Expressing grave anxiety and concern at the present serious situation in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, as a result of the continued Israeli occupation and the measures and actions taken by Israel, the occupying Power, designed to change the legal status, geographical nature and demographic composition of those territories,

Confirming that the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, is applicable to all Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Determines that all such measures and actions taken by Israel in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, are in violation of the relevant provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and constitute a serious obstacle to the efforts to achieve a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East and therefore have no legal validity;

2. Strongly deplores the persistence of Israel in carrying out such measures, in particular the establishment of settlements in the Palestinian and other occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem;

3. Demands that Israel comply strictly with its international obligations in accordance with the principles of international law and the provisions of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands once more that Israel, the occupying Power, desist forthwith from taking any action which would result in changing the legal status, geographical nature or demographic composition of the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem;

5. Urgently calls upon all States parties to the Geneva Convention to respect and to exert all efforts in order to ensure respect for and compliance with its provisions in all Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

16 December 1985 Meeting 118 138-1-6 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/40/890) by recorded vote (118-1-2), 8 November (meeting 27); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Kuwait for the Arab Group, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, Senegal (A/SPC/40/L.10); agenda item 75.

In Israel's view, it was fully entitled to enhance the security of the territories through the establishment of agricultural and urban centres; there was no legal justification for prohibiting Jews from living in the territories of the former British Mandate or in other areas.

The United States believed that the text diverted attention from the basic question of whether the settlements advanced or hindered a just and lasting peace.

Sweden believed that Israel could improve peace prospects by dismantling the settlements.

Iran had reservations about certain phrases in the text, which, it felt, implied recognition of Israel.

Golan Heights

In 1985, developments in the Golan Heights—a part of the Syrian Arab Republic occupied by Israel since 1967—brought action by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights.

Action by the Commission on Human Rights. By a resolution of 19 February 1985,<sup>(47)</sup> the Commission on Human Rights declared that Israel's 1981 decision<sup>(48)</sup> to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Golan Heights, which had resulted in effective annexation, was null and void and gravely violated international law and the United Nations Charter, and called on Israel to rescind it. The Commission strongly deplored the negative vote and pro-Israeli position of a permanent Security Council member which had prevented the Council from adopting appropriate measures against Israel. It deplored the practices against Syrian citizens in the Golan Heights and called on Israel to cease its acts of terrorism against them in order to impose Israeli citizenship on them and force them to carry Israeli identity cards. The Commission reaffirmed its request to Member States not to recognize any jurisdiction, laws or measures by Israel in respect of occupied Syrian and other Arab territories. It emphasized the necessity of total and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from all Palestinian and Syrian territories as an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a Middle East peace.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September,<sup>(49)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on action taken pursuant to a 1984 Assembly resolution<sup>(50)</sup> calling on Israel to desist from repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan Heights. In a 1 July reply to a note verbale he had sent on 29 March asking Israel what steps it had taken or envisaged to implement the resolution, Israel referred to its stated position as set out in a letter of 29 December 1981.<sup>(51)</sup> In addition, replies to a note verbale of 9 April 1985 to other Member States asking for information on measures they might have taken in implementation of the 1984 resolution, received from Czechoslovakia, Gabon, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, were annexed to the Secretary-General's report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted, by recorded vote, resolution 40/161 F on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices.

The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned that the Arab territories occupied since 1967 have been under continued Israeli military occupation,

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/88 E of 10 December 1982, 38/79 F of 15 December 1983 and 39/95 F of 14 December 1984,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General of 18 September 1985,

Recalling its previous resolutions, in particular resolutions 3414(XXX) of 5 December 1975, 31/61 of 9 December 1976, 32/20 of 25 November 1977, 33/28 and 33/29 of 7 December 1978, 34/70 of 6 December 1979 and 35/122 E of 11 December 1980, in which it, inter alia, called upon Israel to put an end to its occupation of the Arab territories and to withdraw from all those territories,

Reaffirming once more the illegality of Israel's decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which has resulted in the effective annexation of that territory,

Reaffirming that the acquisition of territory by force is inadmissible under the Charter of the United Nations and that all territories thus occupied by Israel must be returned,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Security Council, particularly Council resolution 497(1981), in which the Council, inter alia, decided that the Israeli decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian "Golan Heights was null and void and without international legal effect and demanded that Israel, the occupying Power, should rescind forthwith its decision;

2. Condemns the persistence of Israel in changing the physical character, demographic composition, institutional structure and legal status of the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights;

3. Determines that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken or to be taken by Israel, the occupying Power, that purport to alter the character and legal status of the Syrian Golan Heights are null and void and constitute a flagrant violation of international law and of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and have no legal effect;

4. Strongly condemns Israel for its attempts and measures to impose forcibly Israeli citizenship and Israeli identity cards on the Syrian citizens in the occupied Syrian Arab Golan Heights and calls upon it to desist from its repressive measures against the population of the Syrian Arab Golan Heights;

5. Calls once again upon Member States not to recognize any of the legislative or administrative measures and actions referred to above;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

16 December 1985 Meeting 118 136-1-10 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/40/890) by recorded vote (114-1-6), 8 November (meeting 27); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Kuwait for the Arab Group, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, Senegal (A/SPC/40/L.13); agenda item 75.

Against: Israel.

Abstaining: Cameroon, Come Rica, Grenada, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Malawi, Saint Lucia, Swaziland, United States, Zaire.

Israel found the text unacceptable, adding that under Syrian administration the Golan area had been a peripheral region with no local judicial system; the application of Israeli laws endowed the area with normal legal guarantees and due process, thus favouring its development.

The United States felt that the text went beyond the 1981 Security Council resolution,<sup>(52)</sup> which was the authoritative United Nations action on Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration in the Golan Heights.

Sweden pointed out that its support of the text did not alter its negative stand on the 1982 Assembly resolution on the Golan Heights and other Israeli-occupied territories.<sup>(53)</sup>

Also on 16 December, under the agenda item on the Middle East, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/168 B by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Having discussed the item entitled "The situation in the Middle East", Eking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 22 October 1985.

Recalling Security Council resolution 497(1981) of 17 December 1981,

Reaffirming its resolutions 36/226 B of 17 December 1981, ES-9/1 of 5 February 1982, 37/123 A of 16 December 1982, 38/180 A of 19 December 1983 and 39/146 B of 14 December 1984,

Recalling its resolution 3314(XXIX) of 14 December 1974, in which it defined an act of aggression, inter alia, as "the invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof" and provided that "no consideration of whatever nature, whether political, economic, military or otherwise, may serve as a justification for aggression",

Reaffirming the fundamental principle of the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by force,

Reaffirming once more the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem,

Noting that Israel's record, policies and actions establish conclusively that it is not a peace-loving Member State and that it has not carried out its obligations under the Charter of the United Nations,

Noting further that Israel has refused, in violation of Article 25 of the Charter, to accept and carry out the numerous relevant decisions of the Security Council, in particular resolution 497(1981), thus failing to carry out its obligations under the Charter,

1. Strongly condemns Israel for its failure to comply with Security Council resolution 497(1981) and General Assembly resolutions 36/226 B, ES-9/1, 37/123 A, 38/180 A and 39/146 B;

2. Declares once more that Israel's continued occupation of the Golan Heights and its decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights constitute an act of aggression under the provisions of Article 39 of the Charter of the United Nations and General Assembly resolution 3314(XXIX);

3. Declares once more that Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the occupied Syrian Golan Heights is illegal and therefore null and void and has no validity whatsoever;

4. Declares all Israeli policies and practices of, or aimed at, annexation of the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories, including Jerusalem, to be illegal and in violation of international law and of the relevant United Nations resolutions;

5. Determines once more that all actions taken by Israel to give effect to its decision relating to the occupied Syrian Golan Heights are illegal and invalid and shall not be recognized;

6. Reaffirms its determination that all relevant provisions of the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907, and the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, continue to apply to the Syrian territory occupied by Israel since 1967, and calls upon the parties thereto to respect and ensure respect for their obligations under these instruments in all circumstances;

7. Determines once more that the continued occupation of the Syrian Golan Heights since 1967 and their annexation by Israel on 14 December 1981, following Israel's decision to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on that territory, constitute a continuing threat to international peace and security;

8. Strongly deplores the negative vote by a permanent member of the Security Council which prevented the Council from adopting against Israel, under Chapter VII of the Charter, the "appropriate measures" referred to in resolution 497(1981) unanimously adopted by the Council;

9. Further deplores any political, economic, financial, military and technological support to Israel that encourages Israel to commit acts of aggression and to consolidate and perpetuate its occupation and annexation of occupied Arab territories;

10. Firmly emphasizes once more its demand that Israel, the occupying Power, rescind forthwith its illegal decision of 14 December 1981 to impose its laws, jurisdiction and administration on the Syrian Golan Heights, which resulted in the effective annexation of that territory;

11. Reaffirms once more the overriding necessity of the total and unconditional withdrawal by Israel from all the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, which is an essential prerequisite for the establishment of a comprehensive and just peace in the Middle East;

12. Determines once more that Israel's record, policies and actions confirm that it is not a peace-loving Member State, that it has persistently violated the principles contained in the Charter and that it has carried out neither its obligations under the Charter nor its commitment under General Assembly resolution 273(III) of 11 May 1949;

13. Calls once more upon all Member States to apply the following measures:

(a) To refrain from supplying Israel with any weapons and related equipment and to suspend any military assistance that Israel receives from them;

(b) To refrain from acquiring any weapons or military equipment from Israel;

(c) To suspend economic, financial and technological assistance to and co-operation with Israel;

(d) To sever diplomatic, trade and cultural relations with Israel;

14. Reiterates its call to all Member States to cease forthwith, individually and collectively, all dealings with Israel in order totally to isolate it in all fields;

15. Urges non-member States to act in accordance with the provisions of the present resolution;

16. Calls upon the specialized agencies and other international organizations to conform their relations with Israel to the terms of the present resolution;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Swaziland, Thailand, Uruguay, Venezuela, Zaire.

In the opinion of the United States, the declaration that Israel was not a peace-loving Member State and accusing it of an act of aggression was another polemic which did not advance peace and was not consistent with Security Council resolutions 242(1967)<sup>(54)</sup> and 338(1973);<sup>(55)</sup> the charges purported to engage the Assembly in matters which under the Charter were expressly reserved to the Council.

Sweden had strong objections in particular to paragraphs 12 to 16, with regard to their substantive content as well as to the fact that they could not be reconciled with the division of responsibilities between the Assembly and the Council. New Zealand regretted the absence in the text of the balance of principles embodied in Council resolutions and of a measured approach essential for securing the co-operation of all parties.

Nepal believed that the diplomatic isolation and economic boycott of Israel, as called for in paragraph 13, could be counter-productive. The Philippines and Singapore said they were unable to support a text that was unbalanced in its condemnation or impinged on the sovereign right of third countries to conduct their own international affairs as they saw fit. In Ecuador's opinion, certain paragraphs affected the principle of the universality of the United Nations and decisions flowing from State sovereignty, which in no circumstances should be subordinated to any decision or urgings of third countries or international organizations.

Bolivia did not agree with certain provisions which, it felt, did not contribute to a Middle East solution. Egypt also found certain elements which it could not approve. The measures proposed in the text, Peru believed, were not liable to prejudice efforts for achieving a solution within the United Nations framework. Implicit in the text was the danger of infringing some of the principles of international law and of an increasing erosion of the Organization's authority and effectiveness. Brazil and Austria did not believe that measures aimed at breaking relations with Israel and leading to its isolation would bring a solution any closer. Brazil added that Israel should not be offered excuses because of its isolation to disregard further the rules of international law.

Turkey found it difficult to reconcile paragraphs 13 and 14 with efforts under way to initiate a long-overdue negotiating process aimed at working out a solution. Argentina and Mexico had serious reservations on paragraphs 12 to 14; paragraph 9 and the eighth preambular paragraph as well, Argentina said, were not compatible with its foreign policy or with the objective of a comprehensive negotiated solution. Greece, although voting in favour, dissociated itself from paragraphs 8, 13(c), 13(d) and 14.

In resolution 40/161 D, the Assembly condemned Israeli repression against and closing of the educational institutions in the Golan Heights, particularly the prohibition of Syrian textbooks, Syrian educational system, the deprivation of Syrian students from pursuing their higher education in Syrian universities, the denial of the right to return to Syrian students receiving their higher education in the Syrian Arab Republic, the forcing of Hebrew on Syrian students, the imposition of courses promoting hatred, prejudice and religious intolerance, and the dismissal of teachers.

Palestinian officials

Expulsion of Palestinian leaders

In 1985, the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights again called on Israel to allow the return of three West Bank officials so that they could resume their functions. Israel had deported the three Palestinian officials in 1980,<sup>(56)</sup> on the ground that they had systematically engaged in inciting the local Arab population to acts of violence and subversion, abusing their public offices.

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1985<sup>(57)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on implementation of a 1984 Assembly resolution<sup>(58)</sup> demanding that Israel rescind the expulsion of and release from imprisonment the Mayors of Hebron and Halhul, rescind the expulsion of the Sharia Judge of Hebron and facilitate their immediate return.

In its 1 July reply to his note verbale of 29 March 1985, the Secretary-General stated, Israel had reiterated its previously stated position.<sup>(59)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee and in connection with the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/161 E by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 468(1980) of 8 May 1980, 469(1980) of 20 May 1980 and 484(1980) of 19 December 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/147 D of 16 December 1981, 37/88 D of 10 December 1982, 38/79 E of 15 December 1983 and 39/95 E of 14 December 1984,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 14 August 1985,

Deeply concerned at the expulsion by the Israeli military occupation authorities of the Mayor of Halhul, the Mayor of Hebron who has since died, the Sharia Judge of Hebron and, in 1985, other Palestinians,

Alarmed by the decision of the Israeli military occupation authorities on 26 October 1985 to expel four Palestinian leaders,

Recalling the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, in particular article 1 and the first paragraph of article 49, which read as follows:

"Article 1

"The High Contracting Parties undertake to respect and to ensure respect for the present Convention in all circumstances."

'Article 49

"Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the occupying Power or to that of any other country, occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive . . .",

Reaffirming the applicability of the Geneva Convention to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

1. Strongly condemns Israel, the occupying Power, for its persistent refusal to comply with the relevant resolutions of the Security Council and the General Assembly;

2. Demands that the Government of Israel, the occupying Power, rescind the illegal measures taken by the Israeli military occupation authorities in expelling the Mayor of Halhul, the Sharia Judge of Hebron and, in 1985, other Palestinians and that it facilitate the immediate return of the expelled Palestinians so that they can, inter alia, resume the functions for which they were elected and appointed;

3. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to rescind its illegal decision taken on 26 October 1985 and refrain from deporting the four Palestinian leaders;

4. Further calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to cease forthwith the expulsion of Palestinians and to abide scrupulously by the provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible and not later than the beginning of its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

16 December 1985 Meeting 118 126-1-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/40/890) by recorded vote (106-1-14), 8 November (meeting 27); draft by Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Cuba, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Kuwait for the Arab Group, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Qatar, Senegal (A/SPC/40/L.12/Rev.1); agenda item 75.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: SPC 16-23, 27; plenary 118.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel,

Abstaining: Belgium, Cameroon, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Ivory Coast, Liberia, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, Norway, Saint Lucia, Swaziland, United Kingdom, United States, Zaire.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Assembly and the Committee adopted paragraph 1, by recorded votes of 110 to 2, with 33 abstentions, and 98 to 2, with 22 abstentions, respectively.

In Israel's view, the text was unjustified and unacceptable. The authority for expulsion orders flowed from the Defence (Emergency) Regulations of 1945, which had been in force under the British and Jordanian administrations. The expulsions had taken place to protect public order and safety.

The United States faulted the text for not containing a reference to the factors that had contributed to the deportation of the individuals in question; however, it believed that the deportations were contrary to the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention and the deportees should be allowed to return.

Canada said it could not support the language used in paragraph 1.

Prosecution in assassination attempts

In August 1985,<sup>(60)</sup> the Secretary-General reported to the General Assembly on implementation of a 1984 Assembly demand<sup>(61)</sup> that Israel inform him of the results of the investigations and prosecution relative to the 1980 assassination attempts against the Mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and Al Bireh.<sup>(62)</sup>

In reply to the Secretary-General's request of 29 March 1985 for relevant information, Israel stated on 1 July that its position concerning the attempts on the lives of the three officials had been fully set out in various statements; recent developments had made any further consideration of the subject inappropriate. On 22 August, Israel had transmitted a summary of an Israeli press bulletin dated 22 July noting that, on 10 July, 15 men had been convicted of terrorism and that the sentences were handed down on 22 July; of those 15 men, 10 were charged with activities leading to the attacks against the mayors. Of the 10, one received life imprisonment and nine received terms from 3 to 10 years, the varying lengths due to charges of additional violations.

Living conditions of the Palestinians

In June 1985,<sup>(63)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on a seminar on remedies for the deterioration of the economic and social conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied territories (Vienna, 25-29 March), which he had organized pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly request.<sup>(64)</sup> The seminar examined, among other topics, agriculture, industry, trade, the monetary situation, fiscal policies, housing and basic facilities, higher education and welfare. Among the participants were 12 experts, and representatives of PLO, United Nations bodies and the World Health Organization (WHO).

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/174 of 25 July, took note of the Secretary-General's report.

ECWA action. On 24 April, the Economic Commission for Western Asia (ECWA) adopted a resolution<sup>(65)</sup> on the economic and social conditions of the Palestinian people under occupation, calling on the Executive Secretary to ensure that all available data on the occupied territories were included in all ECWA studies and statistical abstracts. It also called on him to include studies on economic and social conditions in the territories in the 1986-1987 work programme, and to prepare studies on the population situation, on Israel's settlements policy and on support for the industrial sector, particularly existing industries and the solution of problems from which they suffered, such as those of marketing, finance, manpower and raw materials. ECWA appealed to international and Arab organizations to assist in their preparation and execution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/201 by recorded vote.

Living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Vancouver Declaration on Human Settlements, 1976, and the relevant recommendations for national action adopted by Habitat: United Nations Conference on Human Settlements,

Recalling also its resolution 39/169 of 17 December 1984,

Taking note of Commission on Human Settlements resolution 8/3 of 10 May 1985,

Gravely alarmed by the continuation of the Israeli settlement policies, which have been declared null and void and a major obstacle to peace,

Recognizing the need to identify priority development projects needed for improving the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories,

1. Takes note with concern of the report of the Secretary-General on the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories;

2. Takes note also of the statement made on 25 October 1985 by the observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization;

3. Rejects the Israeli plans and actions intended to change the demographic composition- of the occupied Palestinian territories, particularly the increase and expansion of the Israeli settlements, and other plans and actions creating conditions leading to the displacement and exodus of Palestinians from the occupied Palestinian territories;

4. Expresses its alarm at the deterioration, as a result of the Israeli occupation, in the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the Palestinian territories occupied since 1967;

5. Affirms that the Israeli occupation is contradictory to the basic requirements for the social and economic development of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To organize, by April 1987, a seminar on priority development projects needed for improving the living conditions of the Palestinian people in the occupied Palestinian territories, including a comprehensive general housing programme, as recommended in resolution 8/3 of the Commission on Human Settlements;

(b) To make the necessary preparations for the seminar, providing for the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization;

(c) To invite experts to present papers to the seminar;

(d) To invite also relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations;

(e) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the preparations for the seminar;

(f) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the seminar.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 153-2-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.7) by recorded vote (133-2), 11 November (meeting 30); 5-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.13), orally amended by Vice-Chairman based on informal consultations end by Luxembourg, for EEC; agenda item 84(g).

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Grenada.

The United States believed that the text would perpetuate unproductive, if not counter-productive, activities which would in no way resolve the problems or improve the well-being of the Palestinians. It also felt the Secretary-General's report was slanted. Further, the United States expressed concern about the financial implications of the text which, it felt, would be better spent on helping the Palestinians directly.

Australia also had some misgivings concerning the financial implications; it hoped that the seminar would be held at a time when conference-servicing costs could be kept to a minimum.

Speaking for the EEC member States, Luxembourg said that the budget implications should have been more specific and, as far as possible, the funds should be drawn from existing resources; initiatives to hold seminars should be carefully coordinated in order to avoid multiplication and efforts must be made to have United Nations bodies meet at their headquarters.

The USSR, in explanation of vote also on behalf of Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland and the Ukrainian SSR, said they strongly condemned any Israeli action which hindered the attainment of Palestinian rights. Those who gave the Israelis protection were also obstructing peace. All parties to the conflict, including PLO, should be allowed to participate in efforts to find a solution to the Middle East problem.

Iraq stated that the United Nations had been responsible for the partitioning of Palestine; as a result, the Palestinians were living under alien occupation and were threatened with genocide.

Introducing the draft, Democratic Yemen said the living conditions of the Palestinians continued to deteriorate because Israel had been changing the demographic composition of the territories, thus increasing Palestinian emigration. The Palestinians not only lacked full control over land and water, but were subject to constraints on self-generating development.

If Israel was indeed helping the Palestinians and living conditions had improved, PLO remarked, it was not clear why Palestinians were demonstrating and being killed. Progress and development would not be possible until Palestine had been liberated.

PLO said the Secretary-General's report was based partly on Israeli statistics that did not show the real level of deterioration of the Palestinians' living conditions. The occupying authorities had been destroying the Palestinian national economy and making it dependent on Israel. Despite a high birth rate, the population in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip had declined. Expulsion, imprisonment, the suppression of human rights and the denial of permits for the reunification of families, against a background of economic decline, prompted the young and educated to leave.

Israel had appropriated more than 60 per cent of the land and monopolized 90 per cent of the water resources. Restrictions on Palestinian farming, the dumping of subsidized Israeli agricultural products on the Palestinian market, restrictions on imports and the blocking of several industrial development projects had caused further damage to both the agricultural and industrial sectors. Industrial employment opportunities were quite limited and many Palestinians had to seek employment in the Israeli economy or emigrate.

External trade was also subject to Israeli domination. The territories were a captive market, with 92 per cent of their imports originating in Israel. Israel refused to allow the establishment of Palestinian financial institutions. Inflation had diminished the real value of earnings, discouraged investment and increased unemployment. Taxes imposed by Israel amounted to approximately 33 per cent of the territories' income, and external aid was restricted or prevented, PLO said.

The Secretary-General's report, Israel said, had been prepared in implementation of a resolution referring to the deterioration of the economic and social conditions of the Palestinians, which was tantamount to condemning Israel in advance of any investigation. It was based on the wilful suppression and misuse of statistical data, presenting Israel's policy of socio-economic promotion as cruel oppression. The statistics that it purported to quote revealed that, unlike the rest of the Middle East, the areas under consideration had undergone unparalleled economic and social development.

Israel's comments refuting a number of statements in the report were reproduced in the annex to a 5 November 1985 letter to the Secretary-General.<sup>(66)</sup>

Israeli economic practices

Report of the Secretary-General. In June 1985,<sup>(67)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a comparative study on Israeli economic practices in the occupied territories and its obligations under international law, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(68)</sup> when it had asked him to elaborate on a 1983 report by a legal expert.<sup>(69)</sup> In particular, he had been asked to cover in detail the resources exploited by the Israeli settlements and the Israeli-imposed regulations and policies hampering the territories' economic development, including a comparison between Israel's practices and its obligations under international law. As it had not been possible to send a fact-finding mission to the territories, the report had to rely on information from other United Nations reports and available sources. The report covered in particular the land and water resources exploited by Israeli settlements.

With regard to land resources, up to January 1984 Israel had appropriated 40 per cent of the land in the West Bank and 31 per cent of that of the Gaza Strip; 26 per cent of the West Bank area had been used for Israeli settlements. International law would seem to require that Israel as the occupying Power should not hinder the right of the local population to use freely, control and dispose of their land resources. Israel was also prohibited from taking any lands in the territories for establishing Israeli settlements.

Similar rules applied to water resources, the report stated. Water supply and water resources management in the territories had been under the direct control of the Israeli Water Commission through its Department of Water Allocation and Certification. Israel's policy included measures based on claims of national security requirements, restrictive measures aimed at controlling the search for, and the development and use of, water by the Arab population, and practices resulting in quantitative reduction of and qualitative damage to the water made available to that population. Drilling new artesian wells or deepening existing ones was forbidden without special permits; on no account were Arab inhabitants permitted to drill wells near Israel's borders. In many areas of the West Bank, Arab wells had run dry because Israeli wells had been dug too close to them; similar problems had occurred in the Golan Heights and the Gaza Strip.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1985, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/177 by roll-call vote.

Israeli economic practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1985, the Council:

(a) Took note, with concern, of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of General Assembly decision 39/442 of 18 December 1984;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories;

(c) Invited the Secretary-General to, utilize the services of competent United Nations bodies in preparing the report requested in paragraph (b) above;

(d) Requested the Secretary-General to submit the report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/177

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, China, Colombia, Congo, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Guinea, Haiti, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Japan, Lebanon, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

The United States would have liked to have had a balanced and impartial report, submitted to the competent authority, on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities. Unfortunately, the mandate given to the Secretary-General in the decision would not allow him to prepare such a report.

Jordan considered that the practices of the occupying Power called for the study requested; there were abundant instances in which that Power sought to choke off all economic activity in the territories.

The reason for the decision, said Saudi Arabia in introducing it, was the lack of information in the Secretary-General's report on Israel's financial and trade practices in the territories.

Israel wondered whether it was useful to ask for another report which could be as repetitive as the preceding ones. With regard to its obligations under international law, it stated that the only principle recognized and binding in the circumstances was set out in article 55 of the Hague Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention of 1907 respecting the laws and customs of war on land, under which the occupying State would be regarded as usufructuary of the properties situated in the occupied country.

PLO said that article 55 of the Hague Regulations expressly stated that the occupying State should be regarded only as administrator of the occupied territories, and article 53 of the fourth Geneva Convention prohibited the occupying Power from destroying real or personal property belonging to private persons in the territories. Under no circumstances did international law authorize the occupying Power to arrogate to itself the right to dispose as it pleased of those territories.

UNCTAD report. In July 1985, the Special Economic Unit of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), set up in 1983,<sup>(70)</sup> submitted to the Trade and Development Board a report<sup>(71)</sup> reviewing the economic conditions of the Palestinians in the occupied territories and the effects of policies by the occupying authorities which appeared to hinder their economic development. The report gave an overview of population movements in the territories, water resources, agriculture, industrial development, the labour market and tourism since 1967.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 40/432 by recorded vote.

Israeli economic practices in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories

At its 119th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Took note, with concern, of the report of the Secretary-General prepared in pursuance of Assembly decision 39/442;

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the financial and trade practices of the Israeli occupation authorities in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories;

(c) Invited the Secretary-General to utilize the services of competent United Nations bodies in preparing the report;

Israel said it was evident that the motives behind the text were political and that the main purpose was to advance the cause of the so-called PLO rather than improve the well-being of the Palestinians.

Iraq stated that it was fitting that the United Nations, which had created the Palestinian problem by deciding to partition the land without the right to do so, should be responsible for taking care of the Palestinians.

Introducing the text, Pakistan explained that a fact-finding mission had not been able to make an in-depth analysis because of Israel's attitude. Israel had systematically tried to dismantle any indigenous economic institutions; it had closed Palestinian banking institutions, forcing Palestinians and other Arab residents to conduct business exclusively through Israeli banks and in Hebrew. A report such as the one requested, combined with the information already available, would provide a true picture of Israeli policies.

Economic development projects

Report of the Secretary-General. In June 1985<sup>(72)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on progress made in implementing the General Assembly's 1984 resolution<sup>(73)</sup> calling for the urgent lifting of Israeli restrictions on the economy of the occupied territories and for the carrying out of projects to facilitate economic development there. In reply to his note verbale of 2 May 1985 requesting information from Israel, Israel had stated by a letter of 24 May (annexed to the Secretary-General's report) that it considered the resolution biased and politically motivated, falsely accusing Israel of imposing arbitrary restrictions and deliberately disregarding the improved economic and social welfare of the inhabitants of the territories, as well as Israel's actions to foster economic growth there. The ports of Ashdod and Haifa were fully open to the inhabitants of the territories and products from there thus had free access to external markets. All development projects, Israel added, were considered solely on the basis of their economic merit.

The Secretary-General also drew attention to information on projects carried out by UNIDO, contained in his report<sup>(74)</sup> on assistance to the Palestinians (see p. 281). UNIDO was carrying out for the Palestinians a project to identify problems of the plastics industry and make recommendations with particular emphasis on capacity utilization, and a feasibility study on a canning plant for citrus fruits.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1985, by decision 1985/187, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report.

On 25 July, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, the Council adopted resolution 1985/58 by roll-call vote.

Economic development projects in the occupied Palestinian territories

The Economic and Social Council,

Aware of the Israeli restrictions imposed on the foreign trade of the occupied Palestinian territories,

Aware also of the imposed domination of the Palestinian market by Israel,

Taking into account the need to give Palestinian firms and products direct access to external markets without Israeli interference,

Noting the lack of progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/223 of 18 December 1984, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on economic development projects in the occupied Palestinian territories,

1. Calls for the urgent lifting of the Israeli restrictions imposed on the economy of the occupied Palestinian territories;

2. Recognizes the Palestinian interest in establishing a seaport in the occupied Gaza Strip to give Palestinian firms and products direct access to external markets;

3. Calls upon all concerned to facilitate the establishment of a seaport in the occupied Gaza Strip;

4. Also calls upon all concerned to facilitate the establishment of a cement plant in the occupied West Bank and a citrus plant in the occupied Gaza Strip;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to facilitate the establishment of the above-mentioned projects and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/58

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 41-1-4 (roll-call vote)

Approved by Third Committee (E/1985/138) by roll-call vote (40-1-4), July (meeting 10): 10-nation draft (E/1985/C.3/L.3), orally revised: agenda item 21.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Djibouti, India, Morocco, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Yugoslavia.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Congo, Ecuador, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Japan, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Suriname, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, United Kingdom, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States

Abstaining: Canada, Finland, Iceland, Sweden.

In the view of the United States, the text could not provide a solution to the Palestinian problem but was part of it. The Council had been established to discuss questions of international co-operation and promote economic and social development, not to lose time in making political statements.

Canada considered that the Council was not an appropriate place to discuss such projects; it would have been sufficient to indicate to the competent organizations that emphasis should be placed on the economic and social development of the Palestinians.

Luxembourg, speaking also for France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom, said their positive votes implied no commitment on their part; economic development projects should be economically and technically viable so that they could contribute to the region's economic prosperity, in the interest of all.

Israel said the text was based on false premises, particularly in regard to the call for a seaport in the Gaza Strip. Trade in the occupied territories was being restricted not by Israel but by its Arab neighbours. The Director-General of the International Labour Organisation (ILO), reporting on his mission to the territories, had stated that the situation in the Gaza Strip, where 40 per cent of agricultural production consisted of citrus fruits, faced permanent difficulties because of the closures of the Egyptian markets and intermittent closures of Jordanian markets. The establishment of a citrus plant had in fact been approved, and a cement plant in the West Bank depended on fuel-supply security, which would be no problem if the Arab States lifted the oil boycott imposed on the territory.

PLO remarked that the Israeli authorities had stated that the citrus plant could be established on condition that it was obtained from Israel, that the produce was not marketed in Israel and that Israel's produce should have access to Arab markets. Consultants from the Federal Republic of Germany had undertaken a feasibility study on the cement plant and had concluded that it was viable. With regard to port outlets, Israel controlled 90 per cent of the occupied territories' foreign trade; world public opinion had reiterated that Palestinian trade should be completely free from Israeli restrictions. Since 1979, UNDP—which could provide only what Israel allowed—had spent less than $4 million there, PLO added.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/169 by recorded vote.

Economic development projects in the occupied Palestinian territories

The General Assembly,

Aware of the Israeli restrictions imposed on the foreign trade of the occupied Palestinian territories,

Aware also of the imposed domination of the Palestinian market by Israel,

Taking into account the need to give Palestinian firms and products direct access to external markets without Israeli interference,

Noting with regret the lack of progress in the implementation of General Assembly resolution 39/223 of 18 December 1984, as reflected in the report of the Secretary-General on economic development projects in the occupied Palestinian territories, Israel said the ports of Ashdod and Haifa were entirely at the disposal of the inhabitants of Judea, Samaria and the Gaza district. Products originating there had free access to external markets, and development projects were considered solely on their merits.

Though agreeing on the desirability of ensuring the territories' economic development, Sweden, speaking also on behalf of Finland, Iceland and Norway, said the text implied that the Assembly would have to pronounce itself in favour of specific proposals which had not been discussed or scrutinized by any relevant United Nations body and had no assurance of their technical and financial viability. The same reasons were cited by Australia and Canada for their abstentions.

Speaking for the EC members, Luxembourg reiterated their positions on the need for projects to be economically and technically sound, and observed that their positive votes implied no specific commitment.

Introducing the draft, Bangladesh said it had the full support of the Group of 77 and sought to ensure that the necessary facilities and opportunities were made available for development projects; in view of the overwhelming support the resolution had received in the Economic and Social Council, it hoped that the Committee would adopt it by consensus.

Israeli measures against educational institutions

Communications. By a letter of 5 March 1985, transmitted by Democratic Yemen as Chairman of the Arab Group,<sup>(75)</sup> PLO brought to the Secretary-General's attention charges that on 1 March several students were badly injured when units from the occupation army and border guards stormed both campuses of Bir Zeit University in the West Bank to stop the opening of a Palestinian cultural exhibit. Israel then declared the University a military zone, suspended classes, stormed student houses and arrested scores of students and faculty members. On 3 March, Israeli reinforcements were sent to the University to crush a student protest demanding their immediate release; it remained closed and under siege. Also in the West Bank, Al-Najah University was surrounded by Israeli army units on 2 March. PLO called on the United Nations to end such Fascist and inhuman acts.

Grave concern at the raids on Bir Zeit University was also expressed by the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights in a letter of 19 March.<sup>(4)</sup> According to press reports, he said, 53 students and their guests had been detained and further detentions were expected.

UNESCO action. The Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), at its May/June 1985 session,<sup>(76)</sup> noting with grave apprehension that Israel continued to obstruct the functioning of educational, cultural and training institutions, deplored any obstruction and harassment of such institutions in the occupied territories, which, it said, could imperil their existence. It called on the occupying authority to comply with the 1949 fourth Geneva Convention and the 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict by rescinding all measures and military orders against educational and cultural institutions, and to safeguard their academic freedoms. The Board invited the UNESCO Director-General to appoint a mission of academics to study the conditions in which academic freedoms were guaranteed and exercised in the territories.

Report of the Secretary-General. In August 1985,<sup>(77)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the territories. He stated that, by a note verbale of 29 March, he had requested Israel to inform him of any steps taken or envisaged to implement the Assembly's 1984 resolution<sup>(78)</sup> demanding that Israel rescind all actions and measures against educational institutions.

By a note verbale of 1 July 1985, annexed to the report, Israel had categorically rejected the accusations made against it in the 1984 resolution. The school system in the occupied territories had grown considerably during the years of Israeli administration, it stated; in Judaea and Samaria, the number of pupils and classes in 1984/85 had doubled since 1967/68, and in the Gaza district it had increased by over 209 per cent. With regard to higher education, there had been no university in Judaea and Samaria in June 1967; the Israeli administration had enabled the establishment of five universities. Teachers' seminars, agricultural, technical and paramedical institutions, mostly operating since 1967, also provided higher education and their students had increased to 4,680 in 1984/85 from 2,599 in 1980/81.

Academic activity on the campuses was conducted without its interference, Israel went on. The curricula were, in Judaea and Samaria, those of the Jordanian educational system and, in the Gaza district, those of the Egyptian educational system. Academic freedom, however, did not subsume disruption of public order by incitement, threats or violence, Israel added.

The March 1985 seminar<sup>(63)</sup> on the living conditions of the Palestinians (see p. 344) also examined the question of higher education in the territories. In its view, the establishment of a Palestinian system of higher education, which included six universities serving more than 10,000 students, was a singular achievement in a society under occupation, all the more remarkable in that it was an indigenous effort that had received no encouragement from the occupying authorities. However, owing to military occupation and the practices of the occupying Power, the further development of the Palestinian system of higher education was severely hindered and suffered from three serious problems: constraints on the autonomy and freedom of academic institutions; absence of an effective local Palestinian authority to plan, co-ordinate and support higher education; and scarcity of resources.

The seminar's working group on the topic proposed that all measures of collective punishment imposed on academic institutions should cease, as should those curtailing their autonomy and restricting their academic functions and freedoms. Restrictions imposed on the work of the Council for Higher Education should be removed and it should be recognized as the local Palestinian authority. Israeli restrictions on the entry of funds to Palestinian higher education should be lifted; universities and higher-education bodies abroad should be encouraged to establish links with Palestinian institutions. International assistance was of the utmost importance for further progress in higher education in the territories. Various United Nations organizations and bodies as well as other international and non-governmental organizations could provide such assistance and co-operation.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/161 G, on the report of the Committee on Israeli practices, by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Bearing in mind the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949,

Deeply concerned at the continued harassment by Israel, the occupying Power, against educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories,

Recalling its resolutions 38/79 G of 15 December 1983 and 39/95 G of 14 December 1984,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General of 14 August 1985,

Taking note of the relevant decisions adopted by the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization concerning the educational and cultural situation in the occupied territories,

1. Reaffirm the applicability of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, to the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem;

2. Condemns Israeli policies and practices against Palestinian students and faculties in schools, universities and other educational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, especially the policy of opening fire on defenceless students, causing many casualties;

3. Condemns the systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities and other educational and vocational institutions in the occupied Palestinian territories, restricting and impeding the academic activities of Palestinian universities by subjecting the selection of courses, textbooks and educational programmes, the admission of students and the appointment of faculty members to the control and supervision of the military occupation authorities, in clear contravention of the Geneva Convention;

4. Demands that Israel, the occupying Power, comply with the provisions of that Convention, rescind all actions and measures against all educational institutions, ensure the freedom of those institutions and refrain forthwith from hindering the effective operation of the universities and other educational institutions;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly as soon as possible and not later than the beginning of its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Before voting on the text as a whole, the Assembly and the Committee adopted paragraph 2 by recorded vote, by 96 to 2, with 45 abstentions, and 84 to 2, with 34 abstentions, respectively.

Israel said although it did not subscribe to many of the observations in the Secretary-General's report on the Vienna seminar, the picture presented there was totally different from that portrayed by the resolution, which spoke of a systematic Israeli campaign of repression against and closing of universities; the truth was that the six Palestinian universities functioned normally and satisfactorily as long as foreign elements did not stir up the student body to disturbance and violence.

The United States said it strongly defended academic freedom and had made its views known when Israeli practices towards academic institutions were open to criticism, but it could not support broad condemnatory and inflammatory language seeking to condemn indiscriminately without regard to the facts or actual policies.

Though supporting the text as a whole with some hesitation, Sweden abstained on paragraph 2 because of what it felt were very categorical and sweeping formulations not totally borne out by the facts.

Mediterranean-Dead Sea canal project

Israel's 1981 plan<sup>(79)</sup> to build a 67-mile canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea for electric power generation was the subject of a 1985 General Assembly resolution (40/167) and a decision of the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP). The Secretary-General reported that, in June, Israel had given instruction to cease all work on the project.

UNEP Council action. On 23 May,<sup>(80)</sup> the UNEP Governing Council deplored Israel's non-compliance with Assembly resolutions on the subject and requested the UNEP Executive Director to facilitate the Secretary-General's work in monitoring and assessing all aspects, especially ecological ones, of the adverse effects on Jordan and on the occupied territories arising from the implementation of the Israeli decision, and to report on the matter in 1987.

Secretary-General submitted in November 1985 a report<sup>(82)</sup> on the adverse-including juridical, political, economic, ecological and demographic-effects of Israel's decision to construct a canal linking the Mediterranean and Dead Seas. By letters of 10 May, the Under-Secretary-General for Technical Co-operation for Development had requested Israel and Jordan to make available relevant information, give a small team of experts access to sites and arrange contacts with officials concerned.

Jordan replied on 21 May that it would be glad to receive the experts, facilitate their work and forward any information available. Israel, on 29 May, stated that it believed that the canal project would benefit the population of the entire area and had repeatedly sought to discuss and co-ordinate the matter with Jordan. Jordan had not responded to those offers. As the report to be prepared was on the "adverse" effects of the canal project, the report's outcome would thus be predetermined and Israel believed that no useful purpose would be served by an additional visit of experts. On 1 July, Israel informed the Secretary-General that on 11 June its Minister of Energy and Industry had instructed the Mediterranean-Dead Sea Corporation to cease all work related to the canal.

A United Nations mission visited Jordan from 19 to 25 September 1985; its report annexed to the Secretary-General's report, assessed effects of a canal on agricultural development, mineral production, tourism and recreation, and the environment, along the lines of the 1984 report.<sup>(83)</sup>

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/167 by recorded vote:

Israel's decision to build a canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/150 of 16 December 1981, 37/122 of 16 December 1982, 38/85 of 15 December 1983 and 39/101 of 14 December 1984,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to monitor on a continuing basis any new development relating to the proposed canal linking the Mediterranean Sea to the Dead Sea and to report all findings in this regard to the General Assembly;

2. Decides to resume consideration of this item in case activities by Israel relating to the said canal are resumed.

Against: Israel.

Israel saw no valid reason for the United Nations to take a stand on a plan which was still at the stage of feasibility studies. Israel had stopped all work related to the canal in June; it had not been resumed. In addition to maligning Israel and distorting the nature of a bona fide development blueprint, the text dealt with an irrelevant inquiry after all work had been terminated and asked the Secretary-General to monitor hypothetical future activities, putting a purposeless strain on personnel and finances. Israel also considered that its territory and operations should not be subject to any United Nations surveillance and objected to such monitoring as a matter of principle.

The United States regarded the text as a positive step towards solving a difficult problem, but did not alter its opposition to previous resolutions on the subject.

Introducing the text, Jordan emphasized that work on the canal could be resumed when the reasons which had led Israel to suspend that work no longer existed.

Palestine refugees

UN Agency for Palestine refugees

In 1985, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East continued to assist 2,093,545 refugees in Jordan, Lebanon (see p. 311), the Syrian Arab Republic and the Israeli-occupied territories of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, providing quasi-governmental education, health and relief services to refugees living in and outside camps. Less than a third of the refugees were registered as living in camps. The Agency maintained its own schools, training institutions, clinics and health centres, and procured and distributed food rations to needy refugees. It employed more than 16,500 schoolteachers, doctors, nurses, sanitation labourers, relief workers and others. Its operations were administered from its headquarters at Vienna and Amman and from five field offices in Jordan, Lebanon, the Syrian Arab Republic, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, with liaison offices in New York and Cairo.

UNRWA activities and various aspects of the Palestine refugee problem were addressed by the General Assembly, which in December adopted 11 resolutions on: assistance to Palestine refugees (40/165 A); the Working Group on the Financing of UNRWA (40/165 B); assistance to displaced persons (40/165 C); scholarships for higher education and vocational training (40/165 D); Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip (40/165 E); ration distribution to Palestine refugees (40/165 F); refugees displaced since 1967 (40/165 G); revenues derived from refugee properties (40/165 H); refugee protection (40/165 I); Palestine refugees in the West Bank (40/165 J); and a proposed University of Jerusalem for Palestine refugees (40/165 K).

The Agency's activities and its staff were particularly affected by the events in Lebanon (see p. 295). Following the kidnapping of two British subjects in mid-March, the United Kingdom Embassy at Beirut advised all British citizens to leave; three of the live British staff members of the Lebanon field office were transferred to duties outside Beirut. On 25 March, Alec Collett, a British journalist working under contract with UNRWA, was kidnapped by unidentified gunmen south of Beirut. The Commissioner-General ordered the remaining British nationals working for UNRWA, including the field office Director, to leave Lebanon. On 15 May, the UNRWA Deputy Director in Lebanon, an Irish citizen, was abducted by armed men, to be released 37 hours later. During two incidents in April/May, armed militiamen intruded into UNRWA's central warehouse in Beirut and searched the premises. On 7 June, the Director of UNRWA Affairs, Lebanon, who was leading a relief convoy to Burj el-Barajneh camp, was forced with others to leave his vehicle but was released on the intervention of the Lebanese Minister for Justice. In the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, Israeli authorities continued to summon Agency staff for interrogation during office hours without adequate notice, causing disruption especially of UNRWA school programmes.

In the Gaza Strip, there was a marked deterioration of the security situation resulting in an increasing number of incidents. Numerous incidents also characterized the situation of refugees in the West Bank, including confrontations with Israeli settlers (see p. 338). No solution was reached to the problem of the Palestinian refugees, numbering approximately 5,000, on the Egyptian side of the border between the Gaza Strip and the Sinai, to whom UNRWA continued to provide limited assistance.

The process of issuing individual registration cards for all Palestine refugees-intended to facilitate provision of services and to reassure the refugees that certain rights acknowledged by the General Assembly would not be affected because UNRWA had suspended the basic ration-as requested by the Assembly in 1982,<sup>(1)</sup> was stopped in March 1985 in the Gaza Strip at the request of the Israeli authorities, although most of the refugees there had received them. The Syrian and Jordanian Governments also prevailed upon UNRWA to stop issuing them in the Syrian Arab Republic, Jordan and the West Bank; no attempt was made to issue cards in Lebanon because of the security situation there. Instead of individual cards, family registration cards were again being issued in all fields.

UNRWA activities and its financial situation in 1985 were described by the Commissioner-General in reports covering the periods 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985<sup>(2)</sup> and 1 July 1985 to 30 June 1986.<sup>(3)</sup> Introducing in the General Assembly's Special Political Committee the 1984/85 report, the Commissioner-General stated that it described one of the most difficult years in the Agency's 35-year history.

On 1 November 1985, Giorgio Giacomelli (Italy) succeeded Olof Rydbeck (Sweden) as Commissioner-General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 A, by recorded vote.

Assistance to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/99 A of 14 December 1984 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985,

1. Notes with deep regret that repatriation or compensation of the refugees as provided for in paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III) has not been effected, that no substantial progress has been made in the programme endorsed by the Assembly in paragraph 2 of its resolution 513(VI) of 26 January 1952 for the reintegration of refugees either by repatriation or resettlement and that, therefore, the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of serious concern;

2. Expresses its thanks to the Commissioner-General and to all the staff of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, recognizing that the Agency is doing all it can within the limits of available resources, and also expresses its thanks to the specialised agencies and private organizations for their valuable work in assisting the refugees;

3. Expresses its deep appreciation to the former Commissioner-General, Mr. Olof Rydbeck, for his many years of effective service to the Agency and his dedication to the welfare of the refugees;

4. Reiterates its request that the headquarters of the Agency should be relocated to its former site within its area of operations as soon as practicable;

5. Notes with regret that the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine has been unable to find a means of achieving progress in the implementation of paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 194(III), and requests the Commission to exert continued efforts towards the implementation of that paragraph and to report to the Assembly as appropriate, but no later than 1 September 1986;

6. Directs attention to the continuing seriousness of the financial position of the Agency, as outlined in the report of the Commissioner-General;

7. Notes with profound concern that, despite the commendable and successful efforts of the Commissioner-General to collect additional contributions, this increased level of income to the Agency is still insufficient to cover essential budget requirements in the present year and that, at currently foreseen levels of giving, deficits will recur each year;

8. Calls upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible to meet the anticipated needs of the Agency, particularly in the light of the budgetary deficit projected in the report of the Commissioner-General, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions.

Against: None

Abstaining: Israel.

Israel said the ritual expression of deep regret for non-implementation of the Assembly's stipulation in paragraph 11 of the 1948 resolution on the partition of Palestine<sup>(4)</sup>—that the refugees should be permitted to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property—which had been adopted in entirely different historical circumstances, was unacceptable.

The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya emphasized that, though voting in favour of the texts under the agenda item, that did not imply its recognition of Israel or its practices in the occupied territories.

Iran had reservations concerning all references to the Zionist régime as "Israel". It also stressed that the relief programmes should not be considered a permanent solution to the Palestinian question.

UNRWA financing

Total income received by UNRWA for all funds, in cash and in kind, in 1985 was $182 million, including about $16 million received in response to an appeal by the Commissioner-General. Expenditure in 1985 by all funds was $187.4 million, $3.9 million less than in 1984. The excess of expenditure over income was reduced from $10.1 million in 1984 to $5.4 million in 1985, $1.2 million of which was in respect of the General Fund.

In a special report, annexed to a May 1985 note by the Secretary-General,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commissioner-General drew attention to the critical state of the Agency's finances and outlined the efforts he had made to overcome the difficulties as well as the measures that would have to be taken-including major cuts in services to refugees-unless additional funding could be obtained at an early date; those measures, he pointed out, could adversely affect stability in the Middle East and be harmful to the search for a just and lasting peace.

In his report for the period ended 30 June 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commissioner-General again stressed UNRWA's grave financial situation, in spite of strenuous efforts to reduce expenditure while avoiding major cuts in services, and to raise additional funds. He warned that the Agency still faced a shortfall of several million dollars which, if not covered by additional contributions or programme reductions, would lead to a further drawdown of UNRWA's already low capital. The minimum budget for 1986 would require some $20 million more than Governments had pledged as their regular contributions; there was no way to reduce projected expenses without depriving refugees of basic education and health services. In the light of those potentially serious consequences, the Commissioner-General urged Governments to discuss a rational approach to the Agency's financial problems.

In 1985, by cancelling all construction, slashing maintenance deeply, denying area staff pay raises and making other reductions, the budget gap was reduced from $67 million to $27 million. At that point, the Commissioner-General again addressed Governments stating that he had reduced the budget as far as possible without mass reductions in staff or directly cutting vital services. Although several countries-Australia, Canada, Japan, the United States and the Nordic countries-responded generously, he said, the overall response from Member States was disappointing and further cuts had to be made, which had a direct impact on services to refugees. On the positive side, UNRWA benefited from some reduced costs because of exchange rate gains. With those savings and with continuing austerity measures, the Agency was still $8 million short of the estimated needed income to cover 1985's already reduced programme.

The Commissioner-General's decision to implement austerity measures was a matter of great concern to the refugees and to host Governments. Although continuing to press their view that UNRWA should do more for the refugees and should restore the basic ration programme suspended in 1982 due to financial constraints, those Governments were helpful in assisting UNRWA to overcome its difficulties. For example, when the Agency experienced a critical shortage of flour in late 1985, Jordan loaned it sufficient stocks to maintain distribution to special hardship cases in the country until new supplies could be obtained.

Working Group on UNRWA financing

Report of the Working Group (March). At the end of February 1985, the Commissioner-General urgently requested the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to hold a meeting as soon as possible so that it could be informed about UNRWA's alarming financial situation. The Group met on 1 March and discussed an oral report of the UNRWA Comptroller on the acute budgetary crisis. On 26 March, it adopted a special report<sup>(6)</sup> and authorized its Chairman to take whatever steps he might find possible to assist the Commissioner-General and the Secretary-General in their fund-raising efforts.

The Comptroller reported that contributions had declined from $190.6 million in 1980 to an estimated $177.9 million in 1984, while pledged and expected contributions for 1985 amounted to only $164.4 million, of which $138.3 million was in cash for the General Fund. As expenditure to maintain the programmes in 1985 amounted to $231.6 million, including a $205.1 million cash expenditure, there was a shortfall of some $67 million.

Austerity measures introduced by the Commissioner-General-reductions in personnel costs ($13.9 million), postponement of construction, maintenance and replacement of equipment ($19.4 million), reductions in provisions for administrative services, supplies and reserves ($6.4 million)-totalled some $40 million, leaving an unfunded balance of some $27 million.

The $27 million represented the minimum needed to maintain education, health and relief programmes until the end of 1985. By a letter of 19 February, the Commissioner-General appealed to Governments and selected intergovernmental organizations for additional pledges by the end of May.

Concluding, the Working Group expressed deep concern at UNRWA's financial outlook. It expressed its appreciation to the Commissioner-General for his efforts to reduce expenditure, but noted that a major portion of his austerity measures related to the deferral of payments due to area staff for salary increases and cost-of-living adjustments which would have to be met in the future; also, deferred construction and maintenance would probably be more costly in the long run. Nevertheless, the Group agreed that in the circumstances he had had no other alternative.

The Group reiterated its conviction that the international community should not allow UNRWA to collapse for want of funds. Noting that many Governments which supported UNRWA in their votes in the General Assembly did not contribute to it, the Group urged them to do so and invited those that were contributing to make additional special contributions.

As an initial step, the Group authorized its Chairman to address a letter to the Secretary-General underlining the critical financial situation, endorsing the Commissioner-General's appeal and emphasizing the need for Governments to respond generously. The Chairman did so on 27 March,<sup>(7)</sup> warning that services would have to be reduced, inevitably affecting the education programme, and that the continued employment of many of the 17,000 locally recruited Palestinian staff would be jeopardized.

Report of the Working Group (October). At a meeting on 1 October, the Working Group examined a report with up-to-date information on UNRWA's financial situation in 1985 and on the outlook for 1986.<sup>(8)</sup> Since March 1985, estimated income had increased by some $13 million as a result of additional contributions pledged by Australia ($260,000), Canada ($2.2 million), Denmark ($451,000), Finland ($170,000), Norway ($562,000), Sweden ($1.2 million) and the United States ($8 million), reducing the shortfall from $27 million to $14 million. Additional austerity measures could further reduce the estimated shortfall to about $5 million by the end of the year.

Based on those projections and the possibility that further additional contributions would be pledged, the Commissioner-General expected to be able to maintain Agency services at the current levels until the end of 1985; he warned, however, that the shortfall would have to be met by drawing on UNRWA's precariously low working capital, thus seriously affecting the Agency's ability to finance its operations until contributions were paid in 1986.

The outlook for 1986 was not encouraging; even if the level of expenditures did not exceed that of the severely reduced 1985 budget, some $20 million more than the 1985 regular contributions would be required.

In the concluding remarks of its October report,<sup>(9)</sup> the Working Group paid tribute to the Commissioner-General for his efforts to raise income and again underlined that his austerity measures involved deferrals providing only temporary relief; postponed items would have to be funded in the future. It also noted that, despite strenuous efforts, income in 1985 was not expected to exceed that of 1984.

The Group shared the Commissioner-General's concern about the magnitude of the task of soliciting an additional $20 million to fund the programme in 1986. It continued to believe that a solution to UNRWA's chronic financial problems lay not so much in economy, postponement and reduction as in finding ways to assure required resources.

As UNRWA services for refugees remained indispensable until a Middle East settlement was reached, it was incumbent on the international community to ensure that the Agency was provided with the means to continue its work. The Group welcomed the Commissioner-General's suggestion for a meeting to discuss ways of placing UNRWA's finances on a more rational footing; it encouraged him to pursue that matter with a view to holding the meeting as soon as possible in 1986. The Group also welcomed a suggestion by the Advisory Commission (see below) for special fund-raising missions to current and prospective donor countries to solicit greater 1986 contributions.

The Group urged all Governments to recognize the seriousness of UNRWA's financial difficulties and match their political support with financial support, and urged payment of contributions as early as possible.

UNRWA Advisory Commission

The UNRWA Advisory Commission met on 30 May 1985 at Vienna to consider the critical financial situation and its implications for the Agency's ability to maintain services if the shortfall was not overcome. In a statement to the Commissioner-General, transmitted to the Secretary-General on the same date,<sup>(10)</sup> the Commission members unanimously commended and declared support for the Commissioner-General's efforts to obtain additional contributions. They shared his disappointment that responses had been inadequate and noted with deep concern his statement that UNRWA faced the imminent prospect of having to reduce services already at a minimum level. They urged UNRWA to take steps to avoid such action. They endorsed the view that the Member States which expressed support for UNRWA should help provide it with needed funds. More programme cut-backs, the Advisory Commission believed, would have profoundly disturbing consequences for stability in the area and for prospects of reaching a peaceful settlement of the Middle East conflict.

The Commission called on all Member States to contribute to ensure UNRWA's survival and ability to carry out its mandate.

At a regular meeting on 29 August, the Commission endorsed the suggestion for a gathering of concerned Governments early in 1986 for informal consultations on the Agency's financial plight.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 B, without vote.

Working Group on the Financing of the United Nation; Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 2656(XXV) of 7 December 1970, 2728(XXV) of 15 December 1970, 2791(XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2964(XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3090(XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3330(XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 D (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 C of 23 November 1976, 32/90 D of 13 December 1977, 33/112 D of 18 December 1978, 34/52 D of 23 November 1979, 35/13 D of 3 November 1980, 36/146 E of 16 December 1981, 37/120 A of 16 December 1982, 38/83 B of 15 December 1983 and 39/99 B of 14 December 1984,

Recalling also its decision 36/462 of 16 March 1982, whereby it took note of the special report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and adopted the recommendations contained therein,

Having considered the report of the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East,

Taking into account the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985,

Gravely concerned at the critical financial situation of the Agency, which has already reduced the essential minimum services being provided to the Palestine refugees and which threatens even greater reductions in the future,

Emphasizing the urgent need for extraordinary efforts in order to maintain, at least at their present minimum level, the activities of the Agency,

1. Commends the Working Group on the Financing of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East for its efforts to assist in ensuring the Agency's financial security;

2. Takes note with approval of the report of the Working Group;

3. Requests the Working Group to continue its efforts, in co-operation with the Secretary-General and the Commissioner-General, for the financing of the Agency for a further period of one year;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary services and assistance to the Working Group for the conduct of its work.

Claims for compensation

According to the Commissioner-General, UNRWA had received no response to a 1984 claim against Israel for $4,381,867 as compensation for loss and damage caused to Agency property and facilities as a result of the invasion of Lebanon in 1982. The General Assembly had called for such compensation in 1983<sup>(11)</sup> and 1984.<sup>(12)</sup> A separate claim had also been made for $194,901 for loss and damage caused by Israeli military action in Lebanon before June 1982. There had also been no response from Israel or any indication as to when it expected to complete its examination of UNRWA's claims, lodged in 1969, arising out of the 1967 hostilities.

No progress had been made over claims amounting to $675,000 against Jordan, despite an understanding reached in October 1984 that it would nominate representatives to a joint UNRWA/Government committee to study the claims, which included those arising out of the 1967 hostilities and the disturbances of 1970 and 1971.

Other aspects

Displaced persons

Humanitarian assistance

In addition to relief services, which included the provision of basic food commodities, blankets, clothing, shelter repair and cash grants, UNRWA continued to provide in 1985 a small measure of humanitarian assistance for persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities in the Middle East but who were not registered with UNRWA as refugees.

In Jordan, UNRWA continued to distribute rations on the Government's behalf to some 193,000 persons, and to provide schooling, supplementary feeding, milk, medical, sanitation and other camp services to people living in the post-1967 refugee camps; the Government reimbursed the Agency for the cost of supplies used in the supplementary feeding and milk programmes and the cost of distributing basic rations to displaced persons.

In Egypt, UNRWA provided elementary and preparatory schooling and basic health care to 1,200 refugee children. With the co-operation of the Israeli and Egyptian Governments, UNRWA distributed food, blankets and clothing to 4,350 refugees left stranded in the Egyptian sector of Rafah as a result of the withdrawal of Israeli forces in April 1982 to the international border between the Sinai and the Gaza Strip.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 C, without vote.

Assistance to persons displaced as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/99 C of 14 December 1984 and all its previous resolutions on the question,

Taking note of the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985.

Concerned about the continued human suffering resulting from the hostilities in the Middle East,

1. Reaffirms its resolution 39/99 C and all its previous resolutions on the question;

2. Endorses, bearing in mind the objectives of those resolutions, the efforts of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to continue to provide humanitarian assistance as far as practicable, on an emergency basis and as a temporary measure, to other persons in the area who are at present displaced and in a serious need of continued assistance as a result of the June 1967 and subsequent hostilities;

3. Strongly appeals to all Governments and to organizations and individuals to contribute generously for the above purposes to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and to the other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned.

Repatriation of refugees

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1985 a report<sup>(14)</sup> on population and refugees displaced since 1967. In response to his request in a note verbale of 22 March 1985 for information on Israeli steps to facilitate the return of displaced inhabitants, Israel on 12 August had referred to its position as set out in successive annual replies in recent years, most recently in June 1984.<sup>(15)</sup> The total number of persons who had returned since 1967 stood at approximately 65,000, Israel added.

The Secretary-General also had obtained information from the UNRWA Commissioner-General on the return of refugees registered with the Agency; since UNRWA was not involved in arrangements for return, the data was based on requests by returning refugees for transfer of their entitlements for services to the areas to which they had returned. Between 1 July 1984 and 30 June 1985, 234 registered refugees (including family members') had returned to the West Bank and 70 to the Gaza Strip. The number of displaced registered refugees known to have returned to the occupied territories since June 1967 was some 10,725.

Report of the Commissioner-General. The Commissioner-General stated<sup>(2)</sup> that in the Agency's understanding, Israel and Egypt had reached an agreement in principle on the return of refugees to the Gaza Strip, following the withdrawal of Israeli forces in April 1982 to the international border between the Sinai and Gaza. He had been informed by Israel that, in recent discussions between the two Governments, it had been agreed that the refugees would return, perhaps commencing at an early date. The Commissioner-General said UNRWA would welcome the implementation of such an agreement and would facilitate the refugees' relocation and provide schooling, health care and welfare services, similar to its assistance prior to April 1982.

Report of the Conciliation Commission. The thirty-ninth report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine covering the period from 1 September 1984 to 31 August 1985<sup>(16)</sup> was transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in September 1985. In 1984,<sup>(17)</sup> the Assembly had requested the Commission to continue efforts towards implementation of paragraph 11 of its 1948 resolution<sup>(4)</sup> on the partition of Palestine, stipulating that the Palestine refugees should be permitted to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property. The Commission stated that events in the region had further complicated the situation and the circumstances which limited its possibilities of action had remained essentially unchanged. Nevertheless, it continued to hope that the situation would improve towards achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East, thus enabling it to carry forward its work.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 4/165 G by recorded vote.

Population and refugees displaced since 1967

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 2252(ES-V) of 4 July 1967, 2452 A (XXIII) of 19 December 1968, 2535 B (XXIV) of 10 December 1969, 2672 D (XXV) of 8 December 1970, 2792 E (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C and D (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 D of 23 November 1976, 32/90 E of 13 December 1977, 33/112 F of 18 December 1978, 34/52 E of 23 November 1979, ES-7/2 of 29 July 1980, 35/13 E of 3 November 1980, 36/146 B of 16 December 1981, 37/120 G of 16 December 1982, 38/83 G of 15 December 1983 and 39/99 G of 14 December 1984.

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985, and the report of the Secretary-General,

1. Reaffirms the inalienable right of all displaced inhabitants to return to their homes or former places of residence in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, and declares once more that any attempt to restrict, or to attach conditions to, the free exercise of the right to return by any displaced person is inconsistent with that inalienable right and inadmissible;

2. Considers any and all agreements embodying any restriction on, or condition for, the return of the displaced inhabitants as null and void;

3. Strongly deplores the continued refusal of the Israeli authorities to take steps for the return of the displaced inhabitants;

4. Calls once more upon Israel:

(a) To take immediate steps for the return of all displaced inhabitants;

(b) To desist from all measures that obstruct the return of the displaced inhabitants, including measures affecting the physical and demographic structure of the occupied territories;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly before the opening of its forty-first session on Israel's compliance with paragraph 4 above.

against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Costa Rica, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Paraguay, Swaziland, Sweden, United Kingdom, Zaire.

The United States regarded the text as highly polemical, one-sided and harshly condemnatory. In stating that inhabitants of the occupied territories had an inalienable right to return, Israel said, the text was based not on consideration of the interests of those inhabitants but on the policy of rejection.

In Sweden's opinion, the text appeared to rule out negotiations or discussions on the means by which the displaced Palestinians might return to their homes.

Iran said all practices which prevented the Palestine refugees from exercising their right to voluntary repatriation to their homeland should be condemned.

In resolution 40/165 A, the Assembly, noting with regret that the Conciliation Commission had been unable to achieve progress in implementing paragraph 11 of the 1948 resolution on Palestine,<sup>(4)</sup> requested the Commission to exert continued efforts in that direction and to report by 1 September 1986. That paragraph was unacceptable to Israel (see p. 354).

Food aid

The General Assembly, in December 1985, again called for resumption of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees which had been suspended in September 1982,<sup>(18)</sup> except in Lebanon! where it had ceased in March 1984.<sup>(19)</sup> Distribution of food rations was currently confined to special hardship cases which comprised about 5 per cent of the refugee population. Particularly in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank, where unemployment and underemployment were on the rise, UNRWA faced increasing pressure from refugees applying for special hardship assistance; many did not qualify because the criteria for granting such assistance was based on a family's capacity for employment rather than on actual employment. As a result, refugee community leaders had been pressing for more flexibility, which would require a substantial increase in resources. In the West Bank, refugees in some camps refused to allow rations to be distributed to hardship cases on the ground that all refugees were in need of food aid and unless they all received it, none would be permitted to do so.

By the end of June 1985, according to the Commissioner-General,<sup>(2)</sup> assistance to hardship cases was benefiting 103,857 persons: 25,044 in Gaza; 23,693 in the West Bank; 22,717 in Lebanon; 19,686 in Jordan; and 12,717 in the Syrian Arab Republic.

Given the lack of sufficient resources and of responses from Governments, it had not been possible to comply with the Assembly's 1984 request to resume the general ration distribution.<sup>(20)</sup>

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1985,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General reported that the response to the Assembly's repeated appeals for contributions had not been encouraging; contributions had declined from $154 million in 1982 to $136 million in 1984. It was clear that income for 1985 was insufficient to maintain existing programmes at desired levels. Without additional resources, it had not been possible to resume the general distribution of basic food rations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 F by recorded vote.

Resumption of the ration distribution to Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 F of 16 December 1981, 27/120 F of 16 December 1982, 38/83 F of 15 December 1983, 39/99 F of 14 December 1984 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 302(IV) of 8 December 1949,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985, and the report of the Secretary-General,

Deeply concerned at the interruption by the Agency, owing to financial difficulties, of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields,

1. Regrets that its resolutions 37/120 F, 38/83 F and 39/99 F have not been implemented;

2. Calls once again upon all Governments, as a matter of urgency, to make the most generous efforts possible and to offer the necessary resources to meet the needs of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, particularly in the light of the interruption by the Agency of the general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields, and therefore urges non-contributing Governments to contribute regularly and contributing Governments to consider increasing their regular contributions;

3. Requests the Commissioner-General to resume on a continuing basis the interrupted general ration distribution to Palestine refugees in all fields;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Israel remarked that the wealthy Arab States which had sponsored the text had reduced their contributions to UNRWA. Without sufficient financial resources, said Sweden, the resumption of the general ration distribution would endanger the most important activities of the Agency. The United States strongly supported the Commissioner-General's efforts to make the most efficient use of UNRWA's scarce resources, and said the text was aimed at narrowing his discretionary powers in that regard.

Education and training services

Schools and teacher training centres

UNRWA activities. Under an agreement between UNRWA and UNESCO, the latter provided technical and professional advice to the Commissioner-General on aspects of the UNRWA education programme which included schooling for some 350,000 Palestine refugee children. Nine grades of elementary and preparatory (lower secondary) education were provided in some 635 Agency schools.

The curriculum followed that of the host country, and that of Jordan and Egypt for the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, respectively. With some UNRWA assistance, many refugee children were able to continue at the upper secondary level in government or private schools.

In addition, UNRWA provided vocational and pre-service teacher training at Agency centres, in-service teacher training and a university scholarship programme (see below). Pre-service training was given to some 1,000 trainees at three training centres in Jordan and at Ramallah in the West Bank, and a variety of in-service training courses was conducted through education development centres located in the five field office areas of UNRWA operations. The number of places available to refugees in vocational and technical courses conducted in eight UNRWA training centres was 3,812; in addition, the Agency sponsored the vocational training of 40 refugees in private institutions. It also organized pre-school education programmes, youth activities, adult training in crafts, and medical and paramedical education and training.

The general education programme continued as the largest single Agency activity in 1984/85. Seven school buildings were constructed during that period and work began on another six.

Of the 16,500 UNRWA employees, over 12,000 were in education, and over 90 per cent of those were schoolteachers. UNRWA's teacher training programme aimed primarily at providing qualified teachers for the Agency's schools.

Proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds"

Report of the Secretary-General. As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in August 1985<sup>(23)</sup> on the latest efforts to establish a university for Palestine refugees at Jerusalem, first considered by the Assembly in 1980.<sup>(24)</sup> In order to complete the feasibility study requested of him, he had contacted the Rector of the United Nations University, who designated an expert to carry out the study. The expert was to meet with Israeli officials, bearing in mind that the co-operation of Israel, which was in effective control of Jerusalem, was a prerequisite for establishing the university.

In a note verbale of 1 April 1985, the Secretary-General requested that Israel facilitate the visit of the expert at a mutually convenient date. In its reply of 2 May, Israel referred to its statements made in 1983<sup>(25)</sup> and 1984;<sup>(26)</sup> the 1984 resolution<sup>(22)</sup> was an attempt to use the field of higher education for transparent political ends, totally extraneous to genuine academic pursuits. Israel also pointed out that higher academic institutions in Judaea and Samaria were meeting the requirements in the area while continuing to improve education standards; until substantive clarifications were provided, it was unable to help in taking the matter further.

In view of Israel's position, the Secretary-General concluded, it had not been possible to complete the feasibility study as planned.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 K by recorded vote.

University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 36/146 G of 16 December 1981, 37/120 C of 16 December 1982, 38/83 K of 15 December 1983 and 39/99 K of 14 December 1984,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General on the question of the establishment of a university at Jerusalem,

Having also examined the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985,

1. Commends the constructive efforts made by the Secretary-General, the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, the Council of the United Nations University and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which worked diligently towards the implementation of General Assembly resolution 38/83 D of 15 December 1983 and other relevant resolutions;

2. Further commends the close co-operation of the competent educational authorities concerned;

3. Emphasises the need for strengthening the educational system in the Arab territories occupied since 5 June 1967, including Jerusalem, and specifically the need for the establishment of the proposed university;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to take all necessary measures for establishing the University of Jerusalem, "Al-Quds", in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, giving due consideration to the recommendations consistent with the provisions of that resolution;

5. Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to co-operate in the implementation of the present resolution and to remove the hindrances which it has put in the way of establishing the University of Jerusalem;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: Israel, United States

Abstaining: Grenada.

The United States considered the university a purely political project which would not meet the educational needs of the refugees. Israel said the request for its establishment was absurd, in view of the existence of a large number of renowned educational institutions, both Jewish and Arab, in Jerusalem.

In resolution 40/165 D, the Assembly appealed for generous contributions to Palestinian universities in the occupied territories, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem.

Scholarships

UNRWA activities. During the 1984/85 academic year, UNRWA awarded 353 scholarships to Palestine refugees for study at Arab universities, 271 of them continuing and 82 new. Scholarships, partly funded from special contributions, were awarded for one year, but were renewable from year to year for the duration of a course of study. In addition, UNESCO annually provided fellowships for short training courses for UNRWA's senior education staff.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a September 1985 report,<sup>(27)</sup> submitted in accordance with a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General provided information on responses to the Assembly's numerous appeals for special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees, for which UNRWA acted as recipient and trustee.

In 1985, the Federal Republic of Germany granted six fellowships to Palestine refugee graduates from UNRWA vocational training centres, all from Jordan. Japan offered five training scholarships for UNRWA's vocational training instructors in the West Bank and Gaza.

Among United Nations organizations and agencies, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations had two programmes for Palestinians, one providing specialized training in agricultural development and awarding three fellowships to university graduates, the other helping Palestine families of the Gilgine and Ramadan refugee camps in the Syrian Arab Republic to improve production and efficiency in crop and livestock farming. On the invitation of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), UNRWA proposed eight candidates for WIPO training fellowships. ILO was involved in two UNDP-sponsored projects: one to increase facilities for vocational training by UNRWA centres, governmental services and private institutions; the other, implemented in the second half of 1984, to provide vocational and technical refresher courses for 19 Palestinians. An ILO expert assisted a project to help Palestinian women's institutions promote vocational training. UNESCO granted four fellowships for overseas training of UNRWA education staff. During the 1985/86 academic year, EC agreed to finance 5 to 10 scholarships for Palestinians from Gaza for studies in Europe, the West Bank or Arab countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 D by recorded vote.

Offers by Member States of grants and scholarships for higher education, including vocational training, for Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 212(III) of 19 November 1948 on assistance to Palestine refugees,

Recalling also its resolutions 35/13 B of 3 November 1980, 36/146 H of 16 December 1981, 37/120 D of 16 December 1982, 38/83 D of 15 December 1983 and 39/99 D of 14 December 1984,

Cognizant of the fact that the Palestine refugees have, for the last three decades, lost their lands and means of livelihood,

Having examined the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also examined the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985,

1. Urges all States to respond to the appeal contained in General Assembly resolution 32/90 F of 13 December 1977 in a manner commensurate with the needs of Palestine refugees for higher education and vocational training;

2. Strongly appeals to all States, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to augment the special allocations for grants and scholarships to Palestine refugees in addition to their contributions to the regular budget of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

3. Expresses its appreciation to all Governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations that responded favourably to General Assembly resolution 39/99 D;

4. Invites the relevant specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue, within their respective spheres of competence, to extend assistance for higher education to Palestine refugee students;

5. Appeals to all States, specialized agencies and the United Nations University to contribute generously to the Palestinian universities in the territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including, in due course, the proposed University of Jerusalem "Al-Quds" for Palestine refugees;

6. Also appeals to all States, specialized agencies and other international bodies to contribute towards the establishment of vocational training centres for Palestine refugees;

7. Requests the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to act as the recipient and trustee for such special allocations and scholarships and to award them to qualified Palestine refugee candidates;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Israel.

In the opinion of the United States, the text provided a practical way of meeting some of the needs of the refugees. Israel said it was unable to support it because it contained a reference to the proposed university of Jerusalem for Palestine refugees.

