An oral report was submitted to the Committee on the work of its informal contact group which had been considering the establishment of a meeting of a group of internationally eminent experts. The contact group had failed to agree on a mandate for the meeting of experts owing to two areas of contention-whether or not to include a reference to non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and how such a reference might be formulated; and whether or not the group should discuss problems concerning the financing of the capital-intensive investments required by the nuclear industry. The Committee concluded that it should not be convened.

The Committee decided that the Conference should have 25 Vice-Presidents, recommended that the Assembly take a decision on the provision of summary records for the Conference, requested that IAEA and United Nations organizations submit to the Committee revised or updated texts of input documents, and took note of a list of non-governmental organizations which had expressed their interest in being invited.

Communications. In 1985, the Secretary-General received communications relating to the promotion of international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

On 18 November(12) and 4 December,(13) the USSR transmitted statements by the General Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the USSR. At a 13 November meeting with a delegation of Nobel Prize winners, he had stated that the mastery of nuclear fusion was a promising area of international co-operation, that the building of a fusion reactor was believed to be technically feasible in the comparatively near future, and that its achievement would make it possible to solve one of the world's most acute problems-energy. In a report presented to a 27 November session of the Supreme Soviet, he had pointed out that scientists from different countries had begun work on the Tokamak fusion reactor, which opened up the opportunity for a radical solution of the energy problem-the creation before the end of the century of an inexhaustible source of thermonuclear energy.

On 5 November, Angola forwarded the Final Political Declaration adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries (Luanda, 4-7 September).(14) The Ministers stressed the importance of international co-operation among the non-aligned and other developing countries in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy; expressed concern about obstacles which the developed countries placed in the way of transfer of peaceful nuclear technologies; reiterated that non-proliferation should not be made a pretext for preventing States from developing peaceful nuclear technology; and expressed satisfaction at the progress in preparations for the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/95 without vote.

United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy

1. Approves the conclusions and decisions contained in the report of the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy on its sixth session, including the dates for the seventh session of the Preparatory Committee, from 10 to 21 November 1986, and the new dates of the Conference, from 23 March to 10 April 1987;

2. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Chairman of the Preparatory Committee and the Secretary-General of the Conference in pursuance of paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 39/74;

3. Notes with satisfaction the progress made in the preparations for the Conference and requests the Secretary-General of the Conference to continue with the preparations;

4. Invites the International Atomic Energy Agency, the specialized agencies and other relevant organizations of the United Nations system to contribute further to the preparations of the Conference by revising and updating, as necessary and appropriate, their input documents for the Conference, bearing in mind paragraph 7 of General Assembly resolution 39/74 and in the light of the comments by the members of the Preparatory Committee at its sixth session;

5. Invites all States to co-operate actively in the preparations for the Conference and to make available at the earliest the information requested in paragraph 9 of General Assembly resolution 36/78 and in the broad questionnaire circulated by the Secretary-General of the Conference in March 1984;

Chapter XI

Food

The World Food Programme (WFP)—a joint undertaking of the United Nations and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), each of which celebrated its fortieth anniversary in 1985 (see also pp. 403 and 1287)—continued during the year to provide food aid to developing countries in support of development projects and to meet emergency needs. It received from 90 donors pledges of cash and commodities worth $1 billion for 1985-1986—the highest amount ever—while contributions to the International Emergency Food Reserve also reached a record level, of over 800,000 metric tons. During the year, WFP supervised 361 projects in 90 countries and delivered emergency food aid to about 11 million people. The Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, WFP's governing body, held two sessions and approved projects at a total cost of some $526 million.

The World Food Council (WFC)—the highest-level international body dealing with food problems—meeting in Paris from 10 to 13 June, reviewed the global food and development situation and focused on Africa's food crisis.

In December, the General Assembly affirmed that food represented an essential element of the world's economic, social and political development process (resolution 40/181) and established a $1.4 billion target for 1987-1988 voluntary contributions to WFP (40/176).

Topics related to this chapter. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief. Regional economic and social activities: Africa—food and agriculture. Health and human resources: health and nutrition. Human rights: right to food. Women: women in rural areas. Children: nutrition. Refugees and displaced persons: assistance.

Food problems

The attention of the international community remained focused in 1985 on the continuing economic and food crisis in Africa and on the limited progress in other developing regions in tackling the silent and growing crisis of chronic hunger and malnutrition, a crisis exacerbated by global economic difficulties which weakened the efforts of those countries.

Despite growing food imports and food aid, 21 countries in Africa had exceptional food shortages and an estimated 150 million people suffered from malnutrition and hunger, the Secretary-General stated in a June 1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> on the critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa in 1984-1985—submitted in response to a 1984 General Assembly request<sup>(2)</sup> and taken note of by the Economic and Social Council on 26 July 1985 (decision 1985/197). While drought and other natural disasters aggravated food problems, the main long-term cause rested with the inability of African countries to reach a "take-off" stage for sustained economic and social development and with policies that denied agriculture its priority role in the development process. Proposals for recovery and rehabilitation included the establishment of an early warning system in drought-prone countries and of emergency seed stocks, provision of appropriate seeds and draught animals, supply of fertilizers and chemicals, assistance to livestock owners, and improvement of food transportation, storage and distribution.

The Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, in a June 1985 report,<sup>(3)</sup> stated that food aid should be integrated into the national development plans of recipient countries to support humanitarian objectives and to provide an incentive for increased production. Since the 1974 World Food Conference,<sup>(4)</sup> progressively increasing resources had enabled WFP to raise its annual commitments for development projects by more than six times, and about 80 per cent of all cereal food aid was currently destined to low-income, food-deficit countries. However, the minimum annual food aid target, established by the Conference, of 10 million tons of grain had not been met despite considerable stocks in major food-exporting countries, while the ability of low-income countries to import food on commercial terms had decreased.

The WFC Executive Director submitted several reports during the year on food problems in the world.

In a March note reviewing the 1984 world food situation,<sup>(5)</sup> he found that although all regions produced more food that year, the gain was offset by population growth; some 70 countries produced even less per caput in 1984 than during 1974-1976, and a rise in the value of the United States dollar in 1983-1984 exacerbated an already severe debt problem for many developing countries, reducing their ability to import food.

In another report,(6) the Executive Director recommended for WFC action a phased approach to eliminating hunger and malnutrition, consisting of preventing a recurrence of famine, reducing infant deaths from malnutrition, reversing the trend of increasing world hunger in the coming few years, and adopting development strategies for reducing chronic hunger and malnutrition in the 1990s. In addition, it was suggested that WFC might recommend improved monitoring of both the means for and progress in achieving the phased approach.

In a third report,(7) he analysed external economic constraints on meeting food objectives and the need for expanding world trade.

As regards the effectiveness of aid in support of food strategies,(8) he examined four issues affecting the quality of such aid to Africa: the domestic policy environment, donors' policies, the international economic environment, and the particular place of food aid in Africa as the principal famine-emergency resource. He also suggested improving the quality of aid through flexible and realistic national food policy implementation, greater selectivity of aid on the part of recipients, and enhanced co-ordination of recipient-donor efforts.

Assessing the status of food plans and strategies in Africa,(9) the Executive Director observed that those countries, struck by one of the worst economic crises in their history and preoccupied with emergency relief, had suffered a set-back in implementing national food strategies. He recommended, among other things, establishing an analytical monitoring framework for use by all concerned, giving priority to food production, stepping up emergency assistance to speed recovery from the current crisis and conserve resources for long-term development programmes, building up human resources and infrastructure for food strategy implementation, and providing adequate external support.

WFC activities. The 36-member WFC held its eleventh ministerial session in Paris from 10 to 13 June 1985(10) and reviewed the global food and development situation. It expressed concern over the growing crisis, exacerbated by global economic difficulties, of chronic hunger and malnutrition in developing regions, and directed particular attention to measures for protecting the fragile food and nutrition level of low-income groups and for reducing hunger during the remainder of the century. WFC concluded that increased external assistance, while indispensable, could not substitute for a more equitable international economic, trade and financial environment with provisions to reduce trade protectionism, resolve the developing countries' debt problems, and improve international monetary stability.

As regards Africa, where millions of people including growing numbers of refugees remained threatened by famine, WFC—which had sponsored a workshop on accelerated food strategies implementation in Africa (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, 25-27 February)(11)—reaffirmed that emergency relief should be accompanied by rehabilitation and long-term development efforts. It called, among other things, for a common monitoring system for a more systematic follow-up of food strategy implementation and hunger reduction, and agreed to continue promoting food strategy development and implementation, including international mobilization of resources. The Council suggested that a major food and economic recovery programme for Africa should establish priorities; co-ordinate investments; apply improved technology; integrate emergency and development assistance; provide incentives for producers; promote more balanced food-crop and export-crop policies; support small-scale irrigation; deal with rural poverty; upgrade technical and managerial skills affecting food production and nutrition; strengthen African institutions and administration, including restructuring the role of parastatals and strengthening the managerial capacity to design and implement projects and programmes; give increased attention to population issues; and provide for careful planning and programming to reform Africa's pricing and marketing policies to increase food production.

WFC declared that the effectiveness of external assistance in support of food strategies could be enhanced when used to supplement national policies for increased domestic food production and poverty alleviation. It recommended that development food aid be programmed on a multiyear basis, with a system to assess its impact on national priorities, and supported the strengthening of related co-ordination mechanisms of the United Nations.

On improving access to food by the undernourished, WFC urged Governments to make the elimination of hunger and malnutrition a central objective in national development, and recommended action to prevent famine, reduce infant mortality, and limit and reduce hunger. The Council also reviewed the international financial and trade situation as it affected developing countries' capacities for resolving their food problems. It urged all countries to adjust their manufacture and agriculture sectors, and to refrain from creating obstacles to agricultural imports, especially from developing countries. It also recommended that adjustment programmes for resolving debt problems be phased to take account of developing countries' food and social needs on a long-term basis; that the Committee on Trade in Agriculture of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade be encouraged to accelerate work towards more effective rules and disciplines for trade and domestic farm policies; and that the WFC Executive Director report to it in 1986 on the origins of, and possible solutions to, current conflicts in international food trade.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council decided to transmit to the General Assembly for its consideration a draft resolution on food and agricultural problems (decision 1985/196). The text was transmitted in a September note by the Secretariat.<sup>(12)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 40/181 without vote.

Food and agricultural problems

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281(XXIX) 12 December 1974, resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition adopted by the World Food Conference and the Programme of Action adopted by the World Conference on Agrarian Reform and Rural Development,<sup>(13)</sup>

Stressing the imperative need to keep food and agricultural issues at the centre of global attention,

Stressing also the urgent need for the international community in its development efforts to take determined action towards the elimination of, inter alia, poverty, hunger and malnutrition, and infant mortality,

Reaffirming the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, adopted by the General Assembly on 3 December 1984,

Reaffirming that food and agricultural problems in developing countries should be considered in a comprehensive manner in their different dimensions and in their immediate, short-term and long-term perspectives,

Affirming the urgent need for sustained international support for the efforts of the African countries towards rehabilitation and long-term development of their food and agriculture,

Reaffirming that the right to food is a universal human right which should be guaranteed to all people and, in that context, believing in the general principle that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure,

Reaffirming also that the maintenance of peace and security and the strengthening of international co-operation in food and agriculture are important for improved economic conditions and enhanced food security,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 38/158 of 19 December 1983 and 39/166 of 17 December 1984, and Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/54 of 25 July 1984, as well as all other relevant resolutions concerning food and agriculture, and calls for their immediate and effective implementation;

2. Welcomes the conclusions and recommendations, as adopted, contained in the report of the World Food Council on the work of its eleventh ministerial session, held in Paris from 10 to 13 June 1985;

3. Welcomes also the conclusions and recommendations contained in the tenth annual report of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme and in the report of the Committee on its nineteenth session;

4. Affirms that food represents an essential element of the world's economic, social and political development process and should therefore be treated with the highest priority by all Governments in their rededication to the principles and purposes of the Charter of the United Nations in this fortieth anniversary year of the United Nations and to the commitment of the World Food Conference to eliminate hunger and malnutrition;

5. Reaffirms that urgent action should be taken to increase food production, which is one of the most important elements in meeting the food needs of the developing countries; that, in this regard, sustained efforts at the national, regional and international levels should be pursued; and that the national food strategies, plans and programmes of developing countries should play a central role in the process of establishing priorities, in co-ordinating national and international funding and in the application of technology and human resources development, in order to promote food production and increase the national self-reliance of the developing countries;

6. Welcomes the positive efforts of developing countries for the development of their food and agricultural production, and calls upon the international community to provide effective support to those efforts;

7. Emphasizes the need for priority attention at the national, subregional, regional and international levels to the timely delivery of food to those requiring assistance, especially in African countries, and the need to assist recipient countries in developing and strengthening their logistic, transportation and administrative capacities, as well as internal distribution systems, and that emergency food aid programmes should, whenever possible, procure supplies within the region;

8. Appeals to the international community to provide, as a matter of extreme urgency, the logistic agricultural inputs, and fulfil the unmet aid needs of the drought- and famine-affected African countries;

9. Notes with deep concern the substantial decline in international market prices for agricultural commodities over the last five years, which, coupled with deteriorating terms of trade for commodity exporting countries, have had particularly serious effects on developing countries, and in this context calls for appropriate measures to overcome foreign exchange constraints, including measures to diversify and increase export earnings, and for continuous efforts for the conclusion of commodity agreements and arrangements, as appropriate, particularly within the framework of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, and agrees that efforts should continue in order to improve the effectiveness of appropriate export earning stabilization schemes and to seek agreement on more effective co-operation in international commodity policy, notably through the early entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities;(14)

10. Emphasizes that the success of efforts of developing countries to solve their food and agricultural problems requires, as a major element, economic growth, which is severely constrained by, inter alia, the burden of external debt; and that, in accordance with recommendations of the World Food Council at its eleventh ministerial session, adjustment programmes for resolution of debt problems should take into account the food and social needs of the developing countries on a sustained and long-term basis;

11. Stresses the need to continue and to intensify the support for programmes and policies for increasing food and agricultural production and raising nutritional standards in developing countries, particularly in Africa and the least developed countries, and in this context urges the international community, particularly the developed countries, to take determined action, in support of the efforts of developing countries, to increase the flow of resources, particularly the concessional flow by, inter alia, increasing their contributions to multilateral agencies;

12. Calls upon the parties concerned urgently to achieve the conclusion of the negotiations on the second replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development in the light of the broad agreement achieved at the seventh meeting of the consultation on the replenishment;

13. Urges developed countries to provide the International Development Association with the necessary financial resources, including, inter alia, supplementary financing, to enable it to cover any shortfall and to increase its assistance to developing countries, particularly in the development of food and agriculture;

14. Recommends that the International Wheat Council should continue to explore the possibilities of raising the minimum overall commitment under the Food Aid Convention to 10 million tons;

15. Recommends that the Committee on Trade in Agriculture of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade should continue, within its mandate, to accelerate to the greatest extent possible progress towards more operationally effective rules and disciplines for trade in agriculture, bearing in mind the concerns of all developing countries, including wider and more predictable access to markets;

16. Urges all countries to demonstrate the requisite political will by refraining from creating obstacles to agricultural imports, especially those from developing countries, and all exporting countries, particularly developed countries, to endeavour to limit export subsidies and analogous practices which might hinder trade, especially that of developing countries;

17. Notes with satisfaction paragraph 2 (e) of Trade and Development Board resolution 286(XXVIII) of 6 April 1984, in which the Board decided that, in the annual review of the problems of protectionism and structural adjustment, attention should be given to strengthening the participation of developing countries in agro-industrial production and trade and, in this regard, paragraph (g) of Board decision 310(XXX) of 29 March 1985, in which the Board recommended that, in preparing the documentation for the annual review to be carried out at the thirty-second session of the Board, the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should give particular attention to this question and special attention to the difficulties of the African and the least developed countries;

18. Recognizes the important contribution and potential of women in the development of the food and agricultural sectors and the need adequately to reward their contribution to those sectors, and urges Governments to ensure and enhance women's participation in the formulation and implementation of national food and agricultural policies, plans and projects;

19. Recognizes the importance of implementing famine prevention measures and, in this regard, welcomes the increased activity and proposed strengthening of the Global Information and Early Warning System in Food and Agriculture of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, and emphasizes the importance of establishing and improving national and regional early warning systems;

20. Appreciates the measures taken by the World Food Programme to ensure speedy and timely delivery of food aid as well as the development of an information system for the dissemination on a regular basis of all relevant information on food aid to facilitate planning and operational co-ordination;

21. Urges the donor community to provide the necessary financial support for the effective implementation of the programmes of action adopted by the FAO World Conference on Fisheries Management and Development;(15)

22. Urges the World Food Council, within the context of its mandate, to mobilize and sustain greater efforts in the struggle to overcome hunger, to continue to review and report on major problems and policy issues, and to continue to serve as a co-ordinating mechanism in the field of food and other related policy matters within the United Nations system and, in this connection, notes that the Council, in its report to the General Assembly, addressed the question of strengthening its effectiveness and other related issues, and expresses the hope that necessary action, as appropriate, will be taken in that regard;

23. Stresses the need to strengthen subregional, regional and interregional co-operation for the promotion of food security and the development of agriculture in developing countries and, in this context, calls upon the relevant entities of the United Nations system to accord priority support to economic and technical co-operation among developing countries in food and agriculture.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009/Add.2) without vote, 13 December (meeting 51); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.130), based on informal consultations on draft transmitted by Economic and Social Council decision 1965/196 (A/C.2/40/L.4); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 36, 39, 48-51; plenary 119.

The draft proposed by the Economic and Social Council had contained less detailed formulation of paragraphs 9 to 11, by which the Assembly would have: called for the conclusion of agreements and arrangements within the framework of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, and for the entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities; expressed concern that external debts and measures under adjustment policies affected the capacity of most developing countries to tackle their food problems; and noted with concern stagnation in commitments of external resources for the agricultural sector and the overall hardening of terms, and urged donors to increase contributions to multilateral agencies and concessional flows to developing countries.

In explanation of position, Canada said that export earning stabilization schemes based on balance-of-payments requirements were appropriate, while those that sought to compensate for shortfalls in export earnings from individual commodities were not. It continued to question the need for an additional financing facility, and hoped that greater emphasis would be given in the future to humanitarian aspects and to improving agricultural production and distribution. Australia also questioned the appropriateness of commodity-specific schemes. The Federal Republic of Germany, also on behalf of Belgium and the United Kingdom, said that the narrow interpretation in paragraph 9 of "international market prices" in terms of United States dollars disregarded the fact that, because well over 75 per cent of key agricultural commodities were traded on European markets, their prices were denominated in a European national currency.

The United States, referring to paragraph 8, said it was the responsibility of each Government to ensure that its people were not denied food; that except in the case of total embargoes, its grain was available to all purchasers; and that it had the right to decide how its resources should be used. Egypt considered it appropriate for the text to refer to the substantial decline in international market prices and the need for economic growth; it regretted that amendments were submitted to paragraphs 9 to 11 after the issues had been discussed.

In other 1985 action, the Assembly dealt with food and agriculture and rural development (resolution 40/205), negotiations on the replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development (40/211), and donors' response to the emergency food situation in Africa (40/20). The Economic and Social Council dealt with an international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food and agricultural production in Africa (decision 1985/199).

Food aid

World Food Programme

In 1985, WFP continued to provide developing countries with food aid for development purposes and emergency relief.

CFA activities

At its nineteenth session, held at Rome, Italy, from 20 to 31 May 1985, (1) the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes (CFA)—the WFP governing body—conducted its tenth annual review of food aid policies and programmes, focusing on co-ordination of food aid operations in beneficiary countries. It emphasized that food aid must be integrated into the development process and co-ordinated with financial and technical assistance, and that the recipient Governments should bring food aid within their national development plans and establish appropriate management units to co-ordinate all food aid operations. CFA also recommended that developing countries improve the assessment of their food aid needs and establish national early warning systems to detect impending emergency situations.

The Committee approved 18 projects at a total cost of some $300 million, in addition to four budget increases for approved projects, making a combined total of approximately $344 million (equivalent to 1 million tons of food).

At its twentieth session at Rome from 30 September to 10 October, (2) CFA urged WFP to increase its activity in support of development so as to attack the root causes of hunger and to reduce the need for emergency relief in the future. Recognizing the increasing food aid needs of the developing countries, it proposed for 1987-1988 a target-later endorsed by the General Assembly (see p. 703)—of $1.4 billion, comprising 3.25 million tons of food at current prices and $405 million in cash.

The Committee approved 20 projects at a total cost of $226 million and six budget increases for approved projects. The combined value amounted to approximately $255 million, equivalent to about 700,000 tons of food. In addition, the Committee was informed that between 1 January and 30 June 1985, the Executive Director had approved five projects of up to $1.5 million each in food value, at a total cost to WFP of $7.3 million.

WFP activities

In 1985, WFP committed 1.8 million tons of food worth $642 million to development projects, mainly in low-income, food-deficit countries; provided emergency support worth $225 million to 11 million people; supervised the implementation of 361 projects worth $3.64 billion in some 90 countries; and carried out 29 evaluation missions.

Intensifying its emergency response to the African food crisis, WFP's Africa Task Force secretariat co-ordinated information and logistics, and helped deliver an unprecedented total of 5.8 million tons of food aid to 20 sub-Saharan countries affected by drought and civil strife. While commitments for emergency aid totalled some 336,000 tons of food, costing $129 million, WFP shipped 647,000 tons of its own food for both emergency and development operations in sub-Saharan Africa, in addition to 313,000 tons on behalf of bilateral donors. Of $873 million of total WFP resources committed for both development and emergencies in 1985, $321 million, or about 37 per cent, was for that subregion.

The special FAO/WFP task force, set up in April 1983(3) to monitor the agricultural and food supply situation in Africa, continued its work. The initial phase of the WFP management information system became operational in 1985, and a computerized system-containing food aid and related logistics information for African countries receiving emergency food aid—was created and installed in April.

Agreements were reached during the year between WFP and the United Nations Development Programme on their relations in the field and between WFP and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on more effective handling of food aid for refugees. The United Nations/FAO Joint Task Force on WFP Relationship Problems began its work in January.

Development assistance

In 1985, WFP committed $642 million of resources, representing 1.8 million tons of food, to development projects. Of the total, $550 million (86 per cent) was approved in the form of 55 new projects; of these, 38 projects (valued at $526 million) were approved by CFA and 17 projects (valued at $24 million) by the Executive Director under his delegated authority. Eighty-five per cent of the food went to low-income, food-deficit countries; in value terms, the share of commitments for the poorest countries was 79 per cent. Asia and the Pacific continued to receive the largest share of commitments ($237 million or 37 per cent of the total), followed by Africa south of the Sahara

($192 million or 30 per cent), North Africa and the Near East ($151 million or 23 per cent) and Latin America and the Caribbean ($62 million or 10 per cent).

In 1985, $499 million went to agricultural and rural development projects, focusing on rehabilitation of agricultural land through irrigation, flood control and soil conservation, and on forestry. Other projects included agricultural reforms, such as price stabilization programmes in Mali and Mauritania, to which $15 million was committed. Commitments to human resources development amounted to $144 million, of which $107 million went for nutritional support for vulnerable groups, including primary school children.

Emergency operations

During 1985, WFP committed $225 million to provide 733,000 tons of food—including $186 million worth of food drawn from the International Emergency Food Reserve (IEFR)—to 55 emergency operations in 32 countries, as well as $5.2 million to provide cash subsidies for six operations which had been approved the previous year. Over 11 million people were targeted beneficiaries of WFP emergency food aid approved in 1985.

Of the year's total emergency assistance, 56 per cent (in dollar terms) went for 34 operations in sub-Saharan Africa, 36 per cent for 12 operations in Asia, 4 per cent for 6 operations in Latin America and the Caribbean and 4 per cent for 3 operations in North Africa and the Near East. Seventy per cent of the total tonnage—511,445 tons worth $145 million—was channelled to some 4.7 million refugees, returnees and persons displaced by internal strife. WFP co-ordinated the bilateral and multilateral food aid distribution to refugees in Pakistan and Somalia and the displaced persons along the Thai-Kampuchean border (see also Chapter XXI of this section).

WFP arranged for the international transport of over 2 million tons of food to 84 countries, using 1,822 vessels; its direct management of large truck fleets in Chad, Ethiopia and the Sudan enabled it to reach more people in remote areas. Considerable attention was given to speedier delivery of emergency supplies; for instance, within 24 hours of the 13-14 November eruption of the Nevado del Ruiz volcano, which buried the town of Armero, Colombia, under mud and debris, WFP delivered to the disaster site food airlifted by helicopter from Bogota by the national authorities.

WFP resources

Total net WFP commitments in 1985, for development projects, emergency operations and administrative costs, were $868 million. Its total expenditure was $814 million.

Pledges and contributions

During 1985, total WFP resources reached $1,316 million, including $1,003 million in pledges by 90 donors to regular resources, $211 million to IEFRR channelled through WFP, and $76 million contributed under the 1980 Food Aid Convention.<sup>(4)</sup> The $1,003 million pledged for 1985-1986 represented 74 per cent of the $1,350 million target set at the eleventh (1984) pledging conference.<sup>(5)</sup>

For the fourth time since inception, IEFRR's target of 500,000 tons of cereals was exceeded in 1985; by year's end, announced contributions exceeded 825,000 tons of food (766,541 tons in cereals), valued at $227 million. Of the total 1985 contributions, 90 per cent were channelled multilaterally through WFP. Twenty-nine donors, including seven developing countries, contributed to IEFRR in 1985.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1985, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1985/73 without vote.

Pledging target for contributions to the World Food Programme for the biennium 1987-1988
The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes, at its nineteenth session, held from 20 to 31 May 1985, postponed consideration of the pledging target for contributions to the World Food Programme for the biennium 1987-1988 to its twentieth session, to be held from 30 September to 11 October 1985,

Taking into account the fact that the pledging target will serve as a guiding figure for donor countries at the pledging conference for contributions to the World Food Programme for the biennium 1987-1988, to be convened early in 1986, Recommends the General Assembly to consider at its fortieth session the pledging target for contributions to the World Food Programme for the biennium 1987-1988.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/83

26 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/147) without vote, 25 July (meeting 30); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1985/C.1/L.19), based on informal consultations; agenda item 10.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/176 without vote.

Target for World Food Programme pledges for the period 1987-1988

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of its resolution 2095(XX) of 20 December 1965 to the effect that the World Food Programme is to be reviewed before each pledging conference,

Recalling also the provisions of paragraph 4 of its resolution 38/176 of 19 December 1983 that, subject to the review mentioned above, the next pledging conference should be convened at the latest early in 1986, at which time Governments and appropriate donor organizations should be invited to pledge contributions for the biennium 1987-1988, with a view to reaching such a target as may be then recommended by the General Assembly and the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations,

Noting that the review of the Programme was undertaken by the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes of the World Food Programme at its twentieth session,

Having considered the recommendations of the Committee on Food Aid Policies and Programmes,

Recognizing the value of multilateral food aid as implemented by the World Food Programme since its inception and the necessity for continuing its action both as a form of capital investment and for meeting emergency food needs,

1. Establishes for the two years 1987 and 1988 a target for voluntary contributions to the World Food Programme of $1.4 billion, comprising 3.25 million tons of food at current prices and $405 million in cash, and expresses the hope that such resources will be augmented by substantial additional contributions from other sources in recognition of the prospective volume of sound project requests and the capacity of the Programme to operate at a higher level;

2. Urges States Members of the United Nations and members and associate members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and appropriate donor organizations to make every effort to ensure the full attainment of the target;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, to convene a pledging conference for this purpose at United Nations Headquarters early in 1986;

4. Decides that, subject to the review provided for in its resolution 2095(XX), the next pledging conference at which Governments and appropriate donor organizations should be invited to pledge contributions for the biennium 1989-1990, with a view to reaching such a target as may be then recommended by the General Assembly and the Conference of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, should be convened, at the latest, early in 1988.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009/Add.2) without vote, 5 December (meeting 48); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.97), based on informal consultations; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 36, 39, 48; plenary 119.

In explanation of position, the United Kingdom, cautioning against setting excessively high targets for food aid, said it was important to assess accurately the relative cost of food aid in the context of total assistance, and to ensure that the developing countries did not become overly dependent on such aid.

Chapter XII

Science and technology

Restructuring international scientific and technological relations continued to occupy an important place on the agenda of many United Nations bodies throughout 1985. Working in accordance with guidelines set by the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action, they directed their efforts at enhancing the scientific and technological capacities of developing countries by trying to mobilize financial resources, improve institutional arrangements and balance the international flows of technology.

As a halfway point of the decade, 1985 was a logical choice for carrying out a comprehensive analysis of progress made over the previous five years in implementing the Vienna Programme. The results of the mid-decade review prompted the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the main directing and policy-making body, to express disappointment with the progress achieved and to urge the international community to provide additional resources and co-operation for implementing the Programme. The Intergovernmental Committee, which held its seventh session in May/June 1985, also focused on the issue of information systems for science and technology for development, concluding that setting up and strengthening national systems should form the major activity in developing a global information network. The Committee's resolutions and decisions were endorsed by the General Assembly (resolution 40/193).

Effective policy and planning advice to the Intergovernmental Committee on all the issues under consideration was provided by the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, which held its fifth session in February. Two of the Advisory Committee's panels of experts met in 1985 for an in-depth examination of questions relating to information systems and mobilizing financial resources for scientific and technological development in developing countries. Both the Intergovernmental and Advisory Committees continued to receive substantive secretariat support from the Centre for Science and Technology for Development which prepared studies on information systems, maintained regular contacts with national focal points and worked to develop further the Advance Technology Alert System. With regard to inter-agency co-ordination, it assisted the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development of the Administrative Committee on Coordination (ACC). The Task Force held its sixth session in January focusing specifically on the financing aspects of joint activities and the criteria for building endogenous capacities in developing countries.

For the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD), 1985 proved a difficult year, with the continued uncertainty of its long-term financing and institutional arrangements hindering mobilization of resources through normal pledging procedures, which yielded less than $150,000. After reviewing proposals by an open-ended intergovernmental working group, the Intergovernmental Committee reaffirmed in June the importance of such arrangements and appealed to all Member States to pledge the maximum resources to UNFSSTD. Proposals on improving the System's financial situation were made in October by the Secretary-General. The Assembly (resolution 40/194) requested him to report on the results of an April 1986 pledging conference, together with his views on the future of the System, including its orderly termination, should pledges fall short of the average level achieved by the System over the previous three years.

Promoting a more balanced flow of technology between developed and developing countries remained a high priority for several bodies, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). After the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology made some progress at its sixth session in May/June, the Assembly invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report in 1986 on possible solutions to issues outstanding in the draft code of conduct (resolution 40/184). Regarding the reverse transfer of technology or brain drain, the Assembly called for further studies of the problem at various levels (resolution 40/191).

Implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action

In-depth examination of pre-selected substantive subjects was a major United Nations activity in 1985, aimed at implementing the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development.(1) Following a 1984 decision of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development,(2) the question of information systems for science and technology for development was the subject of a comprehensive analysis in a number of reports and discussions at the Committee's 1985 session. Another important aspect of its activities during the year was evaluation of the progress achieved over the previous five years in implementing the Vienna Programme.

Mid-decade review

In 1985, the United Nations launched a major effort to evaluate progress made in implementing the Vienna Programme of Action. The assessment was made in the form of a mid-decade review, as provided for by the Programme's 1981 operational plan(3) and the medium-term plan for 1984-1989 adopted in 1982.(4)

Reports by the Secretary-General. Serving as a basis for the Intergovernmental Committee's mid-decade review were three reports by the Secretary-General, which examined activities of the United Nations system and progress at the regional level, and also provided an overall assessment of the implementation process.

In his overall assessment,(5) the Secretary-General reviewed the main trends relating to the Vienna Programme's objectives over the previous five years, indicated the progress or lack of it in different areas, analysed constraints to the implementation process and identified opportunities for initiating specific steps in the near future. He concluded that the situation called for mobilizing science and technology for development, and exploring strategic options for implementing the Programme. The Secretary-General recommended a number of ways to build scientific and technological capabilities of developing countries, in part through measures allowing them to take advantage of the international market, adopting a deliberate policy to manage technological options, establishing depositories of scientific and technological policies and plans, and expanding international co-operation. Enhancing societal capabilities for innovation was another dimension involved in the design of scientific and technological strategies. Noting a lack of scientific and technological infrastructure and human resources in many developing countries, the Secretary-General said intensive efforts were needed to mobilize support from international governmental and non-governmental organizations in resolving the situation, particularly in the least developed countries. His other suggestions concerned assessment and choice of technologies and resource allocation.

In the light of the conclusions of the mid-decade review, the Secretary-General proposed that the Intergovernmental Committee consider at its 1985 session conducting a more comprehensive review at the end of the decade, in 1989, instead of annual and biennial reviews. He suggested that the Committee should outline a broad framework for that review to identify relevant data and to enable analytical contributions from national focal points, United Nations entities and a variety of other concerned organizations.

The report analysing the progress in implementing the Vienna Programme at the regional level(6) contained a brief description of each region's salient features and a review of its accomplishments, generally within the framework of the 1981 operational plan's eight programme areas. In his conclusions, the Secretary-General noted that the contributions of the countries of each region for the respective regional review had further stimulated national interests in identifying the major gaps in science and technology endeavours related to the Programmes objectives and in seeking alternative solutions.

An overview of the activities undertaken by the organizations of the United Nations system in the context of the Vienna Programme was the focus of the Secretary-General's third report.(7) It covered achievements at programme level, assessed perspectives regarding the role of the United Nations system in implementing the Programme and highlighted major changes in policies and institutional arrangements introduced over the reporting period. The report also contained a section describing the role of respective organizations in implementing the Programme. In his conclusions, the Secretary-General pointed to a growing need in developing countries for assistance from external sources and particularly from the United Nations system. He said that the system's future efforts in implementing the Vienna Programme would be determined on the basis of national needs for assistance in the context of special areas of interest of each organization.

Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC), who reported<sup>(8)</sup> on activities of the ACC Task Force and the Centre for Science and Technology for Development (see below), not covered by the Secretary-General.

Advisory Committee consideration. The mid-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme was high on the agenda of the February session of the Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development.<sup>(9)</sup> The Committee's main contribution to the review was a discussion of the global context for the application of science and technology to development, which was based on the results of the 1984 ad hoc panel on long-term perspectives.<sup>(10)</sup> While noting a number of changes in various fields since the adoption of the Vienna Programme, the Advisory Committee found it difficult to evaluate individual responses by countries or groups of countries to the Programme, a problem further compounded by the lack of data on changes at the national level in developing countries. A consensus was reached that both the Advisory and Intergovernmental Committees should pay greater attention to the fuller dissemination of the results of their deliberations in order to promote further the emerging consciousness among scientific communities of the need to apply science and technology to development.

Intergovernmental Committee action. Taking note of the Secretary-General's three reports on the mid-decade review, the Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 June,<sup>(11)</sup> said it was disappointed with the progress made in implementing the Vienna Programme and was concerned about the adverse world economic situation that imposed constraints on the development of endogenous scientific and technological capabilities of developing countries. It urged the international community to provide the additional resources and co-operation required and recommended that developing countries should be further supported in attaining the critical mass of scientific and technological human resources. The Intergovernmental Committee requested the Advisory Committee to continue to report on the impact of the emerging trends in science and technology on developing countries and the way of assimilating these technologies in their development process. With regard to the reports of the Centre on United Nations activities in implementing the Programme, the Committee decided that the Centre should give special attention to the substantive themes and other programme areas it had specified in 1981.<sup>(12)</sup> It also decided to undertake in 1989 a comprehensive review of the Programme's implementation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/193, noted the Intergovernmental Committee's actions and, in resolution 40/178, stressed the willingness of Member States to strengthen the United Nations system as a framework for dialogue and joint efforts in solving scientific-technological problems, especially those confronting the developing countries.

Information systems for science and technology

Following a 1984 decision,<sup>(2)</sup> the Intergovernmental Committee focused on information systems for science and technology for development as a substantive theme for in-depth consideration in 1985. The ACC Task Force on Science and Technology for Development took up the matter at its sixth session (Geneva, 29-31 January),<sup>(13)</sup> when it examined the results of a meeting of the Advisory Committee's Ad Hoc Panel of Experts on Information Systems for Science and Technology for Development (Rome, Italy, 21-25 January)<sup>(14)</sup> and proposals of the Centre regarding a long-term plan for a global information network. The Task Force agreed that the gradual establishment of a global information network should begin with a source referral function and that the International Referral System for sources of environmental information (INFOTERRA) of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) (see Chapter XVI of this section) was best suited to carry it out. A detailed study, however, was necessary to assess the feasibility of transforming INFOTERRA into the referral system of a global information network.

Reports of the Secretary-General. Three documents by the Secretary-General, prepared in co-operation with the Centre for Science and Technology for Development, served as the basis for consideration by the Intergovernmental Committee.

In a report reviewing the nature of information systems as related to the needs of developing countries,<sup>(15)</sup> the Secretary-General stressed the crucial role of scientific and technological information in the development process but pointed out that the existing facilities for collecting, storing and disseminating such information were inadequate in most developing countries. It was essential to develop the basic institutional infrastructure, combining the development of primary information sources, such as books, periodicals and technical documentation, with the growth of institutional capabilities and with mechanisms to supply information to various user groups. In view of resource constraints, the Secretary-General recommended that the introduction of computerized information systems and telecommunications should be introduced in a phased manner and that a flexible mix of modern and traditional techniques should be adopted. He also emphasized that the development of national information systems in developing countries would require greater international co-operation.

Analysis of another aspect of the substantive theme was provided by the Secretary-General in a study on the long-term plan of action for the establishment of the global information network.<sup>(16)</sup> The report assessed the results of various studies of the problem during the previous two years and the opinions from individuals and institutions involved in scientific and technological information activities. It outlined the general approach to creating a global network and to formulating criteria for developing it at the national and international levels. In his conclusions, the Secretary-General recommended that the initial stage of establishing the network should include the following basic elements: strengthening international assistance to developing countries in setting up their own national information systems and networks, especially through UNESCO's Intergovernmental Programme for Co-operation in the Field of Scientific and Technological Information; assigning to UNEP's INFOTERRA the functions of the science and technology global source referral network to be established under the auspices of the United Nations; enhancement of inter-agency co-ordination between the Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems (ACCIS) and the ACC Task Force on Science and Technology for Development; and formulation of pioneer projects to provide developing countries with basic primary information sources through voluntary contributions.

Following a 1983 request of the Intergovernmental Committee,<sup>(17)</sup> the Secretary-General also submitted a review of the existing and planned scientific and technological information systems and services of various United Nations entities.<sup>(18)</sup>

Activities of UNU. Questions related to scientific and technological information constituted part of a major programme area of the United Nations University (UNU).<sup>(19)</sup> Its activities were aimed at strengthening the capacity and monitoring the development of information and communication technologies in developing countries and devising new modes for sharing knowledge. In 1984-1985, UNU had co-operated in organizing special training courses and regional training colleges in Colombia and Sri Lanka and at the International Centre for Theoretical Physics (Trieste, Italy), and launched a training programme jointly with Trinity College (Dublin, Ireland). In Malaysia, a joint project focused on the applications of microprocessor and microcomputer technology in agriculture and educational local area networks. By the end of 1985, the Communication Centre of Scientific Knowledge, established in 1984 under UNU auspices, had produced for distribution in India 50 manuals in various local languages on food, water, environment, housing, rural energy, health and social co-operation. UNU was also a co-sponsor of a regional workshop for communicating scientific knowledge useful for underprivileged groups at the Indian Institute of Technology at Madras.

Advisory Committee consideration. After discussing, at its February session,<sup>(9)</sup> the ways available to the international community to create a global information network, the Advisory Committee arrived at the following conclusions: adequate national efforts represented the essential base upon which any network might be built; there was an urgent need for a minimum of primary information in each developing country to sustain scientific and technological activities; at the international level, a global referral service should be developed enabling national systems to locate relevant information sources; and such an international referral system should provide for linkages among existing systems and services, while avoiding duplication. The Committee also recommended that a series of projects should be initiated to furnish the universities, scientific and technological institutions and the national libraries of the less developed countries with important scientific journals through voluntary contributions. In addition, it proposed initiating a permanent programme to assist the formulation of national scientific and technological information policies, with the creation and improvement of corresponding instruments and institutions.

Intergovernmental Committee action. The Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 June,<sup>(20)</sup> decided that developing countries should be encouraged to seek international assistance, particularly that of United Nations entities, to strengthen their own national information systems and that strong national capabilities were indispensable for the development of a global information network. The Committee requested the entities and other organizations to support the developing countries in setting up those systems. It further requested the ACC Task Force in co-operation with ACCIS to study the feasibility of extending INFOTERRA to all sciences and technologies and asked the Secretary-General to elicit information from Governments regarding their requirements from a global net work and their most urgent technical assistance and training needs. He was also to seek information on Governments' possible contributions towards organizing the network by allowing access to their national systems, their offers of facilities for training specialized personnel from developing countries and their provision to those countries of technical and other kinds of support. In addition, the Committee requested the Secretary-General to disseminate to Governments and other users the Advisory Committee's 1985 directory of United Nations data bases and information systems; urged the regional commissions to enhance their efforts to set up regional information systems; and asked the Centre for science and technology to report biennially on the implementation of the Intergovernmental Committee's recommendations. Developing countries were invited to formulate projects aimed at providing them with basic primary information sources, such as journals and magazines.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 40/193, the General Assembly noted the Intergovernmental Committee's conclusion that setting up and strengthening national information systems should form the major activity in developing a global information network.

Financing

UN Financing System

In its fourth year of operation since January 1982,<sup>(1)</sup> the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development continued, despite diminishing finances, to assist developing countries in strengthening their scientific and technological capacities. By October 1985, it had financed 103 projects and served as a forum for the exchange of experience, with inputs totalling about $60 million. Since mobilization of resources through normal pledging procedures had been hindered by uncertainty of the System's long-term financial and institutional arrangements, co-operative arrangements with Governments and non-governmental and private organizations had assumed critical importance, according to a report on UNFSSTD operations in 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> prepared by the Administrator of UNDP in consultation with the DIEC Director-General.

Operational activities

In allocating funds for its operational activities UNFSSTD was guided by priorities in science and technology as expressed by developing countries. Thus, of the total of $55.5 million approved by the System in 1985, most of the resources went to the two programme areas dealing with the linkage of research and development activities to the productive sphere (36 per cent) and strengthening of scientific and technological infrastructure (26 per cent). In the research/production sphere, a UNFSS-sponsored project in Jordan resulted in a breakthrough in low-cost housing techniques; in China, international assistance was channelled for new technologies in the food industry; and in Jamaica, a project was brought to completion with the inauguration in June of facilities for bauxite testing and processing. Projects dealing with infrastructure included establishing a Centre for Earth Sciences and Geological Cartography in Tunisia and expansion of the Asian Institute of Technology which provided post-graduate and continuing education for countries in the region.

In the programme area covering science and technology policies and plans for development, UNFSSTD-supported projects were completed in the Caribbean and Guinea, while a new project was begun in Ethiopia to assist in planning and institution-strengthening in the aftermath of natural disasters. With regard to human resources development, projects on science teaching took place in Swaziland and Zambia and three projects were completed in Latin America dealing with training in artisanal coastal fishery (Haiti), post-graduate studies in the chemistry of natural products (Paraguay) and master programmes in sciences (Peru). The preparatory stage of a UNFSSTD-supported Technological Information Pilot System (TIPS) project continued during 1985, focusing on the nature and structure of the national focal points designed to distribute technical information among TIPS users.

Despite a slow-down in the flow of project requests, over 1,000 official requests had been received from developing countries by the end of 1985, with the majority of new submissions generated by country and subregional programming exercises being carried out in Africa. Since the number of requests far exceeded available resources, the project portfolio was extensively revised to select the most promising projects endorsed by requesting Governments, appraised through UNFSSTD established channels and further strengthened by technical inputs of UNDP, the concerned United Nations entities and independent experts. In the absence of substantial replenishment of the Financing System's core resources, trust fund operations had become a significant funding source, with three major funds launched in 1985 amounting to $7.8 million.

The lack of core resources also had an impact on follow-up activities. Efforts to secure funding by bilateral or multilateral agencies, particularly the UNDP indicative planning figures (IPFs), brought only limited success: co-financing arrangements with IPFs included a project to establish a metallurgical research and development institute in Nigeria and a small-scale remote sensing and satellite photo-interpretation training centre in Ethiopia. In Latin America and the Caribbean, 17 countries took part in implementing the second phase of the Regional

Non-Destructive Testing Network, with more than 1,500 operators trained and certified during the year. UNFSSTD was also involved in events aimed at promoting international exchange in science and technology. In April, a national remote sensing centre in China hosted an international seminar on the development and application of remote sensing, organized in co-operation with the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the State Scientific and Technological Commission of China. The System was invited by UNCTKD to sponsor an inter-agency project related to pharmaceutical supplies (see p. 717). A seminar on institutional linkages between research and productive sectors (São Paulo, Brazil, November) was sponsored by UNFSSTD and the São Paulo government as part of the latter's two-year technical co-operation programme.

Continuing in 1985 its evaluation programme to ensure project quality, UNFSSTD had projects in India, Jamaica, Somalia and Tunisia reviewed by outside experts.

Financial situation

Following a 1984 General Assembly decision,(3) an informal open-ended intergovernmental working group reviewed the long-term financial and institutional arrangements for the Financing System and outlined its proposals at the June session of the Intergovernmental Committee.(4) The group Chairman noted that there had been a broad consensus on the uncertain immediate outlook for additional resources and on the usefulness of UNFSSTD under current arrangements; agreement on its continuation, however, was dependent on its potential to attract additional resources. The suggestions presented by the Chairman on his own behalf included: continuing the current arrangements for mobilizing resources during a further two-year period beginning in 1986; additional efforts by the Secretary-General to mobilize adequate funding for those arrangements; establishing a relationship between core and non-core resources; reviewing the arrangements between UNDP and UNFSSTD in order to enlarge support to the System during the proposed extended period; consultations by the Secretary-General with interested Governments with a view to convening a consultative meeting on science and technology in 1986; and strengthening the working relations between the UNFSSTD secretariat and the Centre for science and technology. The Intergovernmental Committee was to provide guidelines on the proposals and assess their implementation in its annual review of the System's operations.

The Committee, on 7 June,(5) reaffirmed the importance of establishing the long-term financial and institutional arrangements for UNFSSTD and appealed to all Member States to participate and to pledge the maximum possible to the System at the November 1985 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see p. 463). The Committee requested the Secretary-General to consult with Member States on broadening the System's financial base and to submit his recommendations to the General Assembly not later than October. In other action of the same date,(6) the Committee urged Governments to bring about as early as possible the long-term arrangements.

Reporting on his consultations, the Secretary-General, in October,(7) proposed to make UNFSSTD more secure through closer linkage with UNDP. As envisaged by the Secretary-General, it would have two types of operational resources (core and non-core) and a separate administrative account; its institutional structure would consist of the Intergovernmental Committee for overall policy guidance and the UNDP Governing Council for operational activities; it would have closer working arrangements with UNDP units; and its operations would focus on project appraisal, funding, implementation and evaluation. The Secretary-General recommended that the Assembly implement his suggestions in 1986 for three years, to be reviewed at the end of that period, and urged Governments to indicate their willingness to contribute during the current Assembly session and at the November Pledging Conference. The Secretary-General stressed that all core and non-core resources received through September were fully committed and that other resources were insufficient to maintain normal operations beyond 1985. He emphasized that if no funds were forthcoming in 1986 or earlier, Governments would have to decide on terminating UNFSSTD.

Those recommendations were considered informally during the Assembly session, when a general consensus was reached regarding the need for adjustments to existing arrangements.

UNDP Governing Council action. In June 1985, the UNDP Governing Council considered a report(8) of the UNDP Administrator describing the operations of UNFSSTD from March 1984 to March 1985. The report outlined new project development initiatives and co-operative arrangements with Governments and NGOs, including the emergence of trust funds as an important source of new project funding. The status of intergovernmental negotiations on the long-term institutional and financial arrangements for UNFSSTD was also summarized.

On 28 June(9) the Council approved two projects to be funded by UNFSSTD. It called on the Administrator to assist the Secretary-General to carry out the responsibilities entrusted to him by the Intergovernmental Committee with regard to technology transfer (see p. 718) and requested him to keep Council members informed on relevant developments.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/194 without vote.

United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development

The General Assembly,

Taking note with interest of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development and on the financial and institutional structure of the System for the next three years, as called for under resolution 6(VII) of 7 June 1985 of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development,

Regretting that the current resource outlook of the Financing System does not at this time permit the full implementation of the long-term financial and institutional arrangements set out in General Assembly resolution 37/244 of 21 December 1982,

Expressing its appreciation for the contribution which the Financing System has made, despite its meagre financial base, to enhancing science and technology capabilities in developing countries as called for in the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and in General Assembly resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979,

Emphasizing the importance of continuing the operational activities of the Financing System,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to review the recommendations contained in his report on the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development in the light of comments made by Governments during the fortieth session of the General Assembly, to hold informal consultations with Governments early in 1986 to arrive at final proposals and to transmit the resulting proposals to Governments by 1 March 1986;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to convene by 30 April 1986 a Pledging Conference for the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development to enable Governments to pledge resources for 1986 and to give indications of intent to provide other resources for 1986 and the following years;

3. Further request the Secretary-General to take all steps necessary to bring about a successful outcome of the pledging conference;

4. Decides that, to maintain a viable level of operations, the total resources made available to the Financing System in 1986 should be sufficient to permit a level of operations not less than the average level achieved by the System over the past three years,* and which would result in a reasonable balance between core and non-core resources;

5. Decides further that, should the amounts realized for 1986 fall below this level, the Secretary-General should report on the results of the 'pledging conference, together with his views on the future of the Financing System, including its orderly termination, to the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development at its eighth session;

6. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to bring this matter to the attention of the Governing Council of the Programme at its thirty-third session with a view to seeking authorization to carry out possible new responsibilities that may be assigned to the Programme with regard to the Financing System, including the provision of such administrative support for specific functions and/or posts as may be required;

7. Urges Governments to make every effort to provide the maximum support possible for the financing and operations of the Financing System.

*Approximately $10 million.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989Add.4) without vote, 13 December (meeting 51); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.126), based on informal consultations; agenda item 84 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 30, 51; plenary 119.

Other aspects of science and technology financing

Mobilizing financial resources for science and technology was also taken up by the Advisory Committee at its February session.(10) The Committee proposed convening a panel to develop recommendations for enhancing the process.

An ad hoc panel of specialists on mobilizing financial resources for scientific and technological development in developing countries was held at Islamabad, Pakistan, from 4 to 10 November.(11) Noting that there was no real alternative to domestic efforts at resource mobilization, the panel emphasized the need for political commitment at the highest level and creation of a central government entity to deal with science and technology. It submitted that the very condition of acute Underdevelopment and poverty required modest but critical investment, stressed the importance of technical education and post-education and called for integrating science and technology into the framework of other national policies and plans. Upon examining the effectiveness of various resource-generating techniques, the panel presented a list of policy instruments which could be used by developing countries in line with their specific needs. It concluded, however, that mobilization per se would be of no avail unless the efficiency and management of scientific and technological institutions improved.

Contributions and expenditures

Uncertainty regarding the long-term financial and institutional arrangements for the Financing System again hindered the mobilization of resources through normal pledging procedures, with less than $150,000 pledged in that manner during 1985.

Institutional arrangements

National focal points

The Centre for science and technology continued its efforts to establish and maintain an up-to-date registry of national focal points for science and technology for development. As requested by the Intergovernmental Committee in 1982,(1) the Secretary-General presented a list of national focal points updated as at February 1985(2) and including additional information provided by Member States since March 1983, when the initial registry had been compiled.(3) The registry listed the 159 Member States of the United Nations and five non-member States maintaining permanent observer missions at Headquarters (Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Holy See, Monaco, Republic of Korea, Switzerland). In 17 cases, the designation of the national focal point had been made temporarily and in three cases the Centre was awaiting information. In the interim, the registry listed the permanent mission of each country to the United Nations or, in its absence, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Intergovernmental Committee

Strengthening effectiveness of work methods

The question of enhancing the role and effectiveness of the Intergovernmental Committee was a major topic at its May/June 1985 session.(4) On 7 June,(5) the Committee adopted guidelines for selecting substantive themes, which in its view should: be closely related to the programme areas of the Vienna Programme's operational plan; address policy issues related to strengthening endogenous scientific and technological capacities in developing countries; promote those countries' collective self-reliance; cut across several sectors of science and technology; and be of relevance to developed and developing countries and to the activities of concerned United Nations entities. The Committee selected two substantive themes for consideration at its 1987 session: the application of science and technology to the study, prevention, monitoring and combating of drought and other natural disasters; and the impact of new and emerging areas of science and technology on the development of developing countries. The Advisory Committee was requested to prepare for the in-depth study of those themes and to comment on the guidelines for theme selection.

In other action of the same date,(6) the Intergovernmental Committee invited a more active participation in it and a more effective contribution to its work and urged a further strengthening and development of substantive themes. Affirming its commitment to comply with a 1984 General Assembly resolution(7) by which the Assembly had identified science and technology for development for biennial consideration by the Second Committee in odd-numbered years, the Committee decided that the biennial cycle of its own meetings should begin in 1987. It further decided that at each session the Chairman for the following session should be elected, that appropriate country groups should nominate the other members of the Bureau, and that the Chairman should be elected for calendar years, should assist in preparations for each session and for contacts with the Advisory Committee, and should be responsible for reporting the session's results to the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Intergovernmental Committee's report on its seventh (1985) session (New York, 28 May-7 June)(4) was submitted to the Economic and Social Council, which took note of it on 25 July by decision 1985/175.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/193 without vote.

Report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development and General Assembly resolution 34/218 of 19 December 1979,

Noting that the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, at its seventh session, considered as a substantive theme the question of information systems for science and technology for development, and noting the conclusion, in Committee resolution (VII) of 7 June 1985, that the setting up and strengthening of national information systems and networks should form the major activity in the process of development of a global information network,

Noting further the mid-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme of Action conducted by the Committee and its decision, in its resolution 4(VII) of 7 June 1985, to undertake a comprehensive review in 1989,

1. Takes note of the report of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development on its seventh session;

2. Endorses the resolutions and decisions contained therein.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.4) without vote, 11 November (meeting 30); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.19), based on informal consultations and orally revised; agenda item 84 (d).

Advisory Committee

The Advisory Committee on Science and Technology for Development, established to provide policy and planning advice for the deliberations of the Intergovernmental Committee, held its fifth session in New York from 4 to 13 February 1985,(8) focusing on the two substantive themes selected by the Intergovernmental Committee for consideration in 1985: a mid-decade review of the Vienna Programme, and information systems for science and technology for development (see above, under respective headings). The Advisory Committee also reviewed its work in the medium term, considering the guidelines for a November 1985 panel on mobilization of financial resources (see p. 713) and a panel on science, technology and self-sufficiency in food, scheduled for January 1986. Looking to the medium-term future, the Committee outlined several broad themes related to the Vienna Programme to serve as the basis for its work programme: generation and support of the scientific and technological community in developing countries; the innovation process in developing countries; multilateral co-operation; science and technology and long-term ecological crises; and problems of rapidly growing urban areas. In addition, the Committee identified other areas of interest requiring further investigation and proposed a tentative schedule for panel meetings on the new topics.

On 7 June,(9) the Intergovernmental Committee took note of the Advisory Committee's report and expressed appreciation to Austria, Canada, Italy, Japan, Swaziland, the USSR and the United States for their co-operation in holding panels and workshops in 1984 and 1985. In implementing its work programme, the Advisory Committee was requested to take into account the substantive themes chosen by the Intergovernmental Committee and to use the guidelines for selecting those themes in planning future activities. The Intergovernmental Committee recommended that the General Assembly authorize the Advisory Committee to constitute a maximum of four ad hoc panels of specialists in 1986 and 1987, with no more than two one-week panel meetings held each year. Certain aspects of the Advisory Committee's work were covered by other Intergovernmental Committee resolutions of the same date (see pp. 714 and 716).

Centre for science and technology

Serving as the secretariat for the Intergovernmental Committee, the Advisory Committee and the ACC Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, the Centre for Science and Technology for Development continued throughout 1985 to provide support for the implementation of the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action. Since the Centre had no mandate for undertaking operational projects, its efforts had been mainly directed towards promoting in-depth analysis of the issues pertaining to the Programme and catalysing action for fulfilling its objectives.

A major focus in 1985 was on scientific and technological information systems for development. The Centre prepared background documents for the January ad hoc panel of experts in Rome (see p. 709), carried out a number of studies leading to the final report on the establishment of the global network of scientific and technological information, prepared a survey on the existing and planned information services in the United Nations system (see p. 710), and organized an interregional seminar on the role of information in accelerating scientific and technological progress in developing countries (Moscow, 24 September-5 October). It also organized a preparatory workshop in New York (13 and 14 August) and an ad hoc panel of specialists in Islamabad (4-10 November) on mobilization of financial resources, and a preparatory workshop on science, technology and food security (Cairo, Egypt, 21-25 October).

The Centre maintained its regular interaction with the national focal points (see p. 714), Governments and regional organizations and published its newsletter UPDATE, covering the work of the Intergovernmental and Advisory Committees and other organizations. In a continued effort to alert developing countries to the positive and negative implications of new technologies, it worked to develop further the Advance Technology Alert System (ATAS), launched in 1984,<sup>(10)</sup> putting out the ATAS Bulletin, each issue of which focused on a specific area of new technology.

An assessment of the Centre's activities for the previous five years was presented in a report by the Secretary-General on the mid-decade review of the implementation of the Vienna Programme.<sup>(11)</sup>

The Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 June,<sup>(12)</sup> decided that the Centre's regular reports on the activities of the United Nations system in implementing the Vienna Programme should give special attention to the subjects related to the substantive themes and to other programme areas. It also requested the Centre's Executive Director to submit to the Committee at its 1986 session a proposal for a working methodology for a 1989 end-of-decade review (see also p. 709). Also on the same date,<sup>(13)</sup> The Committee took note of the Centre's efforts in implementing the ATAS programme, publishing the proceedings of the ad hoc panels and seminars convened by the Advisory Committee and organizing follow-up activities to the recommendations of the Intergovernmental and Advisory Committees. Expressing thanks to all Governments and organizations which provided support for those efforts, the Intergovernmental Committee encouraged the Centre to accord higher priority to them during 1986 and 1987 and reiterated its request to all national and international potential donors to support the growth of the Centre's activities.

Co-ordination in the UN system

Established by ACC to promote closer co-operation among United Nations bodies in implementing the Vienna Programme, the Task Force on Science and Technology for Development held its sixth session at Geneva from 29 to 31 January 1985.<sup>(14)</sup> After discussing follow-up and implementation of joint activities, the Task Force agreed that financing remained the principal problem, requiring greater commitment from United Nations organizations and agencies, and suggested thematic joint programming meetings to be held by the lead agencies to implement individual projects. The Task Force also drafted a decision for adoption by ACC (see below) and proposed that the Intergovernmental Committee request United Nations agencies to include joint activities in their 1986-1987 programme budgets. With regard to criteria for building endogenous capacities in developing countries, the Task Force decided to set up an open-ended working group under the chairmanship of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) to formulate terms of reference for policy-oriented studies and inter-agency missions to developing countries at their request. After examining a mid-decade review on implementing the Vienna Programme, the Task Force agreed to issue a list of documents on the subject published by United Nations organizations. Other items on the session's agenda concerned information systems for science and technology (see p. 709), proposed themes for consideration at the Intergovernmental Committee's 1986 session, follow-up to the Advisory Committee's ad hoc panels, and co-operation with the Organization of the Islamic Conference.

Acting on the Task Force's conclusions, ACC decided, in April,<sup>(15)</sup> that preparation of programme budget proposals for 1986-1987 provided an opportunity for submitting to respective governing bodies proposed allocations to joint activities, and requested executive heads of the lead agencies to explore ways of mobilizing extrabudgetary resources.

On 7 June,(16) the Intergovernmental Committee called for enhancing the effectiveness of the Task Force's inter-agency co-ordination mechanisms in co-operation with ACCIS. Also that day,(12) the Committee recommended that the cross-organizational programme analysis on the activities of the United Nations system, planned by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination for 1987, should examine measures for ensuring compatibility between the medium-term plans of United Nations entities.

Technology transfer

Questions of choice, acquisition and transfer of technology continued to be in the focus of attention of several United Nations bodies during 1985, particularly UNCTAD and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO).

UNCTAD activities. A major emphasis in the work of UNCTAD's Trade and Development Board in 1985 was follow-up to decisions adopted at the 1984 sessions of the Committee on Transfer of Technology.(1) With regard to technical and operational assistance provided by the Advisory Service on Transfer of Technology, the Board, on 29 March,(2) noted the progress made by the Service in responding to developing countries' requirements and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue providing information on its work, including data for a 1986 review by the Committee on Transfer of Technology. The Board requested the Service to give priority to requests of developing countries in formulating and implementing related plans; utilizing technologies in the public domain; formulating strategies for the technological development of sectors important to individual developing countries; preparing training programmes and operational tools; establishing efficient co-operative arrangements among developing countries; and improving their access to United Nations-funded research and development. The Board urged that the Service be provided with sufficient resources.

Concerning new and emerging technologies, the Board, also on 29 March,(3) underscored their major implications for world trade and development and for the technological transformation of developing countries. Taking note of the UNCTAD secretariat's preliminary work on the economic, commercial and developmental aspects of those technologies, the Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare a study of those issues, particularly examining their impact on the export performance of developing countries. He was also requested to ensure the integrated study of those issues within the secretariat and to submit his report to the Committee on Transfer of Technology at its 1986 session.

In other March actions,(4) the Board took note of the Committee's report on its 1984 regular session,(5) and authorized its Chairman to continue informal consultations on issues in individual sectors of critical importance to developing countries. The latter question was again addressed by the Board on 27 September,(6) when it requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene before the 1986 session of the Committee an intergovernmental expert group on the transfer, application and development of technology in the energy sector, with particular attention to new and renewable sources of energy (see Chapter X of this section). He was invited to seek extrabudgetary resources to offset the cost of participation by experts from the least developed countries, and also requested to expedite work on the transfer, application and development of technology in the food sector and to report the results to the Committee in 1986. The Committee was requested to convene the remaining meetings of governmental experts, as had been decided by UNCTAD in 1983.(6)

Also on 27 September,(7) the Board invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Transfer of Technology in 1986 on development aspects of the work in pharmaceuticals by the World Health Organization (WHO). It also invited UNFSTSD to give priority to the joint inter-agency project on formulation of strategies for facilitating pharmaceutical supplies to developing countries and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report in 1986 to the Committee on Transfer of Technology on the results of a WHO-sponsored conference at Nairobi, Kenya (see PART II, Chapter V) and on UNCTAD activities in the pharmaceutical sector.

During 1985, UNCTAD published a number of case-studies which examined aspects of the transfer of technology: implications of technology transfer by small and medium-sized metalworking enterprises in Argentina and Brazil;(8) establishment of an information and documentation system on the transfer of technology in Ethiopia;(9) international transfer of technology by Japan's small and medium enterprises in developing countries;(10) policy and institutional issues of transfer of technology in Nepal;(11) and implementation of laws and regulations on transfer of technology in Nigeria.(12)

Conscious of the importance of effective mechanisms for the transfer of technology, the Intergovernmental Committee, on 7 June,(13) requested the Secretary-General to contact Member States informally on ways of tackling issues left unresolved by the 1979 United Nations Conference on Science and Technology for Development,(14) possibly at a special session of the Intergovernmental Committee; he was to report on the outcome in 1986.

UNIDO activities. The thrust of UNIDO's work in technology transfer and acquisition during 1985, as described in its annual report,(15) continued to be strengthening negotiating capabilities of developing countries. As part of that effort, UNIDO provided advisory services on request; conducted technical workshops in Greece, Mali and Nigeria; held a technical workshop in Poland on contract negotiation and project preparation for African countries; prepared guidelines for guarantees and warranties; and consolidated training material for strengthening negotiating capabilities in African countries. Much of the work continued to be channelled through the Technological Information Exchange System (TIES). Data on some 800 contracts were added during the year to the information contributed under TIES and maintained by the UNIDO secretariat. The Tenth Meeting of Heads of Technology Transfer Registries (Cairo, December) reviewed trends in technology transfer flows and contractual arrangements, and assessed the development of the computerized registry information system as an important element of TIES.

On 31 May,(16) the Industrial Development Board requested the UNIDO Executive Director to present a report on the development and transfer of technology, including the Industrial and Technological Information Bank, to the next session of the competent organs of UNIDO, and reaffirmed the relevant resolutions of the 1984 Fourth General Conference of UNIDO(17) and the previous conclusions of the Board on the subject.

Draft code of conduct

Following a 1983 decision of the General Assembly,(18) the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology, initially convened under UNCTAD auspices in 1978,(19) was held at Geneva from 13 May to 5 June 1985. The Conference continued working on the draft code-comprising a preamble and nine chapters-by initially establishing two working groups to examine, respectively, issues outstanding in chapter 4, on restrictive practices, and chapter 9, on applicable law and settlement of disputes. A third working group, established at a later stage, dealt with a number of issues still outstanding in chapters 1 (scope of application), 5 (obligations) and 8 (international institutional machinery).

Describing the status of the negotiations at the conclusion of the sixth session, the UNCTAD secretariat noted that most of the unresolved issues fell under a broad category of provisions concerning the regulation of transfer of technology transactions and the conduct of parties to them. Regarding chapter 4, the Conference succeeded in drawing up a list of 14 restrictive practices to be avoided; three of them, however, needed further elaboration. In addition, despite substantial progress made in formulating an introductory section setting forth the characteristics of the practices to be avoided, the relevant circumstances and the applicability of the chapter to transactions between affiliated enterprises, certain differences had persisted among regional groups. The text of chapter 9 had not been formally drafted; while there appeared to be a broad consensus on the formulation of the provisions on conciliation and arbitration, differences remained in the approaches proposed by regional groups with respect to the choice of law.

The provisions of the code falling under another broad category, related to action by Governments, had all been agreed upon, except for two subparagraphs in chapter 8 concerning the nature of the institutional machinery and the nature, mandate and timing of the review conference.

In view of the fact that the sixth session was unable to complete the negotiations on an international code of conduct, the Conference, on 5 June, requested the General Assembly to consider the possibility of reconvening the negotiations. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to transmit to the Assembly the draft code and the appropriate documentation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/184 without vote.

International code of conduct on the transfer of technology

Recalling its resolution 38/153 of 19 December 1983,

Taking note of the decision adopted on 5 June 1985 by the United Nations Conference on an international Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology, at its sixth session, in which it requested the General Assembly to take the measures necessary for further action, including the possible reconvening of negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology,

1. Notes that progress has been made in the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology but that there are still important problems outstanding;

2. Further notes that at the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology, progress was made in identifying common ground, as well as divergences, in respect of the issues outstanding in chapter 4 of the draft code, on restrictive practices, and in chapter 9, on applicable law and settlement of disputes;

3. Believes that further work, continuing the genuine efforts made by all parties concerned, is required in the search for possible solutions to the outstanding issues in order to complete successfully the negotiations on a code of conduct;

4. Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the President of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology to consult, as appropriate, with regional groups and Governments, taking into account the need for balanced geographical representation, with a view to identifying appropriate solutions to the issues outstanding in the code of conduct;

5. Further invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the progress made in the consultations referred to in paragraph 4 above and decides to take, at that session, further action on the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology.

Brain drain

In 1985, UNCTAD and the General Assembly continued to search for solutions to the problem of the outflow of skilled personnel from developing countries, known as the reverse transfer of technology or brain drain.

UNCTAD activities. Pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,(1) the Third Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology was held at Geneva from 26 August to 4 September 1985. The Meeting examined studies prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat on policy approaches and measures; a preliminary outline of a set of guidelines; and elements for a questionnaire on quantitative and qualitative information on the reverse transfer of technology.

In its conclusions and recommendations, included in the Trade and Development Board's report on its September session,(2) the Meeting stressed that, reinforced by the current adverse economic situation, outflows of skilled manpower had increased and taken new forms, undermining developing countries' efforts to accelerate their development processes and prompting implications of global concern. Although measures had been adopted to mitigate the adverse effects of the brain drain, concerted international action was needed to complement national efforts. The Meeting concluded that a foundation had been established for moving to a universal approach and that improvement of policy implementation and information dissemination was closely linked to establishing guidelines for an integrated action programme. It recommended that the documentation submitted to the Meeting and its report(3) be circulated to all UNCTAD member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and United Nations entities. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to convene, not later than the first quarter of 1987, the next expert meeting to consider an action programme on the reverse transfer of technology. Regretting the absence of receiving developed countries from the three meetings, the Third Meeting urged those countries to participate fully and asked United Nations entities to co-operate with UNCTAD in its work.

Inter-agency group meeting. The Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology, established in 1984(4) to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations system in responding to the needs of the countries concerned, met on 24 and 25 June 1985 at Geneva. The meeting, held under the chairmanship of UNCTAD, was convened in pursuance of a 1984 Assembly request.(1) The Group's report(5) summarized information provided by ILO, UNCTAD, UNDP, UNIDO and the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations on their activities related to the brain drain. In its concluding remarks, the Group noted that joint projects launched by ILO with the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration were a good example of United Nations action to achieve better results. The Group emphasized that its meetings played a catalytic role in the co-ordination of efforts and stressed that its 1984 conclusions(4) constituted a constructive framework for co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/191 by recorded vote.

Reverse transfer of technology

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975, 35/56 of 5 December 1980 and the resolutions on the reverse transfer of technology,

Continuing to believe that since the outflow of skilled personnel from developing countries seriously hampers their development, there is an urgent need to formulate national and international policies to avoid the "brain drain" and to obviate its adverse effects,

Convinced that the search for durable solutions to the problem of the reverse transfer of technology requires the full participation of all parties concerned,

1. Takes note of the report of the Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology, covering meetings held at Geneva on 24 and 25 June 1985;

2. Takes note also of the outcome of the Third Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Reverse Transfer of Technology, held at Geneva from 26 August to 4 September 1985;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to convene a meeting of governmental experts to review the current situation with respect to all aspects of the international migration of skilled personnel from developing countries; the governmental experts should focus, in their study, on the nature, scale and effect of such flows, taking into account the concerns of all parties, with a view to proposing to the Conference and, as appropriate, other international organizations, further work that they may carry out to mitigate adverse consequences of this phenomenon, especially as it affects the developing countries, also taking into account, as appropriate, the work done thus far by governmental expert groups, and any other relevant material;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to prepare studies providing:

(a) A review of the existing situation with respect to the international migration of skilled personnel from developing countries based on the most recently available and generally acceptable statistics;

(b) A comprehensive bibliography of current literature in this field;

5. Recommends that the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development should invite all interested organs and bodies of the United Nations system and other appropriate international organizations to participate in the preparation of the studies and in the work of the meeting of governmental experts;

6. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report on the outcome of the meeting of governmental experts to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Trade and Development Board;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to convene further meetings of the Inter-Agency Group on Reverse Transfer of Technology and to report on the results of those meetings to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

Against: United States

Speaking in the Second Committee on behalf of the Eastern European countries and Mongolia, Bulgaria said that the approved text should in no way restrict the existing mandate of UNCTAD on matters relating to the reverse transfer of technology. Canada welcomed the fact that the Committee had been able to approve a revised text in a spirit of compromise. The United Kingdom said it voted in favour without prejudice to the position it had taken on previous resolutions on the subject. Yugoslavia, for the Group of 77 developing countries, regretted that paragraph 4 (a) had caused difficulties for some delegations, since it felt that the reference to generally acceptable statistics did not change the work methods of the UNCTAD secretariat.

Chapter XIII

Social and cultural development

Poverty and underdevelopment remained major obstacles to social progress in 1985. Statistics of total output showed the grip of recession on different country groups and the uneven recovery towards mid-decade, which was strong in North America but hardly felt in much of Western Europe, parts of Asia, many countries in Latin America and the Caribbean, and most of Africa.

In a context of persistent underdevelopment and growing insecurity, the world social situation continued to be marked by violence, economic and other imbalances and contradictions, the emergence of new problems due to shifting economic, social and national interests, and the increasing use of adjustment or austerity measures.

The Commission for Social Development held its twenty-ninth session at Vienna, Austria, from 18 to 27 February 1985. Following its recommendations, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolutions on the family (1985/29), an inter-regional consultation on developmental social welfare policies (1985/26), the co-operative movement (1985/22), welfare of migrant workers and their families (1985/24) and timely distribution of documents (1985/20). The Council also adopted resolutions on the social aspects of development (1985/31), implementation of the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development (1985/34) and the progress of the Commission's work (1985/36).

Both the Council and the General Assembly dealt with the world social situation in resolutions 1985/21 and 40/100, respectively and with national experience in achieving social and economic changes—1985/32 and 40/23.

In addition, the Assembly adopted a resolution on improving the United Nations role in social development (40/98) and the Council dealt with social welfare policies for African migrant workers (resolution 1985/64).

The Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was held at Milan, Italy, from 26 August to 6 September. It adopted the Milan Plan of Action on crime prevention and criminal justice and Guiding Principles for crime prevention in the context of development, as well as four other major international instruments and 26 resolutions.

The Assembly expressed its appreciation to Italy for hosting the Congress (40/37). It approved the Milan Plan and recommended the Guiding Principles for action (40/32). It adopted Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (40/33) and a Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power (40/34). Also on the recommendation of the Congress, it adopted two resolutions on the development of standards for the prevention of juvenile delinquency (40/35) and on domestic violence (40/36).

Efforts continued by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to promote the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin. The Assembly, by resolution 40/19, welcomed the steady increase in the number of States parties to the 1970 UNESCO Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property.

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation—economic and social trends and policy; rural development; special economic areas. Health and human resources: disabled persons; the role of qualified national personnel in development. Human rights: popular participation; right to development; rights of migrant workers. Women: women and development. Children, youth and aging: child welfare.

Social development and welfare

World social situation

The 1985 Report on the World Social Situation,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted in accordance with guidelines set forth in 1982 General Assembly<sup>(2)</sup> and 1983 Economic and Social Council<sup>(3)</sup> resolutions, was the eleventh in the series issued by the United Nations since 1952. It sought to reflect the complex and changing relations between the economic and social, national and international facets of development, while providing an intersectoral analysis of trends and treatment of issues and policies, bearing in mind different social and cultural traditions. The Report, which appeared at a time when the United Nations was celebrating the fortieth anniversary of its founding, noted that social conditions had changed profoundly since 1945 by technology and decolonization, to take two prominent influences, but stubbornly resisted change in other areas as testified to by violent conflict and mass poverty.

The Report was divided into two parts. The first considered major obstacles to social progress, such as underdevelopment and the difficulties of international economic co-operation, conflicts and militarism, and violence to groups and individuals. The second part took up the forces of change, including education, technology, information and communication, employment, urbanization and changes in values, and the role of the State.

Poverty and underdevelopment remained major obstacles to social progress, and stark inequalities among countries diminished opportunities for co-operation. A feature of the preceding few years had been the simultaneous adjustment to external imbalances by a large number of countries by cutting the imports which would have been the others' exports; that added to surplus world export capacity and unemployment while domestic needs in many parts of the world went unmet. The tragedy of famine at a time of ample food supplies in global markets pointed to another long-standing imbalance. Another symptom was a widespread tendency to cut what were considered to be dispensable social expenditures. It had become more difficult to keep in perspective the importance of a balance between social investment and long-term economic health and development.

In connection with the Report, the Secretary-General presented in January 1985 an analysis<sup>(4)</sup> of the co-ordination between the United Nations and its specialized agencies in the collection of social statistics and the preparation of reports on social issues, also requested by the Assembly in 1982.<sup>(2)</sup> The report identified three types of reports on social issues produced by the United Nations—recurrent analytical reports, world-wide or regional in coverage; reports on the implementation of strategies and plans of action; and ad hoc reports on specific issues. Primary responsibilities for the international collection, compilation and dissemination of social statistics were basically decentralized by subject-matter in the international statistical services. Offices engaged in collecting data included the statistical services of the United Nations Secretariat, ILO, FAO, UNESCO and WHO. The Commission for Social Development took note of the report on 27 February 1985.<sup>(5)</sup>

The United Nations University organized during 1985 a number of symposia and workshops and prepared research papers on human and social development.<sup>(6)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/21 without vote.

World social situation.

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/54 of 3 December 1982,

Having considered the report of the Commission for Social Development on its twenty-ninth session,

1. Endorses the conclusions reached by the Commission for Social Development on the world social situation and on the 1985 report on the world social situation, annexed to the present resolution;

2. Transmits those conclusions to the General Assembly for its consideration.

ANNEX

Conclusions of the Commission for Social Development

I. World social situation

1. The Commission notes that recent years have seen a worsening of the social situation in many parts of the world, particularly in Africa, as a result of the disruptive consequences of the global economic crisis. Achievements registered in certain regions and countries or in specific areas of social development do not alter the fact that this deterioration affects the developing countries in particular. Long-lasting problems that have an important bearing on the situation remain unsolved. Additionally, new problems have appeared, both in developing and in industrial countries, and much remains to be done to achieve the various objectives adopted by the international community. Some countries appear to remain untouched by the general deterioration.

2. The Commission reaffirms that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom.

3. Four decades after the victory over fascism and nazism and the founding of the United Nations, pressing social problems continue to exist.

4. It is necessary to achieve the rapid and complete elimination of the obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples. Colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, aggression, occupation and foreign domination and all other forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples constitute major obstacles to the economic and social progress of developing countries and peoples. It is indeed regrettable that even after the four decades that have elapsed since the founding of the United Nations, progress in the eradication of apartheid in South Africa remains slow and unsatisfactory.

5. The existing inequities and imbalances in international economic relations are widening the gap between developed and developing countries, thereby constituting a major obstacle to the development of the developing countries and adversely affecting international relations and the promotion of world peace and security. The arms race and the aggravation of international tension continue to contribute to the deterioration of the world social situation. Disarmament would release resources that could be used for the development of developing countries and could contribute to the well-being and prosperity of all.

6. It is necessary to have a reduction of social and economic disparities and the adoption of measures to ensure the effective participation of all people in the preparation and execution of national policies for economic and social development, based on equal opportunities for all and a full enjoyment of human rights.

7. The adverse social situation reflects the lack of implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, other relevant United Nations charters and declarations in the social and economic fields, and the objectives and overall development goals adopted and reaffirmed in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

8. Certain social and economic changes have occurred that have had broad and negative repercussions on the elements constituting the social sphere. There is a need to adapt governmental policies to the new and urgent needs that have arisen.

9. Greater attention needs to be accorded to a unified approach to development, as well as to the pursuance of international economic policies in areas of trade, and monetary and fiscal policies consistent with the overall objectives of growth and development. The interdependence that exists between economic development and social development is much more apparent in developing countries facing a crushing debt burden, which at present is having a devastating impact on the social conditions of vulnerable groups. The worsening of the social situation has a serious impact in particular areas and countries, notably on employment and income distribution. Even though additional measures are required for social progress, economic development is an essential prerequisite. It has been stressed that social change and development can exert a positive influence in extricating societies from their economic difficulties. The establishment of the new international economic order has become of great importance for social progress.

10. A more rational use of various available resources should be made by Governments, communities, local authorities and voluntary organizations to deal with the worsening social situation, paying greater attention to the most essential and deserving aspects of social development.

11. The 1985 report on the world social situation and the discussion on the report in the Commission clearly indicate that existing approaches to socio-economic development have not always been able to solve the problems of mass poverty and underdevelopment. Alternative development methods are needed, involving, in particular, more effective participation by the people. Hopeful prospects for future progress towards social amelioration are emerging in developed countries. Technological marvels have appeared on the scene in those countries and been socially assimilated by them at a remarkable rate. The potential exists for applying existing and future technologies to the enhancement of social and productive life in the developing countries.

12. The social situation should be monitored in depth on a regular basis, paying special attention to the manner of implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

II. 1985 report on the world social situation

13. The Commission, conscious of its responsibility for the serious consideration and discussion of the issues before it, expresses its concern at the considerable delay in the circulation of the documents, including the 1985 report on the world social situation, and urges the Secretary-General to ensure that the documents and the report to be considered by the Commission are distributed as prescribed under the rules of procedure of the functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council.

14. The Commission is of the view that the report on the world social situation will better serve the purpose of analysis of the world social situation and trends if it is prepared at four-yearly intervals, as this provides a reasonable time-span for measuring change.

15. For the sessions held in the intervening years, the Commission should have before it a draft framework of the forthcoming report on the world social situation, to allow it to make suggestions in regard to the preparation of the report, and an updated report on the main issues and trends of international concern that have emerged since the last report on the world social situation was prepared.

16. The next report on the world social situation should envisage an overview of trends, within the framework of overall development, and of the impact of continuing imbalances in the world economy and international economic crises that particularly affect developing countries. The report should provide an intersectoral analysis of trends, issues and policies in the national, regional and international contexts. It should cover ways of overcoming obstacles to social progress, the relationship between peace and development, the need for disarmament and major international social and economic concerns, in line with the priorities indicated by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

17. The next report should also include a more thorough analysis of the impact of new and emerging technologies on socio-economic conditions, particularly in developing countries. It should analyse the progress that has been made in the international diffusion of appropriate technology and application of technology in improving social conditions in developing countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/21

29 May 1985

Meeting 23

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1) without vote, 17 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1985/24 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

In resolution 1985/20, the Council requested the Secretary-General to ensure that future reports on the world social situation were distributed no later than 12 weeks before the commencement of the Commission session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/100 by recorded vote.

World social situation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/152 of 17 December 1979 and 37/54 of 3 December 1982 on the world social situation,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New

International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, and 36/194 of 17 December 1981, in which it endorsed the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Recalling further its resolution 39/29 of 3 December 1984 on the critical economic situation in Africa,

Bearing in mind its resolutions 40/14 of 18 November 1985 on the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace and 40/17 of 18 November 1985 on channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations,

Recognizing that social progress and development are founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person,

Bearing in mind that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and the fair distribution of the benefits therefrom, and that the pace of development in the developing countries as a whole should be accelerated substantially in order to enable them to achieve this goal,

Mindful that the existing inequalities and imbalances in the international economic system are widening the gap between developed and developing countries and thereby constitute a major obstacle to the development of the developing countries and adversely affect international relations and the promotion of world peace and security,

Conscious that each country has the sovereign right freely to adopt the economic and social system that it deems the most appropriate and that each Government has a primary role in ensuring the social progress and well-being of its people,

Reaffirming that economic growth must go hand in hand with qualitative and structural changes, the reduction of social and economic disparities and the adoption of measures to ensure the effective participation of all peoples in the preparation and execution of their national policies for economic and social development,

Convinced of the urgent necessity rapidly to eradicate colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and all forms of racial discrimination, apartheid, terrorism in all its forms, aggression, foreign occupation and alien domination and all forms of inequality, exploitation and subjugation of peoples, which constitute major obstacles to economic and social progress as well as to the promotion of world peace and security,

Reaffirming the existence of the interrelationship of peace, disarmament and development and therefore the imperative need to halt the arms race, thereby releasing valuable resources that could be used for the development of the developing countries and could contribute to the well-being and prosperity of all,

Reaffirming also that the primary responsibility for their development rests with the developing countries themselves and that the commitment from other countries to support these efforts is of vital importance for achievement of this aim,

Having considered the 1985 Report on the World Social Situation,

1. Takes note of the 1985 Report on the World Social Situation,

2. Takes note also of the conclusions of the Commission for Social Development at its twenty-ninth session;

3. Notes with deep concern the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation of the world, in particular in the developing countries, whose position has been further worsened by sharp fluctuations in exchange rates, high real rates of interest, the severe fall in commodity prices, serious deterioration in the terms of trade of developing countries, increased protectionist pressures, the reverse transfer of resources from developing countries, crushing debt burdens, the restrictive adjustment process demanded by financial and development institutions, the decline in official development assistance in real terms and the severe inadequacy of resources experienced by multilateral development and financial institutions;

4. Notes further with deep concern that the economic and social situation in Africa continues to be critical and that it has been exacerbated by the world recession and by famine, drought and desertification;

5. Calls for full implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/29 on the critical economic situation in Africa;

6. Notes with great concern the slow progress in the implementation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development(') and in the attainment of the objectives and overall development goals adopted and reaffirmed in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade;(8)

7. Reaffirms that the social aspects and goals of development are an integral part of overall development and that it is the sovereign right of each country freely to determine and implement appropriate policies for social development within the framework of its development plans and priorities;

8. Emphasizes the importance, for the achievement of social progress, of the establishment of the new international economic order;

9. Reaffirms the urgent need to implement the socio-economic development objectives contained in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, as well as the need to implement the socio-economic objectives of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

10. Emphasizes again that the rapid socio-economic progress of developing countries requires substantially enhanced multilateral and bilateral financial support and advanced technological assistance to national development efforts, rendered within the framework of the development plans of developing countries;

11. Calls upon all Member States to promote economic development and social progress by the formulation and implementation of an interrelated set of policy measures to achieve the goals and objectives established within the framework of national plans and priorities in the fields of employment, education, health, nutrition, housing facilities, crime prevention, the well-being of children, equal opportunities for the disabled and the aged, full participation of youth in the development process and full integration and participation of women in development;

12. Calls upon the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to mobilize the necessary resources to undertake measures aimed at improving social conditions and achieving the main objectives set forth in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries;

13. Also calls upon Member States to make all efforts to promote the accelerated and complete elimination of such fundamental elements hindering economic and social progress and development as colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism and all forms of racial discrimination, apartheid, terrorism in all its forms, aggression, foreign occupation, alien domination and all forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples, and also to undertake effective measures to lessen international tensions and to halt the arms race and redistribute released resources in order to promote social and economic development;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to continue monitoring the world social situation in depth on a regular basis and to submit the next full report on the world social situation to the General Assembly in 1989, for consideration at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council;

15. Also requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the next report on the world social situation, to take into account the observations made by Member States on the 1985 report as well as the conclusions of the Commission for Social Development contained in the report on its twenty-ninth session;

16. Further requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements for wide dissemination of the reports on the world social situation;

17. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to co-operate fully with the Secretary-General in the preparation of future reports by making available all relevant information pertaining to their respective areas of competence;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fourth session the item entitled "World social situation".

General Assembly resolution 40/100

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 127-1-24 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/963) by vote (120-1-23), 27 November (meeting 56); draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.3/40/L.12/Rev.1), orally revised: agenda item SO.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 16-23, 30, 37, 55, 56; plenary 116.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Wet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Yugoslavia, on behalf of the sponsors, declared that the wording of the draft resolution had been revised to achieve consensus. However, since there had been a request for a vote, the original paragraph 3 should replace the revision, which had expressed concern at the economic crisis and decline that developing countries had had to face as a result of deep global recession.

The United States opposed the text because it contained a formulation on economic issues outside the competence of the Third Committee and presented too negative a view of the economic and social situation. It had serious difficulties in particular with the economic language in paragraphs 3, 8 and 10 and the seventh preambular paragraph, and considered that paragraph 13 and the tenth and eleventh preambular paragraphs contained political elements inappropriate in a Third Committee draft.

Speaking for the Nordic countries, Finland regretted the lack of normal pre-consultations on the text, elements of which, it felt, fell within the mandate of other Main Committees; Luxembourg expressed a similar view, on behalf of the States members of the European Economic Community, Portugal and Spain. Japan did not agree with the wording of some paragraphs, particularly paragraph 3. Australia believed that the language of paragraph 3 would have been more appropriate in the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee. Austria regretted the inclusion of the original paragraph 3. Canada felt that paragraphs 3 and 4 contained an inexact description of the world situation.

Social aspects of development

The Economic and Social Council and/or the General Assembly adopted resolutions on the social aspects of development, social progress and development, implementation of the 1969 Declaration on Social Progress and Development,(7) national experience in achieving social progress and impact of development on the family. The Secretary-General reported on social aspects of rural development.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/31 without vote.

Social aspects of development

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the resolve enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and for these ends to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Recalling also the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order and the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Aware that the attainment of the goals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade calls for a concerted effort to promote genuine social development,

Convinced that men and women can achieve complete fulfilment of their aspirations only within a just social and political order and that it is consequently of cardinal importance to accelerate social and economic progress and the respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms everywhere, thus contributing to international peace and security,

Persuaded that social development can be promoted by friendly relations and co-operation among States with different social, economic or political systems, as well as by effective arms reduction and disarmament measures,

Aware that mounting economic problems in various parts of the world, unprecedented in the history of the United Nations, negatively affect and diminish the status of social development policies,

1. Recognizes the significance of social aspects of development and the constant need to elaborate their national and international dimensions;

2. Calls upon all Governments and all institutions, both national and international, to intensify their organizational, intellectual and financial efforts with a view to promoting the social aspects of development;

3. Decides to include the question of the social aspects of development in the provisional agenda for the thirtieth session of the Commission for Social Development.

Social progress and development

On 13 December 1985, following a recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/98.

Improvement of the role of the United Nations in the field of social development

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development based on the Charter of the United Nations and solemnly proclaimed on 11 December 1969,

Recalling also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 33/48 of 14 December 1978 on world social development and 35/56 of 5

December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Taking into account the discussion of the Economic and Social Council, during its first regular session of 1985, on the work of the Commission,

Having considered the 1985 Report on the World Social Situation,

Noting with concern that, although recovery and growth are under way in some States, the recession that has afflicted the world economy in recent years has had a deep negative impact on the economies of many countries,

1. Notes with concern that the ideals of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development have not been implemented nor have the objectives and overall development goals adopted and reaffirmed in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade been achieved yet;

2. Reaffirms that the socio-economic aspects and goals of development are an integral part of the overall development process;

3. Reaffirm also the urgency of taking effective measures aimed at further promoting social progress and development;

“The General Assembly,

“Recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, based on the Charter of the United Nations and solemnly proclaimed on 11 December 1969, “Recalling also its resolutions 2543(XXIV) of 11 December 1969 and 34/59 of 29 November 1979 on the implementation of the Declaration, “Recalling further its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, 33/48 of 14 December 1978 on world social development, and 34/152 of 17 December 1979 and 37/54 of 3 December 1982 on the world social situation, “Convinced that international peace and security, on the one hand, and social progress and economic development, on the other, are closely interdependent and influence each other,

“Bearing in mind that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the social situation of entire populations and ensuring their full participation in the process of development and the fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

“Reaffirming that social progress and development shall be founded on respect for the dignity and value of the human person and shall ensure the promotion of human rights and social justice, “Aware of the fact that, fifteen years after the adoption and proclamation of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, its main objectives, embodied also in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, inter alia, elimination of unemployment, hunger, malnutrition and poverty, eradication of illiteracy, assurance of the right to universal access to culture, provision of health protection of the entire population, provision of free, universal education at the primary level, and promotion of human rights and social justice, have not yet been universally realized,

“Recalling that the peoples of the United Nations expressed in the United Nations Charter their determination to save future generations from the scourge of war and to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom,

“Fully conscious of the urgent need of intensifying the efforts by the international community and relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to achieve the objectives set forth in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development and in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

“1. Reaffirms the lasting validity and importance of the principles and objectives proclaimed in the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;

“3. Urges all Governments to take into account the provisions of the Declaration in their bilateral and multilateral relations in the field of development;

“4. Recommends that international organizations and agencies concerned with development should consider the Declaration as an important international document in the formulation of strategies and programmes designed to achieve social progress and development, and that it may be taken into consideration in the drafting of instruments that the United Nations may undertake in the field of social progress and development;

“5. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a substantive report on possible ways and means of increasing the contribution of the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as far as they are concerned, to achieving the full realization of the principles and objectives contained in the Declaration and to submit it, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

“6. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to inform the General Assembly, in a summary form in annexes to the reports on the world social situation, of the measures adopted by Governments-not included in other reports provided on a regular basis-and by the international organizations concerned for the

29 May 1985 Meeting 23 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1) without vote, 24 May (meeting 15); 6-nation draft (E/1985/C.2/L.3/Rev.1); agenda item 17.

The Commission for Social Development, in its conclusions endorsed by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1985/21, asserted that the adverse social situation reflected the lack of implementation of the 1969 Declaration<sup>(7)</sup> and other United Nations declarations on social and economic matters, and of the goals of the 1980 International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.<sup>(8)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 40/98, the General Assembly noted with concern that the ideals of the Declaration had not been implemented nor had the objectives of the Strategy been achieved, and called on United Nations bodies to improve social conditions and achieve the main objectives set forth in those instruments.

National experience in achieving social progress

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(9)</sup> submitted a report on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for social progress,<sup>(10)</sup> based on 11 replies as at 30 April 1985 to a note verbale sent by him to Member States. Austria, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany and Poland provided information on recent changes in social policies; the Byelorussian SSR, Greece, Iraq, Mongolia, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR gave information on the overall objectives of national development efforts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/32 by recorded vote.

National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress

The Economic and Social Council,

Guided by the desire to promote a higher standard of life, full employment and conditions for economic and social progress and development,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Mindful of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, as well as the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Noting its resolutions 1581 A (L) of 21 May 1971, 1667(LII) of 1 June 1972 and 1746(LIV) of 16 May 1973 concerning the importance of fundamental structural socio-economic changes for the strengthening of national independence and the achievement of the ultimate goals of social progress,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3273(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/38 of 30 November 1976, 36/19 of 9 November 1981 and 38/25 of 22 November 1983, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the importance for every State to exercise its inalienable right to carry out fundamental social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress and the necessity of studying national experience in this field,

Desirous of securing a speedy and complete removal of all obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples,

Convinced that peaceful coexistence and co-operation among States create favourable international conditions for the socio-economic development of all countries, in particular developing countries,

Considering that the exchange of national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress would contribute to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Reaffirming the sovereign and inalienable right of all peoples freely to determine their political status and freely to pursue their economic, social and cultural development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

2. Calls upon all States to give special attention in their national development plans and programmes to the social aspects of development with a view to increasing the well-being of the population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to make arrangements for holding the interregional seminar called for in paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 38/25 within the resources already requested for sectoral and regional advisory services;

4. Invites all States to submit to the Secretary-General national reports on their experience in carrying out far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with all States, a further report on national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress, taking into account the provisions of General Assembly resolutions 36/19 and 38/25, and to submit it to the Assembly at its forty-second session through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council;

6. Requests the Commission for Social Development to consider at its thirtieth session the question of national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress.

Against: United States

Abstaining: Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, United Kingdom.

In the opinion of the United States, the inter-regional seminar and additional report requested were wasteful of scarce resources; the reports prepared on the subject for the past several years had proved to be of no practical value. The United Kingdom also had reservations with regard to the report requested.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/23 by recorded vote.

National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress

The General Assembly,

Guided by the desire to promote a higher standard of life, full employment and conditions for economic and social progress and development,

Bearing in mind the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Mindful of the provisions of the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, as well as the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Desirous of securing a speedy and complete removal of all obstacles to the economic and social progress of peoples, especially colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, military, political and economic intervention and pressure, foreign aggression and occupation or alien domination, as well as all forms of inequality and exploitation of peoples,

Convinced that peaceful coexistence and co-operation among States, as well as effective measures in the field of disarmament, create favourable international conditions for the socio-economic development of all countries, in particular developing countries,

Considering that the exchange of national experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress would contribute to the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

3. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/32 of 29 May 1985, paying special attention to paragraphs 3 and 5 thereof;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General to make arrangements for holding in 1986 the interregional seminar called for in paragraph 3 of General Assembly resolution 38/25, within the resources allotted to the programme for sectoral and regional advisory services;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress".

29 November 1985 Meeting 96 133-1-11 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/879) by recorded vote (120-1-15), 11 November (meeting 37); 15-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.16); agenda item 91.

Against: United States

Abstaining: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, United Kingdom.

The United States said the item was superfluous and illustrated the tendency to ask for reports on various questions, which then spawned resolutions asking for still more reports; yet the reports had been unenlightening over the years and implementation of the current resolution would merely further divert limited resources into unproductive activities.

Chile would have preferred the sixth preambular paragraph to refer also to terrorism in all its forms.

Impact of development on the family

In response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,(11) the Secretary-General submitted in January 1985 a report on the impact of development on the institution of the family.<sup>(12)</sup> He stated that changes brought about by development often had mixed results. Development improved health, sanitation and nutrition, diminished morbidity and mortality, and increased income, standards of living, levels of education, employment, housing and transportation. It also was seen as impoverishing families, creating inequalities between men and women, and pushing innovations with no consideration for the effects on family life.

A number of trends concerning family structure were associated with the development process, the Secretary-General observed. Families were becoming smaller, with a decline in birth rates, while divorce rates and frequency of remarriage and single-parent families were increasing. There also was a greater trend towards perceiving familial arrangements, especially among the poor, as rational strategies for coping with adversity.

The needs of families should be taken into account to a greater extent by those responsible for development activities, the report concluded. In view of the limited data available, a better understanding of how families were affected by development should be sought. The tendency of additional services to replace familial functions was an area requiring greater study. National policies should address wider structural deficiencies and give more attention to bringing about positive changes in families' environments, as well as to preventing negative effects, such as child labour.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/29.

The family

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1983/23 of 26 May 1983 on the role of the family in the development process,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on the impact of development on the institution of the family, and of its conclusions,

Emphasizing the need for the greatest importance to be given to the family as basic unit of society and natural environment for the growth and well-being of all its members,

Affirming the importance of national policies which meet the needs of families and enable them to perform their essential role,

Recognizing that consideration of the needs of families is made more necessary by the special constraints which families are experiencing in social situations that are often difficult, and that it has also become more complex as a result of the growing diversity that can be observed in the forms of the institution of the family,

1. Renews its invitation to Member States to expand their efforts at the national and community levels to consider, examine, identify and evaluate the needs of families and the ways in which those needs may be more effectively met;

2. Appeals to future United Nations meetings on developmental social welfare policies and programmes to include in their deliberations the question of development and families, paying particular attention to the support of the family unit as a framework in which and through which social welfare policies and programmes can provide more effective support to family members;

3. Invites the various regional meetings at ministerial level scheduled to take place in 1985 and 1986 to consider also the question of development and families, so that each region's concerns may be fully represented;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to obtain information, to be supplied by countries and relevant international organizations, on policies and programmes concerning families, and to promote the improvement of the scope, availability and comparability of statistics and indicators relating to families;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure consistency between the policies and concepts contained in United Nations programmes and plans of action having a bearing on the family, in co-operation with the Commission on the Status of Women, the Population Commission and other relevant bodies;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to study the data available in the reports and action plans developed in the course of recent United Nations activities such as the World Assembly on Aging, the International Year of Disabled Persons, the International Year of the Child and the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, taking into account the need to strengthen policies for the welfare of the entire society;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to study further the impact of development on the family as an institution and to submit a progress report to the Council at its first regular session of 1987, through the Commission for Social Development at its thirtieth session, on developments concerning national family policies and programmes;

8. Invites the General Assembly to consider the possibility of including in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session an item entitled "Families in the development process", with a view to considering a possible request to the Secretary-General to, initiate a process of development of global awareness of the issues involved, directed towards Governments, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations and public opinion.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/29

29 May 1985                      Meeting 23                      Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1) without vote, 17 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1985/24 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

Social aspects of rural development

In accordance with a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in January 1985 a rep on on the social aspects of rural development,<sup>(14)</sup> which the Council took note of in decision 1985/135 on 29 May, on the President's oral proposal. The Secretary-General stated that despite set-backs, frustrations and changes in developmental directions, the record of developing countries in rural development in past decades had been quite good.

Notwithstanding the general progress, a certain amount of waste and missed opportunities had been associated with many rural development programmes. An incoherent multiplicity of projects reflecting the carry-over remnants of past approaches, unco-ordinated donor initiatives and ad hoc pressures posed by domestic interest groups had probably achieved less than if there had been an overall sound, focused policy. Further, owing to budgetary constraints, many projects in recent years had collapsed once foreign assistance had been withdrawn, or had remained inadequately supplied, as frequently was the case in rural health centres, or insufficiently maintained, as was true of many rural roads.

An increasing number of countries had begun to adopt far-reaching reform measures in agricultural pricing, subsidies and parastatal policies, which appeared to favour production over welfare objectives. Those measures had also been endorsed by several multilateral and bilateral agencies, and had been promoted by them sometimes as part of their lending and assistance programmes.

If unaccompanied by developmental programmes and projects, however, price incentive policies might end up primarily benefiting farmers in a position to take advantage of them, namely, commercial farmers in relatively developed, fertile areas. To reach emergent farmers, it would be necessary to continue programmes ranging from extension services and infrastructure development to the testing of commercial plant hybrids for rain-fed areas, improving erosion controls and so forth. To achieve growth in most rural areas, however, and to ensure greater social equity in opportunities and work, more would be needed than pricing policy reforms.

Evaluation of UN social development activities

On 29 May 1985, in resolution 1985/36 on the progress of work of the Commission for Social Development, the Economic and Social Council requested the Committee for Programme and Coordination (CPC) to review the current evaluation timetable and study the possibility of evaluating in depth the effectiveness, relevance and impact of United Nations social development activities.

On 6 December,<sup>(15)</sup> in a follow-up to the resolution, a note by the Secretariat recalled that in 1984 CPC had established a timetable for in-depth evaluation of programmes between 1986 and 1992.<sup>(16)</sup> It had been stressed that if the need arose, CPC might alter the topics or the order in which they were to be considered. In the light of that, CPC might wish to consider replacing one of the existing topics in the timetable by social development or adding social development to the list, for review in 1994.

Social welfare

Social welfare policies and programmes

Regional and interregional activities

Three regional intergovernmental meetings on developmental social welfare policies and programmes were held during 1985: the Fourth Conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 18-26 March); the Third Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Development (Bangkok, Thailand, 9-15 October); and the Pan-Arab Regional Conference on Social Welfare Policies (Tunis, Tunisia, 12-15 October).

The United Nations and the League of Arab States held a sectoral meeting on social development (Amman, Jordan, 19-21 August 1985),<sup>(17)</sup> in response to a 1983 General Assembly resolution.<sup>(18)</sup> A range of items were discussed, including: the volume and level of technical assistance provided for social development by the United Nations in the Arab region; a review and assessment of past efforts; assistance to youth; United Nations participation in the October 1985 Tunis Conference (see above); Arab projects on population, education, development, the communications media, illiteracy, technical education and correctional institutions; and establishment of an Arab Centre for Research and Training in Social Development. The meeting emphasized the usefulness of United Nations-League endeavours in social development research, training, exchange of information and publications, technical assistance and meetings.

Interregional consultation

The Secretary-General, in accordance with a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(19)</sup> presented in January 1985 a report<sup>(20)</sup> reviewing Secretariat activities in social development, with particular reference to the convening of an interregional consultation on developmental social welfare policies and programmes. The Secretary-General concluded that there was much support for such a consultation to review developments and set targets for the year 2000 and beyond.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, following the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/26.

Interregional consultation on developmental social welfare policies and programmes

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1983/22 of 26 May 1983, concerning the taking of steps to convene an interregional consultation on developmental social welfare policies and programmes, within existing budgetary resources,

Recalling also its resolutions 1979/18 of 9 May 1979 and 1981/20 of 6 May 1981 on the strengthening of developmental social welfare policies and programmes,

Noting that government policy affects the well-being of all citizens and thus requires continuous interaction between its social, economic and other elements,

Aware of the serious consequences of the world-wide economic recession for the welfare of peoples and for the funding and delivery of social services which are even more essential now than in periods of economic growth,

Convinced that there is a need to reassess social welfare policy in the light of past experience and present issues, in order to arrive at effective strategies for the future,

Taking note of the efforts made to relate the concerns expressed in Council resolution 1983/22 to the preparations for the Fourth Conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 26 March 1985, the Third Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development, to be held at Bangkok from 9 to 15 October 1985, the Pan-Arab Regional Conference on Social Welfare Policies, to be held in September 1985, and looking forward to similar conferences in Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General concerning steps taken with a view to convening an inter-regional consultation on developmental social welfare policies and programmes and the necessity of the active involvement of regional intergovernmental organizations in this effort,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the organization of the interregional consultation on developmental social welfare policies and programmes to be held, within existing budgetary resources, at Vienna, at an appropriate policy-making level, in the autumn of 1987 when regional preparations will be completed, and to which all States would be invited, with the objective of appraising present policies and programmes and developing themes and setting goals in the social field for the year 2000, taking into account the Declaration on Social Progress and Development;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to assist in the conduct of regional intergovernmental meetings, which would consider, inter alia, issues relating to the interregional consultation;

3. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit, on the basis of consultations with Governments, to the Commission for Social Development at its thirtieth session for final comments, an annotated draft agenda for the interregional consultation, with relevant documentation to the extent possible.

29 May 1985                      Meeting 23                      Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1) without vote, 17 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1985/24 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

In resolution 1985/64, the Council urged all Member States, particularly LDCs, to prepare for and be adequately represented at the interregional consultation.

Social integration policies

Pursuant to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,(21) the Secretary-General submitted in January 1985 to the Commission for Social Development a report on recent trends in strategies for the social integration of less-advantaged population groups in developing countries.(22) Such groups generally included the poor and landless, migrant workers, disadvantaged youth, aged persons, the disabled, racial and ethnic minorities and persons discriminated against by gender. A major obstacle to a solution of the problem of the disadvantaged was their exclusion from policy- and decision-making. Analysis indicated a need for comprehensive and integrated policy approaches. Measures to establish a more positive environment and support attempts by the disadvantaged to improve their own situation included: strengthening legal codes to ensure the rights and freedoms of the disadvantaged; establishing a legal and administrative basis for affirmative action; strengthening Governments' role in advancing social integration; accelerating social and economic changes for the elimination of disparities between social groups; improving social planning and the co-ordination of activities of governmental and non-governmental groups; and providing material and legal support to facilitate participation by the disadvantaged in policy- and decision-making.

The Commission on 27 February 1985(23) took note of the report.

Co-operatives

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,(24) submitted in January 1985 a report on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement, (25) which was based, in part, on information from 22 Member States and, in addition, on a review of recent publications. It discussed the role of co-operatives in social and economic development and in improving the welfare of their members; the participation of all people in co-operatives; the inter-relationship between agrarian reform and agricultural co-operatives; strengthening movement-to-movement activities among co-operatives; the role of co-operatives in improving the production, marketing and consumption of food; training and educational programmes to promote the effectiveness of co-operatives; difficulties faced by countries in establishing co-operatives; and the role of Governments in promoting them.

The report concluded that Member States might wish to renew their commitment to promoting co-operatives in a manner consistent with preserving their autonomy and democratic character; to encourage rural co-operatives to become more directly involved in the production of food for domestic consumption; to support efforts to strengthen the movement-to-movement concept among co-operatives as an important step in promoting co-operative development; to promote the development of urban co-operatives in such areas as industrial production, credit, housing and social services; to explore ways to strengthen the involvement of women, young people, disabled persons and the aging in co-operative and self-help organizations; to promote co-operative activities among the poorest elements of society; and to encourage programmes to improve the management of co-operatives through training and educational programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/22.

National experience in promoting the co-operative movement

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 2459(XXIII) of 20 December 1968, 3273(XXIX) of 10 December 1974, 31/37 of 30 November 1976, 33/47 of 14 December 1978 and 36/18 of 9 November 1981, and Council resolution 1983/15 of 26 May 1983, Desiring to promote the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Bearing in mind the importance of the establishment and growth of co-operatives as an instrument for the full economic, social and cultural development of all members of society,

Reaffirming the important role played by co-operatives in the socio-economic development of developing countries,

Recognizing the necessity of training and educational programmes at various levels for the growth, diversification and professionalization of the management of co-operatives,

Convinced that the exchange among countries of national experience relating to the co-operative movement plays an essential role in strengthening co-operatives for the benefit of their members and in overcoming difficulties in the development of various co-operatives,

Convinced of the important role that co-operatives in the various sectors of the economy can play in improving the production, marketing and consumption of food, with particular reference to special population groups,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement;

2. Invites the regional commissions and specialized agencies concerned to make further efforts to promote the co-operative movement as an effective instrument for the improvement of the well-being of all people, and special population groups in particular;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to include pertinent information and data on the co-operative movement in developing and developed countries in relevant periodic United Nations publications;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, with particular attention to developing countries, in consultation with Member States, relevant organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations, and drawing on the work already under way elsewhere in the United Nations system, a comprehensive report on national experience in promoting the co-operative movement, paying special attention, inter alia, to the following aspects of the question:

(a) The role of co-operatives in overall social and economic development, particularly in rural areas;

(b) The role of agricultural, savings, handicraft and other types of co-operative organizations in the production, marketing and consumption of food and related goods and services;

(c) The role of co-operative and co-operative-type organizations in promoting development in urban areas;

(d) The participation of all people, including women, youth, disabled persons and the aging, in co-operatives;

(e) The participation of peasants, including landless peasants, in co-operatives;

(f) The role and extent of government support in promoting co-operatives;

(g) Training and educational programmes to promote the effectiveness of co-operatives and make them more responsive to the needs of their members;

(h) Difficulties faced by countries in the establishment and development of co-operatives and their experience in overcoming them;

(i) Progress made in strengthening "movement-to-movement" activities;

(j) Progress made in promoting membership in and the growth of co-operatives;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit that report, through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session for consideration under the item entitled "National experience in achieving far-reaching social and economic changes for the purpose of social progress".

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1) without vote, 17 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1985/24 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

Situation of workers

Income distribution

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1983,(26) the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission for Social Development in January 1985(27) a report on the conclusions of an income distribution project, including those relating to the adverse effects of the world economic crisis on income in developing countries. He said developing countries had taken a broad approach to social equity, in which equitable income distribution was a consideration, but often not a precisely formulated objective. The eradication of poverty remained a central social issue. Government efforts typically focused on such measures as extending essential services to the whole population, improving facilities in less endowed areas, removing specific barriers to the social mobility and welfare of disadvantaged groups, and promoting mechanisms for participation in society.

Among the most important factors determining income distribution were: type of economic system; land and capital ownership; technology; sectoral, regional and employment structures; education; and social stratification. Governments wishing to bring about lasting change in income distribution had to consider the impact of their policy measures on those factors.

The Commission for Social Development took note of the report on 27 February.(28)

Employment and workers' rights

Communications. On 28 May 1985,(29) Czechoslovakia, also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, transmitted to the Secretary-General their declaration on the situation in the International Labour Organisation (ILO). The declaration, which had been conveyed earlier to the ILO Director-General, charged that the basic concept and structure of ILO had remained unchanged since 1919; that ILO had virtually ignored the admission of socialist and developing countries to its membership and, in effect, served the interests of only one socio-political system, that of capitalism; and that while some useful activities on social and labour problems had been carried out, a radical change was needed in the organization's work.

On 3 July,(30) Costa Rica transmitted a document which had been before the ILO Governing Body (May/June session, Geneva) and which responded to issues raised by the socialist countries, concerning ILO activities relating to employment, disarmament, alleged ILO interference in countries' internal affairs, supervision of international labour standards by ILO machinery, alleged ILO resistance to East-West trade union co-operation, lack of East-West co-operation, assistance to employers' organizations in developing countries, technical co-operation projects, ILO structure and staffing, filling of elective posts and seat distribution in ILO bodies, and efficient use of budgetary resources.

On 9 July, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States requested that the ILO document be circulated as an official document of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council in order for all delegations to be adequately informed.

Welfare of migrant workers

In accordance with a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,(32) the Secretary-General submitted to the 1985 session of the Commission for Social Development a report on the social situation of migrant workers and their families.(33)

Current adverse economic conditions were contributing to a global increase in irregular migration and, consequently, were making migrants more vulnerable to exploitation, discrimination and abuse, the Secretary-General observed. In many parts of the world, hostility was growing towards migrants, who had to live in permanent insecurity, uncertain about their own and their children's future. A dramatic increase in foreign labour in oil-producing Middle Eastern countries, which had promoted contract or project-tied migration, also had serious implications. In that type of situation, virtually every aspect of the migrant workers' lives was controlled by the employer: they were forbidden to form unions and usually were housed in work camps situated away from population centres; the incidence of work-related deaths and injuries was high.

Greater efforts were needed to improve the situation of children of migrants, particularly with respect to education, vocational training and employment. Those issues should be fully taken into account in policies and programmes aiming to resolve problems caused by migration.

Progress had been made in drafting an international convention on the protection of the rights of migrant workers and their families (see Chapter XVIII of this section). However, if the convention was to contribute significantly to improving their position, it should include explicit provisions with regard to family reunion, housing, education of children, health care and preservation of national and cultural identity.

The General Assembly adopted resolution 40/130 on measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights of migrant workers.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/24.

Welfare of migrant workers and their families

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/12 of 9 May 1979, 1981/21 of 6 May 1981 and 1983/16 of 26 May 1983,

Having taken note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the social situation of migrant workers and their families,

Concerned by the fact that the changing conditions of international migration resulting from current economic trends adversely affect the situation of migrants, whether they remain abroad under increasingly difficult conditions or return to their country of origin,

Aware of the new needs and problems emerging as a result of the changing migration patterns of migrant workers and their families,

Noting with concern the inadequacy or lack of programmes and social services to help migrant workers to adapt themselves to the language, culture and customs of the host country, and to settle down in decent material conditions and send for their families,

Recalling that the family is the natural and fundamental group unit of society and is entitled to protection by society and the State and that, in that context, the families of migrant workers are entitled to the same protection as the migrant workers themselves,

Noting with appreciation the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established in accordance with General Assembly resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979,

Recognizing the need for further efforts at the national, bilateral, regional and international levels to improve the social situation of migrant workers and their families,

1. Invites Member States to establish and/or expand programmes and services designed to improve the welfare of migrant workers and their families and to meet the new needs and problems emerging as a result of the changing circumstances of the international migration of labour;

2. Emphasizes that such programmes should give major attention to the protection of families of migrant workers and to a substantial improvement in the conditions for genuine integration of members of migrants' families, particularly women, children and youth, into the host society; special care should be paid to the education of children, so that they maintain and develop the knowledge of their maternal language and their cultural heritage;

3. Invites Member States, both countries of origin and host countries, to facilitate the reintegration of migrant workers and their families in the case of their return to their country of origin; the participation of the host country in that process is not to be regarded as a moral obligation only, but rather as a way of assisting those who actively contributed to building up the economy of the host country;

4. Affirms the need for the Governments of the Member States concerned to enact or strictly apply legislation to prevent or punish discriminatory or xenophobic activities against migrants, to enable the migrant workers to enjoy the benefits of association within the law;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with intergovernmental organizations, specialized agencies and organs of the United Nations system, to prepare a document incorporating guidelines for establishing social services for migrant workers and their families;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to encourage operational activities within available resources, and to consider the implementation of measures based on studies already conducted by the United Nations and other international organizations concerned to benefit migrant workers and their families;

7. Invites the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to continue and strengthen their efforts in this field, in co-operation with the United Nations;

8. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the Commission for Social Development, at its thirtieth session, on the progress made in strengthening programmes designed to improve the social situation of migrant workers and their families and in meeting the needs and problems emerging as a result of the changing conditions of international migration.

African migrant workers

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1985, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/64.

Developmental social welfare policies and programmes on the situation of African migrant workers

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the serious consequences of the critical African socio-economic situation for the living conditions of the peoples in Africa, and for the funding and delivery of social services, which are even more essential now than in previous periods of economic development,

Reaffirming the essential role of social welfare in overall development and in dealing with pressing issues arising notably from food shortages, problems relating to refugees and displaced persons, the breakup of families, lack of adequate health and educational facilities, unemployment and underemployment, urbanization, and high rates of population growth,

Having considered the issue of African migrant workers and the impact it has on the socio-economic development of the sending and receiving countries,

Noting that, since 1979, work has been under way on an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families,

1. Urges all Member States, particularly the least developed countries, to prepare for and be adequately represented at the Interregional Consultation on Developmental Social Welfare Policies and Programmes, to be held in 1987;

2. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to prepare a report on the issues identified in Council resolution 1983/22 of 26 May 1983, with special emphasis on those issues of particular concern for or relevance to Africa, and to ensure that the substance of that report is taken into full consideration in the agenda and documentation of the Interregional Consultation;

3. Further requests the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to make the necessary arrangements for an in-depth study of the situation of African migrant workers in both receiving and sending countries, in order to elicit appropriate action and measures to promote the welfare and protection of the rights of the migrant workers and their families, as well as appropriate policies for their social integration;

4. Recommends the General Assembly to approve the technical and financial implications of the involvement of the Economic Commission for Africa in both activities, as submitted in section 13 of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987.

Institutional machinery

UN Research Institute for Social Development

In 1985, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development (UNRISD) continued research on food systems, popular participation, improving development data and social conditions of refugees.<sup>(34)</sup> Food security research had been conducted in 10 countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America. The failure of conventional national and international food policies to prevent recurrent food crises in Africa showed the need for a comprehensive food systems approach in analysing the root causes of hunger and famine. Moreover, research indicated that many proposed solutions to food security problems, such as decreased protectionism, rapid economic growth, increased aid, transnational investments and improved technology, might have a contrary impact, unless applied as part of carefully developed strategies.

Popular participation research examined social movements among rural workers, peasants, marginal urban populations, ethnic groups and industrial workers, and studied how such movements emerged, evolved and interacted with political parties, non-governmental organizations, élites and the State.

New approaches to the collection and analysis of development data and the testing of their practical applicability and utility were pursued. Social and economic developments were researched jointly, and a country development profile, based on 19 selected indicators, was proposed. Reports were issued on a workshop on local monitoring and analysis (Geneva, 8-10 July) and on a pilot project on local monitoring at Kerala, India.

Research on the social conditions of refugees, which had focused mainly on Africa and to a lesser extent on Asia, was expanded to include Latin America. Case-studies in the three continents helped Governments and international agencies to understand the social systems of refugee communities and reach target populations more efficiently. For example, in collaboration with El Colegio de Mexico, a study was undertaken on the integration of Guatemalan refugees in south-east Mexico and the response of the Mexican population and authorities.

Income in 1985 amounted to $2,261,520, consisting of $791,613 in government contributions to UNRISD general funds, $1,340,250 special-purpose contributions to project trust funds, $113,227 interest and $16,430 of miscellaneous income. Expenditures totalled $1,241,205.

Commission for Social Development

In the report on its February 1985 session,<sup>(38)</sup> the Commission for Social Development recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of 10 resolutions and two decisions. Seven other decisions adopted by the Commission were brought to the Council's attention.

The resolutions covered the timely distribution of documents (see p. 737), the world social situation (see p. 722), national experience in promoting the co-operative movement (see p. 733), youth in the contemporary world (see Chapter XX of this section), welfare of migrant workers (see p. 734), the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see p. 420), an interregional consultation on developmental social welfare policies (see p. 731), efforts to secure the human rights of youth (see Chapter XX of this section), implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging (see Chapter XX of this section) and the family (see p. 730).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/36.

Progress of work of the Commission for Social Development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the terms of reference of the Commission for Social Development set forth in Economic and Social Council resolutions 10(II) of 21 June 1946, 830 J (XXXII) of 2 August 1961 and 1139(XLI) of 29 July 1966, Reaffirming the central role of the Commission for Social Development within the United Nations in considering matters relating to social development,

Reaffirming that, within the United Nations system, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat has a major role to play in matters relevant to social development,

Recognizing the importance for the Commission for Social Development of exchanges of information on activities with other functional commissions of the Economic and Social Council with mandates in the social development sector, in particular the Commission on the Status of Women and the Population Commission,

Concerned that the Commission should have available to it sufficient information on social development activities within the United Nations system to enable it to make an appropriate contribution towards the fulfilment of overall development objectives, and to provide appropriate direction to the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs with respect to its work in the field of social development,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 36/228 A and B of 18 December 1981, in which guidelines were laid down by which organizations in the United Nations system were to create mechanisms for the evaluation of their work, and in which the Secretary-General was requested to strengthen the United Nations evaluation system through a series of five separate actions, including self-evaluation,

Recognising that programmes in the field of social development are formulated within the framework of the medium-term plan, and of the biennial budgets established in accordance with that plan,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission for Social Development at future sessions such details as may be available of the proposed programme of work for the forthcoming biennium so as to allow the Commission to make recommendations on matters pertaining to the social sector to the appropriate intergovernmental bodies;

2. Encourages the Secretary-General to make available to the Economic and Social Council information on areas of complementarity among the work programmes of the Commission for Social Development, the Commission on the Status of Women, the Population Commission and other relevant bodies, and to optimize the flow of information on social development within the United Nations system;

3. Recommends that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, in preparing its overview reports for the Commission for Social Development, should draw on information relating to the activities of the specialized agencies in the social development field and such other information as it considers appropriate;

4. Requests the Committee for Programme and Coordination to review the current evaluation timetable and to study the possibility of conducting an in-depth evaluation of the effectiveness, relevance and impact of United Nations social development activities, with a view to submitting it to the Commission for Social Development.

Crime prevention

Seventh UN Congress

The Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was held at Milan, Italy, from 26 August to 6 September 1985. (1) Its theme was crime prevention for freedom, justice, peace and development. The Congress was attended by 124 States and observers from 14 United Nations organs and offices, 10 intergovernmental organizations, 59 non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and two national liberation movements (for participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III).

Five major topics were considered: new dimensions of criminality and crime prevention in the context of development (topic 1); criminal justice processes and perspectives in a changing world (topic 2); victims of crime (topic 3); youth, crime and justice (topic 4); and United Nations standards in criminal justice (topic 5).

Prior to the Congress, an interregional preparatory meeting of experts on topic 1 took place at New Delhi, India, from 22 to 26 April 1985; it called on Governments to give high priority to the integration of crime prevention and criminal justice policies in national development planning. Preparatory meetings on the other four topics had been held in 1984.(2)

Leticia R. Shahani (Philippines), Assistant Secretary-General for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat, was named Secretary-General of the Seventh Congress.

The Congress adopted by consensus the Milan Plan of Action on crime prevention and criminal justice (see below), Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order (see p. 742) and four other major international instruments; 26 resolutions on a broad range of crime-related issues; and a decision approving the report of the Credentials Committee.

Decisions of the Congress

Milan Plan of Action

The Milan Plan of Action recommended that Governments accord high priority to crime prevention and criminal justice; co-operate bilaterally and multilaterally to strengthen crime prevention measures and the criminal justice process; eradicate racial discrimination, particularly apartheid; and develop public participation in preventing and combating crime. It further recommended that the United Nations and Member States give particular attention in research to possible inter-relationships between criminality and such aspects of development as population, urbanization, industrialization, housing, migration and employment opportunities. Additional study of crime in relation to human rights and fundamental freedoms was needed. The Plan also recommended that priority be given to combating terrorism and controlling illicit drug traffic and organized crime, while the United Nations would reinforce its technical co-operation activities, particularly in the areas of training, planning, exchange of information and reappraisal of legal systems.

The Plan called for continued attention to the improvement of criminal justice systems; for the strengthening of regional and interregional United Nations institutes for crime prevention; and for continued NGO involvement in the work of the United Nations on crime prevention and criminal justice. The Secretary-General was requested to review that work, together with the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, in order to establish priorities.

Other Congress action

Recommended by the Congress for adoption by the General Assembly were two major instruments—United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (see p. 746) and Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power (see p. 742)—and two resolutions on the development of standards for the prevention of juvenile delinquency (see p. 756) and on domestic violence (see p. 745). In addition, the Congress adopted a Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners and recommendations on the treatment of foreign prisoners, and Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary (see p. 757).

The Congress called on Member States to combat organized crime more effectively by introducing new offences directed at novel and sophisticated forms of criminal activity; providing for the forfeiture of illegally acquired assets; facilitating the obtaining of evidence abroad for use in national courts; modernizing national extradition laws and developing bilateral extradition treaties; conducting campaigns against drug abuse; strengthening law enforcement authorities; establishing national crime commissions; and reviewing laws related to taxation, the abuse of bank secrecy and gaming houses, and the transfer of funds for or the proceeds of organized crime across national boundaries (resolution 1).

On illicit drug trafficking and drug abuse control, the Congress recommended that a new international instrument provide for effective penalties, establish all drug trafficking offences as extraditable offences, establish a system of control of precursor substances and chemicals used in the manufacture of illicit drugs, establish jurisdictional issues regarding drug trafficking on the high seas, introduce the investigative technique of controlled delivery in cases involving major drug violators, and develop measures to counter drug smuggling through international postal systems; and invited Member States to take full advantage of the facility offered by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control to pool resources and thus achieve greater impact (resolutions 2 and 3).

The Congress requested the early establishment of an African Regional Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (resolution 4).

In other resolutions, the Congress proposed measures to enhance technical co-operation in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice (resolution 5); called for fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system (resolution 6); recommended that Member States avoid political, social, racial, religious, cultural, sexual or other kind of discrimination in the selection of prosecutors (resolution 7); and recommended the development of guidelines for the training of criminal justice personnel (resolution 8) and of crime and criminal justice information and statistical systems (resolution 9).

The Congress also welcomed the approval in 1984 by the Economic and Social Council(3) of procedures for implementing effectively the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (resolution 10); condemned extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions and requested the Secretary-General to submit a review of documents on the prevention, investigation and elimination of such executions (resolution 11); and invited States retaining the death penalty to implement the safeguards guaranteeing the rights of those facing the death penalty, approved by the Economic and Social Council in 1984(4) (resolution 15).

With respect to youth and crime, the Congress called on Member States to eliminate conditions such as illiteracy, unemployment, racial and national discrimination and other forms of social inequality (resolution 19); adopted principles, guidelines and priorities relating to research on youth crime (resolution 20); and recommended that the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control develop standard minimum rules for the protection of juveniles deprived of their liberty (resolution 21).

The Congress further urged States to facilitate the application of law enforcement measures against terrorists and to strengthen co-operation in the areas of extradition and mutual legal assistance (resolution 23).

In seven other resolutions, the Congress considered the transfer of criminal proceedings (resolution 12) and of supervision of foreign offenders (resolution 13); the 1979 Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials(5) (resolution 14); the role of lawyers (resolution 18); alternatives to imprisonment and social integration of offenders (resolution 16); the human rights of prisoners (resolution 17); and crime prevention in the context of development (resolution 22).

The Congress expressed its thanks to the people and Government of Italy for their hospitality (resolution 24).

Reports of the Secretary-General. In July 1985, the Secretary-General presented to the Seventh Congress a report(6) on implementation by States of the recommendations of the Sixth Congress in 1980,(7) in pursuance of a 1982 Economic and Social Council resolution.(8) The Secretary-General declared that the Caracas Declaration, unanimously adopted by the Sixth Congress, represented a major step towards international co-operation in the struggle against crime. In implementing the Declaration, the United Nations Secretariat had undertaken research, with special attention to new types of criminality in the context of socio-economic changes, focusing on the linkages between crime and urbanization, industrialization, unemployment and rural-urban migration. The aim was to improve the identification of socio-economic factors accompanying high and low crime rates, thus assisting Member States to develop crime prevention policies. National and international action on each of the 19 resolutions adopted by the 1980 Congress also was reported.

In October 1985, the Secretary-General, responding to a 1984. General Assembly resolution,(9) submitted a report(10) on the implementation of the conclusions of the Seventh Congress. He stated that the Congress had significantly enlarged the scope of United Nations activities in crime prevention and criminal justice by adding new mandates and amplifying the modalities of ongoing work. The Milan Plan of Action contained the elements of a worldwide programme for crime prevention and criminal justice, including the allocation of adequate resources, action-oriented research, and technical assistance to developing countries. The new Guiding Principles for crime prevention (see p. 742) would promote effective, coherent policies and allow adjustments to particular socio-economic and cultural circumstances. The Secretary-General summarized the major resolutions and instruments adopted by the Congress and made recommendations for the initial phase of their implementation.

Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/171 of 15 December 1980, in which it endorsed the Caracas Declaration, annexed to that resolution, and urged implementation of the conclusions relating to the new perspectives for international co-operation in crime prevention in the context of development adopted by the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,

Recalling also its resolution 36/21 of 9 November 1981, in which the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders was invited to consider current and emerging trends in crime prevention and criminal justice, with a view to defining new guiding principles for the future course of crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of development needs, the goals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, taking into account the political, economic, social and cultural circumstances and traditions of each country and the need for crime prevention and criminal justice systems to be consonant with the principles of social justice,

Recalling further its resolution 39/112 of 14 December 1984, in which the Secretary-General was requested to ensure that the substantive and organizational work of the Seventh Congress was fully adequate for its successful outcome,

Emphasizing the responsibility assumed by the United Nations in crime prevention under General Assembly resolution 415(V) of 1 December 1950, which was affirmed by the Economic and Social Council in its resolutions 731 F (XXVIII) of 30 July 1959 and 830 D (XXXII) of 2 August 1961, and in the promotion and strengthening of international co-operation in this field in accordance with Assembly resolutions 3021(XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 32/59 and 32/60 of 8 December 1977, 35/171 of 15 December 1980 and 36/21 of 9 November 1981,

Bearing in mind the theme of the Seventh Congress, "Crime prevention for freedom, justice, peace and development", and the importance of preserving peace as a condition for development and international co-operation,

Welcoming the fact that the Congress, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/112, paid particular attention to the question of illicit drug trafficking,

Alarmed by the growth and seriousness of crime in many parts of the world, including conventional and non-conventional criminality, which have a negative impact on development and the quality of life,

Considering that crime, particularly in its new forms and dimensions, seriously impairs the development process of many countries, as well as their international relations,

Noting that the function of the criminal justice system is to contribute to the protection of the basic values and norms of society,

Aware of the importance of enhancing the efficiency and effectiveness of criminal justice systems,

Noting that to limit effectively the harm caused by modern economic and unconventional crime, policy measures should be based on an integrated approach, the main emphasis being placed on the reduction of opportunities to commit crime and on the strengthening of norms and attitudes against it,

Aware of the importance of crime prevention and criminal justice, which embraces policies, processes and institutions aimed at controlling criminality and ensuring equal and fair treatment for all those involved in the criminal justice process,

Mindful that the incorporation of crime prevention and criminal justice policies in the planning process can help to ensure a better life for people throughout the world, promote the equality of rights and social security, enhance the effectiveness of crime prevention, especially in such spheres as urbanization, industrialization, education, health, population growth and migration, housing and social welfare, and substantially reduce the social costs directly and indirectly related to crime and crime control by ensuring social justice, respect for human dignity, freedom, equality and security,

Convinced that due attention should be paid to crime prevention and criminal justice and the related processes, including the fate of victims of crime, the role of youth in contemporary society and the application of United Nations standards and norms,

Determined to improve regional, interregional and international co-operation and co-ordination to achieve further progress in this area, including effective and full implementation of the resolutions of the Seventh Congress,

Having considered the report of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the recommendations of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, and the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the conclusions of the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, all submitted in pursuance of General Assembly resolution 39/112,

5. Endorses the other resolutions adopted unanimously by the Seventh Congress;

6. Invites Governments to be guided by the Milan Plan of Action in the formulation of appropriate legislation and policy directives and to make continuous efforts to implement the principles contained in the Caracas Declaration and other relevant resolutions and recommendations adopted by the Sixth Congress, in accordance with the economic, social, cultural and political circumstances of each country;

7. Also invites Member States to monitor systematically the steps being taken to ensure co-ordination of efforts in the planning and execution of effective and humane measures to reduce the social costs of crime and its negative effects on the development process, as well as to explore new avenues for international co-operation in this field;

8. Invites the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to review, at its ninth session, the Milan Plan of Action, the resolutions and recommendations adopted unanimously by the Seventh Congress and their implications for the programmes of the United Nations system and to make specific recommendations on the implementation thereof in its report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1986;

9. Requests the Economic and Social Council to examine, at its first regular session of 1986, the report of the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and the recommendations of the Seventh Congress for further implementation of the Milan Plan of Action in order to provide, within the United Nations system, overall policy guidance on crime prevention and criminal justice, and to undertake periodically the review, monitoring and appraisal of the Milan Plan of Action;

10. Urges the United Nations system, including the regional and interregional institutes in the field of crime prevention and the treatment of offenders and the relevant non-governmental organisations having consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to become actively involved in the implementation of the recommendations of the Seventh Congress;

11. Also urges the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the Secretariat and the United Nations Development Programme to give their full support to projects of technical assistance, in particular to developing countries, in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice and to encourage technical co-operation among developing countries;

13. Also requests the Secretary-General, in his report to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to initiate a review, as a matter of urgency, of the functioning and programme of work of the United Nations in the field of crime prevention and criminal justice, including the United Nations regional and interregional institutes, paying special attention to improving the co-ordination of relevant activities within the United Nations in all related areas in order to establish priorities and ensure the continuing relevance and responsiveness of the United Nations to emerging needs, and to submit the final report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1987;

14. Further requests the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the Seventh Congress to Member States and intergovernmental organizations in order to ensure that it is disseminated as widely as possible, and to strengthen information activities in this field;

15. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its forty-first session, a report on the measures taken to implement the present resolution;

Questions related to criminal justice

Crime prevention and development

The Seventh Congress on crime, by resolution 22, reaffirmed that crime prevention must be examined in the context of socio-economic and political systems, social and cultural values, and social change. It also reaffirmed the need for increased efforts of the international community and Member States, in the context of a proposed new international economic order (see p. 420), for crime prevention, achievement of human rights and development of nations; deplored the increase and gravity of crime; called on Member States to take measures to eliminate conditions of life that degrade human dignity, including unemployment, poverty, illiteracy, racial discrimination, apartheid and social injustice; recommended that States promote the people's broadest participation in political, social and other measures to prevent crime; reiterated that the international community must accord priority to the search for crime prevention solutions; and requested that the Eighth United Nations Congress on crime examine new dimensions of criminality in the context of development, on the basis of information provided by Member States.

The Congress also adopted Guiding Principles for Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice in the Context of Development and a New International Economic Order, which addressed itself to many issues, including various types of crime and their impact on development, planning for crime prevention and criminal justice, the role of criminal justice systems and prerequisites for international action in crime control. New approaches to meet new problems more effectively were recommended, while the potential of traditional forms of social control were simultaneously recognized. The Guiding Principles, in addition, stressed the need to protect human rights, reduce social marginality and injustice, and encourage co-operation among States through the United Nations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/32, recommended the Guiding Principles for national, regional and international action, and requested the Secretary-General to translate them into action.

ANNEX

Declaration of Basic Principles of Justice for Victims of Crime and Abuse of Power

A. Victims of crime

1. "Victims" means persons who, individually or collectively, have suffered harm, including physical or mental injury, emotional suffering, economic loss or substantial impairment of their fundamental rights, through acts or omissions that are in violation of criminal laws operative within Member States, including those laws proscribing criminal abuse of power.

2. A person may be considered a victim, under this Declaration, regardless of whether the perpetrator is identified, apprehended, prosecuted or convicted and regardless of the familial relationship between the perpetrator and the victim. The term "victim" also includes, where appropriate, the immediate family or dependants of the direct victim and persons who have suffered harm in intervening to assist victims in distress or to prevent victimization.

3. The provisions contained herein shall be applicable to all, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, age, language, religion, nationality, political or other opinion, cultural beliefs or practices, property, birth or family status, ethnic or social origin; and disability.

Access to justice and fair treatment

4. Victims should be treated with compassion and respect for their dignity. They are entitled to access to the mechanisms of justice and to prompt redress, as provided for by national legislation, for the harm that they have suffered.

5. Judicial and administrative mechanisms should be established and strengthened where necessary to enable victims to obtain redress through formal or informal procedures that are expeditious, fair, inexpensive and accessible. Victims should be informed of their rights in seeking redress through such mechanisms.

6. The responsiveness of judicial and administrative processes to the needs of victims should be facilitated by:

(a) Informing victims of their role and the scope, timing and progress of the proceedings and of the disposition of their cases, especially where serious crimes are involved and where they have requested such information;

(b) Allowing the views and concerns of victims to be presented and considered at appropriate stages of the proceedings where their personal interests are affected, without prejudice to the accused and consistent with the relevant national criminal justice system;

(c) Providing proper assistance to victims throughout the legal process;

(d) Taking measures to minimize inconvenience to victims, protect their privacy, when necessary, and ensure their safety, as well as that of their families and witnesses on their behalf, from intimidation and retaliation;

(e) Avoiding unnecessary delay in the disposition of cases and the execution of orders or decrees granting awards to victims.

7. Informal mechanisms for the resolution of disputes, including mediation, arbitration and customary justice or indigenous practices, should be utilized where appropriate to facilitate conciliation and redress for victims.

Restitution

8. Offenders or third parties responsible for their behaviour should, where appropriate, make fair restitution to victims, their families or dependants. Such restitution should include the return of property or payment for the harm or loss suffered, reimbursement of expenses incurred as a result of the victimization, the provision of services and the restoration of rights.

