capitalist governments, pay adequate attention to the interests of labor. This had been shown by the action of ILO when the question of trade union rights was referred to it, and it had considered instead the question of freedom of association. The Organisation, it was said, had shown too little interest in the great economic and social changes in Eastern Europe. It was further pointed out that many of the conventions adopted by ILO had not been ratified, which, it was argued, showed that the Organisation as at present constituted was ineffective.

The Brazilian, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States, Canadian, Danish and Chilean representatives opposed the resolution. Among the arguments against it were: that the present tripartite character of ILO was one of the sources of its strength and helped to make social understanding possible; that the Organisation had recently reviewed its structure which had been approved by large majorities; that in any case it was for ILO itself to change its structure if it thought this desirable; that it was incorrect to assume that government representatives favored the interests of employers over those of employees, since they represented the interests of their countries as a whole—frequently, for example in the case of labor governments, the interests of the government and workers representatives were the same; that if ILO was predominantly an instrument of the employers it would not be receiving, as it was, the overwhelming support of trade unionists and the WFTU would not recently have entered into an agreement with it.

With regard to the small number of ratifications, it was pointed out that the responsibility in this respect lay with governments and not with ILO itself, and it was argued that this showed that the Organisation's policy was in advance of that of national governments, that in some instances lack of ratification was due to constitutional reasons or to certain points of detail and that in any case national legislation was influenced by the ILO Conventions even if they were not ratified. Various representatives approved the Organisation's work on freedom of association. It was further maintained that the U.S.S.R. resolution did not merely involve a suggestion for a change in the structure of ILO, but was based on a different concept of society which envisaged a class struggle; the structure of ILO, on the other hand, was based on the principle of co-operation between governments, workers and employers in discussing labor problems.

The representative of ILO quoted the principles of the work of the Organisation as reaffirmed by its Conference: the responsibility of the Governments of the Members of the Organisation to their peoples as a whole; the selection of employers' and workers' representatives on the principle of majority rule; the freedom of employers' and workers' representatives to represent their constituents without government instructions; the equal rights in the Conference of all nations; and the obligation of Members to submit to their constitutional authorities the decisions of the Conference.

The Danish, Peruvian and Venezuelan representatives pointed out that they were without sufficient instructions to adopt a resolution making recommendations for change in the structure of ILO, and the Danish representative inquired whether the U.S.S.R. had made its proposal with a view to joining ILO if its structure was altered. The U.S.S.R. representative stated that he would be in a position to reply if members of the Council had shown any willingness in favor of the Soviet draft resolution.

The U.S.S.R. draft resolution was rejected by 11 votes to 3, with 3 abstentions.

The Council, at its 205th plenary meeting on August 19, adopted by 14 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, resolution 167 (VII) A expressing its appreciation of the second report of ILO.

c. FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The following are among the views expressed during the Council's sixth session with regard to the FAO reports, at its 163rd and 165th plenary meetings, on March 4 and 5. The United States representative suggested that the FAO reports should give more information on priorities of the various projects undertaken, regular statistical material and continuity of technical publications, and on the relations between the regional activities of FAO and the activities of the United Nations regional commissions.

The Brazilian representative felt that while FAO's report showed a welcome expansion of activities, attention was focussed on Europe, China and the Near East and the Organization was slow to act in Latin America. He also stressed the importance of co-operation between FAO and ITO on commodity agreements. The Chilean and Peruvian representatives also felt that a greater share of FAO's technical assistance be extended to Latin America and suggested that the Economic Commission for Latin America might co-operate with FAO. The French representative felt that the problems dealt with by FAO were of sufficient importance to justify wider publication of the results of its work, and suggested that steps should be taken to ensure better co-ordination between FAO and the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund. The Polish representative suggested that the work of FAO should be on a wider basis.

During the Council's seventh session, the supplementary report of FAO was discussed at the 34th meeting of the Economic Committee on August 16. The Brazilian representative welcomed the expansion of the regional activity of FAO and the development of related technical services and emphasized the importance of dealing with the question of rural welfare. On the recommendation of the Committee, the Council, at its 222nd plenary meeting on August 27, adopted by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, resolution 167 (VII) B expressing appreciation of the supplementary report and requesting the Secretary-General to transmit to FAO the record of the Council's discussions.

d. UNITED NATIONS EDUCATIONAL, SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

During the sixth session of the Council (163rd and 165th plenary meetings) certain representatives expressed fear that there was a danger of overlapping between some of UNESCO's activities and those of the other specialized agencies and of the United Nations, as, for instance, between the Hylean Amazon project, which included an expert on tropical diseases, and the work of the World Health Organization; the work of UNESCO on mass communication and on education about the United Nations and the work of the United Nations Department of Public Information; and the inquiry, held under UNESCO's guidance, into the philosophical principles underlying human rights and the work of the Commission on Human Rights. Some representatives also felt that there was too great a dispersion of UNESCO's efforts, others praised the Organization for its activity and for not having neglected any continent, and still others felt that the multiplicity of its program was inevitable at the existing stage of its development. The New Zealand representative suggested that stress might be laid on the primary object of the furtherance of peace through educational, scientific and cultural objectives for their own sake. The Polish representative criticized UNESCO's budget on the ground that the amount allotted for general information and communication was much larger than the appropriation for reconstruction and general education. He stated that reconstruction in war-devastated and under-developed countries should now constitute UNESCO's main activity. He also stated that UNESCO should not contemplate any work in Germany until the peace treaty had been signed and until assured of the consent of the Allied Control Commission. He suggested that UNESCO should treat Members of the United Nations which were not Members of UNESCO on a different footing from other non-members.

During the seventh session of the Council, the report of UNESCO was considered at the 56th meeting of the Council's Social Committee on August 9. Several representatives expressed approval of the concentration of the Organization's activities and the granting of priority to certain projects. It was felt that lack of progress had resulted from the width of scope of UNESCO. The United States representative felt that there had been insufficient co-operation with other specialized agencies at the planning stage. The Peruvian and Brazilian representatives emphasized the importance of the Hylean Amazon project, and the Lebanese, French and Polish representatives stressed the importance of dealing with the question of illiteracy. The Polish representative thought that first consideration should be given to the educational and cultural reconstruction of war-devastated countries.

The Committee heard a statement by the representative of UNESCO on the matters raised and particularly on recent organizational progress.

The Council at its 212th plenary meeting on August 24 adopted by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions (the U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives abstaining on the ground that their countries were not members of UNESCO), resolution 167(VII)C expressing its appreciation of the report and requesting the Secretary-General to transmit to UNESCO the records of the Council's discussions.

e. INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

The reports of ICAO were considered during the Council's sixth session, at the 163rd and 165th plenary meetings on March 4 and 5. The United States representative suggested that future ICAO reports might cover the relationship between air navigation and new problems being created, such as frontier restrictions, trade barriers, and the extent to which joint action might be taken by governments on technical aspects of air navigation. While ICAO had established relations with the Universal Postal Union and the International Meteorological Organization, co-operation with the International Telecommunication Union, the World Health Organization and other agencies should also be considered. The Brazilian representative drew attention to a possible duplication of work on international double taxation (Fiscal Commission), maps and charts (Economic and Social Council), standardization of units and measurements (World Meteorological Organization) and insurance requirements (Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization).

The U.S.S.R. representative pointed out that the agreement with ICAO was conditional on the exclusion of Franco Spain from membership, and stated that according to the Organization's report, Spain was still a Member. He proposed (E/680) that the Council should therefore take no decision on the report, warn ICAO that it had not so far complied with the stipulation of the General Assembly, and request the Secretary-General to submit to the Council's seventh session a report on the implementation by ICAO of the General Assembly resolutions and the measures arising out of the situation. Voting paragraph by paragraph, the Council adopted the preamble (by 4 votes to 0, with 14 abstentions) and the third paragraph, which requested the report from the Secretary-General (by 11 votes to 0, with 7 abstentions). The first paragraph was rejected by 14 votes to 4, and the second by 10 votes to 3, with 5 abstentions. The resolution adopted by the Council (129(VI)B) read as follows:

"Whereas the General Assembly in its resolution 39-(I) of 12 December 1946¹⁵⁶ recommended that the Franco Government of Spain be debarred from membership in international agencies established by or brought into relationship with the United Nations;

"Whereas the General Assembly in its resolution 50-(I) of 14 December 1946¹⁵⁷ resolved to approve the Agreement with the International Civil Aviation Organization, provided that that Organization complied with any decision of the General Assembly regarding Franco Spain;

"Whereas the resolution of the Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization of May 1947 concerning an amendment to be made in the Convention of that Organization providing for the automatic cessation of membership in the said Organization of the Governments of countries whose expulsion is recommended by the General Assembly has not yet been ratified and come into force;

"Whereas the report of the International Civil Aviation Organization on its work during the second half of 1947, which has been submitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations for consideration by the Economic and Social Council (document E/456/Add.1/Rev.1 of 26 January 1948), admits that Franco Spain was one of the forty-six members of that Organization as at 15 December 1947,

"The Economic and Social Council, having considered the report of the Organization,

"Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations to submit to the seventh session of the Council a report on the implementation by the International Civil Aviation Organization of the General Assembly resolutions 39(I) and 50(I) and on the measures arising out of the situation which will exist by the time the seventh session of the Council opens."

As requested by this resolution the Secretary-General submitted to the Council's seventh session a report (E/831/Rev.1) on the compliance of the International Civil Aviation Organization with a resolution of the General Assembly calling for the debarment of Franco Spain from ICAO membership.

The report showed that ICAO, at its Assembly in Montreal in May 1947, had approved a proposed amendment to its constitution—the Convention on International Civil Aviation—calling for the automatic cessation of the membership in ICAO of a State whose Government the General Assembly of the United Nations has recommended for debarment from membership in international agencies established by, or brought into relationship with, the United Nations. The report further showed that immediately following the approval of this amendment, the Spanish delegation withdrew from further participation in the Montreal Assembly of ICAO.

The report also stated that, in accordance with Article 94 of the ICAO Convention, the proposed amendment will come into force upon ratification by not less than two thirds of the total number of contracting states. As of June 8, 1948, out of ICAO's 51 contracting states, nine—Pakistan, Canada, New Zealand, Dominican Republic, India, United Kingdom, Afghanistan, China and Czechoslovakia—had ratified the proposed amendment.

The Secretary-General further reported that he had been informed that, following the adoption of the amendment at the Montreal Assembly of ICAO, no invitation had been extended to Spain to participate in conferences or other activities arranged by ICAO, and no representative of Spain had attended any meetings of the Organization or had otherwise participated in ICAO activities.

When the Economic and Social Council considered this report at its 213th plenary meeting, on August 24, 1948, during its seventh session, two draft resolutions on the subject were placed before it reflecting the trend of the discussion. One (E/1013), submitted by the representative of the U.S.S.R., and supported by the representatives of Poland and of the Ukrainian S.S.R., would have placed the Council on record as considering: that ICAO "is proceeding exceedingly slowly" with the exclusion of Franco Spain; that "through this reluctance . . . Franco Spain continues for an appre-cialable and indeterminate period to remain a legal member" of the ICAO; and that the General Assembly had decided to approve the agreement with the ICAO on condition that the Organization complied with all decisions of the General Assembly relating to Franco Spain. In its operative paragraph, the draft resolution proposed by the U.S.S.R. would have the Economic and Social Council decide temporarily to suspend the validity of the agreement with the ICAO pending the actual exclusion by that body of Franco Spain from membership.

The U.S.S.R. proposal was rejected by the Council by a vote of 14 to 3, with 1 abstention. Then, by a vote of 13 to 3, with 2 abstentions, the Council approved a Canadian draft resolution (E/1014) with one or two drafting changes verbally proposed by the representative of Venezuela. The resolution as adopted (169(VII)) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation by the International Civil Aviation Organization of General Assembly resolution 39(I) of 12 December 1946 and 50(I) of 14 December 1946 concerning Franco Spain,

"Notes with satisfaction the measures taken by the Organization to amend the Convention on International Civil Aviation at the first session of the International Civil Aviation Organization Assembly, and not to extend to Spain invitations to participate in any conferences or other activities arranged by the Organization so as to comply fully with the foregoing resolutions of the General Assembly; and

"Recommends that those Member States which are members of the International Civil Aviation Organization and which have not as yet ratified the Protocol of Amendment of the Convention on International Civil Aviation (article 93 bis) should deposit their instruments of ratification as soon as possible."

At its 217th plenary meeting on August 26, the Council adopted without discussion resolution 167(VII)D, expressing appreciation of the ICAO report.

f. INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR RECONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

The first report of the Bank was considered during the Council's seventh session, at the 34th to 37th meetings of the Council's Economic Committee from August 16 to 23, and the 224th plenary meeting on August 28. Several representatives expressed appreciation of the report. The U.S.S.R., Polish and Byelorussian representatives alleged that the Bank was showing political discrimination in paying undue attention to the countries of Western Europe at the expense of other countries. The U.S.S.R. representative stated that no country in Eastern Europe had received a loan, although Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia had been among the first to apply; the Bank, he stated, was being used in support of the Marshall Plan as an instrument of United States foreign policy, a contention denied by the United States representative. The Polish representative emphasized that the purpose of the Bank was to help the reconstruction of devastated countries, promote sound industry and increase industrial and agricultural production. The Bank had not followed the policy of granting loans to the countries most devastated by the war, although their progress in reconstruction and their possibilities of further development offered good returns for investment and would contribute to general European reconstruction and the restoration of the equilibrium in international trade and the balance of payments. He submitted a draft resolution (E/AC.6/W.28) referring to the purposes of the Bank as expressed in its Articles of Agreement and calling the Bank's attention to the fact that reconstruction and general world economic progress was retarded by inadequate production facilities. The resolution stated that the measures taken to remedy the situation should be such as to guarantee the best effects for world economy and in particular "investment goods and credits should be allocated according to the criterion of their greatest economic productivity", and requested the Bank to consider ways and means appropriate for the increase of facilities for producing the commodities crucial to international reconstruction and development.

In the discussion on this draft resolution certain representatives expressed the view that it was not necessary to restate the principles on which the Bank was already acting and thought that the phrase "greatest economic productivity" was somewhat ambiguous. The United States representative thought that there were other criteria to be taken into account such as the "greatest need"; the Canadian representative thought that the formula used in the draft resolution might favor the highly-industrialized countries; the Chilean representative pointed out that it might be used to classify countries according to their natural resources; the Brazilian and Chinese representatives thought that it did not take sufficient account of the question of both short- and long-term productivity. The Canadian representative proposed (E/AC.6/W.29) that the Council should merely note the report and transmit the records of its discussions to the Bank. While agreeing that the Bank from many points of view had made a good start, the Chinese representative thought that too much stress was being laid on its functions as a commercial bank and too little on its character as an international organization for constructive and development projects. Too much emphasis, he thought, had also been placed on reconstruction as against development, the only loan hitherto granted for development projects being to Chile. He proposed an amendment (E/AC.6/W.30) to the Canadian proposal, welcoming the statement of the Bank that it was contemplating paying more attention to development projects, and expressing the hope that it would take measures to overcome the obstacles to international investment so that development loans might be granted as soon as possible, particularly to under-developed countries. He also proposed that, after consultation with the Bank, the Secretary-General should recommend to the Bank that it review its principle of using its funds for "the greatest possible increase in the shortest possible time". The representative of Venezuela also expressed the hope that loans would be granted to under-developed countries, and he and the Australian representative hoped that they would be granted to parts of the world other than Europe. In this connection the representative of the Bank informed the Economic Committee of the Council that in the last few months it had sent nine missions to under-developed areas to discuss plans with the governments concerned; that one of the Bank's senior economists had been placed at the service of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East and that the dispatch of a further six or seven missions in the near future was contemplated.

The Netherlands representative pointed out that as the Bank's funds came from private investors, the interests of the investors had to be borne in mind, and expressed the hope that the Bank should become a truly international organization, not only one lending American dollars. The Chilean representative pointed out, in addition, that the Bank must, in assessing the plans of countries which applied for loans, pay attention not only to their needs and its own resources but also to the co-ordination of the general effort towards reconstruction and development.

Certain members of the Council felt the Council could not adopt a recommendation to the Bank in view of the article in the Bank's agreement with the United Nations which precluded either party from making recommendations to the other without prior consultation. On these grounds, the Netherlands, French and United Kingdom representatives abstained from voting on the final resolution. Other members held that the Council in performing its duties of co-ordination of the activities of specialized agencies should discuss the policy of the Bank and embody its views in a resolution, though agreeing that before a formal recommendation was made consultations should take place. Various representatives criticized the provisions of the agreement.

The Polish draft resolution, incorporating the Canadian proposal to refer the records of the Council's discussion to the Bank, was voted on paragraph by paragraph, certain paragraphs being accepted, but the resolution as a whole defeated by 8 votes to 3, with 6 abstentions. In varying paragraph by paragraph votes, the Economic Committee of the Council adopted the Canadian draft proposal as amended by China with other amendments accepted by the Chinese representative.

At its 224th plenary meeting on August 28, the Council by 12 votes to 2, with 4 abstentions, adopted resolution 167(VII)E as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Taking note of the report submitted by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development,

"Appreciating the statements made by high officials of the Bank on recent occasions to the effect that, other sources of financing now being available for a substantial part of reconstruction needs, the Bank is contemplating paying more attention to the problems of development hereafter,

"Expresses its hope that the Bank will take immediate steps to expedite the examination of these problems and to adopt all reasonable measures to facilitate the early realization of development loans, particularly those in areas economically under-developed; and

"Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Bank the records of the discussions which took place at the seventh session of the Council on the report."

g. INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The first report of the Fund was discussed during the Council's seventh session, at the 38th meeting of the Economic Committee on August 24. It was generally regretted that the report was not sufficiently detailed or up to date. The Byelorussian and U.S.S.R. representatives criticized the policy of the Fund as benefitting almost exclusively countries participating in the Marshall Plan, as giving too much prominence to the German economy, and as being too restrictive. The Polish representative explained that the reason certain countries, including his own, had not declared their parities was because they considered that in the present disturbed state of international trade such a declaration would be artificial. Those countries which had established their eligibility to buy currencies through the Fund by declaring their parities had used the currencies solely to fill in the gaps in their balance of payments, which had done nothing to restore the equilibrium in foreign balances. The representative of Denmark, explaining that his Government had felt concern about declaring par values, thought that countries should not be apprehensive at declaring par values since, he understood, the Fund would change them when the situation made a change necessary. He agreed that it was necessary to take German economic conditions into account.

The representative of the Fund, in answer to certain points raised, stated, inter alia, that no state outside the Marshall Plan had applied for and been refused assistance, even on technical grounds; the fate of the Fund was not bound up with that of the Marshall Plan although the Fund had to take account of that as of all important financial plans; similarly it had to take into account the fact that German economy was an integral part of European economy.

The Council, at its 224th meeting on August 28, adopted by 15 votes to 2, resolution 16(VII)F, taking note of the Fund's report and requesting the Secretary-General to transmit to the Fund the records of the Council's discussions.

h. UNIVERSAL POSTAL UNION

The first report of UPU was considered during the seventh session of the Council, at the 39th meeting of the Economic Committee on August 25, and at the 220th and 222nd plenary meetings of the Council on August 27. The U.S.S.R. and Byelorussian representatives criticized the Bureau of the Union for circulating technical documents to the postal administration of Franco Spain, alleging that this was against the terms of the General Assembly's resolution 39(I) urging that Franco Spain be debarred from agencies brought into relationship with the United Nations. They also criticized the refusal of the Postal Congress to admit the Baltic Republics—Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia—which had been signatories of the 1939 Convention. The U.S.S.R. representative, supported by the Byelorussian representative, submitted a draft resolution (E/1030) recommending that UPU review the question of membership with the object of eliminating discrimination in relation to these three countries.

The representative of the Union made a statement inter alia explaining that technical literature was distributed by the Bureau to all postal administrations in the course of its duties. He also stated that the U.S.S.R. had notified the Union in 1940 that the Baltic States had ceased to exist and although it had later cancelled this statement, the majority of the Congress of UPU had not considered the States sovereign in the full sense of the word.

The Council rejected the draft resolution by a vote of 14 to 3, and adopted by 14 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, resolution 167(VII)G taking note of the report and requesting the Secretary-General to transmit to the UPU the records of the Council's discussions.

i. WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION

The Council considered the report of the WHO Interim Commission during its sixth session, at its 163rd and 165th meetings on March 4 and 5. Representatives congratulated the Interim Commission of the World Health Organization on the work it had so far accomplished. The Brazilian and New Zealand representatives suggested that the World Health Organization might appropriately take over the anti-tuberculosis campaign at present being carried on in collaboration with the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund. The U.S.S.R. representative considered that the Pan American Sanitary Organization should be included in WHO, that the Interim Commission of WHO should augment its publications and increase the work of its expert committees, that the costs of missions of lecturers and inspectors sent to various countries by WHO should be defrayed by those countries and that the offices of WHO should be concentrated in Geneva. He proposed a draft resolution (E/711) incorporating these points, but agreed to withdraw it after the Council had heard explanations from a representative of the Interim Commission of WHO on the measures to be taken or contemplated along these lines when WHO should come into existence.

During the seventh session of the Council the report of the World Health Organization was discussed at the 55th and 56th meetings of the Social Committee on August 5 and 9.

The representative of the World Health Organization made a statement supplementing the report to note the action taken at the first World Health Assembly held in June 1948 at Geneva.¹⁵⁸ Members expressed their appreciation of the work of the Interim Commission and their gratification at the ratification of the Constitution of the World Health Organization by a sufficient number of Members bringing the Organization into existence. Attention was specially directed, in the discussion, to collaboration between the World Health Organization and the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, to regional arrangements planned by the World Health Organization, to the health needs of war-devastated countries, and to the connection between health and economic problems.

Representatives also stressed the importance of collaboration between WHO and other specialized agencies, the importance of malaria control and prevention, and the importance of scientific research.

At the 212th plenary meeting on August 24 the Council unanimously adopted resolution 167 (VII)H, in which it expressed its appreciation of the report submitted by the World Health Organization and requested the Secretary-General to transmit to the Organization the records of the discussion which took place at the seventh session of the Council.

j. INTERNATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATION UNION

The first report of ITU was discussed during the Council's seventh session, at the 38th meeting of the Economic Committee on August 24, and the 222nd plenary meeting of the Council on August 27. The U.S.S.R. representative objected that Spain was still de jure a Member of the Union since the revised convention did not come into effect until January 1, 1949, and that certain organs of the Union still maintained relations with Spain. He also objected to the exclusion of the Baltic Republics — Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia — and the Mongolian People's Republic, which had participated in the Madrid Convention. He submitted a draft resolution (E/1031) recommending ITU to review its statutory provisions with the object of eliminating discrimination against these four countries.

The representative of ITU, in explanation, stated that the Atlantic City Convention was followed by a protocol debarring Spain from membership, but that pending the full entry into force of this Convention on January 1, 1949, routine notices were sent to Spain as an adherent to the Madrid Convention. The Provisional Frequency Board of the Union had to obtain data from all countries including Spain. With regard to the Baltic Republics he stated that the U.S.S.R. had notified the Union in 1940 that the Republics had ceased to be Members of ITU on the date they were incorporated in the U.S.S.R. Although the U.S.S.R. had notified the ITU in 1947 that its previous communication was no longer valid, the Atlantic City Conference after a full discussion had decided against inviting the Baltic Republics, and the conditions of membership had been altered so that adherence to the Madrid Convention did not automatically entitle a state to membership under the new Convention.

The Council at its 222nd plenary meeting on August 27 rejected the U.S.S.R. draft resolution by 14 votes to 3, and adopted by 15 votes to 0, with 3 abstentions, resolution 167 (VII)I, taking note of the report of ITU and requesting the Secretary-General to transmit to the Union the records of the Council's discussions.

3. Co-ordination by the Council of Activities of the Agencies

a. DECISIONS OF THE COUNCIL'S SIXTH SESSION

At its sixth session the Council had before it two reports (E/614 and E/625) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (previously called the Co-ordination Committee and the Secretary-General's Committee on Co-ordination) which had been established pursuant to the Council's resolution 13(III).¹⁵⁹ The reports covered the second and third sessions of the Committee from October 1 to 3, 1947, and January 15 to 17, 1948. They dealt with organizational matters, implementation of agreements, co-operation on substantive questions, co-operation on administrative matters and budgetary and program co-ordination.

The Council also had before it a note by the Secretary-General (E/602/Rev.1) listing reports and work programs of Commissions of the Council and specialized agencies which were available, and draft proposals submitted by the United States (E/647). After a general discussion at its 141st and 144th plenary meetings on February 13 and 17, during which all representatives stressed the necessity for co-ordination but in which some difference of opinion was expressed as to whether the machinery being established for co-ordination purposes was not too cumbersome, the Council at its 145th plenary meeting on February 17 established a Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination, to sit during the session. It was composed of the representatives of Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, France, Netherlands, New ¹⁵⁹ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 546; see also pp. 682-83.

Zealand, Peru, Poland, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States. The Council referred to this Committee the note by the Secretary-General, the reports of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and the proposals of the United States, and also requested it to suggest methods of considering the reports from specialized agencies. The Committee held eight meetings, on February 18, 20, 21, 25, 26 and 27 and on March 3 and 4.

On the recommendation of the Committee (E/681) the Council decided at its 157th plenary meeting on March 1 to consider the reports of the specialized agencies in a committee of the whole. These reports were later recalled to the plenary meeting, and, during the consideration of the reports (see above) at the 163rd and 165th plenary meetings, views were expressed by members of the Council on the general process of co-ordination. Among these were that the reports showed the multiplicity and value of the work performed by the agencies, but that there were dangers of overlapping between the work of some of the agencies and the various organs of the United Nations and between the agencies themselves. The positive task of the Economic and Social Council in giving a lead to and not merely co-ordinating the activities of the agencies was stressed. It was suggested by the United States representative that the agencies should report on the implementation of United Nations resolutions and recommendations; by the U.S.S.R. representative that the Secretariat might be asked to report on the activities of the agencies; and by the French representative that the Council's Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination might be asked to draw the Council's attention to the way in which each agency fulfilled its task.

The Brazilian representative suggested that the four principal types of recommendations that could profitably be made by the Council were on allocations between the various agencies, to prevent overlapping, on priorities and on the initiation of activities.

The proposal submitted by the United States (E/647) formed the basis for much of the discussion in the Council's Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination. This proposal contained three resolutions, the first stressing the need for the fullest possible implementation of the agreements between the United Nations and the agencies, the second dealing with the nature of the reports that the Council wished to receive from the agencies, and the third giving certain directives to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination. The Committee made recommendations to the Council (E/740) based on the United States proposals, amendments suggested by Australia (E/AC.24/1 and Rev.1 and Rev.-1/Add.1) and proposals submitted by the United Kingdom (E/AC.24/2 and Rev.1 and E/AC.24/3). On the Committee's recommendation (E/740), the Council at its 171st plenary meeting on March 10 took the following decisions:

It requested the specialized agencies (resolution 128(VI)A) to submit to the Council, not later than May 15 of each year, reports on the organization of the agency; the activities of the past year; the activities and work program of the current calendar year, with an indication of the priorities applied to these programs; and the proposed activities and work programs for the following year. This resolution was adopted by 17 votes with 1 abstention.

It requested the Secretary-General (resolution 128(VI)B) to prepare, in consultation with the specialized agencies, reports on the action taken in pursuance of the agreements between the United Nations and the various agencies; on the facilities which would be available for these agencies at the seat and regional offices of the United Nations, and existing and future liaison arrangements; and on inter-governmental organizations with responsibilities similar to those of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related fields. The Secretary-General was also requested to submit from time to time to the Council, after consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, a catalogue of studies or investigations in the economic and social fields by the United Nations and specialized agencies; and, finally, to submit to the Council, not later than June 1 of each year, a report including information on the organization and allocation of personnel in the Economic and Social Departments of the Secretariat and an account of the current work programs of the Economic and Social Departments and the commissions of the Council. This resolution was adopted by 14 votes, with 4 abstentions.

It requested (resolution 128(VI)C) the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to transmit to the Council, at its seventh session, observations on the form and content of the reports of the specialized agencies; to examine the possibility of including in these reports such budgetary information as would enable the Council to appraise the relative scope of current and prospective work programs; to draw the Council's attention to any overlapping or duplication in the activities of the United Nations and the specialized agencies; and, finally, to report on its work to each session of the Council. This resolution was adopted unanimously.

It requested (resolution 128(VI)D) the commissions of the Council to establish priorities of work based on the importance of the various projects in implementing Article 55 of the Charter, and to indicate these priorities in their reports. The Secretary-General was also requested to submit to the seventh session of the Council his suggestions on the form and character of the reports of commissions and other subsidiary bodies. This resolution was adopted by 15 votes, with 3 abstentions.

It decided (resolution 128(VI)E) to appoint a committee to sit during the seventh session to consider questions relating to the co-ordination of the activities of the specialized agencies and the United Nations raised by members of the Council, the Secretary-General or the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination. This resolution was adopted by 14 votes, with 3 abstentions.

b. DISCUSSIONS AT THE COUNCIL'S SEVENTH SESSION

The decision to establish a Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination was confirmed by the Council during its seventh session, at its 180th plenary meeting on July 21, 1948. At its 181st meeting on July 23, the Council decided that the Committee should consist of the representatives of the following thirteen countries: Australia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Denmark, France, New Zealand, Poland, Turkey, U.S.S.R., United Kingdom and United States.

This Committee, at meetings as listed below, and the Council, at its 225th plenary meeting on August 28, considered the reports submitted in accordance with the resolutions adopted by the Council at its sixth session. In particular the Committee considered (1) relations with and co-ordination of specialized agencies (E/813, E/818 and Add.1, E/842, E/843/Rev.1, E/846, E/847, E/848 and Corr.1 and Add.1, E/AC.24/4 or E/AC.7/74); (2) a list of reports of specialized agencies (E/815/Rev.1); (3) report of the Secretary-General on the organization of the Economic and Social Departments of the Secretariat and on the work programs of commissions of the Council (E/844 and Add.1) and a report of the Secretary-General concerning the form and character of the reports of commissions and other subsidiary organs (E/845); and (4) draft calendar of meetings and conferences in 1949 (E/906, E/AC.24/5 or E/AC.7/75).

The Committee held meetings on August 4, 5, 6, 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 26, and 27. Owing to the wide nature of the field under review, and the close inter-relation in subject-matter between the various reports, the Committee decided to conduct discussions along the following lines: (1) processes of co-ordination; (2) administrative and budgetary co-ordination; and (3) program co-ordination.

In the Council's discussion of the Committee's report (E/1038) at its 225th plenary meeting, various representatives raised the question of how matters relating to co-ordination should be considered in the future. The representative of Australia thought that in future the problem of co-ordination of policies should be carried out by the Council's two main committees of the whole, the Social Committee and the Economic Committee, and not by the Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination. The Canadian representative suggested that the Council should consider the possibility of combining the functions of the Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination with those of the Agenda Committee, which would then have two tasks to fulfil before the next session: the drafting of a report on the agenda, and the review of material submitted by the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies on co-ordination. He declared that substantive questions concerning the co-ordination of work with specialized agencies should be referred directly to the main committees of the Council. The representative of the U.S.S.R. deplored the tendency to multiply organs dealing with matters of co-ordination and considered that the Council should request the Secretary-General to report on the possibilities of a reduction in their number.

The Committee's recommendations were approved by the Council at its 225th plenary meeting. The matters dealt with are reviewed below.

(1) Processes of Co-ordination

(a) ORGANIZATIONAL MATTERS

The Council's Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination first gave consideration to organizational matters raised in the report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (E/846).

This report dealt with the general scope and nature of the Committee's work, program co-ordination, administrative and budgetary questions, the International Civil Service Advisory Board, regional activities, co-ordination of administrative services in different centres, calendar of conferences, non-statistical questionnaires and fellowship programs.

The Council's Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination reviewed the various types of machinery which had been set up either by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination or in pursuance of resolutions of the General Assembly (e.g., concerning an International Civil Service Advisory Board). The need for keeping such machinery to the minimum consistent with efficiency was emphasized, and the Secretary-General was requested to keep the Council informed of steps taken to achieve this. It was recognized, however, that the wide scope of activities would in future involve a considerable volume of additional work. The magnitude and complexity of the Committee's task had made it increasingly difficult for the administrative officers to deal with more than the major issue of policy and program involved. The representative of the U.S.S.R. expressed the view that there was no necessity to establish the International Civil Service Advisory Board.

(b) FORM AND CHARACTER OF REPORTS BY AGENCIES

The Council's Committee noted the view of the agencies as expressed in the report of the Administrative Committee that, owing to differing circumstances and limitations of both staff and resources, it might be difficult for some agencies to give detailed information under all the items requested. It recognized that a greater degree of uniformity and comparability in the reports, for purposes of co-ordination, would be attained progressively with further experience, and that, in time, the adaptation of agency budgets to the standard budget summaries worked out by the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions would yield information which would be useful to the Council in its task of program co-ordination.

(c) FORM AND CHARACTER OF REPORTS OF COMMISSIONS

The Council considered the report of the Secretary-General on the form and character of commission reports (E/845). It approved, with certain modifications, a standard form suggested for normal use, from which deviations might, however, be made in exceptional cases.

In the Council's discussions of the Committee's report (E/1038), certain representatives, including those of Australia, the U.S.S.R. and Canada, referred to the question raised in the report of the inclusion of minority views in reports of commissions. The Committee had recommended that at the present stage the appropriate place for such views was in the summary records. The Committee further pointed out that any representative had the right to request that a specific reservation made by him be mentioned in a footnote to the report. The Australian representative agreed with this recommendation. The representative of the U.S.S.R. regretted that only the views of individual representatives of the Commission, rather than minority views, would be included in the reports. He stated that his delegation could not accept that recommendation of the Committee. The representative of Canada pointed out, as Chairman of the Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination, that it was for the commissions to decide themselves whether minority views should be included in the reports.

(d) FORM AND CHARACTER OF "COMPARATIVE REVIEW"

The Committee considered whether changes should be made in the form and character of the Comparative Review of the Activities and Work Programmes of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies in the Economic and Social Fields, as suggested by the Secretary-General (E/843/Rev. 1, E/848 and Add.1). It agreed that the Secretary-General should prepare next year's Comparative Review in a similar form as a reference document, with an indication of priorities wherever possible, and with specific questions requiring the special attention of the Council treated in separate documents. The Comparative Review contains analytical lists of the principal questions in the economic and social fields and the work of the United Nations and specialized agencies related to each; lists of documents used in its preparation; outlines of the organizational structure of the specialized agencies; inter-agency agreements; and lists of principal committees and other bodies concerned with problems of co-ordination.

(e) DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL STUDIES

The Committee noted with approval the Secretary-General's report (E/813) on the progress made in the plans to publish the descriptive catalogue of economic and social studies, which had been requested in the Council's resolution 128 (VI) B.¹⁶⁰ The catalogue, it was planned, would describe studies, investigations and other projects in the economic and social fields undertaken by the United Nations and the specialized agencies and would include a brief description of the nature, scope, origin and purpose of each project and publication details concerning resulting memoranda or reports. It would include lists of departments and officers concerned with the listed projects, and would be issued annually.

(f) CALENDAR OF CONFERENCES OF SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

The Committee took note of the reports of the Secretary-General (E/843/Rev.1, E/847) on the progress which had been made in drawing up a balanced calendar of agency conferences, with the principal aim of assisting in ensuring that agencies would be able to time the submission of work programs and budgets before the pre-Assembly session of the Council.

Attention was drawn to the fact that UNESCO and FAO were holding their conferences during the second half of the year. The Council took note of the various technical and procedural reasons for this, and also noted the consideration that had been given by these organizations to the possibility of changing the date of future conferences to the first half of the year; and it expressed the hope that they would be able, in the near future, to conform to the plan recommended for achieving a balanced calendar.

(g) CO-ORDINATION OF PROGRAMS, FACILITIES AND LIAISON ARRANGEMENTS

The Committee took note of the report (E/842), prepared by the Secretary-General in accordance with the Council's resolution 124 (VI) B, on the action taken in pursuance of the agreements with the specialized agencies to develop effective co-ordination of the economic and social programs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, on the facilities which will be available for specialized agencies at the seat and regional offices of the United Nations, and on existing or contemplated liaison arrangements among the United Nations and specialized agencies.

The Committee agreed that the Secretary-General should be requested to undertake a study in greater detail than in this report with a view to enabling the Council to report to the Assembly.

The Committee considered the possibility of formulating policies on the location—in relation to the various offices of the United Nations—of the headquarters of those agencies that have not yet selected a permanent seat, but it was not found possible to formulate policies that would be generally applicable at this stage. It was therefore agreed that each case of an agency seeking prior consultation on this matter should be treated on its merits.

Regarding the location of the regional offices of agencies, the Committee noted that the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination favored full consultation in advance, through the latter Committee, before the establishment of regional offices. It endorsed this action as the procedure which should be followed by specialized agencies in conformity with the principles stated in the agreements between such agencies and the United Nations. It also expressed the hope that agencies not yet in relationship with the United Nations but represented on the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination would adopt a similar procedure if the question of establishing regional offices should arise.

(h) LIST OF INTER-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

The Committee considered the report of the Secretary-General (E/818 and Add.1) listing 70 inter-governmental organizations in the economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related fields having responsibilities similar to those of the United Nations and specialized agencies. The report had been requested in the Council's resolution 128 (VI) B. The Committee recommended a draft resolution, which was adopted by the Council by 16 votes to 0, with 2 abstentions, and reads as follows (resolution 171 (VII)):

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Believing that the establishment of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies having wide responsibilities in the economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related fields makes desirable re-examination by Member Governments of possible duplication or dispersion of effort between these organizations and other existing inter-governmental organizations,

"Recognizing that any action to simplify the structure of inter-governmental organizations could be taken only by Governments members of such organizations,

"Requests the Secretary-General to transmit, not later than 15 October 1948, to Member States and the specialized agencies a list of inter-governmental organizations, to include those in documents E/818 and E/818/Add.1, prepared in response to Council resolution 128 (VI), and any other organizations established by inter-governmental agreement which he may consider should be added;

"Recommends that Member States and the specialized agencies submit by 1 February 1949 their views regarding:

"1. The possible termination absorption or integration of any of these organizations into the United Nations or the specialized agencies;

"2. Relationships which might be established between any of the listed organizations and the United Nations or the specialized agencies; and

"Requests the Secretary-General to submit by 1 May 1949 a consolidated report, based on the replies received, for consideration by the Council at its ninth session."

(2) Administrative and Budgetary Co-ordination

The Committee took note of the Secretary-General's report on administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations and the specialized agencies (E/847). This report had been prepared in accordance with the General Assembly's resolution 125 (II)¹⁶¹ for submission to the Economic and Social Council and the third regular session of the Assembly. This resolution requested recommendations concerning: (a) measures for achieving greater uniformity in presentation of the budgets of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies, with a view to providing a basis for comparison of the several budgets; (b) the fiscal year and schedule of meetings of the specialized agencies with a view to setting priorities and developing effective co-ordination of programs; and (c) the feasibility of improved budgetary co-ordination between the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

The Committee recognized that the report would be discussed in detail by the General Assembly at its third session. However, it felt that the report might suitably be supplemented as far as possible with the following additional information: (a) practices of agencies with regard to presentation of their budget estimates on a project basis; (b) the practical experience of the League of Nations and the International Labour Office in the presentation and approval of budgets; and (c) possible measures for timing the Council's review of agency programs and the review of agency budgets by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, so that recommendations of the General Assembly with respect to budgets might be related to recommendations of the Council with respect to programs.

The Committee noted with approval that progress was being made towards working out a joint system of external audit for the United Nations and the specialized agencies.

(3) Program Co-ordination

In considering problems of program co-ordination covering economic and social co-operation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, the Committee had before it the Comparative Review prepared by the Secretary-General (E/848 and Corr.1 and Add.1). This Comparative Review was based, inter alia, on the following documents: reports of the specialized agencies as listed in document E/815/Rev.1; reports of commissions of the Council as summarized in the Secretary-General's report on work programs of the Economic and Social Departments and of commissions of the Council for 1948-49 (E/844); report by the Secretary-General on the organization of the Economic and Social Departments of the Secretariat for 1948-49 (E/844/Add.1).

A survey was first made of the social field, during which the Committee agreed that while there were overlapping fields of interest, there was not in fact at the present time actual overlapping in the work programs of the specialized agencies. Periodic review of work programs was, however, considered to be required, since the broad terms of reference of these agencies made overlapping possible. It was also agreed that co-ordination in the social field could best be achieved by concentrating on individual projects and problems and by developing joint plans of action on these subjects. It was further agreed, on a proposal of the New Zealand representative (E/AC.7/W.35), that it was desirable for organs of the United Nations and specialized agencies to set down, in their work programs for any specific period, only those items on which they would be actively engaged during that period. It was emphasized that the Economic and Social Council might rely on the Secretary-General (in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, and after taking into consideration the views expressed by members of the Council) to select and prepare studies on specific topics for the Committee's consideration, from the co-ordination aspect, at future sessions.

In surveying the economic field, the Committee agreed that, since the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination had already arranged to keep the subject of economic development under review, and since the question could in any case be more suitably studied when the program of the future ITO and the future status of the Economic and Employment Commission and its sub-commissions were better known, no further action would be taken for the time being. It was considered desirable, however, to have for the Economic and Social Council's information at the next session a report on the existing arrangements for co-ordinated action between the regional commissions and specialized agencies.

The Committee submitted a draft resolution on program co-ordination, which was adopted by the Council at its 225th plenary meeting by 15 votes to 2, with 1 abstention (resolution 166 (VII)), and reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having examined the report of its Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination regarding the processes of co-ordination, the progress made in administrative and budgetary co-ordination and questions of programme co-ordination reported to it by the specialized agencies, the subsidiary organs of the Council and the Secretary-General,

"Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and to the specialized agencies the report of the Council's Committee on Matters relating to Co-ordination and the records of the proceedings at the seventh session of the Council relating to these matters;

"Requests the specialized agencies, the Commissions and the other subsidiary organs of the Council and the Secretary-General to continue their work in pursuance of General Assembly resolutions 125(II) and 165 (II)¹⁶² and Council resolution 128(VI)¹⁶³ in the light of that examination; and

"Decides that an account of the action taken to implement Article 63 of the Charter and of related matters be included in its report to the third regular session of the General Assembly."

4. Co-operation between the United Nations and the Agencies

a. INTER-AGENCY AGREEMENTS

Under the provisions of their respective agreements with the United Nations, the specialized agencies have agreed to inform the Council of any agreements negotiated with other specialized agencies.

As of September 21, 1948, formal agreements had been concluded between ILO and FAO, ILO and UNESCO, ILO and WHO, and UNESCO and WHO. The Executive Board of UNESCO and the World Health Assembly, respectively, had approved formal agreements between FAO and UNESCO and between FAO and WHO, and the FAO Council had recommended them for approval to the fourth session of the FAO Conference convening in November 1948. These two agreements were to come into force with their approval by the FAO Conference.

In addition to these general agreements, a number of inter-agency agreements relating to special questions had been made, comparable to the agreement of November 22, 1947, between the United Nations and ILO defining their respective spheres of competence in migration.

b. LIAISON

Informal working arrangements between two or more specialized agencies and between agencies and the United Nations had evolved in order to avoid overlapping and assure adequate consultation on matters of common concern. The day-to-day secretariat consultations in the preparation and development of work programs had resulted in the allocation of specific tasks or in the co-ordinated handling of problems among the international organizations.

Most of the specialized agencies had made use, up to September 1948, of their right to participate in the discussions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council and its commissions on matters of interest to them.

Similarly, the United Nations had been represented at the main conferences and committee meetings of the agencies. Exchange arrangements had been put into effect whereby principal documents and technical materials issued by the United Nations and the agencies are made reciprocally available to their secretariats.

Permanent liaison officers were being maintained as of September 1948 at the United Nations by ILO, UNESCO and WHO, each of which had small liaison offices in the New York area. As of the same date, FAO, the Bank and the Fund, which are located in Washington, and ICAO, located in Montreal, had not considered it necessary to assign permanent liaison personnel at the United Nations headquarters.