Property rights

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1985,<sup>(29)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties, as requested in a 1984 Assembly resolution<sup>(30)</sup> which he had brought to Israel's attention, asking for any information regarding its implementation, preferably by 30 June 1985. In a reply of 12 August, Israel stated that its position had been set out in 1981 before the Special Political Committee.<sup>(31)</sup> With regard to the resolution's request for information from other States on Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, no replies had been received.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 H by recorded vote.

Revenues derived from Palestine refugee properties The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/13 A to F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 C of 16 December 1981, 37/120 H of 16 December 1982, 38/83 H of 15 December 1983, 39/99 H of 14 December 1984 and all its previous resolutions on the question, including resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Taking note also of the report of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, covering the period from 1 September 1984 to 31 August 1985,

Recalling that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principles of international law uphold the principle that no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her private property,

Considering that the Palestine Arab refugees are entitled to their property and to the income derived from their property, in conformity with the principles of justice and equity,

Recalling, in particular, its resolution 394(V) of 14 December 1950, in which it directed the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, in consultation with the parties concerned, to prescribe measures for the protection of the rights, property and interests of the Palestine Arab refugees,

Eking note of the completion of the programme of identification and evaluation of Arab property, as announced by the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine in its twenty-second progress report, and of the fact that the Land Office had a schedule of Arab owners and file of documents defining the location, area and other particulars of Arab property,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all appropriate steps, in consultation with the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine, for the protection and administration of Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, and to establish a fund for the receipt of income derived therefrom, on behalf of the rightful owners;

2. Calls once again upon Israel to render all facilities and assistance to the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

3. Culls upon all other Governments of Member States concerned to provide the Secretary-General with any pertinent information in their possession concerning Arab property, assets and property rights in Israel, which would assist the Secretary-General in the implementation of the present resolution;

4. Deplores Israel's refusal to co-operate with the Secretary-General in the implementation of the resolutions on the question;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

In the opinion of the United States, the text prejudged the issues of refugee repatriation and compensation which, it felt, could be best settled through direct negotiations among the parties. In Israel's view, the text ran counter to the basic tenets of international law, since property rights within the borders of a sovereign State were exclusively subject to domestic law. Sweden believed that claims by Palestine refugees in respect of property or compensation should be dealt with in the context of a comprehensive Middle East solution.

Refugee protection

Protection of Palestine refugees, especially those in southern Lebanon, was again the subject in 1985 of a General Assembly resolution. The Secretary-General reported on steps taken to ensure their protection, as did the Commissioner-General in his annual report. When introducing his report<sup>(2)</sup> in the Assembly's Special Political Committee, the Commissioner-General stated that the refugees in Lebanon had been affected by almost uninterrupted fighting (see above, under "Lebanon situation"), and the living conditions for refugees in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip had deteriorated.

Report of the Secretary-General. In October 1985,<sup>(32)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on the implementation of a 1984 General Assembly resolution<sup>(12)</sup> calling for protection of Palestine refugees, especially those in refugee camps in Lebanon. Responding on 12 August 1985 to the Secretary-General's request for information on steps taken or envisaged in compliance with the resolution, Israel stated that it deemed the resolution not relevant, since its troops had completed their withdrawal from southern Lebanon in June and were currently deployed along the international border.

The UNRWA Commissioner-General continued his efforts in consultation with the Secretary-General to do all that was feasible to contribute to the safety and security of the refugees in all the territories under occupation.

Palestine refugees in southern Lebanon resided in the vicinity of Saida and Tyre. The Israeli forces withdrew from those areas in February and April 1985, respectively. Up to the dates of their withdrawal, the UNRWA field office in Lebanon reported the following incidents involving Palestine refugees: in southern Lebanon as a whole from July 1984 to the end of February 1985, there were 51 violent deaths, 27 explosions and 2 kidnappings; in the Tyre area in March and April, there were 6 violent deaths and 5 explosions. UNRWA officials drew the attention of the Israeli military authorities to such incidents and, when necessary, lodged protests, with a view to having them investigated and to reminding Israel of its responsibility for the safety and security of the civilian population.

By a note verbale of 28 February to Israel, UNRWA had expressed deep concern about the security of Palestine refugees in southern Lebanon, pointing out that it had been obliged at times to close its schools in the Tyre area to avoid possible injury from stray bullets and requesting adequate and urgent steps to prevent further such incidents. UNRWA had also referred to difficulties in moving personnel and supplies through Israeli check-points and in obtaining access to Israeli military officials in a position to deal with such problems.

UNRWA continued to provide education, health and relief services to Palestine refugees in southern Lebanon. Continuing disturbances throughout the area and delays at IDF check-points and those of local forces armed and controlled by IDF adversely affected access to UNRWA clinics and subsidized hospitals.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 I by recorded vote.

Protection of Palestine refugees

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolutions 508(1982) of 5 June 1982, 509 (1982) of 6 June 1982, 511(1982) of 18 June 1982, 512(1982) of 19 June 1982, 513(1982) of 4 July 1982, 515(1982) of 29 July 1982, 517(1982) of 4 August 1982, 518(1982) of 12 August 1982, 519(1982) of 17 August 1982, 520(1982) of 17 September 1982 and 523(1982) of 18 October 1982,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions ES-7/5 of 26 June 1982, ES-7/6 and ES-7/8 of 19 August 1982, ES-7/9 of 24 September 1982, 37/120 J of 16 December 1982, 38/83 I of 15 December 1983 and 39/99 I of 14 December 1984,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General,

Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985,

Referring to the humanitarian principles of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, and to the obligations arising from the Regulations annexed to the Hague Convention IV of 1907.

Taking into consideration the marked deterioration in the security situation experienced by the refugees living in the Gaza Strip as reported by the Commissioner-General in his statement of 4 November 1985,

Deeply concerned at the lack of security for the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, resulting in scores of violent deaths, woundings, kidnappings, disappearances, evictions in the face of threats, explosions and arsons,

Deeply distressed at the sufferings of the Palestinians resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon,

Reaffirming its support for the sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon, within its internationally recognized boundaries,

1. Urges the Secretary-General, in consultation with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to undertake effective measures to guarantee the safety and security and the legal and human rights of the Palestine refugees in all the territories under Israeli occupation in 1967 and thereafter;

2. Holds Israel responsible for the security of the Palestine refugees in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and calls upon it to fulfil its obligations as the occupying Power in this regard, in accordance with the pertinent provisions of the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949;

3. Calls once again upon Israel, the occupying Power, to release forthwith all detained Palestine refugees, including the employees of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East;

4. Urges the Commissioner-General to provide housing, in consultation with the Government of Lebanon, to the Palestine refugees whose houses were demolished or razed by the Israeli forces;

5. Calls once again upon Israel to compensate the Agency for the damage to its property and facilities resulting from the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, without prejudice to Israel's responsibility for all damages resulting from that invasion;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Commissioner-General, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-first session, on the implementation of the present resolution.

The seventh preambular paragraph was adopted, by recorded votes of 101 to 16, with 29 abstentions, in plenary and 91 to 17, with 18 abstentions, in Committee.

In the opinion of the United States, the text included an unacceptable, one-sided condemnation of Israel in complete disregard of the truth; such exercises in empty polemics only aggravated the problems facing UNRWA. Also, charging the Secretary-General with guaranteeing the safety, security and rights of the Palestine refugees in the occupied territories would raise practical and legal problems with the possibility of conflicting jurisdictional authorities.

Israel said the text contained identical opening paragraphs to the previous year's unjustified and unwarranted resolution, and despite the fact that Israeli forces had meanwhile left Lebanon. The subsequent paragraphs referred not to the situation in Lebanon, but to that in Palestine and other occupied territories. Both the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights and the Security Council had expressed concern over tragic developments in and around the camps at Beirut after Israel's withdrawal from the area, Israel said. There was little doubt that the principal cause of such concern was action by the Syrian Arab Republic, whose forces, in conjunction with Lebanese forces, had killed some 2,000 refugees and wounded over 6,000 in camps in Lebanon. However, the seventh preambular paragraph merely substituted the phrase "in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem", for "in occupied southern Lebanon", used in the 1984 text. It was clear to the many visitors to Judaea, Samaria and Gaza that the outrages which had allegedly occurred in southern Lebanon during the previous year were not being re-enacted in exactly the same way in those territories.

Lebanon responded that the Palestinian civilian and military presence in Lebanon and the violence which had involved Palestinians and Lebanese together had resulted from Israeli acts of aggression. Lebanon hoped that the talks currently being held under Syrian sponsorship would lead to a stable and lasting peace in Lebanon and make it possible to restore the rule of law throughout the country. Despite Israel's claim to have withdrawn its forces from southern Lebanon, United Nations forces and the Lebanese Government continued to consider that no such withdrawal had taken place.

In Sweden's view, the language of several paragraphs was sweeping and contradictory and the text did not appear to address the security situation of the refugees most in need of protection; Sweden and Finland felt it was inappropriate to demand that the Secretary-General should guarantee the safety of refugees when he had no means to do so. Finland said the seventh preambular paragraph and paragraph 3 were inaccurate and overlooked the serious security problems of Palestine refugees in parts of Lebanon that were not occupied. It was Finland's understanding that the damage referred to in paragraph 5 was that specified in UNRWA's claim of approximately $4.4 million submitted to Israel.

Speaking for the 10 EC member States, Luxembourg said they had difficulty in understanding why a text which had been traditionally related to the specific situation of Palestine refugees in Lebanon now appeared to have a more general application. The impression given was that their situation was less grave than that in other occupied territories, although reports demonstrated that the opposite was true. With regard to paragraph 1, the EC members felt that it was important not to detract from Israel's responsibility, as the occupying Power, to provide protection to the civilian population; they also had difficulty in supporting certain other passages in the text which in their view contained extreme generalizations.

In a similar vein, Austria remarked that previous resolutions on the subject had referred to the situation of refugees in Lebanon; the new text, however, applied in general to the territories occupied by Israel since 1967.

Turkey reserved its position on paragraph 1 and on the seventh preambular paragraph.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

The living conditions of refugees and the security situation in the Gaza Strip had deteriorated, the Commissioner-General stated when introducing his annual report<sup>(2)</sup> in the General Assembly's Special Political Committee. There was a serious shortage of adequate housing and increasing numbers of refugees were finding it difficult to obtain employment, which added to other hardships. As a consequence, there was heightened demand for special hardship assistance and help in finding employment. Unhealthy environmental conditions and continued settlement activity further compounded unsatisfactory living conditions, by reducing the amount of land available for agriculture and by increasing the pressure on already insufficient water supply and waste disposal facilities. In addition, no solution had been reached to the problem of the approximately 5,000 Palestinian refugees on the Egyptian side of the border between the Gaza Strip and the Sinai, to whom UNRWA continued to provide limited assistance, the Commissioner-General said.

Report of the Secretary-General. In September 1985,<sup>(33)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report on Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip, in accordance with a 1984 General Assembly resolution<sup>(34)</sup> demanding that Israel desist from removing and resettling Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and destroying their shelters. In reply to a note verbale of 22 March 1985 by the Secretary-General, Israel stated on 12 August that its position on the matter had been set out in successive annual replies, the latest in June 1984.<sup>(35)</sup> To date, Israel said, it had provided housing for more than 9,500 families and, during 1985, another 620 families were to be housed under the refugee voluntary rehabilitation programme.

The Secretary-General reported that, following a shooting incident in Gaza town on 17 April when an Israeli soldier was wounded by a Palestine refugee, Israeli authorities had partially demolished the refugee's father's shelter in Bureij camp. In response to UNRWA's protest that the demolition amounted to collective punishment contrary to the fourth Geneva Convention, the authorities stated that the demolition had been limited to extensions that contravened building regulations.

UNRWA was following up with the Israeli authorities the rehousing of refugees who remained affected by the demolitions in 1971 in the Gaza Strip.<sup>(36)</sup> Of 87 families previously categorized as living in hardship conditions, 19 were still in hardship, 18 were inadequately and 37 adequately housed, and 13 had purchased houses in Israeli-sponsored projects. The authorities stated that the 19 families living in hardship conditions were being rehoused.

Several refugee families living on the northern perimeter of Jabalia camp had been told by Israeli authorities to remove some of their shelter extensions on the ground that they had been built without proper authority on State land outside camp boundaries; the families had taken the matter to the High Court of Israel where proceedings were continuing. Some of the families concerned were understood to have accepted an Israeli offer to move to a housing project at Beit Lahiya, demolishing their shelters at Jabalia as a pre-condition. Israeli authorities had also levelled boundary walls and gardens at that camp on the grounds that they were in contravention of building regulations.

The 35 families whose shelters on the perimeter of Beach camp had been demolished in 1983<sup>(37)</sup> had still not been rehoused; 28 of them were living in temporary shelters on or near the same site, 2 had moved in with relatives and 5 had left. Israel had stated that arrangements were being made to provide alternative accommodation.

In the year under review, according to information available, 326 refugee families, comprising 2,075 persons, moved to 194 plots of land in Israeli-sponsored housing projects; in addition, three refugee families comprising 14 persons moved to completed housing units. As a pre-condition, 501 shelter rooms had to be demolished, of which 245 had been built by UNRWA and 27 had been assisted by it. In requiring such demolitions, Israel maintained that it was to relieve congestion in the camps and that material from demolished shelters was used in new construction. UNRWA believed such demolitions added to the acute housing crisis in the Gaza Strip.

The Israeli authorities had to date allocated a total of 3,714 plots of land in the Gaza Strip for housing projects. Houses had been built by 2,816 refugee families of 17,316 persons on 2,067 plots, and construction was continuing on 361 plots. The remaining plots were either vacant or belonged to non-refugee families. In addition, 2,809 refugee families consisting of 17,649 persons and 14 non-refugee families comprising 65 persons had moved into 2,665 completed housing units.

Refugee families were continuing to purchase plots of land at subsidized rates for constructing houses in projects developed by Israel in the Beit Lahiyah, Naslah and Tel el-Sultan areas. Israel had also started recently to expand the al-Amal and Sheikh Radwan housing projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 E by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 2792 C (XXVI) of 6 December 1971, 2963 C (XXVII) of 13 December 1972, 3089 C (XXVIII) of 7 December 1973, 3331 D (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3419 C (XXX) of 8 December 1975, 31/15 E of 23 November 1976, 32/90 C of 13 December 1977, 33/112 E of 18 December 1978, 34/52 F of 23 November 1979, 35/13 F of 3 November 1980, 36/146 A of 16 December 1981, 37/120 E of 16 December 1982, 38/83 E of 15 December 1983 and 39/99 E of 14 December 1984,

Having considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985, and the report of the Secretary-General,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

Alarmed by the reports received from the Commissioner-General that the Israeli occupying authorities, in contravention of Israel's obligation under international law, persist in their policy of demolishing shelters occupied by refugee families,

1. Reiterates strongly its demand that Israel desist from the removal and resettlement of Palestine refugees in the Gaza Strip and from the destruction of their shelters;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, after consulting with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations

Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-first session, on Israel's compliance with paragraph 1 above.

16 December 1985 Meeting 118 146-2-2 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/40/921) by recorded vote (126-2), 15 November (meeting 34); O-nation draft (A/SPC/40/L.20); agenda item 79.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: SPC 22-28, 31, 34; plenary 118.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States

Abstaining: Grenada, Zaire.

Israel declared that it would continue to provide better-quality accommodation to refugees in the Gaza Strip, despite the demand in the text that it should abandon its efforts to do so. The United States regarded the text as highly polemical, one-sided and harshly condemnatory.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

The living conditions of refugees in the West Bank had deteriorated, the UNRWA Commissioner-General stated when introducing his annual report in the Special Political Committee. The situation had been characterized by numerous incidents, including confrontations between Israeli settlers and the local population; occasional curfews had been decreed in the camps and there had been disruptions in schools.

Communications. By a letter of 12 February 1985,<sup>(38)</sup> the Chairman of the Committee on Palestinian rights brought to the Secretary-General's attention the grave situation and growing tension in and around Palestinian refugee camps, both in southern Lebanon (see p. 311) and in the West Bank. At Dheisheh, near Bethlehem, all roads into the camp had been blocked, the Chairman said; only one narrow pedestrian entrance had remained open, affecting services to the camp and aggravating the atmosphere of living under siege. On 1 February, he added, police reinforced by military troops had arrested scores of residents in the camp and villages in the vicinity.

In a letter of 19 March,<sup>(39)</sup> the Chairman expressed the Committee's profound concern that, on 12 March, the press had reported that 35 youths from the Dheisheh camp, arrested during a night raid on the camp on 31 January, were still being detained for interrogation without charges.

Report of the Secretary-General. Of the 357,704 Palestine refugees in the West Bank registered with UNRWA, 266,473 lived outside camps, the Secretary-General noted in a September 1985 report.<sup>(40)</sup> He also reported that, in reply to a note verbale of 22 March requesting Israel to inform him of any steps taken to implement the General Assembly's 1984 resolution<sup>(41)</sup> calling on Israel to refrain from removing and resettling refugees in the West Bank, Israel had stated on 12 August 1985 that its position had been set out in 1984.<sup>(42)</sup> The views of the UNRWA Commissioner-General remained also as stated in 1984.<sup>(42)</sup> The Agency did not envisage being involved in removing and resettling refugees; while it did not oppose measures voluntarily accepted by them to improve their living conditions, it would strongly object to any attempt to force them to comply with any particular scheme. The mere fact of relocation did not affect eligibility for UNRWA services, the Secretary-General added.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/165 J, by recorded vote.

Palestine refugees in the West Bank

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 237(1967) of 14 June 1967,

Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 38/83 J of 15 December 1983 and 39/99 J of 14 December 1984,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, Having also considered the report of the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, covering the period from 1 July 1984 to 30 June 1985,

Alarmed by Israel's plans to remove and resettle the Palestine refugees of the West Bank and to destroy their camps,

Recalling the provisions of paragraph 11 of its resolution 194(III) of 11 December 1948 and considering that measures to resettle Palestine refugees in the West Bank away from the homes and property from which they were displaced constitute a violation of their inalienable right of return,

1. Calls once again upon Israel to abandon its plans and to refrain from the removal, and from any action that may lead to the removal and resettlement, of Palestine refugees in the West Bank and from the destruction of their camps;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the Commissioner-General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, to keep the matter under close supervision and to report to the General Assembly, before the opening of its forty-first session, on any developments regarding this matter.

General Assembly resolution 40/165 J

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, 'Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Grenada, Malawi.

The United States said it could not support paragraph 1 of the text as it would exclude any programmes which might seek to improve the refugees' quality of life pending an overall political settlement; such programmes might include the construction of new housing outside existing camps, undertaken voluntarily by the refugees themselves and in co-ordination with UNRWA.

Chapter X

Other political questions

In 1985, the General Assembly considered various aspects of information questions, adopting two resolutions—on public information activities and policies (resolution 40/164 A) and on mass communication development (40/164 B). Both called for promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

The Assembly also reviewed work on two other questions: radiation from all sources, and Antarctica. Concerning the first, the Assembly called for the continued pursuit of knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of radiation (40/160). Regarding the second, it asked mainly for information on the management, exploration and use of Antarctica's resources (40/156 A-C).

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: public information. Africa: South Africa and apartheid—public information. Middle East: Palestine question—public information. Institutional machinery: other institutional questions—fortieth anniversary of the United Nations. General questions relating to colonial countries: the 1960 Declaration on colonial countries—information dissemination, Namibia: information dissemination. Other administrative and management questions: information systems, computers and telecommunication.

Information

Information activities of the United Nations fell into two broad categories. One was mass communication co-operation and development, in particular activities designed to develop, through programmes of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), the communication capacities of developing countries. The other was public information, aimed at publicizing the work and goals of the United Nations, among them the free and balanced flow of information. Co-operation and co-ordination in public information activities throughout the United Nations system continued to be promoted by the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), which also adopted recommendations for a common information strategy for the system.

The 69-member Committee on Information, established by the General Assembly in 1978 as the Committee to Review United Nations Public Information Policies and Activities,<sup>(1)</sup> continued to monitor the Organization's information and communication activities—executed principally by the Secretariat's Department of Public Information (DPI)—and to promote the establishment of a new world information and communication order. The Committee made 70 recommendations concerning these matters at its seventh substantive session, held in New York from 17 June to 5 July and on 29 August 1985. The session was preceded by an organizational session, also in New York, from 19 to 21 March.<sup>(2)</sup>

The Committee's recommendations were approved in December by Assembly resolution 40/164 A, to which they were annexed.

Mass communication

UNESCO and ITU activities. In 1985, UNESCO continued efforts to implement its International Programme for the Development of Communication (IPDC)—a programme to help developing countries build communication infrastructure—and to establish a new world information and communication order (see p. 373); it also continued its studies on the social, economic and cultural effects of the accelerated development of communication technologies. Details of these efforts, including related activities of ITU, were described by the UNESCO Director-General in a report submitted to the General Assembly in response to its 1984 request<sup>(3)</sup> and transmitted by the Secretary-General in September 1985.<sup>(4)</sup>

The report noted several trends in the progress of IPDC, among them an increase in the number of projects submitted for financing and in the number of national projects, with greater emphasis on audio-visual media, book development and training. Having achieved a geographical balance in projects from developing countries, IPDC was giving priority support to projects from the least developed countries. Emphasis was being placed on training, i.e. special training projects and enhancement of the training component of projects. IPDC had also established a good working relationship with United Nations organizations concerned with communication.

At its sixth session (Paris, March 1985), the IPDC Intergovernmental Council approved for funding 39 projects, of which 13 (11 regional, 2 national) were for refinancing and 26 were new. Those for refinancing were providing assistance for: training professional and technical communication personnel, including journalists, broadcasting personnel, graphic artists and postal administrators; news agency consultants' services, equipment and computerization; and the strengthening of regional mass communication activities. The new projects included support for: rural broadcasting studies and training on media and the changing family in Africa; development of sound broadcasting in Latin America; and information exchanges among Arab, Latin American and European news agencies. Two special projects were also approved: one on communication training and career development for women in Africa, the other for preliminary work on a report on the state of communication in the world.

Field-based development projects in Africa, the Arab States, Asia and the Pacific, and Latin America and the Caribbean totalled 125. A major activity of UNESCO's communication programme, they represented more than $26 million in ongoing projects (including those financed by IPDC). About 50 per cent of this amount was funds-in-trust, the largest contributors of which were the Arab Gulf Programme for United Nations Development Organizations, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands and the Scandinavian countries; about 6 per cent came from the United Nations Development Programme.

Large-scale extrabudgetary projects in Africa, Asia and the Caribbean were providing assistance for a mass communications institute, to develop educational radio and broadcasting, rural press and news agency services, and to train radio, film and video personnel.

The Intergovernmental Council of IPDC adopted a budget of $2.5 million for 1985-1986 to be paid from the IPDC Special Account. As of the reporting date, $7,034,645 had been paid to that Account, out of $8,603,670 pledged. The USSR offered 30 additional fellowships for professional training, and the Republic of Korea offered training facilities for producing radio and television programmes valued at $300,000. Commitment of funds-in-trust support had also been received from Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United States.

As requested by the Assembly in 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> UNESCO, in its 1986-1987 draft programme and budget, provided for periodic studies to identify new technological trends in information, communication, telematics and informatics and to assess their socio-economic and cultural impact on development. As a first step, a series of regionally based consultations had been organized, the first by Florida State University (United States, December 1984) to discuss possible areas of collaboration in North America, Latin America and the Caribbean. The second was held in Ahmedabad (India, December 1985), which brought together researchers and institution representatives from Asia and the Pacific, Africa and the Arab States.

Related activities of ITU included holding the first of a series of preparatory meetings for a World Administrative Telegraph and Telephone Conference, scheduled for 1988, to draw up new regulations governing the use and operation of international public telecommunications. Also, in keeping with a recommendation of the Independent Commission for World-wide Telecommunication Development set up by ITU in 1982, the ITU Administrative Council, at its fortieth session (Geneva, 1-17 July 1985), took steps towards establishing a Centre for Telecommunications Development. In addition, ITU<sup>(5)</sup> laid the foundation-stone of the Multinational School of Advanced Telecommunication Studies at Dakar, Senegal. This project, launched in 1981 as part of a global effort to achieve fuller control of telecommunication network management, was serving eight West African States. In December 1985, ITU completed the translation into Arabic of ITU's provisional glossary of telecommunication terms and terms relating to space telecommunications.

The UNESCO General Conference, at its twenty-third session (Sofia, Bulgaria, 8 October-9 November), adopted a resolution on its programme on communication in the service of man, renewing its appeal for increased contributions to IPDC, calling for a balance between research and operational activities in implementing the service-of-man programme, and setting forth guidelines for studies on communication, for promoting the free flow and balanced dissemination of information and increased news exchanges, and for the development of communication. The resolution also called for close co-operation with other United Nations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) dealing with communication.

Activities of the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information,<sup>(2)</sup> recognizing the contribution that the mass media world-wide could make to promoting development and other objectives, recommended that the General Assembly appeal to the media to support international efforts towards global development, in particular the efforts of developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress, and to the United Nations system to promote, through its information services, development activities on behalf of those countries. The Committee recommended that developing countries be assured access to communication technology to enable them to improve their communication systems. The United Nations system and the developed countries should be urged to co-operate with them towards strengthening their information and communication infrastructures, and to give full support to IPDC in this connection.

DPI likewise should be urged to monitor meetings of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries and of regional intergovernmental bodies devoted to information and communication issues; and should co-operate with UNESCO to prepare and implement a plan of integrated communication network and regional data and communication centres and to provide facilities for data and communication exchange for non-aligned countries.

The foregoing recommendations were part of a series of Committee recommendations for the establishment of a new, more just and effective world information and communication order (see p. 373), which were approved by Assembly resolution 40/164 A.

Communications. A number of resolutions or declarations adopted by intergovernmental bodies and transmitted to the Secretary-General in 1985 dealt with, among other matters, the question of a more objective and balanced presentation of information to the international community.

The Fifteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Sanaa, 18-22 December 1984), by a resolution among those transmitted by Yemen on 11 March 1985,<sup>(6)</sup> called for stronger co-operation among its members in the field of information and for implementation of an information plan to counter propaganda against Islam and Moslems.

By the Declaration of the Commemorative Meeting in Observance of the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Asian-African Conference (Bandung, 24 and 25 April), transmitted by Indonesia on 1 May,<sup>(7)</sup> the participating countries declared that, to preserve cultural heritage and national identity and to ensure a more balanced flow of information among the international community, it was imperative to realize a new international information and communication order, initiated by UNESCO.

The Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries (Luanda, 4-7 September), by its Final Political Declaration transmitted by Angola on 5 November,<sup>(8)</sup> requested the non-aligned countries to continue efforts towards the establishment of a new information order, asked all States to strengthen the role of UNESCO in this endeavour, and agreed to support DPI activities to increase information dissemination and ensure coherent coverage of priority issues.

The Conference of African Ministers of Information, by a resolution adopted at its first extraordinary session (Cairo, 23-25 November) and among those transmitted on 4 December by Egypt,<sup>(9)</sup> invited UNESCO to intensify efforts to assist the Organization of African Unity (OAU) to set up a new African information order that was fairer and more balanced, as a prelude to the establishment of a new world information order.

Argentina, India, Italy and Nigeria transmitted on 10 April<sup>(10)</sup> the conclusions and recommendations of a study week on the impact of space exploration on mankind (Vatican, 1-5 October 1984), which fell under three headings: telecommunication satellites, space technology, and the future uses of space. The participants considered it desirable that the tools of space technology be used to improve the conditions of life, to promote greater harmony among humankind, to permit the sharing of cultures and knowledge, and to use and care for the world's resources for the common good of all.

By a letter of 20 May,<sup>(11)</sup> Cuba conveyed to the Secretary-General a message it wished to transmit to the United States, protesting that Government's decision to inaugurate broadcasts to Cuba through Radio Martí, a decision Cuba said would damage the foundations for communications and relations between citizens of Cuban origin in the United States and citizens of Cuba.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee on 16 December 1985, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 40/164 B on questions relating to information.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/181 and 34/182 of 18 December 1979, 35/201 of 16 December 1980, 36/149 A of 16 December 1981, 37/94 A and B of 10 December 1982, 38/82 A of 15 December 1983 and 39/98 A and B of 14 December 1984,

Taking note of the ongoing efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to contribute to the clarification, elaboration and application of the concept of a new world information and communication order,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Declarations of the Sixth and Seventh Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979 and at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983 as well as the Final Documents of the Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries held at Jakarta from 26 to 30 January 1984, and the relevant provisions of the Final Political Declaration of the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, in which the importance of the establishment of a new world information and communication order was stressed anew,

Recalling the relevant resolutions adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its eighteenth ordinary session, held at Nairobi from 24 to 27 June 1981, the Conference of Ministers of Information of States members of the Organization of African Unity at its third ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa in March 1985 and at its first extraordinary session, held at Cairo in November 1985, especially those encouraging regional co-operation in the field of information and promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order,

Recalling article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression and that this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, and article 29, which stipulates that these rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, and those of the Concluding Document of the meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held at Madrid from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983,

Recalling resolution 4/21 of 27 October 1980, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twenty-first session, and resolution 2/03 of 3 December 1982, adopted by the General Conference at its fourth extraordinary session,

Recalling also resolutions 4/19 of 27 October 1980, 3.1 of 25 November 1983 and 3.1 of 8 November 1985 adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and, in this context, expressing anew the wish that that organization should contribute to the clarification, elaboration and application of the concept of a new world information and communication order,

Recalling the Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War, adopted on 28 November 1978 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace,

Considering that international co-operation in the field of communication development should take place on the basis of equality, justice, mutual advantage and the principles of international law so as to remedy existing imbalances by strengthening and intensifying the development of human and material resources, communication networks and infrastructures, particularly in developing countries, and thus encourage a wider and better, balanced dissemination of information,

Emphasizing its full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, which constitutes an essential instrument for the development of human and material resources and communication infrastructures in the developing countries and the establishment of a new world information and communication order,

Conscious that diverse solutions to information and communication problems are required because political, economic, cultural and social problems differ from one country to another,

Recognizing the central role of, and the progress accomplished by, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the field of information and communication within its mandate, and that the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned should give that organization adequate support and assistance in the field of information and communication,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on the implementation of the International Programme for the Development of Communication, on the activities relating to the establishment of a new world information and communication order and on the social, economic and cultural impact of the new communication technologies;

2. Appeals to the mass media world-wide to explore all possible avenues for more equitable international co-operation in the field of information and communication and to respond in a positive way to the exceptional opportunities now available to them in the field of international relations, in order to open new vistas of progress for the world community;

3. Underlines the importance of efforts made to implement the principles set forth in the Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War;

4. Reiterates its appeal to all Member States and all organizations of the United Nations system, international, governmental and non-governmental organizations and professional organizations in the field of communication to exert every effort to make better known through all means at their disposal the issues underlying the need for the development of communication capacities in developing countries as a step towards the establishment of a new world information and communication order;

5. Considers that the International Programme for the Development of Communication represents a significant step towards the development of conditions for the establishment of a new world information and communication order, and welcomes the decisions adopted by the Intergovernmental Council of the Programme at its fifth and sixth sessions, held in Paris in 1984 and 1985;

6. Notes with satisfaction the co-operation existing between the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and all other organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the International Telecommunication Union, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the Universal Postal Union, whose projects have been approved by the Intergovernmental Council of the International Programme for the Development of Communication;

7. Expresses its appreciation to all Member States that have made or pledged a contribution towards the implementation of the International Programme for the Development of Communication;

8. Reiterates its requests to Member States and organizations and bodies of the United Nations system as well as other international governmental and non-governmental organizations and concerned public and private enterprises to respond to the appeals of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to make an increased contribution to the International Programme for the Development of Communication by making greater financial resources available, as well as more training resources, equipment, technologies and staff;

9. Appeals to Member States to respond positively and effectively to resolution 4/22 of 27 October 1980 concerning the reduction of telecommunication tariffs for news exchanges, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and to take the necessary steps to implement that resolution;

10. Notes with satisfaction that a second Round Table on a New World Information and Communication Order will be organized jointly by the United Nations and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at Copenhagen in April 1986;

11. Reaffirms its strong support for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, its Constitution, the ideals reflected in it, its activities and for its efforts to further enhance its capabilities with a view to promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order;

12. Encourages the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue the chronological survey of the documents dealing with the establishment of a new world information and communication order and the analysis of the evolution of this concept, and to keep the Committee informed on developments in this area;

13. Encourages the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue and intensify its studies, programmes and activities with a view to identifying new technological trends in information, communication, telematics and informatics and assess their socio-economic and cultural impact on the development of peoples, and in this context requests it to provide, whenever necessary, periodic studies relevant to these topics;

14. Invites the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to continue his efforts in the information and communication field and to submit to the General Assembly, at its forty-first session, a detailed report on the implementation of the International Programme for the Development of Communication and the activities relating to the establishment of a new world information and communication order as well as on the social, economic and cultural effects of the accelerated development of communication technologies.

16 December 1985 Meeting 118 122-16-9 (recorded vote)

Approved by SPC (A/40/1024) by recorded vote (96-15-9), 6 December (meeting 46); draft by Yugoslavia for Group of 77 (A/SPC/40/L.29/Rev.1); agenda item 78. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: SPC 29-39, 45, 46; plenary 118.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei, Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, New Zealand, Spain, Turkey.

Explaining its vote in the Special Political Committee, Canada said the text did not reflect the important progress made at the UNESCO General Conference held at Sofia and that it voted negatively precisely because it was determined to work towards strengthening UNESCO. Canada and others referred to the absence in the text of words qualifying a new world information and communication order as an "evolving and continuous process", reached by consensus at the General Conference. (For the views of other States on this matter, see p. 383.) Canada added that the Assembly should strengthen the basis of the compromise established by UNESCO to enable the Committee on Information to focus its work on the activities of DPI. The United States said that since it had withdrawn from UNESCO, it would be illogical for it to endorse a resolution which supported that organization.

Austria regretted that it had had to abstain, in view of the text's encouraging elements, in particular the second preambular paragraph noting UNESCO's efforts. It expressed reservations on paragraphs 11 to 14, which it said contained formulations that seemed to call into question the consensus reached at the UNESCO Conference concerning the treatment of communication questions.

Proposed new world information and communication order

UNESCO activities. UNESCO, its Director-General reported,<sup>(4)</sup> continued to consolidate knowledge and experience regarding the concept of a new world information and communication order, seen as an evolving and continuous process. Its interest in defining alternative forms of communication focused on case-studies in Asia, Africa and Latin America, utilizing traditional and interpersonal modes, including small-scale media, and encouraging self-expression by minorities or disadvantaged groups. Case-studies on the information and communication situation of migrant workers included research carried out in Australia, Austria, Denmark, Finland, Norway, the United Kingdom, the United States and the Arab States. Also explored were the questions of: access to and participation in communication, particularly the uses of new communication technologies, with special attention to case-studies affecting rural populations in developing countries, especially rural women; the right to communicate; and the media's contribution to mutual respect, international understanding, human rights, peace and the elucidation of major world problems.

A first series of studies on plurality of information, obstacles to a balanced and free flow of information, including censorship, and the role of the press in scrutinizing abuses of power was under way. A synthesis was also undertaken of past studies on various aspects of the democratization of communication (greater public participation, more numerous and significant means, wider access, more extensive information exchanges, two-way communication, reduction in discrimination and domination, greater awareness of differences of opinion and diverging interpretation of facts, and plurality of sources, opinion and content).

Publications issued in 1985 relating to the concept included "International flow of information, a global report and analysis", "The new international economic order: links between economics and communications", and "Mass communication and the advertising industry". Preparations for a historical survey of documents dealing with a new information order were in progress, as were preparations for a second (1986) round table on the topic to be organized jointly by the United Nations and UNESCO.

UNESCO continued to play an important role in the investigation of information flow, particularly between industrialized and developing countries, a situation considered central to the concept of a new information order. Three case-studies were initiated to provide basic data on methodology, and three studies were published: "Global report on international flow of information", "International bibliography on the flow in international news", and "International flow of TV news and programmes". Financial and technical assistance was provided for the development of news collection and dissemination through regional news networks in Africa, Asia, and Latin America and the Caribbean. Technical missions to Africa, Asia and the Arab States investigated ways of improving news agency operations through enhanced telecommunications facilities and computers. In Latin America and the Caribbean, two conferences were held at San José, Costa Rica (15-18 January and 20-22 July): the first reformulated the concept of the Latin American State Radio and Television Association and proposed the creation of a broadcasting union for the region; the second approved the basic documents for launching the Association's activities.

Activities of the Committee on Information. The Committee on Information, in its 1985 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> submitted a set of recommendations on promoting a new world information order, reiterating its call on all countries, the United Nations system and all others concerned to collaborate in establishing a new order based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information and guaranteeing the diversity of sources of information and free access to it. Observing that the principle of sovereign equality among nations extended to information and communication, the Committee stressed the urgent need to change the dependent status of developing countries in that field.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By resolution 40/164 A, the General Assembly approved the recommendations of the Committee on Information, annexed them to the resolution, and urged their full implementation. It requested the Committee, in keeping with its mandate to promote a new information order, to continue to seek the active participation of the United Nations system, in particular UNESCO and ITU, while avoiding overlapping activities.

By resolution 40/164 B, the Assembly, noting that a second round table was being organized by the United Nations and UNESCO for 1986, reaffirmed its strong support for UNESCO and for its efforts to enhance its capabilities to promote the establishment of a new order. It encouraged the UNESCO Director-General to continue the chronological survey of documents dealing with that order and his efforts in the area of information and communication.

UN public information

The fortieth anniversary of the United Nations was prominent among United Nations public information activities in 1985. To observe the occasion, DPI and United Nations information centres around the world mounted a wide-ranging information programme to publicize the goals and accomplishments of the Organization to help solve the world's major problems (see p. 403). Also in 1985, the Secretary-General reported to the Committee on Information on his decision against a United Nations-owned satellite system in favour of an enhanced communications system through leased satellite facilities, expected to have a major impact on United Nations information activities (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Among the 70 recommendations submitted in 1985 by the Committee on Information<sup>(2)</sup> for General Assembly approval were those calling for reiteration of 1984 recommendations approved by the Assembly<sup>(12)</sup> on public information matters and renewal of the Committee's mandate. They also included several on mass communication (see p. 369) and on the proposed new world information and communication order (see above), as well as guidelines on public information policies and activities to be carried out by DPI and its radio and visual services and information centres (see p. 385). Other recommendations concerned JUNC activities (see p. 386), information exchange between the Committee on Information and the Commission on Transnational Corporations, as well as public information on the critical economic situation in Africa (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter III), United Nations decisions on acts of terrorism, the World Disarmament Campaign, human rights violations in the occupied Arab territories, the illegal occupation of Namibia and apartheid policies.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, acting on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/164 A, by recorded vote.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3535(XXX) of 17 December 1975, 31/139 of 16 December 1976, 33/115 A to C of 18 December 1978, 34/181 and 34/182 of 18 December 1979, 35/201 of 16 December 1980, 36/149 B of 16 December 1981, 37/94 B of 10 December 1982, 38/82 B of 15 December 1983 and 39/98 A of 14 December 1984, on questions relating to information,

Recalling article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression and that this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, and article 29, which stipulates that these rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling also articles 19 and 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Declarations of the Sixth and Seventh Conferences of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries held at Havana from 3 to 9 September 1979 and at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983 as well as the Final Documents of the Conference of the Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 26 to 30 January 1984, and the relevant provisions of the Final Political Declaration adopted by the Conference of Ministers for Foreign Affairs of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, in which the importance of the establishment of a new world information and communication order was stressed anew,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling the Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War, adopted on

28 November 1978 by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, as well as the resolutions on information and mass communications adopted by the General Conference at its nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second and twenty-third sessions,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, and those of the Concluding Document of the meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation Europe, held at Madrid from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983.

Recalling also the relevant provisions of the Declaration on the Preparation of Societies for Life in Peace,

Conscious of the need for all countries, the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned to collaborate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order based, inter alia, on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing diversity of sources of information and free access to information, and, in particular, the urgent need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in the field of information and communication, as the principle of sovereign equality among nations extends also to this field, and intended also to strengthen peace and international understanding, enabling all persons to participate effectively in political, economic, social and cultural life and promoting understanding and friendship among all nations and human rights,

Noting the ongoing efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to contribute to the clarification, elaboration and application of the concept of a new world information and communication order and recalling resolutions 4/19 of 27 October 1980, 3.1 of 25 November 1983 and 3.1 of 8 November 1985 adopted by consensus by its General Conference,

Reaffirming that the establishment of a new world information and communication order is linked to the new international economic order and is an integral part of the international development process, and that public information plays an important role in promoting understanding of and support for international co-operation for development,

Emphasizing the role that public information plays in promoting support for universal disarmament and in increasing awareness of the relationship between disarmament and development among as broad a public as possible,

Reaffirming the primary role which the General Assembly is to play in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information, and recognizing the central and important role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the field of information and communication, and that the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned should give that organization adequate support and assistance in the field of information and communication,

Recognizing the importance of the co-ordination and co-operation between the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and its International Programme for the Development of Communication in the promotion of the establishment of a new world information and communication order,

Fully aware and cognizant of the important contribution which the mass media world-wide can make in enhancing and strengthening peace, deepening international understanding, promoting justice, equality, national independence, development, the exercise of human rights and the establishment of a new world information and communication order,

Noting with satisfaction that, during the observance of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, the lasting values of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations were reconfirmed as a reflection of the high hopes which peoples of the world continue to repose in the United Nations as the most appropriate framework for multilateral co-operation and the pursuit of shared objectives,

Recalling with satisfaction the resolution adopted by the General Assembly, acting as United Nations World Conference for the International Youth Year,

Emphasizing its full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication, which constitutes an important contribution in the development of the infrastructures of communication in the developing countries,

Conscious that the transfer of technology in the field of information and communication to developing countries is vital for the acceleration of efforts towards the establishment of a new world information and communication order based on justice, freedom and equity,

Expressing its satisfaction with the successful co-ordination and co-operation displayed by the Department of Public Information with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, as well as with news agencies of other developing and developed countries, and convinced that such efforts have contributed significantly to progress towards a new world information and communication order,

Taking note of the implementation by the Department of Public Information of those parts relevant to public information of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, as well as those of the Declaration and the Programme of Action contained in the Final Document adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia at its extraordinary plenary meetings, held at Vienna from 3 to 7 June 1985, in order to develop and further strengthen the dissemination of information regarding the struggle for independence of the people of Namibia, with a view to reaching the broadest possible public by means of more systematic and better co-ordinated information,

Taking note also of the implementation by the Department of Public Information of those parts of the Programme of Action for the Achievement of Palestinian Rights relevant to information, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/49 C of 11 December 1984,

Expressing its satisfaction with the work of the Committee on Information as reflected in its report,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General on questions relating to information,

Taking note with satisfaction of the report of the Director-General of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

1. Approves the report of the Committee on Information and the recommendations contained in paragraph 139 of that report and annexed to the present resolution, as adopted, and affirms the requests and appeals reproduced therein as well as the provisions of General Assembly resolution 39/98 A and urges their full implementation;

2. Reaffirms the mandate given to the Committee on Information by the General Assembly in its resolution 34/182;

3. Requests the Committee on Information, keeping in mind its mandate, the essential tasks of which are to continue to examine the policies and activities of the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat, and to continue to promote the establishment of a new, more just and effective world information and 'communication order, to continue to seek the co-operation and active participation of all organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the International Telecommunication Union, while taking all possible steps to avoid any overlapping of activities on this subject;

4. Reaffirms its strong support for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, its Constitution and the ideals reflected therein, its activities and for its efforts to further enhance its capabilities with a view to promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order

5. Reiterates its appeal to Member States, to the information and communication media, both public and private, as well as to non-governmental organizations, to disseminate more widely objective and better balanced information about the activities of the United Nations and, inter alia, about the efforts of the developing countries towards their economic, social and cultural progress and about the efforts of the international community to achieve international social justice and economic development, international peace and security, the promotion of disarmament and the progressive elimination of international inequities and tensions; and the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the right of peoples to self-determination; such dissemination being aimed at achieving a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system in all its purposes and endeavours;

6. Calls upon the Department of Public Information to continue to give, as a matter of high priority, its full support in promoting and publicizing the noble goals and accomplishments of the United Nations, as the most appropriate forum for multilateral co-operation and for pooling efforts of States to contribute to the quest for a climate of mutual trust, political dialogue and negotiated solutions to the outstanding problems;

7. Urges the Department of Public Information to give the widest possible dissemination of information pertaining to the acute world economic problems, particularly to the critical economic situation in Africa, the severe economic difficulties of the least developed countries and the external debt of developing countries, as well as to the adverse effect of the international economic environment on these countries, taking into account the views expressed during the fortieth session on these issues;

8. Urges the Department of Public Information to strengthen its co-operation with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies and, in particular, to ensure that its daily dispatches are received by the United Nations Office at Geneva and the United Nations Headquarters in New York;

9. Urges the Department of Public Information to take all necessary measures to ensure the dissemination of appropriate information on the guidelines for further planning and suitable follow-up in the field of youth;

10. Urges the Department of Public Information to adequately disseminate in its programmes and information activities the positive results of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, aimed at the elimination of discrimination and the promotion of the role of women world-wide;

11. Requests the Department of Public Information to continue its follow-up programmes in further implementation of those parts relevant to public information of the Paris Declaration on Namibia and the Programme of Action on Namibia, as well as of the Declaration and Programme of Action contained in the Final Document adopted by the United Nations Council for Namibia, and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986;

12. Requests the Department of Public Information to cover adequately policies and practices which violate the principles of international law relative to belligerent occupation, in particular the Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, of 12 August 1949, wherever they occur, especially those policies and practices which frustrate the attainment and exercise of the inalienable and national legitimate rights of the Palestinian people in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the United Nations, and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986;

13. Urges the Department of Public Information and the mass media world-wide, pursuant to General Assembly resolutions 34/182 and 35/201, to intensify their activities of dissemination of information with regard to the policies and practices of apartheid, taking due account of recent measures and official censorship imposed upon the local and international media related to all aspects of this issue;

14. Reiterates the recommendation contained in its resolution 35/201 that additional resources for the Department of Public Information should be commensurate, as appropriate, with the increase in the activities of the United Nations which the Department covers for the purpose of public information, and that the Secretary-General should provide such resources to the Department to this end where needed;

15. Requests the Department of Public Information to contribute more effectively, through its training programmes, to the development of human, managerial and technical resources of the mass media from developing countries;

16. Reaffirms the importance of the rapidly increasing role of the United Nations public information programmes in fostering public understanding and support of United Nations activities and requests the Department of Public Information to consider the recommendations contained in the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on publications policy and practice in the United Nations system and to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986;

17. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Information, at its substantive session in 1986, on the implementation of all the recommendations contained in the Committee's report and annexed to the present resolution;

18. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution and, in particular, on the implementation of all the recommendations contained in the annex to the present resolution;

19. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the restructuring of the Radio and Visual Services Division of the Department of Public Information, and requests that additional information be submitted to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986;

20. Requests the Committee on Information to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

21. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Questions relating to information".

ANNEX

Recommendations of the Committee on Information

1. The recommendations of the Committee on Information approved by the General Assembly in resolution 39/98 A of 14 December 1984, as well as all the provisions of the resolution, should be reiterated, taking into account the views expressed by delegations at the 100th plenary meeting of the thirty-ninth session of the Assembly on 14 December 1984. Those recommendations should be implemented in full, and the Secretary-General should be requested to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986 on measures taken for the implementation of those recommendations and provisions pending implementation.

2. The mandate of the Committee on Information, as set forth in General Assembly resolution 34/182 of 18 December 1979 and reaffirmed in Assembly resolutions 35/201 of 16 December 1980, 36/149 B of 16 December 1981, 37/94 B of 10 December 1982, 38/82 B of 15 December 1983 and 39/98 A of 14 December 1984, should be renewed.

Promotion of the establishment of a new, more just and more effective world information and communication order intended to strengthen peace and international understanding and based on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information

3. All countries, the United Nations system as a whole, and all others concerned, should collaborate in the establishment of a new world information and communication order based, inter alia, on the free circulation and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, guaranteeing diversity of sources of information and free access to information and, in particular, the urgent need to change the dependent status of the developing countries in the field of information and communication, as the principle of sovereign equality among nations extends also to this field, and intended also to strengthen peace and international understanding, enabling all persons to participate effectively in political, economic, social and cultural life and promoting understanding and friendship among all nations and human rights.

4. The ongoing efforts of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to contribute to the clarification, elaboration and application of the concept of a new world information and communication order should be noted. In this regard, resolutions 4/19 of 27 October 1980 and 3.1 of 25 November 1983, which the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization adopted by consensus, should be recalled.

5. Under the current international climate of political conflicts and economic disorders, the Committee on Information, fully aware and cognizant of the important contribution which the mass media world-wide can make in enhancing and strengthening peace, deepening international understanding, promoting justice, equality, national independence, development, the exercise of human rights and the establishment of a new world information and communication order, recommends that the General Assembly address appeals to the following:

(a) The international media, in order to obtain their support for the efforts of the international community towards global development and, in particular, for the efforts of the developing countries to achieve economic, social and cultural progress;

(b) The United Nations system as a whole to co-operate in a concerted manner, through its information services, in promoting the development activities of the United Nations and, in particular, the improvement of the conditions of the lives of the peoples of the developing countries.

Such appeals should be aimed at achieving a more comprehensive and realistic image of the activities and potential of the United Nations system in all its endeavours, in accordance with the purposes of the Charter of the United Nations.

6. Article 19 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which provides that everyone has the right to freedom of opinion and expression and that this right includes freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers, and article 29, which stipulates that these rights and freedoms may in no case be exercised contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, should be recalled.

7. Aware of the existence of structural imbalance in the international distribution of news affecting the two-way flow of news, the Committee on Information recommends that urgent attention should be given to the elimination of existing inequalities in and all other obstacles to the free flow and wider and better balanced dissemination of information, ideas and knowledge by, inter alia, diversifying the sources of information as a step towards free and more balanced information and the promotion of the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

8. The Committee on Information recommends that the need be stressed to ensure and promote the access of the developing countries to communication technology, including communication satellites, modern electronic information systems, informatics and other advanced information and communication facilities with a view to improving their own information and communication systems corresponding to the specific conditions prevailing in each country.

9. The Committee on Information, while expressing satisfaction with the successful co-ordination and co-operation displayed by the Department of Public Information of the Secretariat with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, as well as with regional news agencies of developing countries, recommends that the Department of Public Information continue to strengthen this co-operation as it constitutes a concrete step towards a more just and equitable world flow of information, thus contributing to the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

10. The Department of Public Information should be urged to monitor, as appropriate, important meetings of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, as well as of regional intergovernmental organizations devoted to information and communication questions, in particular the fourth Conference of the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies to be held at Havana in 1986.

11. With regard to its co-operation with the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies as well as with the regional news agencies in developing countries, the Department of Public Information should co-operate, as appropriate, with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in assisting that organization, within existing resources, in the following activities:

(a) Preparation and implementation of a plan of integrated communication network and regional data and communication centres;

(b) Provision of facilities for meetings on data and communication exchange of the public information bodies of the non-aligned countries.

12. The United Nations system as a whole, as well as the developed countries, should be urged to co-operate in a concerted manner with the developing countries towards strengthening the information and communication infrastructures of the latter countries, in accordance with the priorities attached to such areas by the developing countries, with a view to enabling them to develop their own information and communication policies freely and independently and in the light of their history, social values and cultural traditions. In this regard, Full support for the International Programme for the Development of Communication, which constitutes an important step in the development of these infrastructures, should always be emphasized.

13. The United Nations system should constantly promote the creation of a climate of confidence in relations among States, as a means of easing tension and facilitating the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

14. Reaffirming the primary role that the General Assembly is to play in elaborating, co-ordinating and harmonizing United Nations policies and activities in the field of information and recognizing the central and important role of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in the field of information and communication, the Committee on Information recommends that the United Nations system as a whole and all others concerned should be urged to give that organization adequate support and assistance in the field of information and communication. The Department of Public Information, in particular, should co-operate more regularly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, especially at the working level, with a view to maximizing the contributions of the Department to the efforts of that organization in promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order and to disseminating as widely as possible information on the activities of that organization in this respect.

15. The consolidated study contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the contributions, effects and levels of co-ordination between the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, its International Programme for the Development of Communication and the International Telecommunication Union in support of the development of information and communication infrastructures in the developing countries should be noted.

16. Recalling its recommendation, as endorsed by the General Assembly in its resolution 39/98 A, the Committee on Information recommends that the Secretary-General should be requested to expedite the convening, jointly with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, of a Round Table on a New World Information and Communication Order.

17. The United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, should aim at providing all possible support and assistance to the developing countries, within existing resources, with regard to their interests and needs in the field of information and to actions already adopted within the United Nations system, including, in particular:

(a) Assistance to developing countries in training journalists and technical personnel and in setting up appropriate educational institutions and research facilities;

(b) Granting of favourable conditions to provide access to developing countries to such communication technology as is requisite for the establishment of a national information and communication system and corresponding to the specific situation of the country concerned;

(c) Creation of conditions that will gradually enable the developing countries to produce the communication technology suited to their national needs, as well as the necessary programme material, specifically for radio and television broadcasting, by using their own resources;

(d) Assistance in establishing telecommunication links at subregional, regional and interregional levels, especially among developing countries, free from conditions of any kind.

18. All the information activities of the Department of Public Information should be guided by and carried out in conformity with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and the aspiration for a new world information and communication order, as well as conform to the consensus reached among States in resolutions 4/19, 4/21 and 4/22 of 27 October 1980, adopted by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and 3.1 of 25 November 1983 adopted by the General Conference on Major Programme III.

19. The Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that the activities of the Department of Public Information, as the focal point of the public information tasks of the United Nations, are strengthened, keeping in view the principles of the Charter of the United Nations and along the lines established in the pertinent resolutions of the General Assembly and the recommendations of the Committee on Information, so as to ensure a more coherent coverage of and a better knowledge about the United Nations and its work, especially in its priority areas, such as those stated in section III, paragraph 1, of Assembly resolution 35/201, including international peace and security, disarmament, peace-keeping and peace-making operations, decolonization, the promotion of human rights, the struggle against apartheid and racial discrimination, economic, social and development issues, the integration of women in the struggle for peace and development, the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order, the work of the United Nations Council for Namibia and programmes on women and youth.

20. The relevant provisions of the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, signed at Helsinki on 1 August 1975, and those of the Concluding Document of the meeting of representatives of the participating States of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, held at Madrid from 11 November 1980 to 9 September 1983, should be recalled.

21. The Final Documents of the Conference of Ministers of Information of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Jakarta from 26 to 30 January 1984, should be recalled.

22. The Department of Public Information should be requested to continue its cooperation with the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries as well as with intergovernmental organizations and regional organizations with a view to promoting a new world information and communication order.

23. The Conference of Ministers of Information of States members of the Organization of African Unity, held at Addis Ababa in March 1985, which expressed its conviction of the importance of a new world information and communication order, should be noted.

24. In the light of the grave economic situation prevailing in Africa, the Secretary-General should be requested to ensure that the Department of Public Information does its utmost in bringing to the attention of the international community the real dimensions of the plight of the African people and the tremendous efforts of the African countries, with a view to increasing its contribution towards alleviating this human tragedy.

25. The relevant resolution on the question relating to information of the Fourth Islamic Summit Conference, held at Casablanca from 16 to 19 January 1984, should be recalled.

Continuation of examination of United Nations public information policies and activities in the light of the evolution of international relations, particularly during the past two decades, and of the imperatives of the establishment of the new international economic order and of a new world information and communication order

26. In connection with the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, the Department of Public Information should be urged to give appropriate support to the Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations in promoting and publicizing the noble goals and accomplishments of the United Nations as a major forum for pooling efforts of States to contribute to the solution of vital world problems.

27. The Committee on Information again stresses that the Department of Public Information should maintain editorial independence and accuracy in all material produced by the Department and should promote, to the greatest extent possible, an informed understanding of the work and purposes of the United Nations among the peoples of the world. The Department should ensure that its output contains objective and equitable information about issues before the Organization, reflecting divergent opinions where they occur.

28. The Department of Public Information should continue to ensure that the daily dispatches of the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies that it receives are appropriately utilized in the performance of the public information tasks of the United Nations:

(a) With a view to further promotion and development of functional and mutually beneficial co-operation between the Department and the Pool, the existing arrangements in the Department for the conduct of this co-operation should be established on a more regular basis;

(b) In view of the successful joint coverage by the Pool and the Department of important conferences and other events within the United Nations system, this practice should be continued and further strengthened;

(c) The Department should consider the possibility of utilizing the dispatches received from the Pool to establish a data base on the information and communication facilities in the non-aligned countries.

29. In connection with its annual training programme for journalists and broadcasters from developing countries, the Department of Public Information should continue to allocate the last week of the programme for a visit by them to one of the developing countries that expresses readiness to receive them for the purpose of acquainting themselves with the ways in which information on the United Nations is received and utilized.

30. The Secretary-General should be requested once again to make available to the Committee on Information, as soon as possible, a comprehensive report on the outcome of the activities of the International Telecommunication Union with regard to the World Communications Year.

31. The exchange of information between the Committee on Information and the Commission on Transnational Corporations on matters pertaining to the mandate of the Committee should again be encouraged.

32. The assessment contained in the report of the Secretary-General relating to the acquisition by the United Nations of its own communications satellite in conformity with recommendation 36 made by the Committee on Information to the General Assembly at its thirty-seventh session should be noted, and it would be appropriate to re-examine the question of the acquisition of such a satellite should circumstances permit.

33. The attention of the pertinent organs of the General Assembly and of the United Nations system as a whole should be drawn to the findings of the International Telecommunication Union set forth in its report, especially as concerns the problem of the geostationary orbit reflected, inter alia, in paragraphs 33 and 49 of that report, taking into account the needs of the developing countries.

34. The Committee on Information recommends the rejection of the use of the mass media, especially radio broadcasting, to disseminate false or distorted reports as an instrument of hostile propaganda against the sovereignty of other States. In this regard, it stresses that the media should contribute to the fostering of peace, mutual respect, non-interference and self-determination.

35. With regard to the improvement of communication infrastructures, the Committee on Information draws attention to the success attained by the ARABSAT, BRASILSAT, INSAT-1B, MORELOS and PALAPA satellite systems, designed to promote national and regional integration. In this connection, it endorses the execution of satellite projects such as CONDOR by the Andean group of countries. The United Nations and the specialized agencies, in particular those in the financial sector, should support such activities and initiatives.

36. The Department of Public Information should co-operate closely with the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies to organize a workshop, within existing resources, in 1985 for the familiarization of news agencies of developing countries with modern technology of relevance to news agencies and for the standardization of teaching methods and syllabuses and to produce training manuals in various languages for the training centres of the Pool, and should report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986 on progress made to this effect.

37. In order to enhance awareness and understanding of the lofty objectives of the United Nations, the Department of Public Information should endeavour to promote teaching in the educational institutions of Member States about the structure, principles and aims of the Organization in conformity with the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council. In order to implement this recommendation, the Department should continue to organize, on a yearly basis, a fellowship programme for educators.

38. The Department of Public Information should be requested, in accordance with the relevant United Nations resolutions, to continue to cover adequately the Israeli policies and practices which violate and affect the human rights of the populations in Arab territories occupied since June 1967, including Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, especially those policies and practices which impede the attainment and exercise of the inalienable national rights of the Palestinian people, and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986.

39. The Secretary-General should be requested once again to maintain the functions of the Middle East/Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes, to strengthen and expand this unit to enable it to function in an effective manner and to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986 on the measures taken in implementation of this recommendation.

40. In view of the importance of United Nations broadcasting for the European region, further steps should be taken to maintain and enhance the functions of the European Unit in the Radio Service, within existing resources.

41. Taking into account the needs of numerous radio producers and journalists who use French as a working language, and the role of the "blue notes" in the preparation of radio programmes of the United Nations, the Committee on Information requests the Secretary-General to instruct the Radio and Visual Services Division of the Department of Public Information to produce a daily edition, in French, of the messages concerning the activities of the United Nations.

42. The Department of Public Information should be requested anew to use the official languages of the General Assembly adequately in its documents and audio-visual documentation and to arrange accordingly for an appropriate number of staff in order better to inform the public about the activities of the United Nations. It should also make available to the French Language Production Section of the Press and Publications Division of the Department, within existing resources, the means that will allow it consistently to distribute press releases in sufficient quantity to satisfy the needs of the numerous journalists and delegations that use French as a working language.

43. United Nations information centres should continue to assist press and information media in their respective countries in accordance with the mandate given by the General Assembly and, inter alia, promote the establishment of a new world information and communication order.

44. While the co-operation between the Department of Public Information and the United Nations Development Programme in the field should be promoted to the maximum extent, it is also important to bear in mind the intrinsic functions of the United Nations information centres as distinct from those of the United Nations development activities. The information centres should redouble their efforts to publicize the activities and achievements of operational activities for development, including those of the United Nations Development Programme, taking into account the priorities determined by the General Assembly.

45. The report of the Secretary-General concerning measures to improve the effectiveness of United Nations information centres should be further noted and the Secretary-General should be encouraged to implement the proposals made by him therein, within existing resources.

46. The United Nations information centres should intensify direct and systematic communication exchange with local information and educational communities in a mutually beneficial way, in accordance with the priorities of the General Assembly and taking into account the areas of particular interest to host countries,

47. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 39/98 A, by which the Assembly acceded to the request of the Government of Benin for the opening of a United Nations information centre at Cotonou, the Secretary-General should be requested to continue negotiations with the authorities in Benin for the rapid opening of the centre, within existing resources, and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986.

48. Taking into account the request of the Government of Poland for the opening of a United Nations information centre at Warsaw, the Secretary-General should be requested to continue to take appropriate steps for the establishment of the centre, within existing resources, and to report thereon to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986.

49. The Department of Public Information should disseminate information concerning the decisions of the United Nations dealing with acts of terrorism in all its forms. In this regard, all the relevant United Nations resolutions and the statement made by the Secretary-General at San Francisco on 26 June 1985 should be recalled.

50. The Department of Public Information should focus on and give wider coverage to the economic, social and development activities of the United Nations system aimed at achieving a more comprehensive image of the activities and potential of the system, taking into account the priorities set by the General Assembly, particularly in the light of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations.

51. Note should be taken of the assessment contained in the report of the Secretary-General of the experimental daily short-wave radio broadcasts from Headquarters, pending the submission to the Committee on Information of the final report on the results of the experiment.

52. The Secretary-General should continue his efforts to develop a system for monitoring and evaluating the effectiveness of the activities of the Department of Public Information, particularly in the priority areas determined by the General Assembly.

53. Future reports of the Department of Public Information to the Committee on Information, in particular on new programmes or on the expansion of existing programmes, should contain:

(a) More adequate information on the output of the Department in respect of each topic included in its work programme, which forms the basis of its programme budget;

(b) The costs of the activities undertaken in respect of each topic;

(c) More adequate information on target audiences, end-use of the Department's products and analysis of feedback data received by the Department;

(d) The Department's evaluation of the effectiveness of its different programmes and activities;

(e) A statement detailing the priority level that the Secretary-General has attached to current or future activities of the Department in documents dealing with such activities.

54. The Department of Public Information should improve, within existing resources, its data-collection procedures with regard to the actual use made by redissemulators of materials distributed by the Department and its information centres and submit a report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986 on progress made in this area.

55. The steps taken by the Department of Public Information in redressing the imbalance in its staff should be noted. The Department should continue to intensify its efforts to that end and the Secretary-General should be requested to take urgent steps to increase the representation of underrepresented developing countries and of other underrepresented groups of countries, especially at the senior levels, in conformity with the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, and to submit a report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986.

56. Member States should be called upon once again to make voluntary contributions to the United Nations Trust Fund for Economic and Social Information.

57. The assessment contained in the report of the Secretary-General on the present system of charging Member States and the media for video tapes, audio tapes and news photographs of important United Nations events should be noted, and the Department of Public Information should report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986 on that subject with a view to reducing appropriately the final cost of these materials and spreading overtime charges legitimately incurred in an equitable way so as to enable the media in the Member States, particularly in the developing countries, to give wider publicity to the aims and activities of the United Nations.

58. The interim report of the Secretary-General entitled "The Department of Public Information as the Focal Point for the Formulation and Implementation of Information Activities of the United Nations" should be noted and the Secretary-General should be requested to submit his final report in the light of the ongoing consultations within the Secretariat on the role of the Department with respect to all information activities of the United Nations. The Committee on Information once again recommends that the proliferation of information units in the Secretariat independent of the Department should be discouraged.

59. The Committee on Information takes note of the report on the review of the distribution of taped radio programmes produced by the Department of Public Information in New York and requests the Department to take steps to improve their distribution and to report to the Committee at its substantive session in 1986 on the implementation of the recommendations contained in that report.

60. The operations of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services (Geneva and New York) as voluntarily funded inter-agency projects reaching specific target audiences in the industrialized countries on international development issues should be continued on a stable financial basis through United Nations participation in these services. As with Development Forum, it is essential that United Nations financial participation, from the regular budget, should be ensured in the next biennium. Furthermore, the Secretary-General should be requested to urge all specialized agencies to make long-term contributions to the financing of these services, thereby stressing their inter-agency character.

61. The Joint United Nations Information Committee, as the essential instrument for inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation in the field of public information, should be further strengthened and given more responsibility for the public information activities of the entire United Nations system.

62. The quality, usefulness and coverage of the daily press release and the weekly news summary issued by the Department of Public Information in all working languages should be further enhanced and improved in view of the important public information tasks that they can perform. Services provided at the Press Section of the Department both for the media and the delegations should be improved. The Department should continue to co-operate closely with and provide assistance to the United Nations Correspondents Association.

63. The Department of Public Information should improve, within existing resources, the timely distribution of its materials to subscribers and United Nations information centres, particularly the UN Chronicle, in all languages, a major source of information on the United Nations to its recipients.

64. The report on the programme and activities of the Joint United Nations Information Committee should be noted, particularly in regard to Development Forum as the only inter-agency publication of the United Nations system that concentrates on development issues, and the Secretary-General should, while continuing his efforts to secure a sound and independent basis for the periodical, make such arrangements as necessary through the regular budget, to ensure its continued publication. The resources of the United Nations system should be pooled in support of Development Forum and Development Business and any attempt in the United Nations system to duplicate the functions performed by these publications should be avoided. All specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system should be urged to contribute to the financing of these system-wide publications, thereby recognizing their inter-agency character.

65. The Secretary-General should continue to ensure that Development Forum retains its editorial policy of intellectual independence, thus enabling this publication to continue to serve as a world-wide forum in which diverse opinions on issues related to economic and social development can be freely expressed.

66. The Secretary-General should be encouraged to continue and intensify his efforts to explore all possibilities of securing the adequate resources for the continuation of the World Newspaper Supplement project.

67. The World Disarmament Campaign should give full consideration to the role of the mass media as the most effective way to promote in world public opinion a climate of understanding, confidence and co-operation conducive to peace and disarmament, the enhancement of human rights and development. Within the World Disarmament Campaign and Disarmament Week, the Department of Public Information should fulfil the role assigned to it by the General Assembly by utilizing its expertise and resources in public information to ensure its maximum effectiveness.

68. The Department of Public Information should be requested to implement fully, within existing resources, the provisions of General Assembly resolution 38/82 B relating to the work programme of the Caribbean Unit and the Secretary-General should be requested to report to the Committee on Information at its substantive session in 1986 on the measures taken in implementation of this recommendation.

69. The conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples at its extraordinary session, held at Tunis from 13 to 17 May 1985 to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration, should be noted. In this regard, the Secretary-General should be requested to intensify his efforts, within existing resources, in order to alert world public opinion against the illegal occupation of Namibia and the policies of apartheid of the régime of South Africa and to continue to disseminate as widely as possible information relating to the struggle of the oppressed peoples of South Africa and Namibia.

70. In view of the concerns expressed by several delegations regarding the possible implications on productivity and effectiveness of the proposed restructuring of the Radio and Visual Services Division and taking into account the necessity of strengthening the Professional staff, the Committee on Information recommends that the Secretary-General be requested to submit a written report on the subject to the General Assembly at its fortieth session. Pending submission of the report and a decision thereon, action on the proposed restructuring should be postponed.

16 December 1985 Meeting 118 121-19-8 (recorded vote)

Approved by Special Political Committee (A/40/1024) by recorded vote (96-18-6), 6 December (meeting 46): draft by Yugoslavia for Group of 77 (A/SPC/40/L.29/Rev.1); agenda item 78.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: SPC 29-39, 45, 46; plenary 118.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory

Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Iceland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Austria, Barbados, Greece, Haiti, Ireland, New Zealand, Spain, Turkey.

Most of the States that explained their votes in the Special Political Committee either found the resolution unacceptable or regretted that it did not qualify the references to a new world information and communication order with a phrase that was seen as "an evolving and continuous process". These included Australia, Austria, Canada, Japan, Luxembourg (for the 10 European Community members, Portugal and Spain), Norway (on behalf also of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Sweden) and the United States. That qualification, Norway said, had been reached by consensus and used in resolutions adopted by the UNESCO General Conference in 1983 and 1985. The United States regarded it as essential to an understanding of the concept of a new order that was not static and could not be codified. While Uruguay felt that the tenth preambular paragraph citing the UNESCO resolutions was a tacit admission of the qualification, Luxembourg said that that single reference would not suffice to make up for the omission. Austria would have liked inclusion of the qualification, whereas Mexico had not, solely to facilitate a consensus.

Paragraphs 1 and 14 also elicited objections. Besides reiterating the Nordic countries' reservations on article 20 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, cited in the third preambular paragraph, Norway said they could not support paragraph 1, as it took no account of the views they had expressed in the Committee on Information, thus tilting the resolution against their fundamental constitutional and political principles. Paragraph 1 was for the same reason unacceptable to Luxembourg, as was paragraph 14, given the repeated calls for economy measures. Through restraint and imagination, rather than additional resources, DPI could achieve maximum efficiency and ensure the wisest possible use of the considerable resources already at its disposal, Luxembourg added. Japan made similar observations. Canada, which also objected to the two paragraphs, pointed out that the Assembly had stated on several occasions that UNESCO played the main role in establishing a new information and communication order; it could thus not support attempts to reopen the debate on that subject when UNESCO had already succeeded in laying the groundwork for a compromise.

The United States said it objected to paragraph 1, calling for implementation of recommendations against which it had voted, as well as paragraph 14. It believed, moreover, that divisive political issues had no place in a resolution on information and therefore could not accept the paragraph on Palestine. It observed that the considerable increase in negative votes indicated that, despite efforts by the Group of 77 developing countries to overcome differences, there had been no real accommodation of the Western countries' main concerns. Argentina, whose vote in favour was without reservation, observed that comparing the voting results with those of 1984 on the same subject could be misleading, for while the current numbers might seem less positive, constructive efforts had nevertheless been made. Turkey said that although it had not been possible to do more to overcome the difficulties encountered, it hoped the spirit of co-operation that prevailed during the negotiations would be demonstrated in the future.

While Austria found encouraging elements in the resolution's tenth preambular paragraph, it could not accept recommendation 34. Uruguay called that recommendation incompatible with the right to freedom of opinion and expression—the corner-stone of all other freedoms.

Albania said its non-participation in the voting was based on its position on the principle of sovereign equality of nations in the field of information and on its support of developing countries' efforts to establish information and communication systems independent of the media of the two super-Powers. It had reservations on the paragraphs referring to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, which it characterized as a farce mounted by the super-Powers to strengthen their zones of influence in Europe.

In the plenary, Colombia expressed its concern that a consensus resolution had not been achieved. It called for greater efforts towards consensus in the next year, saying that in such a delicate matter as a new information order, genuine international co-operation, rather than confrontation, should be sought.

The Assembly took various actions on information dissemination in 1985. It noted that the Secretary-General had made permanent his instructions to the information centres and regional commissions to give wide publicity to the World Disarmament Campaign and to adapt as far as possible United Nations materials to local languages (resolution 40/151 B). It requested that DPI and the United Nations system fully co-operate with the Special Committee against Apartheid and the United Nations Centre against Apartheid in disseminating information on the evils of apartheid, and appealed to Governments, the media, NGOs and individuals to co-operate with the United Nations in that endeavour (40/64 D). The Secretary-General was asked to assist the Special Committee, through DPI and the Centre, in disseminating information on Israeli-South African collaboration (40/64 E). He was also asked to ensure DPI's co-operation with the Division for Palestinian Rights to enable it to cover adequately the various aspects of the Palestine question (40/96 B). DPI was asked, in co-operation with the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, to continue its special information programme on the question for 1986-1987 (40/96 C).

The Assembly asked the Secretary-General to ensure that DPI, in disseminating information on Namibia, followed the policy guidelines laid down by the United Nations Council for Namibia; it asked that DPI assist the Council in implementing its information dissemination programme, in particular specific activities for 1986, so as to mobilize public support for Namibia's independence (40/97 D). It also requested the Secretary-General to continue, through the media at his disposal, to give wide and continuous publicity to the United Nations work on decolonization (40/58). Finally, the Assembly asked him to continue, through DPI, an intensified publicity campaign to inform world public opinion of the military activities in colonial Territories that were impeding implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (decision 40/415).

DPI activities

In 1985, DPI continued to act as a focal point for formulating and implementing United Nations information activities, enhancing and co-ordinating the work of the various media at its disposal, including radio, visual and publications services, and information centres (for details, see below under the respective headings). Conscious of the Committee on Information's concern for the need to underline that role, the Under-Secretary-General for Public Information, in an oral report to the Committee,<sup>(2)</sup> stated that consultations were continuing in the Secretariat that might eventually lead to a Secretariat-wide meeting to consider DPI's role with respect to all United Nations information activities and to editorial policy with respect to intergovernmental bodies.