9. Governments should review their practices, regulations and laws to consider restitution as an available sentencing option in criminal cases, in addition to other criminal sanctions.

10. In cases of substantial harm to the environment, restitution, if ordered, should include, as far as possible, restoration of the environment, reconstruction of the infrastructure, replacement of community facilities and reimbursement of the expenses of relocation, whenever such harm results in the dislocation of a community.

11. Where public officials or other agents acting in an official or quasi-official capacity have violated national criminal laws, the victims should receive restitution from the State whose officials or agents were responsible for the harm inflicted. In cases where the Government under whose authority the victimizing act or omission occurred is no longer in existence, the State or Government successor in title should provide restitution to the victims.

Compensation

12. When compensation is not fully available from the offender or other sources, States should endeavour to provide financial compensation to:

(a) Victims who have sustained significant bodily injury or impairment of physical or mental health as a result of serious crimes;

(b) The family, in particular dependants of persons who have died or become physically or mentally incapacitated as a result of such victimization.

13. The establishment, strengthening and expansion of national funds for compensation to victims should be encouraged. Where appropriate, other funds may also be established for this purpose, including in those cases where the State of which the victim is a national is not in a position to compensate the victim for the harm.

Assistance

14. Victims should receive the necessary material, medical, psychological and social assistance through governmental, voluntary, community-based and indigenous means.

15. Victims should be informed of the availability of health and social services and other relevant assistance and be readily afforded access to them.

16. Police, justice, health, social service and other personnel concerned should receive training to sensitize them to the needs of victims, and guidelines to ensure proper and prompt aid.

17. In providing services and assistance to victims, attention should be given to those who have special needs because of the nature of the harm inflicted or because of factors such as those mentioned in paragraph 3 above.

B. Victims of abuse of power

18. "Victims" means persons who, individually or collectively, have suffered harm, including physical or mental injury, emotional suffering, economic loss or substantial impairment of their fundamental rights, through acts or omissions that do not yet constitute violations of national criminal laws but of internationally recognized norms relating to human rights.

19. States should consider incorporating into the national law norms proscribing abuses of power and providing remedies to victims of such abuses. In particular, such remedies should include restitution and/or compensation, and necessary material, medical, psychological and social assistance and support.

20. States should consider negotiating multilateral international treaties relating to victims, as defined in paragraph 18.

21. States should periodically review existing legislation and practices to ensure their responsiveness to changing circumstances, should enact and enforce, if necessary, legislation proscribing acts that constitute serious abuses of political or economic power, as well as promoting policies and mechanisms for the prevention of such acts, and should develop and make readily available appropriate rights and remedies for victims of such acts.

29 November 1985 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/881) without vote, 11 November (meeting 37); draft by Seventh Congress on crime (A/C.3/40/L.21); agenda item 98.

Domestic violence

Report of the Secretary-General. In May 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the Seventh Congress a report(15) on the situation of women as crime victims, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1984.(16) The report analysed the factors contributing to the persistent, worldwide victimization of women through crime, in various old and newly emerging forms, as well as crime-related abuses of power, and discussed policy implications and presented action alternatives aimed at ameliorating female victimization and the treatment of female victims by criminal justice systems. In that respect, the report concluded, the international community could take concrete steps by providing policy models, devising new programmes, training personnel, encouraging research, collecting data, exchanging information and making technical assistance available.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/36.

Domestic violence

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/14 of 24 May 1984 on violence in the family,

Recalling also resolution 9 adopted by the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in which the Congress called for the fair treatment of women by the criminal justice system,

Bearing in mind the recommendations made on the subject of domestic violence by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Having regard to the Declaration of the Rights of the Child, in particular principle 9 concerning the protection of the child against exploitation, neglect and cruelty, and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Mindful of the important role of the family in ensuring the proper development of the young and their integration into the mainstream of society, and in preventing delinquency,

Mindful further of the social aspects of domestic violence and of the great importance of emphasizing and developing appropriate methods of conflict resolution between the parties involved,

Recognizing that abuse and battery in the family are critical problems that have serious physical and psychological effects on individual family members, especially the young, and jeopardize the health and survival of the family unit,

Recognizing further the adverse effects of exposure to domestic violence, especially at an early stage of human development, and the incalculable harm thereof,

Convinced that the problem of domestic violence is a multifaceted one which should be examined from the perspective of crime prevention and criminal justice in the context of socio-economic circumstances,

Convinced also of the necessity to improve the situation of the victims of domestic violence,

Concerned that the abuse of alcohol, narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances may be an exacerbating factor in domestic violence and that the effects thereof should be further examined,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of women as victims of crime;

2. Invites Member States concerned to take specific action urgently in order to prevent domestic violence and to render the appropriate assistance to the victims thereof;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify research on domestic violence from a criminological perspective to formulate distinct action-oriented strategies that could serve as a basis for policy formulation and to report thereon to the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders;

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council to invite the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to examine the problem of domestic violence;

5. Urges all relevant United Nations bodies, agencies and institutes to collaborate with the Secretary-General in ensuring a concerted and sustained effort to combat this problem;

6. Invites the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to consider the problem of domestic violence under a separate agenda item dealing with domestic violence;

7. Invites Member States to adopt specific measures with a view to making the criminal and civil justice system more sensitive in its response to domestic violence, including the following:

(a) To introduce, if not already in existence, civil and criminal legislation in order to deal with particular problems of domestic violence, and to enact and enforce such laws in order to protect battered family members and punish the offender and to offer alternative ways of treatment for offenders, according to the type of violence;

(b) To respect, in all instances of the criminal proceeding, starting with the police investigation, the special and sometimes delicate position of the victim, in particular in the manner in which the victim is treated;

(c) To initiate preventive measures, such as providing support and counselling to families, in order to improve their ability to create a non-violent environment, emphasizing principles of education, equality of rights and equality of responsibilities between women and men, their partnership and the peaceful resolution of conflicts;

(d) To inform the public, as necessary, through all available channels, about serious acts of violence perpetrated against children, in order to create public awareness of this problem;

(e) To deliver appropriate, specialized assistance to victims of domestic violence, as an integral part of social policy;

(f) To provide, as a temporary solution, shelters and other facilities and services for the safety of victims of domestic violence;

(g) To provide specialized training and units for those who deal in some capacity with victims of domestic violence;

(h) To initiate or intensify research and collect data on the background, extent and types of domestic violence;

(i) To make legal remedies to domestic violence more accessible and, in view of the criminogenic effects of the phenomenon, in particular on young victims, to give due consideration to the interests of society by maintaining a balance between intervention and the protection of privacy;

(j) To ensure that social welfare and health administration systems are engaged more intensely in providing assistance to victims of familial violence and abuses, and to make all efforts to co-ordinate social welfare and criminal justice measures.

Juvenile delinquents

Minimum rules for administration of juvenile justice

The Secretary-General, in response to a resolution adopted in 1980 by the Sixth United Nations Conference on Crime, (17) submitted in April 1985 a report (18) to the Seventh Congress on progress in the formulation of standard minimum rules for the administration of juvenile justice, finalized at a 1984 interregional preparatory meeting at Beijing, China. (2)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/33.

United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (The Beijing Rules)

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as well as other international human rights instruments pertaining to the rights of young persons,

Also bearing in mind that 1985 was designated the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace and that the international community has placed importance on the protection and promotion of the rights of the young, as witnessed by the significance attached to the Declaration of the Rights of the Child,

Recalling resolution 4 adopted by the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, which called for the development of standard minimum rules for the administration of juvenile justice and the care of juveniles which could serve as a model for Member States,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 1984/153 of 25 May 1984, by which the draft rules were forwarded to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Milan, Italy, from 26 August to 6 September 1985, through the Interregional Preparatory Meeting held at Beijing from 14 to 18 May 1984,

Recognizing that the young, owing to their early stage of human development, require particular care and assistance with regard to physical, mental and social development, and require legal protection in conditions of peace, freedom, dignity and security,

Considering that existing national legislation, policies and practices may well require review and amendment in view of the standards contained in the rules,

Considering further that, although such standards may seem difficult to achieve at present, in view of existing social, economic, cultural, political and legal conditions, they are nevertheless intended to be attainable as a policy minimum,

1. Notes with appreciation the work carried out by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, the Secretary-General, the United Nations Asia and Far East Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders and other United Nations institutes in the development of the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice;

2. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the draft United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice;

3. Commends the Interregional Preparatory Meeting held at Beijing for having finalized the text of the rules submitted to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders for consideration and final action;

4. Adopts the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice recommended by the Seventh Congress, contained in the annex to the present resolution, and approves the recommendation of the Seventh Congress that the Rules should be known as "the Beijing Rules";

5. Invites Member States to adapt, wherever this is necessary, their national legislation, policies and practices, particularly in training juvenile justice personnel, to the Beijing Rules and to bring the Rules to the attention of relevant authorities and the public in general;

6. Calls upon the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to formulate measures for the effective implementation of the Beijing Rules, with the assistance of the United Nations institutes on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders;

7. Invites Member States to inform the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Beijing Rules and to report regularly to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control on the results achieved;

8. Requests Member States and the Secretary-General to undertake research and to develop a data base with respect to effective policies and practices in the administration of juvenile justice;

9. Requests the Secretary-General and invites Member States to ensure the widest possible dissemination of the text of the Beijing Rules in all of the official languages of the United Nations, including the intensification of information activities in the field of juvenile justice;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to develop pilot projects on the implementation of the Beijing Rules;

11. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to provide the necessary resources to ensure the successful implementation of the Beijing Rules, in particular in the areas of recruitment, training and exchange of personnel, research and evaluation, and the development of new alternatives to institutionalization;

12. Requests the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders to review the progress made in the implementation of the Beijing Rules and of the recommendations contained in the present resolution, under a separate agenda item on juvenile justice;

13. Urges all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the regional commissions and specialized agencies, the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, other intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to collaborate with the Secretariat and to take the necessary measures to ensure a concerted and sustained effort, within their respective fields of technical competence, to implement the principles contained in the Beijing Rules.

ANNEX
United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice
(The Beijing Rules)

Part one. General principles

1. Fundamental perspectives

- 1.1 Member States shall seek, in conformity with their respective general interests, to further the well-being of the juvenile and her or his family.
- 1.2 Member States shall endeavour to develop conditions that will ensure for the juvenile a meaningful life in the community, which, during that period in life when she or he is most susceptible to deviant behaviour, will foster a process of personal development and education that is as free from crime and delinquency as possible.
- 1.3 Sufficient attention shall be given to positive measures that involve the full mobilization of all possible resources, including the family, volunteers and other community groups, as well as schools and other community institutions, for the purpose of promoting the well-being of the juvenile, with a view to reducing the need for intervention under the law, and of effectively, fairly and humanely dealing with the juvenile in conflict with the law.
- 1.4 Juvenile justice shall be conceived as an integral part of the national development process of each country, within a comprehensive framework of social justice for all juveniles, thus, at the same time, contributing to the protection of the young and the maintenance of a peaceful order in society.
- 1.5 These Rules shall be implemented in the context of economic, social and cultural conditions prevailing in each Member State.
- 1.6 Juvenile justice services shall be systematically developed and co-ordinated with a view to improving and sustaining the competence of personnel involved in the services, including their methods, approaches and attitudes.

Commentary

These broad fundamental perspectives refer to comprehensive social policy in general and aim at promoting juvenile welfare to the greatest possible extent, which will minimize the necessity of intervention by the juvenile justice system, and in turn, will reduce the harm that may be caused by any intervention. Such care measures for the young, before the onset of delinquency, are basic policy requisites designed to obviate the need for the application of the Rules.

Rules 1.1 to 1.3 point to the important role that a constructive social policy for juveniles will play, inter alia, in the prevention of juvenile crime and delinquency. Rule 1.4 defines juvenile justice as an integral part of social justice for juveniles, while rule 1.6 refers to the necessity of constantly improving juvenile justice, without falling behind the development of progressive social policy for juveniles in general and bearing in mind the need for consistent improvement of staff services.

Rule 1.5 seeks to take account of existing conditions in Member States which would cause the manner of implementation of particular rules necessarily to be different from the manner adopted in other States.

2. Scope of the Rules and definitions used

- 2.1 The following Standard Minimum Rules shall be applied to juvenile offenders impartially, without distinction of any kind, for example as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinions, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.
- 2.2 For purposes of these Rules, the following definitions shall be applied by Member States in a manner which is compatible with their respective legal systems and concepts:
  - (a) A juvenile is a child or young person who, under the respective legal systems, may be dealt with for an offence in a manner which is different from an adult;
  - (b) An offence is any behaviour (act or omission) that is punishable by law under the respective legal systems;
  - (c) A juvenile offender is a child or young person who is alleged to have committed or who has been found to have committed an offence.
- 2.3 Efforts shall be made to establish, in each national jurisdiction, a set of laws, rules and provisions specifically applicable to juvenile offenders and institutions and bodies entrusted with the functions of the administration of juvenile justice and designed:
  - (a) To meet the varying needs of juvenile offenders, while protecting their basic rights;
  - (b) To meet the needs of society;
  - (c) To implement the following rules thoroughly and fairly.

Commentary

The Standard Minimum Rules are deliberately formulated so as to be applicable within different legal systems and, at the same time, to set some minimum standards for the handling of juvenile offenders under any definition of a juvenile and under any system of dealing with juvenile offenders. The Rules are always to be applied impartially and without distinction of any kind.

Rule 2.1 therefore stresses the importance of the Rules always being applied impartially and without distinction of any kind. The rule follows the formulation of principle 2 of the Declaration of the Rights of the Child.

Rule 2.2 defines "juvenile" and "offence" as the components of the notion of the "juvenile offender", who is the main subject of these Standard Minimum Rules (see, however, also rules 3 and 4). It should be noted that age limits will depend on, and are explicitly made dependent on, each respective legal system, thus fully respecting the economic, social, political, cultural and legal systems of Member States. This makes for a wide variety of ages coming under the definition of "juvenile", ranging from 7 years to 18 years or above. Such a variety seems inevitable in view of the different national legal systems and does not diminish the impact of these Standard Minimum Rules.

Rule 2.3 is addressed to the necessity of specific national legislation for the optimal implementation of these Standard Minimum Rules, both legally and practically.

3. Extension of the Rules

- 3.1 The relevant provisions of the Rules shall be applied not only to juvenile offenders but also to juveniles who may be proceeded against for any specific behaviour that would not be punishable if committed by an adult.
- 3.2 Efforts shall be made to extend the principles embodied in the Rules to all juveniles who are dealt with in welfare and care proceedings.
- 3.3 Efforts shall also be made to extend the principles embodied in the Rules to young adult offenders.

Commentary

Rule 3 extends the protection afforded by the Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice to cover:

(a) The so-called "status offences" prescribed in various national legal systems where the range of behaviour considered to be an offence is wider for juveniles than it is for adults (for example, truancy, school and family disobedience, public drunkenness, etc.) (rule 3.1);

(b) Juvenile welfare and care proceedings (rule 3.2);

(c) Proceedings dealing with young adult offenders, depending of course on each given age limit (rule 3.3).

The extension of the Rules to cover these three areas seems to be justified. Rule 3.1 provides minimum guarantees in those fields, and rule 3.2 is considered a desirable step in the direction of more fair, equitable and humane justice for all juveniles in conflict with the law.

4. Age of criminal responsibility

- 4.1 In those legal systems recognizing the concept of the age of criminal responsibility for juveniles, the beginning of that age shall not be fixed at too low an age level, bearing in mind the facts of emotional, mental and intellectual maturity.

Commentary

The minimum age of criminal responsibility differs widely owing to history and culture. The modern approach would be to consider whether a child can live up to the moral and psychological components of criminal responsibility; that is, whether a child, by virtue of her or his individual discernment and understanding, can be held responsible for essentially anti-social behaviour. If the age of criminal responsibility is fixed too low or if there is no lower age limit at all, the notion of responsibility would become meaningless. In general, there is a close relationship between the notion of responsibility for delinquent or criminal behaviour and other social rights and responsibilities (such as marital status, civil majority, etc.).

Efforts should therefore be made to agree on a reasonable lowest age limit that is applicable internationally.

5. Aims of juvenile justice

- 5.1 The juvenile justice system shall emphasize the well-being of the juvenile and shall ensure that any reaction to juvenile offenders shall always be in proportion to the circumstances of both the offenders and the offence.

Commentary

Rule 5 refers to two of the most important objectives of juvenile justice. The first objective is the promotion of the well-being of the juvenile. This is the main focus of those legal systems in which juvenile offenders are dealt with by family courts or administrative authorities, but the well-being of the juvenile should also be emphasized in legal systems that follow the criminal court model, thus contributing to the avoidance of merely punitive sanctions. (See also rule 14.)

The second objective is "the principle of proportionality". This principle is well-known as an instrument for curbing punitive sanctions, mostly expressed in terms of just desert in relation to the gravity of the offence. The response to young offenders should be based on the consideration not only of the gravity of the offence but also of personal circumstances. The individual circumstances of the offender (for example social status, family situation, the harm caused by the offence or other factors affecting personal circumstances) should influence the proportionality of the reaction (for example by having regard to the offender's endeavour to indemnify the victim or to her or his willingness to turn to a wholesome and useful life).

By the same token, reactions aiming to ensure the welfare of the young offender may go beyond necessity and therefore infringe upon the fundamental rights of the young individual, as has been observed in some juvenile justice systems. Here, too, the proportionality of the reaction to the circumstances of both the offender and the offence, including the victim, should be safeguarded.

In essence, rule 5 calls for no less and no more than a fair reaction in any given case of juvenile delinquency and crime. The issues combined in the rule may help to stimulate development in both regards: new and innovative types of reactions are as desirable as precautions against any undue widening of the net of formal social control over juveniles.

6. Scope of discretion

- 6.1 In view of the varying special needs of juveniles as well as the variety of measures available, appropriate scope for discretion shall be allowed at all stages of proceedings and at the different levels of juvenile justice administration, including investigation, prosecution, adjudication and the follow-up of dispositions.
- 6.2 Efforts shall be made, however, to ensure sufficient accountability at all stages and levels in the exercise of any such discretion.
- 6.3 Those who exercise discretion shall be specially qualified or trained to exercise it judiciously and in accordance with their functions and mandates.

Commentary

Rules 6.1, 6.2 and 6.3 combine several important features of effective, fair and humane juvenile justice administration: the need to permit the exercise of discretionary power at all significant levels of processing so that those who make determinations can take the actions deemed to be most appropriate in each individual case; and the need to provide checks and balances in order to curb any abuses of discretionary power and to safeguard the rights of the young offender. Accountability and professionalism are instruments best apt to curb broad discretion. Thus, professional qualifications and expert training are emphasized here as a valuable means of ensuring the judicious exercise of discretion in matters of juvenile offenders. (See also rules 1.6 and 2.2.) The formulation of specific guidelines on the exercise of discretion and the provision of systems of review, appeal and the like in order to permit scrutiny of decisions and accountability are emphasized in this context. Such mechanisms are not specified here, as they do not easily lend themselves to incorporation into international standard minimum rules, which cannot possibly cover all differences in justice systems.

7. Rights of juveniles

- 7.1 Basic procedural safeguards such as the presumption of innocence, the right to be notified of the charges, the right to remain silent, the right to counsel, the right to the presence of a parent or guardian, the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses and the right to appeal to a higher authority shall be guaranteed at all stages of proceedings.

Commentary

Rule 7.1 emphasizes some important points that represent essential elements for a fair and just trial and that are internationally recognized in existing human rights instruments. (See also rule 14.) The presumption of innocence, for instance, is also to be found in article 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in article 14, paragraph 2, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Rules 14 seq. of these Standard Minimum Rules specify issues that are important for proceedings in juvenile cases, in particular, while rule 7.1 affirms the most basic procedural safeguards in a general way.

8. Protection of privacy

- 8.1 The juvenile's right to privacy shall be respected at all stages in order to avoid harm being caused to her or him by undue publicity or by the process of labelling.
- 8.2 In principle, no information that may lead to the identification of a juvenile offender shall be published.

Commentary

Rule 8 stresses the importance of the protection of the juvenile's right to privacy. Young persons are particularly susceptible to stigmatization. Criminological research into labelling processes has provided evidence of the detrimental effects (of different kinds) resulting from the permanent identification of young persons as "delinquent" or "criminal".

Rule 8 also stresses the importance of protecting the juvenile from the adverse effects that may result from the publication in the mass media of information about the case (for example the names of young offenders, alleged or convicted). The interest of the individual should be protected and upheld, at least in principle. (The general contents of rule 8 are further specified in rule 21.)

9. Saving clause

- 9.1 Nothing in these Rules shall be interpreted as precluding the application of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted by the United Nations and other human rights instruments and standards recognized by the international community that relate to the care and protection of the young.

Commentary

Rule 9 is meant to avoid any misunderstanding in interpreting and implementing the present Rules in conformity with principles contained in relevant existing or emerging international human rights instruments and standards such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights; the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Declaration of the Rights of the Child and the draft convention on the rights of the child. It should be understood that the application of the present Rules is without prejudice to any such international instruments which may contain provisions of wider application. (See also rule 27.)

Part two. Investigation and prosecution

10. Initial contact

- 10.1 Upon the apprehension of a juvenile, her or his parents or guardian shall be immediately notified of such apprehension, and, where such immediate notification is not possible, the parents or guardian shall be notified within the shortest possible time thereafter.
- 10.2 A judge or other competent official or body shall, without delay, consider the issue of release.
- 10.3 Contacts between the law enforcement agencies and a juvenile offender shall be managed in such a way as to respect the legal status of the juvenile, promote the well-being of the juvenile and avoid harm to her or him, with due regard to the circumstances of the case.

Commentary

Rule 10.1 is in principle contained in rule 92 of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.

The question of release (rule 10.2) shall be considered without delay by a judge or other competent official. The latter refers to any person or institution in the broadest sense of the term, including community boards or police authorities having power to release an arrested person. (See also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, article 9, paragraph 3.)

Rule 10.3 deals with some fundamental aspects of the procedures and behaviour on the part of the police and other law enforcement officials in cases of juvenile crime. To "avoid harm" admittedly is flexible wording and covers many features of possible interaction (for example the use of harsh language, physical violence or exposure to the environment). Involvement in juvenile justice processes in itself can be "harmful" to juveniles; the term "avoid harm" should be broadly interpreted, therefore, as doing the least harm possible to the juvenile in the first instance, as well as any additional or undue harm. This is especially important in the initial contact with law enforcement agencies, which might profoundly influence the juvenile's attitude towards the State and society. Moreover, the success of any further intervention is largely dependent on such initial contacts. Compassion and kind firmness are important in these situations.

11. Diversion

- 11.1 Consideration shall be given, wherever appropriate, to dealing with juvenile offenders without resorting to formal trial by the competent authority, referred to in rule 14.1 below.
- 11.2 The police, the prosecution or other agencies dealing with juvenile cases shall be empowered to dispose of such cases, at their discretion, without recourse to formal hearings, in accordance with the criteria laid down for that purpose in the respective legal system and also in accordance with the principles contained in these Rules.

- 11.3 Any diversion involving referral to appropriate community or other services shall require the consent of the juvenile, or her or his parents or guardian, provided that such decision to refer a case shall be subject to review by a competent authority, upon application.
- 11.4 In order to facilitate the discretionary disposition of juvenile cases, efforts shall be made to provide for community programmes, such as temporary supervision and guidance, restitution, and compensation of victims.

Commentary

Diversion, involving removal from criminal justice processing and, frequently, redirection to community support services, is commonly practised on a formal and informal basis in many legal systems. This practice serves to hinder the negative effects of subsequent proceedings in juvenile justice administration (for example the stigma of conviction and sentence). In many cases, non-intervention would be the best response. Thus, diversion at the outset and without referral to alternative (social) services may be the optimal response. This is especially the case where the offence is of a non-serious nature and where the family, the school or other informal social control institutions have already reacted, or are likely to react, in an appropriate and constructive manner.

As stated in rule 11.2, diversion may be used at any point of decision-making by the police, the prosecution or other agencies such as the courts, tribunals, boards or councils. It may be exercised by one authority or several or all authorities, according to the rules and policies of the respective systems and in line with the present Rules. It need not necessarily be limited to petty cases, thus rendering diversion an important instrument.

Rule 11.3 stresses the important requirement of securing the consent of the young offender (or the parent or guardian) to the recommended diversionary measure(s). (Diversion to community service without such consent would contradict the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention.) However, this consent should not be left unchallengeable, since it might sometimes be given out of sheer desperation on the part of the juvenile. The rule underlines that care should be taken to minimize the potential for coercion and intimidation at all levels in the diversion process. Juveniles should not feel pressured (for example in order to avoid court appearance) or be pressured into consenting to diversion programmes. Thus, it is advocated that provision should be made for an objective appraisal of the appropriateness of dispositions involving young offenders by a "competent authority upon application". (The "competent authority" may be different from that referred to in rule 14.)

Rule 11.4 recommends the provision of viable alternatives to juvenile justice processing in the form of community-based diversion. Programmes that involve settlement by victim restitution and those that seek to avoid future conflict with the law through temporary supervision and guidance are especially commended. The merits of individual cases would make diversion appropriate, even when more serious offences have been committed (for example first offence, the act having been committed under peer pressure, etc.).

12. Specialization within the police

- 12.1 In order to best fulfil their functions, police officers who frequently or exclusively deal with juveniles or who are primarily engaged in the prevention of juvenile crime shall be specially instructed and trained. In large cities, special police units should be established for that purpose.

Commentary

Rule 12 draws attention to the need for specialized training for all law enforcement officials who are involved in the administration of juvenile justice. As police are the first point of contact with the juvenile justice system, it is most important that they act in an informed and appropriate manner.

While the relationship between urbanization and crime is clearly complex, an increase in juvenile crime has been associated with the growth of large cities, particularly with rapid and unplanned growth. Specialized police units would therefore be indispensable, not only in the interest of implementing specific principles contained in the present instrument (such as rule 1.6) but more generally for improving the prevention and control of juvenile crime and the handling of juvenile offenders.

13. Detention pending trial

- 13.1 Detention pending trial shall be used only as a measure of last resort and for the shortest possible period of time.
- 13.2 Whenever possible, detention pending trial shall be replaced by alternative measures, such as close supervision, intensive care or placement with a family or in an educational setting or home.
- 13.3 Juveniles under detention pending trial shall be entitled to all rights and guarantees of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted by the United Nations.
- 13.4 Juveniles under detention pending trial shall be kept separate from adults and shall be detained in a separate institution or in a separate part of an institution also holding adults.
- 13.5 While in custody, juveniles shall receive care, protection and all necessary individual assistance—social, educational, vocational, psychological, medical and physical—that they may require in view of their age, sex and personality.

Commentary

The danger to juveniles of "criminal contamination" while in detention pending trial must not be underestimated. It is therefore important to stress the need for alternative measures. By doing so, rule 13.1 encourages the devising of new and innovative measures to avoid such detention in the interest of the well-being of the juvenile.

Juveniles under detention pending trial are entitled to all the rights and guarantees of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners as well as the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, especially article 9 and article 10, paragraphs 2 (b) and 3.

Rule 13.4 does not prevent States from taking other measures against the negative influences of adult offenders which are at least as effective as the measures mentioned in the rule.

Different forms of assistance that may become necessary have been enumerated to draw attention to the broad range of particular needs of young detainees to be addressed (for example females or males, drug addicts, alcoholics, mentally ill juveniles, young persons suffering from the trauma, for example, of arrest, etc.).

Varying physical and psychological characteristics of young detainees may warrant classification measures by which some are kept separate while in detention pending trial, thus contributing to the avoidance of victimization and rendering more appropriate assistance.

The Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in its resolution 4 on juvenile justice standards, specified that the Rules, inter alia, should reflect the basic principle that pre-trial detention should be used only as a last resort, that no minors should be held in a facility where they are vulnerable to the negative influences of adult detainees and that account should always be taken of the needs particular to their stage of development.

Part three. Adjudication and disposition

14. Competent authority to adjudicate

- 14.1 Where the case of a juvenile offender has not been diverted (under rule 11), she or he shall be dealt with by the competent authority (court, tribunal, board, council, etc.) according to the principles of a fair and just trial.
- 14.2 The proceedings shall be conducive to the best interests of the juvenile and shall be conducted in an atmosphere of understanding, which shall allow the juvenile to participate therein and to express herself or himself freely.

Commentary

It is difficult to formulate a definition of the competent body or person that would universally describe an adjudicating authority. "Competent authority" is meant to include those who preside over courts or tribunals (composed of a single judge or of several members), including professional and lay magistrates as well as administrative boards (for example the Scottish and Scandinavian systems) or other more informal community and conflict resolution agencies of an adjudicatory nature.

The procedure for dealing with juvenile offenders shall in any case follow the minimum standards that are applied almost universally for any criminal defendant under the procedure known as "due process of law". In accordance with due process, a "fair and just trial" includes such basic safeguards as the presumption of innocence, the presentation and examination of witnesses, the common legal defences, the right to remain silent, the right to have the last word in a hearing, the right to appeal, etc. (See also rule 7.1.)

15. Legal counsel, parents and guardians

- 15.1 Throughout the proceedings the juvenile shall have the right to be represented by a legal adviser or to apply for free legal aid where there is provision for such aid in the country.
- 15.2 The parents or the guardian shall be entitled to participate in the proceedings and may be required by the competent authority to attend them in the interest of the juvenile. They may, however, be denied participation by the competent authority if there are reasons to assume that such exclusion is necessary in the interest of the juvenile.

Commentary

Rule 15.1 uses terminology similar to that found in rule 93 of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners. Whereas legal counsel and free legal aid are needed to assure the juvenile legal assistance, the right of the parents or guardian to participate as stated in rule 15.2 should be viewed as general psychological and emotional assistance to the juvenile-a function extending throughout the procedure.

The competent authority's search for an adequate disposition of the case may profit, in particular, from the co-operation of the legal representatives of the juvenile (or, for that matter, some other personal assistant who the juvenile can and does really trust). Such concern can be thwarted if the presence of parents or guardians at the hearings plays a negative role, for instance, if they display a hostile attitude towards the juvenile; hence, the possibility of their exclusion must be provided for.

16. Social inquiry reports

- 16.1 In all cases except those involving minor offences, before the competent authority renders a final disposition prior to sentencing, the background and circumstances in which the juvenile is living or the conditions under which the offence has been committed shall be properly investigated so as to facilitate judicious adjudication of the case by the competent authority.

Commentary

Social inquiry reports (social reports or pre-sentence reports) are an indispensable aid in most legal proceedings involving juveniles. The competent authority should be informed of relevant facts about the juvenile, such as social and family background, school career, educational experiences, etc. For this purpose, some jurisdictions use special social services or personnel attached to the court or board. Other personnel, including probation officers, may serve the same function. The rule therefore requires that adequate social services should be available to deliver social inquiry reports of a qualified nature.

17. Guiding principles in adjudication and disposition

- 17.1 The disposition of the competent authority shall be guided by the following principles:
  - (a) The reaction taken shall always be in proportion not only to the circumstances and the gravity of the offence but also to the circumstances and the needs of the juvenile as well as to the needs of the society;
  - (b) Restrictions on the personal liberty of the juvenile shall be imposed only after careful consideration and shall be limited to the possible minimum;
  - (c) Deprivation of personal liberty shall not be imposed unless the juvenile is adjudicated of a serious act involving violence against another person or of persistence in committing other serious offences and unless there is no other appropriate response;
  - (d) The well-being of the juvenile shall be the guiding factor in the consideration of her or his case.

- 17.2 Capital punishment shall not be imposed for any crime committed by juveniles.
- 17.3 Juveniles shall not be subject to corporal punishment.
- 17.4 The competent authority shall have the power to discontinue the proceedings at any time.

Commentary

The main difficulty in formulating guidelines for the adjudication of young persons stems from the fact that there are unresolved conflicts of a philosophical nature, such as the following:

- (a) Rehabilitation versus just desert;
- (b) Assistance versus repression and punishment;
- (c) Reaction according to the singular merits of an individual case versus reaction according to the protection of society in general;
- (d) General deterrence versus individual incapacitation.

The conflict between these approaches is more pronounced in juvenile cases than in adult cases. With the variety of causes and reactions characterizing juvenile cases, these alternatives become intricately interwoven.

It is not the function of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice to prescribe which approach is to be followed but rather to identify one that is most closely in consonance with internationally accepted principles. Therefore the essential elements as laid down in rule 17.1, in particular in subparagraphs (a) and (c), are mainly to be understood as practical guidelines that should ensure a common starting point; if heeded by the concerned authorities (see also rule 5), they could contribute considerably to ensuring that the fundamental rights of juvenile offenders are protected, especially the fundamental rights of personal development and education.

Rule 17.1 (b) implies that strictly punitive approaches are not appropriate. Whereas in adult cases, and possibly also in cases of severe offences by juveniles, just desert and retributive sanctions might be considered to have some merit, in juvenile cases such considerations should always be outweighed by the interest of safeguarding the well-being and the future of the young person.

In line with resolution 8 of the Sixth United Nations Congress, rule 17.1 (b) encourages the use of alternatives to institutionalization to the maximum extent possible, bearing in mind the need to respond to the specific requirements of the young. Thus, full use should be made of the range of existing alternative sanctions and new alternative sanctions should be developed, bearing the public safety in mind. Probation should be granted to the greatest possible extent via suspended sentences, conditional sentences, board orders and other dispositions.

Rule 17.1 (c) corresponds to one of the guiding principles in resolution 4 of the Sixth Congress which aims at avoiding incarceration in the case of juveniles unless there is no other appropriate response that will protect the public safety.

The provision prohibiting capital punishment in rule 17.2 is in accordance with article 6, paragraph 5, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The provision against corporal punishment is in line with article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, as well as the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and the draft convention on the rights of the child.

The power to discontinue the proceedings at any time (rule 17.4) is a characteristic inherent in the handling of juvenile offenders as opposed to adults. At any time, circumstances may become known to the competent authority which would make a complete cessation of the intervention appear to be the best disposition of the case.

18. Various disposition measures

- 18.1 A large variety of disposition measures shall be made available to the competent authority, allowing for flexibility so as to avoid institutionalization to the greatest extent possible. Such measures, some of which may be combined, include:

- (a) Care, guidance and supervision orders;
- (b) Probation;
- (c) Community service orders;
- (d) Financial penalties, compensation and restitution;
- (e) Intermediate treatment and other treatment orders;
- (f) Orders to participate in group counselling and similar activities;
- (g) Orders concerning foster care, living communities or other educational settings;
- (h) Other relevant orders.

- 18.2 No juvenile shall be removed from parental supervision, whether partly or entirely, unless the circumstances of her or his case make this necessary.

Commentary

Rule 18.1 attempts to enumerate some of the important reactions and sanctions that have been practised and proved successful thus far, in different legal systems. On the whole they represent promising options that deserve replication and further development. The rule does not enumerate staffing requirements because of possible shortages of adequate staff in some regions; in those regions measures requiring less staff may be tried or developed.

The examples given in rule 18.1 have in common, above all, a reliance on and an appeal to the community for the effective implementation of alternative dispositions. Community-based correction is a traditional measure that has taken on many aspects. On that basis, relevant authorities should be encouraged to offer community-based services.

Rule 18.2 points to the importance of the family which, according to article 10, paragraph 1, of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, is "the natural and fundamental group unit of society". Within the family, the parents have not only the right but also the responsibility to care for and supervise their children. Rule 18.2, therefore, requires that the separation of children from their parents is a measure of last resort. It may be resorted to only when the facts of the case clearly warrant this grave step (for example child abuse).

19. Least possible use of institutionalization

- 19.1 The placement of a juvenile in an institution shall always be a disposition of last resort and for the minimum necessary period.

Commentary

Progressive criminology advocates the use of non-institutional over institutional treatment. Little or no difference has been found in terms of the success of institutionalization as compared to non-institutionalization. The many adverse influences on an individual that seem unavoidable within any institutional setting evidently cannot be outbalanced by treatment efforts. This is especially the case for juveniles, who are vulnerable to negative influences. Moreover, the negative effects, not only of loss of liberty but also of separation from the usual social environment, are certainly more acute for juveniles than for adults because of their early stage of development.

Rule 19 aims at restricting institutionalization in two regards: in quantity ("last resort") and in time ("minimum necessary period"). Rule 19 reflects one of the basic guiding principles of resolution 4 of the Sixth United Nations Congress: a juvenile offender should not be incarcerated unless there is no other appropriate response. The rule, therefore, makes the appeal that if a juvenile must be institutionalized, the loss of liberty should be restricted to the least possible degree, with special institutional arrangements for confinement and bearing in mind the differences in kinds of offenders, offences and institutions. In fact, priority should be given to "open" over "closed" institutions. Furthermore, any facility should be of a correctional or educational rather than of a prison type.

20. Avoidance of unnecessary delay

- 20.1 Each case shall from the outset be handled expeditiously, without any unnecessary delay.

Commentary

The speedy conduct of formal procedures in juvenile cases is a paramount concern. Otherwise whatever good may be achieved by the procedure and the disposition is at risk. As time passes, the juvenile will find it increasingly difficult, if not impossible, to relate the procedure and disposition to the offence, both intellectually and psychologically.

21. Records

- 21.1 Records of juvenile offenders shall be kept strictly confidential and closed to third parties. Access to such records shall be limited to persons directly concerned with the disposition of the case at hand or other duly authorized persons.
- 21.2 Records of juvenile offenders shall not be used in adult proceedings in subsequent cases involving the same offender.

Commentary

The rule attempts to achieve a balance between conflicting interests connected with records or files: those of the police, prosecution and other authorities in improving control versus the interests of the juvenile offender. (See also rule 8.) "Other duly authorized persons" would generally include, among others, researchers.

22. Need for professionalism and training

- 22.1 Professional education, in-service training, refresher courses and other appropriate modes of instruction shall be utilized to establish and maintain the necessary professional competence of all personnel dealing with juvenile cases.

- 22.2 Juvenile justice personnel shall reflect the diversity of juveniles who come into contact with the juvenile justice system. Efforts shall be made to ensure the fair representation of women and minorities in juvenile justice agencies.

Commentary

The authorities competent for disposition may be persons with very different backgrounds (magistrates in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and in regions influenced by the common law system; legally trained judges in countries using Roman law and in regions influenced by them; and elsewhere elected or appointed laymen or jurists, members of community-based boards etc.). For all these authorities, a minimum training in law, sociology, psychology, criminology and behavioural sciences would be required. This is considered as important as the organizational specialization and independence of the competent authority.

For social workers and probation officers, it might not be feasible to require professional specialization as a prerequisite for taking over any function dealing with juvenile offenders. Thus, professional on-the-job instruction would be minimum qualifications.

Professional qualifications are an essential element in ensuring the impartial and effective administration of juvenile justice. Accordingly, it is necessary to improve the recruitment, advancement and professional training of personnel and to provide them with the necessary means to enable them to properly fulfil their functions.

All political, social, sexual, racial! religious, cultural or any other kind of discrimination in the selection, appointment and advancement of juvenile justice personnel should be avoided in order to achieve impartiality in the administration of juvenile justice. This was recommended by the Sixth Congress. Furthermore, the Sixth Congress called on Member States to ensure the fair and equal treatment of women as criminal justice personnel and recommended that special measures should be taken to recruit, train and facilitate the advancement of female personnel in juvenile justice administration.

Part four. Non-institutional treatment

23. Effective implementation of disposition

- 23.1 Appropriate provisions shall be made for the implementation of orders of the competent authority, as referred to in rule 14.1 above, by that authority itself or by some other authority as circumstances may require.
- 23.2 Such provisions shall include the power to modify the orders as the competent authority may deem necessary from time to time, provided that such modification shall be determined in accordance with the principles contained in these Rules.

Commentary

Disposition in juvenile cases, more so than in adult cases, tends to influence the offender's life for a long period of time. Thus, it is important that the competent authority or an independent body (parole board, probation office, youth welfare institutions or others) with qualifications equal to those of the competent authority that originally disposed of the case should monitor the implementation of the disposition. In some countries, juge de l'exécution des peines has been installed for this purpose.

The composition, powers and functions of the authority must be flexible; they are described in general terms in rule 23 in order to ensure wide acceptability.

24. Provision of needed assistance

- 24.1 Efforts shall be made to provide juveniles, at all stages of the proceedings, with necessary assistance such as lodging, education or vocational training, employment or any other assistance, helpful and practical, in order to facilitate the rehabilitative process.

Commentary

The promotion of the well-being of the juvenile is of paramount consideration. Thus, rule 24 emphasizes the importance of providing requisite facilities, services and other necessary assistance as may further the best interests of the juvenile throughout the rehabilitative process.

25. Mobilization of volunteers and other community services

- 25.1 Volunteers, voluntary organizations, local institutions and other community resources shall be called upon to contribute effectively to the rehabilitation of the juvenile in a community setting and, as far as possible, within the family unit.

Commentary

This rule reflects the need for a rehabilitative orientation of all work with juvenile offenders. Co-operation with the community is indispensable if the directives of the competent authority are to be carried out effectively. Volunteers and voluntary services, in particular, have proved to be valuable resources but are at present underutilized. In some instances, the co-operation of ex-offenders (including ex-addicts) can be of considerable assistance.

Rule 25 emanates from the principles laid down in rules 1.1 to 1.6 and follows the relevant provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

Part five. Institutional treatment

26. Objectives of institutional treatment

- 26.1 The objective of training and treatment of juveniles placed in institutions is to provide care, protection, education and vocational skills, with a view to assisting them to assume socially constructive and productive roles in society.
- 26.2 Juveniles in institutions shall receive care, protection and all necessary assistance-social, educational, vocational, psychological, medical and physical-that they may require because of their age, sex and personality and in the interest of their wholesome development.
- 26.3 Juveniles in institutions shall be kept separate from adults and shall be detained in a separate institution or in a separate part of an institution also holding adults.
- 26.4 Young female offenders placed in an institution deserve special attention as to their personal needs and problems. They shall by no means receive less care, protection, assistance, treatment and training than young male offenders. Their fair treatment shall be ensured.
- 26.5 In the interest and well-being of the institutionalized juvenile, the parents or guardians shall have a right of access.

- 26.6 Inter-ministerial and inter-departmental co-operation shall be fostered for the purpose of providing adequate academic or, as appropriate, vocational training to institutionalized juveniles, with a view to ensuring that they do not leave the institution at an educational disadvantage.

Commentary

The objectives of institutional treatment as stipulated in rules 26.1 and 26.2 would be acceptable to any system and culture. However, they have not yet been attained everywhere, and much more has to be done in this respect.

Medical and psychological assistance, in particular, are extremely important for institutionalized drug addicts, violent and mentally ill young persons.

The avoidance of negative influences through adult offenders and the safeguarding of the well-being of juveniles in an institutional setting, as stipulated in rule 26.3, are in line with one of the basic guiding principles of the Rules, as set out by the Sixth Congress in its resolution 4. The rule does not prevent States from taking other measures against the negative influences of adult offenders, which are at least as effective as the measures mentioned in the rule. (See also rule 13.4.)

Rule 26.4 addresses the fact that female offenders normally receive less attention than their male counterparts, as pointed out by the Sixth Congress. In particular, resolution 9 of the Sixth Congress calls for the fair treatment of female offenders at every stage of criminal justice processes and for special attention to their particular problems and needs while in custody. Moreover, this rule should also be considered in the light of the Caracas Declaration of the Sixth Congress, which, inter alia, calls for equal treatment in criminal justice administration, and against the background of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

The right of access (rule 26.5) follows from the provisions of rules 7.1, 10.1, 15.2 and 18.2. Inter-ministerial and inter-departmental co-operation (rule 26.6) are of particular importance in the interest of generally enhancing the quality of institutional treatment and training.

27. Application of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners adopted by the United Nations

- 27.1 The Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners and related recommendations shall be applicable as far as relevant to the treatment of juvenile offenders in institutions, including those in detention pending adjudication.
- 27.2 Efforts shall be made to implement the relevant principles laid down in the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners to the largest possible extent so as to meet the varying needs of juveniles specific to their age, sex and personality.

Commentary

The Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners were among the first instruments of this kind to be promulgated by the United Nations. It is generally agreed that they have had a world-wide impact. Although there are still countries where implementation is more an aspiration than a fact, -those Standard Minimum Rules continue to be an important influence in the humane and equitable administration of correctional institutions.

Some essential protections covering juvenile offenders in institutions are contained in the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners (accommodation, architecture, bedding, clothing, complaints and requests, contact with the outside world, food, medical care, religious service, separation of ages, staffing, work, etc.) as are provisions concerning punishment and discipline, and restraint for dangerous offenders. It would not be appropriate to modify those Standard Minimum Rules according to the particular characteristics of institutions for juvenile offenders within the scope of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice.

Rule 27 focuses on the necessary requirements for juveniles in institutions (rule 27.1) as well as on the varying needs specific to their age, sex and personality (rule 27.2). Thus, the objectives and content of the rule interrelate to the relevant provisions of the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.

28. Frequent and early recourse to conditional release

28.1 Conditional release from an institution shall be used by the appropriate authority to the greatest possible extent, and shall be granted at the earliest possible time.

28.2 Juveniles released conditionally from an institution shall be assisted and supervised by an appropriate authority and shall receive full support by the community.

Commentary

The power to order conditional release may rest with the competent authority, as mentioned in rule 14.1, or with some other authority. In view of this, it is adequate to refer here to the "appropriate" rather than to the "competent" authority.

Circumstances permitting, conditional release shall be preferred to serving a full sentence. Upon evidence of satisfactory progress towards rehabilitation, even offenders who had been deemed dangerous at the time of their institutionalization can be conditionally released whenever feasible. Like probation, such release may be conditional on the satisfactory fulfilment of the requirements specified by the relevant authorities for a period of time established in the decision, for example relating to "good behaviour" of the offender, attendance in community programmes, residence in half-way houses, etc.

In the case of offenders conditionally released from an institution, assistance and supervision by a probation or other officer (particularly where probation has not yet been adopted) should be provided and community support should be encouraged.

29. Semi-institutional arrangements

29.1 Efforts shall be made to provide semi-institutional arrangements, such as half-way houses, educational homes, day-time training centres and other such appropriate arrangements that may assist juveniles in their proper reintegration into society

Commentary

The importance of care following a period of institutionalization should not be underestimated. This rule emphasizes the necessity of forming a net of semi-institutional arrangements.

This rule also emphasizes the need for a diverse range of facilities and services designed to meet the different needs of young offenders re-entering the community and to provide guidance and structural support as an important step towards successful reintegration into society

Part six. Research, planning, policy formulation and evaluation

30. Research as a basis for planning policy formulation and evaluation

30.1 Efforts shall be made to organize and promote necessary research as a basis for effective planning and policy formulation.

30.2 Efforts shall be made to review and appraise periodically the trends, problems and causes of juvenile delinquency and crime as well as the varying particular needs of juveniles in custody.

30.3 Efforts shall be made to establish a regular evaluative research mechanism built into the system of juvenile justice administration and to collect and analyse relevant data and information for appropriate assessment and future improvement and reform of the administration.

30.4 The delivery of services in juvenile justice administration shall be systematically planned and implemented as an integral part of national development efforts.

Commentary

The utilization of research as a basis for an informed juvenile justice policy is widely acknowledged as an important mechanism for keeping practices abreast of advances in knowledge and the continuing development and improvement of the juvenile justice system. The mutual feedback between research and policy is especially important in juvenile justice. With rapid and often drastic changes in the life-styles of the young and in the forms and dimensions of juvenile crime, the societal and justice responses to juvenile crime and delinquency quickly become outmoded and inadequate.

Rule 30 thus establishes standards for integrating research into the process of policy formulation and application in juvenile justice administration. The rule draws particular attention to the need for regular review and evaluation of existing programmes and measures and for planning within the broader context of overall development objectives.

A constant appraisal of the needs of juveniles, as well as the trends and problems of delinquency, is a prerequisite for improving the methods of formulating appropriate policies and establishing adequate interventions, at both formal and informal levels. In this context, research by independent persons and bodies should be facilitated by responsible agencies, and it may be valuable to obtain and to take into account the views of juveniles themselves, not only those who come into contact with the system.

The process of planning must particularly emphasize a more effective and equitable system for the delivery of necessary services. Towards that end, there should be a comprehensive and regular assessment of the wide-ranging, particular needs and problems of juveniles and an identification of clear-cut priorities. In that connection, there should also be a co-ordination in the use of existing resources, including alternatives and community support that would be suitable in setting up specific procedures designed to implement and monitor established programmes.

29 November 1985 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/881) without vote, 11 November (meeting 37); draft by Seventh Congress on crime (A/C.3/40/L.20); agenda item 98.

Prevention of juvenile delinquency

Key problems, priorities and major issues relating to youth crime and juvenile justice were highlighted in an April 1985 working paper prepared by the United Nations Secretariat for the Seventh Congress.<sup>(19)</sup> The paper discussed models of juvenile justice; the Beijing Rules (see above); youth in the context of juvenile justice administration; perspectives on youth crime and juvenile justice; dimensions and characteristics of youth criminality; marginalization, victimization and changing socio-economic factors in youth crime; the prevention of youth crime; and regional, international and inter-agency co-operation for the prevention of youth crime.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted without vote resolution 40/35.

Development of standards for the prevention of juvenile delinquency

The General Assembly,

Recalling resolution 4 adopted by the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Caracas from 25 August to 5 September 1980, in which the Congress called for the elaboration of a set of standard minimum rules for the administration of juvenile justice and for the care of juveniles,

Noting that the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice (the Beijing Rules) recommended by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Milan, Italy, from 26 August to 6 September 1985, are limited to the administration of juvenile justice and the assurance of legal guarantees in respect of young persons in conflict with the law,

Mindful of the need to develop national, regional and international strategies for the prevention of delinquency among the young,

Recognising that the prevention of juvenile delinquency includes measures for the protection of juveniles who are abandoned, neglected, abused and in marginal circumstances and, in general, those who are at social risk, Recognizing further the existence of a large number of young persons who are not in conflict with the law but who are at social risk,

Acknowledging that one of the basic aims of the prevention of juvenile delinquency is the provision of requisite assistance and a range of opportunities to meet the varying needs of the young, especially those who are most likely to commit crime or to be exposed to crime, and to serve as a supportive framework to safeguard their proper development,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the work undertaken by the United Nations regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders and the regional commissions in the field of crime prevention;

2. Also takes note with appreciation of the working paper prepared by the Secretariat on youth, crime and justice;

3. Endorses the recommendations contained in the report of the Interregional Preparatory Meeting for the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held at Beijing from 14 to 18 May 1984;

4. Requests the Secretary-General and Member States to take the necessary steps to establish joint programmes in the field of juvenile justice and the prevention of juvenile delinquency with the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute, the United Nations regional institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, the Arab Security Studies and Training Centre at Riyadh and other national and regional institutes, and with the assistance of regional commissions and national correspondents, which would include the following activities:

(a) To study the situation of juveniles at social risk and to examine the relevant policies and practices of prevention within the context of socio-economic development;

(b) To intensify efforts in training, research and advisory services for the prevention of juvenile delinquency;

5. Invites Member States to adopt distinct measures and systems appropriate to the interest of juveniles at social risk;

6. Calls upon the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, with the assistance of the United Nations institutes for the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, the regional commissions and the specialized agencies, to develop standards for the prevention of juvenile delinquency which would assist Member States in formulating and implementing specialized programmes and policies, emphasizing assistance and care and the active involvement of the community, and to report to the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders on the progress achieved in the development of the proposed standards, for review and final action;

7. Requests that the prevention of delinquency among the young should be considered regularly by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control and that it should be considered by the Eighth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, under a separate agenda item;

8. Urges all relevant bodies within the United Nations system to collaborate with the Secretary-General in taking appropriate measures to ensure the implementation of the present resolution.

29 November 1985 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee A/40/881) without vote 11 November (meeting 37); draft by Seventh Congress on crime (A/C.3/40/L.22); agenda item 98.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 16-23, 30, 37; Plenary 96.

UN standards and norms in criminal justice

The Seventh Congress unanimously adopted Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary, a Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners and recommendations on the treatment of foreign prisoners.

In resolution 40/146, the General Assembly requested the Economic and Social Council, through the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to give special attention to ways of implementing existing human rights standards in the administration of justice, and to pay due attention to new developments in that area. It invited the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General in those endeavours by providing assistance and by submitting proposals for action to the Committee on crime.

Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary

The Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary stated, inter alia, that the judiciary's independence would be guaranteed by the State, that the judiciary would decide matters impartially and that it would have jurisdiction over all judicial issues. The Congress recommended the Basic Principles for national, regional and interregional implementation; urged United Nations bodies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to become involved in their implementation; called on the Committee on crime to consider, as a priority matter, their effective implementation; and requested the Secretary-General to ensure their widest possible dissemination.

In resolution 40/146, the Assembly welcomed the Basic Principles, invited Governments to respect them, and encouraged the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights to take them into account in its consideration of the independence of the judiciary, jurors, assessors and lawyers.

Model Agreement on foreign prisoner transfer

The Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners provided a set of principles for the social resettlement of offenders and transfer of prisoners, stipulating that such transfer should be effected on the basis of mutual respect for national sovereignty and jurisdiction, the agreement of both the sentencing and the administering State and the consent of the prisoner. The Secretary-General was requested to assist Member States, at their request, in developing transfer agreements and to report regularly thereon to the Committee on crime.

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/146, took note of the Model Agreement and invited

Member States to take it into account in establishing or revising treaty relations.

Cultural development

Restitution of cultural property

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(1)</sup> submitted a report in June 1985<sup>(2)</sup> on the return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin, annexed to which was a report by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). UNESCO efforts in that regard had been particularly devoted to implementing the recommendations of the 1983 session<sup>(3)</sup> of the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to Its Countries of Origin or Its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation.

At its fourth session (Athens and Delphi, Greece, 2-5 April 1985), the Intergovernmental Committee considered ways and means of more effectively promoting bilateral negotiations for the return or restitution of cultural property. It reiterated recommendations made at previous sessions with respect to measures against illicit traffic in cultural property and again stressed the importance of inventories of movable cultural property. The Committee recommended that its fifth session be organized in Paris, in 1987.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 21 November 1985, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/19 by recorded vote.

Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3026 A (XXVII) of 18 December 1972, 3148 (XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3187 (XXVIII) of 18 December 1973, 3391 (XXX) of 19 November 1975, 31/40 of 30 November 1976, 32/18 of 11 November 1977, 33/50 of 14 December 1978, 34/64 of 29 November 1979, 35/127 and 35/128 of 11 December 1980, 36/64 of 27 November 1981 and 38/34 of 25 November 1983,

Recalling also the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property, adopted on 14 November 1970 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General submitted in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Noting with satisfaction that following its appeal other Member States have become parties to the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property,

Aware of the importance attached by the countries of origin to the return of cultural property which is of fundamental spiritual and cultural value to them, so that they may constitute collections representative of their cultural heritage,

Noting with satisfaction that some countries have taken positive steps towards the return or restitution of museum pieces, archives and objets d'art to their countries of origin,

Reaffirming the importance of inventories as an essential tool for the understanding and protection of cultural property and for the identification of dispersed heritage and as a contribution to the advancement of scientific and artistic knowledge and intercultural communication,

Deeply concerned at the clandestine excavations and the illicit traffic in cultural property that continue to impoverish the cultural heritage of all peoples,

Supporting the solemn appeal made on 7 June 1978 by the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization for the return of irreplaceable cultural heritage to those who created it,

1. Commends the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation on the work they have accomplished, in particular through the promotion of bilateral negotiations, for' the return or restitution of cultural property, the- preparation of' inventories of movable cultural property, the reduction of illicit traffic in cultural property and the dissemination of information to the public;

2. Reaffirms that the restitution to a country of its objets d'art, monuments, museum pieces, archives, manuscripts, documents and any other cultural or artistic treasures contributes to the strengthening of international co-operation and to the preservation and flowering of universal cultural values through fruitful co-operation between developed and developing countries;

3. Recommends that Member States adopt or strengthen the necessary protective legislation with regard to their own heritage and that of other peoples;

4. Invites Member States to continue drawing up, in co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, systematic inventories of cultural property existing in their territory and of their cultural property abroad;

5. Also invites Member States engaged in seeking the recovery of cultural and artistic treasures from the seabed, in accordance with international law, to facilitate by mutually acceptable conditions the participation of States having a historical and cultural link with those treasures;

6. Appeals to Member States to co-operate closely with the Intergovernmental Committee for Promoting the Return of Cultural Property to its Countries of Origin or its Restitution in Case of Illicit Appropriation and to conclude bilateral agreements for this purpose;

7. Also appeals to Member States to encourage the mass information media and educational and cultural institutions to strive to arouse a greater and more general awareness with regard to the return or restitution of cultural property to its country of origin;

8. Endorses the opinion expressed at the World Conference on Cultural Policies, held at Mexico City from 26 July to 6 August 1982, that the return of cultural property to its country of origin should be accompanied by the training of key personnel and technicians and the provision of the necessary facilities for the satisfactory conservation and presentation of the property restored;

9. Welcomes the steady increase in the number of States parties to the Convention on the Means of Prohibiting and Preventing the Illicit Import, Export and Transfer of Ownership of Cultural Property;

10. Invites once again those Member States that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Convention;

11. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session the item entitled "Return or restitution of cultural property to the countries of origin".

Against: None.

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Ireland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Although it shared the objectives of the co-sponsors, the Federal Republic of Germany believed that UNESCO was the appropriate body to deal with the matter. The United Kingdom could not accept the principle that cultural property which over the years had been acquired freely and legitimately should be returned to other countries, but it condemned illicit trafficking in such property.

The Byelorussian SSR felt that the United Nations should encourage UNESCO's efforts to promote bilateral negotiations for the return of cultural property and also to draft measures prohibiting the illegal export or trade in art objects. Iraq felt that no real progress had been made and no genuine response elicited on the return of cultural property to its original owners; it hoped that the United Nations would take effective action. Nepal pointed out that illicit traffickers had been plundering its cultural property for years, and called for appropriate steps by UNESCO and the International Council of Museums to curb them. Supporting the principle underlying the text, the Syrian Arab Republic reserved its right to recover its cultural property plundered by Israeli authorities and taken from its territory during foreign occupation and during the period of the British Mandate.

Proposed World Decade for Cultural Development

The UNESCO Director-General was preparing, in consultation with other organizations of the United Nations system, a plan of action for a World Decade for Cultural Development,<sup>(4)</sup> which he had proposed<sup>(5)</sup> should be proclaimed in 1986. The plan was to take into account proposals received as well as the results of discussions at the 1985 sessions of the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters). The Committee considered at its second regular session in October<sup>(6)</sup> the UNESCO draft plan, an analysis of the main features of the plan, suggestions on the role of participants, a proposal for a co-ordinating machinery and a possible timetable. Noting that the Decade would begin in 1988, the Committee felt that, at the current stage, organizations should continue to communicate their views on the plan individually to UNESCO.

On 8 November 1985, the UNESCO General Conference adopted a resolution on the Decade, approving the major proposals set forth in the draft plan; emphasized that the active participation of UNESCO member States, the United Nations system, and international governmental and non-governmental organizations was important for the Decade's success; and invited member States to contribute to its objectives and the Director-General to take the necessary steps for its proclamation to be submitted to the General Assembly.

Centenary of the Berne Convention

By a letter of 20 December 1985 to the Secretary-General,<sup>(7)</sup> the Director-General of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) transmitted a resolution adopted on 1 October by the Conference of WIPO and the Assembly of the International Union for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works (Berne Union), noting that 9 September 1986 would be the one hundredth anniversary of the adoption of the Berne Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works, inviting all States to consider adhering to the Convention and requesting that the resolution be brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council in 1986 for the adoption of an appropriate recommendation.

Chapter XIV

Population

In 1985, the United Nations system continued its efforts to meet the needs of countries and the international community for population information, research, policy analysis and technical assistance. The United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA)—the largest internationally funded source of assistance to population programmes in developing countries—was at the forefront of technical co-operation in this field, with the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) acting as the Fund's governing body. The major portion of UNFPA funds, which came mainly from voluntary governmental contributions, were allocated to family planning projects.

During the year, the Population Commission—the functional commission of the Economic and Social Council which advises it on population matters—reviewed recommendations adopted at the 1984 International Conference on Population and their implications for the activities of the United Nations system. It also examined its work programme for 1986-1987 and the progress of work on the 1984-1985 programme.

The Secretary-General, in his 1985 report on the work of the Organization (see p. 4), pointing out that in the last 40 years the population of the world had more than doubled and that in the next 15 years it was expected to increase by one third, said that some of the strains and stresses in the world community would certainly stem from the pressure on institutions and resources resulting from this population explosion.

Acting on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council, in May, adopted several resolutions proposed to it by the Population Commission, including one on the implications of the recommendations of the International Conference on Population (1985/4), and others on the United Nations work programme in the population field (1985/5), on population structure (1985/3) and on the status and role of women and population (1985/6) (see Chapter XIX of this section).

The General Assembly, in December, expressed its concern about the shortfall of resources of UNFPA and the impact on its ability to carry out its planned programmes, urging all countries to continue and increase their support to the Fund (resolution 40/211).

The third annual (1985) United Nations Population Award went to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, an international non-governmental organization (NGO), for its outstanding contribution to the awareness of population questions and to their solutions.

Follow-up to the 1984 Conference on Population

Population Commission consideration. The 1984 International Conference on Population<sup>(1)</sup> adopted the Mexico City Declaration on Population and Development and a series of recommendations for the further implementation of the 1974 World Population Plan of Action.<sup>(2)</sup> The General Assembly in 1984<sup>(3)</sup> had asked the Population Commission to review those recommendations and their implications for the activities of the United Nations system.

The Secretary-General, in a January 1985 report<sup>(4)</sup> to the Commission, reviewed the implications of the recommendations for the work programme on population of the Secretariat's Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) and Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD). The report identified the substantive results of the Conference having major significance for the activities of the two Departments, examined the programmatic implications of major population themes for their medium-term plans of work, and described the institutional implications for the United Nations of a number of recommendations currently under consideration.

The Population Commission, at its twenty-third session (New York, 19-28 February 1985),<sup>(5)</sup> highlighted certain themes in its discussion of the Conference's recommendations, such as the continuing seriousness of population problems in general and, in particular, of high population growth rates, the interrelationships between population and development, the role and status of women, human rights, the rights of individuals and couples to decide freely the number of their children, national sovereignty, the need to improve standards of living and reduce morbidity and mortality, and the independent role of population policies and family planning programmes in the achievement of national population goals. The continuing importance of peace, security, disarmament and co-operation and the implications of demographic change for population distribution and structure also received attention.

The Commission noted the extensive range of topics proposed for the attention of the DIESA Population Division following the recommendations of the Conference. To the extent possible, the major themes that had emerged would be integrated into the entire range of population variables rather than treated as separate topics. In the field of urbanization and internal migration, the Commission was informed that emphasis would be placed on the study of urban structures and various forms of territorial mobility. Regarding international migration, it stressed the need to study separately the consequences of different types of migration flows as, for example, the effect of migration on fertility. The Commission also took note with satisfaction of the attention given to the preparation and dissemination of estimates and projections, and it endorsed plans to make them more readily accessible and more broadly useful to planners and policy-makers. Increased emphasis would be given to research on management and evaluation of population policies. Work planned in the area of factors affecting reproduction would be broadened to focus on such factors as contraceptive use and marriage and fertility patterns by age.

In regard to DTCB's work programme as affected by the Conference, reference was made to the need for action-oriented training related to programmes and policies for demographers, planners and programme managers, for strengthening institutional mechanisms such as population units to integrate population and development in national planning, for strengthening demographic data analysis and activities to monitor population change through population censuses, civil registration and sample surveys, for strengthening programmes of an interdisciplinary nature in population and development and for strengthening technical co-operation activities among developing countries. It recognized that the main thrust of the programme carried by DTCB was to help developing countries achieve national self-sufficiency in all areas related to population training, demographic analysis and population policy development and planning. The Commission also took note of DTCB's readiness to accommodate the activities that it might recommend as a result of the Conference, although it was pointed out that resources currently available were insufficient to meet these growing needs.

During the year, population activities were also undertaken by various bodies of the United Nations system, including the regional commissions, UNFPA and specialized agencies, as well as by NGOs.

ACC activities. The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) Task Force on the International Conference on Population met in New York from 13 to 15 February 1985 to discuss the implications of and follow-up actions to the recommendations of the Conference for different units, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system. Its report(6) was submitted to the Population Commission to facilitate its consideration of the subject.

At its first 1985 regular session (Geneva, 26-29 March),(7) ACC's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) took note of the report and decided that additional meetings of the Task Force would not be necessary, although, if required, further inter-agency consultations could be arranged.

UNFPA activities. The UNFPA Executive Director, in an April 1985 report(8) to the UNDP Governing Council, said that, with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of its assistance, as well as to reflect the changes of emphasis implied in the Conference's recommendations, UNFPA would strengthen its programmes dealing with family planning, information, education and communication, women's activities, and population and development. In addition to giving greater attention to newly emerging concerns about population distribution, youth and aging, the Fund would continue its support for both data collection and analysis and research and training.

In a June addendum,(9) the Executive Director informed the Governing Council that the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation had appointed a Steering Committee comprising the Under-Secretaries-General of DIESA and of DTCB, and himself, to initiate and supervise the preparation of a report, called for in a 1984 Assembly resolution,(3) on further steps taken to implement the Conference recommendations, in particular recommendation 83 on strengthening UNFPA to ensure more effective delivery of population assistance.

The UNDP Governing Council on 29 June(10) requested the UNFPA Executive Director to continue concentrating UNFPA's assistance in its core areas and give increased emphasis to strengthening its activities at the national level, and to circulate to all Council members the forthcoming report on Conference recommendations for implementing the World Population Plan of Action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1985, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/4 without vote.

Implications of the recommendations of the International Conference on Population

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/228 of 18 December 1984,

Having examined at its first regular session of 1985 the implications of the recommendations for the further implementation of the World Population Plan of Action made by the International Conference on Population, in order to provide overall policy guidelines within the United Nations system on population questions,

Recognizing the important role of international co-operation in the implementation of the recommendations,

Having considered the recommendations on the role of international co-operation, in particular recommendation 83, in which the Conference referred to the leading role of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities in population matters and urged that the Fund should be strengthened further, so as to ensure the more effective delivery of population assistance, taking into account the growing need in this field,

Having also considered recommendation 88 on the review and appraisal of the World Population Plan of Action and the monitoring of population trends and policies and of multilateral population programmes of the United Nations system,

1. Reaffirms the role of the Population Commission as the principal intergovernmental body to arrange for studies and advise the Council on:

(a) The size and structure of populations and the changes therein;

(b) The interplay of demographic factors and economic and social factors;

(c) Policies designed to influence the size and structure of populations and the changes therein;

(d) Any other demographic questions on which either the principal or the subsidiary organs of the United Nations or the specialized agencies may seek advice;

2. Welcomes the information provided by the representative of the Secretary-General on the plans for carrying out the task entrusted to him in paragraph 13 of General Assembly resolution 39/228;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in carrying out this task, to take into account the views expressed by the Population Commission on the need for:

(a) Assessing the performance, achievements and effectiveness of the work of the United Nations system relating to research on demographic developments, formulation of population policies and provision of financial support and technical assistance for population activities;

(b) Consistency in policy guidelines of different organizations within the United Nations system, taking into account the distinctive role of each body;

(c) Improved communication, co-operation and co-ordination in population matters between the different organizations;

(d) Delivering population assistance to countries which request it, with efficiency and effectiveness;

4. Invites the Secretary-General, in carrying out this task to avail himself of the advice of members of the Population Commission, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, the specialized agencies and, as appropriate, related non-governmental organizations and experts in population and other relevant matters;

5. Recommends, in view of the growing commitment of the developing countries, increased efforts by the international community to mobilize resources, as called for in recommendations 79 and 82 of the International Conference on Population, for meeting the increasing need of the developing countries for assistance for population activities;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Economic and Social Council, through the Population Commission and, as appropriate, the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, reports on the substantive and technical aspects of the monitoring of population trends and policies, and of multilateral population assistance, and an overview of population activities within the United Nations system;

7. Invites the Population Commission, at its twenty-fourth session, to review those reports and to transmit its views thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1987.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/4

Meeting 22

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/89) without vote. 17 May (meeting 6); draft by Population Commission (E/1985/25); agenda item 10.

In a related action, the Council, by decision 1985/119, decided to invite the governing bodies of the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to take the necessary and appropriate measures for the effective implementation of the report of the International Conference on Population, containing the recommendations of the Conference, within their respective spheres of competence and mandates.

The text was sponsored in the First Committee by Bangladesh,<sup>(11)</sup> which also orally revised it; it was approved without vote in both the Committee and the Council on 17 and 28 May, respectively.

UN Fund for Population Activities

UNFPA activities

In 1985—the year designated by the General Assembly as International Youth Year—UNFPA focused on reaching young people, particularly through the funding of information, education and communication programmes in developing countries. In-school and out-of-school programmes designed to create an awareness of responsible parenthood and the consequences of population trends and growth helped forge an understanding of those subjects among young people, said the Executive Director in his annual report for 1985.<sup>(1)</sup> He pointed out that between 1985 and the year 2000, the world's youth population—between the ages of 15 and 24—was projected to increase from 940 million to 1.06 billion.

UNFPA also concentrated its efforts on priority programme areas outlined in 1981<sup>(2)</sup> by the UNDP Governing Council—family planning; communication and education; population dynamics; basic data collection; formulation and evaluation of population policies; multisectoral activities; special programmes; and implementation of policies. In response to a large number of requests for assistance, attention was given to planning for future years. Evaluation of activities receiving UNFPA support was given a greater role in Fund programming, as were activities such as human resource development that would help in countries' eventual self-sufficient population and development policies.

Total UNFPA income in 1985 was $142.9 million compared with $138.4 million in 1984. Project allocations, which amounted to $141.4 million, are broken down in the tables below by major function and executing agency as well as geographically. Expenditures were $148.9 million, including $91.4 million for country programmes, $32.8 million for intercountry programmes, $4.6 million for the budgets of UNFPA Deputy Representatives and Senior Advisers on Population, $7.5 million for overhead payments, and $12.7 million for the administrative budget.

At year's end, UNFPA was assisting 2,667 projects—2,067 country, 285 regional, 141 inter-regional and 174 global. In 1985, 64 projects were completed, bringing the cumulative total to 2,257.

UNFPA assistance for maternal and child health and family planning (MCH/FP) programmes, which amounted to $72.5 million, or over half the total allocations, emphasized extension of service delivery to both rural and marginal urban areas. It also focused on projects to enhance accessibility and quality of services through personnel development and training at the country level, preparation of training materials and methodologies, management and evaluation, and contraceptive and family planning research. Particular attention was given to improving management of integrated MCH/FP programmes. Workshops brought together staff of technical agencies and UNFPA to study the development and execution of UNFPA-supported programmes.

Funds for population education and communication totalled $20.3 million, or 14.4 per cent of programme allocations. Information, education and communication activities were one of the key areas for UNFPA's encouragement of innovation in the population assistance field. Projects in 1985 included a television programme for Mexican teenagers, use of itinerant theatre and dance groups in remote villages and various population modules for primary and secondary schools. These types of activities were more effective in conjunction with MCH/FP services.

Assistance to population dynamics projects totalled $15.9 million. As data pools had increased over the past 15 years, the need for population dynamics activities also increased. UNFPA funds assisted countries with population research, demographic training, institution-building and dissemination and utilization of research findings on specific population trends.

Activities in basic data collection totalled $11.5 million, providing support for 116 population censuses, 64 demographic and population surveys, 54 civil registration and vital statistics systems and 25 related demographic projects. Assistance continued to emphasize technical assistance, training and the provision of supplies and equipment.

Support for formulating and evaluating population policies and programmes totalled $9.6 million and included assistance for the creation of national population units and for the organization of seminars, study tours and other activities preparatory to the formulation of national population policy, as well as for country studies on population and development strategies and the management and co-ordination of population activities.

Assistance for special programme interests, which totalled $1.7 million, included issues of women in population and development, youth and aging. UNFPA participated and provided financial support for the participation of 36 women from 33 developing countries in the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (Nairobi, Kenya, July 1985) (see Chapter XIX of this section). Thirty projects with a budget close to $2 million were approved to improve the status of women. Within the Fund, a Special Unit for Women and Youth was established by the Executive Director. Most UNFPA-supported youth projects dealt with population and family life education in both the formal and informal educational sectors. In co-operation with the Economic Commission for Europe, the Fund also supported studies on the economic and social consequences of aging and other studies, seminars and workshops in this field.

Policy implementation accounted for $600,000. As an example of UNFPA's work in that area, the Fund sponsored an expert group meeting on population and development planning in which 11 country experts and 12 international experts participated. The recommendations of the meeting (New York, January 1985) would assist UNFPA in drawing up guidelines for more effective project formulation and implementation.

*Classified as a priority country for UNFPA assistance.

SOURCE: DP/1986/34 (Parts I & II).

Country and intercountry programmes

In 1985, UNFPA continued to address the needs of the countries given priority status for UNFPA assistance (see table above), of which 30 were in Africa, 15 in Asia and the Pacific, 2 in Latin America and the Caribbean, and 5 in the Middle East and the Mediterranean. Of the year's total UNFPA project allocations of $141.4 million, those for regional, interregional and country activities amounted to $103.9 million, or 86.3 per cent of the total.

Intercountry programmes (regional, inter-regional and global), which totalled $37.3 million in 1985, represented 26.4 per cent of total allocations. Activities included technical assistance and backstopping, training, research, and information exchange through clearing-houses and population information networks.

On 29 June,<sup>(3)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council reiterated its goal of devoting up to two thirds of country programme assistance to the priority countries. It approved UNFPA assistance to large-scale country programmes for Bangladesh, Brazil, Cuba, Ghana, India, Indonesia, the Ivory Coast, Nicaragua, Sierra Leone and Uganda. The Council asked the Executive Director to strengthen efforts to improve project implementation as well as Governments' capacity to implement their population programmes and report in 1987 on implementation experience relating to allocations and expenditures with different executing agencies. It also asked for a progress report on the regional and interregional demographic training and research centres.

Family planning research

The UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the UNDP Governing Council in March 1985 a problem-oriented analysis<sup>(4)</sup> of UNFPA's experience in the family planning area. The report stated that, in view of the large number of women entering the reproductive years, the demand for family planning, both as a health and a fertility-limiting measure, would increase considerably. It had been estimated that, in order to reach the level of contraceptive prevalence required to attain a total fertility rate of 3.3 children per woman by the year 2000, an investment of $5.6 billion would be needed. The report analysed various situational and organizational variables relevant to implementing family planning activities and considered the issue of adequacy of contraceptives, outlining insights considered useful to countries, to UNFPA and to other donors in designing and implementing family planning programmes.

Another March report<sup>(5)</sup> examined the use of incentives and disincentives (i.e. rewards or penalties tied to some kind of fertility behaviour) in family planning programmes. Incentives might be paid to acceptors (those who accept rewards), motivators (who attempt to persuade others) or service providers; disincentives were aimed almost exclusively at individuals or couples. The report noted their use in a number of countries, examined the types used and their target groups, their effects on the quality of services, and their relationship to free and informed choice. The Executive Director stressed that, in assessing the complex ethical and human rights issues raised, it was vital to take into account the socio-cultural context within which they operated-value systems, community consensus, individual and national perceptions, and the overall programme for socio-economic development.

On 29 June,<sup>(3)</sup> the Governing Council took note of the March reports and requested the UNFPA Executive Director to continue improving the design, management, monitoring and evaluation of family planning programmes and projects. The Council also asked him to encourage and support research on the effects of incentive and disincentive schemes on the quality of services offered and on the individual's free and informed choice.

As requested by the UNDP Governing Council in 1984,<sup>(6)</sup> the Executive Director submitted to it in March 1985 a report<sup>(7)</sup> on the results of the recommendations of the Policy and Co-ordination Committee of the Special Programme of Research, Development and Research Training in Human Reproduction of the World Health Organization, together with a recommendation for the level of UNFPA funding for 1986-1989.

The Council on 29 June,<sup>(3)</sup> approved the allocation by UNFPA of an additional $500,000 to the Special Programme for 1985, raising the total for that year to $2.5 million, and decided that allocations to that Programme should be increased if possible to $2.75 million for 1986, $3 million for 1987, $3.25 million for 1988, and $3.5 million for 1989. It also noted greater co-ordination of international efforts in contraceptive research.

Work programmes

The income assumptions in the UNFPA work plan for 1986-1989,<sup>(8)</sup> prepared by the Executive Director, were based on Government contributions for 1985 at the exchange rate as at January 1985 and on increases of 5.5, 6, 6.5 and 7 per cent, respectively, for the years 1986-1989, and on some expected increases in interest earnings. After deductions for operational costs and additions to the operational reserve, programmable resources were expected to total $505.4 million for the four years of the work plan: $116.3 million for 1986, $122 million for 1987, $129.2 million for 1988 and $137.9 million for 1989. Inter-country activities for that period would account for 26.7 per cent ($135 million) of total programmable resources, and country activities for 73.3 per cent ($370.4 million). The report also updated information in a 1982 report on the review and reassessment of the UNFPA programme for 1982-1985, concerning the resource situation, overall resource use, distribution of new programmable resources between country and inter-country activities and allocations to country activities. It also contained information on implementation of plans in a 1984 review, and reassessment and revisions required for 1985.

On 29 June,<sup>(3)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council approved the update and the work plan, and gave approval authority-on the understanding that the Executive Director would limit approval of projects to available resources-for net additional amounts of $40.3 million for 1986, $39.7 million for 1987, $39.1 million for 1988 and $38.6 million for 1989.

With regard to a report<sup>(9)</sup> of the Executive Director on the status of financial implementation of Council-approved UNFPA programmes and projects, the Council noted the proportional distribution of allocations between country and inter-country activities achieved in 1984, reaffirmed the existing target of up to 25 per cent of programmable resources for inter-country activities, and requested that a report clarifying the definition of inter-country activities and reviewing the possibility of revising the definition and the target be presented in 1986.

Programme planning and evaluation

During 1985, seven independent, in-depth evaluations were undertaken of UNFPA-assisted programmes and projects in Haiti, Honduras, Mozambique, Nepal, Pakistan, Paraguay and the Sudan, the results of which were presented to the UNDP Governing Council in the report of the UNFPA Executive Director for 1985.<sup>(1)</sup>

In another report<sup>(10)</sup> to the Council, on UNFPA evaluation activities, the Executive Director analysed, compared and reviewed the results of evaluations regarding basic data collection, population and development, MCH/FP, population education and communication, and the role and status of women. It also provided information on the evaluation activities of UNFPA during 1984-1985 and discussed plans for activities in that area.

On 29 June,<sup>(3)</sup> the Governing Council noted the Fund's intention to address the need for further developing and strengthening the system of monitoring and evaluation and for the feedback of the results into its policies and programmes.

Financial and administrative questions

Budget for 1986-1987

On 1 January 1985, UNFPA's balance was $17,499,884. During the year, the Fund received income of $142,945,106 and had expenditures of $148,889,281, which resulted in an excess of expenditure over income of $5,994,175. The Fund's balance as at 31 December was $7,555,709; unspent allocations totalled $18,035,576.

In May<sup>(11)</sup> the UNFPA Executive Director submitted to the UNDP Governing Council the budget estimates for administrative and programme support services for the 1986-1987 biennium. On 29 June,<sup>(12)</sup> the Council took note of the Fund's report, as well as of the report<sup>(13)</sup> of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) which, commenting on the estimates, suggested reducing travel and communications costs. In the same report, ACABQ also commented on a report<sup>(14)</sup> dealing with the financial implications for support services of a job classification exercise and another<sup>(15)</sup> on the inclusion of UNFPA Deputy Representatives and other field and headquarters posts into the regular manning table and on UNFPA basic manpower requirements (see p. 768). The Governing Council approved net appropriations for the biennium in the amount of $36,643,669 to finance administrative and programme support services, and asked the Executive Director to keep support services costs to a minimum. It also asked him, when presenting the financial and budgetary situation of UNFPA, to follow the guidelines used by UNDP.

Contributions

During 1985, 86 countries and Territories paid a total of $122.1 million in voluntary contributions to UNFPA (see table below), compared with $122.5 million from 81 countries and Territories in 1984.<sup>(16)</sup> This figure, together with additions and adjustments to pledges for prior years, exchange-rate and currency revaluation adjustments, interest, donations and other miscellaneous income, gave a total 1985 income of $142.9 million. Pledges for 1986 and future years from 78 countries and Territories totalled $92.1 million as at 31 December 1985 (see table below), compared with $109.8 million from 76 countries and Territories at the end of the previous year.

On 29 June 1985,<sup>(3)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council urged all countries that were able to do so to increase their contributions in 1986 and future years, and to make their contribution payments as early as possible. It authorized the Executive Director to request a special session of the Governing Council should developments in regard to the Fund's resource situation and the necessity for reprogramming of available resources warrant it.

Accounts for 1984

Following the audit of the UNFPA financial statements for the year ended 31 December 1984, the Board of Auditors<sup>(17)</sup> observed that expenditures for project delivery had in some cases exceeded allotments or were incurred without them, while in some projects allotments remained unutilized. It recommended again that control of project allocations and expenditures be strengthened and that the year-end rephasing-of-allocations exercise be monitored more closely. The Board recommended that measures be taken to speed up clearance procedures for financial reports for clearing up discrepancies between the annual field office status-of-allotments reports and the amounts recorded in the year-end financial report produced by headquarters. Noting uncollected pledges of $807,083 pertaining to 1982 and earlier years, the Board reiterated that write-off action should be initiated when appropriate. The Board considered that UNFPA could enhance the effectiveness of its support to conferences, meetings and workshops of NGOs by participating more actively in the evaluation of their final outcome and impact.

The UNFPA Executive Director said the Administration would take measures to comply with the Board's recommendations and comments on budgetary control. He pointed out that uncollected pledges pertaining to 1982 and earlier years represented less than 0.0001 per cent of total pledges for those years; he added that UNFPA would continue to take the necessary measures for the collection and audit adjustment of unpaid pledges.

By resolution 40/238 of 18 December 1985, the General Assembly accepted the UNFPA financial report and audited financial statements and the audit opinion of the Board of Auditors. It requested that remedial action be taken as required.

Audited accounts, 1983

On 29 June 1985,<sup>(12)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took note of the audited accounts of the participating and executing agencies relating to funds allocated to them by UNFPA as at the end of 1983.<sup>(18)</sup>

In a report,<sup>(19)</sup> requested in 1984,<sup>(20)</sup> on the reaction of those agencies and the Panel of External Auditors to views expressed on the importance of receiving narrative audit reports, it was noted that none of the agencies objected to the external auditors' providing narrative audit reports which disclosed audit results sufficiently wide in scope to cover areas the Council had identified in previous decisions, including the audit of the effectiveness of financial management.

The Council requested the UNFPA Executive Director to reiterate to agencies the importance it attached to long-form narrative reports, and to continue his efforts to obtain them.

Staffing

Pursuant to a June 1984 request,<sup>(21)</sup> the Executive Director submitted to the UNDP Governing Council in April 1985 a report<sup>(15)</sup> on the inclusion of UNFPA Deputy Representatives and Senior Advisers on Population in the regular staffing table. The report, after reviewing briefly UNFPA's current position and future prospects, outlined considerations requiring the fuller integration of field and headquarters staff into a combined staffing table financed by the regular administrative and programme support services budget. The report also outlined the Executive Director's views as to UNFPA's basic manpower requirements for future years, focusing primarily on two bienniums—1986-1987 and 1988-1989.

ACABQ<sup>(13)</sup> concluded that justifications submitted in the Executive Director's report were insufficient to warrant the proposed integration of the project-funded headquarters and field posts in the numbers and grade levels proposed. However, it recommended that the Governing Council should accept the proposed integration of 33 Deputy Representative and Senior Adviser project-funded posts into the regular staffing table, and that the Executive Director should ensure that the Council was kept aware of all new project-funded posts established in the future.

On 29 June, <sup>(12)</sup> the Council requested the Executive Director to present to it for approval at its 1986 session draft guidelines for what should be regarded as project-related personnel expenditures (budgeted as project costs) and what should be regarded as administration-related personnel expenditures (budgeted as administrative costs). It also decided to establish in the regular administrative and programme support services budget for 1986-1987 33 Deputy Representative and Senior Adviser posts, nine international programme officer posts and 10 Professional posts at headquarters. Project-funded Professional and General Service posts at headquarters were to be abolished after the contracts of current incumbents had expired, as well as currently vacant General Service posts. A report on implementation was requested for 1986.

A note<sup>(14)</sup> on job classification results and their financial implications indicated that the results of the classification of the UNFPA General Service staff into the new seven-level structure would be implemented effective 1 January 1985, and those for the Professional category a year later. For the General Service, $52,500 would be needed to cover salary increases in 1985; $400,000 would be required annually for 1986-1987 for the Professionals. ACABQ did not interpose any objection to the results of the classification exercise, but felt that the Council might wish to consider correcting UNFPA's grading structure, given the continuing decline in lower-level posts.

The Governing Council, on 29 June,(12) authorized the Executive Director to implement the results of the job classification exercise and the new salary scale for General Service staff of UNFPA when the Secretary-General implemented them for United Nations General Service; he was to implement the reclassification results for Professional posts effective 1 January 1986.

The Council also asked the Executive Director to prepare for 1986 a comprehensive report on personnel management, with recommendations, including a study of the link between the work-load and personnel structure in UNFPA, priorities to be set in order to strengthen specific areas, career development, feasibility of redeployment of posts and personnel rotation between the field and headquarters, and recruitment policies.

Other population activities

Population Commission

The Population Commission held its twenty-third session in New York from 19 to 28 February 1985,(1) discussing the implications of the recommendations of the 1984 International Conference on Population,(2) the action to be taken by the United Nations to implement those recommendations, population trends and policies, the programme of work in population for 1986-1987 and implementation of the programme budget for 1984-1985. Issues it discussed included world demographic analysis, demographic projections, population policies, population and development, monitoring, review and appraisal of population trends, factors affecting patterns of reproduction, dissemination of population information, technical co-operation and demographic statistics.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Population Commission on its twenty-third session (decision 1985/121). It also approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the twenty-fourth (1986) session of the Commission (decision 1985/118): The first decision was orally proposed by the Council President; the second had been proposed by the Population Commission and was approved on 17 May by the Council's First Committee. Both texts were adopted without vote.

Population work programme

In a December 1984 report(3) to the Population Commission, the Secretary-General described the progress achieved by DIESA and DTCD in implementing their programmes of work in the field of population during 1984.(4) He also transmitted notes (5) on the population programmes of work of the two Departments for the biennium 1986-1987.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

3. Re-emphasizes the importance of maintaining the effectiveness and efficiency of the global population programme and of continuing to strengthen co-ordination and collaboration among the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, the regional commissions, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and organizations of the United Nations system in the planning and execution of their population programmes, as well as the need for organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen collaboration and co-ordination with other appropriate intergovernmental and national organizations.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/5

Meeting 22

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/89) without vote, 17 May (meeting 6); draft by Population Commission (E/1985/25): agenda item 10.

Population structure

The Population Commission in February proposed for the Economic and Social Council's adoption a draft resolution on population structure.

In a report(6) on the world population situation (see below), the Secretary-General noted views expressed by Governments that changing population age structure was having a negative impact on some economies. The large proportion of youth among some populations affected education and employment, increasing numbers of women in the reproductive ages could contribute to higher population growth rates, and the aging of the population was of concern to both developing and developed countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, on 28 May, adopted resolution 1985/3, without vote, as recommended by the First Committee.

Population structure

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the recommendations of the World Population Conference, in particular those contained in the World Population Plan of Action, especially paragraphs 63, 64 and 66 thereof, where emphasis is laid on the need to take fully into account the implications of changing proportions of youth, working-age groups and the aged, which affect a growing number of developed and developing countries,

Recalling also the recommendations of the International Conference on Population, in particular recommendations 57 and 58, in which the Conference called for an intensification of efforts in the execution of specific programmes related to youth and requested that further efforts should be made to analyse the issue of aging, particularly its implications for overall development,

Noting the findings of the studies undertaken in preparation for the World Assembly on Aging,

Affirming the need to implement the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Affirming also the need to implement the International Plan of Action on Aging,

Bearing in mind the deliberations of the Population Commission at its twenty-third session on the implications of the recommendations of the International Conference on Population,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 39/228 of 18 December 1984, by which the Assembly reaffirmed the need to pay attention to specific problems of population structure,

1. Urges all Governments, when formulating their social and economic policies, plans and programmes, to take fully into account the existing and anticipated demographic structures of their populations, paying particular attention to their relation to the following:

(a) The number of students and the need for teachers and schools, in connection with ongoing and future technological change;

(b) The changing organization and role of the family, particularly families made up of young people;

(c) The formation of new household and housing needs;

(d) The changing patterns of consumption and savings;

(e) The needs of youth for productive employment opportunities;

(f) The needs of the elderly for social and economic security, and their potential contribution to development;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in supporting the activities of Governments in these efforts, to consider fully the relevant aspects of changing age structures and in this respect:

(a) To continue the work of assessing current and future population structures in both developed and developing countries, paying particular attention to the increase in the proportions of youth and the aged in those populations;

(b) To continue and strengthen efforts to study the implications of changing population structure for social and economic development, for family and household structure, and for social services, medical care and other related fields;

(c) To continue and strengthen efforts to monitor and analyse policies to address specific requirements arising from changing population structure, especially for youth and the aged;

(d) To report to the Population Commission, on a timely basis, the findings of studies on these issues, as well as estimates and projections on the youth and the aged populations, and to make that information available to Governments, non-governmental organizations and others concerned.

Meeting 22

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/89) without vote, 17 May (meeting 6); draft by population Commission (E/1985/25); agenda item 10.

World population situation

In March 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a summary and the conclusions of his biennial report on the world population situation,(6) even though the previous such report had been submitted in 1984(6) for consideration in connection with preparations for the International Conference on Population. The report surveyed trends in population growth, structure, fertility, mortality, distribution, internal and international migration, and the social and economic implications of demographic trends. It also included a summary of the views expressed by Governments at the 1984 Conference, relating to: national sovereignty, human rights, cultural values and peace; population and the status of women; mortality and morbidity; population growth and fertility; population structure; migration and population distribution; population and development; and international co-operation.

The report estimated that, by the year 2000, the world's population would be close to 6.1 billion, of which nearly 80 per cent would be residing in developing countries, compared to 4.5 billion in 1980. The current rate of global population growth was estimated at 1.65 per cent per year, down from 2 per cent during the 1960s. Declines of growth rates occurred in both developed and developing countries. Among the developing regions, in which the annual growth rate declined as a group from 2.5 per cent during 1970-1975 to 2 per cent during 1980-1985-although if China were excluded (whose growth rate dropped from 2.4 to 1.2 per cent per year during the same period), the decline for that group would be less significant (from 2.5 to 2.4 per cent per year)-Africa showed a still-rising growth rate of over 3 per cent during 1980-1985, and Western Asia, 2.9 per cent, with no sign of significant changes. Other South Asian regions and Latin America had respective growth rates of 2.1 and 2.4 per cent during the period, and had been declining over the past decade.

By decision 1985/120, the Economic and Social Council, on 28 May, on an oral proposal by its President, took note of the Secretary-General's report.(6)

UN Population Award

By a 5 December 1985 letter to the Secretary-General,(8) Bangladesh, as Chairman of the Committee for the United Nations Population Award, transmitted a note on the Award for 1985.

The Committee had received 21 nominations. Meeting on 25 and 26 February, the Committee had selected the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) as laureate for the 1985 Award. Established in 1952 with headquarters in London, IPPF was described as the largest international NGO working directly in the promotion of voluntary family planning services throughout the world, operating in 121 countries. The 1985 Award-a diploma, a gold medal and $25,000-was presented by the Secretary-General at a ceremony on 7 June at United Nations Headquarters.

By the end of 1984, the Trust Fund for the United Nations Population Award, administered by the Executive Director of UNFPA, amounted to $455,867; expenditures in 1984 totalled $55,074. Early in 1985, India contributed $50,000.

Chapter XV

Health and human resources

Health risks increased during 1985 as more chemicals were released, used or dumped into the environment. Demand grew for action to counter the threats to health by chemical, biological and physical environmental agents. The United Nations Environment Programme and the World Health Organization, particularly in developing countries, identified potentially harmful agents and promoted the enactment of control measures.

The majority of the population in many developing countries continued to be afflicted by chronic dietary energy deficiency; the United Nations University (UNU) sponsored research into the nature of the problem. During the year, UNU had 78 ongoing projects and subprojects under nine programme areas: peace and conflict resolution; global economy; energy systems and policy; resource policy and management; food-energy nexus; food, nutrition, biotechnology and poverty; human and social development; regional perspectives; and science, technology and the information society.

Measures were undertaken by the United Nations system to implement the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons within the framework of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992). In May, the Economic and Social Council requested the Secretary-General to continue to support and monitor implementation of the Programme of Action, and to include the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons among the programmes for which funds were pledged at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (resolution 1985/35). The Fund was renamed by the General Assembly, in November, as the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons; the Assembly also invited States to give high priority to projects for the prevention of disabilities, rehabilitation and equal opportunities for disabled persons (resolution 40/31).

In December, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take into account the need for an integrated, multidisciplinary approach to human resources development in developing countries, particularly the training of qualified national personnel (40/213), and decided to grant the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) an amount of $600,000, corresponding to the unspent balance of a grant authorized in 1984 (decision 40/451). The need for a decision on UNITAR's long-term financing and future was stressed in another December resolution (40/214).

The Economic and Social Council requested the University for Peace in Costa Rica, which had held its first course in 1984, to report to the Secretary-General on its development, activities and future plans, including post-graduate programmes (1985/2).

Topics related to this chapter. Operational activities: technical co-operation through UNDP—staff-related matters. Food: food problems; food aid. Science and technology: brain drain. Environment: environmental activities. Human rights: human rights of disabled persons.

Health

Human and environmental health

During 1985, health-related environmental activities were conducted by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the World Health Organization (WHO) and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO).

A healthy environment was one of the main prerequisites for human health as well as for environmental protection, the UNEP Executive Director stated in his 1985 annual report.<sup>(1)</sup> That understanding was the basis for close co-operation between UNEP and WHO on projects related to the chemical, biological and physical safety of man and of the environment.

Two concurrent trends were noticeable with regard to environmental health. The first was the increasing risk as more and more chemicals were released, used or dumped, many of them being mutagens or highly toxic, affecting humans, animals and other biological species. Apart from the damage they caused in terms of suffering and the death of individual victims, they could also lead to the extinction of whole species. The second trend was a growing demand for positive action to counter the threats of chemical, biological and physical environmental agents.

UNEP played a central role, particularly in developing countries, in identifying potentially harmful agents, promoting the enactment and enforcement of improved control measures on their use and movement, and providing advice and technical materials to improve environmental health (see p. 801).

WHO, in co-operation with the World Federation of Associations of Clinical Toxicology Centres and Poison Control Centres, prepared to assist developing countries in establishing facilities for medical emergencies arising from acute chemical intoxication. It also prepared chemical safety data sheets for the chemicals used in those countries, summarizing information inter alia on the physical, chemical and toxicological properties of those substances; on first aid, environment protection measures, and explosion and fire hazards; and on safety, storage and transport precautions, and spillage and disposal procedures.

The UNEP Global Environmental Monitoring System (see p. 800), in co-operation with WHO, monitored urban air, water quality and food contamination. Under a UNEP/WHO Human Exposure Assessment Locations programme, health-related monitoring continued (see p. 803).

The assessment of air, water and land pollution sources on the basis of WHO guidelines was promoted through national workshops—for example, at Buenos Aires, Argentina (July), and Jilin, China (September); through regional courses, as in Kuwait (September); and through co-operative activities for intercountry training, such as those of the Pan American Center for Human Ecology and Health. As a result of those workshops, national experts drew up pollution source inventories in a number of countries.

An International Code of Conduct on the Distribution and Use of Pesticides was approved by the FAO Conference in November. The Code's basic objectives were to identify potential health and environmental hazards in the distribution and use of pesticides, and to define responsibilities and set voluntary standards for the regulation, distribution and use of pesticides. Pesticide poisoning was estimated to kill more than 10,000 persons a year world-wide and cause serious illness in about 400,000 others.

Health and nutrition

In 1985, UNU (see p. 785) conducted work on food, nutrition, biotechnology and poverty.<sup>(2)</sup> Policy-oriented activities aimed at helping developing countries increase and improve food supplies, increase knowledge of human nutrition and simultaneously reduce poverty through employment and improvement of income levels. The work on biotechnology was to help ensure that the developing world would benefit from major advances.

Chronic dietary energy deficiency continued to affect the majority of the population in many developing countries. Definitive information on the benefits of increasing caloric intake and additional studies on chronic energy deficiency in individual societies were urgently needed. The Sub-Committee on Nutrition of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) shared the costs of a workshop (Washington, D. C., 28 October-1 November) organized by UNU to evaluate research results and formulate guidelines for further research.

Studies were completed in villages in Egypt and Indonesia on the functional consequences of iron deficiency.

As part of the start-up activities of a regional food and nutrition project for Africa, UNU sponsored a workshop on need-based information service in appropriate food science and technology for Africa (Lagos, Nigeria, 3-8 June). Participants from 16 African nations met with information, documentation and library science experts to identify food science and technology information needs in Africa.

UNU and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) jointly supported studies by social scientists in 14 developing countries on the impact of nutrition and primary health care on the health knowledge and health-seeking behaviour of families. WHO was strongly supportive of the research.

Activities in 1985 of the International Network of Food Data Systems, set up by UNU to facilitate world-wide access, retrieval, interchange and harmonization of food composition data, included the preparation of guidelines for methodological improvement and quality control and for classification and nomenclature of foods, and plans for the computer storage and retrieval of regional data.

Scientists from developed and developing countries carried out research on nitrogen fixation in the root system of rice, using advanced techniques such as recombinant deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) and tissue culture. Seven research projects had been started in China, Malaysia, Nigeria, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Viet Nam and the Korean peninsula, jointly with FAO and the International Atomic Energy Agency and with institutes in Canada, France, Japan, the Netherlands, the USSR and the United States.

In co-operation with Venezuela, UNU was examining possibilities for establishing a biotechnology programme in Latin America and the Caribbean which would lead to the setting up of a UNU research and training centre at Caracas. The University began work on vaccines and diagnostics to combat brucellosis in animals and humans, a disease most prevalent in the Latin America region.

The University was attempting to establish one or more networks for biotechnology research in Africa. Together with the International Foundation for Science, of Stockholm, Sweden, it organized a workshop on possible areas of research (Douala, Cameroon, 10-20 October), attended by more than 30 African scientists. UNU also sponsored a meeting for policy-makers (Helsinki, Finland, 12-16 August) on educational, social, legal, ethical, industrial and environmental issues affecting the implementation of biotechnology in developing countries.

During 1985, four issues of the Food and Nutrition Bulletin were published with a total of 46 articles; the special September issue was devoted to household-level food production. UNU supported a Directory of Anthropologists and Sociologists Concerned with Food and Nutrition, compiled by the International Commission on Anthropology and Food of the International Union of Anthropology and Ethnographic Sciences, and co-published with Oxford University Press Nutrition and Development, a collection of nine papers prepared following a 1980 meeting of the International Food Policy Research Institute.

ACC activities

In its annual overview report for 1984/85,(3) ACC discussed the work of its Sub-Committee on Nutrition in carrying out inter-agency work. The Sub-Committee had previously identified three areas for priority action by the United Nations system which had been endorsed by ACC in 1984:(4) improving country-level support for nutrition activities; control of vitamin-A and iodine deficiencies; and increased attention to Africa's food and nutrition problems.

Much of the Sub-Committee's eleventh session (Nairobi, Kenya, 11-15 February 1985)(5) was devoted to discussing co-ordinated support of nutrition activities in Kenya; should those efforts prove successful, attempts would be made to introduce the approach in other countries.

ACC endorsed the Sub-Committee's proposal for a 10-year programme to prevent and control vitamin-A deficiency, xerophthalmia and nutritional blindness. The proposal described the prevalence and severity of the problem, national prevention and control programmes and activities that could be included in the programme. The work had been outlined in detail by WHO which the Sub-Committee had designated as lead-agency; other organizations were requested to prepare similar outlines.

At its second regular 1985 session in October,(6) ACC endorsed a report on the prevention and control of endemic goitre, endemic cretinism and other iodine deficiency disorders;(7) assigned high priority to the control and prevention of iodine deficiency disorders; and urged United Nations organizations to collaborate with the Sub-Committee in preparing a 10-year plan of action, also with WHO as lead agency. The Sub-Committee strongly favoured formation of a consultative group on iodine deficiency disease.

Discussing the famine crisis in Africa and the role of nutritionists in its alleviation, the Sub-Committee decided that its Advisory Group on Nutrition was to prepare a work plan and make recommendations. The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) of ACC, at its April 1985 session, expressed appreciation for the initiative, trusting that the Sub-Committee would bear in mind the desirability of not extending its mandate beyond its technical scope, particularly with regard to the African crisis.

Disabled persons

Implementation of the Programme of Action

A number of measures were undertaken in 1985 by the United Nations system(8) to implement the 1982 World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons (9) and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (1983-1992), also proclaimed in 1982 (10)

The International Initiative against Avoidable Disablement (IMPACT), established in 1983 in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), UNICEF, WHO and the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) to support the Decade, continued to promote disability prevention and effective rehabilitation at the national and regional levels through low-cost techniques.

Advisory services on disability policies and programmes were provided during 1984-1985 by the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCO), in co-operation with CSDHA, to 14 countries: Angola, Bahrain, China, Djibouti, Guinea, Jamaica, Jordan, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malta, Morocco, Peru, Philippines. DTCO was also establishing a National Orthopaedic and Rehabilitation Centre at Nouakchott, Mauritania.

In 1985, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees supported 26 projects for 5,719 disabled refugees in Africa, Asia, Europe and Latin America. It also provided severely disabled refugees with specialized medical treatment abroad and resettlement. The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East continued to provide disabled Palestinian refugee children with basic education, training and home-based services, and ran a training centre for visually disabled persons in the Gaza Strip.

Following a severe volcanic eruption in Colombia in November, the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator provided artificial limbs for about 100 persons.

The 1983 Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention(11) of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) became operative on 20 June 1985. During 1985, ILO provided nearly 50 developing countries with expert and consultant assistance, advisory services, fellowships and equipment, with special attention to alleviating the shortage of national vocational rehabilitation personnel.

Attention was given by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) to improving methods for integrating disabled children and youth into normal education structures and incorporating disability concerns into teacher training programmes. During 1984-1985, more than 60 countries benefited from UNESCO's special education activities.

Childhood disability prevention and rehabilitation were included in the activities of UNICEF. Disability prevention and community-based rehabilitation were promoted in a number of major primary health care programmes of WHO.

The 1985 FAO Conference requested that disability prevention and services be expanded in rural areas. CSDHA, entrusted with helping implement the World Programme of Action,<sup>(10)</sup> published four issues of the Disabled Persons Bulletin in English, French and Spanish.

In several countries, national committees established for the 1981 International Year of Disabled Persons (IYDP) continued to promote activities in support of the Decade; in others, the work had been transferred to the private sector. Disability-related activities had been assumed by governmental bodies in a number of other States.

The World Programme of Action encouraged Member States to make use of the technical expertise and promotional capabilities of non-governmental organizations (NGOs). A group of NGOs based at Vienna, Austria, established in December 1985 the Vienna Non-Governmental Organization Committee on Disabled Persons to assist the United Nations in publicizing the Decade.

Disabled Peoples' International reported that its Second World Congress (Nassau, Bahamas, 19-22 September), organized with the financial support of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, directed attention to the Decade and to the issue of human rights and disabled persons. Other 1985 activities of Disabled Peoples' International included a European regional conference of disabled persons, organized in co-operation with the Swedish National Society for Associations of the Disabled (Gothenburg, 3 and 4 June), and a leadership development seminar, for the southern Africa subregion, organized in co-operation with the National Council of Disabled Persons of Zimbabwe (Bulawayo, 29 June-6 July).

Among other NGOs, the World Medical Association gave wide publicity to the Decade. The World Veterans Federation adopted at its eighteenth General Assembly (Rotterdam, Netherlands, 18-22 November) a resolution on the basic rights of disabled persons. The League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies identified roles that its members could play in implementing the World Programme of Action. The International Federation of Disabled Workers and Civilian Handicapped requested member organizations to support the Decade. A project by the World Blind Union, setting forth action plans for visually disabled persons in Africa, Asia and Latin America, was presented in May to Governments and organizations around the world.

Two NGO umbrella bodies, the Council of World Organizations Interested in the Handicapped and Disabled Peoples' International, participated regularly in inter-agency meetings on the Decade (see below).

Inter-agency co-operation. Inter-agency co-operation in the disability field continued to be carried out in response to specific programme and project needs. The third inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (Vienna, 11-13 March 1985)<sup>(12)</sup> discussed position papers by United Nations organs and NGOs on implementation of the World Programme of Action; the procedure for monitoring the Programme's implementation; the terms of reference, cost and time-frame of inter-organizational task forces; and the activities of the United Nations Trust Fund for IYDP (see p. 779), IMPACT (see above), the Trust Fund for Victims of Torture (see Chapter XVIII of this section) and the Trust Fund for Handicapped Refugees. It was recommended that a fourth inter-agency meeting be held for three days in March 1986.

In its 1984/85 overview report,<sup>(3)</sup> ACC noted that CCSQ(PROG) had approved the convening of the March 1986 inter-agency meeting, and that there had been close co-operation within the ACC framework regarding implementation of the Programme and the Decade.

The second regional inter-agency consultation on the Decade by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, Thailand, August) reconstituted itself as the nucleus of an Asia-Pacific inter-organizational task force on disability issues.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in October 1985 a report on the implementation of the World Programme of Action and the Decade.<sup>(14)</sup> As at 9 August, 44 Governments had replied to a request for information on national committees which had continued to function beyond the 1981 IYDP or which had been established for the Decade. Twenty Governments had established IYDP committees, which were continuing to co-ordinate activities on behalf of the disabled. The report also reviewed measures undertaken by the United Nations system, such as the setting of guidelines for priority actions, dissemination of information, and the employment of disabled persons within the system.

The Commission for Social Development, at its February 1985 session,<sup>(15)</sup> considered a November 1984 progress report by the Secretary-General on national experience in implementing the Programme of Action. <sup>(16)</sup>Due to lack of consensus, the Commission did not take action on a draft resolution by which the Economic and Social Council would have expressed concern about the lack of publicity given to the Decade, and requested the Secretary-General to use the United Nations Trust Fund for IYDP to meet growing requests for technical co-operation and to continue to support and monitor the Programme of Action as a major activity of the disability programme of CSDHA.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/35.

United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into consideration General Assembly resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which the Assembly adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, and 37/53 of 3 December 1982 on the implementation of the World Programme of Action, in which the Assembly proclaimed the period 1983-1992 United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Also taking into consideration Council resolution 1983/19 of 26 May 1983, in which the Council, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to monitor and support the implementation of the World Programme of Action by enlisting extrabudgetary resources,

Further taking into consideration General Assembly resolution 39/26 of 23 November 1984, in which the Assembly reiterated the need for an effective implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on national experience in implementing the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and related activities of the United Nations and other international organizations and on the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Concerned with the necessity of keeping alive the momentum generated by the International Year of Disabled Persons and of observing the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and using it, in particular, as a time frame for the implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Noting that the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat has been designated, in paragraph 156 of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, as the focal point within the United Nations system for co-ordinating and monitoring the implementation of the World Programme of Action, including its review and appraisal,

Recalling that in paragraph 195 of the World Programme of Action it is stated that the United Nations system should carry out a critical periodic evaluation of progress made in implementing the World Programme of Action and to that end should select appropriate indicators for evaluation in consultation with Member States, and that the Commission for Social Development should play an important role in this respect,

1. Appeals to Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to help make the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons more widely known as a time frame for the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and to continue to take action to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue his efforts, with a view to ensuring optimal utilization of resources in order to give appropriate publicity to the objectives of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons proclaimed by the General Assembly as a long-term plan of action for the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to support, monitor and evaluate the implementation of the World Programme of Action, including its periodic revisions, as a major activity of the programme on disabled persons of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, and to continue to organize on a regular basis, at least once a year, the inter-agency meetings on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons for co-operation and harmonization of action by the United Nations system in this field;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General to enlist and utilize the resources of the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons to meet growing requests for assistance, advisory services and technical co-operation programmes submitted by developing countries and organizations of disabled persons for the implementation of the World Programme of Action;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, in order to facilitate contributions by Governments, to include the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons, on an annual basis, among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to continue to keep the Commission for Social Development informed of progress made in the monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the World Programme of Action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted without vote resolution 40/31.

Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/52 of 3 December 1982, by which it adopted the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons, 37/53 of 3 December 1982, by which, inter alia, it proclaimed the period 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, 38/28 of 22 November 1983, in which it recognized the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons as an important instrument for the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the desirability of the continuation of the Trust Fund throughout the Decade, and 39/26 of 23 November 1984, by which it adopted further specific measures for implementation of the World Programme of Action,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/35 of 29 May 1985, in which, inter alia, the Secretary General was requested, in order to facilitate contributions by Governments, to include, on an annual basis, the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities,

Noting with satisfaction the concrete measures already carried out by the Governments of Member States, the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations to implement the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the United Nations system and by non-governmental organizations concerned to establish a monitoring procedure and prepare a consolidated questionnaire to monitor the implementation of the World Programme of Action.

Noting with concern that, in spite of a number of contributions made by Governments between 1981 and 1985 and constant appeals by the General Assembly and other United Nations organs to contribute to the financing of activities for the disabled, progress towards the improvement of the situation of the disabled in the developing countries has been slow.

"Noting with serious concern 'the alarming situation of disabled persons in developing countries and the critical economic situation in a number of countries, in particular in Africa and Latin America and the least developed countries,

Mindful that, since developing countries are experiencing difficulties in mobilizing resources, international co-operation should be encouraged to assist national efforts in implementing the World Programme of Action and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons,

Expressing its appreciation to Member States and organizations, in particular to the twenty-five States that have donated $1.6 million over the past few years,

1. Urges all Member States and other donors to consider further generous contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons;

2. Expresses its appreciation to Member States that have established national committees or similar bodies to co-ordinate activities in the field of disability and encourages all Member States to do so;

3. Invites Member States to reinforce national committees as focal points for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, to stimulate activities at the national level, to mobilize public opinion on behalf of the Decade, to participate in the implementation of disability projects with regard to the International Year of Disabled Persons and to assist in monitoring and evaluating the implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons;

4. Encourages Member States to translate the World Programme of Action into national languages;

5. Invites Member States, in close collaboration with the national committees and non-governmental organizations concerned, to submit their replies to the questionnaire for the first round of monitoring and implementing the World Programme of Action to the Secretary-General as soon as possible for inclusion in his report on the evaluation of progress at mid-Decade, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

6. Urges Secretary-General to comply with paragraphs 157 and 158 of the World Programme of Action;

7. Invites all States to give high priority to consideration of projects concerning the prevention of disabilities, rehabilitation and the equalization of the opportunities of disabled persons within the framework of bilateral assistance;

8. Reiterates the need to give greater publicity to the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons and calls upon Member States, national committees and non-governmental organizations to assist in publicizing the Decade by all appropriate means;

9. Takes note of the measures taken by the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system to promote equal employment opportunities for disabled persons and urges them to continue their efforts in this field;

10. Endorses, in particular, the terms of reference proposed in the report of the Secretary-General for the United Nations Trust Fund for the International Year of Disabled Persons, henceforth to be called the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to administer donated funds, using them for projects under the present structure of the Trust Fund, and in addition to make new provisions in order to offer a selection of projects to donor countries which might be willing to finance a particular programme under the "Special Purpose Contributions";

12. Reaffirms that the resources of the Trust Fund should be used to support catalytic and innovative activities in order to implement further the objectives of the World Programme of Action within the framework of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, with priority given, as appropriate, to programmes and projects of the least developed countries;

13. Requests all bodies and organizations of the United Nations system administering assistance projects to take into account the concerns of disabled persons in their projects for the rehabilitation of the disabled and their integration into society, as well as to include disabled persons in their overall planning objectives;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

15. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in the report requested in paragraph 14 above information on preparations for the meeting of experts to evaluate progress at the mid-Decade, as provided for in paragraph 16 of resolution 37/53 and paragraph 13 of resolution 39/26, as well as information on the establishment of inter-organizational task forces, as recommended by the Advisory Committee for the International Year of Disabled Persons at its third and fourth sessions and by the General Assembly in paragraph 17 of its resolution 36/77 in order to provide support services for the exchange of technical information and transfer of technological know-how and other activities in the fields of prevention, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities in developing countries;

16. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Implementation of the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons and United Nations Decade of" Disabled Persons".

UN employment of disabled persons

The March 1985 inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons (see p. 776) stated that persons with disabilities should have the same rights as any other citizens in being considered for posts for which they were qualified, and that the United Nations should declare employment opportunities open to all qualified applicants, regardless of sex, religion, ethnic origin or disability. The quota system was not an appropriate method of increasing work opportunities for disabled persons, the meeting stated; it was considered divisive and discriminatory by disabled persons themselves and by many concerned organizations. Medical and personnel departments should be instructed to ensure that disabled persons were given full opportunity to compete for available posts. External recruitment drives should ensure that disabled applicants were informed of job opportunities and encouraged to compete on equal terms with non-disabled persons.

CCSQ (PROG), at its first regular session of 1985 in April, (17) endorsed in general the principles and recommendations elaborated at the meeting and referred them to the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (Personnel Matters) (CCAQ(PER)) for consideration of their administrative implications.

In his October 1985 report(14) on implementation of the World Programme of Action (see p. 776), the Secretary-General stated that there were employment opportunities for disabled persons at the United Nations and recruitment had included such persons, including consultants, for a variety of functions. The United Nations Office of Personnel Services (OPS) continued to support the work of CCAQ(PER) in connection with the drafting of a policy statement on employment of disabled persons in United Nations organizations; specific recommendations to improve employment opportunities of disabled persons at all levels had been formulated in 1983, and further action in pursuit of policy objectives related to such opportunities in the Secretariat was being undertaken by OPS in consultation with staff representatives.

In resolution 40/31, the General Assembly noted the measures taken by United Nations organizations to promote equal employment opportunities for disabled persons and urged them to continue their efforts.

Trust funds

Voluntary Fund for the Decade

The United Nations Trust Fund for IYDP, renamed in November 1985 Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, continued to support activities to implement the World Programme of Action and to realize the Programme's objectives of equalization of opportunities for disabled persons, prevention of disabilities and rehabilitation. Fund-supported activities included promotional activities; support to organizations of or concerned with disabled persons; data collection and applied research; training; and information. Between January 1980 and June 1985, the Fund disbursed more than $1.1 million for 51 projects, the majority of them (61 per cent) in developing regions, with Africa accounting for approximately one fourth of resources disbursed. While the priority in the allocation of Fund resources continued to be for catalytic and innovative activities, requests for Fund resources increasingly related to national capability-building efforts as an essential means to further implementation of the Programme of Action.

Since resources available were considerably less than those required to meet requests for assistance, contributions having substantially diminished since IYDP, the Fund sought to establish co-financing agreements for disability-related projects of developing countries with bilateral development assistance agencies, non-governmental funding entities and the private sector.

In 1985, the Trust Fund had a total income of $175,100 and expenditures of $313,042. Contributions to the Fund were made by Austria ($6,713), France ($10,526), Greece ($5,000), Oman ($5,000) and Zambia ($435).(18)

At the third inter-agency meeting on the Decade in March (see p. 776), attention was called to the problem of replenishing the Fund. The meeting concluded that organizations and bodies should present to future inter-agency meetings a detailed account of their Fund projects, and interested NGOs should use their good offices to approach Governments on behalf of the Fund.(12)

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1985/35, requested the Secretary-General to utilize the Fund's resources to meet growing requests by developing countries and organizations of disabled persons for assistance, advisory services and technical co-operation programmes, and to include the Fund among the programmes for which funds were pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

The Fund participated for the first time in the November 1985 Pledging Conference (see p. 463), at which it received pledges from six Governments totalling $52,861.

In his October report on implementation of the World Programme of Action,(14) the Secretary-General stated that the Fund had been an important component of efforts to maintain the momentum generated by IYDP and its continuation would be essential for successful implementation of the Programme. The Decade having been proclaimed on the understanding that no additional resources from the United Nations would be required, extrabudgetary resources would be necessary.

Taking into account the views expressed at the 1984 General Assembly session and in the light of the Fund's operational experience, the Secretary-General elaborated further the terms of reference for its continuation. The Fund's resources should be used to finance consultative and advisory services concerning the design and development of long-term national disability policies and programmes; technical co-operation activities and promoting the exchange of information, transfer of technology and know-how in the areas of prevention, rehabilitation and equalization of opportunities; the development of human resources and training activities; inter-agency collaboration at the national, regional and international levels; and data collection, research and analysis. The Fund's resources should be used mainly within two priority areas: to support catalytic and innovative projects of special importance and activities in new and emerging areas concerning disabled persons. In order to reflect the Fund's future scope of activities, the Secretary-General proposed to rename it United Nations Fund on Disability.

As part of the monitoring activities concerning implementation of the World Programme of Action at the mid-point of the Decade, in 1987, preparations were under way to convene a meeting of experts, as recommended by the Assembly in 1984,(13) the Secretary-General stated in his conclusions.

By resolution 40/31, the Assembly endorsed the terms of reference proposed by the Secretary-General for the Fund, which it renamed the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons. It urged Member States and other donors to contribute generously, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to administer funds, for projects under the current Fund structure, and, in addition, to make new provisions to offer a selection of projects to donor countries willing to finance a particular programme under Special Purpose Contributions. The Assembly reaffirmed that the Fund should be used to support catalytic and innovative activities, with priority given to programmes of the least developed countries.

Trust Fund for Norway's Contribution to the International Year

In 1985, the income of the Trust Fund for Norway's Contribution to the International Year of Disabled Persons was $113,432, while expenditures totalled $68,005.

Human resources

Human resources development

In June 1985, the Governing Council of UNDP considered an April note by the UNDP Administrator,(*) in which he proposed to convene an international workshop of eminent experts to advise him on human resources development, its role in the development process, factors affecting it, new approaches and technical co-operation, which might be followed by regional and subregional workshops or round-table meetings.

The Council, in a decision of 28 June,(2) welcomed the proposal for a series of workshops and appealed to Governments to support them.

In another April note,(3) the Administrator proposed establishing a UNDP human resources facility to supply skilled manpower to developing countries through short-term missions. The Council, on 29 June,(4) authorized him to establish for a trial period of two years, beginning on 1 July 1985, a UNDP focal point or clearing-house to channel highly qualified advisers to developing countries; the focal point would collaborate with the United Nations system, NGOs and other interested organizations in making expertise available. The Council urged United Nations agencies and other parties on 28 June(5) to improve their recruitment policies and procedures with respect to UNDP project personnel (see p. 484).

The Secretary-General, responding to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,(6) submitted a report in September 1985, with a later addendum,(7) on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries. To his request for information on the matter, he had received replies from 20 countries and four United Nations organizations and specialized agencies.

In an 18 November statement before the Assembly's Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the UNDP Administrator pointed out that, although the human factor in development had not always been given the attention it deserved, there seemed to be agreement that the economic performance of many developing countries did not always match the expectations created by capital inflows. Experience had shown the importance of creating the human and infrastructural capacities needed for capital to be utilized effectively; accordingly, action had been taken to meet developing countries' needs for specialized knowledge and skills. A Round Table on the Human Dimensions of Development had been convened (Istanbul, Turkey, 1-4 September), and Japan had agreed to co-sponsor with UNDP a global human resources workshop at Tokyo in 1986.

By adopting resolution 40/205, the Assembly endorsed conclusions and recommendations on human resources made during the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries.

UN Institute for Training and Research Activities of UNITAR

The 1985 activities of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, an autonomous organization within the United Nations system, were described by its Executive Director in a report to the General Assembly covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1986.(8)

UNITAR's training programme included training courses in multilateral diplomacy and international co-operation for diplomats, government and United Nations officials, and workshops on the structure, retrieval and use of United Nations documentation, international legal instruments, and international negotiation. Its training programme for economic and social development emphasized training in development management; modernization of public administration, in particular in least developed countries; management of public enterprises; and finance management. Activities included an international symposium on the modernization of public administration training in African countries (Berlin, 15-26 July) and an international workshop on participation of women in rural development (Bacu, USSR, 20 October-2 November).

Under UNITAR's research programme, financed mainly through special purpose grants, the UNITAR/UNDP Information Centre for Heavy Crude and Tar Sands continued to develop its activities and organized the Third International Conference on Heavy Crude and Tar Sands (Long Beach, California, United States, 22-31 July) (see p. 692). The UNITAR/UNDP Centre on Small Energy Resources, established in 1984 at Rome, Italy, as a clearing-house and bridge between donors and developing countries, became operational in 1985. Preparations were launched in May for a conference on the future of Latin America, to be held at Caracas, Venezuela, in 1986.

The Secretary-General reported in October 1985 to the Assembly(9) that the UNITAR Board of Trustees (New York, 9-11 September) considered a consultant's report outlining three possible options for UNITAR's future: the closing down of the Institute; its transformation into a perspective studies and analysis unit attached to the Office of the Secretary-General; and its restructuring with alternative institutional arrangements. The Board agreed that closing down UNITAR was undesirable and that attaching it to the Secretary-General's Office would be tantamount to shutting it down. The suggestion for restructuring came closest to the Board's own view of a future direction for UNITAR.

The Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in an 8 November statement before the Assembly's Second Committee, supported the Secretary-General's opinion that the option most likely to result in UNITAR's rejuvenation would involve a concentration of research activities on United Nations policy issues; such research would complement the work of the Secretariat and reflect the interests of Member States. In future, the Institute's training activities would be more closely related to its research programmes, while continuing to focus on enhancing the knowledge of diplomats and national officials in multilateral co-operation. The Secretary-General was not proposing any change in the institutional position of UNITAR, although closer co-operation with UNU should be explored.

Accounts for 1984

In June 1985, the United Nations Board of Auditors submitted to the General Assembly the financial statements of UNITAR for 1984.(11)

In its September 1985 report on audited financial statements,(12) the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions commented on the Board's remarks.

The Assembly in December, by resolution 40/238, accepted the 1984 financial report and statements.

Financing for 1986

The Secretary-General, in an October 1985 report,(9) recalled that the General Assembly in 1984(13) had decided to grant UNITAR up to $1.5 million, on an exceptional basis, to supplement its General Fund in 1985; the UNITAR Board of Trustees eventually had decided to reduce the UNITAR budget so as to use as little as possible of that grant. If anticipated 1985 contributions materialized, only about $750,000 of the grant would have been used; however, a significant portion of the contributions remained to be paid. Considering the uncertainty about the level of contributions, the Secretary-General recommended that the unused portion of the grant be made available to UNITAR in 1986.

The Assembly noted with regret in resolution 40/214 that the 1985 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities had been unable to provide UNITAR with the resources required to maintain the Institute during 1986; as at 30 June 1986, pledges totalled $1,273,497.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the Assembly adopted decision 40/451 by recorded vote.

United Nations Institute for Training and Research

At its 120th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, having considered the report of the Secretary-General, decided to grant the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, in order to supplement the funds raised through voluntary contributions for its 1986 budget, an amount corresponding to the unspent balance of the grant of $1.5 million authorized for the Institute in resolution 39/177 of 17 December 1984.

122.15-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1042) by recorded vote (91-15-121. 13 December (meeting 51); 2-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.125); agenda item 86.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Against: Australia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, France, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Brazil, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Israel, Italy, Japan, Mongolia, Netherlands, Portugal, Romania, Spain.

Australia and the United Kingdom stated that organizations funded voluntarily should not receive funds from the regular United Nations budget. Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they objected to granting UNITAR funds from the general budget.

Brazil abstained, having also abstained on paragraph 5 of the 1984 resolution by which the Assembly had decided to grant UNITAR $1.5 million.(13) Japan believed that the Institute should operate with voluntary contributions, the Federal Republic of Germany noted that the UNITAR statute required voluntary funding, and Italy felt that Governments should contribute to UNITAR more generously on a voluntary basis.

Argentina voted for the draft decision in view of the exceptional circumstances described in resolution 40/214 on long-term financing and future of UNITAR. Canada and Sweden voted in favour as part of a package with resolution 40/214 and to ensure adequate funds in 1986. Denmark supported the decision despite its concern about the use of regular-budget funds to cover the cost of UNITAR activities.

The Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee decided by a recorded vote of 63 to 15, with 11 abstentions, to inform the Assembly that, should it adopt the draft decision, an additional appropriation of $600,000 would be required as a grant to UNITAR under the 1986-1987 programme budget. The United States declared that it would reduce its voluntary UNITAR contribution by an amount equal to its share of the regular-budget cost of the proposed grant. The USSR also opposed charging to the regular budget activities that should be financed from voluntary contributions.

Long-term financing

Discussing the financial situation of UNITAR, the Secretary-General declared in his October 1985 report on the Institute,(9) requested by the General Assembly in 1984(13) since it had not been able to agree on long-term financial arrangements, that he was exploring ways of reducing UNITAR's operational and administrative costs;

in recent years, the latter had increased disproportionately to the costs of programme activities. The Secretary-General and UNITAR's Executive Director were examining ways in which the United Nations might take further responsibility for the Institute's financial and administrative functions, and ways of cutting the cost of the functioning of the Board of Trustees. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General had not proposed any further financing of the Institute's activities in the proposed programme budget for 1986-1987. The Executive Director would include $100,000 in the UNITAR budget as the first instalment towards the reimbursement to the regular budget for the advance of $886,000 approved by the Assembly in 1983(14)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/214.

Long-term financing and future of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/177 of 17 December 1984, in which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive study on the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, its activities in training and research, its funding and its future role, keeping in mind related activities within the United Nations system and the relevant provisions of the statute of the Institute, in order to determine the most effective manner of discharging those functions, and to submit his report together with the comments of the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research thereon, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/142 of, 17 December 1982 and 38/77 of 19 December 1983, in which it called upon the Secretary-General to submit a report on long-term financing arrangements for the Institute which would place its financing on a more predictable, assured and continuous basis,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the statement made on 8 November 1985 by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation,

Noting with regret that, so far, no agreement has been reached on the future role and, in particular, the long-term funding of the Institute,

Noting also with regret that the 1985 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was unable to provide the General Fund of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research with the level of resources required to maintain the Institute as a viable entity during 1986,

Acknowledging with regret that voluntary contributions to the Institute have so far been insufficient to guarantee the level of resources needed to maintain it as a viable entity, and that it has not been possible to reach agreement on any of the three options for long-term financing arrangements for the Institute recommended by the Board of Trustees, namely, the setting up of a reserve fund, the adoption of a replenishment system or the establishment of an endowment fund.,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms the continuing relevance of the mandate entrusted to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, namely, to enhance the effectiveness of the United Nations, and takes note of the view of the Secretary-General that this mandate continues to be essential to the functioning of the Organization today;

3. Takes note of the administrative, staffing and organizational arrangements outlined in the report of the Secretary-General on the future work of the Institute;

4. Stresses the need to take a final decision on the long-term financing and future of the Institute at the latest at the forty-first session of the General Assembly and, to this end, requests the Secretary-General to prepare comprehensive specific plans for the future of the Institute based on two options contained in his report:

(a) To close down the Institute, including the possibility of re-allocating the functions of the Institute to other agencies and bodies throughout the United Nations system where those functions could be undertaken in an efficient and cost-effective manner;

(b) To restructure the Institute, including the possibility of transferring to the Institute appropriate ongoing and planned training and research functions of other agencies and bodies throughout the United Nations system;

such plans should include a detailed assessment of the financial implications of the two options, including a blueprint for a specific scheme for the long-term and stable funding of the Institute, which could be tried on an experimental basis;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to keep in mind, while preparing the plans requested in paragraph 4 above, the need for specific suggestions for the improvement of administrative arrangements to ensure cost-effectiveness;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to consult, as appropriate, with all States and the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research before finalizing the plans, which should be submitted to the General Assembly not later than 1 September 1986;

7. Urges all States that have not yet contributed to the United Nations Institute for Training and Research to do so, and calls upon all countries, especially those donor countries that are not contributing at a level commensurate with their capacity, to increase their voluntary contributions in order to meet the needs of the Institute.

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1042) without vote. 13 December (meeting 511; draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.124), based on informal consultations on drafts by Egypt, India, Ivory Coast, Mali and Pakistan (A/C.2/40/L.87) and by Canada and Denmark (A/C.2/40/L.88); agenda item 86.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 29, 45, 47, 51; plenary 120.

Stating its position, Algeria said emphasis should be placed on restructuring UNITAR and on long-term funding to ensure its future. Cameroon was confident that the Secretary-General would submit an analysis removing any obstacles to providing UNITAR with the means to fulfil its mandate. Liberia reaffirmed its commitment to UNITAR. France felt that the option to close UNITAR should not be considered until all possible remedies were explored, a view supported by Pakistan. The United States said it had become increasingly concerned about the quality of UNITAR's work, particularly its research; in any case, it should be funded by voluntary contributions. New Zealand hoped a final decision on UNITAR's future could be reached in 1986.

UN University

Activities of the University

The United Nations University,<sup>(15)</sup> an autonomous academic institution within the United Nations system, continued in 1985 under the medium-term perspective (1982-1987)<sup>(16)</sup> to respond to the problems of peace and progress at three levels: the material quality of life; distribution of resources; and the long-term structures of society and the processes of change. The UNU programme had an overarching goal of better understanding of the dynamics of development, as it encompassed welfare and survival, as well as an improved material standard of living. It aimed to help develop conceptual and practical tools to enable people, institutions and States to participate in development.

In 1985, UNU had 78 ongoing projects and sub-projects under the five themes and nine programme areas of the medium-term perspective.<sup>(16)</sup> Five projects and subprojects on energy research, urban development, new social thought, migration and Arab alternative futures were completed. Dissemination of results in the form of publications and other media, such as video, was expanded. There was also an increase in the number of trainees and the forms of training offered.

Cross-cultural, policy-oriented research was carried out on administrative issues in crime prevention and control. Eight comparative case-studies for the project were completed in 1985 in Colombia, Costa Rica, Japan, Kenya, Nigeria, Poland, Singapore and Thailand; the final reports were discussed at a concluding project meeting hosted in August 1985 by the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute at Rome, and a summary of the discussions was submitted to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see p. 738).

Considerable progress was made in setting up the University's own research and training centres, with the start of activities in Finland of the World Institute for Development Economics

Research (WIDER), following the appointment of its governing Board and first Director. At a Board meeting (Helsinki, 29-31 May), the 1985-1986 WIDER work programme was approved, with three themes under which research would be clustered: hunger and poverty—the poorest billion; money, finance and trade—reforms for world development; and development and technological transformation—the management of change. Preparatory work to establish an Institute for Natural Resources in Africa and a research and training centre in Japan also moved forward.

The Special Committee on Africa completed its work with a symposium (Nairobi, 12-15 November) on science and technology in Africa in relation to development; a significant outcome of the Committee's efforts was the emergence of a core of African intellectuals, functioning as a group dealing with the African crisis from an African perspective.

The University sponsored or co-sponsored a number of other symposia, workshops and meetings, including a workshop on energy planning and management (Tokyo, 3 April); a meeting, jointly with the International Development Research Centre of Canada, on energy research and technology assessment (Manizales, Colombia, 26-30 August); a workshop on the uses of multi-purpose trees in agro-forestry systems, co-sponsored by the International Union of Forest Research Organizations and the German Agency of Technical Co-operation (Turrialba, Costa Rica, 24-28 June); and a workshop on tropical home garden agro-forestry systems (Bandung, Indonesia, 2-8 December).

Other workshops discussed Arab progressive movements (Nyon, Switzerland, 20-22 March); the political economy of fiscal policy (Kyoto, Japan, 17-19 April); the global impact of human migration (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 28-30 May); the ecological impact of pioneer settlements in unpopulated or sparsely populated regions (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, 16-20 September); self-reliance in science and technology for national development (Beijing, China, 5-8 October); and cinema as a factor of unity and diversity in the Arab world (Cairo, Egypt, 6 and 7 November).

Meetings were held on the educational and cultural problems of a multi-ethnic society (Mexico City, September) and on Asian perspectives—the State, people and culture (Penang, Malaysia, 23-27 October).

The University participated in a meeting, organized by the International Centre for Ethnic Studies, on ethnic minorities in Buddhist societies (Bangkok, 25-28 June), and was represented at the Conference of the Association of Development Research and Training Institutes of Asia and the Pacific (Bangkok, June) and the Conference of the Association of Asian Social Science Research Councils (Bali, Indonesia, September).

The University organized a seminar on the climatic and biological effects of nuclear war (Tokyo, 4-9 February). It co-sponsored with several universities a seminar on international organizations (Hakone, Japan, 8-15 September), and, with the Japan Society of Information and Communication Research, a forum on communication for development (Tokyo, 14 and 15 November).

A series of seminars and meetings were held on social movements in Latin America: emerging democracy at the local level (Mexico City, 12-15 March); the political system and emerging democracy in the federal states of Mexico (Mexico City, 16-23 May); and social movements in Mexico (Mexico City, 13 and 14 May) and in South America (Lima, Peru, 29-31 May).

The University continued to expand collaboration with other institutions, organizations and groups involved in activities of international concern. Institutions associated with UNU numbered 39. The number of Fellows, including three Special Fellows, in training was 125 as at 31 December 1985; 72 Fellows and 10 Special Fellows completed training during the year. New forms of training were being developed as research results were presented.

The University published 40 scholarly publications during the year. The name of the UNU newsletter was changed from Newsletter to Work in Progress.

Plans went ahead for the construction of UNU's permanent headquarters building in Tokyo. Discussions concerning the site which had been allocated were held with the Japanese Ministry of Education and the Tokyo Metropolitan Government.

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/109, invited UNU and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes encouraging understanding, tolerance and respect in relation to freedom of religion.

Activities of the Council

The UNU Council met twice during 1985, holding its twenty-fifth session at Mexico City from 8 to 12 July, and its twenty-sixth session in Tokyo from 9 to 13 December.(15)

In July, the UNU Rector presented an oral report on progress since the Council's December 1984 session, together with information on UNU's activities in Africa and his thoughts on the second medium-term perspective. The Rector also presented reports on networking and fund-raising. The Council took note of progress reports by WIDER and on the proposed Institute for Natural Resources in Africa, the permanent headquarters building and the proposed research and training centre in Japan. It adopted a draft provisional statute on training through fellowships; expressed its intent to continue the UNU association with Development Forum for two years; and designated two new associated institutions—Universidade de Sao Paulo (Brazil) and University of Nairobi (Kenya).

In December 1985, the Council concentrated on the proposed programme and budget for 1986-1987, its report for 1985, a paper on dissemination and co-operation with UNITAR.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/165 of 19 July 1985, took note of the UNU Council's report on work in 1984.(17)

Finances of the University

Total UNU income in the 1984-1985 biennium was $53.4 million, while expenditures totalled $34.5 million. The University's financial statements for the biennium were expanded to include the WIDER Trust Fund.

University for Peace

In a letter to the Secretary-General,(18) Costa Rica requested that the Economic and Social Council include a supplementary item on the University for Peace in the provisional agenda of its first regular session of 1985. Annexed to the letter were an explanatory memorandum and a draft resolution. The memorandum stated that the University had held its first course in 1984, attended by 25 students from different countries; various other activities also took place, including seminars in all continents on matters related to education for peace.

The University was a specialized international institution for post-graduate studies, research and dissemination of knowledge specifically aimed at training for peace. Its establishment, proposed by Costa Rica in 1978,(19) was approved by the General Assembly in 1980.(20)

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 24 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/2.

University for Peace

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/111 of 14 December 1979, by which the Assembly approved the idea of establishing a University for Peace,

Also recalling General Assembly resolution 35/55 of 5 December 1980, by which the Assembly approved the establishment of the University for Peace,

Aware of the positive response of the international community to the establishment of that institution,

Considering that it is important to follow up the development of the University for Peace in its initial stage,

Recognizing the important work carried out by the University for Peace during the first stage of its institutional life,

1. Decides to request the University for Peace to submit a report to the Secretary-General on the various aspects of its development, its existing activities and its future plans, including programmes of post-graduate studies;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1986 the report submitted by the University for Peace in pursuance of paragraph 1 above;

3. Decides to consider this question at its first regular session of 1986.

Chapter XVI

Environment

Signs of a global environmental crisis—desertification, acid rain, depletion of the ozone layer, destruction of tropical forests—formed the background to the 1985 work of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), which continued to co-ordinate efforts by the United Nations system to protect the Earth's environment.