The Secretary-General had undertaken to assure special liaison with the agencies located in Europe through officers concerned with Social Affairs and Trusteeship attached to the Geneva office.

c. CO-ORDINATION MACHINERY

In addition, formal machinery exists for inter-secretariat collaboration on broad policy matters. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (formerly known as the "Co-ordination Committee"), established in pursuance of a resolution (13(III)) of the Economic and Social Council at its third session, consists of the Secretary-General and the corresponding officers of the specialized agencies brought into relationship with the United Nations. Other agencies with which agreements are contemplated may send observers to the meetings of the Administrative Committee. The Administrative Committee held four sessions during the period under review: its second, from October 1 to 3, 1947; its third, from January 15 to 17, 1948; its fourth, from May 27 to 29; and its fifth, on July 15.

Further progress was made during the period under review in consolidating the machinery for co-ordination between the United Nations and the specialized agencies. A Preparatory Committee, composed of representatives of the chief administrative officers of the agencies, was established in February 1948 for the purpose of relieving the chief administrative officers of lesser matters of co-ordination, so that the latter could devote more attention to questions of higher policy. Subsidiary groups reporting to the Administrative Committee included, as of September 21, 1948, consultative committees on administrative questions, statistical matters, and public information, the United Nations Film Board and the Inter-Library Committee. Two regional bodies, the Geneva Consultative Committee on Administrative Matters and the Paris Central Administrative Services Unit, were also responsible to the Administrative Committee, as well as four ad hoc technical working groups, on fellowship programs, housing and town and country planning, migration and publications. Pursuant to a resolution of the General Assembly (13(I)), the Committee, at its fourth session, agreed that an International Civil Service Advisory Board should be established at an early date "to contribute to the improvement of recruitment and related phases of personnel administration in all of the international organizations" (E/846), and decided on the terms of reference of the Board.

d. CO-OPERATION ON SUBSTANTIVE MATTERS

(1) Resolutions of Organs of the United Nations

Various decisions involving co-operative action by the United Nations and the specialized agencies have been taken by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and its commissions. For example, during the period under review the General Assembly requested (resolution 128(II)) ILO to pursue its study of the practical application of machinery to ensure trade union rights and freedom of association.¹⁶⁴ The Assembly requested (136(II)) the Secretary-General, in collaboration with IRO, to report to the seventh session of the Council on the progress and prospect of repatriation, resettlement and immigration of refugees and displaced persons. The report was accordingly prepared (E/816 and Add.1) and considered at the Council's seventh session.¹⁶⁵ UNESCO was invited by the Assembly (137(II)) to assist Members of the United Nations at their request in implementing a program of teaching the purposes and principles of the United Nations in schools of Member States. UNESCO, as requested, reported on this subject to the seventh session of the Economic and Social Council (E/823).¹⁶⁶

Similarly, the Economic and Social Council requested FAO (103(VI)) to report on the measures taken by Member States, regional commissions and the specialized agencies to alleviate the world food crisis, and to recommend further action which might be taken to improve the situation.¹⁶⁷

In dealing with the question of prevention of discrimination and the protection of minorities, the Council made a number of requests (116(VI)B) to UNESCO in connection with programs of education, disseminating scientific facts designed to remove racial prejudice, and other measures to combat intolerance or hostility between nations and groups.¹⁶⁸

(2) Submission of Questions by Agencies

A number of specialized agencies have also submitted problems to the Council or its commissions.

The Preparatory Committee of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment suggested that a committee be set up to keep informed of and facilitate inter-governmental consultation and action on commodity problems. This recommendation was seconded by the FAO Preparatory Commission on World Food Proposals. The Interim Co-ordinating Committee for International Commodity Arrangements, set up pursuant to resolution 30(IV) of the Economic and Social Council, is composed of a representative of the Interim Commission of ITO, a representative of FAO, and a representative chosen by the Secretary-General.

ITU in November 1947 requested (E/572/Rev.-1) the United Nations to draw the attention of its competent organs to the urgency of the problem of rehabilitating the telecommunication systems of Members of the Union devastated by the war.

The International Timber Conference held by FAO recommended the immediate establishment of a European Timber Committee within the framework of the Economic Commission for Europe. This recommendation was communicated to the United Nations in June 1947 (E/455).

ILO in February 1948 referred to the United Nations a resolution (E/781) of its Regional Meeting for the Near and Middle East concerning the economic policies necessary to raise the standard of living in the area. The resolution had been brought before the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in January 1948, and it was decided to allocate work in this connection between the United Nations and the appropriate international agencies, including FAO and WHO.

In May 1948, UNESCO suggested (E/CN.9/26) to the Population Commission the desirability of calling a World Population Conference.

(3) Collaboration on Economic and Social Questions

The following are other examples of collaboration between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and between the agencies themselves on economic and social questions.

In the preparation of the survey of world economic conditions and trends presented to the sixth session of the Council, ICAO, the Bank and the Fund rendered considerable assistance, and ILO and FAO contributed to the survey whole sections on world manpower problems and the world food situation.

ILO, FAO, UNESCO and WHO assisted the Secretary-General, as members of his Advisory Committee, in preparing for the United Nations Scientific Conference on the Conservation and Utilization of Resources.

The United Nations, ILO, ICAO, ITU and the International Meteorological Organization (the predecessor of the proposed World Meteorological Organization) co-operated in the field of transport and communications. The Joint Maritime Commission of ILO had, prior to the United Nations Maritime Conference, expressed the hope that there would be no overlapping between the work of ILO and IMCO and that there would be full co-operation between the two organizations on all matters of common interest. The Maritime Conference, after noting the maritime work of ILO, drafted the Convention establishing IMCO, and in particular IMCO's functions, in such a manner as to ensure the avoidance of duplication.

Representatives of ICAO, ITU, the International Meteorological Organization, and the Provisional Maritime Consultative Council composed the preparatory committee of experts which met prior to the Conference on Safety and Life at Sea. The preparatory committee prepared a report on existing measures for the co-ordination of activities in the fields of aviation, shipping and telecommunications.

In order to avoid unnecessary requests for statistics to governments and to promote a well co-ordinated program of statistics, procedures have been established for the exchange of draft statistical questionnaires in advance of issuance. Arrangements were made for the International Labour Office to provide the United Nations with statistics on employment, unemployment, cost-of-living, wage rates and similar matters within the labor field. The International Monetary Fund provides statistics on balances of payments, exchange rates, gold and foreign exchange reserves and other subjects of special concern to the Fund. ICAO provides all figures on civil aviation. Negotiations with FAO were initiated to clarify responsibilities for the collection and publication of statistics on the production, consumption and distribution of agricultural products. Similar arrangements were made whereby the Statistical Office of the United Nations supplies to the specialized agencies statistics on population, national income, industrial production, trade and prices.

Other arrangements assure a close liaison in fiscal matters between the specialized agencies and the Fiscal Division of the United Nations both as regards planning of research on public finance and the exchange of available information and completed studies in this field. The International Labour Office informally offered to make available to the Fiscal Division factual information and analyses on aspects of social security systems that might be of use to the Division. On the other hand, it expressed a desire to obtain information on certain technical phases of taxation and methods of financing public works. FAO suggested the study of fiscal systems and policies as they affect purchasing, consumption, agriculture, economic development and social progress; material for use in such studies has been collected by the Fiscal Division in the course of its general work. Provision has been made between the Fiscal Division, the Fund, and the Bank for the exchange of studies relating to public finance, except insofar as certain studies by the Fund and the Bank contain confidential information.

Co-operative action at the regional level is illustrated by the combined efforts of the Economic Commission for Europe and FAO in the field of timber; FAO supplies the secretariat for the ECE Timber Committee, thereby ensuring the closest integration of policies. ECE was also assisted by FAO in dealing with problems of fertilizers and agriculture and by ILO with regard to European manpower problems. Decisions of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East also provided for close co-operation with specialized agencies, particularly with FAO in the field of agriculture, and with ILO in technical training. The Economic Commission for Latin America proposed a study, to be made jointly with the specialized agencies, of the relationship between the economic rehabilitation of non-American countries and the development of economic and commercial activities in Latin America.

A Directory of Economic and Statistical Projects, No. 1, published during 1947-48, served to reveal at the earliest possible stage any danger of overlapping in work projects. The Directory, by setting out the nature of projects in hand, provided a continuous guide to the United Nations and the specialized agencies in avoiding duplication. The preliminary issue of the Directory, published in July 1947, contained information from FAO, ICAO, ILO, WHO, the Bank and Fund, as well as from the United Nations. The second issue, published in January 1948, contained information from the above agencies and from IRO, ITU, UNESCO, and UPU. To comply with the resolution (128(VI)) of the Council, the Directory was to be replaced by a Catalogue of Economic and Social Studies, to include studies in the social as well as the economic field. The Catalogue is to be published annually in June, the first issue to appear in 1949 (see above).

The assistance received by UNICEF, particularly from FAO and WHO, illustrates the co-operation between the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the social field. A survey of the milk supply position in different European countries was made by UNICEF and FAO in the summer of 1947. UNICEF has been assisted by an FAO nutrition consultant and a WHO liaison officer and pediatrician in carrying out its supplementary child-feeding programs. UNICEF has also been assisted to a considerable extent by WHO in developing programs for the control of tuberculosis, malaria and venereal diseases among children and nursing and expectant mothers.¹⁶⁹

Both FAO and WHO agreed to co-operate with UNESCO in the Haitian pilot project for fundamental education; FAO was to study and work toward improving agricultural methods in the area, while WHO was to advise on sanitary and health conditions. Likewise, these two agencies as well as the United Nations were participating in the UNESCO-sponsored research project in the Hylean Amazon region of Latin America.

UNESCO and WHO jointly arranged for the calling of a conference in early 1949 to establish a Permanent Council for co-ordination of International Congresses of the Medical Sciences.

All the interested specialized agencies participated with the Trusteeship Council in the development of a questionnaire on Trust Territories.

In connection with the work of the Commission on Human Rights on an International Bill of Rights, UNESCO transmitted to the United Nations the results of a study of the philosophical bases of a declaration of human rights. Material on human rights was also prepared by IRO.

In addition to the examples of co-operative action listed above, many activities and problems with which the United Nations and the specialized agencies were jointly concerned are described in more detail in other sections of this volume. Among these are the following: the allocation of functions in the field of migration; co-ordinated action to meet the world food crisis; problems concerning refugees; narcotics control; the activities of the specialized agencies and subsidiary organs of the Council in the field of housing and town and country planning and the measures taken towards their co-ordination; the shortage of newsprint; equal pay for equal work; United Nations postal services; the question of establishing United Nations research laboratories; the co-ordination of cartographic services; and the co-ordination of the fellowship programs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies.¹⁷⁰

5. Membership in UNESCO

In accordance with Article 2 of the agreement between UNESCO and the United Nations, the Director-General of UNESCO forwarded for consideration by the Economic and Social Council an application from Hungary for admission to UNESCO (E/261/Add.1).

At its 86th plenary meeting on July 21, the Council decided by 10 votes to 1, with 7 abstentions, that UNESCO should be informed that the Council had no objection to the admission of Hungary to the Organization. The representative of Cuba explaining his negative vote stated that his delegation felt that the present government of Hungary, as distinct from the Hungarian population, was not democratic and should be treated on the same basis as Franco Spain.

The Council at its sixth session considered the application of the Principality of Monaco for membership in UNESCO, consideration of which had been postponed from the fifth session (E/568).

The matter was discussed at the 125th and 129th plenary meetings of the Council on February 3 and 5. Certain representatives, including those of the United States, Canada and New Zealand, thought that this raised the problem of the position of other small states from the point of view of their practical independence and importance, and considered that UNESCO should take into account what contribution Monaco could make in furthering the program of the Organization. The French representative supported the application of Monaco, stating (1) that it was a sovereign state and (2) that its standing in the cultural and scientific field, owing in particular to the activities of its Oceanographic Institute, entitled it to a place in UNESCO.

¹⁶⁹ See United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, p. 622.

¹⁷⁰ For details, see under appropriate headings.

The Council adopted a Canadian draft resolution as amended by France (resolution 137(VI)) in which it stated that it had no objection to the admission of Monaco to UNESCO, but recommended that in considering the request UNESCO take into account the contribution which Monaco could make in furthering the program of the Organization and also consider "the general problem of the admission of similar diminutive states".

6. Location of the World Health Organization Headquarters

The Council at its 181st plenary meeting on July 23, 1948, considered the report of the Committee on Negotiations with Inter-Governmental Agencies on the headquarters of the World Health Organization (E/C.1/39). The Committee had agreed that since consultations had taken place at the secretariat level (E/852) on questions arising out of the location of the headquarters of WHO and since the decision of the World Health Assembly on July 2 had been unanimous, no further formal consultations were necessary. A majority of the Committee had gone on record in declaring that this procedure should not be regarded as a precedent. The Committee recommended to the Council a draft resolution taking note of the decision of the World Health Assembly to make Geneva the headquarters of WHO, and stating that the Council considered the establishment of its headquarters there "at this time" in the best interests of the United Nations and WHO.

The Director-General of WHO pointed out to the Council that it had been necessary to make a provisional decision on headquarters pending formal consultation with the United Nations, in order that the World Health Assembly might consider budgeting and other problems. It was intended to hold a meeting of the Assembly on the following day to take the final decision. He also expressed the feeling that the words "at this time" in the draft resolution were unwise since they might be interpreted to mean that the location chosen was only temporary.

On the proposal of the U.S.S.R. representative the Council decided by 16 votes to 1 to amend the resolution by referring to the "permanent" headquarters of WHO. Certain representatives expressed some misgivings at the use of the word "permanent", and the Chinese representative opposed it on the grounds (1) that it had been laid down by the General Assembly that specialized agencies should take into consideration the advantages of concentrating their headquarters at the seat of the United Nations, and (2) that action by WHO was more badly needed in under-developed countries than in Europe, and, he therefore maintained, the decision should not be too rigid.

A French amendment to make clear that the decision of the World Health Assembly had been a provisional one was adopted by 14 votes to 3.

The amended resolution (168(VII)) was adopted by 13 votes to 0, with 4 abstentions, as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Having taken note of the provisional decision unanimously adopted by the World Health Assembly on 2 July 1948 that Geneva be made the permanent headquarters of the World Health Organization,

"Considers that the establishment of the headquarters of the World Health Organization at Geneva is in the best interests of the United Nations and of the World Health Organization."

7. Use of the Central Library at Geneva by the United Nations and Specialized Agencies

At its fifth session (88th meeting) on July 22, 1947, the Economic and Social Council considered a request from the Interim Commission of WHO for the transfer of certain assets of the League of Nations, in particular medical and health material in the League of Nations Library. The Council recommended a resolution to the General Assembly, the terms of which it adopted (129(II)) on November 17, 1947.¹⁷¹

It instructed the Secretary-General "to consider the different aspects of the problem of the transfer of the medical and health material of the League of Nations Library and to submit to the Economic and Social Council a draft plan within the framework of a general policy relating to the use of the Central Library by the United Nations and by the specialized agencies".¹⁷¹

The Secretary-General therefore submitted to the Council at its seventh session a note (E/835) informing the Council that the general policy determining the future role of the Geneva Library was the subject of extensive informal consultations. In particular, it would be discussed at a meeting of an International Advisory Committee of Library Experts to which librarians of all the specialized agencies had been invited. The Secretary-General, therefore, suggested that the final decision on the question might be postponed.

The special requirements of WHO would be considered with the representatives of that agency.

¹⁷¹ See General Assembly, pp. 119-20.

The guiding principle would be to make the Geneva Library as useful as possible to all the specialized agencies.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Council a communication from WHO (E/958) calling attention to a resolution on the League of Nations Library adopted by the first World Health Assembly. The resolution requested the Council to arrange without delay for the transfer to WHO of title to the health documents, medical and health books and other materials in the League of Nations Library relating to the work of the League of Nations Health Organization.

The Council considered the question at the 198th plenary meeting on August 13. The French representative thought that a decision should be postponed until the general study of the use of the Library had been completed, since WHO in the meantime would be able to consult any documents it wished. His proposal to defer consideration of the question to the eighth session of the Council was rejected by 9 votes to 7.

The United States representative submitted a resolution (E/945) requesting the Secretary-General to formulate a draft plan for submission to the Council at its eighth session, bearing in mind that the operating requirements of WHO made it desirable to locate in WHO headquarters certain medical and health materials from the Geneva Library and that these requirements could be met by long-term loans without transfer of title.

The representative of the Secretary-General read to the Council the text of a telegram stating that the Committee of Library Experts which was then meeting had unanimously recommended that requests for the transfer of specific portions of the League of Nations Library should not be granted and that the function of the Library would be seriously impaired if portions of it were detached.

The representative of WHO stated that his Organization had felt that the best way to secure access to the books it needed was by transfer of title but that it would be satisfied by a long-term loan. If transferred, the books would be readily available to the United Nations or any of the specialized agencies.

The representatives of New Zealand, Poland, and the United Kingdom supported the view that the Library should not be split up. The representative of New Zealand felt that the United States draft resolution did not specifically exclude this principle and therefore proposed to delete from this resolution the paragraphs referring the considerations to be borne in mind by the Secretary-General in formulating his plan.

The Council unanimously adopted the amended draft resolution (172(VII)) as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Considering General Assembly resolution 129(II) of 17 November 1947, the resolution of the first World Health Assembly of 17 July 1948, and the note by the Secretary-General on the use of United Nations library facilities at Geneva,

"Considering that the Geneva Library should be made as useful as possible to the United Nations and all the specialized agencies,

"Requests the Secretary-General promptly to formulate the draft plan, within the framework of a general policy relating to the use of the Central Library by the United Nations and the specialized agencies, as requested by the General Assembly, for submission to the Council if possible at its eighth session."

J. NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

1. Granting of Consultative Status

a. ORGANIZATIONS ADMITTED AT THE FIFTH AND SIXTH SESSIONS OF THE COUNCIL

The Committee on Arrangements for Consultation with Non-Governmental Organizations (Council NGO Committee), established by the Council on June 21, 1946, to review and make recommendations on applications for consultative status submitted by non-governmental organizations, met on July 18, 24, 28 and 29, 1947, to consider the applications received up to the meeting of the NGO Working Party on June 2, 1947. The Committee's report (E/500) was considered by the Council's fifth session at the 107th, 114th and 115th plenary meetings on August 6 and 13, 1947, and by a meeting of the Council's Committee of the Whole on August 7. The Council decided (resolution 94(V)I.2) to admit 21 international organizations and, on the recommendation of the Members of the United Nations concerned, it also decided (95(V)II) to admit four national non-governmental organizations to consultative status in category B.¹⁷²

¹⁷² For list of organizations with consultative status, see p. 694. Certain organizations were admitted at the fifth session subject to the exclusion of their Spanish affiliates, and as the condition was not fulfilled, they are not included in the list.

At its sixth session the Council considered at its 161st, 162nd and 164th plenary meetings on March 3, 4 and 5 the reports of the Council NGO Committee (E/706) and, on the basis of the report, decided at its 161st plenary meeting on March 3 to admit seven organizations to consultative status in category B and two in category C.

b. RECLASSIFICATION OF ORGANIZATIONS

The Council NGO Committee had recommended to the fifth session of the Council (E/500) that the request of the following organizations in category B to be placed in category A should not be granted: Inter-American Council of Commerce and Production, International Organization of Industrial Employers, Women's International Democratic Federation, World Federation of Democratic Youth. In the case of the International Organization of Industrial Employers it had recommended that consideration of the request should be postponed for one year.

The Council decided at its 114th plenary meeting on August 13, by 14 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions (resolution 95(V)I.1), to place the International Organization of Industrial Employers in category A. It, however, rejected by 7 votes to 3, with 8 abstentions, a U.S.S.R. proposal to reclassify the Women's International Democratic Federation and the World Federation of Democratic Youth.

At its sixth session the Council decided on the basis of the Council NGO Committee's report (E/706), in resolution 133(VI)A, that the World Federation of United Nations Associations formerly placed in category B should be placed in category A. At its 164th plenary meeting on March 5 it adopted by 14 votes to 1, with 2 abstentions, the recommendation of the Committee that the Women's International Democratic Federation and the World Federation of Democratic Youth, which had requested to be placed in category A, should remain in category B. A Polish proposal, supported by the U.S.S.R. representative, that they should be placed in category A was rejected by 12 votes to 2, with 2 abstentions.

c. POSTPONEMENT OF GRANT OF STATUS

On the recommendation of the Council NGO Committee the Council at its sixth session passed, without discussion, resolution 133(VI)A, which provided, inter alia, that the Council,

"2. Considering that the Council NGO Committee feels unable to make recommendations concerning the following organizations at the present time either because they have been recently organized or because further information is desired,

"Decides that the applications of the following organizations will be reconsidered at a later date:

"European Union of Federalists (postponed until organizations having a similar interest enter into sufficiently close relations with each other to permit joint representation)

"International Council of Christians and Jews (postponed for one year)

"International Institute of Public Law (postponed for one year)

"International Union of Socialist Youth (postponed for one year)

"Pax Romana—International Catholic Movement for Intellectual and Cultural Affairs (postponed until information and clarification to be requested is received)

"Pax Romana—International Movement of Catholic Students (postponed until information and clarification to be requested is received)

"World Movement for World Federal Government (postponed until organizations having a similar interest enter into sufficiently close relations with each other to permit joint representation). . . ."

d. ORGANIZATIONS CONCERNED WITH TRANSPORT

At the Council's fifth session, acting on the recommendation of the Council NGO Committee, the Committee of the Whole recommended the following resolution to the Council (E/543):

"The Economic and Social Council

"Decides to request the Transport and Communications Commission to advise the Council on the applications of the organizations noted below, it being understood that the question of Spanish membership will be taken into consideration when the Council acts upon these applications, some of which appear to fall within the terms of the Council's resolution 57(IV) of 28 March 1947 providing that 'in the case of certain organizations consultative arrangements should not be made, since their work would appear to fall entirely within the field of activity of one of the specialized agencies or other inter-governmental organizations'; and

"Decides to request the Council NGO Committee to consider the report of the Transport and Communications Commission and forward its recommendations to the Council:

"Central Council of International Touring

"International Air Transport Association

"International Shipping Conference

"International Union of Public Transport

"International Union of Railways

"Permanent International Association of Navigation Congresses."

The Council discussed this draft resolution at its 114th and 115th plenary meetings on August 13. After a tie vote, the Council decided by 8 votes to 7, with 3 abstentions, on the proposal of the Venezuelan representative, to delete the name of the International Shipping Conference from this list.

The reasons given by the Venezuelan representative for his proposal were: that the International Shipping Conference had affiliations in Franco Spain; that the Council already had relations with the Provisional Maritime Council, an inter-governmental organization dealing with the same questions as the International Shipping Conference, and it had been decided that if an inter-governmental organization was dealing with a subject, a non-governmental organization dealing with the same subject should not receive consultative status; that the International Shipping Conference indulged in unfair competitive practices the prevention of which was one of the aims of the proposed maritime conference.

The Venezuelan proposal was supported by the U.S.S.R. representative. It was opposed by the United Kingdom representative on the grounds that: the subjects dealt with by the International Shipping Conference and the Provisional Maritime Council were not identical; the question of participation of organizations which had Spanish affiliations should only be considered when the Council was called upon to take decisions regarding such applications; it was not for the Council to decide whether or not it was in agreement with the views of the organizations on which it conferred consultative status. The Norwegian representative thought that the Transport Commission should decide whether the International Shipping Conference covered exactly the same ground as the Provisional Maritime Council and proposed that, as in the case of other organizations which held a similar position with regard to the Spanish question, the International Shipping Conference could be invited on condition that its Spanish branches were excluded.

After some further discussion on a United Kingdom proposal that the other five organizations on the list should be accorded the same treatment as the International Shipping Conference if they had Spanish affiliations, and an Indian proposal that the Transport and Communications Commission should only consider the organizations which had severed all connection with Franco Spain before its next session, the Council decided at its 115th plenary meeting on August 13 without objections (resolution 95(V)II) to refer the paragraph in the report of its Committee of the Whole to the Council NGO Committee with the request that it reconsider the paragraph and report to the Council.

At its sixth session, on the basis of the Council NGO Committee's report (E/706) the Council in resolution 133 (VI) A adopted the following provisions:

"The Economic and Social Council. . .

"Decides to request the Transport and Communications Commission to advise the Council on the applications of the organizations noted below, it being understood that the question of Spanish membership is not referred to the Commission but will be taken into consideration when the Council acts upon these applications, and

"Requests the Council NGO Committee to consider the report of the Transport and Communications Commission and forward its recommendations to the Council regarding:

"Central Council of International Touring

"International Air Transport Association

"International Shipping Federation

"International Union of Railways

"Permanent International Association of Navigation Congresses."

e. ORGANIZATIONS WITH SPANISH AFFILIATES

In its resolution 95 (V) of August 13, 1947, the Council had granted consultative status to the International Organization for Standardization (on condition that the Spanish affiliate be expelled from the International Electro-technical Commission which had become a part of it), and also the International Automobile Federation and the International Touring Alliance (to be jointly represented), the International Bar Association and the International Federation for Housing and Town Planning subject to the exclusion of their Spanish affiliates.

The Council NGO Committee and the Council noted that the Spanish affiliate of the International Organization for Standardization had resigned and that this Organization, having met the Council's requirements, therefore had consultative status in category B.

With regard to the other organizations the Council NGO Committee suggested that the other four organizations should be given a period of twelve months in which to comply with the Council's condition regarding the exclusion of their Spanish affiliates.

At the sixth session of the Council (162nd plenary meeting on March 4) certain representatives expressed the view that the extension of twelve months granted to the four organizations was unjustified. Others felt that a distinction should be drawn between the International Automobile Federation and the International Touring Alliance, which had taken certain steps to comply with the Council's decision, and the International Bar Association and the International Federation for Housing and Town Planning, which appeared to have taken no action. A U.S.S.R. proposal providing that the part of the Economic and Social Council's resolution of August 13, 1947, referring to the two latter organizations should be revoked since they had not complied with the conditions laid down by the Council, was rejected at the same meeting by a vote of 6 to 3, with 7 abstentions.

The Council at its 162nd plenary meeting adopted, by 11 votes to 0, with 5 abstentions, resolution 133(VI)B, stating that the International Automobile Federation and the International Touring Alliance should be given twelve months in which to comply with the Council's decisions concerning the exclusion of their Spanish affiliates, and that the International Bar Association and the International Federation for Housing and Town Planning should not be granted consultative status with the Council unless the required action was taken by the Council's next session.

At the suggestion of the Council NGO Committee, the Council at its 164th plenary meeting on March 5 unanimously requested (133(VI)F) the Committee to study the Council's resolution (57(IV)) on international non-governmental organizations having members in Spain, which the Committee had thought required clarification.

f. RECONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS

At its sixth session, at the 162nd plenary meeting on March 4, the Council by 10 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions, adopted in a slightly amended form a resolution proposed by the Council NGO Committee concerning the reconsideration of the Council's decisions on non-governmental organizations. The U.S.S.R. representative was against a general ruling on this matter and felt that, when there was a question of revising decisions concerning applications from non-governmental organizations, each case should be treated on its merits. The United States and Chinese representatives thought that a limitation was advisable in order to save time and ensure efficiency. The resolution adopted by the Council (133(VI)C.1) reads as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Considering that several non-governmental organizations, whose applications for consultative status under Article 71 or for reclassification were not granted by the Council, immediately re-applied, and

"Considering that paragraph 2 of section HI of the Council's resolution of 21 June 1946, states, in part, that It should also be recognized as a basic principle that the arrangements should not be such as to overburden the Council, . . .

"Decides that any re-application for consultative status or requests for reclassification should be considered by the Council NGO Committee, for recommendation to the Council, at earliest eighteen months after the last occasion on which such applications or requests were considered by the Council, unless otherwise decided at the time of such consideration."

2. Arrangements for Consultative Status

a. REQUEST OF THE WORLD FEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS FOR ADDITIONAL PRIVILEGES

The General Assembly adopted on December 15, 1946, a resolution (49(I)B and C)¹⁷³ recommending that the Council give the World Federation of Trade Unions the right to submit items for insertion on the Council's provisional agenda in accordance with the procedure applicable to specialized agencies, and expressed agreement with the general principle that all organizations in category A should receive equal treatment in respect of consultative arrangements with the Council. The Council accordingly at its fourth session in March 1947 provided that organizations in category A might submit items for the Council's provisional agenda; set up an Agenda Committee to consider and make recommendations on the provisional agenda; provided that category A organizations could present their views at any meeting of the Agenda Committee at which the inclusion of items submitted by them was discussed.¹⁷⁴

The World Federation of Trade Unions, by a letter (E/C.2/48) dated July 3, 1947, addressed to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, requested that the Council should give it:

"1. The right to request the convocation of the Council in special session under the same conditions as those provided in Rule 4 of the rules of procedure of the Economic and Social Council for specialized agencies;

"2. The right to participate, in conformity with the procedure at present applied to specialized agencies, in the Council's deliberations concerning:

"(a) the adoption of the agenda whenever the removal from or retention on the agenda of a question proposed by the World Federation of Trade Unions is discussed;

"(b) the examination of all questions placed on the agenda on the proposal of the World Federation of Trade Unions."

At the same time it submitted a resolution, laying down that the Council,

"to fulfil entirely its task of co-ordination and direction, should, prior to any reference of a question to a commission or a specialized agency, give directives to the body concerned on the sense and scope of the studies to be undertaken and the solution to be worked out."

¹⁷³ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p. 150.

¹⁷⁴ See Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, p.

The Federation requested that its note should be brought to the attention of the General Assembly at its next session.

The Council NGO Committee, which met concurrently with the fifth session of the Economic and Social Council, considered the question on August 16 and submitted a report (E/566) containing two resolutions which were considered and adopted by the Council at its 121st plenary meeting on August 16. By 8 votes to 7, with 3 abstentions, the Council voted to hear a representative of the WFTU, who explained, inter alia, that if the Agenda Committee of the Council decided against putting an item proposed by the WFTU on the Council's agenda, the WFTU wished to be permitted to state its views on that item to the full Council, and stated that proposals made by the WFTU to the Council should be considered by that body and not referred to an organ outside the Council.

The U.S.S.R. representative supported the WFTU views and criticized the report of the NGO Committee as mechanically placing all non-governmental organizations in the same category. The United Kingdom, United States and French representatives felt that the distinction between specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations should be maintained and that the NGO Committee's report provided adequate machinery for fruitful collaboration.

The first of the two resolutions (95(V)III.1) adopted by the Council at its 121st plenary meeting on August 16 by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention, reads as follows:

"1. The Economic and Social Council Decides,

"With a view to the further implementation of the General Assembly resolution of 15 December 1946 and the Council resolutions of 21 June 1946 and of 28 March 1947,

"That whenever the Council discusses the substance of an item proposed by a non-governmental organization in category A and included on the agenda of the Council, such an organization shall be entitled to present orally to the Council an introductory statement of an expository nature,

"That such an organization may be invited by the President of the Council, with the consent of the Council, to make, in the course of the discussion of the item before the Council, an additional statement for purposes of clarification,

"That non-governmental organizations in category A will be expected to follow the procedure already established, of presenting their views, in the first instance, to the Council NGO Committee on all items which they have not proposed, it being understood that the Committee may recommend that the Council invite the organization to present an oral statement to it, and

"That any request on the part of non-governmental organizations in category A, referred to in paragraph 2, to be heard by the Council on any item of the agenda of the Council should be made to the Council NGO Committee not later than forty-eight hours after the adoption of the agenda by the Council."

The Council voted separately on the three paragraphs of the second resolution and adopted them by varying votes. The resolution as a whole was adopted at the same meeting by 14 votes to 3, with 1 abstention.

In this resolution (95(V)III.2) the Council stated that considering the differences established in the Charter between specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations and the arrangements worked out for giving effect to the Assembly's resolution, it could not "accede to the request that non-governmental organizations be granted the right to demand the convocation of special sessions of the Council". On the question of the right to participate in Council discussions it believed that the separate resolution adopted (see above) was adequate to ensure close co-operation between the Council and non-governmental organizations in category A. On the question of the proposed resolution submitted by the WFTU it pointed out that the way in which the Council dealt with any question on its agenda was in each case entirely within its competence.

b. ALTERATIONS IN PROCEDURAL ARRANGEMENTS

The Council at its sixth session unanimously decided at its 164th plenary meeting on March 5 (resolution 133(VI)D) to draw the attention of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East to the arrangements approved by the Council for consultation with non-governmental organizations and to request the Commission to consider the formulation of rules of procedure providing for consultation with non-governmental organizations. A similar recommendation had been suggested by the Council NGO Committee with regard to the Economic Commission for Latin America (E/706), but in view of a proposal made by the President (E/735) to change the wording of the rules of this Commission to meet the point in question, the Council decided not to cover it specifically. In this connection the U.S.S.R. representative put forward the view that the regional economic commissions should consult only with regional non-governmental organizations.

The Council also decided unanimously at its 164th plenary meeting (133(VI)E) to amend rules 5 and 44 of the rules of procedure of its functional commissions to provide that the provisional agenda of each session of the commissions and, as far as possible, the text of all reports, resolutions, recommendations and other formal decisions adopted by the commissions and their subsidiary bodies should be communicated to the non-governmental organizations in category A and to appropriate non-governmental organizations in categories B and C.

At its 159th plenary meeting on March 2, 1948, the Council discussed a United States proposal (E/692) to amend the final paragraph of its resolution 95 (V) III.1. This paragraph (see above) provided that a request of a non-governmental organization in category A "referred to in paragraph 2" to speak on an item of the agenda of the Council should be made not later than 48 hours after the adoption of the agenda. Paragraph 2 referred to additional statements by the organizations on items proposed by them for inclusion in the agenda. The United States maintained that this reference was in error, since the Council had obviously intended that the 48-hour limit should apply to organizations wishing to make statements on items they had not proposed for inclusion in the agenda (i.e., paragraph 4 of resolution 95 (V) III.1). The Council adopted the United States proposal (resolution 133 (VI) G) that the reference in question should be made to "the preceding paragraph".

In view of this misunderstanding, the Council, after some discussion, decided at the same meeting by 13 votes to 3, with 2 abstentions, on the recommendation of the NGO Committee, to hear a representative of the American Federation of Labor on the question of equal pay for equal work, despite the fact that the request of the Federation had not been submitted within 48 hours after the Council had adopted its agenda.

3. Communication from the World Jewish Congress

The Council at its sixth session (174th plenary meeting on March 11) on a point of order raised by the Polish representative discussed the question of a report of the Council NGO Committee (E/710) on the memoranda of the World Jewish Congress in regard to the situation of the Jewish populations in Arab countries. This report had been placed before the Council at the same time as the report of the Council NGO Committee (E/706) and the Polish representative alleged that an informal agreement had been reached among the five Great Powers not to discuss document E/710 on the ground that it would unduly prolong the Council's deliberations. The U.S.S.R.

and French representatives denied that there had been any such agreement. The French representative explained that different members of the Council had suggested various ways of handling the question. He thought that a number of members had not realized that the document was before the Council for discussion and that it might appear that the Council had refused to examine the question. The United States representative stated that the matter had been referred to the Council without recommendation by the Council NGO Committee and would only be discussed by the Council on the specific request of a member of the Council. The Polish representative, however, felt that the item on the agenda was "Reports of the Council NGO Committee", and one of these reports was document E/710; the Council had simply overlooked the document in question. He asked for a review of the whole question from the procedural point of view.

The Council adopted a resolution (133 (VI) H) proposed by the representative of France transmitting the record of its discussion to the Council NGO Committee and requesting that Committee to submit to the Council at its next session "whatever recommendations it may deem useful".

The Council NGO Committee—which had originally heard a representative of the World Jewish Congress on February 16, 1948—held meetings on June 21 and 22, 1948, at which representatives of Egypt, Pakistan, Syria and Turkey were heard on the question, as well as the representative of the World Jewish Congress. The Committee reported to the Council at the seventh session (E/940).

The report by the NGO Committee was deferred with other items until the eighth session. In connection with the above question, the NGO Committee concluded that, with regard to consultation with non-governmental organizations in categories B and C, it should not make specific recommendations regarding the substance of the consultation unless specifically requested by the Council. At the same time the Committee agreed that its reports should be sufficiently detailed and explicit to permit the members of the Council to form their own judgments regarding the importance of the subject under consideration and any action to be taken thereon.

4. Items Submitted by Non-Governmental Organizations in Category A

During the period under review, the following items were submitted by non-governmental organizations in category A to the Economic and Social Council for consideration:

1. Principle of equal pay for equal work for men and women workers. (Item proposed by the World Federation of Trade Unions.)

2. Trade Union Rights (freedom of association). (Item proposed by the World Federation of Trade Unions.)

3. Infringement of Trade Union Rights. (Item proposed by the World Federation of Trade Unions.)

4. Protection of migrant and immigrant labor. (Item proposed by the American Federation of Labor.)

5. Survey of forced labor and measures for its abolition. (Item proposed by the American Federation of Labor.)

6. International control of oil resources. (Item proposed by the International Co-operative Alliance.)

5. Communications from Consultative Non-Governmental Organizations

In the period covered by this Yearbook, 83 communications were received from 22 consultative non-governmental organizations (E/C.2/46-E/C.2/125, excluding documents E/C.2/56, 87, 97, 98, 119/Rev.1, 120 and 121). These communications, though sometimes directed primarily to Commissions of the Economic and Social Council (in particular the Human Rights, Social, Status of Women and the Transport and Communications Commissions), and sometimes calling particular matters to the attention of the members of the Council, were generally related to items on the Council's agenda.

During the seventh session of the Council, the question of the listing of documents received from organizations in relation to the Council's agenda was considered by the NGO Committee. The Committee requested the Secretary-General to prepare for the current and each future session of the Council, for distribution immediately after the adoption of the agenda, a list by categories A, B and C of communications from non-governmental organizations received since the previous list was issued, indicating their titles and document numbers and which of them are specifically addressed to items on the agenda as adopted by the Council (E/940/Add.1).

6. Hearings of Non-Governmental Organizations

The following organizations were heard by the Economic and Social Council in plenary meetings at the fifth session;

Name of Organization	Subject
American Federation of Labor	Trade Union rights Protection of migrant and immigrant labor
International Co-operative Alliance	International control of oil resources

ANNEX III

MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE COUNCIL¹⁷⁹

Amended rules adopted at the Council's fifth session on August 12, 1947 (resolution 99(V)):

Rule 10

The provisional agenda shall include all items proposed by:

- (a) The Council at a previous session;
- (b) The General Assembly, the Security Council, or the Trusteeship Council;
- (c) Members of the United Nations, specialized agencies, and non-governmental organizations in category A, if submitted in sufficient time to reach the Secretary-General not less than twenty-eight days before the first meeting of each session.

Rule 14

The Agenda Committee shall prior to each session consider items submitted (under rule 10) for the provisional agenda and make recommendations thereon to the Council at the first meeting of the session, including suggestions as to the inclusion or deferment of items and the order in which they shall be considered.

A Member of the United Nations, a specialized agency, or a non-governmental organization in category A, which has requested the inclusion of an item in the provisional agenda, shall be entitled to present its views through its representative at any meeting of the Agenda Committee at which the question of the inclusion of the item is discussed.

If, owing to the urgency of the subject, an item is proposed for inclusion on the provisional agenda under rule 10(c) less than twenty-eight days before the first meeting of the session, it shall be accompanied by a statement of the urgency, including the reasons which precluded its submission under rule 10(c), which the Secretary-General shall transmit to the Agenda Committee. The Agenda Committee shall include in its report to the Council a recommendation with regard to the inclusion on the grounds of urgency of any such item.

Rule 65

Each commission shall elect its own officers.

Rule 66

The rules of procedure of the commissions, as approved by the Council and amended from time to time by the Council, shall apply to the proceedings of the commissions and the subsidiary bodies unless otherwise decided by the Council.

Amended rules adopted at the Council's seventh session on August 28, 1948 (E/1068):

Rule 13

The Council shall set up an Agenda Committee composed of the President, the two Vice-Presidents and two other members who shall be elected at each session of the Council to hold office until replaced at the next session. The President shall be the Chairman of the Agenda Committee subject to the provisions of rules 20 and 21.

Rule 30

(a) A summary estimate of the financial implications of all proposals coming before the Council shall be prepared by the Secretary-General and circulated to members as soon as possible after the issue of the provisional agenda. This summary estimate shall be revised as necessary during the session in the light of the Council's discussions and a final summary shall be considered by the Council in plenary meeting before the close of each session.

(b) Before a proposal which involves expenditure from United Nations funds is approved by the Council or by any of its committees, the Secretary-General shall prepare and circulate to members, as early as possible, a separate estimate of the cost involved in each proposal. It shall be the duty of the President of the Council and chairmen of committees to draw this estimate to the attention of members and invite discussions on it when the proposal is considered by the Council or by a committee.

¹⁷⁹ For complete text of rules of procedure before these amendments, see Yearbook of the United Nations, 1946-47, pp. 564-68.

V. Non-Self-Governing Territories

A. DECLARATION ON NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

Chapter XI of the Charter contains a Declaration on Non-Self-Governing Territories. In this Declaration, Members of the United Nations which are responsible for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote their welfare to the utmost.

They therefore undertake the following obligations:

To ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social and educational advancement, their just treatment and their protection against abuses;

To develop self-government, to take account of the political aspirations of the peoples and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions according to the particular circumstances of each territory and the varying stages of development of the peoples;

To further international peace and security;

To promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research and to co-operate with one another and, where appropriate, with specialized international bodies so as to achieve the social, economic and scientific purposes set forth in the Article;

To transmit regularly to the Secretary-General for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social and educational conditions in those Non-Self-Governing Territories which are not placed under the International Trusteeship System.

Members of the United Nations also agree that their policy with respect to these Non-Self-Governing Territories, equally with that concerning their Metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighborliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world in social, economic and commercial matters.¹

B. INFORMATION ON NON-SELF-GOVERNING TERRITORIES

On February 9, 1946, the General Assembly adopted a resolution requesting the Secretary-General to include in his annual report on the work of the organization a statement summarizing such information as may have been transmitted to him under Article 73 e of the Charter.²

On December 14, 1946, the General Assembly (resolution 66(I)) invited Members transmitting information to send to the Secretary-General by June 30 of each year the most recent information at their disposal. The information was to be summarized, analyzed and classified by the Secretary-General and included in his report to the General Assembly so that the Assembly might decide whether any procedure would be desirable for dealing with such information in future years.³

1. Ad hoc Committee on Information Transmitted under Article 73 e

The Assembly at the same time established an ad hoc committee, composed in equal numbers of representatives of Members transmitting information and of the representatives elected by the Assembly on the basis of equitable geographical distribution, "to examine the Secretary-General's summary and analysis of the information transmitted under Article 73 e with a view to aiding the Assembly in its consideration of this information, and with a view to making recommendations to the General Assembly regarding the procedures to be followed in the future and the means of ensuring that the advice, expert knowledge and experience of the specialized agencies would be used to the best advantage".

The composition of the ad hoc Committee was as follows:

Members transmitting information under Article 73 e of the Charter:

Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, Netherlands, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States.

Members elected by the General Assembly:

Brazil, China, Cuba, Egypt, India, Philippines, U.S.S.R., Uruguay.

The ad hoc Committee met at Lake Success from August 28 to September 12, 1947.

Representatives of the following specialized agencies were invited to attend its meetings in an advisory capacity:

Food and Agriculture Organization; International Labour Organisation; United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization; World Health Organization.

Information concerning the following territories was transmitted by the Powers (in italic type) responsible for their administration and was summarized by the Secretary-General (A/319-26). The information was analyzed by the Secretary-General under the following headings: Labor, Public Health and Agriculture (A/327 and Adds. 1-5).⁴

2. Action Taken at the Second Session of the Assembly

At its second session, on November 3, 1947, the General Assembly adopted five resolutions concerning information from Non-Self-Governing Territories.⁵

In the first of these (resolution (142(II))) the Assembly adopted a Standard Form for the guidance of Members in the preparation of information to be transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter.⁶

The second resolution (143(II)) authorized the Secretary-General in his summaries and analyses of information transmitted on Non-Self-Governing Territories to use information contained in official publications of the Members responsible for the administration of the territories which was transmitted or notified to him by such Members, provided the data used was limited to the subjects treated in the information required under Article 73 e of the Charter. He was also authorized to use, for purposes of comparison, similar information from inter-governmental or scientific bodies and, in agreement with the Member concerned, information prepared by the United Nations Secretariat.

In the third resolution (144(II)) the Assembly stated that it considered that the voluntary transmission of information on the development of self-governing institutions in the Non-Self-Governing Territories was in conformity with the Charter and should be noted and encouraged.

The fourth resolution (145(II)) provided for the collaboration of the specialized agencies.

In the fifth resolution (146(II)) the Assembly established a Special Committee to examine the information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter and the Secretary-General's summaries and analyses of this information, and to report to the General Assembly.