A number of written reports on improvements to various aspects of DPI operations were before the Committee in response to its 1984 recommendations that had been approved by the General Assembly.<sup>(12)</sup>

The reports included an April 1985 Secretariat note,<sup>(13)</sup> stating that the current system of charging Member States and the media for video tapes, audio tapes and news photographs of important United Nations events was under review by DPI. The exercise was aimed at reducing the costs of those materials to enable the media, particularly in developing countries, to give wider publicity to such events. Another report<sup>(14)</sup> dealt with the improvement of data-collection procedures to monitor and evaluate use made by redissemulators (the media, NGOs, government agencies, schools and universities) of DPI materials—such as taped radio programmes, the World Chronicle television programme, daily short-wave radio programmes, the bimonthly Development Forum and its fortnightly business edition, Development Business—as well as with evaluation of the annual editors' round table and the 1975-1981 fellowship programme for educators. The Secretariat also reported<sup>(15)</sup> on progress made to redress the geographical imbalance in DPI staffing by the recruitment of nationals from developing countries.

As requested by the Assembly in 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> DPI undertook extensive programmes to publicize the World Disarmament Campaign and Disarmament Week (see pp. 92 and 95), the Organization's fortieth anniversary (see p. 403) and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter I). It continued its public information activities relating to the Palestine question (see p. 272), the African crisis (see p. 499) and Namibia (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter III). For the participants of its 1985 training programme for journalists and broadcasters, DPI scheduled a one-week field visit (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 27 October–2 November) to acquaint them with how United Nations information was received and utilized. DPI took other action in response to recommendations relating to radio services and information centres (see below).

The foregoing activities were outlined by the Secretary-General in a September report to the Assembly.<sup>(16)</sup>

Following its review of United Nations public information policies and activities, the Committee on Information, in its 1985 recommendations to the General Assembly,<sup>(2)</sup> stressed anew that DPI should maintain editorial independence and accuracy, promote an informed understanding of the United Nations work and purposes, ensure appropriate use of daily dispatches from the Pool of Non-Aligned News Agencies, and acquaint journalists and broadcasters with how United Nations information was received and used. The Secretary-General should continue efforts to develop a system for monitoring and evaluating DPI activities, especially in priority areas. DPI reports were to contain information on: output and costs for each programme element, target audiences and end-use of products, programme evaluation, and priority levels attached to current and future activities. DPI was to continue to improve data-collection procedures on the use of its materials, to correct the geographical imbalance in its staffing, and to establish a final pricing policy for its audio and video tapes and news photographs.

Recommendations called for a final report on the role of DPI as a focal point for all United Nations information activities and discouraged the proliferation of independent information units within the Secretariat. Others called for improvement of the daily press releases and the weekly news summary, of services to the media and the delegations in general, and of the timely distribution of materials, particularly the UN Chronicle, to subscribers and information centres.

Radio and visual services

In 1985, a proposal was put forward to the General Assembly to restructure the Radio and Visual Services Division of DPI into two divisions, the Visual Services Division and the Radio Services Division. The restructuring was proposed in view of the differences in technique of the two media involved. The operations of the two services were essentially separate, and, as a rule, their staffs were not easily interchangeable. It was envisaged that the proposed restructuring would enable DPI better to complement national and international broadcasting in the production of radio and audio-visual materials, and to ensure more effective management of each of these two expanding activities.

The proposal was included in the proposed programme budget for the 1986-1987 biennium, and was described in a report by the Secretary-General<sup>(17)</sup> submitted in response to a 1985 recommendation of the Committee on Information, later approved by the General Assembly in resolution 40/164 A.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) had no objection to the financial consequences of the restructuring, provided that the proposal was accepted by the Assembly.<sup>(18)</sup> The Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC)<sup>(19)</sup> recommended that the Secretary-General, in arriving at a decision, should take into account the views expressed by CPC members.

As requested by CPC in 1983<sup>(20)</sup> and by the Committee on Information in 1984,<sup>(21)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee a report<sup>(22)</sup> reviewing the distribution of United Nations taped radio programmes to determine their timeliness and utilization, covering 49 radio programmes (in 20 languages) distributed on tape to 1,156 addresses in some 160 countries; an average of 11,434 tapes and cassettes had been sent out each month. Of the questionnaires sent, 351 were returned in time for use in the review. About 66 per cent of respondents reported receiving their programmes regularly and on time for broadcasting. Of the 49 taped programmes, 27 were reported as being broadcast in their entirety; most of the remainder were excerpted for broadcast. No mention was made at all of 12 programmes.

The survey revealed the need for: a rational global pattern for distribution; procedures for changing or introducing programme titles, and notifying users; a centralized and computerized mailing list; and systems for determining the speediest channel of delivery, for marking each reel or cassette as to content and specifications, and for expediting dispatch. There was need for co-ordination between the information centres, as channels for distribution, and with the Radio Service, and for close liaison with users, including promotion.

As called for by the Committee in 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretariat, in an April 1985 note,<sup>(23)</sup> reported that DPI was conducting an experiment to determine whether daily short-wave radio programmes from United Nations Headquarters could attract a significant number of listeners during the inter-Assembly period. Begun on 4 February for six months, the experiment was limited to Africa (except for the southern region). Using rented facilities from the Voice of America, news and documentary feature programmes were being broadcast in English and French for half an hour each, five days a week. To stimulate feedback, the experiment had been preceded by a broad publicity effort in the pilot region. The results of the experiment were to be submitted to the Committee in 1986.

Also, as recommended by the Committee in 1983,<sup>(24)</sup> the Secretary-General reported<sup>(16)</sup> that the Asian Unit of the Radio Service had undertaken radio programming in Bengali and Indonesian on a weekly basis.

In its 1985 recommendations approved by Assembly resolution 40/164 A, the Committee<sup>(2)</sup> renewed its request to maintain the functions of the Middle East and Arabic Unit as the producer of Arabic television and radio programmes, and to strengthen and expand the Unit. It called for further enhancing the European Unit in the Radio Service and for the production of a daily edition in French of messages concerning United Nations activities. DPI should be requested anew to use adequately the official languages of the Assembly in its documents and audio-visual documentation and be given the means to distribute sufficient press releases in French to meet the needs of journalists and delegations that use French.

UN information centres and services

In 1985, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(16)</sup> that DPI, in response to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(12)</sup> had begun consultations with Benin and Poland on the opening of information centres at Cotonou and Warsaw through redeployment of resources. In response to 1983 requests,<sup>(24)</sup> it reopened the Centre at Jakarta, Indonesia, on 20 August, and pursued consultations with Cameroon and Burundi on their requests for full-time directors for the centres in their capitals.

The Committee on Information made a series of recommendations in 1985<sup>(22)</sup> concerning information centres. These called for the centres to continue to assist press and information media in promoting the establishment of a new world information and communication order, to redouble efforts to publicize the achievements of United Nations operational activities for development, and to intensify communication exchange with local information and educational communities. The Secretary-General should continue negotiations for opening centres at Cotonou and Warsaw. The Committee also recommended that the 1984 report of the Secretary-General on measures to improve the centres' effectiveness<sup>(25)</sup> should be further noted and that he should be encouraged to implement them within existing resources.

These recommendations were approved by Assembly resolution 40/164 A.

Yearbook of the United Nations

ACABQ consideration. In 1985, ACABQ<sup>(18)</sup> examined a provision for continued temporary assistance to reduce the backlog in the publication of the Yearbook of the United Nations, included in the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 for DPI. The provision called for continuation of 24 work-months each of general temporary assistance at the P-3 and General Service levels.

ACABQ noted that a report on adherence to the production schedule outlined by the Secretary-General in 1983<sup>(26)</sup> revealed a failure to reduce the backlog; moreover, delay in production had increased, due mainly to the decision to have the Yearbook staff draft the texts (beginning with the 1981 edition), instead of editing and revising departmental submissions, and to widening the scope of debate coverage. ACABQ regarded these initiatives as premature. Noting that the backlog would not be entirely eliminated until June 1995, ACABQ said such delay was unacceptable and felt that the Yearbook must be issued on a timely basis if it was to be used more widely by the general public.

ACABQ therefore recommended that DPI issue abbreviated editions until the backlog had been eliminated. It was of the opinion that neither the quality nor the value of the Yearbook as an objective reference work need be diminished as a result, provided that care was taken, inter alia, to supply sufficient references to more detailed sources of information. Subject to its observations, ACABQ recommended acceptance of the request for temporary assistance and asked the Secretary-General to submit to it in 1987 a further report on the implementation of its recommendation for abbreviated editions.

Report of the Secretary-General. In a November 1985 report,<sup>(27)</sup> the Secretary-General reviewed the current format of the Yearbook with a view to developing a new format to make the book more usable and accessible. Submitted in response to a 1983 General Assembly request,<sup>(28)</sup> the report examined the purposes which the Yearbook was intended to serve, analysed four different formats to determine which would best fulfil those purposes and discussed possible changes of content and presentation within the selected format. The report also described several changes introduced on an experimental basis in the 1981 edition and those retained for the 1982 edition.

The review led to the following conclusions. The three-guiding elements of the format—organization of information to permit ready retrieval, comprehensiveness implying objective recording of United Nations activities, and comprehensibility for a non-specialist—remained valid. A format essentially similar to the current one should be retained, and the submission of texts by substantive departments should be reinstituted.

The Secretary-General proposed that the ACABQ recommendation for abbreviated editions be carried out, beginning with the 1983 edition, until the backlog was eliminated, while retaining a format similar to that of the 1982 edition.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December 1985, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted section I of resolution 40/252 on questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the 1986-1987 biennium.

Yearbook of the United Nations

[The General Assembly,]

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General and the relevant observations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions as contained in paragraphs 27.35 to 27.43 of chapter II of its first report on the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Concurs with the observations of the Advisory Committee as contained in paragraphs 27.42 and 27.43 of its report;
3. Decides that the Yearbook of the United Nations shall be issued in abbreviated editions until such time as the backlog in its publication has been eliminated;

General Assembly resolution 40/252, section I

18 December 1985 Meeting 122 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/40/1069) without objection, 18 November (meeting 39); oral proposal by ACABQ Chairman: agenda item 116.

Co-ordination in the UN system

JUNIC activities. The Joint United Nations Information Committee, the essential instrument for inter-agency co-ordination and co-operation in public information in the United Nations system—charged also with elaborating longer-term indicative planning and joint action—held its twelfth session at Rome, Italy, from 16 to 19 April 1985.<sup>(29)</sup>

At that session, JUNC discussed the work of the Committee on Information in 1984 and subsequent developments in the General Assembly on information questions, reviewed the public information aspects of the critical situation in Africa and approved several recommendations aimed at co-ordinating information activities and ceremonies in observance of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations (see p. 403). It decided to inform the World Bank of its concern over the Bank's decision to launch a new subscription service, the International Business Opportunities Service, which could compete with Development Business, the business edition of Development Forum.

The role, function and place of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services (Geneva and New York) were examined, with a view to strengthening their institutional framework. JUNC approved most of the recommendations of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) for a common information strategy for the United Nations system.

Other topics discussed concerned: JUNC participation in Expo '85 (Tsukuba, Japan) and Expo '86 (Vancouver, Canada); the possibility of incorporating special training courses/seminars on development issues in the 1986 United Nations Staff Development Programme; the recommendations of the JUNC Ad Hoc Working Group on Audio-Visual Matters at its 15 April meeting and the continued publication of the newsletter on audio-visual matters, Playback; recent and planned meetings of a consortium of some 26 national broadcasting networks on "Agenda for a Small Planet", a series of television films on subjects of special importance to the international community; continuance of reportage missions; and improvement of the roster of journalists taking part in United Nations-organized media events.

JUNC approved its plan of action for 1986-1987, excepting a proposal that, from 1986, members commit 1 per cent of their public information budgets to finance agreed joint projects.

The action plan included such projects as publication of Development Forum; maintenance of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services; development education; meetings to agree on co-operative actions with information services of industrialized countries; ensuring a unified United Nations presence at international expositions; audio-visual activities; assistance in development-support communication planning and activities; and system-wide public information on international years and special events. Other projects concerned joint inter-agency activities on the emergency situation in Africa; development of the third phase of "Agenda for a Small Planet", addressing disarmament; follow-up of the recommendations of the 1982 JUNC report on public perceptions of the United Nations system,<sup>(30)</sup> as endorsed by the Committee on Information,<sup>(31)</sup> aimed at improving monitoring and response to the media; implementation of a common strategy to reinvigorate support for development assistance and United Nations operational activities; and joint reportage missions.

Action by the Committee on Information. The main issues dealt with by JUNC at its April session were reviewed by the Committee on Information<sup>(2)</sup> in June. The Committee recommended to the General Assembly that JUNC be given more responsibility for the public information activities of the entire United Nations system, and that operation of the Non-Governmental Liaison Services and of Development Forum be ensured through support from the regular budget and through a pooling of system-wide resources. The Committee also called for securing adequate resources for the continuation of the World Newspaper Supplement project.

These recommendations were approved by the Assembly in resolution 40/164 A.

ACC decision. Following consideration of the JUNC report, ACC, on 29 October,<sup>(32)</sup> expressed the wish that consultations be pursued with the World Bank with a view to continuing assistance for the production of Development Forum, while obviating competition for subscriptions to the Bank's International Business Opportunities Service and to Development Business, the main source of financial support for Development Forum.

Departmental News Service

On 18 December 1985, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, on the Fifth Committee's recommendation, section XI of resolution 40/252.

News Service of the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs

[The General Assembly...]

Decides to maintain for 1986 the current staffing resources of the News Service of the Department of Political and Security Council Affairs pending consideration by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and the General Assembly of the Secretary-General's report on the evaluation of the News Service;

General Assembly resolution 40/252, Section XI

18 December 1985 Meeting 122 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/40/1069) without objection, 14 December (meeting 651; oral proposal by Trinidad and Tobago, orally amended by Sweden; agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers GA 40th session: 5th Committee 28, 62, 65; plenary 122.

The oral amendment by Sweden limited the action to 1986.

Earlier, an oral proposal by the United Kingdom—that the staff allocated to the News Service revert to the original level of seven posts pending consideration by CPC and the Assembly in 1986 of a study currently under way—was rejected by a recorded vote of 38 to 19, with 27 abstentions. The Committee did not take action on an oral proposal by Nigeria to request the Secretary-General to ensure the editorial integrity, objectivity, balanced reflection of developments relevant to the maintenance of international peace and security, and operational efficiency of the News Service by including more information sources from developing countries, and to provide guidelines for the operation of the Service.

Radiation effects

Pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(1)</sup> the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation continued its work, including its co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources. It also continued to review the main problems in the field of radiation.

At its thirty-fourth session (Vienna, Austria, 10-14 June 1985),<sup>(2)</sup> the Committee's discussions were based on a number of scientific documents on topics in three main areas: physics, biology and genetics. The topics in physics were on natural radiation sources including those technologically modified; exposures from nuclear explosions and from the production of nuclear-weapon materials; current exposures received globally from the production of nuclear power and the predicted radiological impact of the nuclear fuel cycle up to the year 2050; and medical irradiation. In biology, they included radiation-induced cancer; biological effects of pre-natal irradiation; early effects of high radiation doses; and scientific uncertainties associated with the assessment of radiation risk per unit dose, mostly somatic. The various topics in genetics were related to the hereditary effects of radiation.

The discussions aimed at improving the documents that were to serve as background material for future Committee reports to the Assembly. Since the reports' quality and completeness depended on the availability of information on the topics dealt with, the Committee renewed its call on Member States, United Nations organizations and other international and national scientific bodies to make such information available.

In carrying out its activities, the Committee continued to receive co-operation from the United Nations Environment Programme, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Health Organization, as well as from two scientific organizations: the International Commission on Radiation Units and Measurements, and the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, acting without vote on the recommendation of the Special Political Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/160.

Effects of atomic radiation

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 913(X) of 3 December 1955, by which it established the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, and its subsequent resolutions on the subject, including resolution 39/94 of 14 December 1984, by which it, inter alia, requested the Scientific Committee to continue its work,

Taking note with appreciation of the report of the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation, Reaffirming the desirability of the Scientific Committee continuing its work,

Concerned about the potentially harmful effects on present and future generations, resulting from the levels of radiation to which man is exposed,

Conscious of the continued need to examine and compile information about atomic and ionizing radiation and to analyse its effects on man and his environment,

Bearing in mind the decision of the Scientific Committee to submit, as soon as the relevant studies are completed, shorter reports with scientific supporting documents on the specialized topics mentioned by the Committee,

1. Commends the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation for the valuable contribution it has been making in the course of the past thirty years, since its inception, to wider knowledge and understanding of the levels, effects and risks of atomic radiation and for fulfilling its original mandate with scientific authority and independence of judgement;

2. Notes with satisfaction the continued and growing scientific co-operation between the Scientific Committee and the United Nations Environment Programme;

3. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue its work, including its important co-ordinating activities, to increase knowledge of the levels, effects and risks of ionizing radiation from all sources;

4. Endorses the Scientific Committee's intentions and plans for its future activities of scientific review and assessment on behalf of the General Assembly;

5. Requests the Scientific Committee to continue at its next session the review of the important problems in the field of radiation and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

6. Requests the United Nations Environment Programme to continue providing support for the effective conduct of the Scientific Committee's work and for the dissemination of its findings to the General Assembly, the scientific community and the public;

7. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance rendered to the Scientific Committee by Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and non-governmental organizations, and invites them to increase their co-operation in this field;

8. Invites Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations concerned to provide further relevant data about doses, effects and risks from various sources of radiation, which would greatly help in the preparation of the Scientific Committee's future reports to the General Assembly.

Antarctica

In 1985, the General Assembly, again took up the question of Antarctica, considering developments that had emerged from an October 1984 study by the Secretary-General<sup>(1)</sup> and from previous discussions of specific features of the 1959 Antarctic Treaty system. Notable among them were non-militarization, non-nuclearization and the prohibition of nuclear waste disposal; freedom of scientific research; open access to the area covered by the Treaty; and protection of the environment and of the living resources of the continent.

Communications. A resolution on Antarctica, adopted by the Council of Ministers of OAU (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 10-17 July) and transmitted by Madagascar on 18 September<sup>(2)</sup> declared Antarctica to be the common heritage of mankind and called on all OAU members to take appropriate steps at the 1985 General Assembly session to seek its recognition as such. In a Final Political Declaration adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries (Luanda, 4-7 September) and transmitted by Angola on 5 November,<sup>(3)</sup> the Ministers reaffirmed their conviction that Antarctica should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and be accessible to all nations and not become the object of international discord; they felt that the Assembly should remain seized of the question of Antarctica and expressed hope that the Secretary-General's 1984 study<sup>(1)</sup> would contribute to a more comprehensive examination by the Assembly in 1985, taking into account the concerns of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries.

On 25 November, Belgium transmitted an English version of the final report of the Thirteenth Antarctic Treaty Consultative Meeting (Brussels, 7-18 October).<sup>(4)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 16 December 1985, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the First Committee, adopted three texts-resolutions 40/156 A, B and C-each by roll-call vote, on the question of Antarctica.

A

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983 and 39/152 of 17 December 1984,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica",

Welcoming the increasing international awareness of and interest in Antarctica,

Bearing in mind the Antarctic Treaty and the significance of the system it has developed,

Taking into account the debate on this item at its fortieth session,

Convinced of the advantages of a better knowledge of Antarctica,

Affirming the conviction that, in the interest of all mankind, Antarctica should continue for ever to be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and that it should not become the scene or object of international discord,

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Economic Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and of the Final Political Declaration adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries, held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, as well as the resolution on Antarctica adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985,

Conscious of the significance of Antarctica to the international community in terms, inter alia, of international peace and security, economy, environment, scientific research and meteorology,

Recognizing, therefore, the interest of mankind as a whole in Antarctica,

Bearing in mind the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

Noting once again with appreciation the study on the question of Antarctica, Convinced that it would be desirable to examine further certain issues affecting Antarctica,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to update and expand the study on the question of Antarctica by addressing questions concerning the availability to the United Nations of information from the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties on their respective activities in and their deliberations regarding Antarctica, the involvement of the relevant specialized agencies and intergovernmental organizations in the Antarctic Treaty system and the significance of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea in the southern ocean;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the co-operation of all Member States and the relevant specialized agencies, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as the relevant intergovernmental and non-governmental bodies, in the preparation of the updated study by inviting them to transmit, as appropriate, their views and any information they may wish to provide;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the study to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

16 December 1985 Meeting 117 96-0-11 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/40/996 & Corr.1) by roll-call vote (80-0-9), 2 December (meeting 55): 13-nation draft (A/C.1/40/L.82), orally revised: agenda item 70.

Sponsors: Bangladesh, Brunei Darussalam, Cameroon, Ghana, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mali, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Philippines, Rwanda, Sri Lanka.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 1st Committee 48-55; plenary 117.

Roll-call vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad,* Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab, Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Make, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Austria, Canada, China, Fiji, Ireland, Luxembourg, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Solomon Islands, Turkey.

*Later advised the Secretariat it had intended to abstain.

B

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 38/77 of 15 December 1983 and 39/152 of 17 December 1984,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica,"

Recalling the relevant paragraphs of the Economic Declaration adopted by the Seventh Conference of Heads of State or Government of Non-Aligned Countries, held at New Delhi from 7 to 12 March 1983, and of the Final Political Declaration adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries held at Luanda from 4 to 7 September 1985, as well as the resolution on Antarctica adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985,

Recognising that the management, exploration and use of Antarctica should be conducted in accordance with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and in the interest of maintaining international peace and security and of promoting international co-operation for the benefit of mankind as a whole,

Aware that negotiations are in progress among the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, with the non-Consultative Parties as observers, to which other States are not privy, with a view to establishing a régime regarding Antarctic minerals,

1. Affirms that any exploitation of the resources of Antarctica should ensure the maintenance of international peace and security in Antarctica, the protection of its environment, the non-exploitation and conservation of its resources and the international management and equitable sharing of the benefits of such exploitation;

2. Invites the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to inform the Secretary-General of their negotiations to establish a régime regarding Antarctic minerals;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly for consideration at its forty-first session a report containing the replies received from Consultative Parties;

4. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Question of Antarctica".

16 December 1985 Meeting 117 92-0-14 (roll-call vote)

C

The General Assembly,

Having considered the item entitled "Question of Antarctica,"

Noting with regret that the racist apartheid régime of South Africa, which has been suspended from participation in the General Assembly of the United Nations, is a Consultative Party to the Antarctic Treaty,

Recalling the interest of African States in Antarctica as shown by the resolution adopted by the Council of Ministers of the Organization of African Unity at its forty-second ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 10 to 17 July 1985,

Recalling further that the Antarctic Treaty is, by its terms, intended to further the purposes and principles embodied in the Charter of the United Nations,

1. Views with concern the continued status of the apartheid régime of South Africa as a Consultative Party to the Antarctic Treaty;

2. Urges the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties to exclude the racist apartheid regime of South Africa from participation in the meetings of the Consultative Parties at the earliest possible date;

3. Invites the States parties to the Antarctic Treaty to inform the Secretary-General on the actions taken regarding the provisions of the present resolution.

16 December 1985 Meeting 117 100-0-12 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (A/40/996 & Corr.1) by roll-call vote (81-0-9), 2 December (meeting 55): draft by Mauritius for African Group (A/C.1/40/L.85); agenda item 70.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: In Committee 48-55; plenary 117.

Roll-call vote in Assembly as follows

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: Austria, Canada, Fiji, Ireland, Luxembourg, Malawi, Portugal, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Turkey.

Before the Assembly voted on the resolutions, Australia, on behalf of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, requested that the Assembly records reflect the non-participation of countries so announcing in the roll-call votes. The parties were firmly of the view, Australia noted, that consensus offered the only realistic basis for Assembly consideration of Antarctica; therefore, unless consensus could be restored, they would be compelled to reconsider their further participation in the consideration of the item.

States which announced their intention not to participate in the roll-call vote on resolution 40/156 A were: Afghanistan, Albania, Argentina, Australia, Barbados, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Paraguay, Poland, Samoa, Spain, Sweden, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay.

The same 41 States, plus Honduras and Morocco, similarly announced non-participation in the vote on resolution 40/156 B; most of the 41 did likewise in the vote on 40/156 C, excepting Afghanistan, Albania, Barbados, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, India and Nicaragua, but including Grenada, Honduras, the Ivory Coast and Mauritius.

Explaining their abstention on all three texts in the First Committee were Canada and Turkey. Canada reiterated the importance of basing any resolution relating to Antarctica on general agreement. The inability to reach agreement on the appropriate way to deal with the question, Canada said, did not enhance the functioning of the Treaty, whose contribution to international peace and security, to scientific co-operation, to the preservation of Antarctic resources and to the protection of its environment was widely recognized. Turkey said that, while it agreed that the Treaty was valid, it none the less felt that the Antarctic régime needed to be adapted to the international community's interests—a need that could not be served by resolutions not reflecting consensus. Nor could Turkey—despite its abhorrence for the South Africa régime—support a United Nations recommendation concerning the Treaty's membership.

Expressing deep regret at the lack of consensus, China said its vote on resolution 40/156 C was based on its support of the African people's struggle against apartheid. Its abstentions, however, reflected its consistent stand that Antarctica should be used to serve the cause of peace, science and mankind's common interests and not be an arena of international disputes. Pending a consensus, it felt its actions on the question should be as helpful as possible in creating a harmonious atmosphere, avoiding confrontation and seeking continued dialogue.

Peru's vote for resolution 40/156 A was based on its belief that all United Nations Members had a natural interest in Antarctica, and that the text neither interfered with the purposes and objectives of the Antarctic Treaty nor attempted to undermine its validity and implementation.

Italy, speaking also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, the Netherlands, Spain and Sweden, expressed deep concern that consensus could not be obtained, the reason why they had not found it possible to participate in the votes.

Proposed as a compromise text to enable the Committee to proceed by consensus but later withdrawn on behalf of the Treaty parties was a draft sponsored by Australia.<sup>(5)</sup> Although it included a request similar to that in resolution 40/156 A for a supplement to the Secretary-General's 1984 study,<sup>(1)</sup> the Australian text did not call for inclusion in that report of the significance of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea in the southern ocean; it asked for presentation of the study in 1987, instead of 1986 when only a progress report was to be made; its preambular section also differed in several respects from that of the resolution adopted.

Anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British Empire

In 1985, there were no speakers on the agenda item "Celebration of the one-hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British Empire". The General Assembly, by decision 40/461, adopted without vote on 18 December, on an oral proposal by its President, included the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-first (1986) session.

Chapter XI

Institutional machinery

The year 1985 marked the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations. Its theme was "United Nations for a better world".

The Security Council, apart from considering its agenda, held a commemorative session at ministerial level to review the international situation and, in the context of the anniversary's theme, to continue examining possibilities for improving its effectiveness in discharging its principal role of maintaining international peace and security.

The General Assembly resumed and concluded its thirty-ninth session and held the major part of its fortieth session, considering 140 items of a 149-item agenda. A special significance attached to the Assembly in 1985, which also held a commemorative session, from 14 to 24 October, at which Member States reflected on the performance of the United Nations during its 40 years of existence, on its accomplishments and failures, and on how it could be improved. Not the least of those accomplishments was the achievement of near universality in its membership, which had risen from 51 Member States in 1945 to 159 in 1984, remaining at that number in 1985.

On the occasion of the anniversary, the Secretary-General considered humanity's future and the United Nations role in it (see p. 3). The choice between a world of infinite promise and one of potentially terminal danger was ours to make, he said, and the United Nations and the use to which its Members put it was an essential element in that choice. The Secretary-General, who suggested further development of his capacity to serve as an objective third party, continued to exercise his good offices towards resolving the situations involving the questions of Afghanistan, Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Iran and Iraq, and Kampuchea.

Also during the year, the Assembly adopted six resolutions on co-operation between the United Nations and intergovernmental organizations.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: co-operation between OAU and the UN system. Regional economic and social activities: Africa-co-operation between the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and the United Nations. Institutional arrangements: Economic and Social Council-co-operation with other organizations. International organizations and international law: draft standard rules of procedure for conferences. Other legal questions:

co-operation between the United Nations and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee. Other administrative and management questions: calendar of meetings.

UN Members

As there were no new admissions to the United Nations during 1985, its membership remained at 159.

Côte d'Ivoire

On 6 November 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the Ivory Coast drew attention to a decision taken by the Parti Démocratique de Côte d'Ivoire at its eighth Congress (Abidjan, 9-12 October) that the designation Côte d'Ivoire, the country's proper name, should no longer be considered a geographical term and that the practice of translating it into the different languages be stopped. Aware, however, of the practical difficulties for implementing the decision during the current General Assembly, session, the Ivory Coast requested the Secretary-General to make the decision fully effective within the Secretariat of the United Nations and applicable to all of the Organization's related bodies by 1 January 1986.

Security Council

The Security Council held 74 meetings in 1985 and adopted 21 resolutions.

Meeting numbers. SC: 2566-2639.

In accordance with a decision taken during informal consultations on 29 August,<sup>(1)</sup> the Council held a commemorative meeting on 26 September to celebrate the United Nations fortieth anniversary. At that meeting, the President said he had been authorized by Council members to make the following statement on their behalf:<sup>(2)</sup>

"The Security Council met in public at the Headquarters of the United Nations in New York on Thursday, 26 September 1985, at the level of Foreign Ministers, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of the Organization.

"The meeting was chaired by the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as the President of the Security Council for September. Statements were made by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, Thailand and Peru; by the Permanent Representative of Madagascar; by the Minister of State for Commerce of India; and by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of France, Egypt, Denmark, China, Burkina Faso, Australia, the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, as well as by the Secretary-General.

"The agenda for the commemorative meeting was: 'United Nations for a better world and the responsibility of the Security Council in maintaining international peace and security'.

"The members of the Council welcomed the opportunity provided by the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations to reaffirm at a high level their obligations under the Charter and their continued commitment to its purposes and principles. They conducted a wide-ranging review of the international situation. They expressed their deep concern at the existence of various threats to peace, including the nuclear threat. While acknowledging that it had not always proved possible for the Organization to eradicate those threats, they underlined the continuing relevance of the United Nations as a positive force for peace and human advancement. They welcomed the continuing growth of the membership of the Organization to a point where the objective of universality of membership, which they endorsed, had almost been achieved.

"The members of the Council were cognizant of the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security conferred by the Charter on the Security Council and of the special rights and responsibilities of its permanent members. They stressed that a collegial approach within the Council was desirable to facilitate considered and concerted action by the Council as the main instrument for international peace. They acknowledged that the high hopes placed in the Organization by the international community had not been fully met and undertook to fulfil their individual and collective responsibility for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace with renewed dedication and determination. They agreed to employ appropriate measures available under the Charter when considering international disputes, threats to the peace, breaches of the peace and acts of aggression. They recognized the valuable contribution made on many occasions by the United Nations peace-keeping forces. They called again upon the entire membership of the United Nations to abide by their obligations under the Charter to accept and carry out decisions of the Security Council.

"They agreed that there was an urgent need to enhance the effectiveness of the Security Council in discharging its principal role of maintaining international peace and security. Accordingly, they resolved to continue the examination of the possibilities for further improvement of the functioning of the Security Council in carrying out its work in accordance with the Charter. In this context, they paid special attention to the suggestions addressed to the members of the Council in the Secretary-General's annual reports on the work of the Organization. They thanked the Secretary-General for those reports and encouraged him to play an active role within the scope of his functions under the Charter."

Also on the occasion of the Organization's fortieth anniversary, the Secretary-General, referring to the question of how to enhance the Council's role in providing stability and limiting conflict, made what he called a simpler set of suggestions than those he had put forward previously (see p. 6). These included a determined and conscious effort by Council members, especially the permanent ones, to give matters of international peace and security priority over bilateral differences; a deliberate and concerted effort to solve one or two of the major problems before the Council by making fuller use of the measures available to it under the Charter; and a reaffirmation by the United Nations membership as a whole of Charter obligations, especially those relating to the non-use or threat of force, peaceful settlement of disputes, resort to the mechanism set out in the Charter for such settlement, and respect for Council decisions.

The General Assembly, in stressing the urgent need to enhance the effectiveness of the Council's principal role of maintaining international peace and security, emphasized, by resolution 40/158 on implementing the 1970 Declaration on the Strengthening of International Security, that the Council should consider holding periodic meetings in specific cases to review outstanding problems and crises, thus enabling it to play a more active role in preventing conflicts. The Assembly reiterated the need for the Council, in particular its permanent members, to ensure implementation of its decisions in compliance with relevant Charter provisions.

That same role continued to be considered in 1985 by the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization. Discussion centred on a revised working paper containing proposals for preventive measures to be applied by the Council, among other principal organs of the United Nations, in situations which might lead to international friction (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

Agenda

During 1985—its fortieth year—the Security Council considered 19 agenda items. It continued the practice of adopting at each meeting the agenda for that meeting. (For list of agenda items, see APPENDIX IV.)

Eight of the items were included for the first time in the Council's agenda.<sup>(3)</sup> They concerned complaints by Chad against the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

(one item), by Nicaragua against the United States (two items), by Botswana against South Africa (two items) and by Tunisia against Israel (one item); the situation created by hostage-taking and abduction; and United Nations for a better world and the Council's responsibility in maintaining international peace and security (in celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations).

In a 16 September note,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General notified the General Assembly, in accordance with Article 12, paragraph 2, of the United Nations Charter, of 12 matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security that the Council had discussed since his previous annual notification.<sup>(5)</sup> He listed 108 other matters not discussed during the period but of which the Council remained seized. The Assembly took note of these matters on 9 December by decision 40/416.

During the year, the Assembly also asked the Council to take certain specific actions in fulfilment of its responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and security. It reiterated its 1984 call<sup>(6)</sup> on the Council to initiate procedures in accordance with the Charter for bringing the escalating arms race to a halt (resolution 40/151 A). It requested the Council to act to prevent any racist régime from acquiring arms or arms technology and to conclude consideration of recommendations aimed at blocking existing loopholes in the arms embargo against South Africa (resolution 40/89 B). It again called on the Council urgently to take action under Chapter VII of the Charter with a view to applying comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against that country (resolution 40/64 A)-a call the Assembly repeated when it asked the Council to exercise its authority in the implementation of its various resolutions to bring about Namibia's independence without further delay (resolution 40/97 B).

The Assembly urged the Council to act decisively in fulfilment of United Nations responsibility over Namibia, as well as against schemes to frustrate the legitimate struggle of the Namibian people, and to ensure full implementation of the United Nations independence plan for the Territory and strict compliance with the arms embargo against South Africa; and urged implementation of the recommendations of the Council Committee established in 1977 to monitor the embargo (resolution 40/97 A).

Members

In 1985 as in the previous year, the question of equitable representation on the Security Council and increase in its membership was not considered. Thus, on 18 December, the General Assembly, acting without vote on an oral proposal by its President, adopted decision 40/460 by which it decided to include the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-first (1986) session.

Reports for 1983/84 and 1984/85

At two meetings held in private in 1985, on 29 January and on 15 November, the Security Council considered its draft annual reports to the General Assembly covering the periods 16 June 1983 to 15 June 1984<sup>(7)</sup> and 16 June 1984 to 15 June 1985,<sup>(8)</sup> respectively, and unanimously adopted them. The Assembly took note of the first report on 9 April by decision 39/457 and of the second on 9 December by decision 40/418.

At the 29 January meeting, the Council President stated<sup>(9)</sup> that members, in preparing the 1983/84 report, were of the opinion that it could be shortened without changing its general format. Accordingly, they agreed that the report would no longer summarize documents addressed to the Council President or to the Secretary-General and circulated as Council documents, the full text of which was available elsewhere. Also, the report would simply indicate the subject-matter of those documents relating to the Council's procedure, such as requests for meetings or requests to take part in discussions.

General Assembly

The General Assembly met in two sessions during 1985, to resume and conclude its thirty-ninth regular session and to hold the major part of its fortieth.

The first part of the thirty-ninth session had been held from 18 September to 18 December 1984.<sup>(1)</sup> The session resumed in 1985 from 9 to 12 April and on 16 September, when it was declared closed after consideration of the remaining items on its agenda was concluded.

The fortieth regular session was opened on 17 September and continued until its suspension on 18 December. During the general debate, from 23 September to 11 October, the Assembly heard 137 statements by heads of State or Government and heads or members of delegations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following a statement by its President that, with the exception of nine items and four sub-items, consideration of the agenda had been concluded, the General Assembly adopted decision 40/470 without vote.

Suspension of the fortieth session

At its 122nd plenary meeting, on 18 December 1985, the General Assembly decided to resume its fortieth session, at a date to be announced, for the sole purpose of considering the following agenda items:

Item 16(a): Election of two members of the Governing Council of the United Nations Environment Programme;

Item 17 (h): Appointment of members of the Consultative Committee on the United Nations Development Fund for Women;

Item 17 (l): Appointment of a member of the Special Committee on the Situation with regard to the Implementation of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples;

Item 21: The situation in Central America: threats to international peace and security and peace initiatives;

Item 41: Launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development;

Item 43: Observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America;

Item 44: Question of Cyprus;

Item 45: Implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations;

Item 46: Consequences of the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq;

Item 84 and 84 (c): Development and international economic co-operation; trade and development;

Item 116: Proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987;

Item 123: Personnel questions.

General Assembly decision 40/470

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 8.

Agenda

As the General Assembly had decided in December 1984,<sup>(1)</sup> it resumed its thirty-ninth session in 1985 to consider 11 items and two sub-items remaining on that session's agenda. In addition, it reopened three sub-items to consider a request for the appointment of one member of the Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) (item 17 (g)) and another for the resumption of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships for two weeks in July (item 80 (c)); and to consider a draft decision by which the Assembly would ask the Commission on the Status of Women, acting as the preparatory body for the July 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women, to resume its third (March 1985) session in April in order to complete its preparatory work (item 93 (b)). The items involving the resumption of meetings were also considered under the related item on the programme budget.

With the exception of the item on global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, consideration of all the other items was concluded, including the appointment of a JIU member (see APPENDIX III).

On 16 September, the Assembly, by a series of decisions, included several items in the agenda of its fortieth session on: the confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) (decision 39/324 B), the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development (decision 39/4.54 C), the situation in Central America (decision 39/462), the observance of the quincentenary of the discovery of America (decision 39/463), the Cyprus question (decision 39/464), implementation of United Nations resolutions (decision 39/465), the Iran-Iraq conflict (decision 39/466), and the celebration of the one-hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of slaves in the British Empire (decision 39/467).

In 1985, the fortieth session had 149 items on its agenda, of which 146 were adopted by the Assembly on 20 September and three were added to the list on 23 September, 29 October and 15 November.<sup>(2)</sup> Inclusion of the items in the agenda, as well as their allocation to the Assembly's Main Committees or directly to plenary meetings,<sup>(3)</sup> was recommended by the General Committee.<sup>(4)</sup> On 18 September, it approved a 146-item agenda on the basis of preliminary<sup>(5)</sup> and annotated<sup>(6)</sup> lists of items, a 144-item Provisional agenda,<sup>(7)</sup> a two-item supplementary list,<sup>(8)</sup> and two requests for inclusion of additional items: on settlement of disputes through negotiation<sup>(9)</sup> (see p. 121) and on an election to fill a vacancy on the International Court of Justice<sup>(10)</sup> (see APPENDIX III). The Committee also recommended that the item concerning East Timor (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV) be deferred to the forty-first (1986) session. On 23 September, 29 October and 15 November, it recommended approval of three additional items proposed during the fortieth session: on international relief to Mexico<sup>(11)</sup> (see p. 543), on a draft declaration relating to the protection of children<sup>(12)</sup> (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XX) and on international relief to Colombia<sup>(13)</sup> (see p. 545).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Following examination of the recommendations of the General Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 40/402 without vote.

Adoption of the agenda and allocation of agenda items

At its 3rd, 5th, 53rd, 78th, 123rd and 124th plenary meetings, on 20 and 23 September, 29 October and 15 November 1985 and on 28 April 1986, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first, second, third, fourth and fifth reports and on the proposal of the Secretary-General, adopted the agenda and the allocation of agenda items for the fortieth session.

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 20 September 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the General Committee, decided to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Question of East Timor".

General Assembly decision 40/402

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/40/250 & Add.1-4) without vote, 18 and 23 September, 29 October 15 November 1985 and 28 April 1986 (meetings 1-5): agenda item 8.

Organization of work

In its first and third reports, dated 18 September<sup>(14)</sup> and 29 October,<sup>(15)</sup> the General Committee made recommendations concerning the organization of the fortieth session, based on suggestions by the Secretary-General<sup>(16)</sup> and on letters from the Committee on Conferences.<sup>(17)</sup>

The recommendations provided for a schedule of daily meetings, including a commemorative session in observance of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, fixed the duration of the general debate and set 17 December as the session's closing date. Other recommendations drew attention to provisions embodied in a 1979 decision on the rationalization of the Assembly's procedures and organization,<sup>(18)</sup> such as early agreement among regional groups on the distribution of Main Committee chairmanships for the following session, limiting explanations of vote and meeting records and, in general, dispensing with concluding statements. Attention was also drawn to the mandatory deadline of 1 December for submitting draft resolutions with financial implications and to setting deadlines for submitting reports requiring consideration by the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, as well as to the 48-hour interval between the submission of and voting on a proposal involving expenditure. The Assembly was neither to debate nor to adopt resolutions on reports unless requested to do so by the reporting bodies. Maximum restraint was to be exercised in requests for the circulation of material as official documents.

In addition to recommending that the Main Committees review the number of special conferences already scheduled before scheduling additional ones, the General Committee also recommended authorization for a number of subsidiary organs to meet during the session, which was later granted by Assembly decision 40/403.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the General Committee's recommendations, the General Assembly adopted decision 40/401 without vote.

Organization of the fortieth session

At its 3rd and 53rd plenary meetings, on 20 September and 29 October 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the General Committee as set forth in its first and third reports, adopted a number of provisions concerning the organization of the fortieth session.

General Assembly decision 40/401

Adopted without vote

Approved by General Committee (A/40/250 & Add.2) without vote, 18 September and 29 October (meetings 1.3): agenda item 8.

Representatives' credentials

At its first meeting, on 9 October 1985, the Credentials Committee examined a memorandum of the previous day from the Secretary-General indicating that formal credentials to the fortieth session of the General Assembly had 'been submitted by 120 Member States. At that meeting, the Legal Counsel provided supplementary information that credentials had subsequently been received from two other Member States.

The Committee also heard statements in connection with the credentials of Afghanistan, Chile and Democratic Kampuchea.

China reiterated its position that allowing Afghanistan to participate in the current Assembly session should not be interpreted as acquiescence to the situation created in that country by foreign armed invasion and occupation. The United States, saying it had raised no objection to those credentials out of respect for the technical nature of the credentials exercise, expressed a similar reservation. Such assertions, the USSR said, were an attempt to distort historical and political reality and were contrary to the interests of normalizing the situation in south-west Asia and ensuring favourable conditions for the ongoing talks on Afghanistan.

The USSR reiterated its opposition to acceptance of the credentials of Chile and of Democratic Kampuchea. The United States, on the other hand, considered those credentials to be in order and saw no basis for questioning their acceptance. The guiding principle, Canada said, was concern solely with the technical aspects of such documents, which, in the case of those under challenge including Afghanistan's, appeared to be fully in accord with the relevant rule of the Assembly's rules of procedure, based on information provided to the Committee. Canada stressed that their acceptance and those of others was not intended to imply any foreign policy position.

Acting on an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Committee adopted without vote a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received, taking into account the various reservations expressed. It also recommended for adoption a draft resolution by which the Assembly would approve the Committee's first report.<sup>(19)</sup>

On 12 December, at its second meeting, the Committee examined a further memorandum from the Secretary-General reporting that, since the Committee's first meeting and as of 11

December, formal credentials from 36 other Member States, including Grenada, had been received.

The USSR reaffirmed its non-recognition of the credentials of what it called the puppet regime established by the United States in Grenada. The United States said the credentials complied with the Assembly's rules of procedure and were therefore in order.

Acting without vote on an oral proposal by its Chairman, the Committee adopted a resolution by which it accepted the credentials received, taking into account the reservations expressed. It also submitted a draft resolution recommending Assembly approval of its second report.<sup>(20)</sup>

Acting on the recommendations of the Credentials Committee, the General Assembly adopted two resolutions on credentials of representatives to its fortieth session.

On 16 October, it adopted resolution 40/2 A without vote.

The General Assembly

Approves the first report of the Credentials Committee.

16 October 1985 Meeting 37 Adopted without vote

Approved by Credentials Committee (A/40/747) without vote, 9 October (meeting 1); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 3.

Before adopting the resolution, the Assembly, by a recorded vote of 80 to 41, with 20 abstentions, decided not to act on an amendment sponsored by 18 States to reject the credentials of Israel. That decision was taken on a motion by Sweden, also on behalf of Denmark, Finland, Iceland and Norway. Reservations concerning those credentials had been entered by 50 States (see p. 271).

Explaining their positions following adoption of the resolution, Egypt said it voted for the Swedish motion because it related to a procedural matter that in no way changed the situation in the Middle East; that the credentials of Israel had been issued in Jerusalem, Egypt added, did not detract from the illegal character of that city's annexation. Iran said it wanted its reservations on those credentials to be made part of Assembly official records.

Referring to Afghanistan's credentials, Belgium, along with the Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom, stated that not objecting to those credentials was not to be interpreted as recognition of the current Afghan regime, which had been imposed from outside.

Afghanistan characterized the reservations made on its credentials in the Credentials Committee as impertinent, and entered its own reservations on the credentials of what it termed the so-called Government of Democratic Kampuchea;

the only authority that could speak for the Kampucheans, it asserted, was the People's Republic of Kampuchea. Democratic Kampuchea on the other hand expressed gratitude for the recognition of and support for its sovereignty and independence.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/2 B without vote.

The General Assembly

Approves the second report of the Credentials Committee.

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Credentials Committee (A/40/747/Add.1) without vote, 12 December (meeting 2); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 3.

The representation of Kampuchea in the United Nations was also challenged in two communications (see p. 228).

Likewise, the legitimacy of Chad's representation under its current Government was challenged by the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, at a Security Council meeting on 30 January. The legal opinion on that question, sought and obtained on 4 February by France, as Council President at the time, noted General Assembly acceptance, without dissent, of Chad's credentials as presented by that Government (see p. 197).

Rationalization of UN procedures

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(21)</sup> the Special Committee on the Charter of the United Nations and on the Strengthening of the Role of the Organization kept the question of the rationalization of United Nations procedures under review, devoting two meetings to the topic during its March 1985 session<sup>(22)</sup> (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV). A working paper was presented by France and the United Kingdom as containing a clearer formulation of various items previously considered but deserving further consideration.

While it was generally recognized that the topic was a useful and important one, two main views emerged during the Committee's discussion. In the light of the Committee's 1984 conclusions,<sup>(23)</sup> which the Assembly had approved for reproduction as an annex to its rules of procedure,<sup>(24)</sup> the view was expressed that there was nothing to add to those conclusions at the current stage, nor would the time be ripe to resume consideration of the new proposals at the Committee's 1986 session. The view was also expressed, however, that the 1984 conclusions did not respond sufficiently to all the problems of rationalization, nor did they rule out further Committee consideration of the topic.

In resolution 40/78 on the report of the Special Committee's March session, the Assembly again requested the Committee to keep the topic under review.

Recommendations for the rationalization of the Assembly's procedures were made by Presidents of the General Assembly at a June meeting held in commemoration of the United Nations fortieth anniversary (see p. 403).

The Secretary-General pointed to the difficulty in streamlining the Assembly and rationalizing its procedures, which he attributed to the universality of its membership and to its diverse agenda; he suggested, however, that improving the political process in the Assembly should include a much greater degree of intergovernmental consultation before each session, and a determined attempt to hammer out consensus on important issues and to avoid divisive rhetoric (see pp. 8 and 9).

Secretary-General

In his 1985 annual report on the work of the United Nations (see p. 3), the year of its fortieth anniversary, the Secretary-General focused on the future of humanity and the United Nations role in that future. Noting the general lack of the essential political conditions, the sense of solidarity and mutual confidence that could make international instruments work towards addressing some of the major problems confronting the international community, he asserted that the United Nations was the best place where such conditions and solidarity could be developed. While it could not solve all those problems, it was the best place to avoid the worst and to strive for improvement.

Of his own office, the Secretary-General said its responsibilities and duties were a high challenge. While appreciative of the trust bestowed on him, he had been concerned that delegation of responsibility to the Secretary-General might, in certain instances, have the effect of diminishing the effort expected of Member States. It would be in the Organization's interest, he suggested, if the Secretary-General's capacity to serve as an objective third party were to be further developed by the wider and earlier use of fact-finding and observation, and by regular, systematic surveys of the state of international peace and security—a task in which both the Security Council and the Secretary-General should be involved.

Good offices

During 1985, the Secretary-General continued the missions of good offices entrusted to him either by the Security Council or by the General Assembly. These missions concerned Afghanistan, Cyprus, the Falkland Islands (Malvinas), the Iran-Iraq conflict and Kampuchea.

The Secretary-General's determined efforts to promote the search for a political solution to the Afghanistan situation continued in contacts with the principals and in two rounds of talks during the year through the intermediary of his Personal Representative (see p. 232). With regard to Cyprus, he continued his high-level meetings with the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities in order to seek their agreement on a framework for an overall solution to the Cyprus problem (see p. 251). Apart from maintaining contacts with representatives of Iran and Iraq in New York on his proposals for a cease-fire between them, the Secretary-General visited the capitals of both countries, conveying his personal commitment to continue trying to bring closer the prospect of peace (see p. 242).

Likewise, he renewed his efforts to assist Argentina and the United Kingdom to resume negotiations towards a peaceful solution to their sovereignty dispute over the Falkland Islands (Malvinas). Those efforts included meetings with the respective leaders of both countries aimed at promoting a dialogue between the two sides (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DECOLONIZATION, Chapter IV). Also, with the assistance of his Special Representative, the Secretary-General continued his exchanges with all concerned towards a solution of the Kampuchea situation (see p. 226).

Co-operation with other intergovernmental organizations

Co-operation between the United Nations and other intergovernmental organizations was the subject of six 1985 General Assembly resolutions. Those organizations were the League of Arab States and the Organization of the Islamic Conference (see below); the Organization of African Unity (see p. 201); the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapters VIII and XXIV, respectively); and the Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter IV).

League of Arab States

The Secretary-General submitted in July 1985 a report<sup>(1)</sup> concerning progress in implementing, since the beginning of the year, a 1984 General Assembly resolution<sup>(2)</sup> on enhancing political, economic, social and cultural co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States.

The report described consultations between the two organizations at various levels and summarized progress achieved on the proposals for co-operation as had been agreed by them in 1983.<sup>(3)</sup> Twenty-four multilateral proposals involving two or more bodies of the United Nations system were on such matters as disarmament, education and training for the handicapped and on human rights, energy, the environmental aspects of agricultural and industrial development and in planning human settlements, health care, maritime transport, natural resources (water, land, minerals), informatics and computer sciences, and regional technical co-operation projects.

The report also summarized action taken and planned for the future, as described by the United Nations agencies, programmes and bodies concerned, on bilateral proposals in six main areas of co-operation. These included political matters, in particular the maintenance of international peace and security in the Middle East and in the Gulf area, and co-operation in the struggle against apartheid; economic, financial and technical co-operation for development; food and agriculture; social development, labour, human resources and cultural affairs; refugees, disaster prevention and emergency relief, and human rights; and information and communication.

In September,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General reported that the United Nations and the League had held a sectoral meeting on social development (Amman, Jordan, 19-21 August) (see ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL QUESTIONS, Chapter XIII).

In 1985, the League's Secretary-General, its Under-Secretary-General for Political and International Affairs and its Permanent Observer to the United Nations made statements at seven Security Council meetings, to which they had been invited to participate in accordance with rule 39<sup>a</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Those meetings dealt with the situation between Iran and Iraq, the Middle East situation including the Palestine question, the situation in Namibia, and a complaint by Tunisia of an Israeli air attack on Tunis.

The final communiqué of the Extraordinary Summit Conference of Arab States (Casablanca, Morocco, 7-9 August) was transmitted on 19 August and issued as an official document of the General Assembly.<sup>(5)</sup> Its circulation as such was viewed with deep regret by the Syrian Arab Republic, which stated on 28 August<sup>(6)</sup> that, together with four other Arab States, it had not participated in the Conference and that, therefore, the communiqué did not accurately express the true nature of the Arab position on the topics discussed: the Middle East situation, the Iran-Iraq conflict and the situation in the Horn of Africa.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/5 by recorded vote.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States, in particular resolutions 36/24 of 9 November 1981, 37/17 of 16 November 1982, 38/6 of 28 October 1983 and 39/9 of 8 November 1984,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States,

Having heard the statement by the Permanent Observer of the League of Arab States on co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States of 25 October 1985 and having noted the emphasis placed therein on follow-up projects, actions and procedures on the recommendations adopted at the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis from 28 June to 1 July 1983, as well as on various sectoral activities related to development priorities in the Arab region,

Recalling the relevant Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional arrangements for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

Noting with appreciation the desire of the League of Arab States to consolidate and develop the existing ties with the United Nations in all areas relating to the maintenance of international peace and security, and to co-operate in every possible way with the United

<sup>a</sup>Rule 39 of the Council's provisional rules of procedure states: "The Security Council may invite members of the Secretariat or other persons, whom it considers competent for the purpose, to supply it with information or to give other assistance in examining matters within its competence."

Nations in the implementation of United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East,

Aware of the vital importance for the countries members of the League of Arab States of achieving a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict,

Realizing that the strengthening of international peace and security is directly related, inter alia, to disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination,

Convinced that the maintenance and further strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States contribute to the work of the United Nations system and to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling that at the meeting held at Tunis the framework of co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States in certain priority sectors was defined, and proposals that could lend themselves to joint implementation were recommended,

Recognizing the need for closer co-operation between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in realizing the goals and objectives set forth in the Strategy for Joint Arab Economic Development adopted by the Eleventh Arab Summit Conference, held at Amman from 25 to 27 November 1980,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the follow-up action taken by him on the proposals adopted at the meeting between representatives of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations and the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system, held at Tunis, as well as to the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system for their efforts to facilitate the implementation of the proposals;

3. Notes with satisfaction the results achieved at the sectoral meeting on social development in the Arab region, held at Amman from 19 to 21 August 1985;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to strengthen co-operation with the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States for the purpose of implementing United Nations resolutions relating to the question of Palestine and the situation in the Middle East in order to achieve a just, comprehensive and durable solution to the Middle East conflict and the question of Palestine, the core of the conflict;

5. Requests the Secretariat of the United Nations and the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States, within their respective fields of competence, further to intensify their co-operation towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the strengthening of international peace and security, disarmament, decolonization, self-determination and the eradication of all forms of racism and racial discrimination;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and the organizations of the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in order to enhance their capacity to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to continue the follow-up action to facilitate the implementation of the proposals of a multilateral nature adopted at the meeting held at Tunis in 1983, and to take appropriate action regarding the multilateral proposals relating to social development adopted at the meeting held at Amman in 1985, including the following measures:

(a) Promotion of contacts and consultations between the counterpart programmer, organizations and agencies concerned;

(b) Setting up of joint sectoral inter-agency working groups;

(c) Consultation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States regarding the convening in 1987 of the joint sectoral meeting on development of human resources in the Arab region,.

8. Calls upon the specialized agencies, and other organizations and programmes of the United Nations system:

(a) To continue to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the programmes, organizations and agencies concerned within the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations in the follow-up of multilateral proposals aimed at strengthening and expanding co-operation in all fields between the United Nations system and the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations;

(b) To maintain and increase contacts and consultations with the counterpart programmes, organizations and agencies concerned regarding projects of a bilateral nature in order to facilitate their implementation;

(c) To inform the Secretary-General, not later than 15 May 1986, of the progress of their co-operation with the League of Arab States and its specialized organizations, in particular, the follow-up action taken on the multilateral and bilateral proposals adopted at the meetings held at Tunis and Amman;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, to hold periodic consultations as and when appropriate between representatives of the Secretariat of the United Nations and of the General Secretariat of the League of Arab States on follow-up policies, projects, actions and procedures;

10. Further requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly, at its forty-first session, a progress report on the implementation of the present resolution;

11. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the League of Arab States".

General Assembly resolution 40/5

25 October 1985 Meeting 50

133-2-2 (recorded vote)

20-nation draft (A/40/L.7); agenda item 26.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bahrain, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Mauritania, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Albania, Algeria, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe

Against: Israel, United States.

Abstaining: Ethiopia, Grenada

Israel explained that its negative vote was because of the League's disregard of the principles of peace and security on which the United Nations was based, the League's history having been dedicated to united Arab action aimed at Israel's eradication. The United States could not but vote against, it stated, due to paragraph 4, which it saw as opposing many of its fundamental policies; it voiced concern that the costs of the joint sectoral meeting envisaged in paragraph 7 (c) needed to be absorbed within existing United Nations financial resources.

Ethiopia abstained because the League had adopted resolutions detrimental to Ethiopia's national unity and territorial integrity. Grenada's difficulties were with the provisions of paragraph 4.

Also voicing reservations on that paragraph were: Australia; Canada, which did not support all the resolutions referred to; Finland, also on behalf of Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Sweden, which held that the elements with political implications could not prejudice their positions on the substantive matter; and Luxembourg, for the 10 members of the European Community (EC), which recalled that they had not supported all the resolutions mentioned and stressed their preference for dealing with the co-operation issue in terms avoiding divisive elements. The Libyan Arab Jamahiriya said its vote did not mean recognition of Israel.

Organization of the Islamic Conference

measures taken to strengthen the mechanism for co-operative activities of the two organizations, as provided for by the Assembly in 1982.<sup>(9)</sup>

The report gave a brief account of the consultations between the two organizations and their representation at meetings, as well as of a co-ordination meeting of the focal points of their lead agencies (Geneva, 30 and 31 July). It outlined developments concerning co-operation between the organizations in political and security-related matters and in economic, social and cultural questions.

The July meeting evaluated progress achieved in the five priority areas of co-operation: food security and agriculture, science and technology, investment mechanisms and joint ventures, eradication of illiteracy and assistance to refugees. The meeting concluded that co-operation should be further strengthened and the emerging modalities systematized through regular and more frequent contacts. Information collection and dissemination was to be intensified and, in view of financial constraints especially in respect of the Conference, emphasis should be on consolidation of selected programmes rather than expansion into new ones.

Political and security activities focused on the situation in Afghanistan and in the Middle East, the Iran-Iraq conflict, decolonization and apartheid, and outer space. With respect to economic, social and cultural development, activities in co-operation with some 18 agencies and other entities in the United Nations system were reviewed. The latest such entity to sign a memorandum of co-operation with the Conference was UNCTAD, on 27 June 1985. Discussions with other bodies in the system for concluding similar agreements were under way.

On 11 March,<sup>(10)</sup> Yemen transmitted the final communique and resolutions adopted by the Fifteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Sanaa, 18-22 December 1984<sup>(11)</sup>), together with reports on those resolutions. Yemen also transmitted, on 15 October 1985,<sup>(12)</sup> a communique of the co-ordination meeting of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Conference (New York, 9 October), dealing with, among other matters, the Middle East situation, South Africa and Namibia, Afghanistan, the Iran-Iraq conflict and the drought in the African Sahel.

During 1985, the Chairman of the Conference participated at one Security Council meeting and its Secretary-General at two meetings, under rule 39<sup>b</sup> of the Council's provisional rules of procedure. Those meetings dealt with a complaint by Tunisia of an Israeli air attack on

Tunis; and with the Middle East problem, including the Palestine question.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 25 October, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/4.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference

The General Assembly,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Taking into account the desire of both organizations to co-operate more closely in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order,

Recalling the Articles of the Charter of the United Nations which encourage activities through regional co-operation for the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Noting the strengthening of co-operation between the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference,

Noting the convening of the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held at Geneva on 30 and 31 July 1985 in compliance with General Assembly resolution 39/7, which afforded an opportunity to evaluate the progress achieved in the five priority areas of co-operation identified by the first annual meeting between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the secretariat of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, held at Geneva on 15 July 1983,

Taking note of the encouraging results obtained in the evaluation of the progress achieved in the five priority areas of co-operation as well as in the exchange of views on preparatory work and other details for the second general meeting between the two organizations as provided for in General Assembly resolution 37/4,

Convinced that the strengthening of co-operation between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference contributes to the promotion of the purposes and principles of the United Nations,

Recalling its resolutions 36/23 of 9 November 1981, 37/4 of 22 October 1982, 38/4 of 28 October 1983 and 39/7 of 8 November 1984,

1. Takes note with satisfaction of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Approves the conclusions and recommendations of the co-ordination meeting of the focal points of the lead agencies of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

3. Notes with satisfaction the active participation of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in the work of the United Nations towards the realization of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations;

4. Requests the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to continue co-operation in their common search for solutions to global problems, such as questions relating to international peace and security, disarmament, self-determination, decolonization, fundamental human rights and the establishment of a new international economic order;

5. Encourages the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to continue to expand their co-operation with the Organization of the Islamic Conference, particularly by negotiating co-operation agreements, and invites them to multiply the contacts and meeting; of focal points for co-operation in priority areas of interest to the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to strengthen co-operation and co-ordination between the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the Organization of the Islamic Conference to serve the mutual interests of the two organizations in the political, economic, social and cultural fields;

7. Recommends that the second general meeting between representatives of the secretariats of the United Nations and other organizations of the United Nations system and the secretariat of the Organization of the Islamic Conference as provided for in General Assembly resolution 37/4 should be organized in 1986 at a date and place to be determined through consultations with the organizations concerned;

8. Expresses its appreciation for the efforts of the Secretary-General in the promotion of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference, and expresses the hope that he will continue to strengthen the mechanisms of co-operation between the two organizations;

9. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the state of co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference;

10. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-first session the item entitled "Co-operation between the United Nations and the Organization of the Islamic Conference".

Draft by Yemen (A/40/L.5); agenda item 24.

Other intergovernmental organizations

At the request of the host Governments of several intergovernmental conferences, the main documents of those meetings were transmitted to the Secretary-General in 1985 for circulation as documents of the General Assembly, the Security Council or both, as follows:

—Declaration of the Commemorative Meeting in Observance of the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Asian-African Conference (Bandung, Indonesia, 24 and 25 April).<sup>(13)</sup>

—Final Political and Economic Declarations adopted by the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries (Luanda, Angola, 4-7 Septemr);<sup>(14)</sup> final communique adopted by the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries to the fortieth session of the General Assembly (New York, 1 October).<sup>(15)</sup>

—Communique adopted at a meeting of heads of Government of Commonwealth States (Nassau, Bahamas, 16-22 October).<sup>(16)</sup>

—Final communique adopted by the sixth session of the Supreme Council of the Gulf Co-operation Council (Oman, 3-6 November).<sup>(17)</sup>

—Resolutions adopted by the first extraordinary session of the Conference of African Ministers of Information (Cairo, Egypt, 23-25 November).<sup>(18)</sup>

Fortieth anniversary of the United Nations

The year 1985 marked the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations, whose theme was "United Nations for a better world", and was also observed as the Year of the United Nations in accordance with the General Assembly's 1984 decision.<sup>(1)</sup>

Notable among the commemorative activities was the meeting of former and current Presidents of the General Assembly, under the auspices of the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, held in New York from 6 to 10 June 1985. The meeting, whose purpose was to contribute to the debate on improving the impact of the United Nations, centred on two issues: the crisis of multilateralism as it affected the United Nations and the improvement of the General Assembly. The main conclusions and the recommendations of the 11 Presidents for the rationalization of the Assembly's procedures were transmitted by the President of the thirty-ninth session of the Assembly to the Secretary-General on 12 June<sup>(2)</sup> for circulation to Member States.

Within the context of the anniversary's theme, the Security Council held a commemorative meeting on 26 September, at which it considered its responsibilities for maintaining international peace and security (see p. 392).

In accordance with decision 40/404 (see p. 406), the Assembly held a commemorative session from 14 to 24 October, the last day coinciding with the proclamation of 1986 as the International Year of Peace (IYP) (see p. 122). Statements made and messages delivered during the proceedings were later published in a compendium.<sup>(3)</sup> Because the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO)—two organizations with observer status—were not invited to address the commemorative session, Algeria<sup>(4)</sup> and Burkina Faso,<sup>(5)</sup> on 17 and 22 October, respectively, advised of their intention not to participate in the proceedings. For the same reason, Iran on 23 October<sup>(6)</sup> conveyed its deep regret and that of the Muslim people.

In his 24 October concluding address, the Secretary-General said that the commemoration assumed the importance that it did because international relations had reached a critical stage; he emphasized the need amidst a world seething with tensions and racked by violence to strengthen that structure of international co-operation which was the United Nations. The Assembly President followed with a restatement of the concerns voiced during the ceremonies, of those areas in which the United Nations had achieved a satisfactory measure of success but where work remained to be done, and of the gravest problems, concluding by appealing to Member States to muster the necessary political will to solve existing conflicts and prevent new ones from arising.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: plenary 34, 35, 40-49.

As mandated by the Assembly in 1984,<sup>(7)</sup> the Department of Public Information of the United Nations Secretariat mounted a wide-ranging information programme aimed at providing an overall perspective of United Nations achievements. Various publications were issued, including two books—one surveying the work of the United Nations in its first 40 years<sup>(8)</sup> and the other reviewing its peace-keeping operations<sup>(9)</sup> a brochure highlighting United Nations-related events in those years;<sup>(10)</sup> a special issue of the periodical Objective: Justice, featuring a history of decolonization;<sup>(11)</sup> a newsletter on the anniversary;<sup>(12)</sup> and a booklet giving an overview of United Nations work in development.<sup>(13)</sup> A special anniversary issue of the magazine UN Chronicle was also issued.<sup>(14)</sup>

The Department produced films and television programmes carrying the anniversary message, among them a film entitled "Why", examining the United Nations and its prospects for the future, and another reflecting young people's aspirations for the Organization. It organized book and photographic exhibitions, an international poster competition on the anniversary, seminars, and meetings with professional groups to promote teaching about the United Nations. A press kit for the occasion was prepared, and special events and activities were conducted at United Nations information centres around the world.

Numerous communications concerning the anniversary were received and circulated (see p. 406), a number of them dealing also with IYP (see p. 123).

ACC activities. Observance of the anniversary was of primary concern to the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) in view of the significant contribution of the United Nations specialized agencies and programmes to the betterment of world conditions and to increased international co-operation during the past 40 years. Activities included the designation of focal points by organizations, an assessment of the work of the United Nations system during those years and of its further potentialities, and joint measures to convey effectively to the public information and knowledge about that work. In its annual overview report for 1984/85,<sup>(15)</sup> ACC said the anniversary provided an opportunity to reassess the United Nations role in international economic co-operation, reverse certain negative trends in multilateralism and renew commitment to the Charter.

Responding to a 1984 Economic and Social Council recommendation<sup>(6)</sup> and to a General Assembly invitation of the same year,<sup>(7)</sup> ACC members provided information on their plans and programmes, which ACC submitted in February 1985 to the Preparatory Committee for the anniversary (see below).

On 23 April, during its first 1985 session, ACC requested its Organizational Committee to make recommendations and prepare material to enable it to contribute appropriately to the anniversary's observance.<sup>(17)</sup> accordingly, at a special meeting on 25 October, the Committee approved a draft declaration for ACC consideration at its second (October) session. However, no action was taken on the draft.

Activities of the Preparatory Committee. The Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations held eight meetings between 19 February and 11 September 1985. The Committee of 117 members (as at 11 September), under the chairmanship of the President of the thirty-ninth session of the General Assembly, made recommendations concerning procedural and organizational arrangements for commemorating the anniversary. Those recommendations were approved by the Assembly when it acted on the Preparatory Committee's report,<sup>(18)</sup> and embodied them in decision 40/404.

As to participation in the ceremonies of organizations with observer status, the Committee stated its understanding that, in accordance with established Assembly practices, representatives of such organizations could address the Assembly under the items of direct relevance to them and could refer to the fortieth anniversary under those items.

The Committee, which had been requested to draw up a suitable text for a final document for signature or adoption by the Assembly as a high point of the commemorative session,<sup>(1)</sup> had before it two draft declarations. The main draft under consideration was sponsored by the non-aligned countries of Algeria, Democratic Yemen, India, Iraq, the Syrian Arab Republic, Yemen and Yugoslavia.<sup>(19)</sup> Amendments to that draft were proposed by the United States.<sup>(20)</sup> By a letter of 18 December,<sup>(21)</sup> India clarified that the draft represented a consensus text—rather than a proposal by the sponsors—which had evolved as a result of informal consultations, and pointed out that the draft had been transmitted to the Committee on 22 October, at which time there were several unresolved issues remaining. The second draft was put forward by the 10 EC members, Portugal and Spain.<sup>(22)</sup>

The Committee met once more, on 24 October, to resolve the remaining points of contention, including one on the question of Palestine. The Committee failed to reach agreement on a final text, however, so that, at the sponsors' request, the two drafts and the proposed amendments were circulated as official documents. Thus, the Assembly was unable, on 24 October, to adopt a declaration in honour of the anniversary.

By the first draft, United Nations States Members, having considered the Organization's 40 years' experience, would have declared that it had helped prevent another global war and had achieved significant progress in such endeavours as peace-keeping, promoting human rights and enhancing awareness of the need for disarmament and co-operation for development. They would have acknowledged the Organization's invaluable contribution to decolonization, improving the quality of human life and assisting developing countries; its significant role in the development of international law; and its indispensability as a forum for negotiations for the political, economic, social and humanitarian benefit of humankind.

Members would have also acknowledged, however, that the purposes of the Charter had not been fully realized, and its principles and provisions not universally respected; that the world situation continued to be characterized by confrontation and conflicts, intervention and occupation, threat or use of force, terrorism, violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and grave economic and social problems; and that the most destructive weapons ever produced threatened the survival of humanity.

Members would have reiterated their commitment to respect the Charter without reservation and determination to promote the rule of law in international affairs. They would have resolved to promote friendly relations among States based on sovereign equality, to give effect to the principles of sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of States, to reverse the arms race through genuine disarmament and to redeploy arms resources for economic and social development. They would have stressed the need to address the critical economic situation and famine in Africa and the United Nations role in enhancing international co-operation in science and technology. They would also have declared their intention to strengthen the United Nations role in maintaining international peace and security and in promoting economic and social development and human rights; emphasized the importance of the Assembly's role under the Charter; agreed to enhance the Security Council's effectiveness; reaffirmed the Secretary-General's responsibilities; and pledged to work together in the United Nations for a better world, through multilateral co-operation.

Other provisions concerned peoples' right to self-determination, early independence for Namibia, eradication of apartheid, an end to situations caused by foreign aggression and occupation, disasters, children, youth and the advancement of women.

The amendments proposed by the United States were to three paragraphs. By the first, Members would have declared that all people should have access to basic requirements of life through national efforts supported and strengthened by a just international economic system, to which end they would have reaffirmed their determination to work for the establishment of a new international economic order. The United States amendment would, among other changes, have stated that, while developing countries recognized that ultimate responsibility for their development rested on themselves, industrialized countries would stress their commitment to strengthen support of the developing countries by, inter alia, endeavouring to ensure a stable and equitable international environment conducive to development; a collective endeavour to promote a system of just and mutually beneficial international economic relations would contribute to establishing a new international economic order.

By the second paragraph, Members would have pointed to the need urgently and comprehensively to solve the interrelated issues of money, finance, debt and trade, and to the need to address the international debt crisis through a dialogue involving debtor and creditor countries, international private banks and multilateral financial institutions. The amendment would have stated that those issues needed to be resolved urgently with full recognition of their interrelationship and that progress towards resolving the international debt problem should encompass, inter alia, pursuit of the dialogue mentioned.

By the third paragraph, Members would have expressed concern that, although the United Nations agenda had included the question of Palestine since 1947, the problem remained unresolved; they would have reaffirmed their commitment to work together, under the auspices of the United Nations, to ensure a just, comprehensive and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem in all its aspects, encompassing the right to self-determination of the Palestinian people and the principle of the inadmissibility of acquisition of territory by force which required termination of the occupation. The United States amendment would have referred instead to the Arab-Israeli dispute and the Palestinian issue, and would have reaffirmed commitment to working together under appropriate auspices for a just, comprehensive and lasting settlement of the Middle East problem in all its aspects, omitting reference to what those aspects encompassed.

The second draft text embodied many elements of the first, adding crisis management as a United Nations achievement. Its provision on the world economic crisis would have had Members recognize the need to reinforce and further develop United Nations activities designed to bring about the economic and social progress of all countries, in the first instance that of the developing countries, and to accentuate the convergence of the economic policies of all States within the framework of a long-term development strategy. The draft spoke of peaceful settlement of disputes without, however, referring to any specific dispute. It also spoke of reinforcing international co-operation for the consolidation of peace and security for all; of the Organization's capacity to promote the ideals of peace and co-operation; and of the current era as offering unprecedented possibilities for mankind to become master of its destiny and to forge a better world by making the forces of reason prevail over those of division and destruction.

A note by the Secretariat with later addenda<sup>(23)</sup> updated information on action taken or contemplated in observance of the anniversary by: Member States; the Secretariat, specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system; and intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. Another such note, also with later addenda,<sup>(24)</sup> summarized information received from Governments in response to the Assembly's 1984 invitation<sup>(7)</sup> to organize appropriate observances.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In September, acting on the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee, the General Assembly adopted decision 40/404 without vote.

Commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations

At its 3rd plenary meeting, on 20 September 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendations of the Preparatory Committee for the Fortieth Anniversary of the United Nations, decided that:

(a) All statements made by Heads of State or Government and special envoys during the entire fortieth session of the General Assembly in 1985 should be considered part of the commemoration;

(b) The general debate should be held as usual for a three-week period, from 23 September to 11 October, on the clear and explicit understanding that statements made by Heads of State or Government and special envoys during that period would also be considered part of the commemoration;

(c) Between the conclusion of the general debate and the commemorative ceremony, to be held on 24 October, Heads of State or Government and special envoys might address the General Assembly in connection with the fortieth anniversary celebration;

(d) The culmination of this period should be on 24 October, with a solemn ceremony to hear statements by the Secretary-General and the President of the General Assembly and to adopt a final declaration by consensus;

(e) During the commemorative proceedings between 14 and 24 October, Heads of State or Government should be seated in the General Assembly Hall and escorted to the podium from the floor and, following the practice already approved by the Assembly, delegations should refrain from expressing their congratulations in the Assembly Hall after a speech had been delivered; to this end, Heads of State or Government should be advised of such arrangements and the President of the General Assembly should be requested to draw the attention of representatives to those arrangements;

(f) Delegations should be informed that the number of speakers per day on 21, 22 and 23 October could not exceed twenty-one during regular morning and afternoon meetings, that this number could only be accommodated on the assumption that statements did not exceed fifteen minutes and that any additional speakers on those days would have to be heard at an extended afternoon meeting or at a night meeting;

(g) Heads of State or Government should be advised of the arrangements referred to in subparagraph (f) above and the President of the General Assembly should be requested to draw the attention of representatives to those arrangements;

(h) A compendium of the statements delivered by or received from Heads of State or Government with duly accredited delegations and the statements made by their special envoys should be issued as a United Nations publication as part of the commemoration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations;

(i) Member States might consider including in their delegations to the fortieth session of the General Assembly those dignitaries who were actively involved in the work of the United Nations, particularly those who had signed the Charter of the United Nations and/or former Presidents of the Assembly.

General Assembly decision 40/404

Adopted without vote

Draft by Preparatory Committee (A/40/49); agenda item 39.

On 14 October, at the beginning of the commemorative session, the Assembly had before it a revised draft resolution on PLO and SWAPO participation, sponsored by India, Iraq, Kuwait, Nigeria, Senegal and Yemen.<sup>(25)</sup> However, the sponsors did not press the draft to a vote. By the draft, the Assembly would have invited both organizations to address it during the session. The Assembly President stated that the sponsors' major concern related to the Preparatory Committee's interpretation of the participation of such organizations (see above). He explained that the Assembly, in acting on the Committee's report on 20 September, did so without prejudice to its 1974<sup>(26)</sup> and 1976<sup>(27)</sup> resolutions granting observer status to PLO and SWAPO, respectively.

Under the agenda item on the commemoration of the anniversary, the Assembly also adopted resolution 40/237 on the review of the efficiency of the administrative and financial functioning of the United Nations.

Communications. Throughout 1985, the Secretary-General received many letters transmitting statements, messages, appeals, declarations and resolutions, issued officially by Governments in observance of the anniversary. The majority recalled the purposes for which the United Nations had been founded and underscored its achievements and the contribution of States in bringing them about. They also pointed to areas for improvement and to tasks that lay ahead, and called for actions to be taken.

Several letters annexed a description of commemorative activities, such as an 8 April letter from Yugoslavia<sup>(28)</sup> mentioning special publications and commemorative stamps, children and youth activities, streets and squares named after the United Nations, and special sessions held by United Nations associations. On 14 June, Bulgaria<sup>(29)</sup> listed such activities as solemn meetings and mass gatherings, popular scientific activities, lectures, publications, film and broadcast documentaries, photo exhibits, newspaper and magazine features, and special school programmes including the awarding of scholarships for 1985/86 to students from developing countries and national liberation movements. Similarly, the Foreign Minister of the Byelorussian SSR, in a 28 June letter,<sup>(30)</sup> spoke of special press, radio and television programmes, as well as photo and poster exhibits.

A number of communications called for united action to avert the threat of nuclear war and to halt the arms race. They included a 9 May letter from the Foreign Minister of Poland,<sup>(31)</sup> a statement issued by Czechoslovakia jointly with Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Cuba, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR, the USSR and Viet Nam,<sup>(32)</sup> a 17 May statement from Mongolia<sup>(33)</sup> and a 24 June message from the German Democratic Republic.<sup>(34)</sup>

Venezuela, on 24 June,<sup>(35)</sup> transmitted a message by its Foreign Minister expressing confidence that the commemoration would strengthen joint action towards attaining Charter ideals. A 24 October<sup>(36)</sup> communication by its President expressed pride in United Nations accomplishments and stated that without the Organization mankind would be living in a less hopeful world.

In a 24 June telegram,<sup>(37)</sup> the Foreign Minister of the USSR underscored the anniversary's significance in terms of United Nations accomplishments and its potential for preserving peace and improving the economic and social well-being of all; it affirmed USSR readiness to ensure that the democratic principles on which the Organization had been founded became firmly established in international relations.

Several communications used the occasion to reaffirm a commitment to the Charter's purposes and principles and to the United Nations. These included a 26 June<sup>(38)</sup> joint appeal by the heads of State or Government of Argentina, Austria, Canada, Jordan, Malaysia, Senegal, Spain, Sweden and the United Republic of Tanzania; a 22 June letter<sup>(39)</sup> from the Foreign Minister of the Ukrainian SSR; the 29 July Lima Declaration signed by 20 Latin American States;<sup>(40)</sup> and a declaration from Bulgaria,<sup>(41)</sup> a resolution by the Ivory Coast,<sup>(42)</sup> a message from Mongolia<sup>(43)</sup> and a message from the President of Guinea,<sup>(44)</sup> all issued in October.

The President of Brazil issued two messages: on 26 June,<sup>(45)</sup> he reiterated his confidence in the Organization's ability to strengthen its role in the peaceful solution of conflicts; and on 23 October,<sup>(46)</sup> he stated that renewed dedication to the Charter was indispensable for realizing the ideals that had inspired the United Nations.

The Foreign Minister of Uruguay, on 25 October,<sup>(47)</sup> stated that existing conflicts and the accelerating arms race committed the international community more than ever to redoubling its efforts towards the peaceful settlement of disputes. A motion adopted by the Senate of Peru on 22 October<sup>(48)</sup> voiced hope that United Nations influence would make possible the attainment of peace, the survival of the human race and its harmonious coexistence.

A 24 October message<sup>(49)</sup> by the President of Afghanistan cited not only United Nations achievements but also the obstacles to its functioning—such as the activities of the imperialist Powers and their industrial-military complexes; elimination of those obstacles, the message said, required total observance of the Organization's aspirations.

United Nations reform was called for in two statements. On 16 August,<sup>(50)</sup> the Philippines made a series of recommendations, among them a more efficient, institutionalized system of evaluation, programme policies and priorities reflecting national priorities, retrenchment measures and greater utilization of the network concept. On 29 October,<sup>(51)</sup> Egypt reiterated its call to amend the Charter to enable the Organization to keep pace with developments and to perform its functions in such manner as to realize the purposes for which it had been created.

The indispensability of the United Nations as an instrument of co-operation and understanding among its Members and as the best forum for solving complex problems was stressed by Yugoslavia on 5 July.<sup>(52)</sup> That there was no alternative to the Organization was equally stressed by a declaration adopted by Austria's Socialist International (Vienna, 15 October),<sup>(53)</sup> which also suggested measures for reform. A 24 October statement<sup>(54)</sup> by the Foreign Minister of Tunisia stated that, criticism of its detractors notwithstanding, the United Nations remained mankind's greatest hope, the last resort of small nations, and the instrument without which law and justice would go into oblivion.

A 26 June statement<sup>(55)</sup> by the Foreign Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany attributed the weaknesses of the United Nations principally to the lack of political determination of its Members to act in accordance with its purposes and principles. A message of 23 October<sup>(56)</sup> by the Prime Minister of Malaysia said the anniversary provided the opportunity for the international community to redirect its political will towards overcoming the Organization's shortcomings. Also on 23 October,<sup>(57)</sup> the President of the Lao People's Democratic Republic pointed to the need for a demonstration of such will.

The Chairman of the Council of Ministers of Viet Nam, in a 23 October message,<sup>(58)</sup> expressed appreciation to the Secretary-General for his contribution to the cause of world peace and to building a South-East Asia of peace, stability, friendship and co-operation; Viet Nam highly valued United Nations economic and technical assistance for the country's reconstruction. Bolivia's President, by a message of 24 October,<sup>(59)</sup> paid tribute to the Organization and cited its outstanding achievements, in particular the multinational co-operation it had begun in support of his country's economic recovery.

A 28 September statement<sup>(60)</sup> by Argentina's Senate expressed hope that United Nations action on behalf of justice, peace and development of all peoples would continue to guide all nations and that Members would contribute towards strengthening the Organization.

Communications were also received from intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations. The Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee transmitted,<sup>(61)</sup> as its contribution to the anniversary's, observance, a study it had prepared on strengthening the United Nations role through rationalization of functional modalities with special reference to the Assembly (see LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VII). The final communiqué of the Meeting of Ministers and Heads of Delegation of Non-Aligned Countries (see p. 403) reaffirmed the Movement's support to the United Nations; the Political Declaration of the Movement's ministerial Conference (see also p. 403) stated that the anniversary should give impetus to strengthening the Organization so that multilateral negotiations might bring about political solutions, and so that equality and independence of all countries and principles of coexistence might become the basis of international relations.

A statement by the World Federation of United Nations Associations (WFUNA) (thirtieth plenary assembly, Geneva, October), transmitted by Canada on 17 October,<sup>(62)</sup> affirmed WFUNA's determination to work towards United Nations objectives and called on all Member States to intensify efforts to strengthen its authority and on all non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to support those efforts. A 13 September message<sup>(63)</sup> by the Conference of Non-Governmental Organizations reconfirmed NGO commitment to the Charter and underscored that strict adherence to its provisions was indispensable for the maintenance of international peace and security and for creating conditions necessary for economic, social and cultural development and for safeguarding human rights.

Several communications related to addresses made before the Assembly during the commemorative session.

On 24 October,<sup>(64)</sup> Ethiopia, referring to the speech made that day by the United States President, called baseless his allegation that 1,700 USSR advisers and 2,500 Cuban troops were in Ethiopia; there were but few foreign advisers and no combat troops, it said, and its bilateral relations with any country were determined solely by Ethiopia.

Referring to the same address, Afghanistan, on 28 October<sup>(65)</sup> accused the United States President of evading serious consideration of global questions by fabricating artificial issues in his references to Afghanistan. On 6 November,<sup>(66)</sup> Afghanistan further accused him of putting regional conflicts at the centre of his speech and protested against what it labelled ill-intentioned interpretations of the realities in that country.

On 18 October,<sup>(67)</sup> Iran stated that Iraq, in its address that day, had repeated its fallacious allegations against Iran.

On 8 November,<sup>(68)</sup> Bulgaria, referring to what it called unwarranted accusations made against it by Turkey when that country spoke on 22 October, stated that the existence of a Turkish minority in Bulgaria was fictitious; Turkey's attempts to destabilize the Balkans were intended to divert world attention from Turkey's own domestic problems. Replying on 18 November,<sup>(69)</sup> Turkey insisted that a Muslim Turkish minority, numbering 1.5 million and suffering from a campaign of terror, existed in Bulgaria; Turkey quoted excerpts from the world's press giving accounts of clashes between ethnic Turks and the Bulgarian authorities during the first half of 1985.

A number of the communications received in connection with the anniversary also dealt with the observance of 1985 as the International Year of Peace (see p. 123).

Composition of UN organs

In 1985, as in previous years since 1979, consideration of the question of the composition of the relevant organs of the United Nations was deferred, based on a recommendation of the Special Political Committee, which reported that none of its members had requested to speak on the substance of the item.<sup>(70)</sup> Acting without vote on that recommendation, the General Assembly, on 16 December, adopted decision 40/430, by which it included the item in the provisional agenda of its forty-first (1986) session.

Economic and social questions

Chapter I

Development policy and international economic co-operation

The need for the developing countries to advance at an acceptable pace against the background of the debt crisis was discussed in several United Nations bodies throughout 1985. During discussions on the world economic situation and in major economic reports, it was stressed that, despite the significant expansion of world output and international trade, the legacy of the global recession of the early 1980s was still affecting a large number of developing countries and the middle years of the decade would continue to be characterized by high unemployment and inadequate progress against world poverty. Particular attention was given to the seriousness of the plight of the least developed countries and of sub-Saharan Africa.

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General also noted the uneven functioning of the world economy, stating that high technology in industrial countries promised great affluence but also caused overcapacity, obsolescence and unemployment, while many developing countries, in addition to basic development problems, were crippled by debt burdens. Since the need for international economic co-operation increasingly cut across traditional sectoral boundaries, what was required was more effective use of the United Nations as a forum for integrating practical effort which should also increase the effectiveness of the specialized agencies. There was a parallel need for governmental ministries to act in concert with each other towards agreed objectives if the international system was to perform effectively.

The mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) was completed in 1985 by the Committee established to carry out that process. Although the Strategy's growth and assistance targets had not been met, the continuing validity of its goals and objectives were reaffirmed.

The mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) was carried out in October by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) Intergovernmental Group on LDCs. The General Assembly emphasized that they needed urgent and special attention from the international community and added Vanuatu to the list of officially designated LDCs, bringing the total number of countries so listed to 37. Country review meetings continued to be organized for individual LDCs by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), which also administered the special fund for them.

After the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States was reviewed by an Ad Hoc Committee, the Assembly urged States to examine further the Charter's implementation, thereby contributing to the establishment of the new international economic order.

Following discussions in the Economic and Social Council on conducting constructive international economic negotiations, the Assembly urged Member States to continue negotiations initiated in the United Nations system on international economic issues and to bring them to a successful end.

Informal discussions continued throughout the year on the launching of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to start in 1980; in suspending its 1985 session, the Assembly decided to consider the issue when it resumed the session in 1986. The Assembly also felt that a common endeavour to promote just and mutually beneficial international economic relations would contribute to the economic well-being of States and to the establishment of a new international economic order.

During the year, the question of economic co-operation among developing countries was considered in UNCTAD, while activities in the United Nations system regarding economic and technical co-operation among those countries were discussed in the Assembly, the Council, the Committee for Programme Co-ordination (CPC) and Joint Meetings of CPC and the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

The World Economic Survey 1985, which analysed current trends and policies in the world economy, was the background document for the Council's annual discussion of international economic and social policy. UNCTAD produced its fifth annual report on trade and development issues, the Trade and Development Report, 1985, which, in addition to analysing the world economy, focused on the problem of debt and development. A further assessment of the world economic situation was carried out by the Committee for Development Planning (CDP) which stated that effective multilateral economic co-operation was particularly necessary in four areas-the trading system, the monetary and financial system, debt and development finance, and the crisis in sub-Saharan Africa.

The Assembly again considered the specific problems and geographical handicaps of land-locked developing countries and called for assistance to help them with their transport and transit infrastructures. The United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries was dissolved by the Assembly because of the low level of contributions.

The Assembly decided that the Secretary-General should continue reporting on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000 and it singled out areas for special attention in 1987. In other actions, the Assembly again deplored the application of coercive economic measures by developed countries, and requested Member States to submit additional comments on a proposed new international human order: moral aspects of development.

Broad areas of economic and social development were considered in several United Nations forums during the year. The improvement of various aspects of development planning, education and administration continued to be studied, while the work of the United Nations system in rural development continued to be reviewed.

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: disarmament and development. Operational activities for development. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: Africa and the critical economic situation. International trade and finance. Regional economic and social activities: economic and social trends-Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Asia; development policy and regional economic co-operation-Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Asia. Social and cultural development: social aspects of development; crime prevention. Human rights: right to development. Women: women and development. Statistics: economic statistics. International economic law: legal aspects of the new international economic order.

International economic relations

Development and economic co-operation

Several United Nations bodies, including the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council, continued to follow aspects of development and economic co-operation during 1985. In resolution 40/178, the Assembly urged Member States to continue, in good faith, negotiations initiated in the United Nations system on international economic issues, stressing the willingness of those States to strengthen that system as a framework for solving economic, scientific-technological and social problems. Having considered a report on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, the Assembly identified topics for special attention in 1987 (resolution 40/207). It considered that promoting just and mutually beneficial international economic relations would contribute to each State's economic well-being and to establishing a new international economic order (40/173). The Assembly again deplored the use of coercive economic measures by some developed countries and their impact on international economic relations (40/185). In other action, the Assembly considered the moral aspects of development contained in the proposed international human order (40/206).

The mid-term review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) was concluded by the Committee established for that purpose and the Assembly endorsed the Committee's agreed conclusions (decision 40/438). A review of the implementation of the 1974 Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States was carried out by an Ad Hoc Committee and the Assembly urged States to examine further the Charter's implementation (resolution 40/182).

Economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) was widely discussed in various United Nations forums, with the UNCTAD Committee on ECDC holding its fourth session in 1985.

Several United Nations bodies expressed concern over the economic situation in Africa, particularly in the sub-Sahara.

Informal contacts on global economic negotiations continued throughout the year, with no agreement being reached.

CDP activities. At its twenty-first session, held in two parts, the first in November 1984<sup>(1)</sup> and the second in April 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> CDP had multilateral economic co-operation as its central theme. Noting that the contribution of multilateralism to post-war economic progress had been impressive but that major changes in the world economy had created new challenges, CDP expressed concern at the strains facing multilateral co-operation and the resulting danger of a drift away from order, stability, predictability and rules, which posed a threat to the international community, especially its weakest members.

In view of the growing economic interdependence of national economies and dramatic changes taking place in the world's industrial and financial structures, and in order to cope more effectively with demographic momentum and the ecological impact of economic activity, CDP proposed a strengthening of multilateralism. Effective multilateral co-operation would be particularly necessary to meet four immediate challenges to the world economy, namely: the risk of disintegration of the world trading system; the instability and uncertainty in the international monetary and financial system; debt and development finance (see also Chapter IV of this section); and the crisis in sub-Saharan Africa (see Chapter III of this section).

CDP noted that the primary focus on multilateral economic co-operation did not indicate lack of concern for the appropriateness of national policies, in both developing and industrialized countries; in many developing ones, there could be little prospect of future development unless there was major domestic policy reform to complement a more supportive international environment.

A CDP working group on capital requirements of developing countries met in New York from 9 to 11 December 1985.

ACC activities. In its annual overview report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(3)</sup> ACC stated that, in reviewing the world economy, it had noted the recovery from recession in industrialized countries and the resumption of growth in a great number of developing countries. Recovery, however, had been accompanied by increasing protectionist pressures and moves away from multilateral trade agreements, while weaknesses persisted in commodity prices. ACC noted that the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1985 provided an opportunity to reassess the Organization's role in international economic co-operation, reverse negative trends in multilateralism and renew commitment to the Charter of the United Nations.

At its first regular 1985 session (Geneva, 22 and 23 April),<sup>(4)</sup> ACC took note of a 1984 report by its Task Force on Long-Term Development Objectives on medium- and long-term perspectives and problems of employment and development,<sup>(5)</sup> and requested the Task Force to continue assessing the world economic situation, taking into account the views expressed in ACC, the coherence of the United Nations system's long-term development objectives and issues such as employment and social aspects of development, including the social cost of adjustment.

At its second regular session of the year (New York, 28 and 29 October),<sup>(6)</sup> ACC decided to undertake at its first regular 1986 session an in-depth review of issues related to conditions for fostering economic growth and asked the Task Force to prepare for it, focusing on the economic and social implications of growth strategies and the impact of adjustment policies and measures. ACC took note of the intention of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to undertake a study, in consultation with ACC members, on strengthening co-operation and co-ordination in selected economic and social areas.

World Economic Survey 1985. During its annual discussion of international economic and social policy, which took place in July (see below), the Economic and Social Council had before it the World Economic Survey 1985,<sup>(7)</sup> prepared by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs (DIESA) and based on information available as at 1 April 1985.

After analysing trends and prospects in the world economy (see p. 428), the Survey listed key policy issues for international and national action: the adoption by industrial countries of standstill provisions on trade barriers and a gradual dismantling of non-tariff barriers and discriminatory trade restrictions; gradually reducing the United States budget deficit combined with relaxing cautious fiscal stances in those developed countries in a position to do so, to avoid deceleration of world economic growth; more effective consultations among developed countries to further exchange rate stability; use of the centrally planned economies' five-year plans (1986-1990) to consolidate recent progress, lay the foundations for more balanced long-term growth and expand economic relations with developing countries; effective policies in developing countries to increase domestic savings and to attract official and private capital from abroad; an improvement in the mix of internal adjustment efforts and external financial support, for countries facing balance-of-payments difficulties and a more supportive stance by the International Monetary Fund in that regard, particularly the restoration of the original character of its extended fund and compensatory financing facilities: increased exports and a return to more normal interest rates to restore creditworthiness to many developing countries and arrest further negative resource transfers from them, with further debt renegotiations required in the mean time; an increased inflow of official development assistance (ODA), as well as debt relief, to LDCs and other low-income countries which continued to be afflicted by stagnation or declines in per capita incomes and still faced weak primary commodity markets; an increase in the capital base of the World Bank and regional development banks, which faced resource constraints precluding a normal increase in lending activities; close attention to the emergency food situation in sub-Saharan Africa and further international and domestic efforts to rehabilitate the social and productive infrastructure; and the strengthening of existing trade arrangements and the enactment of more comprehensive ones.

The Economic and Social Council's general discussion of international economic and social policy<sup>(8)</sup> focused on international co-operation in the interrelated areas of money, finance, debt and trade and the United Nations role in promoting such co-operation in an increasingly interdependent world. The Council had decided, in 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> that in 1985 it would give special attention to the Organization's role in that regard. Shared concern about future world economic prospects prompted most delegations to stress the need for enhanced international co-operation in those interrelated areas. Of immediate concern was the prospective deceleration in growth in certain industrialized countries and the possible concomitant slow-down in world trade. Averting a new global recession required sustained non-inflationary growth in those countries, greater monetary stability, enlarged market access for exports of developing countries and larger resource flows to them. It also required sustained adjustment efforts by those countries to redress external and internal imbalances and improve allocative efficiency in their economies.

In the longer term, concerted efforts were necessary to redress fundamental inequities and deficiencies in the international monetary, financial and trading systems, including restoration of the multilateral character of the trading regime, improved mechanisms for creating and distributing international liquidity and ensuring adequate financial resources for developing countries in support of their development efforts.

On 25 July, the Council took note of the Survey (decision 1985/182) and decided to transmit a summary of its discussion to the General Assembly (decision 1985/183); it was transmitted on 5 August as a statement by the Council President.<sup>(10)</sup> on the Organization's work (see p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that it had become increasingly clear that economic, financial, monetary and trade issues were so interrelated and of such profound political and social importance that they could be dealt with effectively only as part of a wider political process. The need for international co-operation in economic affairs more and more cut across traditional sectoral boundaries, as 'represented nationally by different ministries and internationally by different specialized agencies. What was required was more effective and pragmatic use of the United Nations as a forum for integrating practical effort which should enhance the effectiveness of the specialized agencies. At the national level, there was need for governmental ministries to act in concert with each other if the international system was to perform effectively.

Communications. During 1985, communications dealing with general aspects of international economic relations were received by the Secretary-General. Among these were: an 11 March<sup>(11)</sup> note verbale from Yemen transmitting documents of the Fifteenth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers (Sanaa, 18-22 December 1984); an 18 March<sup>(12)</sup> letter from Uruguay transmitting the final communiqué of the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Consultation and Follow-up Machinery of the Cartagena Consensus (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 7 and 8 February); a 2 April<sup>(13)</sup> letter from Costa Rica and Panama transmitting a joint declaration signed by their heads of State on 19 March; a 1 May letter<sup>(14)</sup> from Indonesia transmitting the Declaration of the Commemorative Meeting in Observance of the Thirtieth Anniversary of the Asian-African Conference (Bandung, 24 and 25 April); a 9 May letter<sup>(15)</sup> from the USSR transmitting a document on its economic assistance to developing countries; a 9 May<sup>(16)</sup> letter from the Federal Republic of Germany transmitting the Bonn Economic Declaration entitled "Towards sustained growth and higher employment", issued at the Bonn Economic Summit (2-4 May) which was attended by the heads of State or Government of seven major industrialized countries (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States) and the President of the Commission of the European Communities; a 24 June<sup>(17)</sup> note verbale from the USSR, transmitting a document giving its position on problems of development and international economic co-operation; a 4 July<sup>(18)</sup> letter from Poland transmitting the communiqué of the fortieth session of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Warsaw, 25-27 June); a 9 July<sup>(19)</sup> letter from the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States concerning contributions to the development activities of the United Nations system; a 12 July<sup>(20)</sup> letter from Bulgaria transmitting a statement delivered on behalf of the socialist countries to the Economic and Social Council on 9 July; a 12 August<sup>(21)</sup> letter from Peru transmitting the Lima Declaration signed on 29 July by the heads of State of Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Panama, Uruguay and Peru, and by the special representatives of 13 other Latin American countries; a 19 September<sup>(22)</sup> letter from Papua New Guinea transmitting the Sixteenth South Pacific Forum communique (Rarotonga, Cook Islands, 5 and 6 August); a 1 October<sup>(23)</sup> letter from the German Democratic Republic transmitting a communication on its assistance to developing countries and national liberation movements in 1984; an 8 October<sup>(24)</sup> letter from Japan transmitting information on its new medium-term target for expanding ODA; a 17 October<sup>(25)</sup> letter from Egypt transmitting a declaration adopted by the Group of 77 developing countries at their annual meeting (New York, 4 October); a 28 October<sup>(26)</sup> letter from the Bahamas transmitting a communique adopted by heads of Government of Commonwealth States at their summit (Nassau, 16-22 October); a 15 October<sup>(27)</sup> note verbale from Canada transmitting the resolutions of the Seventy-fourth Inter-Parliamentary Conference (Ottawa, 2-7 September); a 30 October<sup>(28)</sup> letter from Czechoslovakia transmitting a report on its economic assistance to developing countries and national liberation movements in 1984; a 5 November<sup>(29)</sup> letter from Kuwait transmitting data on its contributions to a number of African countries since January 1984; a 5 November<sup>(30)</sup> letter from Angola transmitting the Final Political Declaration and Final Economic Declaration of the Conference of Foreign Ministers of Non-Aligned Countries (Luanda, 4-7 September); and a 20 November<sup>(31)</sup> letter from the USSR transmitting a document on its economic co-operation with developing countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/181 without vote.

Conducting constructive and action-oriented international economic negotiations

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1985, the Council, recalling its resolution 1984/82 of 27 July 1984 on the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations in 1985, having devoted special attention to an assessment of the role of the United Nations in promoting international economic and social co-operation and to the consideration of ways of strengthening the role of the Organization and of further enhancing its effectiveness in this regard, and noting the importance of the ideas contained in the draft resolution entitled "Conducting constructive and action-oriented international economic negotiations", annexed to the present decision, and the extensive discussion held thereon, decided to transmit the draft resolution to the General Assembly at its fortieth session for further consideration and appropriate action.

ANNEX

Conducting constructive and action-oriented international economic negotiations

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the fundamental purposes of the United Nations as laid down in its Charter,

Recalling that the United Nations should promote, inter alia, higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development, as well as solutions of international economic, social and related problems,

Bearing in mind that conditions of stability and well-being are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

Particularly concerned at the deterioration in the international economic environment, especially at the very grave economic situation suffered by developing countries,

Alarmed about the growing tendency to solve internal economic problems at the expense of other countries and to undermine normal economic and scientific-technological co-operation among nations,

Concerned also at the impasse in international economic negotiations within the United Nations on nearly all substantial issues as a result of a retreat from multilateral co-operation by certain developed countries,

Noting the important role and historic responsibility of Governments, statesmen and politicians for promoting international economic co-operation and for conducting fruitful multilateral negotiations to this end,

Stressing that the purposes of the United Nations can be achieved only under conditions in which States comply fully with their obligations assumed under the Charter,

Expressing the hope and desire that the year 1985-the fortieth anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations-will mark the beginning of an era of durable and global economic and social co-operation, of strengthening the role of the Organization and of further enhancing its effectiveness in this regard,

1. Reaffirms that co-operation among all nations should be based on respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system and to exercise full sovereignty over its wealth and natural resources;

2. Appeals to all States Members of the United Nations to reaffirm their solemn pledge to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in the Charter of the United Nations on international economic and social co-operation and to contribute their genuine share of efforts to this end;

3. Emphasizes the urgency for all Member States to contribute actively to creating an atmosphere favourable to fruitful and constructive negotiations on international economic problems within the United Nations;

4. Stresses the willingness of the Member States to strengthen the United Nations Organization as a forum for constructive dialogue and joint efforts in solving international economic problems, especially problems confronting the developing countries, on the basis of the principle of equality, mutual benefit and respect for the legitimate interests and rights of all peoples, and with due regard for the real situation in the world;

5. Urges all Member States to conduct in good faith the negotiations initiated in recent years in the United Nations on international economic problems and to bring them to a successful end by reaching mutually acceptable and just solutions in accordance with the objectives agreed upon;

6. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council, on the progress achieved in this regard and to make conclusions as appropriate.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/181

Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1985/L.56), based on informal consultations on draft by German Democratic Republic (E/1985/L.48); agenda item 3.
Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 52.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

After considering the draft transmitted by the Council, the General Assembly on 17 December adopted resolution 40/178 without vote, as recommended by the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee.

Strengthening the role of the United Nations in the field of international economic, scientific-technological and social co-operation

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the fundamental purposes of the United Nations as laid down in its Charter,

Recognizing that the creation of conditions of stability and well-being is necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples,

Reaffirming that the United Nations, with a view to the creation of such conditions, should promote higher standards of living, full employment, conditions of economic and social progress and development, solutions of international economic, social, health and related problems, international cultural and educational co-operation, and universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Aware of the current state of international economic relations which calls for renewed efforts to promote international economic co-operation and to create a more favourable environment for advancing the economic and social development of all countries, in particular the developing countries,

Stressing the importance of multilateral economic negotiations in the United Nations system,

Noting the important role and historic responsibility of Governments for promoting international economic co-operation and for conducting fruitful multilateral negotiations to this end,

Stressing that the purposes of the United Nations can be achieved only under conditions in which its Members comply fully with their obligations assumed under the Charter,

Expressing the hope and desire that the year 1985 will mark the beginning of a new era of durable and global economic and social co-operation, of strengthening the role of the United Nations system and of further enhancing its effectiveness in this regard,

1. Reaffirms that co-operation among all nations should be based on respect for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of each State, including the right of each people to choose freely its own socio-economic and political system;

2. Appeals to all Member States to reaffirm their solemn pledge to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in the Charter on international economic co-operation and to contribute genuinely their share of efforts to this end;

3. Emphasizes the important contribution of the United Nations system in responding to the particular needs of the developing countries, and stresses in this context the need to strengthen multilateral co-operation for development, including increased voluntary contributions to operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

4. Emphasizes also the urgent need for all Member States to intensify their contribution to creating an atmosphere favourable to fruitful and constructive negotiations on international economic problems within the United Nations system;

5. Stresses the willingness of Member States to strengthen the United Nations system as a framework for constructive dialogue and joint efforts in solving international economic, scientific-technological and social problems, especially problems confronting the developing countries;

6. Urges all Member States to continue in a constructive spirit and in good faith the negotiations initiated in the United Nations system on international economic issues and to bring them to a successful end by reaching mutually acceptable and just solutions in accordance with the objectives agreed upon;

7. Invites the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly, in his annual reports, on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009/Add.2) without vote, 11 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.118), based on informal consultations on draft annexed to Economic and Social Council decision 1985/181 (A/C.2/40/L.3); agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 36, 39, 48-50; plenary 119.

The Second Committee devoted a major part of its work during the Assembly's 1985 regular session to development and international economic co-operation, making recommendations on a large number of topics (see APPENDIX IV, agenda item 84). A list of pertinent documents was included in part I of the Committee's report on that item,<sup>(32)</sup> which the Assembly took note of on 17 December when it adopted without vote decision 40/437, as orally proposed by its President.

Long-term trends in economic development

Report of the Secretary-General. In accordance with a 1982 General Assembly request,<sup>(33)</sup> the Secretary-General in August 1985 submitted to the Assembly a comprehensive report on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000.<sup>(34)</sup> A summary of that report<sup>(35)</sup> was considered by the Economic and Social Council at its July 1985 session.

Analytical work on long-term trends in economic development had been initiated by the Assembly in 1975<sup>(36)</sup> and the perspective had been updated periodically since first prepared in 1982.<sup>(37)</sup> The perspective was intended as a framework for examining long-term economic policy and reviewing implementation of the policy measures in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(38)</sup> (see p. 418).

The report, supplemented by statistical annexes, discussed world economic prospects and gave alternative development scenarios for the balance of the 1980s. A section dealing with longer-term projections to the year 2000 compared a baseline scenario, reflecting the extrapolation to the year 2000 of existing trends, with both a lower-growth and a higher-growth scenario.

From the higher-growth scenario, in which investment effort and capital effectiveness in developing countries gradually moved in the direction of the targets of the International Development Strategy, the general conclusion emerged that 7 per cent real growth for developing countries was achievable but not until the 1990s. It also became apparent that achieving the Strategy's target growth rates required a supportive world economy and international economic system. While the scenario indicated that it was feasible to finance the projected capital requirements from domestic resources, together with ODA and other private capital flows, it also indicated that performance was likely to falter if ODA was not forthcoming or if private capital flows ceased at each short-run crisis.

A section of the report devoted to socio-economic perspectives compared the implications of macro-economic aspects of the higher- and lower-growth scenarios for several social or socio-economic aspects of development, including employment, literacy, school enrolment, nutrition and the availability of drinking-water and sanitation. The major conclusion from the comparison was that social aspects would improve significantly faster from 1985 to 2000 with higher economic growth. However, since even with high growth there would be large gaps between the levels achieved and the Strategy's goals, major policy initiatives and institutional developments would be needed to increase the quantity and efficiency of public and private expenditure.

Although forward-looking, the perspective also attempted to place recent trends in a longer-term historical context by reviewing briefly the 25-year experience from 1960 to the mid-point of the Third Development Decade.

Among selected critical issues also considered in the report were: the crisis in Africa, highlighting the broader problems affecting LDCs, many of which were in sub-Saharan Africa (see p. 498); and military expenditures and various aspects of the relationship between disarmament and development (see p. 87).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Following its consideration of the summary of the perspective,<sup>(35)</sup> the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/178 without vote.

Long-term trends in economic development

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 25 July 1985, the Council decided to transmit the draft resolution annexed to the present decision to the General Assembly at its fortieth session, for consideration and appropriate action.

ANNEX

Long-term trends in economic development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 3508(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it initiated ten years ago the examination, within the United Nations system, of long-term trends in world economic and social development,

Recalling also its resolution 37/249 of 21 December 1982, by which it decided, inter alia, that the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000 should be revised and updated,

Convinced that a better knowledge of long-term trends in economic and social development can form a sound basis for policies determining development strategies and economic co-operation on a national, regional and global scale,

Noting that, despite certain improvements in the world economic situation, the long-term trends and prospects for many countries and regions remain uncertain, with persistent underdevelopment and growing social insecurity,

Conscious of the urgent necessity of reversing the growing arms race, which absorbs resources that might otherwise satisfy acute social and economic development requirements, especially those of the developing countries,

Considering that the examination of long-term trends in global socio-economic development should contribute to confidence-building in international economic relations and greater economic security for all countries,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the report of the Secretary-General on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000;

2. Decides to retain the practice of the submission of comprehensive reports every five years, the next to be prepared in time for the deliberations on the international development strategy for the fourth United Nations development decade;

3. Commends Member States and United Nations organizations, organs and bodies for their contributions to the implementation of General Assembly resolution 37/249 and calls upon them to continue to give all possible support in this endeavour;

4. Requests the Secretary-General, when preparing the updated version of the overall socio-economic perspective, to focus on conclusions pertaining to possible domains, mechanisms and forms of international economic co-operation designed to facilitate structural adjustment within the world economy and bring closer a new international economic order;

5. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-fifth session an item entitled "Long-term trends in social and economic development" and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at that session the report referred to in paragraph 4 above.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/178

Adopted without vote

Draft by Vice-President (E/1985/L.51), based on informal consultations on draft by Poland (E/1985/L.46); agenda item 3.
Meeting numbers. ESC 44, 52.

Also on 25 July, the Council adopted decision 1985/179 by which it noted that the full report on the perspective could not be submitted to it as requested in 1982<sup>(33)</sup> and asked the Secretary-General to submit the full report to the Assembly's 1985 regular session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 40/207.

Long-term trends in economic development The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also its resolutions 3508(XXX) of 15 December 1975, by which it initiated the analytical work relating to the examination within the United Nations system of long-term trends in world economic and social development, and 37/249 of 21 December 1982, by which it decided, inter alia, that the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000 should be revised and updated,

Recalling further its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations system, by which it decided, inter alia, to undertake in-depth intersectoral analyses and syntheses of development issues and to identify and bring to the attention of Governments emerging economic and social issues of international concern,

Affirming the need for an effective and timely response to unforeseen international economic problems,

Taking into account that 1985 marks the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations and that the implementation of Article 55 of the Charter will contribute to the creation of the conditions of sustained growth, stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations,

Mindful that the maintenance of peace and security, the promotion of disarmament, mutual trust and the strengthening of international co-operation would contribute to the improvement of the overall socio-economic perspective of all countries,

Concerned that low growth rates would have serious repercussions for the world economy, in particular for the developing countries,

Noting with grave concern that Africa is the only continent in which standards of living have declined over the past decade and that, as underscored by all forecasts, the real economic growth per capita will remain near zero or will be negative, on average, until the year 2000 unless drastic action is taken,

Reaffirming the relevance of long-term perspectives for providing impetus to policies and decision-making processes in relation to development strategies and economic co-operation on a national, regional and global scale,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000;

2. Decides, subject to review of the next report at the forty-second session of the General Assembly, to continue the submission of reports on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, which should be prepared so that they contribute to the identification of potential problem areas and critical issues in the world economy;

3. Requests the Secretary-General, when preparing the report, to give special attention to the impact on economic and social development of trends and prospective changes in, inter alia, international trade, financial flows and debt problems, including the net outflow of resources from developing to developed countries, technological change and the transfer of technology to developing countries, capital formation and investment patterns, development of human resources, the allocation of public resources between developmental and non-developmental purposes, environmental issues, economic co-operation and integration among developing countries, the implications of different economic and development policies, special problems faced by the least developed countries and the critical economic situation in Africa;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the report, to take into account socio-economic analyses that give special attention to mechanisms and forms of international economic co-operation aimed at facilitating structural adjustment within the world economy towards the new international economic order;

5. Further requests the Secretary-General to convene, if necessary, a meeting of a group of experts, acting in their personal capacity, to elaborate on the elements of the report specified above, and invites the Committee for Development Planning to review progress in the preparation of the report;

6. Calls upon the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination Task Force on Long-term Development Objectives, to contribute, in their respective areas of competence, to the preparation of the report;

7. Decides to include in the provisional agenda of its forty-second session an item entitled "Long-term trends in social and economic development", and requests the Secretary-General to submit to it at that session, through the Economic and Social Council, the report on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000, together with the views and recommendations of the Committee for Development Planning.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 141-1-13 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.12) by recorded vote (105-1-11), 13 December (meeting 51); draft by Poland, and Yugoslavia for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.22/Rev.1), orally revised: agenda item 84 (I).

Financial implications. S-G, A/C.2/40/L.32.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Against: United States.

Abstaining: Belgium, Canada, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Grenada, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Portugal, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Spain, United Kingdom.

Yugoslavia orally revised the Group of 77's draft to insert in paragraph 3 "including the net outflow of resources from developing to developed countries", and to include in paragraph 4 the reference to the new international economic order. Yugoslavia explained that the revisions were made because Belgium had asked for a vote on the Group's text. The recorded vote was taken at the request of those two States.

The United States said it could have accepted the call for another report in 1987 despite misgivings about frequent analyses of long-term economic trends but had voted against the draft because of its sixth preambular paragraph and the oral revisions.

The United Kingdom, also on behalf of Belgium, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, Portugal and Spain, said they had abstained because the requested report would duplicate documentation available from other United Nations sources; they also stressed the inappropriateness of the reference to disarmament in the sixth preambular paragraph, as did Canada which, too, objected to the revisions.

Turkey voted in favour but did not support the preambular text in question. Bulgaria, also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, stated that the socialist countries attached great importance to United Nations studies on long-term trends and outlined areas on which the Secretariat should concentrate in its 1987 report; any study should take account of the potential for implementing disarmament measures and using resources made available for peaceful purposes, including economic development of developing countries. Yugoslavia, for the Group of 77, said it was hard to understand why the reference to disarmament was not acceptable, since it was closely linked to development and was in the interest of all; it stressed that no report had provided details on the net outflow of resources from developing to developed countries and its implications for the development process.

Proposed global economic negotiations

Informal consultations on launching a round of global negotiations on international economic co-operation for development, originally scheduled to begin in 1980,<sup>(39)</sup> continued throughout 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Reporting to the General Assembly's resumed thirty-ninth session on 12 April 1985, its President stated that nothing substantive had emerged from the informal consultations which had taken place since the suspension of the session in December 1984.<sup>(40)</sup> On his oral proposal, the Assembly adopted decision 39/454 B, by which it decided to keep the item open in order to allow further informal, but intensive, consultations after the session's suspension and to reconvene on short notice to consider any decisions or agreements that might emerge.

When the Assembly again resumed its thirty-ninth session on 16 September 1985, the President once more reported a lack of progress; therefore, he proposed, and the Assembly adopted, decision 39/454 C, by which it included the item in the draft agenda of its fortieth session.

At that session in December, the President again proposed that the matter be kept open to allow for the continuation of informal consultations. The Assembly accepted his proposal in adopting decision 40/459 on 18 December without vote.

Also on that day, the Assembly decided to resume its fortieth session, at a date to be announced, to consider several agenda items, one of which was on the launching of the global negotiations (decision 40/470).

International Development Strategy for the Third UN Development Decade

During 1985, the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) continued. That exercise, provided for in the Strategy adopted by the General Assembly in 1980,<sup>(38)</sup> had commenced in 1984<sup>(41)</sup> through a Committee of universal membership set up in 1982<sup>(42)</sup> to carry out the review and appraisal. Since the Committee had been unable to complete its task, the Economic and Social Council decided that it should resume its work in 1985.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (February)

In accordance with a 1984 Assembly resolution,<sup>(43)</sup> the Council in February 1985 considered the question of a resumed session of the Committee and, on the proposal of its President, adopted decision 1985/103 without vote.

Resumed session of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade

At its 5th plenary meeting, on 8 February 1985, the Council:

(a) Decided that the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade should hold a resumed session beginning with a formal meeting on 6 May 1985, to be followed by up to nine formal or informal meetings ending on 17 May 1985, drawing on the facilities provided for the first regular session of 1985 of the Council, as available;

(b) Requested the Bureau of the Council, in preparing the organization of the work of the first regular session of the Council, to take into account the requirements of the resumed session of the Committee, without adversely affecting the work of the Council;

(c) Requested the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the status of the implementation of the International Development Strategy focusing on the achievement of the goals and objectives of the Strategy;

(d) Decided further that an annotated outline of the Secretary-General's report should be submitted to the Committee at its resumed session in May 1985;

(e) Recommended that informal consultations should be held among delegations or groups of delegations, with the assistance of the Bureau of the Committee, to consider the procedural and organizational aspects of the work of the Committee at its resumed session;

(f) Decided to consider future arrangements for the work of the Committee at its first regular session of 1985, on the basis of the recommendations of the Committee.

Committee on the Strategy. At the first part of its resumed session (New York, 6-14 May 1985), the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade requested its Chairman to prepare a new text as a basis for its work.

At the second part of the session (New York, 9-24 September), the Committee had before it the Secretary-General's report<sup>(44)</sup> on the status of the Strategy's implementation—as requested by the Council (see above)—updating a 1984 report<sup>(41)</sup> which had assessed progress made in the Decade's first years. It was noted that, since the earlier report, the world economic recovery had spread to Western Europe and to some developing countries. The strong recovery in the United States had checked the slide in the world economy but was associated with internal and external imbalances that did not appear sustainable.

International bank lending had been further curtailed, especially to developing countries, and the debt service burden had again increased. In 1984 the total resource outflow from developing countries exceeded all inflows and was expected to be similar in 1985. Improvements in output growth and in their external positions had been achieved through major sacrifices in real income and consumption, unemployment and social dislocation. In sub-Saharan Africa, the situation remained critical.

Concern, which had earlier centred on the pace and breadth of the recovery, had turned to the need for long-term growth for all countries. In that context, there was also concern about the patterns of exchange rates and trade balances.

Also before the Committee were its informal conclusions as compiled by the Chairman. On 24 September, the Committee adopted by consensus those conclusions, which were subsequently incorporated in its October report to the General Assembly.<sup>(45)</sup> They confirmed the validity of the Strategy, noting that it: represented the broadest consensus on international co-operation for development; provided a major instrument for collaboration both among States and within the United Nations system; set goals for the Decade and beyond, linking economic, social and political issues, short- and long-term perspectives, and domestic and international policy measures; and represented both a reaffirmation that the ultimate responsibility for their development rested with the developing countries themselves, and a commitment from other countries to support those efforts through the improvement of the international political and economic environment.

The conclusions outlined developments in the world economy since the Strategy's adoption and compared its targets with the performance of the developing countries. Although key targets had not been met there had been some modest progress.

Neither the critical economic situation in sub-Saharan Africa nor the international debt crisis had been foreseen at the time of the Strategy's adoption. Therefore the review and appraisal process had provided an occasion not only to assess the past and identify and appraise the causes of shortfalls, but also to consider the requirements of the collective endeavour to promote the economic and social development of each country in a more favourable external environment.

The assessment had resulted in some convergence of views on the processes that had brought about the prevailing situation, particularly the close interrelationships between money, finance, debt and trade, and the need to enhance economic co-operation among nations. A continuing analysis was required of the policy implications of the large imbalances in the world economy, including current account disequilibria among major developed countries, the transfer of resources from developing to developed countries and the implications of different development policies.

Each developing country would continue to determine objectives and endeavour to fulfil development plans; the commitment of developed countries was to strengthen support of developing countries' efforts by ensuring a stable and equitable international environment. Improvements were therefore needed in the international economic system through reform and strengthening of the framework governing trade, monetary and financial relations.

With regard to trade relations, countries remained committed to improving the system, to strengthening its open and universal character and to the continued expansion of world trade, giving particular attention to the development needs of developing countries. They reiterated that the system should be characterized by generally accepted rules, norms and principles.

With regard to commodity trade, countries agreed that efforts should continue to improve the effectiveness of export earnings stabilization schemes and to seek agreement on more effective co-operation in international commodity policy.

In connection with the international monetary and financial system, countries reiterated the Strategy's call to provide participation of developing countries in its decision-making processes, taking into account their growing role in the world economy. Ways to make the system more stable and effective should be explored, with efforts being made to: reduce exchange rate instabilities; strengthen multilateral surveillance focusing on the promotion of sound economic policies aimed at achieving sustained real growth in the world economy; conclude without delay deliberations on a new allocation of special drawing rights; and pay due regard to the application of conditionality to domestic social and political objectives, economic priorities and the circumstances of countries with a view towards sound long-term development. The Strategy assigned a key role to an effective, symmetrical and equitable adjustment process consistent with high sustainable employment and growth, price stability and the dynamic expansion of trade; countries agreed on the need for an appropriate mix of adjustments and financing to achieve an orderly transition to the medium- and long-term goals of growth and development.

With respect to international debt, countries agreed that, although there had been some positive developments, the problem was far from being solved. Countries would intensify efforts towards solving the debt problems of developing countries by pursuing a dialogue involving debtor and creditor countries, international private banks, and multilateral financial institutions.

Access to external resources was an essential requirement for the accelerated development of developing countries. In that connection, developed countries reaffirmed commitments undertaken under the Strategy regarding the 0.7 per cent target of gross national product (GNP) as ODA. Donor countries were urged to attain 0.15 per cent of their GNP in ODA to LDCs in line with commitments undertaken under the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for LDCs (see p. 434). Every effort would be made to provide the resources required by the United Nations system and other international organizations to allow them to discharge their tasks as called for in the Strategy.

Other issues on which countries agreed to focus attention included: support of capital formation in developing countries; strengthening their industrial capacities; eradicating hunger and malnutrition; and commitment to the Strategy's basic social goals, notably in employment, health, education, population, environment, shelter and the full integration of women, youth and vulnerable population groups in development. It was reaffirmed that special attention should be given to fulfilling the objectives of SNPA, and countries agreed that promoting peace, security, disarmament, mutual trust and co-operation was indispensable to achieving the goals of economic and social development.

Annexed to the Committee's report<sup>(45)</sup> was a statement by the Chairman analysing the Committee's discussions on key policy issues, giving particular attention to areas of divergence.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION (May)

During its consideration in May 1985 of future arrangements for the work of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal, the Council—after hearing an oral progress report by the Committee Chairman in which he conveyed the Committee's recommendation that it should meet in September—adopted decision 1985/116 without vote.

Resumed session of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade

At its 15th plenary meeting, on 15 May 1985, the Council:

(a) Took note with appreciation of the oral report made at that meeting by the Chairman of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade and endorsed the recommendations of the Committee;

(b) Decided that the Committee should resume its session from 6 to 16 September 1985 and endorsed the Committee's request to its Chairman to prepare a new text on the review and appraisal of the Strategy to enable the Committee to further its work with a view to its completion at that session.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/116

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 1.

With regard to the social goals and objectives of the Strategy, the Council on 29 May, on the recommendation of the Second (Social) Committee, adopted resolution 1985/25 without vote.

International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling that the Declaration on Social Progress and Development, contained in General Assembly resolution 2542(XXIV) of 11 December 1969, emphasized the interdependence of economic and social development and the wider process of growth and change, as well as the importance of a strategy of integrated development which takes full account, at all stages, of its social aspects,

Recalling also that the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, annexed to General Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, called, inter alia, for the elimination of hunger and malnutrition, the achievement of full employment by the year 2000, health for all by the year 2000, appropriate population policies, the reduction of the infant mortality rate, the availability of safe water and adequate sanitary facilities by 1990, the attainment of a life expectancy of 60 years as a minimum by the year 2000, universal primary school enrolment by the year 2000, and the securing of the full participation of women in all sectors and at all levels of the development process,

Recalling further its resolution 1983/9 of 26 May 1983, Bearing in mind General Assembly resolution 39/162 of 17 December 1984, in which the Assembly expressed concern that the first review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy had not been successfully carried out,

1. Urges the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, while carrying out the review and appraisal of the implementation of the Strategy, to examine fully the progress made towards the achievement of the social goals and objectives of the Strategy;

2. Invites Governments to carry out the adjustment, intensification or reformulation of the policy measures for achieving the social goals and objectives of the International Development Strategy;

3. Requests the Committee for Development Planning, at its twenty-second session, to give due attention to the social dimensions relevant to the formulation of both economic and social policy measures designed to achieve the continuous raising of the material, spiritual and living standards of all members of society, and to make available its contribution to the Commission for Social Development at its thirtieth session;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to submit the results of the review and appraisal to the Commission for Social Development at its thirtieth session.

29 May 1985 Meeting 23 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (E/1985/96 & Corr.1) without vote, 17 May (meeting 8); draft by Commission for Social Development (E/1985/24 & Corr.1); agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 40/438 of 17 December, the General Assembly endorsed the Committee's agreed conclusions and took note of the Chairman's statement annexed to its report. The Assembly welcomed the co-operation displayed by all delegations in adopting the conclusions by consensus.

'Several General Assembly and Economic and Social Council resolutions on various topics also called for full implementation of the goals and objectives of the Strategy.

Proposed new international economic order

During 1985, aspects of a new international economic order, called for by the General Assembly in 1974,<sup>(46)</sup> continued to be discussed in several United Nations bodies.

In June, the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law considered reports by its Working Group on the New International Economic Order which was continuing to draft a legal guide on drawing up contracts for the supply and construction of industrial works. In December, the Assembly, by resolution 40/67, again urged States to comment on a 1984 study by the United Nations Institute for Training and Research on international law relating to the new order. (See LEGAL QUESTIONS, Chapter VI.)

In other action, the Assembly in resolution 40/20 reaffirmed the United Nations determination to work closely with the Organization of African Unity towards establishing the new international economic order, and in resolution 40/158 States were urged to revive the world economy and restructure international economic relations to establish the new order.

International economic security

At the July session of the Economic and Social Council, the USSR introduced a draft decision entitled "International economic security: a major condition for accelerating the economic decolonization of developing countries".<sup>(47)</sup> By that text, the Council would have recommended to the General Assembly the adoption of a draft resolution, by which it would have called for the elimination from international economic relations of inequality, exploitation, colonialism and neo-colonialism, economic aggression and blackmail, boycott, and trade, credit and technological blockade, of any forms of interference in the domestic affairs of sovereign States, and of the use of economic relations as an instrument of political pressure. The Secretary-General would have been asked to prepare a report containing information provided by Governments on the use of measures constituting a threat to economic security and impeding the economic development of States, for submission in 1986.

Following informal consultations on that draft, the Council on 25 July adopted without vote decision 1985/180, by which it recommended that the Assembly consider the issues in the draft resolution.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, the USSR submitted to the Assembly's Second Committee a further draft on international economic security which took into account the Council's discussions as well as proposals made during consultations. Subsequently, the USSR revised that text to incorporate delegations' suggested proposals, and made further oral revisions as suggested by Egypt.

On 17 December, on the Committee's recommendation, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/173 by recorded vote.

International economic security

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 1514(XV) of 14 December 1960, containing the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and 35/56 of 5

December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling also the purposes and principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations, in particular that of achieving international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character and the inadmissibility of the threat or use of force in international relations,

Referring to Economic and Social Council resolution 1911(LVII) of 2 August 1974,

Considering that ever-increasing interdependence between States and regions is an inevitable condition of world economic development, which determines the mutuality of interest of all countries in promoting development in a secure world environment,

Convinced that all countries would benefit from a more stable economic, trade, monetary and financial situation and from equitable solutions of the existing problems in these areas,

Further convinced that alleviation of the urgent economic problems of developing countries and elimination of the gap in the levels of economic development are major factors of international economic stability and a better political climate,

Recognizing the need to promote international economic security aimed at the economic and social development and progress of each country, in particular developing countries, through international economic co-operation and utilizing the potential of multilateral and regional organizations,

1. Considers that a common endeavour to promote just and mutually beneficial international economic relations would contribute to the economic well-being of each State and to the establishment of a new international economic order;

2. Requests the Secretary-General, taking into account the relevant previous studies, to prepare a comprehensive analytical report on a concept of international economic security, including ways and means of its attainment, with emphasis on the development interests of developing countries, for submission through the Economic and Social Council to the General Assembly at its forty-second session;

3. Calls upon all Governments and organizations, organs and bodies of the United Nations system to contribute to the implementation of the present resolution.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 96-19-28 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009/Add.1) by recorded vote (85-19-25), 25 November (meeting 43); draft by USSR (A/C.2/40/L.28/Rev.1), orally revised; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 22, 23, 29, 30, 34, 36, 39, 42, 43; plenary 119.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, United Kingdom, United States.

Abstaining: Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Bahamas, Barbados Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Dominica, Finland, Gabon, Greece, Grenada, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Malaysia, Paraguay, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Sweden, Turkey, Zaire.

In the Second Committee, the United States stated that it had voted against because it felt it had been impossible to define the concept of international economic security. Similarly, Canada questioned the obscurity of that concept, as did Japan which queried the need for a report. Luxembourg said the European Economic Community (EEC) would have preferred a text based on the concept of international economic co-operation.

Chile said that, although the text contained positive elements, international economic security could be ensured only by launching constructive negotiations.

China felt that the text was too vague and gave rise to political controversies. Sweden questioned the logic whereby the Assembly would recognize the need for a concept that the Secretary-General would endeavour to define. Finland stressed that greater attention should have been paid to the existing multilateral framework and arrangements which were crucial for the stability of trade and other international economic transactions. Zaire stated that a decision of such importance should have been taken by consensus and that some parts of the text could have been included in other drafts before the Committee.

Liberia thought that a consensus would have avoided politicizing the issue. Argentina, Cameroon and Indonesia also would have preferred a consensus and hoped that the forthcoming report would help create it. India spoke in like manner and was joined by Egypt and Pakistan in adding that consultations should continue on the concept before putting a text to a vote.

The USSR hoped that those which could not support the draft would still contribute to the report.

Venezuela, which voted in favour in the Assembly, did not participate in the Committee's vote because it considered that more thorough consultations should have taken place to clarify the text and to obtain the widest possible consensus.

Coercive economic measures against developing countries

In response to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(48)</sup> the Secretary-General in October 1985 submitted a report on economic measures taken by developed countries for coercive purposes, including their impact on international economic relations.<sup>(49)</sup> The report was based on information provided by 22 Member States and by UNCTAD, ECA, ESCAP and ECLAC.

Most of the Governments that replied to the Secretariat's request for information strongly condemned the use of economic coercion and reaffirmed their support for the 1983<sup>(50)</sup> and 1984<sup>(48)</sup> Assembly resolutions on the issue. The replies received addressed the scope and type of coercive economic measures, their impact and their incompatibility with various international principles, including the Charter of the United Nations.

The replies from Governments and inputs from UNCTAD and the regional commissions highlighted the following: firmer international measures were needed to denounce and ban economic coercion; the promotion of international economic co-operation and application of Assembly resolutions on establishing a new international economic order and on the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States would contribute towards ending economic coercion; the possibility of organizing international action against such measures in appropriate forums should be further explored; developed countries should refrain from threatening or applying trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes or other economic sanctions; and the work of the United Nations, particularly UNCTAD, on this issue should be undertaken universally and should take account of the interests of all countries against which such measures were employed.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 40/185.

Economic measures as a means of political and economic coercion against developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the relevant principles set forth in the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also its resolutions 2625(XXV) of 24 October 1970, containing the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations, 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, and 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Reaffirming article 32 of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, which declares that no State may use or encourage the use of economic, political or any other type of measures to coerce another State in order to obtain from it the subordination of the exercise of its sovereign rights,

Bearing in mind the general principles governing international trade and trade policies for development contained in its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 152(VI) of 2 July 1983 entitled "Rejection of coercive economic measures", and the principles and rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and paragraph 7 (iii) of the Ministerial Declaration adopted on 29 November 1982 by the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade at their thirty-eighth session,

Reaffirming its resolutions 38/197 of 20 December 1983 and 39/210 of 18 December 1984,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the effects of economic measures taken by developed countries for coercive purposes, including their impact on international economic relations, and considering that further work should be undertaken in order to implement resolutions 38/197 and 39/210,

Gravely concerned that the use of coercive measures adversely affects the economies and development efforts of developing countries and that, in some cases, those measures have been intensified, creating a negative impact on international economic co-operation,

1. Deplores the fact that some developed countries continue to apply and, in some cases, have increased the scope and magnitude of economic measures that have the purpose of exerting, directly or indirectly, coercion on the sovereign decisions of developing countries subject to those measures;

2. Reaffirms that developed countries should refrain from threatening or applying trade restrictions, blockades, embargoes and other economic sanctions, incompatible with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and in violation of undertakings contracted, multilaterally and bilaterally, against developing countries as a form of political and economic coercion which affects their economic, political and social development;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive, in-depth report on the economic measures mentioned in paragraph 2 above, taken by developed countries for coercive purposes, including their impact on international economic relations, with a view to appraising the economic effects of such measures on the development and development prospects of affected developing countries and with a view to assisting in concrete international action against those measures, and to submit that report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General, in preparing the comprehensive in-depth report, to request further comments from Governments and inputs from competent organizations of the United Nations system, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions and those specialized agencies that have received information on the application of economic coercive measures against developing countries;

5. Appeals to Governments and to the pertinent international organizations to provide the necessary information to the Secretary-General, as requested in paragraph 4 above.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 128-19-7 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.3) by recorded vote (114-19-6), 3 December (meeting 46); draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.83); agenda item 84 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 31, 36, 41, 45, 46; plenary 119.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States

Abstaining: Austria, Finland, Greece, Grenada, Ivory Coast, Spain, Sweden.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Second Committee, Luxembourg said that the EEC States were against using coercion but could not accept a text aimed solely at actions taken by developed countries. Turkey's position was that the question was not within UNCTAD's competence.

Austria was also opposed to coercive measures but was unable to support the draft as it lacked universal application, a view shared by Sweden.

Proposed new international human order

Responding to a 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(51)</sup> the Secretary-General in September 1985 submitted a report<sup>(52)</sup> summarizing the views of Member States on a draft declaration on a new international human order: moral aspects of development, which had been transmitted to the Assembly by the Economic and Social Council in 1983.<sup>(53)</sup>

The report noted that substantive comments had been received from only one State in response to the 1983 Assembly resolution, although 10 countries had submitted comments earlier in response to a 1982 request.<sup>(54)</sup>

Most comments noted that there already existed a large number of United Nations instruments and recommendations covering the same ground addressed by the new proposal. It was stressed that what mattered most was the strict observance by all Member States of existing decisions rather than the adoption of new ones. Other States recognized the importance of existing instruments but considered that they needed further elaboration, stressing that proposals concerning economic solutions were insufficient and should be extended to include social and cultural issues.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/206 without vote.

New international human order:
moral aspects of development

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/225 of 20 December 1982 and 38/170 of 19 December 1983 entitled "New international human order: moral aspects of development", as well as the report of the Economic and Social Council on its consideration of this question and Council decision 1983/171 of 25 July 1983,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General containing the responses of Governments concerning the question,

Taking into account the views expressed on the question in the Second Committee,

1. Requests Member States to submit to the Secretary-General additional comments and suggestions on the question;

2. Decides to consider the question at its forty-second session on the basis of a report of the Secretary-General taking into account suggestions of Member States.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.11) without vote, 11 November (meeting 30); 6-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.21); agenda item 84 (k).

Sponsors: Burkina Faso, Costa Rica, Malaysia, Paraguay, Philippines, Thailand. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 24, 30; plenary 119.

Economic rights and duties of States

In accordance with a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(55)</sup> the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to Review the Implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States met in New York from 25 March to 18 April 1985.<sup>(56)</sup>

The Committee had before it a report of the Secretary-General<sup>(57)</sup> explaining the significance of the 1974 Charter,<sup>(58)</sup> discussing its implementation, and reflecting on the modalities for future reviews of its implementation.

The report noted that a number of reviews of the Charter's implementation had been carried out in the United Nations system, either periodically or on an ad hoc basis, and that those reviews indicated that certain steps had been taken to implement it. However, the fact that only 25 Member States had responded to a request for information on their application of the Charter's provisions indicated that there were obstacles to implementing the instrument's articles, some of which had been adopted after intensive negotiations. Some Governments had referred to specific articles of the Charter, while others spoke of a general lack of progress towards the objectives in its preamble.

The report stated that the Charter's objectives and principles remained valid and important, and each Government and the international community would continue to find it a source of inspiration to advance development and international political and economic co-operation.

Also before the Ad Hoc Committee were communications from Italy,<sup>(59)</sup> forwarding a statement by the EEC member States, Japan<sup>(60)</sup> and the United States,<sup>(61)</sup> indicating that they would not participate in the Committee's work since they had had reservations at the time the 1974 Charter was adopted<sup>(62)</sup> and on the establishment of the Committee.

The agreed conclusions of the Ad Hoc Committee, annexed to its report to the Assembly,<sup>(56)</sup> stated that the Charter remained relevant to the international community's efforts to establish the new international economic order. 'Ten years after its adoption, the Charter remained largely unimplemented, with the international economic structure being inadequate to achieve the stability and sustained growth of the world economy envisaged in it. Developing countries continued to be confronted with an adverse external environment seriously affecting their development, with the crisis in Africa particularly illustrating the basic problems facing them.

The world community faced an impasse in international economic negotiations as a result of a retreat from multilateralism, a situation aggravated by heightened tensions and the arms race. It was imperative to improve the climate for genuine international economic co-operation. Extraneous considerations should not influence international economic and financial co-operation, which should be based on universal respect for each State's right to determine its own economic and political system. Developed countries should refrain from applying coercive measures against developing countries.

All States were called on to eliminate colonialism, apartheid, racial discrimination, neo-colonialism and foreign aggression, occupation and domination. It was regretted that some States continued to support South Africa and the policies of Israel in the occupied Palestinian and other Arab territories. Foreign investments in Namibia gave economic strength to the occupation forces there.

Governments should implement the Charter so as to contribute to eliminating the adverse effects of the international economic crisis on developing countries. The United Nations had an important responsibility as it provided the multilateral framework for considering and promoting the Charter's implementation. To that end, its role should be enhanced with a view to exploring ways to broaden areas of agreement of international economic co-operation for development.

Efforts towards implementing the Charter were taking place when interdependence between the economies of countries should lead to co-operative endeavours to eliminate the widening gap between developing and developed countries. Accordingly, that required changes in the international economic system to enable developing countries to play their role in the world economy and to participate fully in decision-making in order to contribute to establishing a more just and equitable international economic system. The international community was urged to work collectively towards the Charter's full implementation.

After the Ad Hoc Committee concluded its work on 18 April, a joint statement was issued by the Eastern European socialist countries and Mongolia, and transmitted to the Secretary-General by Czechoslovakia on 21 May.<sup>(63)</sup> They said that the review had confirmed the Charter's importance and the increasing need to democratize international economic relations and promote mutually advantageous economic co-operation among all States irrespective of their economic systems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted by recorded vote resolution 40/182.

Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, which laid the foundations of the new international economic order,

Recalling also its resolution 37/204 of 20 December 1982 on the review of the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

Recalling further its resolution 39/163 of 17 December 1984, in which it decided to establish an Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to Review the Implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States,

1. Takes note of the report of the Ad Hoc Committee of the Whole to Review the Implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States;

2. Urges all States to examine further the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, thereby contributing to the establishment of the new international economic order;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-fourth session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989, a comprehensive and analytical report, in order to ensure systematic and comprehensive consideration of the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, in accordance with the provisions of article 34 thereof;

4. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to facilitate the implementation of the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States in their respective spheres of action.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 134-1-19 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.2) by recorded vote (122-1-19), 25 November (meeting 43); draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.20/Rev.1); agenda item 84 (b).

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States

Abstaining: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, United Kingdom.

Speaking in explanation of vote in the Second Committee, the United States pointed out that, having rejected several of the Charter's provisions and having voted against it as a whole, it did not envisage any steps towards its implementation.

Luxembourg said the EEC member countries reaffirmed their previous position on the substance of the matter and had abstained in order to show the importance they attached to a compromise approach. Austria maintained its reservations regarding the Charter and doubted the usefulness of a review of its implementation.

Australia voted in favour in order to show its attachment to the Charter, although the reservations it had expressed in 1974 still applied; the use of a special review procedure was not to be recommended as it entailed high costs.

Economic co-operation among developing countries

During 1985, the United Nations continued to promote ECDC, mainly through UNCTAD. Technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) received the support of UNDP (see next chapter).

UNCTAD activities. The Working Party on Trade Expansion and Regional Economic Integration among Developing Countries (third session, Geneva, 28 January-1 February 1985),<sup>(64)</sup> established by the Committee on ECDC of UNCTAD in 1978,<sup>(65)</sup> met to carry out an overall review of progress in integration and economic co-operation programmes, adjust the work programme for co-operation between secretariats of economic co-operation and integration groupings, and draw up a new work programme.

In its conclusions and recommendations, the Working Party expressed satisfaction with progress achieved in implementing certain activities of the programme for co-operation among economic co-operation and integration groupings of developing countries, which it had established in 1982,<sup>(66)</sup> but noted that there remained scope for action in all the programme's areas. The Working Party focused its attention on issues of special concern, particularly the problems for the trade within groupings and co-operation mechanisms arising from balance-of-payments difficulties of member countries.

With regard to institutional arrangements for implementing the programme for co-operation, the Working Party stressed its importance as the main forum setting out objectives and orientations for mutual co-operation. It considered it essential that it be regarded as a forum of the executive heads of such groupings and it recommended that its name be changed to Meeting of Heads of Secretariats of Economic Co-operation and Integration Groupings of Developing Countries.

At its fourth session (Geneva, 18-29 November), the Committee on ECDC reiterated the need for continued UNCTAD secretariat support to ECDC and called on the UNCTAD Secretary-General to take action in the areas of trade expansion and promotion and of money and financial co-operation among developing countries, and requested him to continue trying to raise additional extrabudgetary resources for ECDC activities. In implementing its ECDC work programme, the secretariat was asked to maintain close co-operation with other United Nations bodies and interregional financial institutions.<sup>(67)</sup>

CPC activities. In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(68)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the 1985 session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) (New York, 29 April-1 June)<sup>(69)</sup> a report on the cross-organizational programme analysis (COPA) of the activities of the United Nations system in the area of economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.<sup>(70)</sup> In line with the Assembly's recommendation,<sup>(68)</sup> the COPA report drew on a 1984 report,<sup>(71)</sup> which had analysed the mandates of and problems addressed by the system in ECDC and TCDC, and also incorporated a cross-organizational review of such co-operation in the medium-term plans of United Nations organizations which was to be considered by the Economic and Social Council in 1985.

The 1985 COPA report<sup>(70)</sup> concluded that there were no significant gaps or overlaps in programme terms. The organizations' plans did not reflect adequately their real work, which was much more comprehensive than the plans indicated. However, when seen as a whole, the individual plans were not a complete response to the range of mandates which guided the system in support of ECDC and TCDC. Organizations should ensure that their planning documents paid more explicit attention to the subject and showed the underlying work more clearly. Intergovernmental guidance was required regarding programmatic objectives and strategies to be pursued by the system as a whole, as existing intergovernmental decisions did not set relative priorities among sectors. The report stated that CPC might suggest to the Economic and Social Council that specific areas be given increased relative emphasis in work programmes.

With regard to resource availability, the COPA noted that some $160 million had been devoted to ECDC and TCDC during 1982-1983, a major increase from 1978-1979. However, since total resources available to the system had shown little growth in recent years, there was an overall constraint on formulating new activities, a factor which CPC could take into account when reviewing programme budget proposals.

As to the distinction between ECDC and TCDC and the respective relative competences of UNCTAD and UNDP, the analysis showed that the lead agency functions as assigned derived from their unique and distinct roles in promoting co-operation among developing countries. Increased trade between developing countries was the centrepiece of promoting ECDC and UNCTAD was responsible for issues of trade and development, while UNDP was the major funding source for technical co-operation activities. Both organizations reported that adequate arrangements existed for co-operation and co-ordination between them.

Noting that the bulk of United Nations efforts in support of ECDC and TCDC remained concentrated at regional and subregional levels, the report suggested that ACC and CPC might recommend strengthening action at those levels. It was pointed out that there was also considerable scope for rationalizing the collection of information on the system's activities in ECDC and TCDC, including maintenance of the data base compiled for preparation of the current COPA report.

Following consideration of the report, CPC stated that it was too descriptive and lacked a critical and analytical assessment of the United Nations role and the relationship between its activities and mandates; the information in the report did not justify a positive conclusion concerning the effectiveness of existing co-ordination arrangements and it too frequently recorded uncritically the views on their work of United Nations Secretariat units that were active in ECDC and TCDC.

CPC stated that a recommendation in the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC<sup>(72)</sup> on internal secretariat arrangements for ECDC and TCDC should be implemented, and that the medium-term plans of United Nations organizations should reflect a commitment to carrying out their mandates in the area. CPC decided to consider the question at a future session based on a follow-up report which should contain a response to its criticisms. It concluded that efforts should also be made to ensure that information was collected on United Nations activities in ECDC and TCDC.

CPC/ACC Joint Meetings. The 1985 Joint Meetings of CPC and ACC (Geneva, 2 and 3 July)<sup>(73)</sup> also considered the COPA report<sup>(70)</sup> and had before them an extract from the CPC report<sup>(69)</sup> on its consideration of the issue.

It was generally agreed by the Joint Meetings that ECDC and TCDC should be viewed as an instrument for enhancing the endogenous capacities of developing countries and assisting them to meet problems caused by the world economic situation, but not as a substitute for North-South co-operation.

It was recognized that responsibility for carrying out ECDC and TCDC lay primarily with the developing countries but that the United Nations system had an important role to play. It was agreed that the system's organizations should reinforce their catalytic and promotional role and activities in ECDC and TCDC respectively and that the dimension of intergovernmental mandates in the area should be reflected in their programmes and medium-term plans. CPC members stressed the importance of co-ordination between organizations to avoid duplicating activities.

It was generally stressed that attention should focus on the mutually supportive character of ECDC and TCDC rather than on problems of definition; it was noted, however, that a proper definition of those activities would have to be developed in due course.

Members of CPC reiterated their comments made during the 1985 CPC session.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1985, the Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1985/76, stressed the importance of effectively implementing CPC's recommendations and, in resolution 1985/77, took note of the report on the Joint Meetings.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONSIDERATION

In further follow-up to the 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(68)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to that body in September 1985 a report on economic and technical co-operation among developing countries,<sup>(74)</sup> giving a brief review of major developments in ECDC since his previous report on the subject in 1979,<sup>(75)</sup> and dealing with action taken within the framework of the COPA and review, as well as inter-secretariat coordination within the system. An account was also given of the 1984-1985 activities of individual United Nations organizations in response to the Assembly's request<sup>(68)</sup> to intensify their activities in support of ECDC.

The 1985 report was considered by the Assembly's Second Committee when it took up the subject of TCDC (see p. 488).

Economic and social trends and policy

The uneven spread of the recovery under way in the world economy was highlighted in economic reports prepared by the United Nations Secretariat in 1985, which also noted that the recovery had bypassed a large part of the developing world. Two major reports, submitted as background to the annual discussion of international economic and social policy in the Economic and Social Council and the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board, focused on the effect of the uneven international trade performance and the debt crisis on the development prospects of developing countries (see Chapter IV of this section).

Economic surveys and trends

The World Economic Survey 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> prepared by DIESA, stated that the significant expansion of world output and international trade in 1984 was giving way to more modest growth rates in 1985 and there was the prospect of a further deceleration in 1986.

The Survey, which was based on information available as at 1 April 1985, reported that, while the average rate of world economic growth for the middle years of the 1980s seemed likely to be more than twice the rate of the period 1980-1983 and was a much welcomed recovery from the worst international recession of the post-war era, it fell short of global needs. The middle years would continue to be characterized by unusually high rates of unemployment and inadequate progress against world poverty.

The impulses that led to a strong recovery in North America and to a dramatic rise in its imports weakened in the second half of 1984. In 1985, the rate of increase in North America's gross domestic product (GDP) was expected to be only about half the nearly 7 per cent achieved in 1984, which should produce a slow-down in the global economy since no substantial acceleration of growth was likely to occur elsewhere.