The effects of that crisis were apparent in 1985. Desertification and drought in the Sudano-Sahelian region of Africa created critical food shortages in 21 countries and placed over 30 million people at risk. Destruction of forests continued unabated. The buildup of so-called greenhouse gases in the atmosphere pointed to major climatic changes. Risks of significant ozone layer depletion were confirmed and environmental conditions in many cities became worse.

But the year also brought positive signs. The Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer was adopted in March and a protocol to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution to reduce sulphur emissions by 30 per cent was concluded. The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office continued to combat desertification, and allocated $12 million for projects in the region. The first African Ministerial Conference on the Environment brought together African policy-makers to discuss common problems and the first Global Meeting on Environment and Development saw representatives of 109 non-governmental organizations examine sustainable development strategies.

The UNEP Governing Council approved further measures to combat desertification and urged intensified efforts in that regard. By resolution 40/198 A, the General Assembly called for increased assistance to affected countries in their desertification control programmes and urged those countries to accord priority to long-term strategies against the problem, and, by resolution 40/198 B, also underscored the urgency of implementing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region. By resolution 40/175, the Assembly recommended that the international community continue to assist drought-stricken countries and to provide all forms of support.

UNEP continued its action to protect the marine environment, to conserve wildlife and protected areas, to monitor various aspects of the environment (climate, global resources, transport of pollutants), and to promote the development of environmental law and the establishment of national conservation strategies. The Global Resource Information Data Base became fully operational and preparation of an Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond progressed. Other activities included management of tropical forests and soil resources, protection against harmful products and pollutants, research on genetic resources, and linkages between environment and development, energy, industry, human settlements and education.

By resolution 40/200, the Assembly endorsed the UNEP Council's 1985 decisions and dealt with various international environmental co-operation questions. By resolution 40/197, it requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts with the countries responsible for planting mines and the affected developing countries to ensure the removal of material remnants of war.

Sixty-three new projects were approved by the Environment Fund in 1985; 62 were closed. The Fund disbursed $23.53 million for programme activities; government contributions totalled $28.26 million.

Comprehensive information covering all aspects of UNEP 1985 activities was given in the UNEP Executive Director's annual report.(1)

Programme and finances of UNEP

At its thirteenth session, held at: UNEP headquarters, Nairobi, Kenya, from 14 to 24 May 1985, the UNEP Governing Council adopted decisions on environmental and administrative matters which were contained in its report on the session.<sup>(1)</sup> That report was taken note of by the Economic and Social Council on 25 July 1985 when it adopted decision 1985/172.

Programme policy

On 23 May,<sup>(2)</sup> the Council noted the UNEP Executive Director's reports<sup>(3)</sup> on the implementation of its 1984 policy decisions and noted the 1984 resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council calling for action by UNEP. The Council also addressed itself to new initiatives: various conferences organized or supported by UNEP (see p. 796); the initiation of the UNEP Global Resource Information Data Base (GRID) (see p. 801); the Executive Director's suggestions on UNEP activities for International Youth Year (1985) (see p. 976); and his proposals on the UNEP role vis-à-vis the 1985 Conference to review the achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see p. 937). In addition, the Council agreed to decide in 1987 on the method by which to consider the proposed system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995. The Council also took action regarding the UNEP clearing-house mechanism (see p. 795).

Also on 23 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Council requested the Executive Director, in presenting to the Council in 1987 the UNEP programme budget for 1988-1989, to provide a statement of the programme strategy for each area of activity, indicating the main goals and the rationale for UNEP involvement. The statement was to indicate the relationship of the area of activity to at least one of the following criteria—that it addressed an environmental issue: essential to understand a major environmental problem or to stimulate action to solve it; global in nature; likely to cause serious damage to health or environment; important to the environment of developing countries; and occurring at the regional or subregional level or in many locations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 40/200 by recorded vote.

International co-operation in the field of the environment

The General Assembly,

Recognising the international dimension of environmental problems, the role of environmental factors in the broader economic and social context, and the importance of taking environmental considerations fully into account in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade.

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its thirteenth session,

Having considered also the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment,

Noting with deep concern that the harmful consequences of the drought and desertification seriously affecting many countries, in particular African countries, are exacerbated by the continued erosion of the resource base for the development of those countries,

Reaffirming the importance of the interrelationships between resources, environment, people and development, and the need to take those interrelationships into account in development policies and strategies,

Stressing the importance of an international exchange of experience and knowledge concerning the protection of the environment,

Noting the activity of the United Nations Environment Programme on the subject "The arms race and the environment", in accordance with its programme of work as adopted by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Mindful of the sovereign rights of States over their natural resources, including their forests,

Noting also the activities of the United Nations and other international organizations, as well as the international initiatives being taken that are directed towards the important objective of rational management, protection and rehabilitation of the world's forests,

Recalling its resolution 38/161 of 19 December 1983 on the process of preparation of the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond,

1. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its thirteenth session and endorses the decisions contained therein, as adopted;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Governing Council to change to a biennial cycle of sessions on an experimental basis and in this regard takes note of the establishment of the open-ended Committee of Permanent Representatives to facilitate this process;

3. Invites the Governing Council, when reviewing the experiment with the organization of a biennial work programme, to consider changes that may in consequence be necessary in the functioning of the Council, including the term of membership;

4. Welcomes section III of decision 13/1 of 23 May 1985, and decision 13/10 of 24 May 1985 by which the Governing Council initiated steps towards the preparation of the system-wide medium-term environment programme for the period 1990-1995 and invited the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to review and further develop the methodology in the light of the experience gained in the system-wide medium-term environment programme for the period 1984-1989;

5. Takes note of the work done by the Special Commission on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, which has adopted the name World Commission on Environment and Development, and by the Intergovernmental Inter-sessional Preparatory Committee on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond in the preparation of their reports, and recalls the relationship between the Commission and the Committee, as set out in General Assembly resolution 38/161;

6. Takes note of the progress on international conventions and protocols in the field of the environment

during 1985, including the adoption of the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer and of an international protocol to the 1979 Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution, on sulphur emissions and fluxes, and the organization of the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals;

7. Considers that measures to deal with the erosion of the natural resource base in countries affected by drought and desertification should have as one of their major aims the sustainable exploitation and increased productivity of that natural resource base;

8. Welcomes the importance attached by the Governing Council to regional approaches and programmes relating to international co-operation in the field of the environment, and in this context stresses the relevance of specific regional planning identified by the regions themselves;

9. Notes with appreciation the convening of the first African Ministerial Conference on the Environment at Cairo from 16 to 18 December 1985;

10. Calls upon the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to co-ordinate further the activities of the Programme with those of other organizations of the United Nations system, to co-operate appropriately with the organizers of the international initiatives on the future of the forests, and to report thereon to the Governing Council;

11. Reaffirms the need to strengthen the co-ordinating role of the United Nations Environment Programme and the need for additional resources to assist developing countries in dealing with serious environmental problems, and urges the Executive Director of the Programme, in consultation with Governments and the international organizations concerned, to accelerate and intensify his efforts in that field;

12. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments that continue to contribute to the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme, particularly those that have increased their contributions, and urges those Governments that have not yet paid their pledged contributions to the Fund for 1985 or made pledges for 1986 to do so in the near future.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 149-0-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.6) by recorded vote (126-0-7), 11 December (meeting 50): 16-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.37/Rev.1), orally revised after informal consultations; agenda item 84 (f).

Against: None.

Abstaining: France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Israel, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

In the Second Committee, the USSR submitted two amendments<sup>(5)</sup> to the original draft resolution; they were later withdrawn in the light of their incorporation into the approved text.

France, which requested separate recorded votes on the seventh preambular paragraph-relating to UNEP activity on the arms race and the environment—and on the draft as a whole, said UNEP had no mandate with regard to the arms race; it was improper, in a text designed to endorse all UNEP's activities, to single out one element on which there had never been consensus.

The Committee approved the paragraph by 102 to 7, with 18 abstentions; the Assembly similarly adopted it by 123 to 8, with 17 abstentions.

Opposing the paragraph in the Committee, the United States said that the arms race was not an important item for UNEP to consider, since it could not do anything useful about it; inclusion of that paragraph was an effort to inject extraneous political elements into the text—a view shared by the Federal Republic of Germany, Israel and the United Kingdom, which believed that disarmament should be discussed elsewhere in the Assembly.

China, Japan and Spain, which abstained on the paragraph, gave similar explanations.

Bulgaria, speaking also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said that the threat the arms race posed to nature and human life was a grim reality, and the work of UNEP on the subject should be intensified in accordance with its mandate and the Assembly's resolutions; it was understood that the Special Commission on the Environmental Perspective would follow its mandate as contained in a 1983 Assembly resolution,<sup>(6)</sup> and that reports on disarmament would be made to the UNEP Council or the Intergovernmental Inter-sessional Preparatory Committee. Peru said that the arms race was a significant aspect of the historical responsibility of States for the preservation of the environment, and a broad approach was needed which embraced the maintenance of international peace and security, the establishment of a new international economic order and détente. Norway, speaking on behalf of the draft's sponsors, stressed that it was the first text on the environment to contain, for the sake of precision, a blanket endorsement of all UNEP Governing Council decisions. Canada agreed with the reasons which had made a consensus impossible on the seventh preambular paragraph.

State of the environment

Monitoring the state of the environment continued throughout the year. Reports to the Governing Council examined emerging environmental issues (see p. 792), and chemical accidents that occurred in 1984 and early 1985,<sup>(7)</sup> including the serious 1984 accident at Bhopal, India, which resulted in more than 1,400 deaths from a leakage of methyl isocyanate from a pesticide plant. Guidelines for national state-of-the-environment reports were published and distributed to Governments (see p. 792). UNEP also began preparing the first of a series of periodic environmental data reports, in collaboration with three bodies dealing with the environment—the Monitoring Assessment and Research Centre, University of London; the World Resources Institute, Washington, D.C.; and the London-based International Institute for Environment and Development. Efforts also concentrated on support to the initial phase of GRID (see p. 801); a project on computerization of data of selected environmental subjects within GRID was helping to ensure quality control of data related to the physical environment, pollution and natural resources. The data were to be used to prepare environmental assessments by the Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS) (see p. 800) and for the periodic review of key environmental indicators.

1985 report

Population and the environment and the environmental aspects of emerging agricultural technologies were the 1985 themes examined in the Executive Director's annual report on the state of the environment,<sup>(8)</sup> as requested in 1984 by the UNEP Council.<sup>(9)</sup>

The report stated that there was no simple correlation between population and environment. Some patterns of development had improved environmental conditions, while others had degraded them irreversibly. The capacity of a number of developing countries to manage their environment was under severe stress because of rapid population growth, mass poverty, environmental degradation and slow development. Population policies could have only limited success when poverty remained widespread, environmental conditions deteriorated and natural resource availability was low; environmental programmes did not have the intended impact when population continued to grow rapidly.

The world had the natural resources, technology and expertise to provide for a decent quality of life for the projected high levels of global population, but co-ordinated action on population, resources, environment and development was urgently needed. Population and environment policies were coming to respond to the needs of social and economic development, and their interface had become clearer. Basic education, improvement in the status of women, public works to improve infrastructure and natural resource availability, land reform, provision of drinking-water supply and sanitation, and spatially balanced industrial, agricultural and settlements development were areas needing urgent attention. Countries experiencing environmental stress and high population densities needed to pursue their population, environment and development goals. Their efforts had to be supported by greater international economic co-operation and development assistance.

On the environmental aspects of emerging agricultural technologies, the report pointed out that abundant and cheap sources of fossil-fuel energy during the previous 30 to 50 years had enabled farmers to enjoy extraordinary output growth, mostly in developed countries. But this technical revolution was not wholly beneficial and, pushed to the extreme, was detrimental to the environment. Moreover, it did not suit the needs of hundreds of millions of poor third-world farmers, and the wisdom of pursuing this agricultural technology in the future would be called into question in view of the world energy situation.

In many parts of the world the environmental costs of agricultural technologies were high, but there was no commonly accepted measure of these costs, due to the difficulty of identifying and quantifying all the impacts of damage to land, water and ecosystems.

Long-term solutions leading to environmentally sound agricultural development included technologies generating lower environmental costs than those currently used. Such technologies had to suit local conditions and be acceptable to farmers. They included integrated pest management, minimum tillage, and the development of new types of seeds tolerant of salt or disease, or capable of enhancing biological nitrogen fixation or increasing the efficiency of photosynthesis.

On 24 May<sup>(10)</sup> the Governing Council endorsed the report's recommendations. The Executive Director was requested to bring them to the attention of Governments and United Nations and other organizations. He was also requested to provide assistance, experimentally, to six countries (two from Africa, two from Asia and two from Latin America) in implementing agricultural policies selected from among those listed in the report, in co-operation with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and other United Nations bodies and the Governments concerned. Various United Nations bodies were also invited to consider the recommendations and support their implementation.

Follow-up on the 1984 report

Referring to the 1984 state-of-the-environment report,<sup>(11)</sup> whose topic was environment in the dialogue between and among developed and developing countries, the Governing Council on 24 May<sup>(12)</sup> urged Governments to continue addressing the major environmental issues to which they had agreed in the 1984-1989 system-wide medium-term environment programme.<sup>(13)</sup> The Council endorsed the Executive Director's recommendations-annexed to the decision-identifying some prerequisites for the success of dialogue on such issues. It felt that no new institutional arrangement was required to deal with the subject of the 1984 report, and that action should arise within current international or intergovernmental treatment of the individual issues. It requested the Executive Director to monitor concerns of Governments on those issues and to report on the progress made.

Future reports

On 24 May<sup>(14)</sup> the Governing Council expressed the hope that future state-of-the-environment reports would increasingly become basic documents for the Council's deliberations, especially when based on GRID statistical data, and decided that future reports should examine, in alternate years, the economic and social aspects of the environment, and environmental data and assessment. It also decided that the topic for the 1986 report would be health and the environment, and that the 1987 report should attempt, as the first world state-of-the-environment report, to present a comprehensive survey also utilizing the data and results available through GEMS.

Emerging environmental issues

An updated list of emerging environmental issues<sup>(15)</sup> was submitted to the 1985 Governing Council session by the Executive Director. The list, which was to be updated annually in line with the Council's 1984 request,<sup>(16)</sup> included data on possible climatic change brought about by the increasing concentration of carbon dioxide and other so-called greenhouse gases in the atmosphere (see p. 804); land and soil loss caused by urban and industrial development; environmental risks resulting from the increasing production and use of chemicals (see p. 802); municipal solid wastes in developing countries; aquaculture; and the effects of military activity (see p. 817).

On 24 May,<sup>(17)</sup> the Council requested the report's wider circulation, and decided that the 1987 state-of-the-environment report should examine municipal solid waste in developing countries and aquaculture.

National reports

On 23 May,<sup>(18)</sup> the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to assist developing countries in preparing their national state-of-the-environment reports, which should include information on the implementation of previous decisions and the results in terms of environmental improvement. It also requested him to assist Governments in preparing, by the Council's 1987 session, examples of those reports for three countries from Africa, three from Asia and the Pacific and three from Latin America, each representing different eco-zones.

Following that decision, guidelines for preparing the reports were distributed to Governments in 1985. Their purpose was to avoid existing wide variations in the presentation of data and trends, which made comparisons between countries extremely difficult. To facilitate understanding, the guidelines suggested that the reports should be produced regularly, and be organized on a sectoral rather than on an ecosystem basis. Thirteen forms were also designed, to collect the basic information needed, taking into account the state of environmental information in developing countries.

Environmental Perspective

The UNEP Council addressed again in 1985 the preparation of an Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, to be submitted to the General Assembly in 1987. To assist in preparing the Perspective, the Council had established in 1983<sup>(19)</sup> an open-ended Intergovernmental Inter-sessionary Preparatory Committee and a Special Commission, an action endorsed by the Assembly.<sup>(6)</sup> In February 1985, the Executive Director reported<sup>(20)</sup> that the Commission, which had adopted the name World Commission on Environment and Development, had set up a secretariat in Geneva, and a work plan which envisaged seven regular meetings between March 1985 and the end of 1986.

The Preparatory Committee had held its first session in Nairobi in May 1984, and, in conformity with its approved mandate,<sup>(6)</sup> had produced a document, annexed to the Executive Director's report,<sup>(20)</sup> giving the expectations of the Council for consideration by the Commission, which was transmitted to the Commission in October 1984. Discussions between Committee and Commission representatives were held in May and November 1984 and March 1985.

At its second<sup>(21)</sup> and third sessions (Nairobi, 22 and 23 May, 3 and 3 December 1985), the Committee examined the Commission's work and discussed the Perspective's preparation.

The Governing Council, on 24 May,<sup>(22)</sup> stated that the Environmental Perspective should promote international co-operation and national efforts to pursue environmentally sound development, and invited Governments to contribute to that end. The Council invited the Commission to make known to the Committee its preliminary conclusions, and hoped that the Commission's report would be available to the Committee at an early stage.

Regional activities

Major regional initiatives in 1985 included the organization of the first African Ministerial Conference on the Environment, the hosting of the Workshop on Youth for the Environment, and information activities (see below).

UNEP also continued providing support to staff of its regional offices, including regional advisers; individual experts from developing countries wishing to participate in environment-related meetings, symposia, workshops and seminars; the Environment Co-ordinating Units in the United Nations regional commissions, with the exception of the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE); and a few small technical co-operation projects.

Africa

Ministerial Conference

Suggested by the Governing Council in 1983,<sup>(23)</sup> the first African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (Cairo, Egypt, 16-18 December), attended by 41 delegations from African countries, reviewed national priorities, identified common problems calling for regional action, and adopted the Cairo Programme for African Co-operation. The Programme included a decision to select 150 villages (three per country) and 30 semi-arid stock-raising zones (one in each of 30 countries) to help them to become self-sufficient in food and energy within live years. Another action was to institutionalize the Conference, which would meet every two years. To improve technical and scientific co-operation, the Conference established eight regional networks on environmental monitoring, climatology, soils and fertilizers, water resources, energy, genetic resources, science and technology, and education and training.

On 23 May<sup>(24)</sup> the Council had approved the Executive Director's proposal to convene the Conference.

Workshop on Youth for the Environment

To encourage the interest of youth in environmental issues, UNEP hosted an African Workshop on Youth for the Environment (Nairobi, 25 and 26 November). Attended by youth leaders from 24 International Youth Year African national co-ordinating committees and from many non-governmental organizations, the Workshop drew up recommendations for youth action on the environment, and stressed the need to involve young women and women's groups in this action.

Latin America and the Caribbean

In spite of the current economic and financial crisis, Governments of Latin America and the Caribbean were requested to redouble their efforts in applying environmental policies. That request was made by the Fourth Intergovernmental Regional Meeting on the Environment in Latin America and the Caribbean (Cancun, Mexico, 18-20 April),<sup>(25)</sup> attended by 12 countries of the region and 10 international organizations. The Meeting also urged Governments to consolidate national institutional and legal provisions on the environment, and to use natural resources as a priority to generate long-term development. It further considered environmental trends and prospects for the year 2000, regional seas programmes, the Environmental Training Network for Latin America and the Caribbean (see below), other regional programmes of common interest and innovative means of financing.

On 24 May 1985,<sup>(26)</sup> the Governing Council endorsed a number of the Meeting's calls. The Council called on Governments of the region and UNEP to include in future meetings an item aimed at strengthening dialogue on the relationship between economic and social issues and the application of environmental policies. Those Governments were invited to conduct quantitative and social cost-benefit environmental studies as a basis for guiding national policies, and to prepare state-of-the-environment reports. The Executive Director was requested to support programmes of common interest and to assess their progress, communicating his views to the Governments. He was also to conduct an inventory of the resources of regional and international organizations and bilateral sources to support regional environmental programmes. In addition, he was to draw up a roster of experts to support regional and subregional projects that had already been allocated priority.

Considering the Latin American and Caribbean Environmental Training Network,<sup>(27)</sup> the Council on 23 May endorsed the Meeting's decision by urging the region's Governments to adopt formally the Network's programme adopted by the Meeting,<sup>(25)</sup> and requested the Executive Director to assist them in preparing proposals for financing and operating the Network in 1986-1987. Governments were urged to furnish details of the contributions they could commit for courses, seminars, research and publications within the framework of the regional strategy adopted for the Network. The Executive Director was requested to prepare, based on government contributions, a regional co-operation project, and to convene at the end of 1985 a meeting of Network focal points to approve the regional project and establish machinery to operate the Network programme.

That meeting (Caracas, Venezuela, 2-6 December) identified measures for the Network's continued operation, including Governments' contributions in cash, fellowships and personnel, as well as funding for courses, workshops and seminars.

Regional information activities

Regional information activities highlighted environmental issues. Inter Press Service disseminated 100 environmental news features in Spanish in Latin America and the Caribbean. Co-operation with the Press Foundation of Asia led to the placement of many items which were reported to have been well received by the targeted media. In the Arab region, UNEP and the Egyptian daily Al-Ahram co-operated to produce a special supplement on the environment for Al-Ahram's Youth, Science and Future magazine, which was distributed to 20,000 subscribers. Throughout the year, UNEP continued to support the Africa Press Service, and this led to the production of three environmental features per month in English and Kiswahili. With a world-wide distribution network of 400 specialists, Earthscan, the media unit of the UNEP-supported International Institute for Environment and Development, continued its feature service in English, French and Spanish; press cuttings showed that considerable placement was achieved.

Co-ordination

United Nations co-ordination

Co-ordination of environmental activities continued to be monitored by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC). In its report to the 1985 session of the UNEP Governing Council,<sup>(28)</sup> ACC welcomed the start of negotiations by UNEP and other United Nations bodies on drawing up the second (1986-1987) programme budget of the system-wide medium-term environment programme (1984-1989), and expressed support to United Nations organizations in concentrating their environmental programmes on sustainable development. ACC also considered that the subject of interrelationships between people, resources, environment and development (see also p. 430) deserved support from all United Nations bodies. On the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see p. 807), ACC noted the seven pledges to finance its implementation, and emphasized the need for additional contributions.

At its October 1985 session, ACC approved its 1986 report to the UNEP Council<sup>(29)</sup> and decided to consider co-operation in environmental matters at its April 1986 session.<sup>(30)</sup>

On 24 May,<sup>(31)</sup> the Governing Council expressed appreciation for ACC's continued co-operation with UNEP and for the co-operation shown by the United Nations system in developing the methodology for preparing the system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1984-1989, and invited ACC to develop the methodology as the first step towards preparing the 1990-1995 programme.

Regarding that programme, the Council on 23 May<sup>(32)</sup> noted that in the United Nations system the medium-term plan cycles had been aligned, and that consequently the consideration and approval by the relevant intergovernmental forums of such plans for 1990-1995, including the United Nations medium-term plan, would in accordance with past practice take place in 1988. It agreed to decide in 1987 on the method by which the proposed system-wide medium-term environment programme for 1990-1995 would be considered.

In December, in resolution 40/200, the General Assembly invited ACC to develop the methodology in the light of the experience gained in the 1984-1989 programme, and called on the UNEP Executive Director to co-ordinate further UNEP activities with those of other United Nations organizations, and to report to the Governing Council.

During 1985, 90 UNEP Fund projects were being implemented in co-ordination with other United Nations organizations, including FAO (19 projects), UNESCO (18), WHO (12), WMO (8), UNSO (6) and UNCHS (5). Out of a total expenditure of $23.53 million for Fund programme activities in 1985, $6.6 million (28 per cent) was implemented by co-operating agencies.

Cross-organizational programme analysis

Cross-organizational programme analyses were carried out regularly in the United Nations system to assess current activities of United Nations organizations in a given sector as a basis for improved co-ordination. In March 1985,<sup>(32)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director recalled that in 1984 the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) had indicated that environment would be the most appropriate subject for the 1987 analysis, as preparations for the 1990-1995 system-wide medium-term environment programme would then be well under way, as would work on the Environmental Perspective (see p. 792). The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) had confirmed in 1984 that the analysis should be reviewed by the competent intergovernmental body. There would be no session of the Governing Council in 1986, the Executive Director recalled, and its 1987 session would probably overlap with the CPC session expected to be considering the subject.

In May 1985, a paper<sup>(33)</sup> prepared by the United Nations and UNEP secretariats was forwarded to the UNEP Council. The paper outlined the background to the analyses, and suggested some issues relating to the environment analysis which required resolution.

Meeting in April and May 1985, CPC decided to consider the cross-organizational programme analysis on the environment at its 1988 session,<sup>(34)</sup> and the President of the Economic and Social Council was so informed on 16 May.<sup>(35)</sup> On 24 May, he received a telegram from the President of the UNEP Governing Council,<sup>(36)</sup> stating that the UNEP Council considered that in preparing the 1990-1995 system-wide environment programme during 1987, for adoption by the Governing Council in 1988, UNEP and the United Nations system would benefit from consideration of the analysis. Accordingly, the Council would appreciate its preparation for consideration by CPC in 1987.

Meanwhile, the Governing Council on 24 May<sup>(37)</sup> welcomed CPC's decision to consider the analysis. Noting the joint paper,<sup>(33)</sup> it requested United Nations bodies to assist the secretariat in preparing a description of mandates guiding the United Nations environment-related work; suggested that including activities in the system-wide medium-term environment programme constituted a working definition of the scope of environmental activities in the United Nations system, for the purposes of the analysis; endorsed the suggestion that that programme should be used in formulating the structure of the analysis; and requested the Designated Officials for Environmental Matters to participate in its preparation.

Joint meetings with UNCHS

In 1985, the UNEP Council again considered the subject of meetings between UNEP and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS). A report<sup>(38)</sup> on the seventh joint meeting, held in November 1984, was submitted to the Council by the UNEP Executive Director. On 23 May,<sup>(3)</sup> noting an 8 May resolution of the Commission on Human Settlements (see p. 833), the Council concurred with that resolution and adopted a text with identical provisions.

On 17 December, by resolution 40/199, the General Assembly, acting on a suggestion submitted by the respective Executive Directors, decided to discontinue those meetings.

Co-ordination with and among Governments

In view of its 1983 decision<sup>(40)</sup> not to hold a session in 1986, the UNEP Council on 23 May<sup>(41)</sup> laid down guidelines for providing information to Governments between the 1985 and 1987 sessions. It recommended that three annual reports be continued: that on the state of the environment, and those of the Executive Director and ACC. The Council specified various subjects to be examined in those documents.

Desiring to institute a more formal and regular system of consultation among Governments and between Governments and the Executive Director, particularly in view of the fact that there would be no session in 1986, the Council, also on 23 May,<sup>(42)</sup> established an open-ended Committee of Permanent Representatives and/or Government-designated officials, which was to meet quarterly and whenever deemed necessary with the Executive Director to make recommendations to the Council.

UNEP clearing-house mechanism

Established by the Governing Council in 1982,<sup>(43)</sup> the clearing-house was meant to expand UNEP's ability to assist developing countries in specific environmental problems, while maintaining its co-ordinating rather than operational role. UNEP's role was usually limited to project formulation, monitoring and evaluation; financing and implementation were negotiated with willing donors. During 1985, four long-term programmes designed in 1983-1984 through the clearing-house mechanism commenced: in Botswana (management of soil and water resources), Indonesia (environmental management of the Jakarta-Puncak corridor region), Jordan (range rehabilitation demonstration project in the low rainfall zone) and Peru (environmental management of the upper Selva region).

In 1985, the programme received support from Argentina, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, the United Kingdom, the United States and the European Economic Community (EEC). Two additional country programmes were formulated for Papua New Guinea and Tunisia. In addition, three multi-country programmes received financing, and short-term advisory services were provided to: Bangladesh (designing a pilot industrial waste-water treatment plant); Burundi (national parks management and assessing the pollution of Lake Tanganyika); Rwanda (organizing a national environment seminar); the Syrian Arab Republic (air pollution assessment); and Togo (preparing an environment code). A project for the management of Andean ecosystems in Peru was also initiated during the year.

On 23 May,<sup>(2)</sup> the Council expressed its appreciation to Governments and institutions which had supported the clearing-house, called on donor countries and aid institutions to increase their support for projects presented through it, and called on developing countries to make wider use of the clearing-house, particularly in technical co-operation among them.

Relations with NGOs

Close co-operation with environmentally concerned non-governmental organizations (NGOs) was again given high priority in 1985, principally through the Nairobi-based Environmental Liaison Centre (ELC), co-ordinator of a network of over 6,000 such NGOs. ELC continued to disseminate information on UNEP and played a leading role in promoting NGO activities on World Environment Day (5 June).

With financial and other assistance from UNEP, ELC organized a Global Meeting on Environment and Development for NGOs (Nairobi, 4-8 February), the first of its kind in that it brought together environmental and non-environmental NGOs. Attended by 140 participants representing 109 NGOs from 48 countries, as well as 83 guests and observers, the Meeting dealt with rural and urban economy, northern development and North-South relations. It adopted 119 action proposals and recommendations<sup>(44)</sup> on sustainable development, environment action and NGO co-operation and effectiveness. The Meeting established a common strategy among NGOs to work for sustainable development and called on UNEP to support the strategy and its extension to other NGOs around the world.

Activities in Asia and the Pacific included UNEP's collaboration with the Asian Mass Communication Research and Information Centre in a research project on the use of traditional media for environmental communication. UNEP also co-operated with Wildlife Fund Thailand on the Buddhist perception of nature. Other initiatives included the production of reports on pesticide poisoning in Asia and the Pacific and on the lessons of the 1984 Bhopal accident, in collaboration with the International Organization of Consumers Unions; the organization of several workshops for journalists, in co-operation with the Press Foundation of Asia and the Sukothai Thammathirath Open University of Thailand; and the co-ordination of tree-planting projects in India, New Caledonia, Sri Lanka and Thailand, with financial support from the National Federation of UNESCO Associations in Japan.

In Kenya, assistance was provided to promotional activities and seminars of the Greenbelt Movement, the tree-planting NGO organized by the National Council of Women.

UNEP continued its close partnership with the major international environmental NGOs. Thus, during 1985, the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources was carrying out 15 activities with UNEP support, the Scientific Committee on Problems on the Environment had six and the International Institute for Environment and Development had three.

Underlining the unique role that NGOs could play at all levels, the Governing Council on 23 May<sup>(45)</sup> urged the Executive Director to improve mechanisms by which UNEP, in consultation with Governments, utilized the capacities of NGOs. He was also urged to help develop the ability of NGOs, especially those in developing countries, to become more effective partners in development with Governments, international agencies and development institutions, and to report on progress in these matters in 1987.

UNEP Fund

During 1985, expenditures of the UNEP Fund on programme and programme reserve activities totalled $23.53 million, broken down as follows: environmental awareness, $3.94 million; Earth-watch, $3.5 million; oceans, $3.02 million; terrestrial ecosystems, $2.61 million; health and human settlements, $2.5 million; desertification, $2.37 million; environment and development, $2.27 million; water, $1.4 million; regional and technical co-operation, $1.38 million; Fund programme reserve, $0.43 million; arms race and the environment, $0.11 million.

In 1985, 63 new projects were approved, compared with 48 in 1984; 62 projects were closed. At the end of the year, 295 projects were still open. Geographical distribution of Fund expenditures was as follows: global, $15,179,952; regional, $6,313,823; and interregional, $2,038,135.

Contributions

On 23 May,<sup>(46)</sup> the Governing Council expressed appreciation to Governments that had increased their pledges to the Environment Fund, appealed to those that had not done so to pledge their 1985 contribution, and urged Governments to contribute at the beginning of a year and to support Fund programme activities in which they were particularly interested by making counterpart contributions to individual projects. The Executive Director was requested to seek increased contributions to implement projects at the agreed expenditure level.

Making similar appeals to Governments, the General Assembly in resolution 40/200 reaffirmed the need for additional resources to deal with developing countries' environmental problems.

Accounts for 1984-1985

As at 31 December 1985, total income of the Fund for 1984-1985 amounted to $61,448,423 and the total expenditure to $60,713,714, leaving an excess of income over expenditure of $734,709.

Comments and recommendations on the accounts of the UNEP Fund were made by the Board of Auditors.<sup>(47)</sup>

Programme budgets

1984-1985

In February 1985,<sup>(48)</sup> the Executive Director reported on the implementation of the approved programme and programme support costs budget for 1984-1985, and indicated the revisions it required. He recalled the Governing Council's request to keep those costs within 33 per cent of the estimated contributions for any given year. To do so in 1985, costs would have to be reduced to $9.9 million, but such a reduction was not possible. Projected 1985 requirements amounted to $12.3 million, but the Executive Director would try to limit expenditure to $11.5 million. It was essential for the Council to accept a situation, deplored by him, of having the costs in question possibly consuming 40 per cent of contributions, making it impossible to have a meaningful programme implementation. Such a situation would occur if most Governments continued to hold stationary or reduce their contributions to the Fund. He recommended the approval of a revised, lower appropriation of $22,811,000 for 1984-1985—a recommendation shared by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ).<sup>(49)</sup>

On 23 May<sup>(50)</sup> the Governing Council approved the revised appropriation and requested the Executive Director to reduce the proportion of the costs as soon as possible.

1986-1987

On 23 May,<sup>(51)</sup> the Governing Council approved the proposed programme budget for 1986-1987 and the activities contained therein. On the same day,<sup>(46)</sup> it approved an appropriation of $60 million for Fund programme activities and $2 million for Fund programme reserve activities for 1986-1987, and set out the apportionment for them. The Executive Director was requested to adjust the financial reserve of the Fund in 1986 to 7.5 per cent of the total programme approved by the Council for 1986-1987.

Also on the same date,<sup>(50)</sup> the Council approved the appropriation of $26,207,700 for the programme and programme support costs budget for 1986-1987—an amount recommended by ACABQ.<sup>(52)</sup>

Resources available to the Fund in 1986 were estimated at $53.07 million. Based on this, an expenditure of $32.35 million was planned in 1986, broken down as follows: programme and programme support costs, $11 million, plus Fund programme activities and reserve activities, $28.35 million, less underspending of $7 million. The balance of $20.72 million was to be carried forward to 1987.

The Executive Director allocated $45.2 million for Fund programme activities in 1986-1987: $27.85 million for 1986 and $17.35 million for 1987. He also allocated $1 million for reserve activities covering both years.

On 23 May,<sup>(46)</sup> the Governing Council Authorized the Executive Director to enter into forward commitments of up to $16 million for Fund programme activities in 1988-1989, and requested him to draw up a programme for Fund activities and reserve activities in 1988-1989 which would result in an estimated level of project expenditures of approximately $50 million.

Also on that day,<sup>(50)</sup> the Council requested him to identify more clearly the real administrative costs of UNEP and to present them in the 1988-1989 budget.

The Executive Director stated that he did not expect to incur a high level of commitments for 1988-1989 activities during 1986-1987, although some forward commitments would be necessary. Only $10,000 commitments for those years had been incurred by 31 March 1986.

Trust funds

Three new technical assistance funds were established after the 1984 session of the Governing Council: to provide short-term experts to developing countries, and for a pilot project on environmental management and protection of Andean ecosystems, both financed by the Federal Republic of Germany; and to promote technical co-operation and assistance in industrial, environmental and raw material management, financed by the Swedish International Development Authority.<sup>(53)</sup> In the same period, one other trust fund, the Interim Special Account for the Establishment of the Special Commission on the Environmental Perspective to the Year 2000 and Beyond, was closed. This brought the number of trust funds administered by UNEP to 15.

On 23 May,<sup>(54)</sup> the Council expressed appreciation to Governments that had pledged to increase their contributions to the various funds, and urged Governments to pay promptly, at the beginning of a calendar year, and to support Fund programme activities in which they were particularly interested by making counterpart contributions to individual projects. The Council approved the extension of six trust funds established under the rules of the Environment Fund and approved, on a contingency basis, the establishment of a Regional Seas Trust Fund for the Eastern African Region. It also took note of the establishment of the three technical assistance funds mentioned above.

Additional sources of funding

In accordance with a 1982 Governing Council request,<sup>(43)</sup> the Executive Director continued to seek resources additional to those provided by contributions to the Environment Fund. Additional pledges totalling $956,822 were secured as counterpart contributions for 12 projects in 1985 and a further $81,932 for three projects in 1986. Twelve Governments contributed $779,926 for 1985, while the European Atomic Energy Community, EEC, several industrial corporations and NGOs contributed a total of $176,896.

Concerned at the decline in the Environment Fund's real resources, the Council on 23 May<sup>(55)</sup> urged States to contribute or to increase their contributions. The Executive Director was requested to seek additional funds for specific activities; to initiate cost-effective mechanisms to utilize national currencies and contributions, in kind; to intensify co-operation between UNEP and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); to secure support to supplement secretariat staff by direct recruitment under agreements with Governments; to consult with United Nations Headquarters on the possibility of issuing conservation stamps 10 finance environmental activities; to encourage the establishment of national environmental committees; and to explore other possibilities.

Other administrative and organizational questions

UNEP public information

Information activities and special events helped to increase environmental awareness during 1985. On the tenth anniversary of GEMS (see p. 800) and the launching of GRID (see p. 801), a visit to UNEP by astronaut George B. Nelson and cosmonaut Anatoly Nicolaevich Berezhovoy attracted major media attention. Press coverage of the visit of Pope John Paul II to the United Nations Office at Nairobi (18 August) was augmented by the distribution of speeches for the occasion to church leaders. World Environment Day (5 June) was observed in more than 70 countries and received global media attention.

An Information Advisory Committee of independent information experts to advise on promoting environmental awareness held its first meeting at Geneva in November. Under the first

UNEP Journalist Attachment Programme, representatives of major newspapers were invited for three weeks in May to observe UNEP's functioning and the Governing Council's session. Liaison with the Nairobi-based media was reinforced with regular monthly briefings and some 100 news releases, features and background papers.

Six issues of UNEP News, in English, French and Spanish, were produced. A new publications series aimed at the general public was launched. The initial titles were: Environment-A Dialogue among Nations, Environmental Refugees and Radiation, Risks, Doses and Effects. Other publications included five technical papers, a series of eight thematic fact sheets (in four languages) and six associated posters (in three languages). In Thailand, Dr. Seuss's children's book The Lorax was released in Thai and distributed free of charge to all school libraries on World Environment Day.

The non-convertible-currency-funded publications and information programmes with China and the USSR continued. The UNEP/China project published four issues of the Chinese-language quarterly World Environment (circulation 25,000), provided information support to a UNEP/FAO/China seminar on pest control, and started preparing the Chinese version of The Lorax. Various publications were printed under the UNEP/USSR project. Its audio-visual component selected Soviet entries for the global environmental film/video catalogue, and started work on a biosphere reserve slide show.

The audio-visual services produced three radio programmes on behalf of all English-language radio stations in Africa; dubbed into Spanish the film Pills and Pesticides; translated into Arabic, French and Spanish the slide show Harvest of Dust; and prepared a photographic display on women in the environment.

The UNEP-sponsored Television Trust for the Environment (TVE) produced, in co-operation with Thailand and the United Press International Television Network, a five-minute news item and a 25-minute film feature for World Environment Day. TVE also produced a film on desertification control in China.

Reform of the information service

As part of the ongoing reform of the UNEP information programme, the Executive Director reported<sup>(32)</sup> that target audiences had been identified and objectives set. Information needs of developing countries had been analysed, as had been the opportunities for use of non-traditional media in those countries. Staff and financial resources for the information programme had been reviewed, and an organizational structure drawn up. A 1985 information programme had been defined and UNEP News issued every two months.

On 23 May,<sup>(56)</sup> the Governing Council urged the Executive Director to continue streamlining information activities, and requested him to provide Governments, through the Committee of Permanent Representatives, with information on the use of funds for such activities.

Future Council sessions

Biennial cycle of sessions

In 1983, the UNEP Governing Council had decided, experimentally, to hold no session in 1986 and decide in 1987 on the periodicity of its sessions.<sup>(40)</sup> In resolution 40/200, the General Assembly welcomed that decision and invited the Council, when reviewing the experiment with the organization of a biennial work programme, to consider changes that might be necessary in the Council's functioning, including the term of membership.

1987 session

On 24 May,<sup>(1)</sup> the Governing Council decided to hold its 1987 session at Nairobi, in April-June, at dates to be relayed to Governments after consultations. It also approved a provisional agenda for the session.

Environmental activities

Environmental monitoring

Environmental monitoring continued to be one of UNEP's main tasks throughout 1985. Its global environment assessment programme, Earthwatch, was conceived as a co-ordinated global system of national facilities and services to study the interaction between man and the environment and determine the status of selected natural resources. Earthwatch had four functions: evaluation and forecasting, monitoring, research, and information exchange.

Since 1974, some 50 projects had been completed within Earthwatch; 20 were ongoing, for a total projected cost of $36 million, half provided by UNEP and half by co-operating agencies. The corner-stone of the programme was the Global Environmental Monitoring System (GEMS), with nearly 150 countries participating in one or more of its six monitoring networks which dealt with renewable resources; climate; health; long-range transboundary pollution; integrated monitoring; and the Global Resource Information Data Base (GRID).

The Environmental Law and Machinery Unit continued to promote the development of environmental law by collating and disseminating data, supporting the enforcement of international agreements, promoting new agreements and assisting States to enforce environmental law. In 1985, three years after the Governing Council had approved<sup>(1)</sup> the 1981 Montevideo (Uruguay) programme for the Development and periodic review of environmental law,<sup>(2)</sup> the priority tasks of the programme had been accomplished, with the adoption in 1985 of the global Convention on protecting the ozone layer (see p. 804) and two sets of international guidelines, prepared by a series of ad hoc working groups of governmental experts on the basis of drafts prepared by UNEP.

On 24 May, the Governing Council addressed various issues concerning environmental law:<sup>(3)</sup> protecting the ozone layer (see p. 804), protecting the marine environment (see p. 815), management of hazardous wastes (see p. 803), harmful products (see p. 801), environmental impact assessment (see below), offshore mining (see p. 816), international conventions (see below), and the Convention on conservation of migratory animals (see p. 813).

Environmental impact assessment

Taking note of progress made in developing guidelines for environmental impact assessment by the Working Group of Experts on Environmental Law (first session, Washington, D. C., 26-29 June 1984),<sup>(4)</sup> the Council, on 24 May 1985, requested the Executive Director to provide for additional sessions to complete the guidelines for submission to the Council in 1987.

International conventions

The Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer was adopted in March (see p. 804) and a protocol to the 1979 Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution<sup>(5)</sup> on the reduction of sulphur emissions or their transboundary fluxes by at least 30 per cent was concluded at Helsinki, Finland, on 8 July 1985. As at 31 December 1985, 21 States had signed the protocol, drawn up within the framework of ECE, while one (Canada) had ratified it.<sup>(6)</sup>

In 1985 UNEP continued its work relating to various aspects of other international conventions relating to the environment. Revised and updated versions of the Register of International Treaties and Other Agreements in the Field of the Environment, the Directory of Principal Governmental Bodies Dealing with the Environment and the survey of Environmental Law in the United Nations Environment Programme were prepared and distributed for use by Governments. In addition, all guidelines and principles on environmental law adopted under UNEP auspices since 1972 were reissued as a documentation series in all official languages. A report<sup>(7)</sup> on progress with regard to environment co-operation by States concerning shared natural resources, prepared on behalf of the Governing Council for the General Assembly in response to a 1982 request,<sup>(8)</sup> indicated that the 1978 principles relating to such resources<sup>(9)</sup> had found wide international acceptance. The report summarized the comments of 46 Governments and 11 international organizations on the question.

Information on developments regarding international conventions and protocols on the environment was submitted to the Council by the Executive Director. His report listed new conventions and gave changes in the status of existing ones.

By decision 40/441 of 17 December, the General Assembly took note of a Secretariat note drawing attention to the Executive Director's report.

Environment information networks

INFOTERRA

The International Referral System for sources of environmental information (INFOTERRA), UNEP's global information system linking national and international institutions and experts, expanded its activities in 1985. The number of Government-designated INFOTERRA national focal points reached 126, of which 103 were in developing countries. The number of queries reached 10,600, an increase over the 9,100 in 1984; over half were from developing countries. In 1985, over 60 per cent of all queries processed by INFOTERRA national focal points received direct answers. INFOTERRA also provided information and referral services to every user who contacted it. About 70 per cent of all users contacted were satisfied or very satisfied with the information they received.

Work continued to identify leading institutions in environmental subject areas and to engage them to act as INFOTERRA special sectoral sources for the provision of information. Four additional institutions were contracted to search their data bases to produce bibliographic references, abstracts and documentation in answer to queries from users, bringing the total to nine.

A training course on basic INFOTERRA operations was held (Nairobi, October) for 20 new national focal points, and three national seminars were organized by Bulgaria, China and the Ukrainian SSR, with UNEP assistance. The INFOTERRA Advisory Committee held its second meeting (Sochi, USSR, April) and discussed the system's development.

The seventh edition of the INFOTERRA International Directory of Sources was published in January in English, French, Russian and Spanish. It listed 5,213 information sources on nearly 1,000 environmental topics. Promotional material and the bi-monthly INFOTERRA Bulletin were produced and distributed to all national focal points.

Global Resource Information Data Base

The Global Resource Information Data Base (GRID) was established in 1985 within GEMS to provide an analytical basis for continuous geographically referenced assessment statements on key global environmental issues. Designed as a data management service for the United Nations system, it enabled environmental data to be transformed into information useful to decision makers. It integrated data on the basis of geographical location—an effective common denominator in environmental planning and management—making them available for national and international users. The GRID processor facility in Geneva was opened in September. By year's end, the tasks of compiling global resource data sets and developing demonstration data sets and models to test the applicability of national geographic-information-system technology was well under way.

On 23 May 1985,<sup>(11)</sup> the Governing Council welcomed the establishment of GRID, expressed appreciation to Governments that had supported it, invited others to do so, and invited developing countries to consider how best they could use GRID for their environmental and developmental objectives. The Executive Director was requested to report in 1987 on progress in its development.

Integrated monitoring

During 1985, a methodology for integrated monitoring, developed by UNEP in conjunction with WMO and UNESCO, was being tested in a pilot project in comparable North and South American temperate forests. Preliminary results, based on a year's data collection at each project site (Torres del Paine National Park, Chile, and Olympic National Park, Washington, United States), confirmed that both locations were suitable for baseline data collection and examination of pollutant fluxes between and accumulations within environmental compartments. Consideration was given to how this study might be linked to similar work carried out in Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) countries in order to provide the basis for a new GEMS global network.

National conservation strategies

On 23 May,<sup>(12)</sup> the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to encourage Governments that had not done so to prepare national conservation strategies, and to recommend to the December African environmental conference (see p. 793) that it consider such strategies with a view to evolving a common approach.

Protection against harmful products and pollutants

Activities regarding pollution assessment continued throughout 1985. With UNEP/GEMS support, the Monitoring and Assessment Research Centre (MARC) of the University of London continued to assess environmental pollution. It produced reports on pathways analysis and exposure commitment assessments of environmental pollutants, in consultation with UNEP's International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (see below); a report on polyaromatic hydrocarbons, aluminium and zinc was published in 1985. MARC also prepared reviews of biological monitoring techniques, evaluating the usefulness of the whole spectrum of living organisms as integrators of exposure and indicators of the effects of environmental pollutants. In association with WHO and with UNEP support, MARC produced a report on historical monitoring which reviewed for the first time global concentrations of metal, organic and radioactive pollutants in both living and non-living materials, over time, using retrospective data.

UNEP and the Scientific Committee on Problems of the Environment continued to collect and analyse information on elements cycling in the environment through their joint Carbon Unit in the Federal Republic of Germany and the Sulphur Unit in the USSR. A project on the transport of carbonaceous compounds from the land to the sea by the major world rivers was under way, and the Carbon Unit published the third part of its report on transport of carbon and minerals in major world rivers. A workshop (Tianjin, China, 13-17 May) discussed the use of modelling and remote sensing to improve understanding of the carbon cycle.

Action to promote environmental health continued. In 1985 UNEP reviewed eight demonstration projects in bilharzia control, established in collaboration with the Egyptian Academy of Scientific Research and Technology and the Theodor Bilharz Research Institute in Cairo.

Under the UNEP-supported International Programme on Chemical Safety (IPCS), new priority chemicals were evaluated, on the basis of which environmental health criteria documents were published to provide national and international institutions with information on dangerous chemicals and with data on their effects on man and the environment. Two training courses organized under IPCS involved 39 participants from developing countries. One on environmental toxicology and ecotoxicology, held in the United Kingdom, dealt with safe disposal of chemicals; the other on preventive toxicology, held in the USSR, upgraded knowledge of agrochemicals to improve the formulation of national standards and exposure limits and the development of measures for hazard control.

In co-operation with FAO and the USSR Commission for UNEP (UNEP/COM), a training course was organized in the USSR on food contamination control with special reference to mycotoxins, involving 16 participants from developing countries.

In collaboration with the International Agency for Research on Cancer, UNEP published a manual on environmental carcinogens which included recommended analytical methods. In co-operation with ECE, UNEP evaluated airborne sulphur pollution and transboundary air pollution, and published two reports assessing air pollution effects on the environment.

In the area of management of agricultural chemicals and residues, the fourth International Meeting on Perception and Management of Pests and Pesticides (Chiang Mai, Thailand, 5-14 January) reviewed ongoing studies on the perceptions of pest managers and farmers; updated national profiles on pesticide production and distribution and pest management practices in developing countries; made recommendations on education and training; and reviewed information on the international flow of pesticides.

A meeting sponsored by UNEP, FAO and China (Guangzhou, China, 16-22 June), attended by 48 participants, aimed at enhancing developing country capabilities for biological control of agricultural pests.

With UNEP support, a training course to create self-reliance in ecological pest management in the tropics was held at the Regional Centre for Training in Plant Protection at Yaoundé, Cameroon (November/December). Its aim was to enable four selected African countries to design programmes for integrated crop pest and livestock vector management, in order to minimize the negative effects of indiscriminate pesticide use. The course was attended by 25 participants.

The second session of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts for the Exchange of Information on Potentially Harmful Chemicals (in particular Pesticides) in International Trade was held at Rome, Italy, in January/February. The Group reviewed the provisional notification scheme for banned and severely restricted chemicals;<sup>(13)</sup> approved standard notification forms annexed to the scheme; and revised the draft guidelines for the exchange of information on potentially harmful chemicals in international trade. Sixty-one Governments were participating in the notification scheme.

On 24 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Governing Council noted with appreciation an offer by the United Kingdom to host the third session of the Ad Hoc Working Group in early 1987. The Executive Director was requested to convene the session before that of the Governing Council in order to complete the draft guidelines. He was also requested to facilitate, through IPCS and in co-operation with the organizations concerned, the provision of technical assistance and training to developing countries to establish and improve national institutions dealing with the issue.

International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals

The potential threat posed by the increasing production, trade and use of chemicals became a major issue in 1985 as a result of chemical-related accidents such as the ones at Bhopal, India, and at the Fly River estuary, Papua New Guinea, where 2,700 sixty-litre barrels of sodium cyanide spilled in 1984. UNEP's International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC) became more involved in providing information, assistance and advice on chemical safety and hazard control. IRPTC expanded in 1985 its global information exchange network involving national institutions, international organizations, NGOs and industry. Training in the establishment and operation of national chemical information systems, in particular in developing countries, became a regular part of its work. With other international bodies, IRPTC organized training courses and seminars on the optimal use of data for the protection of health and the environment. In partnership with other parts of the United Nations, IRPTC maintained a global data base on prohibitions and restrictive regulatory measures imposed on chemicals by Governments.

The Query-Response Service continued to receive queries on chemicals at an increasing rate. Over 330 came in during 1985 (43 per cent from developing countries), most (44 per cent) on agrochemicals.

The IRPTC Legal File, containing data on regulatory measures and recommendations for hazard control on 400 chemicals, covering 12 countries and six international organizations: was expanded in 1985 to contain occupational exposure limits for 1,258 chemicals from 20 countries. The File was accessible on-line, world-wide, from the Environmental Chemicals Data and Information Network of the Commission of the European Communities as a result of an agreement between UNEP and the Commission.

IRPTC updated its loose-leaf manual on toxic chemicals and continued to develop its data profiles of 500 chemicals of international significance stored in its data bank.

Two issues of the IRPTC Bulletin were published in English, French, Russian and Spanish and distributed to 9,200 recipients. The Bulletin contained information on activities by UNEP and other organizations on chemicals; the results of risk assessments of chemicals; and chemicals which were the subject of controls or restrictive measures. With USSR co-operation, publication continued of the series Scientific Reviews Of Soviet Literature on Toxicity and Hazards of Chemicals, which comprised 94 publications. The English edition of Principles of Pesticide Toxicology was published.

An international expert consultation on toxicometric methodology, held jointly with rpcs (Moscow, November), reviewed a draft document on recommendations and methods of toxicometry, providing basic information on the experiences of CMEA countries in safety-testing of chemicals, and made proposals for its finalization and use.

Close working links were maintained with the new national chemical information systems established in Colombia, the Gambia, Malaysia, Sri Lanka and the United Republic of Tanzania during 1984 under UNEP's clearing-house mechanism (see p. 795). Plans were developed for a second phase, involving six more developing countries.

In response to a 1984 Governing Council request,<sup>(14)</sup> IRPTC continued to send to Governments, international organizations, NGOs and industry a report on environmentally dangerous chemical substances and processes of global significance. A revision of the report based on government and other comments was begun.

Responding to another Council request,<sup>(13)</sup> IRPTC continued to assist in implementing the provisional notification scheme for banned and severely restricted chemicals (see p. 802). By the end of 1985, Governments had started issuing notifications of control action for specific chemicals for dissemination to others through IRPTC.

During 1985, IRPTC continued to collaborate with IPCS, OECD, CMEA, the Commission of the European Communities, ILO and other United Nations bodies.

On 23 May,<sup>(15)</sup> the Governing Council, noting that IRPTC had achieved specific successes, recognized that the current international information exchange systems on chemicals for the protection of human health and the environment, in which IRPTC played an important role, were failing to keep abreast of the growing requirements placed on them. The Council felt that it was urgent to raise the effectiveness of IRPTC by increasing the number of chemicals it covered, intensifying information exchange, providing access to additional organizations, institutions and bodies, and expanding training programmes. The Council urged Governments, international organizations and industry to provide information for inclusion in the IRPTC files, and called on the Executive Director to continue giving high priority to IRPTC's work and to increase its financial resources from non-convertible currency contributions to the Environment Fund.

Managing hazardous wastes

On 24 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to convene a third session of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes, to enable it to complete guidelines and principles on that subject for the Council's consideration in 1987. The Group had held its first two sessions in 1984.<sup>(19)</sup>

The Working Group met at Cairo (4-9 December), and adopted the Cairo Guidelines and Principles for the Environmentally Sound Management of Hazardous Wastes,<sup>(17)</sup> together with several recommendations addressed to Governments and the UNEP Executive Director.

Health-related monitoring

In the area of health-related monitoring, work continued under the UNEP/WHO Human Exposure Assessment Locations (HEALS) programme, expected to lead to major advances in assessing pollution-exposure risk to various sectors of the population in industrialized and developing countries. During 1985, final discussions were held with participating countries (Japan, Sweden, United States and Yugoslavia) on implementing the first stage of the programme. In the next two stages, HEALS was to be extended to advanced developing countries and then to less developed countries.

At the end of 1985 GEMS had, in co-operation with WHO, three operational networks monitoring urban air, water and food contamination. On urban air, 50 countries (27 developing) were participating, with some 175 monitoring sites in 75 cities. Regarding water, 250,000 data points had been returned from 448 stations in 59 countries or territories. Concerning food contamination, 26 joint FAO/WHO monitoring centres and institutions were operational. In addition, the health-related monitoring programme had resulted in initiating or strengthening national monitoring in 25 developing countries.

Monitoring long-range transport of pollutants

The first phase of a project begun in 1984 with ECE<sup>(13)</sup> to assess the effects of acidifying deposition on forests in ECE countries and to recommend guidelines for a unified methodology for sampling, analysis and assessment of damage to forests from air pollution continued in 1985. A planned second phase was to monitor damage to forests by applying methodology developed in the first phase.

Protection of the ozone layer

Seven years of efforts by the international community culminated in the adoption of the Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer on 22 March by a conference of plenipotentiaries (Vienna, 18-22 March). Sponsored by UNEP with the support of the Austrian Government, the conference was attended by 43 States (including 14 developing countries) and seven international organizations. As at 31 December 1985,<sup>(6)</sup> the Convention had been signed by 25 States and EEC. It was to enter into force after 20 States had ratified or accepted it.

The conference was preceded by a meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Legal and Technical Experts for the Elaboration of a Global Framework Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer (Geneva, 21-25 January) and by an informal negotiation meeting. In view of the urgent need for a protocol on the control of chlorofluorocarbons, UNEP convened two ad hoc steering committee meetings (London, 17 and 18 September, and Brussels, 16 December) to arrange for a 1986 workshop as a basis for elaborating such a protocol.

Justification for the Convention was based largely on the continuing process of assessment of ozone layer modification and its impact carried out through the UNEP Co-ordinating Committee on the Ozone Layer. A December 1985 assessment report, prepared by the United States National Aeronautics and Space Administration based on work by several bodies, including UNEP and WMO, contained more refined data on the atmosphere than ever before, and confirmed the risk of significant ozone depletion should chlorine-containing chemicals, particularly chlorofluorocarbons, be emitted to the atmosphere at a higher rate than was currently happening. Also stressed was the possibility of climate change occurring as a result of increasing levels of tropospheric ozone as well as of the so-called greenhouse gas properties of ozone-modifying substances.

To promote awareness of the ozone layer issue in developing countries, a seminar for developing country scientists on global environmental problems was held at UNEP headquarters in November, with participants from Argentina, Brazil, China, Egypt, India, Kenya, Malaysia and Nigeria.

On 24 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Governing Council urged States which had not signed and ratified the Vienna Convention to do so and requested the Executive Director to convene a working group on a protocol on chlorofluorocarbons, authorizing him, pending the Convention's entry into force, to convene a diplomatic conference to adopt such a protocol. The Council urged States and regional economic integration organizations, pending the protocol's entry into force, to control their emissions of chlorofluorocarbons and urged interested parties to sponsor a workshop on the subject under UNEP auspices, and to set up a steering committee to prepare for it. The Council also set out the committee's terms of reference.

Climate-related monitoring

At the end of 1985, the WMO/UNEP Background Air Pollution Monitoring Network involved 95 participating countries, 65 of which had operational stations and 55 were regularly reporting data on the state of the atmosphere. During 1985, five other stations became operational. Emphasis continued to be on improving the quantity and density of data, replacing outmoded instruments by modern ones, and improving quality assurance procedures.

The World Glacier Inventory was completed in 1985 and responsibility for its continuation passed to the UNEP-supported World Glacier Monitoring Service. A selection of key reference glaciers in various regions was being made by the Service, which would also provide annual data on the mass balance changes of the glaciers. These data would contribute to understanding global climatic changes and variability, and provide an indication of water availability from glaciers in areas where they occurred.

Climate impact studies

In 1985 the World Climate Impact Studies programme (WCIP)—the UNEP-led element of the World Climate Programme (WCP) of WMO, which had resulted from the 1979 World Climate Conference<sup>(18)</sup>—focused on reducing the risks of adverse climatic impact on food systems and agriculture, developing methodologies for climate impact assessment, and analysing greenhouse-gas-induced climate changes. Mounting scientific evidence indicated that the earth's atmosphere was gradually warming, because of excessive amounts of gases (mainly the by-products of the burning of fossil fuels) which trapped heat in the atmosphere, much as glass traps heat in a greenhouse (leading to the term "greenhouse effect").

The highlight of WCIP was the second joint UNEP/WMO/International Council of Scientific Unions assessment of the role of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases in climate variations and their associated impacts. The assessment was carried out at a conference (Villach, Austria, 7-15 October), attended by scientists from 29 countries, which stated that, in the first half of the next century, a rise of global mean temperature could occur that would be greater than any in history. The increase in global mean equilibrium surface temperature due to increases in carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases was likely to be in the range of 1.5-4.5° C. Further, the expected global mean temperature due to a doubling of carbon dioxide was about the same magnitude as the change of global temperature from the last glacial period to the current interglacial one. A global warming of 1.5 to 4.5° C would lead to an estimated sea-level rise of between 20 and 165 centimetres. A future change of climate of such an order could have profound effects on global ecosystems. The conference drew attention to the linkages between climate change and other major environmental issues such as acidic deposition and threats to the Earth's ozone shield, and noted that actions to limit one environmental threat could have repercussions on other environmental areas. The conference called on scientists and policymakers to explore jointly alternative policies.

Various WCIP projects were concluded during 1985. Under the project on integrated approaches to climate impact assessment, a two-volume Assessment of Climate Impacts on Agriculture was finalized for publication in 1986. Under the project on improving the science of climate impact studies, a publication, Climate Impact Assessment, was issued and distributed free to developing countries. Under a joint UNEP/UNRISD/Centre for Regional, Ecological and Science Studies in Development Alternatives project, on reducing the vulnerability of food systems to climate in north-east India, the Perception Study of Food Vulnerability to Climatic Variability in the Region was published in October.

WCIP's Scientific Advisory Committee held its fourth meeting (Vienna, 4-8 February) to review implementation of WCIP and recommend future activities. Among these were: following up on the Villach conference's recommendations; encouraging development of national climate programmes, including impact studies; and urging national participation in WCP.

UNEP and the United States National Centre for Atmospheric Research held a workshop (Lugano, Switzerland, 11-15 November) on El Niño and Southern Oscillation (ENSO) events, thought to be associated with climatic anomalies, including drought, in many parts of the world. The workshop considered impacts on socio-economic systems, agriculture, fisheries and ecology attributed to ENSO in 10 world regions.

During 1985, UNEP-supported experts began investigating the impact of climatic variations on agriculture in the humid tropics of South America. Three countries were involved in the investigation, carried out by the Inter-Agency Group on Agricultural Biometeorology. Interim results were discussed at an expert group meeting (Lima, Peru, November).

Noting the progress in implementing WCP, particularly WCIP, the Governing Council on 23 May<sup>(19)</sup> invited the Executive Director, in co-operation with WMO, to support WCP by encouraging the development of national climate programmes in countries where none existed, and by facilitating closer co-operation among such programmes and between them and WCP.

Desertification and drought control

In Africa, famine, malnutrition and deaths arising from drought and desertification remained for most of 1985 the most visible sign of a broader crisis. At its peak, in 1984-1985, chronic malnutrition was affecting 150 million people with over 30 million at risk, of whom about 10 million were displaced. Towards the end of 1985, in most of the 21 seriously affected countries, the food supply seemed to move back to normal, after average to above-average crop harvests. There was also an increased awareness by Governments of the desertification threat and the need for long-term solutions. But poverty and lack of resources remained acute.

In a June 1985 preliminary report on the stricken countries,<sup>(20)</sup> submitted to the General Assembly pursuant to its 1984 request,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that 74 countries throughout the world had a substantial portion of their territories affected. Most of the 37 least developed countries (see p. 433) were stricken by drought and desertification, and were in a state of extreme deprivation. Many other countries were also affected, including some industrialized ones.

The current African drought had persisted, with certain variations, for the past 17 years. Despite its length, there was no evidence of a long-term change in the African climate. Computer simulations indicated that the current drought, although the worst in the century, was within a normal range of variability. The disturbing conclusion was that drought was a recurrent phenomenon that the affected countries, especially in Africa, must learn to live with.

The combination of drought and desertification had had disastrous consequences, the report said. In 1983-1984, more than 150 million Africans were facing extreme hunger, malnutrition and shortages of potable water. The Secretary-General stressed that, in concert with the heads of concerned United Nations organizations, he was reviewing all aspects of the problem, and would present more specific recommendations on future action in accordance with any further decision of the Economic and Social Council and the Assembly.

Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 18-20 July), recommended national strategies, such as drought and desertification control plans; action areas, such as vegetation conservation, water resources, firewood substitution and protecting common ecosystems; and co-operation at all levels.

In its final resolution, the second Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification (Dakar, Senegal, 1-9 November)<sup>(23)</sup> defined 29 major projects for finalization and funding, listed measures for international co-operation, and decided to hold such a conference every two years.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1985, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/176, requested the Secretary-General to submit the final report as soon as possible to the Assembly, taking into account views expressed by delegations during the Council's July 1985 session. By decision 1985/102 of 8 February 1985, the Council had decided to consider countries stricken by desertification and drought at the same time as international co-operation on the environment.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions concerning desertification and drought, both recommended by the Second Committee. It adopted resolution 40/175 without vote.

Countries stricken by desertification and drought
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/208 of 17 December 1984 and Economic and Social Council decision 1985/176 of 25 July 1985, as well as its Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, annexed to its resolution 39/29 of 3 December 1984,

Noting Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 July 1985,

Congratulating the Government of Senegal for having taken the initiative of convening the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries and in Egypt and the Sudan, which met at Dakar, for the first time from 18 to 27 July 1984,<sup>(24)</sup> and for the second time from 1 to 9 November 1985,

Congratulating the Government of Egypt for having invited the first African Environmental Conference, organized by the United Nations Environment Programme in consultation with the Economic Commission for Africa and the Organization of African Unity, to be held at Cairo in December 1985,

Congratulating also the Government of France for having taken the initiative of convening an international conference on tree and forest, to be held in Paris in February 1986,

Noting the positive action taken by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office, as part of a joint effort by the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Environment Programme to help twenty-two African countries, on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme, implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Taking note of decision 12/10 of 28 May 1984 on desertification, adopted by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,<sup>(25)</sup>

Welcoming the establishment by six east African countries-Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda-of an Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development for the purpose of combating the effects of drought in those countries,

Deeply concerned by the tragic consequences of the acceleration of desertification, combined with persistent drought-the most serious recorded this century-which have resulted in a substantial drop in the agricultural output of many developing countries and have contributed particularly to a worsening of the current economic crisis in Africa,

Noting with great anxiety that desertification and drought continue to spread and intensify in developing countries, particularly in Africa,

Aware that the problems of desertification and drought are increasingly assuming a structural and endemic character and that real and permanent solutions must be found in increased global efforts based on concerted action by the stricken countries and the international community,

Bearing in mind that the majority of the countries affected by desertification and drought are low-income countries and, for the most part, belong to the group of the least developed countries, particularly those in Africa,

Aware that the prime responsibility in the struggle against desertification and the effects of drought rests with the countries concerned and that such action is an essential component of their development,

Recognizing, however, that given the scope and the intensity of desertification and drought, particularly in the least developed countries, the attainment of the objectives of programmes to combat these scourges requires financial and human resources beyond the means of the affected countries

Considering the Interdependence between developed countries and those affected by desertification and drought, and the negative impact of those phenomena on the economies of the countries concerned,

Emphasising the fundamental importance of all forms of South-South co-operation in executing programmes to combat desertification and drought,

Taking note of the preliminary report of the Secretary-General on the countries stricken by desertification and drought,

1. Welcomes the results of the Ministerial Conference for a joint policy to combat desertification in the countries of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel and the Economic Community of West African States, in the Maghreb countries and in Egypt and the Sudan, and takes note with satisfaction of the final resolution adopted by the Conference in 1984 and that adopted in 1985;

2. Takes note with satisfaction of the establishment by the Organization of African Unity of the Special Emergency Assistance Fund for Drought and Famine in Africa;

3. Recommends that high priority should be given in the development plans and programmes of the affected countries themselves to the problem of desertification and to problems resulting from drought;

4. Recognizes that particular attention should be given to countries stricken by desertification and drought and that special efforts should be made by the international community, particularly the developed countries, in support of action taken individually or collectively by the affected countries;

5. Recommends that the international community, above all the developed countries, should continue to provide coherent short-term, medium-term and long-term assistance to those countries in order to support the rehabilitation process effectively—in particular through intensive reafforestation and the renewal of growth of agricultural production in the countries stricken by desertification and drought, particularly in Africa;

6. Recommends that, within the framework of bilateral and multilateral development aid programmes, the fight against desertification and drought should be granted priority in view of the extent of those problems;

7. Appeals to all members of the international community, including organs and agencies of the United Nations system, regional and subregional financial institutions, and non-governmental organizations, to continue to provide full support, in all forms—including financial, technical or any other form of assistance—to the development efforts of countries stricken by desertification and drought;

8. Takes note with satisfaction of the generosity with which the international community has responded to the assistance needs resulting from the emergency in Africa, particularly as regards food aid, transport and medical assistance;

9. Requests the appropriate organs and agencies of the United Nations to provide the Secretary-General, for transmission to the stricken countries, with all relevant studies carried out in their respective spheres of competence, in particular with respect to food and agricultural production, development of water resources, industrialization and raw materials, including the studies carried out by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on the impact of desertification and drought on the foreign trade of the stricken countries,<sup>(26)</sup> including similarly, the studies to determine the interaction between forest zones and arid regions and their influence on the acceleration of desertification, particularly in Africa;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary steps to ensure that his final report on the implementation of resolution 39/208, which is to be submitted to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986, contains proposals for specific action to be undertaken, as indicated in the present resolution.

Desertification and drought

The General Assembly,

Aware of the importance of problems relating to desertification and drought for a large number of countries,

Bearing in mind that such problems are discussed under a number of agenda items in the Second Committee,

1. Emphasizes the importance of existing mandates under its resolutions relating to desertification and drought;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that all problems relating to desertification and drought will be considered in future years under one sub-item, to be entitled "Desertification and drought", under the item entitled "Development and international economic co-operation" and will be dealt with in odd years, in accordance with the biennial programme of work of the Second Committee.

Implementation of the ##### Plan of Action to Combat Desertification

Throughout 1985, several bodies took part in the effort to combat desertification. The first African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (see p. 793) took action to implement several programmes on desertification, including a regional co-operation programme among the most-affected countries, strengthening of the North Saharan green belt project, efforts to combat desert advance in the South Saharan zone and the Gum Belt (Sudan) and greater co-operation in research.

The fifth session of the Consultative Group for Desertification Control (Geneva, 18-24 July) was attended by seven United Nations co-sponsor agencies, 14 core members, 21 invited countries and other organizations. Fourteen anti-desertification project proposals were presented to the Group, which expressed interest in six of them, costing at $20.82 million; consultations between donors and recipients followed. The Group also made recommendations on resource mobilization for implementing the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.<sup>(27)</sup>

An expert meeting (Nairobi, 11-14 March) reviewed progress concerning the Desertification Assessment and Mapping Methodology and Data Base being developed by FAO and UNEP. The meeting discussed methodologies for monitoring and mapping desertification and the preparation of a World Atlas of Thematic Maps on Desertification called for in the Plan of Action.

UNEP began work on a Desertification Information System, to organize and code the thousands of documents in the library of UNEP's Desertification Control Programme Activity Centre (DC/PAC), as well as country and project files, for entry into a microcomputer. The work entailed creating several data bases to respond to worldwide requests for information.

In 1985, three television documentaries on desertification were produced. The Crowded Desert, on India's Thar Desert, and a six-part series Seeds of Hope, on land degradation in Ethiopia, were produced by UNEP and Central Independent Television (United Kingdom). Trees for Tomorrow showed a DC/PAC tree-planting project in southern India (see below). DC/PAC also participated in Australian and Japanese television documentaries, and organized trips for journalists to areas in Kenya undergoing desertification. One issue of the Desertification Control Bulletin and a report on Research and Training Desertification Control: the United Nations Effort were published. A directory of worldwide institutions concerned with desertification, containing more than 500 entries, was prepared for publication in 1986. The two-volume Desertification Control in Africa: Actions (I) and Directory of Institutions (II) was updated and reprinted.

UNEP assisted the Tunisian Government to formulate a national plan against desertification and to integrate it in its national development plan. In Tunisia UNEP also initiated a pilot project to map desertification, study indigenous plants for use in sand-dune fixation, and carry out desertification control training courses. A UNEP/UNEP COM project on integrated agricultural development as a means to combat desertification continued in Democratic Yemen. A project involving tree planting, the training of schoolchildren and farmers in afforestation and the setting up of nurseries was launched in southern India, in support of the NGO Millions of Trees Club. In addition, UNEP decided to develop an approach for a project in the Sudano-Sahelian region for ACC consideration.

In a UNEP-sponsored training course held in the United Republic of Tanzania, five scientists from the Institute of Desert Research, China, organized seminars on desertification control. A UNEP-sponsored training course on afforestation and sand-dune fixation in dry zones was held in Moscow and Ashkabad, USSR, for 20 specialists from 16 developing countries.

In response to a 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1985 a report<sup>(29)</sup> summarizing the substantive views of 46 Member States, some of which had been received in 1982<sup>(30)</sup> and 1983,<sup>(31)</sup> on financing the Plan of Action, particularly the establishment of an international financial corporation to fund non-commercial initiatives. The majority of countries did not support the proposed modalities, and while half of them supported the setting up of the financial corporation, few were willing to finance it. There seemed to be no general support for additional financing. The Secretary-General suggested that the Consultative Group for Desertification Control be asked to consider innovative approaches for the Plan's financing.

UNEP Council action. On 23 May,<sup>(32)</sup> the Governing Council urged Governments, United Nations bodies, research institutions and other organizations to intensify their efforts to combat desertification and expressed appreciation for the emergency assistance offered to countries facing famine. It called on affected countries to prepare national plans, and on donor countries to assist affected countries to curb desertification. Noting the role played by NGOs in many of the most successful anti-desertification efforts, the Council called on Governments and international organizations to utilize NGOs to a greater degree. It invited the Executive Director to consult the principal international organizations funding desertification control activities to ascertain how UNEP could best assist them, and to recommend to the Council in 1987 measures that could enhance co-operation between UNEP and those institutions. The Council approved measures to enhance the work of the Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification, requested the Executive Director to consider including the States members of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) in the list of countries eligible to receive assistance through the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (see below), and urged him to seek alternative sources of funding to assist SADCC countries in particular.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/198 A without vote.

Implementation and financing of the Plan of Action The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/172 of 19 December 1977, by which it approved the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Recalling also its resolutions 33/89 of 15 December 1978, 34/184 of 18 December 1979, 36/191 of 17 December 1981, 37/220 of 20 December 1982 and 38/163 of 19 December 1983, dealing with the implementation and financing of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 39/29 of 3 December 1984,

Noting with dismay and grave concern the continuing spread and intensification of desertification in developing countries, especially in Africa, and the grave human suffering, economic losses and social disruption caused by this phenomenon,

Having considered the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the work of its thirteenth session and decision 13/30 A of 23 May 1985 of the Governing Council on the implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Having also considered the report of the Secretary-General on financing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

1. Takes note of decision 13/30 A of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

2. Shares the concern of the Governing Council over the slow implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

3. Urges Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental bodies to intensify their efforts in combating desertification and to accord the highest priority to actions recommended in the Plan of Action and decision 13/30 A of the Governing Council;

4. Notes the significant role that non-governmental organizations are playing in the anti-desertification efforts, and calls upon Governments and organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental bodies to explore all opportunities of involving them more in this effort;

5. Urges the international community to increase its assistance to the countries concerned with a view to the implementation of their national and regional programmes aimed at desertification control;

6. Endorses the Governing Council's invitation to the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to consult with the principal international organizations which are funding desertification control activities in order to ascertain how the Programme can facilitate funding activities, and to recommend measures to enhance co-operation in this field;

7. Urges Governments of countries affected by desertification to accord sustained priority to medium-term and long-term strategies and programmes for combating desertification and to ensure that these are smoothly integrated with their national development plans and regional co-operative programmes to curb the spread of environmental degradation;

8. Notes the measures approved by the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme in its decision 13/30 A to enhance the work of the Inter-Agency Working Group on Desertification and calls upon all members of the Working Group to intensify their joint efforts for the effective implementation of the Plan of Action;

9. Requests the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the Plan of Action;

10. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on financing the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

11. Notes the dearth of reactions and replies on the measures for providing additional resources needed for financing the Plan of Action recommended in the three reports(33) prepared by high-level financial experts convened by the Executive Director in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/172;

12. Considers that the expert studies deserve further consideration and requests the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme to take due account of them under his responsibility with respect to the implementation of the Plan of Action, as well as within the framework of the mandate of the Consultative Group on Desertification Control;

13. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989Add.6) without vote (parts A & B together), 25 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.66), based on informal consultations on draft by Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, Comoros Ecuador, France, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Italy, Kenya, Liberia, Mali, Mauritania, Netherlands, Niger, Panama, Senegal and United Republic of Tanzania (A/C.2/40/L.35); agenda item 84 (f).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 22, 30, 34, 36, 43; plenary 119.

Implementation of the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region

In 1985 the drought continued to be particularly acute in the Sudano-Sahelian region, and most international aid was emergency assistance. The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO), a joint UNDP/UNEP venture, working on UNEP's behalf to implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region, co-operated closely in this endeavour, especially with the Office of Emergency Operations for Africa (see Chapter III of this section).

UNSO raised almost $13 million in new pledges to the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities in 1985 (not including UNEP and UNDP contributions). It allocated over $12 million for projects against desertification, mainly for reforestation, energy-related activities, range and water resources management, soil protection and sand-dune fixation, planning, research and information exchange.

Major forestry initiatives were carried out in Ethiopia. UNO expanded a reforestation programme involving 3,000 hectares in the Debre Birhan area, with a contribution from the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA), and undertook a joint mission with the Finnish International Development Agency (FINNIDA) for a project in Dese which would expand the total planted area to 7,500 hectares. UNO also received a commitment from FINNIDA for forestry management in Somalia. In Mauritania, UNO obtained a contribution from DANIDA for institutional support to the Department for the Protection of Nature. In the Niger, Norway pledged to finance the expansion of green-belt plantations around Niamey. A project for family woodlots in Burkina Faso continued.

To reduce the demand for fuelwood, UNO continued working on alternative energy sources. In Somalia, a wind energy project started with DANIDA financing. In Cape Verde, where wind turbines had been installed with DANIDA financing, UNO investigated a wider use of wind energy. A project in Senegal to develop the use of peat as household fuel and a programme in the Gambia on improved wood-burning stoves were started with DANIDA contributions.

To combat moving sand dunes, UNO was carrying out dune fixation using vegetation. In 1985, three projects were under way in Somalia and one in Senegal. In Cape Verde, soil protection began with a contribution from the Norwegian Agency for International Development.

In range management, a project to establish a centre for the ecological monitoring of pastoral ecosystems in Senegal started with a DANIDA contribution. In the Gambia, range-land development and protection began with a contribution from the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations. In Mali, the integrated development of the Niger River flood plains progressed.

With their inclusion in the list of countries eligible for UNO assistance, planning missions went to Ghana and Togo to assist them in initiating desertification strategies. UNO also supported seminars on desertification in Benin, Burkina Faso and Senegal, assisted the second Ministerial Conference on desertification (see p. 806), and sponsored a symposium on drought and desertification (Washington, DC., October).

Responding to a June 1985 UNDP Governing Council request,<sup>(34)</sup> the UNDP Administrator<sup>(35)</sup> described 1985 UNO activities to implement the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in the Sudano-Sahelian region (see p. 537). These activities were aimed at mitigating the effects of drought, helping countries to become self-sufficient in food production, enhancing socio-economic development and arresting desertification. Under the road programme, construction was under way in Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, the Gambia, the Niger and Senegal. National activities included reforestation and road construction in Burkina Faso, airport runways construction in Cape Verde, water resources management in the Gambia and reforestation in Niger. Regional and international activities included support to the Institut du Sahel and assistance in establishing (January 1986) the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development, comprising Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda. UNO continued to assist the members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee on Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS) (Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, Senegal). Funds mobilized by UNO amounted to $87.8 million at the end of 1985.

Activities carried out in 1984 to implement the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region were described in a February 1985 report of the UNEP Executive Director.<sup>(36)</sup>

By decision 40/441 of 17 December, the General Assembly took note of a Secretariat note drawing attention to the Executive Director's report.

On 23 May,<sup>(37)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council welcomed UNO's steps to implement the Plan of Action in 21 countries of the Sudano-Sahelian and neighbouring regions. It urged the UNEP and UNDP executive heads to consolidate the UNO achievements and to intensify efforts to mobilize resources for combating desertification. It also included the United Republic of Tanzania in the list of countries authorized to receive assistance through UNO (with that inclusion, the list stood at 22).

On 28 June,<sup>(38)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council urged Governments, United Nations bodies and other organizations to intensify their assistance to the countries of the region, and urged Governments of the affected areas to intensify their co-ordination efforts in combating desertification. It also endorsed the UNEP Governing Council's action regarding the United Republic of Tanzania. On the same day,<sup>(34)</sup> the UNDP Council expressed gratitude to those contributing to the implementation of the Sudano-Sahelian recovery programme, appealed to donors to strengthen their support for UNO, and requested it to continue co-operating with CILSS and its members. The UNDP Administrator was requested to continue reporting annually on the implementation of the recovery programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/198 B without vote.

Implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/190 of 17 December 1981, 37/216 of 20 December 1982, 38/164 of 19 December 1983, and 39/168 of 17 December 1984,

Noting decision 13/30 B of 23 May 1985 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Noting also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/65 of 26 July 1984 on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, and 1984/72 of 27 July 1984 on environment and development in Africa,

Considering the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification,

Considering also the report of the Secretary-General on the critical situation of food and agriculture in Africa, 1984-1985,<sup>(39)</sup>

1. Takes note of the report of the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

2. Notes with concern.

(a) The damage wrought by drought on the countries of Africa south of the Sahara;

(b) That insufficient financial resources continue to be a serious constraint in combating desertification;

(c) That the struggle against desertification requires financial and human resources beyond the means of the affected countries;

3. Notes with satisfaction the progress that the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office has made in the face of these obstacles in assisting, on behalf of the United Nations Environment Programme, the Governments of the countries of the region in combating desertification, under a joint venture between the United Nations Environment Programme and the United Nations Development Programme;

4. Endorses the decision of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to add the United Republic of Tanzania to the list of countries to be assisted by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in their efforts to implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification, contained in Council decision 13/30 B;

5. Commends the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for the effective and co-ordinated manner in which they have continued to develop the joint venture through the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office;

6. Recommends the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme and the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to continue and increase their support for the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in order to enable it to respond more adequately to the pressing needs of the countries of the Sudano-Sahelian and adjacent regions;

7. Expresses its gratitude to the Governments, specialized agencies, other intergovernmental organizations and all organizations that have contributed to the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification;

8. Draws the attention of the international community to the need to increase the efforts to implement the Plan of Action in the Sudano-Sahelian region and urges it to contribute to this implementation through appropriate means, including the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities, as well as to respond favourably to requests for assistance from the Governments of the countries of the region;

9. Recommends the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme to make the necessary arrangements, in conformity with General Assembly resolution 39/217 of 18 December 1984, for submitting to the Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the implementation in the Sudano-Sahelian region of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119

Adopted without vote

Soil management

In many parts of the world the soil was being over-used, and mismanagement was robbing it of its wealth, the UNEP Executive Director stated in his annual report.<sup>(40)</sup> Examples of the results of this abuse were the growing of steppe in the monocultures of different regions in Canada and the United States, soil erosion in Armenia and Kazakhstan and the salinization of soils of Sudanese peanut plantations as a result of irrigation. Signs of a looming world-wide ecological catastrophe were clearly recognizable. The UNEP 1982 World Soils Policy<sup>(41)</sup> addressed the issue of sustainable agriculture, and in 1985 UNEP sought to obtain financial support for the Policy's Plan of Action.<sup>(42)</sup> But in spite of many positive comments, few Governments were ready to support Plan-related projects through in-kind contributions, and this had prevented the Plan from becoming operational.

Land management techniques were the subject of a training course (Georgia, USSR, September) for 22 participants, mainly from the Andean region, under a joint Bulgaria/UNEP/UNEP/COM project on land/soil management in mountain ecosystems. In October, as part of the UNEP/UNEP/COM project on the impact of agricultural management on the environment, a workshop on ecological management of irrigated farming in arid and semi-arid zones was held in the southern provinces of the USSR for 20 participants from developing countries.

On 23 May,<sup>(43)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council urged Governments to establish national soil policies. Governments and international organizations were urged to intensify efforts to combat soil degradation and to co-operate with UNEP in implementing the World Soils Policy Plan of Action.

The Executive Director was invited to continue his efforts to secure commitments from Governments and international bodies to the Plan's implementation, and to assist Governments in formulating national soils policies.

Lithosphere

In May 1985, under the UNEP/UNESCO/USSR project on geology and the environment, the first session of the International Scientific Council on Geology and Environment Problems was held at Yalta, USSR. It was attended by 29 scientists, who elaborated draft international guidelines on geology and land-use planning, and drew up the curriculum for a 1986 training course to be held in the USSR.

Forest ecosystems

Tropical forests

Despite efforts by the international community to reverse the destruction of tropical forests, no significant changes in the downward trend were perceived. But those efforts continued, and during 1985 several major events in which UNEP played a role took place. In April, the International Tropical Timber Agreement came into force provisionally (see p. 570); it included environmental considerations for the conservation of the resource base of the commodity. The ninth World Forestry Congress was held in Mexico; FAO declared 1985 the International Year of the Forest; the President of France decided to convene in 1986 a high-level political conference on the protection of forests in Europe and the African region north of the equator; and in November several Governments and international organizations met at The Hague, Netherlands, to analyse the financial implications and mechanisms of the Tropical Forests Action Plan, originally proposed at an expert meeting held in Nairobi in 1980.<sup>(44)</sup> (For reforestation projects in the Sudano-Sahelian region, see p. 810.)

Addressing the General Assembly's Second Committee,<sup>(45)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director warned that the world had 20 years, or even less, to turn from a course of irrevocable destruction. He called for a high-level non-technical conference on the future of tropical forests. Such a conference could tackle two difficult international problems: the reconciliation of the non-contested national sovereignty on forests with the legitimate concerns of the world as a whole; and the frank analysis of why, when the technical means to conserve forests existed and the need to use them was so widely acknowledged, nothing much was being done. He also suggested that the Assembly consider proclaiming 1990 as United Nations Year of the Tropical Forest.

During 1985, under the UNEP/UNESCO pilot project on research and training in tropical forest areas, a regional training course on computer-based quantitative methods for environmental biologists was held at Singapore; a training workshop on agroforestry in the humid tropical zones of West and Central Africa was held in Makokou, Gabon; and a training course on entomological research in tropical forest ecosystems was held in Abidjan and Tai, Ivory Coast. Fellowships were provided to specialists from India, the Ivory Coast, Malaysia, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam. With funds from the National Federation of UNESCO Associations in Japan, reforestation/afforestation projects started 'in Sri Lanka, Thailand and New Caledonia. Under a joint UNEP/FAO project on appropriate management of forest genetic resources, case-studies on conservation of these resources were carried out in Cameroon, Malaysia and Peru.

In resolution 40/200, the Assembly called on the Executive Director to co-ordinate further UNEP activities with those of other United Nations bodies, to co-operate with the organizers of international initiatives on the future of the forests, and to report to the Governing Council.

Mountain ecosystems

An integrated pilot project on the environmental management and protection of Andean ecosystems started in 1985. Financed by a trust fund of the Federal Republic of Germany, it aimed at improving the Andean farmers' living conditions in a demonstration area close to the city of Cuzco, Peru.

Conservation of wildlife and protected areas

Protecting endangered species, managing national parks and creating national conservation strategies continued to be major concerns. UNEP continued to exercise its co-ordinating role in implementing the 1980 World Conservation Strategy<sup>(44)</sup> by providing secretariat services to the Ecosystem Conservation Group (ECG), comprising UNEP, FAO, UNESCO, the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN) and the World Wildlife Fund (WWF). Priority was given to preparing national conservation strategies and their integration in national development planning. One of the countries selected by ECG for assistance was Uganda, where UNEP, in co-operation with the Government and IUCN, was supporting the development of a national conservation strategy. Several United Nations bodies, donor agencies and NGOs were participating in that project. In 1985 UNEP also co-operated with Nepal, IUCN and the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) in formulating a national conservation strategy for that country.

UNEP continued to assist Governments in improving the management of wildlife and protected areas by reviewing the existing protected area coverage of habitats and species and their management, to ensure that critical habitats were protected and other measures taken to maintain the entire range of biological diversity. Towards this end, three expert group meetings were held in 1985 under a joint UNEP/IUCN project: in the Indo-Malayan realm (Corbett National Park, India, February); the Antarctica realm (Bonn, Federal Republic of Germany, May); and the Afro-tropical realm (Kasungu National Park, Malawi, June).

The third South Pacific National Parks and Reserves Conference (Apia, Samoa, June/July), convened by the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme, IUCN, UNEP and WWF, was attended by participants from 15 South Pacific island nations, Australia, New Zealand, the United States and various international organizations. Conference outputs included an action strategy for protected areas in the region, technical papers and a training workshop for field managers from 11 countries.

The conservation of endangered animal species focused on elephants, rhinoceroses, primates, cats and polar bears, whose status was reviewed in live UNEP/IUCN workshops which produced action plans. The improvement in managing the vicuña, a South American animal related to the llama, was examined in a workshop (Arica, Chile, March) attended by over 40 participants from all countries of South America where vicuña existed and Ecuador, which was planning to reintroduce it.

Plans to reintroduce the Przewalski horse into its native habitat in Central Asia were further developed. That horse, the original wild horse from which domesticated varieties derived, had ceased to exist in the wild in the late 1960s but a number of zoological gardens had successfully bred it. At a UNEP-supported expert consultation (Moscow, May), the directors of zoological gardens holding Przewalski horses agreed to provide animals for reintroduction. The experts' recommendations and an action plan were distributed to the Governments concerned.

The proceedings of the first (1983 International Biosphere Reserve Congress,<sup>(46)</sup> containing an overview of the state of the world's biosphere reserves and future perspectives, were published and distributed to Governments and international organizations. Based on the Congress's recommendations, an Action Plan was elaborated. A Biosphere Reserve Scientific Advisory Panel was established and met in September 1985 at Cancún.

On 23 May,<sup>(47)</sup> the UNEP Council urged States to set up or improve biosphere reserves and take part in the development of the world network of biosphere reserves, and invited the Executive Director to support and assist the implementation of the 1984 Biosphere Reserves Action Plan.<sup>(48)</sup>

UNEP continued to support international measures to conserve wild animals and plants and their habitats, such as the 1973 Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). The CITES secretariat (Lausanne, Switzerland), provided by UNEP, brought stricter control to international trade in threatened wildlife and wildlife products by stipulating that government permits be required for such trade. At the fifth meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the CITES Convention (Buenos Aires, Argentina, April/May), attended by 450 participants, 22 resolutions were adopted, including some on control of ivory trade and plant species.

In collaboration with IUCN, UNESCO and the International Waterfowl Research Bureau, UNEP continued to support the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance Especially as Waterfowl Habitat. The Convention Task Force met at The Hague in May and adopted conclusions on the Convention's implementation, subsequently conveyed to all contracting parties.

Convention on the conservation of migratory animals

As requested in 1984 by the Governing Council,<sup>(49)</sup> UNEP provided secretariat services for the Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals, and organized the first meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention (Bonn, 21-26 October).

On 24 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Council appealed to Governments and international organizations concerned to participate in the meeting and called on States not parties to the Convention to consider early adherence to it.

The meeting, attended by scientific experts and conservation officials from 63 countries and 33 organizations, revised the appendices to the Convention, established a Standing Committee and Scientific Council to supervise its implementation, and adopted financial rules and the first triennial budget of the secretariat. It gave impetus to trans-frontier co-operation in protecting migratory species and adopted procedures for regional agreements under the Convention. It also requested the UNEP Executive Director, with the approval of the Governing Council, to seek the Secretary-General's consent to establish a trust fund for the Convention, initially for three years. The Executive Director subsequently reported<sup>(40)</sup> that he had secured that consent and, as there was to be no 1986 Council session, he would establish the fund on an interim basis.

Genetic resources

With UNEP and FAO support, the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources continued to stimulate activities for the exploration and collection of crop plant genetic resources. In 1985 it undertook the collection of crop germplasm in Madagascar, Sri Lanka and Uganda to complement earlier collections. The material collected was deposited in various gene banks, including those of the global network housing the World Base Collection co-ordinated by the Board.

The FAO International Undertaking on Plant Genetic Resources was discussed at the first meeting of the FAO Commission on Plant Genetic Resources (Rome, March) in which UNEP participated, with the aim of improving the conservation and management of such resources. During 1985 FAO, with UNEP support, started pilot projects in Cameroon, Malaysia and Peru, to develop and test methodologies for in situ conservation of forest genetic resources within existing nature reserves and protected areas, and to produce management plans for different categories of protected areas where aspects of genetic resources conservation would be incorporated.

Other activities aimed to create data banks and conservation schemes for animal genetic resources in developing countries. Under a joint FAO/UNEP project, field work on conserving the Kenana breed of cattle in the Sudan started; co-operation with research centres in Ethiopia, the Gambia and Kenya on trypanotolerant breeds of cattle continued; plans for conservation schemes for Sahiwal breeds in Pakistan were prepared; studies on the collection and shipment of semen continued; and activities towards the establishment of regional data banks in developing regions were discussed at an expert consultation meeting.

Research activities of the UNEP-supported regional Microbiological Resources Centres in Brazil, Egypt, Guatemala, Kenya, Senegal and Thailand dealt with the environmental application of microbial resources in increasing legume protein production, soil fertility through biological nitrogen fixation, upgrading of coffee processing by-products, bio-conversion of cassava surplus and by-products into power alcohol, and the degradation of persistent, key environmental pollutants. Each Centre also organized training activities and provided fellowships for applied research.

UNEP continued to support the World Data Centre for Micro-organisms (Brisbane, Australia), established to promote access to information on culture collections and to produce specialized inventories of microbial genetic resources of environmental and economic value. It also organized the third design meeting of the International Microbial Strain Data Network Working Group (Helsinki, August), in association with the Seventh International Conference on Global Impacts of Applied Microbiology.

Photosynthesis and bioproductivity

In 1985, work continued on the UNEP-supported project on primary productivity and photosynthesis in natural ecosystems of the tropics in relation to environmental variables, established in 1983 in co-operation with the University of London. The project secured the support of regional centres in Brazil, China, Kenya, Mexico and Thailand, which applied new technologies to determine the photosynthesis potential of major ecosystems of the tropics.

The interim results of regional studies undertaken in India, Kenya, Venezuela and Yugoslavia were presented to an expert group on photosynthesis in relation to bioproductivity which met in March at UNEP headquarters. The meeting, attended by scientists from 10 countries, considered future research priorities, particularly in developing countries.

In co-operation with Tycooly Publishers, UNEP issued a comprehensive work on Photosynthesis in Relation to Plant Production in Terrestrial Environments and, in co-operation with Pergamon Press, Oxford, published a second, updated edition of Techniques in Photosynthesis and Bioproductivity.

Freshwater ecosystems

In 1985, UNEP concentrated on the preparation of a comprehensive water programme, management of international water systems, environmental training on water management and support for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980<sup>(50)</sup> (see p. 680).

As part of the programme on the environmental management of the common river system of the Zambezi,<sup>(51)</sup> the preparation of a plan for the sound management of that river system by the countries concerned-the Zambezi Action Plan (ZACPLAN)-started in 1985. In February, representatives of UNEP, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, WMO and IAEA attended an inter-agency consultative meeting at Geneva to discuss the programme's development. In April, with UNEP support, the first meeting of a working group of government experts on the Zambezi river system was held at Nairobi, attended by Botswana, Malawi, Mozambique, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Based on reports from those countries, UNEP prepared drafts of a diagnostic study on the state of the ecology and the environmental management of the river system and of ZACPLAN.

UNEP initiated a project on effluent monitoring and pollution control in the Lake Victoria basin, aimed at enabling the Lake Basin Development Authority to monitor water quality and other environmental conditions.

As a member of the International Scientific Council of the International Training Centre for Water Resources Management (CEFIGRE), UNEP attended its eighth session (Sophia Antipolis, France, April), which stressed the need to integrate environmental considerations in CEFIGRE training courses. During 1985, UNEP supported three such courses: on water pollution control, with 25 participants mainly from Africa (Sophia Antipolis, June); on water resources management to assist the basin countries in the preparation of ZACPLAN, with 15 participants from six Zambezi countries (Harare, Zimbabwe, October); and on rural water supply and sanitation, with 20 participants mainly from Asia (Bangkok, Thailand, November/December).

UNEP supported a training workshop on the chemistry of natural waters, organized by UNEP COM (Kishinev, USSR, October) and attended by 15 professionals from developing countries. An Interregional Seminar on Assessment and Evaluation of Multiple Objective Water Resources Projects (Budapest, October), organized by the Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and supported by UNEP and Hungary, was attended by 55 professionals from 25 countries and seven international organizations. The second meeting of the Working Group on Large-Scale Water Development Projects (Athens, Greece, December) provided UNEP with suggestions on how to prepare guidelines on environmentally sound management of water resources, to be used for training. A study on Large-Scale Water Transfers: Emerging Environmental and Social Experiences, prepared by the Working Group, was published and distributed to member States and professionals.

UNEP continued to support the objectives of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade. Two projects started in 1984 in co-operation with WHO progressed satisfactorily. Under the first (on drinking-water quality control), three pilot sites in Indonesia, Peru and Zambia were selected for surveillance activities, and programmes for the sites were developed. Two international workshops on hygienic criteria of drinking-water quality (Tashkent and Kiev, May) were attended by 28 professionals from 22 developing countries. Under the second project (on health hazards of waste-water use), a joint UNEP/WHO/UNDP/WORLD Bank review meeting on evaluating the health hazards of waste-water and excreta use (Engelberg, Switzerland, July) developed a model showing health risks associated with re-use and prepared a statement on health aspects of such use in agri- and aquaculture.

On 23 May,<sup>(52)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council requested the Executive Director to accord high priority to training in the areas of water, and to support for studies and action-oriented activities dealing with domestic waste-water management and environmental problems related to water supply.

Marine ecosystems

Protecting the marine environment

UNEP continued during 1985 to assess marine pollution problems. Much of that work was carried out through its regional seas programme (see below).

The Joint Group of Experts on the Scientific Aspects of Marine Pollution was the main inter-agency mechanism to review marine pollution problems. Through it, work continued on evaluating the hazards of harmful substances carried by ships. Reviews were completed on arsenic, selenium and mercury as marine pollutants, to be published by WHO. Similar reviews on organosilicons and carcinogenic substances were under way.

Methodologies for assessing land-sea boundary flux of pollutants were formulated by the working group concerned, and work was in progress on a report on air-sea interchange of pollutants as modified by atmospheric contaminants. A methodology and guidelines for impact assessment of pollutants from land-based sources on the marine environment were elaborated. The scientific rationale for an integrated global ocean monitoring programme was examined, and preparations started on a global assessment of the state of the marine environment.

Work on developing reference methods for marine pollution studies continued, with the co-operation of several agencies, and 16 reference method documents were issued. To ensure global comparability of marine pollution data, a number of standards, certified reference materials and intercomparison samples were prepared. Using these reference methods, intercalibration exercises on a regional, interregional and global basis were conducted for three of the major classes of pollutants. Publication of specialized directories and bibliographies continued in co-operation with FAO and other bodies.

In late 1985, UNEP completed the move of its Oceans and Coastal Areas Programme Activity Centre from Geneva to Nairobi.

The third meeting of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on the Protection of the Marine Environment against Pollution from Land-based Sources (Montreal, Canada, 11-19 April), attended by experts from 32 countries and six international organizations, finalized the Montreal Guidelines on that subject.<sup>(53)</sup> The Governing Council, on 24 May,<sup>(3)</sup> encouraged States and international organizations to take the Guidelines into account when developing agreements, and requested the Executive Director to distribute them to those concerned.

On 23 May,<sup>(54)</sup> the Council urged the Executive Director to continue to contribute to the global debate on the environmental implications of disposing radioactive and other hazardous wastes at sea, and urged him to strengthen interregional exchange of information and experience and to contribute to protecting the global marine environment. Noting progress made in adopting action plans and regional agreements to protect that environment, the Council called on him to complete the preparatory phase leading to the adoption of regional seas action plans and conventions where they had yet to be adopted, and to continue to assist States to implement those already adopted.

Shared natural resources and offshore mining

A December 1984 report of the Executive Director,<sup>(7)</sup> submitted in response to a 1982 General Assembly request,<sup>(8)</sup> described progress made in environmental co-operation concerning natural resources shared by two or more States, and in the use made of the conclusions of the 1981 study of the legal aspects concerning the environment related to offshore mining and drilling within the limits of national jurisdiction.<sup>(55)</sup>

On 24 May,<sup>(3)</sup> the Governing Council called on Governments to make use of the 1979 principles on natural resources shared by two or more States,<sup>(56)</sup> and the conclusions of the 1981 study, as guidelines in formulating conventions.

By decision 40/441 of 17 December, the General Assembly took note of a Secretariat note drawing attention to the Executive Director's report.

Regional seas programme

Since May 1985, UNEP's regional seas programme had been pursuing activities in 10 regions involving more than 120 coastal States, more than 30 global and regional organizations, and a network of some 250 national institutions. By year's end, action plans had been adopted in nine regions and regional conventions signed in seven; preparations for adopting a convention for the South Pacific region were at an advanced stage. UNEP continued to provide overall co-ordination for the programme and to serve as the secretariat for four action plans and three conventions.

Activities included:

Mediterranean. The Fourth Ordinary Meeting of the Contracting Parties to the Barcelona Convention (Genoa, Italy, September), attended by delegations from 16 Mediterranean States and from EEC, adopted a Declaration on the Second Mediterranean Decade, by which the parties reaffirmed their commitment to protecting the Mediterranean through the Mediterranean Action Plan. They also agreed on 10 priority targets to be achieved during the Decade, to adopt measures to ensure that the quality of bathing waters conformed with the proposed WHO/UNEP environmental quality criteria on faecal coliforms, and accepted the FAO/UNEP recommendations on mercury in seafood.

Kuwait region UNEP co-ordinated the implementation of IAEA assistance to projects of the Regional Organization for the Protection of the Marine Environment, and advised on environmental matters. The organization's Council held its fourth meeting (Kuwait, April) and approved four new projects,

Caribbean. The fifth ratification of the 1983 Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region and its Protocol concerning Co-operation in Combating Oil Spills<sup>(46)</sup> was received in 1985. The Third Intergovernmental Meeting on the Action Plan for the Caribbean Environment Programme (Cancún, April) approved eight projects,

West and Central Africa. The parties to the Convention for Co-operation in the Protection and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the West and Central African Region had their first meeting (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, April), in which they decided to establish at Abidjan a regional co-ordination unit for the Convention and set priorities for project implementation. Highest priority was given to ongoing projects on contingency planning for pollution emergencies and marine pollution research and monitoring, in co-operation with FAO, IAEA, IMO, IOC, UNESCO and WHO.

East Africa. A Conference of Plenipotentiaries (Nairobi, June) adopted a Regional Convention for the Protection, Management and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment, an Action Plan, a Protocol concerning Protected Areas and Wild Fauna and Flora, and a Protocol concerning Co-operation in Combating Marine Pollution in Cases of Emergency. The Protocols and the Convention were signed by France, Madagascar, Seychelles and Somalia.

East Asian seas. The fourth meeting of the Co-ordinating Body on the Seas of East Asia (Manila, Philippines, April) decided to continue all seven ongoing projects, financed by the East Asian Seas Trust Fund and by UNEP.

Red Sea and Gulf of Aden. In May, Saudi Arabia became the fourth State to ratify the 1982 Regional Convention for the Conservation of the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden Environment and the Protocol concerning Regional Co-operation in Combating Pollution by Oil and Other Harmful Substances in Cases of Emergency.<sup>(57)</sup> The Convention and attached Protocol entered into force in July 1985.

South Pacific. UNEP continued its support to the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme. An expert meeting (November) discussed a draft convention on protecting the region's natural resources and environment and two protocols. A seminar (Suva, Fiji, October) was held to facilitate negotiations on those instruments.

South-east Pacific. The Second Intergovernmental Meeting on the Action Plan for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the South-east Pacific (Galapagos, Ecuador, August) approved support to the programme for research on and monitoring of marine pollution from domestic, agricultural, mining and industrial sources. The programme, involving 15 institutions from all live participating States, was largely supported by UNEP.

South Asian seas. Work on four of the five national reports on environmental problems in the region was completed; the reports would be used for drafting a regional action plan. A report on the management and conservation of renewable marine resources in the region was produced jointly with IUCN.

Environmental aspects of political, economic and other issues

Arms race and the environment

Alarmed by the possible environmental dangers stemming from arms research, production and stockpiling—ranging from risk of accidents to a post-war nuclear winter—UNEP continued to collaborate with the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI) in publishing and distributing scientific literature on the subject. A 1985 book, Explosive Remnants of War: Mitigating the Environmental Effects, examined the problem of unexploded mines and munitions, especially acute in developing countries, where most wars had been fought since 1945.

UNEP and SIPRI jointly organized the second meeting of the Advisory Group on the Arms Race and the Environment (Geneva, September 1985), which examined ongoing projects and made recommendations for action, and a symposium on global resources and international conflict (Stockholm, Sweden, October).

The climatic consequences of a nuclear war—the so-called nuclear winter—were again considered by the General Assembly in 1985 (see p. 39).

Material remnants of war

In response to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(58)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1985 a report on the problem of remnants of war.<sup>(59)</sup> He had been asked to collect information on expertise and available equipment, so as to evaluate the needs of developing countries affected and assist them in detecting and clearing war remnants. Countries responsible for such remnants had been requested to intensify bilateral consultations to solve the problem.

By 13 August 1985, 13 States had replied to his request for information: Belgium, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Chile, Finland, Mexico, Netherlands, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, South Africa, Tuvalu.

Of those, one said that the matter was not within UNEP's competence; one suggested that bilateral negotiations between the countries concerned should be encouraged; another stated that measures should be taken to alleviate the problem, and responsibility placed on the countries that had planted the instruments of war. One country did not have current problems, but was concerned about future difficulties resulting from the Gulf war and would appreciate assistance in that regard, one was prepared to consider providing experts to developing countries to remove remnants of war. One country had no remnants as outlined by the Assembly in 1984; another, never having had any instrument of war in its territory, was not in a position to provide information. One did not have equipment or expertise within government agencies. Several countries had no comments.

The Secretary-General concluded that, since most Member States had not provided information on available equipment and expertise, or on bilateral negotiations undertaken to solve the problem, he was unable to evaluate the needs of the developing countries affected so as to assist them in detecting and clearing war remnants.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/197 by recorded vote.

Remnants of war

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3435(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 35/71 of 5 December 1980, 36/188 of 17 December 1981, 37/215 of 20 December 1982, 38/162 of 19 December 1983 and 39/167 of 17 December 1984 concerning the problem of remnants of war,

Recalling also decisions 80(IV) of 9 April 1976, 101(V) of 25 May 1977, 9/5 of 25 May 1981 and 10/8 of 28 May 1982 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme,

Recalling further resolution 32 adopted by the Fifth Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Colombo from 16 to 19 August 1976, and resolution 26/11-P adopted by the Eleventh Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers, held at Islamabad from 17 to 22 May 1980,

Convinced that the responsibility for the removal of the remnants of war should be borne by the countries that planted them,

Recognizing that the presence of the material remnants of war, including mines, in the territories of developing countries seriously impedes their development efforts and causes loss of life and property,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the problem of remnants of war;
2. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Executive Director of the United Nations Environment Programme, to continue his efforts with the countries responsible for planting the mines and the affected developing countries in order to ensure the implementation of the relevant resolutions;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a detailed and comprehensive report on the implementation of the present resolution.

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

In the Second Committee, Italy requested the recorded vote. In explanation of vote, the United Kingdom, speaking also on behalf of the Federal Republic of Germany and Italy, said they had abstained because of reservations also expressed on a similar draft in 1984,<sup>(60)</sup> the problem being a matter for bilateral negotiations, and the obligations referred to in the draft had no basis in international law. The United States, while not unsympathetic to the problems caused by war remnants, also thought that their removal could be best dealt with bilaterally. Sweden reiterated the reasons it gave in 1984, and stated that practical results could best be achieved by setting aside the issue of international responsibility and compensation.

The USSR expressed its support for the demands of developing countries suffering from material remnants of what it said were imperialist and colonialist wars. India felt that the text applied only to actions resulting from such wars. Iran said that it understood that the removal of remnants of war applied only to those developed countries which had planted them. Chad said it had supported the text even if skeptical about the intentions of its principal sponsor, the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, which it said was stockpiling a vast quantity of weapons on Chadian territory—a charge denied by the Jamahiriya. Morocco said that the draft sought to promote international co-operation in solving a problem with complex legal implications.

Environmental aspects of apartheid

In South Africa black miners faced harsh working conditions: in some gold mines temperatures were often 50° C (120° F), working shifts lasted 10 hours and the noise produced by drilling and blasting operations was intolerably high. Occupational diseases such as infections of the lung were widespread. Accident rates were very high. Most black miners were compelled to live in barrack-facilities, each holding as many as 8,000. The un-style hostels, overcrowded and with minimal favourable environmental conditions of workers had serious adverse social, medical and psychological effects on them and their families. High incidence of tuberculosis also affected the black population at large, due to the general poverty of blacks, the insanitary conditions in which they were obliged to live, especially in the black townships, widespread malnutrition and the inadequacy of the health care available to almost all of them, especially those living in the so-called homelands.

This information was contained in a report of the Executive Director on the environmental impacts of apartheid.<sup>(61)</sup> It concluded that the agenda for future action in improving the environmental working conditions for blacks was very long. An effective trade union for them could have immense possibilities for bettering the conditions of millions of black workers and their dependants.

On 23 May,<sup>(62)</sup> the UNEP Council reaffirmed its solidarity with the victims of apartheid and its condemnation of that system, and requested the Executive Director to continue monitoring the environmental impacts of apartheid in South Africa and to report on the issue in 1987.

Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal project

On 23 May,<sup>(63)</sup> the Governing Council stated its position concerning the question of Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea (see p. 351).

Environment and development

Convinced of the close link between development and the environment, UNEP continued providing guidance on including environmental considerations in development decision-making.

A UNEP project carried out within the framework of the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters)<sup>(64)</sup> dealt with the deforestation of the Himalayan foothills. The project's ongoing and past work was assessed at a meeting (New Delhi, 29 April-1 May) convened by UNEP and India, attended by experts from Bhutan, India and Nepal.

Jointly with Australia, the Commonwealth Secretariat and the East-West Centre, UNEP launched a programme to apply economic analysis to dryland degradation and rehabilitation. Aimed at preparing technical guidelines, the programme was based on analyses of case-studies from Australia and developing countries in Africa, Asia and Latin America.

IUCN and UNEP continued an experiment to integrate conservation objectives into four major development projects in Costa Rica, Fiji, Pakistan and Zimbabwe.

UNEP held consultations with the Syrian Arab Republic's Planning Office on integrating environmental considerations into development planning, and began collaboration with Cyprus to improve its environmental impact assessment.

A report on integrated area development in the humid tropics, prepared by UNEP, the Organization of American States and Peru, contained an environmental assessment of the Central Selva of Peru, and recommendations for environmentally sound development from which a regional environmental management plan was expected to evolve.

ECLAC and UNEP prepared reports on the integration of environmental considerations into Latin American development planning processes. They also co-operated with Argentina in convening a regional seminar on the subject (Buenos Aires, June).

Under UNEP-World Bank auspices, the third expert group meeting on environmental accounting and its use in development policy and planning (Paris, 29 September-2 October) formulated guidelines on presenting environmental issues in national economic analyses. The sixth meeting of the Committee of International Development Institutions on the Environment (Washington, DC., June) reviewed progress made in implementing the Declaration of Environmental Policies and Procedures relating to Economic Development.

On 24 May,<sup>(65)</sup> the Governing Council requested the Executive Director to continue reviewing, in co-operation with the Declaration's signatories, progress achieved in response to the Declaration, and called on the signatories to accord special consideration to major environmental problems within developing countries' development needs.

Among the Executive Director's recommendations on the environment in the dialogue between and among developed and developing countries, annexed to the Council's decision on his 1984 state-of-the-environment report (see p. 792), were a number of environmental issues suggested for such consultations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

During the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs), several conclusions and recommendations were made by UNCTAD's Intergovernmental Group on LDCs regarding environmental considerations in those countries (see p. 433). Those findings were endorsed by the General Assembly when it adopted resolution 40/205.

Environment and energy

Throughout 1985, UNEP continued to pursue a number of activities aimed at reducing the impact on the environment of the production of energy (see p. 692).

Environment and industry

UNEP's catalytic action in the crucial area of the environment and industry included organizing meetings and disseminating technical information. The first meeting of the UNEP Environmental Consultative Committee on the Iron and Steel Industry (Geneva, 28 and 29 March) discussed environmental control for the industry and the retrofitting of pollution abatement facilities for older plants, newly developed environmental technology, solid waste disposal, and the development of legal and regulatory measures. A UNEP-supported African regional meeting (Abidjan, 23-26 July) called on industry in the developed countries to assist African countries to solve their industry-related environment problems. A conference on industry and the environment (Ankara, 24 and 25 October), organized by UNEP and the Environmental Problems Foundation of Turkey and attended by some 180 participants, examined industrial pollution, the "polluter pays" principle, foreign investment and the environment, and Government/industry consultations in choosing environmental management strategies. An International Symposium on Clean Technologies, organized by UNEP and the Federal Republic of Germany (Karlsruhe, 7-18 October), was attended by some 60 participants (mainly from developing countries) and included presentations on clean technologies and field visits to industrial plants.

UNEP continued to disseminate information on the impact of industry and transportation on the environment. It published 17 issues in the various language versions of the quarterly Industry and Environment, each focusing on a specific industrial topic. Seven other specialized publications were issued during the year. At UNEP's request, the International Petroleum Industry Environmental Conservation Association prepared a draft technical review on environmental management of petroleum refineries and terminals, which was widely circulated.

Environment and human settlements

With environmental conditions in many urban areas deteriorating, UNEP continued to work to combat this situation with various United Nations agencies, especially UNCHS, including support for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (see p. 827).

Having completed environmental guidelines for human settlements planning, UNEP and UNCHS launched a project to apply the guidelines in four cities in Africa, Asia and Latin America, aimed at establishing institutional mechanisms by which environmental considerations would be routinely included in human settlements management. Under a joint UNEP/WHO project on environmental criteria for housing and urban planning, guidelines for improving indoor air quality were completed, and a kit was produced to guide communities in controlling insects and rodents. Assistance was provided to the Kenyan Government in a project to rehabilitate the Lamu town sea wall, affected by coastal erosion.

In collaboration with UNEPCOM and ESCWA, UNEP organized a training course (Moscow and Tbilisi, USSR, November) for 18 technicians from Arab-speaking countries on environmental aspects of human settlements planning and waste management.

Environmental education and training

The main activities under the UNEP/UNESCO International Environmental Education Programme (IEEP) included preparing environmental education materials, and pilot projects on integrating environmental education into general education and into university, technical, vocational and adult education.

A UNEP-sponsored regional seminar on university and the environment in Latin America and the Caribbean (Bogotá, Colombia, October) adopted an action plan to incorporate the environmental dimension into university education in the region. In December this action was duplicated for the Arab States under an IEEP project in Qatar. Pursuant to these seminars and the first African Ministerial Conference on the Environment (see p. 793), regional programmes of action in environmental education and training, developed with UNEP assistance, were adopted by Governments in the African, Asia and the Pacific, Latin American and Arab regions.

Under UNEP auspices, experts met in Bangkok in November to develop and adopt an action programme for environmental education and training.

In the area of training, Strategem-1, a computer-based resource management game, was designed by the International Network of Resource Information Centres, with UNEP funds. Its purpose was to help people to understand the concept of sustainable development. The players assumed the role of ministers in a hypothetical country and had to manage its resources over 50 years. Success depended on the players' ability to balance sectors such as energy, agriculture, industry, environmental protection and foreign exchange, while developing human resources and improving living standards. The game was played at workshops in Nairobi and Budapest, used in a training course for USAID programme managers, and adopted in some 20 teaching and research centres around the world.

A UNEP/IUCN International Training Workshop on Youth and the Environment (Moscow, September), attended by youth leaders from most African countries, developed a conservation agenda for environmental activities in the region and a draft manual for training youth leaders.

A UNEP/ECA workshop aimed at introducing environmental components into the training programme of 11 ECA-sponsored institutions (Abidjan, November) provided training to 20 participants and produced a core curriculum in environmental training for those institutions. Twenty trainers received training under a UNEP/ILO project to incorporate environmental components in the training activities of ILO-sponsored institutions; by the end of 1985, 100 management trainers had been trained and training manuals had been produced under a UNEP/ILO project to introduce environmental components in ILO management development programmes. The ninth international graduate course on resource management and environmental impact assessment in developing countries (Dresden, October 1985-July 1986), organized by UNEP, UNESCO and the German Democratic Republic, had involved 125 participants from 40 developing countries by the end of 1985.

On 23 May, the Governing Council adopted three decisions on education and training. By the first<sup>(66)</sup> it requested the Executive Director to consider convening in 1987 an international meeting on environmental education and training, in co-operation with UNESCO and the USSR, to appraise the achievements in this area in the preceding decade and to make proposals for the future.

By the second,<sup>(67)</sup> the Council requested the Executive Director, in co-operation with international organizations, to accord priority in 1986-1987 to training in Africa on: water management, with particular reference to rural areas; domestic waste-water management and recycling of waste water for agriculture; energy management, with emphasis on efficiency of energy utilization; and soil conservation. The Executive Director was also requested to accelerate the establishment of subregional African centres of excellence for environmental education and training, and to take into account the recommendations of the African environmental conference (see p. 793) in formulating other 1986-1987 activities for Africa.

The third decision<sup>(68)</sup> dealt with the Latin American and Caribbean Environmental Training Network (see p. 793).

Human settlements

In a world where 1 billion people lacked adequate shelter, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (UNCHS), known also as Habitat, continued in 1985 to assist developing countries in all aspects of their human settlements activities by providing technical co-operation, research and development (including training) and information dissemination.

As lead agency in the United Nations system for co-ordinating activities for the 1987 International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH), UNCHS continued to play a key role in its preparations. Those preparations were considered by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Settlements. The Assembly, in resolution 40/203, requested countries that had not done so to formulate national plans of action for IYSH and to designate IYSH projects for the improvement of human settlements, and appealed for financial contributions to the programme for the Year. The Commission, which held its eighth session at Kingston, Jamaica (29 April-10 May), approved various measures with regard to IYSH, adopted 24 resolutions and two decisions, and accepted Turkey's invitation to hold its 1986 session at Istanbul. Four resolutions requiring action by the Assembly pertained to IYSH, the Commission's biennial cycle of sessions, a housing programme for the Palestinian population in the occupied Palestinian territories (see p. 326), and the tenth anniversary of Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.

By resolution 40/202 A, the General Assembly called on all Governments to accord priority in their development programmes to human settlements activities, urged the international community to consider more flexible strategies in lending for human settlements programmes, and decided to designate the first Monday of October of every year as World Habitat Day. It also welcomed the Commission's decision to adopt a biennial cycle for its sessions (resolution 40/202 B), and requested the Secretary-General to ensure UNCHS participation in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and its machinery (resolution 40/202 C).

Topics related to this chapter. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel-living conditions of the Palestinians; settlements policy; Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal project. Development and international economic and social policy:

International Development Strategy. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: disaster preparedness and prevention. Regional economic and social activities: Asia and the Pacific-human settlements; Africa-human settlements. Refugees.

Programme and finances of UNCHS

Programme policy

The report of the Commission on Human Settlements on its 1985 session<sup>(1)</sup> was considered by both the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. On 25 July, the Council took note of the report by decision 1985/173.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/202 A without vote.

Report of the Commission on Human Settlements
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolutions 32/162 of 19 December 1977 on institutional arrangements for international co-operation in the field of human settlements and 34/116 of 14 December 1979 on the strengthening of human settlements activities,

Conscious of the very substantial gap between the resources available through voluntary contributions to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) and the needs of developing countries requesting assistance from the Centre,

Having considered the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its eighth session,

1. Takes note of the report of the Commission on Human Settlements on the work of its eighth session;
2. Takes note with appreciation of the progress which the Commission and its secretariat, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat), have continued to make in providing guidance and assistance to

Governments in their efforts to provide adequate shelter and services to their people, particularly the poor and disadvantaged;

3. Calls upon all Governments to accord the requisite priority in their development and development assistance programmes to human settlements activities as a proved means of promoting economic and social development, as well as to the fair distribution of the benefits of such development to all segments of the population;

4. Takes note of Commission on Human Settlements resolution 8/12 of 8 May 1985 and, in that context, urges the international community, including multilateral institutions and agencies, to consider, as appropriate, more flexible strategies in lending for human settlements projects and programmes;

5. Commends those Governments and others that have made voluntary financial contributions to the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, particularly those that have done so on a regular basis, and appeals to those that have not contributed to do so at the earliest opportunity;

6. Decides, in accordance with Commission on Human Settlements resolution 8/4 of 8 May 1985, to designate the first Monday of October of every year as "World Habitat Day".

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.7) without vote (parts A, B and C together), 25 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.43), based on informal consultations on drafts by Colombia, Gambia, India, Jamaica, Kenya, Lesotho, Netherlands, Panama, Philippines, Sri Lanka and Zambia (A/C.2/40/L.24) and by Gambia, Jamaica, Kenya, Netherlands and Sri Lanka (A/C.2/40/L.25); agenda item 84 (g).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 22, 24, 29, 30, 43; plenary 119.

Explaining its position, the USSR said that a World Habitat Day was unjustified, since such measures often turned into expensive official ceremonies which diverted limited resources away from the principal United Nations activities. The United Kingdom was concerned by the proliferation of special days, and understood that participation in the Day would be voluntary and that the Secretary-General would be responsible for all connected expenses. Norway, speaking on behalf of the Nordic countries, noted that 30 days of the year were given to celebrating various causes, and said that it would be advisable to avoid multiplying such celebrations because such a practice might run counter to the desired goal. Canada associated itself with Norway's comments.

Human settlements planning and management

The UNCHS Executive Director submitted to the 1985 Commission session a report on planning and management of human settlements, with emphasis on small and intermediate towns and local growth points.<sup>(2)</sup> The report was prepared in response to a 1983 decision,<sup>(3)</sup> by which the Commission had designated the subject as a special theme for discussion in 1985.

Focusing on recommendations for national action relating to small and intermediate centres, the report said that such centres had potential for helping developing countries meet their goals for social and economic improvements. Two functions of the centres were identified: to provide social and technical services to the majority of the population; and (applicable only to certain centres) to contribute to the national strategy for economic diversification and growth. International organizations could help strengthen these centres in developing countries, especially in local resource development and training of urban planners and managers.

On 8 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission endorsed the report and urged Governments to recognize the locational implications of economic development and trends, to promote the interests of small and intermediate settlements, and to recognize that comprehensive planning and management of intermediate settlements was required, since it could contribute to regional economic expansion and to employment. Governments were also urged to integrate local government into local development programmes and to encourage collaboration between all economic sectors, since no one sector had the resources necessary to achieve its development goals alone. Aid agencies were urged to give attention, in their programmes for small and intermediate settlements, to support for low-income groups in the form of improved housing and living facilities. The Commission requested countries, in their projects and strategies for IYSH (see p. 827), to expand the role of small and intermediate settlements to meet the Year's objectives, and requested the Executive Director to give special attention to those settlements in future UNCHS work programmes.

On 10 May,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commission invited the Executive Director to form a working group of secretariat and Commission members to develop guidelines for eliciting more substantive discussions on special themes, and requested that the guidelines be applied experimentally, beginning at the 1986 Commission session.

Proposed financial and advisory institution for Asia and the Pacific

Further progress was made in 1985 towards setting up a financial and advisory institution for human settlements in Asia and the Pacific, an idea first considered by the Commission in 1981.<sup>(6)</sup> On 8 May,<sup>(7)</sup> the Commission requested the UNCHS Executive Director to circulate the proposal on the modalities for setting up the institution, submitted by a working group in 1984,<sup>(8)</sup> to the countries of the region and other interested countries and institutions, to consult with them and to report to the Commission in 1986.

Financing

Concern over the financial resources available for human settlements activities was expressed by the Commission on Human Settlements several times in 1985. On 8 May,<sup>(9)</sup> it called on the international community, particularly multilateral financial institutions, to be more flexible in lending for human settlements projects and to develop more creative financing strategies, particularly regarding secondary mortgage financing, urging them to utilize existing regional and national financial institutions to channel resources for housing and human settlements development. It also urged multilateral and bilateral agencies to restructure their technical assistance, in order to give more emphasis to providing infrastructure, equipment and training.

Other Commission actions of the same date, on various aspects of human settlements financing, dealt with mobilizing resources for the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (see below) and IYSH (see p. 827); payment of extrabudgetary resources for timely completion of UNCHS's 1986-1987 work programme and the 1984-1989 medium-term plan (see p. 827); and a proposed financial and advisory institution for human settlements in Asia and the Pacific (see p. 823).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/202 A, urged the international community, including multilateral institutions and agencies, to consider more flexible strategies in lending for human settlements projects and programmes.

In resolution 40/203, it again appealed to Governments that had not announced a voluntary contribution to IYSH, especially those of developed countries, as well as to international financial institutions and other organizations, to provide financial and other support to the programme for the Year.

Extrabudgetary resources

The UNCHS Executive Director, in a February 1985 report,<sup>(10)</sup> described the use of extrabudgetary resources by the Centre during 1984-1985. These resources came from four sources: the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation (see below); programme support income from the execution of projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and trust funds ($3,672,000); a subvention from the World Food Programme (WFP) ($194,000); and programme support from the Fund of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) ($66,800), for a total of $3,932,800.

During 1984-1985, UNCHS expected project delivery amounting to $27,183,000, broken down as projects financed by UNDP ($22,400,000), the UNEP Fund ($83,000) and other sources ($4,700,000). Projects financed by other sources were funded under various arrangements: trust-fund agreements under which technical co-operation projects were financed by recipient Governments or through agreements with donor agencies such as the World Bank; funding from various Governments for specific training programmes; contributions from Governments, agencies and foundations for specific projects; and associate-expert arrangements, with Governments providing experts at their cost. In 1984, 33 associate experts (from Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland) were working on technical co-operation projects; a similar number was expected in 1985.

UNCHS expected to earn $3,672,000 from the projects, to be used to support them; a similar income was expected in 1986-1987.

UN Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation

The declining real resources of the United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation, impeding the launching of new programmes and projects and preventing the implementation of approved ones, was addressed by the Commission on Human Settlements in 1985. On 8 May,<sup>(11)</sup> it requested the UNCHS Executive Director to seek additional financing through counter-part contributions and trust and special funds, and to intensify co-operation with UNDP, thereby ensuring more financing from it. The Commission recommended that he make an inventory of potential resources available from multilateral organizations and bilateral financial sources, and create an information system relating to them. He was also authorized to offer alternatives to Governments, such as additional contributions, so that they used national currency and inputs in kind in executing priority projects. Governments were urged to strengthen international co-operative machinery in which use was made of such currency and inputs, to try to gear it to human settlements projects, to promote the allocation of financial resources to those projects, and to try to ensure that their technical co-operation projects for developing countries included human settlements components. States, particularly developed ones, were requested to increase and deliver promptly their voluntary contributions to the Foundation.

On the same day,<sup>(12)</sup> the Commission decided that, in addition to the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see p. 463), there would be a pledging meeting for voluntary contributions to the Foundation on the second day in plenary of all future Commission sessions.

Also on 8 May,<sup>(13)</sup> the Commission commended the Executive Director for his good financial management in utilizing the Foundation's limited resources. It approved the proposed allocation of funds for programme implementation, programme support, projects and reserve purposes for 1986-1987,<sup>(14)</sup> and the proposed utilization of resources for IYSH-related activities (see below).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 40/202 A, the General Assembly commended Governments and others that had contributed to the Foundation, particularly those that had done so regularly, and appealed to those that had not contributed to do so at the earliest opportunity.

Accounts

The audited financial statements of the Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation<sup>(15)</sup> showed a combined excess of expenditure over income for 1984-1985 amounting to $1,127,718. However, a saving from liquidation of previous financial period unliquidated obligations of $491,310 was realized as at 31 December 1985. The Foundation had a combined unencumbered fund balance of $8,529,340 available for existing and future commitments. The combined total income of $8,016,470 included contributions to the Foundation and IYSH. Expenditures for 1984-1985 totalled $7,829,813; of that amount, $3,422,962 related to programme and programme support activities and $4,406,851 to project activities of the Foundation and IYSH.

During 1984-1985, pledges by Governments for the Foundation and IYSH amounted to $6,487,220; collections and adjustments of $5,705,639 were made, of which $879,438 was for the previous period and $5,000 against future years' pledges. Current and previous years' pledged contributions in respect of the Foundation and IYSH in the amount of $1,211,950 and $796,076, respectively, remained unpaid as at 31 December 1985; unpaid pledged contributions for future years amounted to $379,220 and $717,640 respectively.

Contributions

In 1985, nearly $3 million in contributions for the Foundation was received from 35 countries; pledges for future years amounted to $387,220.

Human settlements activities

UNCHS (Habitat)

Activities of UNCHS

The 1984-1985 work programme of UNCHS was based on eight subprogrammes: policies and strategies, settlements planning, shelter and community services, the indigenous construction sector, low-cost infrastructure, land, mobilization of finance, and institutions and management.<sup>(1)</sup>

Under the first subprogramme, in 1985 the most important UNCHS undertaking was the preparation of the Global Report on Human Settlements, which reviewed the conditions of settlements throughout the world and outlined priority actions for Governments. In addition to this general reference work, policy statements were produced on women in human settlements and on youth in human settlements. UNCHS also prepared its regular biennial report on financial assistance to and among developing countries, and a theme paper on the role of small and intermediate centres in national development (see p. 823). Research continued on resource allocation for human settlements investment in national plans.

As part of settlements planning, a report was prepared on regional planning guidelines, based on case-studies in developing countries. In the area of environmental planning, a training course was held in Moscow in conjunction with UNEP and the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia. Preparations were made for the test application in four cities of developing countries of environmental guidelines developed by UNCHS and UNEP. Work continued on the review of planning methods supported by microcomputers.

The execution of demonstration projects on the upgrading of slums and squatter settlements was a high priority under shelter and community services. In 1985, a demonstration project was in progress at Colombo, Sri Lanka, and for 1986-1987 a new project had been identified at Bangkok, Thailand. Community participation training with the support of the Danish International Development Agency was carried out in Bolivia, Sri Lanka and Zambia, and training materials were widely distributed. The Centre also carried out activities for IYSH (see p. 827).

Regarding the indigenous construction sector, UNCHS produced documentation on building codes, and began establishing a network of agencies involved in building-technology research. Various publications were in hand on building materials technologies and on expanded production of those materials through small-scale processes. Attention was also given to increasing the efficiency of the private construction sector—particularly its informal element.

Concerning low-cost infrastructure, publications were issued on energy-efficient building design and on efficient energy use in producing building materials. Extensive work was in hand on replacing conventional energy sources by new and renewable sources in the operation of human settlements. With regard to sanitation, a design manual for shallow small-bore sewerage systems was being prepared, drawing on experience in Brazil and Pakistan. On transportation, a publication was prepared on simple non-motorized vehicles for developing countries and work started on a publication about simple motorized vehicles.

These studies were undertaken in collaboration with the International Labour Organisation.

With regard to land, a report on land-assembly methods was completed. Under the subprogramme on mobilization of finance, a publication on informal-sector activities in low-income settlements and an audio-visual presentation on financial institutions were produced.

As part of the subprogramme on institutions, and management, the training activities of UNCHS throughout 1984-1985 were very successful. The Centre achieved a 100 per cent performance for the 142 programmed outputs and was able to carry out other activities as well. Nine courses and workshops were held, and 187 fellowships were awarded. In addition, the Centre conducted a system-wide exercise to promote co-operation in human settlements training. UNCHS also organized a global meeting of aid agencies, scheduled for June 1986, to agree on human settlements training support in developing countries, based on guidelines given by the Commission on Human Settlements to member Governments. In the area of management, a report was issued on national institutional arrangements for human settlements and work began on a study of such arrangements for large cities, as an input to the May 1986 Conference on Population and the Urban Future (Barcelona, Spain), co-sponsored by UNCHS and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities.

UNCHS information activities included the production of a variety of monographs, information documents, posters, and audio-visual presentations. Three issues of Habitat News were published in 1985, including an index of the newsletter (1979-1983) and special inserts on the 1985 Conference to review the achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see p. 937).

UNCHS continued its pioneering work in the application of microcomputers to the planning and management of human settlements. It developed the Urban Data Management Software (UDMS), a package designed as a training and demonstration tool to show the potential for microcomputer-based data management in the work of urban and regional planning agencies. UDMS was installed in a number of developed and developing countries.

A second package, the Housing Finance Software (HFS), was developed to assist small housing-development and loan agencies in financial management and reporting. Following a successful installation in Seychelles, UNCHS started worldwide distribution of HFS. By the end of 1985, the software had been provided to 12 governmental, parastatal and non-profit housing-development and loan institutions.

New efforts were made to investigate available software relevant to human settlement planning and management. A network of users was initiated through the publication of a directory, which at the end of 1985 included over 300 entries.

Work continued on a number of information systems projects. A comprehensive directory of organizations working in human settlements was under way, produced in co-operation with an information centre of the Federal Republic of Germany. A trilingual thesaurus on human settlements neared completion. Two other publications were produced with the assistance of the Swedish Institute of Building Documentation. HABIRES, the data base on ongoing research projects, was also nearing completion. In September 1985, a two-week training course on the handling of human settlements documentation was held at UNCHS headquarters at Nairobi, Kenya, in collaboration with the French Government. It was attended by 10 documentalists and librarians from French- and English-speaking Africa.

The demand for technical advisory services increased significantly. Resources available fell far short of demand, even though these services were limited to only a few specific subjects and were provided for a maximum of four weeks per country. Of particular interest were the advisory services related to microcomputer applications to human settlements planning and management: 25 missions were carried out, resulting in 19 formal mission reports and 13 draft project documents prepared for Governments.

Technical co-operation

During 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> the Centre had under execution 151 technical co-operation projects in 77 countries—51 in least developed countries (LDCs). Of the total, 88 were financed by UNDP, representing approximately 70 per cent of the funds budgeted for technical co-operation during the year by UNCHS.

A total of 16 projects were also supplemented by trust-fund arrangements. The United Nations Habitat and Human Settlements Foundation funded 43 small-scale projects, designed to provide assistance in preparing project documents for submission to UNDP, donor Governments and donor agencies.

Regular programme funds were used for special advisory services and training, with emphasis on supporting human settlements activities in LDCs. In 1985, 51 missions were fielded. Some of the special advisory missions resulted in project documents for funds-in-trust financing. Special advisory missions were provided in data management, building materials and low-cost construction technologies, human settlements finance and the rehabilitation of existing housing stock.

Resources were provided under UNDP sectoral support to UNCHS for identifying national and technical co-operation needs in human settlements and for formulating project documents and proposals for financing by UNDP and other sources.

UNCHS continued its co-operation with other agencies. The WFP/UNCHS co-ordinator assisted in appraisal and project development missions. Collaboration with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued through the assistance of a UNHCR/UNCHS human settlements officer in project development in refugee settlements.

In addition, UNCHS had, in response to requests from developing countries, prepared 99 projects which were awaiting funding for implementation in 58 countries.<sup>(3)</sup> The overall budget for these projects was $66,709,686, with a first-year budget of $17,141,122. Each had been formulated in close co-operation with the Governments concerned and with UNDP.

Programme and budget for 1986-1987

On 8 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission on Human Settlements urged Governments to ensure that extrabudgetary resources were made available to UNCHS for timely completion of its 1986-1987 work programme and the 1984-1989 medium-term plan, and approved the outputs and activities proposed in the draft work programme for 1986-1987. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director, in implementing the programme, to accord a relatively higher priority to: land policies and practices; development of a local construction industry and appropriate technology; low-cost infrastructure, with special emphasis on sanitation; planning and management of a rational settlements pattern, with appropriate emphasis on small and intermediate centres; and development of alternative financial modules or systems that could reduce dependence on government budgetary allocations or borrowing.