3. Special Committee on Information Transmitted under Article 73 e

The members of the Special Committee, which was composed in equal numbers of Members transmitting information and of other Members elected by the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly on the Assembly's behalf on as wide a geographical basis as possible, were as follows:

Members transmitting information under Article 73 e of the Charter:

Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, Netherlands, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States.

Members elected by the Fourth Committee on behalf of the General Assembly:

China, Colombia, Cuba, Egypt, Nicaragua, Sweden, U.S.S.R.⁷

The Special Committee was authorized to avail itself of the assistance of the specialized agencies, to establish liaison with the Economic and Social Council and to invite Members to provide such supplemental information as "may be desired within the terms of Article 73 e". It was to make what procedural recommendations it thought fit and what substantive recommendations it thought desirable relating to functional fields generally but not with respect to individual territories.

The Special Committee met in Geneva from September 2 to 17 and in Paris on September 23 and 29, 1948, holding in all 21 meetings. It submitted its report (A/593) to the General Assembly on October 1, 1948.⁸ The report was adopted by a vote of 13 to 1, the negative vote having been cast by the representative of the U.S.S.R.

The Special Committee elected Cheng Paonan (China) Chairman, G. Guitierrez (Colombia) Vice-Chairman and M. Lannung (Denmark) Rapporteur.

Representatives of the following specialized agencies, invited in accordance with the General Assembly's resolution 145(II), attended the meetings of the Special Committee and participated in the discussions affecting the work of their organizations: World Health Organization (WHO),

International Labour Organisation (ILO) and United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

4. Information Considered by the Special Committee

Information was transmitted on the following territories⁹ by the Powers (in italic type) responsible for their administration, and was summarized by the Secretary-General in the documents noted:

In addition to the information transmitted by the administering Powers on conditions in the Non-Self-Governing Territories under their administration and the summaries of it by the Secretary-General, the Special Committee had before it the analyses prepared by the Secretary-General. These analyses dealt with functional aspects of the data and, aside from a general introduction (A/587), analyzed the agricultural conditions (A/588), economic conditions (A/589 and Corr.1), educational conditions (A/590), labor conditions (A/591 and Add.1) and public health (A/592) in the Non-Self-Governing Territories concerned.

5. Report of the Special Committee

The report of the Special Committee (A/593) dealt with the Committee's discussions on the territories enumerated; the Secretary-General's summaries and analyses of information in general and under the headings of information on economic, health, labor, social welfare and educational conditions; information voluntarily transmitted regarding the development of Non-Self-Governing Territories; collaboration with specialized agencies; and recommendations to the General Assembly.

a. TERRITORIES ENUMERATED

The representative of the U.S.S.R. called attention to the inclusion in the summaries and analyses prepared by the Secretary-General of information relating to the Republic of Indonesia transmitted by the Netherlands Government. He proposed that the information should not be considered by the Committee inasmuch as the Republic of Indonesia had been established as an independent state by the will of its people.

It was stated on behalf of the Secretariat that under the terms of the General Assembly resolutions, the Secretary-General had no option but to summarize and analyze any information transmitted under Article 73 e by Members of the United Nations in relation to economic, social and educational conditions.

The Netherlands representative said that according to the so-called Renville Agreement, the sovereignty throughout the whole of the Netherlands Indies, in which the Republic of Indonesia was included, was and would remain with the Netherlands until it was transferred to the United States of Indonesia which would be formed.

Various members contended that it was beyond the competence of the Committee, as a result of its terms of reference, to exclude from consideration by the Committee any information which had in fact been transmitted under Article 73 e and which was in fact before it in the documents circulated by the Secretary-General. It was further contended by a number of members that in any case the Committee had no power to decide upon the territories in respect of which information should be transmitted. Some members believed that the question of the territories in respect of which information should be transmitted was a matter for the consideration of the General Assembly, and the view was also expressed that it was a matter on which the International Court of Justice might be asked for an opinion. The United Kingdom representative said that in the view of his Government, the determination of such territories for the purposes of Article 73 e lay exclusively with each Metropolitan Power in the light of its constitutional relationships with the territories for whose international relations it was responsible. Any suggestion that the General Assembly should define the territories within the scope of Article 73 e would involve a decision on constitutional relationships within the domestic jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Power concerned which his Government could not accept. Nor could the United Kingdom Government agree that for the purposes of Article 73 e this question should be referred to the International Court of Justice. Certain other members could not accept the view that the determination of such territories lay exclusively with the Metropolitan Power. The representative of India, in particular, pointed out the obligatory character of the responsibilities of the Metropolitan Power under Article 73 e in respect of any territory inhabited by a people of a different race, culture and language, whose international relations and representation were under the direction of the Metropolitan country and which did not enjoy the same basis of self-government as the Metropolitan Government, particularly in respect of electoral qualifications and conditions of representation in the Metropolitan legislature.

The representative of the United States considered that the proposal of the representative of the U.S.S.R. raised such far-reaching questions of principle that members should be given time to consider it; and on procedural grounds, with which the representatives of Denmark and New Zealand concurred, the United States would vote against the proposal of the U.S.S.R. representative if it were put immediately. The representative of India, affirming that his country's sympathies were entirely with Indonesia, also concurred, entirely on procedural grounds. The representative of China took the same view.

The U.S.S.R. representative proposed a draft resolution (A/AC.17/W.11) to withdraw from the agenda the discussion of information transmitted by the Government of the Netherlands in respect of the Republic of Indonesia, the latter being independent by the will of its people.

The representative of the Netherlands moved that this resolution was out of order on the grounds that it was outside the competence of the Committee.

The Chairman, by application of the rules of procedure, gave priority to the Netherlands motion and the Committee decided by 8 votes for, 1 against, and 4 abstentions, that the U.S.S.R. proposal was beyond the competence of the Committee.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that his proposal was in full compliance with the rules of procedure, the functions of this Committee, the terms of Article 73 of the Charter and the resolutions of the General Assembly. In his opinion, the decision taken by the Committee ruling his proposal out of order was without legal foundation.

In another form the question of the territories in respect of which information should be transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter was raised by the representative of India, after the representative of France had stated that he would welcome an examination of this subject. In a working paper introduced by the representative of India (A/-593, Appendix B), it was suggested that steps should be taken to clarify the position so that an administering Power might recognize the obligatory character of its responsibilities under Article 73 e in respect of territories, the non-self-governing status of which might be determined by the consideration of certain factors which were enumerated in the working paper. These were that the territory should be

"inhabited by a people of a different race, culture, and language from its own in the Metropolitan country, whose international relations and representation are under the control and direction of such Metropolitan country and which does not enjoy the same basis of self-government as the Metropolitan Government, particularly in respect of electoral qualifications and conditions of representation in the Metropolitan legislature".

b. THE SECRETARY-GENERAL'S SUMMARIES AND ANALYSES OF INFORMATION

General observations on the summaries and analyses were made prior to the debate on the respective functional fields.

The representative of India observed that the information elicited by the Standard Form should be presented in two parts:

- (a) Information on the permanent features of territories;
- (b) Information on the changing features.

Topics of considerable importance, such as land tenure, agricultural indebtedness, training facilities for agricultural personnel and livestock problems, should be treated more fully in the analyses. The specialized agencies could be used to conduct sample surveys in selected areas, with the assistance and co-operation of the administering Powers to determine the coefficient of error in the statistics.

The representative of Denmark suggested that all restrictions should be removed from the use by the Secretary-General of relevant official statistical data for purposes of evaluation and comparison. This would help to place the information against its proper background, to set up standards for progress and to enable the Non-Self-Governing Territories to learn of the nature of developments in neighboring countries.

The representative of China supported the views of the representatives of Denmark and India, and envisaged improvement in future years in the collection of the information, which in turn would result in the transmission of more satisfactory information. He was impressed by the many plans of the administering Powers to overcome problems in the territories. There should be regular reports showing the success or failure of these plans. The work of the Special Committee would be of great importance in this matter.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that Article 73 and the resolutions of the General Assembly concerning information from Non-Self-Governing Territories had laid down the principles underlying the policy of the United Nations with regard to Non-Self-Governing Territories, and that the transmission of information should be considered as one of the means of carrying out this policy. The Committee, in his opinion, should examine the information in substance and prepare appropriate recommendations for the General Assembly. He objected to attempts to limit the scope of the Committee to procedural questions. The information concerning Non-Self-Governing Territories was incomplete; it did not give a complete picture of the situation and in particular did not throw light on the question of the progress of the participation of the local populations in local organs of self-government. The Secretary-General should have the right to supplement the information received from official sources by information from private persons and local groups or organizations, and also by sending annually to the Non-Self-Governing Territories representatives of the United Nations to study the situation on the spot.

(1) Analysis of Information on Economic Conditions

The representative of the U.S.S.R. held that economic and other information transmitted should be examined in relation to the question of the development of self-government, which was the responsibility Members administering Non-Self-Governing Territories had assumed under the Charter. Examination of the analyses showed no evidence of any such progress. The information was incomplete, was not presented in such form as to show progress in self-government, was more concerned with future plans and did not present a clear picture of existing conditions. The policies of the administering Powers showed a tendency to control the economy of the territories for the benefit of the Metropolitan countries. There was insufficient training of native personnel, and available training was so little that the territories would never reach the stage where they could take control of their own affairs and become independent. The objective of colonial policy seemed to be to increase the export of foodstuffs and perpetuate the backward, one-sided economy of Non-Self-Governing Territories. Mechanization of agriculture had been confined to the European plantations; they owned the best land, while the natives had been driven into reservations which more appropriately might be called ghettos. Compulsory labor flourished in spite of international conventions against it. In West Africa natives were compelled to grow certain crops. There was no evidence of intention on the part of the colonial Powers to develop native industries. A characteristic feature of the Non-Self-Governing Territories was the preservation of a system of cheap labor and the acquisition of large profits by foreign capitalists. The problem of industrialization should be solved by the mobilization and utilization of the resources of the Non-Self-Governing Territories themselves as well as by assistance from states that were more developed industrially. Such assistance should not be accompanied by demands which might hinder the achievement of independence on the part of Non-Self-Governing Territories and should be realized within the framework of the United Nations.

Representatives of the administering Powers stated that the Special Committee was not competent to supervise their activities in the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories. They contended that there were no grounds for the allegations of the representative of the U.S.S.R. and they contrasted his remarks with the objective and constructive comments of the representative of India.

The representative of the United Kingdom denied charges of labor compulsion or that no industries had been set up in Africa. The general shortage of manufactured goods had developed an interest in the industrialization of colonial territories. A speedy advance had been prevented by the shortage of capital, capital goods and skilled labor. He referred to the territories where new industries had been established. The objectives of colonial food policy were first to increase production for home consumption, and second to increase production of export crops; and in the economic development schemes the corporations created were by law required to safeguard the interests of the indigenous populations.

The representative of Belgium pointed to 246,000 industrial workers in the Belgian Congo and to the development of power stations as sufficient proof of the existence of industrial development. In fact, the textile and cement industries had been established with the help of the Belgian Government in the face of opposition from Belgian industrialists. But the Congo had to export in order to pay for imports. This was a simple law of classic economics.

The representative of France said that the advance in agriculture and nutrition in the French Non-Self-Governing Territories had been remarkable, taking account of conditions which prevailed on the assumption of French administration. Malnutrition, where it existed, was due to population increase, whereas under former conditions the population used to diminish. In both North and West Africa agricultural production had made gigantic strides. A population in misery when France acquired these territories was today relatively prosperous. Where mineral resources existed, rapid progress in industrialization had been made. Forced labor did not exist in the French Union. French capital had produced considerable results, and yet labor was protected from domination by monopolies. The flow of foreign capital to these territories was necessary for their development.

With reference to the analysis on agriculture, it was stated on behalf of the Secretariat that FAO was conducting a World Food Census during the coming year, and that FAO had declared that in certain respects information on agriculture transmitted under Article 73 e would provide the necessary data for the time being. In communicating the Standard Form the Secretary-General would indicate to the administering Powers the use which would be made of it by FAO. This would have the advantage of avoiding duplication and would enable the administering Powers to take account of the type of information desired by FAO.

(2) Analysis of Information on Health Conditions

Suggestions were made by the representative of India for the improvement of the information relating to public health. In particular, this needed improvement in regard to infant mortality. Experience in India had shown the necessity for three classifications: (1) infants under 1 year of age; (2) children between 1 and 5 years; and (3) those between 5 and 10 years. Statistics on maternal mortality and on expectancy of life would also be valuable. Information was also needed on the types of special hospitals. Experience in India had shown that a policy which emphasized preventive rather than curative medicine yielded greater results. The United Kingdom program for the training of indigenous medical personnel was noted with the hope that such programs would be extended in other Non-Self-Governing Territories. The representative of India emphasized the value of collaboration with the World Health Organization, which might be asked to undertake studies on the topics mentioned. He found it gratifying that WHO had already taken steps to make an expert study of the health section of the Standard Form.

The representative of Sweden emphasized the immense task which existed in the fields of child welfare, public health, nutrition and sanitation. He hoped that the resolutions recently passed by the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund extending the Fund's activities to several Non-Self-Governing Territories would be helpful, as well as the work of WHO.

The representative of the United States emphasized the importance of information on the training of medical staff. He suggested that a study be made of licensing practices with a view to permitting the use in Non-Self-Governing Territories of doctors then living in displaced persons camps, whose talents were being wasted in the face of wide need for further medical services in many parts of the world. The representative of the United States suggested that a comparative study of the methods used to train indigenous medical assistants might also be useful.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. said that the information on health was insufficient. It threw very little light on the existing situation, but contained much about future plans which might never be realized. He drew attention to statistics figuring in the information which, according to his view, showed deficiencies in respect of infant care and hospital facilities, staff and training. The U.S.S.R. representative found the per-capita expenditure on health insignificant and cited comparative figures for the Non-Self-Governing Territories and for the Metropolitan countries.

Representatives of the administering Powers gave details of positive achievements in health work in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, where, in many cases, the population had increased and much progress had been made in improving conditions of life. For example, there had been a marked decline in infant mortality in certain localities and successful steps had been taken against certain tropical diseases. They pointed out that comparisons between health conditions in the Non-Self-Governing Territories and conditions in countries where geographical and other factors were entirely different were unreasonable. It would be more just to consider the actual situations and to find out whether available resources were being used to the best advantage.

The representative of the United Kingdom pointed out that the figures of per-capita expenditure on medical and health services as given in the Secretary-General's summaries and analyses did not take into account the large sums provided in the Public Works Department Estimates for expenditure on services, nor the very large sums provided by the Government of the United Kingdom for medical research, etc.

(3) Analysis of Information on Labor Conditions

With regard to labor conditions, it was suggested that more ample data should be transmitted by the Members concerned and included in the future analyses to be prepared by the Secretary-General.

Points for clarification which were stressed by the representative of India included such topics as the methods of computing wages, the periods of payment, the extent of payments in cash or in kind and the provision of housing and whether it was rent free. He inquired if employers supplied any social services for their workers such as schools, hospitals and guidance. Further information was also desirable on systems of contract employment, on the recruiting of labor and on regulations controlling these matters. As many Non-Self-Governing Territories were mainly agricultural, another problem of major interest was seasonal unemployment and under-employment and the relationships between owner and cultivator in share-cropping areas. He drew attention to differences in the trade union policies of certain of the administering Powers and regretted certain features in the Belgian policy such as that limiting the unions to Belgian advisers. In this respect he commended the policy of the United Kingdom. He also reviewed the situation in respect of international labor conventions and deplored the large degree of non-application.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. deplored the lack of information on wages, on social security, on labor legislation and on female and child labor. He asked how the trade union movement could develop in the territories when it was under the guidance of Europeans, as for instance in the Belgian Congo. The information dealt with the formal aspects, and not with actual labor conditions. There was no information on forced labor, recruitment and contracts, although these placed natives at a great disadvantage. There was exploitation of natives in the mines and an absence of protective social legislation. Wages were low and discriminatory. These conditions had led to serious strikes, and even to public disorder, as in the Gold Coast. He spoke of racial discrimination in the Non-Self-Governing Territories. He stated that the policy followed by the Metropolitan Governments in respect of labor was contrary to the principles of the Charter.

The representative of the International Labour Organisation cited the report of an expert committee which showed noteworthy progress in the application of ratified conventions to Non-Self-Governing Territories. This question of the application of conventions was being watched through the regular machinery of the Organisation. He drew attention to the work performed by ILO in providing technical assistance on labor problems, and expressed the hope that the administering Powers would make use of this assistance for the benefit of Non-Self-Governing Territories.

Information was provided by representatives of administering Powers in regard to labor developments and, in particular, in regard to trade union progress. The representative of the United Kingdom gave illustrations from Malaya, and mentioned the extension of wage-fixing machinery in territories where conditions were not conducive to trade union action. The representative of Belgium informed the Committee of certain details of new legislation introduced in the Congo and pointed to the absence of labor disputes since the introduction of this legislation. Similarly, the representative of France gave details of favorable trade union developments in French territories and the action taken in application of international labor conventions.

In reply to the statement made by the U.S.S.R. representative, the representative of France said that any charge of exploitation could not apply to French territories, where racial discrimination was unknown. There had been strikes in some territories. It was noteworthy, however, that these had been settled peacefully. The representative of the United Kingdom indicated that the legislation for proper trade union activities existed, that progress had been made, but that in some cases suitable leadership was lacking. Regarding the Gold Coast disturbances, he pointed out that the report of the Commission of Inquiry showed that the trade union movement in the Gold Coast had little complaint to make about wages and working conditions.

(4) Analysis of Information on Social Welfare

The Secretary-General had submitted as an analysis an account of penal administration in certain British African territories, and, as regards other aspects of social welfare, had limited himself to summaries of part of the information transmitted.

The representatives of India and the U.S.S.R. complained of the meagre character of the analysis of this information. The representative of the U.S.S.R. declared that the question of social welfare had not been prepared for discussion.

On behalf of the Secretariat, it was explained that the boundaries of social welfare were difficult to delimit and that, for this reason, the guidance of the Committee had been desired to determine the aspects to be covered. Furthermore, it had been necessary to wait until a suitable candidate could be discovered with expert knowledge in the field of social welfare in Non-Self-Governing Territories.

The chief point raised in the Committee related to housing problems. The representative of India, in particular, asked for information on housing programs and suggested that an international exhibition of types of houses and of building materials suitable for tropical conditions would be most useful. The representative of the United States also pointed out that many interesting experiments were being conducted in this field and that this Committee might well sponsor further work on this subject.

The representative of Belgium pointed out that here was a subject in which the constitutional status of Non-Self-Governing Territories was irrelevant. He referred to the meeting on tropical housing which had been held at Caracas and said that these matters constituted a problem of human needs and not one of political status.

Following this discussion, it was pointed out, on behalf of the Secretariat, that the United Nations was already planning a detailed study of problems of tropical housing covering many of the points to which particular allusion had been made.¹⁰ The Committee would not wish to duplicate this work but it might well be of value if the interest shown in tropical housing by this Committee could be brought to the attention of those studying tropical housing as a whole and if information on housing conditions and experiments in Non-Self-Governing Territories could be used in conjunction with the general studies.

No formal decision was taken on the point.

Other points made in relation to housing included a statement by the representative of the United Kingdom referring to a report containing a summary of housing and town planning in respect of Non-Self-Governing Territories, and a statement by the representative of France on the progress of co-operative housing in Morocco and Tunisia.

Another point raised by the representative of India was the suggestion that UNESCO should undertake a study of the impact of Western civilization on non-Western peoples. Here again, it was pointed out that this was not a question limited to Non-Self-Governing Territories and that, in particular, it was a matter constantly under study by the International Institute of African Languages and Cultures.

A third point emphasized by the representative of India was the condition of women in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, with special reference to non-official women's organizations tackling social, economic and educational problems. The representative of the United Kingdom stated that the raising of the status of women was of special concern to welfare workers in Non-Self-Governing Territories, while the representative of France pointed out that international labor conventions concerning the employment of women had been applied to all French territories.

The representative of Denmark referred to the criticisms levelled at the administering Powers. He said that social conditions in Greenland were, of course, not at the same level as in Denmark because of conditions in the Arctic. Promoting the welfare of the Greenlanders had been the main object of Danish policy, and Denmark had not only derived no economic advantage for more than 100 years but was contributing considerable subsidies every year. Far-reaching plans were in operation, the ultimate aim being to bring Greenland to a high social level and in general onto an equal footing with the rest of the Kingdom.

Summing up the discussion, the representative of China hoped that neither lack of staff nor budgetary considerations would be allowed to prevent the Secretariat from preparing adequate analyses of social conditions next year, and that where gaps existed in the information, the administering Powers would be able to supply more ample details.

(5) Analysis of Information on Educational Conditions

With regard to educational conditions also, suggestions were made as to points on which more information was desirable.

It was requested by the representative of India that capital expenditure for school buildings be shown separately from current educational expenditure. Experience in India had shown that capital expenditure was often wasted on the Western type of school buildings. Training of natives should be undertaken on a wider scale; it should not be confined to literary education but should be expanded to include professional training. It was encouraging to note the acceptance of the principle of native participation by the United Kingdom and the United States in their use of natives on advisory educational boards. It was not clear how far France and Belgium sought local advice. The wisdom of the French policy of prohibiting the use of native languages was questionable; likewise that of Belgium in leaving the educational field exclusively in the hands of the missions. In contrast, the United Kingdom policy in the British West Indies was noted.

The representative of New Zealand said that educational progress should be measured qualitatively, not quantitatively. The problem was one of adjusting two alien cultures. UNESCO could help in the study of this very important question. The experience of New Zealand had shown that building on the native culture yielded far greater results than the complete substitution of Western culture. The French policy of developing a native elite raised the question whether to concentrate on a select few, or to spread out on a broad though thin basis. This was another problem which UNESCO could study.

The representative of France explained that the use of French as the language of instruction had been emphasized in the particular case of French Equatorial Africa, where an educational system had to be constructed in an area with hundreds of widely different dialects. In some other French territories, teaching was both in French and in the native languages. On this subject the representative of the Netherlands was of the opinion that UNESCO should also study the problem of the language of instruction in education. The French representative also stated that the practical value of developing a native elite had been shown by their integration into the highest levels of French culture, in administration and in Parliament. He, together with the representative of Belgium, paid tribute to the work of the missionaries. By their devotion, education had been provided which otherwise the territories would have been unable to afford.

Other practical points raised were the importance of the film and radio in education (India, New Zealand, France) and the suggestion that future analyses might show the extent of free and of compulsory education and education in relation to age groups (United States).

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the information showed that the natives were still largely ignorant and illiterate and without access to contemporary culture. Educational budgets formed a very small part of total territorial expenditure, and contributions from the Metropolitan Governments were negligible. There was racial discrimination in educational expenditure, with per-capita expenditure on natives extremely low. The literacy rate was to be deplored. Enrolment statistics in primary schools were discouraging, but even more depressing in the secondary schools; higher education was a luxury except for the elite in some cases. The number of teachers was inadequate. Most teachers were unqualified and teacher training was not receiving appropriate attention. In many territories, the administering Powers had abdicated in favor of the missions in respect of educational responsibilities. The main emphasis was on primary education, which produced good servants and workers. Neither the press nor radio nor films were being used for mass education. Educational standards had been kept low to assure the privileged position of the Metropolitan countries.

This comment led to further remarks by representatives of the administering Powers.

The representative of the United Kingdom deplored the lack of a single constructive suggestion in the remarks of the U.S.S.R. representative. His Government had done as well as, if not better than, others would have done in similar circumstances. Difficulties in educational progress were due not to political considerations but to multiplicity of languages, scattered populations and the nature of the terrain. Mass education campaigns were being carried on throughout United Kingdom territories in Africa with the active participation of Africans as organizers. There was continuing improvement in literacy. In the United Kingdom territories, many senior posts were held by inhabitants of the Non-Self-Governing Territories. Improvement in education depended on good staffing of the secondary schools and teacher training institutions. It was difficult to obtain European teachers for those purposes because his Government could only offer short-term contracts in view of the declared policy of his Government to fill as many posts as possible with suitably qualified indigenes. In reply to the charge of neglect of higher education, the United Kingdom representative referred to the large sums which were being spent on the universities in Africa, Asia and the West Indies, and also to the scholarship schemes for education in the United Kingdom.

Other comments were made by the representatives of France and of Belgium. It was stated that education in the French territories had not been neglected. Desert conditions and a nomadic population accounted for the low literary rate and the small number of schools in French Somaliland. In French Equatorial Africa, despite difficulties of dense forests and scattered population, great progress had been made. The representative of Belgium said that his Government considered that it had made the best use of available resources to provide education; the figures were there to show the considerable progress made.

The representative of the United States drew attention to the figures on educational expenditures in the American territories. There was really no disagreement between the U.S.S.R. and the administering Powers in respect of the objectives of education. There were weak spots, but the picture was not as gloomy as painted by the U.S.S.R. representative.

The representative of UNESCO observed that his specialized agency could play an important part through education in preparing the Non-Self-Governing peoples to become self-governing. In connection with its clearing house on fundamental education, the report it had received some time ago on educational methods in the Soviet Union might be of value. The work of the Committee of Experts on literacy might also be useful, as well as the work of another committee on the use of native languages in education. He referred to the pilot project in Nyasaland (as well as the projects in the Member States of China and Haiti); to the UNESCO Mission to the war-devastated areas of the Far East, including Malaya, Singapore, Sarawak and North Borneo; and to the Amazon project.

The Committee took no formal decision on the question.

c. INFORMATION VOLUNTARILY TRANSMITTED REGARDING THE DEVELOPMENT OF SELF-GOVERNING INSTITUTIONS

Resolution 144(II), adopted by the General Assembly on November 3, 1947, noted that some Members responsible for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories had already voluntarily transmitted information on the development of self-governing institutions in the territories and considered that the voluntary transmission of such information and its summarizing by the Secretary-General were entirely in conformity with the spirit of Article 73 of the Charter and should therefore be duly noted and encouraged.

Provision for the transmission of information of this character was made in the optional category of the Standard Form. In the information transmitted in 1948, the optional category had been covered in the case of the information transmitted by Australia, Denmark, New Zealand, the Netherlands and the United States, and by France for Morocco and Tunisia. This information was included in the Secretary-General's summaries.

The representative of Colombia emphasized the interest of the American States in the problems of Non-Self-Governing Territories, as shown by the discussions at the Bogota Conference. This interest was both humanitarian and economic. It was important that the standard of living in the Non-Self-Governing Territories should be raised and this was the social background to the political problem.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. declared that Article 73 emphasized that the United Nations should ensure the political, as well as the social, economic and educational advancement of the peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories. The question of self-government had been given a special paragraph in the Article and the transmission of information on this subject was obligatory under Article 73. He criticized points in the structure of government in West Africa and the West Indies, with special reference to the representation of the local populations in the Legislative Councils.

In reply to a point of order, the Chairman read the terms of resolution 144(II) and considered that discussion on details of political institutions in the Non-Self-Governing Territories was irrelevant, although criticism in regard to the question of which Members had transmitted information under this resolution would be in order.

The representative of Australia agreed that the Committee was competent to express the hope that the administering Powers would transmit political information. He disagreed, however, with the contention that the administering Powers could be criticized for not transmitting such information.

The representatives of Belgium, France, the United Kingdom and the Netherlands emphasized that they were not prepared to discuss political or constitutional matters affecting the relations between the Non-Self-Governing Territories and the Metropolitan countries, either in the Committee or in any other organ of the United Nations, there being no obligation to transmit such information.

The representative of Egypt pointed out that his Government had considered that it was necessary to receive political information. This was a subject, however, which had been fully discussed last year and any further discussion should be within the terms of the General Assembly's resolution 144(II).

The representative of India considered that political information was necessary as showing the means by which the ends of economic, social and educational advancement could be achieved. He regretted that the information transmitted on political development was meagre or lacking, and also that a special paper had not been prepared by the Secretariat. He appealed to the United Kingdom representative to consider this question in the light of British tradition, by which formal arrangements were supplemented by the development of conventions.

During many points in the discussions of the Committee, the representative of the U.S.S.R. declared that Article 73 e should be interpreted as an integral part of Article 73 and that, therefore, questions of political advancement were within the competence of the Committee. On the other hand, other representatives considered that the Committee's terms of reference limited it to Article 73 e and, therefore, to the consideration of statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social and educational conditions subject to such limitations as security and constitutional considerations might require. The representative of Australia emphasized that, just as Members administering Non-Self-Governing Territories had accepted the declaration of policy in Chapter XI, so the non-administering Members had undertaken to accept the obligation to respect the limitations of Article 73. In this he was supported by the representative of the United Kingdom. The representative of Australia further stated that, while the discussion of information transmitted under Article 73 e was within the competence of the General Assembly, Chapter XI recognized the full authority of the administering Powers and their ability and willingness to carry out the policies of Chapter XI without the need for supervision.

d. COLLABORATION WITH THE SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

The General Assembly in resolution 145(II) had invited the Secretary-General to enter into relations with the secretariats of the specialized agencies: to allow them to assist him with the preparation of the analyses of the information received; to make recommendations to the Assembly on the form and content of the information with a view to its meeting the informational needs of the agencies; and to bring to the Assembly's notice their conclusions and any supplemental information on conditions in the Non-Self-Governing Territories in their fields, particularly as to the services they might make available to the administering Powers with a view to improving conditions.¹¹

The Committee's discussion on collaboration with the specialized agencies was limited to a brief statement by the representative of the United States pointing out that this collaboration had been considered frequently in the course of other discussions. The Committee attached importance to the establishment of effective collaboration with the specialized agencies, and the representatives of the specialized agencies attending the meeting contributed to the discussions on the matters within their interests. This matter was later emphasized by the representative of India, who referred to documents before the Committee showing work being undertaken under the auspices of the Economic and Social Council or by the specialized agencies which was of great interest to Non-Self-Governing Territories. The work of a special committee would be particularly useful if, as a result, the needs of Non-Self-Governing Territories could receive full consideration in the elaboration of programs of economic and social progress, applicable without regard to the question of the status of the various territories and countries concerned.

e. RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

As the discussions proceeded, it became clear that, with the exception of the representative of the U.S.S.R., a measure of common agreement was being reached, particularly as regards the recommendations to be made to the General Assembly concerning methods for the transmission and consideration of information. A number of suggestions were embodied in two working papers, one presented by the representative of India and the other by the representative of the United States (A/593, Appendix B).

(1) Establishment of Drafting Committee

In a general discussion further points emerged, and a drafting sub-committee composed of representatives of Cuba, France, India, New Zealand, the U.S.S.R. and the United States was appointed to consider all suggestions and to incorporate them in resolutions likely to obtain the assent of the Committee.

The drafting sub-committee produced texts of four draft resolutions based on the following general considerations:

(a) A flexible but equal time limit for the transmission of information in relation to the expiration of the administrative year in the territory concerned;

(b) Annual information on the changing features in Non-Self-Governing Territories, such as statistics and progress in development programs;

(c) Removal of any restrictions on the Secretary-General in his use of such official statistical information for purposes of evaluation and comparison as had been communicated to the United Nations or to the specialized agencies;

(d) Full summaries and analyses every three years, with annual supplements in the intervening years;

(e) Taking account both of the improved character of the information transmitted and of suggestions for its further improvement, the Standard Form to be retained for another year, and to be revised with the advice of the specialized agencies;

(f) The Special Committee, having demonstrated its usefulness, to be continued in 1949 without any prejudice as to its future status;

(g) Relevant information transmitted under Article 73 e and supplemental information to be placed at the disposal of the Economic and Social Council;

¹¹ For text of resolution, see General Assembly, p.153.

(h) More active assistance by the specialized agencies in the preparation of and comments on the analyses.

The four resolutions had been adopted in the drafting sub-committee with the affirmative votes of all representatives, with one exception. The representative of the U.S.S.R. voted against the first draft resolution and abstained from voting on the other three draft resolutions.

In introducing the texts proposed by the drafting sub-committee, the Rapporteur noted the spirit of compromise which had been shown in the sub-committee and appealed to the Committee to discuss the sub-committee's proposals in this same spirit. The representatives of China, Egypt, New Zealand and Sweden, associating themselves with the Rapporteur's remarks, said that, although the texts proposed did not fully meet their own wishes on separate points, they would support them in the belief that they reflected a spirit of conciliation.

The representatives of Australia, Belgium, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom also paid tribute to the spirit in which the sub-committee had conducted its work. For their part they were anxious to support these proposals in the same spirit, but indicated that there were certain points on which they would have to move amendments or request a division of the vote so as to make their attitudes clear.

The representative of India stated that he had been a party to the compromises which were reflected in the draft resolutions. He wished to note, however, that he remained a strong advocate of the permanence of the Committee and disagreed with any suggestion that the Committee was concerned merely with questions of technique which could be rapidly liquidated. He had also not pressed his suggestions regarding a revision of the Standard Form since the points he had made would be brought to the attention of the administering Powers, which appeared ready to provide further information, including information on human rights.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. said that the draft resolutions interpreted Chapter XI and the functions of the Committee in a restrictive sense. In his opinion, the task of the Committee was to assist the administering Powers in fulfilling their obligations under the Charter. The first two resolutions excluded information regarding the development of self-government institutions and the participation of their people in the administration. The sources of information remained limited to official sources and no provision was made for the consideration of petitions or for the making of visits to Non-Self-Governing Territories. The time limits for the submission of information were further prolonged. He said that the Committee was regarded as if it were a temporary organ whose duties would in fact terminate in 1949, although such a provision would be contrary to General Assembly resolution 146(II), which in his opinion provided for the creation of a permanent organ. For the above reasons he could not support the draft resolutions.

The representative of Colombia expressed a vital interest in the permanent continuation of the Special Committee for the purpose of examining information, protecting the interests of the Non-Self-Governing Territories and promoting better standards of living in these territories, which had an influence on the economy of independent countries which were also producers of primary products.

(2) Resolution on the Transmission of Information under Article 73 e of the Charter

This draft resolution, submitted by the sub-committee, was approved by the Committee in paragraph by paragraph votes and the final resolution was approved by a vote of 14 to 1. The Committee rejected, by votes varying from 10 to 3, with 1 abstention, to 13 to 2, Soviet amendments designed to widen the obligations of Metropolitan Powers as regards the transmission of information on their respective Non-Self-Governing Territories and to widen the scope and powers of the Special Committee.

In the discussion of the draft resolution, the Netherlands representative placed on record his doubts as to the feasibility of the time limit of six months for the transmission of information in the case of the Netherlands. The United Kingdom representative explained that his Government was not prepared to submit any information under the optional part of the Standard Form.

The draft resolution submitted by the Committee to the Assembly was as follows:

"The General Assembly,

"Considering that, in the light of experience, resolution 66 (I) adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1946 and resolutions 142 (II) and 143 (II) adopted by the General Assembly on 3 November 1947 require adaptation and amplification,

"1. Invites the Members transmitting information under Article 73 e of the Charter to send to the Secretary-General the most recent information which is at their disposal, as early as possible and at the latest within a maximum period of six months following the expiration of the administrative year in the Non-Self-Governing Territories concerned;

"2. Recommends that the Members, in transmitting information on the basis of the Standard Form, should notify such changes in statistics and such other appre-

cial changes, including the progress achieved in accordance with development programmes, as have occurred in the previous year and as affect the matters covered by Article 73 e of the Charter, bearing in mind that information already furnished on a previous occasion need not be repeated but that reference may be made to the appropriate sources;

"3. Invites the Secretary-General to extend the use of supplemental information in future years and considers that, in order to provide a means of assessing the information transmitted under Article 73 e, the Secretary-General should be authorized to include in his summaries and analyses, all relevant and comparable official statistical information within the categories referred to in Article 73 e of the Charter which has been communicated to the United Nations or to the specialized agencies;

"4. Invites the Secretary-General to prepare for the General Assembly, and for any special committee which the General Assembly may appoint:

"(a) Full summaries and analyses of the information transmitted during 1949 and thereafter at three-year intervals, showing the progress made over the three-year period in respect of economic, social and educational conditions;

"(b) In the intervening years annual supplements, showing such changes in statistics and such other appreciable changes, including information on the progress achieved in accordance with development programmes, as have occurred in the previous year, together with relevant statistics for the previous two years, as well as analyses of different aspects of economic, social and educational conditions to which attention may have been drawn in previous years;

"(c) Annual summaries of any material which the Members may have voluntarily transmitted under the optional category of the Standard Form;

"5. Invites the Secretary-General to distribute the documents referred to above as far as practicable in accordance with the attached schedule;

"6. Decides that the Standard Form for the guidance of Members in the preparation of information should be retained for the coming year, but that the Secretary-General in communicating this form to the Members concerned should inform them of the comments made in the Special Committee in connexion with the contents of this form and the information received, should endeavour as far as practicable to take account of these comments in the preparation of his summaries and analyses and should invite the Members concerned which have not hitherto provided general information forming the optional category of the Standard Form nevertheless to supply such information in relation to the geography, history, people of, and human rights in, the territories concerned."

(3) Resolution concerning a Special Committee on Information Transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter

This draft resolution, submitted by the sub-committee, after having been approved in varying paragraph by paragraph votes, with a Nicaraguan amendment designed to make more precise the wording concerning the membership of countries transmitting information, was approved as a whole by a vote of 11 to 1, with 3 abstentions. The Committee rejected by 11 votes to 1, with 2 abstentions, a Soviet amendment, the effect of which would have been to place the Special Committee on a permanent basis.

The United Kingdom representative in the discussions on the draft resolution stated that, while voting for the appointment of a Special Committee in 1949, his Government considered that the Committee should confine itself to the task of completing a technique for the collection and transmission of information under Article 73 e so that the appointment of a further Committee would be unnecessary.

The draft resolution submitted by the Committee to the Assembly was as follows:

"The General Assembly,

"Having considered the report of the Special Committee on Information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter which was constituted by resolution 146 (II) adopted by the General Assembly on 3 November 1947,

"1. Considers that, without prejudice as to the future, a special committee similar to that of this year should be constituted to meet in 1949, composed of all the Members of the United Nations which have hitherto transmitted information in accordance with Article 73 e and of an equal number of other Members elected by the Fourth Committee on behalf of the General Assembly, on as wide a geographical basis as possible;

"2. Invites this special committee to examine the summaries and analyses of information transmitted under Article 73 e on the economic, social and educational conditions in the Non-Self-Governing Territories, including any papers prepared by the specialized agencies, and to submit a report thereon for the consideration of the General Assembly with such procedural recommendations as it may deem fit and such substantive recommendations as it may deem desirable relating to functional fields generally but not with respect to individual territories;

"3. Considers that the Special Committee should meet in 1949, not later than three weeks before the opening of the regular session of the General Assembly, at a place to be determined by the Secretary-General, and should conclude its work not later than one week before the opening of the session;

"4. Invites the Fourth Committee to take the necessary action in accordance with this resolution, on behalf of the General Assembly."

(4) Resolution concerning Liaison between the Economic and Social Council and the Special Committee

This resolution, submitted by the drafting committee, after paragraph by paragraph votes, was approved as a whole by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention. It read as follows:

"The General Assembly,

"Having considered the report of the Special Committee on Information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter which was constituted by resolution 146 (II) adopted by the General Assembly on 3 November 1947, and which was authorized to establish liaison with the Economic and Social Council,

"1. Invites the Secretary-General to:

"(a) Inform any special committee which the General Assembly may appoint of decisions taken by the Economic and Social Council and of studies undertaken under its auspices which include within their scope economic and social conditions affecting Non-Self-Governing Territories;

"(b) Place at the disposal of the Economic and Social Council all relevant information transmitted under Article 73 e and all relevant supplemental information required for the work of the Economic and Social Council;

"2. Draws the attention of the Governments responsible for the administration of Non-Self-Governing Territories to the schemes of technical assistance approved by the Economic and Social Council, and invites the Secretary-General to inform any special committee which the General Assembly may appoint of the extent and nature of any such technical assistance rendered to Non-Self-Governing Territories at the request of Administering Members."

(5) Resolution on Co-operation with the Specialized Agencies

After paragraph by paragraph votes (during which a new text, proposed by the United Kingdom, concerning the submission of information by specialized agencies to the General Assembly and any special committee it might appoint was approved by 14 votes to 1, and a French amendment to invite the "secretariats" of the specialized agencies to revise the Standard Form was rejected by 9 votes to 1, with 5 abstentions), the revised draft resolution was approved as a whole by 14 votes to 0, with 1 abstention.

The draft resolution submitted by the Committee to the General Assembly read as follows:

"The General Assembly,

"Having considered the report of the Special Committee on Information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter which was constituted by resolution 146 (II) adopted by the General Assembly on 3 November 1947, and which was authorized to avail itself of the counsel and assistance of the specialized agencies,

"1. Has noted the resolution adopted by the World Health Assembly and welcomes the measures being taken by the World Health Organization to examine the section of the Standard Form relating to public health and sanitation, and in other ways to provide technical assistance in the preparation and consideration of information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter.

"Has also noted the information supplied by the International Labour Office with particular reference to the ratification and application of international labour conventions concerning Non-Self-Governing Territories and to the study which is being undertaken in regard to migrant labour problems;

"Has also noted the explanations furnished by the representative of UNESCO on the services which UNESCO is providing in Non-Self-Governing Territories with the consent of the Members responsible for the administration of these territories;

"2. Invites the Secretary-General to keep in close touch with the secretariats of the specialized agencies with a view to seeking their counsel and assistance in preparation of his analyses of information transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter;

"3. Invites the specialized agencies to examine the relevant sections of the Standard Form with which they are specially concerned with a view to the revision of this form;

"4. Invites the specialized agencies to inform any special committee which the General Assembly may appoint of the progress of any work undertaken by them which includes within its scope economic, social and educational conditions affecting Non-Self-Governing Territories.

"5. Further invites the appropriate specialized agencies to make such comments on the analyses prepared by the Secretary-General as they may feel will be helpful to the consideration of these analyses."

V. PICTORIAL MATERIAL (if available)

NOTES RELATING TO THE STANDARD FORM AS A WHOLE

1. In cases where, under the provisions of any general convention on any economic, social or educational subject, information is transmitted to a central international agency by Member States parties to such convention, the transmission of a copy of such information to the Secretary-General of the United Nations would be considered as applicable in discharge of the obligation under Article 73 e in respect of that subject. It is also to be hoped that international bodies requiring information on Non-Self-Governing Territories, including those to which reports are made under international conventions, will co-operate as may be necessary and desired in order that their informational needs may be satisfied through the information, including supplemental data, supplied under Article 73 e to the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

2. Wherever relevant information exists in published form, there would be no need for the Government to reproduce that information; a chapter and page reference to the publication in question (with communication of the publication itself, where necessary) would suffice.

3. Information already furnished on a previous occasion need not be repeated.

4. Whenever possible, statistics should be classified under indigenous and non-indigenous.

5. Whenever possible, information should be so classified as to show the manner in which the different elements of the population, indigenous and non-indigenous, are affected, and, in particular, whether, in law or administrative practice, there is any discrimination based on race, colour or religion.

VI. The International Trusteeship System

A. CHARTER PROVISIONS¹ FOR THE INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

The basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System are:

- (a) to further international peace and security;
- (b) to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the Trust Territories, and their progressive development towards self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstance of each Territory and its peoples and the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each Trusteeship Agreement;
- (c) to encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and
- (d) to ensure equal treatment in social, economic and commercial matters for all Members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives.

The Trusteeship System applies to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of individual Trusteeship Agreements:

- (a) Territories held under Mandate;
- (b) Territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War; and
- (c) Territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.

The terms of Trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the Trusteeship System, including any alteration or amendment, are to be agreed upon by the states directly concerned, including the Mandatory Power in the case of territories held under Mandate by a Member of the United Nations. They must be approved by the General Assembly or, in the case of strategic areas, by the Security Council. Each Trusteeship Agreement includes the terms under which the Trust Territory is to be administered and designates the authority which will exercise the administration of the Trust Territory. Such authority is called the Administering Authority and may be one or more states or the United Nations itself.

In any Trusteeship Agreement there may be designated a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the Trust Territory to which the Agreement applies. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of Trusteeship Agreements and of their alteration or amendment, are exercised by the Security Council. The objectives of the Trusteeship System apply equally to the peoples of strategic areas. In performing its functions relating to political, economic, social and educational matters in the strategic areas, the Security Council, it is provided by the Charter, is, subject to the conditions of the Trusteeship Agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, to avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council.