The growth momentum recently achieved by most of the developing economies in Asia was maintained in 1984 and Latin American countries experienced a slight rebound in economic activity from depressed 1982-1983 levels, partly as a consequence of increased exports. Growth in sub-Saharan Africa, however, continued to be constrained by the weak expansion in agriculture in most of the region. Since domestic and external impulses for growth in developing countries were not going to change markedly in the near future, growth rates would remain generally weak. Even by the second half of the decade, the majority of developing countries would not have recovered fully from the dramatic set-back suffered in the early 1980s.

The Japanese economy, largely on account of buoyant exports, had experienced robust growth since mid-1983, while the economies of Western Europe were gradually achieving a somewhat higher rate of growth in GDP, but still insufficient to make a dent in unemployment. The centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe maintained, especially in industry, the growth momentum reached in the second half of 1983. Domestic impulses for growth remained strong in China and its rapid economic expansion continued in 1984 and 1985.

The rate of growth of aggregate global output rose from less than 3 per cent in 1983 to an estimated 4 per cent in 1984-1985, as growth in both the developed market and developing countries accelerated. For the developing countries as a whole, the average growth rate of real GDP in 1984, although substantially higher than in 1983, was only 3 per cent, 2 percentage points below those countries' average growth in the late 1970s. Real GDP in the energy exporters and energy importers grew on average by about 2 and 3.5 per cent respectively, representing a significant decline in comparison to their average growth rates in the latter half of the 1970s.

Within the group of developed market economies, there was considerable diversity in economic performance. Although the variation in growth rates had narrowed somewhat since the latter part of 1984, North America and the developed countries of the Pacific region, particularly Japan, were continuing to grow at rates that were 1 to 2 percentage points higher than Western Europe's average annual growth rate of 2.5 per cent.

In the Eastern European countries, the 5 per cent pace of economic activity in 1984, although below post-war trends, represented a substantial acceleration compared with 1979-1982, when output stagnated. In contrast to the upturn witnessed in Eastern Europe, economic growth in the Soviet Union in 1984 slowed from 4.2 to about 3 per cent, which was below planned levels. The deceleration stemmed mostly from the stagnation in agriculture, where grain output was below plan for the sixth year in a row.

The strong output growth registered in China during the first three years of the decade continued in 1984, when the economy expanded by about 12 per cent, well above the already very high 9 per cent growth achieved in 1983.

With regard to the short-term outlook for the world economy, the Survey noted that there were some encouraging signals pointing to an upswing after 1986. According to those signals, the post-1986 upturn, as distinct from the recent recovery, could be characterized by some convergence in the growth rates of the developed countries, less instability in key economic variables, and a resumption of development in a less restricted number of developing countries. However, the world economy had proved to be fragile and, if current problems were not tackled, it was likely that a significant upswing would not occur in 1987. Persistent protectionist pressures and the possibility of more restrictive trade measures, the considerable fiscal deficit and trade imbalance in the United States, protracted adjustment in the European economies that prevented them from attaining high rates of growth in domestic product and in import demand, slow progress in resolving the debt problem, and critical economic conditions in sub-Saharan countries, all indicated how hazardous the path towards a strong and broad-based world recovery remained.

The Survey stated that changes in policies to deal with those problems could significantly affect events in the second half of the 1980s. Joint actions to halt and roll back protectionism, to support more decisively the multilateral financial institutions and to harmonize macro-economic policies among large developed countries would go a long way towards improving the international economic environment. Even in the event of such an improvement, however, many low-income countries would still have to put in place more effective policies to expand agricultural production rapidly and to increase savings and investment, which could prove difficult to achieve without worsening their already depressed consumption levels. Some inflation-ridden countries also confronted difficult choices, since indexation mechanisms and expectations of continuing high inflation rates had become entrenched. For developed countries, it was still necessary to consolidate recent gains in the fight against inflation and to create jobs at a faster pace.

Two chapters of the Survey concentrated on major developments and policy needs in international trade and financial relations (see Chapter IV of this section), while others dealt with selected policy responses and adjustment to economic disequilibria, and summarized conclusions and recommendations for possible action on some key issues (see p. 411).

In its account of current and short-term prospects for the world economy, the Trade and Development Report, 1985<sup>(2)</sup> noted the weak and uneven influence on the developing countries of the economic revival in the industrialized countries. The recovery in the latter, which was losing momentum, left many parts of the developing world still in straitened economic circumstances and estimates of performance in 1985 indicated no significant acceleration in growth.

Disparities in performance among industrialized countries partly accounted for the pattern of economic trends in developing ones, as the expansionary fiscal policy of the United States gave rise to an upsurge of economic activity there, as well as to an acceleration in Japan, while restrictive fiscal policies in Western Europe restrained its pace of recovery. This favoured developing countries with close trade links with the former countries, especially those which were substantial exporters of manufactures. The sluggish economic performance of Western Europe was also a major reason for the weak prices of primary commodities used as industrial raw materials. Other primary commodity markets, including that for petroleum, had also been weak.

The Report did not foresee any marked improvement in the performance prospects for developing countries in the near future; the external environment was unlikely to bring significant relief to pressures on their balance of payments on current account. Since economic growth in the industrialized countries was slowing down and expected to continue at a lower rate, the growth in demand for exports from developing countries would probably decelerate and primary commodity prices might weaken further. Although interest rates had been declining, they remained high and their course was uncertain. The rate of increase in gross borrowing on international capital markets continued to decline, and no appreciable change was expected in ODA. A further increase in imports was likely, but the improvement in rates of growth in total output was expected to be marginal in 1985, though modestly better in 1986.

Among the developed market-economy countries, rates of expansion in economic activity were likely to converge, with Japan and the United States approaching the lower pace of growth in Western Europe. In the United States, however, the combination of an expansionary fiscal policy with a stringent monetary policy, which was instrumental in bringing about a strong recovery, had also given rise to high interest rates and a misalignment of the dollar exchange rate. The combination of the worsening United States balance of payments, the financing of the deficit through large capital inflows attracted mainly by high interest rates and the strong dollar, and intensified calls for protection as domestic demand was diverted from domestic production to imports did not make for a stable situation.

While Western Europe and Japan had also been pursuing tight monetary policies, their fiscal policies remained restrictive. However, the absence of a strong stimulus to aggregate domestic demand had disadvantageous consequences. Among the close trading partners of the United States, especially Japan, the foreign demand for exports had outpaced the domestic demand for imports, and large surpluses on current account had accumulated. For Western Europe, it was widely recognized that greater investment and a higher economic growth rate were fundamental to alleviating the high rate of unemployment. Actions on the supply side could contribute to promoting investment, but maintaining a high level of aggregate demand was an essential prerequisite.

Recovery in Eastern Europe continued in 1984 although individual countries experienced varying growth patterns. For the group, other than the Soviet Union, the annual growth rate of net material product (NMP) reached 5.1 per cent in 1984 against 3.9 in 1983. In fact, in 1984, NMP growth rates in almost all socialist countries of Eastern Europe exceeded not only the previous year's level, but also the 1984 annual plans' targets. The economy of the Soviet Union continued to expand in accordance with its annual and five-year plans, although at a slower pace than in 1983. The NMP growth rate reached 3 per cent in 1984 (3.1 was planned), against 4.2 in 1983 and 3.9 in 1982.

The economy of China continued to surge with growth in national income being led by the exceedingly good performance of agriculture, which expanded by 14.5 per cent, giving an average real growth of 9.2 per cent over the period 1980-1984.

A large section of the Report was devoted to problems of debt, development and the world economy (see Chapter IV of this section).

Resources, environment, people and development

During 1985, the ACC Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) (CCSQ(PROG)) continued to deal with inter-agency co-ordination of the programme of work on inter-relationships between resources, environment, people and development, and to screen projects proposed for financing under the general trust fund for the programme, established in June 1981.<sup>(3)</sup>

At its first regular session of 1985 (Geneva, 1-4 April),<sup>(4)</sup> CCSQ(PROG) was briefed by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization on a carrying capacity (ability to support growing populations at increasing standards of living) project in Kenya, which had been completed and tested. Kenya wished to use it as a basis for long-term planning but further technical assistance was needed to install the model and modify it for the Government's specific needs. Several other countries were interested in using the model in their development planning.

The United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) informed CCQ(PROG) of progress relating to a project on deforestation of the Himalayan foothills, stating that a meeting was planned to develop regional co-operation and to agree on specific case-studies.

The Committee was further informed that UNEP would develop an approach for a project in the Sudano-Sahelian region, for which continued inter-agency consultations would be necessary.

The Committee recalled that the programme was designed to develop policy approaches which Governments could integrate into national policies and was not intended to finance major development projects. Funding for extending the carrying-capacity approach to other countries would need to be sought from traditional funding sources rather than from the interrelationships trust fund.

It was agreed that CCQ(PROG) would consider the question of interrelationships only when specific project proposals were put forward or when there had been developments in approved activities.

In resolution 40/179 of 17 December 1985, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to continue implementing a 1974 Assembly resolution<sup>(5)</sup> in order to assist States, particularly developing countries, and United Nations organs in their efforts to advance knowledge on the interrelated issues of resources, population, environment and development.

Development planning, education and administration

Improving development planning, education and administration continued to be a focus of several United Nations bodies during 1985, among them CDP which studied development issues against the background of a general lack of commitment to multilateral economic co-operation. The Economic and Social Council reviewed the findings of the Seventh (1984) Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance and set the agenda for the Eighth (1987) Meeting. The Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC) continued to co-ordinate preparation of United Nations educational materials.

Development planning

CDP activities. The Committee for Development Planning resumed its twenty-first session in New York from 20 to 23 April 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> having held the first part in 1984.<sup>(2)</sup> Meetings of CDP working groups were cancelled by the Economic and Social Council to finance the resumed session (see below).

Composed of 24 experts appointed by the Council, CDP examined the challenges to multilateral co-operation created by post-war changes in the world economy and called for a renewed commitment to multilateralism (see p. 411.). It also considered the risk of disintegration of the trading system, the instability in the international monetary and financial system and the debt crisis (see Chapter IV of this section). The crisis in sub-Saharan Africa was also addressed, as was the eligibility of Kiribati, Tuvalu and Vanuatu for inclusion in the list of LDCs (see p. 433).

With regard to its future work, the Committee decided to revert to a single-session work programme and proposed convening a representative working group to review the state of world development and identify themes for its 1986 report.

On 8 February 1985, the Council adopted decision 1985/108 in which it recalled its 1984 resolution<sup>(3)</sup> regarding the CDP meeting schedule and authorized it to resume its session, bearing in mind that CDP working groups for 1984-1985 would be cancelled to finance the resumed session within existing resources. On 25 July it took note, by decision 1985/182, of the report on CPC's regular (1984) and resumed (1985) sessions.

Development administration

In 1985, the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) implemented 179 projects to assist developing countries in improving the performance of their public administration, public finance and public enterprises. The programme continued to emphasize the strengthening of government capabilities for evaluation, which was an integral part of projects and seminars in such areas as policy analysis, government budget and audit, personnel performance, management control and public enterprises. During the year, DTCD, whose main source of funds was UNDP, delivered $11.8 million, 39 per cent of which was spent in Africa, 23 per cent in Asia and the Pacific, 13 per cent in Latin America, and 25 per cent in the Middle East, the Mediterranean and Europe and for interregional projects.<sup>(4)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In May 1985, the Economic and Social Council had before it a report of the Secretary-General<sup>(5)</sup> commenting on the discussions and major recommendations of the Seventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance, held in 1984.<sup>(6)</sup> The Secretary-General believed that the priorities identified for developing countries deserved serious national consideration. He also agreed with the analysis of the crisis in the sub-Saharan African countries and recommended that both matters be brought to international attention.

With regard to suggestions on aspects of the United Nations programme in public administration and finance, he stated that he would take them into account and requested that recommendations on allocating resources for public administration and finance be considered a priority area under the new indicative planning figure (IPF) cycle of UNDP.

In the light of the Meeting's recommendation, and subject to Council approval, the Secretary-General had included a proposal for the next (1987) review of the public administration and finance programme in the 1986-1987 budget.

On 28 May, the Council, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, adopted resolution 1985/10 without vote.

Public administration and finance for development

The Economic and Social Council.

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, 36/194 of 17 December 1981 on the United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, particularly paragraph 3 thereof, 34/137 of 14 December 1979 on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries, and 35/80 of 5 December 1980 and 39/219 of 18 December 1984 on the role of qualified national personnel in the social and economic development of developing countries,

Recalling also Council resolutions 1978/6 of 4 May 1978, 1978/75 of 8 November 1978, 1980/12 of 28 April 1980 and 1982/44 of 27 July 1982, concerning public administration and finance for development in the 1980s, and 1981/45 of 20 July 1981 and 1983/61 of 28 July 1983 on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries,

Reiterating the importance of effective and responsive public administration systems for the economic and social development of developing countries,

Reiterating also the critical importance of developing and strengthening the public administration and finance capabilities of developing countries, in particular improving the performance of existing institutions, personnel and policies,

Concerned about the critical economic situation in Africa and the need for increased urgent assistance to African countries, inter alia, in the fields of institutional, managerial and financial resource development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Seventh Meeting of Experts on the United Nations Programme in Public Administration and Finance, held at Geneva from 17 to 26 October 1984, and the report of the Secretary-General thereon;

2. Takes note of the recommendations made by the Seventh Meeting of Experts and requests the Secretary-General to transmit them to the States Members of the United Nations for their review and appropriate action at the national level;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to further strengthen, taking into account the recommendations of the seventh Meeting of Experts, the catalytic role of the United Nations programme in public administration and finance to assist developing countries in the improvement of their systems of public administration and finance for development;

4. Invites all organs, agencies and organizations of the United Nations system and the international community to take into account the Action Programme in Public Administration for Sub-Saharan Africa proposed by the Seventh Meeting of Experts, in formulating their programmes of assistance for countries in Africa;

5. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, in formulating its regional and interregional programmes, to bear in mind the need for improving the administrative and managerial capabilities of developing countries, especially the least developed among them, in the field of public administration and finance;

6. Notes the recommendation of the Seventh Meeting of Experts that its next meeting should be convened in 1987, and requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary preparations for that meeting, which, in reviewing the United Nations programme in public administration and finance in accordance with its mandate, should also deal in particular with:

(a) Challenges and constraints in public administration and finance in the developing countries;

(b) Development of computer-based management information systems in public administration and finance;

(c) The specific needs of the least developed countries, especially in the field of training;

(d) Strategies and measures for improving the performance of public enterprises and their contribution to national development;

(e) Support and assistance by the United Nations system for the developing countries in this field, including technical co-operation among developing countries;

(f) Progress in the implementation of the proposals and recommendations made by the Seventh Meeting of Experts.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/10

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/93) without vote, 17 May (meeting 6); 12-nation draft (E/1985/C.1/L.1): agenda item 14.

SPONSORS: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, China, Congo, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, Romania, Senegal, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Development education

At its April 1985 session,<sup>(7)</sup> JUNC (see p. 387) reviewed the work of its Ad Hoc Working Group on Development Education, whose Chairman stated that implementation of the JUNC Development Education Programme of Action continued to depend largely on the United Nations Non-Governmental Liaison Services (NGLS). JUNC members were invited to think of areas and themes which their organizations considered priorities for development education and to which they could contribute.

JUNC felt that the Working Group at its next session should consider development education in the United Nations system, the system's relationship with the non-governmental community in terms of development education, and a revised concept paper on the role of NGLS. The results of those discussions were to be reviewed at a special 1986 meeting of JUNC.

In resolution 40/164 A, the General Assembly urged the United Nations Department of Public Information to disseminate widely information on acute world economic problems, particularly the critical situation in Africa, the severe difficulties of LDCs and the external debt of developing countries, as well as on the adverse effect of the international economic environment on those countries.

Rural development

ACC action. The ACC Task Force on Rural Development (New York, 6-8 March 1985)<sup>(1)</sup> reviewed work accomplished since its 1984 meeting<sup>(2)</sup> in three areas: joint action at the country and regional levels; people's participation in rural development; and monitoring and evaluation. The Task Force considered progress reports from individual agencies and organizations, describing their activities since the 1984 meeting, which showed that they continued to focus on alleviating rural poverty, joint action between agencies and organizations at the country level, people's participation and women in rural development, and monitoring and evaluation at the project/programme and national levels.

The progress report by FAO, the lead agency in the rural development area, presented a positive assessment of change and progress towards rural poverty alleviation, increased decentralization in project planning, preparation and implementation, and increased regional attention on Africa. It was noted that there was a lack of institutional infrastructure at the national level to carry out effectively national programmes of poverty alleviation, combined with a lack of trained manpower.

A discussion by the Task Force on the impact of international economic recession on rural development at the country level and on resources available to the United Nations system highlighted the following: the change in income distribution in rural sectors due to the recession; the effect on rural employment; and the effect on infant mortality and malnutrition, and other socio-economic conditions of the rural population. It was noted that the recession had also led to possible long-term effects on international commodity prices. The Task Force's discussion focused on domestic adjustments taking place at the country level, such as lower rates of foreign exchange earnings in developing countries and cut-backs in domestic service programmes available to rural populations, thus exacerbating rural poverty. It was agreed that in future the Task Force would discuss new policy issues or developments bearing on the rural economy, and that studies on the effects of the recession on poverty and the standard of living prepared within the United Nations system should be circulated to Task Force members.

In April 1985,<sup>(3)</sup> CCSQ(PROG) heard an oral account of the Task Force's meeting and in October<sup>(4)</sup> took note of its report.

Other action. During the mid-term global review of the implementation of SNPA for the 1980s for LDCs (see p. 434), several conclusions and recommendations were made by UNCTAD's Intergovernmental Group on LDCs regarding food and agriculture and rural development in those countries. Those findings were endorsed by the General Assembly when it adopted resolution 40/205.

In May, the Economic and Social Council considered a report on social aspects of rural development<sup>(5)</sup> (see Chapter XIII of this section).

Special economic areas

In 1985, the General Assembly again considered measures being taken by the international community in favour of developing countries and called for action to deal with the specific problems of particular groups of them. By resolution 40/205, it endorsed the conclusions and recommendations of the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries on the mid-term global review of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs, and in resolution 40/233 added Vanuatu to the list of that group of countries, as recommended by CDP. By resolution 40/183, the Assembly again urged increased assistance to land-locked developing countries. However, due to the very low level of pledges and the declining trend in contributions, the Assembly, by decision 40/448 A, requested the Secretary-General to dissolve the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, as recommended by the UNDP Governing Council.

Developing countries

In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in September 1985 a report, prepared in co-operation with the heads of other United Nations bodies, on progress made in implementing immediate measures in favour of the developing countries.<sup>(2)</sup>

The report noted that United Nations entities had been endeavouring to develop specific proposals and to expedite the implementation of immediate measures in five areas identified by the Assembly in 1983,<sup>(3)</sup> namely: food and agriculture, money and finance, trade and raw materials, energy resources, and LDCs.

The conclusion that emerged from the system-wide review was that, although accomplishments had been significant in certain areas, they had generally been limited. The system had operated under stringent resource constraints and deliberative bodies found it difficult to agree on policy measures; action by the system required the consensus of the international community.

The Assembly took note of the report on 17 December by decision 40/443.

Least developed countries

The problems of the States officially designated as LDCs were considered in several United Nations forums during 1985, including the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs, the Governing Council of UNDP, ACC and the General Assembly.

With the General Assembly deciding in December to act on a CDP recommendation to include Vanuatu in the United Nations list of LDCs, the number rose to 37. The others were: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lesotho, Malawi, Maldives, Mali, Nepal, Niger, Rwanda, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Togo, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen.

Identification of LDCs

CDP action. Responding to 1984 requests contained in a General Assembly resolution on economic assistance to Vanuatu<sup>(4)</sup> and in an Economic and Social Council resolution<sup>(5)</sup> on including Kiribati and Tuvalu in the list of LDCs, CDP, at its April 1985 session,<sup>(6)</sup> considered their eligibility for inclusion in the list.

Based on data supplied by the Secretariat on the three criteria for determination of eligibility—per capita GDP, share of manufacturing output in GDP, and adult literacy rate—CDP concluded that Vanuatu qualified for inclusion. It decided to withhold its decision regarding the other two countries until a new set of criteria was established. The Committee was sceptical of the existing criteria and considered that new criteria should involve a clear definition of the purposes that the list of LDCs was meant to serve.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In February 1985, the Economic and Social Council considered an 11 January letter from El Salvador<sup>(7)</sup> transmitting a 1984 resolution of the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean,<sup>(8)</sup> by which it recommended that El Salvador be accorded treatment equivalent to that given to LDCs until its adverse economic situation returned to normal.

On 8 February, the Council adopted decision 1985/110 without vote.

Resolution of the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean concerning El Salvador

At its 5th plenary meeting, on 8 February 1985, the Council:

(a) Took note of the fact that the Committee of the Whole of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean adopted, on 28 June 1984, resolution 472(PLEN.17), concerning assistance to El Salvador, without signifying any agreement on the part of the Council with the contents of paragraph 2 thereof regarding the treatment of countries as least developed countries;

(b) Emphasized, in this connection, that as a general practice the existing procedures for the inclusion of countries in the list of the least developed countries should be followed by all the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/110

Adopted without vote

Draft by Resident (E/1985/L.18), based on informal consultations: agenda item 2. Meeting numbers. ESC 1, 5.

In resolution 1985/63 of 26 July, the Council called for measures to ensure the effective and accelerated implementation of SNPA in the African LDCs during the second half of the 1980s.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In resolution 40/233 of 17 December 1985 on economic assistance to Vanuatu, the General Assembly decided to include Vanuatu in the list of LDCs.

Programme of Action for the 1980s

In 1985, United Nations bodies continued to monitor the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs, adopted in 1981 by a United Nations Conference<sup>(9)</sup> and endorsed later that year by the General Assembly.<sup>(10)</sup> After the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs completed a global mid-term review of SNPA, the Group's conclusions and recommendations (see below) were endorsed by the Assembly. Meanwhile, ACC held three consultations during the year to co-ordinate preparations and facilitate a common understanding on the approach of the United Nations system to the review.

UNCTAD action. In accordance with a 1984 Assembly resolution,<sup>(11)</sup> a high-level meeting of the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs met (sixth session, Geneva, 30 September-12 October 1985)<sup>(12)</sup> to carry out the mid-term global review of the implementation of SNPA for the 1980s for LDCs.

On 12 October, the Intergovernmental Group adopted a resolution by which it reaffirmed the objective of SNPA as the basis for continuing co-operation between LDCs, submitted to the Assembly the conclusions and recommendations of its review of SNPA implementation-inviting the Assembly to endorse them-and the conclusions of its consideration of measures to ensure SNPA implementation over the second half of the decade, and called on Governments and organizations to take account of the conclusions and recommendations in their efforts to implement SNPA, to enable each LDC to achieve a minimum standard of performance in socio-economic development.

In a further resolution, also adopted on 12 October, the Group recommended that the Assembly at its 1985 session decide that a global review and appraisal of SNPA implementation should take place in 1990 at a high level, and invited the Assembly at its 1987 session to decide on the precise level, mandate, date and venue for such a review as well as on the preparatory process.

The Group's main background document was the second UNCTAD annual report on LDCs,<sup>(13)</sup> containing an assessment of their socio-economic development since 1980, a review of international support provided to them and of developments in the economies of individual LDCs since then, and a chapter setting forth conclusions and recommendations. An addendum to the report contained basic data in tabular form.

In addition to contributions by United Nations and other organizations describing their action to implement SNPA, the Group had before it the report of a Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of LDCs (Geneva, 1-10 May 1985),<sup>(14)</sup> which was held in preparation for the mid-term review and in accordance with a 1984 UNCTAD Trade and Development Board decision.<sup>(15)</sup>

On 10 May, the experts adopted conclusions presented by the Chairman which reflected the informal discussions on issues relating to the mid-term review. The conclusions were on: national measures taken or to be undertaken by LDCs with international support for their accelerated progress and full and expeditious implementation of SNPA; ways of better adapting the implementation of development assistance programmes to the specific needs of LDCs; and measures to improve the co-ordination of assistance programmes.

ACC action. Also pursuant to the Assembly's 1984 resolution<sup>(11)</sup> and a 1981 ACC decision,<sup>(16)</sup> three inter-agency consultations on SNPA follow-up were held at Geneva during 1985 (11 and 12 February, 29 April, and 29 and 30 July). In February,<sup>(17)</sup> the consultation discussed the follow-up of the 1984 resolution on implementation of SNPA,<sup>(11)</sup> preparations for the mid-term review, both by the United Nations system and by UNCTAD, and an overview by UNDP of experience gained from country meetings, including proposed changes in the format of round tables. The consultation also annexed to its report directions for the organizations of the United Nations system for the mid-term review and for the implementation of SNPA during the second half of the decade, and agreed to finalize them in April.

In April,<sup>(18)</sup> the consultation reviewed and adopted the directions, exchanged views on issues to be considered by the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Institutions with Representatives of LDCs (see above), and discussed ways of assisting LDCs in preparing for the mid-term review.

At the July meeting,<sup>(19)</sup> the last before the review, the inter-agency consultation discussed preparations of the United Nations system, including facilitation of a common understanding on the system's approach, and exchanged views on the UNCTAD 1985 LDC report<sup>(13)</sup> and on policy proposals for the review.

UNDP action. During 1985, UNDP, together with the World Bank, continued to serve as lead agency in organizing country review meetings at which individual LDCs could consult with their aid partners on the recipient country's economic situation, on progress in SNPA implementation, on aid conditions and on needs for additional assistance. During 1985,<sup>(20)</sup> round-table-related activities were held with UNDP assistance for Benin, Chad, the Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Mali, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, and Togo. Other countries elected to have the World Bank assist them with review meetings.

Funding for the round-table process and for other activities benefiting LDCs was provided by the UNDP Special Measures Fund for LDCs. Contributions to the Fund in 1985 totalled $10.5 million and 11 countries pledged $11.5 million for 1986. Expenditures on round-table conferences were limited to $100,000 for each LDC. Resources from a trust fund established in 1983<sup>(21)</sup> for a special contribution from the Netherlands for LDCs were used to prepare round-table conferences and to finance follow-up activities to conferences held in recent years.

During 1985, UNDP continued to give highest priority to assisting the poorest countries (for UNDP IPFs and project expenditures, see next chapter). Assistance to LDCs was also provided by the United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office and the United Nations Volunteers programme.

In response to a 1984 UNDP Governing Council decision,<sup>(15)</sup> the UNDP Administrator submitted to the Council in 1985 an evaluation report on the role of UNDP in implementing SNPA.<sup>(22)</sup> The report reviewed UNDP involvement with LDCs and its response to the special action programmes introduced since the designation of the first group of LDCs in 1971<sup>(23)</sup> and particularly since the adoption of SNPA. The report contained proposals for revitalizing the Special Measures Fund for LDCs and described an improved format which had been introduced for the round-table process. The improved process would not focus on a single conference but would constitute a continuing process with multi-purpose functions of consultation, information and negotiation with the donor community over a period of time, with the round-table conference being followed by sectoral and other special programme consultations.

Noting that, with few exceptions, round-table conferences had exceeded the $100,000 allocated from the Special Measures Fund and that the estimated average cost of the improved format of the round-table process was $300,000, plus $200,000 for follow-up consultations, the report stated that ways of raising additional funds needed to be found, most appropriately by financing the process for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) from Special programme Resources (SPR). An estimated ceiling of $500,000 per LDC per round-table cycle would ensure adequate support to the country concerned as well as a reasonable measure of control over SPR spending. UNDP was exploring alternative sources of funding in order to bridge the intervening period.

On 29 June,<sup>(24)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council endorsed the Administrator's proposals for revitalizing the Special Measures Fund, requested him to report in 1986 on arrangements made for utilizing and managing the Fund's resources, and urged Governments to contribute or increase contributions to the Fund and to UNCDF. The Council welcomed the improved format for the round-table process, requested the Administrator to ensure that the process provided an effective instrument for implementing SNPA, particularly in promoting a dialogue between LDCs and bilateral and multilateral donors on policy guidelines, and requested him to review periodically the round-table mechanism to ensure that it responded to the needs of LDCs and donors in efforts to achieve effective aid co-ordination. The Administrator was also requested to present to the mid-term review of SNPA a comprehensive report on UNDP efforts in favour of LDCs particularly since the 1981 Conference on LDCs,<sup>(9)</sup> and to assess the results of round-table conferences since 1981 and present his views on how UNDP, donors and LDCs might contribute to the success of UNDP initiatives towards improved development co-operation with LDCs. The Council agreed in principle to the proposal for financing the round-table process from SPR and requested him to make the necessary recommendations to the Council in 1986, including an indication of the types of expenses that UNDP expected to incur.

Report of the Secretary-General. For its 1985 consideration of the implementation of SNPA, the General Assembly had before it the report of the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs (see p. 434), forwarded by the Secretary-General on 1 November,<sup>(25)</sup> and his 31 October report on the mid-term global review,<sup>(26)</sup> describing the United Nations system's preparations and summarizing the outcome of the review.

The latter report pointed out that the review had focused on issues of crucial importance to the development of LDCs and that Governments agreed on measures to expedite progress in implementing SNPA. Much attention was given to national policies of LDCs and priority areas for domestic action by LDCs were identified, such as food and agriculture, education, training, health and population policies. Particular attention was given to integrating women into the development process and their participation in the benefits therefrom. Important steps taken by many LDCs in adjusting their policies and programmes were acknowledged. On the other hand, it was repeatedly stressed that without substantially increased international support, progress in achieving SNPA objectives could not be made. Apart from urging increased aid flows, the review focused on ways that the international community could further strengthen the economies of LDCs through debt relief and commercial policy measures. Considerable attention was paid to the co-ordination and monitoring of SNPA.

It was noted that, although increased aid flows through fulfilment of SNPA targets could result by 1990 in a level of aid 30 per cent higher than in 1983, it might not be sufficient to allow LDCs to resume and accelerate economic growth. UNCTAD secretariat projections of capital requirements of LDCs implied an increase in ODA to those countries ranging from 34 to 300 per cent. The base scenario corresponded to continuing current trends, while the higher allowed LDCs to achieve a 7.2 per cent annual rate of growth by 1990.

To assist LDCs to improve their economic situation, substantially higher amounts of external financial resources were required, and fulfilment as soon as possible of commitments with regard to financial aid by all developed countries was extremely important. Urgent steps should be taken to provide substantially more resources through development banks and multilateral agencies and enhanced efforts would be needed to improve the quality and effectiveness of aid.

With regard to debt of LDCs, the mid-term review not only considered debt in the context of ODA debt to bilateral developed donors, but also invited creditors for official and officially guaranteed loans to LDCs and to multilateral assistance institutions to consider the debtor country's adjustment measures for restoring its debt-servicing capacity and long-term growth when concluding debt rescheduling arrangements.

With regard to trade policy, a wide range of measures had been set out in the mid-term review to expand the export earnings of LDCs. A number of developed countries had announced measures to improve access to their markets for the exports of LDCs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/205 without vote.

Implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 39/174 of 17 December 1984,

Reaffirming the provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade relating to the least developed countries, and the agreed conclusions concerning those countries of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Reaffirming the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, whose objective is to transform the economies of the least developed countries so that they may achieve self-sustained development, and to enable them to provide at least internationally accepted minimum standards of nutrition, health, transport and communications, housing, education, and job opportunities to all their citizens, particularly the rural and urban poor,

Reaffirming the need to respect the socio-political and economic system of each least developed country in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action,

Deeply concerned at the continued deterioration of the socio-economic conditions of the least developed countries despite national and international efforts to achieve the goals and objectives of the Substantial New Programme of Action,

Seriously concerned at the critical economic situation faced particularly by the least developed countries in Africa,

Recognizing the specific problems of the land-locked and island countries among the least developed countries, as reflected in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 137(VI) and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 and Trade and Development Board resolution 319(XXXI) of 27 September 1985,

Recalling paragraph 119 of the Substantial New Programme of Action in which it was recommended that the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, while carrying out the mid-term review, should consider the possibility of holding at the end of the decade a global review on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action which might, inter alia, take the form of a United Nations conference on the least developed countries,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the mid-term global review of progress towards the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action, carried out by the Intergovernmental Group at its sixth session,

1. Emphasizes that the least developed countries, in view of their deteriorating socio-economic situation, need the urgent and special attention of the international community and its large-scale support on a continuous basis to enable them to progress towards self-reliant development, consistent with the plans and programmes of each least developed country;

2. Reaffirms the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries as the basis for continuing co-operation between the least developed countries and their development partners, as well as the commitment to the full and effective implementation of the Programme;

3. Endorses the conclusions and recommendations contained in the report of the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries on the mid-term global review of the Substantial New Programme of Action, as annexed hereto, which are designed to ensure the full implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action over the second half of the decade;

4. Calls upon all Governments, intergovernmental and multilateral institutions, the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, non-governmental organizations and all others concerned to take immediate, concrete and adequate steps to implement the Substantial New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries, taking full account of the conclusions and recommendations of the mid-term global review so as to enable each least developed country to achieve a minimum standard of performance in socio-economic development;

5. Reaffirms that the least developed countries have primary responsibility for their overall development and that, although international support measures are vitally important, the domestic policies those countries pursue will be of importance for the success of their development efforts, and urges the least developed countries to continue their efforts to implement the provisions of the Substantial New Programme of Action at the national level;

6. Calls upon donor countries to continue to make every effort to increase their contributions in view of the important role that official development assistance plays in helping the least developed countries to achieve the objectives of their country programmes within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action, and urges those donor countries that have not yet attained 0.15 per cent of their gross national product, or have not yet doubled their official development assistance to least developed countries, to make every effort necessary to attain those targets as set out in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 142(VI) of 2 July 1983, as adopted;

7. Urges the least developed countries to create an appropriate policy framework (pricing policies, institutional reform, rationalization of public expenditures and public sector management, and measures to mobilize domestic savings through taxation, domestic financial institutions and the rural sector), in order to increase the mobilization of domestic resources and then ensure their effective use, and to strengthen their national financial and planning institutions and, in this regard, urges all concerned to support the least developed countries with appropriate technical and financial assistance;

8. Stresses the critical importance of multilateral assistance to the least developed countries through channels such as the International Development Association, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, regional development banks and their funds, the United Nations Development Programme, including its Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries, the United Nations Capital Development Fund and the United Nations Volunteers programme;

9. Calls upon donor countries and institutions urgently to improve further the quality and effectiveness of official development assistance to increase its responsiveness to the requirements of the least developed countries, as called for in paragraph 70 of the Substantial New Programme of Action and in section XIII of part two of the annex to the present resolution;

10. Reaffirms the importance of co-ordination, follow-up and monitoring at the national, regional and global levels, as outlined in section XVII of part two of the annex to the present resolution, as crucial to the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action and requests the international community and the multilateral agencies to ensure that the country review meetings for the least developed countries facilitate understanding and dialogue between those countries and their development partners aimed at effective and expeditious implementation of the plans and programmes of the least developed countries with a view to achieving an accelerated growth rate and structural transformation of their economies, and invites the least developed countries to convene such meetings on a regular basis;

11. Renews the invitation to the governing bodies of appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Programme, to take the necessary and appropriate measures for effective implementation, monitoring and follow-up of the Substantial New Programme of Action and the conclusions and recommendations adopted by the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries at its sixth session within their respective spheres of competence and mandates, and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to continue to undertake their responsibilities as specified in paragraphs 121 and 123, respectively, of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

12. Decides to carry out a global review and appraisal of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action at a high level in 1990;

13. Decides further that the precise level, mandate, date and venue for such a review, as well as the preparatory process, should be determined by the General Assembly at its forty-second session, in the light of the consultations that will take place under the auspices of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, including those of the seventh session of the Conference;

14. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

ANNEX

Mid-term global review of progress towards the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries: conclusions and recommendations submitted by the Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

Part One

Review of progress in implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action at the country level and of progress in international support measures

Introduction

1. It was noted with serious concern that since the adoption in 1981 of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries there has been a significant deterioration in the overall socio-economic situation of the least developed countries, the causes of which were both external and domestic. The economic crisis had a depressing effect on the three major sources of foreign exchange of the least developed countries: export earnings, concessional capital flows and private transfers. The exceptionally high real interest rates prevailing during the past years have increased the interest obligations on their external debt. This situation was worsened by very adverse climatic conditions in many least developed countries, particularly in Africa, which have caused declines in agricultural and food production. There has also been uneven implementation of domestic policy changes that were required for social and economic development.

2. Thus, as a result of all these factors, after growing at a low average annual rate of close to 4 per cent in the 1970s and by 3 per cent in the first year of the present decade, the least developed countries as a group recorded a growth rate in gross domestic product (GDP) in 1982 and 1983 of only 2 per cent. Since population increased at the high rate of 2.6 per cent, in 1982 and 1983 their GDP per capita declined. Provisional indicators show a poor picture for 1984 when the African crisis came to a climax, affecting almost all the least developed countries in Africa. Preliminary estimates for 1985 point towards a virtual stagnation or decline of GDP for the group of least developed countries as a whole, which would mean a considerable reduction per capita. However, it is encouraging to note that, despite this very poor development for the group as a whole, a few individual least developed countries did perform particularly well, some of them exceeding an annual GDP growth of 7.2 per cent, the rate required to double national income in a decade. This is evidence of the fact that the target of the Substantial New Programme of Action is not entirely beyond reach, although its attainment has become more difficult during the first half of the decade owing to the convulsions that have affected the world economic scene and to the vagaries of weather. Such an achievement requires an intelligent combination of measures undertaken by the least developed countries, on the one hand, and of the volume, conditions and structure of international assistance on the other.

3. Unless urgent measures are taken to implement fully and adequately the Substantial New Programme of Action, this declining trend in the socio-economic situation of the least developed countries will be even more acute in future, with serious and stark repercussions for their populations.

I. General situation and national measures

A. Food and agriculture

4. Among the essential social and economic priorities for the development of the least developed countries, both as a means of satisfying the most fundamental human needs and as a basis for economic growth, agriculture and food production were given the highest priority in the Substantial New Programme of Action. Specific recommendations were made in paragraphs 9-19 of the Programme and more especially in paragraph 13. Indeed, the weight of the agricultural sector within the overall economies of the least developed countries, supporting the overwhelming majority of the population and providing raw materials for industry and export revenues, establishes a clear and close link between progress in this sector and overall economic growth. These recommendations called for giving a high priority in the national development plans, programmes and policies of the least developed countries to the agricultural sector, with particular attention to food production and distribution. Agricultural and food strategies were to include among their objectives:

(a) The attainment of greater food self-sufficiency as soon as possible and at the latest by 1990;

(b) The attainment or surpassing of the 4 per cent growth rate in agricultural production;

(c) Achievement of food security through food supplies readily accessible at affordable prices.

5. During the first four years of the 1980s agricultural production in the least developed countries continued to be a source of continuing concern in terms both of growth rates and of the ability of the least developed countries to meet the food and nutritional needs of their growing populations. During this period the average rate of growth of agricultural output not only fell far short of the target of 4 per cent but also was lower than that recorded in the 1960s and 1970s. This implied a serious deterioration in per capita terms, given that population increased at the rate of 2.6 per cent per annum.

6. The goal of food self-sufficiency was even further from fulfilment, inasmuch as food production per capita fell even more than overall agricultural production. Food insecurity has worsened further, particularly at the household level. The decline of per capita food production worsened, dropping from -0.5 per cent per annum in the 1970s to -1.4 per cent in 1980-1984. However, 7 among the 36 least developed countries did record positive growth rates in food output per capita, proving the realism of the targets set by the Substantial New Programme of Action.

7. Non-food agricultural production, destined largely for export, performed relatively better for the least developed countries as a group during the early 1980s.

8. The causes of the disappointing performance in agriculture and in food production in the least developed countries during the period under review are complex and vary from country to country. But in general, among them are the disastrous climatic conditions in most of those countries during the 1980s, which not only reduced agricultural production and negated the effects of the very substantial efforts made by many of them to increase production in this sector, but also caused severe ecological damage to the environment.

9. The importance accorded to food strategies has proven to be correctly placed. Such strategies enable donors and the least developed countries to deal with the problems of production, marketing and consumption in an integrated and comprehensive manner. Courageous and important steps have been taken by several least developed countries, with the support of the international community, to define and introduce food strategies. Success in these cases was the result of the political will of Governments to introduce changes. These measures have yet to produce full and tangible benefits but represent the principal achievement in this sector.

10. Failure in some cases to adopt appropriate food sector strategies and to implement appropriate reforms has contributed to the lack of progress in agricultural development. Difficulties have been encountered in such key areas as: full participation of the rural population in rural development programmes; appropriate pricing policies for both agricultural products and inputs to serve as incentives for increased production; institutional and agrarian reforms; the development of the required infrastructure; meeting the basic needs of rural societies; and overcoming the inequalities between men and women in participation in and benefiting from rural development programmes.

11. During recent years the particular dynamism of the rural sector has increased and shown itself in various forms, particularly in that of village groupings. It often developed in collaboration with non-governmental organizations. Several least developed countries have taken steps to support this dynamism using donor assistance, both bilateral and multilateral.

12. It was noted that there is a need to bring about an appropriate balance between food production for domestic consumption and cash crops for export. There are some positive examples for overcoming this potential dilemma, providing that the two objectives need not conflict with each other. For example, the development of agricultural export products may facilitate the introduction of new techniques and facilities that can also be used by traditional farmers to improve their production. Appropriate policies and development of infrastructures supporting export production may also benefit food production for local consumption.

13. Insufficient infrastructure in rural areas not only is a serious constraint to agricultural production, manufacturing and processing, but also serves to discourage linkages with other economic sectors.

14. While food aid has been useful in the short term, it has sometimes served to discourage moves towards increasing food self-sufficiency in the least developed countries by depressing prices and delaying urgent investments in the rural sector. However, ways have been found to use food aid as a tool for financing development projects in general and in the agricultural sector in particular.

15. Co-ordination in the agricultural sector at both the local and the international levels has been insufficient, priorities sometimes conflict, and the dialogue has not always been as comprehensive as might have been desired.

16. Severe price fluctuations on the international markets and uncertainties caused by natural factors have compounded problems facing the agricultural sector. The difficult economic conditions that faced many developed and developing countries in the early 1980s depressed demand for the major agricultural exports of the least developed countries, upon which they depend for a major part of their foreign exchange earnings, and further complicated their efforts to use agriculture as a means of improving their overall economic performance.

17. Support measures to help offset the shortfalls in export earnings arising from declining primary commodity prices were noted with satisfaction. However, many countries felt that the insufficient availability of such support, coupled with delays in bringing into operation the Common Fund for Commodities and the limited number of functioning commodity agreements, contributed to the difficulties of the least developed countries in overcoming the adverse consequences on their agricultural production.

B. Human resources and social development

18. On the issues of human resources and social development in the least developed countries there was general agreement that the recommendations of the Substantial New Programme of Action in this area remain valid. The development of human resources is an essential prerequisite for the development of the least developed countries, and therefore remains a priority. The scarcity of skilled manpower, particularly in an administrative and managerial capacity, hinders the development process in the least developed countries.

19. The progress achieved by some of the least developed countries in several areas, particularly declining infant mortality rates and increased literacy rates, was noted with satisfaction, while concern was expressed at the continued large discrepancy between male and female literacy rates. However, it was noted with concern that several other indicators reveal a declining trend in the education, health and nutrition status of the population of the least developed countries as a whole.

20. The scarcity of means available to accelerate the development of human resources in the least developed countries and efforts to overcome the situation were discussed. The need to consider public expenditure on education and health as investment from the point of view of the economy as a whole was stressed.

21. The reorientation of the educational system in some of the least developed countries in order to train managers and technicians to better meet the needs of the economy was noted. There had been limited improvement in implementing training programmes meeting the priority needs of the rural populations. An important aspect has been increasing the prestige of manual work, especially in agriculture. The view was expressed that on-the-job training programmes have been more useful when integrated in development projects at an early stage and that they should be expanded and strengthened. Efforts to mobilize more domestic resources for education were highlighted. The necessity was stressed of maintaining and improving the quality of education in the context of the expansion of basic education.

22. It was emphasized that high priority for primary health care was still required. The contrast was noted in a general way between highly sophisticated medical care that was sometimes available only to a section of the urban population and the development of a widely decentralized preventive medicine which required simple methods, was relatively inexpensive and intended for as many people as possible. The efforts made by the least developed countries to achieve the target of "Health for All by the Year 2000" were also noted. The adaptation of the nomenclature of the essential drugs programme prepared by the World Health Organization forms part of these efforts.

23. Significant cuts in social expenditure have adversely affected the maintenance of physical facilities in both education and health in particular. Experience has shown that this difficulty can be overcome by flexibility on the part of both the least developed countries and donors. It was recognized that government funds were very limited in the least developed countries and experiences were reported where active participation of beneficiaries, inter alia, through user fees, contributed to covering the costs, to safeguarding the efficient use of existing facilities and to reducing dependency of vital services on external assistance. However, generally low income levels have resulted in some of the cases referred to in difficulties and limitations for such contributions. It was also stressed that universal access to basic education and health services was regarded as one of the major social aims of the least developed countries. Local and recurrent cost support in the aid programmes has in several cases been an essential complement of local efforts to keep physical facilities running.

24. The implementation of national population policies as recommended in the Substantial New Programme of Action was seen as an important factor for the success of development efforts by the least developed countries. It was noted that only a few least developed countries had vigorously encouraged population policies and family planning activities. Maternal and child care, including family planning, also bring general health benefits to mothers and children. The representatives of least developed countries explained that, while several least developed countries had adopted population programmes, the determinants of achieving lower fertility were not always favourable in their countries.

25. The significant contribution made by women in the development process of the least developed countries, especially in the agricultural sector, was highlighted.

26. Financial and technical assistance to the least developed countries plays an important part in supporting their efforts in the sphere of human resources development. The linkage between both types of assistance and the right sequence to be followed in providing them was considered to be of crucial significance. The view was expressed by some donors that such assistance should have been provided on more flexible terms and should cover recurrent and local cost expenditures, as these have been identified as major constraints to the development of health and education.

27. It was observed that there is a 'lack of readily available data about the practical experience in human resources development that would permit analyses of past investment in and development of human resources. In this connection, the important role played by a number of partner countries of least developed countries and by the United Nations Development Programme in helping the least developed countries to develop their human resources and identify priorities was emphasized.

C. Natural resources and energy

28. In the sphere of natural resources and energy, the targets of the Substantial New Programme of Action remain entirely valid, despite the fact that they have not yet been achieved. The energy deficit experienced by most least developed countries often leads to their balances of payments being heavily mortgaged, as well as to destructive consequences on the environment. Most least developed countries have lacked the financial, human and material means to be able to assess and plan their traditional and other energy resources in a sufficiently comprehensive manner, with the result that the rational exploitation of these resources has so far been impeded.

29. Thus, the intensive use of fuelwood and charcoal has three consequences: a tendency towards the depletion of these resources, the degradation of the ecosystem and the weakening of the agricultural potential. Efforts to substitute the consumption of fuelwood by other resources have not yet yielded the results anticipated.

30. Despite the decline in real terms of the international price of energy, the cost of importing energy products remains heavy for the least developed countries.

31. For lack of financial and technical means, the hydroelectric resources of the least developed countries continue to be underexploited. Investments in this sector often have the twofold characteristic of requiring very considerable financial resources and of not invariably offering profitability sufficient to guarantee the covering of recurrent costs. The advantages afforded by small-scale hydroelectric schemes have not yet been fully exploited.

32. Although international aid has contributed to the efforts made in the energy sector, it has not solved the energy problems of the least developed countries, and modalities have not always been flexible enough to permit the full economic and social development of local potential.

D. Manufacturing industry

33. The industrialization targets of the Substantial New Programme of Action have not yet been achieved. In the majority of the least developed countries, the share of manufacturing in GDP is currently close to 9 per cent, while in a number of cases it does not even exceed 4 to 5 per cent.

34. The maintenance over a long period of unrealistic price structures and rates of exchange has sometimes exerted a negative impact on industrial development efforts.

35. In a number of least developed countries industrial policies, including the role to be played by the State in the industrial development sphere, have been redefined. In several least developed countries State enterprises continue to play an important role in this process.

36. In some cases industrial promotion mechanisms, mainly credit structures and technical training, as well as international aid, continue to be insufficient, and often entail severe conditions that the promoters are unable to fulfil.

37. In many cases in the past the choice of technologies, both by donors and by beneficiaries, has been inappropriate, leading to difficulties in maintenance and utilization of capacities.

38. The complementarity of the agricultural and industrial sectors has not always been fully taken into consideration, particularly in respect of linkage effects on employment. However, the least developed countries have endeavoured to promote the formulation of integrated strategies. Local capacities for on-the-spot processing of primary commodities have not yet been fully developed, owing to a lack of technical and financial means and of technology transfers to the least developed countries.

39. Although the situation varies considerably from country to country, the formulation of policies for the promotion of small- and medium-sized enterprises, as well as international assistance furnished for that purpose, are still inadequate. Industrial co-operation agreements between some enterprises of least developed countries and those of certain donor countries have been concluded.

40. Regional and subregional economic groupings have taken measures to exploit the opportunities offered by an expanding market in the regions concerned.

E. Physical and institutional infrastructure

41. The insufficiency, fragility and occasional ineffectiveness and inadequacy of the physical and institutional infrastructure continue to be one of the major obstacles to the structural transformation and economic development of the least developed countries.

42. The precarious situation of the physical infrastructure of the least developed countries is often aggravated by the inadequacy of maintenance services.

43. Institutional infrastructures are often insufficiently productive for various reasons, mainly the inadequacy of equipment and skilled staff and insufficient operating budgets.

44. In the case of land-locked least developed countries the inadequacy and the precarious situation of transport networks in adjoining countries, as well as occasional institutional instability in some of those countries, have formed an obstacle to the transportation of products coming from, or intended for, foreign countries.

E Environment

45. The close interrelationship of poverty and environmental deterioration has become increasingly obvious in recent years. The lack of means and alternative energy resources compels the populations of the least developed countries to utilize resources that are becoming depleted, such as fuelwood, thus producing environmental deterioration and an aggravation of the effects of drought and the desertification process. The deterioration of the ecosystem is thus the outcome of the joint impact of climatic conditions and human activity in a context of poverty and rapid population growth, which leads to the over-exploitation of the soil, water resources and vegetation. Consequently, climatic deterioration leading to drought and desertification may well become irreversible phenomena.

46. In some least developed countries, rural development policies have not yet always included specific measures designed to combat drought and desertification. Bearing in mind that fuelwood will continue to be the main source of energy for rural households in the least developed countries in the future, reforestation efforts have been inadequate. As they have been undertaken, activities, including international aid in this sphere, have frequently been geared to the short term and have neglected the need for long-term measures. Contemporary famines are the consequence of decades of unfavourable climatic factors but also of mistakes, inaction and a lack of foresight, both by the countries concerned and at the level of international aid.

47. In some cases political instability has made the efforts to combat desertification and drought hazardous. Similarly, population movements have sometimes constituted an aggravating factor.

48. Confronted with the seriousness of the situation, some least developed countries are beginning to implement policies associating local populations with measures to protect the environment.

G. Transformational investments

49. The number of major investment projects under preparation or under implementation in many least developed countries has decreased considerably since the adoption of the Substantial New Programme of Action, as a result of, inter alia, resource constraints, both internal and external, experienced by these countries, as mentioned in paragraphs 53 and 54 of the Programme. In the light of experience gained in design and implementation of projects, besides the capital needs, the following elements were considered important:

(a) A comprehensive approach for selecting major investment projects in accordance with national priorities;

(b) Carefully prepared pre-investment studies, including cost-benefit analysis;

(c) Pre-investment activities, with the necessary technical assistance.

(d) Human resources aspects, such as training of personnel, management capacity and participation of the local work force;

(e) Maintenance and rehabilitation, including preparedness to meet recurrent costs;

(f) A conducive atmosphere for investment.

H. Land-locked and island least developed countries

50. Paragraph 55 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, relating to the problems of land-locked and island least developed countries, was considered to retain its full pertinence. It was furthermore noted that the problems of those countries had been aggravated in the recent period of recession. Attention was called to United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 137(VI) and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 and Trade and Development Board resolution 319(XXXI) of 27 September 1985.

I. Foreign trade

51. The Intergovernmental Group reaffirmed the importance of paragraphs 56 to 58 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, which retain their full validity. The following factors were considered to be of special importance:

- (a) Horizontal and vertical diversification of production and exports;
- (b) The effects of the expansion of the network of intergovernmental long-term agreements on trade and economic co-operation, as well as the institutional framework between the least developed countries and other countries;
- (c) Development of trade at the domestic and regional, as well as at the global level;
- (d) Trade promotion activities;
- (e) Adjustment efforts with regard to import programmes and policies of the least developed countries;
- (f) Development of institutional capabilities, including the training of personnel.

52. It was recognized that, in carrying out their tasks in these fields, the least developed countries had benefited from, inter alia, the activities of the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT and of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

J. Disaster assistance for the least developed countries

53. The implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action during the first four years has been impeded by natural disasters such as the drought in Africa and floods and cyclones in other countries, and man-made disasters such as internal and external conflicts that have affected a large number of the least developed countries and have considerably increased the number of refugees and displaced persons. The least developed countries, the industrialized countries and the international community, in particular the relevant specialized agencies of the United Nations system, are today in a position to draw some lessons from these dramatic experiences, which point to:

- (a) The need for creating conditions for improving the efficiency of emergency assistance, with the aim of reaching the target groups of the population;
- (b) The shortcomings relating to administrative structures for preventive purposes in the field regarding, inter alia, statistics, technology and various information networks and systems of monitoring the environment;
- (c) The relevance of using emergency assistance for measures improving the efficiency of the assistance, such as support for logistics and transport capacities;
- (d) The need for better co-ordination of efforts at both the national and the international level;
- (e) The value of the participation of non-governmental organizations;
- (f) The need for consideration of longer-term development objectives when providing emergency assistance, in particular with regard to production and distribution of food;
- (g) The special vulnerability of the least developed countries hosting refugees and persons affected by natural disasters.

54. The Intergovernmental Group endorsed the conclusions relating to emergency assistance adopted by the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries as Part of Preparation for the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action, which was held at Geneva from 1 to 10 May 1985.

II. International support measures

A. Transfer of financial resources

55. The United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries recognized that action by the least developed countries at the national level, including vigorous measures for the mobilization of domestic resources, should be complemented by international measures of support through both a substantial increase in financial resource transfers and policies and programmes affecting the modalities of assistance so that those countries might achieve the objectives of their country programmes within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action.

1. Volume of aid

56. The Substantial New Programme of Action envisaged that if all donors were to provide levels of net official development assistance consistent with one or other of the targets set out in paragraph 63 of the Programme, the level of such assistance to least developed countries would double by 1985 compared with the annual level of transfers to them during the period 1976-1980. On the basis of the data available up to 1984, it is anticipated that the actual level of assistance will fall substantially short of this amount in 1985. Nevertheless, a significant number of the donors who accepted one of the targets in 1981, either to provide official development assistance equivalent to 0.15 per cent of their gross national product (GNP) or to double the level of their assistance, have met or come close to reaching the target.

2. Multilateral programmes

57. The amount of multilateral aid, including flows from multilateral agencies financed by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, provided to least developed countries annually was 47 per cent higher in the period 1981-1983 than in 1976-1980. However, many countries expressed serious concern about the reduced level of funding for several important multilateral development agencies, in particular the International Development Association.

58. It was noted, however, that several multilateral development agencies, mainly financed by countries members of the Development Assistance Committee, have adopted policies that emphasize the needs of the least developed countries. Although the share of flows from these agencies to the least developed countries has increased since 1981, the policy emphasis is yet to be fully reflected in aid disbursement patterns.

59. Although the Special Facility for sub-Saharan Africa of the World Bank, established in 1985, is not specifically addressed to the least developed countries, it will increase financial flows to many least developed countries in Africa.

3. New mechanisms

60. No new initiatives have been taken since 1981 in respect of possible new mechanisms for increasing financial transfers to the least developed countries. It was noted that the use by those countries of resources of the International Monetary Fund, designed to alleviate short-term balance-of-payments problems, which reached $2.2 billion in 1983, was now on the decline and that their net purchases from the Fund had been negative in 1984, despite their continuing serious balance-of-payments difficulties. It was further noted that the Task Force on Concessional Flows of the Development Committee of the World Bank had recently completed its work, which was considered at the 27th meeting of the Development Committee, held on 7 October 1985 at Seoul.

4. Aid modalities

61. The Substantial New Programme of Action urged donors and recipients to improve the quality and effectiveness of official development assistance by making improvements in aid practices and management. In this regard the following points were noted:

(a) Most donors have increasingly provided aid to the least developed countries on grant terms;

(b) The debt situation of many least developed countries remains serious and the amount of debt outstanding, including short-term debt and credits of the International Monetary Fund, had increased since 1981 to $35 billion by the end of 1983. Most donors members of the Development Assistance Committee had taken measures under Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978: the value of such measures in respect of least developed countries amounts to $4.0 billion, of which $2.9 billion is in the form of cancellation of official development assistance debt. Some donors have also rescheduled the official development assistance debt of least developed countries in several appropriate cases;

(c) Since 1981 there has been no general initiative by donors to increase the proportion of untied bilateral aid. Most bilateral aid, apart from local cost financing, has continued to be tied to procurement in the donor country. Representatives of least developed countries indicated that in their experience the tying of bilateral aid to their countries had increased since 1981;

(d) In the context of improved dialogue and understanding about domestic programmes and policies of the least developed countries, most donors have shown a greater willingness to provide aid in more flexible forms, in particular for balance-of-payments support, and at a sectoral level for rehabilitation and improved maintenance, as well as for longer-term development objectives. Representatives of some least developed countries pointed out that donors had continued, and in some cases increased, their preference for project aid, as compared to other forms of aid, which created difficulties in aid utilization in many least developed countries. The need was recognized for greater predictability in the provision of such assistance and for measures to be taken to reduce delays between commitments and disbursements;

(e) While most donors have been more willing to provide local cost financing, there remains a cautious attitude towards the funding of recurrent costs. It was noted that the provision of aid for the local costs of investments could facilitate the financing of recurrent costs from domestic resources, particularly in the social sectors. Nevertheless, the importance of aid for recurrent costs in appropriate cases was recognized, provided there was an understanding on the time-scale over which such costs could be increasingly financed from domestic resources;

(f) The donor Governments, and the public through voluntary contributions to non-governmental organizations in various countries, have responded to disasters, and in particular to the appalling famine in sub-Saharan Africa, with substantial emergency assistance.

B. Immediate action component of the Substantial New Programme of Action

62. The main issues concerning the immediate action component of the Substantial New Programme of Action were discussed in the context of aid modalities.

C. Technical assistance

63. Although the level of technical assistance to the least developed countries was substantially higher in the period 1981-1983 than in 1976-1980, it has remained at about $1.5 billion annually. The increased focus on technical assistance aimed at institution-building and training of manpower given by a number of donors, including the United Nations Development Programme, was noted.

64. Experience indicates that there is further scope for improving the effectiveness of technical co-operation, by establishing a closer link between technical co-operation and financial assistance and a further integration of different technical co-operation inputs, including the provision of equipment and highly qualified experts able to operate effectively in the environment of the least developed countries in association with appropriate counterpart staff.

D. Other economic policy measures at the international level

1. Commercial policy measures

65. The decline in dollar terms of the export earnings of the least developed countries, due particularly to the drop in the prices of primary commodities since 1979, is a source of serious concern. This, coupled with the deterioration in the terms of trade, has led to a reduction in essential imports and an increase in the external debt of the least developed countries, thus impeding their plans for trade expansion and diversification. In these circumstances, the efforts made by the industrialized countries in trade policy matters have not produced the desired effect.

(a) Access to markets

66. Some progress towards improved access for the products of the least developed countries to the markets of the industrialized countries has been noted. The persistence in certain cases of quantitative restrictions or of unduly severe rules of origin applied by certain countries was also noted.

67. Considerable improvements have been made by certain industrialized countries to their tariff preference schemes, although in many cases these schemes do not include all the export products that are of special relevance for the least developed countries. Moreover, the least developed countries do not or often could not take full advantage of the existing preference schemes for various reasons.

(b) Export promotion

68. A number of industrialized countries have set up offices to promote imports from developing countries, and more particularly imports from the least developed countries.

69. The technical assistance of the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT and of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development in formulating export strategies and trade promotion was considered to be constructive.

(c) Primary commodities

70. Little progress has been recorded in concluding commodity agreements. The successful conclusion of two new agreements for development purposes, the international agreements on jute and jute products and on tropical timber, was welcomed. The Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities, which would be advantageous for the least developed countries, has still not been implemented.

71. As far as compensation for shortfalls in export earnings is concerned, the extension of STABEX* to new products and the announcement of the implementation of a similar system for least developed countries that are not parties to the Lomé Convention were considered to be positive developments. However, there is still room for improvement in compensatory financing facilities. Reference was made to a plan for improving compensatory financing facilities that would provide for special treatment for the least developed countries and that is under discussion in the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

2. Transport and communications

72. Considerable difficulties continue to beset the least developed countries in respect of the upkeep and operation of transport and communications networks. These difficulties contribute to heavy losses in the event of natural disasters. The problems of land-locked and island least developed countries are particularly acute and require substantial investments in transport-transit infrastructure.

3. Transfer and development of technology

73. There has been a growing awareness of the importance of the transfer of technology for the social and economic transformation of the least developed countries. They continue to face difficulties in the acquisition and adaptation of appropriate technologies. A number of important measures taken by the least developed countries in effecting technological transformation were noted. Concern was expressed that the negotiations on an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology, the revision of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property and the problem of the brain drain had not been concluded. The negative impact of reverse transfer of technology was mentioned.

III. Arrangements for implementation, follow-up and monitoring

74. The Substantial New Programme of Action recognized the importance of follow-up, implementation and monitoring at the national, regional and global levels.

A. National level

75. Co-ordination to ensure effectiveness of all development activities at the country level is a key responsibility of the least developed countries themselves and a crucial aspect of implementation, monitoring and follow-up of the Substantial New Programme of Action. Co-ordination needs differ from country to country, and mechanisms selected respond to the requirements of the individual country situation. The growing burden on the administrations of the least developed countries created by an increasing number of development activities, including measures to offset the consequences of natural disasters, has led to a stronger recognition by the least developed countries and the international community of the importance of co-ordination. In response, many least developed countries have established national focal points to co-ordinate external assistance. The United Nations Development Programme and other donors have contributed to strengthening the least developed countries' capabilities in this regard.

76. Since 1981 most of the least developed countries have established mechanisms in accordance with paragraph 111 of the Substantial New Programme of Action in the form of United Nations Development Programme round-table conferences and World Bank consultative groups or other arrangements. In response to the request from the least developed countries, the United Nations Development Programme has expanded its round-table conferences and the World Bank has increased the number of consultative groups, at the meetings of which the secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development has played an active role. The initial results of the round-table conferences in terms of encouraging increased resource flows and a candid discussion of specific development issues were unsatisfactory. The meetings did not cover all the aspects suggested in paragraph 113 of the Programme but they provided a good basis for future development co-operation.

77. The United Nations Development Programme subsequently evaluated the round-table process and implemented a series of improvements, including co-operation with the World Bank and the European Economic Community on key aspects of macro-economic situations in conducting economic analyses. This is leading to a convergence of the types of issues dealt with at both forms of co-ordination meetings. Some donors have provided special assistance to the United Nations Development Programme for the purpose of conducting round-table conferences.

78. Although there is a general recognition that the United Nations Development Programme round-table conferences and World Bank consultative groups should be complemented by co-ordination at the local and sectoral levels, experience has shown that this has not been achieved in all cases.

79. Co-ordination of the activities of the United Nations system at the country level, as envisaged in paragraph 124 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, and under the aegis of the United Nations system resident co-ordinator has been insufficient and has scope for improvement as regards some reluctance to co-operate. In some least developed countries, at the specific request of the country concerned, the role of the system resident co-ordinator has assumed a broader focus. The activities undertaken by the regional commissions of the United Nations pursuant to paragraph 125 of the Programme were noted.

B. Global level

80. It was noted that the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in fulfilling the role of global monitoring of the Programme, had made a regular analysis of some aspects of the economic performance of the least developed countries and the actions taken by the international community in implementing the Programme. The secretariat of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development had also reported on a regular basis to the General Assembly on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action. Furthermore, within the United Nations system the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, in close co-operation with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, has been convening inter-agency consultations on the least developed countries on a regular basis in order to ensure at the secretariat level the full mobilization and co-ordination of all regional commissions, organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system for the purpose of implementation and follow-up of the Programme.