Co-operation with NGOs

On 8 May,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commission recognized the contribution which non-governmental organizations (NGOs) such as the Habitat International Council could make to the promotion of human settlements development and expressed satisfaction with the efforts made to ensure co-operation between UNCHS and NGOs. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director to continue and extend his co-operation with NGOs, in particular in four areas: development and implementation of the UNCHS work programme; technical co-operation; training, and the collection and dissemination of information; and IYSH, including implementation of the information policy for it.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987)

During 1985, UNCHS continued preparing for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, having been designated by the General Assembly in 1982 as the lead agency for co-ordinating the programmes and activities for the Year.<sup>(6)</sup> It sponsored the holding of three IYSH subregional meetings: for southern African countries (Lusaka, Zambia, 25-29 March); for South Pacific countries (Lae, Papua New Guinea, 14-21 June); and for Asian countries (New Delhi, India, 10-14 December).

The Centre continued to produce and distribute IYSH information material, such as technical reports, posters and brochures. It started a series of monographs on human settlements projects and put out three issues of IYSH Bulletin, a new periodical highlighting national activities.

In a January 1985 report to the Commission on Human Settlements,<sup>(7)</sup> the Executive Director of UNCHS described its preparatory activities since the 1984 Commission session, and presented a set of future actions, pointing out that action had been taken on all activities approved by the Commission for 1984-1985.

As of 31 January 1985, pledges of voluntary contributions for the Year's programme totalling $2.3 million had been made by 25 developing and four developed countries. However, an additional $2 million was required to avoid curtailment of activities.

A total of 115 IYSH national focal points had been designated in 92 developing and 23 developed countries. India, Kenya, Mexico, the Netherlands, Nigeria, the Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda and the United Arab Emirates had established national organizational structures to support an IYSH national action programme; India and the Netherlands had held national meetings to develop a national programme.

An IYSH trust fund had been established by a group of NGOs in the Netherlands and the United Kingdom to support domestic and international activities. The United Kingdom group had also been designated as the national focal point.

A total of 135 IYSH projects had been identified in 60 countries. Various bilateral and multilateral agencies intended to designate IYSH projects.

In 1984, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ (Prog)) had agreed that United Nations agencies and the regional commissions would provide UNCHS with information relating to their IYSH activities.<sup>(s)</sup> As of 31 January 1985, eight bodies had responded.<sup>(7)</sup>

Responding to a 1984 Commission request, the Executive Director submitted in January 1985 a report<sup>(9)</sup> outlining a long-term information strategy for IYSH to guide the United Nations system, Member States and interest groups, based on three main components: shelter policy, technical support and awareness.

In a March 1985 report,<sup>(10)</sup> the Executive Director examined the geographical and substantive coverage of IYSH projects, noting that while there were a number addressing issues in shelter and services, there were few in the more critical areas of policy, legislative and institutional change. Few projects addressed problems of land, finance, building materials, transportation, training, employment and information. There were a number of schemes in water supply and sanitation, but not on a scale that would service large communities of low-income people. Important issues like solid-waste disposal and maintenance of infrastructure and services had not figured in any project. In addition, a number of Governments had not designated projects for the Year, while other Governments and agencies had not submitted complete information on their projects.

With few exceptions, most projects, though relevant, were not on a scale to convince policy makers of their potential for wider application. It would have been of greater value if projects contained replicability and affordability features with clear policy and programme implications.

Geographically, although there was fair representation from all parts of the world, there was scope for better coverage. Large parts of Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Latin America and the Middle East did not figure in the projects list. There were almost none in the United States, or in Western or Eastern Europe. While the main focus of IYSH was the developing world, it was expected that developed countries would not only support IYSH programmes in developing countries but also highlight the problem of homelessness in their own countries and the ways in which it was being addressed.

Action by the Commission on Human Settlements. The Commission, on 10 May,<sup>(11)</sup> endorsed the Executive Director's reports and recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution on the Year. That text formed the basis of resolution 40/203 (see below).

Earlier, on 8 May,<sup>(12)</sup> the Commission expressed appreciation to Governments that had made contributions to IYSH, appealed to those that had not announced a voluntary contribution and to financial institutions and other organizations to provide financial and other support, and decided to have special pledging provision at its 1986 and 1987 sessions.

Other resolutions adopted in conjunction with IYSH dealt with human settlements in territories occupied by Israel, women and human settlements, Latin America and the Caribbean, and human settlements and peace (see under relevant subject headings in this chapter).

The Commission also decided to hold a special session devoted to follow-up to IYSH, a decision endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 40/202 B.

Report of the Secretary-General. A July 1985 report of the Secretary-General<sup>(13)</sup> summed up progress made up to June 1985 in preparing for IYSH. The report, submitted pursuant to a 1984 Assembly request,<sup>(14)</sup> noted that there was optimism in relation to the Year's immediate objectives, although there was concern about improving the shelter and neighbourhood of all poor within a specified time-frame. Considerable optimism stemmed from the resilience of the urban and rural poor who, everywhere, had displayed remarkable enterprise to cope with shelter problems. Their self-help spirit, manifested in a variety of projects being carried out with little or no outside assistance, was a beacon of hope in an otherwise difficult situation in most developing countries. The role of Governments as facilitators of these remarkable initiatives of ordinary people was increasingly recognized.

But the report noted areas of concern. Shelter and settlement issues were too frequently perceived by development ministries and aid agencies as peripheral to the development process, whereas for most countries they represented a major development opportunity in terms of capital formation, employment generation and socio-political stability. Many intergovernmental agencies had not sufficiently seized the opportunity provided by IYSH to demonstrate in their activities the indispensable role of shelter and decent living conditions for the achievement of objectives in areas such as health, environment, alleviation of poverty and the like. The paucity of contributions from developed nations was a source of deep concern.

ACC consideration. UNCHS submitted a progress report on preparations for IYSH to the 1985 first regular session of CCSQ (Prog) (Geneva, 1-4 April),<sup>(15)</sup> which endorsed further co-operative action.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/203.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/221 of 20 December 1982, 38/168 of 19 December 1983 and 39/171 of 17 December 1984 on the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Noting with satisfaction that more than one hundred and fifteen countries have designated official national focal points for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, that many countries have already launched intensive national programmes for the Year and reported thereon to the Commission on Human Settlements at its eighth session, and that more than one hundred and sixty projects for the Year are under way in sixty-five countries

Expressing its appreciation to the twenty-nine developing countries and five developed countries that have already made or pledged voluntary contributions to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

Recognizing that an estimated one quarter of the world's population does not have adequate shelter and lives in extremely unhealthy and unsanitary conditions and that the programme for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless provides a necessary and unique opportunity for countries to review their prospects and priorities for shelter and settlements and to develop, before or during 1987, new national policies and strategies for improving shelter for, and the neighbourhoods of, the poor and disadvantaged by the year 2000,

Noting that most of the voluntary contributions pledged to date have been pledged by developing countries and that further voluntary contributions are now needed in order to carry out effectively the overall plans endorsed by the General Assembly for activities to be undertaken before and during the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless,

1. Requests those countries that have not yet established official national focal points for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless to do so in the near future, along the lines specified in the annex to General Assembly resolution 38/168;

2. Also requests those countries that have not yet formulated national programmes and plans of action for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless to do so and periodically to provide information on them to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) so that all national focal points can be regularly informed of the activities, progress and achievements of the Year in countries around the world;

3. Further requests those countries and international organizations that have not yet done so to designate projects for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless aimed at improving access to land, financing, building materials, training and employment, giving special attention to legal and institutional measures, and to send a project information sheet on each project to the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat);

4. Requests all countries in their periodic reports on their national programmes and projects for the Year, especially in reports to the Commission on Human Settlements at its ninth session, to give special attention to their plans for developing and implementing new national policies and strategies for improving shelter for, and the neighbourhoods of, the poor and disadvantaged by the year 2000;

5. Appeals once again to all Governments that have not yet announced a voluntary contribution, especially those of developed countries, as well as to international financial institutions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to provide effective financial and other support to the programme for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986 on progress achieved in the implementation of the approved programme of measures and activities to be undertaken before and during the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless;

7. Invites the Economic and Social Council to include a special account of its deliberations on the subject in its report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

8. Decides, in view of the fact that 1987 is the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, to devote special attention to the Year at its forty-first session.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.8) without vote, 25 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.34), based on informal consultations on draft by Bangladesh, Botswana, Burundi, Canada, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Fiji, Gambia, Greece, India, Indonesia, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Malawi, Maldives, Morocco, Netherlands, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Romania, Rwanda, Seychelles, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia and Zambia (A/C.2/40/L.29); agenda item 84 (h). Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 29, 43; plenary 119.

Explaining its position, the USSR said that, in implementing the resolution, the criteria set forth by the Economic and Social Council in 1980<sup>(16)</sup> should be respected. This meant that the IYSH programme should be financed voluntarily, that the Commission on Human Settlements should consider celebrating IYSH within the limits of its resources, and that the participation of UNCHS should not entail expenditures exceeding those available from the United Nations regular budget.

In resolution 40/202 B, the Assembly endorsed a Commission decision (see p. 833) to hold a special session of shorter duration in 1988 devoted exclusively to ensuring effective follow-up to IYSH.

Political, economic and social issues

Assistance to Africa

Assistance to victims of apartheid

Responding to a 1984 request by the Commission on Human Settlements,<sup>(17)</sup> the UNCHS Executive Director outlined in a January 1985 report<sup>(18)</sup> the assistance provided by UNCHS to victims of apartheid and colonialism in Africa. Aid was provided through 16 projects under way in Botswana, Lesotho, Mozambique, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe, with a total budget of $2,883,556 in 1984. Various other projects had been prepared and would be implemented as soon as funds became available.

On 8 May 1985,<sup>(19)</sup> the Commission condemned South Africa for its inhuman repression there and its illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as for its aggression and destabilization against front-line and other neighbouring States, and for its continuous forced removal of the African population from their homes. It commended the Organization of African Unity and others for their support of the struggle against apartheid and colonialism in southern Africa. In commending the Executive Director for efforts made in implementing its 1984 resolution<sup>(17)</sup> on assistance to victims of apartheid, it requested him to intensify those efforts, to continue providing additional aid to countries in which human settlements had been disrupted by the South African regime, and to report in 1986 on progress made.

Assistance to displaced Namibians

On 8 May 1985,<sup>(20)</sup> the Commission made similar requests to the Executive Director with regard to assistance to Namibian refugee settlements. It also condemned any unilateral action by racist South Africa leading towards an internal settlement outside the terms of Security Council resolution 435(1978)<sup>(21)</sup> and declared the establishment of the so-called interim Government as null and void.

A number of recommendations to facilitate implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibian independence were made by the Commission to the United Nations Council for Namibia on 10 May.<sup>(22)</sup> The Council should follow up the implementation of the Commission's 8 May resolution.<sup>(20)</sup> In the event that Namibia did not achieve independence before the 1986 Commission session, the Council should include that session in its 1986 work programme, with a view to assessing the implementation of the 8 May resolution and to making recommendations for 1987. The policy options for the various sectors of an independent Namibian society that were researched by the United Nations Institute for Namibia should be disseminated at Commission meetings, at which other member States might have an opportunity to make suggestions, thereby contributing to more refined planning and future implementation of those policy options. The Council should therefore include a representative of the Institute in its delegations to Commission meetings.

Human settlements in territories occupied by Israel

Matters relating to human settlements in Israeli-occupied territories were again considered by the Commission in 1985 which examined a January study,<sup>(23)</sup> submitted by the UNCHS Executive Director in response to a 1984 Commission request,<sup>(24)</sup> on the possibility, on the occasion of IYSH, of a housing programme for Palestinians in the occupied territories.

The study, pointing out that it had not been possible to locate up-to-date comprehensive studies on the housing situation of Palestinians, drew broad conclusions on the situation, and stated that additional information would be necessary to determine the nature and magnitude of a housing programme. It concluded that preparation of such a programme would require a team of experts to visit the territories to obtain first-hand information and carry out studies.

On 8 May,<sup>(24)</sup> the Commission, noting that the information in the study was incomplete and inaccurate, requested the Executive Director to prepare anew the study, in co-ordination with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and concerned United Nations agencies, and to submit it in 1986.

On 10 May,<sup>(25)</sup> the Commission recommended a draft resolution on the housing programme to the General Assembly. By that text, the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to convene an international seminar leading to a comprehensive general housing programme for the Palestinian population in the occupied Palestinian territories, with the co-operation of specialized agencies and UNCHS and the participation of PLO. That text was examined by the Assembly when it considered and adopted resolution 40/201 on the living conditions of Palestinians in the occupied territories.

Women and human settlements

Noting the participation of UNCHS in the July 1985 Conference to review the achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see p. 937), the Commission on Human Settlements on 8 May 1985<sup>(26)</sup> invited Governments to remain attentive to the concerns expressed by women regarding housing and urban development, and invited countries to co-operate to ensure better satisfaction of women's needs in housing, especially in developing countries. It requested the Executive Director to continue to give an appropriate place, in examining human settlements questions, to the impact of the evolution of women's tasks in society, and proposed that UNCHS consider sponsoring a seminar, as part of IYSH, to define the role of women in the conception, utilization and maintenance of human settlements.

Human settlements and peace

After considering its contribution to the International Year of Peace (1986) (see p. 122), the Commission on Human Settlements on 8 May 1985<sup>(27)</sup> stressed the importance of that contribution in implementing the objectives of the Year and stated that it recognized the close interdependence between the Year's objectives and those of IYSH. It requested the UNCHS Executive Director to submit to the 1986 General Assembly session a report on the Commission's contribution to the strengthening of peace and the implementation of the objectives of the International Year of Peace.

Organizational questions

UNDP remained the main funding source for UNCHS field projects. At the end of 1985, UNDP financing constituted 70 per cent of the UNCHS technical co-operation projects budget, as compared with 72 per cent at the end of 1984. UNDP also continued to provide modest resources to UNCHS under its sectoral support programme for the identification of national technical co-operation needs in human settlements and for formulating project documents and proposals for financing by UNDP and other sources.

UNCHS and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization co-sponsored the first Global Consultation on the Building Materials Industry (Athens, Greece, 25-30 March), attended by over 170 participants from 72 countries and 15 international organizations (see p. 611).

Co-operation with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) continued in developing a microcomputer programme for storing bibliographic data to facilitate the exchange of scientific and technical information among developing countries. In November, updated software was installed at UNCHS headquarters by UNESCO experts.

UNCHS and UNHCR continued to collaborate in refugee assistance, among other things through the UNCHS/UNHCR human settlements officer in the Special Support Unit in UNHCR at Geneva. UNCHS was designated executing agency for a refugee settlements project in Kyaka II county in Uganda, aimed at establishing a rural settlement for 25,000 refugees. Another joint project was assisting a Philippines refugee processing centre in the Bataan peninsula.

Collaboration continued with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) in planning and managing human settlements in earthquake-prone areas. During 1985, the two agencies also continued co-operating with the UNEP Regional Activity Centre, within the context of the priority actions programme of the Mediterranean Action Plan, with regard to land-use planning and management in seismic zones.

The question of UNCHS participating in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) was again considered by both the Commission on Human Settlements and the General Assembly.

On 8 May 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission noted that UNCHS, although participating in the subsidiary machinery of ACC, was not an ACC member and had not been able to support adequately the Commission's central co-ordinating role. The Commission reconfirmed that only full membership would enable UNCHS to discharge its mandate properly to ensure harmonization of human settlements programmes and to assist the Commission in co-ordinating activities in the United Nations system. The Secretary-General was requested to take account of these views in reporting to the Assembly on co-ordination of human settlements programmes.

In his October report,<sup>(3)</sup> requested by the Assembly in 1984,<sup>(4)</sup> on his efforts to ensure the participation of UNCHS, the Secretary-General stated that UNCHS had been kept informed of matters to be considered in ACC and its subsidiary bodies, and had participated in all meetings of the three main subsidiaries. The Centre's Executive Director had been invited to participate in all 1984 and 1985 ACC meetings when he had indicated in advance that the items of those meetings were of interest to the Centre. Noting the Commission's comments, the Secretary-General agreed that the effectiveness of UNCHS should be enhanced to assist the Commission in discharging its central co-ordinating role and mentioned the channels for co-ordination used in the past few years, adding that he would continue to review ways by which they could be made more effective. Regarding UNCHS participation in the work of ACC and its subsidiaries, the Secretary-General felt that the current arrangements should continue, while recognizing the need to keep them under careful review.

The co-ordinating role of UNCHS was also taken up by the Commission when it considered a 1984 cross-organizational programme analysis of human settlements activities (see p. 833).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/202 C without vote.

Co-ordination of human settlements programmes within the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General concerning the co-ordination of human settlements programmes within the United Nations system,

Taking note of the view on co-ordination expressed in Commission on Human Settlements resolution 8/13 of 8 May 1985,

Requests the Secretary-General to ensure effective participation of the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements (Habitat) in the work of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and its subsidiary machinery relevant to its mandate, as contained in General Assembly resolution 32/162 of 19 December 1977, taking into account Assembly resolutions 32/197 of 20 December 1977, 35/77 C of 5 December 1980 and 37/223 C of 20 December 1982, and to, keep the matter under review for consideration by the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session in 1987 on the implementation of the present resolution, taking into consideration the follow-up of the cross-organizational programme analysis in human settlements by the Committee on Programme and Co-ordination.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119

Adopted without vote

(For other procedural details, refer to p. 823.)

Regional co-ordination

After reviewing the draft work programmes in human settlements for 1986-1987 of the regional commissions,<sup>(5)</sup> on 8 May 1985 the Commission on Human Settlements<sup>(6)</sup> urged those Commissions to co-operate closely with UNCHS in implementing their work programmes. It requested the Executive Director, when submitting the commissions' work programmes for 1988-1989, to supply a synoptic chart showing the relationship between the subprogramme elements of the Centre and the commissions' programmes, and recommended that he continue co-ordinating those programmes and take their relevant work into account in developing and implementing the UNCHS work programme.

Latin America and the Caribbean

Two 8 May 1985 actions by the Commission on Human Settlements were aimed at strengthening the co-ordination of human settlements activities in Latin America and the Caribbean. By the first,<sup>(7)</sup> the Commission commended the UNCHS Executive Director for having reached an agreement with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) on establishing a joint human settlements unit. It requested him to continue supporting the activities undertaken in the region, to give more support to the Centre's linkage offices there, particularly to its Information Office for Central America and the Caribbean, whose efficiency was a priority for participating countries, and to consider opening other information offices in the region.

By the second action,<sup>(8)</sup> the Commission noted that the Latin American Organization for Housing and Development of Human Settlements and the Permanent Committee of Housing and Development for Central America and Panama had as objectives to assist in improving housing conditions of low-income groups of the region, and invited them to collaborate with the Commission in executing IVSH programmes. It requested the Executive Director to take into account the Latin American organization as an important organism which could mobilize the political support of its member countries, to consider the Committee as a permanent subregional institution and to establish links for mutual support in technical co-operation programmes in Central America. It also appealed to the Executive Director to consider giving additional support to ECLAC in order to increase its regional activities in conjunction with the two organizations, especially in information dissemination and participation.

Cross-organizational programme analysis

At its 1985 session, the Commission on Human Settlements took up the Secretary-General's 1984 cross-organizational programme analysis and the assessment and recommendations thereon of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination.<sup>(9)</sup> On 8 May,<sup>(10)</sup> the Commission stated that what should be included in the human settlements activities of the United Nations system could most appropriately be defined by listing areas of action along the lines made in the recommendations adopted in 1976 by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements.<sup>(11)</sup> It noted that a statistical summing-up of the activities of United Nations bodies within their different areas of action did not give the guidance needed for co-ordination of work and setting of priorities, and underlined that much of the co-ordination work could best be carried out through agency-to-agency contact, based on information taking into account the nature of the work of each agency. The Commission further underlined that priorities for action should take due account of activities covered outside the United Nations system, and requested the UNCHS Executive Director, in preparation for the 1990-1995 medium-term plan, to carry out a comprehensive study of activities and priorities of the system, indicating possible areas for co-ordination, and to submit his findings to the Commission in 1987.

In resolution 40/202 C, the General Assembly, in asking the Secretary-General to ensure UNCHS participation in the work of ACC, said that follow-up of the cross-organizational programme analysis should be taken into consideration.

Joint meetings with UNEP

As requested by the Commission on Human Settlements in 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> the UNCHS Executive Director in February 1985 submitted his report<sup>(13)</sup> on the implications of discontinuing joint UNCHS/UNEP meetings. He suggested their abolition, coupled with reinforced institutional measures for co-operation between the two bodies. He felt that this was the most practical and cost-effective option, under which both the Commission and the UNEP Governing Council would take up the matter of co-operation separately, based on a common progress report prepared by the respective Executive Directors.

On 8 May 1985,<sup>(14)</sup> the Commission included co-operation between the two in its future agenda and recommended to the UNEP Governing Council that it do likewise, requesting it to agree that the item be discussed by each governing body based on the common report. The Commission felt that joint meetings would then no longer be necessary.

The UNEP Governing Council, on 23 May,<sup>(15)</sup> concurred with the Commission and requested the UNEP Executive Director to consult with his UNCHS counterpart to recommend to the General Assembly that the meetings be discontinued (see also p. 795).

The Assembly decided to discontinue the annual meetings in adopting resolution 40/199.

Commission on Human Settlements

Biennial cycle of sessions

Further to a 1984 Commission resolution on the question of a biennial cycle for Commission sessions,<sup>(12)</sup> the UNCHS Executive Director suggested in a January 1985 report<sup>(16)</sup> that the Commission hold biennial sessions meeting only in odd-numbered years, with no substitute meetings in even years, thereby complying with the latest requests of the General Assembly<sup>(4)</sup> and the Economic and Social Council.<sup>(17)</sup> Since Commission members were currently elected for three-year terms on a rotating system by which one third of the membership changed each year, it was suggested that the term length be changed to four years, with half the members changing every two years, thus allowing each member to participate in two Commission sessions.

On 10 May 1985,<sup>(18)</sup> the Commission decided that, experimentally, sessions would be held only during odd-numbered years as of 1987, and that it would hold a shorter special session in 1988 devoted to follow-up to IYSH. The Executive Director was requested to propose its agenda and duration to the Commission in 1987, and in 1989 to report on low-cost alternatives to inter-session consultations with Governments after 1989. The Commission recommended to the Assembly that it change the term of office of Commission members from three to four years, beginning in 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/202 B without vote.

Biennial cycle of sessions of the Commission on Human Settlements

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/162 of 19 December 1977, by which it provided for the establishment of the Commission on human Settlements and specified the duration of the term of office of members of the Commission,

Recalling also its decision 38/429 of 19 December 1983 on the rationalization of the work of the Second Committee and its resolution 39/170 B of 17 December 1984, in which it required the Commission on Human Settlements to consider adopting a biennial cycle of sessions,

Taking note with satisfaction of Commission on Human Settlements resolution 8/1 of 10 May 1985 on a biennial cycle of sessions for the Commission,

Having considered the recommendation of the Commission that the duration of the term of office of its members should be changed from three to four years in recognition of the change to a biennial cycle of sessions,

1. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Settlements contained in its resolution 8/1 that, beginning in 1987, its sessions will, on an experimental basis, be held only in odd-numbered years;

2. Endorses the decision of the Commission on Human Settlements contained in its resolution 8/1 to hold a special session of shorter duration in 1988 devoted exclusively to ensuring effective follow-up to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless which, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 37/221 of 20 December 1982, will be observed in 1987;

3. Decides that, beginning with the terms of office commencing on 1 January 1987, membership in the Commission on Human Settlements will be for a term of four years instead of three.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

(For other procedural details, refer to p. 823.)

Themes for future sessions

Themes for future Commission sessions were again considered by the Commission in 1985. On 10 May,<sup>(19)</sup> it decided to discuss the small-scale production of building materials at its 1986 session, in addition to considering the role of community participation in human settlements work. It also decided that there would be no special theme apart from discussion of YUSH at its 1987 session, and decided to consider including in its 1989 session a theme on the roles, responsibilities and capabilities of different levels and organizations in governmental and non-governmental sectors, and opportunities for co-operation among them.

Earlier, on 8 May,<sup>(20)</sup> the Commission recommended that the UNCHS Executive Director, in preparing 1986 documentation, take into consideration: the importance of community solutions recognized in several developing countries as implementable using available resources; the need to emphasize social, political and economic factors in solutions to housing and human settlements problems; the importance of promoting knowledge and taking advantage of appropriate technologies to be used by the beneficiaries in their own regions and of adapting the solutions already achieved by old civilizations as the expression of their cultural development; and the need to intensify the study and utilization of non-conventional financing mechanisms that had shown positive results.

Chapter XVIII

Human rights

In 1985, the United Nations continued its efforts to foster human rights and fundamental freedoms world-wide. The drafting of an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families continued, as did work on a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention and Imprisonment. Elaboration of a convention on the rights of the child moved forward, as did work on a draft body of principles, guidelines and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder.

A United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations was established. The General Assembly also adopted a Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live.

Under the United Nations programme established for the purpose, experts provided advisory services to several countries in the implementation of international human rights instruments, adherence to which continued to be encouraged. The Secretary-General deplored that many States had not ratified important international conventions, nor brought their laws or institutions into conformity with the international standards proclaimed by the United Nations (see p. 10).

Protection of detained persons was again a substantive part of the United Nations work in the human rights field. The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted in 1984, was opened for signature in New York on 4 February 1985; by the end of the year, 41 States had signed it. The Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances continued to investigate cases of disappearances in several countries.

Among economic, social and cultural rights, the rights to food and development received particular attention. The Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights-renamed the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights-was reorganized to make its work more effective.

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined. The Secretary-General appealed to all States to support, strengthen and take part in the procedures established to examine such violations. Persecutions for political, religious or racial reasons continued, the Secretary-General stated, and minorities and indigenous populations were often inadequately protected; there were also instances in which, in his view, the co-operation of Governments with the United Nations and its organs left much to be desired.

Actions on these and other human rights issues taken by the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-first session, held at Geneva from 4 February to 15 March, were embodied in 54 resolutions and 14 decisions; those by its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its thirty-eighth session, held also at Geneva, from 5 to 30 August, numbered 36 resolutions and 12 decisions.

Topics related to this chapter. Asia and the Pacific: Kampuchea situation; Afghanistan situation. Mediterranean: Cyprus question. Middle East: territories occupied by Israel. Social and cultural development: crime prevention. Women. Namibia. Other colonial Territories.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1983-1993)

Implementation of the Programme for the Decade

In 1985, United Nations efforts to implement the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were carried out in accordance with the plan of activities for 1985-1989.<sup>(1)</sup> Pursuant to a 1984 resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in April 1985 his annual report,<sup>(3)</sup> and later an October addendum, summarizing activities undertaken or contemplated by Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations (NGOs), to achieve the objectives of the Decade. In September, <sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on measures taken to implement the 1984 resolution.

Human Rights Commission action. On 26 February 1985,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights commended all States that had ratified or acceded to the international instruments relevant to the Decade and appealed to others to do the same. It urged co-operation from all States and international organizations in implementing the plan of activities for 1985-1989, requested the Secretary-General to provide annual progress reports, and decided to consider each year a selected topic within the plan. It chose "International assistance to peoples and movements struggling against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination and apartheid" as the topic for 1987 and recommended to the Economic and Social Council that an international seminar on that subject be organized in Africa in 1986.

CERD consideration. Questions related to improved public awareness of Second Decade objectives were discussed at the March 1985 session of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) (see p. 839), which emphasized that there should be the greatest possible dissemination of information on its work during the Decade and supported the idea of organizing a seminar on the implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination during a part of one of its regular sessions, to be held preferably in an African country.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council decided, on 30 May 1985, by decision 1985/141, to organize in 1986, in Africa, an international seminar on international assistance and support to peoples and movements struggling against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination and apartheid.

The text, which was proposed by the Commission on Human Rights, was approved by the Second (Social) Committee on 24 May by 52 votes to 1, the same voting pattern by which the Council adopted it by roll-call vote. The United States cast the dissenting vote, based, it said, solely on the excessive financial implications of the seminar, not only because additional costs were entailed since it would be held away from the United Nations Centre for Human Rights headquarters at Geneva on which point the United Kingdom also expressed reservations-but also that travel costs would be diverted from the Centre's limited advisory services budget. Japan also felt the funds could be put to more effective use, and expressed doubts as to the appropriateness of the subject of the seminar.

On 29 May, the Council adopted resolution 1985/19 without vote.

Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The Economic and Social Council,

Welcoming the consensus support for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination demonstrated by the General Assembly in its resolutions 38/14 of 22 November 1983 and 39/16 of 23 November 1984,

Mindful of the responsibilities conferred by the General Assembly upon the Council for Co-ordinating and evaluating the activities undertaken in implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

Recalling the guidance provided to the Secretary-General by the General Assembly in its resolution 39/16.

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

2. Welcomes the initiatives being taken to co-ordinate the full range of programmes under implementation by the United Nations system as they relate to the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

3. Also Welcomes the additional project, introduced during the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, to organize a media round-table in Europe in 1985 concerning international legal issues relating to apartheid, racism and racial discrimination, and requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the implementation of that project;

4. Invites all Governments to take or continue to take all the necessary measures to combat all forms of racism and racial discrimination and to support the work of the Decade by making contributions to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

5. Invites all Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to participate in the implementation of the plan of activities for the period 1985-1989 by intensifying and expanding their efforts to ensure the rapid elimination of apartheid and all forms of racism and racial discrimination and to co-operate fully with the Council in its co-ordinating role of the activities related to the Second Decade;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit annual reports on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade, taking into account the relevant resolutions and recommendations of the United Nations, including the Programme for the first Decade annexed to General Assembly resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/19

29 May 1985 Meeting 23 Adopted without vote

Draft by Mozambique, for African Group (E/1985/L.26); agenda item 2.
Meeting numbers. ESC 10-14, 16, 23.

Study by the Special Rapporteur. As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,<sup>(6)</sup> Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway) submitted to the Sub-Commission in July 1985 the first part of a study<sup>(7)</sup> on the achievements made and obstacles encountered during the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination (1973-1983), containing a descriptive summary of the Decade's goals and policy measures recommended, of activities undertaken to achieve the Decade's objectives, and of obstacles encountered. The second part of the study evaluating those objectives and measures was to be submitted in 1986.

Study by the Secretary-General. Pursuant to a 1984 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in October 1985 a preliminary report<sup>(8)</sup> summarizing results of a study on the effects of racial discrimination in education, training and employment as it affected the children of minorities, particularly those of migrant workers (for further information on migrant workers, see p. 848). The study analysed the relevant international standards, discussed efforts to combat racial discrimination as it affected the children of minorities and indicated approaches to bringing social practice in line with recognized legal norms. A section was devoted to the situation of children in South Africa. However, in order to finalize the study for submission to the Assembly's 1986 session, the Secretary-General sought authorization from the Assembly to solicit relevant information from Member States, NGOs, specialized agencies and regional intergovernmental organizations for inclusion in the final study.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, acting on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/22, without vote.

Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its objective contained in the Charter of the United Nations to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its firm determination and its commitment to eradicate totally and unconditionally racism in all its forms, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on 14 December 1960,

Recalling also its resolution 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, on the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, and its resolution 38/14 of 22 November 1983, on the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Recalling further the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at Geneva in 1978 and 1983, respectively,

Taking note once again of the Report of the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced that the Second World Conference represented a positive contribution by the international community towards attaining the objectives of the Decade, through its adoption of a Declaration and an operational Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Noting with Concern that, despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the first Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination were not attained and that millions of human beings continue to this day to be the victims of varied forms of racism, racial discrimination and apartheid,

Recalling its resolution 39/16 of 23 November 1984,

Emphasizing the necessity of attaining the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Convinced of the need to take more effective and sustained international measures for the elimination of all forms of racism and racial discrimination and the total eradication of apartheid in South Africa,

1. Resolves once again that all forms of racism and racial discrimination, particularly in their institutionalized form, such as apartheid, or resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity, are among the most serious violations of human rights in the contemporary world and must be combated by all available means;

2. Appeals to the international community, in general, and the United Nations, in particular, to continue to give the highest priority to programmes for combating racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and to intensify its own efforts, during the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, to provide assistance and relief to the victims of racism and all forms of racial discrimination and apartheid, especially in South Africa and Namibia and in occupied territories and territories under alien domination;

3. Appeals to all Governments and to international and non-governmental organizations to increase and intensify their activities to combat racism, racial discrimination and apartheid and to provide relief and assistance to the victims of these evils;

4. Appeals to all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Programme for the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination so as to enable the Secretary-General to implement the various programme elements outlined in his report on the plan of activities for 1985-1989;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General containing information on the activities of Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations, as well as United Nations organs, to give effect to the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

6. Acknowledges the progress made in preparing the study on the effects of racial discrimination in the field of education, training and employment as it affects the children of minorities, in particular those of migrant workers, authorizes the Secretary-General to solicit relevant information and views from Governments, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council and requests him to submit the final study to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

7. Congratulates the Secretary-General on the organization of the Round Table on International Legal Issues relating to Apartheid, Racism and Racial Discrimination, held at The Hague from 4 to 6 September 1985;

8. Expresses its satisfaction at the convening of the Seminar on Community Relations Commissions and Their Functions, held at Geneva from 9 to 20 September 1985, and invites the Secretary-General to disseminate the report of the Seminar widely;

9. Reiterates its invitation to the Secretary-General to proceed with the implementation of the activities outlined in his report on the plan of activities for 1985-1989 and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session the study on the role of private group action to combat racism and racial discrimination and to the Assembly at its forty-third session the global compilation of national legislation against racial discrimination;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare and issue as soon as possible a collection of model legislation for the guidance of Governments in the enactment of further legislation against racial discrimination;

11. Invites the Secretary-General to organize in New York in 1987 a training course for legislative draftsmen with the aim of focusing on the preparation of national legislation against racism and racial discrimination;

12. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to expedite the preparation of teaching materials and teaching aids to promote teaching, training and educational activities on human rights and against racism and racial discrimination, with particular emphasis on activities at the primary and secondary levels of education;

13. Requests the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights to consider the possible need for updating the study on racial discrimination;

14. Authorizes the Secretary-General to organize in 1988 a global consultation on racial discrimination involving representatives of the United Nations system, regional intergovernmental organizations and interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council, to focus on the co-ordination of international activities to combat racism and racial discrimination;

15. Welcomes Economic and Social Council decision 1985/141 of 30 May 1985, by which the Council authorized the organization in 1986 in Africa of a seminar on international assistance and support to peoples and movements struggling against colonialism, racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and requests that the report thereon be made available to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

16. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Economic and Social Council, during the period of the Second Decade, to submit an annual report to the General Assembly, containing, inter alia:

(a) An enumeration of the activities undertaken or contemplated to achieve the objectives of the Second Decade, including the activities of Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other international and regional organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations;

(b) A review and appraisal of those activities;

(c) Its suggestions and recommendations;

18. Decides that the item entitled "Implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination" should be on its agenda throughout the Second Decade and should be considered as a matter of the highest priority at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/22

29 November 1985 Meeting 96

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/861) without vote, 4 November (meeting 30): draft by Nigeria, for African Groups (A/C.3/40/L.7); agenda item 88. Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/40/953: S-G, A/C.3/40/L.10. A/C.5/40/42. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 3-15, 30, 31; 5th Committee 48: plenary 96.

Israel said if the text had been put to a vote, it would have voted against it because of the abuses which the Decade had generated, most notably the Assembly resolution<sup>(9)</sup> equating zionism with racism. The United States recalled that for the same reason it had not taken part in the activities of either Decade, and expressed concern about the financial implications of holding the seminar mentioned in paragraph 15 away from Headquarters. Canada said allocating funds from the advisory services programme to organize a seminar in Africa was inappropriate.

The United Kingdom said it had reservations with regard to paragraph 1; "combated by all available means" was to be interpreted in accordance with the Charter and could not include armed struggle—a view also held by France and the Federal Republic of Germany. Japan reserved its position with regard to the report of the seminar mentioned in paragraph 8, since the report was not yet available. France observed that its position in opposition to the Declaration adopted by the Second World Conference to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination had not changed. It also felt the wording in paragraph 2 referring to "occupied territories and territories under alien domination" to be ambiguous and inappropriate. Iraq and the Syrian Arab Republic said they understood the expression to mean the occupied Arab territories. The Netherlands held that the reference in paragraph 2 did not imply that racism and racial discrimination were inevitably practised in occupied territories.

The Federal Republic of Germany would have preferred not to see any reference to situations other than that of South Africa, and did not believe that the status of migrant workers, mentioned in paragraph 6, was in itself a criterion for racial discrimination.

Other activities. In the framework of activities for the Decade, a Seminar on Community Relations Commissions and Their Functions was held at Geneva from 9 to 20 September;<sup>(10)</sup> it was financed from resources under the advisory services programme on human rights (see p. 893).

Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1985, there were 124 parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, adopted by the General Assembly in 1965<sup>(11)</sup> and in force since 1969.<sup>(12)</sup>

The same number of parties was given in the Secretary-General's annual report to the Assembly on the status of the Convention,<sup>(13)</sup> which listed States that had signed, ratified or acceded to the Convention as at 1 September 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/26, without vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3057(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, 3135(XXVIII) of 14 December 1973, 3225(XXIX) of 6 November 1974, 3381(XXX) of 10 November 1975, 31/79 of 13 December 1976, 32/11 of 7 November 1977, 33/101 of 16 December 1978, 34/26 of 15 November 1979, 35/38 of 25 November 1980, 36/11 of 28 October 1981, 37/45 of 3 December 1982, 38/18 of 22 November 1983 and 39/20 of 23 November 1984,

Expressing its satisfaction with the entry into force, on 3 December 1982, of the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, under article 14 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, to accept and to examine communications from persons or groups of persons, and with the fact that since that date more States parties have made the declaration provided for in that article,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;
2. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have ratified the Convention or acceded thereto;
3. Reaffirms once again its conviction that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and implementation of its provisions are necessary for the realization of the objectives of the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;
4. Requests those States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto;
5. Calls upon States parties to the Convention to consider the possibility of making the declaration provided for in article 14 of the Convention;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to submit to the General Assembly annual reports concerning the status of the Convention, in accordance with Assembly resolution 2106 A (XX) of 21 December 1965.

General Assembly resolution 40/26

29 November 1985 Meeting 96 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/914) without vote, 4 November (meeting 30): 23-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.4), amended by 14 nations (A/C.3/40/L.8); agenda item 94 (b).

Sponsors of draft: Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cuba, Cyprus, Egypt, Germany, Federal Republic of, Hungary, India, Morocco, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Portugal, Rwanda, Spain, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Sponsors of amendments: Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, Iceland, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden, Uruguay. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 3-15, 30; plenary 96.

Prior to approving the draft resolution as a whole, the Third Committee adopted, by a recorded vote of 79 to 1, with 41 abstentions, amendments sponsored by 14 nations. The amendments added the second preambular paragraph and paragraph 5.

Implementation of the Convention

CERD activities. Devoting most of its work to an examination of reports by States parties to the Convention on measures taken to implement its provisions, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, set up under article 8 of the Convention, held two sessions in 1985: the thirty-first in New York from 4 to 22 March; and the thirty-second at Geneva from 5 to 23 August. After considering reports submitted by 37 States under article 9 of the Convention, the Committee provided, in its annual report to the General Assembly,<sup>(14)</sup> a summary of its members' views on each country report and of statements made by the States parties concerned. The report also described action taken to resolve the problem of delays and non-submission of reports.

In conformity with article 15 of the Convention, CERD considered petitions and reports, and other information relating to Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories transmitted by the Trusteeship Council (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter II) and by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples. CERD examined reports related to African Territories, including Namibia, Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Territories, including Gibraltar, and Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories, stating with regret that it had not been provided with information relevant to its task under article 15 in the submissions on Anguilla and on Pacific and Indian Ocean Territories.

With regard to article 3 of the Convention, condemning racial segregation and apartheid, CERD, on 20 August,<sup>(15)</sup> strongly condemned the racist régime of South Africa for the crimes perpetrated under the apartheid system and appealed to States parties to implement Security Council resolution 569(1985) of 26 July 1985, which was consistent with the aims of the Convention. In a separate decision (General Recommendation VII)<sup>(16)</sup> relating to article 4, concerning measures to eradicate incitement to and acts of racial discrimination, the Committee recommended that States parties whose legislation did not satisfy the provisions of the article take steps to fulfil its requirements. It requested that States parties provide fuller information on this matter in their periodic reports, including decisions by national tribunals and other State institutions.

At its August session, CERD also continued considering, under article 14 of the Convention, communications from individuals or groups of individuals claiming violation of their rights under the Convention by a State party recognizing CERD competence to receive and consider such communications. As in the previous year, 11 of the 124 States parties—Costa Rica, Ecuador, France, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Senegal, Sweden and Uruguay—had declared such recognition. By the end of the August 1985 session, work under the article had not reached the reporting stage.

Communications. In connection with the observance, on 21 March, of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, 20 Member States (one of them on behalf of the 10 members of the European Community (EC), one non-member State, two specialized agencies and eight NGOs sent messages to the Special Committee against Apartheid<sup>(17)</sup> (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V). By letters of 10 January<sup>(18)</sup> and 2 December 1985,<sup>(19)</sup> respectively, Israel drew attention to what it called extreme examples of anti-Semitic outbursts in United Nations forums during November and December 1984 and protested against what it called racial and religious incitements by Bahrain during deliberations in the General Assembly's Third Committee (for further details, see p. 263).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 40/28, by recorded vote.

Report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 39/21 of 23 November 1984 on the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and 40/26 of 29 November 1985 on the status of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, as well as its other relevant resolutions on the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination,

Having considered the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on the work of its thirty-first and thirty-second sessions, submitted under article 9, paragraph 2, of the Convention,

Emphasizing the need for Member States to intensify, at the national and international levels, the struggle against acts or practices of racial discrimination and the vestiges or manifestations of racist ideologies wherever they exist,

Bearing in mind that the Convention is being implemented in different economic, social and cultural conditions prevailing in individual States parties,

Mindful of the obligation of all States parties to comply fully with the provisions of the Convention,

Aware of the importance of the contribution of the Committee to the implementation of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination and to the elimination of all forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin,

Taking note of the decisions adopted and recommendations made by the Committee at its thirty-first and thirty-second sessions,

1. Takes note of the report of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination on its thirty-first and thirty-second sessions;

2. Also takes note of the part of the report relating to Trusts and Non-Self-Governing Territories and other Territories to which General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960 applies;

3. Draws the attention of the relevant United Nations bodies to the opinion and recommendations of the Committee relating to the Territories mentioned in paragraph 2 above, calls upon those bodies to ensure that the Committee is supplied with all relevant information on the Territories and urges all administering Powers to co-operate with those bodies by providing all the necessary information in order to enable the Committee to discharge fully its responsibilities under article 15 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

4. Considers that the Committee should not take into consideration information on Territories to which General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) applies unless such information is communicated by the competent United Nations bodies in conformity with article 15 of the Convention;

5. Strongly condemns the policy of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia as a crime against humanity and urges all Member States to adopt effective political, economic and other measures in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly, the Security Council and other United Nations bodies, in order to support the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples of South Africa and Namibia for their national liberation and human dignity and to secure the elimination of the racist apartheid system;

6. Commends the Committee for its continuous endeavours towards the elimination of all forms of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin, in particular the elimination of apartheid in South Africa and Namibia, and welcomes the decision on apartheid adopted by the Committee at its thirty-second session;

7. Notes with appreciation the Committee's continued participation in the activities within the framework of the Programme of Action for the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination;

8. Welcomes the efforts of the Committee aimed at the elimination of all forms of discrimination against national or ethnic minorities, persons belonging to such minorities and indigenous populations, wherever such discrimination exists, and the attainment of the full enjoyment of their human rights through the implementation of the principles and provisions of the Convention;

9. Welcomes further the efforts of the Committee aimed at the elimination of all forms of discrimination against migrant workers and their families, the promotion of their rights on a non-discriminatory basis and the achievement of their full equality, including the freedom to maintain their cultural characteristics;

10. Calls upon Member States to adopt effective legislative, socio-economic and other necessary measures in order to ensure the prevention or elimination of discrimination based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin;

11. Further calls upon the States parties to the Convention to protect fully, by the adoption of the relevant legislative and other measures, in conformity with the Convention, the rights of national or ethnic minorities and persons belonging to such minorities, as well as the rights of indigenous populations;

12. Commends the States parties to the Convention on measures taken to ensure, within their jurisdiction, the availability of appropriate recourse procedures for the victims of racial discrimination;

13. Reiterates its invitation to the States parties to the Convention to provide the Committee, in accordance with its general guidelines, with information on the implementation of the provisions of the Convention, including information on the demographic composition of their populations and on their relations with the racist régime of South Africa;

14. Appeals to the States parties to take fully into consideration their obligation under the Convention to submit their reports in due time;

15. Commends the Committee for its efforts towards a further universalization and a more consistent implementation of the Convention and welcomes its General Recommendation VII relating to the implementation of article 4 of the Convention;

16. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure wider publicity of the work of the Committee, which would facilitate its task to implement effectively its functions under the Convention, and to inform the General Assembly at its forty-first session of the action taken in that regard.

29 November 1985 General Assembly resolution 40/28 Meeting 96 136-1-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/914) by recorded vote (129-1-8). 19 November (meeting 46): 12-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.14/Rev.1); agenda item 94 (a).

Sponsors: Angola, Bangladesh, Cape Verde, China, Cuba, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar, Nigeria, Y&en, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 3-15, 37, 46; plenary 96.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom.

Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly voted separately on paragraphs 4 and 5 and on the phrase "including information on the demographic composition of their populations and on their relations with the racist regime of South Africa" in paragraph 13. The paragraphs were retained by recorded votes of, respectively, 93 to 9, with 32 abstentions, and 122 to 1, with 22 abstentions; the phrase was retained by 122 votes to none, with 23 abstentions.

The Third Committee had also voted on the same paragraphs and phrase, retaining them by recorded votes of, respectively: 82 to 9, with 36 abstentions; 116 to 1, with 21 abstentions; and 110 to none, with 24 abstentions.

The United States said it voted against the text because paragraph 5 contained a reference to apartheid as a crime against humanity, as well as other divisive elements not directly relevant to the CERD report. Japan understood that the term "crime against humanity" had no legal implications.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the 10 States members of EC, voiced reservations on paragraph 4, which it described as being political in nature and introducing irrelevant and controversial elements, as well as on paragraphs 5 and 13, on the same grounds as in 1984.<sup>(20)</sup> The conviction that it was not for the Third Committee to direct CERD's work also motivated France to cast a negative vote, and Senegal to abstain, in the vote on paragraph 4. The United Kingdom said the paragraph failed to take account of the reporting obligations of States parties which were also administering Powers; in addition, it said it had difficulties with paragraph 6, and felt the text contained decisions and opinions that exceeded the Committee's terms of reference. Canada and Portugal were concerned, respectively, about the undue politicization of the CERD report and the Convention, while Belgium regretted that the text had not been worded in such a way as to enable its adoption by consensus.

Denmark, explaining the Nordic countries' abstention in the separate votes, said the wording of paragraphs 2 to 4 failed to focus on racial discrimination as the Committee's main purpose and called on it to take action beyond the scope of its mandate, a view shared by Austria. Australia abstained in the vote on paragraphs 4 and 5, citing lack of balance and certain legal difficulties. China said it accepted paragraph 4 on the understanding that it reaffirmed the relevant articles of the Convention and did not relate to or affect the positions of Governments in regard to certain specific questions. Noting that the Convention did not mention "national or ethnic minorities" or "indigenous populations", India understood that the rights referred to in paragraphs 8 and 11 were to be interpreted strictly within the meaning of article 1. Morocco abstained in the vote on paragraph 4, which it felt presented legal difficulties in relation to paragraph 14. Turkey considered that parts of the CERD report did not reflect the true historical context of certain questions.

Explaining its vote in favour of paragraph 4, Algeria said it had been intended to prevent any deviations from article 15 of the Convention, according to which CERD was to receive information on Territories from United Nations bodies and in no case from administering Powers or States parties; it was not an attempt to modify the provisions of the Convention or CERD's mandate.

Measures against nazism and fascism

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1985,<sup>(21)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights condemned all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror, or systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Noting, in particular, the totalitarian nature of racist régimes, it urged States to draw attention to threats to democratic institutions by such ideologies and practices and called for measures against them. It requested the Secretary-General to submit to its 1986 session a report on the implementation of the Assembly's December 1984 resolution<sup>(22)</sup> on the subject.

Report of the Secretary-General and communications. In response to a 1984 Assembly request,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted, in April 1985, a report, with later addenda,<sup>(23)</sup> summarizing comments from 24 States, three specialized agencies, one intergovernmental organization and 19 NGOs on ongoing and planned measures to eradicate nazism, fascism and related ideologies and practices.

By a letter of 17 June,<sup>(24)</sup> Israel protested against Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasser Arafat's public praise, in April 1985 in Indonesia, of two Palestinians who, Israel charged, had been Nazi collaborators. On 6 November,<sup>(25)</sup> Israel accused the Syrian Arab Republic of sheltering a Nazi war criminal (see p. 314).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/148, by recorded vote.

Measures to be taken against Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist activities and all other forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial intolerance, hatred and terror
The General Assembly,

Recalling that the United Nations emerged from the struggle against nazism, fascism, aggression and foreign occupation, and that the peoples expressed their resolve in the Charter of the United Nations to save future generations from the scourge of war,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles laid down in the Charter, which are aimed at maintaining international peace and security, developing friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and the self-determination of peoples and achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Recalling that 8 and 9 May 1985 marked the days of the fortieth anniversary of victory over nazism and fascism in the Second World War and of that struggle against them,

Bearing in mind the suffering, destruction and death of millions of victims of aggression, foreign occupation, nazism and fascism,

Recalling also the close relationship between all totalitarian ideologies and practices based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred and terror and the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Firmly convinced that the best bulwark against nazism and racial discrimination is the establishment and maintenance of democratic institutions, that the existence of genuine political, social and economic democracy is an effective vaccine and an equally effective antidote against the formation or development of Nazi movements and that a political system which is based on freedom and effective participation by the people in the conduct of public affairs and under which economic and social conditions are such as to ensure a decent standard of living for the population makes it impossible for fascism, nazism or other ideologies based on racism and racial discrimination, hatred and terror to succeed,

Emphasizing that all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist ones, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror or systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which have such consequences, may jeopardize world peace and constitute obstacles to friendly relations between States and to the realization of human rights, fundamental freedoms and social progress in the world,

Acknowledging with satisfaction the fact that many States have established systems based on the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all human beings, which are the basis of a democratic society and the best bulwark against totalitarian ideologies and practices, and have set up legal regulations which are suited to prevent the activities of Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist groups and organizations,

Noting that, nevertheless, in the contemporary world there continue to exist various forms of totalitarian ideologies and practices which entail contempt for the individual or denial of the intrinsic dignity and equality of all human beings, of equality of opportunity in civil, political, economic, social and cultural spheres, and of social justice,

Deeply alarmed at the existence of groups and organizations which propagate totalitarian ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist ones, which violate human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the rights to self-determination, to life, liberty and security of person and to freedom from discrimination, and which thereby constitute a threat to the purposes and principles laid down in the Charter of the United Nations,

Conscious of the need to counter the spread of totalitarian ideologies and practices based on the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, racial intolerance, hatred and terror,

Stressing that totalitarian regimes based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred or terror or the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms seek to ensure their domination and their economic and social privileges at the expense of other peoples or racial or ethnic groups, which they oppress and exploit,

Reaffirming that the prosecution and punishment of war crimes and crimes against peace and humanity, as laid down in General Assembly resolutions 3(I) of 13 February 1946 and 95(I) of 11 December 1946, constitute a universal commitment for all States,

Mindful of the principles of international co-operation in the detection, arrest, extradition and punishment of persons guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity, set forth in General Assembly resolution 3074(XXVIII) of 3 December 1973,

Recalling its resolutions 2331(XXII) of 18 December 1967, 2438(XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2545(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, 2713(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2839(XXVI) of 18 December 1971, 34/24 of 15 November 1979, 35/200 of 15 December 1980, 36/162 of 16 December 1981, 37/179 of 17 December 1982, 38/99 of 16 December 1983 and 39/114 of 14 December 1984,

Recalling further the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples and the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Underlining the importance of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and other relevant international instruments,

Reaffirming that the ideologies and practices described above are incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the above-mentioned international instruments,

Mindful that the fortieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War served to mobilize efforts of the world community in its struggle against those ideologies and practices,

Viewing with deep concern that the proponents of Fascist ideologies have, in a number of countries, intensified their activities and are increasingly co-ordinating them on an international scale,

Expressing its concern that Fascist and Nazi and other totalitarian ideologies and practices are inherited, inter alia, by repressive racist régimes practising gross and flagrant violations of human rights and the systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Again condemns all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist ideologies, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred and terror, which deprive people of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms and of equality of opportunity, and expresses its determination to combat those ideologies and practices;

2. Urges all States to draw attention to the threat to democratic institutions by the above-mentioned ideologies and practices and to consider taking measures, in accordance with their national constitutional systems and with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights, to prohibit or otherwise deter activities by groups or organizations or whoever is practising those ideologies;

3. Invites Member States to adopt, in accordance with their national constitutional systems and with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights, as a matter of high priority, measures declaring punishable by law any dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred and of war propaganda, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist ideologies;

4. Calls upon all States, in accordance with the basic principles of international law, to refrain from practices aimed at the violation of basic human rights and which constitute a threat to peace and international security;

5. Welcomes the fact that on 8 May 1985 the Economic and Social Council held a solemn commemorative ceremony, in the light of General Assembly resolution 39/114, the purpose of which was to underline the continuing relevance of the Charter of the United Nations, the importance of international co-operation towards peace, security and development and the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms and in particular the fundamental right to life, liberty and security of person;

6. Gives expression to the respect felt by today's generation for the victims of and the struggle of peoples against nazism and fascism in the Second World War and for the establishing of the United Nations in order to save mankind from the scourge of war and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person;

7. Appeals to all States that have not yet done so to become parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity and the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

8. Reiterates its request to the appropriate specialized agencies, as well as other intergovernmental organizations and international non-governmental organizations, to initiate or intensify measures against the ideologies and practices described in paragraph 1 above;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat pays due attention to the dissemination of information exposing the ideologies and practices described in paragraph 1 above;

10. Invites all States and international organizations to submit to the Secretary-General their comments and information on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session in the light of the discussion that will take place in the Commission on Human Rights and on the basis of comments provided by States and international organizations.

Fortieth anniversary of the victory over nazism and fascism

Communications. The fortieth anniversary of the victory over nazism and fascism was the subject of a number of communications to the Secretary-General. By a letter of 5 February 1985,<sup>(27)</sup> a group of Eastern European countries-Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR-and the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia and Viet Nam requested the Economic and Social Council, at its 1985 organizational session, to devise ways to hold a solemn celebration, on 8 and 9 May 1985, of the anniversary. In connection with the anniversary, Czechoslovakia transmitted, on 17 May,<sup>(28)</sup> a joint statement by the same Eastern European countries, as well as Cuba and Viet Nam, at the Council's May/June 1985 session. The German Democratic Republic, on 20 March,<sup>(29)</sup> provided information on activities it was undertaking to observe the anniversary of the end of Nazi rule, whose commemoration was also the subject of an 8 May message from the President of Madagascar, transmitted 13 May.<sup>(30)</sup>

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1985,<sup>(31)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights paid a tribute to the people whose efforts and sufferings had led to the end of the Second World War and the establishment of the United Nations, and considered that celebration of that anniversary should serve the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms. On 6 February,<sup>(32)</sup> it had requested the Economic and Social Council, in considering its 1985 work programme, to take into account the fact that 8 and 9 May represented the fortieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War.

Action by CERD. Recalling that the Assembly in 1984<sup>(22)</sup> had considered that the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the victory over nazism and fascism should serve to mobilize efforts in the struggle against Nazi, Fascist, neo-Fascist and other totalitarian ideologies and practices, CERD on 22 March 1985<sup>(33)</sup> expressed appreciation of the victory, paid tribute to the memory of those who fought against and were the victims of nazism and fascism, condemned racism, racial discrimination and apartheid, and reminded the States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination of their obligation to adopt measures during the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination aimed at ending such ideologies.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 8 February, in adopting its work programme for 1985 and 1986 (see p. 1055) the Council decided to hold on 8 or 9 May a solemn commemorative ceremony in the light of the Assembly's 1984 resolution,<sup>(22)</sup> bearing in mind the continuing relevance of the Charter, in particular its emphasis on the importance of international co-operation towards peace, security and development, fundamental human rights and the dignity of the human person, and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

The text, which became a provision of decision 1985/101, was based on a draft decision<sup>(34)</sup> submitted by the Council President on behalf of the Bureau, with changes agreed upon during further informal consultations, based on information on consultations on two different drafts: one submitted by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam,<sup>(35)</sup> the other by Belgium, Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway the United Kingdom and the United States.<sup>(36)</sup>

On 30 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1985/44, without vote.

Solemn commemorative ceremony in the light of General Assembly resolution 39/114

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of General Assembly resolution 39/114 of 14 December 1984, in which the Assembly declared that 8 and 9 May 1985 would be the days of the fortieth anniversary of victory over nazism and fascism in the Second World War and of that struggle against them,

Taking note also of Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1985/31 of 13 March 1985, entitled "Measures to be taken against all totalitarian or other ideologies and practices, including Nazi, Fascist and neo-Fascist, based on racial or ethnic exclusiveness or intolerance, hatred, terror, systematic denial of human rights and fundamental freedoms, or which have such consequences", and 1985/32 of 13 March 1985, entitled "Fortieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War",

Paying a tribute of respect to the peoples whose great efforts and sufferings led to the end of the Second World War and to the establishment of the United Nations forty years ago,

Recalling that the United Nations Organization embodies the resolve of peoples to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person,

Noting that on 8 May 1985 the Economic and Social Council held a solemn commemorative ceremony in the light of General Assembly resolution 39/114, bearing in mind the continuing relevance of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular its emphasis on the importance of international co-operation towards peace, security and development, fundamental human rights and the dignity of the human person, and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

1. Takes note, with appreciation, of the report of the Secretary-General and decides to transmit it to the General Assembly;

2. Acknowledges with satisfaction that many States have taken measures for the solemn commemoration of this anniversary and of the founding of the United Nations;

3. Considers that the solemn commemoration by the Council of this anniversary should serve the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular the fundamental right to life, liberty and security of person.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/44

30 May 1985 Meeting 25 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1965/95) & Corr.1) without vote, 24 May (meeting 15); draft based on consultations on draft by Afghanistan, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR and Viet Nam (E/1985/C.2/L.11/Rev.1) and amendments by Netherlands and United Kingdom (E/1985/C.2/L.14); agenda item 16.

Other aspects of discrimination

Religious freedom

Communication. On 22 August,<sup>(37)</sup> Morocco transmitted a statement made by King Hassan II introducing Pope John Paul II, who addressed a rally on 19 August at Casablanca on interfaith dialogue and understanding.

Human Rights Commission action. Pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(38)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights continued in 1985 to consider measures to implement the 1981 Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief.<sup>(39)</sup> On 14 March,<sup>(40)</sup> the Commission urged States to provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees for freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief, and examine the possibility of establishing national institutions to promote tolerance of religion and the training of their public officials to ensure that they did not in their duties discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs. The United Nations University and other academic and research institutions were invited to undertake programmes on the encouragement of respect in matters relating to freedom of religion, and the Secretary-General was asked to prepare a compendium of national legislation and regulations on freedom of religion or belief and report in 1986 on measures to implement this resolution.

With regard to a 1984 Seminar on the Encouragement of Understanding, Tolerance and Respect in Matters relating to Freedom of Religion or Belief,<sup>(41)</sup> the Commission took note of its report<sup>(42)</sup> which was subsequently transmitted by the Secretary-General to the Assembly Participants from 24 States and observers from 16 countries, as well as representatives of several United Nations bodies, inter- and non-governmental organizations and liberation movements attended.

Emphasizing the importance of tolerance for religion or other belief and the role world religions could play in promoting such attitudes, the Seminar stressed the fundamental and universal character of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, expressed concern over violations of that right and called for action at all levels to ensure respect for it. The Seminar urged that high priority be given to implementing United Nations instruments for the protection of freedom of religion and belief and pointed to the need for an international convention on the matter. It recommended that States provide adequate constitutional and legal guarantees for that freedom and examine the possibility of establishing national institutions for promoting tolerance. Education should play a significant role in attaining that goal, particularly through promotional programmes in educational and cultural institutions and the training of public officials and teachers in the spirit of tolerance.

The Seminar urged increased interfaith dialogue and improved dissemination of information, and called for launching an action programme for translating the Declaration into the greatest possible number of national and local languages and for issuing a multi language publication containing the various international standards relating to freedom of religion. Viewing studies on the major religions and beliefs as important for combating intolerance, the Seminar suggested examining the links between discrimination on grounds of religion or belief and discrimination on grounds of race or origin. It recommended that Governments utilize the advisory services of the Centre for Human Rights for drafting legislation on establishing institutions in this field, and that NGOs develop proposals on issues of tolerance, religion or belief.

Sub-Commission action. On 27 August 1985,<sup>(43)</sup> the Sub-Commission decided to postpone consideration of the item to its 1986 session. By a resolution<sup>(44)</sup> adopted on 29 August 1985 by 11 votes to 1, with 3 abstentions, it requested the Human Rights Commission to urge Albania to provide constitutional and legal measures to ensure freedom of religion or belief, proscribe discrimination on ground of religion or belief, and provide safeguards and remedies against such discrimination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/109.

Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the need to promote universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Reaffirming its resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981, in which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief,

Recalling subsequent resolutions, in which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider what measures might be necessary to implement the Declaration,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/39 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council authorized the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust its Special Rapporteur with the preparation of a study, in accordance with the terms of Sub-Commission resolution 1983/31 of 6 September 1983, on the current dimensions of the problems of intolerance and of discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief,

Taking note of the progress report thereon submitted by the Special Rapporteur to the Sub-Commission at its thirty-eighth session,

Concerned that the Special Rapporteur has not yet received sufficiently relevant or detailed information to discharge her tasks effectively,

Recalling the Seminar on the Encouragement of Understanding, Tolerance and Respect in Matters relating to Freedom of Religion or Belief, held at Geneva from 3 to 14 December 1984,

Recognizing that it is desirable to enhance the promotional and public information activities of the United Nations in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and that both Governments and non-governmental organizations have an important role to play in this domain,

Aware that intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief continue to exist in many parts of the world,

Believing that further efforts are, therefore, required to promote and protect the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief,

1. Reaffirms that freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief is a right guaranteed to all without discrimination;

2. Urges States, therefore, in accordance with their respective constitutional systems, to provide, where they have not already done so, adequate constitutional and legal guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief;

3. Endorses the request of the Commission on Human Rights to the Secretary-General, contained in its resolution 1985/51 of 14 March 1985, to prepare a compendium of the national legislation and regulations of States on the question of freedom of religion or belief, with particular regard to the measures taken to combat intolerance or discrimination in this field;

4. Encourages Governments, specialized agencies, intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to supply the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, as requested, with information relevant to the study she is preparing on the current dimensions of the problems of intolerance and of discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, so as to enable her to submit the final report to the Sub-Commission as soon as possible;

5. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Seminar on the Encouragement of Understanding, Tolerance and Respect in Matters relating to Freedom of Religion or Belief;

6. Urges all States to take all appropriate measures to combat intolerance and to encourage understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief and, in this context, to examine where necessary the supervision and training of their civil servants, educators and other public officials to ensure that, in the course of their official duties, they respect different religions and beliefs and do not discriminate against persons professing other religions or beliefs;

7. Invites the United Nations University and other academic and research institutions to undertake programmes and studies on the encouragement of understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion or belief;

8. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to give high priority to the dissemination of the text of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, in all official languages of the United Nations, and to take all appropriate measures to make the text available for use by United Nations information centres, as well as by other interested bodies;

9. Requests the Secretary-General in this context to invite interested non-governmental organizations to consider what further role they could envisage playing regarding the dissemination of the Declaration in national and local languages;

10. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of measures to implement the Declaration and to report, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Elimination of all forms of religious intolerance" and to consider the report of the Commission on Human Rights under that item.

Indigenous populations

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March,<sup>(45)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, having considered the 1984 activities of the Sub-Commission's Working Group on Indigenous Populations,<sup>(46)</sup> urged it to intensify its efforts in developing international standards on human rights of indigenous populations. On the same date,<sup>(47)</sup> it recommended to the Economic and Social Council the issuance, in a consolidated form of the full report of Special Rapporteur José R. Martínez Cobo (Ecuador) on the problem of discrimination against indigenous populations, which had been presented to the Sub-Commission in 1983.<sup>(48)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1985, the Council adopted without vote decision 1985/137-as recommended by the Human Rights Commission and approved by the Council's Second Committee on 24 May-requesting the Secretary-General to issue the Special Rapporteur's 1983 report in a consolidated form and to disseminate it to Governments, agencies, organizations and institutions. The Council decided that the conclusions and recommendations of the report should be printed, with an introduction by the Secretary-General.

Working Group activities. The Working Group on Indigenous Populations continued to review, at its fourth session (Geneva, 29 July-2 August and 23 August),<sup>(49)</sup> developments pertaining to the promotion and protection of rights and freedoms of indigenous populations. It considered the preliminary version of seven draft principles-dealing with the right to enjoy universally recognized fundamental rights, to be equal to all other human beings, to life, to religious freedom, to education, to preserve cultural identity, and to promote intercultural information and education-for inclusion in a future declaration on those rights. At future sessions, emphasis was to be placed on the Group's standard-setting activities.

Sub-Commission action. The Sub-Commission, on 29 August 1985,<sup>(50)</sup> requested the Working Group to focus in 1986 on drafting specific proposals for the content and scope of the seven rights and principles under consideration and on gathering information on other rights and principles. It asked the Secretary-General to assist the Working Group in discharging its duties and ensure adequate dissemination of all relevant material.

On the same date,<sup>(51)</sup> the Sub-Commission proposed to its parent Commission a draft resolution for adoption by the Council recommending that the Group meet for up to eight working days before the annual sessions of the Sub-Commission.

UN Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March 1985,<sup>(52)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights proposed to the Economic and Social Council a draft resolution recommending the establishment by the General Assembly of a voluntary fund to provide financial assistance to representatives of indigenous communities and organizations to participate in the Working Group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By resolution 1985/38, adopted without vote on 30 May 1985, the Council, following approval without vote of the Commission's text by its Second Committee on 24 May, recommended that the Assembly adopt the proposed text, which it attached to its resolution.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The Economic and Social Council.

Recalling its resolution 1982/34 of 7 May 1982, authorizing the establishment annually of a working group on indigenous populations,

Recommends the following draft resolution to the General Assembly for adoption:

[For text, see General Assembly resolution 40/131 below.]

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations

The General Assembly,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/34 of 7 May 1982, by which the Council authorized the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to establish annually a working group on indigenous populations,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/32 of 12 March 1984,

Convinced that the establishment of a voluntary trust fund for indigenous populations would constitute a significant development for the future promotion and protection of the human rights of indigenous populations,

Decides to establish a voluntary trust fund in accordance with the following criteria:

(a) The name of the fund shall be the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations;

(b) The purpose of the Fund shall be to assist representatives of indigenous communities and organizations to participate the deliberations of the Working Group on Indigenous Populations by providing them with financial assistance, funded by means of voluntary contributions from Governments, non-governmental organizations and other private or public entities;

(c) The only type of activity to be supported by the Fund is that described in subparagraph (b) above;

(d) The only beneficiaries of assistance from the Fund shall be representatives of indigenous peoples' organizations and communities:

(i) Who are so considered by the Board of Trustees of the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations described in subparagraph (e) below;

(ii) Who would not, in the opinion of the Board, be able to attend the sessions of the Working Group without the assistance provided by the Fund;

(iii) Who would be able to contribute to a deeper knowledge on the part of the Working Group of the problems affecting indigenous populations and who would secure a broad geographical representation;

(e) The Fund shall be administered in accordance with the Financial Regulations and Rules of the United Nations and other relevant provisions set forth in the annex to the note by the Secretary-General, with the advice of a Board of Trustees composed of five persons with relevant experience on issues affecting indigenous populations, who will serve in their personal capacity;

the members of the Board of Trustees shall be appointed by the Secretary-General for a three-year term renewable in consultation with the current Chairman of the Sub-Commission; at least one member of the Board shall be a representative of a widely recognized organization of indigenous people.

13 December 1985

Meeting 116

Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) without vote, 6 December (meeting 70); draft recommended by Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/38 (A/C.3/40/L.32); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 54, 61-64, 69, 70; plenary 116.

In resolution 40/28, the Assembly welcomed CERD's efforts to eliminate discrimination against persons belonging to indigenous populations and to attain full enjoyment of their human rights.

Migrant workers

Communication. By a letter of 20 August 1985,<sup>(53)</sup> Egypt's Minister for Foreign Affairs protested what he described as wide-ranging acts of mass expulsion of Egyptian nationals working in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. On 23 August,<sup>(54)</sup> the latter rejected the charges. The reduction of foreign workers, it said, had been gradual, the result of a three-year-old decision, and was not directed against any State. (See also p. 259.)

Draft convention

In March 1985, the Commission on Human Rights considered the progress made by the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, as described in the Group's 1984 reports.<sup>(55)</sup> The Working Group convened twice in 1985, in June and in September/October. The General Assembly decided in December that the Working Group should continue drafting the convention at an inter-sessional meeting in 1986.

The welfare of migrant workers was also dealt with by the Secretary-General in a report to the Commission for Social Development (see p. 734); following its consideration, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/24.

Human Rights Commission action. On 14 March 1985,<sup>(56)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights commended the Working Group for concluding, in first reading, the drafting of the preamble and articles which would serve as the basis for second reading of the draft convention on the rights of migrant workers. It invited all Member States to continue co-operating with the Group and reiterated its hope for a speedy conclusion of the convention.

Working Group activities. The open-ended Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, established by the General Assembly in 1979,<sup>(57)</sup> held its fifth inter-sessional meeting in New York from 3 to 14 June 1985,<sup>(58)</sup> and its sixth session from 23 September to 4 October.<sup>(59)</sup>

In June, the Group adopted in second reading the preamble of the draft convention and began consideration of part I, relating to the scope of and definitions in the convention, adopting a paragraph defining the term "migrant worker". At its September/October session, the Group continued consideration of part I, adopting, in second reading, three articles on the convention's applicability and on terms defining various categories of migrant workers.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/130, without vote.

Measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming once more the permanent validity of the principles and standards embodied in the basic instruments regarding the international protection of human rights, in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind the principles and standards established within the framework of the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural organization, and the importance of the task carried out in connection with migrant workers and their families in other specialized agencies and in various organs of the United Nations,

Reiterating that, in spite of the existence of an already established body of principles and standards, there is a need to make further efforts to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling its resolution 34/172 of 17 December 1979, by which it decided to establish a working group open to all Member States to elaborate an international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/198 of 15 December 1980, 36/160 of 16 December 1981, 37/170 of 17 December 1982, 38/86 of 16 December 1983 and 39/102 of 14 December 1984, by which it renewed the mandate of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and requested it to continue its work,

Having examined the progress made by the Working Group during its fifth inter-sessional meeting, held from 3 to 14 June 1985, as well as the report of the Working Group during the current session of the General Assembly, during which the Group continued with the second reading of the draft convention,

1. Takes note with satisfactions of the reports of the Working Group on the Drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families and, in particular, of the progress made by the Working Group on the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention;

2. Decides that, in order to enable it to complete its task as soon as possible, the Working Group shall again hold an inter-sessional meeting of two weeks' duration in New York, immediately after the first regular session of 1986 of the Economic and Social Council;

3. Invites the Secretary-General to transmit to Governments the reports of the Working Group so as to enable the members of the Group to continue the drafting, in second reading, of the draft convention during the inter-sessional meeting to be held in the spring of 1986, as well as to transmit the results obtained at that meeting to the General Assembly for consideration during its forty-first session;

4. Also invites the Secretary-General to transmit the above-mentioned documents to the competent organs of the United Nations and to international organizations concerned, for their information, so as to enable them to continue their co-operation with the Working Group;

5. Decides that the Working Group shall meet during the forty-first session of the General Assembly, preferably at the beginning of the session, to continue the second reading of the draft international convention on the protection of the rights of all migrant workers and their families.

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) without vote, 2 December (meeting 60); 25-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.70); agenda item 12.

The United States said it supported the principle of drafting a convention, but felt that such a task should be the responsibility of the International Labour Organisation (ILO). The United Kingdom expressed reservations as to the usefulness of the work of the Working Group.

By resolution 40/28, the Assembly welcomed CERD'S efforts to eliminate discrimination against migrant workers and their families, to promote their rights and to achieve their full equality, including the freedom to maintain their cultural characteristics.

Protection of minorities

Activities related to protection of minorities continued to focus in 1985 on the elaboration of a draft declaration on the rights of persons belonging to national, ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities. As in previous years, the Commission on Human Rights set up an informal open-ended working group which held meetings on 20 February and 5 March. The preambular part of the draft declaration, on much of which preliminary agreement had been reached, was annexed to the Working Group's report.<sup>(60)</sup> Noting that a definition of the term "minority" was essential, a task on which the Sub-Commission was working, the group decided to postpone work on the draft to its next session. It was agreed that the Commission should urge the Sub-Commission to submit proposals on the definition of the term by that time and that the Secretariat should be requested to compile proposals and comments by Governments and organizations on the articles of the revised draft.

On 14 March,<sup>(61)</sup> the Commission urged its Sub-Commission to give highest priority to consideration of proposals for the definition of "minority" and to submit them to the Commission's 1986 session, when it would set up another working group to continue elaboration of the declaration.

After considering a study<sup>(62)</sup> and a proposed definition of the term "minority" by one of its members, Jules Deschênes (Canada), the Sub-Commission decided on 28 August<sup>(63)</sup> to transmit it to the Commission, together with the records of the Sub-Commission's discussion.

In resolution 40/28, the General Assembly welcomed CERD'S efforts to eliminate all forms of discrimination against national or ethnic minorities, among others, and called on States parties to the 1965 Convention against racial discrimination<sup>(4)</sup> to adopt legislative and other measures, in conformity with the Convention, to protect fully their rights.

Draft declaration on the human rights of non-citizens

Pursuant to a 1984 Assembly resolution,<sup>(64)</sup> the Secretary-General, in January 1985, requested all Member States to submit comments on a draft declaration on the human rights of individuals not citizens of the country in which they lived; the text had been elaborated since 1980 by a sessional working group established for that purpose. Replies from nine Governments were included in a report<sup>(65)</sup> of 18 September and later addenda.

In a bid to finalize the draft declaration, an open-ended Working Group that met during the Assembly's 1985 session held 11 meetings between 7 October and 3 December. After completing the second reading of the operative part, the Group adopted the draft declaration as a whole by consensus and annexed it to its report<sup>(66)</sup> to the Assembly's Third Committee.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting without vote on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/144 on 13 December 1985.

Declaration on the human rights of individuals who are not nationals of the country in which they live
The General Assembly,

Having considered the question of the human rights of individuals who are not nationals of the country in which they live,

Decides to adopt the Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live, which is annexed to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Declaration on the Human Rights of
Individuals Who are not
Nationals of the Country in which They Live

The General Assembly,

Considering that the Charter of the United Nations encourages universal respect for and observance of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all human beings, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in that Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims further that everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law, that all are equal before the law and entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law, and that all are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of that Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination,

Being aware that the States parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in these Covenants will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Conscious that, with improving communications and the development of peaceful and friendly relations among countries, individuals increasingly live in countries of which they are not nationals,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations.

Recognizing that the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms provided for in international instruments should also be ensured for individuals who are not nationals of the country in which they live,

Proclaims this Declaration:

Article 1

For the purposes of this Declaration, the term "alien" shall apply with due regard to qualifications made in subsequent articles, to any individual who is not a national of the State in which he or she is present.

Article 2

1. Nothing in this Declaration shall be interpreted as legitimizing the illegal entry into and presence in a State of any alien, nor shall any provision be interpreted as restricting the right of any State to promulgate laws and regulations concerning the entry of aliens and the terms and conditions of their stay or to establish differences between nationals and aliens. However, such laws and regulations shall not be incompatible with the international legal obligations of that State, including those in the field of human rights.

2. This Declaration shall not prejudice the enjoyment of the rights accorded by domestic law and of the rights which under international law a State is obliged to accord to aliens, even where this Declaration does not recognize such rights or recognizes them to a lesser extent.

Article 3

Every State shall make public its national legislation or regulations affecting aliens.

Article 4

Aliens shall observe the laws of the State in which they reside or are present and regard with respect the customs and traditions of the people of that State.

Article 5

1. Aliens shall enjoy, in accordance with domestic law and subject to the relevant international obligations of the State in which they are present, in particular the following rights:

- (e) The right to freedom of thought, opinion, conscience and religion; the right to manifest their religion or beliefs, subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others;
- (f) The right to retain their own language, culture and tradition;
- (g) The right to transfer abroad earnings, savings or other personal monetary assets, subject to domestic currency regulations.

2. Subject to such restrictions as are prescribed by law and which are necessary in a democratic society to protect national security, public safety, public order, public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others, and which are consistent with the other rights recognized in the relevant international instruments and those set forth in this Declaration, aliens shall enjoy the following rights:

- (a) The right to leave the country;
- (b) The right to freedom of expression;
- (c) The right to peaceful assembly;
- (d) The right to own property alone as well as in association with others, subject to domestic law.

3. Subject to the provisions referred to in paragraph 2, aliens lawfully in the territory of a State shall enjoy the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose their residence within the borders of the State.

4. Subject to national legislation and due authorization, the spouse and minor or dependent children of an alien lawfully residing in the territory of a State shall be admitted to accompany, join and stay with the alien.

Article 6

No alien shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and, in particular, no alien shall be subjected without his or her free consent to medical or scientific experimentation.

Article 7

An alien lawfully in the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom only in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law and shall, except where compelling reasons of national security otherwise require, be allowed to submit the reasons why he or she should not be expelled and to have the case reviewed by, and be represented for the purpose before, the competent authority or a person or persons specially designated by the competent authority. Individual or collective expulsion of such aliens on grounds of race, colour, religion, culture, descent or national or ethnic origin is prohibited.

Article 8

1. Aliens lawfully residing in the territory of a State shall also enjoy, in accordance with the national laws, the following rights, subject to their obligations under article 4:

- (a) The right to safe and healthy working conditions, to fair wages and equal remuneration for work of equal value without distinction of any kind, in particular, women being guaranteed conditions of work not inferior to those enjoyed by men, with equal pay for equal work;
- (b) The right to join trade unions and other organizations or associations of their choice and to participate in their activities. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of this right other than those prescribed by law and which are necessary, in a democratic society, in the interests of national security or public order or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others;
- (c) The right to health protection, medical care, social security, social services, education, rest and leisure, provided that they fulfil the requirements under the relevant regulations for participation and that undue strain is not placed on the resources of the State.

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) without vote, 6 December (meeting 71): draft by Morocco (A/C.3/40/L.80), rally revised; agenda item 12.
Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 69, 71: plenary 116.

Algeria and India felt that not enough time had been given to study the Declaration. Algeria reserved its position with respect to provisions it thought might be incompatible with the convention on the rights of migrant workers currently being drafted. Yugoslavia felt that the wording of Article 5, paragraph 1, implied that domestic law was subordinate to the international instruments to which a State adhered. Mexico did not believe that the provisions of article 8, guaranteeing rights to aliens lawfully residing in a State, were consistent with those of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>(67)</sup> and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,<sup>(68)</sup> which stipulated that those rights should be granted to everyone without restriction. India said it would apply the provisions of the Declaration in accordance with its position with respect to the two International Covenants on Human Rights and its national legislation. Cuba reserved its position with respect to the provisions of the resolution.

Malaysia maintained reservations in view of the complexities of the matter, which it said needed further extensive study by Malaysian local authorities. Denmark observed that national legislation might contain provisions under which the enjoyment of certain rights were subject to authorization by national authorities; this understanding pertained in particular to article 5, paragraphs 2 (c) and 4. It pointed out that article 1, read in conjunction with the other articles, did not clearly specify which aliens were covered by the individual articles. Cameroon reserved its position on paragraph 2 of article 2, and on articles 5 and 8, until the appropriate authorities could ascertain whether they were in keeping with its legislation.

Civil and political rights

In a September 1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> on international conditions and human rights (see p. 882), the Secretary-General reviewed the situation with regard to civil and political rights. The right to life in particular was affected by intensified armed conflicts in many parts of the world and by the threat resulting from the existence and proliferation of nuclear weapons. Other practices involving denial of the right to life included summary and arbitrary executions and disappearances. During the two-year review period, there had also been an alarming number of reported cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment in various parts of the world, and there were allegations of grave and persistent violations of the rights of detained persons in many countries, such as arrests and detentions on vague charges or without grounds, imprisonment of individuals on account of the non-violent exercise of their fundamental rights, detention without trial, extraterritorial abduction and forced repatriation, detention incommunicado, unfair trial procedures, abuse of executive and preventive detention, and death during detention. Other major human rights problems, such as violations of trade union rights and related civil liberties and the persistence of different forms of forced labour, were consistently referred to in reports by ILO.

While those problems provided serious cause for concern, the Secretary-General felt that the overall picture of the past two years also reflected a number of positive and highly encouraging developments, most notably the return to democratic forms of government by a number of countries and the continuation of efforts in other States to achieve a more democratic order and to reconcile in a constructive manner the sometimes conflicting interests of differing population groups within national borders. The return to democracy had in many instances been accompanied by a spirit of national renewal and a major effort to secure justice both for victims and perpetrators of human rights violations.

At the international level, the Secretary-General said, the establishment of various procedures for monitoring human rights problems was a tribute to the increasing recognition by States of the importance of identifying, exposing and seeking to remedy major violations at the earliest possible moment. In addition, States were increasingly prepared to co-operate in applying those procedures.

Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and Optional Protocol

Accessions and ratifications

As at 31 December 1985, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol thereto, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966<sup>(2)</sup> and in force since 1976,<sup>(3)</sup> had been ratified or acceded to by 80 and 35 States, respectively, after San Marino's accession in October 1985. San Marino and Spain were the two States which acceded to the Optional Protocol in 1985. Spain made the declaration under article 41 of the Covenant recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee to receive and consider communications that a State party claimed that another was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant.

In his report to the Assembly on the International Covenants on Human Rights,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General provided information on the status of the Covenant and the Protocol as at 1 September 1985 (see p. 891).

Implementation

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Pursuant to an interim arrangement of the Human Rights Committee under which the Committee was to transmit regularly to the Council the texts of the general comments adopted by the Committee and transmit its full annual report directly to the Assembly later in the year, the Secretary General, by a note of 11 March,<sup>(5)</sup> transmitted the Committee's general comments on Covenant articles 1 and 14 and article 6 adopted, respectively, at the Committee's March/April and October/November 1984 sessions.<sup>(6)</sup> The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/105 of 8 February, had agreed to the interim arrangement and, without prejudice to further Council consideration of the current arrangements, authorized the Secretary-General to transmit the Committee's annual report directly to the Assembly. On 24 May, by decision 1985/117, the Council requested the Secretary-General to transmit the report (see below) directly to the 1985 regular session. The Council also took note of the Secretary-General's March note. The text of the decision had been orally proposed by the Council President, on behalf of the Bureau, following information consultations.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, on 14 March,<sup>(7)</sup> expressed appreciation for the Human Rights Committee's continued striving for uniform standards in implementing the Covenant and the Optional Protocol and invited States to become parties to them and to consider making the declaration under article 41. Emphasizing the importance of strict compliance with those instruments, it stressed the obligation of a State party availing itself of the Covenant's right of derogation immediately to inform the other States parties of its reasons for doing so. The Commission hoped that representation by experts for presentation of reports would become universal and encouraged Governments to give the Covenant and Protocol the widest possible publicity. It requested a report in 1986 on the status of these instruments, as well as on the Council's work on implementing the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights,<sup>(s)</sup> and asked the Secretary-General to consider ways of assisting States parties to prepare their reports.

Human Rights Committee activities. The Human Rights Committee, established under article 28 of the Covenant, held three sessions in 1985: the twenty-fourth in New York from 25 March to 12 April; the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth at Geneva from 8 to 26 July and from 21 October to 8 November.

The Committee considered reports and additional information submitted by nine States-Afghanistan, the Dominican Republic, Finland, Luxembourg, New Zealand (Cook Islands), Spain, Sweden, the Ukrainian SSR and the United Kingdom-under article 40 of the Covenant. The Committee also concluded consideration of adopted views on six communications from individuals claiming that their rights under the Covenant had been violated and that they had exhausted all available domestic remedies. The cases concerned Finland (1), Madagascar (2), Suriname (1) and Uruguay (2). The Committee decided that eight other such communications from individuals were inadmissible.

On 25 July, the Committee unanimously adopted its ninth annual report<sup>(9)</sup> to the Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Taking note, in resolution 40/115 (see p. 891), of the Human Rights Committee's report, the General Assembly expressed satisfaction with the Committee's performance, asked the Secretary-General to give the Committee's work more publicity, and voiced appreciation to those States parties to the Covenant that had submitted their reports, while urging others to do the same, including those that had been requested to provide additional information, and urging all those that had not become parties to the Covenant to do so. It further invited the States parties to consider making the declaration under article 41. It noted with satisfaction that the majority of parties to the Covenant had been represented by experts for the presentation of their reports. The Assembly emphasized the importance of the strictest compliance with the Covenant and the Protocol, requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1986 a report on the status of those instruments and encouraged all Governments to publish them in as many languages as possible and ensure for them widest possible publicity.

State of siege or emergency

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In 1984, the Sub-Commission had requested that it be authorized to appoint a special rapporteur to prepare an explanatory paper on the best way of drawing up and annually updating a list of countries that proclaimed or terminated a state of emergency. An annual report by the Sub-Commission on compliance with national and international rules governing the legality of the introduction of a state of siege or emergency was to contain that information (the right of derogation from provisions of the Covenant in a state of emergency was provided for in article 4).

The Commission on Human Rights recommended a draft resolution to the Economic and Social Council in response to the Sub-Committee's request. The Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted it on 30 May, as resolution 1985/37, without vote. The Commission had approved the text on 11 March<sup>(11)</sup> by 28 votes to none, with 9 abstentions.

The administration of justice and the human rights of detainees

The Economic and Social Council

1. Authorises the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to appoint a special rapporteur to carry out the work referred to in paragraph 1 of Sub-Commission resolution 1983/30 of 6 September 1983 and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1983/18 of 22 February 1983 and decision 1984/104 of 6 March 1984 on an annual basis:

2. Requests the Secretary-General to give the special rapporteur all the assistance he may require in his work;

3. Requests the special rapporteur to submit his first annual report to the Sub-Commission at its thirty-ninth session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/37

30	May	1985	Meeting	25	Adopted	without	vote
----	-----	------	---------	----	---------	---------	------

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) without vote, 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Sub-Commission action. By a 30 August 1985 resolution,<sup>(12)</sup> the Sub-Commission expressed appreciation to Special Rapporteur Leandro Despouy (Argentina) for an explanatory paper on the topic that he had presented at the current session. It requested him to draw up a list of countries that had proclaimed or terminated a state of emergency and present his first annual report to the Sub-Commission in 1986.

Chile

In March, the Commission on Human Rights urgently called on Chilean authorities to end the regime of exception and especially the practice of declaring states of emergency, under which serious violations of human rights were committed (see p. 913).

Paraguay

Following a 1984 request by the Sub-Commission, the Secretary-General submitted to it in July 1985 a note<sup>(13)</sup> containing information on new developments in the question of ending the state of siege in Paraguay. In response to his request of 28 May for relevant information, Paraguay had explained on 20 June that the state of siege was applied only in the area of the capital, that a declaration of an amnesty was pointless because there were no political prisoners in the country, and that the Commission on Human Rights had been informed at its recent sessions of the work on modernizing Paraguayan penal legislation. An additional inquiry had established, the Secretary-General said, that Paraguay was not a State party to the American Convention on Human Rights and was under no obligation to inform the Commission pursuant to that Convention of any derogations from it.

The Sub-Commission, on 29 August,<sup>(14)</sup> considered with appreciation the spirit of co-operation of the Paraguayan authorities, inviting them to persevere in their efforts. While satisfied by recent releases of political prisoners, the Sub-Commission insisted that exiled or banished persons be allowed to return. It requested the Commission once more to recommend that Paraguay ratify the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and asked the Secretary-General to report to it in 1986 on new developments.

Self-determination of peoples

The Commission's actions and debate on the right of people to self-determination, as well as action taken by the Economic and Social Council in 1985, were summarized by the Secretary-General in a report<sup>(21)</sup> to the General Assembly on the universal realization of that right. The report also contained a summary of responses from nine Governments, eight specialized agencies and three NGOs to the Assembly's 1984 request<sup>(22)</sup> for information on their assistance to colonial Territories and peoples.

Following the pattern of previous years, the Assembly adopted in 1985 two resolutions on the right to self-determination—a right it repeatedly reaffirmed for individual Non-Self-Governing Territories (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV). The Assembly also reaffirmed, in resolution 40/158, the legitimacy of the struggle of peoples under colonial domination, foreign occupation or racist régimes and their inalienable right to self-determination and independence.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions concerning the right of people to self-determination. Resolution 40/24 was adopted without vote.

Universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the importance, for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights, of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations and embodied in the International Covenants on Human Rights, as well as in the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples contained in General Assembly resolution 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960,

Welcoming the progressive exercise of the right to self-determination by peoples under colonial, foreign or alien occupation and their emergence into sovereign statehood and independence,

Deeply concerned at the continuation of acts or threats of foreign military intervention and occupation that are threatening to suppress, or have already suppressed, the right to self-determination of an increasing number of sovereign peoples and nations,

Expressing grave concern that, as a consequence of the persistence of such actions, millions of people have been and are being uprooted from their homes as refugees and displaced persons, and emphasizing the urgent need for concerted international action to alleviate their condition,

Recalling the relevant resolutions regarding the violation of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights as a result of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, adopted by the Commission on Human Rights at its thirty-sixth, thirty-seventh, thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth and forty-first sessions,

Reiterating its resolutions 35/35 B of 14 November 1980, 36/10 of 28 October 1981, 37/42 of 3 December 1982, 38/16 of 22 November 1983 and 39/18 of 23 November 1984,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms that the universal realization of the right of all peoples, including those under colonial, foreign and alien domination, to self-determination is a fundamental condition for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights and for the preservation and promotion of such rights;

2. Declares its firm opposition to acts of foreign military intervention, aggression and occupation, since these have resulted in the suppression of the right of peoples to self-determination and other human rights in certain parts of the world;

3. Calls upon those States responsible to cease immediately their military intervention and occupation of foreign countries and territories and all acts of repression, discrimination, exploitation and maltreatment, particularly the brutal and inhuman methods reportedly employed for the execution of these acts against the peoples concerned;

4. Deplores the plight of the millions of refugees and displaced persons who have been uprooted by the aforementioned acts and reaffirms their right to return to their homes voluntarily in safety and honour;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention to the violation of human rights, especially the right to self-determination, resulting from foreign military intervention, aggression or occupation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report on this issue to the General Assembly at its forty-first session under the item entitled "Importance of the universal realization of the right of peoples to self-determination and of the speedy granting of independence to colonial countries and peoples for the effective guarantee and observance of human rights".

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Austria, El Salvador, Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Ireland, Japan, Portugal. Spain.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly voted on paragraph 26, retaining it by a recorded vote of 84 to 5, with 39 abstentions. Prior to that, the Third Committee had retained the paragraph by a recorded vote of 74 to 4, with 39 abstentions.

Speaking on behalf of the 10 EC members, Luxembourg said they could not support the text, submitted without consultation with various groups, because it lacked balance in several respects and neglected to mention the situations in Afghanistan and Kampuchea. The Ten, as well as Spain, could not accept the assertion that maintaining relations with a State was tantamount to approving its policies. Israel said the text, singling it out for attack, bore no relation to reality, reflected the prejudices of certain delegations and the diktats of the automatic majority at the United Nations, and failed to mention and condemn the links between the Arab States and South Africa. It also protested the description of PLO as the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. Uruguay said it was up to the Palestinians to choose their representatives once they could freely exercise their right to self-determination. Australia said it opposed the text because of long-standing objections to a number of elements; both Australia and Spain had reservations about reaffirming resolutions of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) of which they were not members. The United Arab Emirates said its affirmative vote was based on its support of a 1975 Assembly resolution,<sup>(23)</sup> because it felt that the link between racism and Zionism must be stressed. Turkey said it was opposed to singling out Member States and groups of countries for criticism and condemnation.

Although agreeing with many elements of the text, Austria, Portugal, Spain and Uruguay said they could not support all of it, particularly the reference to armed struggle in paragraph 2. Botswana reserved its position on the paragraphs pertaining to economic sanctions, noting that while supportive of them in principle it had not the capacity to participate in them, but did not wish to serve as an excuse for the failure of others to impose sanctions. Honduras felt that the text represented a confusion of ideas and subjects already dealt with by the Assembly in specific resolutions.

Malaysia said it abstained in the vote on paragraph 26 in keeping with its vote on the 1984 Assembly resolution<sup>(24)</sup> on the question of Western Sahara. Morocco voted in favour to act in unison with the African Group, but opposed the reference to that resolution. Zaire said it voted against paragraph 26 because of its firm conviction that the problem of Western Sahara could be solved only through a referendum. Swaziland had reservations concerning the twelfth preambular paragraph and paragraphs 23, 24 and 26 on sanctions. While supporting the overall text, Argentina and Burma said they had reservations with regard to the wording of some provisions. Portugal objected to the wording of the eighth, ninth and twenty-third preambular paragraphs, and operative paragraphs 2, 5, 21, 22, 24 and 31. It recalled reservations it had expressed at international conferences on Namibia and Palestine, and had not participated in the conferences mentioned in paragraphs 21 and 24. Ecuador also could not support paragraphs referring to conferences in which it had not taken part. Mexico said paragraph 5 referred to a Palestinian programme of action on which it had reservations; moreover, paragraph 21 mentioned a Declaration in whose drafting it had not participated.

Afghanistan

On 13 March 1985,<sup>(17)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, by a roll-call vote of 31 to 7, with 5 abstentions, reaffirmed its profound concern that the people of Afghanistan continued to be denied their right to self-determination, to determine their own form of government, and to choose their economic, political and social system free from outside intervention; subversion, coercion or constraint. It called for a political settlement based on immediate foreign troop withdrawal from Afghanistan, full respect for the country's independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and non-aligned status, and strict observance of the principle of non-intervention and non-interference. Affirming the right of the Afghan refugees to return to their homes, the Commission urged a settlement enabling the Afghan people to determine their destiny free from outside interference. It requested the Secretary-General to continue to search for a political solution, urged all concerned to continue to co-operate with him, and appealed for humanitarian relief assistance to alleviate, in co-ordination with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), the hardships of Afghan refugees.

(See also p. 905 and, for details of the situation in Afghanistan, see p. 232.)

Kampuchea

Reiterating its condemnation of persistent human rights violations in Kampuchea, particularly the repeated attacks by the occupying forces against civilians along the Thai-Kampuchean border, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed, by a resolution adopted by a roll-call vote of 28 to 8, with 5 abstentions, on 27 February 1985,<sup>(16)</sup> that the continued illegal occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived Kampucheans of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary human rights violation in that country. The Commission emphasized that the withdrawal of forces, restoration of Kampuchea's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity, recognition of the Kampucheans' right to self-determination and a commitment by all States to non-interference were essential components for a solution to the Kampuchea problem. It reaffirmed its call for a cessation of hostilities and for an immediate withdrawal of foreign forces, to enable Kampucheans to exercise their fundamental human rights free from foreign interference and to determine their future through free and fair elections under United Nations supervision, and make possible the return of all refugees and efforts towards a political solution within the framework of the 1981 Declaration on Kampuchea.<sup>(25)</sup> The Commission asked the Secretary-General to intensify efforts towards a political settlement and restoration of human rights in Kampuchea and requested the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea (see p. 225) to continue its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/155, by roll-call vote.

Right of peoples to self-determination and its application to peoples under colonial or alien domination or foreign occupation

At its 25th plenary meeting, on 30 May 1985, the Council fully endorsed Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/12 of 27 February 1985, by which the Commission, inter alia, reaffirmed that the continuing illegal occupation of Kampuchea by foreign forces deprived the people of Kampuchea of the exercise of their right to self-determination and constituted the primary violation of human rights in Kampuchea at present. The Council reaffirmed its decisions 1981/154 of 8 May 1981, 1982/143 of 7 May 1982, 1983/155 of 27 May 1983 and 1984/148 of 24 May 1984 and reiterated its call for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Kampuchea in order to allow the people of Kampuchea to exercise their fundamental freedoms and human rights, including the right to self-determination as contained in the Declaration on Kampuchea adopted by the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 July 1981 and in General Assembly resolutions 34/22 of 14 November 1979, 35/6 of 22 October 1980, 36/5 of 21 October 1981, 37/6 of 28 October 1982, 38/3 of 27 October 1983 and 39/5 of 30 October 1984.

The Council expressed its grave concern at the increasing activities of the foreign forces in Kampuchea, particularly at the severity and the scope of the attacks on Kampuchean civilian encampments along the Thai-Kampuchean border since November 1984, resulting in serious loss of life and property of Kampucheans and forcing more than 230,000 Kampuchean civilians to flee into Thailand.

The Council took note of the statements made by the Secretary-General on 27 December 1984 and 13 March 1985 expressing serious concern about the escalation of fighting along the Thai-Kampuchean border and his appeal to all concerned to avoid endangering thousands of Kampuchean civilian lives and adding to the misery and deprivation which already afflict these most unfortunate people. The Council noted with appreciation the visit undertaken by the Secretary-General to the South-East Asian region in January-February 1985 in an effort to bring about a peaceful solution to the Kampuchean problem.

The Council requested the Secretary-General to report to the Council any further violations of humanitarian principles perpetrated against Kampuchean civilian refugees by the foreign occupying troops along the border, and also requested him to continue to monitor closely the developments in Kampuchea and to intensify efforts, including the use of his good offices, to bring about a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem and the restoration of fundamental human rights in Kampuchea.

The Council took note of the communiqués issued by the Ad Hoc Committee of the International Conference on Kampuchea on 17 January 1985 and 15 February 1985. The Council noted with appreciation the ongoing efforts of the Committee and requested that the Committee should continue its work, pending the reconvening of the Conference.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/155

38-5-7 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) by roll-call vote (37-5-7). 24 May (meeting 151; 34-nation draft (E/1985/C.2/L.8); agenda item 16.

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Haiti, Iceland, Indonesia, Japan, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda; Saudi Arabia; Senegal, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bulgaria, German Democratic Republic, India, Poland, USSR.
Abstaining: Algeria, Congo, Finland, Lebanon, Mexico, Suriname, Uganda.
*Subsequently said its vote should have been recorded as an abstention.

Viet Nam said the text, while reflecting political manoeuvres aimed at subjecting Kampucheans to the Pol Pot régime, distorted the actual human rights situation in Kampuchea, failed to take account of the different views of the parties and constituted interference in the affairs of a sovereign State. Sharing the view that it represented unacceptable interference in Kampuchea's affairs, the Lao People's Democratic Republic felt that, instead of protecting rights, the text would violate the United Nations Charter and international human rights instruments, and reduce the chances for a settlement in South-East Asia.

The USSR, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Poland, said they opposed attempts to use United Nations bodies to buttress the Pol Pot criminals, and pointed out that instead of condemning an undeclared war being waged by mercenaries against Kampuchea, the decision sought to return the Kampucheans to the era of that genocidal régime.

Democratic Kampuchea said that the only objective of the current struggle of the Kampucheans and the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea was the total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea.

Sweden said that, although it had voted in favour, it did not subscribe to every formulation in the Commission's February resolution. Withdrawal of all foreign forces, the restoration of sovereignty and the right of the Kampucheans to self-determination must be the basis for any just settlement.

(For details on the Kampuchea situation, see p. 221).

Palestinians

The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution<sup>(15)</sup> adopted on 26 February 1985 by a roll-call vote of 29 to 7, with 7 abstentions, condemned the continued occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories by Israel and its aggression and practices against the Palestinians, and demanded Israel's immediate, unconditional and total withdrawal. The Commission reaffirmed the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, to an independent and sovereign State, and to return to their homes and property. It recognized their right to regain their rights by all means in accordance with the Charter, and reaffirmed that their future could be decided only with their participation, through their legitimate and sole representative, PLO.

The Commission rejected all partial agreements and separate treaties in so far as they violated Palestinian rights and contradicted the principles of a just and comprehensive Middle East solution, as well as the "autonomy" plan under the 1978 Camp David accords,<sup>(26)</sup> declaring them invalid. Reaffirming its support for the 1983 Geneva Declaration on Palestine<sup>(27)</sup> and for the idea of an international peace conference on the Middle East under United Nations auspices, the Commission regretted the negative attitude of Israel and the United States towards such a conference. States, United Nations bodies and other international organizations were urged to support the Palestinians, through PLO, in the struggle to restore their rights.

(For other resolutions dealing with human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, see p. 925; see also p. 326.)

South Africa and Namibia

On 26 February 1985, the Commission on Human Rights adopted, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 4, with 7 abstentions, a resolution<sup>(20)</sup> calling on States to take steps to enable the dependent peoples of South Africa and Namibia to exercise fully and without further delay their right to self-determination and independence. It reaffirmed the right of Namibians to freedom and independence in a united Namibia, as well as the legitimacy of their struggle and that of the oppressed people of South Africa by all means, including armed struggle. It urged States to assist them and called for immediate implementation of the 1983 Paris Declaration and Programme of Action on Namibia.<sup>(28)</sup> Rejecting the so-called "new constitution" as null and void and stressing that majority rule through full and free adult suffrage was the only guarantee of peace, the Commission demanded full respect for the human rights of all people detained or imprisoned in South Africa because of their struggle for independence, and demanded their immediate release.

It reaffirmed that continued colonialism in all forms and manifestations was incompatible with the Charter, the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights<sup>(29)</sup> and the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.<sup>(30)</sup> The Commission condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, its attempts to dismember the Territory, its repression, torture and killing of workers, schoolchildren and other opponents of apartheid, its policy of bantustanization and its acts of aggression and destabilization against front-line and other neighbouring States. It also condemned collaboration with South Africa, calling on Western and other countries to sever relations with the régime, and the continuing activities of foreign economic and other interests impeding the implementation of the 1960 Declaration. It declared the illegal occupation of Namibia to be an act of aggression and demanded the withdrawal of South Africa's occupation forces from Angola. Reaffirming that using mercenaries against national liberation movements and States was a criminal act and that mercenaries were criminals, the Commission called on Governments to enact legislation declaring their recruitment, financing, training and transit to be punishable offences, to prohibit their nationals from serving as mercenaries, and to report on such legislation to the Secretary-General.

Pursuant to a similar provision of a 1984 Commission resolution<sup>(31)</sup> on self-determination as it applied to South Africa and Namibia, seven Governments provided the information requested, which the Secretary-General summarized in a report<sup>(32)</sup> submitted to the Commission in 1985.

oppressed people of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination and independence (see p. 903); in another,<sup>(34)</sup> it reiterated that that right could be legally exercised by the Namibian people only in accordance with conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978<sup>(35)</sup> (see p. 899).

Noting with deep regret the announcement on 18 April 1985 of the installation by South Africa of an "interim Government" in Namibia, the Sub-Commission, by a resolution<sup>(36)</sup> adopted on 27 August by 18 votes to none, with 2 abstentions, reaffirmed the rights of the Namibians to self-determination and independence in a united Namibia with complete territorial integrity, and the importance of urgent implementation of the 1978 Security Council resolution<sup>(37)</sup> approving the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia. The Sub-Commission demanded that all Namibian political prisoners be immediately and unconditionally released and that all captured freedom fighters be accorded prisoner-of-war status. It called on United Nations Members to take measures against South Africa under Chapter VII of the Charter in order to isolate it, and requested the Commission Chairman to convey to the Secretary-General and the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council the Sub-Commission members' deep concern at the continuing failure to bring about Namibia's independence and at South Africa's latest efforts to impose an "internal settlement".

Western Sahara

On 26 February 1985,<sup>(18)</sup> by a roll-call vote of 30 to none, with 12 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that the question of Western Sahara was one of decolonization to be completed through the exercise of the people's right to self-determination, and that a political solution lay in the implementation of the 1983 OAU resolution quoted in an Assembly resolution.<sup>(38)</sup> The Commission requested the parties to the conflict to negotiate directly towards bringing about a cease-fire and creating conditions for a referendum for self-determination, welcomed OAU and United Nations efforts to promote a just solution and decided to consider the question again in 1986. (See also p. 1137.)

Rights of detained persons

Treatment of prisoners and detainees

Report of the Secretary-General. In connection with the Sub-Commission's annual review of developments in the administration of justice and the human rights of detainees, the Secretary-General in May 1985 submitted a report, with later addenda,<sup>(39)</sup> summarizing information from 13 Governments, three specialized agencies and two intergovernmental organizations. In July, he presented a synopsis of material from NGOs.<sup>(40)</sup>

Activities of the Working Group on Detention. A five-member sessional Working Group on Detention, set up by the Sub-Commission, met between 12 and 22 August.<sup>(41)</sup>

The Group recommended to the Sub-Commission a draft declaration on unacknowledged detention (see p. 865) and decided to transmit the question of administrative detention without charge or trial to the Sub-Commission for consideration. After examining the subject of use of force by law enforcement officials and military personnel, the Working Group suggested that the Sub-Commission consider proposing, through the Secretary-General, that the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders study ways to promote international technical co-operation in restraints on the use of force by those persons (see p. 866).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/146, without vote.

Human rights in the administration of justice

The General Assembly,

Acknowledging the important work accomplished by the Seventh Congress, in particular in relation to the formulation and application of United Nations standards and norms in the administration of justice under item 7 of its agenda,

1. Deplores the continued use of cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, prohibited under international law, and strongly condemns the practice of summary or arbitrary executions;

Encourages the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities of the Commission on Human Rights, in giving further consideration to the question of the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers, which is currently on its agenda, to take into account the Basic Principles adopted by the Seventh Congress in making final recommendations at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the Model Agreement on the Transfer of Foreign Prisoners and recommendations on the treatment of foreign prisoners, also adopted unanimously by the Seventh Congress, and invites Member States to take the Model Agreement into account in establishing treaty relations with other Member States or in revising existing treaty relations;

5. Also takes note with appreciation of the recommendations made by the Seventh Congress with a view to ensuring more effective application of existing standards, in particular the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and safeguards guaranteeing the rights of those facing the death penalty;

6. Calls upon Member States to spare no effort in providing for adequate mechanisms, procedures and resources so as to ensure the implementation of these recommendations, both in law and in practice;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to assist Member States, at their request, in implementing these recommendations and to report thereon to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

8. Requests the Economic and Social Council, through the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control, to give special attention to effective ways and means of implementing existing standards, to pay due attention to new developments in this area and to keep these matters under constant review;

9. Invites the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, to continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General in these endeavours by providing assistance, as may be appropriate, and by submitting proposals for relevant action to the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control;

Draft principles for the protection of detainees

In 1985, a Working Group open to all members of the General Assembly's Sixth (Legal) Committee continued work on a draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention and Imprisonment. The draft originated from a text adopted by the Sub-Commission in 1978,<sup>(42)</sup> which had since undergone revisions by a succession of working groups: of the Third Committee in 1980,<sup>(43)</sup> and of the Sixth Committee in 1981<sup>(44)</sup> 1982,<sup>(45)</sup> 1983<sup>(46)</sup> and 1984.<sup>(47)</sup>

The 1985 Working Group, established pursuant to a 1984 Assembly decision,<sup>(48)</sup> met in New York between 26 September and 22 November. It concluded the first reading of principles 29 to 35, which covered: the right to a request or complaint regarding treatment; inquiry into the death or disappearance of a detainee or prisoner; the right to compensation; presumption of innocence; prompt appearance before a judicial authority; entitlement to trial or release; and opportunity to obtain provisional release. The approved provisional texts of all the articles were annexed to the Group's report.<sup>(49)</sup>

On 11 December, the General Assembly adopted decision 40/420, on the recommendation of the Sixth Committee, taking note with appreciation of the Working Group's report. The Assembly decided that an open-ended working group of the Sixth Committee would be established at the 1986 session with a view to expediting the finalization of the draft Body of Principles; it requested the Secretary-General to circulate to Member States the report of the 1985 Working Group.

The Assembly acted without vote, as had the Sixth Committee,<sup>(50)</sup> which approved the text on 27 November, as proposed by Sweden.<sup>(51)</sup>

Protection of juvenile prisoners

On 29 August 1985,<sup>(52)</sup> the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to invite Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, intergovernmental organizations, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) and NGOs to submit information on the incarceration of persons under the age of 18 with adult prisoners, and to solicit their views on ways of preventing that practice for a report in 1987. States were encouraged to maintain records on children placed in adult penal facilities.

Torture and cruel treatment

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1985,<sup>(53)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights decided, by a roll-call vote of 30 to none, with 12 abstentions, to appoint for one year a special rapporteur who, working with discretion, would examine questions relevant to torture—seeking information from Governments, specialized agencies and inter- and non-governmental organizations—and report in 1986 on the occurrence and extent of its practice, together with his conclusions and recommendations. The Secretary-General was asked to assist the rapporteur and to appeal to all Governments to do likewise. Pursuant to the Commission's request, its Chairman appointed on 12 May Peter H. Kooijmans (Netherlands) as Special Rapporteur.

The Commission's decision was approved by the Economic and Social Council on 30 May by decision 1985/144. The Council acted without vote, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which similarly approved on 24 May the text as proposed by the Commission.

Status of the Convention against torture

Following its adoption by the General Assembly in December 1984,<sup>(54)</sup> the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment was opened for signature in New York on 4 February 1985.

Human Rights Commission action. By an 11 March 1985 resolution,<sup>(55)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights invited all States to become parties to the Convention as a matter of priority. It asked its Sub-Commission to include the Convention in its list<sup>(56)</sup> of international human rights instruments to which it sought to find ways of encouraging adherence. It also requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Assembly in 1985 and the Commission in 1986 a report on its status.

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the Commission, the Secretary-General reported to the Assembly that 33 States had signed the Convention as at 1 September.<sup>(57)</sup> By 31 December 1985, eight more States had signed, bringing the total to 41.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The item "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment" was placed on the agenda of the General Assembly's 1985 session at the request of the Netherlands.<sup>(58)</sup>

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/128, without vote.

Status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, both of which provide that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3452(XXX) of 9 December 1975,

Recalling further its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment and called upon all Governments to consider signing and ratifying the Convention as a matter of priority,

Mindful of the relevance, for the eradication of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, of the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials and of the Principles of Medical Ethics,

Convinced of the desirability of early finalization and subsequent adoption of the draft Body of Principles for the Protection of All Persons under Any Form of Detention or Imprisonment,

Seriously concerned about the alarming number of reported cases of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment taking place in various parts of the world,

Determined to promote the full implementation of the prohibition, under international and national law, of the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Welcoming the decision of the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1985/33 of 13 March 1985, to appoint a special rapporteur to examine questions relevant to torture,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

2. Expresses its satisfaction at the number of States that have signed the Convention since it was opened for signature, ratification and accession on 4 February 1985;

3. Requests all States that have not yet done so to sign and to ratify the Convention as a matter of priority;

4. Invites all States, upon ratification of or accession to the Convention, to consider the possibility of making the declarations provided for in articles 21 and 22 of the Convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session and to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the status of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment;

6. Decides to consider the report of the Secretary-General provided for in paragraph 5 above at its forty-first session under the item entitled "Torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment".

Fund for victims of torture

On 11 March 1985,<sup>(59)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights asked the Secretary-General to transmit its appeal to Governments, organizations and individuals to contribute to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture, established in 1981.<sup>(60)</sup> It also asked him to assist the Fund's Board of Trustees to publicize the Fund's humanitarian work and to keep the Commission annually informed of the Fund's operations.

The Secretary-General stated in his annual report<sup>(61)</sup> on the status of the Fund that the Board, which had held its fourth session in April, had recommended to him approval of 36 grants totalling $817,400 for 30 projects in 16 countries located in four continents. The projects were mainly for therapy and rehabilitation of victims of torture and were usually carried out by humanitarian organizations, often related to churches or religious bodies. In some cases, UNHCR served as an implementing channel. As examples of Fund-supported programmes, the Board Chairman, in an annex outlining the Board's activities during the three years of Fund operations, mentioned projects in Argentina, Guinea and Uruguay, which often involved psychological help to children and families of victims and medical assistance. The Fund also financed training courses and teaching seminars.

The Fund's balance at the end of the year was $1,458,876.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/127, without vote.

United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture
The General Assembly,

Recalling article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment,

Again recalling the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from Being Subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling also its resolution 39/46 of 10 December 1984, by which it adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recalling further its resolution 36/151 of 16 December 1981, in which it noted with deep concern that acts of torture took place in various countries, recognized the need to provide assistance to the victims of torture in a purely humanitarian spirit and established the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture,

Convinced that the struggle to eliminate torture includes the provision of assistance in a humanitarian spirit to the victims and members of their families,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its gratitude and appreciation to those Governments, organizations and individuals that have already contributed to the United Nations Voluntary Fund for Victims of Torture;

2. Calls upon all Governments, organizations and individuals in a position to do so to respond favourably to requests for initial as well as further contributions to the Fund;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Board of Trustees of the Fund for the work it has carried out;

4. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support given to the Board of Trustees of the Fund;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to make use of all existing possibilities, including the preparation, production and dissemination of information materials, to assist the Board of Trustees of the Fund in its efforts to make the Fund and its humanitarian work better known and in its appeal for contributions.

Detention on grounds of mental illness

The sessional working group set up by the Sub-Commission in 1984<sup>(62)</sup> to examine further the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees for the protection of persons detained on grounds of mental ill-health or suffering from mental disorder was reconvened in four meetings between 15 and 26 August 1985.<sup>(63)</sup> The group heard comments by four NGOs and began its second preliminary reading of the draft body of guidelines.

The group agreed to retain as they stood the introductory comments; it also retained article 2 as it stood and amended articles 1 and 3 (on application of the guidelines) and articles 4, 6 and 7 (on fundamental freedoms as basic rights of the patient). It decided to reconsider at a later stage paragraph 2 of article 5 (to the effect that difficulties of adaptation to certain moral, social, cultural or political values or religious beliefs should not be a determining factor in diagnosing mental illness).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/110, without vote.

Implications of scientific and technological developments for human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/53 of 14 December 1978, in which it requested the Commission on Human Rights to urge the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to undertake, as a matter of priority, a study of the question of the protection of those detained on the grounds of mental ill-health, with a view to formulating guidelines,

Recalling also its resolution 39/132 of 14 December 1984, in which it urged the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission to expedite their consideration of this question, so that the Commission could submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/33 and decision 1984/142 of 24 May 1984,

Noting with concern that the Commission on Human Rights will not be in a position to submit its views and recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-first session through the Economic and Social Council because the Sub-Commission has still not concluded its consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees,

Reaffirming its conviction that detention of persons in mental institutions on account of their political views or on other non-medical grounds is a violation of their human rights,

Again urges the Commission on Human Rights and, through it, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to expedite their consideration of the draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, so that the Commission can submit its views and recommendations, including a draft body of guidelines, principles and guarantees, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Draft declaration against unacknowledged detention

By a resolution of 29 August 1985,<sup>(64)</sup> adopted by 14 votes to 1, the Sub-Commission approved a one-paragraph draft declaration against unacknowledged detention of persons, prepared by its Working Group on Detention<sup>(41)</sup> (see p. 862), and recommended it to the Commission on Human Rights for adoption. The draft declaration stated that Governments were to disclose the identity, location and condition of all persons detained by members of their police, military or security authorities, or others acting with their knowledge, together with the cause of such detention, and seek to locate all other persons who had disappeared. In countries where legislation to that effect did not exist, steps were to be taken to enact such legislation as soon as possible.

The Working Group was asked to consider possible further provisions relating to the draft.

Detention without charge or trial

On 11 March 1985,<sup>(65)</sup> the Commission requested the Sub-Commission to analyse available information about the practice of administrative detention without charge or trial and to make recommendations regarding its use. The Sub-Commission, on 29

August,<sup>(66)</sup> requested Louis Joinet (France) to prepare before its 1986 session a paper suggesting procedures by which the Sub-Commission might carry out that responsibility.

Use of force by law officials

In June 1985, the Secretary-General presented to the Sub-Commission a report<sup>(67)</sup> on restraints in the use of force by law enforcement officials and military personnel, supplementary to a 1984 report.<sup>(68)</sup> The 1985 report contained information submitted by Kuwait, Madagascar, Morocco, the Netherlands, Norway and Pakistan, the United Nations Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the International Criminal Police Organization (INTERPOL) and an NGO.

Following a proposal by its Working Group on Detention,<sup>(41)</sup> the Sub-Commission, on 29 August,<sup>(69)</sup> decided to submit to the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see p. 738), through the Secretary-General, a proposal that the Congress study ways to promote international technical co-operation in the area of restraints on the use of force by law enforcement officials and military personnel. It also asked the Secretary-General to inform it of the results of the Congress in this matter, a subject it would consider in 1986.

Capital punishment

In April 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council his third quinquennial report<sup>(70)</sup> on the use of and trends in capital punishment, and on legal changes, initiatives and results of research compiled since 1979. Based on information received from 48 countries, mostly non-retentionist, the report contained information on practices and statutory rules governing the right of a person sentenced to death to petition for pardon, commutation or reprieve, and noted newly adopted safeguards for those facing the death penalty.

The information provided suggested that there had been few significant changes between 1979 and 1983, in comparison with the previous reporting period, 1974-1978. However, the decisions of three countries to abolish capital punishment (totally in two States and for ordinary crimes in the third) and an apparent decrease in the number of capital sentences and executions made it possible to conclude that the movement towards abolition had progressed somewhat. Significant initiatives had been taken in 1984 by the adoption by the Economic and Social Council of safeguards<sup>(71)</sup> for those facing the death penalty and an Assembly resolution<sup>(72)</sup> endorsing the Council's action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/33, without vote.

Capital punishment

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1745(LIV) of 16 May 1973, 1930(LVIII) of 6 May 1975 and 1984/50 of 25 May 1984,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 2857(XXVI) of 20 December 1971, 32/61 of 8 December 1977 and 39/118 of 14 December 1984,

Having examined the third quinquennial report of the Secretary-General on capital punishment,

Concerned at the fact that only 48 Governments responded to the questionnaire addressed to them for the preparation by the Secretary-General of the third quinquennial report,

1. Invites Member States to provide the Secretary-General with the information required for preparation of the fourth quinquennial report on capital 'punishment in 1990;

2. Takes note of the fact that in the period under review in the report of the Secretary-General some countries have abolished capital punishment, others have adopted a policy of reducing the number of capital offences or have reported not imposing death sentences on offenders, while others have retained capital punishment;

3. Requests the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control to keep the question of capital punishment under constant review;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the fourth quinquennial report, to draw on all available data, including current criminological research, and to invite the comments of specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations on this question.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/33

29 May 1985 Meeting 23 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1 without vote, 21 May (meeting 11); 10-nation draft (E/1985/C.2/L.7), orally revised: agenda item 17.

Sponsors: Austria, Colombia, Costa Rica, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Portugal, Sweden, Uruguay.

In a statement of position after the vote, Saudi Arabia said the abolition of capital punishment not only ran counter to the Islamic Shariah, which permitted retaliation in kind in cases of premeditated murder, but also violated the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>(29)</sup> which guaranteed freedom of religion, and the principle of national sovereignty.

Proposed second optional protocol to the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

The idea of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aimed at the abolition of the death penalty, originated in the General Assembly in 1980.<sup>(73)</sup> Pursuant to a 1982 Assembly request,<sup>(74)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights, in 1984,<sup>(75)</sup> invited its Sub-Commission to consider elaborating a second protocol. On a recommendation of 14 March 1985<sup>(76)</sup> of the Commission, the Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1985/41, entrusted a Special Rapporteur, Marc Bossuyt (Belgium), with analysing the proposal. Also on 14 March,<sup>(77)</sup> the Commission decided to consider the issue further at its 1987 session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/41, without vote.

Elaboration of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming at the abolition of the death penalty

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting resolution 1984/7 of 28 August 1984 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/46 of 14 March 1985 concerning the idea of elaborating a draft of a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming at the abolition of the death penalty,

1. Authorizes the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to entrust Mr. M. Bossuyt, as Special Rapporteur, with the task of preparing an analysis concerning the proposal to elaborate a second optional protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights aiming at the abolition of the death penalty;

2. Requests the Special Rapporteur to take into account the documents considered and the views expressed in the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and the Sub-Commission in favour of or against the idea of elaborating such a protocol;

3. Invites the Special Rapporteur to present, on the basis of his analysis, recommendations for further consideration by the Sub-Commission at its thirty-ninth session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the Special Rapporteur with all necessary assistance for the completion of his task.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/41

30 May 1985 Meeting 25 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) without vote, 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Saudi Arabia said it had joined in the consensus although it had voted against the 1984 Assembly resolution<sup>(78)</sup> on the subject. It did, however, maintain the right not to abolish the death penalty, as such an action would run counter to Islamic law.

Extra-legal executions

In conformity with a 1984 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(79)</sup> Special Rapporteur S. Amos Wako (Kenya) submitted to the Commission on Human Rights in February 1985 a report<sup>(80)</sup> on summary or arbitrary executions. He updated the information contained in two previous reports submitted in 1983<sup>(81)</sup> and 1984,<sup>(82)</sup> reporting on the activities he had undertaken since then, including examination of situations in which such executions allegedly had taken place. He also presented information on his visit to Suriname in July 1984 to examine the alleged occurrence of the summary execution of 15 persons in December 1982, the official measures taken to determine the facts, and the safeguards adopted or envisaged to enhance the protection of the right to life.

The Special Rapporteur had received appeals from various sources making allegations of imminent or threatened summary executions, indicating that the practice was still widespread. He reported that 15 Governments had not replied to his inquiries concerning allegations of executions in their countries, and strongly appealed to them to respond without delay. He recommended that the Commission continue to monitor extra-legal executions and consider ways by which all such cases could be brought to its attention. His review of national legislation made it clear, he said, that a number of exceptions had been made in regard to safeguards to the right to life. Some Governments had resorted to harsh penalties to cope with rampant crime. Lack of respect for the right to life was evident in groups other than Governments or quasi-governmental agencies, and numerous executions had occurred as countermeasures by Governments responding to killing by non-governmental groups; the Commission should give urgent attention to the responsibility of such groups. In addition, Governments should be urged to set up training programmes for law enforcement officials. He hoped that the trend towards impartial investigation, prosecution and punishment of those involved in extra-legal executions would continue.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/40, without vote. The Commission on Human Rights had recommended the text on 13 March.<sup>(83)</sup>

Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Mindful of General Assembly resolutions 36/33 of 9 November 1981, 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983 and 39/110 of 14 December 1984,

1. Strongly deplores, once again, the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, which continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Appeals urgently to Governments, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations to take effective action to combat and eliminate summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions;

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/143, without vote.

Summary or arbitrary executions

The General Assembly,

Recalling the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that every human being has the right to life, liberty and security of person,

Having regard to the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which states that every human being has the inherent right to life, that this right shall be protected by law and that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life,

Recalling also its resolution 34/175 of 17 December 1979, in which it reaffirmed that mass and flagrant violations of human rights are of special concern to the United Nations and urged the Commission on Human Rights to take timely and effective action in existing and future cases of mass and flagrant violations of human rights,

Recalling further its resolution 36/22 of 9 November 1981, in which it condemned the practice of summary or arbitrary executions, and its resolutions 37/182 of 17 December 1982, 38/96 of 16 December 1983 and 39/110 of 14 December 1984,

Deeply alarmed at the continued occurrence on a large scale of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions,

Recalling resolution 1982/13 of 7 September 1982 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission recommended that effective measures should be adopted to prevent the occurrence of summary or arbitrary executions,

Welcoming Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/50 of 25 May 1984, and the safeguards guaranteeing protection of the rights of those facing the death penalty annexed thereto, which resolution was endorsed by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders in its resolution 15, as well as the ongoing work on summary or arbitrary executions within the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control,

Convinced of the need for appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the practice of summary or arbitrary executions, which represents a flagrant violation of the most fundamental human right, the right to life,

1. Strongly condemns the large number of summary or arbitrary executions, including extra-legal executions, which continue to take place in various parts of the world;

2. Demands that the practice of summary or arbitrary executions be brought to an end;

3. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/35 of 7 May 1982, in which the Council decided to appoint for one year a special rapporteur to examine the questions related to summary or arbitrary executions;

4. Also welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/40 of 30 May 1985, in which the Council decided to continue the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, Mr. S. A. Wako, for a further year and requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider the question of summary or arbitrary executions as a matter of high priority at its forty-second session;

5. Urges all Governments and all others concerned to co-operate with and assist the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights in the implementation of his mandate;

6. Requests the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, to respond effectively to information that comes before him, in particular when a summary or arbitrary execution is imminent or threatened, or when such an execution has recently occurred;

7. Also requests the Special Rapporteur to consider, in his next report, possible measures to be taken by the appropriate authorities when a death occurs in custody, including adequate autopsy;

8. Considers that the Special Rapporteur, in carrying out his mandate, should continue to seek and receive information from Governments, United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional intergovernmental organizations and non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur so that he may effectively carry out his mandate;

10. Again requests the Secretary-General to continue to use his best endeavours in cases where the minimum standard of legal safeguards provided for in articles 6, 14 and 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights appear not to be respected;

11. Requests the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session, on the basis of the report of the Special Rapporteur to be prepared in conformity with Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/35, 1983/36, 1984/35 and 1985/40, to make recommendations concerning appropriate action to combat and eventually eliminate the abhorrent practice of summary or arbitrary executions.

Other action. The Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Milan, Italy, 26 August-6 September) (see p. 738), by a consensus resolution,<sup>(84)</sup> condemned extra-legal, arbitrary and summary executions, and called on Governments to investigate such acts, punish those found guilty and take measures to prevent such executions; it requested the Secretary-General to submit an analytical review of documents on the prevention, investigation and elimination of such executions for consideration by the Committee on Crime Prevention and Control.

Persons detained by Israel

On 11 March, the Commission on Human Rights adopted, by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 9 abstentions, a resolution<sup>(85)</sup> strongly condemning Israel for ill-treatment and torture of Palestinian detainees. It urged Israel to release immediately all civilians arbitrarily detained since the beginning of the armed conflict in Lebanon, as well as those rearrested and detained again at A1-Ansar camp in southern Lebanon, in violation of a 1983 agreement on prisoner exchange,<sup>(86)</sup> and to release the 125 prisoners transferred from that camp to Atlit prison. It urged Israel to co-operate with ICRC and allow it to visit all detainees in the detention centres under its control, to recognize prisoner-of-war status for all combatants captured during the conflict and treat them accordingly, and to ensure protection for Palestinian civilians, including released detainees, in the areas under its occupation. The Commission called on all parties to the conflict to inform ICRC of persons who were missing or who disappeared following the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, and requested the Secretary-General to make all information on that matter available. (See also p. 334.)

Disappearance of persons

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March 1985, (87) the Commission on Human Rights decided to extend the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for another year and to study in 1986 the possibility of extending it for two years. The Group was requested to submit at the 1986 session a report with conclusions and recommendations, discharging its mandate with discretion so as to protect persons providing information or to limit the dissemination of information provided by Governments and observing United Nations standards and practices in dealing with communications. The Group was also requested to present to the Commission all necessary information.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to appeal to Governments to co-operate with the Group, to invite countries with numerous cases of disappearance to envisage the establishment of a national body to investigate and answer requests for information on them, and to ensure that the Group received all necessary assistance and resources. The Commission encouraged Governments to consider with special attention any wish expressed by the Group to visit their country.

Working Group activities. In an addendum<sup>(88)</sup> to its 1984 report,<sup>(89)</sup> the five-member Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances reported in February 1985 on developments since its last session in December 1984. The addendum contained additional communications from Governments as well as information on cases of enforced or involuntary disappearances transmitted during January 1985; such cases had been reported in Bolivia, Colombia, Cyprus, El Salvador, Ethiopia, Guatemala, Honduras, Iran, Morocco, Nicaragua, Peru, the Philippines and Uganda.

The Working Group, established in 1980,<sup>(90)</sup> held three sessions in 1985:<sup>(91)</sup> its sixteenth (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 5-14 June), seventeenth (Geneva, 9-13 September) and eighteenth (Geneva, 4-13 December).

In 1985, the Working Group received some 4,500 reports on enforced or involuntary disappearances and after examination transmitted some 2,200 of the newly reported cases to the Governments concerned. Under its urgent action procedure, the Group transmitted 322 cases to Governments in 1985. Replies included in the report were from Colombia, Peru and the Philippines.

The Group also retransmitted summaries of all cases unclarified to date to Governments that had either never replied to the Group's transmittals or which had asked to be informed of the status of outstanding cases. The Group further informed Governments whenever a case was clarified by new information. It invited all Governments to which it had transmitted reports on disappearances to send representatives to its sessions, and maintained correspondence with relatives of missing persons, their associations and various NGOs which submitted information. It gave particular attention to reports of harassment, threats and assassination of relatives of missing persons and conveyed its feeling of deep preoccupation to the Governments concerned, stressing their responsibility to prevent such acts.

Two members of the Working Group visited Peru from 17 to 22 June and provided the Commission with an analysis of the situation of disappearances in the country.

To enhance the effectiveness of its activities, the Group decided to add to or slightly modify some of its procedures: to retransmit to Governments that had never replied to the Group's communications the summaries of all outstanding cases in conjunction with an invitation to attend the Group's three annual sessions; to inform Governments of clarifications provided by non-governmental sources whenever they appeared to be reliable, and no longer to ask them for confirmation or disapproval of such information; to communicate relevant information to the Commission's special rapporteurs dealing with country situations, summary or arbitrary executions and torture; to revise the statistical presentation of outstanding cases in its report; and to renew its efforts to have NGOs and family associations submitting reports present cases in a detailed and well-documented manner.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1985/142 of 30 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Working Group's mandate for another year, as well as its request to the Secretary-General to ensure that it received the necessary staff and resources required to work effectively and expeditiously. The Council acted without vote, following similar approval by its Second Committee on 24 May of a text proposed by the Commission.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/147, without vote.

Question of enforced or involuntary disappearances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 concerning disappeared persons, and its resolution 39/111 of 14 December 1984 on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Deeply concerned about the persistence, in certain cases, of the practice of enforced or involuntary disappearances,

Expressing its profound emotion at the anguish and sorrow of the families concerned, who should know the fate of their relatives,

Convinced of the importance of implementing the provisions of its resolution 33/173 and of the other United Nations resolutions on the question of enforced or involuntary disappearances, with a view to finding solutions for cases of disappearances and helping to eliminate such practices,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/20 of 11 March 1985, in which the Commission decided to extend for one year the term of the mandate of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances, and Economic and Social Council decision 1985/142 of 30 May 1985, in which the Council approved the Commission's decision,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances for its humanitarian work and to those Governments that have co-operated with it;

2. Welcomes the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend for one year the term of the mandate of the Working Group, as well as to study at its forty-second session the possibility of extending to two years the term of the mandate of the Working Group;

3. Also welcomes the provisions made by the Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1985/20 to enable the Working Group to fulfil its mandate with even greater efficiency;

4. Appeals to all Governments to provide the Working Group and the Commission on Human Rights with the full co-operation warranted by their strictly humanitarian objectives and their working methods based on discretion;

5. Encourages the Governments concerned to consider with special attention the wish of the Working Group, when such a wish is expressed, to visit their countries, thus enabling the Group to fulfil its mandate even more effectively;

6. Calls upon the Commission on Human Rights to continue to study this question as a matter of priority and to take any step it may deem necessary to the pursuit of the task of the Working Group when it considers the report to be submitted by the Group to the Commission at its forty-second session;

7. Renews its request to the Secretary-General to continue to provide the Working Group with all necessary assistance.

Other aspects of civil and political rights

Slavery

Human Rights Commission action. By an 11 March 1985 resolution,<sup>(92)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights invited States to sign or ratify as soon as possible the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others.<sup>(93)</sup> It requested the Secretary-General to invite States parties to that Convention, and to the 1926 Slavery Convention and the 1956 Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery,<sup>(94)</sup> to report regularly on their compliance with those instruments. It requested him also to transmit to the Governments concerned, and to the United Nations bodies and agencies mentioned by the Working Group on Slavery in its recommendations, statements by NGOs containing specific allegations of slavery-like practices, together with the relevant parts of the Working Group's report. It invited States, United Nations organs and agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and INTERPOL to continue to supply information to the Working Group.

The Commission requested its Sub-Commission to consider undertaking studies on alleged slavery-like practices against women and children and ways they could be assisted and rehabilitated and on debt bondage. It recommended that the struggle against procuring be intensified at the national level and that international measures be adopted to dismantle the networks feeding prostitution and to repatriate and assist the victims. It further recommended that the mass media, including those of the United Nations system, more widely publicize the evils of slavery and that Governments avail themselves of the advisory services programme for its elimination. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), ILO, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) were requested to give particular attention in their technical assistance programmes to situations where poverty was leading to or perpetuating such practices.

On 18 December 1985, by decision 40/461, the General Assembly decided to include in the provisional agenda of its 1986 session an item on the celebration of the one-hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British Empire.

Activities of the Working Group. The Sub-Commission's Working Group on Slavery, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 29 July-2 August 1985),<sup>(95)</sup> reviewed and made recommendations on developments in slavery and the slave trade, including questions relating to Mauritania (see below), the exploitation of child labour (see p. 930), the traffic in persons and the exploitation of prostitution of others, and slavery-like practices of apartheid and colonialism. It also discussed debt bondage.

The Group recommended: that Governments ratify the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others; that UNICEF commit itself to eradicating the sexual exploitation of children and that it be designated as the lead agency for research and education in that area; that Governments be encouraged to establish national policies to protect children from such exploitation; that strong measures be taken to ensure a social status for women equal to that of men and that the mass media publicize their fundamental equality; that special attention be devoted to the problem of child prostitution; and that a World Day for the Abolition of Slavery in All its Forms be proclaimed.

It recommended that the Human Rights Commission Chairman be authorized to pressure South Africa to obtain the release of political prisoners and to engage in a dialogue with black-majority leaders (see p. 899).

Slavery-like practices in Mauritania

Human Rights Commission action. By an 11 March 1985 resolution,<sup>(96)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights expressed appreciation to Mauritania for inviting a Sub-Commission mission to visit and for its exemplary co-operation. Expressing appreciation to Marc Bossuyt (Belgium) for the report on his 1984 mission,<sup>(97)</sup> the Commission decided to transmit it to Mauritania, inviting it to inform the Sub-Commission of any action it felt able to take thereon, and to various United Nations agencies, regional and subregional organizations and United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) donors, inviting them to consider what assistance they could give to Mauritania to help eradicate the consequences of slavery, in accordance with Mauritanian development objectives. The expert was requested to prepare a follow-up report on the basis of the replies received, and submit an interim report to the Sub-Commission in 1985 and a final report in 1986.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/143 of 30 May 1985, approved the Commission's request to the expert to prepare a follow-up report-based on replies received and taking into account the views expressed by the Sub-Commission at its 1984 session and by the Commission at its 1985 session, in particular with respect to assistance which could be provided to Mauritania-and submit an interim report to the Sub-Commission in 1985 and a final report in 1986. The Council acted without vote, following similar action by the Committee on 24 May, approving a text proposed by the Commission.

Interim report by the expert. The Sub-Commission's expert presented to the Sub-Commission in July an interim report,<sup>(98)</sup> giving a synopsis of the replies he had received and the views expressed by the Sub-Commission and the Commission, in particular with respect to assistance that could be provided to Mauritania. At the time of preparation of the report, no reply had been received from Mauritania. UNDP and four specialized agencies had replied, as well as the Economic Commission for Africa. Those replies, he stated, already gave indications as to what kind of assistance could be given; efforts needed to be made by the United Nations, in co-operation with Mauritania, to promote co-ordination and stimulate interest. In the expert's opinion, the Sub-Commission should consider proposing that a co-ordinating role be vested in the Secretary-General or a person designated by him.

Working Group on Slavery. At its July/August session,<sup>(95)</sup> the Working Group on Slavery recommended that: Mauritania, as well as international organizations, donor countries and other recipients of the expert's report, be invited to respond early to it; consideration be given to the method of co-ordinating the various assistance programmes to Mauritania; the opinion of anti-slavery organizations be taken into consideration in planning development projects and they be assured of independence of action; and consideration be given to the proposals for Mauritania's development put forward by the Anti-Slavery Society, which formed part of the Working Group's report.