It is the duty of the Administering Authority to ensure that the Trust Territory plays its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the Administering Authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities and assistance from the Trust Territory in carrying out its obligations towards the Security Council, as well as for local defence and the maintenance of law and order within the Trust Territory.

The functions of the United Nations, with regard to Trusteeship Agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the Trusteeship Agreements and of their alteration or amendment, are exercised by the General Assembly. The Trusteeship Council, operating under the authority of the General Assembly, assists the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

¹The main provisions are contained in Chapter XII, Articles 75-85, which establishes an International Trusteeship System; and Chapter XIII, Articles 86-91, which defines the composition, functions and powers, voting and procedure of the Trusteeship Council. Other provisions are to be found in Articles 7, 18, 98 and 101 of the Charter.

B. CHARTER PROVISIONS FOR THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The Trusteeship Council consists of the following Members of the United Nations:

(a) Those Members administering Trust Territories;

(b) Such of those permanent members of the Security Council as are not administering Trust Territories; and

(c) As many other Members, elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly, as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of members of the Trusteeship Council is equally divided between those Members of the United Nations which administer Trust Territories and those which do not.

Each member of the Trusteeship Council designates one specially qualified person to represent it therein.

The principal functions and powers of the Trusteeship Council, under the authority of the General Assembly, are:

(a) to consider reports submitted by the Administering Authority;

(b) to accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the Administering Authority;

(c) to provide for periodic visits to the respective Trust Territories at times agreed upon with the Administering Authority; and

(d) to take these and other actions in conformity with the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement.

One of the functions of the Trusteeship Council is to formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each Trust Territory, on the basis of which the Administering Authority for each Trust Territory within the competence of the General Assembly is to make an annual report to the General Assembly.

The voting and procedure of the Trusteeship Council are defined as follows:

Each member of the Trusteeship Council has one vote. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council are made by a majority of the members present and voting.

The Trusteeship Council adopts its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its President. The Trusteeship Council meets as required in accordance with its rules, which include provision for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

The Trusteeship Council is to avail itself, when appropriate, of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

C. TRUST TERRITORIES

The following Non-Self-Governing Territories have been placed under the International Trusteeship System by the Members of the United Nations responsible for their administration. All these territories were formerly administered under Mandate of the League of Nations. The following are the Administering Authorities as designated in the Trusteeship Agreements:

D. MEMBERSHIP, OFFICERS AND SESSIONS OF THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

1. Membership

The membership of the Trusteeship Council was increased by two (Costa Rica, Philippines) as a result of the entry into force, on July 18, 1947, of the Trusteeship Agreement for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands. In this Agreement, the United States of America was designated as the Administering Authority and, in consequence, its status in the Trusteeship Council changed from that of a non-administering member to that of an administering member. In order to preserve the equal representation of administering and non-administering members in the Trusteeship Council provided for in Article 86, paragraph 1 c, of the Charter, the General Assembly had to elect two additional members. The Assembly, at its 109th plenary meeting, on November 13, 1947, elected Costa Rica and the Philippines as members of the Council.

As a result, the composition of the Council during its second and third sessions was as follows:

Members administering Trust Territories:

Australia, Belgium, France, New Zealand, United Kingdom, and United States.

Members mentioned by name in Article 23 of the Charter (i.e., permanent members of the Security Council) and not administering Trust Territories: China and the U.S.S.R.

Members elected by the General Assembly:

Costa Rica (until December 31, 1950), Iraq (until December 31, 1949), Mexico (until December 31, 1949) and Philippines (until December 31, 1950).

2. Officers

Francis B. Sayre (United States) and Sir Carl August Berendsen (New Zealand) continued to serve as President and Vice-President, respectively, until the opening of the third session on June 16, 1948, when Liu Chieh (China) and Sir Alan Burns (United Kingdom) were elected President and Vice-President, respectively. The two last-mentioned were to continue in office until their respective successors were elected at the regular session due to be held in June 1949.

3. Sessions and Meetings⁵

The Council held the following meetings and sessions during the period covered by the present Yearbook (all of them at Lake Success):

Second Session

First Part (1st to 18th meetings) Nov. 20-Dec. 16, 1947
Second Part (19th to 35th meetings) Feb. 18-Mar. 10, 1948
Third Part (36th to 46th meetings) Apr. 21-May 5, 1948

Third Session

(1st to 43rd meetings) June 16-Aug. 5, 1948

E. ORGANIZATIONAL QUESTIONS

1. Changes in the Rules of Procedure

At the seventh meeting of the second session, on December 2, 1947, the Council considered the extent to which its rules of procedure might need modification as the result of its approval (during the fourth meeting of the second session (T/P.V.-31), of the report of the Joint Committee of the Economic and Social Council and the Trusteeship Council on arrangements for co-operation in dealing with matters of common concern. It was found that the report necessitated changes in only two rules: an amendment of rule 3 to provide for the calling of a special session of the Trusteeship Council at the request of the Economic and Social Council, and an amendment to rule 8 to provide for the communication to the Economic and Social Council of the provisional agenda for each session of the Trusteeship Council.⁶

In addition to these two changes necessitated by

⁶ See pp. 731-33; see also Economic and Social Council, pp. 510-12.

the acceptance of the report of the Joint Committee, the Trusteeship Council also modified the following of its rules of procedure during its second session:

(1) Rule 85. At the fourth meeting of the second session (T/P.V.31) the representative of Belgium stated, in connection with the consideration of petitions received by the Council, that he wished to draw the Council's attention to the danger that existed of receiving petitions too easily. The Council not only might find itself being swamped by inconsequential petitions, but the dignity and importance of the Council might be prejudiced by its examination of certain questions placed before it under the guise of petitions. He, therefore, supported by the representative of the United Kingdom, proposed that the Council's rules of procedure should be amended so as to give the Secretariat the power to exclude from the Council's agenda those petitions which were clearly outside the Council's competence. He also suggested that the Secretariat should be given the task of making a study of the constitutional practice of democracies on the question of petitions.

The representatives of Mexico, Iraq, China and Costa Rica, on the other hand, urged that it was the duty of the Council to examine petitions even though some of them might seem or prove to be irrelevant. The consideration of petitions, they considered, was a very important function of the Council which it could not delegate to another organ of the United Nations, such as the Secretariat, without violating the Charter. At the present stage of development of the Trusteeship System, it was urged, it was of the utmost importance to safeguard the integrity of the right of petition. The contents of these petitions were of secondary importance. A number of representatives also expressed the view that the Council had not yet been called upon to deal with an excessively large number of petitions, and the problem was therefore not yet one of great practical importance. The representative of France suggested that the Council might more appropriately entrust its ad hoc committee on petitions⁷ than the Secretariat with the task of screening petitions.

At the seventh meeting (T/P.V.34) the Council considered a proposal of the Secretariat to amend rule 85 of the rules of procedure so as to relieve the Secretary-General of the obligation of circulating to all the members of the Council petitions which were "manifestly inconsequential". The President pointed out that such a limitation was contained in rule 24 of the rules of procedure concerning communications not classed as petitions, and that the Secretariat felt that a like provision in the case of petitions would be useful. After considerable discussion the Council agreed to a Mexican proposal that the Secretary-General should not be required to circulate petitions which were "manifestly inconsequential". A list of such petitions with a summary of their contents, should, however, be communicated to all the members and the original documents should be submitted to the Trusteeship Council for its final disposition. Rule 85 was amended accordingly.

(2) Rule 80 bis. At the seventh meeting, also, (T/P.V.34) the representative of the United States proposed a modification of the rules concerning the granting of oral hearings to petitioners. To wait to give a petitioner the right to present his case until after the Council had met, he stated, would often make it very difficult for the petitioner to make the necessary arrangements to appear before the Trusteeship Council. The representative of the United States therefore suggested that a standing committee of the Council, possibly including the President, should be authorized between sessions of the Council to decide whether the right to present his case orally should be granted to a petitioner.

The representative of Belgium, supported by the representative of the United Kingdom, proposed that the President, in agreement with the Administering Authority, should be authorized to inform a petitioner that the Council would grant him an oral hearing. The representative of Belgium suggested at the fourteenth meeting of the Council's second session (T/P.V.41) that the objections of the Administering Authority should be taken into account only if the latter considered that there were "substantial reasons" why a petitioner should not be informed, before the Council convened, that he could present his case orally.

On the basis of these suggestions, the Council by 7 votes to 0 adopted a new rule (80 bis) authorizing the President of the Trusteeship Council, through the Secretary-General, to inform a petitioner that the Council would grant him a hearing at such time and place as the President may name. Before communicating such information to the petitioner the President should inquire of the Administering Authority concerned whether there were substantial reasons why the matter should first be discussed by the Council. If the Administering Authority considered that such substantial reasons existed the matter would be left for the Council itself to decide.

⁷ See rule 90 of Rules of Procedure of the Trusteeship Council (T/1/Rev.1).

(3) Rule 99. The visiting mission to Western Samoa⁸ had experienced certain difficulties in determining the proper procedure and timing for the release and publication of its report. The Council at the fourteenth meeting of its second session (T/P.V.41) decided to revise rule 99 so as to provide more detailed guidance for future missions. After considerable discussion it was agreed unanimously that each visiting mission should submit to the Trusteeship Council a report on its visit, a copy of which should be promptly and, as a rule, simultaneously transmitted to the Administering Authority and to each other member of the Trusteeship Council. The mission, the revised rule provides further, may authorize the Secretary-General to release its report in such form and at such date as it may deem appropriate. The Council itself would subsequently determine whether and in what form and at what date the report should be published.⁹

2. Procedure for the Examination of Annual Reports

The Council, during its second session, considered the procedure to be followed in the examination of annual reports so as to discharge most effectively its obligation under Article 87 a of the Charter, dealing with consideration of annual reports submitted by the Administering Authorities.

The Council had before it a memorandum prepared by the Secretariat (T/94), in which it was proposed that small working groups should be formed from among the members of the Council who would become experts in certain lines of examination and would thereby assist the Council in the orderly examination of annual reports. A similar procedure had been followed by the Permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations.

In the course of the Council's discussion (T/P.V.-45, T/SR.57 and 58), the representatives of the United States, France, China, Mexico and the Philippines supported the suggestion that groups of representatives should be assigned to make a thorough study of certain particular sections of reports. They stressed that the appointment of such groups would in no way prevent all members of the Trusteeship Council from requesting information and presenting comments on any subject in which they were interested.

The representatives of Australia, Belgium and the United Kingdom, on the other hand, did not think it advisable to establish specialized committees within the Trusteeship Council. Unlike the Permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations, it was stated, the members of the Trusteeship Council were not experts, but representatives of states bound by instructions from their governments. The procedure followed by the Permanent Mandates Commission was therefore not likely to prove profitable in the case of the Trusteeship Council. It was also stated that certain questions could not be isolated from the reports as a whole; such questions could only be studied profitably in the light of the general conditions prevailing in a particular territory. If some degree of specialization were desired, it would be preferable to assign working groups to consider reports from certain territories. In any event, each report should be examined as a whole.

At the 31st meeting of its second session on March 5, 1948 (T/SR.58), the Trusteeship Council considered a draft resolution submitted by the representative of the United States, which, with certain amendments proposed by the representatives of China and the Philippines, was adopted by a vote of 5 to 0, with the representatives of Australia, Belgium, the United Kingdom and New Zealand abstaining from voting.

The resolution adopted by the Council (31(II)) provided, inter alia, that a general discussion of each report as a whole should precede a more detailed examination of the report. It also provided that small groups of members should be specially assigned to study, in particular detail, one or more of the four broad fields (political, economic, social and educational advancement) indicated in Article 76 b of the Charter. Such small working groups, in addition to invoking the aid of the Secretariat, might also avail themselves of the assistance of specialized agencies and of such other information as might be available to the Council through petitions, reports of visiting missions, results of special investigations or inquiries, and previous reports to the Permanent Mandates Commission (of the League of Nations) and to the Council.

The following groups were accordingly assigned by the President during the second session to serve during the Council's consideration of annual reports at the third session:

Political Advancement:

China, France and New Zealand.

Economic Advancement:

Belgium, Costa Rica and the United Kingdom.

Social Advancement:

Australia, Iraq and Mexico.

Educational Advancement:

The Philippines, the United Kingdom and the United States.

⁸ See pp. 761-63.

⁹ For text of revised rules, see pp. 787-88.

At the opening of its third session (T/SR.75) it was agreed that the Council should not resolve itself into separate groups for the consideration of the annual reports. There was no need, it was agreed, even for the groups to meet informally; it would be sufficient for the individual members of each group to undertake individual studies of the field assigned to the group, while the reports would be examined in full session.

As the representative of the U.S.S.R. had not been present during the Council's second session when the assignments had been made, the President asked him whether he would like to be associated with any particular group. The representative of the U.S.S.R. replied that his delegation considered that a division of the Council into small groups would only delay the Council's work. It would be simpler and wiser for all representatives to study all aspects of every report in detail.

3. Relations with the Security Council

A Trusteeship Agreement for the Territory of the Pacific Islands—a strategic area under the administration of the United States—was approved by the Security Council on April 2, 1947, and it entered into force on July 18, 1947.

In view of the terms of Article 13 of this Agreement¹⁰ the Trusteeship Council, at the eighteenth meeting of its second session (T/P.V.45), considered the question of its responsibilities under Article 83, paragraph 3, of the Charter in respect of strategic areas under Trusteeship. The representative of Australia presented a draft resolution that the President of the Trusteeship Council should be requested to consult with the President of the Security Council with a view to assuring that, before the Security Council makes a final decision on the arrangements to be made concerning the functions of the Trusteeship Council in respect of strategic areas under Trusteeship in relation to the political, social, economic and educational advancement of the inhabitants, the responsibilities of the Trusteeship Council be fully taken into account.

The representative of New Zealand, supported by the representative of the Philippines, expressed the view that it was not appropriate to take such a step. He considered that under Article 83 of the Charter the Trusteeship Council had no responsibility whatever for taking any initiative in regard to strategic areas under Trusteeship. The whole of that responsibility rested with the Security Council, although there was a duty incumbent upon the Security Council to avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council in certain matters. The initiative, however, he asserted, must come from the Security Council.

The representative of Australia, France, Belgium, the United States and Iraq, on the other hand, expressed the view that the Trusteeship Council had certain definite responsibilities in relation to strategic areas under Trusteeship. The Trusteeship Council, it was stated, fulfilled the same functions as regards strategic territories and non-strategic territories, the difference being only that in one case the Trusteeship Council informed the General Assembly and in the other the Security Council, and that it might be forbidden to visit certain parts of strategic areas. If the Trusteeship Council, moreover, had no responsibilities as regards strategic areas, it was pointed out, there would be no reason why the United States should be represented on the Council as an Administrative Authority.

At the suggestion of the representative of Iraq the representative of Australia amended his proposal so as to provide for the appointment of a committee of three, to be composed of the President and two other members of the Council. The amended resolution was then adopted by a vote of 9 to 0, with 1 abstention (resolution 10(II)).

In the meantime, the Security Council referred the matter to its Committee of Experts, which presented a preliminary report to the Security Council on January 12, 1948.

A majority of the Committee of Experts recommended the adoption by the Security Council of a draft resolution by which in essence the Trusteeship Council would be requested: (1) to perform in accordance with its own procedures, on behalf of the Security Council, the functions specified in Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter relating to the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of strategic areas, subject to the terms of the relevant Trusteeship Agreements and to considerations of security; (2) to send to the Security Council, one month before forwarding it to the Administering Authority concerned, a copy of the questionnaire formulated in respect of a strategic area and of any amendments thereof; (3) to examine and report to the Security Council on all reports and petitions received in respect of strategic areas; and (4) to submit to the Security Council its reports and recommendations on political, economic, social and educational matters affecting strategic areas.¹¹

Preliminary consideration was given to the report of the Committee of Experts by the Security

¹¹ See Security Council, pp. 490-92.

Council on June 18, 1948, when it was decided to appoint a committee, consisting of the President and the representatives of Belgium and the Ukrainian S.S.R., to confer with the committee established by the Trusteeship Council. On receipt of the invitation, the President of the Trusteeship Council appointed the representatives of Mexico and New Zealand to the committee of the Trusteeship Council (see T/SR.77). A joint meeting of the two committees was held on June 22, 1948, and, after an exchange of views on the responsibilities of the Trusteeship Council in connection with the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of Trust Territories, the President of the Security Council invited the President of the Trusteeship Council to ascertain the views of the Trusteeship Council in regard to the draft resolution recommended by the Committee of Experts.

The matter was taken up by the Trusteeship Council at the ninth and tenth meetings of its third session, on June 25 and 28, 1948. The majority of the Council's members thought the arrangements envisaged in the draft resolution recommended by the Committee of Experts to be generally satisfactory. The representative of the U.S.S.R., however, expressed the view that the resolution establishing a committee of the Trusteeship Council to confer with a committee of the Security Council was contrary to Articles 83 and 85 of the Charter. The Trusteeship Council, in his opinion, had no right to discuss the whole question until it had been settled by the Security Council.

As regards the draft resolution recommended by the Security Council's Committee of Experts, the representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that it was unacceptable because it was contrary to the Charter. He considered that it was the right and duty of the Security Council to carry out in respect of strategic areas the functions exercised by the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council in respect of non-strategic areas. The Security Council therefore could not delegate to the Trusteeship Council the functions specified in Articles 87 and 88 of the Charter but could only avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council in certain specific instances. As regards the questionnaire, in particular, the representative of the U.S.S.R. expressed the view that the Security Council itself should draw up a questionnaire for strategic areas. The views of the majority and of the minority were communicated to the committee of the Security Council at a second joint meeting of the two committees held on July 22, 1948.

4. Relations with the Economic and Social Council and with Specialized Agencies

In accordance with a resolution adopted by the Trusteeship Council at its first session,¹² a committee consisting of the representatives of France, Iraq and the United States had been appointed to confer with a similar committee of the Economic and Social Council to discuss arrangements for co-operation in dealing with matters of common concern.

The committee joined with the committee of the Economic and Social Council, which consisted of its President and the representatives of India and Venezuela. The joint committee held two meetings during August 1947, and submitted a report (E&T/C.1/2/Rev.1) to both Councils containing a number of detailed recommendations regarding methods of co-operation between the two Councils. The committee recommended among other things that the Economic and Social Council, while fully empowered to make recommendations or studies of general application on economic and social problems, should not single out Trust Territories for special recommendations, except with the concurrence of the Trusteeship Council; and, secondly, that all petitions to organs of the United Nations (such as petitions on human rights or the status of women) emanating from or relating to Trust Territories should be dealt with in the first instance by the Trusteeship Council, which should subsequently seek the assistance of the appropriate commission of the Economic and Social Council regarding those parts of such petitions which concerned them.

The Committee also recommended that the President of either Council be specially informed of the date and place of the first meeting of each session held by the other Council and that he should likewise be informed of the provisional agenda for each session. The President of either Council—or his representative—should be given the privilege of participating in the discussion by the other of matters of special concern to his Council. The President of either Council should also be sent copies of all general documents emanating from the other Council. As regards the calling of special sessions, the Economic and Social Council's rules accord to the Trusteeship Council the privilege of calling a special session of the former Council, with the agreement of its President. The Committee recommended that the Trusteeship Council extend a similar privilege to the Economic and Social Council.

The report of the joint committee was to come into effect when it had been approved by both Councils. It was approved by the Trusteeship Council without discussion at the fourth meeting of its second session, on November 26, 1947 (T/P.V.31).

In accordance with a resolution adopted by the Trusteeship Council at its first session, a committee consisting of the representatives of Australia and Mexico had been appointed to join, with respect to clauses concerning the Trusteeship Council, the representatives of the Economic and Social Council in any future negotiations with inter-governmental organizations to be brought into relationship with the United Nations. This committee participated in the negotiations which led to the conclusion of agreements between the United Nations and, respectively, the World Health Organization, the International Telecommunication Union, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund.

The committee's report (T/50) on its participation in the negotiations was approved by the Trusteeship Council at the fourth meeting of its second session on November 25, 1947 (T/P.V.31).

At the 34th meeting of its third session on July 28, 1948 (T/SR.107), the President appointed the representatives of France and Iraq to the committee for a further period of one year.

During its sixth session in March 1948 the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 122-(VI)C calling upon the Secretary-General to initiate studies, and to collect and disseminate information and reports, concerning social welfare administration, social services in relation to rural welfare, training of social welfare personnel, and child welfare in under-developed areas and territories. In so far as such studies might be carried out in relation to conditions in Trust Territories, the Secretary-General was enjoined by the resolution to consult with and obtain the concurrence of the Trusteeship Council.¹³

The resolution was considered by the Trusteeship Council at the eighteenth and nineteenth meetings of its third session, on July 7 and 8 (T/SR.91, 92).

The representative of Iraq proposed a draft resolution (see T/SR.91, p. 9) which provided that the Trusteeship Council (1) note the Economic and Social Council's resolution, (2) welcome the efforts to promote in Trust Territories the social amelioration of the inhabitants, (3) note that the information required might be available in the annual reports on Trust Territories from the Administering Authorities and in other official documents, and (4) invite the Secretary-General, if such information be insufficient for the purposes of the Economic and Social Council's resolution, to submit for the consideration of the Trusteeship Council such additional questions as might seem to be desirable in the Council's annual questionnaire.

The representatives of France, China and Mexico thought this resolution acceptable. The representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States and Australia, however, expressed the view that the Economic and Social Council's resolution was difficult to interpret, as it had not yet been implemented. For the time being the Trusteeship Council should therefore merely note the Economic and Social Council's resolution and take no further action. To this end the representative of the United States proposed to amend the Iraqi resolution by deleting all but the first paragraph.

The representative of the Philippines, considering that the Council should adopt a more positive attitude than merely noting the Economic and Social Council's resolution, proposed to amend the last two paragraphs of the Iraqi resolution (see T/SR.92, p. 8) to the effect that the Trusteeship Council assure the Economic and Social Council of its full co-operation in every possible way in the promotion of the implementation of the objectives of the Economic and Social Council's resolution and invite the Secretary-General to act as envisaged in that resolution.

The representative of the U.S.S.R., supported by the representative of Costa Rica, expressed the view that it was the obligation of the Trusteeship Council to co-operate in every possible way with the Economic and Social Council to ameliorate the economic and social conditions of all peoples. He therefore proposed an amendment to the Iraqi resolution providing that the Trusteeship Council ask the Economic and Social Council to include in its program of work studies of the living conditions of the population of the Trust Territories. Explaining his proposal, the representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the Trusteeship Council had neither the time nor the funds to undertake studies of specific conditions in Trust Territories. The Economic and Social Council, on the other hand, had a number of commissions entrusted with the investigation of conditions in various underdeveloped areas. The Trusteeship Council therefore would be failing in its responsibilities if it did not assist and encourage the work already undertaken by the Economic and Social Council and its commissions.

The representative of New Zealand was of the opinion that under the U.S.S.R. proposal the Trusteeship Council would be abdicating its duties in relation to Trust Territories by transferring them to another United Nations organ. He suggested that such studies as those proposed should be considered by a joint committee of both Councils.

At the close of the discussion, the United States amendment to the Iraqi resolution was rejected by a vote of 6 to 4, with 2 abstentions. The U.S.S.R. amendment was next rejected by a vote of 8 to 4. The Council then adopted the Philippine amendment by a vote of 8 to 1, with 3 abstentions. The amended resolution as a whole (resolution 35-(III)), which was adopted by a vote of 9 to 0, with 3 abstentions, therefore provides that the Trusteeship Council welcomes the effort envisaged in the resolution of the Economic and Social Council to promote the social amelioration of the inhabitants of Trust Territories, assures the Economic and Social Council of its full co-operation, in every way within its competence, in the promotion or implementation of the objectives set forth in the aforesaid resolution and invites the Secretary-General to act as provided therein.

5. Consideration of the Action Taken by the General Assembly on the Report by the Trusteeship Council Covering Its First Session

By its resolution 139(II) of November 1, 1947, on the report of the Council covering its first session, the General Assembly transmitted to the Council for its consideration during its future work comments made by members on the report (A/421). These comments consisted almost entirely of suggestions for the revision of certain rules of procedure of the Council and of certain questions contained in the provisional questionnaire.¹⁴

At the fourteenth meeting of the second session on December 11, 1947 (T/P.V.41), consideration of these suggested changes was postponed to the third session. At the 34th meeting of its third session on July 28, 1948 (T/SR.107), the Council decided again to postpone such consideration until the fourth session, when, it was expected, the Council would undertake a revision of its provisional questionnaire and would re-examine its rules of procedure.

6. Provision of Information concerning the United Nations and Trusteeship to the Peoples of Trust Territories

The vital importance of providing the peoples of the world with information on the aims and activities of the United Nations was recognized by the General Assembly in the resolution adopted at its 31st plenary meeting on February 13, 1946.¹⁵ The question of the dissemination of such information to the inhabitants of Trust Territories was taken up by the Council at the eighteenth and nineteenth meetings of its third session on July 7 and 8 (T/SR.91 and 92). The Council had before it a memorandum prepared by the Secretariat (T/127) and a draft resolution submitted by the representative of China (see T/SR.91, p. 10), who redrafted two paragraphs of the resolution to take account of suggestions made by Australia, Mexico and the U.S.S.R. The resolution (see T/SR.92, p. 14) provided that the Council invite the Administering Authorities to furnish lists of the names and addresses of officials in Trust Territories to whom could be sent, for information, records of the Council's activities and other suitable documents, and suggestions as to appropriate channels (e.g., press, radio, non-governmental organizations, trade unions and other public organizations, educational and religious institutions, teachers, missionaries, etc.) through which information concerning the aims and activities of the United Nations might be communicated to the general public. The draft resolution also requested the Secretary-General and the Administering Authorities to co-operate in ensuring an adequate flow of suitable information concerning the aims and activities of the United Nations to the inhabitants of the Trust Territories.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. submitted an amendment to the revised Chinese draft resolution (see T/SR.92, p. 15). He proposed that the addresses of officials in Trust Territories which the Council should request the Administering Authorities to furnish should include "natives who occupied administrative posts in the central administration as well as in the local native administration". In the list of possible channels for the dissemination of information to the general public the representative of the U.S.S.R. wished to include, in addition to those mentioned in the Chinese draft resolution, "libraries, native notables, teachers and representatives of other strata of native intelligentsia". Furthermore the representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed to add the following paragraphs to the Chinese draft resolution:

"(a) Taking into account the almost complete illiteracy of the native population of the Trust Territories, the Trusteeship Council requests the Secretary-General to work out the most effective methods and forms for the dissemination of information, including oral information, in the native languages in the form of lectures, conferences, etc.

"(b) [The Trusteeship Council] Requests the Secretary-General to send to Trust Territories regularly (and not less than twice a year) brief surveys, set out in popular form, reflecting the basic problems and aims of the Trusteeship System and the proceedings of each session of the Trusteeship Council.

"Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administering Authorities, to arrange for the publication of those surveys in the Trust Territories in the native languages.

"(c) The Trusteeship Council deems it most important that the school curriculums in Trust Territories should include popular information in regard to the aims and objectives of the Trusteeship System and the United Nations as a whole. With this end in view, the Council requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administering Authorities, to make all necessary arrangements.

"Requests the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General and the Administering Authorities to co-operate in ensuring an adequate flow of suitable information concerning the aims and activities of the United Nations to the indigenous population of the Trust Territories and to inform the Trusteeship Council periodically of the steps taken in pursuance of this resolution."

The Council rejected the U.S.S.R. amendment by a vote of 6 to 5, with 1 abstention. It then adopted the Chinese resolution as cited above by a vote of 11 to 0, with 1 abstention.

7. Records of the Council

By reason of the provisions of the budgetary resolution 166(II) adopted by the General Assembly on November 20, 1947,¹⁶ the Council was not provided with verbatim records during the second and third parts of its second session and during its third session.

The Council discussed this situation at the 35th meeting of its second session on March 10, 1948 (T/SR.62), and adopted a resolution 30(II) by which it requested the Secretary-General to provide accurate and sufficiently detailed summary records within 24 hours of the close of meetings to which they referred, and to submit a report containing further suggestions for the improvement of the Council's records.

The matter was discussed again at the 34th meeting of the third session on July 28, 1948 (T/SR.107), when the Council examined estimates submitted by the Secretariat (T/196) of the cost of various forms of records. The Council adopted a resolution (44(III)) in which it expressed its opinion that its work was considerably impeded by the absence of verbatim records, particularly as regards the examination of reports and petitions, and requested the General Assembly to make regular budgetary appropriations to provide it with facilities for verbatim records in mimeographed form, as well as printed summary records.

F. PROVISIONAL QUESTIONNAIRE

1. Revision of the Provisional Questionnaire Postponed

During its first session, the Trusteeship Council had adopted a provisional questionnaire (T/44) listing a total of 247 questions to form the basis for the annual reports to be submitted by the authorities administering Trust Territories.¹⁷ The Council had invited the comments of the Administering Authorities concerned as well as those of the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies, with a view to revising the provisional questionnaire during the second session in the light of such comments and observations.

The question of the revision of the provisional questionnaire was considered at the seventh meeting of the Council's second session on December 2, 1947 (T/P.V.34), and during the ninth meeting of the third session on June 25, 1948 (T/SR.82).

On each occasion it was decided to postpone consideration of the matter until all the Administering Authorities, the Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies might have had sufficient time to present suggestions to the Trusteeship Council, i.e., until the fourth session of the Council.

2. Provisional Questionnaire Transmitted to Australia with regard to the Trust Territory of Nauru

When the Council decided, during its first session, to forward the provisional questionnaire to all authorities administering Trust Territories, there had been no Trusteeship Agreement for the Pacific Island of Nauru. The Nauru Agreement (T/Agreement/9) was approved by the General Assembly during its second session, on November 1, 1947.¹⁸ At the seventh meeting of the Trusteeship Council's second session, on December 2, 1947 (T/P.V.-

41), the Council resolved (11(II)) to transmit the provisional questionnaire (T/44) to the Government of Australia, as the Government responsible for administering the Trust Territory of Nauru.

G. ANNUAL REPORTS

1. Cameroons under British Administration

The report on the administration of the Territory for the year 1947 was received by the Secretary-General on June 18, 1948, and transmitted by him to members of the Council on the same day. At the sixth meeting of its third session (T/SR.79), the Council decided that the report should, in accordance with rule 72, paragraph 2, of its rules of procedure, be examined at the fourth session.

2. Cameroons under French Administration

The report on the administration of the Territory for the year 1947 had not been received by the Secretary-General in sufficient numbers to permit its distribution to members of the Council during the third session.

3. Togoland under British Administration

The report on the administration of the Territory for the year 1947 was received by the Secretary-General on June 21, 1948, and was at once transmitted to members of the Council. At the sixth meeting of its third session (T/SR.79), the Council decided that, in accordance with rule 72, paragraph 2, of its rules of procedure, the examination of the report should be deferred until the fourth session.

4. Togoland under French Administration

The report on the administration of the Territory for the year 1947 had not been received by the Secretary-General in sufficient numbers to permit its distribution to members of the Council during the third session.

5. Western Samoa

The Secretary-General on November 28, 1947 transmitted to members of the Council with a covering note (T/65) the annual report on the administration of the Territory of Western Samoa for the year ended March 31, 1947, previously transmitted to him by the Government of New Zealand. In a communication dated November 14, 1947, the New Zealand Government stated that the report had been sent in order that the Trusteeship Council might have the latest available information concerning Western Samoa, pending settlement of the form of the annual questionnaire.

As the report referred in greater part to a period prior to the entry into force of the Trusteeship Agreement, and as in any case the report of the United Nations Mission to Western Samoa covered more recent developments, the Council considered the annual report in connection with the report of the Mission.¹⁹

6. Ruanda-Urundi

The report on the administration of Ruanda-Urundi for the year 1947 was received by the Secretary-General on May 6, 1948, and was transmitted to members of the Council on May 14, 1948.

At the second meeting of its third session (T/SR.75), the Council decided that the report, which had been received one day later than required by rule 72, paragraph 2, of its rules of procedure, should nevertheless be examined at the third session.

During the fourth, fifth and sixth meetings (T/SR.76, 77, 78) Maurice Simon, Governor of Ruanda-Urundi, who had been appointed as the special representative of the Administering Authority, answered questions on the report and on the administration of the Territory.

During the twentieth and twenty-first meetings (T/SR.93 and 94) the Council held a general discussion with a view to formulating conclusions and recommendations relating to the report and to the Territory, and appointed a drafting committee consisting of the representatives of France, Iraq, New Zealand and the Philippines to draft a report, in accordance with rules 100 and 101 of its rules of procedure, for inclusion in the annual report of the Council to the General Assembly.

The draft report (T/197) prepared by the drafting committee was considered by the Council at the 31st, 32nd and 33rd meetings of its third session (T/SR.104, 105, 106) and, at the 33rd meeting, the Council adopted the committee's report with some modifications by a vote of 9 to 1, with 2 abstentions. The representative of the U.S.S.R., who cast the negative vote, stated that his delegation could not accept the report, chiefly because it did not contain any recommendation relating to the abolition of the existing administrative union between Ruanda-Urundi and the Belgian Congo and the establishment of a separate administration for the Trust Territory. He therefore asked that in accordance with rule 64 of the rules of procedure a statement of his delegation's views be appended to the report. At its 43rd meeting (T/SR.116) the Council agreed to the inclusion of the statement of minority views submitted by the representative of the U.S.S.R. Following is the text of the report adopted by the Council and of the U.S.S.R. statement (A/603, pp. 5-10 and pp. 46-47):

a. REPORT ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL

PART I. Review of Conditions, Based on the Report of the Administering Authority

A. GENERAL

The Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi lies in Central Africa, approximately equidistant from both the Atlantic and the Indian Oceans. Its area of 54,172 square kilometres includes large mountainous areas, and the estimated population of 3,718,545 Africans makes it the most densely populated Territory in Africa.

B. POLITICAL

Previously occupied by Germany, the Territory was entrusted by Mandate of the League of Nations to Belgium in 1924. Under the Belgian law of 21 August 1925, the Territory is united administratively with the Belgian Congo, legislative authority being delegated through the Governor General of the Congo to the Governor of Ruanda-Urundi, with the Territory maintaining its own separate budget.

Local administration of the indigenous population is carried out by the existing indigenous authorities under the control of the Belgian administration officials; the division of the Territory into the separate native states of Ruanda and Urundi, each headed by a hereditary Mwami, is maintained. Local administration is carried out by chiefs and sub-chiefs, and both the Bami (plural of Mwami) and the chiefs are assisted by indigenous councils. All appointments of chiefs and sub-chiefs are subject to the approval of the Administering Authority, which maintains a special school for candidates for appointment to the positions of chiefs and sub-chiefs. The indigenous authorities maintain budgets and administer indigenous courts of justice.

All senior administrative posts are held by Europeans, the subordinate positions being filled by Africans, of whom 2,964 were employed in 1947, apart from those in the defence and police forces and temporary workers.

C. ECONOMIC

The economic basis of the Territory is agriculture and stock-raising. Industrial crops for export, such as coffee, cotton, pyrethrum and quinine, palm oil and castor oil, are cultivated as a result of encouragement by the Administering Authority.

In 1947, the indigenous inhabitants occupied about 36,000 square kilometres of land, the Government 470 square kilometres and non-indigenous inhabitants 205 square kilometres. European colonists numbered 101.

In order to provide against famine, the last outbreak of which occurred in 1943-44, the Administering Authority has imposed measures including the compulsory cultivation of crops, and further measures are being taken for the provision of food reserves.

The chief indigenous industries are pottery, basket-making, dairy farming and production of hides. Among mining and agricultural industries, three out of 331 in 1947 were indigenous, and among manufacturing industries 207 out of 558 were indigenous.

Government revenue is derived principally from income tax, customs duties, fees and poll tax, the latter being the principal tax imposed on the indigenous population, and varying from 35 to 115 francs per head per year.

D. SOCIAL

Approximately 52,000 indigenous inhabitants were employed on a permanent basis in European undertakings in 1947, and in addition there is an outward movement of seasonal labour into the Belgian Congo and the neighbouring British territories. The conditions of employment of indigenous workers are governed by a law setting out the requirements of contract terms, rations, lodging, medical care and other matters.

The Administering Authority maintains a medical service which includes eight State and seven rural hospitals, ten subsidized mission hospitals and five others maintained by mining companies. In addition, there are 72 separate dispensaries, maintained partly by the Government, partly by indigenous authorities and partly by the missions. The total number of medical practitioners at the end of 1947 was 35 and the number of indigenous medical workers in the Government service was 530, of whom 63 possessed diplomas.

E. EDUCATIONAL

Education is undertaken entirely by religious missions, with the exception of one school in Astrida maintained by the Administering Authority. In 1947 the Administration subsidized 1,429 mission primary schools serving some 112,000 pupils; in addition there were 2,687 "bush" schools, with some 211,000 pupils, which did not attain the standard required to earn a subsidy.

The total amount specifically provided for education in the 1947 budget represented 7.34 per cent of the total budget.

Four libraries were established by the Government in 1947.

PART II. Observations

A. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

1. The Trusteeship Agreement

The Council noted that the legislation approving the Trusteeship Agreement for Ruanda-Urundi had not yet been passed by the Belgian Parliament. At the same time, however, it noted the assurance of the representative of Belgium that the reason for this delay had been the slowness of parliamentary procedure, and that the fact that the Trusteeship Agreement had not yet been ratified in no way implied that it was not fully in effect.

The Council expressed the hope that ratification of the Agreement would take place in the near future.

2. Administrative union

The Council observed that the Territory had been united administratively with the Belgian Congo since 1925, but took note of the assurance of the Administering Authority that its separate juridical personality had been preserved.

The hope was expressed that, in view of the fact that Ruanda-Urundi was now a Trust Territory, its separate political entity would continue to be preserved, either by a revision of the Law of 21 August 1925 or by some other suitable measure.

3. Promotion of political advancement

The Council noted that, even making allowances for their primitive conditions of life, the progress so far made by the indigenous inhabitants in the practice of democratic processes was disappointing.

The Council observed in particular that the way of political progress must be by educational progress, and that an obligation rested with the Administering Authority to provide an educational basis sufficient for political advancement.

The Council was of the opinion that the Administering Authority should give particular attention to devising practical measures aimed at promoting the political advancement of the inhabitants and their progressive development towards self-government or independence. Such measures should include a revision of the constitution of both the central and local administrative organs, and preliminary steps should be taken towards the ultimate establishment of representative government based on some form of electoral system.

The Council observed further that it would be desirable that the Administering Authority should supply information as to the steps which it was prepared to take towards furthering the political advancement of the inhabitants.

4. General administration

The Council noted that the newly-constituted Council of the Vice-Government-General acted in an advisory capacity and was composed exclusively of Europeans and that, although the interests of the indigenous inhabitants were represented therein, they were represented indirectly through European representatives.

The Council further observed that the Governor, the heads of departments and services, the residents, administrators, assistant administrators and agents, were also exclusively European.

The Council was of the opinion that the Administering Authority might wish to consider granting to the indigenous population some form of direct participation in the higher administration of the Territory. In particular, the Council considered, the Administering Authority might find it possible to give them direct representation in the Council of the Vice-Government-General and increased training to enable them to fill positions in the administration, to extend the curriculum in the school for chiefs and sub-chiefs, and to increase the number of persons trained there.

5. Indigenous political structure

The Council noted that the Administering Authority had preserved the indigenous tribal and political organization of the Territory, particularly the institutions of hereditary chieftainships, sub-chieftainships and their local and regional councils.

The Council expressed doubt as to whether these institutions offered sufficient opportunity for the development of a sense of political responsibility among the indigenous inhabitants as a whole, and observed that it would look forward with great interest to any improvements in the whole system which might be effected in the future.

The Council was of the opinion that the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the indigenous population could be better furthered through progressive modification of the tribal system by the creation of local organs of self-government.

The Council noted that the indigenous population was governed by two forms of administration: the European administration and the indigenous administration. The Council felt that the Administering Authority might consider whether it would not be advisable and feasible progressively to establish one system of government in which both Europeans and indigenous inhabitants would participate, and in which eventually the indigenous inhabitants would assume the principal functions and responsibilities.

B. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. General

The section of the report dealing with economic matters occasioned the Council much concern. While some strong views on the unfavourable economic conditions were expressed by some members, and while such criticisms must be read in the light of geographical and economic limitations in the Territory, the Council, as a whole, was of the opinion that economic conditions, including the system of taxation, required improvement, that economic benefits were not sufficiently directed to the interests of the indigenous population and that much remained to be done in this respect.

2. Public debt

The Council noted the statement of the special representative of the Administering Authority that the public debt of the Territory, which in 1944 stood at 175.4 million francs, had been reduced to 20.8 million francs, and that the final closing of the accounts might reveal it to have been liquidated entirely.

The Council also noted the explanation of the representative of the Administering Authority that this rapid reduction in the debt had resulted from the unavailability of supplies and the absence of personnel necessary to maintain services at a normal level during the war.

The Council felt, nevertheless, that it might have been advisable not to repay this public debt in such a short period of time. In view of the limited revenues of the Territory, for such essential territorial services as social welfare and education, it might have been desirable had the Administering Authority retained at least a part of the funds, devoted to liquidating the debt, to improve the economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants.

3. The problem of famine

The Council noted that large-scale famines had occurred from time to time in the Territory. The Council was informed that, after a serious food shortage in 1928-29 the Administering Authority—then the Mandatory Power—took precautions which led it to believe that, except under extremely abnormal circumstances, all further danger would be averted; nevertheless another severe famine took place in 1943-44.

The Council expressed its concern lest famine conditions should recur and expressed the opinion that every possible measure should be taken to prevent such a disaster in the future.

C. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Labour conditions

The Council noted that although children are employed in the Territory on a casual basis in certain light agricultural work, no legislation existed which relates specifically to conditions of child labour.

The Council was of the opinion that the Administering Authority should pass special legislation to control, and should maintain a careful watch on, the position of child labour to ensure its proper control and protection, especially since the inadequacy of educational facilities might tend to encourage children to take up employment prematurely.

2. Exaction of labour in default of payment of taxes

The Council noted the existence of the practice by which labour may be exacted in default of the payment of taxes.

Concern was expressed by some members of the Council at this practice; the Council felt that, although it was necessary to conserve the revenue, every effort should be made to guard against any abuse of such a system.

3. Medical services

The Council noted the state of the medical services of the Territory and felt that the number of 35 European medical practitioners to meet the requirements of nearly four million inhabitants was insufficient.

The Council expressed the hope that the number of physicians would be increased so far as was practicable, and that the Administering Authority might devise measures for training indigenous inhabitants as physicians and increasing the numbers trained as other medical personnel.

The Council also expressed the hope that more funds might be allocated to provide for the medical needs of the indigenous population.

D. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

The Council noted that the schools in the Territory might be grouped into three categories: namely, Government schools, private schools subsidized by the Government and private schools not subsidized by the Government. There was only one Government primary school, divided into a part for boys and a part for girls, in Astrida. The rest of the primary schools were mission schools. The allocation for education was only 7.34 per cent of the total budget.

The Council took into consideration both the present state of education and achievements of the Administering Authority, having regard to the limitations under which it laboured. It was of the opinion that education was of the most vital importance in the advancement of the Territory. Although the Administering Authority had done much towards that end and had made progress, the fact remained that much was left to be desired.

The Council noted that the lack of educational enlightenment was not conducive to stability, political, economic or social advancement in general. Illiteracy was prevalent, schools insufficient in number, and advanced education practically unknown, and considerably increased expenditure on education would be essential for many years to come in order to meet this situation.

The fact that education was almost entirely left to the missions revealed the inadequacy of the initiative both of the Administering Authority and the indigenous population—who could hardly be expected to take the lead in that respect. The help of the missions was welcome, but not sufficient alone, and totally non-existent beyond the primary education stage.

There were insufficient public libraries and no government scholarships—either in the Territory or in the Congo or in Belgium itself—whereby the indigenous population might obtain the benefit of higher and professional education, which would ultimately be of immense help to the political, economic and social conditions of the Territory.

PART III. Conclusions and Recommendations

The Council, in presenting to the General Assembly the conclusions and recommendations arising from its examination of the annual report on the administration of the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi for the year 1947,

(a) States its firm opinion that the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the Territory are inter-dependent one on the other;

(b) Recognizes that in its efforts to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the Territory the Administering Authority has been confronted with the difficulties inherent in a country densely populated by a people who have only in comparatively recent years felt the impact of more modern civilization;

(c) Commends the Administering Authority for the positive achievements it has made in furthering the well-being and progress of the inhabitants; and

(d) Makes the following conclusions and recommendations designed to promote the interests of the inhabitants and their progressive development towards the ultimate objective of self-government or independence, in accordance with Chapters XII and XIII of the Charter and the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

A. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

1. The Trusteeship Agreement

The Council welcomes the assurance given by the Administering Authority that the Trusteeship Agreement has been put fully into effect, and expresses the hope that it will be formally ratified by the Belgian Parliament at an early date.