Part Two
Measures for ensuring the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action over the second half of the Decade

The Intergovernmental Group on the Least Developed Countries,

I
Food and agriculture and rural development

Expressing concern that, although the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries rightly attaches high priority to the agricultural sector, in particular to food production, progress in achievement of targets has been very slow, in many cases because of factors beyond the control of the least developed countries,

Recognizing that there is need to make further progress in developing and implementing food strategies in a co-ordinated and concentrated way,

1. Concludes that, while recognizing the individual situation of each least developed country, for an integrated policy in this area the following elements are of critical importance:

(a) Overall strategies, defining not only the goals of agricultural development and food security, but also the ways and means to reach those goals;

(b) Agricultural exports as a means to finance essential imports, notably for the agricultural sector, and to facilitate reinvestment in the sector;

(c) Improvement of research and development activities, adoption of appropriate technologies and study of possibilities for further processing of the main agricultural products;

(d) Promotion of co-operative development;

(e) Efficient structures and procedures to support the farmer in terms of, first, services (marketing and payment facilities, adequate agricultural extension, basic social services, such as primary health facilities and basic education, and ancillary services, such as repair shops and small-scale manufacturing); second, direct production inputs (for instance, an extended system of rural credit and seeds, fertilizers, pesticides, tools); and, third, infrastructures (for instance, storage and transport facilities, water supply);

(f) Appropriate pricing policies for agricultural inputs and products;

(g) Appropriate institutional and agrarian reforms, including more efficient and fairer distribution of the means of production;

(h) Measures to ensure the full participation of the rural population, with particular attention to women as regards the role they play and their share in the benefits received;

(i) Efficient management and utilization of forest resources based on the productive, protective and social potential of forests;

(j) Improved fisheries management and fisheries development strategy;

(k) Improvements in livestock breeding, disease control, including vaccine production, and provision of animal feed;

2. Urges that the least developed countries continue to take all necessary steps to allocate an appropriate share of domestic resources to rural development, as recommended, for example, by the Assembly of the Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 July 1985;

3. Urges donors to support increasingly the least developed countries in devising and implementing the above-mentioned policies and programmes with technical and financial aid in order directly to improve agricultural production and living conditions in rural areas;

4. Requests donors to make clearer commitments for assistance, including food aid, which is to be integrated into longer-term agricultural and food strategies, so as to ensure that sufficient food is available to the least developed countries during the period in which the least developed countries concerned have not reached their objectives of self-reliance in food;

5. Requests the least developed countries and donors to recognize that their policies should be complementary in order to achieve the goals of sound agricultural development and complete food security;

II

Human resources and social development

Recognizing that for the least developed countries human resources and social development are of critical importance, noting that public expenditures on development of education, improvement of health services and population measures are investments for the future of the least developed countries, that rehabilitation and maintenance of existing facilities are essential and that involvement of local initiatives, support, motivation and participation of the people are crucial and noting further that many least developed countries have taken important initiatives in this regard,

1. Urges the least developed countries to devise and to implement, with the assistance of donors, concrete plans in the following areas:

(a) Education and training

(i) Universal primary education and universal adult literacy, bearing in mind the second Medium-Term Plan of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (1984-1989), emphasizing the need to narrow the disparities between men and women and to improve the quality of education;

- (ii) Vocational training, including on-the-job training, for development projects;
  - (iii) Educational programmes geared to meet the priority needs of the rural population;
  - (iv) Special training of rural youth, also to limit further migration to urban areas;
  - (v) Labour-intensive and other appropriate technologies;
  - (vi) Increasing the availability of skilled manpower, particularly with administrative, managerial and development planning ability;
  - (vii) Raising the importance ascribed to productive activities and manual work, particularly in farming, at primary and higher levels of education;
  - (b) Health and nutrition
    - (i) Improved access to health services for the entire population, emphasizing primary health care, preventive medicine, supply of essential drugs and simple and less expensive techniques;
    - (ii) Strengthening the health infrastructure, including management, and establishing planning cycles for this purpose within the national development process of each least developed country;
    - (iii) Development of national health manpower;
    - (iv) Promotion and management of supply and storage of drugs, appropriate health technologies and basic health education;
    - (v) Integration of nutritional considerations into agricultural and health plans and policies;
    - (vi) Improved co-ordination in rural development programmes such as water supply and sanitation;
  - (c) Population
    - Integration of population policies into national development planning, emphasizing mother and child health care and family planning services as recommended by the International Conference on Population, 1984;
2. Requests increased support from donors and multilateral agencies for these highly important areas not only in terms of financial and technical aid but also in terms of a predictable and comprehensive package of aid measures including, as far as possible, local and recurrent costs in order to maintain existing facilities;

III

Position of women

1. Urges all countries to implement the conclusions and recommendations of the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace;
2. Emphasizes the need to ensure the full integration of women in all aspects of the development process in the least developed countries;
3. Requests the Governments of the least developed countries to show continuous awareness of the position of women as a critical factor for their development by strengthening their efforts to take the necessary steps to overcome cultural, legal and economic barriers that hamper the full participation of women in development and in the equitable sharing of the benefits of economic and social development;
4. Urges donors, in their support of development programmes and projects in the least developed countries, to give particular attention to their effect on the situation of women, including attention to ensuring that they do not inadvertently have negative consequences for women;

IV

Energy

1. Calls upon the least developed countries to include in their energy development plans measures for energy conservation and to assess the pattern of consumption of energy sources, including fuelwood, and its impact on the environment;

2. Requests developed donor countries and other countries in a position to do so to assist the least developed countries in the planning and implementation of these measures and to support as fully as possible measures to ensure energy supply and conservation, particularly through the development of renewable sources of energy as well as through reforestation;

V

Industrial development

Recognizing that industrial development is an important objective in overcoming under-development, in terms of employment and of the need for economic diversification,

Recognizing also that in many least developed countries the priority of agro-industry is reflected in policies for industrial development,

Noting resolution 6 adopted on 19 August 1984 by the Fourth General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization,

1. Stresses that the least developed countries should:

(a) Continue to give priority in their industrial development to agro-industry, industries producing agricultural inputs and industries based on local raw materials;

(b) Favour the development of national productive enterprises, in particular small and medium-scale, labour-intensive enterprises;

(c) Improve further the economic, legal and financial framework for industrial development and for all forms of international co-operation, including joint ventures between enterprises of least developed countries and those of other countries, within the context of national policies and priorities;

(d) Give priority to the maintenance and full use of existing industrial capacity;

(e) Seek appropriate technologies adapted to local needs and capacities for maintenance and repair;

(f) Use the full potential of the State, but also improve the incentives for entrepreneurship and support for local initiatives according to national policies;

2. Calls upon donor countries:

(a) To increase their effective support to the least developed countries in carrying out these measures in the light of the agreed priority noted above;

(b) To base their contributions firmly on local initiatives and involvement;

(c) To combine technical and management training with financial assistance;

(d) To provide assistance where possible on a multi-year basis;

(e) To assist in developing local sources of raw materials where necessary to make local industry less vulnerable to balance-of-payments problems;

VI

Physical and institutional infrastructures

Recognizing the primary importance for the least developed countries of overcoming bottle-necks in institutional and physical infrastructures,

Recognizing also that for the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action increased attention should be paid, in particular, to the strengthening of institutional capacity, which has an important bearing on, inter alia, effectiveness of development aid programmes, disaster relief and aid co-ordination,

1. Requests the least developed countries further to strengthen their planning, monitoring, evaluation and executing capacity, in particular so that it is geared to creating a policy framework that enables efficient and effective use of the possibilities for development in each country;

2. Also requests the least developed countries, with regard to physical infrastructure, to take steps to ensure that the existing capacity is fully used and that recurrent costs for maintenance and investments for balancing, modernization and replacement are covered, taking into account that foreign assistance will be needed in the short term in many least developed countries since in many cases it will not be possible to cover those costs fully from domestic resources;

3. Calls upon donors to support the least developed countries with technical and long-term financial assistance to improve their physical and institutional infrastructures;

4. Further calls upon donors to pay special attention to transport facilities and transit links of the least developed countries, in particular of the land-locked and island countries among them;

5. Underlines the special importance of feeder roads and tracks for opening up remote rural areas so as to increase accessibility to markets of their agricultural products and to facilitate delivery of emergency assistance;

VII

Environment

Recognizing the close interrelationship between poverty and the environment,

Further recognizing that conflict may exist between the immediate needs of people in the least developed countries and the need for environmental protection,

1. Urges all least developed countries and donors to take into account increasingly the environmental implications of development actions, notably the problem of desertification;

2. Requests donors to support actions by the least developed countries in terms of environmental protection, including, in particular, soil conservation, afforestation, reforestation and identification and conservation of water resources;

3. Requests the least developed countries to give increasing attention to the integration of environmental issues into development planning and to the active participation of the local population in all measures taken;

VIII

Land-locked and island countries among the least developed countries

Recognizing the specific problems of land-locked and island countries among the least developed countries, as reflected in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 137(VI) and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 and Trade and Development Board resolution 319(XXXI) of 27 September 1985,

1. Calls upon transit countries to intensify co-operation with the land-locked countries among the least developed countries in order to alleviate their transit-transport problems;

2. Requests donors to give attention to land-locked and island countries among the least developed countries in their technical and financial assistance, with particular focus on capital input in infrastructural development;

3. Requests the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, to continue to support those least developed countries in the solution of their specific transit-transport and communications problems;

IX

Disaster relief

Recognizing that natural and man-made disasters have seriously aggravated the already difficult situation of the least developed countries,

1. Requests the Governments of the least developed countries, within the context of their national policies and priorities, to increase their capacity to respond to disasters and to allow the free flow of relief materials to all those affected;

2. Stresses the need for better co-ordination of efforts at both the national and the international levels;

3. Requests donors to help the least developed countries, while fully respecting their sovereignty, to bring relief to the people affected by disaster by including in their assistance, inter alia, support for logistics and transport capacity;

4. Urges donors to assist the least developed countries not only in a situation when a disaster occurs, but also in strengthening the capacity of those countries to face disasters, including an extended early warning system for natural disasters as well as food storage facilities;

5. Calls upon all countries to ensure that food-aid and other supplies to relieve the suffering can reach the country in need in the fastest and most effective way;

6. Calls upon donors and the least developed countries to take into consideration longer-term development objectives when implementing emergency assistance measures, in particular with regard to production and distribution of food;

7. Encourages all countries to continue to promote the participation of non-governmental organizations and the general public in relief efforts;

X

Mobilization of domestic resources

1. Urges the least developed countries to create an appropriate policy framework (pricing policies, institutional reform, rationalization of public expenditures and public sector management, and measures to mobilize domestic savings through taxation, domestic financial institutions and the rural sector) in order to increase the mobilization of domestic resources and then ensure their effective use, and to strengthen their national financial and planning institutions;

2. Urges developed donor countries and multilateral institutions to support the least developed countries with technical assistance to strengthen their planning and financial institutions and to assist by providing financial assistance for the purpose of stimulating the mobilization of domestic resources;

XI

Transfer of financial resources

Recognizing that action by the least developed countries at the national level, including vigorous measures for the mobilization of domestic resources, should be complemented by international measures of support both through a substantial increase in financial resource transfers and through policies and programmes affecting the modalities of assistance,

1. Calls upon the international community to continue to make special efforts to increase its contributions in view of the fact that only a substantial increase in official development assistance in real terms during the present decade will enable the least developed countries to achieve the objectives of their country programmes within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

2. Reaffirm United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 142(VI) of 2 July 1983 as adopted, in which the Conference urged donor countries within the overall context of the Programme as adopted and of progress towards the 0.7 per cent target, to attain 0.15 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance or to double their official development assistance to the least developed countries by 1985 or as soon as possible thereafter;

3. Expresses its appreciation that since 1981 several donor countries have reached 0.15 per cent of GNP as official development assistance or have doubled that assistance to least developed countries;

4. Appeals to those donor countries that have not yet contributed 0.15 per cent of their GNP, or have not yet doubled their official development assistance to least developed countries, to make every effort necessary to attain these targets as contained in resolution 142(VI);

5. Stresses the critical importance of multilateral assistance to the least developed countries through channels such as the International Development Association, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, regional development banks and their funds, the United Nations Development Programme, including its Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries, the United Nations Capital Development Fund and the United Nations Volunteers programme;

6. Calls upon donor countries to channel a substantial part of their aid through multilateral development institutions and agencies, particularly those addressing the needs of the least developed countries, within the overall substantial increases of official development assistance to least developed countries;

7. Stresses the important role that the International Development Association plays in structural adjustment programmes of the least developed countries within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action, while noting with regret that the Seventh Replenishment of the Association was lower than the Sixth Replenishment and welcoming the fact that the Development Committee at its twenty-seventh meeting, held at Seoul on 7 October 1985, urged that a successful and adequate Eighth Replenishment be achieved by September 19136;

XII

Debt

Recognizing that the burden of debt and debt service has increased substantially for the least developed countries since the adoption of the Substantial New Programme of Action,

Recognizing also that it is in the interest of both creditors and debtors that the debt commitments of the least developed countries are met,

1. Notes with satisfaction that a number of donor countries have responded favourably to section A of Trade and Development Board resolution 165(S-IX) of 11 March 1978 by cancellation of official development assistance debt or other equivalent measures and firmly invites other donors that have not yet done so to implement fully commitments undertaken in pursuance of the resolution, keeping in mind paragraph 71 of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

2. Further notes that the repayment of debt to multilateral assistance institutions is one of the elements in the overall debt service burden of the least developed countries and invites those institutions to take this into account in their lending programmes for the least developed countries;

3. Invites creditors for official and officially guaranteed loans to the least developed countries when concluding a debt rescheduling arrangement for a least developed country, to give due consideration to, inter alia, the debtor country's adjustment measures for restoration of its debt-servicing capacity and long-term growth;

4. Invites donors and relevant international organizations to assist the least developed countries in strengthening their administrative structures in order to permit continuous monitoring and effective management of the debt of the least developed countries, its structures and service payment schedules;

5. Recommends that in the context of a review of the economic and financial situation of a least developed country, country review meetings may also take into account its debt situation;

XIII

Aid modalities

1. Recognises that, in terms of aid modalities:

(a) Clear medium-term perspectives and greater predictability of the volume and forms of the resources available are important to the least developed countries and to the donor community to enable the latter to adapt assistance flexibly and effectively to the changing needs, objectives and priority of the least developed countries;

(b) In order to minimize delays in disbursement, advance payments should be made whenever appropriate and solutions to problems of disbursement should be sought by all parties;

2. Urges donors to take the necessary steps to ensure that:

(a) Bilateral official development assistance to the least developed countries is provided essentially in the form of grants, acknowledging, however, that increased flows may require a mixture of types of aid, such as grants, concessional loans and other forms of assistance;

(b) Multilateral development assistance agencies and institutions addressing the needs of the least developed countries provide credits to them on highly concessional terms, to the extent that their lending procedures permit;

(c) Aid to the least developed countries is untied to the maximum extent possible; when not possible, necessary steps should be taken to help offset the disadvantages of tying;

(d) Transactions financed by any type of associated financing are generally avoided for the least developed countries because of their relatively hard terms; if contracted, it should be ensured that such transactions with the least developed countries contain a high component of official development assistance;

3. Recommends with regard to different forms and types of aid, that:

(a) Particularly in support of domestic adjustment measures of the least developed countries, donors should provide aid in more flexible forms, in particular balance-of-payments support, and at a sectoral level, for rehabilitation and improved maintenance, as well as for longer-term development objectives;

(b) Donors should further increase, where appropriate, their participation in local and recurrent cost financing; adequate provisions should also be made for allowing a progressive take-over of recurrent costs by the least developed countries;

(c) Aid programmes should provide, as much as possible, for the use of local consultants and expertise;

4. Concludes, with regard to technical assistance, that:

(a) Because of the need for the development of human resources, technical assistance by donors is of primary importance and should accompany financial aid to the maximum extent possible;

(b) It is important further to integrate different technical co-operation inputs, including the provision of equipment;

(c) Appropriate co-ordination by the least developed countries of technical assistance is of primary importance; donors are requested to support the strengthening of aid administration and planning agencies in the least developed countries with a view to improving co-ordination capabilities at a national level;

(d) Increased attention should be paid by donors and the least developed countries to the appointment of suitable expatriate experts for the training of counterparts, to maintaining stability in their assignments, and to strengthening training institutions in the least developed countries;

Foreign trade and commercial policy measures

Noting with concern the problems facing the foreign trade sector of the least developed countries as referred to in paragraph 65 of the review, in part one above,

1. Recognizes the progress achieved in providing access for products of the least developed countries to the markets of industrialised countries, particularly under the Generalized System of Preferences;

2. Notes as a positive development the initiative of the European Economic Community in establishing a system similar to STABEX* for those least developed countries not parties to the Lomé Convention;

3. Recommends that the least developed countries give special attention to implementing the measures set out in paragraphs 56 to 58 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, giving particular emphasis to the factors identified in paragraph 51 of the review, in part one above;

4. Invites the least developed countries to utilize fully the opportunities that are already available in the field of market access, in particular under the Generalized System of Preferences;

5. Calls upon the international community to intensify efforts 'to strengthen and improve 'the open multilateral trading system aimed at benefiting all countries, keeping in view the specific needs of the least developed countries;

6. Invites all countries concerned to pursue action towards facilitating the trade of the least developed countries by reducing or eliminating tariff and non-tariff obstacles to their exports, in pursuance of paragraph 77 of the Substantial New Programme of Action and the Ministerial Declaration adopted on 29 November 1982 by the Contracting Parties of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade at their thirty-eighth session;

7. Requests the preference-giving countries that have not yet done so to make further improvements for the least developed countries on a non-discriminatory basis in their schemes under the Generalized System of Preferences through, inter alia, more flexible requirements for rules of origin, extension of the list of products that receive preferential treatment, and extension of the duration of these schemes for a reasonable period, in order to facilitate the fullest possible duty-free access to products of interest to the least developed countries;

8. Calls upon developed countries to provide the necessary resources to strengthen technical assistance facilities so that the least developed countries can fully benefit from the Generalized System of Preferences;

9. Also calls upon developed countries in a position to do so to explore the possibilities of promoting long-term arrangements for the sale of export products of the least developed countries, pursuant to paragraph 79 (c) of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

10. Invites developed countries and multilateral agencies, including the International Trade Centre UNCTAD/GATT and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to provide appropriate technical and financial assistance to support export strategies and trade promotion efforts of the least developed countries;

11. Calls upon the developing countries in a position to do so to provide preferential treatment to imports of goods produced by the the least developed countries, pursuant to United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 142(VI), paragraph 13 (a);

12. Invites all countries to intensify their efforts for a broader utilization, where appropriate and feasible, of international commodity agreements for the stabilization of the export prices of the least developed countries;

13. Requests the international community to take appropriate steps to bring the Common Fund for Commodities into operation at an early date, which, once operational, should give due emphasis to commodities of interest to the least developed countries in determining its priorities for the use of resources of the Second Account;

14. Invites importing developed countries that have not yet done so to consider steps in the field of export earnings stabilization, in accordance with paragraph 83 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, and notes the establishment of an intergovernmental group of experts, as decided by Trade and Development Board decision 317(S-XIV) of 27 June 1985, to consider, inter alia, this matter;

15. Invites the International Monetary Fund to explore, within its existing rules, ways and means of improving the use of its compensatory financing facility by least developed countries;

XV

Economic co-operation among developing countries

1. Calls upon all developing countries to implement the recommendations on economic co-operation among developing countries, as contained in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolution 142(VI);

2. Requests all donor countries and multilateral organizations to support and strengthen economic co-operation among developing countries, in particular concerning the projects of special interest to the least developed countries, in order to ensure that the countries concerned will fully benefit from the results of such co-operation;

XVI

Role of non-governmental organizations

Recognizing that non-governmental organizations can contribute positively to the development of the least developed countries as well as provide valuable disaster relief,

1. Calls upon the Governments of the least developed countries and donors to encourage active participation of the local population, both women and men, through non-governmental entities;

2. Calls upon non-governmental organizations to comply with the national policies and legislation of the host countries and, while preserving their character, to contribute to the development priorities of the least developed countries, co-operating with appropriate authorities and organizations in order to implement effective development programmes;

3. Invites the non-governmental organizations of the donor countries to reinforce their role in consciousness-raising in their countries of origin and in mobilizing increased private and public resources for the benefit of the least developed countries;

XVII

Co-ordination and monitoring

1. Reaffirms the importance of co-ordination, follow-up and monitoring at the national, regional and global levels as crucial to the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

2. Reaffirms also the monitoring role of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development at the global level and requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue and intensify his work, as specified in paragraph 121 of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

3. Welcomes the growing attention to co-ordination at the national level;

4. Recognizes that effective co-ordination, monitoring and follow-up at the national level must be a continuous process;

5. Endorses the results concerning the co-ordination of assistance programmes of the Meeting of Governmental Experts of Donor Countries and Multilateral and Bilateral Financial and Technical Assistance Institutions with Representatives of the Least Developed Countries as part of Preparation for the Mid-term Global Review of the Substantial New Programme of Action, held at Geneva in May 1985;

6. Welcomes the steps taken by the World Bank and the United Nations Development Programme to improve the consultative groups and round-table meetings by, inter alia, enhancing co-operation among multilateral institutions and agencies, as well as efforts made with the help of the Special Measures Fund of the United Nations Development Programme and voluntary contributions and specific contributions of donor countries for the least developed countries;

7. Emphasizes the primary role of each least developed country in the co-ordination of aid activities;

8. Further emphasizes the importance of co-ordination in each least developed country at the sectoral level in order to ensure the greatest possible effectiveness of development activities;

9. Requests the Governments of the least developed countries to continue to strengthen their planning machinery and administrative capacity so as to improve the planning, negotiation and utilization of external assistance;

10. Requests the least developed countries, with the assistance of the lead agencies, to attend to the quality and early availability of preparatory documents for round-table conferences and meetings of consultative groups, which are essential for their success;

11. Requests the multilateral agencies to improve further the quality, coherence and timeliness of the background documentation they present at round-table conferences and meetings of consultative groups;

12. Requests donor countries and multilateral institutions to pay more attention to appropriate local representation and sectoral co-ordination;

13. Urges donors in a position to do so to support development plans or programmes of the least developed countries with multi-year, predictable and monitorable commitments and timely disbursements;

14. Calls upon the organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate closely in each least developed country under the aegis of the resident co-ordinator, as provided for in paragraph 124 of the Substantial New Programme of Action;

15. Reiterates paragraph 123 of the Substantial New Programme of Action, in which the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation is called upon, in close collaboration with the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the executive secretaries of the regional commissions and the lead agencies for the aid groups, to ensure at the secretariat level the full mobilization and co-ordination of all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system for the purpose of implementation and follow-up of the Programme;

16. Urges the resident co-ordinators of the United Nations system to respond constructively to requests by the Governments of the host countries to play a broader co-ordinating role in appropriate cases;

17. Requests the international community and the multilateral agencies:

(a) To ensure that review meetings result in facilitating an increased flow of external assistance through, inter alia, a better understanding and a candid dialogue between the least developed countries and their development partners;

(b) To harmonize terms and procedures of donors to the extent possible in order to achieve a co-ordinated approach conducive to the implementation of the development programmes of the least developed countries.

*System of stabilization of export earnings established by the first Lomé Convention, concluded between EEC and 46 ACP (African, Caribbean and Pacific) States on 28 February 1975, and reinforced by the second ACP-EEC Convention, concluded between EEC and 58 ACP States on 31 October 1979.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.10) without vote, 13 December (meeting 51); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.131), based on informal consultations on draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.82); agenda item 84 (i).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 45, 51; plenary 119.

Speaking in explanation of position in the Second Committee, Bulgaria, also on behalf of the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said the socialist countries attached great importance to SNPA and had participated actively in the review; however, no recommendations had been made on the indebtedness and other financial problems of LDCs, eliminating protectionism and compensation for damage to their economies from the economic crisis, nor had any reference been made in the Intergovernmental Group's report<sup>(25)</sup> to the interrelationship between disarmament and development or to the need to establish a new international economic order.

The United States said it had been pleased to join the consensus but had difficulties with the reference to a global review of SNPA implementation at the end of the decade that might take the form of a conference, as the nature and scope of the review should not be prejudged until its purpose had been carefully assessed; paragraphs 12 and 13 were also of concern and it rejected the call in paragraph 6 for the setting of ODA targets. Similarly, the United Kingdom stressed that ODA to LDCs was subject to public-expenditure constraints and to the level of assistance it provided to other developing countries.

Lend-locked developing countries

During 1985, the special needs and physical handicaps of land-locked developing countries were considered by UNCTAD and the General Assembly. On the recommendation of the UNDP Governing Council, the Assembly in December requested the Secretary-General to dissolve the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries.

UNCTAD action. Responding to a 1984 UNCTAD Trade and Development Board decision,<sup>(27)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat submitted to the Board (Geneva, 18-29 March 1985) the views and comments of Governments<sup>(28)</sup> on the report of the 1984 meeting of an Ad Hoc Group of Experts<sup>(29)</sup> which had studied ways of improving transit-transport infrastructures and services for land-locked developing countries.

It was concluded that the Group's report received the endorsement of most of the 30 Governments that responded to an UNCTAD note verbale on the subject. The report's recommendations were viewed as a basis for an approach by the international community towards solving the problems of land-locked developing countries. Although some Governments attached great importance to the role of international agencies as third parties in seeking solutions for land-locked and transit countries, the initiative to negotiate solutions should be taken by those countries. The need for intensified co-operation between land-locked countries and their transit neighbours was fully supported by all Governments and a special appeal was made to transit countries to ratify the 1965 Convention on Transit Trade of Land-locked States.<sup>(30)</sup> The importance of tackling transit-transport as part of national development plans was underlined and the Group's recommendations on co-operative subregional development were supported.

Some Governments commented that, although there were a number of common features characterizing the transit-transport problem, individual land-locked countries had their own peculiarities. Other issues on which some Governments had reservations included: the general question of recognizing land-locked developing countries as a special category; the questions of joint ownership and management of transit facilities; and issues pertaining to internal restructuring of the economies of land-locked countries with a view to reducing their dependency on transit routes and to institution building. Areas which should have been more adequately covered included: inter-modal co-ordination; pricing of transport services; diversity of problems facing individual countries; and the role of the regional commissions in work related to those countries.

On 29 March, the Board decided<sup>(31)</sup> to consider at its September session a draft resolution on specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries.

On 27 September,<sup>(32)</sup> following consultations on the draft, the Board called on the international community to continue implementing UNCTAD resolutions 63(III),<sup>(33)</sup> 98(IV),<sup>(34)</sup> 123(V)<sup>(35)</sup> and 137(VI),<sup>(36)</sup> and on donors to provide assistance, including skilled manpower training, in assessing potentials for restructuring the economies of land-locked countries through the promotion of import substitution industries. The land-locked countries and their transit neighbours were invited to intensify transit-transport co-operative arrangements, including legal arrangements for the smooth flow of goods in 'transit.

International financial and technical assistance institutions were called on to give priority to programmes encouraging such co-operation as well as development schemes involving land-locked countries, and the Board urged that transit developing countries be given greater support in providing efficient transit-transport facilities. The international community was urged to consider positively the recommendations of the Ad Hoc Group<sup>(29)</sup> and the views of Governments thereon (see above).

The Board invited member States to ratify and implement international conventions on transit trade and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to provide technical assistance to land-locked developing countries and their transit neighbours to promote such ratification. He was also requested to pursue the work of UNCTAD technical advisory services as called for in UNCTAD resolution 137(VI),<sup>(36)</sup> to carry out studies recommended by the Ad Hoc Group, to seek extrabudgetary resources, including UNDP funds, to enable him to comply with requests contained in the resolution, and to report to the Board in 1986.

In resolution 137(VI),<sup>(36)</sup> the UNCTAD Secretary-General was called on to report annually to the General Assembly through the Trade and Development Board on progress in implementing specific action related to the needs and problems of the land-locked developing countries. The second such report prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat<sup>(37)</sup> was submitted to the Assembly in October 1985. It consisted of two parts, the first of which dealt with geographical handicaps and their impact on trade and development, as requested by the Assembly in 1984.<sup>(38)</sup>

The first part of the report discussed: basic considerations relating to the geographical handicaps of land-locked developing countries, including their remoteness from world markets and the need to ship goods through the territory of neighbouring States; the diversity of the 21 land-locked countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America; the need for alternative routes, such as air freight, should normal transit routes be disrupted; co-operative arrangements between land-locked and transit countries; international regulations for transit-transport operations; and the role of international assistance in support of transit-transport infrastructure development.

The report recommended: investment in transport infrastructure and improved management of transport facilities, complemented by domestic development strategies and international support measures; increasing local value added before export; and greater support to local production of low-value, high-bulk imports, particularly those increasing the utilization of local resources. The report stated that international support in developing alternative routes was a matter of high priority, as was co-operation between land-locked countries and their transit neighbours. Adherence to international conventions relevant to trade and transport was stressed as their ratification would significantly contribute to removing some bottle-necks restraining transit traffic.

The second part of the report contained information received from 26 countries and 24 international and intergovernmental organizations on specific action in favour of land-locked developing countries.

The report concluded that, although international support of land-locked developing countries continued to be inadequate to meet their growing requirements, it was widely recognized that they continued to face serious development problems because geographical handicaps were an additional burden on their weak and highly vulnerable economies. Sectoral diversification of assistance would, in the long run, help to restructure their economies and render them less vulnerable to their geographical handicaps. In the short run, however, increased resources were needed for the transit-transport sector where bottle-necks undermined development projects and threatened the survival of countries facing shortages of essentials. Particular attention was being given by some donors to subregional transport development, which encouraged close co-operation between land-locked countries and their neighbours.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/183 by recorded vote.

Specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries

The General Assembly,

Reiterating the specific actions related to the particular needs of the land-locked developing countries stated in United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 63(III) of 19 May 1972, 98(IV) of 31 May 1976, 123(V) of 3 June 1979 and 137(VI) of 2 July 1983 and Trade and Development Board resolution 319(XXXI) of 27 September 1985,

Recalling the provisions of its resolutions 31/157 of 21 December 1976, 32/191 of 19 December 1977, 33/150 of 20 December 1978, 34/198 of 19 December 1979, 35/58 of 5 December 1980, 36/175 of 17 December 1981 and 39/209 of 18 December 1984 and other resolutions of the United Nations relating to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries,

Bearing in mind various other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly, its related organs and the specialized agencies emphasizing special and urgent measures in favour of land-locked developing countries,

Recalling the relevant provisions of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, adopted on 10 December 1982,

Bearing in mind the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts to Study Ways and Means of Improving Transit-transport Infrastructures and Services for Land-locked Developing Countries,

Recognizing that the lack of territorial access to the sea, aggravated by remoteness and isolation from world markets, and the prohibitive transit, transport and transshipment costs impose serious constraints on the socio-economic development of land-locked developing countries,

Noting with concern that the measures taken thus far have not adequately addressed the problems of land-locked developing countries,

1. Reaffirms the right of access of land-locked countries to and from the sea and freedom of transit through the territory of transit States by all means of transport, in accordance with article 125 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea;

2. Appeals to all States, international organizations and financial institutions to implement, as a matter of urgency and priority, the specific actions related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries envisaged in resolutions 63(III), 98(IV), 123(V) and 137(VI) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, in the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries and in other relevant resolutions of the United Nations;

3. Urges all concerned countries, as well as international organizations, to provide land-locked developing countries with appropriate financial and technical assistance in the form of grants or concessional loans for the construction, maintenance and improvement of their transport and transit infrastructures and facilities;

4. Urges also the international community and multilateral and bilateral financial institutions to intensify efforts in raising the net flow of resources to all land-locked developing countries to help offset the adverse effects of their disadvantageous geographical situation on their economic development efforts, in keeping with the overall development needs of each land-locked developing country;

5. Invites transit countries and the land-locked developing countries to co-operate effectively in harmonizing transport planning and in promoting other joint ventures in the field of transport at the regional, subregional and bilateral levels;

6. Further invites the international community to give financial, technical and other support to interested transit and land-locked developing countries in the construction of alternative routes to the sea;

7. Commends the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and other United Nations agencies for their work and the assistance they have provided to the land-locked developing countries, and invites them to continue to take appropriate and effective measures to respond to the specific needs of those countries;

8. Recommends continued and intensified activities relating to the conducting of necessary studies and the implementation of special actions and specific measures for the land-locked developing countries, including those in the area of economic co-operation among developing countries, as well as those that have been envisaged in the programme of work of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the regional commissions and other programmes and activities at the regional and subregional levels;

9. Once again requests Member States to transmit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development their views and comments on the report of the Ad Hoc Group of Experts to Study Ways and Means of Improving Transit-transport Infrastructures and Services for Land-locked Developing Countries;

10. Welcomes the report of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development on progress in the implementation of specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries, submitted pursuant to resolution 39/209, and requests him to prepare another such report for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-second session.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 152-0-1 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.3) by recorded vote (135-0-1), 3 December (meeting 46): 13-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.38/Rev.1); agenda item 84 (c). Sponsors: Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Bolivia, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Central African Republic, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nepal, Paraguay, Rwanda, Zambia.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: None.

Abstaining: United States

Explaining its abstention, the United States said it believed that the category of land-locked countries was not meaningful and it opposed the institution of special categories other than that of least developed.

Prior to voting on the text as a whole, the Second Committee approved paragraph 1 by a recorded vote of 106 to none, with 26 abstentions. A number of States explained their abstentions on paragraph 1 relating to article 125 of the 1982 United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea,<sup>(39)</sup> which assured land-locked States right of access and freedom of transit, under terms and modalities for transit agreed upon between the States concerned, and allowing transit States to ensure that their legitimate interests were not infringed.

Iran said the right of access to the sea and freedom of transit should be realized in compliance with subparagraphs 2 and 3 of article 125. Senegal said it also had reservations regarding the article and believed that the problems of land-locked countries could be better solved through bilateral arrangements, a position shared by Ghana, Liberia, Mauritania and India, which added that it could not understand the need for a detailed Assembly resolution paralleling that of 1984.<sup>(38)</sup> Mozambique stated that it had reservations on the article, as the issue in question should be agreed between the land-locked developing countries and transit States. The Federal Republic of Germany, speaking also on behalf of the United Kingdom, felt that matters regarding State sovereignty should be decided by consensus and that action in favour of land-locked countries should be related to their individual level of development.

Turkey said its vote in favour of the draft as a whole in no way implied that it had accepted the Convention on the Law of the Sea. Brazil said that its vote in favour of paragraph 1 and the draft as a whole was on the understanding that the text did not supersede existing bilateral arrangements. Peru voted in favour on the understanding that existing agreements between the concerned parties and the rights of transit States would be respected.

UN Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries

In a two-part report<sup>(40)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council, the UNDP Administrator, responding to a 1981 Governing Council decision,<sup>(41)</sup> gave details of income, expenditure, programming and projects of the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries for the 1983-1984 biennium, and, in accordance with a 1983 Council decision,<sup>(42)</sup> reviewed the Fund's history since its inception.

The Administrator stated that the decline in contributions continued during 1983-1984 when pledges amounted to some $88,000 and $55,000 respectively. As at March 1985, pledges for that year totalled some $38,000. (As at 31 December 1985, payments totalling $49,604 were received from 11 States, while 12 States pledged $15,116 for 1986-see table below.)

The Administrator noted that the 19 countries which abstained in the vote on the 1976 General Assembly resolution approving the Fund's statute<sup>(43)</sup> included virtually all the major donors to United Nations development activities. He said those countries were opposed to categorizing the land-locked developing countries as a special group and preferred to assist them through bilateral programmes and through other multilateral programmes benefiting individual land-locked developing countries among others. Of the 115 countries which voted for the resolution, 27 had contributed to the Fund since its inception and 14 of those were themselves land-locked.

The Administrator concluded that the Fund would cease to be viable in 1985-1986 and stated that, if the UNDP Governing Council shared that conclusion, it might wish to recommend to the Assembly that the Fund be dissolved.

On 28 June,<sup>(44)</sup> the Council recommended to the Assembly that, in the absence of any prospect for increased contributions, the Fund should be dissolved and closed for further contributions as of 1 January 1986, and that, following completion of activities in respect of projects approved by that date, any uncommitted resources be transferred to UNDP general resources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted three decisions on the closure of the Special Fund. It adopted decision 40/448 A without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

At its 120th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, having taken note of decision 85/32 of 28 June 1985 of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to dissolve the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries in an orderly manner by 31 December 1986 and to transfer all uncommitted resources to the general resources of the Programme.

General Assembly decision 40/448 A

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1041) without vote, 11 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.113); agenda item 85 (b).

Meeting numbers GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 35-42, 44, 46-50; plenary 120.

As a result of the adoption of the above decision, the Assembly, on the oral proposal of its President, adopted decisions 40/448 B and C without vote. It decided that there was no longer a need for the Assembly to elect members of the Fund's Board of Governors (40/448 B) or confirm the appointment of an Executive Director (40/448 C).

Chapter II

Operational activities for development

Total official development assistance (ODA) transferred through the United Nations system to developing countries in 1985 amounted to $5.1 billion. Total contributions for operational activities amounted to $5.5 billion, an overall decrease due to the drop in contributions to the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD).

In its thirty-fifth anniversary year, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) received aggregate contributions of $863.7 million, of which $571.7 million was expended on field programme activities. In June, the UNDP Governing Council reached consensus on the target for annual resource growth for the Programme's fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), agreeing to average yearly increases in voluntary contributions of 8 per cent, on a basis of a target of $700 million anticipated for 1986. In November, at the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, recorded and estimated pledges for 1986 surpassed $700 million and were expected to exceed $745 million, the highest level in UNDP history.

The General Assembly in December, by resolution 40/211, called on States to make every effort to attain the planned funding levels for operational activities for development by the various organizations of the United Nations system.

The United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCO) delivered $127.2 million in project expenditures, the largest programme since 1981. Special concerns addressed by DTCO during 1985 included the critical situation in Africa, pre-investment and investment follow-up, and women in development.

The United Nations Volunteers programme experienced sustained growth in 1985 with 1,128 volunteers in service as at 31 December. By resolution 40/212, the Assembly invited Governments to observe annually, on 5 December, an International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development.

In May/June, the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries (TCDC) held its fourth session and adopted decisions on a range of TCDC issues. The Assembly, by resolution 40/196, endorsed the Committee's decisions and requested United Nations organizations to ensure their implementation.

The United Nations Capital Development Fund (UNCDF) approved $37.5 million for 22 new projects and grant increases in existing project budgets. It continued to direct a large proportion of its resources to the least developed countries in Africa beset by critical economic and drought-related problems.

General aspects

In his annual report on United Nations operational activities for development,<sup>(1)</sup> the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation (DIEC) stated that $5,147 million in ODA was transferred through all the organizations of the system to developing countries in 1985, amounting to about 15 per cent of net ODA received by those countries. Excluding the concessional funds provided by the International Development Association (IDA) and IFAD, which amounted to $2,601 million, the share of developing countries' net ODA receipts channelled through the system was a little over 7 per cent, almost the same percentage as in earlier years of the decade.

Grant-financed expenditures on field programmes totalled $2,546 million, an increase of about 7 per cent, part of which was the result of the stronger United States dollar, which might have had a depressive effect on contributions but had a beneficial effect on programme expenditures. The principal source of growth in expenditures was the World Food Programme (WFP); the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), UNDP and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) experienced less significant increases.

Total contributions to the operational activities of the United Nations system, including all funds and programmes of the United Nations and the operational activities of the specialized agencies and WFP, amounted to $5,490 million, a decrease compared with 1984 due to the drop in contributions to the World Bank and IFAD. Contributions were also received in respect of humanitarian, refugee, disaster relief and special economic assistance programmes, amounting to $593 million in 1985, an increase of 6 per cent over the 1984 level. This was mainly due to the response to the critical situation in Africa.

In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(2)</sup> the Director-General included in his annual report to the 1985 Assembly<sup>(3)</sup> information on measures taken to strengthen co-ordination capabilities and national evaluation arrangements. Information was also included on co-operation with multilateral development banks and on the relationship between programme delivery and administrative and support costs. With regard to harmonization of administrative, financial, personnel, planning and procurement procedures, the report noted that some progress had been made in evaluation procedures, project proposals and procurement practices. As to bringing about greater use of the technical resources of DTCD, the Secretary-General had created a joint DTCD/UNDP task force to increase collaboration so as to promote the utilization of the comparative strengths of both organizations.

The question of co-ordination of external technical co-operation at the country level and steps taken by UNDP to strengthen co-ordination was also addressed in a report by the UNDP Administrator to the UNDP Governing Council (see p. 472).

ACC activities. In a preliminary exchange of ideas on the Director-General's report for the triennial policy review of operational activities for development to be undertaken by the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly in 1986, the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) (CCSQ(OPS)) (New York, 7-9 October)<sup>(4)</sup> of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) heard a representative of the Director-General's Office summarize possible topics to be considered to improve the coherence, impact and relevance of operational activities. Committee members would be consulted during preparation of the report and a paper on subjects to be included would be submitted to the Committee in 1986.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/211 without vote.

Operational activities for development

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the validity of its resolution 38/171 of 19 December 1983 on the comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development,

Reaffirming also its resolution 39/220 of 18 December 1984 on financing of operational activities for development, as well as its resolution 32/197 of 20 December 1977 on the restructuring of the economic and social sectors of the United Nations,

Reaffirming further its resolutions 2688(XXV) of 11 December 1970 on the capacity of the United Nations development system and 3405(XXX) of 28 November 1975 on new dimensions in technical co-operation,

Reaffirming the exclusive responsibility of the Government of the recipient country in formulating its national development plan, priorities and objectives, as set out in the consensus contained in the annex to resolution 2688(XXV), and emphasizing that the integration of the operational activities of the United Nations system with national programmes would enhance the impact and relevance of those activities,

Reaffirming also the responsibility of developing countries to co-ordinate development co-operation, including the determination of local co-ordination arrangements,

Reaffirming further the responsibilities of the resident co-ordinators on behalf of the United Nations system with respect to co-ordination of operational activities carried out by the United Nations system at the country level in accordance with their mandate,

Reaffirming the important contribution of operational activities for development of the United Nations system in support of the overall economic and social development of developing countries,

Reiterating its desire for a coherent and co-ordinated United Nations system in the field of operational activities for development and for effective leadership by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation in the co-ordination of the various components of the United Nations system and in exercising overall co-ordination within the system, as set forth in resolution 32/197, as well as its call for full co-operation with the Director-General by all organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system.

Noting the steps being taken by the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Children's Fund and the World Food Programme, through the joint consultative group on policy to enhance their collaboration in programming and implementation, Welcoming the decisions of the governing bodies of the relevant United Nations organizations to strengthen their efforts in response to the emergency situation in Africa, and welcoming the co-ordinated response of the United Nations organizations in support of relief operations in Africa and the co-ordination of such assistance through the United Nations Office for Emergency Operations in Africa, as well as the related arrangements at the country level,

Recognizing, in this regard, the need for additional financial resources to meet the urgent development needs of African countries,

Emphasizing the need for a significant, continuous and real increase in resources for operational activities to meet the growing requirements for development of the developing countries, in particular the least developed countries,

Expressing its appreciation to those Governments of both developed and developing countries that, at the 1985 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities, announced 'increased contributions for operational activities for development for the year 1986, as well as to those Governments that have consistently maintained their contributions at a high level,

Having examined the report of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation on operational activities for development of the United Nations system,

1. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation, within a general framework of broad objectives of operational activities in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/197, to include the following in his report for the 1986 comprehensive policy review, in addition to the requests contained in General Assembly resolution 38/171 and the issues identified in paragraph 3 of the report of the Director-General for 1985 and to make recommendations, as appropriate, thereon:

(a) Measures to strengthen the existing mechanisms within the United Nations system, with a view to furthering the coherence and co-ordination of operational activities;

(b) An analysis of the relationship between the increasing responsibilities of the United Nations Development Programme in the area of co-ordination and its essential role in the provision of technical co-operation;

(c) An analysis of changing requirements for technical co-operation through multilateral channels and the responsiveness of the United Nations system to them;

(d) Further analysis of programme delivery and administrative and support costs;

(e) Developments regarding joint technical co-operation needs assessments;

(f) Steps taken by United Nations organizations engaged in operational activities to promote the participation of women in development;

(g) An analysis of the response of the United Nations system in assisting developing countries in the strengthening of their co-ordination capacity;

(h) Actions taken to increase programme effectiveness through, inter alia, evaluation;

(i) Efforts undertaken to expand the geographical distribution of the sources of supply, including in underutilized donor and developing countries, for the operational activities of the United Nations system;

2. Emphasizes the importance of the round-table country review process and other mechanisms for co-ordination at the country level in facilitating the effective implementation of the development programmes in the countries concerned;

3. Takes note of the report of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme for the year 1985 and the decisions contained therein;

4. Reaffirms the central funding role of the United Nations Development Programme in the field of technical co-operation for development;

5. Calls upon all States to make every effort to attain the planned funding levels for operational activities for development by the various organizations of the United Nations system, and urges the successful completion of the current negotiations on the replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development to enable it to maintain its effective contribution to agricultural and food development, as well as the early consideration and completion of the eighth replenishment of the International Development Association at an adequate level,

6. Expresses its deep concern about the shortfall of resources of the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the impact on its ability to carry out its planned programmes, and urges all countries to continue and increase their support for the Fund;

7. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to report on the results of the efforts to increase collaboration between the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development and the United Nations Development Programme;

8. Requests the Economic and Social Council, in discharging its responsibilities as defined in the annex to General Assembly resolution 32/197, to assist the Assembly in establishing overall strategies, policies and priorities for the system as a whole in respect of operational activities, and to formulate suggestions and recommendations at the time of its consideration of the 1986 comprehensive policy review;

9. Invites the governing bodies of the organizations of the United Nations system, where possible, to provide the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986 and the General Assembly at its forty-first session at the time of the 1986 comprehensive policy review of operational activities, their views on the system-wide policy issues affecting operational activities identified by the Assembly in its resolution 38/171 and in the present resolution, and also invites the organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate with the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation in the preparation of his report for that review.

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1041) without vote, 13 December (meeting 51); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.132), based on informal consultations on draft by Canada, Denmark and Netherlands (A/C.2/40/L.103) and orally revised; agenda item 85 (a).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 35-42, 48, 51; plenary 120.

By decision 40/449 of 17 December, the Assembly took note of the report of the Secretary-General on United Nations technical co-operation activities in 1984.<sup>(5)</sup>

Financing of operational activities

In his 1985 report to the General Assembly,<sup>(3)</sup> the DIEC Director-General summarized the resource outlook for 1985-1988 for IDA, IFAD, UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP. Estimates indicated that contributions to UNDP, UNFPA, UNICEF and WFP would amount to $1,900 million in 1985 compared to about $1,750 million actually received in 1984. For the period 1986-1988, the four organizations were planning for total contributions of $6,300 million compared to $5,437 million collected (estimated for 1985) for the immediate preceding three years, 1983-1985.

The seventh replenishment of IDA, amounting to $9 billion, represented a reduction of 25 per cent in nominal terms and 40 per cent in real terms over the sixth replenishment level of $12 billion. Effective 1 July 1985, the World Bank established a Special Facility for sub-Saharan Africa, administered by IDA, of over $1.2 billion, to help countries of the region deal with their economic crisis.

The question of the second replenishment of IFAD resources was not resolved during 1985. In February, all but one important contributor reached a consensus on the minimum amount for the replenishment ranging from $500 million to $650 million, to be available for 1985-1987. The IFAD Executive Board approved the launching of a special programme for countries of sub-Saharan Africa affected by drought and desertification, targeted to mobilize $300 million over four years from contributors outside the formal second replenishment and aimed at stimulating the production of smallholder farmers in the region.

Expenditures

In his annual report on United Nations system technical co-operation expenditures,<sup>(6)</sup> the UNDP Administrator stated that 25 organizations and the five regional commissions had reported expenditures of almost $916 million financed from sources other than UNDP central funds in 1985, as against $841 million originally reported for 1984 (subsequently adjusted to $904 million, to take into account statistical differences arising from the World Health Organization (WHO) biennial budgeting and accounting system). This reflected a modest increase of 1.3 per cent as against about 7.4 per cent between 1983 and 1984. With data adjusted for WHO expenditures, regular technical co-operation expenditures rose by 5.9 per cent, while those funded by extraordinary sources other than UNDP, UNFPA and UNDP-administered funds decreased by 2.4 per cent. UNFPA-financed expenditures rose from $120 million in 1984 to $128 million, an increase of about 6.7 per cent. Those financed by UNDP-administered funds amounted to $77 million in 1985 against $81 million in 1984, a decrease of about 5 per cent.

The five larger agencies—the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and WHO—accounted for some 71 per cent of total non-UNDP-financed technical co-operation expenditures, as against 70 per cent for 1984. Expenditures by the United Nations and ILO increased by almost 13.7 per cent, while WHO expenditures increased by 2.6 per cent. However, UNESCO's non-UNDP-funded expenditures declined by about 28 per cent. As in the past, the expenditure data for the smaller agencies produced no generally valid trends, although their total non-UNDP-financed technical co-operation expenditures continued to increase.

Because of the size of the WHO budget, the health sector had the highest concentration of expenditures not financed by UNDP central resources, accounting for 35.5 per cent of all non-UNDP-financed technical co-operation expenditures in 1985, about the same as in 1984. The second most important sector continued to be agriculture, forestry and fisheries, with about $145 million or some 15.8 per cent of total expenditures, followed by population (14 per cent), natural resources (6.7 per cent), transport and communications (4.5 per cent), industry (4.4 per cent), general development issues, policy and planning (3.6 per cent), employment (2.9 per cent) and science and technology (2.7 per cent).

Under regular budgets alone, the health sector accounted for some 71.3 per cent of total technical co-operation expenditures. Agriculture, forestry and fisheries occupied second place (7.8 per cent), followed by industry (4.2 per cent), general development issues, policy and planning (3.8 per cent) and natural resources (3.6 per cent).

Technical co-operation expenditures financed from extrabudgetary sources, including those funded by UNFPA- and UNDP-administered funds, reflected a less marked concentration of expenditures in a few sectors. As in previous years, the most important sector was population (24.5 per cent), followed by health (20.6 per cent), agriculture, forestry and fisheries (17 per cent) and natural resources (7.2 per cent).

Unilateral "self-supporting" expenditures—those financed by the developing countries themselves—were concentrated in the agriculture, forestry and fisheries sector (35.7 per cent), followed by transport and communications (25 per cent), natural resources (13.5 per cent) and industry (7.6 per cent).

Total UNDP project expenditures for 1985 amounted to $564 million as against $527 million for 1984, an increase of almost 7 per cent compared with a decrease of about 5.8 per cent between 1984 and 1983. Non-UNDP-financed expenditures rose by about 1.2 per cent and amounted to $915 million compared with the adjusted figure of $904 million for 1984. The majority of the agencies continued to have the greater part of their technical co-operation expenditures financed by UNDP.

Total technical co-operation disbursements under World Bank loans and IDA credits for training and consultants reached almost $947 million in 1985, surpassing UNDP-financed technical co-operation expenditures.

Total grant assistance provided by the United Nations system, which continued at an annual level of $2.2 billion from 1982 to 1984, regained the 1981 level of $2.4 billion in 1985.

Contributions

In his annual report to the General Assembly,<sup>(1)</sup> the DIEC Director-General stated that total contributions to the operational activities of the United Nations system in 1985, including all the funds and programmes of the United Nations and the operational activities of the specialized agencies and WFP, amounted to $2,829 million, an increase of about 6 per cent over 1984. Although a number of countries increased the national currency value of their contributions, part of the increase was lost in accounting terms because of the movement of the United States dollar against most other currencies.

Contributions to UNDP, UNICEF and UNFPA totalled $1,316 million in 1985, an increase of 4 per cent over 1984. However, contributions to UNDP-administered trust funds and to other United Nations funds and programmes fell to $153 million from $165 million. Contributions to UNICEF began to increase after a drop in 1983-1984 and contributions to WFP increased by 21 per cent to $809 million.

Regular and extrabudgetary contributions for the technical co-operation activities of the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency in 1985 reached $631 million. However, the increase in assessed contributions for technical co-operation (which totalled $290 million) was offset by a drop in funds-in-trust and other extrabudgetary contributions, to $340 million. Those figures included $40 million provided by the World Bank for programmes carried out by agencies of the system.

Contributions to IDA and IFAD and capital subscription payments to the World Bank and IFC amounted to $2,660 million in 1985, a further decline from levels attained in the earlier part of the decade.

Compared with previous years, there was a decrease in 1985 in overall contributions for operational activities, due to the drop in contributions to the World Bank and IFAD. Of the total contributions of $5,490 million to the system, about half was channelled through grant-financed operational activities and half on concessional terms through the World Bank and IFAD.

Contributions in respect of humanitarian, refugee, disaster relief and special economic assistance programmes amounted to $593 million in 1985, an increase of 6 per cent over the 1984 level, due in great part to the response to the critical situation in Africa.

Communications. During 1985, several communications concerning economic assistance to developing countries were received by the Secretary-General. Among them were: a 9 May letter<sup>(7)</sup> from the USSR transmitting a document on its economic assistance to developing countries; a 17 May letter<sup>(8)</sup> from Czechoslovakia containing a joint statement by Bulgaria, the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, which included information on assistance provided by them to developing countries and their views on obstacles to progress in the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s);<sup>(9)</sup> and a 9 July letter<sup>(10)</sup> from the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States concerning their monetary contributions to the development activities of the United Nations system. These letters were, as requested by their authors, brought to the attention of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see p. 418).

In an 8 October letter,<sup>(11)</sup> Japan stated that it had adopted a third medium-term target for expanding its ODA disbursements for 1986-1992 to more than $40 billion.

General Assembly action. By resolution 40/211, the General Assembly called on all States to make every effort to attain the planned funding levels for operational activities for development by the organizations of the United Nations system, and urged successful completion of the negotiations on replenishing IFAD, as well as the early consideration and completion of the eighth replenishment of IDA at an adequate level. It also expressed deep concern about the shortfall of UNFPA resources and urged all countries to increase their support for the Fund.

During the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs), several conclusions and recommendations were made by the Intergovernmental Group on LDCs of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) regarding technical assistance to those countries (see p. 436). The findings were endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 40/205.

UN Pledging Conference for Development Activities

The 1985 United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities was held at United Nations Headquarters on 14 and 15 November to receive government pledges for 1986 to United Nations funds and programmes concerned with development and related assistance.

Contributions to the funds and programmes participating in the Conference totalled $1,160 million in 1985. Pledges for 1986, as at 30 June 1986, amounted to $1,142 million, more than half of which was for UNDP.

Inter-agency co-operation

At its second session of 1985 (New York, 7-9 October),<sup>(4)</sup> CCSQ(OPS) expressed recognition that co-ordination was not an end in itself but a process designed to help both donors and recipients enhance the cost-effectiveness of external aid. It was emphasized that aid co-ordination was a prerogative of the recipient country, and the primary contribution of the United Nations system should be to strengthen the capacity and commitment of recipient countries, particularly by assisting them to formulate a suitable macro-economic and sectoral policy framework and strategy.

The Committee agreed: to request its substantive secretariat to identify and describe mechanisms and processes for sectoral and intersectoral co-ordination in use at the country level that could be more widely applied, and to provide details on measures taken by the United Nations system to strengthen the co-ordinating capacities of recipient countries; to invite its members to submit analyses of their arrangements for sectoral and intersectoral co-ordination in, for example, health, agriculture, manpower and employment, industry and education; to invite organizations to review their operationally oriented analytical work and means of encouraging both donors and recipients to make more effective use of their sectoral knowledge and experience in planning external assistance; and to request its substantive secretariat to explore, with the Office of the DIEC Director-General and member organizations, ways of pursuing aspects of collaboration with bilateral donors that were particularly important in enhancing overall co-ordination.

Programme evaluation

In a report on evaluation,<sup>(12)</sup> submitted to the UNDP Governing Council in April and taken note of by the Council on 29 June,<sup>(13)</sup> the UNDP Administrator discussed the development of measures taken to improve evaluation policies and procedures and summarized the status of harmonization in project evaluation and reporting throughout the United Nations using UNDP's proposed system as a frame of reference. The Administrator stated that preliminary reactions from the system were favourable to a proposal put to CCSQ(OPS) by UNDP and WHO in 1984 to apply new provisions in the UNDP Policies and Procedures Manual, jointly with the executing agencies, to all UNDP-financed projects. At a January meeting of an inter-agency working group on evaluation, it was agreed that the revised procedures would be so applied during a trial period extending to May 1986 and the experience gained would be analysed by both UNDP and the executing agencies. An analysis would be undertaken of experience gained with the new system in some 12 countries and the reaction of all Governments involved would be sought.

At its October meeting,<sup>(4)</sup> CCSQ(OPS) noted that the trial period for introducing new procedures for monitoring, evaluation and reporting for UNDP-financed projects was under way, with special emphasis being given to training. Several agencies had decided to apply the UNDP procedures to all their project monitoring, evaluation and reporting, regardless of the source of funds.

Technical co-operation through UNDP

In his annual report for 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Administrator said that a number of events in 1985 stood out as milestones in UNDP's transition to a new phase of operations. In June, the Governing Council reached consensus on the target for annual resource growth for the period 1987-1991 and Council members agreed to average yearly increases in voluntary contributions of 8 per cent, starting with a base of $700 million for 1986. It was also agreed that 80 per cent of resources earmarked for country programmes would flow to low-income nations.

Discussions at the second Global Meeting of UNDP Resident Representatives (Copenhagen, Denmark, October) centred on new trends in country programming, practices in country-level co-ordination, improvements in programme and project quality including monitoring and evaluation, methods for efficient programme delivery and UNDP's evolving financial structures. Based on that practical foundation, UNDP's management was currently developing revised strategies to enhance and diversify the Programme's operational capacity.

At the United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities (see above), recorded and estimated core pledges for 1986 surpassed the $700 million base figure set by the Council and were expected to exceed $745 million. That estimated total, the highest in UNDP history, would represent a 10.6 per cent increase over 1985 in dollar terms. Actual pledges of $487.4 million were announced by 102 countries to UNDP core resources for 1986.

The Administrator stated that trends discerned in several reappraisals of the first generation of development assistance were hopeful. He cited statistics on life expectancy, infant mortality, literacy and education demonstrating social advances made by developing countries since 1950 and stated that general economic indicators were equally encouraging. He also noted that events in sub-Saharan Africa in particular had put poverty high on the agenda for action. In other regions, the impact of recession and adjustment on disadvantaged segments of society showed that the poorest of the poor were no less vulnerable to reversals in national fortunes. In order to extend the fight against poverty, 41 per cent of all distributed country indicative planning figure (IPF) resources would be shared between the 37 countries designated by the General Assembly as LDCs (see p. 433). In other economically more advanced developing countries, specific poverty alleviation measures like urban renewal programmes and rural employment-creation schemes commanded an increasing share of country programme resources.

UNDP had found that past development policies had favoured the buildup of physical capacities over human resources and concluded that more attention needed to be given to the latter as the true agents and sole objects of development. Technical assistance could play a catalytic role in sustaining developing countries' newly formed linkages between universities, public and private research and development centres, and industry. Through such mechanisms as TCDC, UNDP could also support the exchange of technical information and experience between countries adopting similar strategies. UNDP's new focal point for short-term advisory services (STAS) concentrated on matching requests for assistance with expertise from the productive, commercial and service sectors of developed and developing countries (see p. 474), while the UNDP-supported programme for the transfer of knowledge through expatriate nationals was another mechanism to provide expertise to deal with immediate and specialized requirements.

In 1985, field programme expenditures supported by UNDP rose to $571.7 million from $532.6 million in 1984, an increase of 7.3 per cent. IPF expenditures of $482.1 million largely accounted for the improvement, which reversed a three-year trend towards lower levels of project spending. The total value and number of new project approvals during 1985 rose by 13.6 per cent and 33.7 per cent respectively. Supplementary contributions provided by developing and developed countries—the sources of which included programme and project cost-sharing, trust funds established under the authority of the Administrator, government cash counterpart contributions and contributions to the Special Measures Fund for the Least Developed Countries (SMF/LDCs)—in 1985 represented some 15 per cent of Programme resources, amounting to $137.2 million. (See also p. 475.)

Six new trust funds were established in 1985 with contributions amounting to $8.5 million (see p. 480). In addition, six sub-trust fund arrangements were established on behalf of UNCDF, the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development (UNFSSTD) and the United Nations Sudano-

Sahelian Office (UNSO), the value of which was some $12.6 million. Voluntary pledges for the numerous special-purpose funds administered by UNDP declined from $38.6 million in 1984 to $28.6 million in 1985. Income received by the special funds from cost-sharing and sub-trust fund arrangements amounted to about $25.5 million.

Total contributions to central resources, special-purpose funds and sub-trust fund and cost-sharing arrangements amounted to $863.7 million in 1985, an increase of 3.5 per cent over 1984.

Total expenditures from UNDP central resources in 1985 amounted to $778.1 million, of which $571.7 million was for field programme activities, while the balance was for agency, administrative and programme support costs and sectoral support and other field-level costs. Of the field programme expenditure, $482.1 million was delivered under IPF resources (see p. 475).

The number of new projects approved climbed to 1,436 in 1985 from 1,074 in 1984. New approvals by sector followed the pattern of the preceding year, with the three leading sectors in order of their numerical share of new approvals being industry, development policy and planning, and agriculture, forestry and fisheries.

Although the cultivation of staple foods rallied in several drought-stricken parts of the Africa region in 1985, in many countries social and economic conditions remained critical as rooted structural imbalances continued to affect recovery. For UNDP, the operational challenge remained twofold: to continue its support for immediate relief and rehabilitation measures, while assisting Governments to address the issues underlying the development crisis and sustain more durable, comprehensive and integrated solutions (see p. 500).

Management of the UNDP programme in Asia and the Pacific in 1985 concentrated on preparing country programmes, planning country and intercountry programme exercises, improving project preparation, strengthening monitoring and evaluation, preparing donor round-table meetings and producing studies. New commitments to the value of almost $200 million were entered into during the year so that, by the end of 1985, 95 per cent of third-programming-cycle (1982-1986) resources had been fully committed.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, UNDP concentrated on adapting country programming to new, debt-defined realities in technical co-operation by stepping up its support for national debt management and adjustment strategies. As part of its drive to enhance the impact of its assistance, UNDP intensified programme monitoring in the region during 1985; 167 tripartite reviews, 21 mid-term evaluations and 22 country-programme reviews were carried out. The 17 country-programmes to be submitted to the Governing Council in 1986 reflected the pre-occupations of Governments with economic reactivation, as well as the search for alternative development strategies for coping with adjustment measures and promoting growth with equity.

In partnership with UNDP, three Governments of the Arab States held formal annual reviews of their country programmes in 1985. A further 11 countries were assessed in preparation for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991). Theme-oriented programming emerged as an appropriate form of UNDP support for intercountry co-operation, which had begun to concentrate on priority regional issues such as food security, human resources development, energy, promotion of advanced technologies and TCDC. The Sudan and Lebanon continued to experience acute drought- and security-related difficulties respectively, which severely affected UNDP assistance. In the Sudan, however, strong post-emergency efforts by the Government led to resumed UNDP-assisted rehabilitation and longer-term development activities. Cost-sharing rose by 40 per cent over 1984, indicating heightened interest by Governments in multilateral technical co-operation.

Other developments noted by the Administrator during 1985 concerned TCDC, project evaluation, inter-agency procurement, STAS, the Projects Annotated Listing (a compilation of project proposals), and staff development and training.

UNDP also administered the following special funds in 1985: UNCDF, UNSO, the UNDP Energy Account, the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme, the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, the United Nations Development Fund for Women (formerly the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, it was officially transferred from the United Nations Secretariat to autonomous association with UNDP on 1 July) and UNFSSTD.

In addition to its sizeable emergency and relief operations in Africa (see p. 500), UNDP collaborated with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other agencies in responding to a number of natural disasters in other regions: a volcanic eruption in Colombia (see p. 545); earthquakes in Mexico (see p. 543); cyclones in Vanuatu (see p. 532); and extensive flooding brought on by recurring typhoons in Viet Nam (see p. 541).

UNDP Council action. In New York, the UNDP Governing Council held organizational meetings on 19 and 22 February, a special meeting from 19 to 22 February on preparations for the fourth programming cycle, and its thirty-second session from 3 to 29 June.<sup>(2)</sup> At the session, the Council resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole,<sup>(3)</sup> which held meetings between 3 and 7 June to discuss country and intercountry programmes, projects and evaluation; it recommended that the Council take note of various reports and approved a number of programmes and projects it had reviewed. Financial, budgetary and administrative matters were considered by the Council's Budgetary and Finances Committee<sup>(4)</sup> between 3 and 29 June.

At its organizational meetings, the Council adopted<sup>(5)</sup> the schedule of meetings for its June session. The 46 decisions it adopted on 28 and 29 June, in addition to those mentioned in this chapter, dealt with assistance to the national liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (see p. 169); assistance to the Palestinian people (see p. 281); implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCS (see p. 435); the United Nations Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries (see p. 454); strengthening the response to the crisis in Africa (see p. 500); UNFPA and its 1986-1987 budget (see Chapter XIV of this section); the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see p. 670); information support to TCDC and to the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (see p. 680); programmes in energy development (see p. 686); UNFSSTD (see p. 712); human resources development (see p. 780) and a focal point for STAS (see p. 781); implementation of the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian Region and of the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programme in that region (see p. 810); and evaluation of the women-in-development programme, integration of issues relevant to women into promotional and operational activities for TCDC (see p. 946), and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (see p. 950).

By a decision of 3 June, the Council allocated agenda items and assigned tasks for the work of its 1985 session.<sup>(6)</sup> Three decisions of 29 June approved the provisional agenda and arrangements for its meetings in 1986<sup>(7)</sup> and took note of several reports.<sup>(8)</sup> By decision 1985/186 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of an extract<sup>(9)</sup> of the report of the UNDP Governing Council covering its organizational and June meetings..

Having considered the Administrator's 1984 annual report,<sup>(10)</sup> the Governing Council on 29 June<sup>(11)</sup> expressed support for his efforts to improve UNDP's effectiveness, particularly measures to strengthen its technical capability and role in project development and to improve agency performance in project formulation and implementation. Governments and agencies were urged to streamline internal procedures and institutional mechanisms to ensure speedy implementation of UNDP-financed activities, and Governments and the Administrator were requested to use IPF resources in identifying requirements for technical assistance, with a view to mobilizing external resources. The Council took note of the Administrator's exceptional measures in response to the critical situation in Africa, particularly co-ordination of emergency assistance with longer-term rehabilitation and development measures, and of his efforts in managing residual funds transferred from the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund for use in countries affected by natural disasters. He was encouraged to enhance the round-table consultation process in favour of LDCs and requested to consult with agencies to improve project budgeting practices and report on measures to improve programme and project quality. UNDP was urged to continue to respond to the changing technical co-operation requirements of developing countries.

By resolution 40/211, the General Assembly took note of the UNDP Governing Council's 1985 report<sup>(2)</sup> and decisions and reaffirmed UNDP's central funding role in technical co-operation for development. The Assembly requested the DIEC Director-General to report on efforts to increase collaboration between DTCD and UNDP, and on the relationship between UNDP's increasing co-ordination responsibilities and its essential role in providing technical co-operation.

UNDP operational activities

Country and intercountry programmes

In an April report<sup>(12)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council, the Administrator analysed six (Bhutan, Fiji, Guatemala, India, Indonesia and Tonga) of the seven country programmes being submitted to the Council for approval. The Afghanistan programme, submitted to Council in 1984<sup>(13)</sup> on which a consensus was not reached, was not included. The report dealt with the timing of the programmes, preparatory work, financing, major development objectives and orientation, allocation of resources, pre-investment and investment support activities, and global and regional priorities.

In a section of his annual report for 1985<sup>(1)</sup> on project results of the global/interregional programme and special funds, the Administrator stated that agricultural research had retained its place as the first priority of UNDP's global programme. Under the joint sponsorship of UNDP, the World Bank and WHO, 3,000 scientists in 125 countries were planning and conducting research on six major diseases endemic in tropical countries. Also in collaboration with UNDP, a WHO-implemented diarrhoeal diseases control programme had developed a world-wide research programme involving investigators in more than 80 countries. UNDP also supported global and interregional projects in energy, fisheries, water supply and sanitation, and human resources development.

Additional resources were mobilized and channelled to developing countries to meet the need for special efforts in specific areas through seven associated funds administered by UNDP or its Administrator: UNCDF (see p. 493); UNSO (see p. 810); the UNDP Energy Office (see p. 686); UNV (see p. 486); the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (see p. 669); the United Nations Development Fund for Women (see p. 950); and UNFSSTD (see p. 711).

UNDP Council action. In June,<sup>(14)</sup> the Governing Council decided to convene, immediately after its 1986 organizational session, a special session to examine country programmes and programming matters and to consider the possibility of convening other sessions in accordance with information provided by the UNDP Administrator. It decided to establish, on an experimental basis, a 24-member working group of the Committee of the Whole to facilitate and expedite consideration of matters arising from the Committee's mandate, particularly programming matters, other than country and intercountry programmes. The 1986 review of the three-year trial period of the Committee of the Whole would be undertaken in the light of additional experience of the working group.

On 28 June,<sup>(15)</sup> the Council approved country programmes for Bhutan, Fiji, Guatemala, India, Indonesia and Tonga, and took note of extensions of country programmes for Bangladesh and Suriname. The Administrator was authorized to proceed with appraisal and approval of requests for UNDP assistance for projects falling within the outlines of each country programme, as long as expenditures were in conformity with IPFs, increased with governmental cost-sharing contributions but within available resources. In the absence of a country programme for Afghanistan, he was authorized to support ongoing projects there and to consider for approval new projects consistent with normal UNDP criteria.

Global projects on technology transfer on food and forage legumes in West Asia and North Africa, research and development of integrated resource recovery and West African sorghum and millet improvement were approved. The Council took note of the Administrator's steps, taken in consultation with the World Bank and FAO, to secure international status for agricultural research centres including reconstitution of one each in Colombia and Mexico-of the Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research, under arrangements consistent with those worked out in setting up other agricultural research centres in India, the Netherlands and the Syrian Arab Republic, in agreement with host Governments.

Country programmes by region

Africa

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in the Africa region during 1985,<sup>(16)</sup> the UNDP Administrator said that as at 31 December there were 45 approved programmes of assistance in 42 countries, including special programmes of assistance to Namibia and the national liberation movements recognized by OAU and the regional programme. From 1982 to 1986, some $1.2 billion was available through UNDP, excluding resources channelled through funds under the Administrator. Of the total resources available, $992 million was from the country and regional IPFs and the balance from SMF/LDCs, the Special Fund for Land-locked Developing Countries, Special Programme Resources, Special Industrial Services (SIS) of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), cost sharing and a number of trust funds. Of total programmable resources for 1982-1986, $1.1 billion, or 91 per cent, was committed to approved projects by December 1985.

Each programme had been reviewed at headquarters and the majority had been the object of in-country reviews. The report gave examples of action taken by Governments and UNDP, following the reviews, to enhance the quality of the programmes. Countries whose commitment levels were not high enough and countries and individual projects with slow implementation rates were identified and measures initiated to rectify the shortcomings. During the year, the regional programme for Africa was subject to a series of evaluations of individual projects and clusters of projects such as the assistance programme to river basins. The reviews made it clear that the next regional programme should have sharper focus with fewer and more specific objectives aimed at addressing current and long-term African needs, should support fewer projects with larger size and should move away from institutional support to capacity-building and programme assistance; links should be forged and promoted between national activities and subregional and regional ones.

In a May report on co-ordination of external technical co-operation at the country level,<sup>(17)</sup> the Administrator said that most African countries had established formal consultation mechanisms in the form of round-table conferences or consultative group meetings, the latter convened under the auspices of the World Bank. UNDP was the lead agency for 19 round-table conferences and participated in the group meetings. Several Governments had left it to resident representatives to initiate and develop informal mechanisms for consultation with the local representatives of aid programmes outside the United Nations system. The principal outcome of such arrangements was a better flow of information among assistance programmes and a consequent avoidance of duplication.

Experience with co-ordination within the United Nations system was mixed; in a few cases a systematic attempt had been made at joint programming, while in others the resident representative had been unaware of projects negotiated directly between ministries and United Nations organizations using their own resources. The concept of aid co-ordination and the role of the resident co-ordinator was well received by a majority of Governments in the region; in two countries, major donors had requested monthly meetings for co-ordination.

Arab States

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in the Arab States region during 1985,<sup>(18)</sup> the Administrator said that programmes there had started to take new shape by focusing UNDP assistance on certain developmental themes. Programme areas which were guiding project selection for regional co-operation were food security, human resources development, energy, promotion of advanced technologies and TCDC. As the most appropriate form of supporting the theme-oriented and often multisectoral technical assistance requirements, Governments often requested UNDP to provide assistance under "umbrella-type" projects which, in some countries, were Government-executed in association with United Nations agencies. Formal country programme reviews were conducted in the latter half of 1985 in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Somalia and the Sudan.

Regional projects were geared to meeting manpower needs, with particular attention to LDCs. Assistance complemented national efforts in such sectors as development planning and statistics, public administration and education. Regional needs with regard to water resources and natural resources exploration and utilization were met by a number of projects; others addressed common problems in agriculture and fisheries and in the packaging and iron and steel sectors. In order to cover additional activities dealing with human resources development, water resources management, promotion of new and advanced technologies and TCDC activities, it was intended to strengthen co-operation with the World Bank's investment programmes and regional funding organizations.

The UNDP Regional Bureau for Arab States had 321 large-scale projects under implementation in 1985, almost all of which were reviewed on a continuing basis. Twenty in-depth evaluations were carried out, mostly for projects nearing completion and for which Governments had requested continuing UNDP assistance. Evaluators discerned a clear trend away from direct assistance for institutional management and organization towards technical support to institutional programmes and projects.

In his May report on co-ordination,<sup>(17)</sup> the Administrator said that co-ordination of external assistance in the Arab States region was undertaken through round-table conferences, consultative group meetings, and informal meetings between Governments, the donor community and multilateral assistance organizations. Emergency relief assistance was co-ordinated under the aegis of the United Nations. At a more informal level, many UNDP offices kept in touch with major donors to exchange information. Within the United Nations system, efforts were made to avoid overlaps through monthly consultations of local representatives of United Nations organizations. Co-operation with the World Bank was particularly strong in several countries. Governments had demonstrated an interest in improving their co-ordinating role in planning and monitoring external development aid. Some oil-exporting countries supported the principle of co-ordination of the international system's development and technical assistance activities, although one country, with a weakened central co-ordinating authority, had proposed that UNDP review its representation in the light of political and economic changes and activate a new dialogue with the Gulf Co-operation Council to cover socio-economic development responsibilities.

Asia and the Pacific

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in the Asia and the Pacific region,<sup>(18)</sup> the Administrator stated that a principal activity during 1985 was the preparation of country programmes for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991). Programmes for Bhutan, Fiji, India, Indonesia and Tonga, with a combined IPF of $230.4 million, were approved in June by the Governing Council<sup>(15)</sup> and a further 16 (Bangladesh, China, Cook Islands, Kiribati, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Mongolia, Nepal, Niue, Papua New Guinea, Philippines, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Viet Nam), with a combined IPF of $502.9 million, were prepared for submission to the Governing Council in 1986. Steps were taken to elaborate programmes for a further 11 countries for submission in 1987, by which time almost every country of the region would have been covered. The regional programme for the fourth cycle, to be submitted in 1987, also required substantial preparatory work during the year. Three special management studies were undertaken in 1985: on the use of national professional project personnel in the region; on government execution of projects in China; and on UNDP assistance over three cycles in Nepal.

At the end of 1985, commitments in the region totalled $1,029 million—95 per cent of the total programmable resources of $1,087 million available for the third cycle (1982-1986)—compared with $875 million at the end of 1984. Ongoing projects numbered 1,545, of which 1,385 were country and 160 were intercountry projects, with cumulative UNDP budgets of $1.2 billion. Agriculture, forestry and fisheries accounted for 22 per cent of total assistance, industry for 17 per cent, natural resources, 15 per cent, and transportation and communications, 12 per cent. There was an increase in training expenditures and a decrease in those for equipment; a content analysis of the regional programme also confirmed the increasing prominence given to human resources development.

Reporting on co-ordination of technical co-operation in the region,<sup>(17)</sup> the Administrator stated that formal arrangements included round-table conferences, consultative group meetings, the South Pacific Bureau for Economic Co-operation, the South Pacific Commission and the Pacific Operations Centre of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. There were also informal local arrangements among Governments, inter-agency groups, international organizations and non-governmental organizations (NGOs).

It was UNDP's experience in the region that organizations of the United Nations system, particularly those with funding resources of their own, contributed to a weakening of central aid co-ordination by dealing directly with technical ministries on development co-operation activities.

The position of Governments on the focal-point role of resident co-ordinators in co-ordinating aid varied according to administrative capacity and the economic and political condition of each country. Although some countries strongly supported the concept, countries with sophisticated bureaucratic systems were anxious that links between the agencies and technical ministries should not be weakened. A close link had been developed at the regional level between UNDP and the World Bank, as well as with the Asian Development Bank and the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

Europe

In a report on implementation of country programmes in Europe during 1985,<sup>(20)</sup> the Administrator said that the majority of programmes were at an advanced stage of implementation in the third programming cycle. Apart from Cyprus and Portugal, where resident experts constituted the major component of projects, the majority of programmes emphasized specialized equipment and training.

During the year formal reviews were conducted in all countries except Albania, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Portugal and Romania. Several major projects were reviewed in those countries. A major objective of the reviews was to determine the effectiveness of third-cycle programmes before preparing country programmes for the fourth cycle. Governments were generally satisfied with the status of the regional programme and confirmed its priority areas: energy, environment, transport and communications, and science and technology. Several mentioned the possibility of utilizing in other regions the successful results of projects implemented in Europe. Governments viewed UNDP co-operation as an essential component of their overall development efforts and UNDP inputs were designed to fill technological gaps towards the attainment of specific economic goals.

The energy sector of the regional programme was strengthened in 1985 with the approval of projects for energy conservation in industry and for low-calorie coal utilization technology.

In his May report on co-ordination of external technical co-operation at the country level,<sup>(17)</sup> the Administrator said that, since the majority of the countries in Europe benefiting from IPF assistance were relatively high on the per capita income scale, bilateral and multilateral donors in the region were few in number and aid co-ordination was of limited significance. Only one country utilized the resident co-ordinator in a systematic way; most Governments had established their own co-ordinating bodies and did not require United Nations support. However, there were examples of resident co-ordinators playing effective roles, particularly in connection with disaster relief.

Latin America and the Caribbean

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes in Latin America and the Caribbean in 1985,<sup>(21)</sup> the Administrator said that in reviewing the country programmes for Barbados, Belize, the Cayman Islands, Cuba, El Salvador, Paraguay, and Trinidad and Tobago, and the regional programme, an attempt was made to illustrate varying conditions in which programmes were being implemented. The implementation rate was high and no major carry-over was foreseen for the fourth cycle. Programme and project cost-sharing resources were significant, with commitments reaching $19.7 million for the above programmes.

The principal characteristic of the regional programme was its coverage of objectives and sectors. During the period 1982-1986, 131 projects were implemented. Governments were aware that UNDP country programmes were an invaluable instrument for dealing with their economic difficulties and recapturing the pace of development.

In his report on country-level co-ordination of external technical co-operation,<sup>(17)</sup> the Administrator said that several resident co-ordinators had reported initiatives by Governments in requesting UNDP assistance to co-ordinate all technical co-operation, while others indicated that some weaknesses in the Governments' capacity to perform those functions were being corrected. A wide range of models for co-ordination were used in the region: formal structured mechanisms were used in one subregion, while informal ad hoc consultations took place in others. The support role played by many resident co-ordinators could be enhanced through periodic meetings of the entire donor community in the country and by strengthening co-ordination mechanisms in the host country. A model of co-ordination in the region was the Consultative Group for Economic Development in the Caribbean, for which UNDP provided support in the co-ordination of all technical co-operation and which was a full partner with the major donor institutions in all key phases of the co-ordination process.

Resource constraints had led to the involvement of resident co-ordinators in a variety of activities and approaches to assist Governments in mobilizing resources (most of which was realized through cost-sharing arrangements with UNDP), an approach that facilitated integration with the UNDP country programme. The United Nations system had been requested to support Governments in strengthening specific units of their planning institutions. UNDP and other United Nations organizations had become more active in training key policy-makers.

On 28 June,<sup>(22)</sup> the Governing Council accepted the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit regarding United Nations technical co-operation in Central America and the Caribbean (see p. 473).

Indicative planning figures

In a May note<sup>(23)</sup> to the Governing Council, the UNDP Administrator said that, in anticipation of a separate independent status for Aruba, the authorities of Aruba had informed him that, as of 1 January 1986, the island would no longer fall under the central Government of the Netherlands Antilles. They requested that he establish a separate illustrative IPF for Aruba as of that date. He informed the Council that he intended to do so by apportioning to Aruba $570,000 of the $1.5 million illustrative IPF for the Netherlands Antilles for 1982-1986; a separate IPF would also be calculated for the fourth programming cycle.

At the special February meeting of the Governing Council on preparations for the fourth programming cycle (see p. 473), the Administrator circulated a 19 February communication<sup>(24)</sup> from the Acting President of the United Nations Council for Namibia addressed to the Governing Council's President. The Acting President expressed concern that the proposed fourth cycle IPF for Namibia was some $900,000 lower than the third cycle amount. Drawing attention to a number of special circumstances that he felt needed to be taken into consideration when deciding on UNDP resources for Namibia, he appealed to the Governing Council to consider raising Namibia's IPF above that for the third cycle in order to provide comprehensive material assistance to the Namibian people.

On 28 June,<sup>(25)</sup> the Council approved the extension of an experimental arrangement of providing an add-on to IPFs for countries where government-executed projects were in operation (see p. 474); the next day<sup>(26)</sup>, it increased the fourth cycle IPF for Namibia by 50 per cent with up to $3 million more to be provided following submission in 1986 of a report justifying that amount.

UNDP Council action. In a 29 June decision<sup>(26)</sup> on the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991), the UNDP Governing Council approved guidelines and criteria for allocating financial resources to the various programmes: of total resources allocated for IPFs, 19 per cent was to be for intercountry and 81 per cent for country IPFs; within the total IPF resources allocated to intercountry programmes, 79.5 per cent would be allocated to regional and 8 per cent to interregional programmes, and 12.5 per cent to the global programme; an additional $20 million would be allocated to the global programme from the Operational Reserve. Using 1983 per capita gross national product (GNP) as a base, 80 per cent of the amount available for country IPFs was to be allocated to countries with a per capita GNP of up to $750, weighted so as to be more advantageous to those with $375 and below, and the remaining 20 per cent to countries with per capita GNP of above $750, weighted to be advantageous to those between $751 and $1,500. Countries with a per capita GNP of under $3,000, and small island countries with populations of 1 million or less with a per capita GNP between $3,000 and $4,200, would have a fourth cycle supplement, if necessary, to receive no less than 100 per cent of their country IPFs for the third cycle; other countries would receive no less than 80 per cent. Each country with a per capita GNP of above $1,500 would receive an IPF amount not exceeding its third cycle IPF. The Council also indicated the weight ratio (75 to 25) between the basic criteria and supplementary criteria used in computing illustrative country IPFs, and stipulated a cap to limit the amount given for supplementary criteria to 50 per cent of the amount given for basic criteria.