At the Group's session, the representative of the Anti-Slavery Society said the full rehabilitation and reinsertion of former slaves would call for thorough social reforms and a restructuring of Mauritanian society. The social problems facing Mauritania were particularly difficult and had to be tackled in the context of a critical situation of near-famine and consequent massive population drift. Mauritania needed international assistance on a large scale if it was to survive.

Sub-Commission action. Following consideration of the expert's interim report, the Sub-Commission, on 29 August,<sup>(99)</sup> expressed appreciation to him, to Mauritania for its continued co-operation, and to the bodies that had informed the Sub-Commission of the assistance they could provide to Mauritania. It requested the Secretary-General to renew the invitation to those that had not yet replied and to UNDP donor States. It expressed the hope that UNDP and other organs and agencies would consider undertaking an additional specific effort to help Mauritania eliminate the consequences of slavery, and invited the Commission on Human Rights to consider ways to ensure co-ordination of such assistance. The Sub-Commission looked forward to information from Mauritania on action it felt able to take on the expert's recommendations.

Freedom of movement

On 11 March 1985,<sup>(100)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights welcomed the progress made by Special Rapporteur Chama L. C. Mubanga-Chipoya (Zambia) in his study on everyone's right to leave any country, including one's own, and to return to one's country. It appealed to Governments to respond to his questionnaire, and requested the Sub-Commission to consider his next report as a matter of priority, with a view to submitting a draft declaration as soon as possible.

Following consideration of a progress report,<sup>(101)</sup> the Sub-Commission, on 30 August,<sup>(102)</sup> requested the Special Rapporteur to continue his work and present to it in 1986 a final report and a preliminary draft declaration and, in 1987, a final draft of a declaration and a report on the right to employment, on the right to return to one's own country, and on the phenomenon of the "brain drain", i.e. the outflow of trained personnel from developing countries. The Sub-Commission called on Governments, international and non-governmental organizations to respond expeditiously to the Special Rapporteur's questionnaire, requesting the Secretary-General to remind them to do so.

Freedom of speech

On 11 March 1985,<sup>(103)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights expressed concern at the extensive occurrence, in many parts of the world, of detention of persons who exercised their right to freedom of opinion and expression. The Commission called on States to allow full realization of that right, and appealed to them to ensure respect and support for the rights of those who exercised that right and to release those who had been detained solely for doing so. It affirmed that further national and international measures might be required to ensure respect for that right.

Conscientious objectors

As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,<sup>(104)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the 1985 session of the Commission on Human Rights a report<sup>(105)</sup> containing comments and observations from States, United Nations bodies and NGOs on the question of conscientious objection to military service. As at 14 February, information had been received from eight countries—Australia, Austria, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom—two United Nations organs and nine NGOs.

The Commission decided on 14 March<sup>(106)</sup> to adjourn until its 1987 session the debate on a draft resolution on the question submitted by Austria, Costa Rica, France, the Netherlands, Spain and the United Kingdom.

Amnesty

In 1985, Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France submitted to the Sub-Commission his study<sup>(107)</sup> on amnesty laws and their role in the safeguarding and promotion of human rights, taking into account the specific characteristics of various legal systems. The report had been requested in 1984<sup>(108)</sup> following consideration of an interim report. The Special Rapporteur set out the practices followed by States concerning amnesties and compared them, with a view to deducing rules or constants which might serve as guidelines for authorities proposing to initiate an amnesty, as well as for jurists responsible for drafting legislation—a frame of reference which, he stated, might also be of use to various specialized international supervisory bodies to enable them better to assess the impact of an amnesty law. He concluded that the amnesty process could be effective only if coupled with certain measures: in the short term, the repeal of emergency laws as a corollary of amnesty; in the medium term, the holding of elections; and in the long term, implementation of economic, social and political measures attacking the root causes of conflict or dissension.

The Sub-Commission, on 30 August,<sup>(109)</sup> expressed appreciation to the Special Rapporteur and recommended that the Commission on Human Rights propose to the Economic and Social Council that the study be published and disseminated as widely as possible in all official United Nations languages.

Independence of the judicial system

A final report on a study of the independence and impartiality of the judiciary, jurors and assessors and the independence of lawyers was submitted to the Sub-Commission in July 1985<sup>(110)</sup> by Special Rapporteur L. M. Singhvi (India). It included a draft declaration on the independence of justice prepared by the Rapporteur; draft principles on the independence of the legal profession formulated at a May 1982 meeting at Noto, Sicily (Italy), of a Committee of Experts organized by the International Association of Penal Law and the International Commission of Jurists; and a Universal Declaration on the Independence of Justice adopted at the June 1983 World Conference on the Independence of Justice at Montreal, Canada. His research confirmed those principles, the Rapporteur stated, and he suggested that the United Nations adopt a declaration or a convention on the independence of justice and that specific studies investigate violations of the independence of justice. He saw a need for a representative world organization, as a clearing-house for information, to protect and promote the independence of judges, jurors, assessors and lawyers and to provide education and research.

The Sub-Commission, on 27 August,<sup>(111)</sup> postponed consideration of the study to its 1986 session, asking the Secretary-General to circulate the study to Sub-Commission members before December 1985 and invite them to submit written comments on it, which the Special Rapporteur would take into account when presenting his report in 1986.

Economic, social and cultural rights

In a September 1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> on international conditions and human rights (see p. 882), the Secretary-General stated, with regard to economic, social and cultural rights, that the poorest and most vulnerable countries and groups were the hardest hit and the situation continued to give cause for concern. The impact of current international conditions on those rights could best be illustrated by reviewing the situation with respect to the right to food and the right to work. With regard to the former, the World Food Council had in its most recent report characterized the situation as deplorable, referring specifically to the millions of people in Africa threatened by famine, 15 million child deaths annually world-wide from malnutrition and disease and the growing numbers of chronically undernourished.

The widespread non-realization of the right to work had been emphasized in a report, transmitted in April<sup>(2)</sup> (see p. 877), by the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations of the International Labour Organisation on progress in achieving observance of the 1966 International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.<sup>(3)</sup> The Committee noted that serious problems of unemployment and underemployment in many parts of the world had continued to increase;

such problems tended to be particularly acute in rural areas and less developed regions, and among certain population groups, such as young people, women, older workers or handicapped persons. The Committee recalled that those problems were not only dependent on national policies but were substantially influenced by international economic relations. At the same time that official development assistance to developing countries declined, debt repayment requirements exacerbated economic and social conditions, making it even more difficult for many Governments to ensure full realization of economic, social and cultural rights.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 14 March resolution,<sup>(4)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 29 to 6, with 5 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights appealed to States to pursue policies directed towards implementing civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, and called on them to co-operate in creating conditions conducive to the enjoyment of all human rights. It urged its Sub-Commission to pursue the study on the right to food and invited the Directors-General of ILO, FAO, UNESCO and the World Health Organization (WHO) to submit in 1986 a report on the state of implementation of the rights to work, food, education and health, respectively, so that the Commission could undertake a global assessment of progress and problems in implementing those rights. The Sub-Commission was also requested to examine and update for the Commission's 1987 session the conclusions and recommendations in the 1974 study on The Realisation of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Problems, Policies, Progress.<sup>(5)</sup>

On 13 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/114, by recorded vote.

Indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the obligations of States under the Charter of the United Nations to promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom and universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Acknowledging that the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights have created new standards and obligations to which States should conform,

Recalling that 1986 marks the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Also recalling the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, based on the Charter of the United Nations and solemnly proclaimed on 11 December 1969,

Taking note of the 1985 Report on the World Social Situation,

Reaffirming the provisions of its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977 that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights can never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the other rights,

Convinced that the full realization of civil and political rights is inseparably linked with the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights,

Convinced also that the achievement of lasting progress in the implementation of human rights is dependent upon sound and effective national and international policies of economic, social and political development,

Desirous of removing all obstacles to the full realization of human rights, in particular colonialism, neo-colonialism, racism, racial discrimination in all its forms, apartheid, foreign intervention, occupation, aggression, discrimination and domination,

Recognising the fundamental rights of every people to exercise full sovereignty over its natural wealth and resources,

Recognizing also that the realization of the right to development could help to promote the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights,

Reaffirming that there is a close relationship between disarmament and development, that progress in the field of disarmament could considerably promote progress in the field of development and that resources released through disarmament measures would contribute to the economic and social development and well-being of all peoples, in particular those of the developing countries,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/42 of 14 March 1985, in which the Commission stated that the promotion and implementation of economic, social and cultural rights and the obstacles to their realization have not received sufficient attention within the framework of United Nations organs,

Requesting the Secretary-General to enhance his efforts under the programme of advisory services to States in the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights,

1. Recognizes that equal attention should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of economic, social and cultural rights and civil and political rights;

2. Appeals to all States, on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights, to pursue policies directed to the full implementation of the rights contained therein;

3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue its consideration of the realization of economic, social and cultural rights and to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, its views and recommendations on these human rights;

4. Welcomes the decision of the Economic and Social Council, in its resolution 1985/17 of 28 May 1985, to establish the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which will be entrusted from 1987 on with the important task of overseeing the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

5. Encourages Governments to give careful consideration to nominations for membership of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in due recognition of the status of Committee members as experts with recognized competence in the field of human rights, serving in their personal capacity;

6. Urges the Secretary-General to take determined steps, within existing resources, to give publicity to the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and to ensure that it receives full administrative support in order to enable it to commence its functions effectively;

7. Decides to convene, on 16 December 1986, during its forty-first session, a commemorative plenary meeting of the General Assembly devoted to the twentieth anniversary of the adoption of the International Covenants on Human Rights;

8. Decides also to discuss at its forty-first session, under the item entitled "International Covenants on Human Rights", the question of the indivisibility and interdependence of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights.

Separate recorded votes were taken on the eighth, tenth and eleventh Preambular paragraphs in both the Assembly and the Third Committee. The eighth paragraph was adopted by 125 votes to 7, with 20 abstentions; its approval in the Committee was by 107 votes to 8, with 18 abstentions. The Assembly vote on the tenth paragraph was 130 to 1, with 23 abstentions; the Committee had approved it by 113 to 1, with 21 abstentions. The vote on the eleventh paragraph was 130 to 7, with 17 abstentions in the Assembly and 113 to 7, with 16 abstentions, in Committee.

A Moroccan oral proposal to reverse the order in which the Covenants were listed in the second and third preambular paragraphs was not accepted.

The United States regarded the text as an attempt by a small group to pursue its political ends and said the text aimed at redefining and reinterpreting the concept of human rights set forth in the principal international instruments; it was unable to support the attempt to place the controversial concept of the indivisibility, inseparability or interdependence of various categories of rights as a permanent item on the Committee's agenda.

The Federal Republic of Germany said the ambitious title of the text did not have much to do with its content; the term "interdependence" was incorrect since there was only a straightforward relationship between different kinds of rights. Moreover, the wording in the eleventh preambular paragraph did not correspond to the terms used in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights—a point also noted by Ireland, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom—and the thirteenth preambular paragraph addressed questions that were within the exclusive competence of other Main Committees.

Similarly, Italy and the United Kingdom could not accept the assertion that all human rights were interdependent; although they agreed that a relationship between both sets of rights existed, they could not accept that the exercise of civil and political rights should be made dependent on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights. Costa Rica held a similar view.

Ireland could not accept that the realization of one category of rights should be subordinated to the other; it had serious reservations regarding the agenda item under which the initiative had been taken and on certain paragraphs based on the same notion. Australia added that it should not be suggested that the realization of economic rights took priority over or constituted a pre-condition for the exercise of civil and political rights. Australia and the Netherlands interpreted the eighth preambular paragraph as meaning that the realization of both categories of rights was mutually reinforcing.

Japan also had difficulty in accepting the concept of indivisibility and interdependence of both categories of rights; it felt that the necessary weight should be given to the essential difference between the rights set forth in the Covenants, and the progressive realization of one category of rights should not delay enjoyment of the other.

Austria felt that the term interdependence was not sufficiently clear; both sets of rights should receive equal attention and be implemented equally. Instead of referring to the interdependence of both categories of rights, Uruguay remarked, it would have been better to speak of the indivisibility of those rights and the links between them.

The United Kingdom also could not accept the implication that the principal obstacles to the realization of human rights had been set forth in the tenth preambular paragraph, since, in order for that provision to be comprehensive, totalitarian ideologies should also be added, a view shared by the Federal Republic of Germany. The United Kingdom also did not accept that the non-self-governing status of certain Territories in itself deprived their inhabitants of the full enjoyment of their human rights if they were free to exercise their right to self-determination. It also had difficulties accepting the twelfth and thirteenth preambular paragraphs.

New Zealand said it would have preferred the eighth preambular paragraph to have been worded so as to be clearly in accordance with the central proposition in operative paragraph 1.

Egypt had reservations concerning the expression "within existing resources" in paragraph 6.

Australia and Japan had difficulty with the concept of the right to development; Australia said the right was not recognized in the Covenant and therefore could not be considered as being inherent in its implementation.

Canada stated it had difficulties in accepting the inclusion in the preamble of references to the world social situation, disarmament and the right to development, which were not relevant to the question under consideration.

Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

As at 31 December 1985, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, adopted by the General Assembly in 1966<sup>(3)</sup> and in force since 1976,<sup>(6)</sup> had been ratified or acceded to by 85 States. Greece and San Marino became parties to it during 1985.

The Secretary-General reported on the status of ratifications or accessions to the Covenant as at 1 September,<sup>(7)</sup> as well as on other questions related to its implementation (see p. 891).

Implementation of the Covenant

The Secretary-General, in a February note,<sup>(8)</sup> reported on the status of the submission of reports by States parties to the Covenant.

The Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the Covenant met for its seventh session in New York from 22 April to 9 May 1985.<sup>(9)</sup> The Group was set up in 1978<sup>(10)</sup> and restructured in 1982<sup>(11)</sup> to comprise 15 States parties to the Covenant (see APPENDIX III). The Group examined 13 reports from 11 States parties on their implementation of specific provisions of the Covenant. On each report, the Group heard statements by, and put questions to, the State representatives concerned. Under a programme established by the Council in 1976,<sup>(12)</sup> reports required under the Covenant were to be submitted in three biennial cycles or stages, each stage covering a related group of articles of the Covenant.

For the first stage (due 1 September 1977), the Group examined a report from Iraq,<sup>(13)</sup> concerning rights covered by articles 6 to 9 (the right to work and to favourable conditions of work, the rights of trade unionists, the right to social security). At their request, consideration of first-stage reports from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea<sup>(14)</sup> and Mexico<sup>(15)</sup> was deferred. Second-stage reports (due 1 September 1983) examined came from Australia,<sup>(16)</sup> Bulgaria,<sup>(17)</sup> the German Democratic Republic,<sup>(18)</sup> Madagascar<sup>(20)</sup> Romania<sup>(20)</sup> and the United Kingdom;<sup>(21)</sup> one from Colombia<sup>(22)</sup> was deferred at its request.

The Group examined an initial report (due 1 September 1979) from Portugal<sup>(23)</sup> on rights covered by articles 10 to 12 (protection of the family, mothers and children, an adequate living standard, and physical and mental health). Consideration of a report from Hungary<sup>(24)</sup> was deferred at its request.

Also examined were reports (due 1 September 1981) on implementation of articles 13 to 15 (education, including compulsory education, and participation in cultural life) from France,<sup>(25)</sup> Guyana,<sup>(26)</sup> Iraq,<sup>(27)</sup> Nicaragua<sup>(28)</sup> and Portugal.<sup>(29)</sup>

In addition, the Group considered an April 1985 note<sup>(2)</sup> by the Secretary-General transmitting the seventh report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations of ILO (see p. 874). The report detailed progress in observing the provisions of articles 6 to 9 of the Covenant, within the scope of ILO's activities, by 28 respondent States.

The Group suggested to the Economic and Social Council that it might wish to remind States parties of their obligation to submit reports and urge them to cover the entire cycle of initial reports before submitting second periodic reports; the Group should be instructed not to consider second periodic reports if that condition was not met. The Secretary-General should be requested to revise the guidelines for preparation of reports in accordance with the Group's suggestions; in the mean time, States parties should comply with the existing guidelines. Reports should be balanced, go beyond a mere transcription of legislative and administrative measures or a reproduction of statistical data; they should be limited to a reasonable length and contain a brief introduction with general information on the country and basic data on economic, social and constitutional conditions.

Reports scheduled for consideration by the Group should be made available at least six weeks before the opening of the Group's session. Each State party should send an expert on the subjects covered in its report. If necessary, additional information should be supplied within one year.

The Group recommended that the Council request the agencies to provide their views on implementation of the Covenant within their special fields of competence. It drew attention to the fact that its meetings were public and States parties, United Nations Members and agencies could participate. It urged the Council to ensure continued press coverage of its proceedings.

The Group expressed serious concern about non-submission and delays in the submission of reports; the Council might wish to consider requesting States parties to inform it of difficulties in preparing and submitting their reports. It emphasized the need for the Secretary-General to devise and implement a programme of advisory services and technical assistance on report submission. The Group recommended to the Council that, under the second and subsequent cycles, reports be submitted every three years to allow more time for their preparation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Taking note of the Working Group's recommendation, the Economic and Social Council decided on 28 May, by decision 1985/132, to prolong by one year the periodicity of reporting under the second and subsequent cycles of the reporting procedure, while maintaining the current biennial reporting for the first cycle under article 16 of the Covenant.

The text<sup>(30)</sup> was proposed by Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Guinea, Italy, Morocco, the Netherlands, Senegal, Spain, Uruguay and Venezuela, and adopted without vote.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Commending, by resolution 40/115, the States parties to the Covenant that had submitted their reports under article 16, and urging those that had not to do so as soon as possible, the Assembly noted with satisfaction that an increasing number of parties had been represented by experts for the presentation of their reports, and hoped they would arrange such representation in the future. It again urged States to become parties to the Covenant, emphasized the importance of strict compliance with their obligations thereunder, recommended that they continually review any reservation they might have made in respect of its provisions, welcomed the Council's decision to establish the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (see below) to oversee implementation, and encouraged Governments to publish the text of the Covenant in as many languages as possible and distribute and make it known as widely as possible (see also p. 891).

Composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Working Group

Taking into account the fact that it had not been possible to achieve full attendance of all its members, the Sessional Working Group discussed several options for improving its composition, organization and administrative arrangements.

The Commission on Human Rights, on 14 March,<sup>(31)</sup> had stated that it looked forward to the Secretary-General's report to the Council on that subject and welcomed the Council's 1984 decision<sup>(32)</sup> to undertake its triennial review of the composition, organization and administrative arrangements early in 1985 to allow time for a full discussion.

The Secretary-General submitted his report<sup>(33)</sup> to the Council in March, providing a comparative analysis of the composition, organizational structure and administrative arrangements of the Sessional Working Group and those of other bodies carrying out similar functions under existing international human rights instruments, including those bodies' composition, elections and membership, members' qualifications, number, duration and timing of sessions, and annual reports.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/17 by recorded vote, renaming the Sessional Working Group the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, increasing its membership from 15 to 18, and setting out rules for its elections, periodicity of meetings and reporting procedures; its venue would alternate between New York and Geneva.

Review of the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1988(LX) of 11 May 1976, by which it noted the important responsibilities placed upon the Economic and Social Council by the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in particular those resulting from articles 21 and 22 of the Covenant, and expressed its readiness to fulfil those responsibilities?

Recalling its decision 1978/10 of 3 May 1978, by which it decided to establish a Sessional Working Group on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, for the purpose of assisting the Council in the consideration of reports submitted by States parties to the Covenant in accordance with Council resolution 1988(LX), and determined the composition of the Working Group,

Recalling also its resolution 1979/43 of 11 May 1979, by which it approved the methods of work of the Working Group, and its decision 1981/158 of 8 May 1981, by which it incorporated certain changes in, and modified the methods of work of, the Working Group,

Recalling further its resolution 1982/33 of 6 May 1982, by which it modified the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts and decided to review the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Group at its first regular session of 1985,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the composition, organization and administrative arrangements of the Sessional Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and other bodies established in accordance with existing international instruments in the field of human rights,

Recorded vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Botswana, Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea, Iceland, India, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Bangladesh, Brazil, Japan, Malaysia.

The United States, which had asked for the vote, said that although it understood that some adjustments might be desirable, it was not convinced that the conversion of the Sessional Working Group into a Committee of experts was the most appropriate manner for the Council to fulfil its responsibility under the Covenant; at the time of extreme budgetary austerity, the related expenses were not justified.

The United Kingdom believed that the proposed changes would enhance the application of the Covenant and the attitude of States towards it; efforts should be made to cover the new expense by redeployment.

The USSR supported the text, saying it ensured the participation of experts from all States and might even effect savings in the Committee's expenses.

By decision 1985/161 of 28 May, the Economic and Social Council approved the provisional agenda for 1986 of the Sessional Working Group. By decision 1985/162 of the same date, the Council decided on the membership of the Bureau for 1986 of the Working Group (see APPENDIX III). Both decisions had been recommended to the Council by the Working Group and both were adopted by the Council without vote.

Right to development

Human Rights Commission action. By a 14 March 1985 resolution,<sup>(34)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 25 to 10, with 6 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reiterated that the right to development was an inalienable human right and that equality of opportunities for development was a prerogative both of nations and of individuals. The Commission decided to transmit to the General Assembly the part of its report and summary records that dealt with that right. It decided to convene its Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development for three weeks in January 1986 to study ways to promote that right, so that the Group could submit its proposals to the Commission.

By a May 1985 note,<sup>(35)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly the Commission's resolution and a draft declaration on the right to development, which had been annexed to a letter<sup>(36)</sup> of 7 March from Yugoslavia to the Commission Chairman.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/149, by roll-call vote.

The right to development

At its 25th plenary meeting, on 30 May 1985, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/43 of 14 March 1985, approved the Commission's decision to transmit to the General Assembly, through the Council, the report of the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, the part of the report of the Commission on Human Rights dealing with the right to development, the summary records of the Commission's discussion on the question during its forty-first session and any other relevant documents, so as to enable the Assembly to adopt a declaration on the right to development. The Council further approved the Commission's decision to convene the Working Group for three weeks in January 1986 to study the measures necessary to promote the right to development and its request to the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the Working Group.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/149

37-9-6 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) by recorded vote 134-9-71, 24 May (meeting 151; draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Lebanon, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Thailand, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Canada, Finland, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Japan, New Zealand, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: France, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Somalia, Spain, Turkey.

Speaking after the vote, the Netherlands said the text gave effect to a Commission resolution which had constituted a regrettable break with the consensus approach followed theretofore by the Commission on the question. Human rights could not be unilaterally proclaimed; they required universality, which formed the corner-stone of international law. Consensus was essential, the Federal Republic of Germany said, if the right to development was to become recognized as a universal right. Japan agreed that an important instrument such as a declaration on the right to development required wide consultations and had no value unless it was adopted by consensus. This view was shared by the United Kingdom.

The Netherlands and Japan found unacceptable the decision to convene the Working Group for three weeks in January 1986, because, they said, that would prejudice the outcome of the General Assembly debate.

Japan and Sweden, the latter speaking also on behalf of Finland and Iceland, said they considered it premature to refer the matter to the Assembly; it was unacceptable to schedule a meeting to discuss measures of implementation even before the right to development had been defined and a declaration adopted.

The Federal Republic of Germany held a similar view; the concept of a right to development was relatively new both in national and international law and practice, and extreme care must be taken to arrive at a precise definition of its nature and scope. The Working Group had not even arrived at tentative recommendations, it added. To convene the Working Group to study the implementation of a right before an accepted definition existed was not only illogical but also appeared to contradict the Group's mandate.

France was opposed to giving the Assembly the task of drafting the basic principles.

The United Kingdom said it voted against the text mainly for procedural reasons; a wider measure of agreement should have been achieved before it was referred to the Assembly. It was illogical to reconvene the Working Group if the Commission was now transmitting its work to the Assembly; it was not even clear that there was a mandate for reconvening the Group since it had been originally established to do work different from that which the decision would require it to complete.

New Zealand also considered it premature and prejudicial to forward the Working Group's documentation to the Assembly at the current stage.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 40/425 adopted on 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee,<sup>(37)</sup> the General Assembly, having considered the question of a draft declaration on the right to development, decided to transmit the draft and all relevant documents, including an amendment by Pakistan,<sup>(38)</sup> to its 1986 session, with a view to considering the question then.

The decision, approved by the Committee on 29 November without vote, was orally proposed by Yugoslavia on behalf of a group of sponsors that had also submitted a draft resolution<sup>(39)</sup> by which the Assembly would have adopted a declaration on the right to development: Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, Colombia, Cyprus, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Guyana, Nigeria, Peru, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia. An amendment to the draft declaration, proposed by France and the Netherlands,<sup>(40)</sup> would incorporate article 1, paragraph 2, of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>(41)</sup> into a provision stating that the right to development implied full realization of the right to self-determination, which included the inalienable right to sovereignty over natural wealth and resources.

Pakistan's amendment would add a new article 4 stating that the achievement of the right to development required concerted international and national efforts to eliminate economic deprivation, hunger and disease in all parts of the world without discrimination, and identifying the objectives of international co-operation in that respect.

Introducing the draft resolution for the sponsors, Yugoslavia said the original draft declaration<sup>(35)</sup> transmitted to the Council and Assembly had been slightly revised to meet the concerns of a number of delegations; the sponsors were working to achieve consensus. Subsequently, in the absence of that consensus, Yugoslavia and the sponsors proposed the decision to defer consideration of the draft.

Among the documents to be forwarded to the Assembly's 1986 session in accordance with the decision was a draft declaration<sup>(42)</sup> on the right to development submitted to the Third Committee by India, on behalf of the experts from the non-aligned countries of the Working Group of Governmental Experts of the Commission on Human Rights.

Also on the Third Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted, without vote, decision 40/427 on 13 December, by which it considered that the meeting of that Working Group scheduled for January 1986 should be postponed, so that the Commission at its 1986 session could provide guidance to the Group in the light of the Assembly's current discussions and decisions. The Committee approved the text, orally proposed by its Chairman, without vote on 6 December.

In resolution 40/124, the Assembly expressed concern at the current situation with regard to the achievement of the objectives and goals for establishing a new international economic order and the adverse effects of that situation on the full realization of human rights, in particular the right to development, which, the Assembly reaffirmed, was an inalienable human right. The Assembly again requested the Commission to take the necessary measures to promote that right, and welcomed its decision concerning the future work of the Working Group. It also requested the Secretary-General to submit in 1986 information on the Group's progress.

Right to food

In a progress report to the Sub-Commission,<sup>(43)</sup> Special Rapporteur Asbjorn Eide (Norway), entrusted by the Economic and Social Council in 1983<sup>(44)</sup> with the preparation of a study on the right to adequate food as a human right, stated that he had found it desirable to postpone completion of the study until 1986 because of certain ongoing activities at the international level-food-related conferences, committee meetings, studies, workshops-the outcome of which should be reported in the final study. A draft of the study's first five chapters had been submitted in 1984.<sup>(45)</sup>

At the intergovernmental level, the Special Rapporteur reported, the Director-General of FAO, at the request of the Committee on World Food Security, had prepared a draft text on a World Food Security Compact which addressed several issues of significance for the current study. The Compact (later adopted by the FAO Conference in November 1985) sought the achievement of everyone's fundamental right to be free from hunger and to make food security an integral objective of economic and social plans. According to the Compact, action should be aimed at attaining desirable levels of food production, increasing stability of food supply, and ensuring access to food supplies for those in need. Food should not be used to exert political pressure. Governments should give overriding priority to food security and reaffirm their commitment to strengthen global food security. The Compact, he said, was not cast in binding legal terms, but rather was intended as a set of moral and political commitments.

The Special Rapporteur concluded that interest in the right to food had substantially increased.

The Sub-Commission decided on 22 August<sup>(46)</sup> to invite the Special Rapporteur to present his study to the 1986 session.

In a 14 March resolution<sup>(*)</sup> on the realization of economic, social and cultural rights, the Commission on Human Rights had urged the Sub-Commission to pursue the study on the right to food as a priority matter and submit it to the Commission as soon as possible. It invited the Director-General of FAO to submit to it in 1986 a concise report on the state of implementation of the right to food.

Popular participation and human rights

Human Rights Commission action. Taking note of a final study<sup>(47)</sup> by the Secretary-General on popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights, the Commission on Human Rights requested on 14 March<sup>(48)</sup> that the study be submitted to the General Assembly and circulated to Member States, United Nations organs and agencies and NGOs for comments. The Secretary-General was requested to submit to the Commission a report containing those comments.

In his study, requested in 1983,<sup>(49)</sup> the Secretary-General described the evolution of the concept of popular participation and examined the relationships between participation and development and participation and human rights. He also analysed the question of recognizing popular participation as a right in national and international legislation. Although seldom explicitly guaranteed as a right in national legislation, there seemed to be a growing trend towards its recognition as a right in one or more areas of economic, social and political life, he stated, for example with regard to trade union rights, enterprise councils and membership of co-operatives. In international legal instruments, he said, the right to popular participation did not appear to be expressly established as such; on the other hand, a number of international texts of varying legal nature contained elements of it, some of which went so far as to enunciate a global right to participation.

The Secretary-General reported to the Assembly on the topic in August<sup>(50)</sup> pursuant to an Assembly request of 1983,<sup>(51)</sup> reviewing progress made since then in the consideration of the question by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/99, without vote.

Popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/152 of 17 December 1979, 37/55 of 3 December 1982 and 38/24 of 22 November 1983,

Reaffirming that popular participation in all sectors of public life, including the participation of workers in management and workers' self-management where they exist, constitutes an important factor in socio-economic development and in the full realization of all human rights and the dignity of the human person,

1. Takes note of the study by the Secretary-General;
2. Invites Governments, the concerned specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the relevant non-governmental organizations to transmit to the Secretary-General their comments on the study;
3. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to consider at its forty-second and, if desired by the Commission, at its forty-third, forty-fourth and forty-fifth sessions, the question of popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in the full realization of all human rights, and to inform the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council, of the results of that consideration;
4. Decides to continue the consideration of this question at its forty-fourth session, in the context of the item relating to the world social situation, under the sub-item entitled "Popular participation in its various forms as an important factor in development and in the full realization of all human rights".

Advancement of human rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly an overview of current international conditions and human rights, based on information from four Governments-Cuba, Nigeria, Panama, Qatar-seven United Nations bodies and agencies and an intergovernmental organization. The report was a follow-up to two previous reports, submitted in 1981<sup>(2)</sup> and 1983.<sup>(3)</sup> Despite a number of positive developments since then, the Secretary-General stated, the picture was far from encouraging, the overall situation being characterized by continuing large-scale breaches of civil and political as well as economic, social and cultural rights. In spite of the problems and obstacles encountered, the United Nations was attempting to respond to them through different mechanisms and procedures, and international co-operation in that regard was intensifying. However, those efforts could not succeed unless matched by corresponding national efforts; the effort of the international community must therefore be geared to improving national conditions in every domain.

The information received provided cause for cautious optimism, the Secretary-General said. Perhaps the most significant development was a heightening awareness of human rights issues by Governments and international organizations, which also manifested itself in further ratifications of international human rights conventions. There was also continued progress in the drafting of conventions on the rights of the child and of migrant workers and other instruments dealing with the rights of aliens, the right to development, abolition of the death penalty and the protection of detainees. The increasing number of situations under consideration by the Commission on Human Rights in recent years attested not only to the severity of human rights violations around the world, but also to an increased willingness by Member States to focus on specific situations with a view to terminating violations. There was also growing emphasis on the advisory services programme, to help Governments strengthen their laws and institutions.

Some respondents, he reported, felt that certain issues, such as the safeguarding of peace and the promotion of development, should be further examined from their human rights perspective. The right to life, the right to development, the need to curb the arms race, and human rights violations resulting from aggression, occupation, exploitation and foreign intervention were mentioned; an unjust international economic order having adverse consequences for human rights, racial discrimination, particularly apartheid, and discrimination against women were cited as issues that should retain the international community's attention.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/124 by recorded vote.

Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms

The General Assembly,

Recalling that in the Charter of the United Nations the peoples of the United Nations declared their determination to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small and to employ international machinery for the promotion of the economic and social advancement of all peoples,

Recalling also the purposes and principles of the Charter to achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Emphasizing the significance and validity of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and of the International Covenants on Human Rights in promoting respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Recalling its resolution 32/130 of 16 December 1977, in which it decided that the approach to the future work within the United Nations system with respect to human rights questions should take into account the concepts set forth in that resolution,

Recalling also its resolutions 34/46 of 23 November 1979, 35/174 of 15 December 1980, 36/133 of 14 December 1981, 38/124 of 16 December 1983 and 39/145 of 14 December 1984,

Taking into account Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/43 of 14 March 1985,

Underlining the fact that the right to development is an inalienable human right,

Recognising that the human being is the main subject of development and that everyone has the right to participate in, as well as to benefit from, the development process,

Reiterating once again that the establishment of the new international economic order is an essential element for the effective promotion and the full enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all,

Reiterating also its profound conviction that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent and that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political and economic, social and cultural rights,

Reaffirming the importance of furthering the activities of the existing organs of the United Nations system in the field of human rights in conformity with the principles of the Charter,

Underlining the need for the creation of conditions at the national and international levels for the promotion and full protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples,

Recognizing that international peace and security are essential elements for the full realization of human rights, including the right to development,

Considering that the resources that would be released by disarmament could contribute significantly to the development of all States, in particular the developing countries

Recognizing that co-operation among all nations on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, is essential for the promotion of peace and development,

Convinced that the primary aim of such international co-operation must be the achievement by each human being of a life of freedom and dignity and freedom from want,

Acknowledging the progress so far achieved by the international community in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Concerned, however, at the occurrence of violations of human rights in the world,

Reaffirming that nothing in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights or in the International Covenants on Human Rights may be interpreted as implying for any State, group or person the right to engage in any activity or perform any act aimed at the destruction of any of the rights and freedoms set forth therein,

Affirming that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population, on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom,

Emphasizing that Governments have the duty to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Taking note of the work done by the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development, as reflected in its reports to the Commission on Human Rights,

1. Reiterates its request that the Commission on Human Rights continue its current work on the overall analysis with a view to further promoting and improving human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the question of the Commission's programme and working methods, and on the overall analysis of the alternative approaches and ways and means for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in accordance with the provisions and concepts of General Assembly resolution 32/130 and other relevant texts;

2. Affirms that a primary aim of international co-operation in the field of human rights is a life of freedom, dignity and peace for all peoples and for each human being, that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interrelated and that the promotion and protection of one category of rights should never exempt or excuse States from the promotion and protection of the others;

3. Affirms its profound conviction that equal attention and urgent consideration should be given to the implementation, promotion and protection of both civil and political and economic, social and cultural rights;

4. Reaffirms that it is of paramount importance for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms that Member States should undertake specific obligations through accession to, or ratification of, international instruments in this field and, consequently, that the standard-setting work within the United Nations system in the field of human rights and the universal acceptance and implementation of the relevant international instruments should be encouraged;

5. Reiterates once again that the international community should accord, or continue to accord, priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals affected by situations such as those mentioned in paragraph 1 (e) of General Assembly resolution 32/130, paying due attention also to other situations of violations of human rights;

6. Reaffirms its responsibility for achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and expresses its concern at serious violations of human rights, in particular mass and flagrant violations of these rights, wherever they occur;

7. Expresses concern at the present situation with regard to the achievement of the objectives and goals for establishing the new international economic order and its adverse effects on the full realization of human rights, in particular the right to development;

8. Reaffirms that the right to development is an inalienable human right;

9. Reaffirms also that international peace and security are essential elements in achieving the full realization of the right to development;

10. Recognizes that all human rights and fundamental freedoms are indivisible and interdependent;

11. Considers it necessary that all Member States promote international co-operation on the basis of respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources, subject to the principles referred to in article 1, paragraph 2, and article 25 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, with a view to resolving international problems of an economic, social and humanitarian character;

12. Expresses concern at the disparity existing between the established norms and principles and the actual situation of all human rights and fundamental freedoms in the world;

13. Urges all States to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

14. Reiterates the need to create, at the national and international levels, conditions for the full promotion and protection of the human rights of individuals and peoples;

15. Reaffirms once again that, in order to facilitate the full enjoyment of all rights and complete personal dignity, it is necessary to promote the rights to education, work, health and proper nourishment through the adoption of measures at the national level, including those that provide for workers' participation in management, as well as the adoption of measures at the international level, including the establishment of the new international economic order;

16. Again requests the Commission on Human Rights to take the necessary measures to promote the right to development, and welcomes the decision of the Commission, in its resolution 1985/43, concerning the future work of the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report containing information on the progress made by the Working Group in the accomplishment of its tasks;

18. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms".

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cane Verde Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia; Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao, Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaïre, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom.

After a procedural debate, the Committee decided by 90 votes to 19, with 13 abstentions, to take immediate action on the text. Any decision on the draft resolution, said Senegal, depended on the decision on the 12-nation draft resolution which contained the draft declaration on the right to development (see p. 879); the main priority was adoption of the latter. That view was supported by Pakistan.

Canada and Italy felt that the two drafts should have been considered together. Greece said delegations had been led to believe they would be. Austria, Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany said it was illogical to take a decision on a text with references to the right to development before the conclusion of negotiations on the draft declaration. No decision on the text should have been taken until the draft declaration had been considered, according to Australia, Brazil, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom. The Netherlands stated that it would not be able to join a consensus on the text before the draft declaration had been considered.

Cuba, Mauritania and Yugoslavia, on the other hand, believed that the two should not be linked. The Syrian Arab Republic saw no reason to wait for adoption of the declaration before acting on the resolution.

The Federal Republic of Germany said the eleventh preambular paragraph did not adequately reflect the different proposals made to strengthen and further develop existing organs to ensure protection of human rights. The text contained vague concepts concerning the international framework for the promotion of human rights, particularly in the ninth and thirteenth to fifteenth preambular paragraphs and paragraphs 2, 7, 9, 15 and 16. The notion should not be given, the Federal Republic said, that putting into effect such concepts as a new international economic order was a pre-condition for the guarantee of human rights, a view that Finland also expressed on behalf of the Nordic countries. Issues concerning international peace and security and disarmament and development should be dealt with in more competent forums, the Federal Republic added.

Australia had reservations concerning the seventh to ninth, fifteenth and sixteenth preambular paragraphs, which it said might prejudice results of negotiations aimed at defining the right to development. Italy also felt that those negotiations might be prejudged by the reference to the Commission's decisions. Japan had difficulties in particular with paragraph 8, referring to the right to development. Spain said it believed that the references in paragraphs 16 and 17 to the Working Group of Governmental Experts on the Right to Development and the task entrusted to it by the Commission on Human Rights were in contradiction with each other.

Ireland said the text did not focus clearly on the nature of human rights and gave undue attention to factors which impaired its balance. It was not sufficient to discuss approaches; the text must also deal with ways to improve enjoyment of human rights and the role of the United Nations in respect of human rights violations.

National institutions for human rights protection

In July 1985, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(4)</sup> on national institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984.<sup>(5)</sup> The Assembly had also encouraged all Member States to take steps to establish or strengthen such national institutions. In the light of information received, the Secretary-General was to prepare for publication, as a handbook for the use of Governments, a consolidated report on the various types and models of national and local institutions for promoting and protecting human rights.

As at 15 June, information had been received from Barbados, Cyprus and France. Periodic reports under various international human rights instruments would be taken into account in preparing the report, the Secretary-General stated, as would information from inter- and non-governmental organizations and specialized agencies, especially ILO and UNESCO.

The report annexed the table of contents of the first study on national institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/123, without vote.

cluding information on the various types and models of national and local institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights, taking into account differing social and legal systems;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN machinery

Human Rights Commission action. On 14 March 1985,<sup>(6)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights decided to consider in 1986 the possible establishment of an open-ended working group to continue the overall analysis of alternative ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and of further promoting those rights and freedoms, including the question of the Commission's programme and methods of work.

Commission on Human Rights

Organization of work of the 1986 session

Taking into account its heavy work schedule and that of its sessional working groups, the Commission on 14 March 1985<sup>(7)</sup> decided to recommend that the Economic and Social Council authorize 20 fully serviced additional meetings, including summary records, for the Commission's 1986 session, whose Chairman was to make every effort to organize the work within the normal allotted time.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On the Commission's and the Second Committee's recommendation, the Council, by decision 1985/151 of 30 May 1985, approved without vote by all three bodies, authorized, if possible within existing financial resources, the requested 20 additional meetings and summary records. It also took note of the Commission's decision to request the Chairman of the 1986 session to make every effort to ensure that additional meetings were utilized only if absolutely necessary.

Report of the Commission

On 30 May 1985, by decision 1985/154, the Economic and Social Council took note without vote of the report(s) of the Commission on Human Rights on its forty-first session (Geneva, 4 February-15 March 1985). The Council's Second Committee had approved the text, recommended by the Commission, on 24 May.

Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities

Review of the work of the Sub-Commission

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March 1985,<sup>(9)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights noted that its Sub-Commission in 1984 had reviewed and made suggestions for improving its work;<sup>(10)</sup> it endorsed the desirability of better continuity in that work and requested the Secretary-General, after consultation with Member States, to report to the Commission in 1986 on existing election procedures which could provide for such continuity so that the Commission could decide on the matter. The Commission stressed that it was important that States nominate as members and alternates experts not subject to government instructions. It recommended that the Sub-Commission propose a new study only when a previously authorized study was in the final stage of completion; it also requested the Sub-Commission to give priority to topics on which standards were being prepared and give due consideration to recommendations for the printing and distribution of studies, taking into account the long-term plan for studies for 1985-1989 and the availability of financial resources. The Sub-Commission was invited to seek the widest possible agreement on draft resolutions proposed for adoption, bearing in mind that they should reflect thorough discussion and be consistent with the Sub-Commission's role as a body of independent experts; it was also requested to complete the review of its work and submit in 1986 recommendations for its further rationalization.

Working Group activities. The sessional Working Group on the Review of the Work of the Sub-Commission, which first met in 1984,<sup>(11)</sup> held four meetings between 7 and 20 August 1985. Summarizing its observations and comments, especially regarding points taken up by the Commission in its March resolution, the Working Group recommended in its report<sup>(12)</sup> to the Sub-Commission that the review be continued by the Sub-Commission as a whole.

Sub-Commission action. By a 29 August 1985 resolution,<sup>(13)</sup> adopted by 18 votes to 1, the Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission that, in order to ensure greater continuity of its membership, half of its members be elected every two years, which would require that the term of membership be increased to four years. In order to enable a maximum of three sessional working groups to meet concurrently, additional services for three 3-hour meetings should be authorized. Consideration should be given to changing the name of the Sub-Commission to Sub-Commission of Experts on Human Rights, and ways should be explored to ensure the quality of the studies of special rapporteurs and provide them with more resources. The Sub-Commission decided that the Working Group should discontinue its work so that further discussion by all Sub-Commission members would be reflected in the summary records.

On 28 August,<sup>(14)</sup> the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to inform the Committee on Conferences of its view that the summary records of the Sub-Commission could not be further abbreviated, and asked him to continue to provide them in the existing format.

Future work of the Sub-Commission

On 30 August 1985,<sup>(15)</sup> the Sub-Commission decided that the following items would be considered on a biennial basis, starting in 1986: the new international economic order and the promotion of human rights; elimination of all forms of intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief; and international peace and security as an essential condition for the enjoyment of human rights, above all the right to life. The items on human rights and disability, human rights and scientific and technological developments, and encouragement of universal acceptance of human rights instruments would also be considered biennially, starting in 1987.

Report of the Sub-Commission for 1985

By decision 1985/153 of 30 May, the Economic and Social Council approved a 14 March decision<sup>(16)</sup> of the Commission on Human Rights to invite the Sub-Commission to be present, through the Chairman or a designated member, at the consideration of its 1985 report by the Commission in 1986. The Council's Second Committee had approved the decision on 24 May.

In a 29 August 1985 resolution<sup>(13)</sup> on review of its work (see above), the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to inform it in 1986 of the Commission's consideration of its 1985 report.

Inter-sessional meetings of the Bureau

By a 29 August resolution,<sup>(17)</sup> adopted by 7 votes to 4, with 8 abstentions the Sub-Commission requested authorization for the Bureau elected at each of its sessions to hold two inter-sessional meetings per year, so that it could review developments and ensure timely collection of information needed for bringing to the Commission's attention any situation which it believed revealed a consistent pattern of human rights violations (see p. 898).

Public information activities

In a February 1985 report to the Commission on Human Rights,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General gave an overview of public information activities in the human rights field by the United Nations Department of Public Information (DPI) and United Nations information centres, as well as by Governments and NGOs.

By a resolution of 14 March,<sup>(19)</sup> the Commission requested Governments to facilitate publicity on United Nations human rights activities, with particular reference to the work of the Commission and expert bodies, and to accord priority to the dissemination of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General to issue by the end of 1986 a personalized version of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in the six official United Nations languages, and afterwards to produce personalized versions in national and local languages. It requested him to build up the reference works on human rights in each information centre and requested United Nations agencies to send reference material to the Centre for Human Rights for distribution. It also asked the Secretary-General to make greater use of audio-visual techniques and computer technology to collect relevant, already prepared material, prepare a basic human rights teaching booklet in the six official languages, and examine how the United Nations system might assist in the dissemination of human rights material. The Commission asked the regional commissions to assist in dissemination and investigate ways of promoting co-operation within the regions to that end. Governments, United Nations agencies and NGOs were requested to submit further comments and proposals for enhancing United Nations promotional activities, and the Secretary-General was to report to it in 1986 on implementation of the resolution, including a status report on the availability of the principal international human rights instruments in official and other languages, the amount in stock and a summary of the activities of the information centres related to human rights.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/125, without vote.

Development of public information activities in the field of human rights

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming that activities to improve public knowledge in the field of human rights are necessary to the fulfilment of the purposes of the United Nations set out in Article 1, paragraph 3, of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions on the status of the International Covenants on Human Rights, including resolution 39/136 of 14 December 1984,

Taking into account the relevant General Assembly resolutions concerning the further promotion of human rights, including resolution 39/144 of 14 December 1984 relating to the activities of national institutions in the field of human rights,

Welcoming Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/49 of 14 March 1985 on the development of public information activities in the field of human rights,

Recognizing the fundamental importance of national and regional public information activities in the field of human rights and the catalytic effect that initiatives of the United Nations can have on these activities,

Reaffirming that programmes of teaching, education and information in the field of human rights are central to the achievement of lasting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Noting the importance of making available United Nations materials on human rights in national and local languages, including in simplified form, and of making more effective use of the mass media and of new technologies in order to reach a wider audience, especially the less-educated and those in isolated areas,

Believing that the promotional activities of the United Nations system in the field of human rights should be enhanced and strengthened,

1. Requests all Member States to take appropriate steps, by all available means, including the mass media, to give publicity to the activities of the United Nations in the field of human rights and to accord priority to the dissemination, in their respective national and local languages, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and other international conventions;

2. Calls upon all relevant bodies of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies and the regional commissions, to assist further in the dissemination of United Nations material on human rights;

3. Welcomes the efforts of the Secretary-General to issue a personalized version of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in the six official languages of the United Nations, having in mind the desirability of completing this task in 1986, and also welcomes the preparation of a list of basic reference works on human rights for use by United Nations information centres and other interested bodies;

4. Takes note with satisfaction of the request of the Commission on Human Rights to the Secretary-General, in its resolution 1985/49, to collect relevant material, including that prepared by specialized agencies, regional bodies, groups, non-governmental organizations and individuals, with a view to preparing a basic teaching booklet on human rights in the six official languages of the United Nations;

5. Recommends that all Member States consider including, in their educational curricula, material relevant to a comprehensive understanding of human rights issues;

6. Urges the Commission on Human Rights to give special attention at its forty-second session to the development of public information activities in the field of human rights and to submit to the General Assembly) at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, its views and recommendations on further action;

7. Decides to continue its consideration of this question at its forty-first session under the item entitled

“Alternative approaches and ways and means within the United Nations system for improving the effective enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms”.

Regional arrangements

Taking note of the Secretary-General's 1984 report<sup>(20)</sup> to the General Assembly on regional arrangements for the promotion and protection of human rights, the Commission on Human Rights, on 14 March 1985<sup>(21)</sup> invited States members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) to submit comments on the 1982 Seminar on National, Local and Regional Arrangements for the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights in the Asian Region,<sup>(22)</sup> in particular on the conclusions and recommendations concerning development of regional arrangements in Asia and the Pacific. ESCAP, the other regional commissions and intergovernmental bodies dealing with human rights were also invited to submit their comments, to be incorporated in an interim report by the Secretary-General to the Commission in 1986.

The Commission requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with ESCAP and Governments of the region, to consider establishing a regional depository centre for human rights materials.

International human rights instruments

In a June 1985 note to the Sub-Commission,<sup>(23)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the status of several international human rights instruments, including the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights,<sup>(24)</sup> the 1965 International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,<sup>(25)</sup> the 1973 International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid,<sup>(26)</sup> and the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.<sup>(27)</sup>

The Secretary-General transmitted in a note<sup>(28)</sup> to the Sub-Commission the replies of live Governments, as of 1 May, to his invitation, issued in accordance with a 1984 Sub-Commission request,<sup>(29)</sup> to provide information on circumstances which had prevented them from adhering to human rights instruments.

By a 27 August 1985 resolution,<sup>(30)</sup> adopted by 15 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions, the Sub-Commission decided to include the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment<sup>(31)</sup> in the list of human rights instruments whose universal acceptance was to be encouraged. It requested the Secretary-General to renew the invitation for submission of information, to examine further the idea of offering legal training to local staff or providing experts to assist in the drafting of legislation and regulations, with a view to enabling States to ratify or accede to those instruments, to keep under review the idea of designating regional advisers on international human rights standards, to continue informal consultations with government representatives on prospects for ratification, and to update the table of country-by-country developments in connection with ratification or accession. The Sub-Commission decided, until further review of its mandate, to suspend the work of the Working Group on the Encouragement of Universal Acceptance of Human Rights Instruments and asked its Chairman to appoint a member to report in 1987 on information received.

By a note verbale of 10 December,<sup>(32)</sup> the Syrian Arab Republic transmitted to the Secretary-General a statement of its Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the occasion of the thirty-seventh anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, relating the Declaration to its constitution and stressing the need for the international community to continue to combat continuing violations of human rights.

Reporting obligations of States parties

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1985,<sup>(33)</sup> the Secretary-General presented to the General Assembly a report on reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights. Reporting obligations were contained in six such instruments, including the two International Covenants,<sup>(24)</sup> the Conventions against racial discrimination<sup>(25)</sup> and against apartheid,<sup>(26)</sup> and the Convention on eliminating discrimination against women.<sup>(27)</sup> (The sixth, the Convention against torture,<sup>(31)</sup> was not yet in force.) States parties undertook to submit initial and periodic reports to an international supervisory body responsible for monitoring implementation of each Convention. The periodicity of reporting after the entry into force varied from one instrument to the other. As at 1 June 1985, the system of reporting under the conventions comprised 138 States which were parties to at least one of those instruments; overdue reports totalled 384. Approximately half of the outstanding reports were overdue from a group of 27 States parties which seemed to encounter difficulties in submitting them, the Secretary-General stated; another characteristic common to that group was that most of them were parties either to four or to all five conventions.

An addendum to the report contained a compilation of general guidelines on the form and content of the various reports to be submitted under the five conventions in force.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/116, without vote.

Reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 37/44 of 3 December 1982, in which it noted with concern the critical situation with regard to overdue reports under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and affirmed the necessity of considering that situation within the overall framework of all reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights,

Recalling also its resolution 38/117 of 16 December 1983, in which it noted that many delays were also occurring in the submission of reports under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, as indicated by the Secretary-General in his first report on the overall situation with regard to reporting obligations,

Recalling further its resolution 39/138 of 14 December 1984, in which the General Assembly, having considered the report of the meeting of the Chairmen of the supervisory bodies entrusted with the consideration of reports submitted under United Nations conventions on human rights and of the Commission on Human Rights, held at Geneva on 16 and 17 August 1984, expressed its concern about the problems experienced by those bodies in the functioning of the reporting procedures and its conviction of the need to improve the existing reporting system in order to resolve the problems experienced both by those bodies and by the States parties to the various conventions on human rights,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing updated information as at 1 June 1985 on the general situation of the submission of reports of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights and a compilation of the general guidelines elaborated by the various human rights bodies under the human rights instruments containing reporting obligations,

Noting with deep concern that the number of reports overdue from States parties to at least one of the conventions on human rights has increased seriously and may even increase further unless appropriate steps are taken to ascertain better the root causes of the situation and to devise appropriate types of action that can progressively remove the difficulties being experienced,

Recalling, in this respect, Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/26 of 11 March 1985 concerning the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, and also resolution 1985/45 of 14 March 1985, in which the Commission, having considered the status of the International Covenants on Human Rights, requested the Secretary-General to consider ways and means of making advice and assistance available to States parties to these instruments in the preparation of their reports,

Recognising once again and with deeper concern the burden that several coexisting reporting systems place upon

Member States that are parties to various conventions, which in future may become more acute in relation to the ratification of other conventions,

Reiterating the importance it attaches to the fulfilment of obligations under international conventions on human rights, including reporting obligations,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the very comprehensive second report of the Secretary-General on reporting obligations of States parties to United Nations conventions on human rights, which contains:

(a) Updated information on the general situation of the submission of reports of States parties to the five conventions currently in force;

(b) Consideration of and suggestions on the question of consolidating the guidelines of the supervisory bodies entrusted with the consideration of the reports of States parties on the implementation of the conventions;

(c) A list of articles dealing with related rights under the various conventions and a compilation of the current guidelines;

2. Expresses its deep concern about the alarming number of reports overdue from many States parties to the international conventions on human rights, which negatively affects the reporting systems of those conventions, in particular the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights;

3. Expresses particular concern that some States that are parties to four or to five conventions seem to have serious difficulties in submitting their reports, as indicated by the repeated reminders addressed to them by the Secretary-General at the request of the competent supervisory bodies;

4. Takes note with interest of Economic and Social Council decision 1985/132 of 28 May 1985, by which, while maintaining the first six-year cycle of the reporting procedures on the implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Council decided to establish a nine-year period for the subsequent cycles, and considers this decision a first step towards the necessary lightening of the heavy burden of reporting obligations placed upon the States parties to that Covenant;

5. Supports the request addressed to the Secretary-General by the Commission on Human Rights, in its resolution 1985/45, concerning the provision of practical assistance to States, under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights, in the preparation of their reports under United Nations conventions;

6. Commends the United Nations Institute for Training and Research for having organized in the Caribbean region, at the suggestion of the Centre for Human Rights and with its close co-operation, a training course on the preparation and submission of reports under international conventions on human rights, and expresses the hope that other courses of that type may be organized in Africa and Asia;

7. Believes that new timely steps are needed in order to ascertain better the most relevant causes of the present situation regarding the non-submission of reports and to devise feasible types of action intended to remove the difficulties being encountered;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, to this end, to send a note verbale to all States parties to the five United Nations conventions on human rights having at 1 February 1986 more than two reports overdue, inviting them to indicate, if they so wish, the reasons for their difficulties in complying with the reporting obligations with regard to the conventions under which their reports are overdue and their interest, if any, in technical advice and assistance with a view to better fulfilling their reporting obligations;

9. Invites the supervisory bodies entrusted with the consideration of reports submitted under all conventions currently in force to give particular attention, during the usual consideration of the action taken by the General Assembly on their annual reports, to the report of the Secretary-General and to the present resolution;

10. Recommends to the States parties to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination that, at their next meeting they consider suggesting to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination the adoption, as a general rule, of the practice already being followed by the Committee of considering two successive reports in one single text;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report containing updated information on the general situation with regard to overdue reports, an assessment of the operational and financial implications of increasing training activities in this field and the results of the request addressed to him in paragraph 8 above;

12. Decides to consider at its forty-first session the convening, in 1987, of another meeting of the Chairmen of the supervisory bodies, including the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and, if already established, the committee against torture, in order to consider jointly the report of the Secretary-General requested in paragraph 11 above;

13. Fully concurs with the considerations and suggestions of the Secretary-General on the question of consolidating the guidelines of the supervisory bodies entrusted with the consideration of reports of the States parties on the implementation of the conventions on human rights;

14. Takes note with appreciation of the compilation of the general guidelines elaborated by the various supervisory bodies and of the list of articles dealing with related rights under the five conventions, both of which are very helpful for States parties in the preparation of their reports;

15. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session a separate item entitled "Reporting obligations of States parties to the United Nations conventions on human rights".

International Covenants on Human Rights

Human Rights Commission action. On 14 March 1985,<sup>(34)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed the importance of the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights<sup>(24)</sup> in promoting universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. It invited States to become parties to the Covenants and to consider acceding to the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, emphasizing the importance of strict compliance with the obligations under those instruments. The Commission noted with satisfaction the number of parties that had been represented by experts for the presentation of their reports. It urged the Secretary-General to give more publicity to the work of the supervisory committees and improve administrative and related arrangements to enable them to carry out their functions effectively. It encouraged all Governments to publish and distribute the texts of the Covenants in as many languages as possible. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to consider ways to assist States parties in preparing their reports, including fellowships, regional training courses and other possibilities under the programme of advisory services. It also requested him to report in 1986 on the status of the Covenants. (See also p. 853.)

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1985<sup>(35)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on the status of ratifications and accessions to the two Covenants and on questions related to their implementation. As at 1 September 1985, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights had been ratified or acceded to by 84 States, while those adhering to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights numbered 80. In addition, nine States had signed the former, 10 the latter, and seven had signed the Optional Protocol to the latter Covenant. Eighteen States had made the declaration provided for in article 41 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, recognizing the competence of the Human Rights Committee established under article 28 to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State party claimed that another State party was not fulfilling its obligations under the Covenant. (See also pp. 853 and 876.)

Advisory services

In 1985, under the United Nations programme of advisor services in human rights, established in 1955,<sup>(36)</sup> experts provided advisory services in the implementation of international human rights instruments, particularly the International Covenants. As reported<sup>(37)</sup> by the Secretary-General to the Commission on Human Rights, such assistance was provided during the year to Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea, Haiti and Uganda (see below). The programme also included training courses, seminars and fellowships. In 1985, recommendations were made for the award of 33 individual fellowships to candidates from 30 countries. Under the programme, a Seminar on Ways to Eliminate the Exploitation of Child Labour in All Parts of the World was held in co-operation with ILO (see p. 930); a Seminar on Community Relations Commissions and Their Functions (Geneva, 9-20 September),<sup>(38)</sup> held in the framework of activities to implement the Second Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, was financed by resources allocated from the programme.

Reports of the Secretary-General. In January 1985,<sup>(39)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on progress made in providing expert assistance to Governments in the human rights field. He informed the Commission on Human Rights that he had maintained contacts with the Governments of Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea and Haiti, and activities would be followed up in 1985 in the light of the Commission's deliberations on the three reports for those countries.

Various suggestions for a long-term programme of action had been made, including: the development of promotional, public information, regional and field activities; the promotion of ratifications of the International Covenants on Human Rights; the utilization of commemorative activities; the development of practical training; the development of model legislation; technical assistance for the strengthening of legal institutions; and the development of programmes within the Centre for Human Rights.

In his report, the Secretary-General reiterated recommendations for the provision of advisory services and technical assistance made at a meeting in August 1984<sup>(40)</sup> of the chairmen of the Human Rights Commission and the supervisory bodies of human rights instruments.

In another January 1985 report,<sup>(41)</sup> the Secretary-General gave a synopsis of 1984 decisions and recommendations of United Nations bodies affecting the advisory services programme. He also gave a brief overview of seminars and training courses held or planned under the programme. He stated that he would continue to provide human rights fellowships in 1985 within available resources.

Human Rights Commission action. On 11 March 1985,<sup>(42)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights encouraged the Secretary-General to enhance his efforts to provide advisory services assistance to States in the implementation of international human rights instruments, particularly the Covenants, and requested him to examine ways to facilitate the flow of bilateral human rights assistance to States which had indicated a need-giving consideration in such cases to the organization of information and/or training courses for government personnel and to consider the possibility of using voluntary contributions to implement projects under the programme. In cases in which assistance was being considered at a Government's request, the Secretary-General was invited to report to the Commission in 1986 on progress in implementing the programme and to continue considering suggestions for long- and short-term programmes of action.

On the same date, the Commission also adopted individual decisions on advisory services and technical assistance to Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea, Haiti and Uganda (see below).

Follow-up action. Pursuant to the Commission's resolution, the Secretary-General brought to the attention of all Governments and UNDP resident representatives the Commission's call for due consideration to be given, when awarding fellowships, to officials whose responsibilities related to the implementation of international human rights conventions.

Practical assistance to States was given in that regard by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) which, in co-operation with the Centre for Human Rights, arranged in 1985 a pilot training course (Barbados, June), the first in a series of three to focus on the training of persons whose tasks related to human rights conventions. The second and third courses were to be held in 1986 in Africa and Asia.

Also following the Commission's recommendation, the Secretary-General offered to organize in Bolivia, Equatorial Guinea, Haiti and Uganda similar information and/or training courses. He transmitted projects presented by Bolivia and Uganda to other Governments and international organizations for consideration of any technical assistance they could offer.

Bolivia

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1984 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(43)</sup> the Secretary-General reported<sup>(44)</sup> to the Commission on Human Rights in February 1985 on assistance to Bolivia and on implementation of the recommendations made in 1984 by Special Envoy Héctor Gros Espiell (Uruguay).<sup>(45)</sup> Contacts between government representatives and the Centre for Human Rights were continuing on the possibilities for providing assistance in disseminating human rights instruments in local languages, the development of teaching about human rights and the organization of a training course for law enforcement and prison officials. The Centre also expressed its readiness to offer two fellowships for the promotion of human rights. Letters had been sent in November 1984 to ILO, UNESCO and WHO drawing specific projects to their attention and asking for their comments.

When faced with such cases, the Secretary-General concluded, the most practical form of action which could be speedily organized by the United Nations, in co-operation with the Government concerned, would be training and/or information courses for civil servants, judges, law enforcement and prison officials, teachers and NGO representatives.

Annexed to the Secretary-General's report were replies from the Netherlands and seven United Nations bodies and organizations containing information on assistance they had provided to Bolivia in this field.

Human Rights Commission action. On 13 March 1985,<sup>(46)</sup> the Commission urged the Secretary-General to implement the projects mentioned in his report and invited Governments and international organizations to consider assisting projects to introduce the teaching of human rights as a subject at all education levels, to create a chair of human rights in the various higher-education centres, to increase human rights fellowships, to reform the national prison system and train specialized personnel, to look into the matter of enforced or involuntary disappearances, and to improve basic economic and health conditions and conditions of extreme poverty. The Commission again invited all Member States, United Nations organizations and NGOs to support Bolivia in its efforts to strengthen the enjoyment of human rights, and requested the Centre to maintain contacts with the agencies responsible for the various assistance programmes to Bolivia.

The Secretary-General initiated contacts with Bolivia, expressing the Centre's readiness to organize a training course for relevant government personnel, inviting the Government to nominate candidates for fellowships and offering teaching assistance and help in reproducing and disseminating international human rights instruments in local languages.

Equatorial Guinea

Appointed in accordance with a 1984 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(47)</sup> an expert, Fernando

Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica), undertook a mission to Equatorial Guinea from 13 to 20 November 1984. His report,<sup>(48)</sup> transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights in January 1985, contained recommendations to improve the human rights situation there which, he stated, had already changed significantly in accordance with the Government-approved plan of action he had suggested following a 1980 visit.<sup>(49)</sup> The positive results achieved so far would make it possible to continue to work towards the full restoration of human rights. He strongly recommended that relations between the Government and the United Nations be maintained with a view to implementing fully the plan of action and adopting other measures suited to the situation.

Recommending a number of administrative and constitutional changes, including a review of and amendments to the "Fundamental Law of Equatorial Guinea", the expert noted that United Nations co-operation was especially needed for the drafting of legislation, the training of legal and administrative staff and lawyers, the improvement of mass media and obtaining equipment to reopen a newspaper, and the identification of economic and social priorities. To work out better co-ordination between the Government and the Centre for Human Rights in implementing the plan of action, he suggested the establishment of a group of United Nations specialists or co-operation experts.

Commending the expert for his report and noting the improvement in the observance of human rights in Equatorial Guinea evident from it, the Commission on Human Rights, on 11 March 1985,<sup>(50)</sup> recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of a resolution on the subject.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/39, without vote.

Situation in Equatorial Guinea

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/36 of 7 May 1982, 1983/35 of 27 May 1983 and 1984/36 of 24 May 1984,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/30 of 11 March 1985,

Considering that the conclusions and recommendations of the expert appointed by the Secretary-General pursuant to Council resolution 1984/36 concerning his recent mission to Equatorial Guinea indicate that more needs to be done by the United Nations and the Government of Equatorial Guinea to implement and make better use of the plan of action proposed by the United Nations and accepted by the Government of Equatorial Guinea,

1. Requests the Government of Equatorial Guinea to consider the possibility of continuing to implement the plan of action, taking particular account of the expert's new proposals, especially those concerning amendments to the Fundamental Law of that country;

2. Further requests the Government of Equatorial Guinea to take steps to facilitate the repatriation of all refugees and exiles, including the adoption of measures enabling all citizens of Equatorial Guinea to participate fully in the country's political, economic, social and cultural affairs, thus helping to relieve the shortage of specialized personnel mentioned in the report of the expert;

3. Appeals to the Government of Equatorial Guinea to accede to the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, among other international instruments concerning human rights and fundamental freedoms;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the report of the expert, to hold discussions with the Government of Equatorial Guinea with a view to carrying out the expert's recommendations regarding assistance to that country, so that the plan of action can be fully implemented in the interests of the full and effective observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to appoint an expert to co-operate with 'the Government of Equatorial Guinea in the full implementation of the plan of action proposed by the United Nations and accepted by that Government';

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider this matter further at its forty-second session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/39

30 May 1985 Meeting 25 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) without vote, 24 May (meeting 151; draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Follow-up action. As the expert had recommended, a series of meetings were held in New York from 21 to 25 October between him and the President of Equatorial Guinea, its Minister for Foreign Affairs and Co-operation and high officials of his Ministry. In addition, the expert met with representatives of UNDP and a number of countries providing assistance.

In his discussions with the country's representatives, the expert examined an April request from Equatorial Guinea to the Secretary-General that two legal experts be sent to Malabo to assist in drafting certain basic legal texts. On his suggestion, two Costa Rican legal experts—Fernando Cruz and Oscar Fernández—were named for the drafting of a penal code and a code of criminal procedure, and later a civil code, commercial code and code of civil procedure. The experts left in late December for Equatorial Guinea, the Secretary-General reported.<sup>(51)</sup>

Other items discussed during the talks in New York included: the possibility of sending other specialists to the country in 1986 and 1987 to help the Government draft other provisions of the Constitution in matters pertaining to the protection of human rights; the training of staff for the judiciary and, in general, for legal assistance to citizens; and the promotion of women and training in government administration.

Haiti

In accordance with a 1984 Economic and Social Council decision,<sup>(52)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the Commission on Human Rights in January 1985<sup>(53)</sup> on human rights assistance to Haiti. To explore further with the Government ways of facilitating the realization of full enjoyment of human rights, he had called on Jonas K. D. Foli (Ghana) to make contact with the Haitian authorities and the National Human Rights Commission, a national NGO, to ascertain what assistance the United Nations could provide. The expert met with the Commission during his visit to Haiti in October 1984 to discuss the establishment of a documentation centre or library for the Commission, the award of fellowships in human rights, and the organization and promotion of seminars. It was decided that all the points raised during the meetings with the Commission would be embodied in a recommendation made by the Commission to the Government which, it was hoped, would send concrete proposals to the United Nations. At the date of the completion of the report, no such proposals had been received. Meanwhile, the United Nations Centre for Human Rights had ensured the dispatch to the National Commission of a number of human rights documents as a nucleus for a prospective documentation centre.

In conformity with an 11 March recommendation<sup>(42)</sup> by the Commission on Human Rights, the Secretary-General reported,<sup>(54)</sup> a formal proposal was made to the Government on 5 July regarding the organization of a national training course designed specifically for officials directly involved in human rights protection.

Uganda

On 11 March 1985,<sup>(55)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights requested the Secretary-General to continue his contacts with Uganda and to identify external sources of human rights-related assistance on which it might draw. It invited States, United Nations bodies and agencies, and humanitarian and non-governmental organizations to assist Uganda in its efforts to guarantee human rights, and commended those which had been providing such assistance. The Secretary-General was requested to report in 1986 on progress made in helping Uganda in this area.

The Secretary-General reported<sup>(56)</sup> that in July he had informed the Ugandan Government that the Centre for Human Rights had offered two fellowships and, in September, he had asked for assistance and support to Uganda from States and the above-mentioned organizations. As at 10

December, positive replies had been received from ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO, UNCTAD, UNIDO and an NGO.

Technical assistance to strengthen legal institutions

In July 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission a report<sup>(57)</sup> on technical assistance for the strengthening of legal institutions, in accordance with a 1984 Sub-Commission resolution.<sup>(58)</sup> He had invited Governments receiving aid from UNDP to indicate their needs with regard to establishing or strengthening law faculties, developing law libraries, training judges, drafting legal texts, publishing official law journals, and collecting and classifying legal material. As at 9 August 1985, replies had been received from six States which indicated their need for assistance (Argentina, Chad, Cyprus, Dominica, Ethiopia, Peru) and from two States (Australia, Norway) and four specialized agencies which provided assistance.

Responsibility to promote and protect human rights

Because it had not been possible to convene as had been decided in 1984<sup>(59)</sup>—an open-ended working group to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, the Commission on Human Rights decided in 1985 that the group should be convened for one week before its 1986 session, taking into account reports and documentation from the Sub-Commission arising from its work on draft principles on the subject. The Commission's decision<sup>(60)</sup> was taken by 30 votes to none, with 11 abstentions, on 14 March, and it proposed a draft to that effect for adoption by the Economic and Social Council.

In June 1985, Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) submitted to the Sub-Commission a resolution containing a draft body of principles,<sup>(61)</sup> in accordance with her 1984 mandate.<sup>(62)</sup> Expressing appreciation for the Special Rapporteur's efforts, the Sub-Commission decided, by a 30 August resolution<sup>(63)</sup> adopted by 15 votes to 1, with 1 abstention, to refer the draft to the Commission for further consideration by its working group.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/152, without vote.

Question of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in any part of the world, with particular reference to colonial and other dependent countries and territories

At its 25th plenary meeting, on 30 May 1985, the Council approved the decision taken by the Commission on Human Rights, in its decision 1985/112 of 14 March 1985, that the working group established under Commission decision 1984/116 of 16 March 1984 to draft a declaration on the right and responsibility of individuals, groups and organs of society to promote and protect universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, would be convened at the forty-second session of the Commission, meeting for one week prior to the session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/152

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/19685/95 & Corr.1) without vote, 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Proposed establishment of a new international humanitarian order

In October 1985,<sup>(64)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly, in accordance with its 1983 request,<sup>(65)</sup> on the proposed establishment of a new international humanitarian order. The proposal had been advanced by Jordan in 1981.<sup>(66)</sup>

The Secretary-General's report was based on views and comments from 34 States and took account of the views offered in various consultations undertaken by the Secretary-General, including those with United Nations departments and organizations and other international organizations, in particular the Independent Commission on International Humanitarian Issues established in 1983.

The most acute humanitarian issues identified, the Secretary-General observed, were hunger, health and environmental conditions, unemployment, illiteracy, the situation of women and children, genocide, summary executions, torture, disappearances, slavery, armed conflicts, gross human rights violations, weapons that caused unnecessary suffering, disrespect for basic human rights standards, humanitarian law, refugees, migrant workers and non-citizens, natural and man-made disasters and disaster relief, mass exoduses, population questions, vulnerable groups whose survival was threatened, racial and religious intolerance, and the drug problem.

The term "humanitarian", the Secretary-General said, could be used to describe a specific body of law, created around the turn of the century to ameliorate conditions in armed conflicts, or that developed since 1864 under the aegis of ICRC, such as the 1949 Geneva Conventions. At times it denoted an approach emphasizing protection of and assistance to the individual, as opposed to politically influenced considerations; at other times, the term reflected a broader sentiment, to relieve human suffering and help realize human needs. A conceptual understanding of the humanitarian international order must encompass all those aspects and include the internationally established norms on human rights.

In practical terms, humanitarian emergencies arose in situations of natural or man-made disasters, armed conflicts, internal disturbances and refugee outflows. A normative and institutional framework to deal with those areas existed, but certain issues required further standards, a continuing task of the international community, as was implementation of existing norms.

The basic issue was whether emphasis was to be given to a broad, future-based approach or to the immediate solution of concrete and practical problems. Whatever approach was adopted by the Assembly, he felt that priority should be given to existing humanitarian emergencies, effective implementation of internationally recognized standards, universal ratification of relevant instruments, education, training and dissemination of information to create greater awareness of those standards, and the setting of standards addressing current problems.

Since an extensive body of international norms already existed, the Secretary-General said, perhaps a distillation of humanitarian principles might be the subject of a publication. A universal declaration on a new international humanitarian order would perforce draw on the existing human rights instruments; it was open to discussion whether principles could be drawn up in a new declaration that would extend much further. An attempt to "renegotiate" existing principles might weaken them; an incremental approach involving the addition of standards dealing with pressing new problems might, however, avoid such risks. The tasks of consolidation, systematization, codification and progressive development might for the time being be left to be resolved through evolving practice and to the endeavours of scholars, he concluded.

Human rights violations

Situations involving alleged violations of human rights on a large scale in several countries were again examined in 1985 by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights, as well as by special bodies and officials appointed to examine some of those situations.

In addition, situations of alleged human rights violations involving the self-determination of peoples (see above, under "Civil and political rights") were discussed with regard to Afghanistan, Kampuchea, South Africa and Namibia, Western Sahara and the Palestinian people.

Under a procedure established by the Council in 1970<sup>(1)</sup> to deal with communications alleging denial or violation of human rights, the Commission held closed meetings in 1985 to study confidential documents, observations thereon submitted by Governments and a confidential report by a working group set up in 1984<sup>(2)</sup> to examine the material.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/138, adopted without vote on 30 May 1985, approved a 5 March decision<sup>(3)</sup> of the Commission to set up a similar five-member working group to meet for one week prior to its 1986 session to examine particular situations that might be referred to it by the Sub-Commission at its 1985 session under its procedure for dealing with confidential documents, and those of which the Commission was seized. The decision was approved by the Council's Second Committee on 24 May, also without vote.

The Council decided that material relating to Argentina dealt with by the Commission under the same procedure should cease to be confidential (see p. 912); a similar decision was taken with regard to material relating to Uruguay (see p. 924).

The Sub-Commission, by a resolution<sup>(4)</sup> adopted on 29 August by 7 votes to 4, with 8 abstentions, requested the Commission's and the Council's authorization for the Bureau it elected at each of its sessions to hold two inter-sessional meetings per year, to enable it to review developments and ensure timely collection of needed information, so that it could bring to the Commission's attention any situation which revealed a consistent pattern of human rights violations in any country and assist the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities under a 1979 General Assembly resolution<sup>(5)</sup> to take timely and effective action in cases of mass and flagrant violations.

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/124, reiterated that the international community should continue to accord priority to the search for solutions to mass and flagrant violations of human rights of peoples and individuals, paying due attention also to other situations of human rights violations. It reaffirmed its responsibility for achieving international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and expressed its concern in particular at mass and flagrant violations, wherever they occurred.

Africa

South Africa and Namibia

Working Group reports. The six-member Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa, established in 1967<sup>(6)</sup> by the Commission on Human Rights, submitted in January 1985 its annual report<sup>(7)</sup> to the Commission. It observed that the preceding year had witnessed persistent massive repression of protests and demonstrations, a growing number of arrests of political prisoners and detentions without trial, allegations of torture in both South Africa and Namibia, continuation of the policy of forced removals of populations and harassment of activists.

Following up on a report<sup>(8)</sup> submitted to the Commission in 1983 and the corresponding Commission decision,<sup>(9)</sup> the Ad Hoc Working Group submitted in January 1985 a report<sup>(10)</sup> on the effects of apartheid on the non-white population, in particular on black women and children, in South Africa and Namibia. The Group examined the extent to which acts of apartheid might be likened to those designated as acts of genocide. Its conclusion was that the practical implementation of apartheid resulted in certain criminal consequences which coincided with acts prohibited under article II of the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,<sup>(11)</sup> which characterized as genocide such acts as killing members of a group, causing bodily or mental harm to them, or imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group or transferring the group's children. The policy of apartheid, viewed as a whole and over the long term, would ultimately produce consequences identical to those prohibited under another provision of article II (i.e. deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part).

The Working Group requested the Commission to authorize it to continue its investigations so as to complete its information, taking into account the way in which the South African régime implemented its apartheid policy, henceforth considered as a kind of genocide. The Commission might also wish to authorize the Group to study in which areas of life the racially oppressed peoples in South Africa felt the effects of genocide and how far those consequences had gone, and examine the question of international penal responsibility of States, groups and individuals. The Group requested the Commission to call on the General Assembly to seek an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the extent to which apartheid as a policy entailed criminal effects bordering on genocide. The Group suggested that the Commission might wish to take steps to revise the 1948 Convention and to arrive at an up-to-date definition of the crime of genocide. It also recommended that the Commission invite the Assembly to request the International Law Commission rapidly to conclude preparation of the draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind (see p. 1163).

Human Rights Commission action. By a roll-call vote of 41 to 1, with 1 abstention, taken on 26 February 1985,<sup>(12)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights adopted the Working Group's conclusions and recommendations. It also took note of the Group's studies and findings<sup>(13)</sup> concerning the relationship between apartheid and genocide and requested the Group to continue investigating the matter. The Commission reaffirmed its rejection as null and void of the so-called constitutional arrangements in South Africa, as they served to perpetuate apartheid and other forms of racial discrimination and continued to exclude the black majority from participating in the country's political, social, economic and cultural life and to deny the black population their full citizenship rights.

The Commission denounced the policy of "bantustanization", the forced removals of the black population and the policy of denationalization, and expressed profound indignation at, particularly, the intimidation and suppression of opponents of apartheid, the indiscriminate arrest and torture of political activists, the extreme use of violence in dealing with legitimate protests, the killing and ill-treatment of detainees, the discriminatory and inferior quality of black education, and the continued adverse effects of apartheid, especially on women and children. It condemned South Africa for its military pressures on front-line States and for its support and encouragement to bandits who sought to destabilize those and other neighbouring States.

The Commission demanded that South Africa end apartheid and other gross human rights violations, called for the unconditional release of all political prisoners, and called on South Africa to respect international standards on trade union rights. It renewed the mandate of the Working Group to continue to study violations of human rights in South Africa and Namibia, and requested it to continue to bring to the Commission Chair-man's attention particularly serious violations. It requested the Working Group, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, to continue to investigate ill-treatment and deaths of detainees and authorized the Group Chairman to participate in events connected with action against apartheid organized under that Committee's auspices. It renewed its request to South Africa to allow the Working Group to make on-the-spot investigations of treatment and living conditions in prisons of South Africa and Namibia. It requested the Working Group to report to the Commission in 1987, with a progress report in 1986, and asked the Secretary-General to assist the Group.

Also on 26 February,<sup>(13)</sup> the Commission adopted, by a roll-call vote of 39 to none, with 4 abstentions, the conclusions and recommendations concerning Namibia in the report<sup>(7)</sup> of the Ad Hoc Working Group. It reaffirmed the right of the Namibian people to self-determination and independence under conditions determined by the Security Council in 1978.<sup>(14)</sup> The Commission strongly condemned South Africa for the military buildup in Namibia, the recruitment and training of Namibians for tribal armies, the use of mercenaries, torture and brutality against the population and captured freedom fighters, and the military conscription of Namibians. Condemning South Africa for its continued attempts to circumvent the United Nations plan for the independence of Namibia, the Commission demanded that it co-operate to bring about Namibia's independence. The Commission decided that the Ad Hoc Working Group should continue to study the policies and practices violating human rights in Namibia, to study ways in which the Commission might effectively contribute to eliminating apartheid there, to inquire about persons suspected of having committed the crime of apartheid or other serious violations of human rights in Namibia, and to bring particularly serious violations to the Commission's attention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1985, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/140, by roll-call vote.

Situation of human rights in South Africa

At its 25th plenary meeting, on 30 May 1985, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/8 of 26 February 1985, approved the Commission's decision to renew the mandate of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa. The Council also approved the authorization given by the Commission to the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Working Group to participate in conferences, symposia, seminars or other events connected with action against apartheid organized under the auspices of the Special Committee against Apartheid.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/140

30 May 1985 Meeting 25 52-1 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) by vote (51-1), 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Financial implications: S.G. A/C.5/40/13 & Corr.1.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea, Haiti, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

While it shared the international community's revulsion at the abhorrent system of apartheid, the United States said, it voted against the text because of its position on the underlying Commission on Human Rights resolution<sup>(12)</sup> and because of its concern about the excessive financial implications of more than $1 million.

Follow-up action by the Working Group. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa met on 14 June 1985 at Geneva for an emergency meeting, the first since its establishment. The Group examined a number of recent incidents involving human rights violations in South Africa and discussed various possibilities for further action. It concluded that the events, because of their seriousness and cruelty, should be investigated thoroughly within its mandate, and expressed the expectation that the international community would take bold and decisive measures to eliminate apartheid.

The special report<sup>(15)</sup> of the meeting was transmitted on 18 July to the Presidents of the General Assembly and the Security Council and to the Secretary-General, as well as to the South African Government. In October,<sup>(16)</sup> the Secretary-General drew the Assembly's attention to that report as well as the Group's earlier report.<sup>(7)</sup>

In a progress report<sup>(17)</sup> to be submitted to the Commission in 1986, the Working Group said that, in August 1985, it became highly concerned at the avalanche of reported cases of serious violations, particularly in the wake of the declaration of the state of emergency in South Africa. Since the cases revealed, in the Working Group's view, a flagrant contempt for the right to life, it decided, in consultation with the Special Rapporteur on summary or arbitrary executions, to send a joint mission to Lusaka, Zambia, to determine the extent of the alleged violations. The Chairman of the Group and the Special Rapporteur visited Lusaka from 13 to 19 November, gathering evidence from 19 witnesses, covering violations of the right to life, effects of the implementation of the constitutional reforms and harsher bantustan policy, torture, victimization, harassment, destruction of property, detention and ill-treatment.

Sub-Commission action. The Sub-Commission's Working Group on Slavery, at its August 1985 session<sup>(18)</sup> (see p. 871), also dealt with apartheid and colonialism, practices it considered to be similar to slavery. 'The Working Group recommended that the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights be authorized to bring pressure on the South African Government to order the unconditional release from gaol of Nelson Mandela, leader of the African National Congress, and Zephania Mothopeng, leader of the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, as well as other political prisoners, and to engage in a meaningful dialogue with the black majority leaders.

On 30 August,<sup>(19)</sup> the Sub-Commission reaffirmed that apartheid was an international crime and that the apartheid régime was illegitimate and contrary to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.<sup>(20)</sup> It strongly condemned South Africa for acts of terrorism against the black majority and against the front-line and other neighbouring States, as well as for its refusal to implement the United Nations plan for Namibia's independence. It demanded the lifting of the state of emergency, the cessation of all acts of brutality by South African police and military forces, and the immediate release of all political prisoners, and called on the international community to continue its efforts towards total isolation of South Africa.

On 8 August,<sup>(21)</sup> the Sub-Commission authorized its Chairman to send an urgent communication to the Commission Chairman requesting him to cable South Africa urging that Messrs. Mandela and Mothopeng, in particular, be released and be allowed to come to Geneva to participate in the current Sub-Commission session.

On 29 August,<sup>(22)</sup> the Sub-Commission decided to observe at the beginning of its future annual sessions a minute of silence in honour of the victims of the apartheid system.

1973 Convention against apartheid

As at 31 December 1985, there were 82 parties to the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, which was adopted by the General Assembly in 1973<sup>(23)</sup> and entered into force in 1976.<sup>(24)</sup> In 1985, Argentina ratified, and Bangladesh and Iran acceded to, the Convention.

In his annual report<sup>(25)</sup> to the General Assembly on the status of the Convention, the Secretary-General annexed a list of the 35 States that had signed, 29 that had ratified and 52 that had acceded to it and the date thereof, as of 1 September.

Activities of the Group of Three. The Group of Three-established under article IX of the Convention to consider reports by States parties on measures taken to implement the Convention and in 1985 composed of Mexico, Senegal and the Ukrainian SSR—held its eighth session at Geneva from 28 January to 1 February.<sup>(26)</sup>

The Group examined an initial report from Algeria, a second periodic report from Madagascar, a third from Yugoslavia, and fourth reports from Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR. The Group also continued to examine the question of whether actions of transnational corporations (TNCs) operating in South Africa came under the definition of the crime of apartheid and whether legal action could be taken under the Convention. The Group noted that several United Nations organs and States parties had repeatedly drawn the attention of the international community to the close interconnection between TNC activities in South Africa and that country's persistence in pursuing its policy of apartheid. The Group was of the view that effective international action to eradicate apartheid had been hampered by TNCs and reiterated that article III of the Convention, pertaining to international criminal responsibility, could apply. The Group felt that further examination of the matter was needed and that views of States parties on TNCs' responsibility for the continued existence of apartheid would be very useful.

The Group noted with concern that less than half of the States parties had submitted a report and it urged in particular those which had not submitted their initial report to do so as soon as possible. When preparing their reports, States parties should take into account the general guidelines and provide more information on legislative, judicial and administrative measures to suppress apartheid and to prosecute persons responsible for acts of apartheid, on difficulties encountered in taking such measures, on teaching and education measures for fuller implementation of the Convention, and on implementation of article XI on the extradition of such persons; they should also identify individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II, and those against whom legal proceedings had been undertaken. It again drew attention to the desirability of disseminating more information about the Convention, its implementation and the work of the Group.

The Group appealed again to States parties to strengthen their international co-operation to implement fully United Nations decisions on apartheid. It recommended that the fortieth anniversary of the victory over fascism and nazism and of the founding of the United Nations be celebrated by mobilizing international efforts to eliminate apartheid. It noted that apartheid was a form of genocide and as such fell under the 1968 Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity;<sup>(27)</sup> it recommended to the Commission that such interdependence be reflected in its resolutions as well as the fact that adherence to the Convention against apartheid was an indication of the implementation of the Convention on genocide.

The Group once again drew attention to the importance of assistance to the national liberation movements in southern Africa. It recommended that States parties be invited to express their views on the responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid, and that the parties, specialized agencies and NGOs be invited to provide information on the types of the crime of apartheid committed by TNCs in South Africa.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 26 February 1985 resolution,<sup>(28)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights took note with appreciation of the Group of Three's conclusions and recommendations. The Commission urged States to adhere to the apartheid Convention without delay, especially those which had jurisdiction over TNCs operating in South Africa and Namibia, and also to ratify the genocide Convention.

The Commission urged States parties to the Convention against apartheid to take full account of the guidelines laid down by the Group of Three in 1978 for the submission of reports, and reiterated its recommendation that they be represented when their country's report was considered by the Group. It requested the Secretary-General once more to invite States parties to express their views on the extent and responsibility of TNCs for the continued existence of apartheid. The Group was requested to continue examining legal actions that could be taken against TNCs whose operations came under the crime of apartheid, and to report to the Commission in 1986.

The Commission called on States parties to strengthen national and international co-operation in order to implement fully United Nations decisions concerning the prevention, suppression and punishment of the crime of apartheid, drew their attention to the desirability of disseminating further information on the Convention, its implementation and the work of the Group, and noted the importance of their measures in teaching and education for fuller implementation of the Convention. The Group was to meet for up to five days before the Commission's 1986 session. The Secretary-General was asked to give it the necessary assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/27, by recorded vote.

Status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3068(XXVIII) of 30 November 1973, by which it adopted and opened for signature and ratification the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and its subsequent resolutions on the status of the Convention,

Reaffirming its conviction that apartheid constitutes a total negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, a gross violation of human rights and a crime against humanity, seriously threatening international peace and security,

Taking note of the finding of the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, established in accordance with article IX of the Convention, that the crime of apartheid is a form of the crime of genocide,

Strongly condemning South Africa's continued policy of apartheid and its continued illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as its recent acts of aggression against Angola and other African States,

Alarmed by the aggravation of the situation in South Africa, in particular the further escalation of ruthless repression by the Fascist-like apartheid regime, including the use of the armed forces against the opposing people and the imposition of virtual martial-law conditions intended to facilitate the brutal oppression of the black population,

Condemning the continued collaboration of certain States and transnational corporations with the racist regime of South Africa in the political, economic, military and other fields as an encouragement to the intensification of its odious policy of apartheid,

Firmly convinced that the legitimate struggle of the oppressed peoples in southern Africa against apartheid, racism and colonialism and for the effective exercise of their inalienable right to self-determination and independence demands more than ever all necessary support by the international community and, in particular, further action by the Security Council in accordance with Chapter VII of the Charter of the United Nations,

Underlining that ratification of or accession to the Convention on a universal basis and the implementation of its provisions without delay are necessary for its effectiveness, and therefore will contribute to the eradication of the crime of apartheid,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the status of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid;

2. Commends those States parties to the Convention that have submitted their reports under article VII thereof;

3. Appeals once again to those States that have not yet done so to ratify or to accede to the Convention without further delay, in particular those States that have jurisdiction over transnational corporations operating in South Africa and Namibia and without whose co-operation such operations cannot be halted;

4. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Group of Three of the Commission on Human Rights, established in accordance with article IX of the Convention, and, in particular, of the conclusions and recommendations contained in that report;

5. Draws the attention of all States to the opinion expressed by the Group of Three in its report that article

III of the Convention could apply to the actions of transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to intensify, in co-operation with the Special Committee against Apartheid, its efforts to compile periodically the progressive list of individuals, organizations, institutions and representatives of States deemed responsible for crimes enumerated in article II of the Convention, as well as those against whom or which legal proceedings have been undertaken;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to circulate the above-mentioned list to all States parties to the Convention and all Member States and to bring such facts to the attention of the public by all means of mass communication;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to invite the States parties to the Convention, the specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to provide the Commission on Human Rights with relevant information concerning the forms of the crime of apartheid, as described in article II of the Convention, committed by transnational corporations operating in South Africa;

9. Appeals to all States, United Nations organs, the specialized agencies and international and national non-governmental organizations to step up their activities in enhancing public awareness by denouncing the crimes committed by the racist régime of South Africa;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to intensify his efforts, through appropriate channels, to disseminate information on the Convention and its implementation with a view to promoting further ratification of or accession to the Convention;

11. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his next annual report under General Assembly resolution 3380(XXX) of 10 November 1975 a special section concerning the implementation of the Convention.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahamas Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Belorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao people's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom.

Before adopting the text as a whole, the Assembly adopted paragraphs 5 and 8 by recorded votes of 118 to 11, with 14 abstentions, and 119 to 11, with 12 abstentions, respectively; the Committee had done the same, by recorded votes of 104 to 11, with 16 abstentions, and 107 to 11, with 12 abstentions. The third preambular paragraph was adopted by the Assembly by a recorded vote of 114 to 9, with 16 abstentions, having been approved by the Committee by a recorded vote of 108 to 10, with 15 abstentions.

Luxembourg, speaking on behalf of the 10 member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), as well as Spain and Portugal, said they considered that the Convention had made no real contribution to eliminating apartheid and, although they supported its ultimate objective, they had serious reservations on the envisaged methods, which posed legal problems with reference to the fundamental characteristics of the crime of apartheid, the territorial application rules and the international jurisdictional competence of States. Turkey also said the text raised legal problems for it, but had voted in favour because it firmly opposed apartheid.

The Ten had difficulty accepting paragraphs 5 and 8, since they deemed it inadmissible that treaties should have a legal effect on third States and that restrictions of competence should be imposed on them without their consent. They considered that the Group of Three was not competent to formulate the conclusions in question and that genocide had been clearly defined by the 1948 Convention. A text like the resolution, without the force of a treaty, by which the Assembly would extend the field of application of the Convention, had no basis in law.

On behalf of the Nordic delegations, Sweden said that, not being parties to the Convention, they had abstained, though not to reflect any positions taken regarding the substance of the resolution, which carried unclear but potentially far-reaching international legal implications. Japan felt certain provisions of the Convention itself contained legally ambiguous concepts and definitions. The Convention also raised legal and constitutional problems for Australia and Austria. Australia also had difficulties with the paragraphs voted on, in particular paragraph 5; it rejected any implications that article II of the Convention applied to TNCs. Not being a party to the Convention, it did not wish to be involved in any request to the Secretary-General in the terms set out in paragraph 8, which presupposed the applicability of the Convention to TNCs, a proposition it could not endorse.

Foreign support of South Africa

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution of 26 February,<sup>(29)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 31 to 5, with 7 abstentions, the Commission reaffirmed the right of the oppressed peoples of South Africa and Namibia to self-determination, independence and enjoyment of their natural resources, to dispose of those resources for their greater well-being and to obtain just reparation for the exploitation, depletion, loss or depreciation of those resources, including reparation for the exploitation and abuse of their human resources. The Commission vigorously condemned the increased assistance to South Africa by major Western countries and Israel, particularly in the military field, and demanded that assistance, which it was convinced was a hostile action against the people of South Africa, Namibia and the neighbouring States, be immediately terminated. Condemning the continuing nuclear collaboration of certain Western States, Israel and others with South Africa, the Commission urged them to stop supplying it with nuclear equipment and technology. It strongly condemned the activities of all foreign economic interests exploiting Namibia's resources and demanded that TNCs refrain from new investment or activities in Namibia, withdraw from it and end their co-operation with the South African administration. The Commission called on all Governments to take legislative, administrative or other measures to stop their nationals and corporations under their jurisdiction from trade, manufacturing and investment activities in South Africa and Namibia, to end technological assistance or collaboration in the manufacture of arms and military supplies there and to cease nuclear collaboration with South Africa.

The Commission rejected all policies that encouraged the régime to intensify its repression of South Africans and Namibians and to escalate its aggression against neighbouring States. It welcomed the General Assembly's request that the Security Council consider mandatory sanctions against South Africa, in particular regarding collaboration in arms manufacture, in military supplies and in the nuclear field, loans (including International Monetary Fund (IMF) and World Bank loans), investments, trade, petroleum and its products and other strategic goods, and called for mobilizing international public opinion in favour of sanctions.

The Commission appealed to States, specialized agencies and NGOs to co-operate with the liberation movements of southern Africa. Strongly condemning South Africa for its persistent aggression against Angola, the Commission called on it to withdraw its troops from there and demanded that it cease destabilizing the political institutions of neighbouring States.

The Commission, reaffirming that the updating of the report containing the list of banks, TNCs and other organizations assisting the régime was of the greatest importance for the fight against apartheid, welcomed the Assembly's 1984 invitation<sup>(30)</sup> to the Special Rapporteur to continue to update the list. It attached special importance to the widest dissemination of the updated report as a United Nations publication, called on Governments to give it wide publicity, and requested the Secretary-General to assist the Special Rapporteur, in particular in establishing direct contacts with the Centre on TNCs and the Centre against Apartheid, in expanding the annotation of selected cases and in continuing the computerization of future lists.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Ahmed Mohamed Khalifa (Egypt) presented to the Sub-Commission in 1985 an updated report<sup>(31)</sup> on the adverse consequences for the enjoyment of human rights of political, military, economic and other assistance to South Africa, with addenda containing an updated list of banks, insurance companies, firms and other organizations assisting South Africa, directly or indirectly and through assistance to Namibia, and the names which were to be deleted from that list.

Sub-Commission action. By a 27 August resolution,<sup>(32)</sup> adopted by 19 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission welcomed issuance of the Special Rapporteur's report as a United Nations publication and invited him to continue to update the list of organizations assisting South Africa, using all available material from United Nations organs and agencies, Member States, inter- and non-governmental organizations and other sources in order to indicate the volume and nature of that assistance. In doing so, the Sub-Commission invited him to intensify direct contacts with the Centre on TNCs and the Centre against Apartheid.

The Sub-Commission recommended to the Commission that it adopt a text along the lines of its own resolution and that, in addition, it call on Governments to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur to make the report even more accurate and informative, and disseminate the report and give it the widest possible publicity.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September 1985 report<sup>(33)</sup> on international conditions and human rights, the Secretary-General stated that the deteriorating situation in South Africa and Namibia, as described by the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa (see p. 898), exacerbated by the declaration of a state of emergency, was nevertheless accompanied by increasing compliance with United Nations resolutions calling for a cessation of all foreign investment there; the campaign to encourage investors to divest themselves of shares in corporations trading in South Africa had gained considerable momentum during the past two years.

Trade union rights

Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts. The Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa continued in 1985 to study the situation relating to allegations of infringements of trade union rights. Its findings, included in its report,<sup>(7)</sup> were submitted to the Council separately in April.<sup>(34)</sup>

The Working Group expressed the opinion that developments concerning the right to work and freedom of association, including the situation of trade unions formed by black workers, could not but be seen in the context of political developments in South Africa, in the face of which black workers had had to organize themselves better and black trade unions found themselves in the vanguard of black emancipation. However, the growth in both stature and size of worker organizations had been an uphill and often bitter struggle; the sharp increase in black trade union membership had been met with a determination by the régime to impose controls and limit the extent to which unions might participate in broader issues and, in particular, the extent to which they could play a part in mobilizing political resistance. Where unions and workers had challenged or ignored the establishment and where their actions had gone beyond the narrow sphere to which the Government wished to confine them, State repression had set in, directed at the growing strength and organization of black workers. Police intervention in strikes had become a regular feature; unions which had most clearly aligned themselves with political resistance had been the principal targets.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/43, without vote.

Report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts of the Commission on Human Rights on allegations of infringements of trade union rights in the Republic of South Africa
The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling its resolution 1984/42 of 24 May 1984,

Having examined the extract from the progress report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa,

Noting with grave concern that police and State interference in industrial disputes and repression against the independent black trade union movement have intensified,

Noting further with indignation the severe repression against trade unionists in the so-called "homelands",

1. Takes note of the extract from the progress report of the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts on southern Africa;

2. Deplores the repression by the Government of South Africa against the growing independent black trade union movement;

3. Demands once again the cessation of persecution of trade unionists and repression of the independent black trade union movement by the Government of South Africa;

4. Culls once again for the immediate recognition of the unimpeded exercise of freedom of association and trade union rights by the entire population of South Africa, without discrimination of any kind;

5. Demands the immediate release of all trade unionists imprisoned for exercising their legitimate trade union rights and the lifting of the orders banning trade unionists and trade union organizations;

6. Requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts to continue to study the situation and to report thereon to the Commission on Human Rights and the Council;

7. Also requests the Ad Hoc Working Group of Experts, in the discharge of its mandate, to consult with the International Labour Organisation and the Special Committee against Apartheid, as well as with international and African trade union confederations;

8. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1986 the question of allegations of infringements of trade union rights in South Africa as a sub-item of the item entitled "Human rights questions".

Asia and the Pacific

Afghanistan

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February). As requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,<sup>(35)</sup> the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights had appointed in October a Special Rapporteur, Felix Ermacora (Austria), to examine the human rights situation in Afghanistan and formulate proposals for the full protection of human rights, before, during and after the withdrawal of all foreign forces. The Rapporteur presented a report to the Commission in February 1985.<sup>(36)</sup>

Unable to obtain the Government's permission to visit the country, he had gone to Pakistan in December 1984 to interview a number of Afghan refugees and to visit four refugee camps and four hospitals set aside for Afghan wounded. With a view to obtaining clarification of information concerning allegations of serious human rights violations, the Special Rapporteur, by a letter of 4 January 1985, drew the Afghan Government's attention to his need for co-operation.

Because of the enormous bulk of data, he based his report on a cross-section of personal-experience cases illustrating the situation, in addition to documentation on the subject by individuals and humanitarian organizations with direct knowledge and experience.

Concluding, the Special Rapporteur stated that the current regime installed in December 1979, like its immediate predecessors, was not elected by the people and therefore unrepresentative. It had instituted a series of reforms, not only applying them with severity but requesting and accepting that foreign armed forces join in their imposition, at a pace apparently unacceptable to the population at large. Although both Afghanistan and the USSR were parties to the 1949 Geneva Conventions, the parties to the conflict did not co-operate with ICRC or did so only selectively. By the same token, the opposition movements would seem not to have been able to ensure full application of international norms by their fighting forces. Practices had taken place violating common article 3 of the 1949 Conventions: the use of anti-personnel mines and so-called toy-bombs; the victimization of the civilian population, particularly women and children; and the non-acceptance of members of the Afghan opposition forces as prisoners of war.

As a result, many lives had been lost, many people were incarcerated in conditions far removed from respect for their rights, and many had been tortured or had disappeared; some 4 million Afghans had fled the country and sought refuge abroad, particularly in Pakistan, Iran and India. Also negatively affected were the population's economic and social rights.

The Special Rapporteur was of the view that, as a first step, the Government ought to make every effort to re-establish a national consensus, an indispensable requirement for which was the withdrawal of all foreign forces and the elimination of foreign influence. There must be an immediate application of the norms of human rights and humanitarian law by all parties involved. A fundamental law or constitution should be promulgated in line with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the rule of law in the country must be re-established consistent with those standards. Dialogue with and support by the international community would be vital in that process.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the Government fully respect its obligations under the international human rights instruments to which it was a party; torture of opponents, which he said was commonplace, should be halted. The party in power and the various opposition movements should establish a representative assembly aimed at the constitution of a Loya Jirgah (Grand Assembly) or its equivalent, to initiate the normalization process.

An independent international humanitarian organization such as ICRC should be entrusted with ensuring respect for humanitarian principles and allowed access to prisons, places of detention, refugee camps or other such places, and to air-fields, or alternatively the parties should be invited to nominate organizations worthy of their confidence so as to form mixed commissions for that purpose. Government and opposition forces should be reminded of their duty to apply fully the rules of international law without discrimination. All forces engaged in the conflict should be recognized as combatants under international humanitarian law. The rights of the refugees to return to their homes should be respected and a general amnesty formally proclaimed for everyone. The Government should co-operate fully with the United Nations, in particular in clarifying the fate of missing persons, and do everything possible to help restore and uphold human rights.

Commission and Sub-Commission action. In a 13 March resolution<sup>(37)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 26 to 8, with 8 abstentions, the Commission expressed concern and distress at the grave and massive human rights violations as reflected in the Special Rapporteur's report. It called on the parties to the conflict to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and to facilitate operations of international humanitarian organizations to alleviate the suffering of Afghans. It urged Afghanistan to end violations of human rights, particularly military repression against the civilian population. Deciding to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and to have him report to the Assembly in 1985 and the Commission in 1986, the Commission urged the Afghan authorities to co-operate with him and requested the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance. (See also p. 859.)

On 30 August,<sup>(38)</sup> the Sub-Commission requested the Commission to ask the Special Rapporteur to look in particular into the fate of women and children as a consequence of the conflict in Afghanistan, and to ask all concerned in the conflict and United Nations agencies to collaborate fully with him.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/147, by roll-call vote.

Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan

At its 25th plenary meeting, on 30 May 1985, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/38 of 13 March 1985, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan and to request him to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session and to the Commission at its forty-second session on the situation of human rights in that country, including the human and material losses resulting from bombardments of the civilian population. The Council further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/147

38-5-8 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) by vote (38-5-7), 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Djibouti, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea, Haiti, Iceland, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Bulgaria, German Democratic Republic, India, Poland, USSR.

Abstaining: Algeria, Congo, Ecuador, Finland, Uganda, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

The USSR, speaking also on behalf of Bulgaria, the German Democratic Republic and Poland, said the decision endorsed an unlawful campaign of slander against Afghanistan and in effect approved a "report" which distorted the truth, an exercise that violated the basic principles of integrity and sought to divert attention from crimes committed by mercenaries and to justify extension of an undeclared war against Afghanistan. The USSR called for an immediate termination of the Special Rapporteur's mandate.

Afghanistan said there was not the slightest justification for the investigation of human rights conditions in Afghanistan. It asserted that the document was biased, contained outright lies, insulted its people, portrayed steps towards eradication of many evil relationships in Afghan society as violations of human rights, and ignored its measures to ensure the universal enjoyment of many human rights and freedoms, including its accession to and decision to implement numerous major international human rights instruments.

Communications. On 20 May,<sup>(39)</sup> Afghanistan transmitted a statement of its Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the same date, saying that no human rights violations took place in the country which warranted any investigation and reporting; the decision to appoint a Special Rapporteur had been imposed on the Commission in violation of the rules of procedure and established practice, and in disregard of Article 2, paragraph 7, of the Charter, proscribing United Nations intervention in the internal affairs of a State. The appointment as Rapporteur of one whom it called an infamous personality revealed, Afghanistan said, the true intentions of the forces behind that decision. Lastly, the report fabricated and distorted facts.

Referring to that letter, Austria, on 14 June,<sup>(40)</sup> reiterated its view that the position of the Special Rapporteur was based on his designation by the Commission Chairman, the report was compiled in his personal capacity and nothing in the report could in any way be imputed to the Austrian Government. Any doubts voiced with respect to his commitment to the cause of human rights, however, were completely inappropriate.

On 5 December,<sup>(41)</sup> Afghanistan transmitted to the Secretary-General a message of the President of the Revolutionary Council of Afghanistan on the occasion of the thirty-seventh anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights,<sup>(20)</sup> stating that Afghanistan attached great importance to the Declaration and the reputable instruments in that field. Respect for democracy, national freedom, humanism, progress, social justice, religion, family, property and other human rights comprised the fundamental principles of its democratic revolution. Constructive steps, such as expanding State leadership organs to include representatives to reflect diverse strata and different groups in society, and measures for possible principled amnesty, reconciliation and nationwide peace, were under way. If intervention and terrorism had not been imposed on its people, its achievement in promoting and protecting human rights would have been far greater, the President said.

Report by the Special Rapporteur (November). Pursuant to the Commission's March request (see above), the Special Rapporteur submitted to the General Assembly in November an interim report<sup>(42)</sup> providing information related to respect for human rights in Afghanistan, on casualties resulting from bombardments of the civilian population and on the relevant constitutional and international legal framework in regard to human rights.

In his conclusions-which, he stated, reflected his personal views on the overall human rights situation in Afghanistan and dealt with a sample of personal experiences of persons who claimed to have been victims of the bombardments-the Special Rapporteur stated that the conflict continued to engender human rights violations on a large scale. He listed such practices as the use of anti-personnel mines, so-called toy-bombs and heavy weapons; indiscriminate mass killings of civilians, particularly women and children; discrimination against persons not adhering to the People's Democratic Party; and the non-acceptance of members of the Afghan opposition movements as prisoners of war. The rights of the refugees and displaced persons to education, to work and to health were affected, as were basic rights embodied in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in particular outside Kabul and other cities.

Reiterating the recommendations made in his earlier report to the Commission (see above), the Special Rapporteur also suggested that the parties to the conflict consider establishing neutral zones under international supervision to shield the civilian population. He felt it might be advisable for Afghanistan to commit itself to a policy of non-alignment or permanent neutrality.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/137, by recorded vote.

Question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and resolved to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Emphasizing the obligation of all Governments to respect and protect human rights and to fulfil the responsibilities they have assumed under various international instruments,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/55 of 15 March 1984, in which the Commission expressed its concern and anxiety at the continuing presence of foreign forces in Afghanistan, as well as Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/37 of 24 May 1984, in which the Council requested the Chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint a special rapporteur to examine the situation of human rights in Afghanistan,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/38 of 13 March 1985, in which the Commission expressed its profound concern at the grave and massive human rights violations in Afghanistan and urged the authorities in that country to put a stop to those violations, in particular the military repression being conducted against the civilian population of Afghanistan,

Recalling Economic and Social Council decision 1985/147 of 30 May 1985, by which the Council approved the decision of the Commission on Human Rights to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur and to request him to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session and to the Commission at its forty-second session on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, including the human and material losses resulting from the bombardments of the civilian population,

Taking note of resolution 1985/35 of 30 August 1985 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission requested the Commission on Human Rights to ask the Special Rapporteur to look, in particular, into the fate of women and children as a consequence of the conflict in Afghanistan,

Having carefully examined the interim report of the Special Rapporteur on the question of human rights in Afghanistan, which reveals continuing grave and massive violations of fundamental human rights in that country,

Recognizing that a situation of armed conflict continues to exist in Afghanistan, leaving large numbers of victims without protection or assistance,

Deploping the continuing refusal of the Afghan authorities to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur,

1. Commends the Special Rapporteur for his report on the question of human rights in Afghanistan;

2. Expresses its profound concern that, as revealed in the findings of the Special Rapporteur, disregard for human rights is more widespread, the conflict continues to engender human rights violations on a large scale and, as a result, not only the lives of individuals but the existence of whole groups of persons and tribes are endangered;

3. Expresses its deep concern that the Afghan authorities, with heavy support from foreign troops, are acting with great severity against their opponents and suspected opponents without any respect for the international human rights obligations which they have assumed;

4. Also expresses its deep concern at the severe consequences for the civilian population of indiscriminate bombardments and military operations aimed primarily at the villages and the agricultural structure;

5. Shares the conviction of the Special Rapporteur that the prolongation of the conflict increases the seriousness of the gross and systematic violations of human rights already existing in the country;

6. Expresses its profound distress and alarm, in particular, at the widespread violations of the right to life, liberty and security of person, including the commonplace practice of torture and summary executions of the opponents of the régime, as well as at increasing evidence of a policy of religious intolerance;

7. Notes with great concern that such widespread violations of human rights, that have already caused millions of people to flee their homes and country, are still giving rise to large flows of refugees and displaced persons;

8. Calls upon the parties to the conflict to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and to admit international humanitarian organizations, in particular the International Committee of the Red Cross, and to facilitate their operations for the alleviation of the suffering of the people in Afghanistan;

9. Urges the authorities in Afghanistan to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Rapporteur, in particular by allowing him to visit Afghanistan;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Rapporteur;

11. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-first session, the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Afghanistan, in order to examine this question anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 40/137

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) by recorded vote (75-23-33), 6 December (meeting 70); 21-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.48/Rev.1); agenda item 12.

Before approval of the text in the Third Committee, a procedural debate took place on a motion by the Syrian Arab Republic that debate on the draft, as well as on a draft pertaining to human rights in Iran (see p. 910), should be adjourned. By a recorded vote of 60 to 37, with 16 abstentions, the Committee overruled a ruling by the Chairman that the Syrian proposal was admissible, a ruling that had been challenged by France.

In explanation of vote, Afghanistan said that it had been selectively and unfairly singled out for examination of its human rights conditions. It felt that the discussion of the matter in the Commission on Human Rights violated the rules of procedure and that the Special Rapporteur, selected in contravention of an established practice, did not have the necessary moral authority to prepare an impartial report. The report was entirely based on unsubstantiated allegations, Afghanistan said, and contained language that was false, divorced from human rights issues, politically motivated, interventionist and unacceptable. It rejected the resolution and declared it would not attach any validity to it or regard itself bound by its terms. Mongolia, sharing Afghanistan's view regarding the appointment of the Special Rapporteur and his identity and in agreement that the text represented interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign State, said the resolution also obstructed the Afghan people's right to self-determination and to choose a social system. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya observed that while the situation in Afghanistan concerned the right of the Afghan people to select the political system of their choice, some were exploiting the question of human rights to exert political pressure.

Expressing hope for normalization of the situation, Bolivia said that, for reasons of State, it would not take part in the voting. Iran expressed disappointment with the human rights machinery of the United Nations; dissociating itself from the draft, it felt that it unfairly reduced the situation in Afghanistan to an issue of human rights violations and undermined the original issue of principle. Zaire believed that investigations and studies should be carried out in respect of all Members of the United Nations, as flagrant and repeated violations of human rights were noted even in the seemingly most democratic countries.

China concurred with the Special Rapporteur's conclusions, stressing, as did Ecuador and Pakistan, that violations of human rights in Afghanistan resulted from foreign military intervention and were a threat to the Afghan people's fundamental rights and freedoms, particularly the right to self-determination. Uruguay shared the deep concern raised by the conclusions of the Special Rapporteur. Madagascar considered it unacceptable that Governments should use human rights questions to interfere in other States' internal affairs.

Iran

Report of the Special Representative (February). As requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1984,<sup>(43)</sup> the Chairman designated, in October of that year, Andrés Aguilar (Venezuela) as Special Representative of the Commission to study the human rights situation in Iran. In his preliminary report submitted to the Commission in February 1985,<sup>(44)</sup> the Special Representative said he had addressed a letter and cable to Iran seeking its co-operation in carrying out his mandate, and hoped that the Government would respond positively. He had received four documents from its Permanent Mission in Geneva dealing mainly with what the documents described as terrorist activities in Iran, and, from various sources, communications and documents containing information on alleged human rights violations. Owing to the lack of direct contact with Iranian authorities, he had not been in a position to evaluate those allegations, but noted with concern their number and gravity, in particular those related to the rights to life, to liberty and security of persons, to a fair trial, and to freedom from arbitrary arrest, freedom from torture, and freedom of thought, conscience and religion.

The Special Representative pointed out that Iran, being a party to the International Covenants on Human Rights, was legally bound by their provisions. He appealed to Iran to co-operate in good faith with him and the Commission and to open a dialogue, so that he could submit a more complete report.

Human Rights Commission action. By a 13 March 1985 resolution,<sup>(45)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 21 to 5, with 15 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights endorsed the Special Representative's general observations. The Commission expressed deep concern at the number and gravity of alleged human rights violations in Iran and urged Iran to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The Commission extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year, requesting him to present to the Assembly in 1985 an interim report on the human rights situation in Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and to submit a final report to the Commission in 1986. It urged Iran to co-operate with the Special Representative and requested the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/148, by roll-call vote.

Situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran

At its 25th plenary meeting, on 30 May 1985, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/39 of 13 March 1985, approved the Commission's decision to extend for one year the mandate of the Special Representative on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, as set out in Commission resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, and its request to the Special Representative to submit an interim report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the human rights situation in that country, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and a final report to the Commission at its forty-second session. The Council further approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative of the Commission.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/148

23-2-20 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) by vote (24-2-20). 24 May (meeting 15); draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22); agenda item 16.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Bulgaria, Canada, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Japan, Luxembourg, Mexico, Morocco,* Netherlands New Zealand, Rwanda, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, United States.

Against: Algeria, Bangladesh.

Abstaining: Argentina, Botswana, Brazil, China, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Haiti, India, Malaysia, Nigeria, Poland, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Sri Lanka, Thailand, Turkey, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

*Subsequently said its vote should have been recorded as an abstention.

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution adopted on 29 August by 10 votes to 3, with 4 abstentions,<sup>(46)</sup> the Sub-Commission expressed alarm at the continuing reports of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Iran and at the evidence of persecution of the Baha'i religious minority and of political, ethnic and national minorities such as the Kurds. It endorsed the general observations in the Special Representative's preliminary report and expressed the hope that the initial contacts of the Iranian Government with him would develop into co-operation. The Sub-Commission asked the Secretary-General to bring to the attention of the Commission and the Special Representative the allegations and information received by the Sub-Commission concerning grave human rights violations in Iran, and to inform it of action taken by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission in response to the Special Representative's reports and other information.

Report of the Special Representative (November). In an interim report of November 1985,<sup>(47)</sup> the Special Representative informed the General Assembly of action taken in accordance with his mandate, his exchange of communications with Iran and his consultations with government representatives. He stated that his attention had been drawn to information published by the Foreign Ministry concerning alleged terrorist acts by opposition groups against Iranian officials, security agents and civilians. Although he believed the Government had the right to take measures it deemed appropriate to protect its agents and the population in general, the examination of such activity was beyond his mandate. Although Iran had been involved for several years in an armed conflict that had inflicted heavy losses on its army, civilian population and economic resources, it continued to be bound by the international human rights instruments to which it was a party, he said.

The Special Representative noted with appreciation that the Government had taken a positive step towards co-operation by providing him with a "Report on the performance of the Islamic Republic of Iran in 1985" (which he annexed to his report); nevertheless, he noted that while the report described some of Iran's legal provisions relative to human rights, it failed to provide information on the way they were applied in practice. No reply had been given to specific questions he had asked concerning summary and arbitrary executions and the death of persons due to ill-treatment. His 29 August letter referring, inter alia, to allegations of torture and religious persecution had also remained without reply. Further, the information available to him appeared to contradict the situation described in the Government's report, in particular with regard to the use of torture, arrests without any given reason, prolonged detention without trial, and denial of visits to prisoners by lawyers and family members. He was, therefore, obliged to conclude that those allegations could not be dismissed as groundless unless proved to be so on the basis of detailed information which the Government was in the best position to collect and provide. He believed that a continued monitoring of the human rights situation in Iran was called for and reiterated his appeal to the Government to continue the dialogue with him and the Commission.

Communication. On 4 December,<sup>(48)</sup> Iran transmitted a statement to the Secretary-General concerning the recent proceedings in the Assembly's Third Committee where, it charged, certain countries, with political intentions, exploited the United Nations machinery for the protection of human rights. The Special Representative's report was based on presumptions, Iran said; his line of questioning as well as his conclusions showed that he was also affected by the misinformation campaign of the imperialist media. Iran stated that information in the report had been supplied by terrorist groups and that the allegations of torture and arbitrary and summary executions, all supplied by one of them, were baseless. In commenting on the issue of political prisoners, Iran continued, which had already been dealt with conclusively by a team of experts representing the Secretary-General (see p. 244), the Special Representative had gone beyond his mandate. His claim that Iran's report merely enumerated constitutional provisions concerning human rights was wrong, Iran continued; it contained specific regulations and the legal framework governing Iran's criminal justice system, as well as safeguards for implementation of those rules, including remedies in cases of their violation. Iran said it was regrettable that the Representative was unable to use fully the opportunity for a constructive and meaningful dialogue initiated by Iran, and that he insisted on a visit to the country; for one unfamiliar with Iran's legal framework, a visit would only entail a superficial examination of the subject. A more constructive approach by him and the relevant international bodies could bring a more useful and constructive dialogue and ensure continuing progress.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/141, by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights -in the Islamic Republic of Iran

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights,

Reaffirming that all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to fulfil the obligations they have undertaken under the various international instruments in this field,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/27 of 11 March 1982 and 1983/34 of 8 March 1983,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/54 of 14 March 1984, in which the Commission expressed deep concern at the continuing serious violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Islamic Republic of Iran and requested its Chairman to appoint a special representative to make a thorough study of the situation of human rights in that country,

Taking note, in particular, of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/39 of 13 March 1985, by which the Commission decided to extend the mandate of its Special Representative for one year and requested him to present an interim report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, and a final report to the Commission at its forty-second session,

Mindful of resolution 1985/17 of 29 August 1985 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, in which the Sub-Commission expressed its alarm at the continuing reports of gross violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the Islamic Republic of Iran,

Regretting that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran has still not extended its full co-operation to the Commission on Human Rights and its Special Representative, in particular by not allowing the Special Representative to visit the country,

Taking into account the specific and detailed allegations of grave and extensive violations of human rights to which the Special Representative refers in his interim report on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran and to which the Government of that country has not responded,

Endorsing the conclusion of the Special Representative that continued monitoring of the human rights situation in the Islamic Republic of Iran is called for,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the interim report of the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran and of the general observations contained therein;

2. Expresses its deep concern over the specific and detailed allegations of violations of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran to which the Special Representative refers in his interim report, and, in particular, those related to the right to life, such as summary and arbitrary executions, the right to freedom from torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, the right to liberty and security of person and to freedom from arbitrary arrest or detention, the right to a fair trial, the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and to freedom of expression, and the right of religious minorities to profess and practise their own religion;

3. Endorses the conclusion of the Special Representative that, on the basis of the information available to him, specific and detailed allegations concerning grave violations of human rights cannot be dismissed, and urgently appeals to the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to respond satisfactorily to these allegations;

4. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, as a State party to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to respect and to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in that Covenant;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to study carefully the final report of the Special Representative, as well as other information pertaining to the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, and to consider further steps for securing effective respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in that country;

6. Urges the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran to extend its full co-operation to the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights, and, in particular, to permit him to visit that country;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to give all necessary assistance to the Special Representative;

8. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran, including the situation of minority groups such as the Baha'is, during its forty-first session in order to examine this situation anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 40/141

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 53-30-45 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) by recorded vote (53-22-41). 6 December (meeting 71): 12-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.75); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, France, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Saint Lucia, Samoa, United Kingdom.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 54-56, 60-71; Plenary 116.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Barbados, Belgium, Belize, Botswana, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Honduras, Iceland, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Mauritius, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Portugal, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, Togo, Uganda, United Kingdom, United States, Venezuela.

Against: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Brunei Darussalam, Comoros, Cuba, Democratic Yemen, Indonesia, Iran, Kuwait, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Bhutan, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Cyprus, Ecuador, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, India, Ivory Coast, Japan, Lebanon, Liberia, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Nepal, Nigeria, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Senegal, Singapore, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

The draft resolution was the subject of two procedural motions in the Third Committee: one was linked with the voting on the resolution on human rights in Afghanistan (see p. 907); the other was a motion by Pakistan, seconded by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, that no action be taken on the text. Pakistan's motion was rejected by a recorded vote of 55 to 28, with 29 abstentions. The Netherlands opposed the motion on the grounds that it constituted an abuse of the rules of procedure and was aimed solely at preventing the Committee from discharging its responsibilities.

Iran considered it neither constructive nor useful to vote on the text which, it said, basically represented the position of the terrorists who were behind all the allegations made against it; the text's adoption would close the door against any future co-operation between Iran and the Committee. In addition, the text referred explicitly to the Baha'is, whose historic links with Zionism were well known, Iran said.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said it felt that the text was a plot by the Western countries to present the Iranian revolution in a bad light; the interim report was biased and inaccurate since it was not based on objective testimony and disregarded Iran's response. The Baha'is, it added, were not a religious sect but a dissident group that had always co-operated with imperialism and Zionism and whose aim was to create disturbance in Iran and other countries.

Pakistan considered the text to be excessive and coloured by a negative and stereotyped view of the political changes in Iran. There was no reason to continue monitoring the human rights situation there. The text was not objective and the interim report drew primarily on 13 witnesses whose testimony remained unsubstantiated; it even referred to incidents between 1980 and 1983, which would not reflect the current situation. The statement that Iran had still not extended its full co-operation was inaccurate; the report on Iran's performance in 1985 replied satisfactorily to the questions raised by the Special Representative, who had drawn no conclusion which could validate the allegations of violations.

Zaire remarked that the Assembly could not confine itself to taking decisions on situations in only certain countries, while flagrant and repeated human rights violations in others were not considered.

In Colombia's opinion, the report of the Special Representative required the international community to appeal to Iran to end the violations described; a revolution in no way justified the perpetration of such violations. Iraq said the text should have contained a reference to oppressed minorities in Iran, such as the Turkmens, the Kurds and the Baluchis.

Ecuador observed that where there were separate votes in particular cases where it considered that there had been selectivity on human rights issues, it would abstain. Bolivia declared it would not take part in the voting for reasons of State; it declared its support, however, for the right to freedom of religion, including freedom for the Baha'i faith in Iran.

Kampuchea

The Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council both affirmed that continued occupation by foreign forces constituted primary human rights violations in Kampuchea (see p. 859).

Pakistan

The Sub-Commission, by a resolution<sup>(49)</sup> adopted on 29 August 1985 by 10 votes to 2, with 6 abstentions, expressed grave concern at the promulgation by Pakistan of Ordinance XX of 28 April 1984 which, the Sub-Commission stated, violated the rights to liberty and security of persons, to freedom from arbitrary arrest or detention, to freedom of thought, expression, conscience and religion and to an effective legal remedy, as well as the right of religious minorities to practise their own religion. It also expressed grave concern that persons charged with and arrested for violations of that ordinance had reportedly been subjected to punishments and confiscation of personal property, and that affected groups had been subjected to discrimination in employment and education and to the defacement of their religious property. Alerting the Commission on Human Rights of the situation in Pakistan as a situation with great potential to cause a mass exodus, especially of members of the Ahmadi community, the Sub-Commission requested the Commission to call on Pakistan to repeal Ordinance XX and restore the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all persons under its jurisdiction.

Europe and the Mediterranean area

Albania

By a resolution of 29 August 1985,<sup>(50)</sup> the Sub-Commission dealt with religious freedom in Albania (see p. 846).

Cyprus

On 13 March 1985,<sup>(51)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights postponed debate on the question of human rights in Cyprus until its 1986 session, on the understanding that action required by previous Commission resolutions on the subject remained operative, including the request for a report on their implementation.

Effective 28 April 1985, the Secretary-General appointed Paul Wurth (Switzerland) to succeed the late Claude Pilloud as the ICRC representative on the three-member Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus. The other members were selected by each of the two Cypriot communities.

Latin America

Argentina

On 30 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council decided, in view of a 1984 decision of the Commission on Human Rights to terminate the study of the situation with respect to human rights in Argentina and in view of the full restoration of human rights in that country, that material relating to Argentina, which had been before the Commission under a procedure established by the Council in 1970<sup>(1)</sup> for dealing confidentially with communications alleging violations of human rights, should cease to be confidential. Decision 1985/156 was adopted without vote, following similar approval by the Second Committee on 24 May of a text<sup>(52)</sup> proposed by Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Mexico and Venezuela.

Chile

Human Rights Commission action. Following examination of a 1984 report<sup>(53)</sup> by Special Rapporteur Rajsoomer Lallah (Mauritius) on the situation of human rights in Chile, the Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution<sup>(54)</sup> adopted on 14 March 1985 by a roll-call vote of 32 to 1, with 8 abstentions, again expressed dismay at the suppression in Chile of the traditional democratic legal order and its institutions and their replacement by a Constitution which did not reflect the people's will, freely expressed, and whose provisions considerably reduced the exercise of human rights through institutionalization and consolidation of states of emergency and extension of the jurisdiction of military tribunals. The Commission expressed indignation at the increase in serious and systematic human rights violations as described by the Special Rapporteur, in particular at the violent suppression of popular protest in the face of the authorities' refusal to restore the democratic order, leading to mass arrests and large numbers of dead and injured. It denounced again the fact that the repressive and arbitrary activities of the police and security agencies, in particular of the National Information Agency, had gone unpunished.

The Commission expressed profound concern about the ineffectiveness of habeas corpus or amparo and of legal protection, owing to the fact that the judiciary did not exercise its powers of investigation, monitoring and supervision and functioned under severe restrictions undermining its independence. It again urged the Chilean authorities to restore and respect human rights in accordance with their obligations under international instruments and re-establish legality, democratic institutions and effective exercise of civil and political rights and freedoms, in particular: to end the régime of exception, especially the practice of declaring states of emergency; to investigate without delay the fate of disappeared persons, inform and assist their families and punish those responsible; to end intimidation and persecution, arbitrary arrests and imprisonment in secret places, and halt torture and other inhuman treatment; to respect the right of Chileans to live in and freely enter and leave the country, and cease assignment to forced residence and forced exile; and to restore full labour rights and economic, social and cultural rights, in particular the rights of the indigenous populations to their land and cultural identity.

The Commission again exhorted the Chilean authorities to co-operate with the Special Rapporteur-whose mandate it extended for another year-and to submit their comments to the Commission in 1986.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1985, by decision 1985/150, the Economic and Social Council, noting the Commission's March resolution, approved without vote the decision to renew the Special Rapporteur's mandate for one year. The Council requested him to report on the human rights situation in Chile to the Assembly's 1985 session and to the Commission's 1986 session. That portion of the decision had been proposed by the Commission. Adding a phrase proposed by Mexico and approved in the Council's Second Committee, the Council also requested the Secretary-General to ensure the necessary financial resources and sufficient staff to implement the Commission's resolution. The Council acted on the recommendation of its Second Committee, which approved the decision on 24 May, also without vote.

The United States said that, although the Commission's resolution did not accurately describe the situation in Chile, it did not oppose extending the Special Rapporteur's mandate. It did oppose consideration of Chile under a separate agenda item of the Commission, rather than on the same basis as other cases debated. Ecuador said the selective criterion which singled out a few countries for criticism of what was passed over in silence where others were concerned was counter-productive. The United Kingdom observed that despite some States' reservations they had not stood in the way of consensus adoption-a significant departure from past practice that would improve the credibility and authority of the special rapporteurs.

The Netherlands said it was its understanding that the Rapporteur's field missions were primarily to hear witnesses; travel and subsistence expenses for such witnesses to visit New York was regrettably absent from the financial implications in the Commission's report.

Sub-Commission action. On 30 August 1985,<sup>(55)</sup> the Sub-Commission urged the Chilean authorities to end all measures of repression such as intimidation, persecution, assignment to forced residence, torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and called on them to identify those responsible for all repressive measures, in particular disappearances, torture and mistreatment, and punish the guilty. It called on those authorities to respect and restore economic, social and cultural rights, in particular those of indigenous populations, including the right to their land, to preserve their cultural identity and to improve their economic and social status. It recommended that the Commission urgently appeal to the Chilean authorities to respect and promote human rights and end the "states of exception" under which serious violations were committed.

Report of the Special Rapporteur. In September 1985,<sup>(56)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly a preliminary report by Fernando Volio Jiménez (Costa Rica), who had been appointed as Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile at the end of January following the resignation of Rajssoomer Lallah. The report took into consideration the more important official texts adopted during 1985, as well as information from national and international governmental and non-governmental organizations, and from representatives of the Chilean Government. The Special Rapporteur had also met on several occasions with Chilean citizens inside and outside the country. Information based on purely subjective assessments or not sufficiently verified had not been taken into account, he stressed. The situation in Chile was assessed in terms of the norms contained in international treaties ratified by Chile, as well as other universally applicable norms of international human rights law.

Between January and June 1985, the Special Rapporteur stated, he had studied disturbing accounts of occurrences which would constitute serious violations of fundamental freedoms, including abduction and murder. The situation was aggravated by widely spreading terrorist activities which clearly hindered the creation of a climate propitious to restoring democracy.

The absence of normal political activity prevented political parties from functioning; without a democratic legal and political structure, he stated, the risk of further deterioration of the human rights situation increased. The lifting of the state of siege on 17 June marked a positive change, he added, although a state of emergency was declared on the same day.

The problem of exiles had a most adverse effect on the human rights situation and national reconciliation. The Government was gradually reducing the number of people allegedly barred from entering the country (some 4,200), but its current measures were not sufficient to resolve the problem satisfactorily. Administrative banishment or assignment to forced residence was being imposed without the benefit of due process. He also believed that the problems afflicting Chile's indigenous minorities deserved closer examination.

The judiciary appeared to lack the independence necessary to exercise its authority. The judicial and executive branches should make a joint effort, he said, to expedite the resolution of outstanding cases, in particular serious violations he had mentioned in a memorandum of 24 July to the Government.

The official recognition as of 16 July of the Special Rapporteur's mandate and the co-operation extended to him was also a constructive step forward, although he had not obtained permission to visit the country.

The restructuring of the carabineros, the armed forces responsible for maintaining law and order, he said, begun following a judicial decision in a case of abduction and murder, should be carried out thoroughly and urgently. Also, the practice of torture must be eliminated. New official mechanisms must be set up to move towards a lasting solution to the problem of exiles and the Government should recognize and publicize the currently unofficial list of persons allegedly barred from entering the country; administrative banishment or restricted residence measures should be transformed into jurisdictional measures. Court proceedings should be speeded up as an immediate task to improve the human rights situation, and the country's legal order should be reformed to guarantee the maximum effectiveness of recourses for the protection of public freedoms such as amparo (which included habeas Corpus).

Terrorism had to be tackled urgently; the new anti-terrorist laws in force would achieve their objective provided that they were used reasonably and abuses were prevented. Citizens, especially those involved in community and religious activities and human rights, must be given increased protection.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the process of drafting, approving and implementing constitutional laws relating to the structure of the political process be speeded up, within a shorter time-frame than that established, and that the Government promote the broadest possible participation of interested political circles in restoring representative democracy.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/145, by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile

The General Assembly,

Aware of its responsibility to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, and determined to remain vigilant with regard to violations of human rights wherever they occur,

Noting the obligation of the Chilean authorities to respect and protect human rights in accordance with the international instruments to which Chile is a party,

Bearing in mind that the concern of the international community at the situation of human rights in Chile was expressed by the General Assembly in its resolutions 3219(XXIX) of 6 November 1974, 3448(XXX) of 9 December 1975, 31/124 of 16 December 1976, 32/118 of 16 December 1977, 33/175 of 20 December 1978, 34/179 of 17 December 1979, 35/188 of 15 December 1980, 36/157 of 16 December 1981, 37/183 of 17 December 1982, 38/102 of 16 December 1983 and 39/121 of 14 December 1984, as well as in its resolution 33/173 of 20 December 1978 on disappeared persons.

Recalling the relevant resolutions of the Commission on Human Rights, in particular resolution 1985/47 of 14 March 1985, in which the Commission decided, inter alia, to extend the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a year and to consider the question as a matter of high priority in view of the increase in serious violations of human rights in Chile,

Considering that the Special Rapporteur proposes to submit to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session a final report on the situation of human rights in Chile,

Considering also the public and notorious nature of many of the deeds which constitute serious and systematic violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile,

Deploping once again the fact that the repeated appeals of the General Assembly, the Commission on Human Rights and other international organs to re-establish human rights and fundamental freedoms have been ignored by the Chilean authorities,

Considering further, inter alia, the recent reports, resolutions and conclusions of the Human Rights Committee, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and the International Labour Organisation, as well as the Chilean Human Rights Committee and the Vicaría de la Solidaridad of the Catholic Church in Chile,

Recognizing the importance of the fact that the Chilean authorities have announced their intention to permit the entry into Chile of the Special Rapporteur, in the exercise of his mandate, to investigate the situation of human rights in that country,

1. Takes note of the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Chile, submitted in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/47;

2. Once again expresses its dismay at the suppression in Chile of the traditional democratic legal order and its institutions and their replacement by a constitution which does not reflect the freely expressed will of the people and whose provisions considerably restrict the enjoyment and exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms through the institutionalization and consolidation of states of emergency and the extension of the jurisdiction of the military tribunals, all of which amounts to an integrated system negating civil and political rights and freedoms;

3. Expresses its indignation at the persistence of serious and systematic violations of human rights in Chile, in particular the suppression of social protests which has caused a considerable number of deaths and injuries and mass and individual arrests, at the intimidation of national human rights organizations, at the frequent reports of torture and ill-treatment, and at the treacherous crimes in which the police forces are judicially implicated;

4. Reiterates its alarm at the fact that, in general, the arbitrary or improper actions of the State police and security agencies continue to go unpunished;

5. Reiterates its concern at the ineffectiveness of the remedies of habeas corpus or of amparo and of protection, owing to the fact that the judiciary, notwithstanding some positive actions in this field, does not always exercise its powers of investigation, monitoring and supervision in this respect, and performs its functions under severe restrictions which undermine its independence;

6. Once again calls urgently upon the Chilean authorities to restore and respect human rights in accordance with the obligations they have assumed under various international instruments, so as to re-establish the principle of legality, democratic institutions and the effective enjoyment and exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and, in particular:

(a) To put an end not only to the state of seige, as was done in June 1985, but also to the regime of exception and especially the practice of declaring "constitutional states of emergency" under which serious and continuing violations of human rights are committed;

(b) To investigate and clarify without delay the fate of persons who were arrested for political reasons and later disappeared, to assist and inform their families of the results of such investigation and to bring to trial and punish those responsible for their disappearance;

(c) To respect the right to life and the right to physical and moral integrity by putting an end to the practice of torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and to put an immediate end to intimidation and persecution as well as to kidnappings, arbitrary or abusive detention and imprisonment in secret places;

(d) To respect the right of nationals to live in and freely enter and leave their country, without arbitrary restrictions or conditions, and to cease the practice of relegación (assignment to forced residence) and forced exile;

(e) To restore the full enjoyment and exercise of labour rights, including the right to organize trade unions, the right to collective bargaining and the right to strike, to put an end to the suppression of the activities of trade union leaders and their organizations and to comply with the provisions of the international agreements of the International Labour Organisation to which Chile has subscribed;

(f) To respect and, where necessary, restore economic, social and cultural rights, in particular the rights intended to preserve the cultural identity and improve the economic and social status of the indigenous populations, including the right to their land;

7. Concludes, on the basis of the preliminary report of the Special Rapporteur and of other data at its disposal, that it is necessary to continue to monitor the human rights situation in Chile;

8. Expresses its conviction that an unrestricted, in situ investigation of the human rights situation in Chile requires that the Special Rapporteur, in fulfilment of his mandate, should have access to all the information and data which could be provided by those persons and bodies that are interested in the situation of human rights in Chile;

9. Requests the Chilean authorities to co-operate more fully with the Special Rapporteur and to submit their comments on his report to the Commission on Human Rights at its forty-second session;

10. Invites the Commission on Human Rights, at its forty-second session, to proceed to an in-depth consideration of the report of the Special Rapporteur and, taking account of all the relevant information at its disposal, to adopt the most appropriate measures for the effective restoration of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Chile, including the extension of the mandate of the Special Rapporteur, and requests the Commission to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council.