2. Administrative union

The Council expresses its conviction that, in view of the fact that Ruanda-Urundi is now a Trust Territory, its separate political entity will continue to be preserved.

3. Promotion of political advancement

The Council firmly believes that increased facilities for general and specialized education are an essential prerequisite of any marked progress towards political advancement. The Council is of the opinion that the way of progress in political matters must be by way of education. In this connexion, the Council draws particular attention to its conclusions and recommendations on educational advancement.

The Council, noting that no real progress has yet been made towards developing in the indigenous population the understanding and practice of democratic processes, recommends that the Administering Authority should review both the central and local administrative organs of government in such a way that the new administrative structure would be in complete accordance with the objective of developing the indigenous inhabitants politically towards eventual self-government or independence. In particular, the Council recommends that the Administering Authority should introduce, in at least a preliminary way, some form of electoral system.

The Council invites the Administering Authority to keep it informed on the steps which it takes, and contemplates taking, in this respect.

4. General administration

The Council recommends that the Administering Authority, in order to grant the indigenous inhabitants a progressively important share in the conduct of their own affairs and those of the Territory as a whole, should provide increased facilities for training indigenous inhabitants to fill responsible posts in the administration, and should study the possibility of granting them, at the earliest possible moment, direct representation in the higher administrative organs.

5. Indigenous political structure

The Council, noting that the Administering Authority has preserved the indigenous political and tribal structure of the Territory, commends the Administering Authority for not forcibly uprooting the indigenous institutions and customs, but suggests that the present system does not offer sufficient opportunity for the development of a sense of political responsibility among the indigenous inhabitants as a whole, and that their political, economic, social and educational advancement could better be promoted by the progressive establishment of local organs of self-government. The Council invites the Administering Authority to study the desirability and feasibility of gradually establishing one system of government in which both Europeans and indigenous inhabitants would participate, and in which the indigenous inhabitants would assume eventually the principal functions and responsibilities.

B. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. General

The Council suggests that the Administering Authority should review from time to time the system and incidence of taxation as it applies to the indigenous inhabitants, with a view to eliminating any possible sources of undue hardship.

2. Famine

The Council, noting the recent recurrence of serious famines in the Territory, and noting the measures which have been adopted so far in order to alleviate this cause of economic and social distress, urges the Administering Authority without delay to put into effect the new programme on a large scale, and suggests that it should avail itself of the assistance in this respect of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The Council moreover invites the Administering Authority to inform it in the next annual report on the Territory of the measures taken, or contemplated to be taken, in this respect.

3. European colonization

The Council, noting the increased number of European colonists in the Territory, requests the Administering Authority to furnish it with more information in the next annual report on the Territory on the European colonization policy pursued there.

C. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Medical services

The Council recommends that the number of physicians be increased so far as is practicable, and that the Administering Authority devise measures for training indigenous inhabitants as physicians and for increasing the numbers trained as other medical personnel. The Council recommends also that the Administering Authority take all further steps necessary to provide for the medical needs of the indigenous population.

2. Social rehabilitation of prisoners

The Council recommends that the Administering Authority introduce a system of payments for labour performed by long-term prisoners to enable them to start a new life on discharge from prison.

3. Vital statistics

The Council recommends that a more adequate system of vital statistics should be introduced in the Territory.

D. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Educational facilities

The Council expresses concern at the inadequacy of educational facilities in the Territory. It considers that there is need for increasing the existing educational facilities in order to combat illiteracy, which is still prevalent, and to promote self-government.

The Council further considers that the number of schools and teachers should be increased so as to provide adequate primary and secondary education.

The Council recommends that a complete programme embodying the construction of school buildings and the provision of adequate equipment, including libraries should be established.

The Council considers that the Administering Authority should assume responsibility for ensuring that adequate facilities for elementary education are made available to children of school age throughout the Territory, and should make every effort to adopt and maintain standards of instruction applicable to all schools of the Territory.

2. Budgetary appropriations

The Council considers that the budgetary appropriations allocated to education by the Administering Authority should be progressively increased in order to establish as wide as possible a system of primary and higher education.

3. Scholarships and higher education

The Council recommends that scholarships should be granted to qualified students in the Territory to enable them to proceed to higher institutions of learning, either in Africa or overseas.

4. General

The Council requests the Administering Authority to include in future annual reports on the Territory an account of the steps taken, or contemplated to be taken, to the foregoing ends, together with statistical data showing the degree of illiteracy among the various age levels of the indigenous inhabitants.

E. MISCELLANEOUS

The Council considers that future annual reports:

Should be in the form of answers to the Questionnaire approved by the Council;

Should include photographic illustrations of the people of the Territory and their conditions of life, anti-soil-erosion measures, schools, hospitals, etc. and also a map of the Territory; and

Should include statistics, especially those concerning financial matters, which cover the entire calendar year for which the report is made.

b. MINORITY VIEWS OF THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE U.S.S.R.

The Soviet representative

1. Considers that the union of the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi with the Belgian colony of Congo, and the subordination of Ruanda-Urundi to the laws and administration of the Belgian Congo would lead to the maintenance of the political, economic, social and cultural backwardness of the Territory of Ruanda-Urundi; that the economic subordination of the Belgian Congo would mean a source of cheap labour for the Congo and other neighbouring Territories. Such a union would prevent the population of the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi from advancement in the political, economic, social and educational fields; it would retard the development of the indigenous population on its path towards self-government and independence, and it would be in contradiction with the basic objectives of the trusteeship system laid down in Article 76 b of the Charter.

The union of Ruanda-Urundi with the Belgian Congo would lead to the loss by Ruanda-Urundi of its international status as a Trust Territory and would result in such a firm fusion of the administration and economy of Ruanda-Urundi with, and their subordination to, the colonial administration and economy of the Congo as to make the granting of independence to Ruanda-Urundi, which is the objective of the trusteeship system as laid down in Article 76 b of the Charter, in practice highly complicated or entirely impossible. All this leads not to the independence of Ruanda-Urundi, but to its annexation and complete absorption by the neighbouring Belgian colony of Congo.

2. Notes the absence of progress in the political development of the indigenous population towards self-government. It is considered that this policy of the Administering Authority is incorrect and incompatible with the basic objectives of the trusteeship system.

3. Notes that there is no electoral system in the Territory and that there are no self-governing indigenous bodies based on an electoral system.

4. Notes the fact that the indigenous population does not participate in the legislation of Ruanda-Urundi; that the entire executive power is vested in the Governor; that the Governor's Executive Council is of a purely advisory nature; and that there are no representatives of the indigenous population on the Vice-Governor's Executive Council.

5. Considers that the existing tribal system is an obstacle to the political, economic, social and cultural progress of the indigenous population.

6. Notes that corporal punishment is inflicted by orders of native courts. The Belgian representative on the Trusteeship Council, clarifying the application of corporal punishment to the indigenous population of the Trust territory of Tanganyika, revealed the point of view of the Belgian administration on corporal punishment generally. He stated: "This is a subject that has been studied by all European administrations. They have all reflected on it at great lengths, and everyone wants to suppress it as early as possible. But there are factors which explain why corporal punishment should be applied to the indigenous inhabitants and not to Europeans. The main reasons are these: imprisonment is a real punishment for Europeans and often is not a real punishment for natives. There are natives whose living standard at home when they are at liberty is certainly much lower than the standard of living of a prisoner. For these natives prison is not a punishment, nor is prison a subject of shame for them. The native has no fear of going to prison because he sees in it no diminution—and there is no diminution in his social status resulting from his having been in prison." [T/P.V.87]

7. Notes that the present taxation system in Ruanda-Urundi is established without any regard to the degree of the property qualifications of the native or his family.

8. Considers that the periodically occurring famines in Ruanda-Urundi are the consequence not only of the general backwardness of the economy of Ruanda-Urundi and its farmers but also as a result of the policy of the Administering Authority which directs agricultural products mainly towards the export market to the detriment of the needs of the indigenous population.

9. Considers that the area under cultivation of food to satisfy the needs of the indigenous population is quite insufficient and that this is one of the causes of the frequent famines in the country.

10. Considers expedient that the Administering Authority of Ruanda-Urundi should work out measures, including measures of a legislative nature, to prohibit child labour and for the limitation and protection of the employment of young people.

11. Considers it essential that the Administering Authority should assume responsibility for the education of the indigenous population and draw up a plan for abolishing illiteracy among the adult indigenous population and for providing elementary schools for all native children within the next few years. It is also essential that the Administering Authority should work out a programme for extending the network of secondary schools for the indigenous population and allocate funds for the realization of that programme within the next few years. Both elementary and secondary education should mainly be in the hands of the Administering Authority or the organs of self-government, and not in the hands of religious missions or private individuals. It is also essential that a programme of higher education for the indigenous population should be drawn up establishing, in Ruanda-Urundi, Native higher educational establishments for the training of teachers, doctors and technicians. It is essential that plans should be made to extend the programme for constructing schools and their subsidiary equipment. In connexion with the above-mentioned it is essential that the Administering Authority should progressively and considerably increase the budgetary appropriations allocated to the education of the indigenous population from the central budget and the local budgets.

12. In order to preserve the legal status of Ruanda-Urundi as a United Nations Trust Territory and ensure that the fundamental aims and purposes of the International Trusteeship System as defined in Article 76 b of the Charter are attained, that is to say, the political, economic and social advancement of the inhabitants of Ruanda-Urundi and also the educational advancement of the indigenous population and its development towards self-government or independence, the Soviet representative:

Recommends that the Administering Authority (the Belgian Government) take the following measures:

The Belgian Government should establish the Trust Territory of Ruanda-Urundi as an independent administrative entity not subordinate to the administration or the laws of the Belgian Congo and should work out a special system of administration for that Territory which should be fully compatible with and correspond to the fundamental aims and purposes of the International Trusteeship System. In the first place, it is of course essential that measures should be taken to establish Native organs of self-government on the basis of the elected representation of the indigenous population to replace the backward tribal system which is an obstacle to the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the indigenous population. In this connexion, it is considered essential that the Belgian Government should annul the laws concerning the subordination of the Territory of Ruanda-Urundi to the laws and administration of the Congo and should enact laws guaranteeing the status of Ruanda-Urundi as a Territory under the United Nations International Trusteeship System and laws ensuring the development of Native organs of self-government on the basis of electoral rights.

The Soviet representative firmly believes that increased facilities for general and specialized education are interdependent on marked progress towards political advancement. He is of the opinion that the progress in political matters must be accompanied by an increasing education.

13. Recommends that the Administering Authority should gradually establish a system of government in which the indigenous inhabitants would eventually assume the principal functions and responsibilities; that it should take steps to guarantee the direct participation of the indigenous population in higher organs of the administration of Ruanda-Urundi, including the Vice-Government-General Council, on the basis of an elected representative of the indigenous population from each province.

Recommends that the Administering Authority should revise its policy in Ruanda-Urundi and bring it into conformity with Article 76 b of the Charter, by adopting a course of promoting the political development of the inhabitants, the development of native organs of self-government on an electoral basis, and simultaneously directing its attention to the development of native school education and the elimination of illiteracy among the adult native population.

14. For the further development of the economy of Ruanda-Urundi it is essential that the Administering Authority should prepare special measures for the establishment and development in the near future of local industry to satisfy the needs of the indigenous population and make use of the raw materials.

The present system of taxation in Ruanda-Urundi does not take into account the material position of the native or his family.

It is essential that the Administering Authority should review the principle of tax imposition as it applies to the population of Ruanda-Urundi taking as the fundamental principle a tax based on a sliding scale.

15. It is essential that the Administering Authority should increase the sums expended on the health of the indigenous population, setting aside for that purpose considerably larger sums from both the central budget and the budgets of the local administrations and provide for the training of secondary medical personnel and doctors with diplomas from among the indigenous population.

16. Recommends that the budgetary appropriations allocated for education by the Administering Authority should be increased on a large scale in order to establish wide systems of primary and higher education.

17. Recommends that the Administering Authority and native organs of self-government take over from the missions the responsibility for education in the Territory.

7. New Guinea

The report on the administration of New Guinea for the year July 1, 1946, to June 30, 1947, was received by the Secretary-General on November 24, 1947, and was transmitted to members of the Council on the same day.

A preliminary examination of the report was undertaken by the Council at the sixteenth and seventeenth meetings of its second session (T/P.V.-43 and 44), and a number of questions (T/119) were raised, to which the representative of Australia undertook to obtain replies, but the Council resolved (12(II)) to postpone final examination of the report to the second part of the session in order that members might have further time for studying it adequately.

Consideration of the report was resumed at the 33rd meeting of the second session (T/SR.60), when the Council had before it the replies (T/138 and Add.1) to the questions which had been raised during the preliminary examination. At that time, however, the Government of Australia was unable to send a special representative as provided for in rules 74 and 75 of the rules of procedure, and the Council therefore decided that the final examination should be further postponed until the third session, when a special representative of the Government of Australia would be present.

During the 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th and 30th meetings of the third session (T/SR.97-103), J. R. Halligan, Secretary of the Australian Department of External Territories, who had been appointed as the special representative of the Administering Authority, answered questions on the report and on the administration of the Territory.

During the 29th and 30th meetings of its third session (T/SR.100 and 103), the Council held a general discussion with a view to formulating conclusions and recommendations relating to the report and to the Territory, and appointed a drafting committee, consisting of the representatives of France, Iraq, New Zealand and the Philippines, to draft a report, in accordance with rules 100 and 101 of its rules of procedure, for inclusion in the annual report of the Council to the General Assembly.

The draft report (T/202) prepared by the drafting committee was considered by the Council at the 37th and 38th meetings of its third session (T/SR.110 and 111) and, at the 38th meeting, the Council adopted the committee's report, with certain modifications, by a vote of 8 to 1, with 3 abstentions. The representative of the U.S.S.R., who cast the negative vote, asked that in accordance with rule 64 of the rules of procedure a statement of his delegation's views be appended to the report adopted by the Council. At its 43rd meeting (T/SR.116) the Council agreed to the inclusion of the statement of minority views submitted by the representative of the U.S.S.R. Following is the text of the report adopted by the Council and of the U.S.S.R. statement:

a. REPORT ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL

PART I. Review of Conditions Based on Information Supplied by the Administering Authority, Including the Annual Report for 1946-47, and Statements made in the Council by the Special Representative of the Administering Authority

A. GENERAL

The Trust Territory of New Guinea lies close to the Equator, with Papua on the South and Dutch New Guinea on the West. The Territory comprises part of the island of New Guinea and more than 600 other islands, the most important of which are New Britain, New Ireland, New Hanover, the Saint Mathias Group, Manus and a part of the Solomon Islands. The land area is about 93,000 square miles.

In June 1941, 38,790 square miles were under complete control, 11,070 square miles under Administration influence, 9,220 square miles under partial influence and 6,060 square miles had been penetrated by patrols. The remaining 27,860 square miles had not yet been penetrated. In order to bring these territories under control, the Administration utilizes a policy of peaceful penetration.

The Melanesians, the Papuans, the Micronesians and the Polynesians, who constitute the principal races, were estimated on 30 June 1941 to number approximately 1,000,000. The non-native population was 6,329 persons, including 1,600 Chinese.

The island of New Guinea, which had been discovered by Spanish navigators in the sixteenth century, was in German possession from 1886 to 1914, when it was occupied by an Australian expeditionary force. A "C" Mandate was conferred upon the Government of Australia by the League of Nations in December 1920.

Early in 1942 Japanese armed forces invaded the mandated Territory, which for the next three years was a theatre of Allied operations until finally reoccupied as a whole by Australian military forces in August 1945. New Guinea was placed under the International Trusteeship System on 13 December 1946, under the administration of Australia. The Trusteeship Agreement for the Territory came into effect without the necessity for formal ratification.

B. POLITICAL

1. Administrative structure

Civil administration in the Territory was suspended from 11 February 1942, and was not restored in the Territory as a whole until 24 June 1946. During that period, areas not under enemy occupation were administered by the Australian military forces until October 1945, from which date a Provisional Administration for Papua and New Guinea took control of a portion of the Territory, and progressively other areas of the Territory were transferred from military to civil control. The Provisional Administration was established under the "Papua and New Guinea Provisional Act 1945" under which the power to make ordinances was vested in the Governor General of the Commonwealth of Australia, and the two territories were administered by a single Administrator with one supreme court and one public service.

2. The Papua and New Guinea Bill

In November 1947 the Australian Government decided to make provision for an administrative union of the Trust Territory of New Guinea with the neighbouring Australian territory of Papua. The Trusteeship Council was informed of this decision in December 1947 and at its third session was provided by the Australian Government with a statement of the reasons for this decision (T/138/Add.1). To this statement was annexed for the information of the Council a copy of a Bill for the purpose of implementing the decision.

The Bill is entitled "The Papua and New Guinea Act 1948". It was presented by the Government of Australia to the Australian Parliament in July 1948 but at the time of adoption of this report had not yet been considered by the Parliament. According to the Bill the Territory of Papua and the Territory of New Guinea are to be administered jointly by a single administration.

According to the Bill there shall be an Administrator of the combined Territory appointed by the Governor General who shall be charged with the duty of administering a Government of the combined territory. There shall be an Executive Council for the combined territory to advise and assist the Administrator. The Council shall consist of not less than nine officers of the combined territory appointed by the Governor General and will have an advisory character only. The Administrator may act in opposition to the advice of the majority of the members of the Council, but in such a case must report the matter forthwith to the Minister responsible for Australian External Territories.

The Bill makes provision also for an Advisory Council for Native Affairs and Native Village Councils. The Advisory Council for Native Affairs may consider and tender advice to the Administrator concerning any matter affecting the welfare of the indigenous population in the area in respect of which it is established.

The Native Village Councils, when established, will have such functions as may be provided by ordinance in relation to the peace, order and welfare of the inhabitants in the areas in respect of which they may be established.

The Bill provides for a Legislative Council for the combined territory which will be composed of 29 members, of whom three will be elected on conditions prescribed by ordinance and the others, including three native members, will be appointed.

A single judiciary will be established for the combined Territory.

The terms of the Bill provide also that the Governor General may, by proclamation, define provinces within the combined Territory by such name and with such boundaries as may be specified in the proclamation.

By the terms of the Bill, there must be expended annually upon the administration, welfare and development of New Guinea an amount not less than the total amount of the public revenue raised each year in respect of the Territory.

The Bill also requires that the Administrator shall reserve for the Governor General's pleasure (i.e. for consideration by the Government of Australia) any ordinance of the Legislative Council which in the Administrator's opinion may not be fully in accordance with Australia's treaty obligations or with Australia's obligations under the Trusteeship Agreement.

The position of the Administering Authority was that the Bill was submitted for the information of the Council, so that the Government might have the advantage of the views of the members, but that the Trusteeship Agreement makes the Administering Authority responsible for decisions as to the form of government of the Territory. The powers of the Administering Authority are set in articles 4 and 5 of the Agreement, especially article 4, and the powers mentioned in article 5 are not exclusive or limiting. The Agreement had been approved by the General Assembly in the knowledge that administrative union of the Trust Territory with Papua was contemplated and the General Assembly had also approved agreements in respect of other territories which were administered in administrative union with neighbouring non-trust territories. The Administering Authority considered that the drafting of the Bill made it clear that political fusion was not contemplated, but was willing to make the Bill clearer in this respect. Further, it asserted that the supervision of the Trusteeship Council could and would be preserved in entirety in regard to the Trust Territory.

C. ECONOMIC

1. Public finance

Under the provisional arrangements one set of accounts was maintained for the territory of Papua and the Territory of New Guinea. Revenue during the year amounted to £464,006, which was slightly less than the pre-war revenue of £500,000 of New Guinea, when the Territory was self-supporting. This revenue was mostly obtained from customs duties, fees for licenses, etc., and a five per cent royalty on the value of all gold produced. There was no direct taxation.

The total expenditure amounted to £2,303,370, of which £2,018,673 was provided by the Australian Government in the form of a grant.

The compensation paid to indigenous inhabitants for war injuries and war damage amounted, at the time of transmission of the report, to £189,667. The total cost could not be estimated at that time but it was anticipated that it might exceed £3,000,000.

The non-indigenous inhabitants of New Guinea and Papua received, in 1946-47, approximately three and a half million pounds, including accrued interest, as war damage. The outstanding liability to non-indigenous inhabitants was estimated at £5,000,000.

2. Trade

The trade of New Guinea still bears marks of the war and its after-effects. In 1940-41 the exports of the Territory were valued at £3,247,585 and imports were valued at £962,129. Exports consisted mainly of gold bullion (86.13 per cent), copra, desiccated coconut, timber, rubber, cocoa beans and trochus shell.

Owing to abnormal conditions in the Territory, detailed data on exports and imports could not be produced for the period from 1 July to 31 December 1946. The value of exports for the first six months of 1947 amounted to £303,497 and consisted mainly of gold bullion (58.62 per cent), copra (16.55 per cent), trochus shell (6.93 per cent), machinery and machines (5.10 per cent); the value of imports amounted during the same period to £779,672.

Owing to the special conditions obtaining in the reconstruction period, the total value of imports for the year 1947 amounted to £1,151,841 and of exports to £415,125.

3. Agriculture

The Territory is estimated to contain 93,000 square miles, or 24,000,000 hectares, of which 365,000 hectares have been alienated. The alienated land comprises 210,000 hectares of freehold (granted by the former German administration), 63,000 hectares of leasehold, 80,000 hectares held by the Government and 10,000 hectares vested in the Director of District Services and Native Affairs as trustee for the indigenous inhabitants.

According to the latest available statistics (30 June 1940) the number of plantations was 517, the total area being 212,855 hectares and the area under cultivation 110,546 hectares.

The production of copra and rubber for export is largely in the hands of European planters and companies. The indigenous production of copra is on the increase around Rabaul.

4. Mines

Prior to the war the Territory of New Guinea was a substantial contributor to the world output of gold, but all installations suffered either damage or complete destruction.

From 1 January 1947 to 30 June 1947, 27,766 02.6 dwt. of gold bullion, valued at £177,915, were exported from the Territory to Australia.

The Administering Authority is planning to prospect for oil.

D. SOCIAL

1. Native labour

With the object of abolishing the indenture system within a period of five years, a set of new rules and regulations governing the employment of native labourers was enacted in 1946—47. The period of indenture was reduced from three years to one year. Provisionally, pending an investigation of the question of wages in the Territory, the minimum wage for indigenous workers was raised from five shillings a month to fifteen shillings a month. Hours of work were reduced from 55 to 44 a week. Employers are required to provide, in addition to wages, a prescribed balanced daily ration scale, housing and medical attention, for indigenous labourers and their families, if accompanying them.

2. Public health

In June 1947, the Department of Public Health employed a staff of 140 persons.

There were three Government hospitals and one private European hospital; thirty Government, two private and eleven mission Native hospitals; three Government Asiatic hospitals; thirty-nine mission aid posts; one Government and two mission welfare clinics; and one Government leprosarium.

Eleven medical officers and three dentists, all Europeans, were active in the Territory.

In 1946-47, 106 indigenous inhabitants were being instructed in the medical training centres at Lae, Goroka and Mount Hagen. There were beds in the hospitals for 70 European and for 6,785 indigenous patients.

The budget for public health amounted to £173,191 in 1946-47.

E. EDUCATIONAL

A new and separate Department of Education, planned to consist of 106 officers, of whom 95 will be qualified teaching staff and the remainder, administrative and clerical staff, has been established. Only 32 officers had, however, been appointed up to 30 June 1947, due to the lack of qualified personnel.

There were five elementary (kindergarten) and primary Government schools and one secondary school for Europeans, with a total enrolment of 54 pupils and five teachers; three primary Government schools for Chinese with a total enrolment of 538 pupils and 20 teachers; 13 primary and vernacular schools, one central school and one Government technical school for indigenous inhabitants, with a total enrolment of 1,201 school children and 29 teachers. The statistics for mission schools were not available when the report was written.

The sum of £36,695 was spent on education in 1946-47.

PART II. Observations

A. PROPOSED ADMINISTRATIVE UNION

The Council, noting with appreciation the action of the Administering Authority in submitting, in advance of final legislative action, its detailed proposals for a permanent administrative union between New Guinea and Papua, proceeded to undertake a careful examination of the subject, which it considered to be of major importance for the future of the Trust Territory.

The Administering Authority based its right to establish the proposed union on article 5 of the Trusteeship Agreement, and claimed that such a union would not be inconsistent with the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System.

The Administering Authority recalled the assurance, given by it at the time of the approval of the Trusteeship Agreement, to the effect that it did not consider that the terms of the Agreement would enable it to establish any form of political association which would involve the annexation of the Trust Territory in any sense or would have the effect of extinguishing its status as a Trust Territory. The Council noted the statement of the Administering Authority that it was prepared to embody in the legislation an assurance to this effect.

Some members of the Council accepted the assurance of the Administering Authority that the proposed union would not in practice lead to the impairment of the status of the Trust Territory as a separate entity. Other members, however, considered that the proposals of the Administering Authority envisaged a union that went beyond the kind of union contemplated in article 5 of the Trusteeship Agreement, in that it would provide not merely for a customs, administrative and fiscal union, together with common services, but for a complete fusion that extended entirely to the executive, legislative and judicial organization. They considered that the proposed union would be contrary to the basic aims of the International Trusteeship System, in that it would lead eventually to the disappearance of the separate identity of the Trust Territory and to its annexation.

Some members of the Council considered that the proposed union was not in the best interests of the inhabitants of the Trust Territory, and therefore was not in accordance with the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System. They considered that so complete a union between a Trust Territory and a Non-Self-Governing Territory would confuse the objectives of the administration of the Trust Territory and obscure the responsibilities of the Administering Authority. Other members, however, were of the opinion that the interests of the inhabitants would be safeguarded under the union and that the union would in fact favour the advancement of both territories and their peoples, in view of the similar nature of the territories and origins of the populations, their common problems of reconstruction, and the fact that they have been divided by a purely arbitrary boundary.

The Council observed that the proposals for the union provided for single executive, legislative and judicial organs for the two territories. Some members were of the opinion that such an arrangement was not conducive to political advancement and progress towards self-government. They felt that the Council should not approve a policy which, in their view, failed to take into consideration that principal objective of the International Trusteeship System. They were of the opinion that the administrative structure of the Trust Territory should be such as to guarantee development in political, economic, social and educational matters.

The Council noted that, although the constitution of the proposed combined legislative council of twenty-nine members provided for the appointment of three non-official indigenous members, it did not specify the number to be chosen from each territory.

The Council considered that any legislation enacted and any action subsequently taken should in no way impair the status and separate identity of the Trust Territory. In this connexion, some members of the Council were of the opinion that the powers conferred upon the Governor General by section 11 of the legislation to define provinces in the combined territories would open the way to the obliteration of the geographical limits of the Trust Territory and the possible complete loss of its political identity. On this point, the representative of the Administering Authority gave an assurance that, although the section had been written into the legislation in the interests of greater administrative efficiency in the task of bringing about the advancement of the indigenous inhabitants, his Government would give very serious consideration to the question.

Some members of the Council were of the opinion that, in view of the fact that the Trust Territory had normally, in past years, been financially self-supporting, whereas the territory of Papua had required financial assistance from external sources, the Trust Territory would have derived greater advantages had its administration remained completely separate. Other members, however, could not subscribe to this opinion in view of the explicit provision in the legislation that there must be expended in each year, for the administration, development and welfare of the Trust Territory, an amount not less than the total amount of the public revenue raised in each particular year in respect of the Trust Territory.

Some members of the Council felt that the existence of the proposed union would ultimately preclude the Council from exercising its responsibility of supervising the administration of the Trust Territory, and render it incapable of judging the development of the indigenous population in the political, economic, social and educational fields. While other members did not subscribe to that view, all members were agreed that the Administering Authority must continue to furnish the Council with full information on every aspect of the administration of the Trust Territory as a separate area.

B. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

1. General

The Council noted that the indigenous inhabitants of the Territory were still in a general state of illiteracy, and that no real beginning had yet been made in their political development. The Council expressed the opinion that, on the foundation of an increasingly wide educational system, the Administering Authority should afford the indigenous inhabitants adequate opportunities for assuming a progressively greater share in the administration of their own affairs.

2. Organs of government

The Council noted that, although indigenous advisory councils and village councils were to be established, the Administering Authority did not see its way to conferring upon them at this stage any substantial degree of responsibility. The Council hoped that greater opportunities for training in self-government would soon be provided through these indigenous councils.

C. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. General

The Council noted that in spite of the abundant natural resources of the Territory, the economic life of the indigenous inhabitants remained in a primitive state. The Council felt that the inhabitants should derive greater benefits than at present from the development of these resources. In particular, members raised the question of whether the Territory should not receive a larger share of the proceeds from gold mining than the existing royalty of five per cent, since they felt that the law which reserved to the Administration all claim and title to the wealth lying below the surface of the land should operate to the advantage of the indigenous inhabitants.

The Council noted the efforts of the Administering Authority in initiating an economic programme for providing assistance to the indigenous inhabitants in developing agricultural projects and achieving increased production of such cash crops as copra, cocoa, rice and fresh vegetables. The Council felt that such projects should be further encouraged and extended, so that the indigenous producers might not only benefit from increased local trading but also participate in the export trade.

2. Public finance

The Council noted that the revenue of the Territory had not yet reached the pre-war level, and the budget of £2,300,000 included a grant from the Government of Australia, which amounted to four times the pre-war revenue. While acknowledging the assistance thus given by the Administering Authority, the Council expressed the hope that all possible efforts would be made to increase progressively the revenue and, accordingly, the expenditure of the Territory for the benefit of its approximately one million inhabitants.

3. Taxation

The Council noted that the poll tax imposed in certain areas on indigenous inhabitants which had amounted to ten shillings per annum, had been suspended during the past two years, and commended the action of the Administering Authority in removing what appeared, in view of the low earnings of the indigenous inhabitants, to have been a burden involving great hardship.

The Council noted that no direct taxation was imposed in the Territory, and that taxation chiefly consisted of import duties and license fees. It felt some misgivings as to whether such indirect taxation bore evenly on all sections of the population.

4. Land tenure

The Council noted that indigenous lands could be sold only to the Government, and only with the consent of the indigenous owner and the approval of the local authority.

The Council expressed concern that the interests of the indigenous landowners should always be adequately safeguarded in this respect, since by virtue of their backwardness they might be unable fully to understand the significance of their consent to such sales.

D. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Indenture system of labour

The Council noted that the Administering Authority had reduced the period of indenture for indigenous labourers to twelve months, and had set itself the objective of abolition of the system in five years, which the Administering Authority considered to be the minimum transition period.

2. Wages

The Council, noting that the minimum wage for a labourer had recently been increased from five to fifteen shillings a month, and that the question of wages and other conditions of labour were under investigation by the Administering Authority, felt that the regulations governing wages should be improved, and that the position of workers contracted by the territorial government or other employers should be more consistent with the general trend of prices of commodities. Even when regard was had to the fact that, in addition to his cash wages, a labourer received food, housing and medical care, a monthly wage of fifteen shillings appeared to be totally insufficient to provide him and his family with their other necessities.

In addition, the Council was of the opinion that efforts should be made to educate workers with a view to enabling them progressively to attain a stage of development in which they would be capable of bargaining collectively with their employers.

The Council was of the opinion, moreover, that there should be no differentiation, except on the basis of skill, in wage rates as between indigenous and non-indigenous labour.

3. Health services

The Council noted that the Administering Authority regarded the promotion of the health of the inhabitants of the Territory as one of the most vital functions of government; that an improved medical service was being planned and that any lack of speed in achieving the aim was due to the difficulty of securing qualified medical practitioners.

The Council, emphasizing the paramount importance of an adequate medical service for the Territory, in which the indigenous inhabitants should participate to a greater degree, expressed the opinion that health conditions in the Territory were still unsatisfactory, and that the number of doctors and medical personnel, and the number of hospitals and clinics, was insufficient. It expressed the view that increasing numbers of the indigenous inhabitants should be trained as physicians, nurses and other medical personnel.

E. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

1. General

The Council noted the statement of the Administering Authority that "education is a major item in the plans that have been approved for the future development of the Territory".

The Council, however, reiterating its belief that the education of the indigenous inhabitants was the prerequisite of their political, economic and social advancement, considered that their relative backwardness would require even greater efforts on the part of the Administering Authority in the future. The Council expressed the hope that the educational plans prepared by the Administering Authority would soon be put into operation, and that a school-building programme would be prepared which would at least restore, in the shortest possible time, the number of buildings to the pre-war level.

The Council observed that there were only a very few schools in the Territory, that illiteracy was the rule, and that the attendance of children in school and the proportion of the number of children of school age who attended school was not satisfactory. The Council observed, moreover, that the religious missions, which had performed very valuable services in the past, would continue to take an important part in the educational programme, but was of the opinion that the administration should not only exercise an increasing measure of control over their activities, but assume an increasing share of the initiative in education.

2. Expenditure on education

The Council noted that only 1.59 per cent of the total expenditure of the combined Territories of New Guinea and Papua had been devoted to education during the year under review.

3. Higher education

The Council was of the opinion that facilities should be provided for the higher education of persons capable of benefiting from it. It was not sufficient to provide the population with a rudimentary education only; provision should be made for scholarships to enable gifted individuals to pursue their studies abroad.

4. Teacher training

The Council expressed concern as to whether the programme of teacher training, especially for indigenous teachers, was adequate for the needs of the Territory, and was of the opinion that the Administering Authority should consider whether additional funds and facilities might not be made available for the purpose.

PART III. Conclusions and Recommendations

The Council, in presenting to the General Assembly the conclusions and recommendations arising from its examination of the Report on the administration of the Trust Territory of New Guinea for the period of 1 July 1946 to 30 June 1947:

(1) Recognizes that in its efforts to promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the Territory, the Administering Authority has been confronted not merely with the difficulties inherent in a country as yet little developed, but also with great problems of reconstruction arising from the devastation and disorganization of war;

(2) Notes in particular that large areas of the Territory were under enemy occupation from January 1942 to August 1945; that civil administration was restored only six days before the beginning of the period under report; that a large number of experienced personnel and all government records were* lost; and that all activities of the administration were disrupted;

(3) Makes the following conclusions and recommendations with a view to promoting the interests of the inhabitants and their progressive development towards the ultimate objective of self-government or independence, in accordance with Chapters XII and XIII of the Charter and the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

A. GENERAL

The Council hereby asserts that, not only by virtue of the obligations under the Charter assumed by the Government of Australia, but also by virtue of the contribution made and the sufferings undergone by the indigenous population of New Guinea during the Second World War, the Trust Territory now deserves the special attention of the Administering Authority in order to promote its recovery and its enjoyment of the benefits due to its people in all fields.

To this end, the Council recommends that the existing activities and programmes of the Administering Authority for the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the Territory should be extended and co-ordinated so as to comprise a general, long-range plan based on the following fundamental considerations:

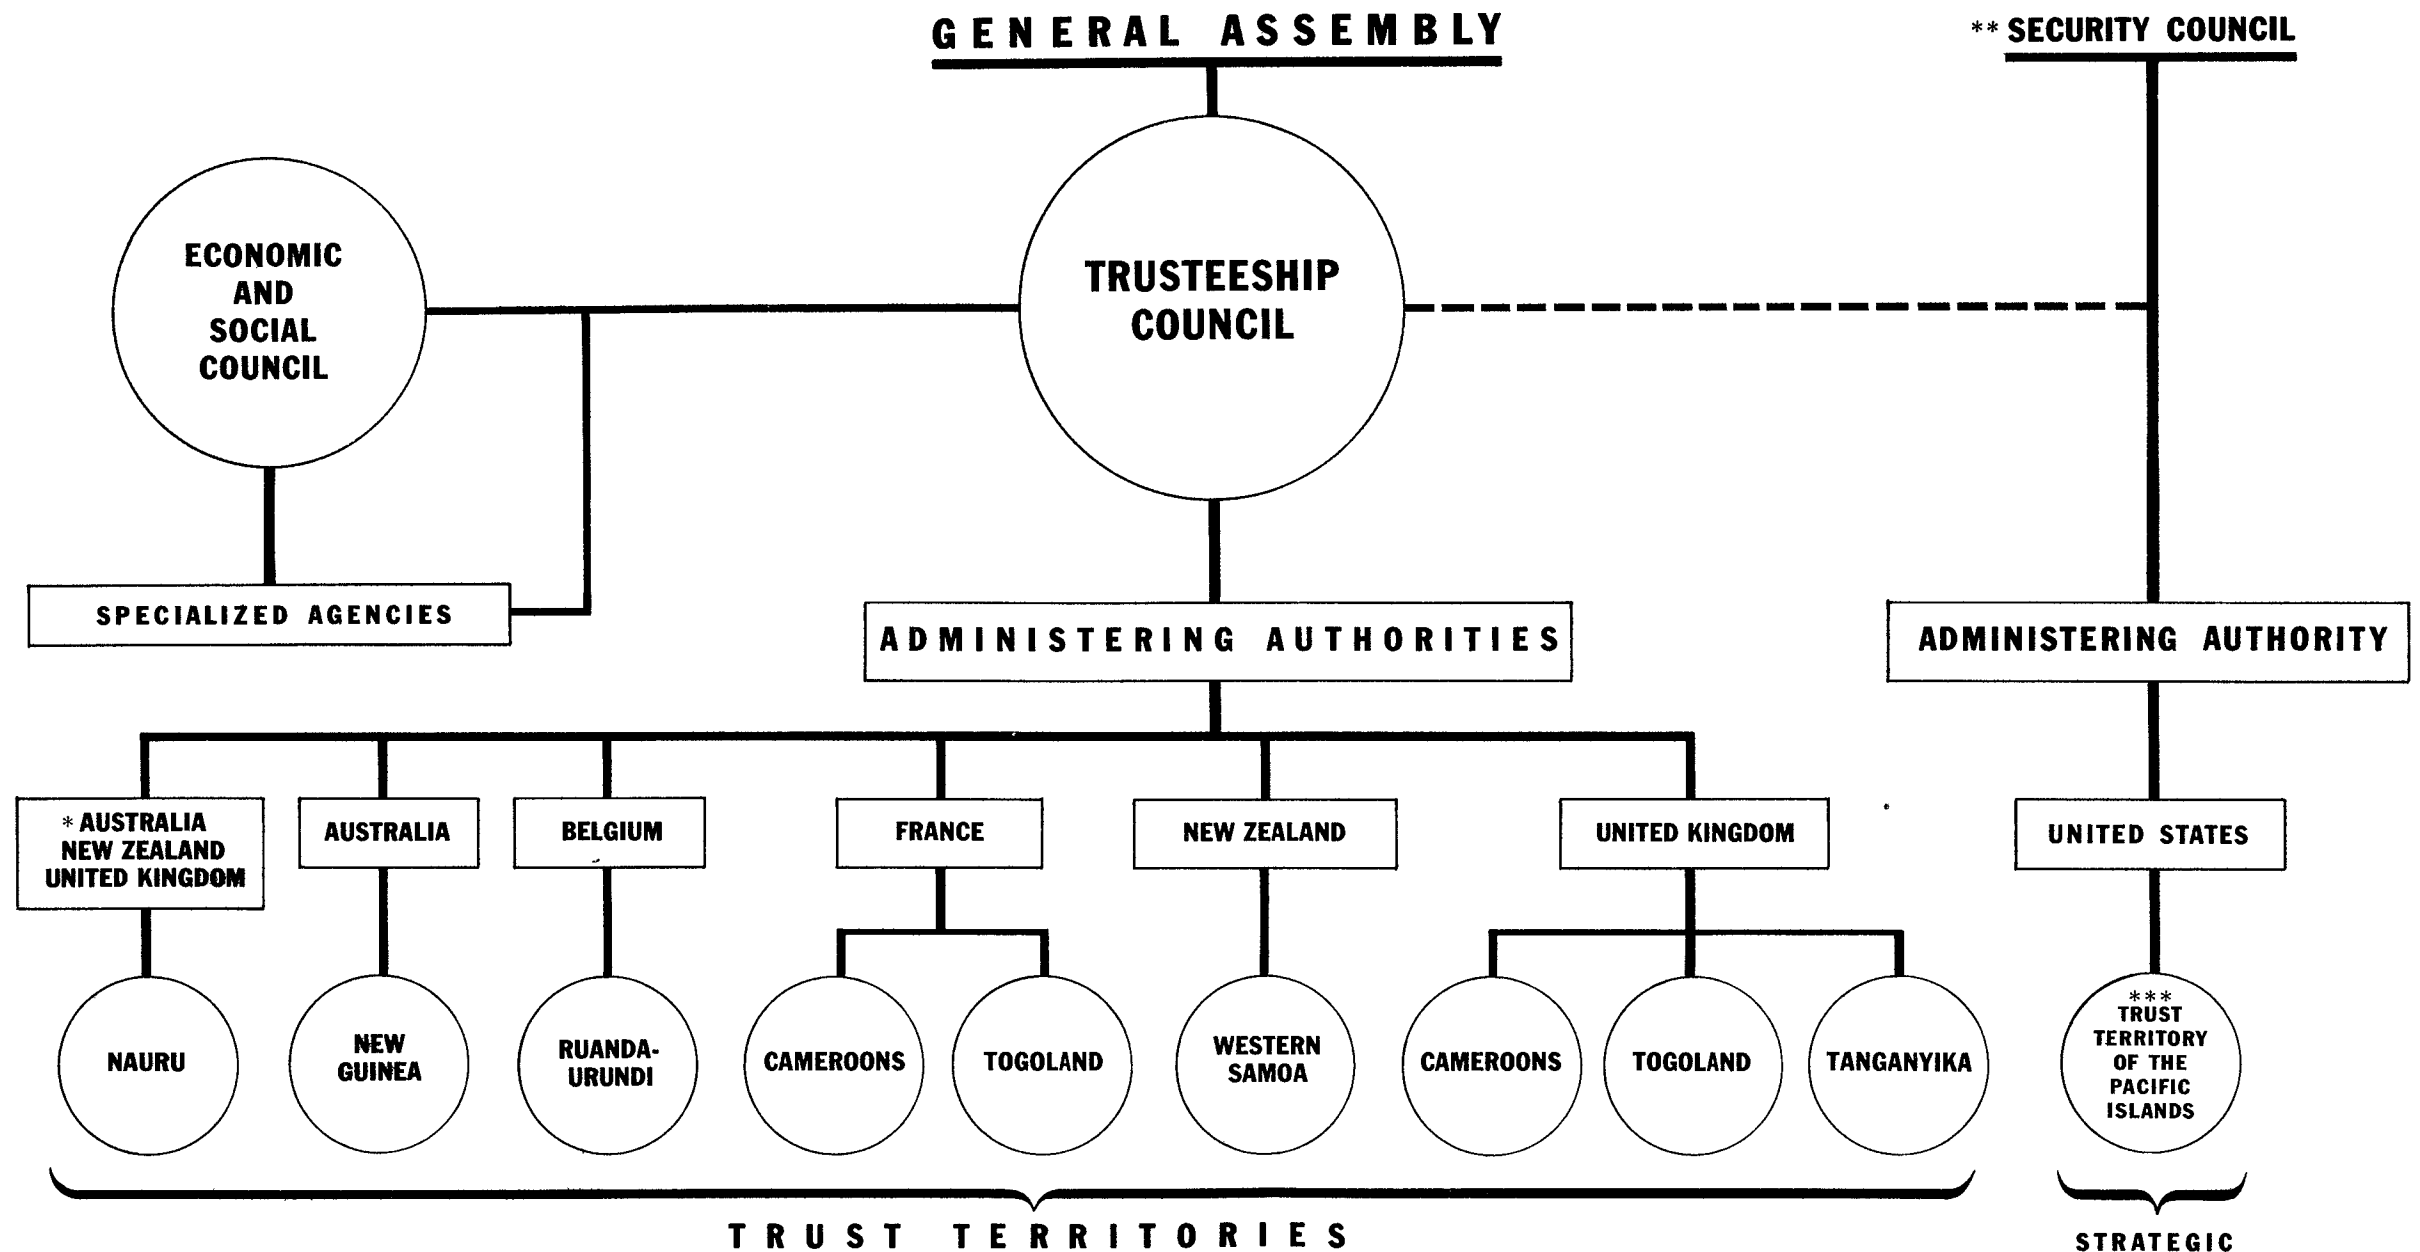

(i) That the execution of such a plan should promote the progressive advancement of the inhabitants as a whole, and not only of individuals or groups;

(ii) That the plan should be based on an appropriate constitutional foundation which would prescribe the main lines of development towards self-government or independence;

(iii) That the plan should provide for continuous and increasing participation by the indigenous inhabitants in all fields of development in the Territory, and for the free expression of their wishes.