Supplementary criteria were to be applied for countries with specific geographical and economic disadvantages, such as LDCs, land-locked or island developing countries, newly independent countries, front-line States, those whose debt-service payments exceeded 20 per cent of export earnings in 1983, whose current account deficit exceeded 10 per cent of gross domestic product or national income for at least two of the years from 1981 to 1983, or whose terms of trade declined by more than 15 per cent in two of those years.

Countries were urged to increase their voluntary contributions to UNDP. Those with a per capita GNP of between $1,500 and $2,000 were urged to increase gradually their annual regular contributions to reimburse as great a proportion as possible of the UNDP-financed programme. Countries with a 1983 per capita GNP of between $2,000 and $3,000 and the island developing countries mentioned above were asked to do the same to reach from 1987 onwards a ratio of annual contributions of at least 75 per cent of the IPF expenditures, in addition to the cost of the UNDP field office, excluding the cost of the resident representative and the deputy. The Administrator was asked to negotiate with Governments an amendment to the Standard Basic Agreement or similar agreements incorporating measures to ensure contributions equivalent to the annual IPF expenditure and report thereon in 1986.

The Council also decided that: as of 1987, the Administrator should determine the difference between government contributions and the cost of the local office, on the one hand, and, on the other, the IPF delivered plus the cost of the UNDP field office, any deficiency being deducted from the IPF available for the rest of the cycle, beginning in 1989; monitoring should ensure that a country's deficiency never exceed its unspent IPF; and contributions above expenditures paid by UNDP in local currency should be paid in convertible currencies. The Administrator was to report at mid-term on the extent to which the above arrangements were fulfilled.

The Council decided that the IPF for national liberation movements should be increased in the same proportion as the increase for countries with per capita GNP below $750.

To maintain ongoing subregional projects to enhance multi-island co-operation, it allocated $2.5 million. It reconfirmed that 1.24 per cent of fourth cycle resources would be allocated to activities to be financed under Special Programme Resources, to which an additional $20 million would be allocated from resources set aside for increase in the operational Reserve.

The Administrator was requested to keep programme commitments within foreseen resources and, if resources fell short, to make across-the-board percentage reductions.

Other consideration. In July, in the Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee of the Economic and Social Council, Bangladesh, India and Pakistan proposed a draft resolution,<sup>(27)</sup> subsequently withdrawn, by which the Council would have appealed to donor countries and others to increase their contributions to UNDP to the level of a 14 per cent growth rate agreed to in a 1970 consensus and reaffirmed in 1980.<sup>(28)</sup> It would have invited the Governing Council, at the review of UNDP resources in June 1989, to consider the continuing relevance of the supplementary criteria, including the need to make them more scientific and objective to ensure transparency, any increase in which should be distributed across the board in a percentage equal to the increase. It would have asked the Administrator for a report on total administrative and support costs, including the proportion of expenditure devoted to programmes, co-ordination activities and administration.

In October 1985,<sup>(29)</sup> CCSQ(OPS) discussed highlights of the 1985 UNDP Governing Council session, including fourth cycle resources, STAS, the project development facility and the process of round-table meetings.

Co-ordination at the country level

In response to a 1984 Governing Council decision,<sup>(13)</sup> the Administrator submitted to the Council's June 1985 session a report<sup>(17)</sup> on co-ordination of external technical co-operation at the country level. The report reviewed recent international dialogue among donors and recipients about the need to improve the effectiveness of development assistance and to strengthen the substantive foundations and processes which facilitated aid co-ordination. It examined the objectives and conditions for effective co-ordination of technical co-operation and discussed steps taken by UNDP to facilitate and participate in such co-ordination and measures taken by UNDP and resident co-ordinators to assist Governments to formulate programmes and prepare for and conduct consultations essential to effective aid co-ordination.

The report recommended that: all parties engaged in technical co-operation commit themselves to achieving greater aid co-ordination; the Governing Council affirm the central role and responsibilities of the resident co-ordinator in co-ordinating technical co-operation and reaffirm that such co-operation financed from UNDP's core and associated funds should be programmed within the framework of Governments' priorities and national technical co-operation programmes; developing countries be encouraged to establish national plans for priority technical co-operation, with resident co-ordinators providing leadership in assisting Governments to co-ordinate national programmes, with the assistance, upon request, of UNDP and other international agencies in their establishment; consultation arrangements be established for co-ordinating technical co-operation; and the Council advocate consistent support for its co-ordination proposals in international forums and call on the international community to endorse and support UNDP measures to improve co-ordination of technical co-operation.

An addendum to the report contained information on aid co-ordination on a region-by-region basis (see above).

UNDP Council action. By a 28 June decision,<sup>(30)</sup> the Governing Council invited developing countries to ensure the best possible co-ordination of all external technical assistance, including establishing national programmes to identify priority needs, and to strengthen consultative arrangements. Bilateral aid agencies and multilateral organizations were encouraged to align their technical co-operation activities with those needs and Governments were invited to utilize the revised round-table process to attain maximum co-ordination. The Council urged the World Bank and regional development banks to continue their close collaboration with UNDP, especially in country and sectoral analysis and programming and in implementing technical co-operation. UNDP was to be ready to help developing countries strengthen their co-ordination capabilities and Governments were invited to continue co-ordinating national action on operational activities for development. The Council reaffirmed the resident co-ordinator's co-ordination responsibilities and urged United Nations organizations to co-operate with him. The Administrator was requested to report in 1987 on implementation of the decision.

ACC action. At its October session,<sup>(29)</sup> CCSQ(OPS) recognized that co-ordination was not an end in itself but a process designed to help both donors and recipients enhance the cost-effectiveness of external aid. Since aid co-ordination was a prerogative of the recipient countries, the primary contribution of the United Nations system was to strengthen their capacity and commitment. Assistance in formulating a suitable macro-economic and sectoral policy framework and strategy was particularly relevant. Further co-ordination efforts should focus on relieving recipient countries of some of the burden of aid-related procedures. Approaches at the country level should be pragmatic and flexible. The collaboration of bilateral donors was an important element in overall co-ordination efforts, since they accounted for a substantial part of the total aid flow. The Committee felt that there was scope for improving and making more effective use of sectoral and intersectoral inputs. Exchange of information, especially on sectoral programmes and projects, including their future orientation, was particularly important.

The Committee agreed to request its secretariat to describe mechanisms and processes for sectoral and intersectoral co-ordination in use at the country level that might be more widely applied, to provide information on measures taken by the United Nations system to strengthen recipient countries' co-ordination capacities, to explore with the Office of the DIEC Director-General and member organizations ways of pursuing collaboration with bilateral donors to enhance overall co-ordination, and to invite selected members to submit to it an analysis of their own co-ordination mechanisms in various sectors.

The Committee welcomed the draft guidelines for UNDP resident representatives, whereby agencies would be consulted on country programmes and their participation facilitated in the country-programming process, including the provision of funds under IPFs.

The Committee was informed that the UNDP Governing Council in June had reviewed the round-table meetings process in order to improve its effectiveness. Agencies would continue to play a major role in the process, particularly in the preparatory phase and in follow-up. Round-table meetings outside the country concerned would be attended only by major donors. UNCTAD would attend because of its special role in implementing SNPA (see p. 434).

JIU reports

In a February note,<sup>(31)</sup> the UNDP Administrator listed six Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) reports issued since the beginning of 1984 which were of interest to UNDP.

On 28 June,<sup>(22)</sup> the Governing Council took note of that information. It accepted JIU's recommendations on United Nations technical co-operation in Central America and the Caribbean and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon.<sup>(32)</sup> It noted with appreciation the Secretary-General's initiatives (see p. 1013) described in his comments on a 1984 JIU report on drug abuse control activities in the United Nations system,<sup>(33)</sup> and requested the Administrator to co-operate in enhancing system-wide co-ordination of drug abuse control projects and report regularly on UNDP activities in that area.

Programme planning and management

Programme evaluation

The Administrator reported<sup>(1)</sup> that, in 1985, the UNDP Central Evaluation Office concentrated on consolidating UNDP's new evaluation framework while broadening the base of the system. The Office joined in field evaluation activities with regional bureaux, carried out two regional studies on measures to strengthen monitoring and evaluation capacities of Governments and reviewed samples from 236 in-depth project evaluations conducted in 1983 and 1984.

Evaluations carried out in the forestry sector over two and a half years were examined to derive sectoral or programmatic conclusions, and thematic and ex-post evaluations were initiated with interested Governments and agencies.

A significant preliminary conclusion reached was that, as the traditional mix of project inputs and the priorities of technical co-operation changed, evaluation processes would need to evolve. An example was greater use of short-term experts and growing reliance on management by national personnel.

Two other conclusions which emerged echoed earlier findings and referred to the importance of information-sharing between agencies and to institution-building, which needed to be approached as a long-term endeavour. Accordingly, training of operational partners was stressed and, as a first step, UNDP launched a new round of training for its deputy resident representatives.

At its June 1985 session, the Council had before it the second report of the Administrator on evaluation,<sup>(34)</sup> prepared in response to a 1983 Council decision,<sup>(35)</sup> the first report having been submitted in 1984.<sup>(36)</sup> The report dealt with the development of measures taken to strengthen evaluation policies and procedures, and gave details of action being taken to harmonize evaluation and reporting throughout the United Nations system using UNDP's proposed system. The report included a summary of results of recent project evaluations and a status report on thematic and ex-post evaluations in progress. Also included was a section on follow-up action to the evaluation of UNDP-financed technical co-operation activities of UNIDO in manufactures (see Chapter VI of this section).

A separate report was submitted to the Council on an interorganizational assessment of women's participation in development (see Chapter XIX of this section).

ACC consideration. At its October 1985 session,<sup>(29)</sup> CCSQ(OPS) noted that the trial period for the new procedures for monitoring, evaluation and reporting for UNDP-financed projects was under way, with the system's main elements in place at the field level. Training courses for evaluation co-ordinators of UNDP field offices were being conducted in all regions to enable them to deal with operational problems in implementing the revised system and to advise field staff and Governments on appropriate action.

Preparations for the fourth programming cycle

In accordance with a 1984 Governing Council decision,<sup>(36)</sup> a special meeting of the Council on preparations for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991) was held at United Nations Headquarters from 19 to 22 February 1985.

The Council had before it a note by the Administrator<sup>(37)</sup> which presented IPF values for each country/programme based on four different assumptions about resource levels for the fourth cycle. The note discussed that cycle in the perspective of estimated ODA for 1985-1991 and under four alternative resource-growth scenarios. Choices in the use of IPF resources and the proposed use of resources for purposes other than IPFs were also set out. The note's annex comprised statistical tables illustrating the actual IPFs that would result from each of the four resource-level scenarios presented.

UNDP Council action. In a 29 June decision,<sup>(26)</sup> the Governing Council decided to maintain for the fourth cycle a five-year planning period to cover the years 1987-1991. It also decided that World Bank data on population and per capita GNP for 1983, where available, would be used in the calculations; otherwise the best estimates available would be used. For forward planning purposes, an assumed average annual growth of voluntary contributions of at least 8 per cent on a basis of the $700 million target anticipated for 1986 would apply. In 1989 the Council was to review resources, plans and any further indications by contributors, taking into account the perceived needs of recipient countries, and determine whether higher IPFs should be established for the cycle's remaining years. The decision then set out the criteria on the basis of which any higher IPFs should be calculated (see p. 471).

Information activities

In response to a 1984 Governing Council request<sup>(38)</sup> for proposals for strengthening UNDP's Division of Information (DOI), the Administrator submitted in May 1985 a note<sup>(39)</sup> on measures to promote better understanding of the role, activities and resource needs of UNDP. It gave the history of UNDP's information capacity, analysed the nature of UNDP information and means of strengthening it, and described needed additional activities and resources to carry them out.

To increase DOI capacity, the Administrator recommended: the addition of three new Professional posts in New York with related support staff and operations costs and the reclassification of a post to the Professional level; one Professional and one support staff post at Geneva; the continued funding of information support programmes for TCDC and the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (see p. 680) during 1986; the sharing by certain UNDP-associated funds and programmes in the annual costs of a DOI special projects officer to give priority attention to their information needs; and the assignment of junior Professionals supplied by interested donor Governments, for project achievement reporting and other key roles. The 1986-1987 budget for DOI reflected an increase of $856,100 attributable to the proposals.

UNDP Council action. On 28 June,<sup>(40)</sup> the Council approved allocations of $,319,200 from Special Programme Resources for the Decade and $150,000 for TCDC for continued information support in 1986. The Administrator was requested to report with his recommendations in 1986.

Short-term advisory services

In his annual report for 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Administrator noted that the Governing Council had approved in June the establishment on a two-year trial basis of the UNDP short-term advisory services programme (see p. 781) to perform clearing-house functions to help developing countries: meet pressing needs for top-level technical and managerial advice on specific issues, such as immediate production and marketing problems. Drawn from largely untapped commercial and parastatal sectors of donor and developing countries alike, STAS advisers were made available for short-term assignments at minimal cost.

Initially, STAS was focusing its problem-specific assistance on requests from manufacturing, transportation and agro-business sectors in developing countries. Additional sectors would be added as demand grew.

The October meeting of CCSQ(OPS)<sup>(29)</sup> was informed that STAS would not impinge on the traditional role of the agencies, which would not normally deal with the particular types of expertise involved or use its modality of project financing, which was to cover only air fares and living costs.

Government execution

In an April 1985 report,<sup>(41)</sup> the UNDP Administrator reviewed progress in the execution of projects by Governments, with special reference to the add-on arrangement to IPFs approved by the Council in 1982<sup>(42)</sup> for an experimental period ending in June 1985. The report also described measures being taken to assist Governments in project execution and noted the role of United Nations agencies therein.

The Administrator concluded that difficulties related to a Government's ability to administer projects could be overcome with experience and with the assistance of UNDP field offices. He recommended that the role of field offices, and in some cases of the Office of Projects Execution (OPE), in assisting Governments should be strengthened and, in the case of substantive aspects of projects, the role of the specialized agencies should be emphasized at all stages.

The Administrator stated that the experimental period for the use of the add-on was not long enough to gain the necessary experience and requested the Council to extend the period. On 28

June,<sup>(25)</sup> the Council approved an extension until 31 December 1987 and requested the Administrator to monitor closely the use of the add-on in supporting government execution. The Council further requested that a review and assessment of government execution and the impact of the add-on, including special reference to cost-effectiveness, be presented to it in 1987.

Procurement

In his report on 1985 activities,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator said that during the year the Inter-Agency procurement Services Unit (IAPSU) continued to emphasize standardization and preferential discounts for items of common use for the United Nations system. Technical bulletins facilitated direct ordering of items such as motor vehicles and office equipment, in line with UNDP's policy of delegating procurement to the field. IAPSU expanded its procurement from developing countries, and information on potential suppliers and manufacturers was entered into its computerized data bank for dissemination to participating and executing agencies. Studies had been undertaken on global insurance schemes, investigations were initiated into reducing transportation costs, and a special study was under way on implications of liability and ownership of equipment and related services for agencies acting as sub-contractors mainly under trust-fund arrangements. IAPSU also chaired an inter-agency subgroup, which had unified procurement procedures in a document entitled "Common principles and practices", to be published in the General Business Guide.

By a 29 June decision,<sup>(43)</sup> the Governing Council noted with appreciation efforts to harmonize procurement practices and requested continued co-operation towards uniformity-reflecting common practices in the General Business Guide-and expansion of the geographical distribution of supply sources. The Council requested the Administrator to consult with the agencies on the production of a more specific analysis of replies to the questionnaire on their procurement practices<sup>(44)</sup> and to report orally to it in 1986.

Financing

In his annual review of the financial situation in 1985,<sup>(45)</sup> the Administrator stated that total income was $873 million ($34.8 million higher than forecast) and total expenditures $778.1 million ($51.5 million lower than forecast). As a result, UNDP general resources (previously known as the revenue reserve) increased from $116.5 million at the end of 1984 to $184.4 million at 31 December 1985. Income from voluntary contributions amounted to $662.8 million (lower than the forecast by $25.2 million, mainly due to the underpayment of a $33 million pledge). Miscellaneous income, mainly from placements of funds in short-term financial instruments and adjustments resulting from exchange-rate changes, amounted to $91.3 million, considerably higher than the $25 million forecast, reflecting the higher level of funds available for such investments and the weakening of the United States dollar in the latter part of 1985.

Field programme expenditure in 1985 was $571.7 million, of which $482.1 million represented expenditure against IPFs, $64.7 million against cost-sharing and $25 million against supplementary programmes—$5.3 million under Special Programme Resources, $2.7 million under SIS, $9.6 million under SMF/LDCs and $7.3 million in government cash counterpart funds. The 1985 IPF expenditures ($482.1 million) increased 10.4 per cent over 1984, but short 3.6 per cent of the $500 million forecast. The Administrator initiated in 1985 a joint study with the executing agencies on operational measures which could be taken to improve programme delivery.

In his annual report for 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the Administrator stated that the outlook for supplementary contributions continued to be hopeful, amounting to $137 million in 1985 (see p. 465).

In the aggregate, contributions in 1985 to UNDP central resources, to the special-purpose funds under its administration, and to all cost-sharing and sub-trust fund arrangements amounted to $863.7 million, an increase of 3.5 per cent over the 1984 aggregate total of $834.5 million. Under government cash counterpart funds, expenditures rose by $2.2 million, while under SIS they increased by $900,000. Cost-sharing expenditures dropped by $8.8 million and SMF/LDCs expenditures by $700,000 from 1984 levels. Overall, the net increase in field expenditures in 1985 totalled $39.1 million, a 7.3 per cent advance over 1984.

The value of new projects approved rose by 13.6 per cent compared with 1984, going from $307.26 million to $349.05 million. The total number of new approvals increased by 33.7 per cent, rising from 1,074 in 1984 to 1,436.

Other expenditures from central resources in 1985 were $73 million on agency support costs, $127.7 million on UNDP administrative and programme support costs and $3 million on sectoral support and other field-level costs. A charge of $2.9 million arising from miscellaneous expenditures in previous years was also applied.

Project expenditures by OPE totalled $74.4 million in 1985, a 12.3 per cent increase over 1984. Expenditures from UNDP core funds amounted to approximately $40.2 million, an increase of 12.7 per cent over 1984. Expenditures from other funding sources increased by 28.7 per cent, amounting to some $34.2 million.

The report of the Board of Auditors for 1985<sup>(46)</sup> stated that the total of unexpended resources increased from $223.5 million in 1984 to $318.4 million as at 31 December 1985.

Budgets

Revised 1984-1985 budget

The UNDP Administrator submitted to the Governing Council in May 1985 revised budget estimates for the biennium 1984-1985 and budget estimates for 1986-1987.<sup>(47)</sup> The revised estimates for UNDP core activities amounted to $224.5 million (net), a decrease of approximately $18.9 million compared with appropriations approved in 1984.<sup>(48)</sup> For the biennial budget as a whole, revised estimates amounted to $243.3 million (net) ($318.6 million (gross)), representing a decrease of some $19 million (net) ($14 million (gross)) compared with 1984 appropriations. The revised estimates embodied the introduction of the job classification scheme for both Professional and General Service posts in UNDP (see p. 483).

In its May report<sup>(49)</sup> on the same budget estimates, the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) recommended approval of the revised 1984-1985 estimates proposed by the Administrator, subject to a reservation with regard to implementation of the General Service classification exercise.

UNDP Council action. On 29 June,<sup>(50)</sup> the Governing Council, noting the ACABQ report, approved revised appropriations of $318,552,200 (gross) to finance the 1984-1985 budget, offset by $75,212,100 in income estimates, i.e. $243,340,100 (net). The Administrator was authorized to implement the results of the job classification exercise and the new salary scale for UNDP General Service staff at headquarters at the same time as those for the United Nations (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III). An annex to the decision indicated the resources from which the appropriations were to be allocated.

1986-1987 budget

In his May report<sup>(47)</sup> on budget estimates, the Administrator proposed that the Council appropriate for the 1986-1987 biennium $348.9 million (gross) and $300 million (net). His budgetary proposals included a substantial programme, including 40 posts, to strengthen the operational capability of UNDP in Africa, which depended on the availability of extrabudgetary funding to complement provisions made in the core budget; extrabudgetary contributions pledged in cash or in kind had fallen short by $5.6 million of the projected $8.4 million required.

The Administrator also submitted to the Governing Council a consolidated report<sup>(51)</sup> on 1986-1987 budgetary and extrabudgetary expenditure estimates, which also included a brief description of activities supported.

ACABQ recommended that future budgets contain more precise information on methodology and on estimates for the Division of Management Information Services, including information on new and existing systems. It felt the 40 posts for increasing operational capacity in Africa should remain extrabudgetary and that the shortfall of voluntary contributions should be made up by a reimbursable subvention from the core budget.

Aside from staff costs, ACABQ stated, the most significant increase related to general operating expenses, including the field office network reflecting the programme to strengthen UNDP's operational capability in Africa and the proposed leasing of additional office space at headquarters. Several increases had also been proposed with regard to UNDP non-core units, to which ACABQ had no objection.

Since action was required by the Governing Council in connection with the redeployment of staff to strengthen activities related to Africa, ACABQ was not in a position to recommend specific appropriation amounts.

UNDP Council action. By a 29 June decision,<sup>(52)</sup> the Governing Council approved appropriations of $170,319,100 (gross) ($145,373,100 (net)) to finance the 1986 budget. Of that amount, $3 million was to be for "Africa strengthening" as a subvention to an extrabudgetary account for strengthening field offices there and reimbursed by contributions. United Nations organizations that benefited from those field offices were urged to make resources available-to be treated as a credit to the extrabudgetary account-to strengthen co-ordination and emergency functions in Africa. The Council called on member States to make further pledges to the extrabudgetary account to ensure that UNDP resources were devoted to their primary purpose-technical co-operation-to the maximum extent possible. The Administrator was requested to continue his efforts to secure system-wide co-operation. The Council requested the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) to submit to it in 1986 proposed adjustments to the technical co-operation guidelines endorsed by the Council, to enable DTCD to play a full part in addressing the emergency situation and long-term development needs in Africa. The issue of the closure of the Belgrade (Yugoslavia) field office would be reconsidered in 1986. The Council authorized implementation of the reclassification results for Professional posts effective 1 January 1986. An annex to the decision indicated the resources from which the 1986 budget would be financed.

Review of 1984 financial situation

In an April report,<sup>(53)</sup> the Administrator provided a comprehensive financial review of UNDP-financed activities during 1984 and of the financial position at the end of that year. The report included estimates of anticipated resources and expenditures for 1985 and 1986, and presented information on cost-sharing activities, SMF/LDCs, Special Programme Resources, placement of UNDP funds and the Operational Reserve and the use of accumulated non-convertible currencies. It also provided information on agency support costs, the Reserve for Construction Loans to Governments, and management and other support services.

In accordance with a 1984 Council decision,<sup>(54)</sup> the Administrator, in an addendum to his report, provided information on contributions to and payments from the UNDP system in respect of each participating Government.

By a 29 June decision,<sup>(55)</sup> the Council expressed concern at the decline in programme delivery in recent years, despite the availability of resources, and at the high level of financial holdings by UNDP. It urged the early implementation of measures to improve programme delivery and performance so as to achieve full delivery at the recognized programming targets for the third cycle. The Administrator was requested to report further on cash management. Member States were invited to expedite project-related actions awaiting their approval and concurrence, and Governments were urged to increase voluntary contributions to UNDP and promptly pay their pledges.

Special Programme Resources

The Administrator submitted to the Governing Council in April a report<sup>(56)</sup> proposing an increase in the resources allocated for Special Programme Resources (formerly Programme Reserve). The report traced the background of the programme and provided clarifications and justifications for the proposed increase.

The Administrator recommended that the purposes for which Special Programme Resources for the fourth programming cycle could be used be expanded to cover: assistance for emergency relief and medium-term rehabilitation and reconstruction of areas stricken by natural disasters; financing contingencies, including promotional and certain operational activities of TCDC; financing of a longer-term research and development programme in economic and social development and change; financing assistance for aid co-ordination activities, especially round-table meetings; and financing ex-post evaluation of projects.

On 29 June,<sup>(26)</sup> the Council reconfirmed that 1.24 per cent of total resources during the fourth cycle would be allocated to specific activities to be financed under Special Programme Resources, to which an additional $20 million would be allocated from resources set aside for increase in the Operational Reserve.

UNDP-administered funds

In 1985, six new trust funds were established under the authority of the Administrator on behalf of UNDP. Contributions to those funds received during the year amounted to $8.5 million. Six sub-trust fund arrangements were established on behalf of UNCDF, UNFSTSD and UNSO. The value of those arrangements was approximately $12.6 million.

Total voluntary contributions to the special-purpose funds in 1985 reflected a three-year pattern of decline: in 1983, the funds attracted pledges of $45.5 million; in 1984, $38.6 million; and only $28.58 million in 1985. In contrast, income received by the funds from cost-sharing and sub-trust fund arrangements amounted to about $25.5 million annually for the preceding two years.

In response to a 1984 Council decision,<sup>(57)</sup> the Administrator submitted in 1985 a report<sup>(58)</sup> on the financial structure of the UNDP-administered system. The report described the background of the different funds and programmes administered by UNDP and the types of financial contribution that could be made to them. It also described the concept of co-financing and UNDP's experience with it.

The Administrator noted that the analysis pointed to two complementary developments: the emergence of a wide range of programmes and funds under his authority, and the substantive or co-ordination role UNDP had been required to play in co-financing arrangements in which resources were not channelled centrally through it.

A report<sup>(59)</sup> on trust funds established by the Administrator in 1985 stated that the six trust funds established on behalf of UNDP were the Ethiopia-Italy Programme of Rehabilitation and Development, the UNDP Trust Fund for Support to the Programmes of the Ministry of Planning of Costa Rica, the UNDP Trust Fund for Assistance to the Technical Co-operation Fund between Peru and Argentina to Administer Food Aid, the Australian Development Assistance Bureau/UNDP Programme Trust Fund, the Fund for Assistance to the Centre for the Physically Handicapped (Bamako, Mali), and the Canadian International Development Agency/UNDP Trust Fund for the Caribbean Project Development Facility; two others were established on behalf of UNCDF, three on behalf of UNFSTSD and one on behalf of UNSO.

UNDP Council action. On 29 June,<sup>(60)</sup> the Council requested the Administrator to review current organizational arrangements for his management of funds and propose ways they could be made more effective and efficient. It noted his intention to make available to cost-sharing programmes the interest earned on cost-sharing balances after UNDP programme costs had been met. He was authorized to lower the support-cost reimbursement rate of a project financed by either a trust fund or cost-sharing if the agency concerned was willing to accept a lower rate. The Council recommended that the General Assembly endorse the Administrator's proposals that the Fund of the United Nations for the Development of West Irian, the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency-Residual Assets, the United Nations Relief Operations in Bangladesh and the Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire be formally closed.

By another decision of the same date,<sup>(61)</sup> the Council asked the Administrator to provide information on individual projects financed by trust funds restricted to use in the donor country, and on the status of all trust funds established by him since 1981 that were still financially active.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 40/446 of 17 December, the General Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps for the closure of the Fund for the United Nations Relief Operations in Bangladesh and the Trust Fund Programme for the Republic of Zaire, and to transfer any balances remaining as at 31 December 1985 as add-ons to the UNDP IPFs of the countries concerned.

By decision 40/447 of the same date, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take steps to close, as of 31 December 1985, the Fund of the United Nations for the Development of West Irian and the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency-Residual Assets Fund.

Both decisions were approved without vote in the Assembly as well as in the Second Committee, which recommended them, based on texts submitted by a Committee Vice-Chairman.

Allocations from the Emergency Operation Trust Fund

In accordance with a 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(62)</sup> the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund was liquidated and its remaining balance allocated to other United Nations funds and programmes. By decision 39/458 adopted without vote on 9 April 1985, the Assembly, on the Second Committee's recommendation, took note of the 1984 report<sup>(63)</sup> of the Secretary-General on the liquidation and allocation of the remaining balance.

In October 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly a progress report<sup>(64)</sup> on the subject. He stated that of the funds channelled through UNDP, some $34 million was used to establish the Trust Fund for Countries Afflicted by Famine and Malnutrition. As at 23 September 1985, the Administrator had approved 115 projects in 52 countries for a total value of some $36 million. An amount of $5.9 million was made available to the Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries. The balance of the funds had been transferred to the United Nations Relief and Works Agent for Palestine Refugees in the Near East<sup>(65)</sup> and all monies had been fully disbursed by 31 December 1984.

By decision 40/450 of 17 December 1985, the Assembly, on the Second Committee's recommendation, took note without vote of the Secretary-General's October report. It was orally proposed by the Chairman of the Second Committee, where it had been approved, also without vote.

Sectoral support

In response to a 1984 Governing Council decision,<sup>(48)</sup> the UNDP Administrator submitted in April 1985 a report<sup>(66)</sup> on the current and future development of sectoral support. The report also addressed the question of linkage between sectoral support and sectoral analysis and the need for improvements in the management of the sectoral support programme with smaller agencies. The question of UNDP support to the Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers (SIDFA) programme was postponed pending clarification of UNIDO's future status (see p. 603).

The Administrator recommended continuing allocations from central UNDP resources to smaller agencies for their sectoral support activities with improved management measures, through the fourth cycle. It was suggested that the Council might consider in 1986 the allocation level—in accordance with past practice, that would be approximately one third of the total sectoral support allocation—to be made to the smaller agencies in conjunction with the future of the SIDFA programme.

On 29 June,<sup>(67)</sup> the Governing Council endorsed the Administrator's proposals; it also addressed the question of UNDP support to the SIDFA programme.

Accounts and auditing

Accounts for 1984

The financial statements of UNDP for the year ended 31 December 1984, together with the report of the Board of Auditors, were submitted to the General Assembly in June 1985.<sup>(68)</sup> The statements also covered the trust funds for which the Administrator had responsibility.

The Board noted that the UNDP revenue reserve had increased again in 1984 to $116.5 million from $57.9 million as at 31 December 1983, while IPF expenditures continued to decrease and, as in 1983, fell short of the planned programme delivery targets by some $63 million. Unpaid pledges amounted to $43.2 million at the end of 1985, which compared unfavourably with $13.2 million in 1983. Factors contributing to the decline of expenditures included the strengthening of the United States dollar, cautious development planning in the face of uncertainty over resource availability, and often unfavourable conditions for project programming and delivery due to natural disasters or security-related problems.

Other findings included: a tendency to over-obligate funds, especially for travel; a lack of proper contractual arrangements and justification for temporary assistance; late submission and inadequate formulation of purchase requisitions; lack of consistency in adhering to recommendations and rules on standardization of equipment, on emergency procurement procedures for vehicle spare parts and on contractor-selection procedures for office supply procurement; delay in assessing staff for losses of or damage to UNDP property; the lack of timely reassignment or disposal of equipment of completed projects; problems in respect of title and ownership of rental income, fixing of rent levels and terms of loan reimbursement with regard to housing construction loan agreements with Governments; and shortcomings and deficiencies in basic agreements, preliminary planning and design, day-to-day supervision and follow-up with regard to construction of new United Nations common premises in a country.

In response, the Administration had stated that a joint study with the agencies had been initiated on measures to improve programme delivery, and IPF expenditure estimates for 1985 and 1986 had been revised to reflect more realistic delivery targets. Action had been taken or was planned in response to most of the Board's other recommendations.

Commenting on the Board's findings, ACABQ, in a September 1985 report,<sup>(69)</sup> said it had been informed that $25.5 million of the unpaid contributions had been collected by 30 June 1985. It noted that the UNDP Administrator had initiated measures to improve programme delivery, to update guidelines on contractual arrangements and to resolve the problems regarding loan agreements with Governments. With regard to procurement practices, ACABQ urged the Administration to ensure full compliance with all applicable rules.

By resolution 40/238, the General Assembly in December accepted the financial report, audited financial statements and audit opinion of the Board of Auditors, concurred with ACABQ's observations and comments, and renewed its invitation to the Governing Council to consider each year the remedial action taken by the Administrator in response to the Board's observations and comments.

Audit reports for 1983

In a 4 April note,<sup>(70)</sup> by which he submitted the audit reports of the participating and executing agencies for 1983 relating to funds allocated to them by UNDP, the Administrator stated that he had brought to the attention of the Panel of External Auditors the Council's 1984 decision<sup>(71)</sup> on the need for long-form narrative audit reports. The Panel had observed that the length of an audit report was determined by the size of the account being audited; the expenditures for certain executing agencies for UNDP were not enough for a long-form report to be produced. With regard to audits on the effectiveness of financial management, the Panel recalled that in 1982 it had indicated that the emphasis it placed on effectiveness auditing would be gradually increased and the findings reflected in the audit reports.

The Administrator noted that for 1983 the number and extent of long-form narrative reports from the agencies showed a significant increase and had covered such areas as project formulation, design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation and the results of field investigations of selected projects and programmes.

Included in the note was a brief summary of observations by the auditors and comments on them by the Administrator. As several of those observations related to project monitoring and evaluation systems, the Administrator also briefly noted action by UNDP and the agencies in that regard.

UNDP Council action. By a 29 June decision,<sup>(72)</sup> the Governing Council expressed its appreciation for the increasing emphasis given to long-form narrative audit reports with observations on financial management effectiveness. The Administrator was requested to bring the decision and members' views to the attention of the Panel of External Auditors, to continue to ensure submission of long-form narrative audit reports for every executing agency carrying out a significant volume of UNDP-financed activities, and to include in his comments on the audit reports a summary of the most significant observations in UNDP's and the United Nations' audit reports, as well as comments made and actions taken in response.

Financial regulations

In accordance with a 1984 Governing Council decision,<sup>(71)</sup> the Administrator submitted<sup>(73)</sup> to the Council's Budgetary and Finance Committee for consideration changes proposed in 1981 to the UNDP Financial Regulations, i.e. texts on which consensus was not reached at the 1984 session (mainly dealing with currencies of contributions and their utilization), and the text of two subparagraphs of a 1981 Council decision<sup>(74)</sup> on which consensus had also not been reached. The note also contained the Administrator's proposals that the Council adopt certain UNDP Financial Regulations that were identical, or nearly so, to corresponding old regulations that had remained in effect pending agreement on the new proposals, so long as the new regulations could replace their old counterparts without affecting the substance of the issues still under contention.

On 29 June,<sup>(75)</sup> the Council approved the Administrator's 1981 proposed texts for inclusion in the Financial Regulations in place of the former regulations that had remained in force pending agreement, and decided that the Budgetary and Finance Committee would consider in 1986 a draft text for regulation 4.6, proposing that a voluntary contribution would be deemed usable if previous accumulations of contributions from the donor amounted to less than the contribution itself, as well as other matters on which consensus was not achieved.

Currency exchange rates applicable to UNDP activities

In a June report,<sup>(76)</sup> the Administrator drew the attention of the Governing Council to the fact that UNDP had been involved in recent years in a number of differences with Governments on the question of the rate of exchange to be used for receipts from international organizations. The question typically arose in the context of economic adjustment programmes negotiated with IMF in which two or more exchange rates were authorized for different types of transactions. United Nations policy was that it was entitled to the most favourable legal rate of exchange in a country and that any advantage arising from multiple exchange rates should accrue to it. A dispute had arisen with a Government on UNDP's right to use the "market-determined" rate of exchange rather than the "official" rate, both authorized by the Central Bank, the practical effect being that UNDP was required to sell foreign exchange to the Central Bank at the official rate while having to buy import goods (other than fuel) at the market rate; local cost increases and salary and post allowances had to be adjusted accordingly. Negotiations to resolve the problem had not been successful and UNDP had advised the Government that if a settlement was not reached by 15 July 1985 it would invoke the arbitration procedure provided for in the Standard Basic Assistance Agreement, the basic legal instrument governing development assistance in most countries. UNDP would report further to the Council in 1986.

On 25 June, Somalia, in a statement<sup>(77)</sup> to the Governing Council, said the Arabic version of the Administrator's report had identified it as the country involved and confidential communications between the Secretary-General and Somalia had been leaked to the news media. Somalia wished to clarify its position for balanced understanding of the situation, as follows: the "favourable legal rate" referred to in the 1977 UNDP/Somalia Agreement meant the official rate applicable to international organizations, including UNDP, while the United Nations Office of Legal Affairs insisted that the open market system (applicable to individuals and commercial entities) was the rate to which UNDP was entitled; according to the 1969 Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties,<sup>(78)</sup> agreements should be interpreted in the light of their purpose and content, and the appropriate interpretation of the word "legal" in the light of that purpose could only be the same as "official" as defined by the Central Bank; the functions that UNDP was performing were clearly governmental and not commercial.

On 29 June,<sup>(79)</sup> the Governing Council expressed the hope that further consultations on the issue would be fruitful.

ITU request for additional support-cost reimbursement

On 29 June,<sup>(80)</sup> the Governing Council, having considered information provided by the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) and UNDP concerning ITU's request for additional reimbursement of support costs for activities financed by UNDP, reaffirmed its 1984 decision<sup>(48)</sup> in which it had decided that support-cost reimbursement to executing agencies should be made in accordance with its 1980<sup>(81)</sup> and 1981<sup>(82)</sup> decisions on the subject.

Staff-related matters

Job classification

In his budget estimate report<sup>(47)</sup> for 1984-1985 and 1986-1987, the UNDP Administrator reported on the outcome of a job classification exercise for both Professional and General Service posts in UNDP. The scheme became effective for New York General Service posts in January 1985 and would go into effect for international Professional posts in January 1986. For General Service posts in field duty stations, UNDP was co-operating with the ACC Consultative Committee on Administrative Questions and the International Civil Service Commission in developing common classification standards. In budgetary terms, the total annual impact amounted to an increase of $200,000 for General Service and some $300,000 for Professionals.

In its related report,<sup>(49)</sup> ACABQ stated that, with respect to Professional posts, the Governing Council might wish to consider whether steps should be taken to correct the grading "pyramid", given the decreasing number of lower-level posts. ACABQ noted that new General Service salary scales had been implemented in February 1984 without its prior concurrence, the Secretary-General having implemented the new scale without waiting for the completion of the job classification exercise; the financial implication for UNDP in 1984-1985 was $1.5 million. Since the UNDP job classification exercise was virtually completed, the Council could decide on immediate implementation on an effective date the same as that for the United Nations.

On 29 June,<sup>(50)</sup> the Governing Council authorized the Administrator to implement the results of the job classification exercise and the new salary scale for UNDP General Service staff at headquarters when the results were implemented by the Secretary-General and with the same effective date.

Project personnel

In accordance with a 1983 Governing Council decision,<sup>(83)</sup> the Administrator submitted a report<sup>(84)</sup> in February 1985 on recent trends in the recruitment, cost and utilization of project personnel and other personnel working in development co-operation. The report concluded that the trend towards greater diversification of project personnel categories was intensifying. The United Nations system met many requirements of developing countries through a wide range of approaches which complemented the traditionally recruited experts and consultants. The fastest growing category of UNDP-financed personnel were nationally recruited project personnel. Since their salaries were tied to best prevailing local rates, their cost was much lower than for international recruits without any apparent loss in quality and impact. The UNV programme had become an essential source for middle- and upper-level positions and the Senior Executive Services programme provided retired experts for short-term assignments. TCDC personnel and the scheme for the transfer of knowledge through expatriate nationals (TOKTEN) could become other important sources for high-quality, short-term personnel at low cost. UNFSTD permitted the employment of such personnel in science and technology from private and semi-private sources. Government execution of projects allowed Governments to recruit international personnel at rates they established, but not to exceed United Nations rates.

The Administrator recommended that the Governing Council: endorse his efforts to ensure greater use of the newer categories, such as nationally recruited project personnel; urge all agencies to ensure greater cost-effectiveness by focusing on project design and appraisal and by considering the full range of available personnel; endorse his initiatives to use a new form of operational personnel-type contract to facilitate the return of nationals working abroad; urge donor Governments to adopt flexible policies to meet short-term personnel shortages in the poorest countries; reaffirm the importance of UNV; endorse his efforts to strengthen data-collection systems and remedy problems in connection with implementing project personnel recruitment policies; reiterate that job descriptions for vacancies be widely circulated, including through national sources; and appeal to host Governments to speed up the clearance and government designation processes.

UNDP Council action. By a 28 June decision,<sup>(85)</sup> the Governing Council endorsed the Administrator's initiative to ensure more intensive use of nationally recruited project personnel, TOKTEN and other initiatives mentioned in his report<sup>(84)</sup> with a view to achieving more cost-effectiveness, and endorsed his efforts to use operational assistance contracts facilitating the return of nationals. It urged that particular attention be paid at the project design stage to cost-effectiveness by identifying the most appropriate categories of personnel, taking into account also the potential role of UNV. Agencies were urged to ensure selection and nomination of the most suitable individuals for projects, to circulate job descriptions for vacancies promptly, making full use of national recruitment services, and to submit more than one candidate to Governments for each vacant post. Governments were urged to speed up personnel clearance and adhere to the schedule in assigning their staff. The Council endorsed the Administrator's efforts to improve data collection in order to monitor the quality and impact of categories of personnel and asked for a comparative report in 1987 on these aspects.

ACC consideration. At its October session,<sup>(29)</sup> ACC's CCSQ(OPS) noted the importance of international experts and national counterparts, especially in the context of trends in multilateral technical co-operation. It expressed the view that the basic consideration should be how to enhance cost-effectiveness in meeting projects' objectives through a mix of personnel inputs, rather than cost reduction as such. Noting that UNDP would prepare a comparative analysis of the cost, quality and impact of all categories of project personnel, the Committee suggested that it include qualitative evaluations to facilitate the determination of the optimal mix of project personnel. UNDP agreed to consult with the agencies in preparing the study and report on progress to a future Committee session. It was agreed that the role of national counterparts should be retained in the Committee's 1986 programme of work.

Other administrative matters

Governing Council documentation

In June,<sup>(86)</sup> the UNDP Administrator reported that, in response to a questionnaire to Governing Council members to ascertain the usefulness of documents issued for the 1984 session, 11 respondent countries (Argentina, Australia, Bahrain, Canada, Finland, Hungary, Poland, Saudi Arabia, Tunisia, United Kingdom, United States) agreed that the content and presentation of documents were useful. Most agreed that the frequency of issue was adequate but suggested that detailed reports on activities not receiving policy consideration no longer be issued. All agreed that reports currently written should not be presented orally; oral presentation should be shorter and some documents condensed; no documents were too short; and UNFPA documentation should not be prepared in a different manner in uneven years. Most felt that it was useful to categorize documents as either "main policy" or "support" papers. All except one respondent felt that suggested courses of action should continue to be included. Half felt that the Secretary-General's report on technical co-operation activities should focus on selected aspects in uneven years, and half felt that it should deal in uneven years with a specific theme.

UNDP Council action. By a 28 June decision,<sup>(87)</sup> the Governing Council requested those members that had not done so to respond to the questionnaire, on the basis of which the secretariat would prepare a report for examination in 1986. The Council strongly insisted that the Administrator take decisive action to solve the problems related to the preparation and timely distribution of Council documents and report in 1986 on measures taken, while continuing his efforts to improve the quality, reduce the quantity and accelerate the distribution of documentation.

The Council allocated up to $200,000 per biennium for the editing, translation, typing and production of its documents.

Other technical co-operation

UN programmes

In 1985, the United Nations, mainly through its Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, continued to provide technical assistance to developing countries in the economic and social sectors. In a report<sup>(1)</sup> to the Governing Council, the Secretary-General addressed various policy matters and described the 1985 DTCD technical co-operation programme (see P. 488) and those of other entities of the United Nations Secretariat.

The report stated that in 1985 the United Nations delivered a technical co-operation programme of $273 million, compared to $254 million in 1984, a 7.5 per cent increase. The United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation financed activities totalling some $17 million through DTCD, the regional commissions, the Centre for Human Rights, the Division of Narcotic Drugs, the Office of Legal Affairs, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, UNCTAD, the United Nations Environment Programme and UNIDO. UNDP-financed projects carried out by those entities totalled some $177 million.

DTCD activities

In his report<sup>(1)</sup> on technical co-operation activities, the Secretary-General stated that the work of DTCD in 1985 was characterized by several positive developments: the delivery of $127.2 million in project expenditures, the largest programme since 1981; the elimination of the gap between administrative costs and programme support earnings; and the production of an operating surplus in the overhead account sizeable enough to eliminate much of the previous deficit. Those developments reflected greater mobilization of funds for technical co-operation, increased volume of project budgets available, a substantial improvement in programme delivery, and increased effectiveness in DTCD performance.

During the year, 1,352 projects were executed by DTCD in development planning, natural resources and energy, development administration and finance, statistics, population, ocean economics and technology, and social development and humanitarian affairs. Project expenditures were incurred against budgets of $165 million, giving an implementation rate of 77 per cent compared with 1984 budgets of $140 million, expenditures of $111 million, and an implementation rate of 79 per cent. By source of funds in 1985, expenditures were $87.9 million for UNDP-financed projects (69 per cent of the total), $13.7 million for UNFPA (11 per cent), $14.8 million under trust funds (12 per cent), $7.5 million under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation (6 per cent), and $3.2 million under the United Nations Educational and Training Programme for Southern Africa (UNETSPA).

By geographic area, delivery was $45.2 million for Africa, $36.1 million for Asia and the Pacific, $28.6 million for the Middle East, Mediterranean, European and inter-regional projects, and $17.3 million for the Americas.

By sector, natural resources and energy continued to account for the largest share of the programme: $59.7 million in expenditures (47 per cent); compared with $50 million (45 per cent) in 1984. Development planning was second, representing $21.7 million, or 17 per cent. The most notable change (a 43 per cent increase) was the statistics sector at $17.7 million, compared with $12 million in 1984.

Distribution of expenditures for other sectors was: public administration, $11.8 million; population, $7.1 million; social development, $4.8 million; UNETPSA, $3.2 million; and others, $1.2 million.

During the year, DTCD executed 254 development planning projects in 91 countries and 78 missions were undertaken by interregional advisers. Several new activities were launched, including assistance to Guinea in preparing an economic recovery programme, an umbrella project in Benin covering national accounts, planning and demography, a large planning project in Burkina Faso, including formulation of a macro-economic framework and the establishment of an investment data-bank cell, and the preparation of the first development plan for Zaire. In rural development, particular emphasis was placed on local grass-roots community development and on increasing the participation of women.

Activities in natural resources and energy included 147 minerals projects covering institution-building, general and targeted exploration, rehabilitation of mines, training, planning, mining legislation and contract negotiation, equipment supply and application of computer techniques. In energy, 142 projects were under execution in three main areas: conventional energy; electric power; and new and renewable energy. Assistance in water resources exploration, development and management was provided to 59 developing countries through some 175 field projects. In the sectors of remote sensing, public works and cartography, 68 projects were active and interregional advisers undertook four missions during the year.

DTCD assisted developing countries in public administration, public finance and public enterprises, implementing 179 projects. With regular programme support, it organized workshops and seminars to exchange experiences between developed and developing countries, to formulate guidelines for analysing public administration and finance issues and to implement development administration programmes.

With substantive support from the United Nations Statistical Office, DTCD provided technical co-operation in statistical organization, national accounts, and demographic and social statistics, including population censuses, surveys, civil registration and statistical data processing. There were 180 statistics and data-processing projects in 1985. DTCD executed 98 UNFPA-supported demographic projects, most of which were individual country projects, covering 62 developing countries.

Projects in social aspects of development covered assistance in crime prevention, criminal justice, youth, the aging and the disabled.

DTCD continued to help select and appoint personnel to advise Governments on various aspects of social and economic development; in 1985, 1,128 experts and consultants were appointed, compared with 1,020 in 1984. The Department implemented a total of 3,670 awards for group training, study tours, workshops, seminars and in-service training, as well as for individual fellowships. Fellows and participants from 140 countries were trained in 101 host countries.

UNDP Council action. By a 29 June decision,<sup>(2)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took note of the Secretary-General's report<sup>(3)</sup> on United Nations technical co-operation activities during 1984, commended DTCD for reducing its administrative costs and continuing to improve its procedures, and urged continued efforts to eliminate the deficit in its overhead income account. It reiterated its request that the Secretary-General cluster in a single organizational entity all technical, managerial and operational capabilities related to the Secretariat's technical co-operation activities, in pursuance of a 1977 Assembly resolution<sup>(4)</sup> on restructuring. The Secretary-General was requested to continue to explore and report on measures to increase DTCD's competitiveness as an executing agency. The Council endorsed DTCD's major role in setting in place a Special Action Programme for Africa to improve administrative and managerial capabilities in public administration and finance, for which there was a need for greater resources. It reaffirmed its support for the Department's use of regular programme of technical co-operation financing for country programming and to cover, on a cost-sharing and reimbursable basis, project identification, appraisal and formulation. The Council again requested financial and funding institutions to make full use of DTCD's capabilities and asked the Secretary-General to develop and present to the Council in 1986 an internal implementation strategy based on work already done to strengthen DTCD's capability to deal with issues of women in development. It invited the Department to co-operate fully with UNDP in that respect.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, without vote and on the recommendation of the Second Committee, also took note of the Secretary-General's report<sup>(3)</sup> on United Nations technical cooperation activities during 1984 by decision 40/449 of 17 December 1985. The Second Committee had approved the action on 13 December on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

UN Volunteers

In 1985, the United Nations Volunteers programme experienced sustained growth, with 1,816 established posts and 1,128 volunteers in service at the end of the year, representing an increase of 13 per cent and almost 20 per cent, respectively, over the 1984 figures. There were 118 volunteers en route to their assignments, and nominations for 380 posts were pending clearance by Governments and agencies.

The African region remained the largest recipient of volunteer expertise, absorbing over 52 per cent of the volunteers in service in 1985, according to the Administrator's report<sup>(5)</sup> on 1985 UNV activities. A notable feature of its activities in the region was the implementation of the UNV project on emergency assistance to drought-affected countries in sub-Saharan Africa, which became fully operational in 1985 with 100 per cent of its budget-$1.5 million-committed and an implementation rate of 73 per cent. At year's end, 53 volunteers were in place in 24 African countries, 11 were en route to assignments and 13 awaited Government clearance.

The Asia and Pacific region was the second largest user of volunteers in 1985. As at 31 December, there were 335 volunteers in 26 countries of the region, representing 30 per cent of the total in the field.

UNV's presence in the Latin American region remained modest with 54 volunteers, although the number of recipient countries increased to 14. Nearly half of the volunteers were serving in Jamaica, mainly in the health sector.

There were over 150 volunteers assigned to projects and programmes in the Arab States and the Middle East region, with Somalia and Yemen absorbing over half of them. A regional project on assistance to LDCs in the Arab States, with activities in agriculture, communication, engineering and small-scale industries, became operational in 1985.

UNDP Council action. By a 28 June decision,<sup>(6)</sup> the Governing Council took note of the Administrator's report<sup>(7)</sup> on the UNV programme for 1984 and noted the progress achieved in assisting the most severely affected African countries in effectively utilizing emergency relief assistance through volunteers. It urged the Administrator to provide such volunteers beyond the duration of the regional emergency project approved by the Council in 1984,<sup>(8)</sup> and urged donors and all United Nations organizations to consider the advantages of using volunteers when making allocations for emergencies and to increase their use in development projects, including design and preparation. That developing countries had recognized those advantages was manifested by the fact that the highest number of volunteers were serving in development projects since the programme's inception. The Council encouraged recipient Governments and the Administrator to consider allocating increased IPF resources for Domestic Development Service programmes aimed at helping the least advantaged communities participate more actively in their own development.

International Volunteer Day

In his report on 1984 UNV activities,<sup>(7)</sup> the Administrator had suggested that the Governing Council propose that the General Assembly designate 7 December, the anniversary of the date of adoption of the 1970 resolution establishing UNV,<sup>(9)</sup> for the annual observance of an International Volunteer Day.

On 29 June,<sup>(10)</sup> the Council recommended that the Assembly consider the question of designating an International Day for Volunteers for Economic and Social Development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/212, without vote.

International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development

The General Assembly,

Taking note of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the United Nations Volunteers programme, and the relevant decision of the Governing Council,

Considering that volunteer service, including that of the United Nations Volunteers, is making an important contribution to socio-economic development activities,

Recognising the desirability of stimulating the work of all volunteers both in the field and in organizations—multilateral, bilateral or national, non-governmental or government-supported— and of giving encouragement to those volunteers, many of whom engage in volunteer service at considerable personal sacrifice,

1. Invites Governments to observe annually, on 5 December, an International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development, and urges them to take measures to heighten awareness of the important contribution of volunteer service, thereby stimulating more people in all walks of life to offer their services as volunteers, both at home and abroad;

2. Invites also specialized agencies, other organizations of the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations that provide, are affiliated with or benefit from volunteer service to undertake and promote activities to stimulate greater awareness of the contribution to their work made by volunteers;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to promote world-wide publicity on the important role of volunteer service.

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1041) without vote, 9 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.107), based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria, Austria, Benin, Botswana, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Mauritania, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Swaziland, Tunisia, United States, Yemen and Zambia (A/C.2/40/L.68); agenda item 85 (d).
Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 35-37, 39, 40, 44, 49; plenary 120.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

In his annual report for 1985,<sup>(11)</sup> the Administrator said that considerable progress was registered during the year in operating and expanding the TCDC Information Referral System (INRES), which had launched its computerized inquiry service in 1984.<sup>(12)</sup> By the end of 1985, the INRES data bank contained information on more than 2,400 institutions in 101 developing countries. INRES processed 460 queries from 76 developing countries and international organizations, with each search resulting in the referral of about 20 to 50 developing-country institutions to would-be users in other developing countries.

In order to put INRES data to more effective use, the UNDP Special Unit for TCDC began reviewing projects at the formulation stage in order to identify institutions in other developing countries with the potential to assist in their implementation. In each of 45 selected developing countries, between 50 and 100 institutions were referred to resident representatives for review with host Governments and executing agencies to pinpoint sources of expertise or training relevant to 160 projects. The Special Unit continued to assist various action-oriented TCDC activities in developing countries and, by the end of 1985, 203 such activities at a cost of some $1.6 million had been supported: 49 in Africa; 26 in Asia and the Pacific; 16 in the Arab States; 9 in Europe; and 103 in Latin America and the Caribbean. The number of countries using TCDC modalities in implementing their IPF-financed projects increased from 17 to 19, with the umbrella project approach—under which multiple TCDC activities were covered by a single project—remaining the preferred modality.

Action by the Committee on TCDC. The fourth session of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries was held in New York from 28 May to 3 June and on 5 June 1985.<sup>(13)</sup>

The Committee had before it a report<sup>(14)</sup> by the Administrator on progress in implementing the tasks entrusted to the United Nations development system by the 1978 Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing TCDC.<sup>(15)</sup> The report, which covered the period 1 November 1982 to 31 October 1984, contained information from 22 United Nations agencies and organizations on their activities in promoting TCDC and on the number of activities and financial support they provided for operational TCDC activities. Twelve of the organizations reported 197 TCDC promotional activities at some $28.4 million in expenditure. Support for 253 activities of a TCDC operational nature involved $24.1 million.

In a general assessment of experience over the reporting period, the Administrator stated that financial support for TCDC was rather evenly divided between promotional and operational activities. Promotional efforts were concentrated heavily on strengthening institutions and centres with TCDC potential and on linking bodies together in networks and associations. Less support had been required for identifying or formulating individual operational projects as the networks became fully operational and self-sustaining.

Financial constraints were cited as an obstacle to expanding support for TCDC activities. Main sources of finance had been agencies' regular and field programme budgets (39 per cent), UNDP funds (33 per cent) and funds-in-trust and other funds provided by Governments, mainly developed countries (28 per cent).

The Administrator noted that 12 of the 22 respondents had reported providing some $52.6 million for TCDC activities during the biennium, comparable to that of the previous biennium. Closer co-operative arrangements between NGOs and enterprises in different countries should be given more emphasis. Some progress had been made in that area in relation to women's organizations, co-operatives and other grass-roots developmental bodies and private enterprises. Some developing countries were slow in increasing their budget allocations for promoting and supporting TCDC and progress in using country IPFs for TCDC had also been slow. It was suggested that the Committee might wish to receive a short report assessing TCDC activities and information on those of the system.

An addendum to the Administrator's report contained chapters on maximization of use of capacities of developing countries and the problem of the "brain drain".

On 5 June, the Committee adopted eight decisions. By one,<sup>(16)</sup> it urged the United Nations development system to implement fully its decisions on TCDC to attain the goals of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action.<sup>(15)</sup> It called on United Nations organizations to identify more clearly the TCDC dimension in their projects, invited them to consider earmarking more resources for such projects and to make increasing use of equipment, services, experts and consultants available in developing countries, reviewing procurement policies in that regard. The Secretary-General was requested to increase United Nations procurement from those countries by disseminating information on their procurement potential and on procurement practices in the system. The UNDP Administrator was requested to report in 1986 on implementation of the decision and on obstacles faced. The Committee encouraged TOKTEN as a useful experiment, and asked the Administrator to include a review and evaluation of it in a comprehensive progress report on the Buenos Aires Plan of Action to be submitted in 1987.

In another decision,<sup>(17)</sup> the Committee invited developing countries: to strengthen their focal points for TCDC with a view to promoting their TCDC activities in accordance with the 1978 Plan of Action; to review, analyse and transmit information on their TCDC activities annually, preferably by 31 January of the following year, to the Special Unit for TCDC, for preparation of the Administrator's report; to utilize opportunities for TCDC provided by the multilateral institutions set up by developing countries themselves; to make available information on their procurement potential; and to take full advantage of possibilities for financing TCDC activities under UNDP IPFs for the fourth programming cycle. The Council invited developed countries to continue supporting the Buenos Aires Plan of Action, applying the same annual reporting procedure for the Special Unit as the developing countries; their submission would be incorporated into the Committee's 1987 progress report.

By another decision,<sup>(18)</sup> the Committee recommended that the UNDP Governing Council allocate a specified amount on a continued and reliable basis for the fourth programming cycle to meet the increasing needs for promoting action-oriented TCDC activities, and requested the Administrator to report to its 1987 session on progress in implementing the interregional action-oriented TCDC project. By a further decision,<sup>(19)</sup> the Committee approved the provisional agenda for that session.

Other Committee decisions dealt with co-operative exchange of skills, staffing of the Special Unit for TCDC, TCDC activities under IPFs and use of UNDP Special Programme Resources for promoting TCDC.

UNDP Council action. In June,<sup>(20)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took note of the decisions of the High-level Committee and approved the allocation of $1.5 million from Special Programme Resources for the promotion of action-oriented technical co-operation activities among developing countries.

On 29 June, the Council adopted a decision<sup>(21)</sup> on the integration of issues relevant to women into promotional and operational activities for TCDC (see Chapter XIX of this section).

Other action. On 25 July, by decision 1985/186, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the High-level Committee, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee.

In September 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a report<sup>(22)</sup> on economic co-operation among developing countries (ECDC) and TCDC (see p. 427), and to the April-June session of the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination a report<sup>(23)</sup> on the cross-organizational programme analysis of the activities of the United Nations system in ECDC/TCDC (see p. 426).

In a report<sup>(24)</sup> on liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund (see p. 481), the Secretary-General stated that $5,872,009 from the remaining balance of that Fund had been made available to the Trust Fund for Economic and Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries.

JIU report. In September, the Secretary-General submitted to the General Assembly a JIU report<sup>(25)</sup> on United Nations development system support to the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action on TCDC.

JIU stated that, although the Plan of Action had been unanimously endorsed throughout the system, support for TCDC had been uneven. There was insufficient grasp of the TCDC concept and of what made it distinct from "traditional" technical co-operation, or of the distinction between promotional TCDC activities (aimed at strengthening developing countries' capacities to initiate, organize and manage TCDC projects-i.e. workshops, study tours, seminars and training, on which emphasis had heretofore been placed) and operational TCDC activities (involving the actual sharing and exchange of technical resources and skills between two or more developing countries, which had so far received only limited support). While UNDP guidelines properly emphasized the primary role of Governments of developing countries with respect to TCDC projects, they omitted to spell out the supportive catalytic role expected from United Nations organizations in accordance with the recommendations of the Plan of Action. The traditionalist mentality on project delivery and the urge to protect vested interests of technical co-operation constituencies within and outside the system represented a major obstacle to the Plan of Action's implementation and to the effective use of the growing capabilities of developing countries. The lucrative scale of expert remuneration under the traditional system was also a disincentive to applying TCDC techniques, since conditions of service for traditionally recruited experts were far more rewarding than those offered by Governments for TCDC experts. Despite those difficulties, field experience demonstrated that the TCDC concept was a viable and sound method of project delivery.

JIU offered recommendations that: (1) the Buenos Aires Plan of Action should be considered a binding legislative framework for TCDC activities, and governing bodies should address mandates and reporting and accountability requirements for ECDC and TCDC separately and at least every two years consider their organization's TCDC activities as a separate agenda item; (2) in supporting TCDC activities, the United Nations development system should be guided by the three main characteristics of typical TCDC projects-an agreement between two or more developing-country Governments participating in an activity and highlighting specific TCDC techniques to be employed, government execution arrangements with active United Nations participation in project initiation but whose role was limited to identifying solutions, bringing parties together and providing elements not available under TCDC arrangements, and limited United Nations financial support of financing foreign exchange components, such as travel expenses outside the host country or the cost of foreign equipment; (3) the TCDC focal points should be strengthened and the staffing strength of the Special Unit for TCDC should be upgraded; (4) UNDP country, regional, interregional and global programming should be given enhanced TCDC orientation and system-supported institutions should be used increasingly as executing agents of intercountry activities; and (5) no less than 10 per cent of technical co-operation resources should be earmarked for TCDC activities, and UNDP should review its 10 per cent limit on country IPFs for TCDC.

ACC felt that the report was particularly relevant because of its clear and concise summary of the status of mandates and concepts of the system's approach to TCDC, and because the assessment of TCDC and the report's recommendations had already resulted in a useful dialogue on TCDC within the system. Commenting on specific recommendations, ACC said it was in agreement with the thrust of recommendation 1 and noted that many agencies were already following the proposed course of action. The proposals in recommendation 2 were also acceptable. It endorsed recommendation 3, but noted that UNDP was constrained by the need to maintain zero growth in its staffing level. Addressing recommendation 4, ACC felt the most appropriate stage for considering TCDC modalities was during project formulation, rather than during the country programming exercise. As to recommendation 5, ACC felt that isolating TCDC into a separate sub-programme in the budget would be counterproductive to the need to integrate TCDC concepts with all the system's activities, and that the setting of financial quotas for specific activities would be undesirable.

In October,<sup>(26)</sup> ACC approved its comments<sup>(27)</sup> on the report.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/196, without vote.

Technical co-operation among developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling also its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Recalling further its resolution 33/134 of 19 December 1978, in which it endorsed the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries, and its resolutions 34/117 of 14 December 1979 and 35/202 of 16 December 1980 on technical co-operation among developing countries,

Reaffirming that developing countries have the primary responsibility for promoting technical co-operation among themselves, that developed countries and the United Nations system should assist and support such activities, and that in addition the United Nations system should play a prominent role as promoter and catalyst of technical co-operation among developing countries, in accordance with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on economic and technical co-operation among developing countries,

Having considered the report of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries,

Taking note with appreciation of the relevant decisions of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme,

Taking note of the report of the Joint Inspection Unit on United Nations development system support to the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action and the comments of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination thereon,

1. Endorses the decisions of the High-level Committee on the Review of Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries;

2. Invites the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme to give adequate and timely attention, preferably during its special session to be held from 19 to 22 February 1986, to relevant decisions of the High-level Committee, including decision 4/7 of 5 June 1985;

3. Recognizes the necessity for programmes of technical co-operation among developing countries to be fully integrated into the operational activities for development of the United Nations system;

4. Takes note of the recommendations of the Joint Inspection Unit on United Nations development system support to the implementation of the Buenos Aires Plan of Action for Promoting and Implementing Technical Co-operation among Developing Countries;

5. Requests the organizations of the United Nations system to take the necessary action, in their respective fields of activity, to ensure the implementation of the decisions of the High-level Committee;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/196

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.5) without vote, 9 December (meeting 49); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.116), based on informal consultations on draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.86); agenda item 84 (e).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 45, 49; plenary 119.

Allocation from Special Programme Resources

In an April report<sup>(28)</sup> to the High-Level Committee on TCDC, the UNDP Administrator gave an account of the utilization of funds from Special Programme Resources for action-oriented promotional activities for TCDC during 1983-1985. He stated that, following the Governing Council's allocation in 1983 of $600,000,<sup>(29)</sup> he had approved an interregional project on promotion of action-oriented TCDC activities, with the following objectives: to provide direct support at the intercountry level through training and exchange of expertise and to promote the voluntary sharing and exchange of technical resources, skills and capacities through action-oriented TCDC activities; and to provide direct support to all developing countries and territories in strengthening their TCDC capacities and potentials. To accommodate the requests for assistance, the Council in 1984 approved a further allocation of $800,000.<sup>(12)</sup>

As at 15 February 1985, 133 action-oriented TCDC activities estimated at $1.28 million had been or were being financed. By region, 34 activities costing $649,500 were in Africa: 22, costing $173,500, were in Asia and the Pacific; 15, costing $75,500, were in the Arab States; 57, costing $328,900, were in Latin America and the Caribbean; and 5, costing $47,800, were in Europe. By component, $651,000 was requested for experts' services, $611,700 for training and $12,500 for equipment. Sectorally, the bulk of resources was utilized in agriculture, forestry and fisheries, general development issues, policy and planning, natural resources, transport and communications, and industry, while lesser resources were channelled into health, education, and international trade and development finance. Lesser amounts were used in science and technology, culture, social conditions and equity, human settlements and employment.

In addition to the UNDP contribution, which represented mainly the cost of airfare and/or partial or full daily subsistence and stipend, the project mobilized additional resources of some $4.2 million in cash and in kind from the co-operating countries.

The Administrator concluded that the project proved that, once the bottle-neck of scarce foreign exchange for travel, subsistence and equipment had been overcome, the developing countries were willing to contribute human resources, institutions, infrastructure and training to strengthen co-operation among themselves.

Other experiences gained from the project suggested that: UNDP had been able to mobilize resources in the form of expertise and training institutions to further the cause of TCDC; the appropriateness and cost-effectiveness of programming UNDP resources using TCDC in technical assistance programmes was viable; experts and trainees, exchanging experiences in developing countries with similar problems and aspirations, were also acquiring international experience while transferring their skills to the recipient countries; training under TCDC was likely to assist in stemming the brain-drain phenomenon; and the overall outcome of exchanging experts and training nationals among developing countries was a form of human resources facility.

By a 5 June decision,<sup>(30)</sup> the High-level Committee expressed concern that, without additional resources for the interregional project, UNDP promotion of action-oriented activities in support of TCDC for the remaining years of the 1982-1986 third programming cycle would be discontinued. It invited the UNDP Governing Council to consider making available up to $1.5 million to continue funding the project, including the possibility of increasing the interregional IPF by drawing from uncommitted Special Programme Resources. It requested the Administrator to report in 1987 on progress achieved in implementing the interregional project.

By a June decision<sup>(20)</sup> (see p. 490), the Governing Council approved the $1.5 million allocation as suggested by the High-level Committee.

Use of country IPFs for TCDC

At its special meeting on preparations for the fourth programming cycle (New York, 19-22 February 1985), the UNDP Governing Council had before it a report by the Administrator on the possibility of introducing greater flexibility in the use of country IPFs for TCDC activities. The report had been submitted to the Council in 1984<sup>(12)</sup> but was not reviewed at that time. The Council decided<sup>(31)</sup> to refer the matter to the May/June session of the High-level Committee on TCDC.

Transmitting his 1984 report to the High-level Committee in March,<sup>(32)</sup> the Administrator drew attention to two points: the consistency in the Committee's and the Council's position on placing the primary responsibility on the developing countries themselves for financing TCDC activities, with country IPFs being considered as a catalyst and supplementary contribution only; and the conflict between those positions and the Committee's 1983 request<sup>(33)</sup> that the Council allow country IPFs to cover fully the local currency expenditure on TCDC projects financed from those resources. A similar conflict had emerged regarding reimbursement of certain local costs associated with services and materials.

On 5 June,<sup>(34)</sup> the High-level Committee expressed concern that reduced IPFs during the third programming cycle had hampered UNDP's potential contribution to TCDC. It invited the Administrator to keep under review the existing procedures in order to guarantee optimal use of IPFs for TCDC activities during the fourth cycle, recommending that the greatest possible share of resources from IPFs in that cycle be devoted to TCDC projects in keeping with the Buenos Aires Plan of Action. The Administrator was asked to report to the Committee in 1987 on implementation.

Staffing of a Special Unit for TCDC

In an April note<sup>(35)</sup> to the High-level Committee on TCDC, the Administrator stated that, subsequent to a 1984 Governing Council request,<sup>(36)</sup> he had reviewed the staffing level of UNDP's Special Unit for TCDC in the context of the 1986-1987 budget. He had concluded that the essential staff was available in the Unit and did not recommend an increase in its staffing level for 1986-1987.

On 5 June,<sup>(37)</sup> the Committee reiterated its belief that strengthening the Special Unit would allow it to discharge fully its functions in support of TCDC and requested the Administrator to provide adequate staffing support to the Unit and report thereon to the UNDP Governing Council in 1986.

Skilled workers

In accordance with a 1984 UNCTAD Trade and Development Board (TDB) resolution,<sup>(36)</sup> a Meeting of Governmental Experts on Co-operative Exchange of Skills among Developing Countries was held at Geneva from 6 to 15 February 1985.<sup>(38)</sup>

The Meeting reaffirmed the important role of TCDC, particularly the exchange of skills among developing countries as an instrument for promoting ECDC and their general development. Governments were invited to promote the exchange of skills by providing technical assistance. Governments of developing countries were invited to integrate the development of skills in the context of national policy and ensure balance between training and development needs. The Meeting recommended that UNCTAD should contribute to implementing and strengthening a multisectoral information network on TCDC as an instrument for developing countries to exchange information on skills needed and available. It welcomed a proposal in an UNCTAD secretariat report<sup>(39)</sup> on creating or strengthening institutional linkages between national decision-making units concerned with education and manpower planning, and recommended that the UNCTAD Secretary-General be asked to support TCDC activities for establishing and strengthening national mechanisms for TCDC, including the co-operative exchange of skills. The Meeting also stressed the usefulness of a proposal relating to on-the-job training and the exchange of information on education activities which could be undertaken jointly by developing countries, welcomed a proposal calling for promotion of national, regional or interregional developing country-owned and -controlled consultancy agencies and private consulting offices, and stressed their usefulness for strengthening links between specialized agencies in developing countries and co-ordinating their activities. Governments of developing countries were invited to participate at all levels in making arrangements for the exchange of skills and it was recommended that the UNCTAD Secretary-General be asked to strengthen their technical and technological capacity by providing technical assistance. The Meeting recommended that a study be undertaken on the role of TCDC, particularly the exchange of skills in the transfer of technology, and that Governments and UNCTAD should support the accelerated development of the national skills of LDCs and enable them to benefit fully from the exchange of skills. TDB was invited to transmit the Meeting's report to the May/June session of the High-level Committee on TCDC.

On 29 March,<sup>(40)</sup> TDB endorsed the Meeting's agreed conclusions and recommendations and transmitted them to the High-level Committee. On 5 June,<sup>(41)</sup> the Committee expressed its satisfaction concerning those conclusions and recommendations and invited TDB to request the UNCTAD Secretary-General to prepare, in co-operation with United Nations organizations and particularly UNDP, the study mentioned therein for submission to the Committee's 1987 session.

UN Capital Development Fund

In his report on the United Nations Capital Development Fund for 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNDP Administrator described project commitments and expenditures and programme developments, and provided information on the Fund's financial status.

In 1985, total UNCDF project approvals were $37.4 million: $29.2 million for 22 new projects and $8.2 million for grant increases in existing projects. At the beginning of the year, there were 182 ongoing projects totalling $122.4 million in outstanding commitments against general resources. The projects, located in 42 countries, were designed to be implemented by national executing agencies. Project expenditures in 1985 were $27 million and an additional $2 million was disbursed against trust fund and cost-sharing arrangements.

During the year, the Fund directed 54.5 per cent of its resources to LDCs in Africa, 30.6 per cent to Asian countries and the remaining 14.9 per cent to countries in Latin America or the Middle East. It continued to concentrate its assistance in rural areas, with projects in agriculture accounting for 43.4 per cent of total approvals.

The Fund continued to seek complementarity between capital assistance provided by it and other sources of financing, especially UNDP. Of 193 UNCDF-funded projects under way at the end of 1985, 82 were receiving technical assistance financed by UNDP through IPF resources, SMF/LDCs and UNSO. Joint-financing arrangements with bilateral donors or other multilateral agencies accounted for 24 of those projects, as well as a further 21 UNCDF-funded projects.

Contributions received during 1985 against pledges amounted to $21.4 million and an additional $500,000 was received against pledges from 1984 and prior years. Following the Pledging Conference in November 1985 (see p. 463), contributions to UNCDF general resources for 1986 were expected to total $24 million.

UNCDF continued to fund some projects through various joint-financing modalities. New joint-financing agreements for $4 million were concluded, bringing the total of such arrangements since 1981 to $32.1 million. During the year, $7.6 million was paid in against trust fund and cost-sharing arrangements. Two of the trust funds concluded by UNCDF in 1985 had no conditions attached on procurement: Norway agreed to a $1 million untied trust fund for a project in Nicaragua, and Switzerland provided a $1 million fund for one in Bhutan. UNCDF also negotiated one new tied trust fund (conditioned on procurement in the donor country) of $700,000 from Belgium for a project in Mali.

In 1985, UNCDF concluded a cost-sharing agreement with the United States Child Survival Fund under which that Fund would provide $660,000 for two projects in Somalia. It also obtained $700,000 for a portion of two water-development projects in drought-affected areas of Africa from the UNDP Trust Fund for Developing Countries Afflicted by Drought, Famine and Malnutrition.