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 88-11-47 (recorded vote)

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Democratic Kampuchea, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Grenada, Honduras, Israel, Ivory Coast, Japan, Jordan, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Philippines, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, Somalia, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, Yemen, Zaire.

Chile characterized the text as illegal, unjust, discriminatory and inconsistent and as exceeding the United Nations competence; Chile had given clear evidence of its co-operation and its attachment to the international instruments to which it was party. Far from seriously dealing with human rights, the text was a libel with a political intent; it interfered in aspects within the country's exclusive competence and disregarded the real situation in the country. In addition, the Assembly was dealing selectively with human rights violations, which occurred in various regions of the world.

The selective treatment of human rights violations was criticized by Zaire. Any selectivity, whereby a few countries were criticized for violations while others were passed over in silence, weakened the system, said Ecuador; it advocated that the United Nations should consolidate its mechanisms for dealing with human rights and should present an annual report on the observance of those rights in each Member State. Madagascar considered it unacceptable that certain States should use human rights questions to interfere in other States' internal affairs.

Costa Rica and the United States would have preferred it if the text had explicitly praised the constructive preliminary report and recognized the positive changes in the human rights situation in Chile, whose Government had for the first time expressed willingness to consider the Special Rapporteur's recommendations. The United States said it hoped Chile would adopt and promptly implement those recommendations. Costa Rica said it was rather strange that the eighth preambular paragraph made no mention of the report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and of the Organization of American States, and believed that paragraph 6 was designed to provoke the Chilean Government and might lead it to deny co-operation to the Special Rapporteur.

Bolivia hoped that the human rights situation in the country would return to normal; for reasons of State, it declared, it would not take part in the vote on the text.

Visit to Chile by the Special Rapporteur. In exercise of his mandate, the Special Rapporteur visited Chile from 8 to 19 December 1985, interviewing a large number of senior officials of the Government and judiciary, senior representatives of the Catholic Church, representatives of numerous human rights, social and trade union organizations and private individuals to obtain first-hand information on reports of human rights violations. The report on his mission was to be submitted to the 1986 session of the Commission on Human Rights.

El Salvador

Report of the Special Representative (February). Special Representative José Antonio Pastor Ridruejo, in fulfilment of his mandate extended by the Commission on Human Rights in 1984,<sup>(57)</sup> submitted a report to the Commission in February 1985.<sup>(58)</sup> Summing up his overview, he observed that the considerable gap between the Government's intentions to improve the situation and its ability to achieve results had narrowed.

The Special Representative again recommended that both sides—the Salvadorian regular army and the guerrilla forces—immediately terminate attacks on the lives of non-combatants. He further recommended that the Government and the left-wing opposition continue their dialogue initiated at La Palma in October 1984 to ensure peace in the country; until that was achieved, both sides should scrupulously comply with the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols.<sup>(59)</sup>

In addition, he recommended to the authorities the following measures: repeal of all legislative and other measures incompatible with international human rights instruments binding on El Salvador; strengthening of government control over the members and units of the armed forces and security bodies, and over all armed individuals and organizations; adoption of measures to prevent, investigate and punish human rights violations rapidly and effectively, including the dismissal of those committing such violations; intensification of mass campaigns to promote respect for human rights; and broadening of administrative and social reforms, including agrarian reform.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a resolution<sup>(60)</sup> adopted on 13 March 1985 by a roll-call vote of 39 to none, with 3 abstentions, expressed deep concern that, despite the sharp drop in political assassinations, detentions and disappearances, many human rights violations continued and the number of attacks on life and the economic structure was still a cause for concern.

The Commission welcomed the release and exchange of prisoners of war and the recent Christmas and New Year's truce, appealed to States to support those measures and to co-operate fully with humanitarian organizations dedicated to alleviating the suffering of the civilians, and recommended that, until peace was achieved, the Government and the guerrilla forces should humanize the conflict by complying with the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocols.

The Commission recognized the right of the Salvadorian people freely to determine their future without outside interference and through a genuine democratic process free from intimidation and terror. It welcomed the invitation to a dialogue made by the President of El Salvador during the General Assembly's 1984 session, as well as the favourable reply to that invitation by the Frente Democrático Revolucionario-Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional. It urged the parties to continue a serious dialogue with a view to achieving a negotiated solution that would end the armed conflict and help institutionalize and strengthen the democratic system.

Deeply deploring the lack of perceptible change in the judicial system, the Commission again urged the authorities to speed up the reform process with a view to punishing those responsible for the serious violations still being committed. It called on them to amend legislation or measures incompatible with international human rights instruments. In addition, it recommended the intensification of economic and social reforms, including agrarian reform.

Extending the Special Representative's mandate for another year, the Commission requested him to report to it on further developments in 1986, after reporting to the Assembly in 1985. It renewed its appeal to the Government and other parties to continue to co-operate with the Special Representative and requested the necessary assistance from the Secretary-General.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, by decision 1985/145, adopted, without vote, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council approved the Commission's decision to extend the Special Representative's mandate for another year and asked him to submit his report on further developments in the situation of human rights in El Salvador to the Assembly in 1985 and the Commission in 1986. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Secretary-General to assist the Special Representative.

The Second Committee had approved the text, proposed by the Commission, on 24 May without vote.

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution<sup>(61)</sup> adopted on 29 August 1985 by 16 votes to 3, with 1 abstention, the Sub-Commission expressed deep concern that, although the number of human rights violations in El Salvador had decreased, the Government continued to commit serious violations as a result, primarily, of its non-observance of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The Sub-Commission recognized that there existed in El Salvador an armed conflict not of an international character where article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II applied, and ratified the point stated by the Special Representative that, according to the 1949 Conventions, as long as the so-called masses did not participate directly in combat, although they might sympathize with insurgents, they preserved their civilian character and must not be subjected to military attacks and forced displacement by government forces.

The Sub-Commission recommended that the Special Representative inform the Commission on whether both parties accepted their obligation to respect the 1949 Conventions, and how well they were doing so, especially concerning the protection of war prisoners, military hospitals, wounded persons, medical personnel and civilians. It regretted that the hostilities on both sides had resulted in numerous civilian victims and material damage. It welcomed the fact that the parties had agreed in their first round of talks to create a Joint Commission to develop mechanisms to integrate all sectors of national life in the search for peace, study measures to humanize the conflict and consider all aspects that could lead to peace in the shortest time possible. The Sub-Commission requested the Commission to reiterate its appeal to the Government and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario for an immediate resumption of talks and implementation of their agreements to achieve a negotiated, comprehensive political settlement that would guarantee all Salvadorians full respect of their human rights. It urged all States to refrain from intervening in the country's internal situation and to encourage a just and lasting settlement, instead of supplying arms and military assistance. It requested a report on the Special Representative's investigation.

Report of the Special Representative (November). In November 1985, the Secretary-

General transmitted to the General Assembly an interim report by the Special Representative on the human rights situation in El Salvador.<sup>(62)</sup> The Representative had visited the country from 8 to 18 September. During his visit, he had interviews with the country's President and a number of high-ranking government officials, representatives of the church and NGOs.

After giving an overview of the situation in the country as it affected human rights, he concluded that the situation described in previous reports had not changed significantly with regard to economic, social and cultural rights; one symptom of that situation was the growing labour unrest. He noted with concern the effects which the attacks by the military forces and in particular systematic attacks by the guerrilla forces on the country's economic infrastructure had had on those rights.

He was convinced that, during 1985, political murders of civilians had continued, some victims having been abducted and subsequently having disappeared, on occasion perpetrated by extreme right-wing paramilitary organizations, some of which were presumably connected with or tolerated by lower-ranking agents of the State.

The Special Representative also had found indications that severe psychological pressure, equivalent to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, had been exerted in extrajudicial interrogations of some political prisoners, although he did not believe that this represented a deliberate policy.

Taking note of the attempts to reform the legal system and the organization of the judiciary, and of the difficulties involved, the Special Representative continued to consider that judicial procedures for investigating and punishing acts of collaboration with the armed opposition were excessively slow and did not always respect the law.

He noted with concern that violations committed in military operations by the Salvadorian army continued, resulting in civilian death and injuries and property damage, although civilian victims appeared to be fewer than in the year before. The most significant result of the Government's policy with regard to respect for human rights in 1985 could be seen in the armed forces' combat behaviour.

With regard to non-combat-related violations by the guerrilla forces, the Special Representative observed a disturbing increase in murders, as well as in abductions of civilians, and their combat actions had caused unjustified deaths and injuries among civilians and damage to property.

The Special Representative again recommended that all interested parties immediately terminate attacks on the lives of non-combatants, in both combat and non-combat situations. He continued to believe that civil peace was a vital prerequisite for the respect of the right to life, as well as other civil and political rights, and for gradual improvement of the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights. He again strongly recommended that the Government and the left-wing opposition forces end violence and war and endeavour to ensure peace through a sincere and open dialogue; until a negotiated peace was achieved, both had the obligation to respect the 1949 Geneva Conventions and the 1977 Additional Protocols to which El Salvador was a party.

He recommended that the legislative, executive and judicial authorities in El Salvador repeal all legislative and other measures incompatible with international human rights instruments; strengthen government control over the armed forces, security bodies and armed individuals and organizations, including in particular the so-called "death squads"; increase monitoring of investigations carried out in the security bodies to eliminate torture or other cruel treatment; adopt measures to investigate and punish violations in the swiftest, most exemplary and most effective manner, including the dismissal of officials and officers who committed such violations; intensify, particularly among the armed forces and security bodies, mass campaigns to promote respect for human rights; and broaden administrative and social reforms, including judicial and agrarian reform.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/139, by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador

The General Assembly,

Guided by the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the humanitarian rules set out in the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and Additional Protocols I and II thereto,

Aware that the Governments of all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms and to carry out the responsibilities they have undertaken under various international human rights instruments,

Recalling that, in its resolutions 35/192 of 15 December 1980, 36/155 of 16 December 1981, 37/185 of 17 December 1982, 38/101 of 16 December 1983 and 39/119 of 14 December 1984, it expressed deep concern at the situation of human rights in El Salvador,

Bearing in mind Commission on Human Rights resolutions 32(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, in which the Commission decided to appoint a special representative on the situation of human rights in El Salvador, 1982/28 of 11 March 1982, 1983/29 of 8 March 1983; 1984/52 of 14 March 1984 and 1985/35 of 13 March 1985, whereby the Commission extended the mandate of the Special Representative for another year and requested him to report, inter alia, to the General Assembly,

Noting that the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights points out in his interim report that, in the process of the democratic normalization of the country, the question of respect for human rights is an important part of the current policy of the Republic of El Salvador, but that nevertheless a situation of generalized warlike violence continues to exist, that the number of attacks on life and the economic structure remains a cause for concern, and that the number of political prisoners and abductions has increased,

Deeply concerned that in El Salvador, in addition to the continuing armed conflict, the scarcely initiated dialogue between the Government and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario has been interrupted,

Considering that, while the armed conflict of a non-international character continues, the Government and the insurgent forces are obliged to apply the minimum standards of protection of human rights and of humanitarian treatment set out in article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, as well as Additional Protocol II thereto, to which the Republic of El Salvador is party,

Aware that a political solution to the Salvadorian conflict may be thwarted if external forces, rather than assisting the resumption of the dialogue, contribute in any way to the intensification or prolongation of the war,

Recognizing the value of dialogue as the best way to achieve genuine national reconciliation and the importance of the fact that different sectors of the country favour an overall negotiated political solution which would put an end to the suffering of the Salvadorian people and stem the tide of refugees and internally displaced persons,

1. Commends the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights for his interim report on the situation of human rights in El Salvador;

2. Recognises with interest and emphasizes that it is important that the Special Representative should have indicated in his interim report that the Government of El Salvador is continuing its policy of attempting to improve the situation of human rights;

3. Expresses, nevertheless, its deep concern at the fact that serious and numerous violations of human rights continue to take place in El Salvador owing above all to non-fulfilment of the humanitarian rules of war and therefore requests the Government of El Salvador and the insurgent forces to adopt measures conducive to the humanization of the conflict by observing scrupulously the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and the Additional Protocols thereto, and also recommends that the Special Representative should, for the duration of the armed conflict, continue to observe and to inform the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights of the extent to which the contending parties are respecting those rules, particularly as regards humanitarian treatment and respect for the civilian population, prisoners of war, those wounded in combat, health personnel and military hospitals of either party;

4. Reaffirms once again the right of the Salvadorian people freely to determine their political, economic and social future without interference from outside, through a genuine democratic process, in which all sectors of the population participate freely and effectively;

5. Requests all States to refrain from intervening in the internal situation in El Salvador and, instead of helping in any way to prolong and intensify the war, to encourage the continuation of the dialogue until a just and lasting peace is achieved;

6. Deeply regrets the interruption of the dialogue initiated in October 1984 between the Government of El Salvador and the Frente Farabundo Martí para la Liberación Nacional-Frente Democrático Revolucionario and therefore calls upon these parties to renew their talks so that by means of sincere, generous and open dialogue they may achieve a negotiated comprehensive political solution which will put an end to the armed conflict and contribute to the institutionalization and strengthening of the democratic system based on the full exercise by all Salvadorians of their civil and political rights and their economic, social and cultural rights;

7. Calls upon the Government and the opposition forces, as agreed at the meeting held at La Palma on 15 October 1984, to establish as soon as possible appropriate mechanisms to study the plans and proposals submitted by both parties and to include all sectors of national life in the search for peace;

8. Views with concern that, as a consequence of the prolonged armed conflict, the number of refugees and internally displaced persons, who already constitute a considerable part of the Salvadorian population, continues to increase and requests all States to collaborate in the reception of the refugees and to support the autonomous organizations responsible for looking after internally displaced persons in El Salvador;

9. Again reiterates its appeal to the Government of El Salvador and to the opposition forces to co-operate fully with the humanitarian organizations dedicated to alleviating the suffering of the civilian population, wherever these organizations operate in the country, and to permit the International Committee of the Red Cross to continue to evacuate those wounded and maimed by war to where they can receive the medical attention they need;

10. Deeply deplores the fact that the capacity of the judicial system in El Salvador to investigate, prosecute and punish violations of human rights continues to be patently unsatisfactory and therefore urges the competent authorities to continue and strengthen the process of reform of the Salvadorian judicial system, in order to punish speedily and effectively those responsible for the serious human rights violations which have been committed and are still being committed in that country;

11. Recommends the continuation and broadening of the reforms necessary in El Salvador, including effective application of agrarian reform, for the solution of the economic and social problems which are the basic cause of the internal conflict in that country;

12. Calls upon the competent authorities in El Salvador to introduce changes in the laws and other measures that are incompatible with the provisions contained in the international instruments binding on the Government of El Salvador in respect of human rights;

13. Renews its appeal to the Government of El Salvador, as well as to other parties concerned, to continue to co-operate with the Special Representative of the Commission on Human Rights;

14. Decides to keep under consideration, during its forty-first session, the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in El Salvador, in order to examine this situation anew in the light of additional elements provided by the Commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council, in the hope that there will be improvement.

General Assembly resolution 40/139

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 100-2-42 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) by recorded vote (92-3-36). 6 December (meeting 71); 13.nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.54). orally revised; agenda item 12. Sponsors: Algeria, Costa Rica, Denmark, France, Greece, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 54-56, 60-71: plenary 116.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Grenada, Honduras, Indonesia, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Lebanon, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Niger, Oman, Pakistan, Philippines, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, United States, Yemen, Zaire:

<sup>2</sup>Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

The Third Committee originally approved the text by a recorded vote of 92 to 4, with 40 abstentions; however, on a motion by the United States that the resolution be reconsidered—a motion approved by a recorded vote of 59 to 22, with 17 abstentions, the required two-thirds majority—a second vote was taken.

Although agreeing that the text contained significant positive features, El Salvador none the less believed that it fell short of recognizing a whole series of government achievements and failed to indicate unambiguously those currently responsible for the majority of human rights violations. The text was repetitive in its references to the armed conflict, but while extremist groups without popular support were trying to impose violence, the Government had a constitutional obligation to maintain national security and public order and to enable State institutions to function. Although El Salvador recognized the need and urgency of the reforms mentioned in the text, it could not accept interference in matters within its domestic jurisdiction.

Countries' use of human rights questions for such interference was the reason given by Madagascar for its non-participation. Iran said that it was not able to take part in any action with regard to the text, disappointed as it was with the human rights machinery of the United Nations, but its condemnation of the crimes committed against the oppressed people of El Salvador still held-and in Chile and Guatemala as well.

While the text recognized the progress made by El Salvador, the United States said, the text had significant defects: it did not take note of the Government's efforts, made in good faith and under the most difficult conditions, to ensure the primacy of law; unlike the Commission's resolution it did not recognize the legitimacy of the Salvadorian Government; it did not devote adequate attention to the brutal violations by the insurgents to which it seemed to give the same moral and legal status as the democratically elected Government, even though they had refused to participate in four free and fair elections; and it implied that the Special Representative's mandate should continue, whereas the progress made could justify allowing it to expire.

Ecuador—which, along with Zaire, said it abstained when it considered there had been selectivity on human rights violations—noted the progress regarding human rights in El Salvador and appealed for their full observance, while Zambia expressed great concern about the widespread violations.

Bolivia, not taking part in the Voting for reasons of State, hoped that the human rights situation in the country would return to normal.

Guatemala

Report of the Special Rapporteur (February). In February 1985, Special Rapporteur Viscount Colville of Culross (United Kingdom) submitted a report<sup>(63)</sup> on the human rights situation in Guatemala, as had been requested by the Commission on Human Rights in 1984<sup>(64)</sup>. He updated information contained in two reports<sup>(65)</sup> submitted during 1984, including new material derived from a visit to the country from 20 to 26 January 1985, and also dealt with the situation of Guatemalan refugees in Belize, Honduras and Mexico.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the process of a return to a democratically elected Government, begun in 1984, should be given every support; the new Constitution should be drawn up so as to guarantee the rights contained in the two International Covenants on Human Rights and ensure that positions of power would be in civilian hands. Independence for the judiciary should be established and violence and disappearances should be prevented; an improvement in the climate of violence was urgently needed if a wider range of political parties was to be persuaded to participate in the next elections. Technical assistance and training was needed to enable judges and court officials to restore credibility to the judicial system. The Guatemalan Assembly should be encouraged to set up an autonomous body to watch over the human rights situation and insist on the investigation and correction of violations; and refugees in the surrounding countries, particularly in Mexico, should be supplied with full information about the situation in Guatemala, to enable them freely to decide whether they wished to return. The development programme and trade union activity should be encouraged, standards of living for migrant workers should be raised, distribution of land title should continue, and technical assistance should be provided to enable rural people to rise above subsistence levels.

Human Rights Commission action. The Commission on Human Rights, by a 13 March 1985 resolution<sup>(66)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 32 to none, with 10 abstentions, again expressed deep concern at continuing serious and systematic human rights violations in Guatemala, particularly acts of violence against non-combatants, disappearances, killings, torture and extrajudicial executions, and at measures restricting the freedoms of rural and indigenous populations, notably their displacement and relocation in development centres and forced participation in civilian patrols organized and controlled by the armed forces.

The Commission urged the Government to ensure that its authorities and agencies, including security forces, respected human rights, and urged all other parties to do likewise; all were appealed to to ensure application of the norms of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflicts of a non-international character. It urged Guatemala to establish the independence of the judiciary and enable it to uphold the rule of law, including the right of habeas corpus, and to prosecute and speedily punish those found responsible for violations. It appealed to the Government to allow an independent and impartial body into the country to investigate alleged violations, and to allow international humanitarian organizations to assist in investigating the fate of disappeared persons, to visit detainees and assist civilians in areas of conflict. Welcoming the dialogue between the Government and the Mutual Support Group of the families of the disappeared, and the establishment of a commission to investigate and clarify the fate of disappeared persons, the Commission on Human Rights urged that commission to act expeditiously and called particularly on the police and army to co-operate with the commission. It asked Guatemala to publish a list of cases which fell within the jurisdiction of special tribunals, indicating their outcome.

The Commission requested all States to refrain from intervening in the country's internal situation, appealed to the Government to adhere to its new timetable for the return to democracy and to ensure conditions which would allow full participation of all in the political process, and appealed to all parties to the conflict to create a climate free from intimidation and terror. Extending the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for another year, it requested him to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1985 and a final report to the Commission in 1986; the report, with recommendations, should take into account information from all reliable sources and should assess in particular allegations of politically motivated killings, disappearances, torture, extrajudicial executions and confinement in clandestine prisons. The Government and other parties concerned were invited to co-operate fully with the Rapporteur.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May, the Economic and Social Council approved a text proposed by the Commission on Human Rights to extend the Special Rapporteur's mandate. Decision 1985/146 was adopted without vote by the Council, having been similarly approved by its Second Committee on 24 May.

The Council thereby approved the Commission's decision to extend for another year the mandate of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Guatemala, to enable him to continue his thorough study of the human rights situation in that country. The Council also approved the Commission's request to the Rapporteur, in preparing his report, to continue to take into account information from all reliable sources, to assess in particular allegations of politically motivated killings, disappearances, acts of torture, extrajudicial executions and confinement in clandestine prisons, to draw conclusions from his findings and to make further recommendations designed to help bring about improvements in the situation of human rights in Guatemala. Further, it approved the Commission's request to the Special Rapporteur to submit an interim report to the General Assembly in 1985 and a final report to the Commission in 1986, and approved the request to the Secretary-General to give him all necessary assistance.

Sub-Commission action. Deep concern at massive and systematic human rights violations in Guatemala and at restrictions on the freedom of the indigenous rural population was expressed by the Sub-Commission in a resolution<sup>(67)</sup> adopted on 30 August by 11 votes to 1, with 6 abstentions. The Sub-Commission again urged the Government to ensure full respect for human rights by its authorities, agencies and forces, to punish those responsible for violations, and to clarify the fate of disappeared persons. It also called on the Government to halt harassment and persecution of members and leaders of the Mutual Support Group and to respond to their demands.

Noting with satisfaction that the Government had invited certain international human rights organizations to visit the country to assess the situation, the Sub-Commission expected that Guatemala would take their reports into due account and would allow international humanitarian organizations, in particular ICRC, to aid the civilians in the areas of conflict and investigate the fate of the disappeared. It called on the parties concerned to ensure the application of international law.

The Sub-Commission expressed its conviction that solutions would be greatly facilitated by allowing the people freely to determine their future without foreign interference. It expressed concern at the climate of intimidation and terror in the country, which it considered to be an impediment to the free participation of all political forces, social sectors and citizens in the presidential election process beginning November 1985, to which it had been invited, as well as at the insufficient conditions for the effective participation in the political processes of the indigenous, rural and peasant populations. The Sub-Commission noted the promulgation of a new Constitution by the National Constituent Assembly, of electoral and constitutional laws and of the final timetable for elections to a constitutional Government which was to take office on 14 January 1986. It urged again all Governments to abstain from intervening in the internal situation, in particular from providing arms and military assistance as long as grave violations of human rights continued to occur. In preparing his reports, the Rapporteur was urged to take due account of the situation of the indigenous population, as well as testimonies submitted to the Sub-Commission.

Report of the Special Rapporteur (November). In November 1985, the Special Rapporteur presented to the General Assembly an interim report<sup>(68)</sup> on the human rights situation in Guatemala. After discussing some questions of methodology, in response to criticism by an opposition group as well as from the country's Human Rights Commission, and giving an account of his use of sources of information additional to his own research, the report dealt with: the role of the police and the judiciary in solving cases of human rights violations; internal and non-governmental organizations concerned with human rights; particular allegations of violations; disappearances; clandestine prisons and civil patrols; development areas or "poles" and model villages; other projects concerning social and economic rights; and Guatemalan refugees in Mexico. It omitted any detailed discussion of the platform of the various political parties competing in the election. The Special Rapporteur stressed that he had received every possible facility and cooperation from the Government and everyone else in the execution of his mandate.

The Special Rapporteur pointed out that the situation in Guatemala was complex and continuously changing. He concluded that there was agreement that violence and disappearances were still a serious problem in 1985; the police had demonstrated considerable success in detecting such crimes but not in relation to many of the cases that excited much international condemnation. There was impatience and frustration over the delay in publishing the results of investigations into disappearances. The criminal justice system was not equipped to bring to trial many persons accused of the most controversial offences; under those circumstances, it was no wonder that people felt free to resort to violence.

The Government had denied allegations that security forces were involved in violence, other than in their military activities against the guerrillas; some allegations were almost certainly untrue, the Rapporteur said, but in other cases the denunciations did not appear to correspond to the facts. The human rights situation continued to give cause for serious concern.

Noting that the existing Government might not wish to make policy decisions that could fetter the incoming administration, the Special Rapporteur recommended that the international community consider providing technical assistance and advice to the judiciary and police to enable them more effectively to bring to justice and trial those responsible for serious crimes. Efforts should be made to clear up serious unsolved crimes and a new attempt made to gain the co-operation of the public. Consideration should be given to methods whereby bodies concerned with human rights might safely operate inside Guatemala and to an invitation to ICRC to establish a presence there. He suggested that UNHCR send to the Government the names of the refugees in Mexico, Honduras and Belize, for comparison with the list of disappearances, and that the results of the Tripartite Commission's investigation into disappearances be published. The new Government should reconsider the policy regarding of the civil patrols in the light of criticism that such an obligation placed on civilians constituted in itself a violation of the right to freedom of association.

The Special Rapporteur also recommended that recognition be made of the various projects in process to improve the standards of living, health, nutrition and education for the poorest sectors of the population.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/140, by recorded vote.

Situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala

The General Assembly,

Reiterating that the Governments of all Member States have an obligation to promote and protect human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling its resolutions 37/184 of 17 December 1982, 38/100 of 16 December 1983 and 39/120 of 14 December 1984,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolution 1984/53 of 14 March 1984, and taking note of Commission resolution 1985/36 of 13 March 1985, in which it expressed its deep concern at the continuing serious and systematic violations of human rights in Guatemala and at restrictive measures that limit the freedoms of the rural and indigenous populations,

Mindful of resolution 1985/28 of 30 August 1985 of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities,

Welcoming the general elections held on 3 November 1985 for President, Vice-President and representatives to the national Congress and of municipalities, with the participation of various political parties,

Noting with satisfaction the set of provisions to safeguard human rights and fundamental freedoms contained in the new Constitution, which, when fully complied with by the new Government and all others concerned, could lead to a significant improvement in the situation of human rights in Guatemala,

Alarmed at the continuation of politically motivated violence, particularly killings and kidnappings, as well as enforced and involuntary disappearances and the lack of effective measures by the authorities in investigating such practices,

Recognising that the internal armed conflict of a non-international character which continues to exist in Guatemala stems from economic, social and political factors of a structural nature,

Expressing its concern at the widespread suffering caused by disregard for the principles of international humanitarian law applicable to that conflict,

Welcoming the co-operation of the Government of Guatemala with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights as well as the invitation by the Government to several international human rights organisations to assess the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms,

1. Welcomes the efforts of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights to fulfil his mandate and takes note of his interim report on the situation of human rights in Guatemala, submitted in accordance with Commission resolution 1985/36;

2. Expresses the hope that the recent elections will be the first step in a process leading to complete and effective enjoyment of human rights by the people of Guatemala;

3. Notes with satisfaction that a new Government and Congress are to take office on 14 January 1986, following a second round in the presidential elections on 8 December 1985, and that a new Constitution, which provides, inter alia, for the establishment of a national commission on human rights as well as a commissioner for human rights, is to take effect on the same date in January 1986;

4. Reiterates its deep concern at the continuing grave and widespread violations of human rights in Guatemala, particularly the violence against non-combatants, the widespread repression, killings, including extrajudicial executions, the practice of torture, disappearances and secret detention, as well as at practices such as the displacement of rural and indigenous populations, their confinement in development centres and their forced participation in civilian patrols organized and controlled by the armed forces;

5. Strongly urges the Government of Guatemala to take all measures necessary to halt violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, particularly enforced and involuntary disappearances, as well as to take effective measures, within the framework of the Constitution, to ensure that all its authorities and agencies, civilian as well as military, fully respect the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all Guatemalans, such as trade unionists, catechists and the predominantly indigenous rural and peasant population;

6. Again requests the Government of Guatemala to investigate and clarify the fate of those who have disappeared and whose whereabouts continue to be unknown, and to include within the framework of such an investigation the publication of the full details of the report of the Tripartite Commission;

7. Further urges the Government of Guatemala to establish the necessary conditions to ensure the independence of the judicial system and to enable the judiciary to uphold the rule of law, including the right of habeas corpus, and to prosecute and punish speedily and effectively those who are responsible for violations of human rights, including members of the military and security forces;

8. Calls upon the Government of Guatemala to allow independent and impartial bodies to function in the country to monitor and investigate alleged human rights violations, as well as to respect and protect human rights defenders such as the Mutual Support Group;

9. Calls upon the Government of Guatemala to guarantee to the rural and indigenous population the freedom to choose their place of residence and freedom from forced participation in civilian patrols;

10. Calls upon all parties to the conflict to apply fully the principles and rules of international humanitarian law and reiterates its appeal to the Government of Guatemala to admit the International Committee of the Red Cross to the country, and subsequently to facilitate its operations for the alleviation of the suffering of the Guatemalan people;

11. Calls upon all Governments to refrain from intervening in any way in the internal situation in Guatemala, which could intensify the internal armed conflict and increase violations of human rights;

12. Deeply deplores the continuing gross violations of human rights arising from that conflict, which are largely due to the failure of the military and security forces to conduct their activities with the necessary respect for protecting the human rights of all Guatemalans;

13. Invites the Government of Guatemala and other parties concerned to continue co-operating with the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights;

14. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to study carefully the report of its Special Rapporteur, as well as other information pertaining to the human rights situation in Guatemala, and to consider further steps for securing effective respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all in that country including, if so requested by the Government of Guatemala, the provision of appropriate technical assistance under the programme of advisory services in the field of human rights;

15. Decides to continue its examination of the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms in Guatemala at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/140

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 91-8-47 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) by recorded vote (85-6-40), 6 December (meeting 71): 10-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.59/Rev.2): agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Austria, Canada, Denmark, France, Greece, Ireland, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 54-56, 58, 60-71; plenary 116.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Byelorussian SSR, Canada, Cape Verde, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, India, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao people's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Portugal, Qatar, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Spain, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Bangladesh, Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Indonesia, Morocco, Pakistan, Paraguay.

Abstaining: Bahamas, Belize, Bhutan, Brunei Darussalam, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Democratic Kampuchea, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Grenada, Honduras, Israel, Ivory Coast, Jordan, Lebanon, Liberia, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Nepal, Niger, Oman, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, Turkey, United States, Yemen, Zaire.

The adopted text incorporated some elements of amendment<sup>(69)</sup> submitted by Colombia, Costa Rica and Venezuela, which were then withdrawn.

Guatemala said that, although the Special Rapporteur had underscored the co-operation and support of the Government, the sponsors of the resolution, combining arrogance with paternalism, had submitted a selective, partial and discriminatory text that reflected neither the real situation in the country nor the changes and progress taking place. In the fifth preambular paragraph, they showed some reticence in recognizing that free and fair elections had been held in an electoral process which would culminate on 14 January 1986 with the installation of a new civilian Government. The ninth preambular paragraph spoke of principles of international humanitarian law applicable to the conflict in the country, whereas in fact what was involved were clandestine groups who perpetrated murders, kidnappings and destruction of property and public buildings; the Government had the duty to ensure the safety of property and persons and to maintain public order. Paragraph 4 compounded the false assertions: no outside observer had ever noted the many and serious violations in question. The text failed to mention the common will of the Government and the Guatemalan people to establish a pluralist and representative democracy and to favour national reconciliation and economic development.

The United States said that, although it had not voted against the text, the resolution was unbalanced, referring to gross human rights violations arising from the conflict. Since the Government had begun to co-operate with the Commission on Human Rights, the situation had become quite comparable to that of other Latin American countries whose situation was not being examined. The text made no mention of the responsibility of the rebels or extremist groups for the violence in the country. The Special Rapporteur's conclusions contained no evidence of restrictions on the freedom of movement in the rural development centres, forced participation in civilian patrols or the existence of secret detention centres; the rebels, not the Government, were responsible for the displacement of the rural population.

Welcoming the elections as a strengthening of democratic institutions, Ecuador appealed to Guatemala fully to observe human rights. Bolivia, for reasons of State, did not take part in the voting. Venezuela said the improvement of the situation in Guatemala would occur when freedom, democracy and stability were instituted; it hoped that the new Government would further that process because, as the Special Rapporteur had pointed out, the situation still left much to be desired and the Government appeared not to have controlled certain forces.

Costa Rica said United Nations bodies had introduced political considerations into human rights resolutions that did little to promote a serious and objective analysis of the situation. They had also acted selectively in the case of Guatemala, as in the cases of El Salvador and Chile, by closing their eyes to what was going on in other States. Zaire held a similar position.

Paraguay

The situation in Paraguay, which had been under a state of siege for 30 years, was again the subject of a Sub-Commission resolution<sup>(70)</sup> (see p. 854).

Uruguay

At a closed meeting on 8 March 1985, the Commission on Human Rights decided<sup>(71)</sup> to discontinue consideration of the human rights situation in Uruguay under the confidential procedure established by the Economic and Social Council in 1970<sup>(1)</sup> to deal with communications alleging denial or violations of human rights, and, taking account of a request by the Uruguayan Government that the material before the Commission should no longer be restricted, recommended a draft decision for adoption by the Council to that effect.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Noting the Commission's decision, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/139 adopted without vote on 30 May, encouraged the Government of Uruguay to persist in its endeavours fully to restore respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms throughout the country, and decided, as Uruguay had requested, that the material relating to Uruguay which had been before the Commission under the Council's procedure for dealing with confidential communications alleging human rights violations should no longer be restricted. The Council's action followed approval of the decision without vote on 24 May by its Second Committee.

Middle East

Lebanon

Human Rights Commission action. By a resolution<sup>(72)</sup> on the situation in southern Lebanon, adopted on 13 March by a roll-call vote of 24 to 1, with 16 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights strongly condemned Israel for its human rights violations—assassinations, mass arrests of civilians, abductions, demolition of houses, desecration of places of worship and other inhuman acts—and called on it to end such practices immediately and release the persons detained and abducted. Demanding Israel's immediate and total withdrawal from southern Lebanon, the Commission called on Governments to end economic, political and military aid to Israel, which encouraged that country to persevere with its policy of aggression, expansion and colonial settlements. The Secretary-General was requested to monitor implementation of the resolution and submit to the Assembly a report on the results of his efforts.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/157, by roll-call vote.

Situation in southern Lebanon

At its 25th plenary meeting, on 30 May 1985, the Council, noting Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/41 of 13 March 1985, endorsed the request of the Commission to the Secretary-General to monitor the implementation of that resolution and to submit to the General Assembly at its fortieth session a report on the results of his efforts in that regard.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/157

29-1-18 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Corr.1) by roll-call vote (30-1-19), 24 May meeting 15; 5-nation draft (E/1985/C.2/L.12); agenda item 16.

Sponsors: Lebanon, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Djibouti, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, India, Indonesia, Lebanon, Malaysia, Morocco, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States

Abstaining: Argentina, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Japan, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Spain, Sweden, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Zaire.

Israel said the Commission's resolution had not reflected the real situation in Lebanon; rival factions were engaged in fratricidal massacres in Beirut, yet the decision related to southern Lebanon, the only part of the country where peace reigned.

The United States could not accept the dual standard the decision implied; it focused on events in one part of Lebanon in an inaccurate and inflammatory way and was totally irrelevant to the tragic reality of violence and destruction in many other parts.

In Venezuela's view, the decision contained inappropriate language. Argentina and Costa Rica did not agree with the wording of the decision, nor with that of the Commission's resolution. Ecuador said that resolution lacked objectivity in failing to refer to Israeli troop withdrawals from Lebanon; it voted in favour solely because of its position of principle concerning the inadmissibility of occupying territory by force.

(See also p. 295.)

Territories occupied by Israel

In 1985, the question of human rights violations in the territories occupied by Israel as a result of the 1967 hostilities in the Middle East was again considered by the Commission on Human Rights. This was in addition to the consideration of political and other aspects by the General Assembly, its Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices Affecting the Human Rights of the Population of the Occupied Territories and other bodies (see p. 326).

Human Rights Commission action. By a 19 February 1985 resolution,<sup>(73)</sup> adopted by a roll-call vote of 28 to 5, with 8 abstentions, the Commission on Human Rights reaffirmed that occupation itself was a fundamental violation of the human rights of the civilian population of the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories. It denounced Israel's continued refusal to allow the Special Committee on Israeli practices access to the territories, and reiterated the Committee's alarm at Israel's policy based on the so-called "homeland" doctrine envisaging a monoreligious (Jewish) State that would include territories occupied by Israel since 1967—a policy which, as affirmed by the Committee, not only denied the population its right to self-determination but was also the source of systematic human rights violations.

The Commission confirmed that Israel's continuous grave breaches of the 1949 (fourth) Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and the 1977 Additional Protocols<sup>(59)</sup> were war crimes and an affront to humanity. It firmly rejected and reiterated its condemnation of Israel's decision to annex Jerusalem and change the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure or status of the occupied territories, including the Holy City-measures which the Commission considered null and void. It strongly condemned Israel's attempts to subject the West Bank and the Gaza Strip to Israeli laws, as well as the terrorist actions against Palestinian inhabitants by what it called Jewish gangs.

The Commission strongly condemned Israeli policies and practices, administrative and legislative measures to promote and expand the establishment and expansion of settler colonies, as well as the following practices: the annexation of parts of the territories, including Jerusalem; the continuing establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements on Arab lands, and the transfer of an alien population there; the arming of settlers to commit acts of violence and to strike at Moslem and Christian religious and holy places; the evacuation, deportation, expulsion, displacement and transfer of Arab inhabitants and the denial of their right to return; the confiscation and expropriation of Arab property; the destruction and demolition of Arab houses; mass arrests, collective punishments, administrative detention and ill-treatment of the Arab population, as well as torture and inhuman prison conditions; the pillaging of archaeological and cultural property; interference with religious freedoms and practices, as well as with family rights and customs; the systematic repression of cultural and educational institutions, closing them or restricting and impeding their academic activities; the expropriation and exploitation of the inhabitants' natural wealth, water and other resources; the dismantling of municipal services; dismissing elected mayors and municipal councils; and preventing the flow of Arab aid funds to the territories.

The Commission called on Israel: to take immediate steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants to their homes and property; to arrange for the immediate return of the municipal chiefs to their municipalities; and to release all Arabs detained or imprisoned as a result of their struggle for the territories' self-determination and liberation and, pending their release, to accord them the protection envisaged under international instruments concerning the treatment of prisoners of war. The Commission condemned Israel for its continued detention of Ziyad Abu Eain, calling for his release and the release of others detained at Al-Ansar camp, which must be closed under a November 1983 agreement.

The Commission again called on States, in particular the parties to the fourth Geneva Convention, and international organizations not to recognize any changes carried out by Israel in the territories, including Jerusalem, and avoid action or aid that might be used by Israel in its annexation and colonization policies. It urged Israel to refrain from practices violating human rights in the territories; requested the Assembly to recommend the adoption of measures under Chapter VII of the Charter; and requested the Secretary-General to give the Commission's resolution wide publicity and to report to the Commission in 1986, also bringing to its attention all United Nations reports on the situation appearing until then.

By another resolution<sup>(74)</sup> adopted on the same day by a roll-call vote of 33 to 1, with 7 abstentions, the Commission, expressing deep concern at the consequences of Israel's systematic refusal to apply the fourth Geneva Convention to the occupied territories, including Jerusalem, reaffirmed its applicability, condemned Israel for its failure to acknowledge its applicability, and urged all States parties to ensure compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories. The Commission called on Israel to respect its obligations under the Charter and other international instruments; repeated the request in the above-mentioned resolution for release of all Arabs detained for fighting for self-determination and liberation, pending which to accord them prisoner-of-war status; and demanded that Israel cease all acts of torture and ill-treatment of Arab prisoners. The Commission requested the Secretary-General to report in 1986 on progress in implementing this resolution after bringing it to the attention of Governments, United Nations organs and agencies, and intergovernmental, humanitarian and non-governmental organizations.

By a third resolution<sup>(75)</sup> adopted on 19 February, by a roll-call vote of 30 to 1, with 10 abstentions, the Commission condemned Israel for its failure to comply with United Nations resolutions on the Syrian Golan Heights. It called on Israel to rescind its 1981 decision<sup>(76)</sup> to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the territory which, the Commission said, resulted in its effective annexation and which it had declared null and void; it reaffirmed its request to United Nations Members not to recognize any such measures. The Commission strongly deplored the negative vote and pro-Israeli position of a Security Council permanent member which had prevented the Council from adopting measures against Israel under Chapter VII of the Charter. It deplored the inhuman treatment, terror and practices contrary to human rights that Israel continued to apply against Syrian citizens in the Golan Heights by reason of their refusing Israeli nationality, and called for an end to such practices. The Commission emphasized that Israel must allow the evacuees from among the Golan population to return and recover their property and residences, and firmly emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian and Syrian territories. (See also p. 313.)

Sub-Commission action. The Sub-Commission, by a resolution<sup>(77)</sup> adopted on 29 August by a roll-call vote of 10 to 1, with 6 abstentions, strongly reaffirmed that the perpetuation of Israeli occupation of the Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, could only be a source of increasing violations of the human rights of the population and of increasing tension. It reiterated that the inalienable rights of the Palestinians included their right to self-determination, to return to their homes and property, and to establish a sovereign State of Palestine. It reaffirmed that their future could only be decided with their full participation and through PLO. It affirmed its support for the Geneva Declaration on Palestine adopted in 1983 by the International Conference on the Question of Palestine<sup>(78)</sup> and welcomed the call for an international peace conference on the Middle East under United Nations auspices and with the participation of all parties. It affirmed that Palestinian and other freedom fighters detained by Israel were entitled to the status of prisoners of war and that the Palestinian and other civilians arbitrarily detained by Israel should be released immediately. It strongly reaffirmed that the fourth Geneva Convention was fully applicable to the occupied territories, and expressed deep concern at the consequences of Israel's refusal to apply the Convention. The Secretary-General was requested to supply the Sub-Commission in 1986 with a list of latest reports, studies, documents, statistics and United Nations decisions on the occupied territories, including Lebanon. The Sub-Commission also recommended to the Commission adoption of a resolution strongly condemning Israeli policies and terrorist actions against the inhabitants of the territories, and calling on it to withdraw in order to restore the Palestinians' national rights.

Mass exoduses

Welcoming the steps taken by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons, the Commission on Human Rights, by a 13 March resolution,<sup>(79)</sup> invited Governments and international organizations to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the problem. It welcomed the designation by the Secretary-General of special representatives on humanitarian issues, reiterating its request to him that he follow closely developments on the issue, and encouraged his efforts to establish an early warning system to anticipate and react more adequately and speedily to cases requiring humanitarian assistance, as mentioned in his 1984 report<sup>(80)</sup> on the work of the Organization. The Commission asked its Sub-Commission to keep in mind the need to consider the relationship between human rights violations and mass exoduses and to make recommendations. It recommended that special rapporteurs and special representatives studying human rights violations pay attention to the problems resulting in mass exoduses.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/149, without vote.

Human rights and mass exoduses

The General Assembly,

Mindful of its general humanitarian mandate under the Charter of the United Nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Deeply disturbed by the continuing scale and magnitude of exoduses of refugees and displacements of population in many regions of the world and by the suffering of millions of refugees and displaced persons,

Conscious of the fact that human rights violations are among the multiple and complex factors causing mass exoduses of refugees, as indicated in the study of the Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights on this subject,

Considering the efforts which have been made to address this subject within the United Nations, in particular by the Commission on Human Rights,

Aware of the recommendations concerning mass exoduses made by the Commission on Human Rights to its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities and to the special rapporteurs for their study of the violations of human rights in any part of the world,

Deeply preoccupied by the increasingly heavy burden being imposed upon the international community as a whole, particularly upon developing countries with limited resources of their own, by these sudden mass exoduses and displacements of population,

Stressing the need to improve international co-operation aimed at the prevention of new massive flows of refugees in parallel with the provision of adequate solutions to actual refugee situations,

Taking note of the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees,

Taking note once again of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and mass exoduses,

Recalling its resolutions 35/196 of 15 December 1980, 37/186 of 17 December 1982, 38/103 of 16 December 1983 and 39/117 of 14 December 1984 and Commission on Human Rights resolutions 30(XXXVI) of 11 March 1980, 29(XXXVII) of 11 March 1981, 1982/32 of 11 March 1982, 1983/35 of 8 March 1983 and 1985/40 of 13 March 1985,

1. Welcomes the steps taken so far by the United Nations to examine the problem of massive outflows of refugees and displaced persons in all its aspects, including its root causes;

2. Invites Governments and international organizations to intensify their co-operation and assistance in world-wide efforts to address the serious problem of mass exoduses of refugees and displaced persons;

3. Welcomes the special interest which the Secretary-General has taken in this question, and reiterates its request to him to follow closely developments in the field of human rights and mass exoduses;

4. Encourages the Secretary-General in his efforts to enable the United Nations to anticipate and react more adequately and speedily to cases requiring humanitarian assistance, as mentioned in the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session;

5. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to keep the question of human rights and mass exoduses under review with the objective of making appropriate recommendations concerning the further measures to be taken in this field;

6. Decides to review the question of human rights and mass exoduses at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/149

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) without vote, 6 December (meeting 711; 11-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.86), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, Colombia, Costa Rica, Germany, Federal Republic of, Japan, Jordan, Pakistan, Rwanda, Sudan.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 61-63, 65-67, 69, 71; plenary 116.

By resolution 40/166, the General Assembly, having examined a report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, extended the Group's mandate in order that it might conclude its comprehensive review of the problem.

Genocide

Report of the Special Rapporteur. Special Rapporteur Ben Charles George Whitaker (United Kingdom) appointed in 1983<sup>(81)</sup> to prepare a study on the question of the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide, presented to the Sub-Commission in July 1985 a report<sup>(82)</sup> revising and updating his preliminary report submitted in 1984.<sup>(83)</sup>

In response to a questionnaire sent by him in 1984 to obtain information for his report, 24 States had replied as at 20 May 1985; in addition, five specialized agencies, one intergovernmental regional organization and 16 NGOs had submitted information.

After a historical survey and a brief outline of the concept of genocide, the report discussed future options for preventing it, among them an early warning system, possibly through an international body. The report also analysed the 1948 Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide<sup>(11)</sup> and reproduced the 1968 Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity<sup>(27)</sup> and the 1984 Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.<sup>(84)</sup>

Sub-Commission action. By a resolution<sup>(85)</sup> adopted on 29 August 1985 by 14 votes to 1, with 4 abstentions, the Sub-Commission took note of the updated and revised study. It recommended that the United Nations renew its efforts to make universal the ratification of the 1948 Convention on genocide.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/142, without vote.

Status of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 260 A (III) of 9 December 1948, by which it approved and proposed for signature and ratification or accession the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide,

Mindful of the fact that the year 1986 marks the thirty-fifth anniversary of the entry into force of the Convention,

Reaffirming its conviction that genocide is a crime under international law, contrary to the spirit and aims of the United Nations,

Expressing its conviction that implementation of the provisions of the Convention by all States is necessary for the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide,

Bearing in mind that the fortieth anniversary of the victory over nazism and fascism in the Second World War is being commemorated in 1985,

1. Once again strongly condemns the crime of genocide;
2. Reaffirms the necessity of international co-operation in order to liberate mankind from such an odious scourge;
3. Takes note with appreciation of the fact that many States have ratified the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide or have acceded thereto;
4. Urges those States that have not yet become parties to the Convention to ratify it or accede thereto without further delay;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the status of the Convention;

6. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to consider at its forty-second session the question of promoting the full implementation of the Convention and to submit its observations and proposals thereon, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Other human rights questions

Rights of the child

Draft convention

Working group activities. As authorized by the Economic and Social Council in 1984<sup>(1)</sup> an open-ended working group to continue drafting a convention on the rights of the child met between 28 January and 1 February and on 8 March 1985.

The group adopted articles 12 bis, 14, 15, 16 and 17, concerning, respectively: health care for children; the right to an adequate standard of living; the right to education; directing education to the development of the child's personality, talents and abilities; and the right to recreation and leisure and to participate in cultural life. There was a preliminary discussion of article 18 concerning children's employment. The text of these articles, together with those previously adopted, were annexed to the Group's report<sup>(2)</sup>. Also annexed were proposed draft articles and amendments which the group could not discuss for lack of time.

Human Rights Commission action. On 14 March,<sup>(3)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights decided to continue in 1986 its work on a draft convention with a view to completing it. The Commission requested the Economic and Social Council to authorize a one-week session of an open-ended working group prior to the Commission's 1986 session, and proposed the text of a draft resolution to that effect.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 30 May 1985, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/42, without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/135 of 14 December 1984, by which the Assembly requested the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to and to make every effort at its forty-first session to complete the draft convention on the rights of the child and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its fortieth session,

Considering that it was not found possible to complete the work on the draft convention during the forty-first session of the Commission on Human Rights,

Taking note of Commission on Human Rights resolution 1985/50 of 14 March 1985,

1. Authorizes a meeting of an open-ended working group for a period of one week prior to the forty-second session of the Commission on Human Rights, with a view to completing the work on the draft convention on the rights of the child at that session;

2. Request the Secretary-General to extend all facilities to the working group for its meeting prior to and during the forty-second session of the Commission to enable it to fulfil its task successfully, and notes the usefulness of providing the working group, in advance of its session, with such working documents as a compilation of all amendments and new proposals, and relevant provisions of other international instruments.

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/95 & Cord) without vote, 24 May (meeting 151: draft by Commission on Human Rights (E/1985/22): agenda item 16.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Poland submitted to the Third Committee in October a document<sup>(4)</sup> on the status of the elaboration of the draft convention on the rights of the child. The initiator of the proposal for such a convention in 1978,<sup>(5)</sup> Poland outlined progress in its elaboration, and transmitted the text approved by the Commission's working group; it included modified proposals on the remaining articles, meant to offer, Poland said, a constructive stimulus towards completion of the work.

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/113, without vote.

Question of a convention on the rights of the child

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/166 of 20 December 1978, 34/4 of 18 October 1979, 35/131 of 11 December 1980,

36/57 of 25 November 1981, 37/190 of 18 December 1982, 38/114 of 16 December 1983 and 39/135 of 14 December 1984,

Recalling also Commission on Human Rights resolutions 20(XXXIV) of 8 March 1978, 19(XXXV) of 14 March 1979, 36(XXXVI) of 12 March 1980, 26(XXXVII) of 10 March 1981, 1982/39 of 11 March 1982, 1983/52 of 10 March 1983, 1984/24 of 8 March 1984 and 1985/50 of 14 March 1985, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1978/18 of 5 May 1978, 1978/40 of 1 August 1978, 1982/37 of 7 May 1982, 1983/39 of 27 May 1983, 1984/25 of 24 May 1984 and 1985/42 of 30 May 1985 and Council decisions 1980/138 of 2 May 1980 and 1981/144 of 8 May 1981,

Reaffirming, on the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, that children's rights require special protection and call for continuous improvement of the situation of children all over the world, as well as their development and education in conditions of peace and security,

Profoundly concerned that the situation of children in many parts of the world remains critical as a result of unsatisfactory social conditions, natural disasters, armed conflicts, exploitation, hunger and disability, and convinced that urgent and effective national and international action is called for,

Mindful of the important role of the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations in promoting the well-being of children and their development,

Convinced that an international convention on the rights of the child would make a positive contribution to ensuring the protection of children's rights and their well-being,

Welcoming the growing interest in the elaboration of an international convention on the rights of the child displayed by a great number of Member States representing all geographical regions and socio-political systems, as well as by governmental and non-governmental international organizations,

Noting with appreciation that further progress was made during the forty-first session of the Commission on Human Rights in the elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child,

Noting the document entitled "Status of elaboration of a draft convention on the rights of the child", submitted by Poland,

1. Welcomes Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/42, in which the Council authorized a meeting of an open-ended working group of the Commission on Human Rights for a period of one week prior to the forty-second session of the Commission with a view to completing the work on a draft convention on the rights of the child;

2. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to give the highest priority to, and to make every effort at its forty-second session to complete, the draft convention and to submit it, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

3. Invites all Member States to offer their active contribution to the completion of the draft convention on the rights of the child at the forty-second session of the Commission on Human Rights;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide all necessary assistance to the working group in order to ensure its smooth and efficient work in the fulfilment of its important task;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Question of a convention on the rights of the child".

Sale of children and child labour

The Working Group on Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities at its July/August 1985 session (see p. 871), also considered the issue of the sale of children for prostitution, begging or hard labour, and the exploitation of child labour. To combat those problems, it recommended in its report<sup>(6)</sup> that in all societies appropriate employment legislation be adopted, education be made available at the place of work, a legal minimum wage for children be introduced, and all United Nations agencies, development banks and intergovernmental bodies involved in development projects ensure that no children under 14 years of age were employed.

The Sub-Commission, on 29 August,<sup>(7)</sup> recommended to the Commission adoption of a draft resolution designed to help protect children from exploitation and abusive labour, including sexual exploitation.

Under the programme of advisory services in human rights (see p. 893), the Secretary-General organized, in co-operation with ILO, a Seminar on Ways to Eliminate the Exploitation of Child Labour in All Parts of the World (Geneva, 28 October-8 November). The holding of such a seminar had been requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,<sup>(8)</sup> on a recommendation by the Commission on Human Rights which took up a recommendation of its Special Rapporteur on the subject.

Youth and human rights

On 11 March 1985, the Commission on Human Rights adopted two resolutions related to youth and their enjoyment of human rights. By the first,<sup>(9)</sup> it reaffirmed the role of youth in promoting full enjoyment of human rights, and appealed to Governments to consider measures to ensure that young people had equal opportunities to participate in the economic, social, cultural, civil and political life of society, as well as in promoting human rights, international peace, co-operation, understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations. It requested the Sub-Commission to pay due attention to the role of youth in the human rights field, particularly in achieving the objectives of International Youth Year (1985) (see p. 978), and requested the Secretary-General, in consultation with specialized agencies, to give special emphasis in 1985 to educational material and programmes for youth as key elements in the United Nations activities for the promotion of human rights.

By the second resolution,<sup>(10)</sup> the Commission called on States, governmental and non-governmental organizations, and United Nations organs and agencies to devote constant attention to the exercise and use by young people of all human rights, including the right to education and vocational training and the right to work, with a view to ensuring full employment and solving the problem of unemployment among them. The Commission called for legislative, administrative and other action by States for the exercise by youth of all human rights, to create conditions for their active participation in their country's economic and social development. It requested the Secretary-General, in his report reviewing measures and activities for the Year, to give attention to implementation of all its aspects.

On 29 August,<sup>(11)</sup> the Sub-Commission requested Dumitru Mazilu (Romania) to prepare a report on human rights and youth, analysing efforts for securing the enjoyment by youth particularly of the right to life, education and work. It requested the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance and decided to deal with the question at its 1986 session.

The Economic and Social Council, by resolution 1985/27, called on all States, governmental and non-governmental organizations and interested United Nations bodies and agencies to continue to give priority to formulating and implementing measures to secure the exercise by youth of the rights to life, education and work in conditions of peace.

By resolution 40/15, the General Assembly asked the Commission for Social Development, when examining youth issues, and national co-ordination and policy- and programme-implementing organs to give adequate attention and priority to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work.

Human rights of disabled persons

In June 1985, Special Rapporteur Leandro Despoy (Argentina) submitted a preliminary report<sup>(12)</sup> on human rights and disability, in accordance with a 1984 Sub-Commission mandate.<sup>(13)</sup> As at 15 June 1985, he had received, in response to requests for information on discrimination against disabled persons and on care and abuses, replies from 20 Member States, 12 United Nations bodies and agencies, one intergovernmental organization and five NGOs.

After discussing various definitions of disability that would have to be taken into account, the Special Rapporteur briefly described the objectives of the study and causes of disability, human rights violations and discrimination against disabled persons, economic, social and cultural rights in relation to disability, and problems related to disabled persons' rights in the context of the International Covenants on Human Rights.

He stated that discrimination to which disabled persons were subjected not only violated their human rights but in most cases also aggravated their disability. The United Nations must pay particular attention to human rights violations causing disability, such as military conflicts, torture, cruel and inhuman treatment and others. Penalties, whether based on internal law or religion, disabling an individual should be regarded as contrary to international law. In addition to control mechanisms that needed to be implemented, the best way to mitigate the effects of the current situation was to ensure the participation of disabled persons in all fields of social life.

The Special Rapporteur recommended that the rights of the disabled and the obligations of Governments and of the national and international community towards them should be specified. When reporting on implementation of the international human rights instruments, Governments should also provide information on respect for disabled persons' rights, on progress in their education, vocational training and rehabilitation and on their integration. The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination also should examine discrimination against disabled persons, within the framework of apartheid in particular.

The Sub-Commission, on 29 August 1985,<sup>(14)</sup> requested the Special Rapporteur to continue his work and submit a progress report in 1987. The Secretary-General was requested to provide him with all possible assistance.

Human rights of the individual and international law

Work continued in 1985 on a study of the status of the individual and contemporary international law, mandated by the Commission on Human Rights in 1981 and authorized by the Economic and Social Council the same year.<sup>(15)</sup>

Because she had recently received additional important replies and documentation which she felt should be taken into account in preparing the final report, Special Rapporteur Erica-Irene A. Daes (Greece) asked to be allowed to submit the report in 1986. By a resolution<sup>(16)</sup> of 30 August, the Sub-Commission expressed appreciation to her for the work thus far, and requested her to continue working on the study with a view to submitting a final report in 1986. The Secretary-General was requested to give her the assistance needed.

Human rights and science and technology

On 11 March 1985,<sup>(17)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights requested the Sub-Commission to reconsider the studies it had suggested in 1984,<sup>(18)</sup> one on current dimensions and problems arising from unlawful human experimentation, and another on the implications for human rights of recent advances in computer and microcomputer technology, with a view to integrating them in the work already being undertaken in the Commission and Sub-Commission under the agenda item on human rights and scientific and technological developments.

The Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly in 1985 the additional replies<sup>(19)</sup> he had received from the Dominican Republic, Guyana, Solomon Islands and Venezuela, as well as four specialized agencies in response to a 1980 request,<sup>(20)</sup> and subsequent reminders, for information on implementation of the 1975 Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December 1985, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/112, by recorded vote.

Human rights and scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Noting that scientific and technological progress is one of the important factors in the development of human society,

Recalling that the year 1985 marks the tenth anniversary of the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 3384(XXX) of 10 November 1975,

Considering that implementation of the Declaration will contribute to the strengthening of international peace and the security of peoples and to their economic and social development, as well as to international co-operation in the field of human rights,

Bearing in mind the relevant provisions of the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Seriously concerned that the results of scientific and technological progress could be used for the arms race to the detriment of international peace and security and social progress, human rights and fundamental freedoms and the dignity of the human person,

Convinced that in the era of modern scientific and technological progress the resources of mankind and the activities of scientists should be used for the peaceful economic, social and cultural development of countries and for improvement of the living standards of all people,

Recognizing that the establishment of the new international economic order calls in particular for an important contribution to be made by science and technology to economic and social progress,

Bearing in mind that the exchange and transfer of scientific and technological knowledge is one of the important ways to accelerate the social and economic development of the developing countries,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on human rights and scientific and technological developments,

1. Stresses the importance of the implementation by all States of the provisions and principles contained in the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind in order to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms;

2. Calls upon all States to make every effort to use the achievements of science and technology in order to promote peaceful social, economic and cultural development and progress;

3. Requests the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to take into account in their programmes and activities the provisions of the Declaration;

4. Invites those Member States, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system that have not yet done so to submit their information pursuant to General Assembly resolution 35/130 A of 11 December 1980;

5. Requests the Commission on Human Rights to continue to give special attention, in its consideration of the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments", to the question of the implementation of the provisions of the Declaration;

6. Invites the Commission on Human Rights to take appropriate measures to assist the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in preparing the study requested by the Commission in its resolutions 1982/4 of 19 February 1982 and 1984/29 of 12 March 1984;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

Japan voiced reservations on the same paragraph, saying it had abstained on the 1982<sup>(22)</sup> and 1984<sup>(18)</sup> Commission resolutions mentioned.

Hazardous technologies

Stating that inadequate information and the absence of uniform protection and safety measures with regard to the potential dangers of hazardous technologies resulted in a grave threat to the right to health and to life, and noting with concern industrial accidents involving very large loss of lives, particularly in developing countries where potentially harmful and hazardous products banned or restricted in other countries continued to be used, the Sub-Commission, on 28 August 1985,<sup>(23)</sup> requested that all TNCs and enterprises disclose the information at their disposal regarding the hazards to human lives of their processes, products and technologies to Governments, employees, consumers and the general public. It requested the Secretary-General to communicate its resolution to all Governments so that they could obtain relevant information from enterprises under their jurisdiction for transmittal to the Secretary-General, who would then pass it on to the Sub-Commission in 1987.

Computerized personal files

In June 1985, Special Rapporteur Louis Joinet (France) submitted to the Sub-Commission revised draft guidelines for the regulation of computerized personal data files. They were annexed to a report<sup>(24)</sup> analysing comments from States and international organizations on provisional draft guidelines, which had been transmitted to them in accordance with a 1984 Sub-Commission request.<sup>(25)</sup>

From those comments, he said, a consensus emerged on the desirability of encouraging the formulation of guidelines, both for States wishing to adopt domestic legislation and for international organizations and agencies in respect of the status of their own personal data files. Suggestions he deemed worthy of particular attention included the following.

There should be a balance in any legislation between the protection of privacy, the principle of free movement of ideas and opinions, and the authorities' need for information to carry out their tasks. Specific characteristics of different legal systems should be taken into account, as should cultural differences. The possibility of supplementing the general principle by "sectoral" rules should be left open. In the case of personnel files, it was proposed that ILO draw up guidelines. In order to supervise observance of the principles, a specialized and independent body should be set up.

Comments were also made concerning proposed amendments to different principles, the application of the principles and the power to make exceptions.

The question of files kept by international organizations had been discussed at the March 1985 session of the Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ).<sup>(26)</sup> The guidelines submitted to the agencies concerning those files were considered, in general, acceptable; opinions were divided, however, on the advisability of a supervisory body. The outcome of CCAQ's discussions was that it should be left to the governing bodies of each organization to decide how they were to be applied. In its reply to the Special Rapporteur, ILO, however, favoured a specific supervisory body, at least in respect of internal personnel files, the matter being left open with regard to external files (for example, UNHCR files on refugees, the United Nations Centre for Human Rights files on disappearances). In some replies, it was suggested that the supervisory body should report periodically to the Commission on Human Rights.

The Sub-Commission on 29 August<sup>(27)</sup> requested the Secretary-General to continue to obtain Governments' comments and suggestions on the revised draft guidelines, and to assist the Special Rapporteur to submit his final report in 1987.

Human rights and peace

Sub-Commission action. In June 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the Sub-Commission the guide,<sup>(28)</sup> requested in 1984,<sup>(29)</sup> to conventions, resolutions and reports of the United Nations concerning the adverse consequences of the arms race, particularly the nuclear-arms race, for the realization of human rights, and a progress report<sup>(30)</sup> on the relationship between human rights violations and international peace.

By a resolution<sup>(31)</sup> adopted on 27 August 1985 by 19 votes to none, with 3 abstentions, the Sub-Commission requested the Secretary-General to provide it in 1987 with a report on the interrelationship between human rights and international peace in all its aspects and dimensions, including the adverse impact of escalating military expenditure, particularly of nuclear-weapon States, on the international social and economic situation and the right to development. In particular, the report was to examine the adverse consequences of the extension and dissemination of nuclear arms in non-nuclear regions for international peace and security, the social and economic development of the countries of the region, and the enjoyment of human rights. The Sub-Commission recommended that the Commission include in its 1987 agenda an item on the adverse consequences of the arms race, especially the dissemination of nuclear arms in non-nuclear regions, for international peace and security and for the protection of human rights.

By another resolution(32) adopted on the same day by 16 votes to 5, with 1 abstention, the Sub-Commission recognized that maintenance of international peace and security was an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights, above all the right to life, and that violation of basic rights might threaten international peace and security. It stressed the importance of its contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security and the achievement of the objectives of the International Year of Peace (1986) (see p. 122). It requested the Secretary-General, in the light of comments of Member States, United Nations organizations and NGOs, to report in 1986 on that contribution, and decided to continue considering the contribution as a sub-item of the agenda item on international peace and security as an essential condition for the enjoyment of human rights, above all the right to life.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 40/111, by recorded vote.

Human rights and use of scientific and technological developments

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the determination of the peoples of the United Nations to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, to reaffirm faith in the dignity and worth of the human person, to maintain international peace and security and to develop friendly relations among peoples and international co-operation in promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling also the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States and the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order,

Recalling further the Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, the Declaration on the Use of Scientific and Technological Progress in the Interests of Peace and for the Benefit of Mankind, the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace, the Declaration on the Prevention of Nuclear Catastrophe and the Declaration on the Right of Peoples to Peace, as well as General Assembly resolutions 36/92 I of 9 December 1981, on the non-use of nuclear weapons and prevention of nuclear war, and 37/100 C of 13 December 1982 and 38/73 G of 15 December 1983, on a convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons,

Bearing in mind that, in its resolution 38/75 of 15 December 1983, the General Assembly resolutely, unconditionally and for all time condemned nuclear war as being contrary to human conscience and reason, as the most monstrous crime against peoples and as a violation of the foremost human right—the right to life,

Recalling its appeal for the conclusion of an international convention on the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons with the participation of all the nuclear-weapon States,

Recalling with appreciation Commission on Human Rights resolutions 1982/7 of 19 February 1982, 1983/43 March February 1983 and 1984/28 of 12 March 1984.

Reaffirming the inherent right to life,

Profoundly concerned that international peace and security continue to be threatened by the arms race in all its aspects, particularly the nuclear arms race, as well as by violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the self-determination of peoples,

Aware that all the horrors of past wars and all other calamities that have befallen people would pale in comparison with what is inherent in the use of nuclear weapons capable of destroying civilization on Earth,

Noting the pressing need for urgent measures towards general and complete disarmament, particularly nuclear disarmament, for the sake of life on Earth,

Bearing in mind that, in accordance with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, any propaganda for war shall be prohibited by law,

Recalling the historic responsibility of the Governments of all countries of the world to remove the threat of war from the lives of people, to preserve civilization and to ensure that everyone enjoys his inherent right to life,

Recognizing that the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations—established at the conclusion of the Second World War, which had brought untold sorrow to mankind—should serve to promote the right to life,

Convinced that for no people in the world today is there a more important question than that of the preservation of peace and of ensuring the cardinal right of every human being, namely, the right to life,

1. Reaffirms that all peoples and all individuals have an inherent right to life and that the safeguarding of this cardinal right is an essential condition for the enjoyment of the entire range of economic, social and cultural, as well as civil and political, rights;

2. Stresses once again the urgent need for the international community to make every effort to strengthen peace, remove the growing threat of war, particularly nuclear war, halt the arms race and achieve general and complete disarmament under effective international control and prevent violations of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations regarding the sovereignty and territorial integrity of States and the self-determination of peoples, thus contributing to ensuring the right to life;

3. Stresses further the foremost importance of the implementation of practical measures of disarmament for releasing substantial additional resources, which should be utilized for social and economic development, particularly for the benefit of the developing countries;

4. Calls upon all States to do their utmost to assist in ensuring the right to life through the adoption of appropriate measures at both the national and the international level;

5. Calls upon all States, appropriate organs of the United Nations, specialized agencies and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned to take the necessary measures to ensure that the results of scientific and technological progress are used exclusively in the interests of international peace, for the benefit of mankind and for promoting and encouraging universal respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms;

6. Again calls upon all States that have not yet done so to take effective measures with a view to prohibiting any propaganda for war, in particular the formulation, propounding and dissemination of propaganda for doctrines and concepts aimed at unleashing nuclear war;

7. Looks forward to further efforts by the Commission on Human Rights with a view to ensuring the inherent right of all peoples and all individuals to life;

8. Decides to consider this question at its forty-first session under the item entitled "Human rights and scientific and technological developments".

General Assembly resolution 40/111

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 127-9-16 (recorded vote)

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/969) by recorded vote (109-6-19), 2 December (meeting 60): 27-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.65): agenda item 102.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 47, 48, 50-53 58, 60; plenary 116.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of Italy, Netherlands, Portugal, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Chile, Denmark, Dominica, Finland, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Turkey.

The Netherlands said the text went beyond the agenda item under which it had been submitted and beyond the Third Committee's competence, a view shared by Canada, France, Japan and the United Kingdom. Japan added that the text had nothing to do with the question of human rights under the current agenda item. Canada and France considered certain formulations in the preamble unacceptable. The United Kingdom found the text similar to previously adopted resolutions which it had opposed. Canada added that, in paragraph 1, the right to life was attributed not only to individuals but also to peoples; to dilute the most fundamental individual right in that manner was unacceptable. Paragraphs 3 and 6 dealt with questions of disarmament which were being examined in other United Nations bodies.'

Speaking for the Nordic countries, Norway said that, although they supported all proposals which could help to stop the arms race, they were of the opinion that those topics should be dealt with by the competent bodies. They had reservations on paragraph 6 similar to those they had on article 20 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights<sup>(33)</sup> on the same subject. They also had reservations on the fourth preambular paragraph which referred to Assembly resolutions they had not been able to support.

Non-interference in States' internal affairs

On 13 December 1985, by decision 40/426, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, decided without vote to defer until its 1986 session consideration of a draft resolution on the inadmissibility of exploitation or distortion of human rights issues for interference in the internal affairs of States, as well as amendments to the text. The draft resolution<sup>(34)</sup> was sponsored by Angola, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the Syrian Arab Republic, the Ukrainian SSR and Viet Nam. The text would have had the Assembly reaffirm the duty of and call on States to refrain from the activities referred to in its title, invite Governments to communicate their views on measures to prevent such activities, and ask for a report in 1986. It would also have condemned campaigns and propaganda by South Africa and Israel to prolong their occupation and oppression and interfere in neighbouring States' internal affairs. Extensive amendments to it were proposed by Pakistan,<sup>(35)</sup> intended, it said, to broaden the scope of the draft and accentuate the priority to be accorded to mass and flagrant violations of human rights.

The proposal to postpone, orally introduced by the Ukrainian SSR, was approved by the Third Committee on 6 December without vote.

Chapter XIX

Women

In July 1985, the end of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) was marked by a World Conference at Nairobi, Kenya. Following a review of the activities of the previous 10 years in implementing the World Plan of Action and the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the Women's Decade, the deliberations of the Conference culminated in the adoption of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women—a set of measures to overcome the obstacles to the Decade's goals and objectives of equality, development and peace during the remainder of the century. In December, the General Assembly endorsed the Forward-looking Strategies and affirmed that their implementation should result in eliminating inequality between women and men and in integrating women into the development process (resolution 40/108). The Assembly also expressed its appreciation to the Government and people of Kenya for hosting the World Conference (40/107).

The Commission on the Status of Women held its third session as the preparatory body for the Conference (Vienna, 4-13 March), made recommendations on preparations and considered the rules of procedure and other organizational aspects of the Conference. Pursuant to a decision by the Assembly at its resumed session in April (decision 39/459), the Commission met again in New York from 19 April to 7 May to complete its work. In May, the Economic and Social Council authorized its Bureau to assist delegations to resolve outstanding issues relating to the Conference's rules of procedure (1985/158) and, on 20 June, transmitted to the Conference its recommendations on two outstanding rules (1985/164).

A major document before the Conference was the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development, which gave an overview of the interrelations between key developmental issues concerning the role of women in relation to agriculture, industry, money and finance, science and technology, trade, energy, and self-reliance and the integration of women in development. Having taken note of the Survey, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to update it on a regular basis, with the first update to be submitted to the Assembly in 1989 (resolution 40/204). With regard to women in rural areas, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report on their current status and perspectives for improving their situation and submit it to its 1989 session (40/106). A report by the Secretary-General reviewing the situation of women and development in the medium-term plans of United Nations organizations was submitted to the Economic and Social Council in May 1985. The Council requested the Secretary-General to formulate a system-wide medium-term plan on women and development, taking into account the recommendations of the Nairobi Conference, and requested the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) to undertake in 1989 a cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA) of activities and resources for the advancement of women (resolution 1985/46).

In 1985, the United Nations Development Fund for Women, formerly the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, became a separate entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). It continued to assist grass-roots initiatives, particularly those of women's and community groups at local levels and, by December 1985, had funded 473 projects valued at more than $30 million. Governments were urged by the Assembly to increase their contributions to the Fund (resolution 40/104).

The International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women (INSTRAW) continued to undertake research and establish training programmes for the integration and mobilization of women in development. Its Board of Trustees held its fifth session at Havana, Cuba, from 28 January to 1 February. In May, the Economic and Social Council appealed to Governments and other potential donors to contribute to the INSTRAW Trust Fund in view of the increasing importance of research and training for women's participation in the development process (resolution 1985/45). The General Assembly reiterated in November the call for contributions and requested INSTRAW to strengthen its research and training activities, especially those in statistics, indicators and data relevant to women, and to emphasize innovative methodological approaches related to women and development in its programmes (resolution 40/38). In April, the Assembly endorsed INSTRAW's statute, as approved by the Economic and Social Council in 1984 (resolution 39/249).

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), at its fourth session (Vienna, 21 January-1 February), considered initial reports of live States parties on their implementation of the Convention. The Economic and Social Council in May (resolution 1985/18) and the General Assembly in December (resolution 40/39) emphasized the importance of the strictest compliance by States parties with their obligations under the Convention and urged them to submit their initial reports in accordance with the Convention.

In May, the Economic and Social Council urged all Governments participating in the 1985 World Conference on Women to incorporate into the Forward-looking Strategies aspects of the 1984 Mexico City Declaration on Population and Development and those recommendations of the 1984 World Population Plan of Action relating to the status and role of women in the context of population (resolution 1985/6).

In other action in December, the General Assembly: appealed to Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to recognize the importance of the role of women in society-as mothers, as participants in economic development and in public life (resolution 40/101); pledged its determination to encourage participation of women in the economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs of society and in the endeavour to promote international peace and co-operation (40/102); and invited the Economic and Social Council to consider the question of the suppression of traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others (40/103).

Topics related to this chapter. Operational activities for development: inter-agency co-operation. Regional economic and social activities: Africa-women in development in Africa. Food: food problems. Social and cultural development: domestic violence. Human settlements: women and human settlements. United Nations officials: status of women in the Secretariat; women's programme officers posts at regional commissions.

Conference on the Decade for Women

The World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, was held at Nairobi, Kenya, from 15 to 26 July. The Conference assessed progress made towards improving the situation of women during the Decade (1976-1985) which was proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1975-International Women's Year.<sup>(1)</sup> The Conference was preceded on 13 and 14 July by consultations, open to all Conference participants, on procedural and organizational matters, while activities in preparation for the Conference were organized earlier in 1985 throughout the United Nations system (see below).

Convened 10 years after the International Women's Year, the Nairobi meeting was the third international conference on the status of women sponsored by the United Nations. The first, the World Conference of the International Women's Year, met at Mexico City in 1975;<sup>(2)</sup> the second, the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women, was held at mid-Decade in 1980 at Copenhagen, Denmark.<sup>(3)</sup>

The Conference was attended by representatives of 157 States, as well as by representatives of the Secretariat, regional commissions, other United Nations organs and programmes and eight specialized agencies. Also represented were 17 intergovernmental organizations and a large number of NGOs. Four national liberation movements attended as or were represented by observers: the African National Congress of South Africa, the Palestine Liberation Organization, the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania and the South West Africa People's Organization. The United Nations Council for Namibia and the Special Committee against Apartheid were also represented.

At its first meeting, on 15 July, the Conference elected as its President Margaret Kenyatta (Kenya), and, at its second meeting, elected a Rapporteur-General and 30 Vice-Presidents. (For Conference participants and officers, see APPENDIX III.)

Addressing the Conference's inaugural ceremony, the United Nations Secretary-General said that the positive trends of the Decade were encouraging. However, efforts to ensure equality of women's rights with those of men must not flag. He was confident that the international community would respond to the challenges of the promotion of peace, the fostering of economic and social development and the universal observance of human rights, but stressed that, without the full partnership of women and men, goals would remain elusive.

The ceremony was also addressed by the President of Kenya, who stated that the success of the Conference would depend crucially on the will of Governments to implement its recommendations, but the onus remained on women to unite and take full advantage of the opportunities created.

On 26 July, the Conference adopted by consensus the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women. Following adoption of the Strategies, statements in explanation of vote on paragraphs or expressing reservations were made or submitted by Albania, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Chile, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Holy See, Ireland, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg (on behalf of the European Community, Portugal and Spain), Malaysia, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, the United States and Uruguay.

The Strategies comprised 372 paragraphs organized into live chapters. The introduction described the historical background of the Conference and analysed economic, social and political factors and trends expected to have a bearing on the advancement of women over the next 15 years. It stated that the measures proposed were designed for immediate action, with monitoring and evaluation every five years. Each country would have the option to set its own priorities, based on its own development policies and resource capacities. The mode of implementation would vary according to each country's political process and administrative capabilities.

The next three chapters approached the themes of the Decade—equality, development and peace—in terms of obstacles encountered in efforts to reach those objectives, basic strategies for overcoming the obstacles, and steps to be taken at the national level to put the strategies into effect. Measures for implementing the basic strategies for equality at the national level were recommended in the following areas: constitutional and legal steps; equality in social participation; and equality in political participation and decision-making. Specific measures with regard to development were recommended in the fields of: employment; health; education; food, water and agriculture; industry; trade and commercial services; science and technology; communications; housing, settlement, community development and transport; energy; environment; and social services. The chapter on strategies for peace made particular reference to women and children under apartheid, Palestinian women and children, and women in areas affected by armed conflicts, foreign intervention and threats to peace. National measures with regard to peace were recommended under the headings of women's participation in efforts for peace and education for peace.

The fourth chapter, which dealt with areas of special concern, addressed: the situation of women in areas affected by drought; urban poor women; elderly women; young women; abused women; destitute women; women victims of trafficking and involuntary prostitution; women deprived of traditional means of livelihood; women as sole supporters of families; physically and mentally disabled women; women in detention and subject to penal law; refugee and displaced women and children; migrant women; and minority and indigenous women.

The final chapter recommended measures of international and regional co-operation to advance the status of women in such areas as monitoring the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies; technical co-operation, training and advisory services; institutional co-ordination; research and policy analysis; participation of women in activities at the international and regional levels and in decision-making; and information dissemination.

In other action, the Conference adopted a resolution expressing its gratitude to the host country and deciding that the Conference's final documents would be known as "The Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women".

On 26 July, the Conference decided that the texts of 85 draft resolutions and a draft declaration on which it had not taken any action owing to lack of time would be reproduced in an annex to its report<sup>(4)</sup> and brought to the attention of the General Assembly for consideration and action as appropriate.

The role of women in development was the subject of the majority of the resolutions: women and development priorities; future perspectives and equal opportunities; principles and priorities of women in development<sup>(2)</sup>; Governments' responsibilities for the advancement of women; contribution to food security (2); women and industrialization; women, population and development; participation in restructuring international economic relations; women and new technologies; implementation and evaluation of the Decade's objectives; a programme to the year 2000; integration in development projects; strengthening women's machineries at all levels to ensure implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies; and establishment and support of national and regional bodies for women's development.

Several drafts dealt with women's contribution to peace: the role of women in preparing societies for life in peace; women and peace; increased participation in United Nations activities in peace, disarmament and arms limitation; contribution to realizing the right of people to peace; women's role in promoting peace and international co-operation for the removal of obstacles to peace and social progress; and disarmament, development and women.

Others considered the situation of women in areas of conflict: assistance to refugees from Afghanistan; women and children living in armed conflict zones; assistance to Sahrawi women; obstacles preventing women from realizing the aims of the Decade due to the Iraq-Iran conflict; obstacles preventing Syrian women in the occupied Golan Heights from realizing the aims of the Decade; Chadian women and children living in armed conflict areas; Palestinian women and children; global concerns for peace and the plight of women; Namibia; refugee and displaced women (2); apartheid, and front-line States.

A number of resolutions addressed questions of health: health and well-being (2); the health and well-being of women in the South Pacific; immunization; maternal mortality; collaboration with NGOs in health; improvement of the condition of physically and mentally disabled women; and improvement of the condition of those who have a person with a disability in their family.

The social advancement of women was dealt with in resolutions concerning: the right to education; women's role in society; education, training and job promotion; the family code; educational perspectives for the year 2000; improving conditions of work and life; international human rights; and improved conditions and opportunities. Environmental concerns were the focus of three resolutions: women and the environment; women and water; and drought and desertification in Africa.

Other resolutions concerned: assistance from NGOs to women and children, particularly in drought-stricken countries; elimination of discrimination; the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women; the fortieth anniversary of the end of the Second World War; promotion of breast-feeding; women in island developing countries; the effects of the external debt of developing countries on women; commercial publicity harmful to dignity; classification in census documents; women and shelter; unemployment; genetic technology; sexual violence against women and children; domestic violence against women; Latin American and Caribbean women and the critical situation; a reporting system on the advancement of women; establishing a system of data and information networks; women and aging; participation of men in reaching the Decade's objectives; migrant women; indigenous women; improving the situation of women in rural areas; technical assistance for women in rural and marginal urban areas; international kidnapping of children; a world conference on women in the year 2000; strengthening the Commission on the Status of Women; the United Nations Development Fund for Women; INSTRAW; the International Centre for Public Enterprises in Developing Countries; and women in the United Nations; and strengthening co-ordination and implementation of activities for advancement within the United Nations system.

By the draft declaration on which no action was taken, the World Conference would have declared that the objectives of the Decade remained valid and would have called on States to implement them with a view to eradicating all forms of discrimination against women. States and international organizations would have been urged to adopt special measures to overcome developing countries' economic and social problems and the United Nations system would have been urged to give greater attention to developing countries, especially the least developed countries (LDCs), and mobilize resources to assist them in dealing with the crisis and its ramifications. The Conference would have appealed to States to channel relief and rehabilitation assistance to drought-affected African countries and called on States to continue integrating women fully in development processes, reaffirming that strengthening international peace, security and co-operation were the most important prerequisites for ensuring socioeconomic progress and equal rights for women. The Conference would have declared that only the total eradication of apartheid could lead to a just and lasting solution of the explosive situation in South Africa. It would have strongly condemned Israel for oppression and repression of the Palestinians and called on the international community to ensure their inalienable rights. Governments would have been urged to implement the Forward-looking Strategies, the United Nations system would have been called on to draw up programmes to implement them and the Secretary-General would have been asked to submit proposals to implement them. The Conference would have recommended that the 1985 General Assembly declare that the period to the year 2000 be dedicated to women for the advancement of the goals of equality, development and peace.

Basic documents submitted to the Conference included the report<sup>(5)</sup> of the Secretary-General on the review and appraisal of progress achieved and obstacles encountered at that level in the realization of the goals and objectives of the Decade. In addition to outlining key issues and constraints at the national level in improving the situation of women, the report summarized replies from 107 Governments to a United Nations questionnaire on general trends in equality, development and peace, the first part of which dealt with national development plans and policies, national machinery and programmes, legislation, political participation, international co-operation and strengthening international peace, and technical co-operation; the second part analysed development in sectoral areas.

Other documents included the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development<sup>(6)</sup> (see below, under "Women and development"), the Secretary-General's reports on the situation of women and children living in the occupied Arab territories and other occupied territories<sup>(7)</sup> (see below, under "Palestinian women"), on a review and appraisal of the situation of women and children living under racist minority regimes<sup>(8)</sup> (see below, under "Women under apartheid"), on a review and appraisal of progress achieved and obstacles encountered at the regional and international levels by the United Nations system in attaining the goals and objectives of the Decade for Women<sup>(9)</sup> (see below, under "Women in the UN Secretariat"), on recommendations of regional intergovernmental preparatory meetings,<sup>(10)</sup> on the activities and programmes of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on behalf of refugee women<sup>(11)</sup> (see below, under "Refugee women"), on NGO participation in the Decade,<sup>(12)</sup> as well as a report<sup>(13)</sup> of CEDAW on the achievements of and obstacles encountered by States parties in implementing the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women<sup>(14)</sup> (see below, under "Convention on Discrimination against Women").

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/108 without vote.

Implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3520(XXX) of 15 December 1975, in which it proclaimed the period from 1976 to 1985 the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Bearing in mind the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, which was adopted on 18 December 1979 and which came into force on 3 September 1981,

Recalling also the principles and objectives set forth in the Declaration of Mexico on the Equality of Women and their Contribution to Development and Peace, 1975, the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women,

Bearing in mind also its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969 proclaiming the Declaration on Social Progress and Development,

Bearing in mind further the consensus achieved in the text of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, in particular regarding the implementation of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women within the framework of the Strategy,

Recalling also its resolution 37/63 of 3 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation,

Recalling further its resolution 39/29 of 8 December 1984 on the critical economic situation in Africa,

24. Invites the Secretary-General to circulate the report of the Conference among Member States, all organizations of the United Nations system and specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in order to ensure that the Forward-looking Strategies are publicized and disseminated as widely as possible, and encourages Governments to translate the Strategies into their national languages;

Preparations for the Conference

The Commission on the Status of Women, as the preparatory body for the 1985 World Conference, met in Vienna from 4 to 13 March 1985 for its third session and in New York from 29 April to 7 May in a resumed session<sup>(15)</sup>

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council that the report<sup>(13)</sup> of CEDAW on the achievements of and obstacles encountered by States parties in implementing the 1979 Convention<sup>(14)</sup> be submitted to the Conference and that the Committee's Chairperson be invited to introduce that report.

It was also recommended that the Council authorize the Secretary-General to accept special contributions to assist representatives of LDCs, Trust Territories, land-locked countries and developing countries in the Caribbean to participate in the Conference. With regard to documentation, the Commission recommended that the Secretary-General's report<sup>(16)</sup> on participation of NGOs in the Decade be submitted to the Conference as a basic document and that a report<sup>(17)</sup> on women and apartheid in South Africa and Namibia, originally submitted to an African regional preparatory meeting, be submitted as a background document.

In other action, the Commission referred a note<sup>(18)</sup> by the Secretary-General-containing the draft provisional rules of procedure of the World Conference and three of his recommendations<sup>(19)</sup> on outstanding questions on organizational aspects and other activities related to the Conference-to the Economic and Social Council. It agreed that he would submit to the Conference, through the Council, a proposal<sup>(20)</sup> by the Group of 77 developing countries for the reformulation of the forward-looking strategies on which there was no consensus, with an explanatory note.

The Commission had before it for review the report of the Secretary-General on the forward-looking strategies and other of his reports which were subsequently submitted to the Conference. Following a General Assembly decision (see below), the Commission resumed its session on 19 April to consider the Conference's rules of procedure and organizational and other questions related to the Conference.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 12 April 1985, during its resumed thirtieth session, the General Assembly adopted decision 39/459 without vote.

Preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace

(b) Decided to request the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the preparatory body for the Conference to resume its third session in New York for a period of no more than seven days starting from 29 April 1985, in order to complete successfully its preparatory work for the Conference;

(c) Decided to request the Economic and Social Council to consider, with priority, during its first regular session of 1985, the results of the deliberations of the preparatory body.

General Assembly decision 39/459

Adopted without vote

Draft by Egypt (A/39/L.47); agenda item 93 (b).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Following consideration of the report of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as Preparatory Body for the Conference,<sup>(15)</sup> the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/158 without vote.

Preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace

At its 26th plenary meeting, on 31 May 1985, the Council, having examined the reports of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace on its third and resumed third sessions,

(a) Took note of the reports and expressed its appreciation for the work done by the Preparatory Body;

(b) Endorsed the recommendation contained in paragraph 1 of the report on the third session and recommendations I and II contained in paragraph 1 of the report on the resumed third session;

(c) Decided to invite Mrs. Rosario Manalo, Chairperson of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace at its third and resumed third sessions, to hold informal consultations in New York, prior to the Conference, with a view to facilitating, as far as possible, the deliberations at the Conference regarding the forward-looking strategies of implementation for the advancement of women and concrete measures to overcome obstacles to the achievement of the goals and objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development, Peace, for the period 1986 to the year 2000, and to make available the results of those consultations to the Conference, as appropriate;

(d) Authorized its Bureau to continue making every effort, through informal consultations, to assist delegations in resolving outstanding issues relating to the provisional rules of procedure for the Conference and to submit the results to the Council at a resumption of its first regular session of 1985, on 20 June 1985.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/158

Adopted without vote

Draft orally proposed by Vice-Resident based on informal consultations; agenda item 5.

On 20 June the Council adopted without vote decision 1985/164, by which it decided to transmit to the World Conference its recommendations concerning rules 6 and 15 of the provisional rules of procedure. By rule 6, the Conference would elect a President, one Vice-President for Co-ordination, 29 other Vice-Presidents, a Rapporteur-General and a Presiding Officer for each of the main committees. By rule 15, the Conference, at its first meeting, would elect its officers and constitute its subsidiary organs, adopt its rules of procedure and agenda, and decide on the organization of its work. Recommendations resulting from pre-Conference consultations would, in principle, be acted on without further discussion.

ACC action. An inter-agency meeting on preparations for the Conference (Vienna, 15 March)<sup>(21)</sup> recommended that the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) approve the holding of an inter-agency meeting immediately after the February/March 1986 session of the Commission on the Status of Women. The meeting should consider the Conference's recommendations and discuss future inter-agency co-operation as follow-up action to the Conference. The meeting also agreed that it would be worth while to hold informal consultations among representatives of the various parts of the United Nations system during the Conference to enhance co-ordination.

CCSQ(PROG) considered the meeting's report at a session held at Geneva from 1 to 4 April.<sup>(22)</sup> It endorsed the meeting's recommendations and agreed that a further such meeting should be held after the Conference to discuss inter-agency co-ordination. It was suggested that use be made of existing inter-agency mechanisms which were already considering the issue of women under their sectoral concerns, such as the Task Force on Rural Development with regard to rural women.

UNEP action. In his introductory report<sup>(23)</sup> to the thirteenth session of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) (Nairobi, Kenya, 14-24 May 1985),<sup>(24)</sup> the UNEP Executive Director stated that UNEP's contribution to the 1985 World Conference on women would take into account views expressed by the Governing Council on the role women should play in stimulating environmental protection. He would be addressing the Conference on that role. Several events would be organized by UNEP during the Conference.

In a 23 May decision,<sup>(25)</sup> the Governing Council, considering that a major burden of the environmental crisis in most developing countries fell on women and that an improvement in their status would bring added emphasis to the environmental cause, endorsed the Executive Director's proposals concerning UNEP's role in the Conference.

Conference follow-up

CCSQ(PROG), at a meeting held in New York (10-16 October 1985),<sup>(26)</sup> heard an oral report by the Assistant Secretary-General for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs outlining the results of the World Conference. CCSQ(PROG) decided to consider at a subsequent session the implementation of the Conference's decisions based on decisions taken by the General Assembly at its 1985 session. It decided to approve the convening of an inter-agency meeting in March 1986 at Vienna, immediately after the session of the Commission on the Status of Women, to consider the follow-up activities to the Conference and discuss the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development.

In resolution 40/164 A, the Assembly urged the Department of Public Information to disseminate in its programmes and information activities the positive results of the Conference.

Women and development

The 1985 World Conference on the Decade for Women took note of the World Survey on the Role of Women in Development.<sup>(1)</sup> In accordance with a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> the Survey in its final form was also submitted to the 1985 Assembly session.

The Survey comprised eight parts, starting with an overview assessing the role of women in economic development, the benefits accruing to women from development and the effects on them of economic trends. A main generalization emerging from the Survey was that women's contribution to national production activities had increased steadily since 1950 and was projected to increase further to the year 2000. Their contribution to economic development was underestimated in national and international statistics. In agriculture, active women were sometimes counted as inactive and in industry were involved more often than men in the informal economy, so that neither their work nor their production was fully recorded.

Women were disproportionately active in services because employment in that area responded to supply pressures more than in other sectors of the economy and because household skills could be transferred to services sectors more readily than to industry.

The second main generalization was that women benefited on average less than men from their contribution to national production. In industry, women still belonged largely to the secondary labour force, taking jobs for which men were unavailable or which men were unwilling to take, resulting in lower average hourly wages. In addition, women were protected by social legislation less than men, even in countries with such legislation, and fixed and generally long working hours made it difficult for women's productive and domestic activities to be compatible. In agriculture, men tended to take higher paying jobs requiring technical skills, while women were generally confined to lower-paid manual labour. Also, in the sectors of services, science and technology financial institutions, insurance, real estate and business, positions held by women and the benefits accruing to them were lower than men's. Women seldom held decision-making positions in any of those sectors or in the institutions that determined national policies affecting them.

The next six parts dealt with women's roles in agriculture, industrial development, money and finance, science and technology, trade, and the development, use and conservation of energy resources. Finally, the concept of self-reliance and the integration of women into development was discussed.

Pursuant to the 1984 Assembly resolution<sup>(2)</sup> on the World Survey, the Secretary-General submitted to the 1985 session a note<sup>(3)</sup> summarizing comments made on the Survey at the World Conference. It had been widely felt among delegations that the three goals of the Decade—equality, development and peace—were strongly interrelated and that the integration of women into development would have been greatly accelerated by favourable international economic and political relations. Although there was a broad consensus that during the Decade, and partly as a result of it, there had been much progress, it was felt that much remained to be done to take advantage of women's potential.

By a 3 June letter,<sup>(4)</sup> India forwarded to the Secretary-General the report of the Ministerial Conference of Non-Aligned and Other Developing Countries on the Role of Women in Development (New Delhi, 10 and 11 April 1985) and requested that it be circulated to the General Assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/204.

Effective mobilization and integration of women in development

The General Assembly,

Taking note with appreciation of the world survey on the role of women in development,

Recognising that although the survey was submitted to the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, it has yet to receive the detailed attention it deserves,

Noting with satisfaction the adoption by the Conference of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which constitute an important and positive contribution to the attainment of the objectives of the Decade and provide a policy framework for the advancement of women to the year 2000,

1. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session to make specific action-oriented recommendations based on the world survey on the role of women in development as a part of the overall implementation of and follow-up to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, which should be for action at the national and international levels, including co-operation among developing countries, within an economic context, and should address sectoral and cross-sectoral problems identified in the survey, and requests that the report of the Commission be made available, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986, to the General Assembly at its forty-second session under the sub-item entitled "Effective mobilization and integration of women in economic development";

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take those recommendations into account when formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and to invite the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the International Training and Research Institute for the Advancement of Women, to take into account the implications of the world survey when preparing their contributions to that plan;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to update the survey on the role of women in development on a regular basis, focusing on selected emerging development issues that have an impact on the role of women in the economy at the local, national, regional and international levels;

4. Decides that the first update of the survey should be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, in 1989;

5. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session to make a recommendation on future updates of the survey after 1989, bearing in mind the need for effective co-ordination with the follow-up activities of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace;

6. Also invites the Commission on the Status of Women to suggest terms of reference for the first update of the survey, which should contain improved data and information on the role of women in development, including, inter alia, their role in the informal sector of the economy;

7. Urges the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to contribute to the preparation of the first update of the survey;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its forty-second session, a progress report on the preparation of the first regular update of the survey, including preliminary views on its scope and content, so that the Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-second session, can take that report into account, together with the comments on the subject made by delegations in the General Assembly;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to utilize the input provided by the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session and by the Economic and Social Council in 1988 for the preparation of the first update of the survey.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.9) without vote. 25 November (meeting 43); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.71), based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria, Australia, Bangladesh, Canada, Congo, Denmark, Finland, France, Gambia, Iceland, Jamaica, Kenya, Morocco, Netherlands, Niger, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Sweden (A/C.2/40/L.23/Rev.1); agenda item 84 (i). Financial implications. SG, A/C.2/40/L.42.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 24, 43; plenary 119.

By decision 40/442 of 17 December 1985, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note<sup>(3)</sup> on the World Survey. The decision was adopted without vote, as it had been in the Second Committee on 25 November, on an oral proposal by the Chairman.

During the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, several conclusions and recommendations were made by the Intergovernmental Group on LDCs of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) regarding the position of women in those countries (see p. 434). Those findings were endorsed by the General Assembly when it adopted resolution 40/205.

UNIDO action. At its May 1985 session, the Industrial Development Board (IDB) of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) (see Chapter VI of this section), adopted a conclusion on the integration of women in industrial development. The Board thereby stressed the need for further progress in designing training programmes to increase the managerial competence of women in industry and the need to encourage national and regional training institutions to conduct such programmes. It also stressed the need for guidelines to ensure that the integration of women would be considered in designing, implementing and evaluating technical co-operation activities and in the studies programme, and requested a secretariat report on action in that regard. The Board stressed the need for intensified efforts to recruit more women to Professional posts, particularly at the policy, planning and decision-making level, and the importance of the Focal Point for the Integration of Women in Industrial Development within the Office of the Director, Division of Policy Coordination, as a means of collecting, analysing and disseminating information on women's participation in different industrial sectors, both within and outside UNIDO. It noted with satisfaction the introduction in the proposed 1986-1987 budget of a programme element on integrating women in industrial development and expressed the hope that adequate staff and other resources would be made available.

During the second part of its first regular session (Vienna, 9-13 December 1985), the UNIDO General Conference adopted a decision<sup>(6)</sup> on the integration of women in industrial development. It took note of the Economic and Social Council recommendations on women and development (see below) and of the results of the World Conference as reflected in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies, which contained sections on industry and science and technology. It considered that, in implementing UNIDO's programme and budget for 1986-1987, account should be taken of the results of the World Conference as related to industrialization. The General Conference reaffirmed the content of its (1984) Fourth General Conference resolution<sup>(7)</sup> and IDB's 1985 conclusion on the subject, stressed UNIDO's essential role in both rural and urban areas in implementing the Nairobi Strategies as related to industrialization, and emphasized the importance of the UNIDO Focal Point in implementing the Strategies. The UNIDO Director-General was urged to ensure that: UNIDO pre-investment study programmes paid greater attention to the social, cultural and economic costs and benefits that investment projects had on the role of women in national economies; industrial research and study activities included socio-economic and human resource factors and paid greater attention to training, research and data collection; and headquarters and field staff were fully aware of and took into account the important role of women in industrial development. He was requested to implement United Nations decisions regarding employment of women in the United Nations system at all levels in the Professional categories.

UNDP action. By a March 1985 note,<sup>(8)</sup> the UNDP Administrator submitted a summary report of the interorganizational assessment of women's participation in development to the UNDP Governing Council (New York, 3-29 June 1985). The study, co-ordinated and prepared by UNDP, involved all United Nations organizations with a significant interest in promoting women's participation.

The report discussed the methodology of the assessment and went on to give the key findings and recommendations of country case-studies in Democratic Yemen, Haiti, Indonesia and Rwanda. It then addressed the quantitative framework of the assessment and its implications. Finally, the Administrator recommended that the Governing Council endorse a series of recommendations for action by Governments, United Nations organizations and NGOs.

In a report<sup>(9)</sup> to the Governing Council on women in development, prepared in response to a 1982 Council decision,<sup>(10)</sup> the Administrator stated that the apparent downward trend in women's participation in UNDP-supported projects in 1980 was reversed in 1981, and the level of participation in 1982 and 1983 remained well above that of earlier years. Women's participation increased in such key sectors as development planning, agriculture, health, employment, and social conditions and equity.

The report also contained information on the response by field offices to ad hoc programming assistance to further women's participation in development. It concluded that, with the possible exception of the African region, that type of assistance was not in high demand. Instead, continuation of a standing concern for women's participation in all aspects of project design and planning was needed, as well as increased staff training. Those points were also among the recommendations in the report on interorganizational assessment.

By a 28 June decision,<sup>(11)</sup> the Governing Council, having considered the Administrator's reports, urged Governments to give more priority to using special programming assistance offered by the United Nations development system. That system, Governments and NGOs were strongly urged to implement the recommendations in the Administrator's report on the interorganizational assessment. The Administrator was requested to develop, for presentation to the Council in 1986, an internal strategy to strengthen UNDP's capacity to deal with women's issues in development. Calling on the experience of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, verifiable objectives and a time-frame for implementation would be established. Special attention should also be given to improved staff training, monitoring existing guidelines, instructions and procedures for including the subject in programming missions and strengthening the focal point in UNDP headquarters for co-ordinating women's programmes.

By a 29 June decision<sup>(12)</sup> on the integration of issues relevant to women into promotional and operational activities for technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC), the Governing Council invited United Nations agencies and organizations to include reference to women in all promotional activities for TCDC and to elaborate and disseminate guidelines on incorporating issues relevant to advancement of women into TCDC programmes and projects. Developing countries were invited to elaborate proposals for such projects benefiting women. The Council reiterated the importance of networking and strengthening linkages between focal points for TCDC and women's organizations and professional organizations having experience with women's and development issues. It requested the Administrator to strengthen co-operation with organizations, such as INSTRAW, which were active in the area of women and development.

Women in rural areas

In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary General submitted to the 1985 Assembly a note<sup>(14)</sup> compiling observations and comments made at the 1985 World Conference on a report of the 1984 Interregional Seminar on National Experience relating to the Improvement of the Situation of Women in Rural Areas.<sup>(15)</sup> Several delegations had described the situation of rural women in their countries, reported on progress made during the Decade and outlined strategies and policies adopted to continue the advancement of rural women. Main obstacles cited were the lack of systematic and reliable information on rural women, particularly on the quantity and type of women's production, which could eventually lead to incorporating women's concerns in national and sectoral planning. Above all, emphasis was placed on the need to increase rural women's productivity in economic activities: agriculture, handicrafts and small-scale industrial production. Delegations proposed several policies to that end, of which training was among the most often mentioned.

Other requirements were granting women access to the resources and factors of production, selecting and providing appropriate technology to women farmers, and credit. Social development also had to be strengthened: emphasis was placed on maternal and child health care, family planning, literacy and adult education.

To spread awareness of the needs and priorities of rural women among planners and decision-makers and increase the effectiveness of self-help initiatives, many delegations acknowledged the need to strengthen women's national machineries, voluntary associations, co-operatives and the like.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/106 without vote.

National experience relating to the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming to the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, adopted by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Recalling its resolutions 34/14 of 9 November 1979, 37/59 of 3 December 1982 and 39/126 of 14 December 1984, concerning the improvement of the situation of women in rural areas,

Reaffirming the importance attached in the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women and in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women to the need to improve the status of women and ensure their full participation, both as agents and as beneficiaries, in the development process,

Recognizing the urgent need to take additional appropriate measures aimed at further improving the situation of women in rural areas,

Convinced that the eradication of apartheid, all forms of racial discrimination, colonialism, neo-colonialism, aggression, foreign occupation and domination is essential to the further improvement of the situation of rural women,

Considering that the strengthening of international peace and co-operation is one of the factors contributing to the further improvement of the situation of rural women,

1. Takes note of the report of the Interregional Seminar on National Experience Relating to the Improvement of the Situation of Women in Rural Areas, held at Vienna from 17 to 28 September 1984, as well as the compilation of observations and comments made by Member States;

2. Calls upon Governments to elaborate and implement, as a part of national development strategies, special comprehensive programmes for improving the situation of women in rural areas and to establish monitoring and evaluating mechanisms, involving women themselves, for these programmes;

3. Requests the organizations and funds concerned within the United Nations system to pay greater attention to the needs of rural women and to assist Member States, especially the developing countries, in the implementation of their national policies and programmes aimed at the advancement of rural women;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare, in consultation with the Member States, a comprehensive report on the present status and perspectives for the improvement of the situation of rural women, paying special attention, inter alia, to:

(a) Participation of rural women in socio-economic and political life;

(b) Questions of the exercise by rural women of their rights;

(c) Role of agricultural co-operatives in the improvement of the situation of women;

(d) Agrarian reform, particularly in favour of rural women, with a view to improving their situation;

(e) Elimination of illiteracy among rural women and upgrading of their educational level;

Assistance to rural women in the improvement of their situation.

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session through the Economic and Social Council.

General Assembly resolution 40/106

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1008, draft resolution VI) without vote, 27 November (meeting 56): 18- nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.34); agenda item 92.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cuba, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Ivory Coast, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Madagascar, Mongolia, Morocco, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Rwanda, Viet Nam.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 24-34.46.48, 55, 56; plenary 116.

France and the United States said that they would join in the consensus, although they had reservations about the fifth and sixth preambular paragraphs which omitted mention of other factors-for example, the denial of basic civil and political rights-or introduced notions which were in no way connected to rural women.

Co-ordination

In 1984, when approving its basic programme of work, the Economic and Social Council decided to review in 1985, on a cross-organizational basis, the question of women and development. In accordance with that decision, the Secretary-General submitted to the Economic and Social Council in April a report<sup>(16)</sup> reviewing selected major issues in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system in that area.

The report outlined the common policies of the system, how well it addressed the pertinent issues relating to women and how those policies could be better translated into programmes. It also attempted to see whether existing plans, taken together, constituted a coherent whole in their approaches to the problems. It was noted that the report's conclusions were somewhat tentative, since the July World Conference might call for changes in emphasis which could have important implications.

The report stated that the Council might wish to recommend priorities and approaches to be reflected in the system's planning documents for 1984-1989, particularly in relation to women's access to productive resources, income and employment, to participation in the decision-making process, and to the development of statistics and indicators. It could also recommend increased emphasis on the problems of poor urban women. Other recommendations might propose: that inter-agency consultations be held to formulate programmes within a system-wide framework; that CPC consider undertaking a COPA on the subject in 1988; that the medium-term plan of the United Nations, and those of the specialized agencies, should contain intersectoral presentations of the various programmes dealing with the issue; that ACC carry out joint thematic reviews on rural women and social indicators where inter-agency mechanisms were already in place, in order to define proposals for action to be incorporated into work programmes and operational policy statements; that linkage between programme and technical co-operation activities be explicitly identified in the planning and programming process; and that, where women constituted a significant proportion of the intended beneficiaries, it should be clearly indicated when formulating strategies and broad programme statements.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION.

On 31 May, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/46 without vote.

Women and development

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/50 of 28 July 1982 and 1983/78 of 29 July 1983, as well as its decision 1984/101 of 10 February 1984, by which it decided to review the question of women and development at its first regular session of 1985,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General reviewing the issue of women and development in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Confirming the importance of the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace,

Convinced of the importance of integrating women fully into all aspects of the development process both as agents and as beneficiaries,

Recognizing the need for greater coherence and efficiency of the policies and programmes related to women and development of the organizations of the United Nations system,

Bearing in mind its resolution 1984/12 of 24 May 1984, pursuant to which the Commission on the Status of Women, at its thirty-first session, will review the ways in which the needs and concerns of women can be integrated into all planning and programme activities of the United Nations system,

1. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General reviewing the issue of women and development in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system, and the recommendations contained therein, as a first step towards a coherent approach by the organizations of the United Nations system to policies and programmes related to women and development;

2. Urges all United Nations bodies, including the regional commissions, and the specialized agencies which have not yet done so, to develop and implement comprehensive policies for women and development and to incorporate them into their medium-term plans, statements of objectives, programmes and other major policy statements;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, in his capacity as Chairman of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to take the initiative in formulating a system-wide medium-term plan for women and development, taking into account the priorities recommended by the Council, the recommendations of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and

Peace, to be held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, and the relevant decisions of the respective governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system, to be submitted, through the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-first session, to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-sixth session and to the Council at its second regular session of 1986;

4. Recommends that future medium-term plans of the United Nations and the specialized agencies should contain intersectoral presentations of the various programmes dealing with issues of concern to women and that revisions of current plans should be considered in the light of the results of the Nairobi Conference;

5. Also recommends that in formulating programmes and projects it should explicitly be indicated where women constitute a significant proportion of the intended beneficiaries;

6. Invites the Commission on the Status of Women, beginning in 1986, to review regularly the priorities and strategies for the advancement of women of the organizations of the United Nations system and to report biennially to the Council on progress made system-wide in their implementation;

7. Requests the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination to undertake in 1989 a cross-organizational programme analysis in order to review systematically the activities for and resources allocated to the advancement of women, and requests the Secretary-General to submit the proposed general framework and approach of that cross-organizational programme analysis for comment to the Commission on the Status of Women at its thirty-second session;

8. Decides to transmit the report of the Secretary-General to the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace for its consideration in formulating forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women at the international and regional levels;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Council at its regular sessions of 1986 on the implementation of the present resolution.

UN Development Fund for Women

In accordance with a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(17)</sup> the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, renamed the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM), was transferred from the United Nations Secretariat to autonomous association with UNDP on 1 July 1985.

In an October 1985 report<sup>(18)</sup> to the General Assembly, the Secretary-General gave information on the implementation of the 1984 resolution on arrangements for the management of the Fund, outlined project-cycle activities and mentioned

Fund activities in connection with the 1985 World Conference. The report stated that contributions from Governments and non-governmental sources had risen gradually since 1980 to reach a high point of $3.4 million in 1984. However, expenditures were also on the increase. During 1985, programming and/or evaluation missions were sent to 30 countries, as a result of which 16 project proposals were scheduled for implementation in 1986 and future years, according to a report<sup>(19)</sup> on the Fund by the UNDP Administrator. Projects ranged from the training of rural trainers to village bakeries, poultry-raising and horticulture. A total of 144 project proposals were received and approval of 36 projects totalling $2.7 million was recommended by the Fund's Consultative Committee. By the end of 1985, UNIFEM had provided assistance to all regions of the world through 473 projects with a total value of $30.4 million.

In 1985, UNIFEM received contributions and pledges from 54 Member States. The $3.5 million in pledges towards the Fund's general resources in 1985 represented an increase of 35 per cent over 1984 pledges, exclusive of contributions earmarked for specific projects. A further $122,451 was received from individuals, NGOs and national committees on the Fund. Also, one donor provided $89,000 for two projects in the African region and $50,000 for donor round-table activities.

At the 1985 Pledging Conference for Development Activities held in November (see Chapter II of this section), 38 countries pledged $3 million to UNIFEM for 1986. Although four traditional major donors were unable to announce their pledges at the Conference, the 1986 total was expected to reach $4 million—more than a 14 per cent increase over 1985.

The Fund maintained a balance between income and expenditures during the year, with an estimated total project expenditure of $4.3 million, representing an increase over the $3.2 million recorded for 1984.

UNDP activities. In a May 1985 report<sup>(20)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council on UNIFEM, the Administrator gave an overview of its mandate and activities, and noted that, in view of the full agenda of the General Assembly's Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), the biennial budget for the Fund's administrative costs would be submitted to the Assembly's 1985 session in September (see below). The Administrator, therefore, sought authorization to act on any ACABQ recommendations before the Council's 1986 session.

By a 29 June decision,<sup>(21)</sup> the Council welcomed the Administrator's arrangements to accept responsibility for UNIFEM as of 1 July 1985 and requested him to prepare the Fund's 1986-1987 budget estimates for review by ACABQ; the Council would consider the budget proposals, as well as staffing matters, at its 1986 organizational session. It authorized the Administrator to maintain the current level of staffing and budgetary expenditures, pending Council approval of the 1986-1987 budget, and requested him to report to the Council annually on the establishment of administrative arrangements relating to the Fund's association with UNDP.

ACABQ consideration. The UNDP Administrator's budget estimates<sup>(22)</sup> for UNIFEM for 1986-1987 were reviewed by ACABQ later in the year.<sup>(23)</sup>

As at 31 August 1985, from the inception of the Fund, contributions amounted to $25.4 million, including $24 million in pledges from States and $1.4 million from non-governmental sources. As at 31 October 1985, the level of unpaid pledges was $1.2 million and some $400,000 in income had not been taken into account in connection with the Fund's financial transfer from the United Nations to UNDP. ACABQ had no objection to the Administrator's staffing requirements of 13 posts, an increase of two over the 1984-1985 biennium. It was informed that the Fund was developing a knowledge-bank pilot project; it felt that before further implementation, the impact of the project on the Fund, its costs and potential users should be carefully weighed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/104 without vote.

United Nations Development Fund for Women The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/125 of 14 December 1984, in which it decided, inter alia, that the activities of the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women should be continued through establishment of a separate and identifiable entity in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme,

Taking note of decision 85/33 of 29 June 1985 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, as well as decision 85/7 of 28 June 1985, in which the Governing Council requested the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to develop an internal implementation strategy to strengthen the capacity of the Programme to deal with issues of women in development which, calling on the experience of the Fund, would establish verifiable objectives and a time-frame for implementation,

Recognizing the Fund's dual priorities, to serve as a catalyst with the goal of ensuring the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development activities, as often as possible at pre-investment stages, and to support activities directly benefiting women in line with national and regional priorities,

Considering the innovative and experimental activities of the Fund directed towards strengthening both governmental and non-governmental institutional capacities to ensure access for women to development co-operation resources and their full participation at all levels in the development process,

Stressing that general questions of development and access of women to development resources have, as a common objective, the creation of conditions which will improve the quality of life for all,

Aware of the broad range of linkages of the Fund with Governments, national women's groups, non-governmental organizations and women's research institutes, besides its close co-operation with United Nations development agencies, including the regional commissions,

Reaffirming that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, underlined the necessity of strengthening the role of women in national and international development programmes,

Taking note of the reports of the Consultative Committee on the Fund on its seventeenth and eighteenth sessions,

Taking note also of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its satisfaction that the establishment of the United Nations Development Fund for Women, in autonomous association with the United Nations Development Programme, was effected on the agreed target date of 1 July 1985, in accordance with the arrangements set out in General Assembly resolution 39/125;

2. Approves the name United Nations Development Fund for Women, with the acronym UNIFEM, as the new name for the Fund, as proposed by the Consultative Committee on the Fund at its seventeenth session, held from 25 to 29 March 1985, in accordance with paragraph 4 of resolution 39/125 and as reflected in the annex to that resolution;

3. Notes with satisfaction the steps that are being undertaken to implement resolution 39/125, as well as the commitment expressed by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to ensure the appropriate involvement of women in mainstream development activities;

4. Stresses the need for close and continuous working relationships between the Fund, the United Nations Development Programme and those bodies, organs and organizations of the United Nations system and other agencies concerned with women's issues and development co-operation;

5. Expresses its appreciation for the contributions to the Fund made by Governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals, which have a vital role to play in maintaining and increasing the financial viability of the Fund and the effectiveness of its work;

6. Urges Governments to continue and, where possible, to increase their contributions to the Fund, and calls upon those Governments that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Fund, in order to enable the Fund to give greater support to deserving requests received for technical assistance;

7. Requests the Consultative Committee on the Fund to continue to monitor the process of implementing the new arrangements for the management of the Fund, as set out in the annex to resolution 39/125;

8. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to submit to the Governing Council of the Programme an annual report on the operations, management and budget of the Fund, taking into account the advice of the Consultative Committee on the Fund;

Status of women

Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women

The fifth session of the Board of Trustees of the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women was held at Havana, Cuba, from 28 January to 1 February 1985.<sup>(1)</sup> In addition to reviewing the Institute's activities during 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> the Board discussed INSTRAW's participation in the 1985 World Conference (see above), progress in establishing a network of focal points and correspondents active in the field of women and development, the Institute's proposed medium-term plan for 1986-1992, and proposed fund-raising activities.

The Board adopted a series of decisions to be brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council. With regard to the priority programme on women and international economic relations, the Board looked forward to: the reproduction of studies on the subject; publication of a consolidated report on the studies; the widest possible dissemination of the consolidated report in different languages; and the participation of Board members and INSTRAW focal points and correspondents in that endeavour. The Board recommended that the results of INSTRAW activities continue to be disseminated as widely as possible and that its public information programme be given priority. It recommended the use of a new logo for the Institute, to be selected in a competition, with the United Nations emblem on all INSTRAW publications.

The Board decided that the balance of the INSTRAW Trust Fund appropriations approved for the 1984-1985 biennium should be released in 1985, including the remainder of the posts approved but not authorized; it requested the Institute's Director to recruit the necessary staff, particularly local staff. The Board requested that the classification of Professional and local-level posts be re-evaluated to reflect changes in functions and that particular attention be given to upgrading the posts of Chief of Research and Training and Administrative Officer. The Director was requested to review and implement the results after approval by the United Nations Department of Administration and Management.

Recommending that the Institute promote its activities at both the Nairobi Conference and the concurrent NGO forum, the Board endorsed the proposed activities for INSTRAW's participation in the Conference.

The Board decided also to endorse activities proposed for establishing a network of focal points and correspondents, encouraged the Director to intensify related activities, endorsed the focal points already designated for co-operation with the Institute, and expressed its desire to organize a meeting of designated focal points as soon as possible.

The Board endorsed the Institute's medium-term plan (1986-1992) and recommended that activities emphasize network-building, methodological approaches related to women and development, training, and the information, documentation and communication programme, including the establishment of data banks. It further recommended that the medium-term plan reflect the outcome of the World Conference with regard to research, training and information.

The Board decided that every effort should be made to seek additional contributions to the Institute, endorsed the Director's proposals on fund-raising activities, and requested the Economic and Social Council to appeal for contributions.

In other action, the Board authorized the Director to evaluate each request for new activities in the light of the work programme and financial situation. It agreed in principle that Arabic should be one of its official languages but felt that it was not currently possible and requested a report on the proposal for its 1986 session.

INSTRAW programme activities

In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly in October 1985 a report<sup>(4)</sup> prepared by INSTRAW on its programme activities. The report outlined the general methodological framework of the Institute's work in research, training and information, documentation and communication, and its method of implementation.

The report also presented information on INSTRAW's work programme in 1984-1985. The Institute had worked closely with the United Nations Statistical Office to improve statistics, indicators and data on the situation of women. In co-operation with the Economic Commission for Europe, it held an expert meeting on statistics and indicators on the role and situation of women (Geneva, 11-14 March), attended by participants from 18 countries and a number of United Nations bodies and other international organizations. In collaboration with the Economic Commission for Africa and the Statistical Office, a subregional seminar met to discuss improved statistics and indicators for women in development (Harare, Zimbabwe, 29 April-7 May), attended by 45 participants from 15 countries. A subregional seminar on statistical analysis of the situation of women in the labour market through household surveys, organized with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (Montevideo, Uruguay, 3-6 June), was attended by 25 participants from 10 countries. As part of a joint, long-term project on households, gender and age, INSTRAW and the United Nations University met in February at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, to review four studies. A workshop on social indicators for Dominican women was held by the Dominican Republic's National Office of Statistics and INSTRAW (Santo Domingo, 6-10 May).

The report also contained information about the Institute's work on women and international economic relations, implementation of policies of individual and collective self-reliance, water supply and sanitation, industrial development, new and renewable sources of energy, food systems, training and fellowships, and documentation and communication.

The Institute's work programme was financed entirely by voluntary contributions. Assets as at 30 June 1985 amounted to $2,509,519, while resources available were $2,302,368.

Women and society

On 13 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 40/101 without vote.

The role of women in society

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the objectives of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, as well as the importance of the Declaration of Mexico on the Equality of Women and their Contribution to Development and Peace, 1975, the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year and the Programme of Action for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women,

Welcoming the results of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, in particular the adoption of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Noting that just and lasting peace and social progress, as well as the establishment of a new international economic order, require the active participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation and in the process of development,

Bearing in mind that economic inequality, colonialism, racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, foreign intervention, occupation, alien domination and terrorism in all its forms, acts of aggression and interference in the internal affairs of others and violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms constitute an impediment to the achievement of real and genuine equality and to the integration of women in society,

Convinced of the necessity to secure for all women full realization of the rights embodied in the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, in the International Covenants on Human Rights and in other relevant instruments in this field,

Recognizing that the achievement of equal and full participation of women in all spheres of activities constitutes an inseparable part of the political, economic, social and cultural development of all countries,

Aware that efforts to promote the status of women in all its aspects and their complete integration in society go beyond the problem of legal equality and that deeper structural transformations of society and changes in present-day economic relations, as well as elimination of traditional prejudices through education and dissemination of information, are required so as to create conditions for women to develop fully their intellectual and physical capacities and to participate actively in the decision-making process in political, economic, social and cultural development,

Mindful of the necessity to enlarge the possibilities for both men and women to combine parental duties and household work with paid employment and social activities,

Aware that the role of women in childbearing should not be the cause of inequality and discrimination, and that child rearing demands shared responsibilities among women, men and society as a whole,

Deeply appreciating the increasing participation of women in political, economic, social and cultural life and their contribution thereto,

1. Appeals to all Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organisations to recognize in their activities the importance of all inter-related aspects of the role of women in society-as mothers, as participants in economic development and as participants in public life-without underestimating any one of them;

2. Calls upon all Governments to encourage such social and economic development that would secure the participation of women in all spheres of work, equal pay for work of equal value and equal opportunities for education and for professional and vocational training, taking into consideration the necessity of combining all aspects of the role of women in society;

3. Appeals to Governments, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to promote conditions that would enable women to participate as equal partners with men in public and political life, in the decision-making process at all levels and in the management of different spheres of life in society;

4. Calls upon Governments to recognize the special status and social importance of motherhood and to take, in the context of their specific abilities and conditions, all necessary measures to promote its protection, including maternity leave with pay, and to provide security for their jobs as long as necessary, so as to allow women, if they so wish, to fulfil their role as mothers without prejudice to their professional and public activities;

5. Appeals to Governments to promote the establishment of appropriate facilities for child-care and education of children as a means of combining parenthood with economic, political, social, cultural and other activities and thus to provide assistance to women in integrating fully into their societies;

6. Decides to consider the question of the role of women in society at its forty-first session under an item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

Women and peace

On 13 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/102 without vote.

Participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation

The General Assembly,

Confirming the noble goal enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations to maintain peace and security in the world and the determination of the States Members of the United Nations expressed therein to save present and succeeding generations from the scourge of war,

Recalling that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985, in adopting the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, underlined the importance of the participation of women in promoting international peace and co-operation,

Convinced that the International Year of Peace, proclaimed for the year 1986 by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/3 of 24 October 1985, could give new impulses for safeguarding international peace and security,

Reaffirming its resolution 37/63 of 3 December 1982, by which it proclaimed the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation,

Recalling its resolution 39/124 of 14 December 1984, in which it requested the Commission on the Status of Women to consider what measures might be necessary in order to implement the Declaration,

Wishing to encourage the active participation of women in promoting international peace and security and co-operation.

Convinced that increased efforts are required to eliminate still existing forms of discrimination against women in every field of human endeavour,

Conscious of the need to implement the provisions of the Declaration,

1. Pledges its determination to encourage the full participation of women in the economic, social, cultural, civil and political affairs of society and in the endeavour to promote international peace and co-operation;

2. Appeals to all Governments to take the necessary measures for putting into practice the principles and provisions of the Declaration on the Participation of Women in Promoting International Peace and Co-operation;

3. Invites all Governments to give wide publicity to the Declaration and its implementation:

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take adequate steps to ensure that publicity is given to the Declaration:

5. Invites the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the World Health Organization and other appropriate bodies within the United Nations system to consider adequate measures to implement the Declaration;

6. Requests the Commission on the Status of Women to consider measures which may be necessary to implement the Declaration in the context of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women for the period up to the year 2000;

7. Decides to consider the further implementation of the Declaration at its forty-first session, as a sub-item of an item entitled "Forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women to the year 2000".

Women under apartheid

In its annual report to the General Assembly,<sup>(6)</sup> the Special Committee against Apartheid (see also p. 127) stated that it had organized, in co-operation with the United Republic of Tanzania and the Organization of African Unity (OAU), an International Conference on Women and Children under Apartheid (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 7-10 May). A mission of the Special Committee to Angola, Zambia and the United Republic of Tanzania, from 3 to 16 April, preceded the Conference, consulting with Governments and liberation movements and visiting refugee camps. The mission's report was the main document before the Conference.

The Conference was convened to publicize the plight of women and children under apartheid, promote moral and material assistance to them in their struggle for liberation and contribute to the July World Conference on the Decade for Women (see above). By a 15 May letter,<sup>(7)</sup> the Acting Chairman of the Special Committee transmitted, for forwarding to the World Conference, the text of the Declaration adopted by the World Conference on 9 May.

The Conference considered the plight of women and children in South Africa and Namibia and their struggle for national liberation, measures to promote international assistance to them and action to demonstrate solidarity with them in their legitimate struggle. The Conference reiterated that apartheid was a crime against humanity and an intolerable affront to the conscience of mankind, commended the peoples of South Africa and Namibia on their heroic resistance, and condemned the massacres, killings and other atrocities against the oppressed people of South Africa, as well as forced removals which had driven millions of people, mostly women and children, off their ancestral lands and deprived them of their South African nationality. The Conference condemned the Pretoria régime for subjecting women and children to oppression and humiliation, for separating families, and for killing, imprisoning, restricting and torturing women and children for opposing apartheid. The Conference also: condemned the manipulation of "family planning" by the South African Government; was appalled that the majority of refugees in neighbouring countries consisted of women and children fleeing the apartheid system; urged countries to grant asylum, food, shelter, medical care, legal protection and guarantee of fundamental human rights, counselling, education, training and employment to women and children from southern Africa; and stressed that the 1985 World Conference should focus on women in South Africa and Namibia in the light of the Decade's themes.

In addition, the Conference called for intensified support for the women and children of South Africa and Namibia and in front-line States, in particular: wide dissemination of information on the situation of women and children in South Africa; national campaigns for the unconditional release of political prisoners there; regional and national meetings on the plight of women and children under apartheid, increased contributions to funds supporting the oppressed people of South Africa; financial assistance to women in the national liberation movements to enable them to attend major international conferences and seminars and undertake speaking tours; and activities of the southern African liberation movements recognized by OAU.

The Conference encouraged the Special Committee and the International Committee of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia to redouble their efforts to promote publicity and assistance, and appealed to Governments and organizations to lend them full co-operation.

By a 26 February 1985 resolution<sup>(8)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights expressed its indignation at the continued violations of human rights in South Africa, particularly the continued adverse effects on women and children of the policies of apartheid.

In accordance with a 1981 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(9)</sup> the Special Committee against Apartheid observed 9 August as the International Day of Solidarity with the Struggle of Women of South Africa and Namibia.

In July, the World Conference had before it a report<sup>(10)</sup> of the Secretary-General on the situation of women and children living under racist minority regimes. The report appraised the political, social and economic aspects of women living under apartheid, gave accounts of recent activities to promote awareness of their plight and contained information on assistance provided by United Nations organizations, specialized agencies and NGOs.

By resolution 40/25 of 29 November 1985, the General Assembly demanded the immediate release of women and children detained in Namibia and South Africa.

Women and population

As a follow-up to the 1984 Conference on Population,<sup>(11)</sup> whose Declaration emphasized the positive influence on family life and size of improving the status of women, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1985/6, without vote, on 28 May 1985.

Status and role of women and population

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering that the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace is scheduled to be held at Nairobi from 15 to 26 July 1985,

Recalling that the International Conference on Population, in its recommendations for the further implementation of the World Population Plan of Action, identified the role and status of women as an area of priority action in the field of population,

Recalling also that the Mexico City Declaration on Population and Development emphasized the fact that the improvement of the status of women and the enhancement of their role were important goals in themselves and that the achievement of those goals would influence family life and size in a positive way,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 39/228 of 18 December 1984, in which the Assembly, inter alia, reaffirmed the importance attached to the formulation and implementation of concrete policies which would enhance the status and role of women in the area of population policies and programmes,

1. Urges all Governments participating in the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, to incorporate fully into the forward-looking strategies for the advancement of women for the period up to the year 2000 those aspects of the Mexico City Declaration on Population and Development and the recommendations for the further implementation of the World Population Plan of Action which relate to the status and role of women in the context of population;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in the framework of the ongoing monitoring, review and appraisal of progress made towards the implementation of the recommendations of the World Population Plan of Action, to focus periodically on those recommendations which make special reference to the relation between the role and status of women and population, and to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council, through the Population Commission.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/6

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/89) without vote. 17 May (meeting 6); draft by Population Commission (E/1985/25); agenda item 10.

Prevention of prostitution

In March, the Secretary-General submitted a report<sup>(12)</sup> to the Economic and Social Council on implementation of a 1983 Council resolution<sup>(13)</sup> on suppression of traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others. The replies of seven Governments to a note verbale from the Secretary-General had been transmitted to the Working Group on Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in 1984 and replies from a further eight Governments were considered by the Working Group at its 1985 session (Geneva, 29 July-2 August). Replies from regional commissions, specialized agencies, other United Nations organizations and an NGO to another note verbale had also been transmitted to the Working Group.

At its 1984 session, the Working Group had recommended that the 1983 Council resolution be made widely known to Member States and that they be urged to implement a national policy against violating the fundamental rights of women and children. It had also recommended that they be urged to implement social and legal measures to ensure reinsertion into society of victims of prostitution, and supported the adoption of international measures aimed at dismantling the networks that fed prostitution and repatriating and assisting their victims.

The Working Group's report was considered by the Sub-Commission in 1984,<sup>(14)</sup> which had recommended to the Commission on Human Rights that it be requested to undertake a study on slavery-like practices against women and children. It had also recommended that the struggle against procurement be intensified at the national level and reiterated the Working Group's recommendations regarding dismantling of prostitution networks and the repatriation and reinsertion into society of prostitution's victims.

In accordance with the 1983 Council resolution, United Nations agencies and organs and NGOs were invited to co-operate with the Centre for Human Rights in preparing two studies: one on the sale of children and the other on the legal and social problems of sexual minorities, including male prostitution. Action was also being taken to reproduce as a United Nations publication a 1983 report<sup>(15)</sup> on the suppression of traffic in persons and exploitation of the prostitution of others.

In an 11 March 1985 resolution,<sup>(16)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights invited States to sign or ratify the 1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others;<sup>(17)</sup> it also recommended that the struggle against procuring be intensified, that the networks of prostitution be dismantled and that States adopt measures to ensure victims' orderly and effective reinsertion into society.

The Working Group on Slavery, at its eleventh session (Geneva, 29 July-2 August 1985),<sup>(18)</sup> recommended that all Governments ratify and implement the 1949 Convention and that strong measures be taken to ensure that women reached a social status equal to that of men and that the mass media publicize their fundamental equality.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/103 without vote.

Prevention of prostitution

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Special Rapporteur on the subject of the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others, prepared in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/20 of 4 May 1982,

Recalling its resolution 38/107 of 16 December 1983 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/30 of 26 May 1983, as well as the report of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality Development and Peace,

Considering that the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others requires a threefold concerted effort, involving prevention, punishment of all forms of procuring and solidarity in order to facilitate the social rehabilitation of the victims,

1. Congratulates the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Tourism Organization for the action they have begun to take in implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/30;

2. Invites once again the Economic and Social Council to consider the whole question of the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others at its first regular session of 1986 in connection with the agenda item on human rights, together with the reports requested by the Council in its resolution 1983/30;

3. Invites the Working Group on Slavery of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to transmit its report to the Commission on the Status of Women at its next session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to expedite the issuance as a United Nations document of the report on the suppression of the traffic in persons and of the exploitation of the prostitution of others prepared in pursuance of Economic and Social Council resolution 1982/20.

General Assembly resolution 40/103

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1008) without vote, 21 November (meeting 48); 9 -nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.36); agenda item 92 (d).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 24-34, 46, 48; plenary 116.

Palestinian women

In response to a 1984 recommendation<sup>(19)</sup> of the Commission on the Status of Women acting as the Preparatory Body for the World Conference, which was approved by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Conference a report on the situation of women and children living in the occupied Arab territories and other occupied territories.<sup>(21)</sup>

The report described the effects of Israeli settlements, which had forced transfers of the indigenous Arab population from the West Bank and Gaza, and gave examples of oppressive practices such as arrest, detention, demolition of houses, imposition of curfews and other measures applied to the Palestinian population. The report also gave information on employment and working conditions, housing, education and health, and listed assistance activities being carried out by the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the political, social, economic and humanitarian spheres.

By a letter<sup>(22)</sup> of 19 March 1985 to the Secretary-General, Israel submitted a rebuttal to the Secretary-General's report. Israel's paper on Arab women and children under Israeli administration took issue with what it called the more blatant inaccuracies, mistakes and misrepresentations in the Secretary-General's report and presented the members of the Conference's Preparatory Body with supplementary material which it said might assist them in determining whether to approve the report. The paper contained information and statistics on population, legal matters, economic and social development, employment, education and health.

Refugee women

The Secretary-General submitted to the World Conference a report on the activities and programmes of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) on behalf of refugee women.<sup>(23)</sup> The report stated that most large-scale influxes of refugees were composed largely of women and children. UNHCR tried to ensure that refugee women had equal access with men to benefits that accelerated social integration and contributed to their physical, psychological and material well-being. One of the most important problems of refugee women was the violation of their physical safety; experience had shown that a UNHCR presence in border areas and refugee camps could have a deterrent effect. The report provided information on assistance given by UNHCR to refugee women and children in the areas of health, education and employment.

The High Commissioner believed that work should continue in the following areas: securing accession of further States to the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees<sup>(24)</sup> and its 1967 Protocol,<sup>(25)</sup> which applied to all refugees, regardless of sex; ensuring that international refugee instruments provided protection to refugee women, despite social, economic or cultural constraints governing the condition of women; ensuring liberal practices by States regarding the granting of asylum, the determination of refugee status and the treatment of refugees and asylum-seekers; ensuring the physical safety of refugees, particularly women; increasing awareness of the importance of the needs of refugee women and pressing for increased funding of programmes to meet those needs; promoting self-sufficiency among refugee women by offering literacy, adult education, vocational and formal education programmes and developing their ability to participate in productive activities and income-generating projects; increasing their participation in health education and mental health programmes, supportive ethnic and communal structures and community organization activities; providing for the special needs of refugee women who were heads of families and of handicapped and disabled refugee women.

By resolution 40/118, the General Assembly commended the High Commissioner's programmes for refugee and displaced women, especially those undertaken to secure their protection and to help them to become self-sufficient through educational, vocational and income-generating projects.

Women in the UN Secretariat

Pursuant to the recommendations of the 1983 session<sup>(26)</sup> of the Commission on the Status of Women that were endorsed by a 1983 Economic and Social Council decision<sup>(27)</sup> and General Assembly resolution,<sup>(28)</sup> a report<sup>(29)</sup> of the Secretary-General on progress achieved and obstacles encountered with regard to the employment and advancement of women within the United Nations system during the United Nations Decade for Women was submitted to the World Conference. The information was based on replies to a questionnaire sent to the organizations of the system and reflected the situation that prevailed from 1976 to 1983. Data received were tabulated for 31 December 1975, the beginning of the Decade, 31 December 1979, the mid-point, and 31 December 1983, towards the end of the Decade. It was noted that incompleteness of responses limited the analysis and the conclusions that could be reached.

The report concluded that efforts made during the Decade had produced some positive results, such as a higher overall percentage of women employed in the secretariats of most organizations. For the most part, however, the increase had been slight or negligible at the higher levels. The executive heads of some organizations had indicated a serious commitment to equality of female and male staff. In some cases, institutional measures, such as appointing a coordinator, designating a focal point or establishing a panel or board, had been taken. As the Decade drew to a close, it appeared that earlier initiatives either had not been sustained or had not been very effective; most targets had not been met. It appeared that bolder strategies were required.

By resolution 40/258 B, the General Assembly welcomed the Secretary-General's efforts to improve the status of women in the Secretariat, requested him to increase the number of women in geographical posts to achieve an overall participation rate of 30 per cent by 1990, and to report in 1986 on progress. The Assembly reiterated its request to Member States to nominate more women candidates in the Professional category.