The Council invites the Administering Authority to

STRUCTURE OF THE INTERNATIONAL TRUSTEESHIP SYSTEM

*The Government of Australia will, on behalf of the Administering Authority, and except and until otherwise agreed by the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, continue to exercise full powers of legislation, administration and jurisdiction in and over the Territory of Nauru.

 Marshalls, the Carolines, and the Marianas (with the exception of Guam).

 For special relationship with Trusteeship Council, refer to Article 83, paragraph 3 of United Nations Charter.

keep it informed of all progress made towards the formulation and execution of such a plan.

B. PROPOSED ADMINISTRATIVE UNION

(1) The Council, having devoted a prolonged and significant debate to the question of the proposed administrative union between the Trust Territory of New Guinea and the Australian territory of Papua, takes the position that the establishment of the union is a highly important problem of serious consequence.

(2) The Council considers that, in so far as the problem—as to whether or not the proposed union is within the terms of the Trusteeship Agreement approved by the General Assembly—is partly juridical in nature, it might to that extent be resolved by recourse to the appropriate juridical body, the International Court of Justice.

(3) It is the Council's conviction that an administrative union must remain strictly administrative in its nature and its scope, and that its operation must not have the effect of creating any conditions which will obstruct the separate development of the Trust Territory, in the fields of political, economic, social, and educational advancement, as a distinct entity.

(4) The Council is not, however, entirely convinced that the proposed union between New Guinea and Papua may not go so far as to compromise the preservation of the separate identity of the Trust Territory.

(5) The Council considers also that the establishment of a union of the kind proposed imposes an embarrassing burden on the judgment of the Council, and that it may constitute a difficulty in the way of the discharge by the Council of its responsibilities under the Charter.

(6) The Council is firmly determined that the proposed union must not lead to a union of a closer permanent nature with still greater implications.

(7) The Council expresses concern lest the powers conferred on the Governor General by section 11 of the legislation, of defining provinces in the combined territories, may allow provinces to be so defined as to include portions of both territories, which might result eventually in obliterating the territorial boundaries and rendering difficult the supervision by the Council of the Trust Territory.

(8) The Council considers that a single tariff system for the two territories under section 73 of the legislation should not affect the obligation of the Administering Authority to apply to the Trust Territory the provisions of Article 76 d of the Charter respecting equal treatment in social, economic and commercial matters for all members of the United Nations and their nationals.

(9) The Council accordingly recommends that the Administering Authority review the matter of administrative union in the light of the foregoing conclusions, and also in the light of the views expressed in the Council, and that it inform the Council of the results of its review.

C. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

1. General

The Council, noting that the indigenous inhabitants of the Territory are still in a state of illiteracy and political backwardness, recommends that the Administering Authority should adopt positive measures to provide adequate opportunities for their political advancement. In this connexion, the Council expresses again its firm belief that increased education is of fundamental importance, and draws particular attention to its conclusions and recommendations on the subject of educational advancement.

The Council recommends that conditions should be created which would lead to the establishment of organs of self-government for the indigenous inhabitants.

The Council recommends that the Administering Authority should review the constitutions and powers of the proposed indigenous advisory and village councils with a view to granting them greater initiative in the conduct of their own affairs, and preparing the inhabitants for a progressively increasing part in the legislative and higher administrative organs of the Territory.

3. Administration of Territory

The Council, noting that approximately one-third of the indigenous population remains outside the Government's control, requests the Administering Authority to include in its next annual report further information on this matter and, in particular, additional details of the principles and practice of the policy of peaceful penetration.

The Council, noting that civil administration has not yet been completely restored, that personnel are inadequate in number and that the functions of government are still limited, expresses the hope that every effort will be made to remedy this situation, in particular by the recruitment and training of additional personnel.

D. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. Revenue and expenditure

The Council, noting that a great increase in expenditure will be necessary before the indigenous inhabitants of the Territory can make adequate progress, recommends that the Administering Authority give earnest consideration to ways and means for increasing the revenue of the Territory.

2. Fiscal system

The Council recommends that the Administering Authority should examine the whole fiscal system of the Territory, with a view to alleviating the burden of indirect taxation where it presses unduly, to the introduction of direct taxation based upon the individual's capacity to pay and to an increasing participation by the indigenous inhabitants in the abundant natural wealth of the Territory.

3. Land tenure

The Council, expressing concern as to whether the interests of the indigenous landowners are sufficiently protected by the law relating to the alienation of land, requests the Administering Authority to furnish further information regarding the law, and the manner and extent of its application, in the next annual report.

4. Indigenous production

The Council recommends that the Administering Authority should induce the indigenous inhabitants to cultivate marketable and exportable crops so as to enable them to participate in the export trade of the Territory.

E. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Labour conditions

The Council, noting that the minimum wage rate for indigenous workers has been tentatively increased from five to fifteen shillings per month, expresses concern that this rate is still inadequate. The Council recommends that the Administering Authority establish in the future wage rates which are not merely commensurate with the cost of living of the indigenous inhabitants according to their existing standards, but which will also enable them to improve their standards of living.

The Council further recommends that in establishing rates of wages for indigenous and non-indigenous workers the Administering Authority be guided at all times by the principle of equal pay for equal work.

The Council recommends that every encouragement and training be given to the indigenous workers which would lead to the establishment of some form of collective bargaining.

2. Public health

The Council, noting with concern the inadequacy of the existing medical services, recommends that the Administering Authority take urgent steps to improve them.

The Council recommends, in particular, that the Administering Authority increase its efforts to recruit sufficient numbers of qualified medical practitioners for service in the Territory.

The Council recommends, further, that the numbers of other medical personnel be increased, and that a more extensive programme be introduced for the training of indigenous inhabitants as physicians and nurses, as well as for other medical work.

The Council recommends, in addition, that greater priority be given to the establishment of additional hospitals, clinics and similar centres.

F. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Educational facilities

The Council expresses concern at the inadequacy of educational facilities in the Territory and at the consequently high rate of illiteracy, which is hindering the political advancement of the indigenous inhabitants.

The Council welcomes the assurance of the Administering Authority that education is a major item in plans for the future development of the Territory, and urges the Administering Authority to press forward with the execution of these plans.

The Council recommends that the Administering Authority put into effect a general school-building programme which will at least restore, in the shortest possible time, the number of schools to the pre-war level.

The Council, noting with concern the inadequacy of the teacher-training programme for indigenous schools, recommends that the Administering Authority devote additional funds and facilities to this purpose.

The Council, noting the preponderant part taken by religious missions in the education of the indigenous inhabitants, recommends that the Administering Authority assume an increasing measure of responsibility and initiative in the future.

2. Higher education

The Council recommends that the Administering Authority devote special attention to the provision of education beyond the rudimentary stage, including the establishment of scholarships or similar facilities for higher study outside the Territory, with a view to building up from the more gifted of the indigenous inhabitants an intellectual elite capable of leading the people as a whole in political, economic, social and educational advancement.

G. MISCELLANEOUS

The Council, noting the special circumstances under which the present report was compiled, hopes that the next annual report will contain a much more complete account of conditions in the Territory in the fields of political, economic, social and educational advancement.

The Council requests the Administering Authority to provide in the next annual report, in addition to detailed answers to the Provisional Questionnaire and information arising from the foregoing conclusions and recommendations:

(a) An official map showing the distribution of population, natural resources, etc.;

(b) Photographs illustrating the country, its people, etc.;

(c) Information on the following subjects in particular:

(i) The provisions of the law relating to the punishment of various criminal offences, indicating whether there is any discrimination in the administration of justice;

(ii) The net profits of the gold-mining companies for the year in review;

(iii) The average annual income of the indigenous inhabitants;

(iv) The number of savings-bank accounts in the names of indigenous inhabitants and, if possible, the total value of such accounts, and the amount of an average account;

(v) The proportional part played by the Government and Missions respectively in the task of education;

(vi) Details of accidents occurring in industry as a whole and in particular industries.

b. MINORITY VIEWS OF THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE U.S.S.R.

1. The Soviet representative:

Notes the fact that the Bill for the union of the Trust Territory of New Guinea and the Colony of Papua is not in accordance with the basic objectives of the trusteeship system and does not take into account those provisions which are set down in the Charter, specifically, under Article 70 b.

Considers that the assurances of the Administering Authority, to the effect that the unification of New Guinea with the Colony of Papua will not bring the loss of the status of Trust Territory of New Guinea, could not in practice be an obstacle to, nor prevent or preclude the process of absorption of New Guinea politically, administratively and economically. The union will lead inevitably to the annexation of the Trust Territory instead of its independence.

Notes that with regard to the unification of the two Territories—the Colony of Papua and the Trust Territory of New Guinea—under one legislative and one administrative and one judicial body with common services, no distinction is made under this Bill between the population of the Trust Territory and the adjacent Colony of Papua. However, very definite distinctions do exist. These distinctions are set down in Article 76 b of the Charter which deals with the rights given to the inhabitants of the Trust Territories.

Considers that the Bill for unification did not provide for any measures which are directed to the establishing in the Trust Territory of bodies for self-government of the people of New Guinea.

The Soviet representative could not but remark that this Bill is being imposed upon the indigenous population by the Administering Authorities. This Bill is not a result of a discussion by the native population; it is not a result of the freely expressed will of the indigenous population. However, Article 76 b of the Charter deals with the basic objectives of the trusteeship system and it states, directly, that measures should be taken towards the progressive development to self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each Territory, and that it should be in accordance with the freely expressed wishes of the native population.

2. The village councils, which will be created by the Administering Authority, could not be considered as organs of self-government because they cannot take any decisions. The same can be said concerning the advisory councils, which are also not organs of self-government.

Thus, in this respect we can only note that the administrative structure does not correspond to the aims and principles of the trusteeship system. Therefore, this structure should also be changed, and the natives should receive a constantly increasing part in the legislative organs, in the high administrative organs, and conditions should be created to allow the natives to create their organs of self-government, for, without achievement of such political progress of the indigenous population, progress in other fields is practically impossible.

3. In view of the fact that this Bill actually means a fusion of a colony and a Trust Territory; in view of the fact that this Bill gives no opportunity, no possibilities for the population of a Trust Territory to develop along the way set forth under the International Trusteeship System of the United Nations, and because this Bill does not provide for any organs of self-government for the native population; in view of the fact that this Bill does not admit the native population to the administration of their own Territory, it is considered that this Bill does not reflect the basic aims and purposes of the trusteeship system. For that reason, the Bill cannot be considered as appropriate and acceptable for New Guinea, and the unification of the Trust Territory of New Guinea and the colonial Territory of Papua should be considered as inconsistent with the Charter and the trusteeship system.

Therefore, the Soviet delegation recommends that the Australian Government should not put into force the Bill on unification of the Trust Territory of New Guinea with the adjacent Australian Colony of Papua and recommends that a separate administration for the Trust Territory of New Guinea be created.

It is also necessary that the Administering Authority should take appropriate legislative and administrative measures which will contribute to the creation and development of indigenous organs of self-government on the basis of the popular representation (electoral system).

8. Tanganyika

The annual report on the administration of Tanganyika for the year 1947 was received by the Secretary-General on May 12, 1948, and communicated to the Council on May 13, 1948. Although the report was received one week later than required by rule 72, paragraph 2, of the rules of procedure, the Council, at the second meeting of its third session (T/SR.75) decided to examine it during that session.

During the eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth meetings of the third session (T/SR.84—89) members of the Council addressed questions to J. E. S. Lamb, special representative of the Administering Authority, on the political, economic, social and educational situation in the Territory. At the 20th, 22nd and 23rd meetings (T/SR.93, 95 and 96), the Council discussed the conclusions and recommendations to be adopted on the report, and appointed a committee consisting of the representatives of Australia, Mexico, the U.S.S.R. and the United States to draft a report, in accordance with rules 100 and 101 of its rules of procedure, for inclusion in the annual report of the Council to the General Assembly. The draft report (T/204) prepared by the drafting committee was considered by the Council at the 36th, 39th and 40th meetings of its third session (T/SR.109, 112 and 113). While the drafting committee which drew up the reports on Ruanda-Urundi and New Guinea presented to the Council texts agreed on by all its members, the drafting committee entrusted with the task of preparing a report on Tanganyika was unable to reach agreement on a single text as regards Parts II and III of the report containing the Council's observations and its conclusions and recommendations.

In Part II (Observations) the drafting committee therefore presented a summary of the views expressed by the various delegations in the course of the Council's discussions, indicating the names of the delegations which had expressed those views. Part III (Recommendations and Conclusions) was divided into three sections, Section A containing the conclusions on which all four members of the committee agreed, Section B presenting the conclusions agreed to by two members of the committee and Section C giving the conclusions of one member only. The drafting committee had considered that it was for the Council to study the various points of view and to make a choice among them.

The representatives of France, Belgium and China criticized the drafting committee for the manner of presenting its report. They were of the opinion that the report should contain only the opinion of the Council as a whole and not the views of individual delegations. The representative of New Zealand moved that the names of delegations should be deleted from the second part of the report, a proposal to which several representatives objected on the ground that the Council as a whole could not assume responsibility for the views of individual delegations. The Council therefore rejected the proposal by a vote of 5 to 4, with 2 abstentions, and adopted by a vote of 6 to 1, with 5 abstentions, Part II as a whole, subject to minor amendments, in the form presented by the drafting committee. The Council voted paragraph by paragraph on the recommendations contained in Part III of the drafting committee's report. Part III as a whole was adopted by a vote of 5 to 1, with 6 abstentions. The Council then adopted the report on Tanganyika as a whole by a vote of 5 to 3, with 4 abstentions.

As in the case of the reports on Ruanda-Urundi and New Guinea, the representative of the U.S.S.R. in accordance with rule 64 of the rules of procedure, submitted a statement of minority views, which the Council at its 43rd meeting (T/SR.116) agreed to append to its report to the General Assembly.

Following is the text of the report (A/603, pp. 19-39 and pp. 48-49) adopted by the Council and of the U.S.S.R. statement:

a. REPORT ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL

PART I. Review of conditions in Tanganyika in 1947: a summary based on the Administration Report for 1947 and the statements made by the special representative, United Kingdom, before the Trusteeship Council

A. GENERAL

1. Area, topography, and climate

The Territory of Tanganyika lies just south of the Equator between the great lakes of central Africa and the Indian Ocean. It has an area of 362,688 square miles including about 20,000 square miles of inland water.

Though isolated hills and minor mountain ranges and some imposing mountain massives exist in widely scattered parts of the Territory, the dominant topographical feature is that of flat or gently undulating plains.

The climate of the Territory varies greatly according to the height above the sea level. Broadly speaking, the rainfall is low for a tropical country.

2. Population

The present population of the Territory is estimated to be about 5,500,000 Africans, 55,000 Asians, and 7,500 Europeans, the average density per square mile being 16.4 in 1946. There is no civil register in the Territory.

B. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Inter-Territorial Organization

At the end of 1947 the United Kingdom Government passed an Order-in-Council linking Tanganyika administratively with Kenya and Uganda. A High Commission and a Central Legislature were created to deal with specified departments and services of inter-territorial significance. The Government of Tanganyika remains responsible for the basic services of the Territory. The new arrangements do not affect the juridical personality of Tanganyika. To add to any of the scheduled services under the High Commission would require the consent of the territorial legislatures.

2. General administration

The Territory is administered by the Governor with the assistance of an advisory Executive Council consisting of official and unofficial members. The laws of the Territory are enacted by the Governor with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, consisting of the Governor, and official and unofficial members. The Governor has the right to veto any Ordinance. There is at present no form of electoral representation in the Territory, appointments to the Central legislature and to local government bodies being by nomination.

No new legislation designed specifically to further political advancement towards the objective of self-government or independence was passed during the year, nor did the need for any such legislation become apparent. The political advancement of the Territory at this stage is mainly a question of education to enable the indigenous peoples to fit themselves for the assumption of greater responsibility in local government and in the general administration of the Territory. A third African member was appointed to the territorial Legislative Council and consideration given to a further increase in the number of African members in the near future.

The Legislative Council consists of the Governor, fifteen official members, all Europeans, and fourteen unofficial members of whom seven are European, four Africans and three Asians. The Executive Council consists of official and unofficial members, the number of official members being seven at present.

For administrative purposes the Territory is divided into eight provinces, each in the charge of a Provincial Commissioner, who is responsible to the Governor. The provinces are divided into districts in the charge of District Commissioners responsible to the Provincial Commissioner. The seat of the government is in Dar-es-Salaam which is also the largest town and seaport of the Territory.

3. Native Authorities

Throughout the Territory, Native Authorities have been established with certain specified jurisdiction over the indigenous inhabitants within their respective tribal areas. While the normal procedure is to recognize the traditional tribal authority, in areas where the inhabitants have no closely knit tribal constitution or where there is a mixture of tribes, the people are called upon to choose their Council of Headmen. These authorities derive their legislative and executive power from the Native Authority Ordinance. In addition, many Native Authorities exercise certain residual powers derived from native law and custom. Further, they may be empowered by an order made by the Governor to administer any law specified in such order.

Attempts are being made to bring about federations of chiefs to cover wider areas for certain common purposes of native administration. In one instance, viz. the Chaggas, the people themselves have reorganized their old administration so as to constitute a superior council and to introduce elected members into their councils.

4. Judicial organization

The judicial organization is made up of: (a) the High Court, (b) the special tribunal, (c) subordinate courts. Appeals lie from the High Court of the Territory to the Court of Appeal for East Africa.

Criminal cases are dealt with under the East African Criminal Code. For civil cases the Indian Code of Civil Procedure is used.

The official language of the courts is English, but provision is made for interpretation.

Included in the judicial organization of the Territory are native courts constituted under the Native Courts Ordinance which defines their jurisdiction. These tribunals are composed exclusively of indigenous inhabitants. Their primary function is to give effect to well-established customary laws of the indigenous society. There has as yet been no attempt to codify native law and custom.

C. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. Agriculture

The very large majority of the indigenous inhabitants are dependent upon agricultural activities in some form or other. Most of them are peasant cultivators, living largely at a subsistence level. For the most part the cultivator relies upon the hoe as his chief implement. The spread of cultivation is limited by the prevalence of the tsetse flies over wide areas and lack of natural water resources. A wide variety of climate and soil conditions makes possible the cultivation of a wide range of produce in the Territory. The most important agricultural products of the Territory in the order of their importance are sisal, coffee, and cotton.

Of the total area of some 6,334,000 acres (about 3 per cent of the total land area of the Territory) under cultivation, 5,250,000 acres or 82 per cent of the area under cultivation is estimated to be devoted to the cultivation of crops for consumption in the Territory. The supply of food to the population is, however, subject to seasonal shortages on account of crop failures and the Native Authority Ordinance provides for compulsory cultivation by an indigenous person of enough land to support himself and his family.

2. Livestock

The most recent figures available give the Territory's stock population as 6,419,566 cattle, 3,165,445 goats and 2,365,813 sheep. Owing largely to the tsetse fly, the large cattle population is concentrated over a comparatively small area of the Territory. In some areas there is definite overstocking. In the main this problem is being dealt with by the development of properly organized markets which operate as outlets for surplus stock.

3. Land tenure

Under the tribal system, in most areas the fundamental principle is accepted that the land belongs to the tribe, the individual occupier enjoying security of tenure, so long as he behaves himself and keeps his land under cultivation. His title to his homestead is, however, more permanent and individual. In the coastal belt, however, the idea of individual property prevails.

Under the Land Ordinance the whole of the lands of the Territory except those disposed of before the Ordinance has been declared public lands, and placed under the control of the Governor, to be held in trust for the use and common benefit of the indigenous inhabitants. Land may be held only under a lease, known as the Right of Occupancy, for terms not exceeding ninety-nine years. Of the total land area, amounting to 342,706 square miles, 2,885 square miles have been alienated. Up to the date of the preparation of the 1947 administration report long term rights of occupancy have been taken out in respect of 51,700 acres. The future needs of the indigenous people are taken into consideration when some new settlement by non-indigenous people is projected. The whole of the Central, Southern, Western and Lake Provinces were closed to alienation to non-indigenous persons for agricultural and pastoral purposes except in the case of applicants in a position to undertake operations on a large scale especially in regard to the provision of water supply.

4. Credit facilities

Since the year 1942, crop, machinery and soil conservation loans have been made to farmers, at first interest free but after 1 January 1947, with interest at 3½ per cent per annum. Security has been provided for under the Chattels Transfer Ordinance, No. 25 of 1942. Loans have been granted only to non-indigenous farmers for the purchase of agricultural machinery and for financing operational expenses in connexion with the increased production of food crops.

In 1947 an ordinance (No. 47 of 1947), to provide for the establishment and management of a land bank for the purpose of facilitating loans to farmers, co-operative societies and native authorities in furtherance of agriculture in the Territory and to provide for matters ancillary thereto, was passed but has not yet been brought into operation.

5. Forests

There are valuable stands of hardwood timber in the Territory. Forests can be declared as "reserved" on both private and public land. Forest Reserves on public land are of two categories: those administered by the Central Government and those under the control of Native Authorities which enjoy any forest royalties that may accrue from them. During the five years, 1942 to 1946, timber worth £96,543 and minor forest produce of the value of £391,626 were exported from the Territory on an average every year, and it is estimated that some 6 per cent of its total labour force is employed in occupations connected with timber. Twenty-six concessions covering 37,861 square miles were in existence at the end of 1947.

6. Minerals

The mineral resources of the Territory, only a tenth of which have been prospected, give indication of being extensive and varied. The principal minerals at present exploited are gold, diamonds, tin-ore, salt and mica, while a wide range of other minerals are mined in a smaller way.

The total value of principal minerals exported from the Territory in 1947 is estimated at £1,222,037.

In Tanganyika surface rights convey no mineral rights which are governed by mining laws. Prospecting for minerals may only be carried out under the authority of a prospecting right issued under the Mining Ordinance, while actual mining is permitted only on a registered claim or lease. Royalties are payable at prescribed rates, while all claims, leases, etc., carry development obligations. Taxation and royalties ensure that a very high proportion of the proceeds of the sale of diamonds accrues to the territorial revenue. Gold is sold to the Bank of England.

7. Industry and business enterprise—General

There were in 1947, 346 incorporated industrial and trading establishments and enterprises in the Territory, of which 265 were in urban areas and eighty-one in rural. There were, besides, seventy co-operative societies with a total membership of 55,381 persons.

Secondary industries have not yet been established to any extent. Local industrial products include soap, cigarettes, furniture, leather, butter, cheese, etc. A new company for meat canning with 51 per cent of Government capital was recently established. The company has an authorized capital of £500,000, 51 per cent of which is owned by the Government of the Territory and 49 per cent by Messrs. Liebig's Extract of Meat Company. There is some processing of primary products, e.g., milling of rice and flour, oil extraction, saw milling, cotton ginning, coffee curing, tobacco curing, etc.

Particulars of the amount of outside private capital invested in the Territory are not available. Local handicrafts comprise woodwork, weaving, hoe making, basket making, pottery, etc. The most important industry managed by Africans is the production of clarified butter and ghee.

So far the indigenous inhabitants have no direct part in the major commercial undertakings or in the wholesale trade of the Territory. In the day-to-day life of the more remote rural areas the barter system still operates among the indigenous people.

The proportion of domestic trade controlled by co-operative organizations is very small.

8. Monopolies

(a) FISCAL. The Government of the Territory enjoys fiscal monopoly in respect of railways and ports services, including the Tanganyika Road Services operating on six routes.

Under the Defence Regulations the Produce Controller is authorized to purchase and distribute controlled produce.

(b) PRIVATE. The Tanganyika Electric Supply Company and the Dar-es-Salaam and District Electric Supply Company hold licences for sixty and eighty years respectively which confer upon them the exclusive right to supply electric energy in specified areas.

9. Foreign trade

The total foreign trade of Tanganyika in 1947 amounted to £25,304,122, which was made up of imports valued at £13,723,925 and exports valued at £11,580,197. There were imports and re-exports of bullion and specie amounting to £147,691 and £23,580 respectively. The principal imports in terms of value were vehicles, including aircraft, railway-stock, etc., cotton piece-goods and other textile manufactures, electrical goods, iron and steel manufactures, cigarettes and a variety of food grains. The chief exports from the Territory were sisal, coffee, cotton, diamonds, gold, hides and kapok.

Tanganyika is a member of the Customs Union which includes also Kenya and Uganda. Under the terms of a convention between Belgium and the United Kingdom the Territory enjoys the benefits of free transit of goods through the Belgian Congo. Exports from Tanganyika to the United Kingdom and its colonies and dependencies have been given tariff preferences. In 1947, the Territory obtained 32.0 per cent of its imports from the United Kingdom, 22.3 per cent from the United States of America, 11.8 per cent from India and 11 per cent from Kenya and Uganda, while 43.1 per cent of its exports found their way to the United Kingdom, 19.4 per cent to Kenya and Uganda, 7.2 per cent to India and 6.2 per cent to South Africa.

The Territory's exports are mainly primary products, which are at present in universal short supply. Since the outbreak of the war, certain major products of the Territory have been sold under contract to the Ministry of Supply and the Ministry of Food in the United Kingdom at guaranteed prices which have been, in some cases, below the ruling world prices. There is at present a general shortage of consumer goods in the Territory and the price of those available have been high.

10. Public finance

No reliable estimates of national income are available. The total revenue of the Territory on Territorial Account is estimated at £5,190,120. The largest contributions are made by customs and excise, native house and poll taxes, and the income tax. All taxes are payable in money except that provision is made for native house and poll tax liability to be discharged by labour, either in whole or in part. During 1947, 2,734 persons discharged their tax obligations in this manner. The revenue from income tax is derived almost wholly from non-indigenous persons. In all tribal areas, except Moshi district, a proportion of the native house and poll tax collected, varying from 25 to 40 per cent, is paid to the Native Administration.

The total expenditure on Territorial Account for 1947 is estimated at £5,232,620, while expenditure on Development Plan Account would amount to £752,120. Of this more than half would be spent on communications.

The total public debt of the Territory amounted to £7,566,146 in 1946. Against this liability, the Territory has reserves of the value of £5,072,043.

Taking the Territory as a whole it may be said that the general economic problem is not unlike that to be found in any country where there is danger of inflation.

11. Development plan

The total cost of the Ten Year Plan is estimated at £19,186,000 of which £6,775,000 will be obtained from the Colonial Development and Welfare allocation. Approximately £11,500,000 will be spent on capital items.

In the plan emphasis is laid on the development of communications. Among the agricultural schemes which have been started, the more important are the Sukumaland and Mbulu development schemes, of which the former is estimated to cost £500,000. Both schemes aim at organizing a redistribution of population and of stock with a view to reduce pressure on land in overcrowded areas. Several schemes are in progress in connexion with the improvement of cultivation of specific crops, such as rice, copra, oranges, coffee, tobacco, and cotton. Provision is being made to increase the number of agricultural instructors from the present ratio of one per fifteen thousand cultivators to one per thousand families. An Indian agricultural school was built in 1947 to provide facilities for Indian youths in the Territory of Kenya. In the 1948 budget a sum of £50,000 has been set apart for the establishment of a local development loan fund which will provide financial assistance to indigenous cultivators, Native Authorities, and the African co-operative societies. It was decided to set up a soil conservation service at an estimated cost of £200,000. In 1947, a grant of £140,000 was made for five and a half years in the first instance by the colonial development and welfare vote for the preservation and development of forest resources of the Territory. The Government carried out a survey of the Lake Rukwa fishing industry and an investigation of coal resources in Ufipa. A sum of £47,000 (approximately) was spent on water development works during 1947 and 130,000,000 gallons of water impounded for distribution.

Outside the Ten Year Development Plan is the East African Groundnut Scheme which will grow groundnuts on an area of over three million acres in Tanganyika, Northern Rhodesia and Kenya. Eighty per cent of the total area would be in Tanganyika. The capital cost of the scheme which is estimated at about £24,000,000 will be met by the United Kingdom Government. Cultivation under the scheme would take place in units of 30,000 acres and would be highly mechanized. The scheme is estimated to employ permanently 24,000 workers in Tanganyika and it will necessitate the provision of a new railway, deep water berths, bulk storage, and port installations. It is planned that the undertaking shall in due course be taken over by the three Governments concerned and in the final stages shall pass to the ownership and control of the people themselves, on a co-operative or other basis as may then seem best suited to ensure the continuance of the benefits of large-scale production by mechanized and scientific methods. By the end of 1947 some 7,000 acres had been planted.

The general shortage of supplies has retarded the progress of development plans, both Government and private.

D. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Human rights

There is no restriction on the expression of public opinion by any section of the population of the Territory. Subject only to the provisions of the law governing sedition and libel, no control is exercised over the subject matter published in newspapers. The registration of newspapers is required by the Newspaper Ordinance and any person wishing to publish a newspaper may, if so required by the Governor in Council, be called upon to execute a bond up to a maximum of three thousand shillings. The Government publishes two newspapers in Swahili for the inhabitants of the Territory.

The inhabitants of the Territory enjoy freedom of thought and conscience and free exercise of religious worship and instruction. Besides the Trusteeship Council, petitions may be made to the Governor, the Secretary of State and His Majesty the King.

No person can be arrested without warrant except for offences specified under the Criminal Procedure Code. In all other cases an arrest can only be made under the authority of a magistrate's warrant. Any person detained in custody may apply to the High Court for a writ of habeas corpus.

No restrictions are imposed on movements of population within and outside the Territory except in connexion with health measures.

2. Social conditions

The native authorities system recognizes in some measure the existing distinction between the ruling clans and the general body of the tribesmen in the Territory. The powers of Native Authorities are, however, controlled and privileges such as the extortion of tribute and free personal service have been abolished.

3. Slavery

Slavery practices do not now exist in the Territory. Orders under the Native Authority Ordinance forbid the purchase of female children with a view to the use of their offspring as slaves. These practices are, however, getting rarer. Pledging of children is also forbidden.

4. Status of women

The laws of the Territory recognize no discrimination against women. Although occasional cases come to light, child marriage is not a practice in the Territory. The payment of "bride price" remains a universal custom. Polygamy continues to be a common practice but is now largely restricted by economic conditions. The dissolution of marriage is common and is not difficult to obtain.

Since there is no electoral system in the Territory, the question of suffrage for women has not yet arisen.

The only legal bars to the employment of women are those imposed by various international labour conventions which have been applied to the Territory. The opportunities to enter and train for government service available to women, are, however, at present, limited to nursing and teaching services.

5. Population pressure

The population of this Territory increased by approximately 600,000 between 1931 and 1946. Pressure of numbers on the land exists in several parts of the Territory. In the Kilimanjaro and Meru mountains in the Northern Province, the pressure is due primarily to excessive alienation of lands to non-indigenous persons by the previous administration. In other areas it is due to such causes as increase of human population and stock; unsatisfactory methods of agriculture and animal husbandry; lack of water supplies and restriction of habitable areas due to the presence of the tsetse fly.

6. Immigration

Under the provisions of the Immigration (Control) Ordinance which was passed in December 1947, persons other than prohibited immigrants are entitled to enter the Territory to engage in any business, trade, or profession provided they have prescribed resources and qualifications and it can be shown that their proposed activities will not be to the prejudice of the inhabitants. The ordinance is not applicable to indigenous Africans.

During 1947 a large number of Europeans entered the Territory in connexion with the post-war rebuilding of administration, trade and commerce and the East African Groundnut Scheme.

7. Social welfare agencies

Twenty welfare clubs have been opened in the Territory under the aegis of the Government Social Welfare Organization. A total grant of £ 50,000 was made for the welfare clubs from the Colonial Development and Welfare Fund while a sum of £6,320 was set aside from territorial revenues to finance the organization.

8. Social security

Apart from the provisions made by Government and by private employers for superannuation and other benefits for their employees, and the Government's widows and orphans pensions—a statutory contributory scheme for Europeans—there are no services provided and contemplated with respect to widow's pensions, old age pensions, maternity benefits, health benefits, unemployment benefits, relief or other forms of protection.

9. Housing

In the urban areas generally there is a shortage of housing affecting all sections of the population, the position being most acute in the larger coastal regions.

Several town planning schemes were in progress in 1947.

10. Labour

(a) GENERAL.—Some 327,000 persons have been in paid manual employment in the Territory in recent years; these are divided approximately as follows:

Agriculture	178,500
Mining	17,000
Timber and Forest Produce	9,000
Industrial Establishments	6,000
Domestic Employment	25,000
Public Services	60,000
Other Employment	31,500

The supply of labour in the Territory generally is now insufficient to meet the demand. A certain amount of apprenticeship training is undertaken by Government departments in the Territory, e.g., the railways. The Labour Department is encouraging private employers to initiate training schemes. It has been decided to establish a labour utilization commission whose function would be to secure a rational utilization and distribution of the Territory's labour resources.

Excessive movement of labour out of rural areas tends to hamper the cultivation of food crops and weaken marital ties. An attempt is made to meet this problem in the case of contract labour by limiting the period of their contract to two years.

It is estimated that some 2,000 persons leave the Territory each year in search of employment in Northern and Southern Rhodesia and in the Union of South Africa and another 2,250 for work in Kenya. These outward movements are in some measure counter-balanced by inward flows of workers from Northern Rhodesia, Portuguese East Africa and other places. By arrangement with the Belgian authorities the Tanganyika Sisal Growers' Association Labour Bureau recruited 500 workers from Ruanda-Urundi. Once such labourers reach Tanganyika, the provision of Tanganyika laws apply fully to them.

(b) RECRUITMENT.—In 1947, 22,348 male workers were recruited by private organizations in the Territory under the Recruitment of Indigenous Workers Convention 1936. In the case of such labourers, their costs of transportation from their homes to their places of employment are paid by recruiters.

For the year ended 30 September 1947, approximately 8,000 persons were compulsorily recruited for work within the Convention's definition of forced labour.

(c) LABOUR DEPARTMENT.—A Labour Department with a Labour Commissioner as its chief has been established to deal with issues connected with labour. The Department also carries out the registration of the adult and other male population in employment.

A Labour Board, consisting of public officers, employers of labour and such other persons as may be appointed by the Governor was set up in 1940 to advise the Government on matters connected with the employment of indigenous labour.

(d) TRADE UNIONS, LABOUR DISPUTES, ETC.—Little development has taken place in the formation of trade unions in the Territory, and no industry has yet established the machinery for collective bargaining. There is only one significant trade union, the organization of dock labourers.

In 1947 there was a serious trade dispute in Dar-es-Salaam which was followed by other minor strikes and disturbances in certain towns and along the central Railway line. The Trade Disputes Ordinance provides for the setting up of tribunals to settle trade disputes.

(e) CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT.—The full application of the principle of non-discrimination in employment and in wage and salary payments as between races presents particular difficulties in a territory with conditions such as those which at present exist in Tanganyika. Not only do the different races maintain very different standards of living, but there are at present marked differences in the general standards of education, qualifications and experience. The only solution appears to lie in the gradual process of education and training to produce an equality of worth as between the different races. In the meanwhile it must remain the aim of policy, by gradually narrowing the difference in wage rates, to raise the standard of living of the lower paid workers. There is no discrimination on grounds of nationality, religion or tribal association.

The average monthly rates of wages of unskilled workers in different occupations in 1947 varied from 8 to 30 shillings, for semi-skilled from 15 to 60 or 80 shillings, and for skilled workers from 21 to 150 shillings. The hours of work varied from 20 to 40 in agriculture and from 44 to 48 in most other occupations. The rate of 8 shillings per month is operative in rural areas. Wages have increased in Dar-es-Salaam between 1939 and 1947. Cost of living allowance is paid to government and other employees.

The Minimum Wages Ordinance authorizes the fixing of minimum wages after due inquiry by Wage Boards on which employees are represented.

No cost of living indices have been prepared. The index of retail prices of consumers' goods used by Africans in Dar-es-Salaam rose from 100 in August 1939 to 187 in 1947.

Indebtedness is prevalent among the lower paid salaried and wage earners in urban areas. Among the poorer sections of the indigenous inhabitants the continued rise in the cost of imported goods, especially piece goods, has been a source of considerable embarrassment. At the end of 1947 there were 70 co-operative societies of which 61 were African in membership. Most of the African societies are concerned with marketing.

11. Labour conventions and legislation

Various ordinances, rules, regulations and notices have been issued to implement various conventions and recommendations of the International Labour Organisation in the Territory. The Application of the Penal Sanctions (Indigenous Workers) Convention 1929 is, however, subject to two reservations. The use of abusive and insulting language to an employer by a servant and the unlawful departure by a servant from his employer's service with intent not to return thereto are both penal offences. The Territorial Labour Board is considering how far the Administration can go in the direction of abolishing penal sanctions.

There are as yet no ordinances governing hours of work, rest periods, etc., in the Territory. In spite of an ordinance dealing with the employment of women, young persons and children in the Territory, a certain amount of child labour is used, specially in light work in rural areas.

12. Medical services

(a) THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.—In 1947 the Medical Department consisted of 18 specialists, 64 medical officers including six African assistant medical officers, four dental surgeons, 66 assistant and sub-assistant surgeons, 61 nursing staff and 32 health inspectorate, besides six persons in the pharmaceutical section.

(b) HOSPITALS, DISPENSARIES.—The Territory had 142 hospitals, 665 dispensaries, seven maternity and child welfare clinics, one mobile health unit, 12 sleeping sickness dispensaries and 27 leper settlements. Vaccination against smallpox is offered at all medical centres. There is an up-to-date mental hospital at Dodoma.

(c) PATIENTS.—8,558 in-patients and 682,486 out-patients availed themselves of the facilities offered by the Government hospitals during 1947 while clinics and dispensaries treated 1,860 in-patients and 3,474,239 out-patients. According to the latest figures available, the leper settlements treated 3,817 inmates and 4,030 outpatients.

There were in the Territory in December 1947, 786 registered and licensed medical personnel of whom 242 were medical practitioners.

13. Prisons and crimes

During 1947, 866 persons were charged and 682 convicted by the High Court of the Territory while 21,279 persons were charged before Subordinate Courts and 17,040 convicted by them. Of these 434 were awarded corporal punishment and corporal punishment with fine or imprisonment or both. Corporal punishment may by law be applied to any inhabitant but it is normally confined to Africans. There were 12,185 persons, of whom 11,355 were Africans, committed for penal imprisonment. Prison labour is used largely by Government departments but it is not hired out to private employers.

14. Juvenile delinquency

In addition to prisons, the Territory possesses at Tabora one correctional institution, an approved school for juveniles, managed by the Commissioner of Prisons, and providing full-time schooling and technical training.

There are at present no specially constituted courts for juveniles, but under the Children and Young Persons Ordinance special provisions are made regarding the procedure to be adopted by subordinate courts when hearing charges against juveniles.

E. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Policy and administration

The education policy of the Territory is aimed at training indigenous persons in order to enable them gradually to take over to the maximum extent possible the functions of non-indigenous inhabitants in the general economy of the Territory and to take greater responsibility in the local government and general administration of the Territory.

The establishment of and operation of schools for indigenous inhabitants is governed by the African Education Ordinance which provides for compulsory registration of schools and teachers. The same ordinance also provides for grants for private schools for Africans, the grants being calculated at percentages (50 per cent or 85 per cent according to the grading of the school) of the salaries of certified and licensed African teachers employed.

Government inspectors supervise the work of both Government and private institutions, in collaboration with the religious mission.

2. Government expenditure on education

The budget for 1947 provided a total sum of £487,060 or 9.2 per cent of total estimated territorial expenditure to be spent on education, the sum allotted to African schools being £382,209. The Government made a grant of £134,000 to voluntary agencies running schools in the Territory, while £353,060 was provided for Government and Native Authority schools.

The schools in the Territory have been affected by a temporary shortage of equipment.

The salaries of African teachers vary from 30 to 40 shillings per month for unlicensed teachers to 122 to 200 shillings per month for Makerere trained teachers.

3. Number of schools

There were 1,366 schools in the Territory in 1947. Of these, 1,279 were for Africans, including 1,212 primary schools, 11 secondary schools and 56 other institutions. 897 primary schools and seven secondary schools for Africans were run by Christian missions, while the Government of the Territory managed 48 primary schools and three secondary schools. The Native Authorities had under them 219 primary schools.

At present no facilities for higher education exist in the Territory. Indigenous students who qualify for admission to Makerere College in Uganda were eligible for Government bursaries covering the full cost of their term at the College. Eight students have been sent to the United Kingdom for social welfare and vocational training.

4. School children

The exact number of children of school age in the Territory is not available. In 1947, 130,645 pupils of whom 119,262 were African pupils were in attendance at schools. The number of African pupils in secondary schools was 2,031 as compared with 115,025 in primary schools. The number of girls in primary African schools was 7,846 as compared with 87,179 boys; the discrepancy is attributed to the social attitude toward education of girls.

5. Curriculum

All African pupils are required to learn Swahili in the first year of their primary course. The teaching of English begins in the fifth year of the primary course for pupils going on to secondary school. Health education is included in the curricula of all schools.

Information regarding the trusteeship system and the status of the inhabitants of Trust Territories is given orally but has not yet been incorporated in school textbooks.

6. Adult and mass education

Up to the present the Government's main effort in adult education in its widest sense has been concentrated on the establishment of the social welfare centres in urban and rural areas. The co-operation of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization is anticipated in connexion with the long-term educational and social welfare activities of the Groundnut Scheme.

A total sum of £115,000, of which £99,000 was contributed by the colonial development and welfare vote, has been provided for the establishment of an East African literature bureau and publishing fund which will concentrate in the first instance on the publication of works in Swahili and Luganda.

7. Libraries

A public library is in process of formation at the King George V Memorial Museum in Dar-es-Salaam but otherwise no public libraries, in the generally accepted sense, exist in Tanganyika.

At the various social welfare centres which have been established, a free circulating library service is provided in connexion with the Central Welfare Library in Dar-es-Salaam and books and illustrated periodicals are distributed regularly to all the centres. In one or two cases district libraries and book clubs have been started.

Among the non-indigenous population various communities maintain their own libraries and reading rooms.

F. GENERAL

1. Equality of treatment under law

Equal treatment for the nationals of all Members of the United Nations in the administration of justice is ensured by the principle of complete non-discrimination on grounds of nationality.

2. Economic equality

Apart from such restrictions as are still placed upon the movements and activities of the nationals of enemy States there is no discrimination in treatment in economic matters on grounds of race or nationality and all Members of the United Nations and their nationals enjoy equal treatment.

3. Suggestions and recommendations

The only specific suggestion or recommendation made by the United Nations Organization during the year was that of the Trusteeship Council with respect to the repatriation of German nationals. The recommendation of the Trusteeship Council that policy in this connexion should be carefully and humanely administered in the spirit of Article 76 c of the Charter has been fully observed by the selective nature of the policy of the Government. No person has been repatriated solely on account of his nationality; no person has been compulsorily repatriated to Germany if he could find some other country willing to accept him, provided there was no objection on grounds of security; steps have been taken to keep family units together as far as possible and to ensure proper reception in Germany of the persons repatriated thereto; and finally numerous exceptions have been made in the case of those shown to be genuine political or religious refugees from nazi domination or on compassionate grounds.

PART II. Observations

A. INTER-TERRITORIAL ORGANIZATION

1. Prior consultation

(a) With regard to the Inter-Territorial Organization affecting the Trust Territory of Tanganyika and the adjoining British territories of Kenya and Uganda, which had been established at the end of 1947, the Trusteeship Council discussed the question of whether or not the Council should have been consulted before such measures were put into effect.

(b) Some representatives (Belgium, France, the United Kingdom) expressed the opinion that by prior consultation with the Trusteeship Council, the Administering Authority concerned would divest itself of its administrative responsibility, and that in their opinion the role of the Trusteeship Council was purely supervisory and that the Council should not seek to acquire administrative functions.

(c) The representative of Australia considered that the proper role of the Trusteeship Council was that of review and criticism of measures taken by the Administering Authority and not that of sharing in the administration of Trust Territories, and that the Council did not have the right to consider in advance or give directions in regard to measures contemplated. Co-operation between the Administering Authority and the Trusteeship Council was desirable, but should not be carried to the point of confusing the respective responsibilities. The responsibility for framing and executing measures should lie wholly with the Administering Authorities which were "trustees" on behalf of the people of the Trust Territories and not "agents" of the Trusteeship Council.

(d) Some other representatives (New Zealand, United States of America), while recognizing that prior consultation was not enjoined either by the Charter or by the Trusteeship Agreement for Tanganyika, felt that the friendly relationship and the need for constant co-operation between the Council and the Administering Authority would make prior consultation desirable.

(e) Some other representatives (China, Mexico, the Philippines, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) maintained that the Trusteeship Council should take up the position that any measures touching or likely to touch or change the status of a Trust Territory should be submitted by the Administering Authority to the Council before being put into effect.

2. Compatibility with the provisions of the Trusteeship Agreement and the Charter

(a) The representative of the United Kingdom expressed the opinion that the scheme of Inter-Territorial Organization was within the powers of the Administering Authority conferred by article 5 (b) of the Trusteeship Agreement for Tanganyika. He reaffirmed the statement of his Government in the Fourth Committee of the General Assembly in December 1946, to the effect that it did not interpret this article as giving it power to establish any form of political association between Trust Territories and adjacent territories under its control which would involve the annexation of Trust Territories or which would have the effect of extinguishing their status as Trust Territories. He further stated that the Inter-Territorial Organization might be held to provide for a measure of political association, but it stopped short of union.

(b) Some representatives of the Council (New Zealand, the Philippines, United States of America) expressed satisfaction at the assurance given by the Administering Authority that it was the firm intention of the Administering Authority to maintain the present status and identity of Tanganyika, and that no plan leading to political union was envisaged and that no extension or modification of the authority of the Central Assembly or of the High Commission would be possible without the express approval of the Tanganyika Legislative Council. They expressed confidence that the Administering Authority would take every occasion to evaluate the effects of the scheme upon the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the indigenous inhabitants, and that this consideration, and not administrative convenience, would be the determining factor in deciding the value of the Inter-Territorial Organization. They also welcomed the statement of the Administering Authority that it will be able to maintain separate statistics on all matters which concern the Trust Territory.

(c) The representative of China was of the opinion that the Council should postpone final judgment on the Inter-Territorial Organization until the Council had thoroughly examined the question in the light of the report of the Visiting Mission.

(d) The representative of Mexico expressed concern that the scheme might be the beginning of a chain of events leading ultimately to full political union with the neighbouring territories. He believed that the scheme might well become an obstacle to the promotion of self-government in Tanganyika.

(e) The representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics stated that the Inter-Territorial Organization of East Africa represents, according to the ordinance in "Colonial Paper No. 210" which defines the status of this organization, a broad political, administrative and eco-conomic union of the three territories of East Africa, Tanganyika, Kenya, and Uganda. These three territories of diverse political status—two of them, Kenya and Uganda, with the status of colonies—Tanganyika with the status of a Trust Territory—are bound together into a common organism, with a common supreme executive power in the form of the "East African High Commission", with a common legislative authority in the form of the "East African Central Assembly", and with common specialized bodies which control and regulate the most important aspects of the economy of all three territories together.

He held that as a result of this unification, the fate of the Trust Territory of Tanganyika becomes one with that of the colonies of Kenya and Uganda. The process of developing Tanganyika within the system of the Inter-Territorial Organization of East Africa will, without fail, lead to the complete absorption of Tanganyika, and to its complete fusion with the adjacent colonies.

Regardless of assurances of the Administering Authority to the effect that this unification will not lead to the annexation of Tanganyika, nor to the loss of its status as a Trust Territory, they remain as empty assurances, groundless declarations. In practice, the development of the Inter-Territorial Organization of East Africa leads to the absorption of Tanganyika, to its annexation and to the loss of its status as a "Trust Territory" instead of its self-government and independence. It is known that the indigenous population is opposed to this unification. It does not want this unification, yet it was not consulted by the Administering Authority as to its approval, as is stipulated in Article 76 b of the Charter.

The representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics further held that it was beyond the competence of the Administering Authority to unify the Trust Territory of Tanganyika with Kenya and Uganda. He held that under the Inter-Territorial Organization it would be inevitable for Tanganyika to become administratively and economically closely interwoven with the adjoining territories. He considered that the arrangement would organically link Tanganyika to the other territories and would unavoidably make the achievement of the independence of Tanganyika practically impossible. The representative of the Soviet Union asked that the Council should reject the plan of Inter-Territorial Organization on the ground that it hindered the achievement, the aims and objectives of the trusteeship system of the United Nations in Tanganyika, that it hindered the advancement of the indigenous population of Tanganyika towards self-government and independence and that it was conducive to eventual loss by Tanganyika of its status as a Trust Territory and to its annexation. He proposed that appropriate legislation for the separate administration of Tanganyika should be put through.

(f) In addition, some members of the Council (China, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) noted with concern that the indigenous population had not been consulted with regard to the Inter-Territorial Organization. The representative of the Soviet Union stated that the consent of the indigenous population in such cases is required by Article 76 b of the Charter.

B. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Electoral system

(a) The Council was informed by the Administering Authority that it had not yet been possible to introduce an electoral system for any of the three main sections of the population and that no legislation on this subject was at present contemplated. It was given the assurance that the ultimate objective was the election of members to the Legislative Council.

(b) Some representatives (Australia, United States of America) took note of this assurance and expressed their interest in the steps to be taken in order to achieve this goal, and their hope that the Council would be kept duly informed by the Administering Authority of such steps.

(c) Some other representatives (Mexico, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) noted the fact that an electoral system had not been established and that therefore there were no electoral laws or regulations affecting any of the three racial groups inhabiting the Territory. They felt it appropriate that the Administering Authority should introduce electoral legislation and stimulate political education among the indigenous inhabitants so as to attain the objective of Article 76 b of the Charter and article 6 of the Trusteeship Agreement on this particular point, in order that institutions of local government should be established and the participation of the indigenous inhabitants in the legislative and executive bodies of the Territory be assured on the basis of a democratic electoral system.

The representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics noted that the policy of the Administering Authority in accordance with which it treated the education of the indigenous population as a prior objective and put off indefinitely the objectives of developing indigenous organs of self-government and of granting to the indigenous inhabitants an increasingly responsible role in the economic life of Tanganyika was inconsistent with Article 76 b of the Charter. The representative of the Soviet Union stated that the Charter gives no grounds for setting up a priority or preference for any single particular field of development. The Charter requires that measures be taken toward the promotion of the development of the indigenous population simultaneously in the political, economic and social fields and in the sphere of education. The political, economic, and social progress of the indigenous population and their progress in the sphere of education are all parts of a single common process of development of the indigenous population; not a single one of these parts can be separated from the other. They are all inter-related and inter-dependent. Therefore, no priority can be set up, by declaring that development of the indigenous population in the sphere of education comes first, putting off indefinitely the development of the indigenous population in the political field and in the field of self-government. This policy is inconsistent with the provisions set forth in Article 76 b of the Charter. He also stressed that to follow such a policy leads to a justification for the exclusion of the indigenous inhabitants from responsible participation in the political and economic life of their country.

2. Native Administration

(a) With regard to the political advancement of the indigenous inhabitants, some members of the Council (Australia, United States of America) noted with satisfaction the programme initiated by the Administering Authority to encourage the indigenous inhabitants to participate in their tribal councils and in the local administration. In this connexion they expressed interest in the patterns of self-government established by the Chagga and by the Sukumaland Federation and hoped that the Administering Authority would take steps to stimulate further participation in self-government by these and other peoples.

(b) Some members of the Council (Mexico, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) were of the opinion that the now existing tribal structure was an obstacle to the political and social advancement of the indigenous inhabitants. They considered it appropriate that the Administering Authority should plan and undertake to put into effect the necessary changes in the present structure in such a way as to give to the indigenous inhabitants the necessary means to develop self-government institutions and to ensure their participation in the legislative and executive organs of the Territory on the basis of popular representation through democratic methods (electoral system).

C. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. Development schemes

(a) Some representatives (Australia, United States of America) considered the East African Groundnut Scheme to be the most significant development in the economic field in Tanganyika. They expressed satisfaction at the statements made by the Administering Authority that the ownership and control of the project would be finally transferred to Africans and that every opportunity would be seized in its working to use it for the economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants. They also expressed the desire that the Council be regularly kept informed regarding the progress of the scheme and its effect upon the people of the Territory.

(b) The representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics observed that the realization of the Groundnut and the Sukumaland Schemes would not benefit the indigenous population. It would vitally affect the social and economic life of the indigenous inhabitants leading to the disruption and instability of the indigenous economy and of the welfare of the indigenous population, and would cause considerable displacement of the population. He stated that the Groundnut Scheme would lead to the concentration of millions of acres of the arable land in the hands of non-indigenous population, organizations and corporations, while there was need for such land by the indigenous population because of the fact that a considerable number of the indigenous inhabitants were landless and the indigenous population was growing rapidly. He stated that the plans of the Administering Authority were not based on the freely expressed will of the indigenous population as required by Article 76 b of the Charter and that the objectives of the plans were an intensified exploitation of the manpower and natural resources of Tanganyika in the interest of the British Empire and Western Europe, rather than the economic advancement and emancipation of the indigenous population. He remarked that the economic policy of the Administering Authority violated both Article 76 b of the Charter and article 8 of the Trusteeship Agreement.

2. Land policy

(a) The special representative of the Administering Authority explained that in the case of large areas which were sparsely inhabited because of the shortage of water or presence of the tsetse fly, an application for a lease by a person or company prepared to undertake development on a large scale might be considered. He pointed out that the area allocated for the Groundnut Scheme was sparsely populated and heavily bushed.

(b) The representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics observed that in view of the present and future need for land on the part of the indigenous inhabitants of the Territory, the Administering Authority should conserve the land resources and not part with large tracts in favour of large corporations and development schemes.

3. Secondary industries

The representative of the Soviet Union expressed the opinion that special attention should be paid to the development of local industries based on local resources and to the creation of an independent and natural basis for the purpose of producing consumer goods for the indigenous population. Such plans should be submitted to the Trusteeship Council.

4. Taxation

The representative of the Soviet Union expressed the Council should include in its report a recommendation that the present system of taxation should be reconsidered and replaced by a system of progressive taxation founded on ability to pay. Moreover, local and central tribunals including representatives of the indigenous taxpayers should be established for appeals by the indigenous inhabitants against tax assessment.

D. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. The representative of the United States of America proposed that the Council endorse the non-discriminatory racial policy of the administration and urge that special efforts be made to ensure that there be no discrimination against the indigenous inhabitants of Tanganyika, particularly in such matters as the enactment and enforcement of labour legislation and the provision of hospital and other medical facilities.

2. The representative of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics observed that the system of indirect rule impeded social and economic progress and urged that steps be taken to abolish discrimination in the determination of wage rates of workers and salaries of indigenous and European medical and teaching personnel; that trade unions and worker groups be represented in the labour boards by elected representatives; and that legislative measures be taken to prohibit child labour and to regulate the conditions of the labour of juveniles. He noted the low level of employment among indigenous inhabitants and both he and the representative of Mexico commented on the low wages and suggested that the Administering Authority be asked to take action to raise them.

3. The representative of the Soviet Union commented on the unsatisfactory conditions of health and medical services in the Territory and the discrepancy between the facilities available for indigenous and European inhabitants, and suggested that the funds allotted on these services for the indigenous population should be increased substantially and that proper attention should be paid to the development and construction of medical centres, the building of hospitals and the medical training of indigenous inhabitants. Plans for these purposes should be submitted by the Administering Authority to the Trusteeship Council.

E. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Some representatives (Mexico, the Philippines, United States of America, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) commented on the small proportion of children of school age attending school in the Territory, the small number of teachers and the extremely low proportion of the total budget spent on education of indigenous inhabitants.

2. Some representatives (Mexico, the Philippines, United States of America) noted the statement of the Administering Authority that the political advancement of the Territory was mainly a question of education of the indigenous people. They also noted the small increase of the number of teachers envisaged under the Ten-Year Development Plan; they stressed the need for more indigenous teachers and for more funds to finance educational advancement. They expressed the hope that the Administering Authority would make special efforts to obtain precise statistics regarding the extent of illiteracy and the number of children of school age, to build libraries and to take other measures for adult education. They considered that the education programme deserved serious thought and vigorous action.

3. The representative of the Soviet Union stressed the disparity in expenditure and educational facilities for European, Asian and African children respectively. He proposed that the Council should urge the Administering Authority to increase expenditure on and expand facilities for primary, secondary and higher education including teacher training, to provide for the development of indigenous languages and culture and to take over from the missions the main responsibility for education and the primary and secondary schools in the Territory.

4. The representative of the Philippines stressed the desirability of giving more attention to the training of natives in higher education in order to have at least a small intellectual elite among the indigenous inhabitants who could then help lead in accelerating the political, economic, social and educational progress of the Territory.

PART III. Conclusions and recommendations

The Council, having examined the annual report on the administration of the Trust Territory of Tanganyika for the year 1947 and considered the statements made before the Council by the special representative of the Administering Authority, makes the following conclusions and recommendations designed to promote the interests of the inhabitants and their progressive development towards the ultimate objective of self-government or independence, in accordance with Chapter XII and XIII of the Charter and the relevant Trusteeship Agreement.

A. INTER-TERRITORIAL ORGANIZATION

The Council:

Desires to be kept informed regarding the effect of the Inter-Territorial Organization upon the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the indigenous population.

Notes that the Inter-Territorial Organization was put into effect without prior consultation with the Trusteeship Council.

Notes the assurance by the Administering Authority that no extension of the authority of the East African Central Assembly or of the East African High Commission as regards Tanganyika is possible without the express approval of the Tanganyika Legislative Council.

Welcomes the assurance given by the Administering Authority that it is the firm intention of the Administering Authority to maintain the present status and identity of Tanganyika and that no plan is envisaged which would involve annexation or the loss by Tanganyika of its status as a Trust Territory.

Considers it premature to form a definite opinion regarding the Inter-Territorial Organization and decides to postpone further consideration of the plan until further information has become available.

Notes that the Inter-Territorial Organization was put into effect without full prior consultation of the indigenous inhabitants of Tanganyika.

Expresses hope that the Administering Authority would consult the Trusteeship Council before undertaking any extension or modification of the present arrangement which might affect the status of Tanganyika.

B. POLITICAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Electoral system

The Council:

Notes that no electoral system exists and that no legislation on this subject is at present contemplated.

Notes that it is an ultimate objective of the Administering Authority to provide for the election of members to the Legislative Council, and desires to be informed in the annual reports of the steps taken toward achievement of this goal;

Expresses the hope that the Administering Authority will take further steps as may be appropriate to foster the participation of the indigenous inhabitants in political development so as to attain the objectives of Article 76 b of the Charter and article 6 of the Trusteeship Agreement.

Recommends that the Administering Authority should introduce electoral legislation and stimulate political education among the indigenous inhabitants, so as to attain the objectives of Article 76 b of the Charter and article 6 of the Trusteeship Agreement on this particular point, in order that institutions of local self-government should be established and the participation of the indigenous inhabitants in the legislative and executive bodies of the Territory be assured on the basis of a democratic electoral system.

2. Native Administration

The Council:

Notes with satisfaction the programme initiated by the Administering Authority of encouraging the indigenous inhabitants to participate in local administration and desires to be informed of the progress of this programme.

Considers that the now existing tribal structure is an obstacle to the political and social advancement of the indigenous inhabitants.

C. ECONOMIC ADVANCEMENT

1. Development plans

The Council:

Desires in future reports to receive information regarding the progress of the Groundnut Scheme and regarding the effect which this scheme is having upon the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the whole Territory.

2. Land utilization

The Council:

Invites the Administering Authority to consider whether its policy of setting aside large tracts of land for development schemes will affect the preservation of adequate land resources for the needs of the indigenous inhabitants.

3. Secondary industries

The Council:

Suggests to the Administering Authority that, in developing its plans for the economic advancement of the Territory, special attention be paid to the establishment of secondary industries based on local resources for the purpose of producing consumer goods for the indigenous population.

4. Taxation

The Council:

Suggests that the Administering Authority consider whether the present system of taxation, as far as it concerns the indigenous population, is satisfactory and whether it is based on ability to pay.

Suggests that the Administering Authority consider the establishment of local and central tribunals for appeals by the indigenous inhabitants against tax assessments.

D. SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT

1. Discrimination

The Council:

Draws attention to the importance of ensuring that there be no discrimination against the indigenous inhabitants particularly in such matters as employment, wages and salary payments, the enactment and enforcement of labour legislation, and the provision of hospital facilities and medical services.

2. Child labour

The Council:

Considers that in the field of labour legislation a policy of prohibiting the use of child labour and of restricting the employment and of safeguarding the work of minors on plantations and in industrial undertakings should be followed.

3. Public health

The Council:

Suggests that the Administering Authority pay particular attention to the development and construction of medical centres, the building of hospitals and the training of medical personnel, including qualified physicians recruited from among the indigenous inhabitants; and suggests that increased appropriation for this purpose be made available and that information on these developments be included in the next annual report.

4. Wage rates

The Council:

Suggests that the Administering Authority consider measures to improve the standard of life by increasing substantially the wage level of the indigenous inhabitants particularly in large corporations, in industrial districts and in plantations.

E. EDUCATIONAL ADVANCEMENT

The Council:

Recognizes the inter-relationship between educational and political advancement.

Recognizes that the present educational facilities are inadequate.

Takes note of the Ten-Year Development Plan.

Expresses its concern and calls to the attention of the Administering Authority the disparity in expenditure and educational facilities for European, Asian and African children respectively.

Suggests that the Administering Authority in undertaking its forthcoming census in Tanganyika make a special effort to obtain precise statistics regarding the extent of literacy and the number of children of school age.

Suggests that ways and means be found to make increased appropriations for education, including the training of teachers.

Suggests that the Administering Authority pay particular attention to mass education for the eradication of illiteracy and to the education of adults to prepare them for assuming greater administrative and governmental responsibilities.

Suggests that the Administering Authority take steps to prevent a relapse into illiteracy on the part of the partially-educated indigenous inhabitants.

Suggests that in view of the illiteracy prevalent among the indigenous population the Administering Authority should take effective steps to expand primary and secondary education as well as institutions of higher learning.

Suggests that consideration be given by the Administering Authority to the development of indigenous languages and culture.

b. MINORITY VIEWS OF THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE U.S.S.R.

The Soviet representative:

1. Considers that the Inter-Territorial Organization of East Africa comprising Tanganyika and the adjacent colonial territories, Kenya and Uganda will lead to the loss by Tanganyika of its status as a Trust Territory and to its annexation and that the Inter-Territorial Organization is an obstacle to the attainment of self-government or independence by the people of Tanganyika.

2. Recommends that the Colonial Paper No. 210 should not be applied to the Trust Territory of Tanganyika since it is inconsistent with the basic objectives of the trusteeship system.

3. Recommends that appropriate legislative measures be taken by the Administering Authority to create a separate administration for Tanganyika.

4. Recommends to the Administering Authority that it should submit in advance for the consideration of the Trusteeship Council draft legislation in any way affecting the status of Tanganyika as a Trust Territory.

5. Recommends that the Administering Authority plan and put into effect the necessary changes in the present structure of native administration in such a way as to give the indigenous inhabitants an opportunity to establish and develop self-government institutions and to ensure their participation in the legislative and executive organs of the Territory on the basis of popular representation through democratic methods (electoral system).

6. Is of the opinion that the Groundnut and the Sukumaland Schemes would not benefit the indigenous people, but disrupt the indigenous economy and the life of the indigenous inhabitants, and cause considerable displacements of the population.

7. Is of the opinion that the Groundnut Scheme would lead to concentration of millions of acres of land in the hands of non-indigenous population in spite of the fact that a considerable number of the indigenous inhabitants are landless and the indigenous population is growing rapidly.

8. Is of the opinion that the plans are not based on the freely expressed will of the indigenous people of the Territory as required by Article 76 b of the Charter.

9. Recommends that the Administering Authority elaborate such plans of development of industry and agriculture in Tanganyika which would be based on the freely expressed will of the indigenous population of the Territory as is required by Article 76 b of the Charter.

10. Recommends that the Administering Authority should revise its policy of setting aside large tracts of land for development schemes with a view to the preservation of land resources for the needs of the indigenous inhabitants.

11. Recommends that the Administering Authority revise existing taxation of the indigenous inhabitants—poll and hut tax—which is imposed regardless of the property situation or ability to pay of the natives; and duced for the indigenous inhabitants and that local and central organs should be created for appeals against tax assessments and indigenous taxpayers should be represented on these organs of appeals.

12. Considers it essential that the Government Labour Board should include among its members trade union representatives or the representatives of workers in those branches of industry in which they are not organized in trade unions and that furthermore, these representatives should not be appointed by the Governor but should be freely elected by the trade unions or the workers employed in the industrial undertakings or on plantations.

13. Recommends that the Administering Authority and native organs of self-government take over the schools from the missions and the responsibility for education in the Territory.

H. PETITIONS

1. Petition from the Leaders and Representatives of Western Samoa

At its first session, the Council had approved a resolution authorizing the sending of a visiting mission to Western Samoa for the purpose of investigating a petition from leaders and representatives of Western Samoa, and reporting its findings back to the Council (resolution 4(I)).²⁰

A special visiting mission to Western Samoa was appointed comprising the following members:

Francis B. Sayre (United States), President of the Council;

Pierre Ryckmans, representative of Belgium on the Council;

Eduardo Cruz-Coke, of Chile.

Mr. Sayre was elected Chairman of the Mission. Peter Anker, Deputy-Director of the Division of Trusteeship, was appointed Secretary of the Mission, and Felix Keesing, Professor of Anthropology at Stanford University, California, accompanied the Mission in the capacity of expert consultant.

With the exception of Mr. Cruz-Coke, who arrived at Apia, Western Samoa, on July 9, 1947, the members of the Mission arrived at Wellington, New Zealand, on June 26 and made contact with members and officials of the New Zealand Government.

Prime Minister Peter Fraser of New Zealand received the Mission on June 28, 1947, and stated the view of his Government on the question of self-government for the Samoans. G. G. R. McKay, former Secretary of Native Affairs in Western Samoa; J. W. Davidson, lecturer on colonial affairs at Cambridge University, England; Ernest Beaglehole, Professor of Anthropology at Victoria College, Wellington; J. C. Beeby, Director of Education in New Zealand; and Mr. Parsonage, Officer in Charge of Education in the Department of Island Territories in New Zealand, stated their views on this matter before the Mission.

On July 3 the Mission, accompanied by G. R. Laking, personal representative of the Prime Minister, and R. T. G. Patrick, Secretary of the Department of Island Territories, left for Samoa. It arrived in Apia on July 4.

During the first two weeks after the arrival of the Mission, a series of meetings and interviews was held with officials of the New Zealand Administration, representative Samoan leaders, members of the European Citizens' Committee, spokesmen for the religious missions, and other representative groups and individuals. During this time the Mission also visited a number of institutions such as schools and hospitals.

In view of the reference in the petition to the British protectorate of Tonga, the Mission made a short visit, from July 20 to 22, to the capital of that Kingdom to study its system of government.

Following its return to Samoa, the Mission spent ten days visiting the outlying districts of the country. From July 24 to 29 a tour was made through the island of Upolu, and from July 31 to August 3 a tour was made through the island of Savai'i. During these journeys, meetings and interviews were held with the district leaders and the population of the main villages, and a number of private individuals were granted hearings by the Mission. Schools, hospitals and religious missions were also visited.

The last three weeks in Samoa were devoted to final investigations, additional meetings with New Zealand officials and with Samoan and European leaders and to the preparation of the report to the Council.

The Mission left Western Samoa on August 28 and returned to headquarters in New York, where work on the report was completed and the final draft unanimously approved on September 12, 1947.

In its report (T/46 and Add.1), the Mission, reviewing the political, social and economic development of the people of Western Samoa, noted that the actual political organization and social structure of the Territory was sufficiently advanced to serve as the basis for progressive self-government. Nevertheless, the Mission was of the opinion that the people of Western Samoa were not at the present time capable of assuming, without assistance from outside, full responsibility for the government of the Territory. The Samoan people themselves recognized to a considerable degree their own limitations and the necessity of receiving help. Such help, however, would not be welcomed by the Samoan people unless a government were established in which the people would have an important or even a dominant role in the making of decisions.

In the circumstances the Mission felt that fundamental reforms should be introduced in the administration of Western Samoa.

The Mission recommended that a Government of Western Samoa should be established. At the head of the Government of Western Samoa, there should be a representative of the New Zealand Government and a representative or representatives of the inhabitants of Western Samoa, sitting together as a Council of State or High Council.

The representative of the New Zealand Government should preside over the Council of State. To stress the difference from the old regime, he should have the title of High Commissioner.

The New Zealand Government, as the Administering Authority, should exercise powers commensurate with its responsibilities under the Charter and the United Nations Trusteeship Agreement. The New Zealand Government should reserve control over the adoption and amendment of the constitution, external relations, defence, loans, control of foreign exchange and audits of public accounts. The New Zealand Government should also retain the right to initiate and enact legislation through acts of the New Zealand Parliament and Orders-in-Council of the Governor-General.

The Government of New Zealand should appoint the High Commissioner and the Chief Judge of the High Court.

The High Commissioner should preside over the Government. He alone should have the power of legislative initiative in financial bills, and he should also have the right to initiate legislation on all other matters. He should have the right to disallow all measures passed by the legislature of Western Samoa. All instances in which this right was used should be mentioned in the annual report on the administration of the Territory.

The Samoan people should be represented in the Government of Western Samoa. The three Fautua (High Chiefs and Advisers), who were universally recognized as qualified to represent the Samoan people, should for the present act as the representatives of the local inhabitants in the Council of State, which would be the Supreme Body of the Government of Western Samoa. The High Commissioner and the Fautua would constitute the Council of State, which on all appropriate occasions would represent the Government of Western Samoa.

The Mission believed that legislative power should be placed in the hands of a local legislature, subject to the rights reserved to the Administering Authority. The legislature should consist of a single body. Samoan representation should have an absolute majority in the legislature.

The President of the legislature should be chosen from among its members. All members of the legislature should have the power to initiate legislation, with the exception of purely financial bills. The annual budget should be presented to the legislature by the High Commissioner, and the legislature should have power to discuss and make recommendations thereon.

The representatives of the Samoan people should have the power to initiate legislation on all matters except those reserved to the Administering Authority, and to advise the High Commissioner on all matters relating to the government and welfare of Western Samoa. This should include the right to be consulted on the choice of the heads of executive departments, and also on any emergency regulations proposed by the High Commissioner.

In its report, the Mission made certain other recommendations regarding changes in village and district government, the constitutional recognition of Samoan customs and traditions, the eventual abolition of legal distinctions between residents of "European" and "Samoan" status, the achievement of racial equality, the establishment of a Samoan public service in the field of public administration, improved services in the fields of education and health and the development of the economic resources of Western Samoa.

In conclusion, the report expressed great satisfaction that the plans for the new Government of Western Samoa which the New Zealand Government had outlined to the Mission were closely in line with the report's recommendations.

The New Zealand Government, as the Administering Authority concerned, submitted to the Council a communication (T/62) dated November 21, 1947, containing its observations on the Mission's report. In its communication the New Zealand Government expressed its intention of transferring progressively to the people of Western Samoa a greater measure of responsibility for the government of the Territory, and stated that any steps which might be taken immediately would be the first of a series leading ultimately to full self-government for the people of Western Samoa.

George Laking was designated as special representative of New Zealand for the examination of the report by the Trusteeship Council, with the special task of supplying any additional information which the Council might desire regarding the bill which had been introduced in the New Zealand Parliament to give effect to certain of the proposals embodied in the report of the Mission.

The Council examined the report of the Mission to Western Samoa at the eighth, ninth, tenth and eleventh meetings of its second session (T/P.V.35, 36, 37 and 38). In the course of the discussion which took place at the eighth meeting of the Council, the members expressed general satisfaction with the report of the Mission, which, it was generally considered, was objective and constructive in its approach. The representative of Iraq expressed dissatisfaction with the form of the report. He thought that a chapter should have been set aside for recommendations. The fact that in the report before the Council the recommendations were scattered throughout the text caused some difficulty, he stated, in distinguishing fact from opinion. In the opinion of the representative of China there were certain passages in the report which were irrelevant and sometimes contradictory or inconsistent. The representatives of China and Iraq also raised a number of questions concerning the substance of the report. These concerned mainly the status of the European residents of Samoa, who, according to the Mission's recommendations, were to receive representation in the local legislature out of proportion to their number and who were to receive special protection of their interests in certain other respects. Other questions raised concerned the structure of the Government of Western Samoa proposed by the Mission, the relation of that Government to the Administering Authority and the powers and functions of the High Commissioner.

At the ninth meeting the representative of China presented a draft resolution (T/P.V.36, pp. 22-25) which was discussed at length and was finally referred to a drafting committee composed of the representatives of China, Belgium, Iraq and Mexico. In redrafting the resolution the committee took into account changes in wording proposed by the representatives of Iraq, Belgium, New Zealand and France.

The drafting committee's text, with some further modifications, was unanimously adopted by the Council at the tenth meeting of the second session on December 5, 1947.

By the resolution (13(II)) thus adopted, the Council, noting with satisfaction the declared policy of the Administering Authority, as reaffirmed in the communication from the delegation of New Zealand of November 21, 1947, resolved that at the present time the people of Western Samoa should be accorded such measures of self-government as were indicated in the report made by the Council's Visiting Mission. It also resolved that the people should be encouraged and assisted to assume increasing responsibilities for self-government and ultimately be accorded full self-government as soon as they were capable of assuming the responsibilities involved.

After the adoption of the resolution a number of representatives expressed a desire to continue the discussion of the substance of the report. Other representatives were of the opinion that further discussion was superfluous in view of the Council's action. Any points to be raised, they considered, should have been discussed before the Council adopted its resolution. The discussion was nevertheless continued to the eleventh meeting of the Council's second session (T/P.V.38), the representatives of the United States, Mexico, Costa Rica and the Philippines addressing questions on points of detail to the special representative of the Administering Authority and offering comments on particular aspects of the Mission's report.

2. Other Petitions Considered during the Second Session

The Council had before it at its second session 43 petitions, all of which had been addressed to the Secretary-General directly and had been transmitted by him to the members of the Council.²¹

At the third meeting, the Trusteeship Council appointed, in accordance with rule 90 of its rules of procedure, an ad hoc committee on petitions composed of four members (Belgium, China, Iraq and the United Kingdom) to classify the petitions and make recommendations to the Council as to the admissibility of each one.

The Council accepted the recommendation of the ad hoc committee (T/57) that the petitions be classified, for purposes of examination, into the following seven groups:

- (a) Petitions from Togoland under British administration and Togoland under French administration;
- (b) Petitions from Tanganyika and Cameroons under British administration: questions relating to repatriation;
- (c) Other petitions concerning Tanganyika;
- (d) General petitions relating to the ILO Draft Convention concerning Social Policy in Non-Metropolitan Territories;
- (e) General petitions concerning special areas (polar and strategic) and strategic raw materials;
- (f) Petitions concerning former Italian colonies;
- (g) Other general petitions.

a. PETITIONS FROM TOGOLAND UNDER BRITISH ADMINISTRATION AND TOGOLAND UNDER FRENCH ADMINISTRATION

The Council had before it a number of petitions from representatives of the Ewe people in Togoland under British administration, in Togoland under French administration, in the Belgian Congo, and in the Gold Coast.²² All these petitions involved a request that Eweland, which the petitioners stated was at present partitioned between Togoland under British administration, Togoland under French administration and the Gold Coast Colony, should be unified under a single administration.

The Governments of France and the United Kingdom, which were the Administering Authorities concerned, had submitted to the Council a joint memorandum on the petitions (T/58) setting forth economic, fiscal and cultural measures proposed by them with a view to improving the conditions of the Ewe people. The proposed measures were as follows:

- (i) Instructions to local authorities to remove as far as possible obstacles which impede the movement of individuals and the transport of their personal property as well as commerce in local goods.

- (ii) Establishment of a conventional zone designed to remove all the disabilities resulting from the customs frontier, although the present system of exchange control would be retained.

- (iii) Measures to remove double taxation and to equalize the tax burden imposed upon the people of the respective territories;

- (iv) To the maximum extent which staff and equipment allow, the teaching of both English and French in the secondary schools of the respective territories, and the establishment of a university fund to permit exchange of especially qualified students;

- (v) Establishment by the French and British Governments of a Standing Consultative Commission for Togoland Affairs to follow up the implementation of the above measures.

An opportunity to make an oral presentation in support was requested in paragraph 19 of the petition from the All Ewe Conference, Accra, Gold Coast, dated August 9, 1947 (T/PET.6/5-T/PET.7/6). At the second meeting, on November 20, 1947 (see T/P.V.29), the Council discussed whether to grant the petitioners' request. The President stated that he interpreted rule 80 of the rules of procedure to mean that the Trusteeship Council could, as a matter of grace, and not of right, grant the hearing of oral petitions.

The representatives of France and Belgium suggested that the Council set a very short time limit for the appearance of the petitioners, as it should be understood that the Council was not at the disposal of any petitioner to present his case at any time. They also expressed the view that the only persons who could rightly be heard before the Trusteeship Council were those who had signed the petition. This would exclude lawyers and other persons not directly interested in the matter.

The representatives of New Zealand and Mexico urged that the Council make a liberal interpretation of rule 80 and stressed the importance of allowing the petitioners sufficient time to make the necessary arrangements to appear before the Council. The representatives of Iraq and China stated that the point raised as to whether the hearing ought to be a matter of grace or of right did not arise at all. As it was generally agreed that the petition from the All Ewe Conference was important, the Council should decide on the petitioners' request without raising points of principle not involved in the present instance.

The Council, on the proposal of the representative of Mexico, decided unanimously to grant an oral hearing to a representative of the Ewe petitioners, provided he could appear before the Council within two weeks from the date of the sending of the telegram informing him of the Council's decision. Thereupon, the All Ewe Conference designated as its representative Sylvanus E. Olympio, of Togoland under French administration.

In accordance with rule 92 of the rules of procedure, the Government of France designated Henri Laurentie and J. Maillet as special representatives for France, and the United Kingdom Government designated Thomas Mead as special representative of the United Kingdom, to be present during the examination of these petitions.

At the eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth meetings on December 8, 9 and 10, 1947 (see T/P.V.-38, 39 and 40), the Council considered the substance of the petitions from the Ewe people. At the eleventh meeting of the Council, Sylvanus E. Olympio presented to the Council an oral statement on behalf of the petitioners. The Ewe case, Mr. Olympio stated, was a simple one. It was the request of a tribe of over one million people to be allowed to live together under one roof and under one government, so that they could achieve peace and prosperity.

The Ewe country, with an area of about 10,000 square miles, had known effective European administration only since the last quarter of the nineteenth century. In 1884 the country was shared between Germany and Great Britain, the former occupying about three quarters of the area. The part then occupied by Great Britain today constituted the south-east corner of the Gold Coast Colony. As a result of the First World War, German Togoland was divided into Togoland under British Mandate and Togoland under French Mandate. Eweland thus was artificially separated into three parts.

Mr. Olympio then gave a brief survey of the history of the demand for the unification of Eweland from 1920 to the outbreak of the Second World War. During the Second World War, he stated, difficulties arose between the French and the British Governments, and, as a consequence, contact between the Ewe living in the British and French zones respectively became very difficult, and sometimes altogether impossible, during the years from 1940 to 1942. This state of affairs intensified the demand for unification and culminated in the creation of the All Ewe Conference, which, Mr. Olympio asserted, had the full backing and the authority of the Ewe people in all the territories. The aim of this organization, composed of traditional Chiefs, Elders and other leaders of the Ewe country, was to co-ordinate the demands of the Ewe people for unification under a single administration.

As regards the measures proposed in the joint memorandum, he stated that the Ewe people felt that the Administering Authorities were sincerely disposed to help them. He considered, however, that the measures proposed were hopelessly inadequate and did not solve the basic problem. In order to ensure the orderly and sure progress of the Ewe country, a common educational system, the same political organization throughout the land and economic unity were required. This, in the opinion of the petitioners, could be brought about only by the complete unification of the country under one administration.

At the twelfth meeting of the Council, on December 9, 1947, the special representative of France presented the views of the Administering Authorities. He stated that until the Second World War the partition of the Ewe between French and British Togoland had not created any difficulties, as there was a free exchange of people and goods across the border. The situation changed in 1940, when the Vichy Government closed the border of French Togoland. Although French Togoland rallied to the Committee of National Liberation in 1943, British Togoland was in a better condition throughout the war, having benefited from Allied assistance and supplies since 1940.

The French representative stated that it was the wartime difficulties of the Ewe people that had caused the idea of unification to thrive. This doctrine was not of popular origin, but had been propagated by the elite towards the end of hostilities and after the war.

He stated further that the only political organization that existed when Europeans began to colonize Africa was based on the tribe. It had been the aim of the Administering Authorities to broaden this too narrow framework within which the African population had been living. The idea of Ewe nationalism, he stated, was a renaissance of the African tribal spirit in a modernized form. It showed all those marks of being exclusive which had always characterized tribal spirit in Africa. If this tendency were followed, Africa would, in the opinion of the Administering Authorities, return to the state of fragmentation found by the European colonizers.

The representative of France stressed that Africa was in a state of transition and that it was too early to predict what form of political organization would ultimately prevail—tribal nationalism, some form of provincial autonomy or a more comprehensive organization based on a broad African national consciousness.

The purpose of the measures proposed by the Administering Authorities was to ameliorate the conditions justly complained of by the Ewe people without prejudging the political future of Africa, the representative of France stated. The proposed measures were transitional, but the Administering Authorities were convinced that they were practical and would to a large extent remove the barrier between British and French Togoland without removing the border. The program outlined in the joint memorandum could be implemented immediately to the advantage of the Ewe people without committing the future of Africa.

The special representative of the United Kingdom, in supplementing the remarks of the representative of France, referred to the fact that a number of tribes other than the Ewe were living in Togoland who might not all identify themselves with the Ewe cause. He also stressed that in his view a change of administration would involve considerable difficulty for the people of at least one of the territories, involving, for example, a change of official language.

After the members of the Council had addressed questions to the special representatives of the Administering Authorities and also to Mr. Olympio, they engaged in a general discussion of the Ewe petitions, in which, in addition to representatives of the Administering Authorities, the representatives of Belgium, New Zealand, China, Australia and the United States participated.

It was generally agreed that the Ewe complaint deserved sympathetic and careful consideration. The representatives of France and the United Kingdom appealed to the Council to give their proposals a fair trial. The representative of Belgium expressed the view that unification of administration was not necessarily the best solution of the problem. In view of the unforeseeable difficulties which might result from an invitation by the Trusteeship Council to the Administering Authorities to erase the border, he urged that the Council should encourage the Administering Authorities in the practical policy they had outlined in order to remove all the difficulties and genuine hardships which were involved in the existence of the border between French and British Togoland.

The representative of New Zealand thought that it was generally recognized that the border caused hardships and that there was real resentment among the Ewe. He stressed that their desire for unification must be taken into account. He considered the solution proposed in the joint memo-random only a partial solution which did not really go to the bottom of the problem, for if the Ewe people wished ultimately to see a Ewe State and to obtain self-government, then it was doubtful indeed whether they would ever become really ready for self-government while they were under two separate administrations. As an immediate step, however, the proposals of the Administering Authorities should be accepted, on the understanding that the Council would see how they worked out in practice and that to this end the Trusteeship Council would, as soon as possible, send a mission to Togoland.

The representative of China concluded that to place the Ewe people under separate administrations was not conducive to the promotion of their political, social and economic advancement and would retard their development towards self-government or independence. He thought that the Ewe people had an indisputable case and that the measures proposed by the Administering Authorities did not go far enough to meet the wishes of the people. The least the Council should do was to come to the conclusion that the present status quo was entirely unsatisfactory and obstructed the progressive development of the people in the direction of self-government.

The representative of Australia stressed the difficulties involved in a proposal for unification and the need for further careful consideration of the whole problem before reaching any final conclusions. He suggested that the Council should give very great weight to the advice of the Administering Authorities. In general, he considered the joint memorandum to present a sound approach grounded in present realities and affording opportunity for development. He thought that it should be made clear that the proposals had not merely a negative value in the sense of removing disadvantages, but had a positive objective as well. Any resolution on the Ewe petitions should include a recommendation that there should be special reports on the implementation of the plan. The Council might also request that greater precision be given to the program of co-ordination.

The representative of the United States fully supported the views of the representative of New Zealand and suggested that the Council should adopt a resolution welcoming the joint proposals of the Administering Authorities as an immediate step. After a reasonable time a visiting mission should investigate on the spot the implementation of the measures proposed by the Administering Authorities. The Council should review the entire question after receiving the report of the visiting mission. Following the examination of the petitions in plenary session the Council referred to a Drafting Committee on Petitions composed of four members (Australia, China, Iraq and the United States) the drafting of a resolution setting forth the conclusions of the Council on the petitions. The Drafting Committee on Petitions recommended a resolution (T/109), which, with a few changes, was unanimously adopted as resolution 14(II) by the Council at the seventeenth meeting on December 15, 1947 (T/P.V.44).

In the resolution the Council noted that the petitions of the All Ewe Conference represented the wishes of the majority of the Ewe population and that the representatives of the Administering Authorities had recognized the point of view of the Ewe people. The Council observed also that the existing frontiers dividing the Ewe people had been a cause of real difficulty to them and that this division had aroused resentment on their part.

The Council welcomed the measures proposed by the Administering Authorities as representing an earnest and constructive initial effort to meet the immediate difficulties of the problem described in the petitions. The Council noted that the representative of the All Ewe Conference considered those measures to be inadequate, as not providing for a sufficient unification of the Ewe people by means of a single administration, a common political organization, economic unity and a common educational system, and that, therefore, they would not solve the basic problem complained of in the petitions.

The Council recommended that the Administering Authorities concerned should foster the association and co-operation of the Ewe people and assist and encourage them to develop their capacity for self-government, through free discussion among themselves and through progressively increasing opportunities for primary and secondary education.

The Council also invited the Administering Authorities concerned to consult with each other and with Ewe representatives with a view to evolving further measures for fulfilling the wishes of the Ewe people as expressed in the petitions.

The resolution finally provided that the first visiting mission to the Trust Territories of Togoland under British administration and Togoland under French administration should devote special attention to the problem set forth in the petitions and to the implementation of measures designed to deal with it, and the Council should re-examine the problem stated in the Ewe petitions at the session at which the report of the visiting mission would be considered.

Contained in a preamble to the resolution there is, inter alia, a paragraph dealing with one other issue raised in one of the Ewe petitions (T/PET.-7/7), dated November 4, 1947. In that petition, Augustino de Souza called attention to the fact that a planned All Ewe Congress had been forbidden by the French authorities. Commenting upon this matter, the special representative of France said that French authorities had forbidden the Congress in question because they thought that the views of the Ewe people concerning unification had been adequately presented in their petitions to the Trusteeship Council and that, on the eve of the Council's examination of those petitions, it would be both useless and improper to hold a congress of this kind and for this purpose. The Council obtained the assurance of the special representative of France that "it is the policy of his Government to grant full freedom of assembly to the people of the Trust Territory and that tribal meetings and meetings of various sections of the Ewe population will not, shall not and cannot be forbidden or repressed" (resolution 42 (II)).

b. PETITIONS FROM TANGANYIKA AND CAMEROONS UNDER BRITISH ADMINISTRATION: QUESTIONS RELATING TO REPATRIATION

Sixteen petitions²³ were presented to the Council from German and Italian residents or former residents of the Trust Territories of Tanganyika and Cameroons under British administration. Some of the petitioners were about to be and some had already been repatriated to Germany or Italy. The plea made in the petitions was that the repatriation orders issued by the Tanganyika Government should be revoked. In some cases the petitioners asked for permission to return to Tanganyika and Cameroons under British administration.

The petitions were examined by the Council at the fifth (December 1, 1947) and seventeenth (December 15, 1947) meetings of the second session (T/P.V.32 and 44). The Government of the United Kingdom, which was the Administering Authority concerned, had submitted to the Council its observations on the petitions in communications dated November 21 (T/71) and December 11, 1947 (T/89).

The representative of the Administering Authority for the Trust Territory of Tanganyika agreed that those petitions which had been presented after the date prescribed in rule 86, paragraph 3 (b), of the rules of procedure should be considered during the second session.

²³ T/PET.2/24-29, T/PET.2/32-41, and T/PET.4/1.