By resolution 40/105, the Assembly invited the regional commissions to propose measures for incorporating women's concerns in their work programmes for 1988-1989. The Secretary-General was requested to report on their proposals, to take into account the regional commissions' role in promoting the advancement of women when formulating the system-wide medium-term plan for women and development and when implementing the Forward-looking Strategies, and to report in 1986 on Progress made in implementing its 1984 resolution<sup>(30)</sup> on senior women's programme officers posts at the regional commissions.

Convention on Discrimination against Women

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, established in 1982<sup>(1)</sup> under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, adopted in 1979,<sup>(2)</sup> held its fourth session at Vienna from 21 January to 1 February 1985<sup>(3)</sup>

The Committee had before it six initial reports of States parties on legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures they had adopted to give effect to the Convention, which had entered into force in 1981.<sup>(4)</sup> The Committee considered the reports of Austria, Bulgaria, Canada, Panama and Yugoslavia; it was unable to discuss El Salvador's report due to the absence of that country's representative.

CEDAW recommended to the Economic and Social Council that adequate funds and staff be made available to provide services for its effective functioning and that the standard of travel accorded to members be commensurate with that provided to comparable committees of experts.

The Committee also discussed its contribution to the 1985 World Conference, and agreed to use as a basis for its report a compendium of information based on national reports on the achievements and obstacles experienced in implementing the Convention. It agreed to recommend to the Economic and Social Council that its report should be placed on the Conference's agenda and that the Council should invite the CEDAW Chairperson to present the report, and decided to request the Secretary-General to facilitate the Chairperson's attendance. CEDAW decided that its 1986 session would be held in New York and its 1987 session at Vienna.

In its report to the World Conference,<sup>(5)</sup> CEDAW noted that, although 52 States parties should have submitted their initial reports by the end of December 1984, only 26 of them had been received. It appealed to States parties to present their reports in due time. Based on information provided in the reports of 18 States parties and during Committee sessions, the report discussed: general measures to guarantee equality of women and men and prohibit discrimination on the ground of sex; measures to provide equal rights for women in political and public life; equal rights in education and employment; equal access to health care services, including family planning and services for pregnant women; legal equality in areas of economic and social life; measures to ensure application of the Convention to women in rural areas; equality of women and men before the law; and rights pertaining to marriage and family relations.

Chapter XX

Children, youth and aging persons

With 15 million children under the age of five dying each year, reducing infant and child mortality rates remained an imperative for the United Nations in 1985. Some 1.4 billion children, mainly in the developing countries of Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Mediterranean area, were provided with life's basic necessities by the Organization during the year, primarily through the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). Through two UNICEF programmes alone (immunization and oral rehydration), more than a million children who would not otherwise have survived were alive at year's end. The General Assembly urged intensified efforts to attain the objectives relating to children in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s). It also took action aimed at having the draft Declaration relating to the protection of children, especially regarding fostering, adopted in 1986.

The commemoration of International Youth Year (IYY) was the highlight of 1985 youth activities during which the United Nations World Conference for IYY—a series of Assembly meetings—adopted guidelines representing a global strategy for future work concerning youth.

The first review of the 1982 International Plan of Action on Aging took place in 1985. After the review had identified priorities for action, the Assembly and the Economic and Social Council urged that priority attention be given to the question of aging and that the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging be strengthened.

Topics related to this chapter. Human rights: rights of the child; youth and human rights; human rights of aging persons. Women: women and children under apartheid. Refugees. Social and cultural development: crime prevention.

Children

Assistance for children in 118 countries—in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Mediterranean area—was provided by UNICEF during 1985 with the help of other United Nations bodies, and covered such areas as health services, social welfare, nutrition, education, water supply and sanitation, and emergency relief. UNICEF continued to support a variety of low-cost programmes aimed at improving children's health and reducing child mortality and morbidity. Of grave concern was the situation of children and their families in many African countries, particularly in the sub-Saharan region.

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/210, urged that UNICEF's fortieth anniversary in 1986 be observed by intensified efforts towards attaining the goals of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(1)</sup> which stressed children's immunization against major diseases by 1990 and which aimed at reducing the infant mortality rate to under 50 per 1,000 live births in all countries by the year 2000.

The Assembly, in decision 40/422, requested the Sixth (Legal) Committee to consult informally in 1986 with a view to adopting the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children: with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption, Nationally and Internationally.

UN Children's Fund

In 1985, UNICEF co-operated in programmes in 118 countries, with a child population under 16 years of age of approximately 1.4 billion. Total expenditure amounted to $390 million; $279 million of this was for programmes, or an average expenditure of 20 cents per child. Support was given to health services in 110 countries, social welfare services in 104, nutrition and non-formal education in 100, water supply and sanitation in 93, formal education in 92, and emergency relief in 30. Of the total programme expenditure, 30 per cent was spent for health, 21 per cent for water supply and sanitation, 13 per cent for emergency relief, 7 per cent for formal education, 6 per cent for nutrition, 5 per cent for social welfare services and 4 per cent for non-formal education.

The UNICEF Executive Board held its regular 1985 session in New York from 15 to 26 April. It also met on 11 and 14 June to elect officers for the period 1 August 1985 to 31 July 1986. The Board's report<sup>(2)</sup> taken note of by the Economic and Social Council in decision 1985/186, was considered by the Council in connection with operational activities for development (see Chapter II of this section). The Programme Committee met from 19 to 22 April 1985 and the Committee on Administration and Finance from 23 to 25 April.

The dominant concerns throughout the Board's deliberations were the severity of the situation of children and families in many African countries, the need to strengthen UNICEF actions there and the need to accelerate the implementation of child survival and development actions.

Programme policy decisions

At its 1985 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Board reviewed UNICEF's performance in 1984, endorsed an emergency assistance programme for several African countries, approved initiatives to accelerate child survival and development actions, particularly towards achieving by 1990 universal immunization of children against their six major communicable diseases (diphtheria, pertussis, tetanus, measles, poliomyelitis, tuberculosis). It also adopted a comprehensive policy framework for UNICEF programmes concerning women, acted to improve the Board's administration and role and approved UNICEF revised budget estimates for 1984-1985 as well as 1986-1987 estimates.

The Board approved general resource commitments totalling $303 million and "noted" projects in the amount of $223.2 million for financing through specific-purpose contributions. It also endorsed the UNICEF emergency programme in Africa.

As a result of the Board's action, UNICEF would be assisting projects in 117 countries: 43 in Africa, 26 in the Americas, 37 in Asia and 11 in the Middle East and northern Africa.

On the recommendation of the Programme Committee, the Board approved for follow-up the conclusions of the twenty-fifth session (Geneva, 28-30 January 1985) of the UNICEF/WHO Joint Committee on Health Policy and endorsed its support for actions towards the 1990 goal of universal immunization.

A working group, established by the Board in 1984 to examine the Board's future work and procedures and ways of improving the use of the secretariat's limited resources in preparing for Board sessions, made recommendations calling for, among other things, preparation and submission to the Board of UNICEF-assisted country programmes with longer programming cycles, bearing in mind the need to maintain and strengthen mid-term reviews and corrections of UNICEF country programmes. The Board renewed the Group's mandate and approved its recommendations.

Medium-term plan for 1984-1988

In April 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Board approved the UNICEF 1984-1988 medium-term plan.<sup>(3)</sup> The Board stressed the importance of ensuring that child survival and development actions were integrated with other UNICEF efforts and implemented within the primary health care framework and basic services strategy. It also supported efforts in all developing countries to protect mothers and children through structural adjustment measures.

In approving the medium-term plan, the Board authorized new programme recommendations totalling $190 million to be presented at its 1986 session. It also approved the financial objectives contained in the medium-term plan, projecting that UNICEF income would increase from $390 million in 1985 to $470 million in 1988, while annual expenditure would increase from $372 million to $448 million.

Policy review: women's concerns

A policy review paper on UNICEF's response to women's concerns<sup>(4)</sup> was considered by the Board at its 1985 session. The role of women in the current world situation and the relationship between the health and well-being of women and children were underscored. New guidelines were developed for including women as integral parts of programming. Support was expressed for extending UNICEF policy beyond the mother/child relationship to include the economic role of women. Increased emphasis was placed on income-generation, exploring potential markets and providing access to technical expertise and management skills and the availability of easier channels and terms of credit for productive activities by disadvantaged women. A positive aspect of the year's experience was the strengthening of the linkage, conceptually and operationally, between health, nutrition, literacy, training, credit and economic activity in women's programmes.

The Board, which supported the paper's recommendations, noted, among other things, that an improvement in the general conditions of women was essential to the implementation of strategies for child survival and development. It also agreed that women-centred activities should be development-oriented rather than welfare-based and made integral to all UNICEF-assisted projects and programmes and executed in the context of each country's national development.

Maurice Pate Memorial Award

The UNICEF Board approved at its April session the Executive Director's recommendation that for 1985 the annual Maurice Pate Memorial Award, established to commemorate the first Executive Director of UNICEF, be awarded to the National Institute of Public Co-operation and Child Development of India.<sup>(5)</sup> The Institute, recognized for its work in developing services for children, training, research and advocacy, planned to use the $25,000 award to strengthen its services, especially with regard to child survival and development.

Information and external relations

During 1985, UNICEF external relations activities centred on continuing with national and international partners the social mobilization effort and spreading the child survival and development message aimed at improving the well-being of children even in difficult economic times.

The aims of UNICEF advocacy were significantly enhanced world-wide through publications, audio-visual productions, exhibitions and extensive coverage of child-related concerns in the electronic and print media. These channels of exchange were multiplied through an enlarging network of allies in the cause of children, namely UNICEF goodwill ambassadors, national committees, government communication systems, and an increasing number of non-governmental organizations (NGOs), such as women's and youth organizations, religious and cultural groups, professional and business forums, school systems, service clubs and voluntary agencies.

UNICEF and the NGO Committee for UNICEF hosted (New York, 25 October 1985) a People's Forum on universal child immunization by 1990 (UCI-1990) in celebration of the United Nations fortieth anniversary. The Forum brought together heads of State, prime ministers, foreign ministers, celebrities and over 800 NGO representatives who signed a Declaration of Commitment to UCI-1990. In April, the Executive Board recommended that the NGO Committee be encouraged to organize a broader-based Forum with the participation of national committees for UNICEF and the Board in association with its 1986 regular session, bearing in mind themes appropriate for UNICEF's fortieth anniversary.

UNICEF fortieth anniversary

In April, the Board discussed preparations for the fortieth anniversary of UNICEF, to be commemorated in 1986, and decided that its theme would be "Children first".

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 40/210 without vote.

Fortieth anniversary of the United Nations Children's Fund

The General Assembly,

Recalling that, by its resolution 57<sup>(1)</sup> of 11 December 1946, it established the United Nations Children's Fund as a manifestation of the responsibility of nations and society for children as the most vital resource of the future world, and noting that the year 1986 represents the fortieth anniversary of this expression of commitment to children,

Reaffirming the principles and guidelines for programme activities established by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund in its efforts to bring about a major world-wide improvement in child survival and child development, taking special advantage of new developments in primary health care techniques and in communications,

Acutely aware that the effect of the adverse global economic situation is more severe on vulnerable groups, such as children, particularly in developing countries, and therefore makes the need for the efforts of the United Nations Children's Fund all the more critical,

Noting that the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations Children's Fund presents a unique opportunity for advancing the above-mentioned principles, which have the potential for a virtual revolution in child survival,

Aware that many developing countries have recently embarked upon major child survival and development efforts and noting with appreciation in this regard the positive response of many world leaders to the commendable initiative taken by the Secretary-General on the occasion of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, regarding the renewed potential for achieving the goal of universal child immunization by 1990, which is an important part of the primary health care strategy,

Welcoming the continued co-operation between the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Health Organization in achieving their common objective, particularly as it relates to the goal of universal child immunisation by 1990,

1. Urges that the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations Children's Fund be observed by intensifying the ongoing efforts towards attaining the objectives relating to children envisaged in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and notes the important role of the child survival and child development strategy in meeting those objectives;

2. Notes that "Children first" has been adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund as the umbrella theme for the observance of the fortieth anniversary of the Fund;

3. Calls upon the United Nations Children's Fund, with the participation of Governments, the organizations of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and individuals, to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of the Fund by reaffirming, through commitment and action, the responsibility of the international community for the survival and development of children;

4. Requests the United Nations Children's Fund, with the guidance of its Executive Board, to continue to develop and promote appropriate means by which Governments, the United Nations and other international organizations, as well as individuals, may express this commitment, particularly during the period of the fortieth anniversary;

5. Appeals to all Governments to increase their support, assistance and contributions during the period of the fortieth anniversary and subsequently, so that the United Nations Children's Fund may be able to strengthen its co-operation with developing countries and respond to the urgent needs of children;

6. Requests all countries to observe the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations Children's Fund in a befitting manner, through governmental and non-governmental participation.

Africa

Concern for the critical situation of children and their families as a result of the situation in many African countries continued to be the focus of UNICEF emergency assistance in 1985 (see Chapter III of this section). Total programme expenditure in Africa increased from $78 million in 1984 to $102 million in 1985, representing some 38 per cent of UNICEF's total global programme expenditure. As a result of increased needs, UNICEF's field capacity was strengthened by upgrading 14 offices to full UNICEF country offices, with a staff increase of some 40 per cent in eastern and southern Africa and almost 50 per cent in western and central Africa. This expansion was accompanied by improvements in the effectiveness of country programmes in linking emergency relief with long-term development action, furthering child survival and development (CSD) and relating programme activities to regional situation analyses.

There were six major crises in 1985 in the eastern and southern Africa region:<sup>(6)</sup> mounting external debt, food shortages, drought, civil strife, continued rapid population growth and instability caused by apartheid. UNICEF allocated a total of $28 million for emergencies, in addition to $59 million for regular programmes. The emergency situation led to a re-thinking of strategy for the survival and development of children in the region through community-based integrated primary health care (PHC) linked with household food security programmes and accelerated immunization.

Steady gains were made during the year to achieve UCI-1990. UNICEF supported courses on planning and management, maintenance and repair of cold-chain equipment (refrigerators, cold boxes, transport), and communication and evaluation techniques. Mass media communication support systems were being developed, community health worker coverage was expanded and immunization activities were integrated into maternal and child health (MCH) programmes. Gains were also made in oral rehydration therapy (ORT)—a method of preventing dehydration caused by diarrhoea, a major cause of child mortality—in producing oral rehydration salts (ORS), in the control of diarrhoeal diseases through national programmes and in breast-feeding and family planning programmes. The UNICEF health commitment averaged $22 million for all countries in eastern and southern Africa: 52 per cent, or $11.4 million, for MCH/PHC activities; 19 per cent, or $4.3 million, for the expanded programme of immunization; and 29 per cent, or $6.4 million, for other health activities such as general health manpower training and essential drugs.

An increase in food supply allowed the scaling down of emergency feeding and nutrition programmes, while regional support to developing food and nutrition information systems continued. In response to the reduction of surplus food stocks as a result of limitations on available goods, UNICEF made essential goods available to the economy in exchange for surplus food.

The analysis of UNICEF's response to women revealed a shift away from welfare towards economically oriented programmes favouring employment and income generation, food production, support to women farmers and strengthening women's development through group organization, education and an increased capacity to ensure the well-being of children and families.

UNICEF also delivered large quantities of vaccines, drugs and ORS to camps and drought-stricken areas and continued its support in health, nutrition and emergency water supply sectors. Relief camp programmes were supported for returning refugees and UNICEF assistance was significant in the development of emergency preparedness recognition capacities to prevent, or at least forecast, famine. In April 1985, UNICEF supported a seminar at Nairobi, Kenya, on abandoned and abused children and their rights as persons.

In western and central Africa,<sup>(7)</sup> despite the diminished threat of drought and massive grain supplies from abroad, malnutrition and hunger remained the fate of large numbers of people; consequently, the development of food self-sufficiency continued to be a priority. Since nutritional problems of children were correlated with the educational and economic level of mothers, nutrition and growth surveillance programmes included a strong educational component. Support for food production for both consumption and sale became the focus of UNICEF action, leading to a special concern for the African woman, and UNICEF assisted in disseminating improved agricultural techniques. Following the July 1985 World Conference to review and appraise the United Nations Decade for Women, regional women founded an International Committee for Development Projects for African Women, with headquarters at Abidjan, Ivory Coast, opening a new area of co-operation. UNICEF also supported instruction for mothers and schoolchildren through various strategies, while assistance to pre-school education continued to be a regional priority.

The combination of strained economic circumstances and weakened populations moved Governments further towards developing PHC structures. With UNICEF assistance, maternal growth charts were distributed through MCH centres and increased support was provided for control of diarrhoeal diseases. All the region's countries supported the goal of UCI-1990, enabling UNICEF to support governmental efforts for CSD and PHC.

UNICEF co-operation in various programmes-rural water supply, hygiene and latrine construction and sanitation education-led to the establishment of village committees responsible for water supplies. It also trained national personnel and assisted in developing technical team work.

The drought, which peaked in 1984-1985, required UNICEF to seek special funding and to develop a long-term approach for further development beyond the emergency situation. Assistance was provided to Governments with resettlement programmes by enabling people to produce their own food on sites chosen for their adequate water supply.

In Angola, where the emergency problem stemmed from an internal conflict, most international aid, including supplementary and emergency water supplies, truck transportation and maintenance, and food distribution centre supervision, was channelled through UNICEF.

The year 1985 saw a marked development and extension of linkages with institutional partners. Advocacy for children was increasingly directed towards international financial institutions whose decisions affected those of national policy-makers.

Americas and the Caribbean

In 1985, UNICEF continued its basic services programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean,<sup>(8)</sup> a region suffering from serious restrictions imposed by the servicing of heavy external debts, internal adjustment policies, and the moderate expansion of the world economy.

During the year, UNICEF advocacy for CSD actions and its readiness to provide timely technical and financial support helped to strengthen the political commitment of several Governments to meet the basic needs of children, especially in health services. UNICEF was able in that region to mobilize public and private institutions to endorse and support basic actions for the survival and development of deprived children. Its offices intensified high-level advocacy, broadened contacts with government decision-makers and worked to identify programme alternatives for the development of innovative and low-cost activities. In co-ordination with UNICEF and the Pan American Health Organization/World Health Organization (PAHO/WHO), Central American Governments prepared a five-year national plan for CSD.

Efforts continued for the accelerated implementation of the expanded programme of immunization and a co-ordinated regional plan was proposed. An inter-agency committee was created to guarantee co-ordination of technical and financial support to participating agencies.

UNICEF supported other initiatives, including a nutrition surveillance project, installation of an

ORS plant in Cuba, which aimed at self-sufficiency in the production and distribution of packets to other countries, and an effective programme of co-operation with PAHO/WHO at the regional level and in several countries to implement acute respiratory infection programmes through training and publications.

UNICEF gave priority to revising early child development programmes emphasizing an integrated view of the child, which included a regional workshop in Colombia. A Latin American seminar on child education, held in Brazil, provided an opportunity to collaborate with Spanish- and Portuguese-speaking countries of Africa.

A seminar, jointly sponsored by the Colombian Government, the Catholic Church, NGOs and UNICEF, discussed problems of children and adolescents in difficult situations and analysed alternative strategies, programmes and community experiences being developed for them. UNICEF also supported community-based preventive programmes for street children in several countries through intensive staff training and communication activities.

All regional offices were involved in providing special technical and financial support to mobilize the greatest number of governmental and private agencies to adopt and implement effective short- and medium-term actions benefiting poor women.

UNICEF co-operated with several Governments in developing urban basic services programmes to improve conditions for children, adolescents and women living in slum areas.

Co-operation with religious organizations and the mobilization of NGOs was strengthened and accelerated. Social communication used the media to promote CSD and UCI-1990 and study tours were arranged for members of national committees from Europe and North America.

Asia

In the east Asia and Pakistan region,<sup>(9)</sup> progress was made in implementing CSD actions, improving PHC and basic service structures and actions, accelerating the immunization process and mobilizing Governments' commitment to, and support for, UCI-1990. Significant improvements in the promotion of ORT were registered: the production of oral rehydration salts increased in Bangladesh and Thailand, an experimental production programme was started in Viet Nam, and there were both local production and imported supplies in Burma.

Family spacing activities were undertaken within the context of MCH programmes, as in the case of the preparations for Bangladesh's third population project of the World Bank where

UNICEF supported a more balanced approach to family planning practices, with priority given to tetanus toxoid immunization of women, safe delivery, use of ORS and the training of 30,000 traditional birth attendants. UNICEF assisted in efforts to provide food supplementation by distributing kits including seeds and tools in Kampuchea and in designing a project in Fiji to correct the dietary imbalance created by imported foods. Other country programmes included support to women's farm groups and small-scale family production as well as a larger-scale home gardening project. Advocacy in favour of upgrading women's education and literacy was important and UNICEF encouraged the use of newly acquired knowledge through income-generating groups. Support was also provided for upgrading the training of village health workers, community members, government officials and field workers. Substantial quantities of essential drugs, supplies and equipment were also distributed.

Malnutrition continued to be a serious problem, but the WHO/UNICEF joint nutrition support programme helped to strengthen the nutrition unit in the Burmese Department of Health. In Bangladesh, efforts centred on training over 11,000 nutrition workers, and the control of iodine deficiency diseases was advanced through strategies which supported legislation on iodating salt and the provision of iodated injections. There was also an increase in the number of wells drilled and hand-pumps installed, village volunteers were trained, and technical personnel were financed to assist a gravity-flow project at the state/division level in Burma.

On education, the regional office convened a meeting between UNICEF and UNESCO staff to assess educational interventions. It also supported research on curriculum objectives and contents, provided assistance to schools and introduced CSD concerns in primary education in several countries. In addition, UNICEF supported women's activities in the areas of female education, income generation and the advocacy of equal rights, as well as the upgrading of slums and squatter settlements through the introduction of PHC and basic social services.

UNICEF staff conducted seminars, evaluations, programme reviews and situation analyses in several areas and countries of the region. An assessment of the situation of children in especially difficult circumstances resulted in an interregional consultation at Bangkok, Thailand, and support to local and international NGOs involved in child care.

In external relations, UNICEF involvement included co-operation with the media and NGOs, the provision of technical back-up services for print and audio-visual productions, and the establishment of a new office in Singapore for the Greeting Card Operation. The regional office co-operated with many United Nations organizations and bilateral co-operation agencies and participated in a number of inter-agency task forces.

In south central Asia,<sup>(10)</sup> UNICEF activities focused on enhancing co-operation with and among NGOs and the media, the re-orientation of education, the delivery of basic services, the preventive dimensions of PHC and improved infant feeding practices beginning with maternal nutrition and including home management of childhood diarrhoea. Immunization activities included developing mobile immunization teams, initiating cold-chain equipment in regional hospitals, training community members and teachers and developing media campaigns. UNICEF also assisted in providing at least one perennial source of potable water in 80 per cent of all villages in the region. It continued the control of iodine deficiency disorders through the production and dissemination of information materials, support for a UNICEF/WHO inter-country workshop, the organization of study visits and advocacy with public health officials. Monitoring of programmes was refined to facilitate evaluation and cost-effectiveness, and improvements involved the expanded use of computers. In addition, UNICEF expanded its use of communication for programme purposes and for wider public information through a broad variety of media, including electronic formats and person-to-person forums.

North Africa and Eastern Mediterranean

With UCI-1990 as a priority, UNICEF further developed its position in the Middle East and north Africa<sup>(11)</sup> by practical approaches to social mobilization, accomplished through joint efforts with WHO and the involvement of the media as well as religious leaders and the army.

Given the diversity of the region, the regional office developed a matrix to consolidate country-specific information from the situation analysis and to guide strategy development in an effort to reduce infant mortality below 50 per 1,000 live births in the region by 1990. Further, the office responded to the need for a demand-oriented health services strategy by reinforcing support for information, education and communication (social mobilization), with attention paid to country specifics in practical campaign planning focusing on sustainability.

Joint CSD programmes were initiated with bilateral agencies, Canada, Italy, the United States Agency for International Development, the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations and the UNESCO regional office for Arab States. A comprehensive programme on breast-feeding, weaning and growth monitoring was established with the International Baby Food Action Network, and UNICEF participated in an inter-country WHO/Eastern Mediterranean regional office workshop for expanded programme of immunization (EPI) managers to set annual coverage targets for UCI-1990 and discuss strategies using an EPI planning and programming check-list developed by the regional office. Country programmes supported management of dehydration with ORT, and many promoted breast-feeding, proper weaning practices and personal hygiene. Water supply and sanitation programmes helped promote community receptivity to other CSD interventions. Progress was achieved towards more realistic identification of programmatic possibilities within countries to initiate, develop and support appropriate programmes for women, especially female literacy.

Communication and social marketing gained momentum and a training manual was developed describing the role of communication in effecting social change. A health and communication materials project relating to CSD was finalized, with materials distributed to UNICEF offices for health educational programmes and to promote the use of mass communication.

In the Sudan, UNICEF was involved in emergency operations through staffing, emergency allocations and activities in health care, nutrition surveillance, supplementary feeding, vitamin-A distribution and water supply. In south Lebanon, in addition to ongoing rehabilitation and construction, UNICEF met emergency water and sanitation needs and expedited the procurement of relief supplies for displaced persons (see p. 548).

UNICEF programmes by sector

In 1985, UNICEF programmes concentrated on bringing about a virtual revolution in CSD through growth monitoring, oral rehydration, breast-feeding, immunization, feeding, family spacing and female literacy.

The programmes aimed at: reducing infant and young child mortality; improving child development through PHC; clean water; sanitation; limitation of severe malnutrition; universal and primary education; abolition of widespread illiteracy; improving the situation of women, an essential condition to ensure CSD; and enhancing family and community capacities to prevent childhood disability and help disabled children.

As in the previous seven years, child health accounted for the largest segment of UNICEF expenditure. The table below gives details of UNICEF expenditures and commitments by sector.

Primary health care

During 1985, UNICEF continued to expand community-based activities to promote primary health care, a highest priority towards the goal of CSD, spending $82.3 million in that sector. Its assistance reached 110 countries (42 in Africa, 23 in the Americas, 32 in Asia and 13 in the Middle East and north Africa) and included grants for training, orientation and refresher courses for 154,000 health workers, technical assistance and equipment for 201,100 health centres, especially in rural areas, and medicines and vaccines against tuberculosis, diphtheria, tetanus, typhoid, measles, poliomyelitis and other diseases.

Health and nutrition of infants and young children were given the highest priority by UNICEF throughout the year. Efforts were guided by the PHC strategy. With UNICEF's assistance, national health systems increasingly put the PHC concept into practice, relying on community-based health workers' services and drawing on successful experiences in immunization and ORT—the most cost-effective means of treating and preventing diarrhoeal dehydration in infants and young children. Global supply and use of packaged ORS rose sharply in 1985. Total production world-wide increased from 173 million packets to 250 million, two thirds of which were made in some 40 developing countries in Africa, the Middle East, Asia and Latin America with UNICEF/WHO assistance.

Somalia and Morocco provided examples of the shift from conventional medical care to PHC. Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines and, to a lesser extent, Nepal decentralized their health programmes to make them community-based. Inter-sectoral approaches to PHC progressed in Kenya, Malawi, Sierra Leone, Uganda and Zambia. National immunization campaigns in Burkina Faso, Colombia and Turkey led to greater emphasis on allied PHC elements in support of CSD and revitalized the existing PHC structures or established new ones. Community participation expanded through committees in Cameroon, the Gambia and Zambia, and community volunteer movements were a significant element of the health sector in India, Indonesia, the Philippines and Sri Lanka. As part of this trend, government ministries other than health, NGOs, and professional and religious groups in a number of countries became increasingly involved in PHC development.

There were major health problems of relevance to CSD. Since acute respiratory infection (ARI) was next only to diarrhoeal disease as a cause of child deaths in developing countries, UNICEF supported ARI control programmes in Argentina, Brazil, Colombia, the Gambia, Nepal, Paraguay and Viet Nam. Malaria continued to be a major public health problem in Africa and was showing resurgence in south and South-East Asia, posing a threat to 2 billion people, with resistance to chloroquine spreading rapidly. Treatment of cases, prophylaxis during pregnancy and control of mosquito breeding grounds were among the strategies applied. Other programmes included efforts to control diarrhoeal diseases in over 75 countries, and implementation of preventive programmes which encouraged breast-feeding, safe drinking-water, hygiene and sanitation, clean preparation and storage of food, and health and nutrition education for parents.

World-wide efforts towards UCI-1990 against six childhood killer diseases (measles, poliomyelitis, diphtheria, pertussis, tetanus and tuberculosis) gathered momentum during 1985. Over 60 countries made national commitments to this effort, leading to national mobilization for immunization. UNICEF spent some $20 million on immunization in 1985 and provided about $13 million worth of vaccines.

During 1985, growth monitoring was used in conjunction with education and selective feeding, PHC, community organization and women's self-help programmes. Although few countries reached national scale, progress was impressive: Indonesia and Thailand expanded their programmes to cover over half of their children; Brazil expected to reach universal coverage by 1990; Colombia provided a growth chart to every child being immunized; and China prepared for a national growth monitoring plan. In India, some 30 million growth charts were distributed and over 6 million children were monitored regularly. Ninety or more per cent of children in Botswana, the Gambia, Maldives and Seychelles had their growth periodically checked. A consultation on growth monitoring (New York, April) suggested a step-up in global and national advocacy, sharing of information, expanding the activity in selected countries, study-and-action projects to enhance programme efficiency, and institutional support at regional and country levels.

UNICEF/WHO co-operation on essential drugs continued and some 80 countries had initiated national essential-drugs programmes, including the development of their own lists as a means of rationalizing the use of drugs within health services. UNICEF, with financial help from the Danish International Development Agency, supplied essential drugs to the United Republic of Tanzania worth $18 million, and supported programmes in Burkina Faso, Ethiopia, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Somalia through a $15-million contribution from Italy. In addition to providing increased supplies of essential drugs worth some $35 million in 1985, UNICEF and WHO assisted Governments with their essential-drug policies.

Child welfare in urban areas

In 1985, UNICEF continued expanding support to community-based activities in the urban areas of developing countries<sup>(12)</sup> with emphasis on PHC and CSD actions, including water supply and sanitation and immunization.

Urban PHC projects in many cities, for example in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, and Kabul, Afghanistan, made great progress in universal child immunization, and several, including Bangkok, Thailand, and Colombo, Sri Lanka, achieved universal immunization. In many urban basic services programmes, low-cost water supply and sanitation projects were developed in connection with diarrhoea management, since the incidence of this disease was particularly widespread in poor and congested urban settlements.

Childhood malnutrition remained a serious urban problem because of low income in a cash economy, early discontinuation of breast-feeding by working mothers, diarrhoea resulting from poor health and insanitary conditions, and the direct consequences of economic recession bearing even more heavily on the urban than the rural poor. Despite the limited space available in many cities for kitchen gardens, efforts were made to encourage urban gardening. Other measures to reduce malnutrition included immunization against measles, control of malaria, continuance of breast-feeding, birth-spacing to reduce the incidence of low birth-weight babies, supplementary food for pregnant mothers and for timely weaning, routine deworming, safe water, improved sanitation, health education and income-generating activities for women.

The presence of street children and working children in the world, a result of poverty, natural and man-made disasters and the urbanizing process, was on the increase. In Brazil, contact was maintained with some 300 community groups working directly with those children. That experience became the basis for new projects carried out in four departments of Colombia, five states of Mexico, and the two principal cities of Ecuador. Local projects were also started in Argentina and the Dominican Republic. The lessons of these countries were shared with African countries (Ethiopia, Kenya, Mozambique, Somalia) as well as with the Philippines and Thailand, resulting in new situation analyses of children's needs.

UNICEF learned that efforts to establish community-based services for the urban poor had to be complemented by assisting the rural poor through agriculture and agro-based industry so that they had fewer reasons to migrate to larger cities.

Education

UNICEF's activities in education programmes (both formal and non-formal) in 1985 reached 112 countries—42 in Africa, 29 in Asia, 28 in the Americas and 13 in the Middle East and North Africa—with a total expenditure of $32.4 million, an increase of $1.9 million over 1984. Programmes included: providing stipends for training teachers; equipping primary schools, teacher-training institutions and vocational training centres with teaching aids; and assisting countries to prepare textbooks locally by funding printing units, bookbinding and paper.

Illiteracy remained heavy in south Asia and sub-Saharan Africa. In west Asia and north Africa, primary education was expanding, but adults, particularly women, remained mostly illiterate. In east Asia, where primary enrolment was close to universal, not all children completed the cycle. In Latin America, many continued to be denied educational opportunities. UNICEF's activities, often carried out in co-operation with UNESCO, the World Bank, bilateral agencies and NGOs, were directed to qualitative improvement and efficiency in primary education, literacy and non-formal education for women and youth, supportive educational elements in other basic services and the care and education of young and pre-school children. Its support of non-formal learning for children, youth and adults, especially girls and women, continued as a strong component of basic education, with efforts to make education relevant and to reach the unserved poor. Priority attention was given to the development of three- to six-year-old children. Pre-school centres served as locations for contact, interchange and delivery of services such as immunization, growth monitoring, early detection of disability, women's literacy, economic activity, small-scale food production, sanitation activity and community education.

A joint UNICEF/UNESCO programme—the universal primary education and literacy project—funded by special contributions and initiated in 1983 to achieve education for all by the end of the century<sup>(13)</sup> was operating in Bangladesh, Bolivia, Ethiopia, Nepal, Nicaragua and Peru. The projects complemented ongoing activities to expand primary education and literacy courses for women and girls; redesign school programmes for disadvantaged groups; improve instructional materials and teachers' skills; and incorporate knowledge and activities that enhanced the health and well-being of children and their families.

Other programmes to educate parents using home-based learning methods and materials were also tried out among some disadvantaged groups and, in the Philippines, an innovative non-formal project for pre-schools among the Badjao community was started in the isolated south-westerly islands. Appropriate curricula for rural community-based programmes in Kenya, Mexico and the United Republic of Tanzania were under preparation. Projects geared to the special needs of refugee children were expanded in Lebanon, Mexico, Mozambique, Pakistan, the Sudan and Thailand.

At the April session of the Executive Board,<sup>(2)</sup> UNICEF was urged to give priority to improving the situation of women and children in Africa. Also emphasized was the importance of women's literacy and education as a means of improving their social and economic positions and of supporting child survival and development.

Nutrition

In 1985, UNICEF co-operated in nutrition programmes in 100 countries—37 in Africa, 29 in Asia, 24 in the Americas and 10 in the Middle East and north Africa—with a total expenditure of $16.6 million. Its activities included expanding nutrition programmes in 35,700 villages, equipping nutrition centres and demonstration areas, community and school orchards and gardens, and fish and poultry hatcheries, providing stipends to train 164,600 village-level nutrition workers, and delivering some 13,470 metric tons of donated foods for distribution through nutrition and emergency feeding programmes.

The five-year UNICEF/WHO joint nutrition support programme (JNSP), set up in 1982<sup>(14)</sup> and financed by Italy, supported 16 country projects: eight in Africa (Angola, Ethiopia, Mali, Mozambique, Niger, Somalia, Sudan, United Republic of Tanzania), five in the Americas (Haiti, Nicaragua, Peru, eastern Caribbean—for Dominica and Saint Vincent and the Grenadines) and three in Asia (Burma, Nepal, Pakistan), aimed at combining dietary and non-dietary measures within the broad context of PHC to reduce child mortality and morbidity and improve child development and maternal nutrition. There were encouraging signs during the year regarding the sustainability of JNSP projects and approach. For example, Burma and Nepal planned to absorb project staff salaries once JNSP resources were no longer available; in the United Republic of Tanzania, JNSP developed a community-based system to monitor children's nutritional status and provide nutritional supplementation to the malnourished; in Bolivia, it achieved success in salt iodization for human consumption and injection of iodized oil for goitre control; in Haiti, it widened the knowledge of ORT among the population; and, in Nicaragua, it mobilized political support and achieved multisectoral co-ordination.

In April, at the UNICEF Board session,<sup>(2)</sup> JNSP objectives were endorsed and the view was expressed that increased attention should be given to maternal nutrition, especially for pregnant and lactating women, since it would reduce the rate of infant deaths and complications often caused by low birth weight. The importance of the role of women as agricultural producers also was stressed and UNICEF was urged to provide them with technical resources to improve domestic food production, particularly through more direct support for strengthening household food surveys.

Water supply and sanitation

UNICEF continued in 1985 to co-operate in supplying safe water and improving sanitation in 93 countries: 36 in Africa, 21 in the Americas, 25 in Asia and 11 in the Middle East and north Africa. It completed over 92,500 water supply systems benefiting some 16.8 million persons and completed nearly 307,200 excreta disposal installations benefiting 6 million people.

UNICEF support for water supply and sanitation programmes recorded an increase in the number of hand-pumps installed, wells dug, deep tube-wells drilled, spring protections with simple gravity-feed schemes and sanitation projects completed. Beneficiaries increased by 11 per cent over 1984, with the cost of delivery being reduced considerably resulting in a 30 per cent productivity increase. In most countries, water supply projects supported by UNICEF were, in varying degrees, linked with sanitation and health education. A major breakthrough came first in the south and South-East Asian countries, followed by many African countries, led by Nigeria. Even countries with severe and persistent internal strife, such as Angola and Mozambique, were able to include strong health and education elements in their programmes.

In 1985, UNICEF became the first recipient of the Crystal Drop Award by the international Water Resources Association for excellence in bringing water resources to good use by human populations.

At the Board's April session, it was stressed that water supply and sanitation services remained a high priority in many areas and needed to be included in CSD activities, and that UNICEF assistance should focus on sanitation, hygiene and health education as well as on the provision of drilling rigs and pumps. Regarding the African crisis, the need for increased inputs for water supply and sanitation, in addition to what was provided through emergency assistance, in order to ensure positive long-term results was stressed. The importance of strengthening the role of women in water and sanitation projects was also emphasized.

UNICEF finances

Total 1985 income was almost $375 million (including $48 million for emergencies, mostly for that in Africa), compared with $332 million in 1984. Income growth came mainly from more favourable exchange rates and increases in contributions for the Africa emergency. Income from Governments accounted for 74 per cent of the total and contributions from private and other sources for 26 per cent. General resources income was $249 million, an increase over 1984 but $21 million below the planned figure for 1985.

Total expenditure in 1985 was $390 million, compared with $345 million in 1984. General resources expenditure totalled $272 million. The imbalance of $23 million between general resources income and expenditure was absorbed by movements in non-cash assets, while general resources cash balances remained stable.

The Executive Board, in April,<sup>(3)</sup> endorsed the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ)<sup>(15)</sup> regarding supplementary budget requests, whereby amounts needed were to be limited to the effects of fluctuations in exchange rates, inflation or other unforeseen developments or to cover the financial implications of specific decisions of the legislative body for which no financial provision had been made. Supplementary appropriations were not to be requested in the middle of the biennium to expand existing activities or to start new ones.

Financial plan for 1985-1988

The UNICEF financial plan for 1985-1988, set out in the 1984-1988 medium-term work plan,<sup>(3)</sup> projected an income of $390 million for 1985, and $420 million, $445 million and $470 million for the following three years. Projected expenditures for the same period were $372 million, $402 million, $425 million and $448 million, respectively.

In April,<sup>(3)</sup> the Executive Board approved the medium-term plan as a framework of projections, including the preparation of up to $190 million in programme commitments from general resources to be submitted to the Board in 1986. That amount was subject to the availability of resources and to the condition that the plan's estimates of income and expenditure would continue to be valid. As requested by the Board in 1983,<sup>(16)</sup> a revised format of UNICEF budget estimates had been submitted and approved in 1984.<sup>(17)</sup> In 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> the Board recognized that the format was an improvement, but decided that it should be further improved in line with ACABQ's recommendations.<sup>(15)</sup>

1993

In April 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Board reviewed the comments of the Board of Auditors and of ACABQ the 1983 UNICEF financial report and the financial report of the Greeting Card Operation (GCO) for the 1982/83 Season, as well as the comments made and action taken by the Executive Director in response to those observations.<sup>(19)</sup>

The Board acted on the recommendation of its Committee on Administration and finance, which met in New York from 23 to 25 April.<sup>(20)</sup>

1984

In June 1985, the United Nations Board of Auditors submitted to the General Assembly the financial statements of UNICEF, including GCO, for 1984.<sup>(21)</sup> In its September 1985 report on audited financial statements,<sup>(22)</sup> ACABQ commented on the Board's remarks.

The UNICEF Executive Board considered the 1984 financial report and statements in April 1985<sup>(2)</sup> and in December, the General Assembly—in resolution 40/238—accepted them and requested that the required remedial action be taken.

Organizational questions

Greeting Card Operation

For the fourth successive year, a downward trend was registered in sales of greeting cards. During the 1984 GCO season (1 May 1984-30 April 1985), 111.2 million cards were sold<sup>(23)</sup> compared with some 113 million the previous season. Except for North America, all regions showed increases: an additional 2.7 million cards were sold in Europe; 1 million in Asia; 0.3 million in Central and South America; 0.2 million each in Africa and the eastern Mediterranean; and 0.1 million in the south-west Pacific. Sales generated $48.5 million in gross revenues for all GCO products (cards, $39,184,000; calendars, $3,010,000; stationery, $1,769,000; educational material, $1,653,000; other products, $2,853,000), or $0.4 million higher than the previous year, yielding a net operational income of $10.1 million to UNICEF general resources, $4.7 million lower than in 1983, mainly because of a weaker operational performance due to higher production and marketing costs ($1.7 million) and exchange rate losses and other adjustments outside GCO operational control ($3 million).

The UNICEF Executive Board in April 1985<sup>(2)</sup> approved the work plan for the 1985 GCO season (1 May 1985-30 April 1986) recommended by the Executive Director,<sup>(24)</sup> in which planned card production ranged from 117 million to 137 million, expenditure from $28.9 million to $31.9 million and corresponding revenue projections from $15.8 million to $20.8 million. The Executive Director was asked to report in 1986 on the problem of sales stagnation and measures to change that trend.

Headquarters arrangements

In 1984,<sup>(25)</sup> the Executive Board had decided to lease space from the United Nations Development Corporation (UNDC) for UNICEF headquarters in a new building, to be available for occupancy in late 1986 or early 1987. Plans for the building (UNDC-III) on East 44th Street in New York City—to be known as UNICEF House—were discussed at the Board's April 1985 session,<sup>(2)</sup> at which many delegations reaffirmed their concern that UNICEF House should be modest reflecting UNICEF's mandate to serve children and women in need. It was suggested that donor countries should contribute furnishings to reduce the organization's financial burden. The secretariat was requested to prepare a proposal regarding the financing of necessary furnishings.

Following ACABQ's<sup>(15)</sup> comments that using a $4-million credit facility offered by UNDC was not the best solution, the Board approved an allocation of $2 million in the 1986-1987 budget instead of the $630,000 set aside as amortization payment. In November,<sup>(26)</sup> the Executive Director recommended, as the best alternative for financing the $5,977,500 one-time installation costs associated with the move, to accept a UNDC abatement proposal which for the first year of the lease (1 January-31 December 1987) would reduce UNICEF base rental payments by $4,581,250. That amount excluded a maximum $2 per square foot base rent contingency provided for under the lease which might be imposed by UNDC, depending on the final development and construction costs of the building. To offset the loss of rental income resulting from the rent abatement, UNDC had proposed a revised rental schedule covering the initial 15-year lease period (1987-2001) which would, except for the first year, increase UNICEF base rent by a fixed amount of $3.87 per square foot. However, ACABQ was not in favour of that proposal. In view of the need for budgetary restraint, particularly with respect to administrative expenses, ACABQ felt that the only way to deal with the one-time costs was by meeting them as they arose instead of deferring them to future years, thereby incurring additional costs.<sup>(27)</sup> It therefore recommended that the Executive Director be authorized to allocate up to $1 million, to the extent possible from within existing resources, in addition to the $2 million already appropriated. Any additional needs could be reported to the Board in 1987 in the revised 1986-1987 estimates.

Inter-agency co-operation

During 1985, UNICEF co-operation with other agencies of the United Nations system was strengthened. It participated in the UNDP resident representatives' meeting at Copenhagen, Denmark, where activities and programme areas of the two organizations were stressed, and in activities of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990). In addition, UNICEF chaired a task force on hand-pumps testing and co-chaired one on women and water with the International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women.

The Joint Consultative Group on Policy—comprising UNICEF, UNDP, UNFPA and WFP—met regularly during the year. Responding to the African emergency, UNICEF co-operated with the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa and WFP. It also continued its dialogue with the World Bank, IMF and other organizations on the human dimension of adjustment policies.

Collaboration between UNICEF and WHO was reinforced during the year. The two organizations worked closely to ensure complementary interaction between UNICEF advocacy of child survival and development in the broader context of primary health care and the WHO objective of Health for All by the Year 2000. Working agreements were reached between the regional directors of the two organizations for Africa and the Middle East/eastern Mediterranean regions. Co-operation with UNESCO continued on education, health education, nutrition, education for child survival, appropriate technology, water and sanitation, with special emphasis on female education, improving external and internal efficiency and education for child survival and development. UNICEF also collaborated with ILO in analysing the situation of working children and factors affecting the well-being of children and women.

Draft Declaration on adoption and foster placement

The question of a draft Declaration on adoption and foster placement of children was again taken up by the General Assembly in 1985.

In October, the Netherlands, the Philippines, Sweden and Venezuela addressed a letter<sup>(28)</sup> to the Secretary-General stating that, on the Netherlands initiative, consultations had been held in New York from 16 to 27 September between Member States representing different legal systems concerning the draft Declaration on Social and Legal Principles relating to the Protection and Welfare of Children, with Special Reference to Foster Placement and Adoption, Nationally and Internationally. In 1984,<sup>(29)</sup> the Assembly had appealed to States to hold the consultations. In a report annexed to the October letter, the Chairman of the consultations stated that he was able to submit a revised draft Declaration offering a good prospect for consensus.

The draft Declaration had originally been prepared by a group of experts in response to a 1975 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(30)</sup> and was submitted to the Council in 1979.<sup>(31)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 11 December 1985, the General Assembly, acting on the Sixth Committee's recommendation, adopted decision 40/422 by which it decided that the Committee would hold informal consultations at the beginning of the 1986 Assembly session to consider the remaining questions with a view to adopting the draft Declaration at that time.

Youth

After six years of planning, 1985 was commemorated by the United Nations system as International Youth Year (IYY) to bring about awareness of the situation of young people between the ages of 15 and 24. The culmination of the Year came with a series of meetings of the General Assembly, designated as the United Nations World Conference for IYY, which adopted guidelines for follow-up concerning youth beyond the Year. Because of the guidelines' importance towards developing national youth policies, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1985/23, and the Assembly, in resolution 40/14, called for their implementation by Governments and organizations at all levels. In resolution 40/16, the Assembly called on States to increase work opportunities for young people and, in resolution 40/17, it invited the Secretary-General further to improve communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations. In resolution 40/15, it made a further call for the implementation of its previous resolutions on human rights relating to youth, particularly regarding education and work, as did the Council, which also stressed the right to life, in adopting resolution 1985/27.

Youth in the 1980s

The situation of youth in the 1980s was examined by the Secretary-General in a January 1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> to the General Assembly. The report, transmitted through the Economic and Social Council at its 1983 request,<sup>(2)</sup> provided an overview of the global situation of youth near the mid-point of the decade. With the world's youth population-estimated at 922 million and constituting 19.4 per cent of the total population-projected to exceed 1 billion towards the end of the decade, the Secretary-General outlined, from a regional and sectoral perspective, the major problems confronting young people in regard to development, the family, the world of work and culture. Although the situation of youth varied from country to country and from one region to another, that should not prevent their problems being considered within a global perspective, through which many problems affecting youth at the national level could be better appreciated and remedial action taken. The Secretary-General recommended that Governments continue their efforts to develop integrated youth policies and that the momentum generated by IYY be maintained.

The report was considered at the February 1985 session of the Commission for Social Development,<sup>(3)</sup> which agreed that IYY provided an opportunity for increasing global awareness of youth problems.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1985/23 without vote.

Youth in the contemporary world

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting with great interest the importance attached by the General Assembly and other United Nations bodies to the concerns of youth,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/16 of 9 May 1979, 1981/16 of 6 May 1981 and 1983/14 of 26 May 1983 on youth in the contemporary world, and General Assembly resolution 39/22 of 23 November 1984 on the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Noting with satisfaction that the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples, continues to provide a useful basis and incentive for further action in the field of youth, at the national, regional and international levels,

Convinced that the preservation and strengthening of international peace and security are prerequisites for a secure and happy future for the youth of all countries,

Recognizing the importance of integrating young people into the overall life of society and of taking fully into account their special needs when formulating national plans and programmes,

Reaffirming the necessity of intensifying and consolidating the efforts of the United Nations so as to give effect to a co-ordinated and practical approach to the youth programmes of all the United Nations agencies involved, as well as strengthening co-operation with non-governmental youth organizations or organizations dealing directly with youth,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of youth in the 1980s;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to ensure appropriate publicity for that report in the context of the activities undertaken for the observance of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

3. Decides that the Commission for Social Development should consider at its thirtieth session ways and means by which it could more effectively deal with youth issues within the appropriate guidelines to be prepared by the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year and approved by the General Assembly on the occasion of the observance of the International Youth Year;

4. Decides to include the theme "Youth in the contemporary world" in the provisional agenda for the thirtieth session of the Commission under the appropriate item and that the Commission should consider a preliminary report of the Secretary-General on the appraisal of the results of the International Youth Year.

Activities of the UN system

The Secretary-General, in an April 1985 report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(4)</sup> described action by the United Nations system and other organizations to facilitate co-ordination and information in the field of youth. The report, prepared in accordance with a 1984 Council resolution,<sup>(5)</sup> was based on information received from those bodies on progress achieved and activities undertaken in the context of IYY.

With preparations for IYY intensifying and improving the co-ordination of efforts concerning youth, networks were organized to streamline co-operation and communication. It was necessary to follow up and enlarge upon the experience gained, the Secretary-General said. In addition, the co-ordination of efforts at the national level should be continued during implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in regard to youth (see p. 978). The Secretary-General stressed that national co-ordinating mechanisms should be encouraged to increase further the involvement of young people in their activities, and he urged that channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and their organizations be strengthened (see p. 980).

Recommendations for youth involvement in environmental issues were made at an African Workshop on Youth for the Environment (Nairobi, 25 and 26 November), organized by the United Nations Environment Programme (see p. 793).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1985/30 without vote.

Co-ordination and information in the field of youth

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/27 of 9 May 1979, 1980/25 of 2 May 1980, 1981/25 of 6 May 1981, 1982/28 of 4 May 1982, 1983/26 of 26 May 1983 and 1984/44 of 21 May 1984, on co-ordination and information in the field of youth,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 34/151 of 17 December 1979, 36/28 of 13 November 1981, 37/48 of 3 December 1982, 38/22 of 22 November 1983 and 39/22 of 23 November 1984 on the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Considering that the process of preparation and observance of the International Youth Year, on the basis of the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during the International Youth Year, of the recommendations made by the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year and endorsed by the General Assembly, and of the relevant recommendations of the five regional meetings devoted to the International Youth Year held in 1983, has contributed to intensifying and improving the co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations and specialized agencies relating to youth,

Convinced of the importance of giving widespread publicity to the activities of the United Nations in the field of youth, especially in the context of the observance of the International Youth Year,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and information in the field of youth,

1. Endorses the conclusions contained in the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and information in the field of youth;

2. Invites again all United Nations bodies, specialized agencies, regional commissions and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as non-governmental organizations concerned, to consider at their regular meetings appropriate ways and means for the improvement of co-ordination and information in the field of youth in the context of the observance of the International Youth Year and of the follow-up of future programmes devoted to youth;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take all necessary measures for the successful organization of the appropriate number of plenary meetings at the fortieth session of the General Assembly, in 1985, designated as the United Nations Conference for the International Youth Year, in accordance with paragraph 2 of General Assembly resolution 39/22;

4. Decides to consider at its first regular session of 1986, on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General, the achievements in co-ordination and information in the field of youth.

International Youth Year

International Youth Year, with its theme of participation, development and peace, was observed by the United Nations in 1985.

Marking the twentieth anniversary of the Declaration on the Promotion among Youth of the Ideals of Peace, Mutual Respect and Understanding between Peoples, <sup>(6)</sup> IYY was commemorated by the General Assembly at six plenary meetings held between 13 and 18 November—designated as the United Nations World Conference for IYY.

The Assembly had proclaimed 1985 as IYY in 1979 and at the same time set up an intergovernmental Advisory Committee for the Year.<sup>(7)</sup>

The Committee's report on its fourth session (Vienna, Austria, 25 March-3 April 1985) was submitted to the Assembly by the Secretary General.<sup>(8)</sup> As decided by the Assembly in 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> the Committee prepared a set of guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth by Governments, the United Nations system and other organizations, especially youth organizations, so as to encourage action in keeping with IYY objectives, and in particular: to enhance awareness of the situation of youth and to increase recognition of youth rights and aspirations on the part of decision-makers and the general public; to promote youth policies as an integral part of social and economic development; to enhance the participation of youth and youth organizations in society, particularly in promoting and achieving development and peace; and to promote among youth the ideals of peace, mutual respect and understanding among people.

In an October 1985 report<sup>(10)</sup> requested by the Advisory Committee,<sup>(11)</sup> the Secretary-General informed the Assembly that 158 national co-ordinating committees or other similar structures had been formed, making IYY unique among international events. Considerable interest had been created in the general situation of youth, and the young themselves were involved in preparing for and observing the Year. The report pointed out that general commitment of the cause of youth came from the manifold activities of NGOs at all levels, which had contributed significantly to the outcome of IYY. In addition, the co-ordinated efforts of various intergovernmental organizations and the United Nations system, including its regional commissions, had made a major contribution. Achievements were accomplished by maximizing the use of existing resources.

While there was little doubt about the successful outcome of IYY—whose preparations had been under way since 1980—the Secretary-General stressed that its success was not permanent. There was a need to consolidate what had been achieved and to build further on it, and the guidelines for further planning recommended by the Advisory Committee provided the general parameters within which youth policies, plans or activities could operate in accordance with each country's priorities. The guidelines envisaged continuing the Trust Fund for IYY after 1985, as a part of the larger attempt to increase technical co-operation activities commensurate with the needs of youth in the developing countries and particularly those in the least developed countries. Therefore, the Secretary-General recommended that the Fund be renamed the United Nations Youth Fund to deal with activities beyond the Year.

The Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in its annual overview report for 1984/85,<sup>(12)</sup> recommended strengthening IYY inter-agency co-operation in four main areas: public information; support to national co-ordinating committees; inter-agency co-ordination at the regional level; and the future of inter-agency co-ordination at the global level. It also agreed that publicity be continued and that Channels, the IYY secretariat's monthly publication, be more widely distributed through each agency's local, national and regional channels.

In communications to the Secretary-General, the following countries reported on activities relating to IYY. Democratic-Yemen (30 May): a statement delivered to its youth on the occasion of IYY.<sup>(13)</sup> Morocco (22 August): a statement by King Hassan II and an address delivered by Pope John Paul II at Casablanca on 19 August.<sup>(14)</sup> Romania (11 September): the joint statement of the World Conference of National Committees for IYY, Bucharest, 3-6 September.<sup>(15)</sup> Spain (18 October): the Barcelona Statement adopted by the World Congress on Youth held under UNESCO auspices, 8-15 July.<sup>(16)</sup> Ivory Coast (22 October): a message to its youth on the occasion of the formal opening of IYY.<sup>(17)</sup> Ecuador (5 November)<sup>(18)</sup> and Poland (13 November)<sup>(19)</sup> their respective messages in connection with the United Nations World Conference for IYY. USSR: (18 June) its reply to a questionnaire on the Specific Programme of Measures and Activities to be undertaken prior to and during IYY;<sup>(20)</sup> (9 May) the measures carried out to stimulate Soviet youth participation in politics, socio-economics and culture;<sup>(21)</sup> (12 August) the appeal of the XII World Festival of Youth and Students (Moscow, 27 July-3 August) to youth and students of the world;<sup>(22)</sup> and (8 October) the results of the Festival.<sup>(23)</sup> Jamaica (23 May): the Kingston Declaration of Principles adopted by the International Youth Conference, 6-9 April.<sup>(24)</sup> Uruguay (1 October): the report of the second Latin American and Caribbean Regional Meeting for IYY, Montevideo, 26-29 August.<sup>(25)</sup> Hungary (23 October): the report of the European Meeting on Co-operation in the Field of Youth Policies,

Budapest, 26-30 September.<sup>(26)</sup> German Democratic Republic (14 November): a report on IYY activities.<sup>(27)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted resolution 40/14 without vote.

International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace

The General Assembly, acting as United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year,

Recognising the profound importance of the direct participation of youth in shaping the future of mankind and the valuable contribution that youth can make in all sectors of society, as well as its willingness to express its ideas concerning the building of a better and more just world in which it can attain the objectives of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Considering it necessary to disseminate among youth the ideals of peace, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, human solidarity and dedication to the objectives of progress and development,

Convinced that youth should be encouraged to contribute its energies, enthusiasm and creative abilities to the task of nation-building, the observance of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the realization of the right to self-determination and national independence, the respect for sovereignty and non-interference in the internal affairs of each State, the economic, social and cultural advancement of peoples, the implementation of a new international economic order and the promotion of international co-operation and understanding to achieve the objectives of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Recognizing the important role of United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and the regional commissions in promoting international co-operation in the field of youth and recognizing that they should continue to give more attention to the role of young people in the world of today, to their ideas and initiatives and to their demands for the world of tomorrow.

Convinced that the preparation for and observance in 1985 of the International Youth Year with the motto "Participation, Development, Peace" have offered a useful and significant opportunity for drawing attention to the situation and the specific needs and aspirations of youth, for increasing co-operation at all levels in dealing with youth issues, for undertaking concerted action programmes in favour of youth and for improving the participation of young people in the study, decision-making processes and resolution of major national, regional and international problems,

Bearing in mind that the International Youth Year has served to mobilize efforts at the local, national, regional and international levels in order to promote the best educational, professional and living conditions for young people, to ensure their active participation in the overall development of society and to encourage their participation in the preparation of new national and local policies and programmes in accordance with the experience, conditions and priorities of each country,

Conscious that the International Youth Year has contributed to strengthening the rights, the ability and the willingness of young people to participate in all activities relevant to them and to promote their own interests,

Commending the organizers of international youth conferences and festivals and other specific activities devoted to the International Youth Year for the results of those events inspired by the motto of the International Youth Year, "Participation, Development, Peace",

Noting with satisfaction the outcome of the World Congress on Youth, held at Barcelona, Spain, from 8 to 15 July 1985 under the auspices of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Mindful that national committees or other mechanisms to facilitate the planning, implementation and co-ordination of the activities related to the preparation for and observance of the International Youth Year have been established in a majority of States,

Convinced that the timely and significant impetus generated by the activities of the International Youth Year should be maintained and reinforced with appropriate follow-up action at all levels,

Expressing its appreciation to the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year and to the United Nations Secretariat for their important contribution to the whole process of preparation and observance of the International Youth Year,

Having considered the report of the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year on its fourth session, held at Vienna from 25 March to 3 April 1985,

Having considered also the report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the guidelines and additional guidelines for the improvement of channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations,

1. Endorses the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth as contained in the report of the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year on its fourth session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth to all States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and regional commissions, as well as to other international organizations concerned;

3. Calls upon all States, all United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, regional commissions and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular youth organizations, to exert all possible efforts for the implementation of the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, in accordance with their experience, conditions and priorities;

4. Urges all States to make every effort to consolidate and build further on the results of the International Youth Year;

5. Considers that, as the case may be, the continuing of national committees and other appropriate co-ordination measures at the national level devoted to the International Youth Year could be usefully considered, and notes with satisfaction the intention of national committees in many countries to ensure a proper follow-up, including adequate funding and the integration of the results of the Year into future activities and policies in order to continue to pursue the objectives of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

6. Requests the appropriate United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies to consider taking up in their programmes every year one or more specific youth-related projects to be elaborated in close co-operation with non-governmental youth organizations on such themes as communication, housing, culture, youth employment and education;

7. Recommends that the Secretary-General keep under review the youth element in the programmes of appropriate United Nations bodies and the specialized agencies;

8. Requests the Commission for Social Development to examine, on a regular basis, specific youth issues, in keeping with the objectives of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

9. Stresses again the importance of the active and direct participation of youth and youth organizations in the activities organized at the local, national, regional and international levels in the field of youth;

10. Emphasizes the importance of improving the active use of the channels of communication between the United Nations system and youth organizations, at both the national and international levels;

11. Invites Governments again to consider the regular inclusion of youth representatives in their national delegations to the General Assembly and other relevant United Nations meetings;

12. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session an item entitled "Policies and programmes involving young people: Participation, Development, Peace" and to evaluate, in this framework, the results of the International Youth Year on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General.

On 16 December, the Assembly, in resolution 40/164 A, urged the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat to ensure the dissemination of information on the guidelines.

Strengthening communication between youth and the United Nations

Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth had been operating for a number of years. To improve these channels further, the General Assembly in 1984<sup>(28)</sup> had requested the Secretary-General to report on implementation of 1977<sup>(29)</sup> and 1981<sup>(30)</sup> guidelines on the topic.

Responding in October 1985,<sup>(31)</sup> the Secretary-General described developments in implementing the guidelines. Preparations for IYY had resulted in increased communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations. Many Governments had included information on the United Nations system in the educational curricula of schools and universities; young people often obtained their first knowledge of the United Nations from these programmes. In that way, educational systems had served as primary, if perhaps unrecognized, channels of communication. Several Governments had also established programmes to facilitate the participation of youth delegates in intergovernmental meetings dealing with youth issues. Such delegates were present at several regional meetings devoted to IYY, at sessions of the Advisory Committee and at General Assembly meetings. In addition, United Nations bodies and NGOs had found innovative ways of mobilizing efforts at all levels in carrying out specific youth programmes. Consideration needed to be given to finding ways to maintain the strong commitment to improving channels of communication and to strengthening co-operation in regard to youth. The dissemination and promotion of the guidelines, prepared by the Advisory Committee for further planning and suitable follow-up concerning youth (see p. 978), required a strengthening of communication channels which, to be more effective, should focus on information dealing with peace and international co-operation, development, employment, environment, and culture and leisure.

Therefore, the Secretary-General suggested the following measures to strengthen those channels: NGOs concerned with youth activities, particularly those at national and regional levels, should apply for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council; involving the family as an information channel should be encouraged; the role of educational institutions in channelling information should be strengthened; use of film and video should be increased; and the translation of information on youth into more languages should be encouraged.

In reply to a questionnaire by the Secretary-General on improving the channels of communication in question, the USSR (17 June) gave its suggestions.<sup>(32)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 40/17 without vote.

Channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/135 of 16 December 1977 and 36/17 of 9 November 1981, in which it adopted guidelines for the improvement of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and also recalling its resolution 39/24 of 23 November 1984,

Bearing in mind the importance of the existence of effective channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations as a necessary instrument for the information of young people and their participation in the work of the United Nations and the specialized agencies at the national, regional and international levels, and also for informing the United Nations of the problems facing youth with a view to finding solutions to such problems,

Taking note with appreciation of the reports of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the guidelines and additional guidelines for the improvement of channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations and on the situation of youth in the 1980s

Taking note of the report of the Advisory Committee for the international Youth Year on its fourth session, held at Vienna from 25 March to 3 April 1985,

Taking note further of the outcome of the youth conferences and meetings held during 1985 in observance of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Convinced that the effective and proper functioning of the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations forms a basic prerequisite for the active involvement of young people in the work of the United Nations,

Convinced further that the participation of youth representatives from Member States in international conferences and meetings dealing with youth-related issues can enhance and strengthen the channels of communication through the discussion of such issues, with a view to finding solutions to problems confronting youth in the contemporary world,

1. Calls upon Member States, United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and other governmental and intergovernmental organizations to implement fully the guidelines relating to the channels of communication adopted by the General Assembly in its resolutions 32/135 and 36/17, not only in general terms but also by concrete measures reflecting the issues of importance to young people;

2. Invites the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to make use of, further improve and, if possible, extend the existing channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations;

3. Calls upon national youth mechanisms that have been set up by youth and youth organizations at the national, regional and interregional levels to continue to act as channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, and, where such mechanisms do not exist, recommends that national co-ordinating committees of the International Youth Year should continue to act as channels of communication;

4. Takes note of the recommendations on the channels of communication between the United Nations and youth and youth organizations, as contained in the report of the Secretary-General;

5. Decides to consider at its forty-first session the item entitled "Policies and programmes relating to youth", on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General.

Integrating youth in development and society

During consideration of the situation of youth in the 1980s (see p. 976) by the Commission for Social Development in February 1985,<sup>(3)</sup> several representatives referred to the serious consequences of the international economic situation for youth, particularly with regard to unemployment, and expressed the view that special efforts should be directed to diminishing its harmful effects. The need to develop job opportunities in rural areas and the necessity of establishing a closer conjunction between education, training and employment were also stressed. The formulation of national youth policies that were capable of an integrated solution of youth problems was also underlined.

On 15 October,<sup>(33)</sup> Canada forwarded to the Secretary-General the resolutions adopted at the seventh-fourth Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Ottawa, 2-5 September), among which was one on the full exercise of the right of youth to education, vocational training, work and social security.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1985/27 without vote.

Efforts and measures for securing the implementation and enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the rights to life, education and work

The Economic and Social Council,

Drawing attention to the exceptional importance of all forms of assistance in the large-scale integration of young people into the social and economic development of their respective countries on the basis of ensuring the economic, social, cultural, political and civil rights of youth, in particular the rights to life, education and work, in conditions of peace,

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure full enjoyment by youth of the rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, in the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with special regard for the rights to life, education and work, in conditions of peace,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 36/29 of 13 November 1981, 37/49 of 3 December 1982 and 38/23 of 22 November 1983, and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1979/16 of 9 May 1979, 1981/16 of 6 May 1981 and 1983/17 of 26 May 1983, in which, inter alia, the need to adopt appropriate measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the rights to life, education and work, is recognized,

Considering that the fortieth anniversary of the victory in the Second World War occurs in 1985 and should serve to mobilize efforts and measures for the implementation and enjoyment by youth of the rights to life, education and work,

Convinced that youth can make a valuable contribution to efforts to create a new international economic order,

Recognising that in many countries the majority of young people, under the prevailing conditions of social and economic crisis, are facing serious problems in the exercise of their rights, particularly the rights to life, education and work,

Aware of the fact that insufficient education and the unemployment of young people limits their ability to participate in the development process and, in this regard, emphasizing the importance of the secondary and higher education of young people, and their access to appropriate technical, vocational guidance and training programmes,

1. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations, interested United Nations bodies and specialized agencies to continue to give priority to the formulation and implementation of effective measures for securing the exercise by youth of the rights to life, education and work, in conditions of peace;

2. Notes with concern that there are at present a rapidly growing number of unemployed young people in the world, many of whom have never had work, and that with the growth of unemployment it is becoming increasingly difficult to ensure the basic social and economic rights of youth, especially the rights to life, education and work;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to take into account the views expressed in the Commission for Social Development concerning ways and means of realizing the rights of youth, in particular the rights to life, education and work, and also the provisions of the present resolution, in the preparation of documentation for the forthcoming session of the Advisory Committee for the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace;

4. Requests the Commission for Social Development to consider at its thirtieth session the progress achieved in connection with the participation of young people in the development of their respective countries and in the realization and exercise of their rights to life, education and work, in conditions of peace.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/27

29 May 1985 Meeting 23 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1) without vote 17 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1985/24 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 November, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions dealing with youth, both on the recommendation of the Third Committee.

The Assembly adopted resolution 40/15 without vote.

Efforts and measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/29 of 13 November 1981, 37/49 of 3 December 1982, 38/23 of 22 November 1983 and 39/23 of 23 November 1984, in which it, inter alia, recognized the need to adopt appropriate measures for securing the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work,

Recalling also its resolution 34/151 of 17 December 1979, by which it decided to designate 1985 as International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace,

Convinced that it is necessary to ensure full enjoyment by youth of the rights stipulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, with special regard to the right to education and to work,

Aware of the fact that insufficient education and the unemployment of young people limit their ability to participate in the development process, and, in this regard, emphasizing the importance of secondary and higher education for young people, as well as access for them to appropriate technical and vocational guidance and training programmes,

Expressing its serious interest in consolidating and building further on the results of the International Youth Year in order to contribute, inter alia, to the increasing participation of young people in the socio-economic life of their country,

1. Calls upon all States, all governmental and non-governmental organizations and the interested bodies of the United Nations and the specialized agencies to pay continuous attention, in further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth, to the implementation of General Assembly resolutions 36/29, 37/49, 38/23 and 39/23 relating to efforts and measures aimed at the promotion of human rights and their enjoyment by youth, particularly the right to education and vocational training and to work, with a view to resolving the problem of unemployment among youth;

2. Requests the Commission for Social Development, in examining specific youth issues, to pay adequate attention to the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work;

3. Invites national organs of co-ordination or organs implementing policies and programmes in the field of youth to give appropriate priority in the activities to be undertaken after the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace to the implementation and the enjoyment by youth of human rights, particularly the right to education and to work.

The Assembly adopted resolution 40/16 without vote.

Opportunities for youth

The General Assembly,

Mindful of the need to secure the employment of youth, which is a concern of global character,

Seriously concerned about the widespread lack of satisfactory integration of young people into the workplace in many countries,

Aware that the solid educational and vocational background of young people is of paramount importance in their aspirations to enter professional life,

Noting that many young people, having finished compulsory or primary education, do not enter any institution of higher education or vocational training, or, after beginning such education or training, are unable to complete it, and find it increasingly difficult to be suitably employed,

Seriously concerned that in a number of developing countries, particularly in the least developed ones, a substantial part of the school-age population has a limited possibility of receiving any kind of education, especially among the poor in both rural and urban areas,

Bearing in mind that in many developing countries the widespread lack of opportunity to receive appropriate education and training thus remains a serious impediment to the participation of youth in the development of their societies and to the attainment of the goals set out in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recognizing that greater awareness should be brought about by Governments and in the economic sectors in order to accord the highest priority to the elimination of youth unemployment where it exists,

Further recognizing that industrialization should duly take into account the requirements of the promotion of employment, especially for youth,

Taking note of the intention of the Government of Austria to organize and act as host to an international symposium of experts on the questions referred to below, to be held at Vienna in the spring of 1987,

Recalling the results and achievements of the International Youth Year: Participation, Development, Peace, in particular the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth,

1. Calls upon Member States to lend increased attention to programmes to combat illiteracy and to young people who, after having finished compulsory or primary education, do not enter institutions of higher education or vocational training, or who, after beginning such education or training, are unable to complete it;

2. Invites Member States to consider steps to enable more young people to begin and complete higher education or vocational training;

3. Urges Member States to dedicate, whenever possible, more resources, through increased technical co-operation activities, to narrowing the gap between demand for and supply of educational and training opportunities at all levels in developing countries, particularly in the least developed ones, and thus to contribute to the achievement of greater equality of employment opportunities for young people in those countries;

4. Calls upon Member States to promote a better awareness of the need to preserve, whenever possible, and to increase work opportunities for young people of both sexes, with particular emphasis on equal opportunities for girls and young women;

5. Recommends to Member States that they should promote initiatives whereby new demands, fields or types of occupation are explored, including the fields of protection of the environment, agro-industries and other natural resource-based industries, new technologies as well as "alternative employment opportunities";

6. Invites Member States to examine more closely the consequences that the introduction of new technologies in developed and developing countries alike may have with regard to the number of work opportunities, especially for young people, and to find ways to offset any possible adverse consequences, ensuring that such technologies are only introduced in a socially compatible manner;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report on the implementation of the long-term plan of action on youth, to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, a detailed analysis of the results of the symposium to be held at Vienna.

Aging persons

The question of the aging-persons aged 60 and over-continued to be discussed during 1985 in the context of implementing the Vienna International Plan of Action on Aging adopted by the 1982 World

Assembly on Aging<sup>(1)</sup> and endorsed by the General Assembly in the same year.<sup>(2)</sup> The Plan's primary aim was to assist States to deal with the needs of the elderly. The Commission for Social Development, which had been entrusted with the implementation review every four years, undertook its first review in 1985, taking into account a study on the world aging situation estimating that by the year 2025 over 70 per cent of persons aged 60 years and above would live in less developed regions. The Commission identified priorities for action, such as creating national committees on aging, Co-ordinated planning, and strengthening of Information exchange, training, research and education programmes.

The Economic and Social Council (in resolution 1985/28) and the Assembly (in resolutions 40/29 and 40/30) requested Governments and Organizations to promote the Plan of Action, and called for increased contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging. The Assembly also requested the Secretary-General, in implementing the programme on aging, to pay special attention to the question of elderly women and to respond favourably to a request by the African Regional Conference on Aging (Dakar, Senegal, December 1984) for assistance in establishing an African gerontological society.

Study on the world aging situation. In a study prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA), it was estimated that, by the year 2025, only 25 per cent of the world's population would be in the 0-14 age group and nearly 14 per cent in the 60-plus group, compared With 1980 when the figures were 35 and 8.5 per cent. respectively. The number of persons 60 years of age and above was projected to jump from some 375 million in 1980 to more than 1 billion in 2025, with over 70 per cent living in less developed regions. The study, which brought together data from an abundance of literature stimulated by the 1982 World Assembly, focused on demographic concepts and developmental and humanitarian issues.

Implementation of the Plan of Action

As entrusted by the Assembly in 1982,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission for Social Development undertook in February 1985<sup>(4)</sup> the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging. The Commission had before it a report<sup>(5)</sup> by the Secretary-General, who stated that, in general, the first review indicated that efforts to implement the Plan had succeeded in improving world-wide understanding of the economic, social and cultural implications for the processes of development of the aging of the population, as well as of the related humanitarian and developmental issues.

The Secretary-General suggested further action to ensure the Plan's implementation. He urged Governments to establish a focal point for aging within the national office responsible for population in order to promote national co-ordination of aging questions among agencies dealing with developmental and humanitarian issues, including health, housing and the environment, consumer protection, social welfare, income security and employment and education. In addition, to respond to the need expressed by Governments in every region, it was essential that resources be strengthened for promoting policies on aging through information exchange, data collection and analysis, training and education and research. Taking into consideration the disparity between the current resources of the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging and the number of requests for assistance, it was essential that its resources be strengthened to meet the rapidly increasing needs of the aging in the developing countries, particularly in the least developed. In view of its expertise, the involvement of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) on aging questions should be strengthened to provide resources for technical co-operation activities, and the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs (CSDHA) of DIESA should continue its role as the United Nations focal point in promoting the Plan's implementation.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 29 May, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its Second Committee, adopted resolution 1985/28 without vote.

First review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, in which the Assembly endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging adopted by the World Assembly on Aging, and requested the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission for Social Development, to review the implementation of the Plan of Action every four years, beginning in 1985,

Mindful of the International Plan of Action on Aging, in which, inter alia, it is pointed out that various problems of older people can find their real solution under conditions of peace,

Reaffirming General Assembly resolution 39/25 of 23 November 1984, in which the Assembly recognized the increasing awareness of issues related to aging in many countries and of the need to provide national authorities, at their request, with technical and financial assistance in their efforts to implement policies and programmes,

Noting with appreciation the efforts made by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to implement the principles and recommendations contained in the International Plan of Action on Aging and described in the report of the Secretary-General on the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 39/228 of 18 December 1984, in which the Assembly endorsed the report of the International Conference on Population, containing the recommendations for the further implementation of the World Population Plan of Action, in recommendation 58 of which Governments were urged to reaffirm their commitment to the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging,

Recalling also the reaffirmation in General Assembly resolution 39/228 of the need to pay attention to specific problems of population structures,

Reaffirming further General Assembly resolution 39/25, in which the Secretary-General was urged to include advisory services to developing countries that requested them in technical co-operation programmes,

Recalling further that the General Assembly, in resolution 37/51, requested the Secretary-General to continue to use the United Nations Trust Fund for the World Assembly on Aging to meet the rapidly increasing needs of the aging in the developing countries, in particular in the least developed ones,

Convinced that the Trust Fund has a unique contribution to make and a catalytic role to play in the technical co-operation field to implement the goals and recommendations of the International Plan of Action on Aging and to promote innovative and experimental activities in the field of aging,

Stressing the need for close and continuous working relationships between the Trust Fund and those bodies, organs and organizations of the United Nations system concerned with the question of aging, and the need for the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat to continue its role as the focal point for promoting the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging,

Expressing its appreciation to those Governments and non-governmental organizations which, through their contributions, have upheld the vital role of the Trust Fund,

Noting with concern the disparity between the current resources of the Trust Fund and the large number of requests for assistance, and the fact that the Trust Fund has not been able to consider all the deserving requests for technical assistance received owing to the minimal contributions received during the last two years,

Noting with appreciation the continuing support of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities for population assistance in the field of aging,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging;

2. Urges Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to strengthen their efforts to implement the principles and objectives of the International Plan of Action on Aging;

3. Invites Governments to strengthen or establish mechanisms, when necessary, to facilitate the co-ordinated planning and implementation of activities in the field of aging and, where appropriate, to establish a focal point for aging within the national office responsible for population activities;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to ensure a well co-ordinated system-wide response for the implementation of the Plan of Action at the national, regional and international levels;

5. Urges Governments and governmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as the specialized agencies, to exchange information and experience concerning the adoption of measures to meet the needs of the elderly, including those who contributed to the victory which ended the Second World War;

6. Affirm the role of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat as a focal point for the exchange of such experience between the organizations of the United Nations system;

7. Reaffirms the importance of the provisions of the International Plan of Action on Aging regarding the necessity of halting the arms race and rechanneling the resources spent for military purposes to the needs of economic and social development, particularly for the improvement of the social status of the elderly;

8. Urges the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure that advisory and other services to developing countries that request them are provided to the extent feasible in technical co-operation programmes and/or through the resources of the Trust Fund for Aging;

9. Urges the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, as a leading organization in international population assistance, to sustain its financial support for technical co-operation activities in respect of aging, particularly in view of the importance given to that issue by the International Conference on Population in its recommendations for the further implementation of the World Population Plan of Action;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to take concrete measures on an urgent basis to promote the financial viability and effectiveness of the Trust Fund;

11. Urges Governments and non-governmental organizations to continue and, where possible, to increase their contributions to the Trust Fund, and calls upon Governments and non-governmental organizations that have not yet done so to consider contributing to the Trust Fund;

12. Requests the Secretary-General, in order to facilitate contributions by Governments, to include the Trust Fund, on an annual basis, among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities;

13. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution, in particular on the measures and steps he has taken to further develop the Trust Fund.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/28

29 May 1985 Meeting 23 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (M/1985/96 & Corr.1) Without vote, 17 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1985/24 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

In an October 1985 report<sup>(6)</sup> to the General Assembly on implementing the International Plan of Action on Aging as assessed in the first review and appraisal, the Secretary-General, as requested in 1984,<sup>(7)</sup> transmitted his findings. He said that the review showed, at the national level, that progress had been made since 1982 but that opportunities remained limited for the Plan's implementation because of the world economic situation, which had been marked by slow economic growth, inflation, growing unemployment, curbs on government spending for social programmes and, in many developing countries, heightened poverty and hunger spurred by economic decline and population growth. Responding to a questionnaire, 72 countries had indicated that their national committees were facilitating the planning, implementation and co-ordination of activities recommended in the Plan, and that such activities included convening national conferences, improving delivery systems for the elderly and developing their income security systems.

At the international and regional levels, the information exchange network on aging had been strengthened and included some 60 organizations representing all world regions. Concerning the exchange of information and experience, the Secretary-General referred to an interregional seminar (Kiev, Ukrainian SSR, 6-22 September 1985)<sup>(8)</sup> to promote the Plan's implementation which, in addition to United Nations agencies and NGOs, was attended by developing countries. Regarding research and training, reference was made to the study on the world aging situation,<sup>(3)</sup> analysing aging trends, summarizing information on the conditions and needs of the aging in diverse regions, and presenting national policies developed to respond to the developmental and humanitarian implications of the aging of populations. The increased coverage and circulation of the quarterly Bulletin on Aging reflected the growing volume of United Nations information exchange activities on aging. In addition, the annual Periodical on Aging, published by the United Nations, provided scholarly information to policy-makers, planners, human service practitioners and researchers.

The Trust Fund for Aging continued to support technical co-operation projects for the formulation and implementation of programmes on aging. During 1985, six projects-at the national, regional and international levels-were financed on various subjects: needs-assessment surveys, policy elaboration, research, formal and informal training, and seminars to exchange knowledge and experience on questions pertaining to the aging. Particular attention was given to technical co-operation among developing countries as well as to communication and dissemination of information. The Secretary-General reported that, despite his appeals and promotional efforts, voluntary contributions during 1984-1985 had failed to reach a level comparable to that of 1982-1983. In view of the number of projects pending approval, he intended to continue to promote the Fund as an essential instrument for realizing the goals of the Plan of Action. To that end, the Trust Fund had been included in the November 1985 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see p. 463), as requested by the Economic and Social Council in resolution 1985/28. Contributions in 1985 totalled $19,830, including $8,000 in pledges. The balance available as at 31 December 1985 was $467,856.

Co-operation within the United Nations system and with other intergovernmental organizations continued. Specialized agencies having had a substantive concern with aging issues included ILO, FAO, UNESCO and WHO; several were designated to execute projects supported by the Trust Fund and also played a major role in the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action. Regional commissions were similarly instrumental in eliciting national interest in the Fund and in encouraging national responses to the review. Co-operation between CSDHA and UNFPA had remained strong since the 1982 World Assembly on Aging.

As for NGOs, the Secretary-General remarked that they had continued to be active in promoting related United Nations work. They were ensuring that aging was considered in the context of United Nations international events, such as the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see p. 936), the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (see p. 738) and International Youth Year (see p. 978). The NGO Committee in New York, for example, conducted an all-day conference on elderly women to promote awareness of the issues related to older women to be considered at the World Conference. The NCO Committee in Vienna worked closely with the IYY secretariat to promote intergenerational activities designed to maintain and strengthen the interdependence of youth and the aging.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 29 November, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted two resolutions on aging persons.

The Assembly adopted resolution 40/29 without vote.

Question of aging

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming its resolution 39/25 of 23 November 1984, in which it recognized the increasing awareness in many countries of issues related to aging and of the need to provide national authorities, at their request, with technical and financial assistance in their efforts to implement policies and programmes,

Endorsing Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/28 of 29 May 1985, in which Governments and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations were urged to continue to strengthen their efforts to implement the principles and objectives of the International Plan of Action on Aging and in which the Secretary-General was requested to include, on an annual basis, the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging among the programmes for which funds are pledged at the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities,

Emphasising the importance of regional meetings to consider the implementation of the recommendations of the Plan of Action, as demonstrated by the African Regional Conference on Aging, held at Dakar in December 1984,

Emphasising also the positive results of the convening of seminars and meetings to exchange information, knowledge and experience on the question of aging, particularly among developing countries,

Recognizing that the dramatic increase in the numbers and proportion of older adults has serious socio-economic implications and is resulting in an increasing need for research and training at all levels,

Recalling the recommendations of the International Conference on Population, which paid particular attention to the urgent and emerging issues of aging,

Appreciating the efforts of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to establish a steering committee and a working group to follow up the implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/228 of 18 December 1984 on the International Conference on Population,

Appreciating the attention given to the question of elderly women by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and the inclusion of this issue in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women,

Stressing the importance of the activities of the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging to assist countries, at their request, in formulating and implementing policies and programmes on aging,

Noting with concern the discrepancies between the resources of the Trust Fund and the number of requests received for assistance,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the question of aging;

2. Calls upon Governments to ensure that the question of aging is incorporated into their national development plans in accordance with the culture and traditions of their countries;

3. Encourages Governments to consider convening regional and Subregional meetings on the applicability of the recommendations of the International Plan of Action on Aging to their particular needs and conditions;

Implementation of the International Plan of Action on Aging

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 33/52 of 14 December 1978, by which it decided to organize a World Assembly on Aging in 1982 as a forum to launch an international programme of action aimed at guaranteeing economic and social security to older persons, as well as opportunities for them to contribute to national development,

Recalling further its resolution 37/51 of 3 December 1982, by which it endorsed the International Plan of Action on Aging adopted by consensus by the World Assembly on Aging,

Reaffirming the part of the preamble of the Plan of Action that solemnly recognizes that the quality of life is no less important than longevity and that the aging should therefore, as far as possible, be enabled to enjoy in their own families and communities a life of fulfilment, health, security and contentment and be appreciated as an integral part of society,

Well aware that the formulation and implementation of policies on aging are the sovereign right and responsibility of each State, and recognizing that the promotion of the activities, safety and well-being of the elderly should be an essential part of an integrated and concerted development effort,

Concerned that the report of the Secretary-General on the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the Plan of Action shows that, in 1985, 55.4 per cent of the global population of the elderly is living in developing regions and that, according to projections, by the year 2025 more than 70 per cent of all persons sixty years of age and over will live in developing countries, which are least prepared to meet the economic and social consequences of this drastic shift in population structure,

Convinced that the elderly must be considered an important and necessary element in the development process at all levels within a given society,

Convinced also that increasing longevity is an achievement of mankind and a sign of progress, and that the aged are an asset and not a liability to society because of the invaluable contribution they can make by virtue of their accumulated wealth of knowledge and experience,

Mindful that 1985 is the first year in which the General Assembly has had the opportunity to review the progress made in implementing the Plan of Action, adopted in 1982,

Noting with concern that contributions pledged to the United Nations Trust Fund for Aging decreased to $39,110 in the twelve-month period ending in December 1984, despite the repeated appeals of the Secretary-General to increase contributions,

Noting also with concern that the expenditures of the Trust Fund are expected to decrease from $450,000 in the biennium 1984-1985 to $150,000 in the next biennium,

Alarmed that the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 shows a projected cut of 30 per cent in the funds to be allocated from the regular budget to the Aging Unit of the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs,

Deeply preoccupied with the fact that the Aging Unit lacks the structural organization, autonomy, funds and necessary manpower to carry out effectively its mandate of implementing the Plan of Action,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to invite Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations concerned within the United Nations system to comment on ways and means of implementing the International Plan of Action on Aging and, in particular, on the desirability and viability of elaborating a United Nations programme for the implementation of the Plan of Action, and to prepare a report on the basis of these comments for submission to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1986;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to include in that report a full analysis of the programmatic and financial aspects of activities undertaken by all organs, bodies and organizations of the United Nations system under the Plan of Action since its inception;

3. Invites interested non-governmental organizations in consultative status with the Economic and Social Council to provide, through the Secretary-General, information and documentation that will facilitate this work;

4. Requests the Economic and Social Council to consider the report at its first regular session of 1986 and to submit appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

5. Decides to consider at its forty-first session the recommendations of the Economic and Social Council as a matter of high priority.

Chapter XXI

Refugees and displaced persons

In the thick of the major emergency in Africa and the persistence of difficult situations in many other parts of the world, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) continued to seek long-term solutions and provide care and maintenance to refugees throughout 1985. Wherever feasible, relief efforts were complemented by self-sufficiency activities. Regarding international protection, some encouraging developments in respect of improved standards of treatment of refugees were offset by mounting concern over the movements of refugees across continents and over the grant of asylum. Violations of physical safety continued to cause grave concern. The need to identify new responses to problems posed by the exodus of asylum-seekers fleeing situations of generalized violence rather than individual persecution also became apparent. The Secretary-General stressed that international efforts for the relief of refugees and their voluntary return or resettlement represented one of the most practical expressions of international solidarity (see p. 11).

The African emergency, in which UNHCR confronted a situation of mass exodus in the midst of severe drought and famine, absorbed much of the Office's energies, particularly in the Central African Republic, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan.

While the emergency represented a serious setback to hopes expressed at the Second (1984) International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa (ICARA II), UNHCR continued to link the issues of refugee aid and development by encouraging programmes in Africa similar to a UNHCR-World Bank pilot project in Pakistan. With a growing number of Afghan refugees, Pakistan remained the country hosting the largest single refugee population, estimated at 2.7 million. Approximately 1.8 million Afghan refugees were also in Iran. In South-East Asia, resettlement in third countries remained the main durable solution for refugees in camps, though an increasing number of Indo-Chinese long-stayers awaiting resettlement caused concern. Under the Orderly Departure Programme, 100,000 Indo-Chinese had by year's end been reunited with family members abroad. UNHCR also continued helping some 112,000 refugees in Central America and Mexico. Voluntary repatriation programmes were carried out for Lao refugees from Thailand, Ugandan refugees from the Sudan and Zaire, and Argentine refugees from other countries in Latin America.

As before, assistance to Palestine refugees was provided by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (see p. 353).

The Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme held in 1985 its resumed thirty-fifth session (Geneva, 24 January), at which it considered a number of administrative and financial items deferred from 1984, and its thirty-sixth session (Geneva, 7-18 October). The Committee described international protection as a pillar of UNHCR work and urged Governments to co-operate in providing protection to refugees, a subject again taken up by its Sub-Committee on international protection.

In December, the General Assembly called on States to promote durable solutions and to contribute generously to the High Commissioner's humanitarian programmes (resolution 40/118). It also urged the international community to maintain the momentum created by ICARA II (40/117), and called for emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad (40/136), displaced persons in Ethiopia (40/133) and refugees in Somalia (40/132) and in the Sudan (40/0135). The Assembly also called for humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti (40/134) as well as aid to student refugees in southern Africa (40/138).

The Assembly further requested the Group of Governmental Experts on International Cooperation to Avert New Flows of Refugees to conclude its review of the problem (resolution 40/166).

The 1985 Nansen Medal—named for Fridtjof Nansen, first League of Nations High Commissioner for Refugees—went to Cardinal Paulo Evaristo Arns, Archbishop of São Paulo, Brazil, for his efforts to assist refugees and address the root causes of their problems.

Poul Hartling, High Commissioner for Refugees since 1978, relinquished that post at the end of 1985. Thanking him for his dedication (resolution 40/119), the Assembly elected Jean-Pierre Hocké (Switzerland) for a three-year term beginning on 1 January 1986 (decision 40/310).

Programme and finances of UNHCR

Programme policy

Executive Committee action. At its October 1985 session, the Executive Committee of the UNHCR Programme(1) expressed deep concern at the seriousness of the emergency in Africa. It was also concerned at the continuing severity of refugee situations in other parts of the world, particularly in Asia and Central America, and called for further efforts to meet needs in those areas and tackle the root causes. It also welcomed the increase of budgetary resources allocated to durable solutions and urged the pursuit of such solutions, particularly voluntary repatriation.

Commending the secretariat for a report(2) on action taken on its decisions, the Committee requested similar reports in the future.

The Committee took note of progress made in promoting development projects to assist refugees, and urged the High Commissioner to continue that work in co-operation with United Nations bodies and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). It encouraged UNHCR to promote resettlement when neither voluntary repatriation nor local integration was feasible and appealed to Governments to facilitate the admission of refugees by a flexible application of selection criteria in providing resettlement opportunities. It noted the need for continued support for the Disembarkation Resettlement Offers and Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers schemes and commended UNHCR's continuing efforts to promote the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam (see p. 1008).

Regarding refugee and displaced women, the Committee welcomed the recommendations of the July World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see Chapter XIX of this section).

In meeting refugee needs, UNHCR continued co-operating with other United Nations organizations, in particular with the World Food Programme (WFP) in providing some 490,000 metric tonnes of emergency food aid in 1985, with the World Bank and the International Labour Organisation in promoting self-reliance and income-generating or employment opportunities, and with the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) in supplying primary health care, water supplies and basic sanitation. It also co-operated with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration, the League of Arab States, the Organization of the Islamic Conference, the European Parliament and the Council of Europe, as well as liberation movements and NGOs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following consideration of the 1985 report of the High Commissioner,(3) the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, adopted on 13 December resolution 40/118 without vote.

Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the activities of his Office, as well as the report of the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner on the work of its thirty-sixth session, and having heard the statement made by the High Commissioner on 11 November 1985,

Recalling its resolution 39/140 of 14 December 1984,

Reaffirming the purely humanitarian and non-political character of the activities of the Office of the High Commissioner,

Deeply concerned that refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner continue to face distressingly serious problems in all parts of the world,

Particularly concerned that in various regions the safety and welfare of refugees and asylum-seekers continue to be seriously jeopardized on account of military or armed attacks, acts of piracy and other forms of brutality,

Stressing the fundamental importance of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection and the need for States to co-operate with the High Commissioner in the exercise of this essential function, particularly in view of the continued and persistent violations of the basic rights of refugees and asylum-seekers,

Emphasizing that voluntary repatriation or return remains the most desirable solution to the problems of refugees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner,

Emphasizing also the importance for the international community to continue to provide assistance and resettlement opportunities for those refugees for whom no other durable solution may be in sight, particularly in regions where countries of first refuge continue generously to receive refugees arriving by land or by sea,

Commending States that, despite severe economic and developmental problems of their own, continue to admit large numbers of refugees and displaced persons into their territories,

Noting with deep appreciation the valuable support extended by many Governments to the High Commissioner in the performance of his humanitarian tasks,

Deeply concerned about the shortage of funds faced by the High Commissioner and its consequences for his ability to fulfil his mandate,

Noting with satisfaction the efforts of the High Commissioner, in the field of international protection, to address the special problems of refugee and displaced women and children resulting from their vulnerable position, which in many cases exposes them to a variety of difficult situations affecting their physical and legal protection as well as their psychological and material well-being,

Noting with satisfaction and encouraging the continuing and increasing co-operation between the Office of the High Commissioner and other bodies of the United Nations system, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations,

Desirous of ensuring the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984,

1. Commends the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his staff for the dedicated and efficient manner in which they discharge their responsibilities;

2. Strongly reaffirms the fundamental nature of the High Commissioner's function to provide international protection and the need for Governments to continue to co-operate fully with his Office in order to facilitate the effective exercise of this function, in particular by acceding to and implementing the relevant international and regional refugee instruments and by scrupulously observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement;

3. Condemns all violations of the rights and safety of refugees and asylum-seekers, in particular those perpetrated by military or armed attacks against refugee camps and settlements and other forms of brutality and by the failure to rescue asylum-seekers in distress at sea;

4. Welcomes the fact that arrangements introduced by the High Commissioner have increased significantly the rescue of asylum-seekers in distress at sea and that preventive measures have resulted in a decline in the number of refugee boats attacked by pirates;

5. Urges all States, in co-operation with the Office of the High Commissioner and other competent international bodies, to take all measures necessary to ensure the safety of refugees and asylum-seekers;

6. Also urges all States to support the High Commissioner in his efforts to achieve durable solutions to the problem of refugees and displaced persons of concern to his Office, primarily through voluntary repatriation or return, including assistance to returnees, as appropriate, or, wherever appropriate, through integration into countries of asylum or resettlement in third countries;

7. Endorses the conclusions on voluntary repatriation adopted by the Executive Committee of the Programme of the High Commissioner at its thirty-sixth session and urges States to extend their full co-operation to the High Commissioner to that effect;

8. Expresses its warm appreciation for the work done by the High Commissioner to put into practice the concept of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees, as initiated at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, and urges him to continue that process, wherever appropriate, in co-operation with the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and other organizations, and, further, urges Governments to support these efforts;

9. Commends the High Commissioner's programmes for refugee and displaced women, especially those undertaken to secure their protection and to help them to become self-sufficient through educational, vocational and income-generating projects;

10. Expresses deep appreciation for the valuable material and humanitarian response of receiving countries, in particular those developing countries that, despite limited resources, continue to admit, on a permanent or temporary basis, large numbers of refugees and asylum-seekers, and, reaffirming the principle of international solidarity and burden-sharing, urges the international community to assist receiving countries in order to enable them to cope with the additional burden created by the presence of those refugees and asylum-seekers;

11. Commends all States that facilitate the attainment of durable solutions and contribute generously to the High Commissioner's programmes;

12. Expresses deep appreciation for the valuable co-operation between the Office of the High Commissioner and intergovernmental and non-governmental agencies;

13. Calls upon all States to promote durable solutions and to contribute generously to the High Commissioner's humanitarian programmes in order to assist refugees, returnees and displaced persons of concern to the High Commissioner in a spirit of international solidarity and burden-sharing.

Financial and administrative questions

UNHCR voluntary funds expenditure in 1985 amounted to $459 million as compared with $445 million in 1984. Of that total, some $282 million was spent on General Programmes and $177 million on Special Programmes and other trust funds.

Total income for 1985 was $435.4 million.

Expressing appreciation for the 1985 contributions, the UNHCR Executive Committee(1) voiced concern at the critical funding situation affecting the 1985 and future General Programmes and urged Governments to announce increased contributions for 1986.

Contributions

Contributions from government sources totalled over $322.8 million in 1985. In addition, intergovernmental organizations provided $53.5 million, and NGOs and private sources made donations valued at $16.5 million.

Appeals by the Commissioner for contributions to Special Programmes(4) continued in response to specific needs, such as: the African emergency; returnees to Ethiopia, Kampuchea, the Lao People's Democratic Republic and Uganda; the Refugee Education Account; the South-East Asia Anti-Piracy Programme; and the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam.

At its October session,(1) the Executive Committee approved a target of $320.4 million (not including $10 million for the Emergency Fund) for 1986 General Programmes, urging donors, especially Governments, to recognize their primary importance and to make higher contributions.

Government contributions were announced at a 15 November 1985 meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee of the General Assembly for the Announcement of Voluntary Contributions to the 1986 Programme of UNHCR.(5)

Accounts of voluntary funds for 1984

The audited financial statements on the voluntary funds administered by UNHCR for the year ended 31 December 1984 showed a total expenditure of $444.8 million and total income of $388.9 million.(6)

In a September 1985 report,(7) the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) commented on the Board of Auditors' report.(6)

In October,(1) the UNHCR Executive Committee took note of the accounts and reports and, noting the further efforts to improve financial planning and control, stressed the importance of pursuing and strengthening them.

In December, the General Assembly, in resolution 40/238, accepted the Board's financial report and audit opinions, concurred with ACABQ's observations and requested the High Commissioner to take the required remedial action.

UN High Commissioner for Refugees

With Poul Hartling, a national of Denmark, United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees since 1 January 1978, due to relinquish his duties on 31 December 1985, the General Assembly in December by decision 40/310 elected Jean-Pierre Hocké, from Switzerland, to that position for three years, beginning 1 January 1986. The Assembly took that action on the Secretary-General's proposal.(8)

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/119 without vote.

Expression of appreciation to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

The General Assembly,

Noting with deep regret that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees will shortly be relinquishing his duties,

Recognizing the significant progress achieved under his guidance in promoting humanitarian solutions to the problems of refugees and displaced persons in various parts of the world,

Considering his unrelenting efforts to alleviate human suffering through the special humanitarian tasks entrusted to him in addition to the original functions of his Office,

1. Expresses its sincere appreciation and thank to Mr. Poul Hartling for the effective and dedicated manner in which he has performed his functions as United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Extends its good wishes to him for success in his future undertakings.

Activities for refugees

Assistance

During 1985, General Programmes expenditure totalled $282 million ($346 million in 1984).<sup>(1)</sup> This amount included $5.9 million obligated from the Emergency Fund which was used mostly in Africa—$3 million went to finance assistance to refugees and persons of concern to UNHCR in the Sudan, while $2 million was spent on relief assistance to returnees in Ethiopia. An amount of $100,000 was also utilized to assist displaced persons in Lebanon. UNHCR continued to improve its emergency preparedness and response capabilities.

The provision of intermediate assistance to refugees in the form of care and maintenance (food, shelter, water, health services and sanitation, education, counselling) accounted for some 53 per cent of total General Programmes expenditure, down from 59 per cent in 1984.

The largest single care and maintenance programme was the assistance programme for Afghan refugees in Pakistan, for which $46.5 million was obligated under the 1985 General Programme. Over $10.5 million of this amount was devoted to income-generating and self-sufficiency measures. An amount of $34.4 million was obligated for Indo-Chinese refugees in East and South-East Asia, of which $20.9 million was for care and maintenance in Thailand pending identification of a more durable solution. In Somalia, $10.6 million was allocated for Ethiopian refugees; in Central America, $15.5 million was obligated for care and maintenance because local integration in Costa Rica, Honduras, Mexico and Nicaragua remained relatively slow.

Self-sufficiency activities were intensified in Costa Rica, Djibouti, Kenya, Pakistan and the Sudan, which were supported by some 80 community counselling service projects in 47 countries.

Elementary education continued to be provided in local government schools or in specially established settlement schools. UNHCR had over 113 world-wide programmes in post-primary, vocational/technical and academic education. In addition, $10.6 million was spent to enable 16,000 refugee students to study at the secondary and tertiary levels—24 per cent of them took technical training courses, 67 per cent attended secondary academic schools and 9 per cent were enrolled in universities.

Promoting durable solutions remained the primary objective of UNHCR. Renewed efforts were made to achieve voluntary repatriation, local integration in the country of first asylum, or resettlement to a third country when other options were not feasible. Almost 42 per cent of General Programmes resources were used to finance the implementation of durable solutions, notably local integration in Africa, Central America and China, while UNHCR succeeded in phasing out its assistance to relatively self-reliant rural settlements in the United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire and Zambia. The year 1985 witnessed major voluntary repatriation operations in Africa, Asia, Latin America and Western Europe as at result of concerted approaches to such repatriation. Successful initiatives and actions regarding the continuing linkage between refugee aid and development were undertaken with the World Bank and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

Approximately 107,600 refugees were resettled in third countries, including 25,000 Vietnamese who were helped through the Orderly Departure Programme to reunite with their families abroad. Resettlement remained the principal durable solution for Indo-Chinese refugees—some 59,000 were resettled in 1985.

UNHCR strengthened its efforts to ensure that handicapped refugees benefited from medical facilities and services in their respective countries of asylum. The needs of over 5,700 were met at a cost of $775,000 obligated under General Programmes in 1985. In addition, some 51 severely handicapped refugees who could not be rehabilitated locally were referred to medical centres abroad at a cost of $100,000 obligated under Special Programmes, while some 270 others were resettled in Europe, North America and Australia.

While implementing durable solutions continued in various parts of the world, expenditure in Africa under UNHCR voluntary funds reached some $225.8 million, of which $97 million was obligated under General Programmes and $128.8 million under Special Programmes.

In October,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNHCR Executive Committee noted with concern that the basic rights of refugees continued to be disregarded and that, in particular, they were being exposed to violent acts, arbitrary detention and refoulement. It welcomed the fact that provision of resettlement places had made it possible for the Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers scheme to commence on a trial basis as from May 1985. It requested shipowners to inform shipmasters in the South China Sea of their responsibility to rescue asylum-seekers in distress. It expressed concern at both the serious emergency in Africa and the severity of the refugee situations in Central America and South-East and South-West Asia, and called for further efforts to meet needs in those areas. The Committee commended Governments that provided emergency resettlement places at short notice and urged others to provide such places. It also commended UNHCR's continuing efforts to promote the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam.

To facilitate planning and rapid action, UNHCR continued to issue basic data on countries receiving large numbers of refugees; profiles on Ethiopia, Pakistan and the Sudan were completed in 1985.

A plan of operations for the Sudan was prepared. A guide to in-kind contributions was also drawn up. The UNHCR Handbook for Emergencies, published in English, French and Spanish, was distributed widely, as well as a large number of health, field and nutritional kits. The magazine Refugees, providing up-to-date information on world-wide refugee problems, was published monthly in English, French and Spanish, and special editions were also issued in Arabic, German and Italian.

During the year, UNHCR released two documentary films—"Fugitives in Africa" and "Casualties of Conflict"—and co-produced a series of films with television networks and film companies. Films, photographs, slide shows, maps and various printed materials were also provided to media, Governments, intergovernmental organizations and voluntary agencies for educational and fund-raising purposes. It also organized in March an itinerant media seminar in South-East Asia for journalists from the international media, and in September UNHCR initiated an emergency management training programme.

Africa

In the first months of 1985, large numbers of persons continued to cross borders to seek help, particularly in the Horn of Africa, imposing an additional burden on neighbouring Governments at a time when the effects of the drought on their own nationals were already severe. Throughout the year, UNHCR established emergency programmes in Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan, and for limited periods in the Central African Republic and Djibouti. Relief was provided to large numbers in desperate need of food, water and medical care. By year's end, the overall situation had improved in many areas but the emergency was not over.

Beneficiaries included not only persons of direct concern to UNHCR but also those who had left their country solely because of the drought. At the height of the food shortages, some nationals physically close to refugee reception centres also temporarily availed themselves of UNHCR emergency assistance. Such extensions of aid proved necessary because of difficulties in making clear distinctions in the prevailing circumstances and also as there were no other funding or implementing arrangements.

In October,(2) the UNHCR Executive Committee, deeply concerned at the seriousness of the emergency in Africa, where drought and famine affecting refugees and local populations had caused great hardship and loss of life, commended the High Commissioner for his efforts to alleviate the problem, and thanked the donors to the UNHCR African emergency programmes. It regretted that the emergency had represented a severe set-back for durable solutions in Africa, including those submitted at ICARA II, and urged that their importance not be overlooked.

UNHCR co-operated with the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa (see p. 496), which was established in 1984,(3) and, as a member of the United Nations Africa Emergency Task Force, it also played an important role in the United Nations system's co-ordination of relief assistance.

Despite better harvests in 1985, the severe and even increasing economic difficulties facing many asylum countries continued to hinder efforts to promote self-sufficiency through rural settlement and agriculture or employment opportunities and income generation. In addition, developments in southern Africa created new and potentially grave problems. Thus, although substantial progress was made in stabilizing several critical emergency situations, progress in achieving durable solutions fell short of expectations in many countries. At the same time, the impact of spontaneously settled refugees on national infrastructures tended to increase, necessitating new approaches in the wider context of the development of areas affected by the presence of refugees.

Yet progress was recorded in several areas: Chadians repatriated voluntarily from the Central African Republic; political developments in Uganda allowed a return of Ugandan refugees from neighbouring countries; many Ethiopians, who had entered the Sudan in late 1984 and early 1985, returned home spontaneously; and assistance to settlements in the United Republic of Tanzania and upper Zaire was phased out as their inhabitants became self-supporting.

In 1985, UNHCR voluntary fund expenditure in Africa amounted to some $225.8 million, of which $97 million was obligated under General Programmes and $128.8 million under Special Programmes.

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/20 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, urged Governments and organizations, as well as NGOs, to help African countries of asylum cope with the heavy burden imposed on their limited resources and weak infrastructures by large numbers of refugees, and it invited them to contribute generously to implementing the Declaration and Programme of Action of ICARA II. The Assembly also adopted resolutions on ICARA II; returnees and displaced persons in Chad; refugees in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Somalia and the Sudan; and South African student refugees (see below).

In his September 1985 report to the Security Council on refugee safety in Botswana and assistance to South African refugees in that country(4) (see p. 189), the Secretary-General transmitted the report of a mission which had visited Botswana (27 July-2 August). The mission stressed that the country's geographic location resulted in a continuous refugee influx and that, in spite of a military attack on its capital, Gaborone, by South Africa on 14 June, Botswana was determined to keep its doors open to South African refugees. The mission recommended that the international community enhance assistance to Botswana in ensuring the safety, protection and welfare of refugees; it also pointed out that it was the right of asylum countries to be secure from attack or coercion by refugee-producing countries.

Follow-up to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

Pursuant to recommendations in the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa in 1984,(5) UNHCR reviewed the continuing refugee/returnee needs in Africa in terms of both normal programming and ICARA II projects. To prepare for and to follow up on the Conference, close collaboration took place between UNDP and UNHCR. They jointly funded development projects embracing all the population in an area west of the White Nile which had been severely affected by a heavy influx of refugees. Their collaboration was also extended to include Somalia and served as a timely precedent which was being pursued in other countries.

While additional needs were met in 1985, when UNHCR assistance in Africa reached an all-time high, the assistance provided to refugees and returnees was of necessity more for emergency relief than rehabilitation. UNDP continued monitoring development programmes for countries affected by their presence.

In July,(6) the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government adopted a declaration and a resolution on the economic situation in Africa, and a resolution on its special emergency assistance fund for drought and famine in Africa. The OAU Council of Ministers, also in July,(6) appealed to the international community to increase its contribution to UNHCR, to enable it to deal better with recent influxes of refugees and returnees and to intensify programmes leading to durable solutions. It also appealed to donor countries to contribute urgently to ICARA II projects aimed at facilitating assistance to refugees and returnees. It further appealed to OAU member States to co-operate among themselves and with UNHCR to improve the living and working conditions of refugees and promote voluntary repatriation. The OAU Secretary-General was requested to report on the question in 1986.

On 9 July 1985, the High Commissioner orally informed the Economic and Social Council's Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the grave crisis caused by the drought in Africa that affected certain UNHCR refugee programmes there. He also reported, on behalf of the Secretary-General, on humanitarian assistance provided to refugees in Somalia and to displaced persons in Ethiopia, the situation of refugees in the Sudan, and assistance to student refugees in southern Africa. On 25 July, the Council, by decision 1985/185, took note of the report.

The Secretary-General, in a July 1985 report on assistance to refugees in Africa<sup>(7)</sup> submitted in response to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(8)</sup> stated that, since ICARA II, Africa had been confronted with a crisis of dramatic magnitude and that persistent economic difficulties and emergency situations involving massive population movements had overshadowed the Conference, as international attention concentrated on endeavours to avert a human and economic catastrophe. It was imperative to undertake rehabilitation and medium-term development actions as soon as possible, even though in the crises of famine and drought the alleviation of immediate needs might appear a more urgent requirement. The Secretary-General remarked that the attention given by OAU member States to the root causes of refugee situations, the funding of refugee-related developmental projects, and the consultations and co-operation undertaken by all concerned were a pledge and a guarantee that efforts to implement the ICARA II Programme of Action would continue.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/117.

Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/197 of 18 December 1982, 38/120 of 16 December 1983 and 39/139 of 14 December 1984 relating to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees in Africa,

Mindful that the fundamental purpose of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984, was to launch collective action by the international community aimed at achieving lasting solutions,

Gravely concerned at the persistent and serious problem of large numbers of refugees on the African continent,

Aware of the heavy burden borne by African countries of asylum on account of the presence of these refugees and its consequences for their economic and social development, and of the heavy sacrifices made by them, despite their limited resources,

Deeply concerned that the refugee situation has been severely affected by the critical economic situation in Africa, as well as by drought and other natural disasters,

Recognizing that the efforts of the countries of asylum require the concerted support of the international community to meet the needs for emergency relief and for medium- and long-term development aid,

Taking note of the declarations and resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 July 1985, and of the resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985, in particular resolution CM/Res.989(XLII) on the situation of refugees in Africa,

Emphasizing the collective responsibility of sharing the urgent and overwhelming burden of the problem of African refugees through effective mobilization of additional resources to meet the urgent and long-term needs of the refugees and to strengthen the capacity of countries of asylum to provide adequately for the refugees while they remain in those countries, as well as to assist the countries of origin in rehabilitating voluntary returnees,

Reiterating the vital importance of the complementarity between refugee aid and development assistance,

Desirous of ensuring the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made at the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa,

1. Expresses its deep appreciation to African host countries, which are the biggest donors, for their generous contribution and continuous efforts to alleviate the plight of refugees in spite of their critical economic situation;

2. Reiterates its appreciation to all donor countries, the organizations and specialized agencies of the United Nations system, regional organizations and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their initial support and response to the projects submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa;

3. Urges the international community to maintain the momentum created by the Conference and to translate into reality the projects submitted as well as the principles of the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted by the Conference;

4. Emphasizes the vital importance of the complementarity of refugee aid and development assistance and of achieving durable solutions to the problems of refugees in Africa and the necessity of providing assistance for the strengthening of the social and economic infrastructures of African countries receiving refugees and returnees;

5. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to continue to keep the situation of refugees in Africa under constant review so as to ensure that adequate assistance is available for care and maintenance and for bringing about durable solutions;

6. Requests the United Nations Development Programme to increase its efforts to mobilize additional resources for refugee-related development projects and, in general, to promote and co-ordinate with the host countries and the donor community the integration of refugee-related activities into national development planning;

7. Calls upon all Member States and organizations of the United Nations system concerned, as well as relevant regional, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to lend their support to the speedy implementation of the recommendations and pledges made at the Conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, in accordance with the Declaration and Programme of Action, to monitor, in consultation and close co-operation with the Organization of African Unity, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Development Programme, the follow-up to the Conference;

9. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/117

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/934) without vote, 21 November (meeting 49); draft by Costa Rica, and Mauritius for African Group (A/C.3/40/L.42); agenda item 105(b).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 37-41, 49; plenary 116.

The Assembly, in resolution 40/118, thanked the High Commissioner for putting into practice the concept of development-oriented assistance to refugees and returnees, as initiated at ICARA II, urged him to continue that process in co-operation with the World Bank, UNDP and other organizations, and urged Governments to support those efforts.

Chad

Pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly request,(9) the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) on 26 November 1985 reported orally to the Assembly's Third Committee on emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad. The drought there had affected nearly one third of its population. Some 500,000 people, in search of food, had settled in an area where crops were non-existent and water supplies were used to the maximum. The largest concentration of displaced persons, about 50,000, centred on the capital, and another 30,000 were grouped at the Ati camp in Batha, one of the most severely affected prefectures. That camp and others had been helped by specific programmes executed by UNICEF, the League of Red Cross Societies and other NGOs. Following the Chadian Government's pacification efforts—on 13 November, it had issued a general amnesty in favour of refugees and persons in exile abroad—there had been a significant movement of spontaneous returnees from the Central African Republic, and food had been distributed to them by local authorities in co-operation with NGOs and UNDRO. In view of the increasing number of returnees and displaced persons—185,000 displaced persons had been resettled by year's end—the Chadian Government requested the Secretary-General to initiate a programme of assistance.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/136 without vote.

Emergency assistance to returnees and displaced persons in Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/106 of 14 December 1984,

Taking note of the report made by the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator on 26 November 1985 on the situation of returnees in Chad,

Deeply concerned by the persistence of the drought, which is compounding the already precarious food and health situation in Chad,

Conscious that the large number of voluntary returnees and displaced persons as a result of the war and the drought in Chad poses a serious problem of integrating them into society,

Considering that, in addition to being a land-locked country and one of the least developed countries, Chad is placed in a particularly difficult situation by reason of the war and the drought,

Bearing in mind the many appeals made by the Government of Chad, in particular that made on 9 October 1985 to the General Assembly, and by humanitarian organizations regarding the gravity of the food and health situation in Chad,

Recalling the urgent appeal made by the General Assembly during its thirty-ninth session for international emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad afflicted by natural disasters,

1. Endorses the appeals made by the Government of Chad and by humanitarian organizations concerning emergency assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

2. Reiterates its appeal to all States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to support by generous contributions the efforts being made by the Government of Chad to assist and resettle the voluntary returnees and displaced persons;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the action undertaken by the various bodies of the United Nations system and the specialized agencies with a view to mobilizing emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

4. Again requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to mobilize emergency humanitarian assistance to the voluntary returnees and displaced persons in Chad;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/136

13 December 1985 Meeting 116 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (A/40/1007) without vote, 6 December (meeting 70); 36-nation draft (A/C.3/40/L.78); agenda item 12.

Sponsors: Algeria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros, Congo, Djibouti, Egypt, France, Gabon, Gambia, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Guinea, Haiti, Indonesia, Italy, Ivory Coast, Japan, Madagascar, Mali, Netherlands, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, Sudan, Thailand, Togo, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 3rd Committee 69, 70; plenary 116.

In resolution 40/218, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue monitoring, with the agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly food and health, of the people of Chad displaced by war and drought. It also requested him to mobilize special humanitarian assistance for persons who had suffered as a result of the war and drought and for the resettlement of displaced persons.

Djibouti

In pursuance of a 1984 Assembly request,(10) the High Commissioner submitted a report in August 1985 on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti.(11) He stated that the limited water supply, which had been further diminished by drought, had hindered the planning of local integration for rural refugees and, as resettlement placement had not kept pace with demand, voluntary repatriation had remained the most viable of the standard durable solutions promoted by UNHCR. At the end of 1985, there were still approximately 17,000 refugees in Djibouti, mostly Ethiopians. Between 1982 and 1985, some 33,000 refugees had repatriated voluntarily to Ethiopia, either under UNHCR auspices or spontaneously. An estimated 10,000 drought victims at Aseyla, who entered the country in 1985, also returned home spontaneously after a few months. UNHCR continued during the year to provide assistance to the remaining refugees, consisting mainly of food distribution, improvements in the supply and storage of potable water and the upgrading of sanitary conditions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/134.

Humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/182 of 15 December 1980, 36/156 of 16 December 1981, 37/176 of 17 December 1982, 38/89 of 16 December 1983 and 39/107 of 14

December 1984 on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,

Having heard the statement made on 11 November 1985 by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Having considered with satisfaction the reports of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti,

Appreciating the determined and sustained efforts made by the Government of Djibouti, despite its modest economic resources and limited means, to cope with the pressing needs of the refugees,

Aware of the social and economic burden placed on the Government and people of Djibouti as a result of the presence of refugees and of the consequent impact on the development and infrastructure of the country,

Deeply concerned about the continuing plight of the refugees and displaced persons in the country, which has been aggravated by the devastating effects of the prolonged drought,

Noting with appreciation the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner, to implement adequate, appropriate and lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti,

Also noting with appreciation the concern and unremitting efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the voluntary agencies which have worked closely with the Government of Djibouti in the relief and rehabilitation programme for the refugees in that country,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the reports of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on humanitarian assistance to refugees in Djibouti and appreciates his efforts to keep their situation under constant review;

2. Welcomes the steps taken by the Government of Djibouti, in close co-operation with the High Commissioner, to implement adequate, appropriate and lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti;

3. Requests the High Commissioner to mobilize the necessary resources to implement lasting solutions in respect of the refugees in Djibouti;

4. Urges the High Commissioner to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that adequate, appropriate and lasting solutions are implemented to assist the refugees in Djibouti, in co-operation with Member States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and the voluntary agencies concerned, with a view to mobilizing the necessary assistance to enable the Government of Djibouti to cope effectively with the refugee problem, which has been particularly aggravated by the debilitating effects of the prolonged drought;

5. Appreciates the assistance provided thus far by Member States, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to the relief and rehabilitation programmes for the refugees and displaced persons in Djibouti;

6. Calls upon all Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system, the specialized agencies, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and voluntary agencies to continue to support the efforts constantly being made by the Government of Djibouti to cope with the current needs of the refugees and the other victims of drought in that country;

7. Requests the High Commissioner, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Ethiopia

In an August 1985 report to the Assembly on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,(12) submitted in pursuance of a 1984 request,(13) the Secretary-General noted that voluntary repatriation of Ethiopian refugees from Djibouti continued during the year under the 1983 tripartite agreement between Djibouti, Ethiopia and UNHCR. (14) At its third meeting (Djibouti, 21 November 1984), the Tripartite Commission decided that the formal large-scale repatriation programme would end on 31 December 1984, and that refugees who wished to return to Ethiopia after that date would be processed on a case-by-case basis. By December 1984, 32,859 persons had been registered as repatriates from Djibouti. Due to the drought in the area, some rehabilitation assistance programmes to repatriates, which had been temporarily suspended in 1984, were resumed in 1985.

On 4 April 1985, the United Nations High Commissioner issued an appeal to the international community for $23.5 million to implement a programme to assist returnees in the Hararghe province. The programme was aimed at expanding or establishing rural settlements and improving the quality and quantity of potable water for about 100,000 agriculturalists among the returnee population. In addition, 100,000 pastoralists were to be assisted to re-establish their herds and watering points were to be developed to provide adequate water for animal survival. The Relief and Rehabilitation Commission, the World University Service of Canada, the Lutheran World Federation and the Ethiopian Water Works Construction Authority were responsible for the programme's implementation, in co-operation with UNDP, FAO and IFAD in order to avoid duplication and to ensure complementarity with longer-term developmental activities.

The influx of Sudanese refugees to the Illubabor region of western Ethiopia continued. The Government of Ethiopia estimated that the refugee population in that region totalled 180,000 persons. UNHCR assistance was limited to refugees who had been registered in the Itang camp and to whom UNHCR had unlimited access. The latter population, which increased from 59,100 at the end of 1984 to 85,000 by December 1985, was assisted with food, health care, basic household utensils and water, as well as through a pilot rural settlement scheme. Refugees received counselling and education aimed at identifying durable solutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/133 without vote.

Assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/91 of 5 December 1980, 36/161 of 16 December 1981, 37/175 of 17 December 1982, 38/91 of 16 December 1983 and 39/105 of 14 December 1984, as well as Economic and Social Council resolutions 1980/54 of 24 July 1980 and 1982/2 of 27 April 1982,

Recalling also the report of the Secretary-General prepared pursuant to Economic and Social Council resolution 1980/8 of 28 April 1980,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to displaced persons in Ethiopia,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees,

Recognizing the increasing number of voluntary returnees and refugees in Ethiopia,

Deeply concerned at the plight of displaced persons and voluntary returnees in the country, which has been aggravated by the devastating effect of the prolonged drought,

Aware of the heavy burden placed on the Government of Ethiopia in caring for displaced persons and victims of natural disasters, as well as for returnees and refugees,

1. Commends the efforts made so far by various organs of the United Nations and the specialized agencies in mobilizing humanitarian assistance to assist the efforts of the Government of Ethiopia;

2. Appeals to Member States and to international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum material, financial and technical assistance to the Government of Ethiopia in its efforts to provide relief and rehabilitation to displaced persons, voluntary returnees and refugees in Ethiopia;

3. Requests the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to intensify his efforts in mobilizing humanitarian assistance for the relief, rehabilitation and resettlement of voluntary returnees, refugees and displaced persons in Ethiopia;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the High Commissioner, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Somalia

Pursuant to a 1984 Assembly request,(15) the High Commissioner appraised the refugee situation in Somalia in an August 1985 report.(16) According to government estimates, in 1985 there were 807,000 refugees in the regions of Hiran, Gedo, the north-west and Lower Shebelle, of whom some 700,000 had arrived from the Ogaden region of Ethiopia following events in the Horn of Africa in 1977-1978 and 107,000 had come in 1984-1985. Emergency relief assistance was provided to them (approximately 77 per cent were women and children) during the year and seven new centres were established. Assistance requirements for refugees in 1985 and the estimated needs for 1986 were $97.3 million and $99.7 million respectively.

Due to the scarcity of natural resources, progress towards durable solutions was limited and the majority of the refugees required relief assistance. Basic food supplies were provided mainly by WFP, which co-ordinated bilateral and multilateral donations. On several occasions since 1983, the Government of Somalia had reaffirmed its policy that voluntary repatriation was considered the most desirable solution, but that local settlement would be permitted for those wishing to remain. The voluntary repatriation of 642 persons from Somalia to Ethiopia took place in late 1985.

Discussions took place to elaborate a local refugee settlement project in Furjano in the Lower Shebelle region. In other regions, small agricultural and income-generating projects aimed at encouraging partial self-sufficiency for some refugees. Assistance was also provided to improve and expand existing farms near refugee camps by maintaining and upgrading the existing irrigation and draining facilities, and some 14,300 refugee farmers were being trained in farming methods, in the maintenance of irrigation systems and pumps, as well as in marketing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/132.

Assistance to refugees in Somalia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/180 of 15 December 1980, 36/153 of 16 December 1981, 37/174 of 17 December 1982, 38/88 of 16 December 1983 and 39/104 of 14 December 1984 on the question of assistance to refugees in Somalia,

Having considered the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on assistance to refugees in Somalia, in particular section IV of that report,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to refugees in Africa,

Deeply concerned that the refugee problem in Somalia has not yet been resolved,

Aware of the additional burden imposed by the new influx of refugees and the consequent urgent need for additional international assistance,

Aware of continuing and serious shortfalls in the provision of food assistance, which have resulted in dangerous ration restrictions, epidemics related to malnutrition, other shortages and extreme hardship in refugee camps in Somalia,

Recognizing from the recommendations contained in the report of the High Commissioner that there remains an urgent need for increased assistance in the provision of food, water and medicines, in the areas of transport and logistics, shelter and domestic items, construction, the strengthening of health and educational facilities, and the expansion of the number of self-help schemes and small-scale farming and settlement projects necessary for the promotion of self-reliance among the refugees,

Aware of the continued consequences of the social and economic burden placed on the Government and people of Somalia as a result of the continued presence of refugees and new refugee flows and the consequent impact on national development and the infrastructure of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner for their continued efforts to mobilize international assistance on behalf of the refugees in Somalia;

3. Takes note with satisfaction of the assistance rendered to refugees in Somalia by various Member States, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and other concerned intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

4. Appeals to Member States, international organizations and voluntary agencies to render maximum and timely material, financial and technical assistance to the Government of Somalia in its efforts to provide all necessary assistance to the refugees;

5. Appeals to the donor community to give urgent and favourable consideration to the development-related refugee projects submitted by the Government of Somalia to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984, and to fulfil the pledges undertaken at or after that Conference;

6. Requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the refugee situation in Somalia;

7. Also requests the High Commissioner, in consultation with the Secretary-General, to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Sudan

The Secretary-General, in a September 1985 report<sup>(17)</sup> submitted in response to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(18)</sup> stated that the refugee population in the Sudan had risen significantly. According to government statistics, the Sudan was at the end of 1985 hosting over 1 million refugees and displaced persons: approximately 790,000 were from Ethiopia, 250,000 from Uganda, 120,000 from Chad and 5,000 from Zaire. Of that number, 635,000 persons—446,000 Ethiopians, 124,000 Ugandans and 65,000 Chadians—were assisted in settlements and reception centres under UNHCR programmes. The remaining refugees were spontaneously settled among the local population and generally received no direct assistance from the international community.

The large-scale influx of refugees from Ethiopia, which had begun in 1984, continued in 1985, reaching a total of 338,000 new arrivals by April 1985. Some 231,000 new arrivals were recorded in reception centres during 1985. Arrivals were partially offset by the spontaneous return to Ethiopia of 55,000 persons at the beginning of the 1985 planting season (April/May). UNHCR also assisted over 130,000 Ethiopian refugees who had arrived in the Sudan before 1984.

There were some 90,000 Ugandan refugees in 30 settlements on the west bank of the Nile and 33,000 in 17 settlements on the east bank in the Equatoria region; many others were spontaneously settled and did not receive direct assistance. Some 3,800 Ugandan refugees voluntarily repatriated with UNHCR assistance during 1985. Organized repatriation was suspended in August owing to the unsettled political situation in Uganda, though several thousand Ugandans, mostly spontaneously settled, were known to have returned to Uganda during the latter part of 1985.

Towards the end of 1985, some 75,000 Chadian refugees were assisted by UNHCR in three reception centres in the Darfur region. Many Chadians were also assisted in food distribution centres established for Sudanese drought victims in Darfur, just as some Sudanese initially benefited from assistance in the reception centres. With the departure of Sudanese from those centres and the dispersal of some Chadians, the number of refugees assisted by UNHCR was estimated at 62,000.

Regular assistance activities in eastern Sudan were virtually suspended during 1985 as attention focused on meeting the urgent needs of new arrivals and providing emergency food and other relief aid to the established refugees affected by the drought.

UNHCR's 1985 programme of assistance to refugees and displaced persons in the Sudan totalled over $90.3 million—$16.3 million in local settlement and over $74 million in other programmes, including $2 million for emergency procurement and shipment of relief items for new arrivals in eastern Sudan, $4 million for assistance to refugees from Chad, Ethiopia and Uganda and $64.5 million for assistance to persons of concern to UNHCR in the Sudan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly on 13 December adopted without vote resolution 40/135.

Situation of refugees in the Sudan

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/181 of 15 December 1980, 36/158 of 16 December 1981, 37/173 of 17 December 1982, 38/90 of 16 December 1983 and 39/108 of 14 December 1984 on the situation of refugees in the Sudan,

Appreciating the measures which the Government of the Sudan is taking in order to provide shelter, food, education, and health and other humanitarian services to the growing number of refugees in the Sudan,

Recognizing the heavy burden placed on the Government of the Sudan and the sacrifices it is making in caring for the refugees and the need for substantially increased international assistance to enable it to continue its efforts to provide assistance to the refugees,

Expressing its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Sudan by Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations in support of the refugee programme,

Recognizing the need to view refugee-related development projects within local and national development plans,

1. Takes note of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the implementation of resolution 39/108;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General, the High Commissioner, donor countries and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their efforts to assist the refugees in the Sudan;

4. Expresses grave concern at the shrinking resources available for refugee programmes in the Sudan and the serious consequences of this situation on the country's ability to continue to act as host and provide assistance to the increasing numbers of refugees;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in view of the massive and increasing presence of the refugees, shrinking financial resources, drought and the serious economic situation in the country, to send, in co-operation and co-ordination with the High Commissioner and relevant specialized agencies, a high-level inter-agency mission to assess the needs and the magnitude of assistance required by the programmes for refugees in the Sudan, as well as the impact of the refugees on the economy and vital public services, with a view to preparing a comprehensive programme of assistance to be submitted to the international community;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to mobilize the necessary financial and material assistance for the full implementation of the projects submitted by the Government of the Sudan to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

8. Requests the High Commissioner to continue co-ordination with the appropriate specialized agencies in order to consolidate and ensure the continuation of essential services to the refugees in their settlements;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the implementation of the present resolution.

Other countries

Algeria. The refugee population in Algeria remained unchanged at some 2,000, comprising elderly people of European origin, and refugees from Latin America, Africa and the Middle East. UNHCR continued its multi-purpose assistance to some 165,000 people identified by the Algerian Government as Sahrawi refugees living in 24 camps in the Tindouf area.

Angola. The refugee total in Angola was estimated at 92,200 in 1985—70,000 Namibians, 13,200 Zairians and 9,000 South Africans. The UNHCR programme for Namibians remained one of care and maintenance pending return to their homeland. Emphasis was given to self-sufficiency projects for Zairian refugees. Assistance to South African refugees continued to be directed mainly at developing agricultural production at the Malange farm.

Benin. The number of refugees in Benin, mainly Chadians, increased steadily from 846 at the beginning of the year to over 3,600 in December. UNHCR assistance consisted mainly of food, clothing and shelter. Some skilled refugees were helped to establish small-scale income-generating projects. Educational aid was also provided.

Botswana. There were 5,500 refugees in Botswana at year's end, the majority being Zimbabweans receiving assistance in the Dukwe settlement. However, the continuing drought affected progress towards self-sufficiency.

Burundi. Of 256,000 refugees in Burundi, some 60,000 received help from UNHCR in the form of education, counselling and services in the settlement areas.

Cameroon. Cameroon estimated that, at the end of 1985, there were over 30,000 refugees in its northern provinces, of whom 5,200 received assistance from UNHCR in the Ridania camp near Poli. A multi-purpose assistance programme was put into effect to meet essential requirements and to promote self-sufficiency.

Central African Republic. As a result of a return to Chad, refugees in the Central African Republic, estimated at 47,000 in March 1985, dropped to some 30,000 at the end of the year. UNHCR met the immediate needs of rural refugees in providing food and medical care, and establishing reception facilities in new settlement sites.

Kenya. Of approximately 8,800 refugees in Kenya in 1985, whose background was mainly urban, 4,150 had come from Uganda, 1,900 from Ethiopia, 1,950 from Rwanda and 800 from other countries. The care and maintenance of needy refugees continued in parallel with the pursuit of durable solutions through repatriation, local integration and income generation. Over 600 Ugandans, who had registered with UNHCR, repatriated voluntarily during the year.

Lesotho. Lesotho estimated that its refugee population, mostly South Africans, remained stable at some 11,500, with new arrivals counterbalancing departures, of which 200 received assistance from UNHCR.

Morocco. The assistance provided in Morocco to a small number of cases was in the form of integration of elderly Europeans, supplementary aid to people of diverse origin (Africa, Middle East) and scholarships to African refugee students.

Mozambique. At the end of 1985, there were approximately 700 refugees in Mozambique, the majority South Africans; some 470 were directly assisted by UNHCR.

Nigeria. There were some 5,000 refugees, including 4,000 Chadians, living in Nigeria in 1985. UNHCR provided aid for small-scale income-generating projects. Educational assistance reflected opportunities made available by the authorities to both refugees residing in Nigeria and others, mainly Namibians, who came to the country to study.

Rwanda. The majority of the 31,000 Ugandan refugees who had been assisted in camps located in the north of Rwanda had repatriated by the end of 1985. Some 19,000 refugees from Burundi remained, but individually required only occasional assistance.

Senegal. The number of refugees in Senegal remained stable at 5,500, of whom 5,000 were from Guinea-Bissau engaged in an agricultural scheme on the outskirts of M'Bour. Educational assistance remained a major aspect for UNHCR in view of educational placement opportunities offered to refugee students, especially at higher secondary and university levels.

Swaziland. During 1985, the number of refugees in Swaziland increased by some 2,000 and reached a total of 10,500, which included 6,900 South Africans and 3,450 Mozambicans. While South African refugees were mainly self-sufficient, relief assistance was provided to the Mozambicans.

Tunisia. UNHCR assisted a small number of cases in Tunisia—local integration of elderly Europeans, supplementary aid to people of diverse origin (Africa, Middle East) and scholarships to African refugee students.

Uganda. The political strife which characterized 1985 was accompanied by uncertainty and population movements within and outside Uganda. The refugee population was estimated at 151,000 persons, of whom 119,400 (118,000 from Rwanda and 1,400 from Zaire) lived in eight rural settlements in the south-west. Over 31,000 others from Zaire, who had arrived in Uganda during the 1960s, had settled spontaneously in western Uganda and no longer required UNHCR assistance.

UNHCR also assisted Ugandan refugees returning from the Sudan and Zaire under a 1984 special programme to rehabilitate returnees in the West Nile province; by mid-1985, 31,000 persons had benefited from that programme, which provided for their immediate needs.

United Republic of Tanzania. The refugee population in 1985 was estimated at 207,000, including largely self-sufficient refugees from Burundi who represented 80 per cent of the refugee population. In addition, there were some 20,000 refugees from Rwanda and 16,000 from Zaire. UNHCR programmes concentrated on establishing large and economically viable rural settlements and strengthening the infrastructure.

Zaire. Refugees in Zaire reached an estimated 317,000 in 1985. Approximately 263,000 were from Angola, 30,000 from Uganda and 24,000 from other countries. The Ugandan population in upper Zaire decreased due to voluntary repatriation, and a self-sufficiency programme was implemented for those who remained. A multi-purpose assistance programme to cover basic needs of over 60,000 Angolan refugees in Shaba was initiated. The Government of Zaire co-operated in the final phase of UNHCR's activities in lower Zaire.

Zambia. There was a significant influx of refugees into Zambia in 1985, mainly from Mozambique and Angola. By year's end, the refugee population was estimated at 104,000—75 per cent from Angola and the remainder mainly from Mozambique, Namibia, South Africa and Zaire. In addition to direct assistance to settlements, assistance was also provided to spontaneously settled refugees.

Zimbabwe. The number of Mozambican refugees and displaced persons increased to some 62,500 by the end of 1985. Of that number, approximately 24,000 were assisted in camps, while others were spontaneously dispersed among the local population. There were also in Zimbabwe 250 urban refugees, mainly South Africans.

Southern African student refugees

Pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly request,(19) the High Commissioner submitted a report(20) on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa—Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe—from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985.

During that time, 138 refugees from South Africa and 7 from Namibia arrived in Botswana, bringing the totals to 266 and 103, respectively; 83 South African and 32 Namibian refugee students were attending secondary schools, vocational training institutions and university, and 70 South African and 8 Namibian students were assisted to pursue their studies abroad, mainly in other African countries.

An estimated 11,500 refugees were still in Lesotho, the majority South Africans. Of the 348 registered with UNHCR, some 260 received assistance. During the first quarter of 1985, there was an influx of some 130 refugees from South Africa; 85 per cent of them were affiliated with liberation movements and were relocated to the United Republic of Tanzania, which also accommodated 282 school-age South Africans for educational purposes.

Among the 8,000 refugees in Swaziland, 85 per cent were South Africans. Of the 217 South African and Namibian refugee students who were attending educational institutions in the country, 167 were sponsored by UNHCR. Seven South African students were granted scholarships to study abroad. UNHCR assisted an additional 97 South Africans to travel from Swaziland to the United Republic of Tanzania for education.

In Zambia, an estimated 7,000 Namibians—mostly young women and school-age children—received educational assistance, food, clothing and medicines from UNHCR.

In Zimbabwe, which registered 440 South African refugees, UNHCR assistance concentrated on formal education and developing vocational and technical skills.

In the period under review, the High Commissioner reported that projects being financed by UNHCR or in co-operation with it amounted to $4,401,900—Botswana was allocated $1,270,700, Lesotho $491,000, Swaziland $663,000 and Zambia $1,977,200.

UNHCR also covered the expenses of students studying outside their countries of asylum. A total of $962,433 went to scholarships awarded to 386 Namibians and 2 South Africans for studies at west African educational institutions, and $197,465 to cover travel for education purposes. In addition, the Otto Beneke Foundation, a voluntary agency of the Federal Republic of Germany, sponsored 516 refugee students—266 Namibians and 250 South Africans—and was preparing a vocational training programme for some 260 beneficiaries, with special consideration to be given to Namibian and South African refugees.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/138.

Assistance to student refugees in southern Africa
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/109 of 14 December 1984, in which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia.

Having considered the report of the High Commissioner on the assistance programme to student refugees from South Africa and Namibia,

Noting with appreciation that some of the projects recommended in the report on assistance to student refugees in southern Africa have been successfully completed,

Noting with concern that the discriminatory and repressive policies which continue to be applied in South Africa and Namibia cause a continued and increasing influx of student refugees into Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia,

Conscious of the burden placed on the limited financial, material and administrative resources of the host countries by the increasing number of student refugees,

Appreciating the efforts of the host countries to deal with their student refugee populations, with the assistance of the international community,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for granting asylum and making educational and other facilities available to the student refugees, in spite of the pressure which the continuing influx of those refugees exerts on facilities in their countries;

3. Also expresses its appreciation to the Governments of Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia for the co-operation which they have extended to the High Commissioner on matters concerning the welfare of these refugees;

4. Notes with appreciation the financial and material support provided for the student refugees by Member States. the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, other bodies of the United Nations system and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

5. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to organize and implement an effective programme of educational and other appropriate assistance for student refugees from Namibia and South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

6. Urges all Member States and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue contributing generously to the assistance programme for student refugees, through financial support of the regular programmes of the High Commissioner and of the projects and programmes, including unfunded projects, which were submitted to the Second International Conference on Assistance to Refugees in Africa, held at Geneva from 9 to 11 July 1984;

7. Also urges all Member States and all intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to assist the countries of asylum materially and otherwise to enable them to continue to discharge their humanitarian obligations towards refugees;

8. Appeals to the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations Development Programme and all other competent United Nations bodies, as well as other international and non-governmental organizations, to continue providing humanitarian and development assistance so as to facilitate and expedite the settlement of student refugees from South Africa who have been granted asylum in Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland and Zambia;

9. Calls upon agencies and programmes of the United Nations system to continue co-operating with the Secretary-General and the High Commissioner in the implementation of humanitarian programmes of assistance for the student refugees in southern Africa;

10. Requests the High Commissioner, in co-operation with the Secretary-General, to continue to keep the matter under review, to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the current status of the programmes and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

In related action, the Assembly in resolution 40/97 E requested UNHCR to expand its assistance for the basic needs of Namibian refugees.

The Americas and Europe

UNHCR obligations in the Americas and Europe totalled $52.2 million in 1985, of which $48.5 million was under General Programmes and $3.7 million under Special Programmes.(1)

The Americas

In 1985, the overall refugee population in Latin America—which exceeded 300,000—remained relatively unchanged, with a slight increase in numbers registered in Costa Rica and Honduras being compensated for by the repatriation of refugees from Argentina and Uruguay. UNHCR's activities concentrated in Central America and Mexico, where 112,000 refugees were being assisted.

In Costa Rica, 19,411 refugees were assisted in 1985. The local integration of Salvadorian and Nicaraguan refugees of urban background was relatively successful, but integration of 5,300 Nicaraguans of rural background remained in its early stages, and by the end of the year 4,000 were still receiving assistance.

In Honduras, 20,700 Salvadorian and 530 Guatemalan refugees continued to receive assistance in camps. Some 5,300 Nicaraguan Ladino refugees also received assistance in two Honduran villages while the search for a suitable resettlement area in the region continued. Approximately 13,300 Nicaraguan refugees of Indian origin became partially self-sufficient in Mosquitia.

In Mexico, 18,500 Guatemalan refugees in the Campeche and Quintana Roo states were achieving self-sufficiency on land provided by the Mexican Government, while in the Chiapas state 21,000 persons were still being assisted pending a more durable solution.

In October,(2) the UNHCR Executive Committee expressed concern at the difficult refugee situation in Central America and called for further efforts to meet refugee needs there.

Europe

Refugees and asylum-seekers arriving in Western Europe, particularly through irregular channels, continued to be of increasing concern to those Governments. To identify problems and propose practical solutions, UNHCR held consultations on the subject (Geneva, 28-31 May 1985). An informal meeting was also organized by Sweden (Stockholm, 25 and 26 November 1985).

Those seeking asylum in European countries in 1985 increased from 103,500 persons to an estimated 165,000. The countries receiving the most asylum-seekers continued to be the Federal Republic of Germany, with over 73,000 persons, followed by France, Sweden and Switzerland. Italy and Turkey granted transit facilities to asylum-seekers.

East and South Asia and Oceania

The number of Indo-Chinese refugees in camps and centres in asylum countries in East and South Asia and Oceania stood at 159,665 at the end of 1985, of whom 34,143 were boat people. Among first-asylum countries, Thailand continued to host the largest number—93,257 Lao, 31,761 Kampucheans and 5,395 Vietnamese. Other countries and territories providing temporary asylum to significant numbers included Hong Kong, Indonesia, Japan, Macau, Malaysia, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Singapore. In addition, two refugee processing centres, at Ba-taan (Philippines) and Galang (Indonesia), provided temporary accommodation to some 11,600 Indo-Chinese refugees who had already been accepted for resettlement by third countries. There were also an estimated 20,000 refugees benefiting from UNHCR assistance in Viet Nam.

Resettlement in third countries remained the most viable solution for the majority. However, Kampucheans and Lao who returned to their home countries from Thailand, through organized or spontaneous repatriation, benefited from UNHCR assistance to facilitate their reintegration.

Following the arrival in Papua New Guinea of some 10,500 refugees from the province of Irian Jaya (Indonesia), UNHCR, at the request of Papua New Guinea, launched an aid programme at border sites, pending a durable solution.

During 1985, $61.6 million was obligated for assistance in East and South Asia and Oceania under General Programmes and $9.7 million under Special Programmes. Of that amount, $39.9 million was spent to aid Indo-Chinese refugees in the region.

The High Commissioner told the Executive Committee in October(2) that he was heartened by the United Kingdom's decision to make a new effort to relieve the burden of Hong Kong which had, proportionately, one of the biggest case-loads of Indo-Chinese refugees. He was also pleased that other major resettlement countries had decided to maintain or only marginally reduce their South-East Asian refugee quotas. He was encouraged by the steady pace of the Orderly Departure Programme from Viet Nam and by the number of lives saved by Thailand's implementation of the Anti-Piracy Programme. Thanking Governments participating in the Rescue at Sea Resettlement Offers scheme, he expressed concern for Kampuchean refugees in camps in Thailand or Viet Nam for whom a durable solution seemed remote.

The Committee(2) expressed concern about the continuing severity of refugee situations in South-East Asia, reiterated the need for durable solutions and called on Governments that were not doing so to participate in the resettlement effort and to allow the admission of refugees who did not have links to a third country.

In his October report on Kampuchea,(21) the Secretary-General stated that, during the previous six years, substantial humanitarian assistance had been channelled to Kampucheans. Those who had sought refuge along the Thai-Kampuchean border and at Khao-I-Dang (the UNHCR holding centre in Thailand) remained dependent on aid. As of 1 October 1985, there were 21,000 Kampuchean refugees in Thailand, compared with 175,000 in 1980. With the co-operation of donor Governments, resettlement countries and the host country, nearly 200,000 refugees had been resettled from Thailand since 1975 and another 6,500, accepted for resettlement, were awaiting departure for third countries. Because of an upsurge of hostilities along the Thai-Kampuchean border, the year had again been very difficult for the Kampuchean refugees on the borders and for the United Nations Border Relief Operation. Nearly all refugees were moved and given temporary refuge inside Thailand.

The donors to the programme of humanitarian assistance for the Kampuchean people met four times during 1985 (20 February, 2 May, 11 September and 25 November) to announce pledges and contributions and consider the latest developments in the region.

During the year, the Secretary-General continued to receive communications on incidents near the common border of Democratic Kampuchea and Thailand that also dealt with the refugee problem on that border (see p. 221).

In resolution 40/7, the General Assembly appealed to the international community to continue emergency assistance to Kampuchean refugees still in need, especially along the Thai-Kampuchean border and in holding centres.

UNHCR role in South-East Asia

The report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the UNHCR role in South-East Asia (1979-1983)(22) was transmitted to the General Assembly in February 1985 by the Secretary-General. It reviewed the operations, achievements and difficulties of UNHCR in fulfilling its mandate in that region.

Focusing on Indo-Chinese refugees falling under UNHCR mandate, the report mentioned that close to 1 million Indo-Chinese refugees had found a permanent home in resettlement countries, mostly in Western Europe and North America, representing the largest intercontinental movement of refugees in the history of UNHCR: Since 1979, UNHCR had channelled some $700 million in emergency and multi-purpose relief assistance to refugees in South-East Asia; in addition, it had attracted other sources of local and external refugee relief assistance, in particular from the NGO community, which had proved to be crucial to it in discharging its responsibilities in the region. Despite the High Commissioner's impressive results in stimulating the necessary political and financial support for solving the crisis, not all difficulties had been overcome. While some of those difficulties were of a political nature, most of them resulted from a weak UNHCR field establishment, which required significant strengthening.

The report recommended, among other things, that UNHCR field offices in South-East Asia should be adequately equipped to perform their responsibilities regarding international protection, programming and co-ordination of assistance activities, administration and financial management, and public information. It also recommended that the High Commissioner and the UNHCR Executive Committee should examine the feasibility of convening a humanitarian regional meeting of all parties concerned by the Indo-Chinese refugee problem with the objective of working out measures aimed at a permanent solution. In addition, it recommended that UNHCR should establish a formal working agreement with the Committee for Co-ordination of Services to Displaced Persons in Thailand (CCSDPT) which would spell out the respective responsibilities and tasks of both parties concerning refugees under UNHCR protection in that country.

In his comments on the JIU recommendations, (23) the Secretary-General said that field offices in South-East Asia were adequately staffed in proportion to the refugee situation; they had a pool of experienced administrative and financial officers and the local administrative staff were generally highly qualified. Referring to the convening of a regional conference, he felt that, given the nature of the refugee problem in South-East Asia, it would have to encompass political as well as humanitarian considerations; such a conference should therefore be convened by other United Nations organs. As for CCSDPT, the Secretary-General pointed out that it was a forum for NGOs in Thailand rather than an operational organization. Besides, CCSDPT—which had had a formal agreement with UNHCR since 1980—had not sought to be recognized as an international organization.

Middle East and South-West Asia

During 1985, $56.7 million was obligated to assist refugees in the Middle East and South-West Asia under General Programmes and $30.2 million under Special Programmes.

Afghans in Pakistan, estimated at 2.7 million in 1985, continued to represent the world's largest concentration of refugees. UNHCR assistance programmes, for which $67.6 million was obligated, were geared towards self-help and self-reliance, including projects to provide training and employment. The three-year UNHCR-World Bank project, to provide employment and income for refugees and the local population, improved, and by the end of 1985 the target for the second year had been achieved, especially in regard to its refugee labour component. Some refugees who arrived in Pakistan during the year were assisted in the Mianwali district of the Punjab, which hosted 110,000 refugees.

Afghan refugees in Iran continued to number approximately 1.8 million, 50 per cent of whom resided in Khorasan and Sistan-Baluchistan provinces. In 1985, $9.1 million was obligated to finance programmes implemented by the Council for Afghan Refugees.

In resolution 40/12, the General Assembly again appealed for humanitarian assistance for Afghan refugees.

Despite the precarious situation in Lebanon (see p. 295), the UNHCR regional office in Beirut continued to assist some 2,900 refugees in that country, and emergency assistance totalling $100,000 was also provided to 20,500 families who had been uprooted from their homes as a result of continuing strife.

In Yemen, UNHCR provided basic assistance to 1,800 refugees of Eritrean origin living on the Red Sea coast.

In Cyprus, UNHCR continued to co-ordinate aid to persons displaced as a result of the 1974 events (see p. 257).

The question of Palestine refugees was addressed by the Assembly in resolutions 40/165 A-K.

Refugee protection

During 1985, it became obvious that only concerted international action could create conditions in which it would be possible to find solutions to refugee problems while, at the same time, facilitating the High Commissioner's task of providing international protection. Thus, the refugee situations of the 1980s were affecting countries world-wide, as evidenced by growing transcontinental movements of refugees and asylum-seekers. The relevance of those considerations was particularly apparent in Europe where increased numbers of refugees arrived. Their problems and those of European States were the subject of consultations in May and November 1985 (see p. 1007).

In the Middle East and Asia, there were no major developments. In general, countries in those regions offered only temporary asylum to refugees and asylum-seekers, either on condition that they be resettled in third countries or until such time as a voluntary return to the country of origin could be envisaged. In both instances, the majority had to remain in refugee camps during the intervening period. A different situation prevailed in Africa, where more liberal asylum practices were followed by most countries. In the American hemisphere, Central American refugees were a source of concern during the year, since the majority of them lived in camps often located close to their country of origin, thereby constituting a potential for the conflict to spill over frontiers. A similar situation existed also in some African and Asian countries.

The physical protection of refugees continued to be of great concern to UNHCR. Military attacks on refugee camps and settlements occurred in southern Africa, Lebanon, Central America and South-East Asia. Refugees were also vulnerable to other violence, both within and outside their camps and settlements. A UNHCR/Thai Government Anti-Piracy Programme continued in 1985 to deal with piracy attacks against asylum-seekers in the South China Sea.

UNHCR continued to provide refugees and asylum-seekers with various measures of protection, against a growing trend among countries to be restrictive in granting asylum. The principle of non-refoulement—whereby refugees and asylum-seekers would not forcibly be returned to countries where they faced persecution or other danger—was respected almost universally. There was, however, a growing trend to put such persons in detention as part of a policy of deterrence. Similarly, some countries progressively introduced legal and other restrictions, rendering it more difficult for refugees to obtain employment or otherwise enjoy economic rights.

There was a growing recognition among countries of the importance of appropriate documentation. At the request of several Governments,

UNHCR printed thousands of refugee identity cards. It also contributed to the cost of producing such cards locally in other countries. In addition, UNHCR provided Governments with over 9,300 convention travel documents and offered help where difficulties were encountered in obtaining or renewing travel documents and visas.

In 1985, UNHCR intensified its activities in the promotion, advancement and dissemination of refugee-law principles, in co-operation with the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee, the Council of Europe, the League of Arab States, the Organization of African Unity, the Organization of American States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference. In addition, UNHCR organized with the International Institute of Humanitarian Law at San Remo, Italy, seminars and meetings on refugee law; it also collaborated with the International Institute of Human Rights at Strasbourg, France, and the Regional Centre for Third World Studies at Bogota, Colombia.

A seminar on the international protection of refugees in east and southern Africa—attended by Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe, and OAU, UNHCR and UNDP representatives—was held at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, from 28 January to 1 February 1985.

In October,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNHCR Executive Committee, recognizing that UNHCR's international protection function had become increasingly difficult due to the growing complexity of current refugee problems, reiterated that that function could be carried out effectively only with full government support, particularly through durable solutions. It welcomed the fact that many States, including those confronted with economic and developmental difficulties, continued to grant asylum to large numbers of refugees. At the same time, it noted with concern the growing phenomenon of refugees and asylum-seekers who, having found protection in one country, moved irregularly to another country, and hoped that that problem could be mitigated through global solutions. That issue was considered by the Sub-Committee of the Whole on International Protection at its tenth session (Geneva, 30 September, 1 and 4 October 1985). Since the Executive Committee could not reach a consensus on how to deal with the problem, it requested the High Commissioner to continue consultations with a view to reaching agreement on the matter. In addition to the question of irregular movements of asylum-seekers and refugees, the Committee adopted other conclusions, prepared by the Sub-Committee, on refugee women and international protection (see below); military attacks on refugee camps and settlements in southern Africa and elsewhere; problems relating to the rescue of asylum-seekers in distress at sea; and voluntary repatriation.

Refugee women and international protection

Since refugee women and young girls currently constituted most of the world's refugee population, an understanding of their special problems and social condition was necessary to enable the international community to provide them with equal and adequate protection. Although refugee men and women often found themselves in similar difficult situations, the physical safety and integrity of refugee women were in many instances threatened or violated.

In response to the special needs of refugee women, UNHCR had developed programmes which included income-generating and self-sufficiency projects. As far as the violation of their physical integrity and safety was concerned, measures needed to be taken to strengthen UNHCR presence in border areas and on flight routes, as well as in areas where women were exposed to such dangers.

The UNHCR Executive Committee adopted several conclusions. Among them, it welcomed the round table on refugee women (Geneva, April 1985) and the recommendations regarding the situation of refugee and displaced women adopted in July by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see Chapter XIX of this section). It also stressed the need for a better understanding of the special needs and problems of refugee women in the international protection field and for gathering data concerning refugee women and girls in order to identify and implement appropriate mechanisms to ensure their effective protection. The Executive Committee requested the High Commissioner to report to it on the needs of refugee women and on existing and proposed programmes for their benefit.

In resolution 40/118, the General Assembly reaffirmed the fundamental nature of the High Commissioner's function to protect refugees and the need for Governments to continue to co-operate with his Office, particularly by observing the principles of asylum and non-refoulement.

International instruments

As at 31 December 1985, the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees<sup>(24)</sup> and its 1967 Protocol<sup>(25)</sup> had been ratified or acceded to by 95 and 94 States, respectively. There was no accession to those instruments during 1985.<sup>(26)</sup>

Other intergovernmental legal instruments of benefit to refugees included the 1969 OAU Convention governing the Specific Aspects of Refugee Problems in Africa, the 1957 Agreement relating to Refugee Seamen and its 1973 Protocol, the 1959 European Agreement on the Abolition of Visas for Refugees, the 1980 European Agreement on Transfer of Responsibility for Refugees, and the 1969 American Convention on Human Rights, Pact of San José, Costa Rica.

As at 31 December 1985, there were 35 States parties to the 1954 Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons<sup>(27)</sup> and 14 States parties to the 1961 Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness.<sup>(28)</sup>

The General Assembly by resolution 40/144 adopted a Declaration on the human rights of individuals not nationals of the country where they live, and in resolution 40/118 stressed the need for Governments to accede to and implement international and regional refugee instruments.

International co-operation to avert new refugee flows

In 1985, the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, established by the General Assembly in 1981(1) to review the problem and develop recommendations, held its fifth and sixth sessions (New York, 25 March-4 April and 3-14 June).<sup>(2)</sup> The Group's work covered, among other things, the circumstances causing new massive flows of refugees and international co-operation to avert them. In view of its complex task, the Group requested that its mandate be renewed for two further 2-week sessions during 1986, preferably in March and April. The Group's composition was to remain unchanged, unless nominating Governments chose to replace their experts.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly, on 16 December 1985, adopted resolution 40/166 without vote.

Recognizing the necessity of having all the experts participate in the future sessions of the Group,

1. Welcomes the report of the Group of Governmental Experts on International Co-operation to Avert New Flows of Refugees, including its recommendations, as a further constructive step in the fulfilment of its mandate;

2. Reaffirms and extends the mandate of the Group of Governmental Experts as defined in General Assembly resolutions 36/148 and 37/121;

3. Calls upon the Secretary-General, without prejudice to the rule contained in resolution 36/148, to continue to assist, as far as possible and by way of exception, the experts coming from least developed countries, appointed by the Secretary-General, to participate fully in the work of the Group of Governmental Experts so that it may fulfil its mandate;

4. Calls upon the Group of Governmental Experts to work expeditiously on the fulfilment of its mandate in two sessions of two weeks' duration each during 1986 and to conclude its comprehensive review of the problem in all its aspects;

5. Requests the Group of Governmental Experts to submit its report in time for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

6. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "International co-operation to avert new flows of refugees".

Chapter XXII

Drugs of abuse

In 1985, the abuse of drugs in many parts of the world remained at a high level and in some countries was escalating. The steady deterioration in recent years had moved the international community to launch unprecedented and comprehensive counter-attacks against abuse, illicit cultivation, manufacture and trafficking.

The Secretary-General, in his 1985 report on the work of the Organization (see p. 10), stated that the plague of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, fuelled by the immense profits which they generated, had reached an emergency stage. He said that the first global conference on the subject, which he had proposed, should serve to raise the level of world-wide awareness of the escalating problems of drug abuse and result in a programme of action at the international, regional and national levels.

In December, the General Assembly approved the programme of action for 1986, the fifth year of the United Nations basic five-year programme of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy (resolution 40/129). As recommended by the Secretary-General, it decided to convene at Vienna, Austria, in 1987, at the ministerial level, an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (40/122). As the Economic and Social Council had done in February (decision 1985/104), the Assembly requested that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs prepare a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs (resolution 40/120), and recommended subjects for action at a 1986 interregional meeting at Vienna of heads of national law enforcement agencies, as part of the international campaign against traffic in drugs (40/121).

The Economic and Social Council, in May, recommended the promotion of preventive education and community participation against drug abuse (resolution 1985/14), and urged Governments to restrict production to meeting mainly their domestic requirements (1985/16). The Council called for measures against the diversion in international commerce of specific precursors, chemicals and solvents used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances (1985/12), urged steps to reduce the risk of illicit traffic in commercial carriers (1985/13) and asked Governments to furnish information to the International Narcotics Control Board (INCB) on the countries of origin of imports and the countries of destination of exports of psychotropic substances (1985/15). It requested the Secretary-General to convene regular meetings of the heads of the national drug control and law enforcement agencies in Africa to establish more effective mechanisms for co-operation (1985/11).

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, which held its thirty-first session at Vienna from 11 to 20 February, considered matters pertaining to the aims and implementation of drug treaties and recommended seven draft resolutions and four decisions for adoption by the Economic and Social Council on the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances. The Commission also reviewed action on international drug control at the international level, i.e. the activities of the specialized agencies and international organs and organizations, initiated preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, discussed implementation of the International Drug Control Strategy and its financing, and reviewed the situation and trends in drug abuse and illicit traffic.

In July, the Council decided that the Commission should hold a special session in 1986 to consider scheduling of substances under the provisions of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances and to review INCB's report (resolution 1985/79).

INCB met twice during the year at Vienna—13-24 May (thirty-seventh session) and 8-25 October (thirty-eighth session)—continuing its evaluation and overall supervision of governmental implementation of drug control treaties. It reviewed annual estimates of licit narcotic drug requirements submitted by Governments limiting the manufacture and trade in narcotic drugs to medical and scientific purposes, and monitored the licit movement of psychotropic substances.

The Narcotics Laboratory Section of the United Nations Secretariat's Division of Narcotic Drugs, whose functions included assistance to national narcotics laboratories in techniques for the identification and analysis of seized drugs, in 1985 trained 16 national scientists from 11 countries at Vienna.

The United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control (UNFDAC) continued to assist Governments, at their request, in the financing of projects aimed at reducing the illicit supply of and demand for drugs—for example, projects to replace illicit opium poppy cultivation, treat and rehabilitate drug addicts, strengthen control measures and organize information and education programmes. UNFDAC, which depended entirely on voluntary contributions, assisted 50 projects in 25 countries during the year.

On the initiative of the Secretary-General, the question of increasing the system-wide effort in drug abuse control was included in the agenda of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) at its second regular session on 28 and 29 October.

To enhance co-ordination and help provide a United Nations system-wide response to the drug abuse phenomenon, two in a series of ad hoc inter-agency meetings on co-ordination in matters of international drug abuse control were held in 1985: one at Vienna on 21 and 22 February; the other at Rome, Italy, from 11 to 13 September.

Drug abuse and international control

INCB report for 1985. The International Narcotics Control Board, in its 1985 annual report,<sup>(1)</sup> stated that the abuse of a variety of drugs—cannabis, cocaine, opiates, psychotropic substances and other dependence-producing drugs—remained at a high level in most parts of the world. Health hazards were being aggravated by the simultaneous consumption of two or more drugs, frequently in combination with alcohol, by the emergence of new and even more potent drugs of abuse, and by the use of ever more dangerous means of drug-taking. Wherever illicit cultivation, production and trafficking occurred, abuse by the local population almost inevitably ensued. The Board observed that abuse by young people gravely imperilled the future of countries, and that very few countries were unaffected by drug abuse.

The Board stressed that responsibility for implementing the international drug control system established by treaties rested above all on national authorities, since they alone were able to control the movement of substances within their respective jurisdictions. INCB's role, in co-operation with parties and non-parties, was to help countries achieve the aims of the treaties. In analysing the drug control situation world-wide, the Board benefited from information obtained from Governments, United Nations organs, specialized agencies and other international organizations, notably the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol). While reviewing the situation in respect of all countries, INCB said it gave special attention to countries in which problems of drug abuse, illicit trafficking and uncontrolled or illicit production were most acute, and to countries where developments were of particular interest to the international community.

It pointed out that the adoption of more collective and vigorous countermeasures on the basis of strengthened political will by Governments had nevertheless resulted in progress during the year.

That applied to, inter alia: joint enforcement operations, including the eradication of illicit cultivation; and the imposition of tighter controls on chemicals and solvents for illicit manufacture, notably of heroin and cocaine. The Board welcomed proposals to facilitate extradition and to strengthen legislation to ensure the seizure of traffickers' illicitly acquired assets. It also welcomed the growing involvement of public and community leaders in preventing and reducing drug abuse, as well as new initiatives adopted to fight all aspects of drug abuse. Drawing attention to the so-called "designer drugs"—analogues of controlled substances—its President said that international action might be necessary to prevent the emergence of a fashion involving clandestine manufacture and abuse of those substances.

INCB stressed the need for the broadest possible international co-operation and co-ordination in the realm of anti-drug action. It was essential that resources be provided to national, bilateral and multilateral drug control programmes. The Board also hoped that the trend, which became more pronounced in 1985, towards providing greater resources to support the drug control programmes of developing countries would continue.

INCB report for 1984. At its February 1985 session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission on Narcotic Drugs considered the INCB 1984 annual report<sup>(3)</sup> and a related note by the Secretary-General.<sup>(4)</sup> Introducing the report, the INCB President presented a broad assessment of the problems of drug control, touching on the legal trade in drugs as well as the non-medical use of, and illicit traffic in, drugs. He said that Governments had launched unparalleled and innovative countermeasures, which INCB welcomed. Controls over psychotropic substances were beginning to function more effectively. Data provided by both parties and non-parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances<sup>(5)</sup> had led to the detection of attempts at large-scale diversion. The President drew attention to the INCB recommendations that Governments ensure that penalties for drug trafficking were sufficiently strict. He reminded Governments that the 1961 Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs,<sup>(6)</sup> as amended by the 1972 Protocol,<sup>(7)</sup> could in certain circumstances serve in lieu of an extradition treaty.

On 28 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/129, took note of the INCB report for 1984,<sup>(8)</sup> which had been issued in summary form in February.<sup>(8)</sup>

JIU report. By an April note,<sup>(9)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly his comments and those of the executive heads of organizations within the United Nations system on the 1984 report of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on drug abuse control activities in the United Nations system.<sup>(3)</sup> He accepted JIU recommendations to propose in ACC positive concerted actions that could be taken on drug abuse control, to continue inter-agency co-ordination meetings at a higher level of participation, and that drug abuse control projects in developing countries should have specific conditions which would require Governments to enforce their purpose and goals (recommendations 1, 3 and 5). He accepted in principle recommendation 4 that the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs attend the inter-agency meetings and those of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, and had conveyed recommendation 2—that specialized agencies develop drug control programmes to be regularly reported on and reviewed by ACC—to the agencies.

In May,<sup>(10)</sup> the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) considered the report of JIU and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon. It recommended that recommendations 1 and 3 be implemented by the Secretary-General and that the Assembly ask the agencies to develop drug control programmes as envisaged in recommendation 2. Recommendations 4 and 5 were not acceptable to CPC.

In-depth evaluation of the drug control programme

Report of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General submitted to CPC in April 1985 an in-depth evaluation of the drug control programme<sup>(11)</sup> for the period 1978-1983—with an addendum to include action by the Secretary-General in 1984-1985 to improve co-ordination of drug control activities in the United Nations system—reviewing the activities of the three United Nations entities which had jurisdiction in the field of drug abuse control: the Division of Narcotic Drugs, the secretariat of INCB and UNFDAC. The report also reviewed four UNFDAC-financed field projects (two each in Turkey and Thailand) and assessed co-ordination efforts in drug-related activities of the United Nations system to curb the problem of drug abuse.

The Secretary-General reported that the three drug control units had in general been effective. He made the following recommendations: (1) the harmonization of the 1961 and 1971 Conventions should continue to be reviewed periodically for implementation; (2) the role and work programme of the United Nations Narcotics Laboratory (see p. 1016) should be reviewed, and an expert study made to determine whether some of its functions should be decentralized to national or regional laboratories; (3) an effort should be made through protocols to make it possible to trace, freeze and seize assets acquired illegally and to extradite drug criminals; (4) increased emphasis should be given to demand reduction; (5) the Division of Narcotic Drugs should be given additional technical capacity;

(6) the possibility of the drug units sharing common services and facilities should be looked into; (7) the Assembly might appeal for increased unearmarked contributions to UNFDAC; (8) a small technical committee should be set up to advise the Executive Director of UNFDAC on projects and priorities; (9) UNFDAC should assist countries facing the illicit drug problem, under conditions that would require Governments to enforce the goals of the projects; and (10) drug control secretariats should eliminate duplication of efforts, ensure teamwork and improve co-ordination.

CPC consideration. In May,<sup>(10)</sup> CPC took note of the Secretary-General's report. It considered that the alarming global dimension of the drug abuse problem and the need for optimum utilization of the limited resources available to curb it required effective co-ordination of all efforts. It welcomed the assignment in May 1984 to the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs of responsibility for overall co-ordination of all United Nations drug control-related activities; it recommended that he undertake further corrective measures outlined by the Secretary-General, such as clearly spelling out the division of responsibilities among the units. The Committee recommended that recommendations 1 and 3 be considered by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, accepted recommendations 2, 4, 5, 9 and 10, and agreed in principle with recommendation 6.

Implementation of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy

In January,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs a note reviewing the implementation of the 1981 International Drug Abuse Control Strategy<sup>(13)</sup> and the five-year programme of action (1982-1986). The note covered implementation of the programme for the third year (1984) and set out the proposed programmes for 1985 and 1986, noting activities that might be undertaken under the regular United Nations budget, and those suggested for extrabudgetary financing.

The Secretary-General also submitted to the Assembly in October, in response to a 1979 Assembly resolution,<sup>(14)</sup> a report<sup>(15)</sup> on international co-operation in drug abuse control. He gave details of activities carried out in 1985 by the Office of the Under-Secretary-General for Political, and General Assembly Affairs, the Division of Narcotic Drugs, INCB, UNFDAC, the Centre for Social Development and Humanitarian Affairs, the United Nations Social Defence Research Institute, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the World Food Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization and the World Health Organization (WHO). The report provided an overview of related developments and plans.

A second October report,<sup>(16)</sup> submitted pursuant to a 1983 Assembly request,<sup>(17)</sup> gave an overview of the drug control activities being carried out by the organizations and programmes within the United Nations system.

In a further October note to the Assembly, on strategy and policies for drug control,<sup>(18)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a possible programme of action for 1986, the fifth year of the United Nations basic five-year programme of action.

One project of the fourth year of the five-year programme, adopted along with the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy by the Assembly in 1981,<sup>(19)</sup> was the convening of an Expert Group on the Reduction of Excessive Stocks of Licit Opiate Raw Materials (Vienna, 23-27 September 1985)<sup>(20)</sup> (see p. 1019). Two other expert groups on drug control strategy and policies also met in 1985: the Expert Group on Cocaine and Heroin Analysis and Recommended Methods of Testing (Wiesbaden, Federal Republic of Germany, 21-25 October)<sup>(21)</sup> and the Expert Group on Countermeasures to Drug Smuggling by Air and Sea (Vienna, 9-13 December).<sup>(22)</sup>

Activities of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs. The Commission, which had been constituted as the task force envisaged in the Assembly's 1981 resolution,<sup>(19)</sup> adopting the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy and the five-year programme of action, to review, monitor and co-ordinate their implementation, met in February 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> when it considered the Secretary-General's January report. It adopted a resolution<sup>(23)</sup> on international drug abuse control strategy and future priority, by which, noting that the basic five-year programme of action would be completed in 1986, it recommended that future such programmes be formulated within the framework of the United Nations medium-term plans and biennial budgets. To that end, it asked the Secretary-General to present to it at future sessions a comprehensive document containing a co-ordinated overview of the budget's international drug control programmes and comparing the current programme and costs with the proposed ones. He was also asked to adjust the proposed 1986-1987 budget to take account of Commission proposals at the current session. The Commission recommended that the text of its resolution be submitted to the General Assembly for consideration.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/129 without vote.

Strategy and policies for drug control

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/124 of 16 December 1977, in which it requested the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to study the possibility of launching a meaningful programme of international drug abuse control strategy and policies,

Recalling also its resolution 36/168 of 16 December 1981, by which it adopted the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy and the basic five-year programme of action proposed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in its resolution 1(XXIX) of 11 February 1981, as well as its resolution 38/98 of 16 December 1983, in which it decided that, beginning with its eighth special session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, meeting in plenary during its sessions and in the presence of all interested observers, would constitute the task force envisaged in General Assembly resolution 36/168 to review, monitor and co-ordinate the implementation of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy and the basic five-year programme of action,

Taking note of resolution 2(XXXI) of 20 February 1985 of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and Economic and Social Council decision 1985/130 of 28 May 1985,

Approves the programme of action for 1986, the fifth year of the United Nations basic five-year programme of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy, reviewed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its thirty-first session.

UN Fund for Drug Abuse Control

During 1985, the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control continued to provide assistance to countries in need, by implementing projects designed as elements of individual country programmes and supporting agency-executed projects designed for the common benefit of various countries. The total UNFDAC budget for 1985 amounted to $18.7 million ($4.4 million greater than for 1984), providing assistance for 50 projects in 25 countries. According to a November 1985 interim report on the Fund,<sup>(24)</sup> major efforts under the technical co-operation programmes were directed to countries where large-scale programmes had been developed, particularly Bolivia, Burma, Colombia, Pakistan, Peru, Thailand and Turkey. Agreements were initiated or renewed for activities in Afghanistan, China, Colombia, Ecuador, Jamaica, Pakistan, Peru, Sri Lanka and Turkey. UNFDAC supported 19 headquarters activities which consisted mainly of research, dissemination of information, organization of meetings and seminars, and training.

*In 1983, Italy pledged $40,880,530 to be used over a five-year period for agreed projects.

In December, the General Assembly, by resolution 40/121, acknowledged the vital role played by UNFDAC and called on Member States to contribute or to continue contributing to it. By resolution 40/122, the Assembly instructed that the issue of strengthening United Nations co-ordination in drug abuse control activities by increasing support for UNFDAC should be included in the comprehensive multidisciplinary outline of future activities to be adopted by a 1987 conference on drug abuse and illicit trafficking.

The Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Milan, Italy, August/September 1985) invited States to use UNFDAC to pool resources for greater impact through improved co-ordination and unified programming, and urged new and increased contributions.<sup>(25)</sup>

UN Narcotics Laboratory

In 1985, the Narcotics Laboratory Section of the United Nations Division of Narcotic Drugs assisted national narcotics laboratories through the selection and procurement of basic equipment, reference books and standard texts, and made available reference samples of drugs under international control. It also provided information on the collection and analysis of seized samples of traditional drugs such as heroin, cocaine and cannabis. The Secretary-General's 1984 report<sup>(26)</sup> on the scientific research and work of the Section was discussed by the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in February 1985,<sup>(27)</sup> along with a manual prepared for use by national authorities on the establishment and operational needs of narcotics laboratories.

Proposed International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking (1987)

The Secretary-General, in a speech to the Economic and Social Council on 24 May 1985, said that drug abuse presented as destructive a threat to current and future generations as the plagues which swept many parts of the world in earlier centuries. Unless controlled, its effect would be more insidious and devastating. He believed the moment had arrived for the international community to expand its efforts in a global undertaking to meet that peril. Accordingly, he proposed that a world conference be convened at the ministerial level in 1987 to deal with all aspects of drug abuse. Specifically, he said, the conference should be multidisciplinary in nature and focus on the following key areas: the promotion of education and community participation in prevention and reduction of the demand for illicit drugs; crop substitution and other methods of reducing supply; improved methods to limit the use of narcotics to medical and scientific purposes; forfeiture of illegally acquired proceeds and the extradition of persons arrested for drug-related crimes; strengthening of resources of law enforcement authorities; and treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts.

In October, ACC decided<sup>(27)</sup> to consider, in its programme of work for 1986, preparations for the proposed world conference. Its Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Co-ordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse Control (Rome, 11-13

September)<sup>(28)</sup> had outlined the genesis of the Secretary-General's proposal, and expressed the hope that the conference would elicit an increase in the human and financial resources allocated by Member States at the national and intergovernmental organization levels to cope more effectively with the drug abuse phenomenon.

An October note by the Secretary-General,<sup>(29)</sup> which annexed his speech to the Council, elaborated on the purposes, objectives, preparations for and organization of the proposed conference.

On 5 November 1985,<sup>(30)</sup> Angola forwarded to the Secretary-General the Declarations adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries (Luanda, 4-7 September). In the Final Economic Declaration, the Ministers expressed their support for the proposed conference and urged prompt agreement on technical and economic co-operation programmes to assist countries most affected by drug abuse, illicit production and trafficking.

The Bahamas, on 28 October,<sup>(31)</sup> transmitted a communiqué adopted by heads of Governments of Commonwealth States (Nassau, 16-22 October), in which they welcomed the Secretary-General's proposal.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On an oral proposal of its President, the Economic and Social Council, on 28 May 1985, by decision 1985/131 adopted without vote, took note of the statement made by the Secretary-General on 24 May on the question of narcotic drugs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, on the recommendation of the Third Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/122, without vote.

International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking

The General Assembly,

Conscious of the common concern that exists among nations of the world regarding the awesome and vicious effects of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, which threaten the stability of nations and the well-being of mankind and which therefore constitute a grave threat to the security and development of many countries,

Aware of the dangers posed for producer, consumer and transit countries alike by the illegal cultivation, production and manufacture of and demand for drugs and by their illicit traffic,

Recalling its resolutions 39/141, 39/142 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984 and relevant resolutions and decisions of the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Narcotic Drugs in the international campaign against traffic in and abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Mindful of relevant regional and other initiatives, such as the Declaration of Principle to Combat the Abuse of Narcotic Drugs adopted by the Association of South-

East Asian Nations on 26 June 1976, the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984, the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984, the report entitled "Options for individual and collective action to intensify the fight against drug abuse" issued at the Bonn Summit held from 2 to 4 May 1985, the joint statement on the international problem of drug abuse and drug trafficking issued on 9 July 1985 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, the Lima Declaration of 29 July 1985, the concern expressed at the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, and the communiqué adopted at the meeting of heads of Governments of Commonwealth States, held at Nassau from 16 to 22 October 1985, as well as the First Ladies' Conferences on Drug Abuse held in Washington in April 1985 and in New York in October 1985,

Recognizing the importance of adherence to existing international legal instruments, including the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, and the need to encourage Member States that have not yet done so to ratify these instruments and the need for States that have already ratified to implement fully their obligations under these instruments,

Noting the relevant provisions of the International Drug Abuse Control Strategy adopted by the General Assembly at its thirty-sixth session,

Mindful of the special responsibilities of the United Nations and the international community to seek viable solutions to the growing scourge of drug abuse and illicit trafficking,

Noting the work of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs towards the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Noting with appreciation the statement made by the Secretary-General before the Economic and Social Council on 24 May 1985, referred to in Council decision 1985/131 of 28 May 1985, which drew attention to the gravity, magnitude and complexities of the international drug problem and in response proposed a world-wide conference at the ministerial level in 1987 to consider all aspects of the problem,

Recognizing that the interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies, to be convened at Vienna in 1986, could make a significant contribution to the deliberations of the conference at the ministerial level proposed by the Secretary-General,

Taking into account the various reviews of the activities of the United Nations agencies in the narcotics field that have already been undertaken and noting with satisfaction the Secretary-General's designation of the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs as the overall Co-ordinator of all United Nations activities related to drug control,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on a proposed United Nations conference on drug abuse control,

1. Strongly urges all States to summon the utmost political will to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking by generating increased political, cultural and social awareness;

2. Calls upon the United Nations, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to give the highest attention and priority possible to international measures to combat illicit production of, trafficking in and demand for drugs;

3. Also calls upon all States that have not already done so to become parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and to the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971, and, in the mean time, to make serious efforts to comply with the provisions of these instruments;

4. Decides to convene, in 1987, an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking at the ministerial level at the Vienna International Centre as an expression of the political will of nations to combat the drug menace, with the mandate to generate universal action to combat the drug problem in all its forms at the national, regional and international levels and to adopt a comprehensive multidisciplinary outline of future activities which focuses on concrete and substantive issues directly relevant to the problems of drug abuse and illicit trafficking, inter alia:

(a) To consider whether existing mechanisms, whereby experiences, methodologies and other information in law enforcement, preventive education, treatment and rehabilitation, research and development of manpower relating to the prevention and control of drug abuse can be exchanged, should be improved or, if necessary, complemented by new mechanisms;

(b) To intensify concerted efforts by governmental, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to combat all forms of drug abuse, illicit trafficking and related criminal activities leading to the further development of national strategies that could be a basis for international action;

(c) To create heightened national and international awareness and sensitivity concerning the pernicious effects of the abuse of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, paying due attention to the demand dimension of the drug problem and to the role of the mass media, non-governmental organizations and other channels of dissemination of information about all aspects of the drug problem, especially in the prevention of drug abuse;

(d) To achieve as much harmonization as possible and to reinforce national legislation, bilateral treaties, regional arrangements and other international legal instruments, especially as they relate to enforcement and penalties against those involved in all aspects of illicit trafficking, including forfeiture of illegally acquired assets and extradition, and to develop co-operation in dealing with drug abusers, including their treatment and rehabilitation;

(e) To make further progress towards eradicating the sources of raw materials for illicit drugs through a comprehensive programme of integrated rural development, the development of alternative means of livelihood and retraining, law enforcement and, where appropriate, crop substitution;

(f) To control more effectively the production, distribution and consumption of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances with a view to limiting their use exclusively to medical and scientific purposes, in accordance with existing conventions, and, in this connection, to underline the central role of the International Narcotics Control Board;

(g) To strengthen the United Nations co-ordination of drug abuse control activities by, inter alia, increasing support for the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and to reinforce regional and other co-operation between Member States;

(h) To support strongly current high-priority initiatives and programmes of the United Nations, including the elaboration of a convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances which considers, in particular, those aspects of the problem not envisaged in existing international instruments;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to facilitate co-ordination and interaction between Member States and the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and, in this regard, to appoint the Secretary-General of the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking at the earliest possible time;

6. Requests the Economic and Social Council, at its organizational session for 1986, to invite the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to act as the preparatory body for the Conference, which shall be open to the participation of all States, and, for this purpose, to extend by one week the ninth special session of the Commission at Vienna in February 1986 in order to consider the agenda and the organizational arrangements for the Conference and, further, to submit its report on these matters to the Council at its first regular session of 1986;

7. Reaffirms the central role of the specialized expert input of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and calls upon all United Nations bodies to co-operate fully with the Commission and with the Secretary-General of the Conference in order to ensure effective preparations for the Conference;

8. Requests the Secretary-General, without prejudice to ongoing initiatives, programmes and work of the United Nations in the field of drugs, to cover as much as possible of the cost of holding the Conference through absorption within the regular budget for the biennium 1986-1987 and to facilitate consideration of the financial implications of the present resolution through established procedures, and further requests the Secretary-General to submit progress reports on the financial arrangements and implementation of the present resolution, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1986;

9. Further requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Preventive education

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second (Social) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/14 without vote.

Promotion of preventive education and community participation against drug abuse

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling article 38, paragraph 3, of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol, and article 20, paragraph 3, of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances,

Recalling also its resolution 1981/9 of 6 May 1981,

Noting with concern the alarming spread of drug abuse in most parts of the world and its detrimental effects on all societies and individuals, particularly young people,

Recognizing that the elimination of the illicit supply of and demand for drugs is the ultimate objective of the community of nations,

Mindful that, given the present state of knowledge in the treatment of drug addiction, a permanent cure is not always an attainable objective,

Aware of the urgent need to protect future generations from the scourge of drug abuse,

Conscious of the impact that informed public opinion will have in increasing the effectiveness of the fight against drug abuse,

Recognizing that information aimed solely at emphasizing the dangers of drug abuse is often of limited effectiveness in discouraging drug misuse,

1. Urges the Governments of countries facing problems of drug abuse, as part of a comprehensive strategy, to give priority to programmes which aim to create in the young a deep respect for their own health, fitness and well-being and, taking into account cultural and social factors, to provide appropriate information and judicious advice for all sectors of their communities with regard to drug abuse, its effects and the ways in which members of those communities can respond;

2. Invites Governments to enlist, as an ongoing strategy, the participation of intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, youth groups, teachers and parents in carrying out preventive activities;

3. Requests Governments to share their experience in this field, through bilateral arrangements, the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations Secretariat, the World Health Organization, other specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations for their consideration and appropriate action.

Supply and demand

Narcotic raw materials for licit use

At its February session, the Commission on Narcotic Drugs<sup>(2)</sup> reported that INCB had requested Governments concerned to provide, pursuant to a 1984 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(32)</sup> information on measures taken or contemplated to implement a series of Council resolutions to promote a lasting balance between supply and demand. INCB prepared a special report<sup>(33)</sup> in which it summarized the current situation and trends in the demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs, as well as international efforts aimed at ensuring a proper balance. The report also contained statements by Governments on measures they had taken or contemplated taking to implement the Council resolutions on the subject. According to the report, global production and demand of opiates had remained in balance since 1980. The problem of abnormally high accumulated stocks of both opium and poppy straw was accentuated by the fact that, since 1974, demand for opiates had levelled out—at approximately 190 tonnes of morphine equivalent per year.

An Expert Group on the Reduction of Excessive Stocks of Licit Opiate Raw Materials (Vienna, 23-27 September)<sup>(20)</sup> concluded that conversion of excess stock of such materials by refining it, or destroying medically useful excess opium stocks, were not currently desirable solutions, that the possibility might be explored of making available through WHO the unsatisfied medical needs for codeine in developing countries, and that the World Bank, UNDP and UNFDAC might consider extending technical assistance to India to assess agro-economic issues relating to opiate raw-material stock and production.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/16 by vote.

Supply of and demand for opiates for medical and scientific needs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/8 of 9 May 1979, 1980/20 of 30 April 1980, 1981/6 of 6 May 1981, 1982/12 of 30 April 1982, 1983/3 of 24 May 1983 and 1984/21 of 24 May 1984, as well as Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution I(XXIX) of 11 February 1981 entitled "Strategy and policies for drug control",

Having considered the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1984 on the demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific needs,

Noting with concern the increasing production of opiate raw materials in excess of domestic need and for export in some non-traditional supplier countries, as brought out in that report,

Noting also with concern that the traditional supplier countries continue to hold large accumulated stocks of opiate raw materials which constitute heavy financial and other burdens for them,

Bearing in mind the urgent need to liquidate the accumulated stocks held by the traditional supplier countries with a view to achieving a lasting world-wide balance between demand and supply of opiates for medical and scientific purposes,

Taking note of the position set out in paragraph 58 of the report of the International Narcotics Control Board,

Noting with appreciation the consultations held and the steps taken by the International Narcotics Control Board to facilitate the implementation of Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/21,

1. Urges the Governments of those countries that have not already done so to take urgent and effective steps to implement Council resolution 1984/21;

2. Urges the Governments of importing countries to take urgent and effective steps to support the traditional supplier countries and to give to those countries all the practical assistance they can, in order to avoid the proliferation of sources of production of opiate raw materials for export;

3. Urges the Governments of producing and manufacturing countries which have recently set up additional capacities for export to take urgent and effective measures to restrict their production programmes to meeting mainly their domestic requirements;

4. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to further pursue the implementation of the above-mentioned resolutions with the Governments of those countries which have not yet implemented them, and to devise such other measures as may be deemed appropriate with a view to promoting and monitoring the urgent implementation of those resolutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts towards the expeditious implementation of project A-1, on the reduction of excessive stocks of licit opiate raw materials, under the programme of action for the biennium 1984-1985 of the Basic Five-Year Programme of Action of the International Drug Control Strategy;

6. Requests the International Narcotics Control Board to assist, in consultation with the producing and consuming countries and the concerned United Nations bodies, in the implementation of project A-1;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for their consideration and implementation.

Meeting 22

35-0-15

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/83) by vote (26-0-13), 15 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1985/23); agenda item 18.

Illicit traffic

INCB reported<sup>(1)</sup> that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its February 1985 session<sup>(2)</sup> noted that increasingly clear links existed in many parts of the world between drug trafficking, the illegal traffic in firearms, subversion, international terrorism and other criminal activities. On the recommendation of its Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East (see p. 1025), the Commission asked to receive information on such links through the annual reporting system.

INCB observed that traffickers attempted to hide their profits by "laundering" (concealing or disguising the nature, source, disposition, movement or ownership) them through legitimate enterprises—a process which undermined the economic and social order, spread violence and corruption, and jeopardized the very political stability and security of some countries. INCB further pointed to the emergence and abuse of new and hazardous drugs, such as "designer drugs"—analogues of controlled substances which, slightly altered, did not fall within the legal controls. They could be more potent than the parent substances and entailed a substantial threat to health and even life.

The Commission, in February,<sup>(3)</sup> initiated preparation of a draft convention on illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances (see p. 1023).

Two subsidiary bodies of the Commission—the Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East and the Operational Heads of National Narcotics Law Enforcement Agencies (HONLEA), Far East Region (see p. 1022)—continued to serve as co-ordination mechanisms for drug law enforcement at the regional level. They were among the co-ordination mechanisms noted in an October report<sup>(4)</sup> of the Secretary-General on the international campaign against traffic in drugs, prepared in response to a 1984 Assembly request.<sup>(5)</sup> Measures to alleviate the special problems of transit States were also addressed, as was the possibility of convening a world ministerial-level conference on drug abuse (see p. 1016). Three interregional seminars were mentioned, as approved by UNDP for 1986, on replacement of opium-poppy cultivation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Third Committee, the Assembly, on 13 December, adopted resolution 40/121 without vote.

International campaign against traffic in drugs

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982 and 38/98 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, as well as its resolutions 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 38/93 of 16 December 1983, 39/141 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984 and other relevant provisions,

Recalling also its resolution 39/142 of 14 December 1984, by which it adopted the Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse, which describes drug trafficking and drug abuse as an international criminal activity whose total elimination demands urgent attention and maximum priority,

Taking note of the reiterated concern expressed by the Secretary-General in his report on the work of the Organization, in which he recognizes that the drug problem can no longer be regarded as a merely social, and largely domestic, concern and proposes that an effective range of strategies be developed to meet the challenge,

Taking note once again of the provisions of the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984, the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984, in which drug trafficking is considered to be a crime against humanity, and the Lima Declaration of 29 July 1985, which draws attention to the need for integrated, effective and urgent regional and international action supported by the resources necessary for successfully overcoming the problem,

Commending the work of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs and the International Narcotics Control Board, as well as the positive action of the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in allocating funds to integrated rural development programmes, including substitution of illegal crops in the most severely affected areas, and their efforts to achieve greater law enforcement,

Considering that, despite the efforts made, the situation continues to deteriorate and the international community is confronted with transnational criminal organizations whose activities, including terrorist practices, constitute a threat to the well-being of peoples, the stability of democratic institutions and the sovereignty of States,

Acknowledging once more that the eradication of this scourge calls for integrated action which will simultaneously tackle the problems of reduction and control of illicit demand, production, distribution and marketing, and that action designed to eliminate illicit drug cultivation and trafficking should be accompanied, when necessary, by economic and social development programmes, including crop substitution, in the affected areas,

Endorsing the statement made by the Secretary-General before the Economic and Social Council on 24 May 1985, referred to in Council decision 1985/131 of 28 May 1985, on the need for a new United Nations offensive against drug trafficking and drug abuse, and his proposal to convene a world conference at the ministerial level in 1987,

Aware of the decision of the Secretary-General to convene an interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies in 1986, in accordance with paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 39/143,

Conscious of the contribution that this interregional meeting could make to bilateral and multilateral efforts, including proposals that might be taken into account in the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and at the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking to be held in 1987,

Acknowledging the important role that Member States and relevant bodies of the United Nations system must play in order to ensure that the interregional meeting produces significant results in the continuing fight against illicit drug trafficking and drug abuse,

Acknowledging once more that law enforcement officials represent an important line of defence against organized crime, the illegal arms trade and other forms of criminal activity associated with illicit traffic in drugs that threaten the stability and security of many States,

Reiterating the importance of ratifying or acceding to international treaties on the control of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General;

2. Reaffirms that maximum priority must be given to the fight against the illicit production of, demand for and traffic in drugs and related international criminal activities, such as the illegal arms trade and terrorist practices, which also have an adverse effect not only on the well-being of peoples but also on the stability of institutions, as well as posing a threat to the sovereignty of States;

3. Acknowledges the work of bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the drug-control bodies, in assisting efforts and initiatives designed to increase international co-operation, and recommends that this work be intensified;

4. Encourages Member States and the relevant bodies of the United Nations system to provide technical assistance to the developing countries most affected by the illicit production of, traffic in and use of drugs and psychotropic substances, in order to combat the problem;

5. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his proposal to convene in 1987, at the ministerial level, an International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking to deal with all aspects of drug abuse;

6. Takes note with satisfaction of the decision of the Secretary-General to hold an interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies at Vienna from 28 July to 1 August 1986, in accordance with paragraph 10 of General Assembly resolution 39/143;

7. Recommends to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs that it advise the interregional meeting to examine in depth the most important aspects of the problem, especially those that would enhance ongoing bilateral and multilateral efforts, in particular the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and the proposed International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, to be convened by the Secretary-General at the ministerial level, and to recommend action on, inter alia:

- (a) Extradition;
- (b) Mechanisms that would enhance interregional co-ordination and co-operation on a permanent basis;
- (c) Modalities of ensuring rapid and secure means of communication between law enforcement agencies at the national, regional and international levels;
- (d) Techniques of controlled delivery;
- (e) Measures to reduce the vulnerability of States affected by the transit of illicit drugs;

8. Encourages Member States to be represented at the interregional meeting by officials at the decision-making level of national organizations concerned with the suppression of illicit traffic in drugs and psychotropic substances;

9. Invites the competent bodies within the United Nations system, as well as the International Criminal Police Organization and the Customs Co-operation Council, to provide technical expertise and to participate actively in the interregional meeting;

10. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session an interim report containing the recommendations of the interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies and to submit a final report to the Economic and Social Council, through the Commission on Narcotic Drugs at its next session;

11. Reiterates its request to the Secretary-General to continue to make the necessary arrangements for holding, within the framework of advisory services, interregional seminars on the experience gained within the United Nations system in integrated rural development programmes that include the substitution of illegal crops in affected areas, particularly in the Andean region;

12. Acknowledges the vital role played by the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control and calls upon Member States to contribute or to continue contributing to the Fund;

13. Calls upon the specialized agencies and all relevant bodies of the United Nations system actively to implement the present resolution and requests the Secretary-General to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

14. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "International campaign against traffic in drugs".

Drug law enforcement

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs reported<sup>(3)</sup> that HONLEA, at its eleventh meeting (Bangkok, Thailand, 26-30 November 1984),<sup>(4)</sup> had considered the serious drug trafficking situation within the Far East region. Not only were illicit opiates being illegally exported to other regions, but there had been a growing influx of illicit opiates and cannabis resin from parts of the Near and Middle East, and of psychotropic substances from Europe. Trafficking routes and methods had become increasingly complex and sophisticated, and a spread of multiple drug abuse, especially among young people, had been registered. The HONLEA Chairman drew the Commission's attention to desirable countermeasures, and stressed that the main thrust of its work was to increase the capacity of drug law enforcement agencies to render effective and practical mutual judicial and other assistance. As proposed by HONLEA, the Commission, on 13 February,<sup>(5)</sup> decided that the Secretary-General should be asked to invite Vanuatu to future HONLEA meetings.

At its twelfth meeting (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 4-8 November),<sup>(6)</sup> HONLEA made recommendations and suggestions relating to the interregional meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies to be convened at Vienna in 1986; they concerned the level of representation and suggested topics for consideration. It also asked for more information concerning designer drugs, and discussed elements for inclusion in the convention on illicit drug traffic.

The Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Milan, August/September 1985) adopted three resolutions on action against drug abuse.

In one resolution,<sup>(39)</sup> it invited States to strengthen instruments and legislation against illicit drug trafficking and maximize co-operation, urged ratification of the relevant instruments, and recommended that a new instrument on the subject address extradition, effective penalties, control of chemicals and precursors used in illicit manufacture, controlled delivery, traffic on the high seas, smuggling through the mails, and control in free-trade zones and ports.

In another resolution,<sup>(40)</sup> it called on States to modernize criminal laws and procedures, including those relating to extradition, the forfeiture of illegally acquired assets and obtaining of evidence abroad, to conduct national campaigns, to strengthen law enforcement, to establish investigative institutions and to review laws for their adequacy to fight organized crime. It recommended that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs be urged to continue to disseminate information on treatment, rehabilitation and educational programmes to deal with drug abuse. (For the third resolution, see p. 1016.)

In its 1985 report,<sup>(4)</sup> INCB endorsed a recommendation of the Congress concerning effective penalties and recommended that it, as well as, provisions to facilitate the exercise of criminal jurisdiction on board foreign vessels passing through territorial seas or on the high seas, be embodied in the new convention on illicit trafficking.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted two resolutions on drug law enforcement. It adopted resolution 1985/12 without vote.

Measures against the diversion in international commerce of specific precursors, chemicals and solvents used in the illicit manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, and the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances oblige Parties thereto to endeavour, to the best of their abilities, to apply such measures of supervision as may be practicable to substances which do not fall within the provisions of the conventions, but which may nevertheless be used for the illicit manufacture of substances falling within those provisions,

Aware that such substances include precursors, chemicals and solvents, the ready availability of which has led to an increase in the clandestine production of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in many parts of the world,

Noting that particular vigilance is desired in the case of ephedrine, ephedrol, phenyl-2-propanone, ergotamine, anthranilic acid, piperidine, ethyl ether and acetic anhydride, which are frequently used for the illicit manufacture of amphetamine, methamphetamine (+)-Lysergide (LSD), methaqualone and phencyclidine, as well as cocaine and heroin,

Bearing in mind paragraphs 40 to 42 of the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1984, in which is emphasized the need to take urgent measures, at both national and international levels, to monitor the movement of such substances in the international trade, with a view to preventing their availability for the illicit manufacture of drugs,

1. Invites Governments, particularly of those countries in which illicit drug manufacture is known to take place, and which have not already done so, to introduce, consistent with domestic laws, a licensing or monitoring system for the supply and import of such precursors, chemicals and solvents used in the manufacture of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, or to prohibit the import of those substances where there is no licit need for them;

2. Also invites the Governments of countries in which such substances are manufactured, the Governments of countries which import them, and the Governments of countries in which illicit drugs are manufactured, to monitor international trade in those substances and to co-operate closely and exchange information promptly with regard to abnormal shipments which give rise to suspicion; to inform their law enforcement services of the existence of such information exchange programmes; and to keep the International Narcotics Control Board notified accordingly;

3. Recommends that Governments should seize any such substances, as well as any equipment used in, or intended for use in, any of the offences referred to in article 36 of the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1954, and article 22 of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances;

4. Invites all Governments to supply to the Board and to concerned Governments, on a voluntary basis, such information as can be obtained on ephedrine, ephedrol, phenyl-2-propanone, ergotamine, anthranilic acid, piperidine, ethyl ether and acetic anhydride which may be useful for the detection and prevention of diversion;

5. Decides to include this question in the provisional agenda for the next regular session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments, for consideration and action as appropriate.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/12

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/83) without vote, 15 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1985/23); agenda item 18

The Council also adopted resolution 1985/13 without vote.

The need to reduce the risk of illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances carried by commercial carriers

The Economic and Social Council,

Bearing in mind that a high proportion of illicit narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances has been seized in connection with commercial carrier operations,

Convinced that commercial carriers have a responsibility to take an active role in improving employee integrity and the security of their operations in order to minimize the risk of illicit trafficking by their own employees or by those using the carriers' services,

Noting that physical safeguards at international ports and airports contribute significantly to the security efforts of the commercial carriers using those facilities,

Recognizing that various measures could be taken by Governments with a view to encouraging greater security at international ports and airports and to facilitating the detection and seizure of illicit drugs,

1. Requests Governments which have not yet done so to initiate or expand training programmes for their law enforcement agencies in order to promote intensified and more effective searches, better analysis of potential risks, and greater overall security within and around their international ports and airports;

2. Urges Governments which have not yet done so to develop ways of improving their security operations, together with officials of the commercial carriers which use their international ports and airports and to encourage those carriers to discharge their responsibility to improve employee integrity and the security of their operations;

3. Also urges Governments which have not yet done so to improve the capabilities of authorities at international ports and airports with a view to controlling access to cargo and commercial carriers;

4. Requests Governments to improve means of communication among themselves in order to permit the most rapid possible exchange of information concerning illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances by commercial carriers;

5. Invites the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control, the Division of Narcotic Drugs of the United Nations Secretariat, the Customs Co-operation Council, the International Criminal Police Organization and Governments to consider supporting the training of enforcement personnel in improved techniques of search and security, advising commercial carriers as well as authorities at international ports and airports on ways of improving employee integrity and the security of their operations, and implementing programmes to ensure that those security improvements are being carried out;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the text of the present resolution to all Governments for appropriate action.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/13

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/83) without vote, 15 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1985/23); agenda item 18

Draft convention against illicit traffic

In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution<sup>(41)</sup> and Economic and Social Council decision 1985/104 (see below), the Commission on Narcotic Drugs initiated preparation in February 1985 of a draft convention against the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs, using a draft convention annexed to the Assembly's resolution as a working paper.

Following discussion of the matter, the Commission adopted on 20 February a resolution<sup>(43)</sup> in which it requested the Secretary-General to seek from United Nations Member States and States parties to the conventions on narcotic drugs comments and proposals on the elements they would like to have incorporated in the draft convention, to compile and consolidate them, and report back to the States by 1 November 1985. The Commission was to consider that report at a special session in 1986.

In an October 1985 report<sup>(43)</sup> to the Assembly on the international campaign against traffic in drugs, the Secretary-General said that on 15 March he had transmitted to Members and States parties the relevant documents with a request for their comments by 1 July. In September, he forwarded to the Commission a consolidated report (addenda through February 1986)<sup>(44)</sup> based on a compilation of replies received from Governments and relevant studies.

The Milan Plan of Action, adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders,<sup>(45)</sup> stated that, as an essential element of an effective plan of action, it was imperative to launch a major effort to control and eradicate illicit drug traffic and abuse, and organized crime, which disrupted and destabilized societies.

In their October communiqué<sup>(31)</sup> (see p. 1017), the heads of Government of Commonwealth States expressed deep concern at the rising incidence of drug abuse and illicit drug trafficking, recognized that it called for a wide range of responses, and expressed the hope that action would be expedited on the proposed new convention.

The Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries in September, in the Final Economic Declaration<sup>(30)</sup> (see p. 1017), expressed concern that continued abuse and illicit trafficking would endanger and undermine the development of nations, and called for the early conclusion of a convention against traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances and related activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February 1985, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/104 without vote.

Draft convention against the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs

At its 5th plenary meeting, on 8 February 1985, the Council, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 39/141 of 14 December 1984, decided:

(a) To request the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, at its thirty-first session, to initiate, as a matter of priority, the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs which considers the various aspects of the problem as a whole, in particular those not envisaged in existing international instruments, and, to that end, to transmit to the Commission as a working paper

the draft convention annexed to Assembly resolution 39/141;

(b) To request the Commission to report to the Council, if possible at its first regular session of 1985, on the results achieved in this respect.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/104

Adopted without vote

Draft by President, for Bureau (E/1985/L.18), based on informal consultations; agenda item 2.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 13 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Third Committee, adopted resolution 40/120, without vote.

Preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/168 of 20 December 1978, 35/195 of 15 December 1980, 36/132 of 14 December 1981, 36/168 of 16 December 1981, 37/168 of 17 December 1982, 37/198 of 18 December 1982, 38/93 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983, 39/141 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984 and other relevant provisions,

Recalling also the Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse of 14 December 1984, in which it is stated, inter alia, that the eradication of trafficking in narcotic drugs is the collective responsibility of all States and that States shall utilize the legal instruments against the illicit production of and demand for, abuse of and illicit traffic in drugs and adopt additional measures to counter new manifestations of this crime,

Bearing in mind the Quito Declaration against Traffic in Narcotic Drugs of 11 August 1984, the New York Declaration against Drug Trafficking and the Illicit Use of Drugs of 1 October 1984 and the Lima Declaration of 29 July 1985, in which profound alarm was expressed at the seriousness of the problem,

Noting the report entitled "Options for individual and collective action to intensify the fight against drug abuse" that emerged from the Bonn Summit held from 2 to 4 May 1985,

Noting also the joint statement on the international problem of drug abuse and drug trafficking issued on 9 July 1985 by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the States members of the Association of South-East Asian Nations, which praised the ongoing efforts of the international community in preparing the draft of a new convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances,

Taking into account the fact that, at the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, the Ministers expressed deep concern over the growing problem of drug abuse and illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and renewed their support for the efforts being undertaken by the international community to combat it,

Taking into account also the paragraphs on drug abuse and illicit trafficking in drugs in the communiqué adopted at the meeting of heads of Governments of Commonwealth States held at Nassau from 16 to 22 October 1985, in which the hope was expressed that action would be expedited on the related proposed new convention,

Recalling with appreciation the thorough consideration given to drug abuse and trafficking issues by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, in particular its resolution 2, in which the Congress recommended that the preparation of a new international instrument against illicit drug traffic should be considered as an absolute priority, and the Milan Plan of Action, especially paragraph 5 (g) thereof,

Deeply concerned by the constant upward trend in illicit traffic and drug abuse verified and reported by an increasing number of Member States, which poses serious dangers for individual human rights and for the economic, cultural and political structures of society,

Reaffirming its conviction that the magnitude and complexity reached in illicit drug trafficking and its grave consequences emphasize the urgent need to carry out the mandate given by the General Assembly, in its resolution 39/141, to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, through the Economic and Social Council, to initiate, as a matter of priority, the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs which considers the various aspects of the problem as a whole, in particular those not envisaged in existing international instruments,

Welcoming the statement made by the Secretary-General before the Economic and Social Council on 24 May 1985, in which he proposed the convening in 1987 of a world conference at the ministerial level to deal with all aspects of drug abuse, and his note on drug abuse control of 22 October 1985,

Recognizing the valuable contribution made by existing international legal instruments in their specialized areas, including the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, as amended by the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971,

Expressing deep satisfaction with Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution I(XXXI) of 20 February 1985, approved by the Economic and Social Council in its decision 1985/130 of 28 May 1985,

1. Expresses its appreciation to Member States for their response to the request made by the Secretary-General in accordance with paragraph 1 of Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution I(XXXI) and urges those Member States that have not yet done so to comply with the request forthwith;

2. Commends the Secretary-General for his effective response to the request set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2 of Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution I(XXXI) and for the preparation of his comprehensive report, which will contribute to the preparation of a draft convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, as mandated by the General Assembly in its resolution 39/141;

3. Requests the Economic and Social Council, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/141 and resolution I(XXXI) of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs, to instruct the Commission to decide, following consideration at its ninth special session of the report of the Secretary-General, on the elements that could be included in the convention and to request the Secretary-General to prepare a draft on the basis of those elements, and to submit a progress report, including completed elements of the draft, to the Commission for consideration at its thirty-second session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking, to be held in 1987, a report on progress made towards completing a new convention against drug trafficking;

5. Emphasizes the importance of resolution 2 adopted by the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/32 of 29 November 1985, in which the Congress recommended that absolute priority should be accorded to the preparation of a new international instrument against illicit drug traffic, as well as the importance of paragraph 5 (g) of the Milan Plan of Action;

6. Recommends that the new convention should take into account the interests of all countries in order that it may be an effective, operative instrument in the struggle against illicit drug trafficking;

7. Requests the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to report to the Economic and Social Council at its first regular session of 1986 on the results achieved in this respect during its ninth special session;

8. Urges once again all States that have not yet done so to adhere to and ratify the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961, the 1972 Protocol Amending the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs of 1961 and the Convention on Psychotropic Substances of 1971;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Near East and Middle East

The Sub-Commission on Illicit Drug Traffic and Related Matters in the Near and Middle East held its nineteenth session at Vienna on 7 February 1985.<sup>(46)</sup> It noted that there was great difficulty in identifying, with precision, sources of supply of illicit raw materials and recommended that the Secretary-General be requested to make arrangements to assist concerned Governments to identify with accuracy such sources of illicit supply. It also recommended to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs the adoption of a decision on links between the illicit drug traffic, the illegal traffic in firearms, subversion, international terrorism and organized crime.

On 13 February,<sup>(47)</sup> the Commission decided that more information on such links was needed. It considered that Governments and reporting authorities should be asked to address this issue in the annual reports questionnaires on the working of international treaties (see p. 1029) and when reporting on drug seizures. Summaries of this information should be submitted regularly to the Commission with a view to developing more co-ordinated countermeasures. Also on the Sub-Commission's recommendation, the Commission, on the same date,<sup>(48)</sup> noting the difficulty of identifying with precision sources of supply of illicit narcotic raw materials, requested the Secretary-General to assist Governments to identify such sources in order to assist them, with international community support if necessary, to eradicate illicit supply.

At its twentieth session (Teheran, Iran, 11-18 September),<sup>(49)</sup> the Sub-Commission adopted two recommendations: in one, it decided on measures for more accurate identification of illicit sources of production and cultivation of opium, and asked the Commission to endorse those measures and ensure finances to put them into effect; in the other, it recommended that the Commission encourage a more carefully balanced policy of contributions to and expenditures by UNFDAC to maintain equilibrium between different drug-related activities and also between different regions and illicit drugs and drug types.

INCB reported<sup>(1)</sup> that in 1985 the large quantities of opium and heroin seized in the Near and Middle East indicated the existence not only of extensive areas of illicit poppy cultivation but also of a substantial heroin manufacturing capacity. Cannabis and its resin were also seized frequently and in large amounts. Opium traditionally had been abused in the region, but the abuse of easily available, locally manufactured heroin was escalating. If an effective attack was to be mounted against illicit production, a systematic survey was needed of areas in which illicit poppy cultivation was believed to be taking place. Countries in the region which were not already doing so ought to conduct periodic epidemiological surveys to determine the actual extent of abuse, since those surveys were prerequisites for the formulation of demand-reduction programmes. The Board stressed that it was crucial for Governments to place special emphasis on intra- and interregional efforts to identify major traffickers and seize their assets, and to curtail the availability of acetic anhydride for heroin manufacture.

Africa

According to INCB,<sup>(1)</sup> evidence of spreading drug abuse in Africa was mounting. The region was attracting larger numbers of drug traffickers, who took advantage of inadequate control arrangements in many countries; it was a source of cannabis, abused locally and trafficked abroad. In recent years some countries, particularly Nigeria, had been used as transit points for heroin, trafficked mainly from the Middle East and South Asia and destined for Western Europe and North America. Heroin abuse had begun to appear in some countries. Traffickers were trying to establish Africa as a major illicit market for psychotropic substances and as a transit point for traffic in such substances. Trafficking had begun to include cocaine as well. Those trends signalled a deteriorating situation which required urgent attention, the Board said.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/11 without vote.

Co-operation for the control of illicit drug trafficking and drug abuse in the African region

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37/198 of 18 December 1982 and 38/98 and 38/122 of 16 December 1983,

Recalling, in particular, General Assembly resolution 39/142 of 14 December 1984, entitled "Declaration on the Control of Drug Trafficking and Drug Abuse",

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1845(LVI) of 15 May 1974 on co-operation for drug law enforcement in the Far East region and Commission on Narcotic Drugs resolution 6(XXX) of 16 February 1983 on the need for activities in the African countries,

Recognizing the urgent need to establish co-ordination mechanisms for similar drug law enforcement co-operation in the African region,

Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 39/143 of 14 December 1984, in which the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to ensure that a meeting of heads of national drug law enforcement agencies would be convened in 1986,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to convene regular meetings of the operational heads of the national drug control and law enforcement agencies of States in the African region to study questions related to illicit drug traffic in the region and to establish more effective mechanisms for co-operation and mutual assistance in the suppression of illicit drug traffic within, from and into the region;

2. Recommends that the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control should consider providing the financial support for those regional meetings, including the travel expenses and subsistence of one participant from each State in the region if, in the absence of such support, the Government concerned would not be represented;

3. Decides that the first regional meeting will be held at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Africa, following consultations with the Executive Secretary of the Commission to determine an appropriate date in 1987;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to invite observers from the International Criminal Police Organization, the Customs Co-operation Council and other competent international and intergovernmental organizations to participate in the regional meetings at their own expense;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General, at his discretion, to invite observers from States which request observer status and which are actively involved in countering the illicit drug traffic in the region to participate as observers in the meetings, on the understanding that any expenses incurred by their attendance shall be borne by the States concerned;

6. Invites the International Narcotics Control Board to participate as an observer in the regional meetings;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to report on the regional meetings to the Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

The Americas

In its 1985 report,<sup>(1)</sup> INCB observed that the abuse and illicit trafficking of drugs was a matter of growing concern to Canada. Cannabis and its derivatives—the most commonly abused drugs—continued to be widely available in the country. Other available drugs included cocaine, heroin and various opiates and benzodiazepines which had been diverted from licit supplies. The clandestine manufacture of LSD and methamphetamine continued to concern authorities. To contain drug abuse and counter trafficking, the Canadian Government was taking strong measures.

Mexico had restated its firm commitment to the eradication of all illicit cultivation on its territory. INCB indicated that, during the first half of 1985, the Mexican authorities had destroyed approximately 4,500 hectares of poppy crops, double the area of the previous year. In the case of cannabis, the most abused drug, the area eradicated during the same period decreased from 1,456 hectares in 1984 to 896 in 1985.

According to INCB, the illicit consumption of drugs in the United States remained a serious public health problem. Most of the cannabis—the most widely abused drug—and all the heroin abused in the country originated abroad. The cocaine originated and was processed mainly in Latin America, although some clandestine cocaine-conversion laboratories were also discovered in the United States, where synthetic narcotics were also manufactured. The United States placed great emphasis on education and prevention. In April 1985, the President's wife, Nancy Reagan, sponsored a First Ladies' Conference on Drug Abuse, attended by the wives of 18 heads of State, to discuss the prevention of drug abuse by youth. A second such conference met in New York in October. Enforcement efforts focused on traditional and financial investigations aimed at immobilizing drug trafficking syndicates, seizures, raids and destruction of laboratories. Investigations were facilitated by the exchange of financial records and data between the United States and other countries.

In the Caribbean and Central and South America, the destabilizing and otherwise negative effects of illicit drug production and trafficking became ever more evident, reported INCB. Highly organized trafficking syndicates and their operations were often linked to the smuggling of weapons and the spreading of violence and terrorism. Drug abuse was growing rapidly throughout the region. Encouraging signs in the fight against it were the degree of commitment at the highest levels of government in several countries, and the intensified counter-offensives which were being pursued nationally, regionally and interregionally. In addition to existing bilateral agreements, the foreign ministers of the Andean countries had agreed to develop a multilateral agreement against drug trafficking, to be named after Colombian Minister of Justice Rodrigo Lara Bonilla, assassinated in 1984.

Effective action in some countries gave rise to hope that progress was being made in the region as a whole. Although the area cultivated with coca bush appeared to be expanding, manual destruction was taking place and action pursued to identify safer and more effective methods which would allow for eradication on a wider scale. Moreover, countries were undertaking joint intelligence and enforcement operations and concluding extradition agreements. Substantial eradication of cannabis occurred in some countries; however, the increase in cultivation in others confirmed that the traffickers were actively seeking new sources of supply.

Rapidly escalating domestic abuse, particularly of cocaine and coca paste, sometimes mixed with cannabis, continued to threaten the well-being of the populations of many countries. Treatment and rehabilitation programmes were being carried out in several countries and special emphasis placed on campaigns directed at high-risk groups, particularly young people. The difficult issue of essential chemicals and solvents used in the illicit manufacture of cocaine was still unresolved. Despite legislation to place those substances under control, their availability close to the coca leaf-growing areas posed a threat which could be neutralized only with stricter controls in both exporting and importing countries.

Asia

INCB reported that in 1985<sup>(1)</sup> some countries in East and South-East Asia continued to be major producers and suppliers of opiates and cannabis which, in addition to being abused locally, were channelled by traffickers to other regions. Abuse of heroin was widespread, particularly among youth, and the abuse of other drugs was increasing. During 1985, an expansion of eradication activities was recorded, which was attributed to both the political will of the Governments and the use of more precise crop-location methods. The chemicals needed for heroin manufacture continued to be available. Some countries were enforcing measures to prevent their diversion; in others, traffickers were taking advantage of the absence of effective control. Bilateral, regional and interregional action against drug-related activities was developed and expanded during the year, receiving attention at the highest levels of government, as evidenced by the emphasis placed on that question at a ministerial meeting of the Association of South-East Asian Nations in July 1985.

In South Asia, India had become a transit country for traffic in heroin and cannabis, originating mainly in parts of the Near and Middle East. Opium was illicitly trafficked, mainly internally. India's reservations under the 1961 Convention permitted cannabis to be used for non-medical purposes until 1989. Although the import, manufacture and sale of methaqualone had been prohibited since January 1984, accumulated stocks posed a risk of diversion. There was an imminent danger that heroin abuse would escalate, as it had in neighbouring countries. To curb trafficking, comprehensive narcotics legislation was enacted during 1985, enhancing penalties for drug offences and providing for improved controls and intensified investigations, and an Indian-Pakistani joint commission considered measures to curb narcotics smuggling along the common border.

INCB observed that Sri Lanka was a transit point for opiates and cannabis resin which had led to growing abuse within the country. In response, the Government had taken measures in 1984 that were among the most severe in the region.

China's accession on 23 August 1985 to the 1971 Convention represented the attainment of virtual universality in the international control system. In February, it joined with UNFODAC and WHO in a three-year project for the prevention of drug dependence in China.

A conference of heads of the Australian states in April mounted a national campaign against drug abuse and advocated steps to strengthen drug control. Effective enforcement severely restricted availability of supplies for abusers in New Zealand, and authorities were using sophisticated equipment to detect cannabis cultivation, which was increasing.

The twelfth meeting of HONLEA, in November 1985,<sup>(38)</sup> agreed on the importance of Governments' establishing a concerted national policy to counter the smuggling of illicit drugs through the mail.

Europe

Though general drug abuse did not constitute a serious public health problem in Eastern Europe, due to their geographical position some countries continued to be used for transit trafficking of illicit narcotics, usually from east to west, according to INCB.<sup>(1)</sup> To deal with the problem, control measures and co-operation with source countries and countries of destination were strengthened. In 1985, in pursuance of its continuing dialogues with countries of Eastern Europe, INCB sent a mission to Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary and Poland.

A variety of drugs continued to be available and abused in Western Europe, and trafficking operated throughout. In 1985, a larger number of countries experienced growing consumption of cocaine. While heroin abuse appeared to have declined in a few countries, there was an escalation of heroin abuse in the United Kingdom. Throughout the region, cannabis continued to be the drug most widely abused, although certain psychotropic substances and amphetamines were the drugs of choice of some abusers. There was a growing tendency to use several drugs together, frequently in combination with alcohol.

Most of the abused drugs came from abroad. Substantial cannabis supplies originated in Lebanon and Morocco, with Africa south of the Sahara emerging as a significant source. Cocaine supplies were trafficked from South America. An estimated 80 per cent of the opiates originated in the Near and Middle East and South Asia, and 20 per cent in South-East Asia. Abused psychotropic substances originated mainly within the region. Data revealed substantial availability of heroin, although the amounts seized during the first half of 1985 appeared to represent a decrease over 1984. Availability of and trafficking in cocaine had increased sharply in recent years.

In 1984, for the second consecutive year, more than a tonne of cocaine was seized; seizures reported to Interpol during the first half of 1985 totalled nearly half a tonne, attesting to a high level of enforcement activity. The health-threatening situation arising from abuse and trafficking received attention at the highest levels, not only of many Governments but also of the Council of Europe and the Pompidou Group (Belgium, Denmark, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom). In several countries, laws were strengthened and comprehensive drug control plans, including treatment and prevention programmes, were devised and carried out.

Conventions

As at the end of 1985,<sup>(39)</sup> States parties to the Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs, 1961, numbered 115. The number of parties to the Convention as amended by the Protocol of 25 March 1972 was 76, with Greece and Venezuela ratifying it in 1985, and the States parties to the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances rose to 81, with the accession of Afghanistan, Bolivia and China.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs discussed a note of the Secretary-General<sup>(51)</sup> on progress in the ongoing revision of the questionnaire completed by States parties when fulfilling the annual reports requirement of these conventions. On 12 February,<sup>(52)</sup> the Commission requested that draft sections of the three revised parts of the questionnaire be circulated to Governments for their comments. It also decided to review the questionnaire further at its 1987 session.

The Commission also reported that WHO had established new guidelines for the review of dependence-producing psychoactive substances eligible for international control. WHO expected to review non-controlled barbiturates and non-sedative hypnotics in 1986, and opioid agonists and antagonists in 1987.

On 13 December, the General Assembly, by resolutions 40/120 and 40/122, urged States to adhere to and ratify the international drug treaties, and, in the mean time, endeavour to comply with their provisions.

1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances

INCB, in its 1985 report,<sup>(1)</sup> stressed the importance of achieving world-wide adherence to the 1971 Convention at the earliest possible time. According to the report, some 150 States and regions—both parties and non-parties—had provided data on psychotropic substances during the year.

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs, in February 1985, considered two WHO notifications<sup>(53)</sup>—with comments from Governments and a substance-by-substance summary reviewing amphetamine-like drugs for scheduling, as the Economic and Social Council had requested in 1984<sup>(54)</sup>—recommending that 2,5-dimethoxy-4-bromoamphetamine (known as DOB) and 3,4-methylenedioxamphetamine (referred to as MDA) be placed under international control by inclusion in Schedule I—one of four categories of international control under the 1971 Convention. By unanimous votes the Commission decided<sup>(55)</sup> to include both DOB and MDA in Schedule I.

The Council, by resolution 1985/79, decided that the Commission was also to consider scheduling of substances under the Convention's provisions at its special session in 1986.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May, on the recommendation of its Second Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/15 without vote.

Improvement of the control of international trade in psychotropic substances listed in Schedules III and IV of the

1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances
The Economic and Social Council,

Having considered the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1984, especially that part concerned with trade in psychotropic substances,

Recognizing with concern that the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances does not require import and export authorizations for international trade in substances listed in Schedules III and IV, thus facilitating the diversion of some of those substances into illicit channels,

Concerned that this lack of a treaty requirement makes it difficult for the competent authorities of both exporting and importing countries to prevent shipments of substances prohibited under article 13 of the Convention,

Bearing in mind that the International Narcotics Control Board needs relevant information in order to monitor effectively the international trade in substances listed in Schedules III and IV,

1. Requests all Governments, to the extent possible, voluntarily to extend the system of import and export authorizations provided for in article 12, paragraph 1, of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to cover international trade in substances listed in Schedule III;

2. Also requests all Governments to establish, in any event, mechanisms for monitoring exports of substances listed in Schedules III and IV in order that importing countries may be alerted, in advance, of shipments that may be a cause of concern;

3. Further requests all Governments, to the extent possible, voluntarily to furnish information to the International Narcotics Control Board on the countries of origin of imports and the countries of destination of exports of substances listed in Schedules III and IV,

4. Requests all Governments which have decided to prohibit the import of substances listed in Schedules III and IV of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances to notify the Secretary-General of this decision, in accordance with article 13, paragraph 1, of the Convention;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit the present resolution to all Governments for their consideration and implementation.

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/83) without vote, 15 May (meeting 4); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1985/23); agenda item 18.

Organizational questions

Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Commission on Narcotic Drugs held its thirty-first session at Vienna from 11 to 20 February 1985. On the first day, it adopted by consensus a revised agenda which included, as requested by the General Assembly,<sup>(41)</sup> an item to initiate the preparation of a draft convention against the illicit traffic in narcotic drugs (see p. 1023).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council on 26 July 1985 adopted without vote resolution 1985/79. The text had been deferred from the Council's May session (where it had been considered by the Second Committee) in accordance with a Council decision of 7 May to consider recommendations relating to the calendar of conferences and meetings for 1986-1987 at its July session.

Ninth special session of the Commission on Narcotic Drugs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2001(LX) of 12 May 1976, Recognizing that the social and human problems created by drug abuse continue to increase,

Aware of the probable need for the Commission on Narcotic Drugs to examine the urgent question of scheduling a number of substances under the provisions of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, following receipt of recommendations to that effect from the World Health Organization,

Decides that the Commission on Narcotic Drugs shall hold a special session of live days' duration in 1986 at a time when it will not overlap with other meetings, and within existing United Nations resources, to consider scheduling of substances under the provisions of the 1971 Convention on Psychotropic Substances, follow-up action to General Assembly resolutions 39/141 and 39/143 of 14 December 1984, the review of the report of the International Narcotics Control Board for 1985, and other urgent matters.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/79

26 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1985/144) without vote, 19 July (meeting 20); draft by Commission on Narcotic Drugs (E/1985/23); agenda item 23.

In related action on 28 May, the Council, by decision 1985/128, approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the thirty-second (1987) session of the Commission; it also took note of the report of the Commission on its thirty-first (1985) session(2) (decision 1985/130). The Council also approved on 26 July the provisional agenda and documentation for the ninth special (1986) session of the Commission (decision 1985/201).

International Narcotics Control Board

In 1985, INCB held two sessions at Vienna—the thirty-seventh from 13 to 24 May, and the thirty-eighth from 8 to 25 October.

Co-ordination in the UN system

The Ad Hoc Inter-Agency Meeting on Co-ordination in Matters of International Drug Abuse

Control(28) (see p. 1016) examined recent developments relating to co-ordination of drug abuse control activities in the United Nations system. The view was expressed that all specialized agencies and entities concerned should be allowed to participate in the preparation of a global strategy, and that there was a need to integrate in a common approach all elements concerning drug abuse and to establish an inter-agency clearing-house to help gather and distribute information at the country and subregional levels. The participants expressed their support of the Secretary-General's proposal for a world drug conference and the readiness of their organizations to co-operate in special activities of a supportive nature, including publications, subject to approval by the General Assembly and their governing bodies.

Chapter XXIII

Statistics

In 1985, the United Nations Statistical Commission met to review developments in economic, social and demographic statistics that had taken place since its previous session in 1983. Among issues discussed were ways of improving the dissemination of international statistics and the integration of social, demographic and related statistics. The Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) met in June and discussed decisions and recommendations of the Statistical Commission that had implications for its work. In September, the Commission's Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination reviewed the provisional agenda for the Commission's 1987 session and suggested documentation and special topics to be considered by the Commission.

In May, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the Commission's recommendations, adopted resolution 1985/7 on international economic classifications, and resolution 1985/8 on the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme.

By resolution 40/179, adopted in December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on patterns of consumption and related socio-economic indicators for consideration by the Statistical Commission in 1987.

The Statistical Commission held its twenty-third session in New York from 25 February to 6 March 1985.(1) It recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of two draft resolutions, one on international economic classifications and the other on the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme, as well as a draft decision on the report on its 1985 session and provisional agenda and documentation for its 1987 session (see below). The Council's attention was also drawn to other decisions and recommendations of the Commission.

Working Group on Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination

The Statistical Commission in February/March examined the 1983 report(2) of its Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination. It endorsed the Group's views on the co-ordination of international statistical data collection aimed at reducing the reporting burden on countries and welcomed the inventory of statistical data collection activities sent to all national statistical offices at the Working Group's request. It urged that additional reviews be undertaken to investigate new possibilities for further reducing unnecessary duplication of requests to countries for data.

The Working Group met at Geneva from 2 to 4 September 1985(3) to review the agenda and documentation for the twenty-fourth (1987) session of the Statistical Commission. The Group also discussed the results of a review of alternative approaches to the problem of assessing the effectiveness of technical co-operation in statistics, considered special problems in the statistically least developed of the developing countries (see below, under "Technical co-operation") and reviewed and revised a list of special topics to be taken up by the Commission during its next several sessions.

On 28 May 1985, by decision 1985/122, adopted without vote, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Statistical Commission's report and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its twenty-fourth (1987) session. The text had been proposed by the Statistical Commission; it was approved without vote by the Council's First (Economic) Committee on 21 May.

ACC Sub-Committee

The ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities nineteenth session, Madrid, Spain, 24-28 June),(4) discussed co-ordination aspects of statistical work being planned or carried out by organizations of the United Nations system and matters raised at the Statistical Commission's 1985 session. Other issues included: international economic classifications; the National Household Survey Capability Programme (NHSCP); the Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS); technical co-operation in statistics; special problems of the statistically least developed countries; local area statistics; social statistics; service statistics; the Statistical Computing Project; tourism and migration statistics; trade and transport statistics; price statistics, including the International Comparison Project (ICP); revision of the System of National Accounts (SNA); energy and environment statistics; and the International Classification of Diseases.

The Sub-Committee recommended that an invitation to hold its twentieth session at the headquarters of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) at Geneva in April 1986 be accepted.

Economic statistics

Energy, environment and mineral resources statistics

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's 1984 report on standards, methods and classifications of energy statistics and the environment statistics programme,(5) the Statistical Commission requested the United Nations Statistical Office to continue its work programme on collecting and compiling energy statistics, to pursue its efforts in the methodological field, particularly in regard to new and renewable sources of energy, and to explore the development of energy statistics in value terms. The Commission requested that the Statistical Office's environment statistics work programme focus on: promoting the application of the Framework for the Development of Environment Statistics,(6) published in 1984; preparing a technical manual for compiling statistics on human settlements and natural resources; developing an international programme of collection and dissemination of environment statistics; and providing technical co-operation support. The Statistical Office was urged to continue co-ordinating international activities on environment statistics, and the Secretary-General was requested to submit progress reports on energy and environment statistics to the Commission's 1987 session.

Having taken steps to enlarge its coverage of minerals and to change its methods and form of reporting on production of some minerals, in response to the 1983 recommendations of the Group of Experts on the Standardization of Definitions and Terminology for Statistics on Mineral Resources Production and Consumption,(7) discussed in a 1984 report(8) of the Secretary-General, the Commission strongly supported the recommendations and decided that work in that field should go forward provided that specialized resources were made available.

National accounts and balances

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's 1984 report(9) on progress made in revising the System of National Accounts, the Statistical Commission endorsed the work programme for the SNA review proposed by the Secretariat and requested it to provide annual reports on its implementation; welcomed the co-ordinating role of the Inter-Secretariat Working Group on National Accounts, regarding it as an excellent example of co-operation between international organizations; emphasized the need to maintain a small common group of experts in all the specialized expert groups on SNA revision to ensure continuity and co-ordination; recommended that special attention be paid to difficulties faced by developing countries as a consequence of the weakness of the basic information they used, that basic data be evaluated, that handbooks on sources and methods of compiling national accounts be prepared, and that technical assistance and training be provided; and reiterated the importance of maintaining continuity in data series by avoiding major changes in definitions and classifications of SNA.

With regard to a 1984 report(9) on the System of Statistical Balances of the National Economy (MPS) by the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, the Commission took note of progress achieved in developing MPS, urged continued elaboration of the system, and agreed to consider the improved version of MPS at its 1987 session.

The Commission also endorsed a 1984 report(9) of the Secretary-General on links between SNA and MPS and agreed that work in that area should continue. It decided that priority should be given to revising the 1979 publication entitled Comparisons of the System of National Accounts and the System of Balances of the National Economy, Part One: Conceptual Relationships,(10) and requested the Secretary-General to submit to the Commission in 1987 a report on progress achieved in linking the two systems.

Price statistics

After considering a 1984 report of the Secretary-General on the International Comparison Project and the International Price Statistics Programme (IPSP), the Commission endorsed plans for phase V of ICP and noted that the question of quality of data and further methodological improvements would also receive attention. It emphasized the need for the Statistical Office to play a strong co-ordinating role in ICP, asked the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1987 a progress report on phase V and continue efforts to obtain extrabudgetary resources to support ICP, and reaffirmed its 1983 decision(11) to assign low priority to other work on IPSP.

In June,(4) the ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities expressed concern that the absence of funding for ICP put at risk the high investment in the project already made by international organizations.

International economic classifications

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's 1984 report(9) on harmonization of international economic classifications, the Statistical Commission endorsed continuation of the work of the Statistical Office on the subject and asked the Secretary-General for a progress report in 1987. It also asked that a draft of the complete revised International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities and of the complete Central Production Classification (previously known as the Combined Trade/Production Goods Classification) be submitted in 1987. It approved the second draft of a third revision of the Standard International Trade Classification (SITC), subject to editorial corrections and amendments to take into account some suggestions made during the session. It recommended that, if States were unable to adopt the full detailed classification for certain commodities, they adopt the special coding procedures described in the Secretary-General's report.

Other recommendations were incorporated in a draft resolution recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 28 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1985/7, without vote.

International economic classifications

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 229 B (XI) of 12 July 1950, Considering:

(a) The marked improvement in the international comparability of external trade statistics which has resulted since 1976 from the implementation by Governments and international agencies of the Standard International Trade Classification (SITC), Revision 2,

(b) The action taken by the Customs Co-operation Council to maintain the correspondence of the Customs Co-operation Council Nomenclature (CCCN) with SITC Revision 2.

(c) The action taken by the Customs Co-operation Council to revise the CCCN and group the headings thereof under a detailed Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System (HS)

(d) The proposed revision of SITC Revision 2, as described in the report of the Secretary-General on the harmonization of international economic classifications, to be known as the Standard International Trade Classification, Revision 3,

1. Recommends that Member States should report internationally data on external trade statistics according to the Standard International Trade Classification, Revision 3, as far and as soon as possible, it being understood that Member States may not wish to make the change until they would in any case be reviewing their customs nomenclature;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To publish SITC Revision 3, together with commodity indexes and correlation codes between SITC Revision 3, the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System and the Customs Co-operation Council Nomenclature and between SITC Revision 3 and the Classification by Broad Economic Categories;

(b) To continue and complete, as a matter of priority, the development of the convertibility indexes between

SITC Revision 2 and the Standard Foreign Trade Classification used for external trade by States members of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance, and to establish similar convertibility indexes in respect of SITC Revision 3 and the Standard Foreign Trade Classification;

(c) To arrange that, beginning not later than with data for the full year 1988, the publication of SITC data by United Nations bodies should be, as far as possible, in the form of SITC Revision 3.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/7

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/90) without vote, 21 May (meeting 8); draft by Statistical Commission (E/1985/26); agenda item 11.

Social and demographic statistics

Social indicators

Following consideration of 1984 reports(9) by the Secretary-General on the future direction of work on social indicators and on progress in the development of such indicators and the integration of social, demographic and related statistics, the Statistical Commission requested that work on the indicators should continue. It agreed that the work of the Statistical Office on the subject should give highest priority to methodologies and to compiling statistics, indicators and data bases on special population groups such as women, children, youth, the elderly and disabled persons. The Commission expressed support for the work of the Statistical Office and the ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities on co-ordination of international work on social statistics and indicators. It requested that a planned handbook on social indicators be prepared to provide countries with technical information, suitable for training activities, on approaches to developing and using social indicators and on data sources for indicators, and emphasized the need for international co-ordination in preparing the handbook. It was agreed that the United Nations should give priority to promoting and facilitating exchanges of experience in resolving problems related to developing social statistics and indicators. The Commission commended ILO on its plans to revise the International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO) and requested it to take a variety of uses of ISCO into account in preparing the revision, including statistics on special groups and the development of social statistics and indicators in developing countries in a variety of social and economic fields, as well as the need for technical guidance in developing detailed national classifications of occupations. The Commission concluded that international requests to countries for indicators for international use should be limited to the minimum essential information that could be provided on a comparable basis and was not already available, and that national sources of internationally published indicators should be carefully identified in publications.

Population and housing censuses

The Statistical Commission commended national, regional and international efforts in successfully implementing the 1980 World Population and Housing Census Programme, strongly endorsed the 1990 Programme to be carried out between 1985 and 1994, and approved a proposed work programme pertaining to the 1990 census decade. It requested the Secretariat to submit to it in 1987 draft supplementary recommendations on population and housing censuses and to work closely with the regional commissions, specialized agencies and donors to prepare technical documentation and training to ensure adequate planning and successful implementation of the 1990 Programme.

The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council adoption of a resolution it drafted on the 1990 Programme. On 28 May 1985, the Council, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted resolution 1985/8, without vote.

1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme

The Economic and Social Council,

Having examined the report of the Statistical Commission on its twenty-third session,

Recalling its resolution 1947(LVIII) of 7 May 1975, in which it endorsed the development of the 1980 World Population and Housing Census Programme and recommended that States Members of the United Nations should take into account international recommendations relating to population and housing censuses when undertaking national censuses during the period 1975-1984, as well as its earlier resolutions endorsing previous decennial programmes,

Noting with satisfaction the unprecedented efforts made by States Members of the United Nations, in all regions, to carry out population and housing censuses as part of the 1980 World Population and Housing Census Programme and also the activities of the Secretary-General in support of national efforts in this regard,

Further recalling the importance placed on population censuses in the World Population Plan of Action adopted by the World Population Conference held in 1974 and reaffirmed by the International Conference on Population held in 1984,

Takes note, in particular, of recommendation 65 adopted by the International Conference on Population, by which all countries were required to participate in the 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme in order to assist, inter alia, in the evaluation of population and development trends at all levels,

Convinced that periodic population and housing censuses, since they provide comparable information for a country as a whole and for each administrative area therein, are one of the primary sources of data needed for effective development planning, monitoring of population trends and policies and the sound administration of national and local activities aimed at fostering the improvement of living standards,

Stressing that population and housing censuses should provide valuable statistics and indicators for assessing the situation of various special population groups, such as women, children, youth, the elderly, refugees and the homeless, and changes therein,

Recognizing that population and housing censuses place heavy demands on the statistical and administrative resources of countries, and that careful preparatory work is essential for maximizing the usefulness and efficiency of census activities,

Further recognizing that census methodology is constantly advancing and that an exchange of national experience and know-how will significantly contribute to the quality and timeliness of census results and the efficiency and effectiveness of census operations,

1. Recommends that States Members of the United Nations should undertake to carry out population and housing censuses during the period 1985-1994, taking into account international and regional recommendations relating to population and housing censuses and giving particular attention to the timely publication of census results so that the censuses meet national data requirements;

2. Requests the States Members of the United Nations, in carrying out population and housing censuses, to continue to provide basic census results to the United Nations and other appropriate intergovernmental organizations to assist in the study of global and regional issues;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to proceed with the development of a 1990 World Population and Housing Census Programme, to be carried out during the period 1985-1994, and to make all necessary preparations with a view to assisting interested Member States to plan and carry out improved censuses during this period.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/8

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/90) without vote, 21 May (meeting 8); draft by Statistical Commission (E/1985/26); agenda item 11.

National Household Survey Capability Programme

Having considered the 1984 report(12) of the Secretary-General on the National Household Survey Capability Programme, the Statistical Commission emphasized the importance of mobilizing resources for implementing country projects, urged donor agencies and participating developing countries to accord high priority to NHSCP in their technical co-operation activities in statistics, and recommended continued co-ordination within the United Nations system, and with other multilateral and bilateral agencies, in carrying out the Programme. It emphasized the importance of and the need for further work in technical studies and documentation, and requested the Secretary-General to submit a progress report on NHSCP in 1987.

The ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities(4) recognized that mobilization of additional resources for NHSCP was of central concern, since many country projects were delayed for lack of external assistance and, in a few cases, the sums required were small. The creation of a modest central fund could overcome such difficulties, it stated. While acknowledging that urgent priority survey activities should not be sacrificed, the Sub-Committee concurred with the Commission's recommendation that donor agencies make use of NHSCP rather than fund ad hoc surveys to meet country data needs.

Living Standards Measurement Study

Following consideration of a 1984 World Bank report<sup>(12)</sup> on its Living Standards Measurement Study, and an oral statement at its 1985 session by a World Bank representative on the same subject, the Statistical Commission noted the progress on and the technical and methodological innovations that were part of LSMS, requested that efforts be made to ensure co-ordination among LSMS, NHSCP and national statistical services on technical and operational matters, and requested a report in 1987 on the results of the prototype surveys and on plans for further work.

Patterns of consumption

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/179, without vote.

Patterns of consumption: qualitative aspects of development

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in particular Article 55, and the provisions of articles 22 to 26 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as well as the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3345(XXIX) of 17 December 1974 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/51 of 22 July 1981 on the interrelationships between population, resources, environment and development, as well as the discussion of the reports of the Secretary-General on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000,

Convinced of the necessity to preserve in the long term the balance between resources, population, environment and development, taking into account the advances made in science and technology and the progress accomplished in the transfer of technological innovations to developing countries,

Recalling further, as stated in paragraph 8 of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, that the development process must promote human dignity, economic growth, productive employment and social equity and that the ultimate aim of development is the constant improvement of the well-being of the entire population on the basis of its full participation in the process of development and a fair distribution of the benefits therefrom, within the framework of the development plans and national priorities of each country,

Reaffirming, in accordance with the goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in particular paragraph 42 thereof, that the international community will provide technical and financial support to achieve immediate and long-term social and economic objectives in the context of an overall substantial increase in resources for development, paying due respect to the cultural identities of nations and peoples,

Considering that, in order to satisfy the fundamental socio-economic needs, it is important to promote, in accordance with national economic plans and priorities, the production of goods and services necessary for the improvement of the human condition,

Noting that the United Nations has undertaken to establish consolidated inventories of data on the environment, natural resources, existing infrastructures and population, including the structure and socio-economic needs of population groups,

Recalling also that the Statistical Commission, the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development and other bodies in the United Nations system have undertaken studies of socio-economic indicators,

Aware of the need for methods to measure with greater accuracy the level of satisfaction of socio-economic needs in the developing countries, in order to facilitate the search for better ways of improving living standards,

1. Reaffirms the common goal pursued by the international community of realizing, through national efforts and international co-operation, and in accordance with the organization and resources of each country, the enjoyment of the economic, social and cultural rights indispensable for the development of the human condition as well as for the well-being of individuals and their families, especially in regards to food, clothing, housing, education, health care and necessary social services;

2. Considers that an accurate assessment of the advances in living standards requires a reliable measuring instrument consisting of a set of indicators related to living conditions, employment and the circumstances underlying them, and the improvement of basic national statistical programmes and capabilities related to food, clothing, housing, education, health care and necessary social services;

3. Notes the importance of identifying, for national use, indicative patterns of consumption that adequately meet fundamental socio-economic needs and are tailored to local and national requirements, particularly in developing countries, taking into account national experience, plans and strategies;

4. Encourages, in this regard, countries to undertake efforts to collect, tabulate and regularly publish accurate and updated data on consumption and living standards for different population groups, bearing in mind the need for more international attention to be given to the qualitative aspects of development;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to implement General Assembly resolution 3345(XXIX) in order to assist all States, particularly developing countries, and the organs of the United Nations in their efforts to advance knowledge on the interrelated issues of resources, population, environment and development;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on patterns of consumption and related socio-economic indicators, based on the views of all interested States and on information about the work done so far by relevant bodies in the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development, and to submit the report to the Statistical Commission at its twenty-fourth session for consideration, and requests the Economic and Social Council to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

General Assembly resolution 40/179

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.122), orally revised, based on informal consultations on draft by Equatorial Guinea, Mauritania, Morocco, Peru and Zaire (A/C.2/40/L.44); agenda item 12.

Other statistical activities

Technical co-operation

During 1985, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), in co-operation with the Statistical Office, provided technical co-operation to developing countries in statistical organization, national accounts and demographic and social statistics, including population censuses, surveys, civil registration and statistical data processing. The Secretary-General reported(13) that, during the year, there were 180 statistics and data processing projects involving expenditures of $17.7 million, an increase of about 43 per cent over 1984.

Training was a central component of the technical co-operation programme. The on-the-job statistical training programme, under way since 1983, enabled junior statisticians and programmers from developing countries to work in the statistical offices of other developing countries and to benefit from their expertise. In 1985, the project involved 14 trainees from 10 countries, working in seven host countries.

Following consideration of the Secretary-General's 1984 report(12) on technical co-operation in statistics rendered by the United Nations system and other agencies, the Statistical Commission requested the Secretary-General to submit to its 1987 session a report on technical co-operation in statistics, including contributions from the system, other international organizations and countries, taking into account suggestions made at its 1985 session. It also requested that a report assessing the effectiveness of technical co-operation in statistics be submitted to it in 1987, and requested the Secretary-General to examine the possibility of discussions in another forum, comprising more developing countries and donors, which might assist the Commission with a supplementary detailed review of technical co-operation in statistics.

In June 1985,(4) the ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities discussed assessment of the effectiveness of technical co-operation in statistics. Background notes prepared by the Statistical Office reviewed some alternative approaches to the problem and specific case-studies of assessment of effectiveness, and proposed an approach that was thought to be feasible within the resources and time available to the Statistical Office. The Sub-Committee suggested that some version of the more limited project assessment suggested by the Statistical Office should be recommended, together with an account of various agency experiences. The Sub-Committee agreed that the document to be submitted to the 1987 Statistical Commission session, in addition to presenting an assessment on a partial projects approach, should contain a detailed proposal and work plan with budgetary requirements for a more in-depth assessment based on a few selected countries.

In September 1985, the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination(3) also considered the question of assessment of the effectiveness of technical co-operation, agreed that a country approach rather than a project approach was appropriate and that the Statistical Office should pursue the country approach by developing a plan and start to carry it out within available resources, with progress being reported to the Statistical Commission's 1987 session. The Working Group also recommended that the Statistical Office identify or develop appropriate global indicators of national statistical capability and use them to assess the change in capability on a global scale over a recent period of time. The results should be included in the report to the Commission, along with relevant experiences of international or national agencies in assessment, an outline of plans and projected costs for the complete country approach and a timetable for reporting on the matter to the Commission.

Special problems in the statistically least developed countries

Following consideration of a 1984 report(12) by the Secretary-General on the special problems of the statistically least developed countries, the Statistical Commission expressed its strong support for continuing work on identifying the special statistical problems of those countries and endorsed the convening of an expert group to study them further and seek a solution.

After discussing the issue at its June meeting,(4) the ACC Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities expressed support for assembling the accumulated knowledge of statistical advisers in international organizations, along with that of country representatives, for a study of a few selected countries to identify problems. The focus of the report to be presented to the Commission in 1987 should be on generic problems rather than on problems related to specific subject areas. Possible types of countries to be considered for the study included very small countries, many of which were island countries, least developed countries, and countries not having the minimal set of series or a good survey system.

At its September 1985 meeting,(3) the Working Group on International Statistical Programmes and Co-ordination decided that the report to be presented in 1987 on special problems in the statistically least developed countries should incorporate a review of problems and policy conclusions based on an investigation of several such countries, and a review based on accumulated knowledge of statistical advisers of a number of organizations. The Working Group agreed that initial material for the first-mentioned review would be prepared by a consultant based on visits to two or three selected countries.

The Working Group stated that the question of defining statistically least developed countries should not be addressed in the report but that countries should be selected from the following categories: countries identified by the General Assembly as least developed countries (see p. 433); small island developing countries; and land-locked and other developing countries with special problems in statistics.

Publication policy

Following consideration of a 1984 report(12) by the Secretary-General on meeting user needs for and improving the dissemination of international statistics, and another(12) on aspects of the publication policies of statistical agencies, the Statistical Commission urged further cost-effective efforts to improve the content of statistical publications and the dissemination of comparable international statistics in a timely and efficient manner. The Statistical Office was requested to continue to develop closer contacts with users and producers of statistics to improve the quality and dissemination of international statistics, and the Secretary-General was requested to submit to the Commission in 1987 a progress report on action taken in response to the Commission's comments.

Chapter XXIV

Institutional arrangements

In 1985, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) and the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) continued to seek greater harmonization of programmes within the United Nations system and a higher level of co-ordination and co-operation in their implementation. With the same end in view, the Economic and Social Council recommended measures for the effective functioning of the Joint Meetings of those two Committees, called for the improvement of programming and co-ordination instruments and, in this connection, endorsed CPC recommendations on cross-organizational programme analyses (COPAs). In December, the Assembly called for recommendations from the Secretary-General to enhance co-ordination.

A report by the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) on the subject of reporting to the Council, and the Secretary-General's comments on it, were examined by CPC, which called for implementation of measures suggested by the Secretary-General.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation, an intergovernmental organization, was pursued, as was co-operation with non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Other organizational and institutional arrangements included adoption by the Council of its work programme for 1985-1986, and approval by the Assembly of the biennial programme of work for 1986-1987 of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

In December, the Assembly approved an Agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), whereby the United Nations would recognize UNIDO as a specialized agency within the United Nations system upon the Agreement's entry into force (see p. 591).

Topics related to this chapter. Industrial development: conversion of UNIDO to a specialized agency; co-ordination in the UN system. Regional economic and social activities: strengthening of regional commissions. United Nations programmes: programme planning; administrative and budgetary co-ordination.

Co-ordination in the UN system

Following the regular consideration by United Nations bodies of matters pertaining to co-operation and co-ordination in the United Nations system, the General Assembly, in December 1985, requested the Secretary-General to report with recommendations on ways to enhance future co-ordination.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly on 17 December adopted without vote resolution 40/177.

Co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system

The General Assembly,

Recalling relevant parts of Articles 15, 17, 57, 58, 63 and 64 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, by which it, inter alia, endorsed the conclusions and recommendations, as amended, of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Restructuring of the Economic and Social Sectors of the United Nations System, among which were guidelines and directives on inter-agency co-ordination,

Reaffirming further Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/77 of 26 July 1985,

Taking note of the references which were made to the importance of co-ordination in statements during the fortieth anniversary session of the United Nations,

Convinced of the pressing need for effective co-ordination and co-operation within the framework of the United Nations system, at both the intergovernmental and intersecretariat levels, to ensure coherent, efficient and responsive implementation of programmes in the future,

Bearing in mind problems that have arisen in co-ordination,

Considering that it is important to take steps to improve further the effectiveness of the United Nations system,

1. Stresses the need for effective and improved co-ordination in the United Nations system as laid down in the Charter of the United Nations and the agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, and calls upon all concerned to observe more vigorously their responsibilities in this regard;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, after consultation with the executive heads of the specialized agencies, to re-examine critically and constructively all aspects of the question of co-ordination in the United Nations and the United Nations system; to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Economic and Social Council, a comprehensive report setting out his considered views on current mechanisms and procedures, and his specific recommendations aimed at enhancing co-ordination in the future, as envisaged in the Charter of the United Nations and the agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies and in accordance with the relevant resolutions; to report orally to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986 and to submit a progress report to the Assembly early in its forty-first session.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009/Add.2) without vote, 5 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.109), based on informal consultations on draft by Bangladesh, Belgium, China, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Italy, Liberia, Netherlands, Pakistan, Trinidad and Tobago, Uganda, United Kingdom and Yugoslavia (A/C.2/40/L.41); agenda item 12. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 36, 39, 48, 49; plenary 119.

ACC activities

In 1985, ACC and its subsidiary machinery dealt with a number of programme, operational and administrative policy issues with implications for the United Nations system. Among these were questions relating to development and international economic co-operation (see p. 411), including policy responses to the continuing slow-down of world economic activity and a co-ordinated approach to the social aspects of the development process. ACC examined the underlying causes of the critical economic situation in Africa with a view to integrating immediate relief efforts and longer-term activities (see p. 499). It discussed co-ordination of system-wide observances of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations (see p. 403), and past, current and future COPAs (see p. 1044). Its Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ (PROG)) considered further approaches to and mechanisms for joint planning.

ACC sought to strengthen further the co-ordination of information systems (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV), and the Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy reviewed co-operation and co-ordination in implementing the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy (see p. 691). ACC endorsed a 10-year programme of support to countries in the prevention and control of vitamin-A deficiency and related disorders, and set in motion preparations for a similar plan for the prevention of iodine deficiency (see p. 775). It considered co-ordination of preparatory work for international conferences (on crime prevention, women, disarmament and development, drug abuse), years (of youth, peace, shelter for the homeless) and decades (of disabled persons, and for cultural development).

ACC's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)) undertook a preliminary examination of major issues relating to the links between emergency relief, rehabilitation and longer-term development activities in the context of the current crisis in Africa (see p. 500). It continued to simplify and harmonize aid modalities, especially as regards project monitoring and evaluation, and discussed the various opportunities open to United Nations organizations for interaction with bilateral aid agencies and conditions for effective fellowship programmes.

ACC continued to review management and institutional policy issues to promote their harmonization, improve efficiency and achieve economies. In the area of personnel and general administration (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III), ACC set out its position on: the determination of the margin between net remuneration in the United Nations common system and that of the comparator civil service, the operation of the post adjustment system, and the determination of the level of pensionable remuneration and pension benefits. The two components of its Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions (CCAQ) reviewed a number of conditions of service, including allowances and benefits, field conditions, leave, health insurance, daily subsistence allowances, education grants, staff-management relations, and financial and budgetary questions in five areas: programmes and budgets; accounting and financial reporting; staff salaries and allowances; cash management; and general financial systems (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

Also during the year, ACC prepared and approved its comments on a JIU report on the United Nations development system's support to implementation of the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (see p. 490) and decided that the JIU reflections on reform of the United Nations should be the subject of ACC comments (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter II).

ACC described the foregoing activities in its annual overview reports for 1984/85(1) and 1985/86(2). It adopted 29 decisions in 1985—13 at its first regular session (Geneva, 22 and 23 April),(3) two at a special session (Geneva, 4 July)(4) and 14 at its second regular session (New York, 28 and 29 October)(5)—relating to the topics mentioned above and matters concerning ACC machinery.

The principal subsidiary bodies of ACC met during the year as follows:

Organizational Committee (New York, 11 and 12 February, 17-21 and 30 October, and 25 October (special meeting); Geneva, 10-12 April and 1 July); CCAQ (personnel and General Administrative Questions) (sixty-second session, London, 4-21 March; sixty-third session, New York, 27 June-17 July); CCAQ (Financial and Budgetary Questions) (sixty-second session, Geneva, 11-15 March; sixty-third session, New York, 9-13 September); CCSQ(OPS) (first regular session, Geneva, 26-29 March; second regular session,

New York, 7-9 October); CCSQ(PROG) (first regular session, Geneva, 1-4 April; second regular session, New York, 10-16 October).

ACC bodies on specific subjects met as follows:

Advisory Committee for the Co-ordination of Information Systems, special and third sessions, Geneva, 14 and 15 January, 23 and 24 September; panel of specialists on information systems for science and technology for development, Rome, 21-25 January; Task Force on Science and Technology for Development, sixth session, Geneva, 29-31 January; inter-agency meetings on COPAs, of the activities of the United Nations system in the area of economic and social research and policy analysis, and on economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, New York, 4 and 5 February and 6-8 February, respectively; fourth, fifth and sixth inter-agency consultations on the follow-up of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, Geneva, 11 and 12 February, 29 April, and 29 and 30 July, respectively; Sub-Committee on Nutrition and its Advisory Group, eleventh session, Nairobi, Kenya, 11-15 February; Ad Hoc Task Force on the International Conference on Population, fourth session, New York, 13-15 February; Task Force on Rural Development, thirteenth session, New York, 6-8 March; Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, fourth session, New York, 11 and 12 March; third inter-agency meeting on the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons, Vienna, Austria, 11-13 March; third inter-agency meeting on preparations for the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, Vienna, 15 March; fourth ad hoc inter-agency consultation on International Youth Year, Vienna, 21 and 22 March; Joint United Nations Information Committee, twelfth session, Rome, Italy, 15-19 April; Sub-Committee on Statistical Activities, nineteenth session, Madrid, Spain, 24-28 June; ad hoc inter-agency meeting on co-ordination in matters of international drug abuse control, Rome, 11-13 September; inter-agency; meeting on outer space activities, Paris, 30 September-2 October; Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources, sixth session, New York, 21-25 October; meeting of senior fellowship officers, Geneva, 4-7 November.

Report for 1984/85

Owing to constraints of time, CPC(6) on 25 May decided, on the proposal of its Bureau, to transmit without discussion the ACC annual overview report for 1984/85(1) to the Economic and Social Council at its second (July) regular session.

By section VII of resolution 1985/76, the Council took note of that report and requested ACC to continue to improve its annual overview report, which should contain an analytical review of its activities, the status of co-ordination efforts among United Nations organizations and recommendations for further cooperation and co-ordination among them.

CPC activities

In 1985, CPC met in New York for its organizational meeting on 1 April and for its twenty-fifth session from 29 April to 1 June.(6)

Most of the session was devoted to a section-by-section consideration of the programme aspects of the proposed programme budget for the 1986-1987 biennium, including its foreword and introduction (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I). CPC took note of initiatives to improve the process of programme budgeting and the programme budget document for future bienniums. It considered the Secretary-General's related reports on: experience gained in providing statements of programme budget implications to the 1984 General Assembly; the harmonization of food and agricultural programmes between the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific; aspects of co-ordination and rationalization of UNIDO activities (see p. 598); and the further implementation of a 1982 Assembly resolution(7) on decentralization of responsibilities from global to regional entities (see p. 625). It deferred consideration of a report on recurrent United Nations publications (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

In addition to taking decisions on the role of the COPA as a tool for its work, CPC examined four reports on past, current and future COPAs (see p. 1044). It acted on triennial review reports on implementation of its recommendations on the programmes on transnational corporations (TNCs), mineral resources and manufactures (see pp. 618, 677 and 602, respectively). CPC also examined an in-depth evaluation report of the drug control programme, together with a JIU report on drug abuse control activities in the United Nations system (see p. 1013).

Other JIU reports considered or deferred to 1986 dealt with reporting to the Economic and Social Council, publications policy and practice in the United Nations system, the evaluation system of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), and UNDP field offices. (See p. 1228.)

Also discussed were an ACC report on co-ordination of United Nations information systems (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV), and the provisional agenda for the 1985 Joint Meetings of ACC and CPC (see p. 1044).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

2. Reaffirms the importance of monitoring and evaluation in the programme planning and budgeting cycle and urges the Secretary-General to refine further the methods employed in those exercises;

3. Reiterates that the medium-term plan constitutes the principal policy directive of the United Nations and should continue to serve as the framework for the formulation of the biennial budget;

4. Suggests that the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination, in the context of its discussion on the cross-organizational programme analysis of economic and social research and policy analysis, should consider the report of the Secretary-General on recurrent publications of the United Nations with a view to identifying duplication and undue overlaps;

V

twenty-sixth session a report describing the existing expert bodies within the United Nations system;

3. Considers that the Secretary-General, taking into account the views expressed in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Economic and Social Council, should continue his efforts to bring about improvements, as suggested in his further comments on the report of the Joint Inspection Unit, and should keep the Council informed;

VII

Reports of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

1. Takes note of the annual overview report of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination for 1984/85;

2. Requests the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, in the light of the debate at the second regular session of 1985 of the Economic and Social Council, to continue to improve its annual overview report, which should contain an analytical review of the activities of the Committee, the status of co-ordination efforts among the organizations of the United Nations system and recommendations for further co-operation and co-ordination among them;

3. Takes note of the Register of Development Activities proposed by the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination in response to Council resolution 1982/71 of 10 November 1982 and General Assembly resolution 37/226 of 20 December 1982 and urges its early implementation;

4. Invites the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to proceed with the technical design for the establishment and operation of the Register and to submit a detailed progress report to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-sixth session, including, inter alia, information on cost, funding, assessment of utility to Member States and agency participation; with regard to the funding, the cost to be borne by the United Nations should be limited to the resources appropriated in the regular budget in connection with paragraph 23 of General Assembly resolution 37/226.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/76

26 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1985/141) without vote, 19 July (meeting 20); draft by Chairman (E/1985/C.3/L.8), based on informal consultations and orally revised; agenda item 19.

Following adoption of the resolution, the United States said it had joined in the consensus on the text, but had several reservations concerning the CPC report, in particular the chapter on TNCs.

Work programme and organization

In drawing up its 1986 provisional agenda for review by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly, CPC(6) included an item on the improvement of its work, particularly in relation to its review of future programme budgets and medium-term plans.

By section II of resolution 1985/76, the Council reiterated its call for continued improvement of such CPC programming and co-ordination instruments as COPAS, in-depth evaluations and triennial reviews of the implementation of its recommendations thereon, programme-budget mechanisms and medium-term plans. It re-emphasized the need to strengthen the links between the recommendations derived from COPAs and evaluations, on the one hand, and the preparation of programme budgets and medium-term plans on the other. It asked the Secretary-General to ensure that COPAs and evaluations were concise, as well as objective and critical in their assessments of the activities and organizational arrangements under review, and of the relationships between activities and mandates.

In resolution 40/240 on programme planning, the Assembly endorsed the decision of CPC to include in its 1986 provisional agenda an item on the improvement of its work, inter alia, with a view to its consideration of future programme budgets and medium-term plans, as well as to enhance the instruments of co-ordination. The Assembly considered that decision a step towards enhancing CPC's effectiveness as the main subsidiary organ of the Council and the Assembly for planning, programming and co-ordination.

Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC

As it had decided in 1984,(8) the Economic and Social Council reviewed, at its February 1985 organizational session, the functioning of the Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC. Doubt was expressed regarding the effectiveness of the Meetings as currently organized. The United States said it was impossible to give the necessary attention to questions under consideration; therefore, the Meetings should be dispensed with and the resources thus released made available to the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa. The Netherlands suggested limiting the agenda and streamlining the decision-making process. The dialogue between the executive heads of the specialized agencies should be made more specific and practical, France suggested, possibly by relating the preparation of documentation and the scheduling of meetings to the choice of the issues considered; a Council Vice-President could be put in charge of helping CPC and the Council to consider those issues. Indonesia felt that ACC should consider improvements suggested by the Council itself and that CPC should also help to improve the Meetings.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Following its review of the functioning of the Joint Meetings, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/107 without vote.

Review of the functioning of the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination

At its 5th plenary meeting, on 8 February 1985, the Council, reiterating its resolution 1984/61 B of 26 July 1984, recommended that the Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination for 1985 should focus on the effectiveness and co-ordination of relief efforts in Africa by United Nations organs and specialized agencies.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/107

Adopted without vote

Draft by President, for Council Bureau (E/1985/L.18), based on informal consultations; agenda item 2.

Meeting numbers. ESC 2, 5.

CPC action. On 31 May, CPC(6) considered the proposed agenda for the 1985 Joint Meetings. While some members questioned the usefulness of the Meetings, others felt that focusing discussion on the agenda items and relevant background papers would improve dialogue. CPC approved the agenda and requested the Secretary-General to take all possible measures to improve the work of the Joint Meetings substantially and thus provide guidance for the activities of the United Nations system.

Activities of the Joint Meetings. CPC and ACC held the twentieth in their series of Joint Meetings at Geneva on 2 and 3 July 1985.(9) In accordance with the Council's decision (see above), the Joint Meetings held a wide-ranging debate on the question of the effectiveness and co-ordination of United Nations organs and specialized agencies in relief efforts in Africa, with an ACC background paper as a basis for the debate. Also discussed were economic and technical co-operation among developing countries (see p. 427) and the agenda for the 1986 Joint Meetings.

In his statement, the CPC Chairman referred to the highly complex mechanism into which the United Nations had grown and the expansion of its activities to all spheres of international life, economic and social in particular; such a development had increased the need for ensuring system-wide co-ordination of activities so as to minimize, if not eliminate, duplication of work and waste of resources. CPC and ACC had gained importance, he said, and the Joint Meetings had proved their usefulness: they provided a unique opportunity for the exchange of views between Governments and executive heads of the specialized agencies, aimed at increasing the efficient use of available capacities and resources; they had also given Governments an opportunity to gain a better knowledge of the difficulties and problems facing ACC members.

The Joint Meetings concluded that, while some progress had been made in the preparations for and in the conduct of the current Meetings, there remained room for improvement. Statements could be shorter and more focused, and inputs to the Meetings should provide more critical assessments and be more action-oriented.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Economic and Social Council on 26 July adopted resolution 1985/77 without vote.

Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination
The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling Articles 57, 58, 63 and 64 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolutions 2008(LX) of 14 May 1976 and 1984/61 B of 26 July 1984.

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977, in particular paragraphs 2 and 3 thereof,

Having considered the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the twentieth series of Joint Meetings of the two Committees,

1. Takes note of the efforts made in the preparations for and in the conduct of the twentieth series of Joint Meetings of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination and stresses the need for improvement in the functioning of the Meetings;

2. Takes note also of the report of the Chairmen of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination on the Joint Meetings of the two Committees, which includes the conclusions reached and the views expressed on the effectiveness and co-ordination of United Nations organs and specialized agencies in relief efforts in Africa and on economic and technical co-operation among developing countries;

3. Stresses the need for more vigorous observance of the responsibilities laid down in the Charter of the United Nations and the agreements between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, bearing in mind problems which have arisen in co-ordination and the pressing need for effective co-ordination among all the organizations of the United Nations system, including co-ordination between the United Nations and the specialized agencies;

4. Urges the development of an open and constructive dialogue in the Joint Meetings in order to reach concrete solutions to problems of interorganizational co-ordination; to that effect, requests that the background paper for the Meetings should be submitted sufficiently in advance to allow careful study; and also requests that that document should highlight the problems faced by organizations in the field of interorganizational co-ordination and difficulties of implementation and should be action-oriented;

5. Recommends that normally only one item should be chosen to serve as a focus for discussion at the Joint Meetings; the item chosen should be sufficiently precise and of such a nature as to allow a concrete discussion among members, centred on the issues identified in the background paper;

6. Calls upon Member States and members of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination to be represented at a high level in order to maximize the usefulness of the Joint Meetings;

7. Suggests that problems of co-ordination should be more systematically taken into account in the work of the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system in view of the discussion in the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and at the Joint Meetings.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/77

26 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1985/141) without vote, 19 July (meeting 20); draft by Chairman (E/1985/C.3/L.9), based on informal consultations: agenda item 19.

Cross-organizational programme analyses

In 1985, in addition to considering reports on previous COPAs in marine affairs and human settlements (see pp. 681 and 834, respectively), ACC and its subsidiaries discussed the preparation of COPAs in the areas of economic and social research and policy analysis, science and technology for development, and the environment (see p. 794), for submission to CPC in 1986, 1987 and 1988, respectively.

CPC(6) examined a COPA of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, incorporating a cross-organizational review (CORE) of medium-term plans on the same subject (see p. 426). It also examined a report of the Secretary-General(10)—submitted in response to its 1984 request(11)—on the scope and general approach of the COPA of economic and social research and policy analysis, currently in preparation. It undertook a review of the concept, structure and future development of the COPA as a tool for its work, and offered a series of conclusions and recommendations that it considered should be taken into account when preparing the COPA which was the subject of the Secretary-General's report and future COPAs (see p. 1228).

CPC concluded that the COPA should be responsive to the needs of Governments and of the United Nations system, its subject well chosen and its scope clearly defined. It should be carefully documented and the system-wide activities in the programme area critically assessed. To fulfil its main objective of facilitating the programme planning process from the standpoint of co-operation and co-ordination, the COPA should identify duplication, overlaps and gaps in activities. The programme area to be analysed should be of high priority to Member States and one requiring improved co-operation and co-ordination within the system. The methodology should be precise but flexible enough to accommodate the circumstances particular to the subject. The report should be short and specific and should contain a set of clearly outlined conclusions to enable CPC to formulate meaningful recommendations. A follow-up of such recommendations should be ensured, with CPC being regularly informed of the practical results.

CPC requested a report in 1986 on the results of past COPAs. It decided to consider a COPA of activities in science and technology for development in 1987, with its scope and general approach to be considered in 1986, and one in the area of the environment in 1988. To assist it in selecting future topics, CPC recommended that the Secretary-General, in consultation with ACC, propose more than one topic.

By section IV of resolution 1985/76, the Economic and Social Council endorsed the CPC conclusions and recommendations, and requested the Secretary-General to take them fully into account when preparing the COPA of economic and social research and policy analysis.

Medium-term plans

In January 1985, ACC circulated to organizations the second draft of a CORE of the issue of women and development in the medium-term plans of the organizations of the United Nations system. Revisions were incorporated in the draft before its submission to the Economic and Social Council (see p. 948).

By section V of resolution 1985/76, the Council decided that, at its 1986 organizational session, it would choose a topic for the next CORE, to be considered at its 1987 second regular session.

Written communications on ILO

On 28 May,(12) Czechoslovakia transmitted to the Secretary-General a declaration by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR on the situation in the International Labour Organisation (ILO). The declaration criticized various aspects of the activities, budget and structure of ILO, including its role in world labour and disarmament problems, the functioning of machinery to supervise international labour standards, alleged resistance to East-West trade union co-operation, membership of ILO bodies, and geographical distribution of staff.

The ILO Director-General addressed those criticisms in an ILO document. Circulation of that document to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council was requested on 3 July(13) by Costa Rica and on 9 July(14) by Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Economic and Social Council

Reporting procedures

Pursuant to a 1984 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> CPC on 20 May 1985 considered in depth a 1984 JIU study<sup>(2)</sup> on reporting to the Council, together with the preliminary comments of the Secretary-General. CPC also considered the Secretary-General's further comments,<sup>(3)</sup> submitted in May 1985 in response to the same resolution.

As the Secretary-General had observed in his preliminary comments, the JIU study presented a comprehensive critique of the structure and functioning of United Nations intergovernmental bodies and Secretariat support services. It sought, through the example of the Council, to examine the broader question of the role of, and relationship between, the Secretariat and intergovernmental organs in the economic and social field.

In his further comments, the Secretary-General stated that he shared the JIU view that there were a number of technical problems relating to Secretariat support services whose solution was possible despite the difficult political context within which they existed; he was therefore ready, whenever feasible and appropriate, to introduce changes and improvements suggested by JIU to enable the Secretariat to respond more effectively to the needs of intergovernmental bodies (the Council and its subsidiary bodies).

The Secretary-General observed, with regard to documentation for consideration by economic and social bodies: first, many documents tended to be more descriptive than analytical, key policy issues were not always precisely identified and policy recommendations were often lacking; second, there was a tendency to rely on established views within the Secretariat, due in part to the complexity of issues dealt with and to the sensitivities relating to some of them; and third, requests for additional documentation were sometimes used as a substitute for compromise, concession and agreement, and many were repetitive although no new developments justified such requests. To improve the situation, it was necessary for the Secretariat to reorient its approaches to the preparation of reports and for Member States to exercise restraint in their requests for documentation, in particular annual or recurrent reports.

The Secretary-General concurred with JIU's call (recommendation 2) for documentation that was concise and analytical and listed precisely stated recommendations. He agreed (recommendation 3) that, to improve the Council's function of defining policies, the form of the general debate and the formulation of its conclusion needed to be reconsidered, and made specific proposals to that end. The format of the World Economic Survey was under review and changes in its structure and content were expected beginning in 1986. Consultations among the system's secretariats on the preparation of other general economic and social analyses and surveys was to be strengthened so as to harmonize definitions of statistics, take account of interactions between economic, social and other issues, and avoid overlapping and duplication. As to the recommended revision of the operations of the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) (recommendation 4), the Secretary-General would continue providing all necessary support to CDP, including consultants' services as required; CDP had indicated readiness to continue its informal consultation with the Council begun in 1984.

Stating that the Council should again review its objectives and functioning in relation to its responsibilities for system-wide co-ordination, the Secretary-General commented on specific reports and mechanisms designed to support the exercise of those responsibilities. Among these was the ACC annual overview report, concerning which the Secretary-General concurred with JIU that it should be more analytical in its treatment of the main issues confronting the system and the intersecretariat co-ordination machinery. He agreed that CORES presented directly to the Council, and COPAS presented to CPC, should be improved; he felt, however, that the core of the issue was not documentation as such but the prevailing approaches to inter-agency co-ordination. As to the ineffectiveness of the CPC/ACC Joint Meetings noted by JIU, the Secretary-General pointed to the 1984 Council recommendations<sup>(4)</sup> for improvement. He would continue to assist CPC to enhance its functioning; however, for the reasons set out in his preliminary comments,<sup>(2)</sup> he did not agree with the recommendations that intergovernmental bodies use outside experts to examine the problems of co-ordinating system-wide programmes and activities, for which CPC would draw up a list of subjects earmarked for COPAs and another of approved experts, and provide the funds required (recommendation 5), and that CPC be given the means necessary for that task (recommendation 6).

The Secretary-General said he would carefully consider the proposal (recommendation 7) that programme planning documents should include an examination of the draft medium-term plan, draft programme budgets, programme performance reports, studies on operational activities, evaluation reports, and COPAS, subject to the constraints of the calendar of meetings. He would ensure speedy distribution of planning, programming and evaluation documents (recommendation 8). As to a calendar being drawn up to allow documents to be considered in good time (recommentation 9), he said the timing of meetings was often dictated by considerations other than those of programme planning so that in some cases documents could not be examined until after they had been considered centrally (by CPC, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), the Council and the Assembly). Concerning the recommendation (10) that the regulations and rules governing programme planning be given wide circulation, he noted that this had already been done and would draw the attention of subsidiary bodies to their importance.

Commenting on the remaining proposals (recommendations 11-13), the Secretary-General said he would continue, as necessary, to engage outside expertise for the development of programming and evaluation tools, agreed that it would be useful to develop a set format to highlight recommendations in evaluation reports and that recommendations of decision-making bodies on reports should be structured to indicate whether or not they had been approved or approved with reservations, and felt it useful to define procedures concerning decision-making on recommendations as a means of ensuring that recommendations were treated as requested when transmitted from one intergovernmental body to another.

Having taken note of the JIU report and comments thereon, CPC recommended that the Secretary-General continue improvements as suggested in his further comments and keep the Council informed. It asked him to submit to it in 1986 a report describing existing expert bodies established by the Assembly outside the structure of the Secretariat to provide independent evaluation and advice. On 26 July, the Council, by section VI of resolution 1985/76, took similar action in taking note of CPC's conclusions and recommendations on the JIU report. On the same date, it took note of the JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments, by decision 1985/198.

Co-operation with other organizations

Non-governmental organizations

The Committee on Non-Governmental Organizations met three times in 1985: in New York from 11 to 22 March(5) and on 8 May;(6) and at Geneva on 4 July.(7)

At its March meetings, following its review of applications from NGOs for consultative status with the Economic and Social Council or for a reclassification of their status, the Committee recommended one NGO for category I consultative status, 26 for category II and 13 for the Roster. It decided to reclassify one organization from category II to category I and seven from the Roster to category II, and withdraw the consultative status of the International Police Association.

Four applications for consultative status and three requests for reclassification were not approved; 20 applications were deferred to 1987 and three requests were not considered; and six requests for reclassification were deferred to 1987. The Committee also deferred to 1987 consideration of the quadrennial reports submitted by 45 NGOs in categories I and II on their United Nations-related activities during 1980-1984.(8)

In addition to approving its 1987 provisional agenda and recommending it for Council approval, the Committee also discussed matters relating to a review and rationalization of its future activities. In this connection, its attention was drawn to a statement of principles and concerns adopted by the Board of the Conference of Non-Governmental Organizations in Consultative Status with the Economic and Social Council (Geneva, 11 and 12 October 1984).(9)

In May and July, the Committee heard requests from NGOs with consultative status to address the Council or its committees in connection with items on the Council's agenda at its first and second regular 1985 sessions. The Council received statements from three NGOs(10) concerning specific areas of its work.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Committee on NGOs, the Economic and Social Council decided on 9 May to hear during its current session the NGOs listed in the Committee's May report.(6) On 10 May, it adopted two decisions concerning the consultative status of NGOs.

The first, decision 1985/113, was adopted without vote.