The Government of the United Kingdom designated Ian Watt of the Colonial Office as special representative of the United Kingdom for the examination of the Tanganyika petitions.

Following a preliminary examination of the petitions in plenary session in consultation with the special representative of the United Kingdom, the drafting of resolutions was referred by the Council to the Drafting Committee on Petitions. The Committee recommended to the Council four resolutions, which were adopted by the Council (resolutions 15(II), 16(II), 17(II) and 18(II)).

In the resolutions, the Council noted that the petitions concerned residents and former residents of German and Italian nationality who had been, or would be, dealt with in accordance with the repatriation policy of the Administering Authority, and that the questions raised related to the implementation of the policy, which had received the general approval of the Council at its first session.²⁴ The Council reaffirmed its approval of this policy, under which no German or Italian was to be repatriated solely on account of his nationality. The Council had received assurances from the Administering Authority that the policy adopted was of a selective nature, the object being the exclusion of all Germans and Italians who had at any time held Nazi or Fascist sympathies or who would be personally undesirable inhabitants of the Territory, the latter category including persons with criminal records or unable to support themselves.

The representative of France did not participate in the discussion or vote on these petitions, declaring that his Government regarded the petitions as lying beyond the Trusteeship Council's competence in view of Article 107 of the Charter.²⁵

c. OTHER PETITIONS CONCERNING TANGANYIKA

Three petitions in this group were before the Council. In a letter (T/67) dated November 21, 1947, the representative of the United Kingdom stated that his Government did not agree that a petition presented by Marius Fortie (T/PET.-2/40) after the date prescribed in rule 86, paragraph 3(b), of the rules of procedure should be considered at the present session, since there had been insufficient time in which to study the various points raised by the petitioner. At the fourth meeting (T/P.V.31) the Council agreed that the examination of this petition should be postponed until its next session.

The two other petitions, presented respectively by Raja Mahendra Pratap (T/PET.2/30) and H. Arnesen (T/PET.2/31), were examined by the Council at the fourth meeting (T/P.V.31) in consultation with Ian Watt, special representative of the United Kingdom. Regarding them, the Drafting Committee on Petitions recommended for the approval of the Council two resolutions, which were adopted by the Council (resolutions 19(II) and 20(II)).

In the resolution concerning the petition from Raja Mahendra Pratap, the Council noted that the subject-matter of the petition involved the problem of the establishment of a Jewish state in Tanganyika, a question which did not fall within the jurisdiction of the Trusteeship Council, and decided that no action was required thereon (resolution 19(II)).

In the resolution concerning the petition from H. Arnesen, the Council considered that no action was possible because the matter complained of was not set forth in sufficiently precise terms (resolution 20(II)).

d. GENERAL PETITIONS RELATING TO THE ILO DRAFT CONVENTION CONCERNING SOCIAL POLICY IN NON-METROPOLITAN TERRITORIES

During its first session the Trusteeship Council had considered two petitions relating to the terms of the draft Convention concerning Social Policy in Non-Metropolitan Territories drawn up by the International Labour Office, with particular reference to discrimination on the basis of sex, and had decided to transmit copies of them to the International Labour Office with a request that the Council be advised of any action the International Labour Conference might take on the questions raised in them.²⁶

In reply to a letter dated May 20, 1947, which the Secretary-General sent to the International Labour Office in pursuance of the decision of the Council, the Director-General of the International Labour Office informed the Trusteeship Council of the action taken by the International Labour Conference, which had prepared a draft convention prohibiting by law any discrimination in matters of employment (T/51).

Six petitions before the Council at its second session dealt with the same subject-matter (T/PET/GENERAL 3-9). The Council examined them at the fourth meeting (T/P.V.31), at which the representative of the International Labour Office informed the Council that the petitions transmitted to the International Labour Office by the Secretary-General had been taken into account by the International Labour Conference and that, to some extent, the wishes of the petitioners had been complied with in the proposed conventions prepared by the International Labour Office.

The Council decided that no action on these petitions was required and adopted a resolution (21(II)), prepared by the Drafting Committee on Petitions, noting the action already taken by the International Labour Conference on the subject-matter involved in the petitions.

e. GENERAL PETITIONS CONCERNING SPECIAL AREAS (POLAR AND STRATEGIC) AND STRATEGIC RAW MATERIALS

At the fourth meeting (T/P.V.31) the Council examined five petitions of this group. Three of them (T/PET/GENERAL 15, 16 and 18) contained proposals to internationalize the polar regions of the globe; one (T/PET/GENERAL 17), a proposal that strategic areas, both land and water, be placed under international control and protected by the United Nations; and one (T/PET/GENERAL 11), a proposal for the international control of production and distribution of strategic raw materials in Non-Self-Governing Territories or Trust areas.

The Council adopted three resolutions recommended by the Drafting Committee on Petitions (resolutions 22(II), 23(II) and 24(II)) whereby the Council decided to take no action on the petitions, on the ground that the petitions dealt with matters beyond the Council's competence.

The view had been expressed by certain members of the Council (Belgium, Australia and the United States) that petitions, to fall within the Trusteeship Council's competence, must deal with matters concerning the administration and supervision of existing Trust Territories. On the other hand, the view had been expressed, particularly by the representative of China, that all petitions pertaining not only to a Trust Territory but to the "operation of the International Trusteeship System"²⁷ should be considered admissible in principle, even if they came from bodies not inside the Trust Territories (T/P.V.30 and 31).

f. PETITIONS CONCERNING FORMER ITALIAN COLONIES

The Council examined, at the fourth meeting (T/P.V.31), three petitions concerning former Italian colonies (T/PET/GENERAL 12, 13 and 19). Following a preliminary examination by the Council, the Drafting Committee on Petitions drafted a resolution which was approved by the Council (resolution 25(II)). Under the terms of the resolution, the Council decided that no action was called for on these petitions since they went beyond the Council's competence.

g. OTHER GENERAL PETITIONS

At the fourth and seventeenth meetings (T/P.V.31 and 44) the Council examined three petitions in this group. One petition concerned the views of the International Alliance of Women, of London, with regard to the status of women in the work of the Trusteeship Council (T/PET/GENERAL 7).

The Council decided that no action was called for on these petitions and authorized the President to reply in this sense to the petitioners.

In regard to a petition from the International Service Seminar (T/PET/GENERAL 10) concerning suggested modifications of Articles 73 and 87 of the Charter of the United Nations, and a petition from Charles Pelton (T/PET/GENERAL 14) presenting a plan for universal colonial and mandate trusteeship under the United Nations, the Council adopted two resolutions recommended by the Drafting Committee on Petitions (resolutions 26(II) and 27(II)) stating that no action was required by the Council.

3. Petitions Considered during the Third Session

The Council had before it at its third session thirteen petitions,²⁸ of which ten had been addressed to the Secretary-General directly, two had been addressed to him through the Administering Authority concerned, and one had been addressed to another person for transmission to him.

At the third meeting the Council decided that it was unnecessary to appoint, under rule 90 of the rules of procedure, an ad hoc committee to undertake a preliminary examination of the petitions, and adopted the recommendation of the Secretariat that they be classified as follows:

- (a) Petition concerning Togoland under British Administration and Togoland under French Administration;
- (b) Petitions concerning Cameroons under British Administration;
- (c) Petitions concerning Tanganyika.

At the tenth meeting on June 28, 1948, the ²⁷ Rule 76, Rules of Procedure of the Trusteeship Council (T/1/Rev.1).

²⁸ For the text of each of the petitions, see Official Records of the Trusteeship Council, Supplement to the Third Session.

Council appointed a Drafting Committee on Petitions, consisting of Australia, Iraq, the Philippines and the United States.

a. PETITION CONCERNING TOGOLAND UNDER BRITISH ADMINISTRATION AND TOGOLAND UNDER FRENCH ADMINISTRATION

The Council had before it a petition from the Togoland Progress Party, dated November 29, 1947 (T/PET.6/10, 7/12), containing a motion of the Party, supported by declarations of certain African chiefs in Togoland under French administration, opposing the unification, under a single Administering Authority, of the two Trust Territories now administered respectively by France and the United Kingdom. The petitioners, moreover, expressed approval of the joint proposals of the Administering Authorities concerned²⁹ for closer co-operation in the administration of the two Territories.

The petition was considered by the Council at the seventh meeting on June 23, 1948 (T/SR.80). As the Council had thoroughly examined the matter at issue at its second session and had decided to examine it anew at the session at which the report of a visiting mission to the two Territories would be considered, and as it had decided also to postpone to its fourth regular session consideration of the annual report for the year 1947 on the administration of Togoland under French Administration,³⁰ the Council decided that consideration of the petition should be postponed.

b. PETITIONS CONCERNING CAMEROONS UNDER BRITISH ADMINISTRATION

There were three petitions in this group before the Council.

(1) Petition from the St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance

In a petition dated November 28, 1947 (T/PET.4/2), the St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance, of London, called to the Council's attention an article in the Catholic Citizen concerning the customs of compulsory marriage and child marriage prevalent among the chiefs of the Tikar communities in the Bamenda Division of the Cameroons under British administration.

The Government of the United Kingdom, the Administering Authority concerned, had submitted its comments on the petition in a communication (T/178) dated June 7, 1948. After giving a detailed account of the practices brought to the Council's attention by the St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance, the communication of the United Kingdom Government stated that it was not surprising that the strange customs which persisted particularly in parts of the Cameroons were shocking to Christian sentiment. These practices, however, the United Kingdom Government submitted, were based on the strongest superstitious beliefs and there could be no question of attempting to achieve a sudden break with long established tribal custom. It was the policy of the Administration to endeavor to achieve a gradual modification of custom and at the same time to ensure that individual hardship or cruelty was prevented. Indicating the important part played by missionaries in combating native customs through the spread of education and Christianity, the United Kingdom Government stated that future improvement in the situation must depend on continued efforts of the missionaries supplemented by the influence and advice of Government officers. The communication finally stated that a woman education officer had recently been stationed in the area; she would endeavor to raise the standard of child welfare and domestic life and generally to accelerate the necessarily slow process of improving the status of women.

The petition was examined at the seventh meeting on June 23, 1948 (T/SR.80). The representative of the United States questioned whether the document before the Council was, in fact, a petition. He stated that the communication from the St. Joan's Social and Political Alliance merely called the Council's attention to a custom current among the Brikom tribe of the Cameroons under British administration and did not ask the Council to take any definite steps. In view of these circumstances and in view of the statement of policy contained in the communication from the Administering Authority, the United States representative considered that there was no need to take any action in regard to this petition. The representative of the United Kingdom shared the views of the representative of the United States and suggested that the Council should merely take note of the document in question.

The representatives of the Philippines, France, Belgium and New Zealand, on the other hand, expressed the view that some action on the part of the Council was required. Otherwise its attitude might be interpreted as indifference towards the existence of the customs in question. The representative of Belgium suggested that the Council should condemn the practices of compulsory and child marriage and express the hope that the Administering Authority would take every measure to put an end to it. The representative of France thought the Council should ask to be kept informed of progress in the matter. The representatives of New Zealand and the Philippines felt that the Council did not have adequate knowledge of the facts involved, and called for investigation by a visiting mission.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed that the matter be referred to the Commission on Human Rights or to the Commission on the Status of Women. He also expressed disapproval of the policy outlined by the Administering Authority in its communication of June 7, 1948 (T/178). It appeared, he stated, that the United Kingdom Government had decided to leave the task of combating the customs of the Brikom tribe to the missionaries. In the view of the U.S.S.R. delegation, the principal part should be played by the officials of the Administration.

As regards the proposal to refer the question to one of the commissions of the Economic and Social Council, the majority of the members of the Trusteeship Council thought that no action by any other organ of the United Nations was called for in this case. Several representatives, however, suggested that the relevant documents should be sent to the Economic and Social Council for its information.

On the basis of the various suggestions advanced in the course of the Council's discussion the Drafting Committee on Petitions drew up a resolution (38(III)) which the Council adopted by a vote of 9 to 0, with 1 abstention, at the eighteenth meeting on July 7, 1948 (T/SR.91). In this resolution the Council condemned the customs of compulsory marriage and child marriage; noted that the Administering Authority was endeavoring to achieve a modification of the customs; requested the Administering Authority to keep it informed, in future annual reports on the Territory concerned, of the steps taken and the progress made to end such practices; and decided to bring the problem to the attention of the first visiting mission to be sent to the Territory concerned. At the same time, the Council approved the draft of a letter from the Secretary-General to the President of the Economic and Social Council, transmitting to the latter a copy of the petition for the information of the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women. The representatives of Belgium, France and the United States had opposed the sending of such a letter. In their view there was no objection to calling the matter to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. They felt, however, that no importance need be attached to it and no special letter should therefore be sent. The Council however decided in favor of the draft letter proposed by the Drafting Committee, after rejecting by a vote of 5 to 4, with 2 abstentions, a New Zealand proposal to postpone consideration of the draft letter to the end of the session, at which time the Council would discuss the text of a letter drawing the Economic and Social Council's attention to all questions in the same category as the one under consideration.

(2) Petitions from the Bakweri Land Committee

In two petitions, dated respectively August 24, 1946, and November 17, 1947 (T/PET.4/3), the Bakweri Land Committee claimed that approximately 580 square miles of land in the Victoria Division of the Cameroons under British administration, which had belonged to the Bakweri people, had been seized by the Germans when they had occupied the Territory and had been transferred to individuals, missionary groups and companies; that after the First World War, when Great Britain had been given the Mandate for the Territory, the plantations of the Germans had been sold by auction, generally to their former German owners, and that other lands had been declared Crown Lands; that most of the land in question was now controlled by the Cameroons Development Corporation; and that the petitioners, having been deprived of their most fertile lands, had had to resort to difficult and uneconomical farming on rocky mountain slopes, causing great hardship to them.

The petitioners requested:

(1) that all lands in the Cameroons under British administration known as Crown Lands be designated "native lands" and be controlled by the natives;

(2) that all alienated land of the Victoria Division which formerly belonged to the Bakweri be returned to them;

(3) that compensation for the exploitation of these lands be given to the Bakweri; and

(4) that mission lands, except those containing ecclesiastical and educational buildings, be returned to the Bakweri without compensation for exploitation.

The observations of the United Kingdom Government, the Administering Authority concerned, were transmitted to the Council in a communication (T/182) dated June 9, 1948, in the course of which it was stated that a senior administrative officer had already been posted to the area in question to investigate the matter, with a view to ensuring that the local inhabitants had land fully adequate for their needs.

In a communication dated April 9, 1948, (T/PET.4/3/Add.1), the petitioners requested that their representative be granted an opportunity to make an oral presentation in support of their written petition. In accordance with rule 80 bis of the rules of procedure, the President of the Council, having ascertained from the Administering Authority that there were no substantial reasons why the matter should first be discussed in the Council, informed the petitioners through the Secretary-General (T/PET.4/3/Add.1) of the Council's willingness to grant their representative an opportunity to make an oral presentation during the third session. However, the Secretary-General received on June 17, 1948, a cablegram (T/PET.4/3/Add.2) from the Bakweri Land Committee in which the petitioners stated that, owing to financial difficulties, their representative would not be able to appear before the Council at its third session, and requested that consideration of their petition be postponed until the next session. At the fifth meeting on June 21 (T/SR.-78), the Council decided to grant the request of the Bakweri Land Committee for an oral presentation. Any decision of the Council on the petition would be deferred until the representative of the petitioners was in a position to make the presentation.

At the seventh meeting of the Council on June 23, 1948 (T/SR.80), the representative of Belgium observed that the Bakweri were asking that all the alienation of land made under the German administration of the territory should be cancelled, i.e., that legal acts in force for more than 30 years should be annulled. The Belgian representative thought that the Council could not ask the Administering Authority unreservedly to grant such a request. In these circumstances, he stated, a question arose as to whether the presence of a representative of the Bakweri Land Committee would, in fact, serve any useful purpose, and whether the Council should not spare the tribes concerned expenses which would be considerable to them by informing them that an oral presentation would add nothing to their written petitions.

The representative of France also thought it would be better not to invite the petitioners to submit their case orally at the Council's next session. It would be better for the Council to wait until it knew the results of the investigation by the Administering Authority and the measures that the latter planned to take, following the investigation, to meet the wishes of the Bakweri. The Trusteeship Council should then verify on the spot what had been done in that connection.

Such a verification could be carried out without any expense to the people by the visiting mission planned for 1949.

The representative of the United States observed that the Council had previously agreed to grant the Bakweri representative the right to be heard. He thought, however, that the Council should take into account the observations of the United Kingdom Government, and especially the fact that a senior administrative officer had already been appointed to make an investigation in the Victoria Division. He thought that the Council could take no useful action until it had heard the results of the investigation. The Council should therefore inform the petitioners that it had taken note of their request and would invite them to send a representative when their petition was under consideration, i.e., when the Council had received the report of the Administering Authority.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. thought that the examination of the petition should not be linked with the result of the investigation carried out by the Administering Authority. If the Council were to await the result of that investigation it would run the risk of setting an unfortunate precedent on the basis of which an Administering Authority might use an investigation as a pretext for asking for an indefinite postponement of any matter in which it was concerned.

The representative of Mexico also expressed the view that the petitioners should not be told that the Council was awaiting the results of the investigation begun by the Administering Authority. Generally speaking, the Council should be able to judge the facts on the basis of information furnished by the petitioner and observations of the Administering Authority. It should avoid giving the impression that the Council was using the investigation as an excuse to justify postponement of the question.

The Council decided to postpone consideration of the petition from the Bakweri Land Committee and to inform the petitioners that the Council would be willing to hear an oral presentation by a Bakweri representative at its third session. In drafting the reply to the petitioners the Drafting Committee on Petitions should take into account the points raised in the discussion. At the eighteenth meeting on July 7, 1948 (T/SR.91), the Council adopted the text of a letter for transmission to the petitioners by the Secretary-General, in which they were informed of the postponement of the examination of their petition and of the Council's willingness to hear an oral presentation in support of it. Their attention was called to the investigation which had already been set afoot by the Territorial Government. If the Bakweri should desire that their representative appear before the Trusteeship Council, the Council would be glad to have him do so. The letter suggested, however, that he might prefer to make an appearance after the Council had been informed by the Administering Authority of the findings of its senior administrative officer in charge of the investigation mentioned above and was ready to examine them. The petitioners were also informed that a visiting mission would visit the Territory some time in 1949.

c. PETITIONS CONCERNING THE TRUST TERRITORY OF TANGANYIKA

There were ten petitions in this group before the Council.

(1) Petition from Marius Fortie

The first petition in the group, from Marius Fortie, of Washington, D.C., had been received prior to the second session of the Council but had been postponed for consideration until the third session.³¹ In his petition, dated October 15, 1947 (T/PET.2/40), Mr. Fortie requested the Council to provide for a visit to Tanganyika in order to investigate policies and practices followed by the Administering Authority which, he alleged, were inimical to the interests of the indigenous inhabitants. The policies and practices in question were elaborated under thirteen heads as follows: (1) British policy in the Trust Territory; (2) land tenure and land ownership; (3) forestry regulations; (4) mining laws and actual prospecting and mining practices; (5) hunting regulations and restrictions; (6) compulsory cultivation of cotton and of other export and cash crops; (7) marketing of cotton, peanuts and other export and cash crops; (8) primary village education; (9) liquor traffic; (10) forced native labor; (11) child labor; (12) lack of knowledge of native customs, laws and language on the part of judges in the criminal courts; and (13) proposals for inter-territorial organization and reorganization in East Africa. In a subsequent communication dated January 14, 1948 (T/PET. 2/40/Add.1), the petitioner elaborated further on three of the subjects listed, i.e., land ownership, native housing and education.

In a letter dated June 15, 1948 (T/PET.2/40/Add.2), the petitioner requested an opportunity to make an oral presentation in support of his petition. At the third meeting on June 17, 1948 (T/SR.76), the Council discussed whether it should grant the petitioner's request. The representatives of the United Kingdom, France, Belgium and the United States opposed the granting of an oral hearing. The representatives of France and the United Kingdom expressed the view that the request could not be recognized because the petitioner was neither a resident nor citizen of the Territory in question, nor was he authorized by the inhabitants of the Territory to represent them. The Council should confine the right of oral presentation to persons residing in the Trust Territories or in close relation to those Territories. The representatives of Belgium and the United States observed that Mr. Fortie had submitted a written petition of considerable length, to which he had later added a supplement. The Council, they thought, was therefore fully informed about the petitioner's request and there was no need for an oral presentation. All four representatives mentioned stressed that the presentation of an oral statement was a privilege which the Council could grant the petitioner at its discretion, and not a right to be claimed automatically. The representative of France, moreover, proposed that before the Council considered granting the privilege in this case it should make some personal inquiries regarding Mr. Fortie. An important organ of the United Nations, he stated, could not agree to grant a public hearing to a person unless he was able to offer certain guarantees.

The President of the Council and the representative of Mexico stated that the substance of the petition was the only consideration on which the Council should base its decision. The rules of procedure did not require residence in the Trust Territory as a qualification for the presentation of an oral statement. The President, whose views were also supported by the representative of Iraq, asserted further that the Council should make the system of petitions as broad as possible, so as to ensure the protection of populations which were not able to present their own petitions. The right of oral presentation should also be interpreted in as wide a sense as possible.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. considered that the presentation of an oral statement was a right which should be granted automatically, and which could not be made subject to the decision of a majority of the Council. The question should not even be put to a vote. In the present instance, moreover, he thought that it was not a question of conferring a favor upon Mr. Fortie, but of permitting those members of the Council who had expressed a desire to do so to hear the oral presentation and to ask questions of the petitioner. These views were endorsed by the representative of the Philippines.

The Council decided by a vote of 4 to 3, with 3 abstentions, not to hear Mr. Fortie and requested the Secretary-General to inform the petitioner accordingly. The question of an oral presentation was re-opened, however, by the petitioner in a letter dated June 18, 1948, in which he requested that the Council reconsider its decision. At the seventh meeting of the third session (T/SR.80) the representatives of the U.S.S.R., Costa Rica and the Philippines urged the Council to vote on the petitioner's request. The majority of the Council, however, considered that no new facts had been brought forth sufficient to justify the reversal of a formal decision. A motion of the representative of Costa Rica to reconsider the matter was therefore rejected by the Council by a vote of 7 to 4, with 1 abstention.

At the eighth meeting of its third session on June 24, 1948 (T/SR.81), the Council examined the substance of Mr. Fortie's petition.

The representatives of New Zealand and Australia expressed doubt whether Mr. Fortie's communication could properly be considered a petition. Mr. Fortie, they stated, was not a resident of Tanganyika, he was not seeking redress of grievances on his own behalf or on behalf of any particular person or persons and he had himself stated that he had included material in his petition which he had not been able to verify. Mr. Fortie seemed an expert and an essayist rather than a petitioner. The Council would never be able to accomplish its task if it should admit as a petitioner every self-appointed expert on Trust Territories.

The President of the Council and the representative of the United States stated that it was not necessary for a petitioner to ask for the redress of a wrong done him personally, and that under rule 77 of the rules of procedure it had been clearly intended that the petitioner need not be a resident of the Territory to which his petition refers. The representative of the Philippines was of the opinion that the document before the Council was unquestionably a petition.

The representative of Belgium suggested that Mr. Fortie's petition could be disposed of without lengthy discussion. Mr. Fortie had asked that the Trusteeship Council should send a mission to Tanganyika to investigate the thirteen specific situations which he had listed. The representative of Belgium therefore proposed that the Trusteeship Council should reply to Mr. Fortie that it had already made plans for sending a mission to Tanganyika within a few weeks. The Council might state further that its members were aware of the thirteen criticisms he had listed and would seek information about them both by studying the Administering Authority's annual report and by asking questions of the special representative of the Administering Authority. If the information thus obtained on any of the thirteen points was insufficient, the mission to Tanganyika would be asked to study those points particularly.

The representative of Costa Rica thought that all thirteen points should be included in the terms of reference of the visiting mission. The representative of the U.S.S.R. also thought that the Council should refer the entire petition to the visiting mission for study. The majority of the Council, however, favored the Belgian proposal and asked the Drafting Committee on Petitions to draft a resolution accordingly.

After it had approved the terms of reference of the visiting mission to Tanganyika,³² the Council at the 36th meeting on July 30 (T/SR.109) unanimously adopted, with slight modification, a resolution (40(III)) prepared by the Drafting Committee in which, recalling the decision taken during its second session to send a visiting mission to Tanganyika in July 1948, and recalling the decision taken during its third session that the visiting mission should give attention to issues raised in petitions received by the Trusteeship Council relating to Tanganyika, including the petition from Mr. Fortie, the Council invited the Secretary-General to inform the petitioner of the above-mentioned decision and to send to the petitioner such relevant documents as he might deem appropriate.

(2) Petition from Semakula Mulumba

In a petition dated November 18, 1947 (T/PET.2/42), Semakula Mulumba, of London, adduced certain complaints against the new scheme of inter-territorial organization in East Africa, including Tanganyika, as set forth in Colonial Paper No. 210.³³ The petitioner alleged: first, that the proposals contained in Colonial Paper No. 210 had not been discussed by the Africans or translated into African languages; second, that the African members of the legislative councils of the territories concerned were not elected by the African people, and therefore tended to favor the Government viewpoint over that of the Africans; and, third, that the new scheme did not contain the principle of equal racial representation which had been embodied in an earlier plan set forth in Colonial Paper No. 191. He alleged that the Africans in Uganda, Kenya and Tanganyika strongly opposed the implementation of the present plan for inter-territorial organization, requested the United Nations to send a commission of inquiry to East Africa to investigate the matter, and suggested that three Africans from each territory, elected by the Africans and not nominated by the respective Governors, be co-opted to the United Nations commission. The petition had been addressed to the permanent representative of the U.S.S.R. for transmission to the Secretary-General.

The representative of the United Kingdom, the Administering Authority concerned, objected to the admissibility of the petition on two grounds. First, he stated that it had not been submitted in conformity with rule 82 of the rules of procedure, which provides that petitions must be addressed "directly to the Secretary-General or may be transmitted to him through the Administering Authority". The rules did not provide for a third channel of communication. The petition in question, however, had been forwarded to the Secretary-General through the U.S.S.R. delegation. Secondly, the United Kingdom representative stated that the matter complained of in the petition did not concern a Trust Territory or the operation of the International Trusteeship System. The petitioner was a representative of the people of Uganda. He could not claim to speak for the people of Tanganyika, and the reference to Tanganyika in the grievance he set forth was purely incidental. The Trusteeship Council, the representative of the United Kingdom asserted, had no competence to consider conditions in Uganda and Kenya which were affected by the plan contained in Colonial Paper 210. Mr. Mulumba's petition, therefore, was not in order.

The questions whether the petition had been properly transmitted and whether it was admissible were considered at the eighth and ninth meetings on June 24 and 25, 1948 (T/SR.81 and 82). The representative of New Zealand and Belgium supported the views of the United Kingdom representative. The President of the Council, and the representatives of Mexico, the Philippines and the U.S.S.R. objected to a narrow interpretation of rule 82. It would be incorrect, it was stated, to construe rule 82 to mean that only such petitions as were sent through the mails or by cable would be admissible. The word "directly" should be interpreted to mean that the channel of communication was not specified and that not all petitions had to be transmitted through the Administering Authorities.

As regards the second objection of the United Kingdom representative, the President pointed out that the plan set forth in Colonial Paper No. 210 formed Appendix XIV of the annual report of the Administering Authority on Tanganyika. The plan embraced Uganda, Kenya and Tanganyika and in so far as it dealt with the future administration of Tanganyika it was properly within the purview of the Council. Similar views were expressed by the representatives of the U.S.S.R. and the Philippines. The Council at the ninth meeting decided that the petition had been transmitted in accordance with rule 82, that it should be accepted in so far as it concerned Tanganyika, and that it should be rejected in so far as it concerned Kenya and Uganda. Consideration of that part of the petition accepted as admissible was postponed until after the completion of consideration of the annual report on the administration of Tanganyika for 1947.³⁴

It was resumed at the 35th and 36th meetings of the third session (T/SR.108 and 109). At the 35th meeting (T/SR.108) the representative of Iraq submitted a draft resolution which the Council with minor modifications adopted at the 36th meeting (T/SR.109). In this resolution (42(III)) the Council requested the Secretary-General to send to the petitioner that part of its annual report to the General Assembly, covering its second and third sessions, which contained its observations and conclusions regarding the inter-territorial organization affecting the Trust Territory of Tanganyika, together with the verbatim records of its discussion of the subject.

(3) Petition from Paul Wamba Kudililwa

In a petition dated January 12, 1948 (T/PET.-2/43), Paul Wamba Kudililwa complained that he had been removed by the Territorial Government from a chieftainship which he had held in the Shinyanga District of Tanganyika, and requested reconsideration of his case. He furnished additional information on his case in a further communication received on June 7, 1948 (T/PET.2/43/Add.1).

The Government of the United Kingdom, the Administering Authority concerned, furnished its observations on the petition in a communication dated June 18, 1948 (T/187). The communication stated that the petitioner had been removed from his position as Chief in 1941 when he was found to have converted public money to his own use. This was not the first time, the communication stated further, that this Chief had been guilty of such misconduct. He had been severely reprimanded and warned on two previous occasions. The decision to withdraw recognition from Mr.

³⁴ See pp. 750-61.

Wamba as Chief, the United Kingdom Government indicated, had been taken with regret, because the petitioner was an enlightened and intelligent Chief, who apart from his periodic financial lapses had performed valuable services. The Administration felt, however, that to allow him to remain in office after the third case of misappropriation would have a bad effect on his fellow Chiefs.

A statement contained in Mr. Wamba's petition to the Trusteeship Council that he had incurred the enmity of the District Commissioner through having called attention to an irregularity on the latter's part in connection with Native Authority funds was rejected by the United Kingdom Government as having no foundation whatever.

The Council examined the petition at the tenth meeting on June 28, 1948 (T/SR.83), in the presence of J. E. S. Lamb, the special representative designated by the Administering Authority. The majority of the Council's members agreed that the observations and explanations furnished by the Administering Authority exhausted the case and that no action on the part of the Trusteeship Council was called for. The view was expressed that the matter was one for the local Administration rather than for the Trusteeship Council, which, if it took it up, risked being deluged by individual complaints.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. proposed that the visiting mission to Tanganyika should be instructed to investigate the petitioner's case. He stated that the petition (T/PET.2/43) contained a specific charge against the District Commissioner, who, the petitioner alleged, had taken money from the Chief's treasury which he refused to return. On the other hand, the Administering Authority had stated that the Chief had taken the money. The representative of the U.S.S.R. thought that the Council should not rely on the testimony of only one of the interested parties.

The Council, however, by a vote of 5 to 2, with 5 abstentions, rejected the U.S.S.R. proposal that the visiting mission to Tanganyika should investigate the complaint of ex-Chief Paul Wamba Kudililwa and decided by a vote of 8 to 1, with 3 abstentions, that no action by the Council was required.

At the eighteenth meeting (T/SR.91), the Council considered the text of a draft resolution. The representative of the U.S.S.R. renewed his proposal for an investigation of the case. It was rejected by a vote of 7 to 1, with 3 abstentions.

The Council then adopted a resolution (41(III)) embodying its conclusion that no action on its part was called for by the petition.

(4) Petitions concerning Repatriation to Germany of Residents or Former Residents of Tanganyika

There were four petitions before the Council concerning the repatriation or proposed repatriation to Germany of Germans resident or formerly resident in Tanganyika. In one, dated February 15, 1948 (T/PET.2/44), the petitioner, Mrs. Else Augoustides, who was born in Germany and had married a Greek subject, requested permission to remain with her husband in Tanganyika. The three others related to the case of Rolf Trappe. In a petition dated February 25, 1948 (T/PET.2/46), Mrs. Margaret Trappe requested that her son Rolf Trappe be allowed to remain in Tanganyika to manage her farm. In a petition dated March 17, 1948 (T/PET.2/47), Rolf Trappe, who was born in Tanganyika of German parents, claimed that he had held a British passport until 1943 and that he was not a Nazi—although he had been forced to join the Nazi Party in Tanganyika—and requested permission to remain in Tanganyika. In a petition dated April 26, 1948 (T/PET.2/48), Mr. Trappe informed the Council that the Tanganyika Government had rejected his appeal for revocation of the expulsion order against him, and he requested reconsideration of his case.

The four petitions were examined by the Council at the tenth meeting, June 28, 1948 (T/SR.83), in the presence of J. E. S. Lamb, the special representative of the United Kingdom, the Administering Authority concerned. At the eighteenth meeting on July 7, 1948 (T/SR.91), the Council adopted in regard to the petitions two resolutions (39(III) and 43(III)), in both of which it noted that the questions raised concerned a German resident or former resident of the Trust Territory who had been or would be dealt with in accordance with the repatriation policy of the Administering Authority, which had been fully considered and had been approved by the Council during its first session;³⁵ the Council reaffirmed its approval of the policy and decided that no action was called for on the petitions.

The representative of France again did not participate in the discussions of or vote on these petitions.³⁶

I. VISITS TO TRUST TERRITORIES³⁷

1. Visiting Mission to East Africa

The Council, at the sixth meeting of its second session (T/P.V.33) on December 1, 1947, decided to send a visiting mission to the Trust Territories of Ruanda-Urundi, under Belgian administration, and Tanganyika, under British administration.

After the Chairman had consulted the Administering Authorities concerned in accordance with Article 87 (c) of the Charter, the Council decided at the seventeenth meeting on December 15, 1947 (T/P.V.44), that the visit should take place shortly after the termination of the June 1948 session of the Council. This date was considered the most suitable from the point of view of both the Administering Authorities and the Council.

At the 33rd meeting of the second session on March 8, 1948 (T/SR.60), the Council discussed the size and composition of the visiting mission, which had already been discussed to some extent at the Council's sixth meeting (T/P.V.33). The President of the Council, as well as the representatives of Belgium, France, Costa Rica, New Zealand and the United Kingdom, urged that, to the maximum extent possible, it should become established practice that members of the Council themselves should constitute visiting missions. In this way the Council would derive the greatest possible benefit from the experience gained by the members of the mission. The representatives of China and Mexico, on the other hand, thought that most representatives would not be able to go on missions. The rules therefore should make provision for the inclusion of other qualified persons on visiting missions. They also stressed the need for experts to be attached to missions. The representative of France, supported by the representative of Iraq, urged that as a rule the mission should contain a member representing the Administering Authority. Such a representative, he thought, would be most valuable, both as a witness and in order to facilitate the task of the mission. The representatives of Belgium and Mexico, however, expressed the view that representatives of the local authorities could adequately fulfil these functions. The representative of China, who likewise opposed the participation of a representative of the Administering Authority in visiting missions, stated that such a representative would be placed in a delicate position if he were asked to criticize the administration, which would be defended by another representative of his country.

As regards the size of the mission, the representatives of France, Australia and the United Kingdom considered that as a rule as few members as possible should serve. They stressed the difficulties of transportation and accommodation in the backward areas to be visited.

The representative of New Zealand, on the other hand, supported by the representative of the United States, urged that as many members of the Council as possible should go on as many missions as possible. The more members of the Council who actually saw the areas for which they held such a large degree of responsibility, the more likely it was, he thought, that the Council's work would be sound. The representative of Iraq also thought that missions should not be too small.

The Council decided at the 33rd meeting that the visiting mission to Tanganyika and Ruanda-Urundi should consist of four members under the chairmanship of Henri Laurentie, of France, the three other members to be selected to represent China, Australia and Costa Rica.

The composition of the mission was further considered by the Council at the seventeenth and nineteenth meetings of its third session. The representative of the United States stated that in considering the membership of the mission the Council should keep in mind that the appointments to be made were personal and that those selected to serve on the mission would act as individuals and not as representatives of governments, and that they would be directly responsible to the Trusteeship Council. This view was supported by the representatives of Belgium and France.

The representative of the U.S.S.R., on the other hand, stated that the Trusteeship Council was not composed of individuals, but of representatives of states, and the same principle must apply to the selection of members of visiting missions.

The representative of Iraq stated that he was not quite satisfied with the principle of selecting individuals on the basis of their personal qualifications. It was inevitable, he thought, that, in practice, any individual, however competent, would to a certain degree represent his government. He also stated that he objected to the composition of the proposed visiting mission because it would give equal representation to the administering and the non-administering Powers. Since the task of a mission was one of supervision and inquiry he considered that the non-administering Powers should be in the majority.

The representative of New Zealand also expressed the view that no individual, however competent, could be expected to dissociate himself entirely from his government. On the other hand, he stated, he could not support the suggestion that the choice of members of a mission should be left entirely to the states to be represented. He favored a middle way, whereby persons considered especially qualified would be appointed by the Council, but would thereafter represent their governments, while being responsible to the Trusteeship Council.

The representative of France suggested that the best way to select members of a visiting mission would be to appoint certain delegations who would submit their own nominations for approval by the Council. The members of the mission would then be responsible to the Trusteeship Council, from which they would receive their instructions.

At a private meeting the Council then discussed the individual candidates which had been proposed. The Council decided to appoint the following persons to the mission, in addition to its chairman, Henri Laurentie, of France: E. W. P. Chinery (Australia), Lin Mousheng (China) and R. E. Woodbridge (Costa Rica).

At the 23rd meeting on July 13, 1948 (T/SR.96), the Council discussed the instructions which it should give to the Mission. The representative of the United States submitted a draft resolution (T/SR.96, p.5) embodying in brief and general form the terms of reference of the Visiting Mission to East Africa. The representative of the United States thought it was important to express directives in general terms in order to grant the Mission the greatest possible freedom in its activities.

The representative of the U.S.S.R. stated that the Mission should be given precise instructions to study the urgent problems which had been emphasized during the Council's discussions. Sharing this point of view, the representative of the Philippines submitted an amendment to include in the United States draft resolution a list of important topics to be investigated by the Mission. The representatives of Mexico and Iraq supported this proposal. The representatives of the United States, Belgium, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and Australia, however, opposed the inclusion of a list of topics for investigation in the Mission's terms of reference. It would be unwise, it was stated, to specify the questions to be studied before the Mission had been able to observe conditions in the territory at first hand.

The Council by a vote of 11 to 1 adopted the United States resolution with but slight textual changes, after having rejected the Philippine amendment by a vote of 6 to 6. The resolution (37(III)), after reciting the appointment to the Visiting Mission of the persons mentioned above and the decision that the Mission should visit Ruanda-Urundi and Tanganyika during July, August and September 1948, set forth the Mission's terms of reference. The Mission was directed to observe the developing political, economic, social and educational conditions in the two Trust Territories, their progress toward self-government or independence, and the efforts of the respective Administering Authorities to achieve all the basic objectives of the International Trusteeship System. It was also instructed to give attention to issues raised in and in connection with the annual reports on the administration of the two Territories, and in petitions received by the Council relating to the two Territories, and to report its findings together with such observations and conclusions as it might care to make.

In accordance with a further decision by the Council, the Visiting Mission departed from the interim headquarters of the United Nations on July 15, 1948.

J. QUESTIONS SPECIALLY REFERRED TO THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

1. City of Jerusalem

a. THE DRAFT STATUTE FOR THE CITY OF JERUSALEM AND QUESTIONS ARISING OUT OF IT

Part III of the Plan of Partition with Economic Union, annexed to the resolution 181 (II) of the General Assembly, dated November 29, 1947, on the future Government of Palestine, established the City of Jerusalem as a corpus separatum under a Special International Regime to be administered by the United Nations. The Trusteeship Council was designated to discharge the responsibilities of the Administering Authority on behalf of the United Nations, and was assigned the task of elaborating and approving within a period of five months a detailed Statute for the City on lines set forth in the Plan.³⁸

In a letter (T/77) dated December 1, 1947, the Secretary-General drew the attention of the President of the Trusteeship Council to the responsibilities envisaged for it in the Plan. At the sixth meeting of its second session (T/P.V.33), the Council decided to appoint a working committee of five or six members to prepare for its consideration a draft Statute for the City. The composition of the Working Committee was entrusted to the President, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary-General in charge of Trusteeship. At the seventh meeting (T/P.V.34) the President announced that he had appointed Australia, China, France, Mexico, the United Kingdom and the United States as members of the Working Committee on Jerusalem.

The Working Committee held 25 meetings. At its first meeting, it elected Benjamin Gerig (United States) as Chairman, and Sir Alan Burns (United Kingdom) as Vice-Chairman; and at its second meeting it elected Henri Laurentie (France) as Rapporteur. In the course of its first eight meetings it completed a general examination of the Plan, hearing explanations of it from Karel Lisicky (subsequently Chairman of the United Nations Palestine Commission), and heard evidence on the situation in Palestine from certain officers of the Palestine Government. It adjourned on December 12, 1947, after having set up two drafting groups of experts to prepare a preliminary draft Statute.

The Working Committee reassembled on January 7, 1948, and during its next sixteen meetings examined the preliminary draft Statute submitted by the Drafting Groups. During that period, and in pursuance of a resolution (T/117) adopted by the Council at the fourteenth meeting of the second session (T/P.V.41), it heard representatives of the Jewish Agency, of the Agudas Israel World Organization and of the Patriarch of Jerusalem (Greek Orthodox Church); the Arab Higher Committee was afforded a similar opportunity to be heard but did not avail itself of it.

At its 24th meeting on January 23, 1948, the Working Committee adopted a draft Statute (T/118) for submission to the Trusteeship Council.

During the second part of its second session, the Council examined the draft Statute prepared by the Working Committee, and gave several hearings to representatives of the Jewish Agency on various matters provided for in the draft. Before the Council entered upon a detailed examination of the draft Statute, the representative of Iraq declared at the nineteenth meeting of the Council's second session (T/SR.46) that the Trusteeship Plan for the City of Jerusalem was illegal and contrary to the Charter, basing his assertion on the following four arguments:

(1) The City of Jerusalem was an integral part of Palestine, deserving independence in the same degree as did the people of the rest of Palestine. The fact that the City was sacred to three religions provided no legal basis for separation.

(2) According to the Charter, Trusteeship was to be an intermediary step leading towards self-government or independence. Permanent Trusteeship for the City of Jerusalem was therefore illegal.

(3) According to the Charter, a Trusteeship Agreement had to be presented to the General Assembly by the party or parties concerned. The Charter did not acknowledge the authority of the General Assembly as the sole originator of such an Agreement; as the United Kingdom, the Mandatory Power, had not presented a Trusteeship Agreement, the General Assembly had no right to draft a constitution of Trusteeship.

(4) Under the Charter, the Trusteeship Council itself could not act as a trustee. Only a state could perform that function; the true function of the Trusteeship Council was that of supervision.

Finally, the representative of Iraq maintained that if the Plan for Jerusalem was to be regarded as a special arrangement not intended to fit within the Trusteeship System then the Council was not acting under Chapter XII of the Charter and could not act legally at all in the matter. The representative of Iraq would therefore not participate in the discussion of the draft Statute for the City of Jerusalem.

At the 20th meeting of the Council's second session the representative of the Philippines asked for some clarification of the guiding principles which the Working Committee had followed in drafting the Statute. Referring to a statement in the Working Committee's report (T/122) that Jerusalem was not a Trust Territory and that Chapters XII and XIII of the United Nations Charter were not, therefore, generally applicable, the representative of the Philippines expressed the view that the provisions of these Chapters for the political advancement of non-self-governing peoples should be applied in so far as they were not inconsistent with the special conditions of the General Assembly's resolution. The Trusteeship Council, he thought, could not deny autonomy to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. The Council could do no less in its administration of the City than observe the same principles it required the Administering Authorities to adhere to.

³⁸ See General Assembly, pp. 254-56.

The representatives of the United States and France, who had both served on the Working Committee, explained that the Plan for Jerusalem was a juridical innovation subject to revision within ten years. The Committee had taken the position that, while the Charter as a whole was applicable, Chapters XI, XII and XIII did not apply specifically, and had worked on the basis that the Statute for Jerusalem was not a Trusteeship Agreement. The General Assembly had at one time considered that the administration of the City should be handled by the Security Council or a special committee of the General Assembly itself. The fact that the Trusteeship Council had finally been entrusted with the task did not mean that Jerusalem fell within the Trusteeship System. The Committee had, however, made every attempt to give the maximum liberty possible to the inhabitants of the City under the special conditions laid down by the General Assembly's resolution and to ensure that the Statute was not in conflict with any fundamental rights described in the Charter of the United Nations.

The representatives of Belgium and New Zealand stated that the General Assembly's primary concern was not the political advancement of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, but rather the protection of the unique religious interests located in Jerusalem. It had been intended that Jerusalem should be self-governing within certain specific limits which would ensure the preservation of the religious and historical interests of the City.