UNDP Council action. The Administrator submitted a report on 1984 UNCDF activities<sup>(2)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council in 1985. On 28 June,<sup>(3)</sup> the Council took note of it, noted the increase in project approvals made possible by joint-financing arrangements and noted especially the increased programme delivery. The Council agreed with the activation for a trial period of three years of a concessional loan facility for revenue-producing projects, requested the Administrator to keep it informed of such loan operations and their impact on the Fund's portfolio and resources, and decided to review the issue in 1988. It noted the emphasis being given to project evaluation activities and feedback to improve project quality, and considered it important that UNCDF views were presented in the round-table process. The Council called on Member States to provide adequate resources to allow the Fund to implement SNPA for LDCs, and encouraged UNCDF to make its programme better known to donors and potential donors.

Chapter III

Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief

The United Nations system continued in 1985 to provide special assistance to countries facing severe economic and financial difficulties and/or requiring aid for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development. Those problems were frequently aggravated by natural or man-made disasters. Many of those countries were among the least developed in the world and some were also geographically handicapped—that is, land-locked or island countries. Of particular concern was the critical economic situation in Africa, compounded by a prolonged drought, accelerating desertification and other disasters. The Secretary-General added his concern for the vast majority of the 30 million Africans who had suffered from an unprecedented drought, and assured that the United Nations would continue to play a central role in international humanitarian co-operation (see p. 11).

To deal more effectively with the situation, the Secretary-General established a United Nations Office for Emergency Operations in Africa (OEOA)—effective 1 January 1985—to co-ordinate and provide assistance to help ensure a broad yet concentrated international response to the continuing drought-related crisis in sub-Saharan Africa. In March, he convened, at Geneva, an International Conference on the Emergency Situation in Africa, followed by consultations in order to direct the general commitments made at the Conference to specific needs of individual countries.

Addressing the economic crisis in sub-Saharan Africa, the Committee for Development Planning (CDP), which met in New York in April 1985 (see p. 410), called on the international community to supplement the policy reform efforts of African Governments in order to rehabilitate seriously affected African countries and resume their economic growth. The Committee stressed that international assistance was crucial and urgent in sub-Saharan Africa.

The Economic and Social Council, in a July resolution on the critical economic situation in Africa, appealed to the international community for assistance (1985/80), and the General Assembly in December called for more effective special programmes of economic assistance (resolution 40/236), and dealt with the African crisis (40/40) and special economic assistance to Benin (40/222), Cape Verde (40/226), the Central African Republic (40/217), Chad (40/218), the Comoros

(40/223), Djibouti (40/227), Equatorial Guinea (40/216), the Gambia (40/224), Guinea (40/235), Guinea-Bissau (40/225), Mauritania (40/219), Mozambique (40/232) and Sierra Leone (40/220).

Economic assistance also continued for several countries in other regions. The Assembly adopted a decision on special assistance to Bolivia (40/452), and, by resolution 40/215, it requested the Secretary-General to continue mobilizing assistance to Democratic Yemen to help it overcome the damage caused by floods in 1981 and 1982. By resolution 40/234, it urged continued contributions to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua. Following a conclusion by CDP, the Assembly, by resolution 40/233, included Vanuatu in the list of least developed countries (LDCs). To assess economic assistance needs, the Secretary-General arranged during the year for review missions to Haiti, Kiribati and Tuvalu.

The United Nations system, particularly the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO), continued to respond to emergency situations arising from natural disasters. UNDRO also promoted the study, prevention, control and prediction of natural disasters and provided Governments with assistance in pre-disaster planning. The Assembly called for assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda (resolution 40/221), as well as to Ethiopia alone (40/228) following a request by the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1985/1) that the Secretary-General continue efforts to mobilize resources for the drought victims there.

In the wake of cyclones in Bangladesh, the Assembly, in resolution 40/231, requested assistance to the country. Continuation of efforts to mitigate the damage caused previously by cyclones and floods in Madagascar was requested by Assembly resolution 40/230. Two earthquakes in September 1985 caused considerable destruction in Mexico, and the Assembly, by resolution 40/1, called for generous international relief. Assistance to Colombia, which suffered severe damage from a volcanic eruption in November, was called for by resolution 40/13.

Emergency humanitarian assistance and assistance for reconstruction and development continued to be provided to Lebanon, despite the lack of security which hampered United Nations efforts. Both the Council and the Assembly (resolutions 1985/56 and 40/229, respectively) called for continued assistance.

Economic assistance

In 1985, the United Nations continued to mobilize special economic assistance for a number of countries identified by the General Assembly as facing severe economic situations. While each country presented a unique set of problems, all of them shared a number of factors. Of the 24 countries benefiting from special economic assistance programmes, 15 were among the least developed, 7 were island developing countries, 5 were land-locked and 4 were also among those most affected by the drought-induced emergency in Africa. All countries had fragile economies which had been subjected to the external shocks experienced by developing countries in recent years. National economic policies had in some cases contributed to their precarious situation, but it appeared that the Governments concerned were fully aware of the need to review prior policies and make necessary changes.

The Assembly, in 1983 and 1984, had requested the Secretary-General to report in 1985 on the economic situation and on the progress made in organizing and implementing special economic assistance programmes. Each of the countries concerned was asked whether it would wish the report to be based on the findings of a review mission that would visit the country or whether it would prefer to provide information that would constitute the basis of a brief interim report to the Assembly. Sixteen of the countries concerned chose the latter; as of 12 August 1985, 14 had provided such information. Accordingly, the Secretary-General submitted in September<sup>(1)</sup> summary reports for Benin, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, the Comoros, Djibouti, the Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Lesotho, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Swaziland and Vanuatu, addressing the main developments in the respective economies and the status of the special economic assistance programmes.

In another September report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General described United Nations assistance to 23 countries: Benin, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Kiribati, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Swaziland, Tuvalu, Uganda, Vanuatu. The report was based on information from United Nations bodies that had provided technical and other forms of assistance (Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD), OEOA, UNCTAD, UNDP, UNDRO, UNFPA, UNHCR, UNICEF, UNIDO, WFC, WFP) and from specialized agencies such as ILO, FAO, UNESCO, the World Bank, IMF, ICAO, UPU, ITU, WMO, IMO, WIPO and IFAD. (See below for details on individual countries.)

Summaries of special economic assistance for various countries in 1985 were also given in later reports by the Secretary-General.<sup>(3,4)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, adopted resolution 40/236 without vote.

Special programmes of economic assistance

The General Assembly,

Reaffirming the need for the international community to respond to the needs of countries facing special economic problems,

Recognizing that, owing to their diverse nature, those problems require special and prompt responses,

Recognizing also the need for an adequate response by the international community to the specific measures identified in the special programmes of economic assistance, as well as the need for enhanced co-ordination within the United Nations system in that regard,

Taking into account the views expressed in the Second Committee on the rationalization of the work of the Committee,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986, on ways and means of enhancing efficiency and effectiveness in the implementation of decisions taken by intergovernmental bodies regarding the special programmes of economic assistance, including the mobilization of the resources necessary for the implementation of those programmes, taking into account available information provided by Governments and the related activities undertaken by the bodies of the United Nations system;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to include in his report recommendations regarding the consideration of special programmes of economic assistance in the appropriate intergovernmental bodies.

General Assembly resolution 40/236

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 9 December (meeting 49); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.106), based on informal consultations; agenda item 87.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 31-34, 41-45, 47-49; plenary 120.

Africa and the critical economic situation

In 1985, the economic and social situation in Africa deteriorated. The devastating drought which had plagued some countries for the preceding three years persisted, even though it had abated to some degree in parts of western and southern Africa and in limited areas of eastern Africa. Population displacement became alarming. Out of the 150 million people living in drought-stricken countries, some 30 million were seriously affected, and it was estimated that over 10 million had had to abandon homes and lands in search of food, water and pasture for their herds.

In response to a 1984 resolution by which the General Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted a report in June/July 1985<sup>(6)</sup> which gave an overview of the situation with the objective of proposing action that would facilitate long-term development and economic growth in Africa and, at the same time, pursue effective action for relief and recovery, both for humanitarian and economic reasons.

The Secretary-General pointed out that since 1980 most African countries had sought to address the economic problems confronting them, and over the past three years had made some adjustments, often supported by financial assistance from IMF and the World Bank. To deal with their current accounts deficit, most countries in sub-Saharan Africa had had to curtail the import of capital goods, raw materials and spare parts, and some had had to devalue their currency. In many cases, arrangements were sought through the "Paris Club" (an informal group of officials from 16 industrialized nations who meet regularly on overdue loans owed by developing countries) to reschedule foreign debts by consolidating short-term liabilities and reducing debt service, which resulted in a decline of the current account deficit in Africa from $25 billion in 1981-1982 to $11 billion in 1984. Domestic efforts were also undertaken to restore internal balance, but all those measures to restore internal and external balances were carried out at a high economic and social cost and resulted in a decline in growth.

To provide the necessary financial assistance to African countries undertaking policy reforms, the World Bank established a special facility for Africa which, with initial resources of $1.1 billion, became operational in July 1985. Other funding organizations of the United Nations system also took action to support development efforts of concerned countries, and many donor countries increased their development assistance to sub-Saharan Africa. None the less, there had been a reduction in net financial flows to that area over the previous three years due to a drop in private capital flows and repayment of loans, which weighed on the capacity of most African countries to finance their development.

The Secretary-General stressed that the coming five years would be crucial for sub-Saharan Africa which was faced with the double challenge of economic problems and severe drought; he felt that there was a need for more vigorous action to consolidate the response to the emergency situation and to relaunch the development process. Although there might appear to be a conflict between measures to deal with the emergency and the need to concentrate on activities for relaunching economic development, the two kinds of action were closely interrelated. The emergency was a result of both drought and economic hardships; dealing with it consisted not only of responding to famine problems but also of providing the foundation for resuming economic progress. The emergency situation was not a problem with solely a humanitarian dimension; the path towards resumption of growth and development passed through the solution of emergency problems.

The task of improving Africa's economic performance and building a better future for Africans was the prime responsibility of the Governments and peoples of Africa, the Secretary-General concluded, but the international community had the responsibility to help; it had committed itself to that task by adopting the 1984 Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa.

In June 1985,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council a Second Special Memorandum by the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) Conference of Ministers on International Action for Relaunching the Initiative for Long-term Development and Economic Growth in Africa. The Memorandum was adopted by ECA at its twentieth session (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 25-29 April) (see p. 625). A first Special Memorandum on Africa's Economic and Social Crisis had been submitted in 1984.<sup>(8)</sup> The Ministers responsible for economic development and planning addressed for the second year the current crisis and its causes; the long-term measures for structural changes in the African economy along the lines of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and the Final Act of Lagos, both adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1980;<sup>(9)</sup> and international action for development and economic growth in Africa, supported by regional and subregional action.

An International Conference on the Emergency Situation in Africa (Geneva, 11 March 1985)<sup>(10)</sup> was convened by the Secretary-General, who had launched an appeal for an additional $1.5 billion needed urgently to meet the requirements of 20 drought-stricken African countries—Angola, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cape Verde, Chad, Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, the Niger, Rwanda, Senegal, Somalia, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Those requirements had been assessed by OEOA, which stated that the survival of some 30 million Africans was at risk.

The Conference affirmed the commitment of the international community to co-operate with and support the Governments and peoples of Africa affected by drought and famine. Priority continued to be accorded to identifying urgent human needs, monitoring and bringing them to the donors' attention, mobilizing additional resources and ensuring the delivery of emergency assistance on a timely basis in collaboration with the affected countries.

The Conference also affirmed the important role of the United Nations in addressing the emergency, co-ordinated through OEOA. It emphasized that concrete measures had to be taken to alleviate the emergency in order to facilitate the recovery, rehabilitation and long-term development of affected countries.

In a report on the activities of UNDRO<sup>(11)</sup> between 1 January 1984 and 31 December 1985, the Secretary-General reviewed efforts made to strengthen the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to disasters. He recalled that, during 1984-1985, UNDRO had been involved in some 98 disaster situations, a large number of which were major disasters calling for concerted relief programmes, within the framework of which bilateral donors, the United Nations system and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) provided assistance. Among those major disasters were tropical storms in Bangladesh, Madagascar, Mozambique and the Philippines; armed conflict in Lebanon (see p. 294); displaced persons in western Africa (see p. 1004); epidemics in Mali and Somalia; earthquakes in Mexico; a volcanic eruption in Colombia; and drought in Chad, Ethiopia, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, the Niger and the Sudan (see p. 805).

Referring to the unprecedented famine in Africa, the Secretary-General said that either partial or complete absence of seasonal rainfall, together with the deterioration of land through years of overgrazing and insufficient capital for agricultural inputs, had resulted in widespread crop failure and food shortages. Even before the establishment of OEOA, UNDRO was involved in 8 of the 20 drought-stricken African countries at their request. Massive humanitarian efforts were called for and put into operation by the world community, resulting in a major increase in contributions to UNDRO which amounted to over $2,149 million in 1984-1985, as compared to $700 million and $370 million in 1982-1983 and 1980-1981, respectively.

The twenty-first ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU (Addis Ababa, 18-20 July) adopted three declarations and a series of resolutions which were transmitted to the Secretary-General by Madagascar on 18 September 1985.<sup>(12)</sup> By one declaration, the Assembly called on developed donor countries to implement urgently the 1984 General Assembly resolution on the critical economic situation in Africa,<sup>(5)</sup> asking for total or partial conversion of official development assistance (ODA) debts into grants. Annexed to the declaration was Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990. The Assembly also called for an international conference to provide a forum for international creditors and African borrowers to discuss Africa's external debt with a view to arriving at emergency, short-, medium- and long-term solutions. By a resolution on the African economic situation, the OAU Assembly requested a special session of the General Assembly and asked the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the ECA Executive Secretary, to initiate the necessary preparations. In another resolution, on its Special Emergency Assistance Fund for Drought and Famine in Africa, the OAU Assembly expressed appreciation to member States and non-African Governments which had made or pledged contributions and appealed to others for generous contributions.

The critical situation in Africa was also discussed by the Joint United Nations Information Committee (JUNIC), responsible for co-ordinating information activities in the United Nations system (twelfth session, Rome, Italy, 16-19 April 1985).<sup>(13)</sup> JUNIC, reviewing efforts made to present the situation, agreed that certain themes should guide future work so that coherence of action was ensured. Information materials should present the emergency situation in the context of Africa's overall development needs, which, in turn, should be presented within the context of the international economic situation. JUNIC also stressed the importance of encouraging information which would provide a balance by emphasizing Africa's own self-help actions and presenting Africa's views on the nature of the crisis and possible solutions.

ACC and CPC activities. Reviewing the critical economic situation in Africa, the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC), at its April 1985 session,<sup>(14)</sup> adopted a decision<sup>(15)</sup> expressing appreciation to the Secretary-General for his initiative and actions taken for relief efforts in Africa through OEOA, and expressing support for all efforts by United Nations organizations. It reaffirmed its commitment towards a concerted response commensurate with the magnitude and gravity of the problem in respect of both its emergency and longer-term aspects. It decided that a drafting group under the chairmanship of Maurice F. Strong be convened on 24 April to prepare an outline of a background paper on the effectiveness and co-ordination of United Nations organs and agencies with regard to relief efforts in Africa.

The Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) of ACC discussed at its October session<sup>(16)</sup> the links between emergency relief, rehabilitation and longer-term development activities, with emphasis on the food crisis in Africa. The Committee was addressed by Mr. Strong in his capacity as Chairman of the Working Group on Emergency-Development Linkages set up by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. It agreed that the Secretariat would submit a report in 1986 for possible recommendations to ACC on specific aspects of the Africa crisis.

At their July 1985 Joint Meetings (see Chapter XXIV of this section), the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination and ACC also discussed the effectiveness and co-ordination of United Nations organs and agencies in relief efforts in Africa.

UNDP activities. The Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), in his report for 1985,<sup>(17)</sup> described steps taken by UNDP to alleviate the crisis in Africa. As social and economic conditions remained critical and affected the recovery pace of many African countries, UNDP continued supporting immediate relief and rehabilitation measures while at the same time assisting Governments to address the issues underlying the crisis and sustain more durable, comprehensive and integrated solutions.

Aid co-ordination and specific inter-agency collaborative activities with other United Nations agencies—especially WFP, UNICEF and UNFPA—were among UNDP priority undertakings. Aware that co-ordinated action by all development partners was essential in assisting countries of the region, UNDP initiated in 1985 several measures to link the funds it programmed in sub-Saharan Africa to other resource flows, among them: supplementary guidelines for the preparation of new country programmes; support for activities aimed at building national capabilities in co-ordinating technical and capital assistance; and actions to evolve new mechanisms by which Governments could assess, identify and rank their most important technical co-operation requirements. Factors contributing to low rates of resource commitment and programme implementation in some 15 countries were reviewed to identify remedial measures.

In 1985, the United Nations Volunteers (UNV) programme launched its Domestic Development Services (DDS) and youth activities in Africa with the fielding of volunteers in Rwanda and Zambia and the endorsement of UNV-executed regional DDS and youth projects by 14 African countries. In addition, through a special allocation of $1.5 million, volunteers were recruited to enable the 24 countries most affected by the drought to participate in emergency relief aid operations mounted by both bilateral and multilateral donor agencies.

The UNDP Administrator, in a March 1985 report,<sup>(18)</sup> described programmes of assistance to 10 countries. In 1984, the General Assembly had invited UNDP and other United Nations organizations to bring to the attention of their governing bodies the specific needs of Benin,<sup>(19)</sup> Cape Verde,<sup>(20)</sup> the Central African Republic,<sup>(21)</sup> the Gambia,<sup>(22)</sup> Guinea,<sup>(23)</sup> Guinea-Bissau,<sup>(24)</sup> Lesotho,<sup>(25)</sup> Sierra Leone,<sup>(26)</sup> Uganda<sup>(27)</sup> and Vanuatu.<sup>(28)</sup>

In a report on implementation of selected country programmes,<sup>(29)</sup> the Administrator provided an overview of UNDP activities in Africa. As of December 1985, there were 45 approved assistance programmes in 42 countries, including special programmes to Namibia and national liberation movements recognized by OAU, and an intercountry (regional) programme. For 1982-1986, some $1.2 billion of programmable resources was available through UNDP, in addition to other resources through funds under the Administrator-the United Nations Capital Development Fund, the United Nations Sudano-Saharan Office and the United Nations Financing System for Science and Technology for Development. Of the total programmable resources for that period, $1.1 billion (91 per cent) had been committed to approved projects by the end of 1985.

The Trust Fund to Combat Poverty and Hunger in Africa was established by the Administrator in November 1984. The Fund, which in 1985 totalled $569,180, was to be utilized to finance technical and/or capital assistance projects designed to combat poverty and hunger in Africa. By the end of 1985, the Fund had an excess of expenditures over income of $19,581.

In a report on United Nations technical co-operation activities for 1985,<sup>(30)</sup> the Secretary-General said the African crisis called for national efforts as well as international assistance on an unprecedented scale; several 1984 and 1985 UNDP Governing Council decisions on Africa provided the frame for special efforts by DTCD through projects executed on behalf of its funding partners or supported from Regular Programme resources.

To strengthen the response to the crisis in Africa, the Governing Council, on 29 June 1985,<sup>(31)</sup> encouraged the Administrator, in conjunction with recipient Governments and executing agencies, to orient UNDP programmes for the greatest impact on the priority needs of African countries, including assistance for the reinforcement of management capacities and the establishment of national strategies for rehabilitation, reconstruction and development. The Council requested the Administrator to ensure that all UNDP programmes played a supportive role vis-à-vis OEOA and supported his proposals for strengthening the capacity of field offices in sub-Saharan Africa.

Communications. Saudi Arabia, in communications of 31 January<sup>(32)</sup> and 7 June 1985<sup>(33)</sup> to the Secretary-General, outlined the assistance it was providing to drought-stricken African countries. On 17 May,<sup>(34)</sup> India transmitted a Plan of Action to meet the critical economic situation in Africa, adopted at an Extraordinary Ministerial Meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of Non-Aligned Countries on the question of Namibia (New Delhi, 19-21 April), and two reports of the Action Committee of the Co-ordinating Bureau on the situation in Africa. Both Senegal, on 22 July 1985,<sup>(35)</sup> and Madagascar, on 18 September,<sup>(12)</sup> forwarded the Declaration on the Economic Situation in Africa adopted by the OAU Assembly of Heads of State and Government in July (see p. 499). The Federal Republic of Germany, on 3 October,<sup>(36)</sup> submitted a report by a group of experts on aid to Africa, appointed by the "Bonn Economic Summit" (Bonn, 2-4 May) of the heads of State of seven industrialized nations (Canada, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, United Kingdom, United States); the report was issued at Bonn on 30 September after its adoption in New York on 25 September by the Summit participants.

On 17 October,<sup>(37)</sup> Egypt, as Chairman of the Group of 77, transmitted a declaration of the Ministers for Foreign Affairs of the Group of 77 (ninth annual meeting, New York, 2-4 October), who expressed grave concern at the continuing deterioration of the economic and social situation in Africa, further exacerbated by famine, drought and desertification, which endangered the lives of millions of Africans.

On 5 November,<sup>(38)</sup> Kuwait forwarded a document on its contributions to a number of African countries since January 1984. The USSR transmitted on 20 November 1985<sup>(39)</sup> a document describing its economic co-operation with developing countries, including aid to African countries.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By a 21 June letter<sup>(40)</sup> to members of the Economic and Social Council, the Council President set out a possible framework for discussions to be held at the Council's July session regarding a review of the immediate and longer-term aspects of the critical economic situation in Africa and the follow-up of the response by the international community and the United Nations system.

On 26 July, the Council adopted resolution 1985/80 by consensus.

Critical economic situation in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa adopted by the General Assembly in its resolution 39/29 of 3 December 1984,

Gravely concerned at the continuing critical economic situation in Africa, which has been exacerbated by the unfavourable international economic environment,

Recognizing the impact of drought and desertification, and environmental and demographic factors on the critical economic situation,

Expressing its appreciation of the efforts and generous contributions of the international community—Governments, organizations of the United Nations system, the general public, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations—in response to the emergency situation,

Welcoming all the initiatives undertaken by the Secretary-General in this connection,

Welcoming the resolve of African heads of State and Government and peoples to address in a coherent manner the economic and social problems facing the continent,

Welcoming in this context the declaration and resolutions on the economic situation in Africa, as well as on the Special Emergency Assistance Fund for Drought and Famine in Africa, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 July 1985, which was devoted essentially to economic issues,

Gravely concerned also at the continuing negative effects of the destabilization policy of South Africa on the economies of southern African States,

Considering that the responsibility for the development of Africa lies primarily with African Governments and peoples,

Stressing, however, the need for the international community as a whole to continue to give priority attention to the critical economic situation in Africa and, to that end, to increase its concrete support in addressing the immediate as well as the medium-term and long-term needs for the rehabilitation and sustained development of the African economies,

Concerned that, despite recent efforts undertaken by the donor community, the combined effects of a stagnation, over the past years, of overall official development assistance, higher levels of debt servicing and depressed commodity export earnings have led African countries to experience a negative flow of financial resources,

1. Welcomes the adoption of the priority programme for the economic recovery of Africa (1986-1990) by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session;

2. Welcomes also the high priority that African Governments individually and collectively have accorded to the improvement of the critical food situation in the continent and to the rehabilitation and development of the food and agricultural sector;

3. Strongly urges the international community to intensify its efforts in order to increase substantially the flow of resources—particularly of a concessional character—to Africa and to address in a comprehensive manner the critical problem arising from negative or insufficient flows of resources due, inter alia, to the heavy debt burden and to the depressed commodity export earnings of African countries;

4. Appeals to the international community, in particular donor countries, to extend all necessary support to African regional and subregional institutions engaged in the process of implementation of economic recovery programmes and economic self-reliance for their member countries;

5. Recognizes, moreover, the urgent need to support the rehabilitation and development of the industrial, manufacturing, transport and communications sectors, as well as improved scientific and technological capabilities, health services and human resources development, which are crucial for a sustained and integrated process of development of African countries;

6. Stresses that the international community, while continuing to address the African emergency, should give greater focus to supporting the medium-term and longer-term development actions without which no lasting solutions to the emergency situation can be found;

7. Appreciates and encourages efforts by African Governments to ensure the effectiveness of development assistance by overseeing effective co-ordination and, to this end, stresses the importance of close co-ordination by the United Nations system of assistance provided under its auspices;

8. Appeals to donor countries, international organizations and non-governmental organizations to consider generous contributions to the Special Emergency Assistance Fund for Drought and Famine in Africa to enable affected countries to resist these calamities effectively;

9. Stresses the urgent need for concerted international measures aimed at mitigating the adverse economic effects on the economies of southern African States of destabilizing acts of aggression by South Africa;

10. Fully recognizes the importance of Africa's debt problems and, in this context, takes note of the appeal launched by African heads of State and Government calling for the urgent convening of an international conference on Africa's external debt;

11. Takes note with interest of the decision by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity by which it requested the convening as soon as possible of a special session of the General Assembly to consider the critical economic situation in Africa;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the implementation of the present resolution, through the Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/80

26 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted by consensus

Draft by Vice-President (E/1985/L.58)—based on informal consultations on draft by Algeria, for African Group, and Syrian Arab Republic (E/1985/L.53)—orally revised, withdrawn by Vice-President and reintroduced by Algeria for African Group: agenda item 4.

Meeting numbers. ESC 46-52.

In requesting a vote on paragraph 10 as orally revised, the United States said it wished to study further a number of points. Following the United States request, the Vice-President withdrew the draft resolution, stating that he had no other choice as it seemed not to be possible for the Council to adopt the text by consensus. Algeria resubmitted the draft on behalf of the African Group, saying that if a vote were requested, it would propose that paragraph 10 be replaced by a paragraph of the original draft, by which the Council would have invited the international community to consider favourably the appeal by the African heads of State and Government for the urgent convening of an international conference on Africa's external debt. Algeria stated that the text carried the political message of the recent OAU summit, renewing the expression of Africa's will to assume responsibility for its own destiny and of faith in international co-operation.

In the view of the United States, that stated objective would not be served by the proposed course of action; if the original paragraph were incorporated, the United States would be obliged to vote against it, an action which would rule out the possibility of the Council adopting the text as a whole by consensus.

Speaking also on behalf of the members of the European Economic Community (EEC), Luxembourg expressed the hope that the African Group would give very careful consideration to that point; a return to the original wording would be an obstacle to consensus. Canada saw a danger that the very attempt to achieve a consensus might result in some countries being forced to take up positions they would have preferred to avoid. The Federal Republic of Germany stressed that most of the countries that had difficulties in accepting paragraph 10 were the principal contributors of assistance to Africa.

Following a proposal by India and Pakistan, the Council decided, by 31 votes to 5, with 5 abstentions, to take no action on the United States request for a vote.

Following adoption of the resolution, the United States said the procedure adopted to prevent action on its request was a dangerous precedent; if a vote had been taken on paragraph 10, it would have abstained and it wished its vote against the proposal by India and Pakistan to be considered equivalent to such an abstention. It was convinced that the only productive method of dealing with debt problems was to ensure that they were given careful and expert consideration on a case-by-case basis in such appropriate forums as the Interim Committee of the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the Development Committees of the Fund and the World Bank, and the Paris Club.

Luxembourg declared on behalf of the EEC members that if there had been a vote on paragraph 10, they would not have been able to agree with its content; a constructive dialogue had developed in the competent international bodies, particularly IMF, the World Bank and the Paris Club, where strategies were being worked out for dealing with the debt problems of the African and other developing countries. A similar position was held by Canada.

Expressing its support for paragraph 10, the USSR said it had always co-operated constructively in the solution of the problems facing the peoples of Africa; the socialist countries would continue to provide every assistance to that end. China believed that adoption of the text would enable the momentum to be maintained in providing assistance to Africa.

Also on 26 July, on an oral proposal by its President, the Council, by decision 1985/203, took note of the Secretary-General's report on the critical economic situation in Africa<sup>(6)</sup> and the ECA Second Special Memorandum on International Action for Relaunching the Initiative for Long-term Development and Economic Growth in Africa.<sup>(7)</sup>

On 2 December, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/40.

Critical economic situation in Africa

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/29 of 3 December 1984, and the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa annexed thereto, Noting the Declaration on the Economic Situation in Africa and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, annexed thereto, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 18 to 20 July 1985.

Noting further Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/80 of 26 July 1985,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the critical economic situation in Africa,

Expressing its appreciation to the international community and the United Nations system for their positive response to the emergency situation in Africa and recognizing the need to continue to extend that support to fulfil unmet emergency needs,

Commending the Secretary-General for his continuing efforts in ensuring that the emergency assistance by the United Nations system and the international community is delivered to affected countries in a concerted manner,

Gravely concerned that, even if the current emergency situation is alleviated, the structural economic problems will continue to cripple African economies and might precipitate recurrent crises,

Alarmed by the forecasts that indicate for Africa stagnant or negative growth rates, declining per capita food production, escalating debt burden and the serious effects of drought and desertification,

Recognizing fully the need to focus attention and efforts on the rehabilitation and medium-term and long-term development problems of the African countries,

1. Takes note of the Declaration on the Economic Situation in Africa and Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990, adopted by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first session;

2. Decides to convene a special session of the General Assembly at the ministerial level to consider in depth the critical economic situation in Africa, to be held in New York from 27 to 31 May 1986;

3. Decides also that the special session of the General Assembly on the critical economic situation in Africa should focus, in a comprehensive and integrated manner, on the rehabilitation and medium-term and long-term development problems and challenges facing African countries, with a view to promoting and adopting action-oriented and concerted measures;

4. Decides further to establish a Preparatory Committee of the Whole for the Special Session of the General Assembly on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa that would undertake the necessary preparations to ensure the success of the session;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures to facilitate the work of the Preparatory Committee;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General, in close co-operation with the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to submit to the Preparatory Committee and to the General Assembly at its special session reports containing action-oriented proposals to deal with the critical economic situation in Africa, particularly the major developmental areas identified in the Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa annexed to Assembly resolution 39/29, taking fully into account the priorities set by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twenty-first session;

7. Commends the international community for its valuable support and positive response to the emergency situation in Africa, and appeals to it to continue these efforts and to give its support for the full implementation of resolution 39/29 and the Declaration annexed thereto;

8. Commends the Secretary-General for his valuable efforts in ensuring the co-ordinated response of the United Nations system and the international community to the emergency situation in Africa;

9. Requests the Secretary-General, in implementing resolution 39/29 and the Declaration annexed thereto, to continue to monitor the emergency situation, to assess the needs and responses, to maintain the system's capacity to respond to the continuing emergency in the affected countries, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/40

	2	December	1985	Meeting	98	Adopted	without	vote

50-nation draft (A/40/L.15/Rev.1); agenda item 30.

Sponsors: Algeria, Angola, Benin, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Niger, Nigeria, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/40/939; S-G, A/C.5/40/55 & Corr.1. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 5th Committee 47; plenary 66, 67, 83, 98.

Introducing the text in the Assembly, Japan, which had been designated on 19 November as co-ordinator for the agenda item on the critical economic situation in Africa, said the unofficial consultations it had conducted had led to what it believed was a consensus.

In a statement of position following adoption of the resolution, Bulgaria, speaking also for the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Poland, the Ukrainian SSR and the USSR, said they were deeply concerned at the further deterioration of the economic situation of Africa, despite the efforts made by the African countries themselves and assistance by the international community; the solution to Africa's economic and social problems was inextricably linked with the general problem of restructuring international economic relations on a just basis. Burundi, speaking on behalf of the African Group, stated again the commitment of the African heads of State or Government to take responsibility for Africa's development; they hoped that the text's adoption would establish a new basis for international co-operation and that the Assembly's special session would be crowned with success.

In separate action, the Assembly, in resolution 40/20 on co-operation between the United Nations and OAU, called on member States and regional and international organizations to implement the 1984 Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa<sup>(5)</sup> and to give their maximum support to Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery 1986-1990. The Assembly expressed its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his timely initiative in alerting the international community to the critical situation in Africa and welcomed the measures he had taken to facilitate international co-operation to assist Africa, particularly through the establishment of OEOA. It commended OEOA for its efforts to sensitize the international community, co-ordinate the community's efforts and monitor the situation in affected African countries. The Assembly also expressed its appreciation to UNDP, UNDRO, WFP, FAO, WHO, UNICEF and UNHCR, as well as the World Bank and other international financial institutions, for their assistance in dealing with the African emergency situation. It requested the Secretary-General to keep OAU informed periodically of the response of the international community to special economic assistance programmes, and called for generous assistance on a long-term basis to all African States affected by the economic crisis.

By resolution 40/242, the Assembly, noting with satisfaction that the project on the issue of special postage stamps on the social and economic crisis in Africa was well under way, decided to place half of the revenue from those stamps at the Secretary-General's disposal for implementation of objectives as detailed in the 1984 Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa.

By a 1985 recommendation of the Committee on Information, as approved by Assembly resolution 40/164 A, the Secretary-General was requested to ensure that the United Nations Department of Public Information did its utmost in bringing to the attention of the international community the real dimensions of the plight of the African people and the tremendous efforts of the African countries, with a view to increasing its contribution to alleviating that plight.

In resolution 40/181, the Assembly emphasized the need for priority attention at all levels to the timely delivery of food to those requiring assistance, especially in African countries. It appealed to the international community to provide urgently logistic agricultural inputs and fulfil the unmet aid needs of the drought- and famine-affected African countries.

In resolution 40/100, the Assembly noted with deep concern that the economic and social situation in Africa continued to be critical and had been exacerbated by world recession, famine, drought and desertification. It called for full implementation of its 1984 resolution on the critical economic situation in Africa.

In resolution 40/158, the Assembly urged all States to implement urgently measures to ameliorate the situation.

Benin

The Secretary-General, in his September 1985 report on special economic assistance programmes,<sup>(1)</sup> provided information on such assistance to Benin, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984.<sup>(19)</sup>

In 1985, Benin, classified by the United Nations as least developed, continued to suffer as a result of the international economic crisis which forced it to reduce its current and investment budget. In addition, following the expulsion of aliens from Nigeria in May, approximately 200,000 people passed through Benin. This displacement, on a massive scale and concentrated within a few days, resulted in road and plantation damage and had ecological consequences; some of the people who reached Benin's frontiers had no means of support or possessions, and a number of them remained illegally in the country causing serious food, shelter and logistic problems. In April, Benin appealed to international organizations for emergency aid. The encroachment of the desert, which had a negative impact on agricultural production and resulted in an immediate food deficit, remained a permanent concern; in that context, the Government organized a national seminar on desertification, at the end of which 1 June was declared "Tree Day".

In his report on United Nations assistance to individual countries,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General described the activities of United Nations bodies and agencies in Benin. In a later report,<sup>(4)</sup> he gave an account of such activities in 1985, when external assistance to Benin totalled over $100 million. Of that amount, $46.5 million was for technical assistance, of which the contribution of the United Nations system, including UNDP, was $10.5 million. Assistance for capital investment, provided by 15 donor agencies, totalled $53.5 million.

Addressing the Assembly's Second Committee on 12 November, Benin said its problems had been compounded by the damage caused by unusually heavy rain and floods in 1985, which had destroyed agricultural production and infrastructure and endangered lives; it appealed to the international community to mobilize additional resources for projects under the special economic assistance programme. It also welcomed the decision announced by the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands to write off the debts of LDCs and hoped that other countries would follow their example.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/222 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Benin

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/88 of 5 December 1980, 36/208 of 17 December 1981, 37/151 of 17 December 1982, 38/210 of 20 December 1983 and 39/185 of 17 December 1984, in which it appealed to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to Benin so as to help that country overcome its financial and economic difficulties,

Recalling also Security Council resolution 419(1977) of 24 November 1977, in which the Council appealed to all States and all appropriate international organizations, including the United Nations and its specialized agencies, to assist Benin,

Having heard the statement made by the representative of Benin on 12 November 1985, in which he described the serious economic and financial situation of his country and the action taken by his Government to tackle these difficulties,

Deeply concerned, nevertheless, by the fact that Benin continues to experience serious economic and financial difficulties, characterized by a marked balance-of-payments disequilibrium, heavy burdens of its external debt and a lack of the resources necessary for the implementation of its planned economic and social development programme,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting that the persisting unfavourable climatic conditions in the coastal and northern regions of Benin are still leading to losses in agriculture and livestock production, and threatening the lives of the population,

Considering that Benin is one of the least developed countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to organize and mobilize support for the international programme of economic assistance to Benin;

2. Takes note of the summary report of the Secretary-General;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the assistance already provided or pledged to Benin by Member States. United Nations bodies and regional, interregional and intergovernmental organizations;

4. Notes with satisfaction the efforts undertaken by the Government of Benin to make structural adjustments in the economy of the country and to take other measures designed to help it to overcome its economic and financial difficulties;

5. Notes with concern that the assistance given to Benin has not been sufficient to cover all the country's pressing needs and that additional resources are still essential for the implementation of its recovery, reconstruction and development programme;

6. Appeals to Member States, international financial institutions, the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to respond generously and urgently to the needs of Benin;

7. Urges donor countries to provide financial assistance to help Benin to bear the counterpart costs of projects receiving external assistance, bearing in mind that it is one of the least developed countries;

8. Appeals to the international community to make contributions to the special account for Benin opened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters, for subsequent transfer to Benin;

9. Invites the programmes, specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development:

(a) To maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Benin;

(b) To co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing and promoting the special programme of economic assistance to Benin;

(c) To bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their urgent consideration, the special needs of Benin;

(d) To report to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1986 on the measures they have taken and the resources they have made available, as well as the decisions of their governing bodies on assistance to Benin;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for implementing the projects of the special programme of economic assistance to Benin;

(b) To evaluate, in consultation with the Government, the economic situation in Benin, the most urgent needs of the country and the implementation of the special programme of economic assistance;

(c) To keep the situation in Benin under constant review, in close collaboration with the Government of Benin, the specialized agencies, regional and intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the status of assistance to Benin;

(d) To report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/222

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 47); 34-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.58), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Benin, Bolivia, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Pakistan, Senegal, Togo, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Zaire.

Cape Verde

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(20)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in September 1985 on special economic assistance to Cape Verde.<sup>(1)</sup> In his report on United Nations assistance to individual countries,<sup>(2)</sup> he stated that, at the March 1985 Conference on the Emergency Situation in Africa, total unmet emergency needs for Cape Verde had been estimated at $9.9 million. At a country-specific meeting held at Dakar, Senegal, on 1 April, those estimates were updated to $15.4 million—food aid requirements, including transport, $4.1 million; basic agricultural pastoral inputs, $4.4 million; water projects, $1.8 million; essential health action, $1.2 million; and additional logistics inputs, $3.9 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/226 without vote.

Assistance to Cape Verde

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions on assistance to Cape Verde, in particular its resolution 39/189 of 17 December 1984, in which the international community was requested to provide an appropriate level of resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance for Cape Verde as envisaged in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Recalling United Nations Conference on Trade and Development resolutions 142(VI) and 138(VI) of 2 July 1983 on the progress made in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, and on activities in the field of island developing countries,

Noting that Cape Verde is one of the least developed countries and a small archipelagic State, with a fragile and open economy, aggravated by endemic and severe drought,

Reiterating that increased substantial, continuous and predictable assistance from the international community is needed for the effective completion of the First National Development Plan (1982-1985), which is still being implemented,

Gravely concerned at the critical food situation in Cape Verde resulting from the failure of seasonal rains, the continuing recurrence of drought and the spreading desertification,

Recognizing the strenuous efforts deployed by the Government and people of Cape Verde in the process of the economic and social development of their country despite existing constraints,

1. Takes note of the summary report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts deployed in mobilizing resources for the implementation of the programme of assistance for Cape Verde;

3. Expresses its gratitude to States and to international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their contribution to the programme of assistance for Cape Verde;

4. Reaffirms the need for all Governments and international organizations to implement their commitments undertaken within the framework of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, particularly those undertaken at the round-table conference of Cape Verde's partners in development, held at Praia in June 1982;

5. Urges Governments and international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations to extend and intensify substantially their assistance for the early implementation of the programme of assistance for Cape Verde;

6. Invites the international community, in particular donor countries, to take appropriate and urgent measures to support the effective completion of the First National Development Plan (1982-1985) of Cape Verde;

7. Calls upon the international community to continue to contribute generously to all appeals for food and fodder assistance made by the Government of Cape Verde, or on its behalf by the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, to help it cope with the critical situation in the country;

8. Once again draws the attention of the international community to the special account established at United Nations Headquarters by the Secretary-General, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/99 of 13 December 1977, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Cape Verde;

9. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization:

(a) To maintain and expand their programmes of assistance for Cape Verde;

(b) To co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing and carrying out the special programme of economic assistance for Cape Verde;

(c) To bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for urgent consideration, the special needs of Cape Verde;

(d) To report the measures they have taken and the resources they have made available, as well as the decisions of their governing bodies regarding assistance to Cape Verde, to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1986;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for implementing the programme of development assistance for Cape Verde;

(b) To arrange for a review of the economic situation in Cape Verde, in consultation with the Government of Cape Verde, to report thereon to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986, and to make a substantive report on the implementation of the special programme of economic assistance for Cape Verde to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 47); 39-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.62), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations: agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Cape Verde, China, Comoros, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ghana, Guinea-Bissau, India, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Mozambique, Niger, Pakistan, Peru, Portugal, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Sudan, Sweden, Trinidad and Tobago, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Zambia.

Central African Republic

In his September 1985 report on special economic assistance,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(21)</sup> provided information on the Central African Republic—a land-locked LDC. Effects of the drought from November 1982 to the end of May 1983 were still being felt, he said, and 1985 had been a year of precarious stabilization, with a continued need for external assistance.

Efforts continued to implement a 1982-1985 national action plan for economic recovery, which, in January 1986, would be followed by a live-year plan for economic and social development. Under the 1982-1985 action plan, the budgetary deficit of the country was reduced. Between 1981 and 1985, recurrent revenues increased at an average annual rate of 14.3 per cent while recurrent expenditures increased by only 6.4 per cent per year; as a result, the recurrent revenues represented 13.2 per cent and expenditures 12.6 per cent of the gross domestic product (GDP) in 1985, compared with 11 per cent and 15.7 per cent in 1980. Agriculture remained the principal economic activity, accounting for one third of GDP, which increased by 2.7 per cent over 1984.

Total United Nations assistance to the Central African Republic reached $30.5 million in 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted on 17 December resolution 40/217 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/87 of 5 December 1980, in which it affirmed the urgent need for international action to assist the Government of the Central African Republic in its efforts for reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the country and invited the international community to provide sufficient resources to carry out the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/206 of 17 December 1981, 37/145 of 17 December 1982, 38/211 of 20 December 1983 and 39/180 of 17 December 1984, in which it noted with concern that the assistance provided had not been adequate to meet the urgent needs of the country,

Recalling further its resolution 38/195 of 20 December 1983 on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Considering that the Central African Republic is land-locked and is classified as one of the least developed countries,

Taking note of the statement made before the General Assembly by the Head of the Delegation of the Central African Republic on 11 October 1985, in which he described the economic problems of concern to the Central African Republic and stated that, because of the lack of financial means, external aid continued to be essential to the country,

Also taking note of the statement made by the representative of the Central African Republic on 13 November 1985, according to which, despite an incipient economic recovery, his country continued to be faced with enormous difficulties in implementing its socio-economic development programmes,

Particularly concerned that the Government of the Central African Republic is unable to provide the population with adequate health, educational and other essential social and public services because of an acute shortage of financial and material resources,

Taking account of the losses suffered by the Central African economy following the great drought of 1982-1983,

Noting with satisfaction the considerable efforts exerted by the Government and people of the Central African Republic for national reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, despite the limitations confronting them,

Taking note of the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Also taking note of table 12 of the report of the Secretary-General, according to which substantial additional assistance for the special programme of economic assistance is needed to finance projects which have only been implemented in part and others for which finance has not yet been obtained, including new high-priority projects specified therein,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the efforts he has made to mobilize resources for carrying out the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic;

2. Reiterates its appreciation to States, international, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations for their contribution to the programme of assistance to the Central African Republic;

3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance provided under this heading continues to fall far short of the country's urgent needs;

4. Urgently draws the attention of the international community to table 12 of the Secretary-General's report, which indicates the projects still 'in need of financing';

5. Reiterates its appeal to all States to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of the Central African Republic;

6. Invites the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to maintain their programmes of assistance to the Central African Republic, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in his efforts to organize an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Invites also regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to give urgent consideration to the establishment of a programme of assistance to the Central African Republic or, where one is already in existence, to the expansion and considerable strengthening of that programme with a view to its implementation as soon as possible;

8. Urges all States and relevant United Nations bodies—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of the Central African Republic to cope with the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for schools and hospitals, as well as to meet the emergency needs of the population in the drought-stricken areas of the country;

9. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Central African Republic and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1986;

10. Again draws the attention of the international community to the special account opened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 35/87, for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to the Central African Republic;

11. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to organize a special emergency assistance programme with regard to food and health, especially medicaments, vaccines, hospital equipment, generating sets for field hospitals, water pumps and food products in order to help the vulnerable population;

(b) To continue also his efforts to mobilize necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Central African Republic;

(c) To ensure that the necessary financial and budgetary arrangements are made to continue the organization of the international programme of assistance to the Central African Republic and the mobilization of that assistance;

(d) To keep the situation in the Central African Republic under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Central African Republic;

(e) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of the Central African Republic and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Chad

Economic recovery in Chad—a land-locked LDC with an annual per capita gross national product (GNP) estimated at $110 or less—continued to be slow as a result of the devastating effects of war and recurring droughts. The situation was further aggravated by the drop in world commodity prices, especially that of cotton (the country's key cash crop), ecological problems such as desertification, and the nation's limited capacity to absorb economic inputs.

In his report on United Nations assistance,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General dealt with Chad, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984.<sup>(41)</sup> He stated that at the March 1985 Conference on the Emergency Situation in Africa, OEOA had estimated that unmet emergency needs for Chad totalled $113.9 million. Those estimates were reduced to $53.9 million at a country-specific meeting held at Geneva on 14 March to meet the most urgent requirements—food aid, including transport, $39.8 million; basic agricultural/pastoral inputs, $4.2 million; health action, $7.9 million; and water projects, $2 million.<sup>(6)</sup> Although rainfall in 1985 was normal, and the consensus among donors was that the emergency situation was over, there was a persistent basic food need among the disadvantaged parts of the population. From November 1984 to October 1985, an estimated 215,000 metric tons of food aid were brought to Chad, of which one third was handled through WFP projects.

Net flows of ODA, as reported by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), grew from $115 million in 1984 to $182 million in 1985, reflecting the strong response of the international community to Chad's emergency needs.

At a donors' round-table conference (Geneva, 4 and 5 December 1985), the Chadian Government presented an interim plan for 1986-1988 which outlined nearly 200 projects. In overall financial terms, commitments (actual and projected) made at the conference totalled $485 million, exceeding by some 20 per cent the total needs as presented in the plan.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/218 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Chad

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/195 of 17 December 1984 and its previous resolutions on assistance in the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Chad, emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad and special economic assistance to that country,

Having considered the reports of the Secretary-General on special economic assistance to Chad, relating, inter alia, to the economic and financial situation of Chad, the status of assistance provided for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the country and the progress in organizing and executing the programme of assistance for that country,

Concerned by the unprecedented drought which is causing havoc in Chad, compounding the food and health situation that is already precarious because of the war and thus compromising all the country's efforts at reconstruction,

Considering that the war and the drought have caused a massive displacement of population and created enormous social problems,

Taking note of the numerous appeals launched by the Government of Chad and governmental and non-governmental organizations regarding the gravity of the food and health situation in Chad,

Recognizing the need for emergency humanitarian assistance to Chad,

Also recognizing the need for assistance in the reconstruction and development of Chad,

Welcoming the conference of donors and contributors of funds held in early December 1985, in accordance with the arrangements agreed upon at the International Conference on Assistance to Chad, held in November 1982,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States and governmental and non-governmental organizations that responded and are continuing to respond generously to the appeals of the Government of Chad and of the Secretary-General by furnishing assistance to Chad;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts to make the international community aware of the difficulties of Chad and to mobilize assistance for that country;

3. Renews the request made to States, appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system and international economic and financial institutions:

(a) To continue to provide the necessary humanitarian assistance to the people of Chad who have suffered as a result of the war and the drought;

(b) To contribute to the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Chad;

4. Notes with satisfaction that the International Conference on Assistance to Chad was held at Geneva on 4 and 5 December 1985, and invites the States and agencies that participated in it to honour as early as possible the commitments they made at that Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to implement the interim development plan submitted at Geneva;

(b) To assess, in close collaboration with the humanitarian agencies concerned, the humanitarian needs, particularly in the areas of food and health, of the people displaced by the war and the drought;

(c) To mobilize special humanitarian assistance persons who have suffered as a result of the war and drought and for the resettlement of displaced persons;

(d) To keep the situation in Chad under review and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/218
17 December 1985 Meeting 120

Adopted without vote

General Assembly Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 471: 51-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.54): agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Botswana, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Chad, the Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Comoros, Congo, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, France, Gabon, Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Lesotho, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Morocco, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Vanuatu, Zaire.

Misgivings—GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 42, 47: plenary 120.

The Assembly, in resolution 40/136, reiterated its appeal to all States and organizations to support generously Chad's efforts to assist and resettle voluntary returnees and displaced persons. It also requested UNHCR and UNHCR to mobilize emergency humanitarian assistance to those persons.

Comoros.

In 1985, the people of the Comoros—an LDC poor in natural resources, consisting of some 2,200 square kilometres of which less than half is suitable for agriculture or animal husbandry-suffered from widespread malnutrition and protein deficiency and continued to rely on rice imports of 20,000 to 25,000 metric tons annually. Over the past years, efforts had been made to encourage farmers to grow maize as a substitute for rice and to plant other food crops with a view to achieving food self-sufficiency, according to a September 1985 report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> He had been requested to report by the General Assembly in 1984.<sup>(2)</sup> With a population of less than half a million dispersed throughout the islands of the archipelago, the country's distance to principal world markets and major maritime routes adversely affected the competitiveness of its exports. In addition, the country was often hit by cyclones, and abundant rainfall was interspersed with drought. Its economy, which had slowed progressively in recent years, registered a growth rate of less than 3 per cent in 1985, compared with 4 per cent in 1984. As to the 1985 cyclone, total contributions reported to UNDRO as at mid-1985 amounted to $192,770, of which UNDRO itself provided $15,000.

The government budget was characterized by large deficits; in 1985, the overall deficit reached 39 per cent of GDP as compared with 26 per cent in 1982. Nearly all of that deficit had to be financed by external grants and loans. The balance of external trade also showed a deficit: imports amounted to $25.7 million, which exceeded the value of exports, consisting of three commodities (vanilla, cloves and ylang-ylang), by $10 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/223 on 17 December without vote.

Assistance to the Comoros

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/193 of 17 December 1984 and its previous resolutions on assistance to the Comoros, in which it appealed to the international community to provide effective and continuous financial, material and technical assistance to the Comoros in order to help that country overcome its financial and economic difficulties,

Taking note of the special problems confronting the Comoros as an island developing country and as one of the least developed countries,

Noting that the Government of the Comoros has given priority to the questions of infrastructure, transport and telecommunications,

Noting also the economic difficulties arising from the country's scarcity of natural resources, compounded by the recent drought and cyclones,

Noting further the grave budgetary and balance-of-payments problems facing the Comoros,

Bearing in mind the holding at Moroni, from 2 to 4 July 1984, of the first International Solidarity Conference for the Development of the Comoros,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Comoros;

2. Notes with satisfaction the response by various Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other organizations to its appeals and those of the Secretary-General for assistance to the Comoros;

3. Notes with concern, however, that the assistance thus far provided continues to fall short of the country's urgent requirements and that assistance is still urgently required in order to implement the projects described in the report of the Secretary-General;

4. Appeals to those States and organizations that participated in the first International Solidarity Conference for the Development of the Comoros to participate in the second Conference, to be held at Moroni towards the end of 1985, in order to put into effect as soon as possible their declarations of intent;

5. Renews its appeal to Member States, the appropriate organs, programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, regional and international organizations and other intergovernmental bodies and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions, to provide the Comoros with assistance to enable it to cope with its difficult economic situation and pursue its development goals;

6. Invites the appropriate programmes and organizations of the United Nations system to increase their current programmes of assistance to the Comoros, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Comoros;

(b) To keep the situation in the Comoros under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, the regional and other intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Comoros;

(c) To report on the evolution of the economic situation of the Comoros and the progress made in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Djibouti

Special economic assistance to Djibouti was among the programmes dealt with by the Secretary-General in a September 1985 report,<sup>(1)</sup> as he had been requested by the General Assembly in 1984.<sup>(43)</sup> An LDC with an arid environment providing little scope for agricultural production and a consequent dependence on food imports, Djibouti continued to rely on external assistance for budgetary and capital expenditures. By the end of 1984, the slowing down of its economy due to prolonged drought had come to a standstill, there had been no further depletion of foreign reserves and the budget deficit had narrowed. During 1985, it had rained in nearly all parts of the country, and the first generation of development programmes following a 1983 donors' conference<sup>(44)</sup> had got off the ground. Those improvements, however, did not significantly reduce the vulnerability of Djibouti's fragile economy, which remained dependent on external factors. There was an increased dependency on food aid. In addition, the year witnessed a new influx of refugees, primarily drought victims from Ethiopia and Somalia, estimated at 15,000 and representing nearly 5 per cent of Djibouti's population.

According to another September 1985 report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(2)</sup> DTCD continued to assist Djibouti in processing census data as a follow-up to its first population census in 1983, also carried out with DTCD assistance. An UNCTAD project funded by UNDP provided assistance to the port of Djibouti, at a total cost of $331,000 for 1984-1986; development and emergency operation projects were funded by WFP at a cost of $10.2 million and $2.7 million, respectively; and new loans by the World Bank and IDA totalled $10 million for education and urban projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/227 without vote.

Assistance to Djibouti

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/200 of 17 December 1984 and its previous resolutions on assistance to Djibouti, in which it drew the attention of the international community to the critical economic situation confronting Djibouti and to the country's urgent need for assistance,

Deeply concerned at the lingering adverse effects of the drought on the economic and social development of Djibouti,

Bearing in mind its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, in which it decided to include Djibouti in the list of the least developed countries,

Having examined the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the critical economic situation of Djibouti and the list of urgent and priority projects formulated by the Government that require international assistance,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to organize an international programme of economic assistance for Djibouti;

2. Notes with appreciation the assistance already provided or pledged to Djibouti by Member States, organizations of the United Nations system and other organizations;

3. Draws the attention of the international community to the difficult economic situation confronting Djibouti and to the severe structural constraints to its development;

4. Renews its appeal to Member States, the appropriate organs, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and international organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international financial institutions, to provide assistance bilaterally and multilaterally, as appropriate, to Djibouti in order to enable it to cope with its difficult economic situation and to implement its development strategies, including the programme of assistance that was presented at the round-table conference of development partners convened by the Government of Djibouti in November 1983;

5. Requests the appropriate specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Djibouti, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Djibouti;

(b) To keep the situation in Djibouti under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Djibouti;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of Djibouti and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti was also called for by the Assembly in resolution 40/221.

Equatorial Guinea

The Secretary-General sent a mission to Equatorial Guinea from 7 to 14 May 1985, led by the Director of Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in response to a 1984 General Assembly request.<sup>(45)</sup> The report of the mission<sup>(46)</sup> described the economic and financial situation of the country, including a review of the more important economic sectors; discussed the implementation of the special economic assistance programme and the country's 1982-1984 programme on economic reactivation and development; and drew certain conclusions and recommendations with regard to support by the international community for the development efforts of the Government.

The mission noted that Equatorial Guinea, consisting of continental Guinea or Rio Muni on the coast of west Africa and insular Guinea, was sparsely populated with a population of over 316,000 and an annual population growth rate of 2.7 per cent. Distances between various parts of the country rendered communications difficult and costly. Although classified by the United Nations as an LDC on the basis of its current economic performance, Equatorial Guinea had considerable potential and could produce enough to meet the basic food requirements of its population. It enjoyed a competitive advantage in the production of cocoa, which could be expanded considerably, as could its production of coffee, thus increasing foreign exchange earnings. The Gulf of Guinea and the waters around Annabón with their adequate fish resources could support both artisanal and commercial exploitation, and offshore exploration indicated the possibility of commercial gas and petroleum production.

During the period under review, however, agricultural production continued to stagnate at levels far below potential, and Equatorial Guinea faced major monetary and fiscal problems which overshadowed development efforts. On the external side, the financing of essential imports had become increasingly difficult and debt-service payments had grown to the point where the Government could not keep current.

Equatorial Guinea's GDP increased during 1980-1985 at an average annual rate of 1 per cent. On 1 January 1985, the country became a member of the Bank of Central African States and replaced the ekwele by the CFA franc as its monetary unit with a fixed rate vis-à-vis the French franc (F 1 = CFAF 50). It also decided at the end of 1984 to join the Central African Customs and Economic Union in association with Cameroon, the Central African Republic, the Congo and Gabon.

The country's external debt at the end of 1985 amounted to $133.2 million, according to data compiled by the World Bank, representing a 15 per cent increase compared with year-end 1984 and a 77 per cent increase compared with year-end 1980. Of that amount, $119.3 million was public and publicly guaranteed long-term debt, while use of IMF credit amounted to $7.9 million and short-term debt to $6 million. To alleviate the heavy debt burden for the country, whose GNP was estimated at $85 million, an agreement was reached at a meeting of the Paris Club in June 1985 whereby repayment of a substantial proportion of the accumulated debt was put forward to 1991.

A government study of foreign assistance project implementation for 138 projects during 1983-1985 revealed that external assistance during that period was estimated at $220 million, corresponding to $700 per capita. Equatorial Guinea's contribution to the projects was $8.2 million and, of the total external assistance, some $96 million was in the form of grants and $125 million in loans. During the period under review, there was a decline in the grant component, from 42 per cent. in 1984 to an estimated 15 per cent in 1985.

In view of the fact that the Government was in the process of formulating a new development programme, no specific priority projects were identified, but the mission made the following conclusions and recommendations. The international community was strongly urged to co-operate with the Government in its efforts to reschedule its debt; at the same time, there was a need for immediate concessional financing for essential imports, both to keep the economy functioning during the current transition period and to contribute to the more long-term development efforts. The need for ODA remained extremely important for national economic and social development; in that connection, the trend to a decline in grants should be reversed and multiyear commitments should be considered.

With regard to external assistance, harmonization of views between donors and the Government was a major problem; an improvement in the situation would require that the Government establish a clear framework reflecting development priorities and enhance its contribution to project implementation and monitoring. It also required support of those efforts by donors by undertaking projects consistent with national development priorities and consulting among themselves and with government authorities to ensure the most effective use of available resources.

Since Equatorial Guinea continued to face an acute shortage of skilled manpower at all levels, there was a continuing need for foreign technical assistance and donors should consider increasing the training component of projects. Assistance to agriculture as the basis of the national economy was essential if the country was to achieve a position where it could earn the foreign exchange necessary to finance its own growth; in addition to assisting in the promotion of food production for domestic consumption, the donor community was called upon to continue providing necessary food aid. The Government's revised policy to expand cocoa and timber production also required international technical and financial assistance.

In addition to supporting the formulation of a comprehensive national development strategy, donors were urged to consider ways to improve and utilize existing infrastructure more effectively. Concluding, the mission said the Government urged that assistance be continued and if possible enhanced in order to support its efforts to deal with its immediate and more long-term problems.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1985, adopted resolution 40/216 without vote.

Assistance to Equatorial Guinea

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/105 of 5 December 1980, 36/204 of 17 December 1981, 37/133 of 17 December 1982 and 38/224 of 20 December 1983,

Recalling also its resolution 39/181 of 17 December 1984, in which it earnestly called upon all Member States and international and regional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as international financial and development institutions and appropriate programmes of the United Nations system, especially the United Nations Development Programme and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research, to establish, maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Equatorial Guinea, particularly in the areas of public administration and public finance in which a general transformation is required as a result of Equatorial Guinea's entry into the Central African Customs and Economic Union and the Bank of Central African States,

Recalling further that Equatorial Guinea is one of the least developed countries,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 39/181,

Noting that Equatorial Guinea, despite the efforts made by its Government and people, continues to be beset by serious economic and financial difficulties,

Recognizing the essential role of short-term, medium-term and long-term international assistance in support of the efforts of the Government of Equatorial Guinea in the task of reconstruction and development of the country,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;
2. Expresses its thanks to the international community for its interest in and assistance to Equatorial Guinea;
3. Also expresses its thanks for the efforts made by the Secretary-General to organize and mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of assistance to Equatorial Guinea;
4. Reiterates its appeal to all Member States to continue to respond generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, so as to meet the needs indicated in the programme presented in 1982 at the International Conference of Donors for the Economic Reactivation and Development of Equatorial Guinea held at Geneva in April 1982;

5. Invites all Member States and international and regional organizations and other intergovernmental organizations, as well as international financial and development institutions, to participate in the round-table meeting of donors to be held in Equatorial Guinea in 1986 for the evaluation of the 1982-1984 three-year programme presented at the International Conference of Donors for the Economic Reactivation and Development of Equatorial Guinea;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To intensify his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Equatorial Guinea;

(b) To keep the situation in Equatorial Guinea under review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and competent international financial institutions and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the status of assistance to Equatorial Guinea;

(c) To submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the economic situation of Equatorial Guinea and the progress made in implementing the present resolution;

7. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to ensure that the round-table conference to be held in Equatorial Guinea in 1986 receives the widest possible publicity among the bilateral and multilateral donors.

Gambia

Classified by the United Nations as an LDC, with per capita GDP well under $300, the Gambia was one of the world's poorest countries. With no known natural resources, the country's economy depended on one cash crop—groundnuts—as the main source of income for two thirds of its population and accounting for 85 to 90 per cent of domestic exports. With a decline in GDP in the 1980s and a doubling of its population between 1965 and 1985—currently estimated at 750,000—the Gambia's real per capita income fell by 16 per cent between 1970 and 1985. Unemployment, especially among young people, was high. Although involved in redressing its economic and financial problems, the Gambia had made significant advances in building up its economic and social infrastructure—schools, clinics, roads and public administration.

With a view to reversing the trend of economic deterioration, the Government launched a comprehensive economic recovery programme in mid-1985 with reforms in the exchange rate system, the financial sector, the civil service and parastatal institutions. The programme also aimed at raising agricultural productivity, promoting productive activities such as fishing, manufacturing and tourism, and included a restructuring of the public investment programme.

In his 26 September report on special economic assistance,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General pointed out that in 1984/85 the Gambia's economic situation had deteriorated, with the production of groundnuts less than half of the previous year, resulting in an equivalent reduction in export earnings, and deficits persisting in the balance of payments and the government budget. Debt-service payments increased by 65 per cent and arrears had accumulated to about 50 per cent of GDP. Due partly to the country's inability to pay for rice imports, the food situation had become serious. To supplement its domestic production, the Gambia had to import annually over 30,000 tons of cereals, mainly rice. For the period from October 1984 to September 1985, the deficit to be met by rice imports was estimated at some 39,000 tons; the uncovered rice deficit for June to September 1985 reached 16,000 tons.

As at the end of June, the Gambia's medium- and long-term public debt was estimated at $312 million, representing about 200 per cent of GDP. External debt service due in 1984/85 was $18 million, which further eroded the deficit from 17 per cent of GDP in 1983/84 to 25 per cent in 1984/85.

Following the 1984 round-table donors' conference for assistance to the Gambia,<sup>(47)</sup> meetings on fisheries and on non-project financing were held in June and September 1985, respectively.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/224 without vote.

Assistance to the Gambia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/203 of 17 December 1984, in which it, inter alia, noted that the Gambia is a least developed country with acute economic and social problems arising from its weak economic infrastructure and that it also suffers from many of the serious problems common to countries of the Sahelian region, notably drought and desertification,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General, in which the recent economic situation in the Gambia is described,

Concerned that the Gambia continues to encounter serious balance-of-payments and budgetary problems and noting that the lack of domestic resources is the most important constraint on development, since the Government lacks the funds to meet the counterpart costs of donor-assisted projects,

Noting that external assistance is still required to enable the Government of the Gambia to implement the six projects recommended by the Secretary-General in his report submitted to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session,

Aware that a round-table conference of donors was held in the Gambia in November 1984, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme, to discuss the country's development needs and to consider ways and means of helping the Government in its efforts to meet those needs,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for the Gambia;

3. Expresses its appreciation also to those States and organizations that have provided assistance to the Gambia;

4. Draws the attention of the international community to the need for assistance for the projects and programmes identified by the Secretary-General in his report;

5. Renews its urgent appeal to Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, as well as international development and financial institutions, to give generous assistance to the Gambia, through bilateral or multilateral channels, and to provide financial, technical and material assistance for the implementation of the projects and programmes recommended by the Secretary-General in his report;

6. Urges donors, as appropriate, to provide financial assistance to the Gambia to help meet the local counterpart costs of externally assisted projects, bearing in mind that the Gambia is classified as a least developed drought-stricken country;

7. Urges Member States, organizations and programmes of the United Nations system, regional and interregional bodies, financial and development institutions, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to respond generously to the needs of the Gambia as discussed at the round-table conference of donors held in that country in November 1984;

8. Invites the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to increase their current and future programmes of assistance to the Gambia, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist that country;

9. Invites also the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of the Gambia and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1986;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to the Gambia;

(b) To keep the situation in the Gambia under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the international financial institutions concerned and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for the Gambia;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation of the Gambia and in organizing and implementing the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Guinea

Classified by the United Nations as an LDC, Guinea continued to face serious economic difficulties despite initiation in 1984 of a special programme of economic assistance<sup>(48)</sup> and a national economic and financial recovery programme (1985-1987) launched by the Government in September 1985.

Apart from mining, Guinea's development was based solely on the public sector, according to a September 1985 report by the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> Despite investments, the public sector had declined since 1973 with the exception of the civil service. Public enterprises, which had been producing at less than 15 per cent of capacity, registered heavy losses, which led to a degree of liberalization from 1980 onwards and paved the way for an economic reform programme aimed at encouraging private sector development, which was at the core of the national programme.

In the rural sector, collective agriculture did not live up to expectations but small-scale peasant farming provided some supplies for the country despite adverse environmental conditions. Yet, agricultural output did not ensure food self-sufficiency, and the country continued to import an average of 70,000 tons of rice annually, including 30,000 tons of food aid. In the industrial sector, Guinea began to export diamonds—50,000 carats during the first four months of 1985—in addition to bauxite and aluminium, which accounted for 99 per cent of its export earnings. Agricultural exports—pineapple and coffee—were of marginal importance.

In its development planning process, the Government of Guinea was assisted by UNDP through a project aimed at streamlining the general organization of the national economy and strengthening the co-ordinating capacity for management and planning in sectors and subsectors crucial to economic recovery and growth, such as mining, processing industries, industrial fishing, feeder roads and foreign trade. To the same end, the World Bank was involved in a $9 million project of technical assistance for economic management to improve services responsible for the planning, evaluation and follow-up of the public investment programme, macro-economic and sectoral planning, and the management of the para-public sector; the restructuring of that sector was to result in the liquidation of non-profitable enterprises and the transfer of certain enterprises to the private sector. The policy of rehabilitating and revitalizing enterprises led to the granting of an $8 million IDA loan to improve the organization and management of the electricity sector and to overhaul installations for the production, conduction and supply of electricity. A donors' meeting was held at Conakry on the question of rehabilitating an initial 36-kilometre section and carrying out a diagnostic survey of Guinea's railways; among the participants were representatives of the World Bank, EEC and the Central Economic Co-operation Fund.

Other multilateral assistance included UNHCR emergency assistance to Guinean returnees amounting to $1.1 million from July 1984 to February 1985, to supply medical kits and vehicles, set up health care delivery systems and distribute food and agricultural inputs. In addition, the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund provided $800,000 to finance the delivery in April 1985 of 6,000 ploughs following a December 1983 earthquake.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/235 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Guinea The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/202 of 17 December 1984, in which it appealed to the international community to contribute generously, through bilateral and multilateral channels, to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development of Guinea,

Noting that the persistence of unfavourable climatic conditions in the northern part of the country has led to enormous losses in crop and livestock production,

Deeply concerned by the fact that Guinea continues to suffer serious economic and financial difficulties arising from a marked balance-of-payments deficit, onerous external debt charges and the massive return of formerly exiled persons,

Taking into consideration the objectives of Guinea's Interim Programme of National Rehabilitation for the period 1985-1987, whose implementation continues to be hampered by the lack of necessary resources,

Noting with satisfaction the considerable efforts made by the Government and people of Guinea to ensure the country's reconstruction, rehabilitation and development, despite existing constraints,

Noting that the Government of Guinea, in collaboration with the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and other international agencies concerned, is preparing a conference of donors for Guinea, which will be organized as soon as possible,

Considering that Guinea is one of the least developed countries,

Noting the statement made by the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs and International Co-operation of the Republic of Guinea on 4 October 1985, in which he described his country's economic problems,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Guinea;

2. Expresses its gratitude to the States and organizations that have provided assistance to that country;

3. Again appeals to the international community, including the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies and organizations, to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to Guinea's economic and social development;

4. Invites all States and relevant organizations of the United Nations system to provide the Government of Guinea with all possible assistance with a view to meeting the population's critical humanitarian needs and to furnish it, as appropriate, with food, medicaments and essential hospital and school equipment;

5. Also invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to intensify and expand their assistance programmes in order to meet the needs of Guinea;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the framework of the United Nations system in order to assist the Government of Guinea in its rehabilitation and development efforts;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, and to the General Assembly, at its forty-first session, on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 471; 60-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.75), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Cyprus, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gabon, Gambia, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, India, Iran, Iraq, Japan, Liberia, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Togo, Tunisia, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Addressing the Assembly on 4 October 1985, Guinea referred to its development plan for 1985-1987 which focused on agriculture, energy, education, transport and communication-basically the restructuring of the country's economy and administration. Efforts centred on finding ways to develop Guinea's natural resources, with an open-door policy enabling it to co-operate with other countries unconditionally and on the basis of equality and mutual interests. The new approach was to be supported within the country by a policy of freeing the economy and encouraging enterprises and private initiatives that had for a long time been stifled. Guinea also welcomed the importance attached by the United Nations to the integrated development plan for the Fouta Djallon massif to create a protective green belt against the progressive desertification of the region, thus making its hydroelectric potential available to all regional States.

Guinea-Bissau

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1984 request of the General Assembly,<sup>(24)</sup> arranged for a review mission to visit Guinea-Bissau from 16 to 23 April 1985 to consult with the Government. According to the mission's findings,<sup>(49)</sup> Guinea-Bissau's population was growing at an annual rate of 2.2 per cent. With a per capita income estimated at $190, life expectancy at birth at 42 years, the mortality rate among children aged 1 to 4 around 200 per 1,000 and 75 per cent of the population illiterate, Guinea-Bissau had been classified by the United Nations as an LDC.

The mission's report reviewed the economic situation in Guinea-Bissau taking into account recent developments, described the status of the special economic assistance programme and discussed the 1983-1986 national development plan. The mission found that the country continued to be beset by economic and financial difficulties but that the rigorous economic policy measures, implemented by the Government in 1984 were beginning to have positive effects. For example, exports increased substantially following the progressive devaluation of the peso and adjustments to producer prices, and revenues rose noticeably in response to fiscal reforms and improved tax collection procedures. Nevertheless, the mission agreed with the Government that its planned stabilization programme would have to be continued beyond 1986.

The mission pointed out that agricultural production, which accounted for over 50 per cent of GDP, with rice as the main staple, could adequately ensure food self-sufficiency and increase export earnings, mainly from ground-nuts, palm kernels and cashew nuts. However, the country's output remained poor owing to lack of incentives, inadequate infrastructure and unfavourable weather.

Under the World Bank's sponsorship, representatives from the Bank, IMF, UNDP and EEC, as well as from France, the Federal Republic of Germany, the Netherlands, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States, met with a delegation of Guinea-Bissau (Paris, 12 and 13 February 1985) to review ways in which the international assistance to Guinea-Bissau had been carried out. Guinea-Bissau indicated that its total requirements for 1985 amounted to $23.8 million ($7 million for food aid, $8 million for fuel import and $8.8 million for other essential imports); for 1986, it anticipated that exports of goods and services could reach $25 million, leaving a balance-of-payments deficit of about $30 million, including food aid, to be financed. The meeting acknowledged that the trend shown by some of the economic indicators was highly encouraging, and the countries supporting Guinea-Bissau promised that every effort would be made to meet the remaining balance-of-payments needs, through debt rescheduling, cancellation or rescheduling of commercial arrears and reconstitution of a minimum level of reserves.

The first round-table follow-up meeting to the 1984 donors' conference for assistance to Guinea-Bissau<sup>(50)</sup> was held at Bissau from 16 to 18 April 1985. Acknowledging the critical importance of external assistance to support the Government's economic and financial stabilization programme, the participants showed their readiness to consider favourably the financing of projects presented; the meeting recommended an extension of the stabilization programme to allow for consolidation of the results so far achieved. It also decided to hold a series of sectoral consultations.

The mission concluded that the international community had responded generously to and been supportive of the measures taken so far by Guinea-Bissau in its efforts to correct some of the fundamental structural imbalances in its economy. However, sustained external assistance would be required for the next few years, in particular the funding of the balance-of-payments deficit of about $53.8 million, including food aid, for 1985-1986; debt renegotiation and relief; and funding of some 22 development projects costing approximately $81.5 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/225 without vote.

Special economic assistance to Guinea-Bissau
The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 35/95 of 5 December 1980, in which it reiterated its appeal to the international community to continue to provide effective financial, material and technical assistance to Guinea-Bissau to help it overcome its financial and economic difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes recommended by the Secretary-General in his report submitted pursuant to General Assembly resolution 34/121 of 14 December 1979,

Recalling also its resolutions 36/217 of 17 December 1981 and 39/186 of 17 December 1984,

Noting, in particular, that Guinea-Bissau is one of the least developed countries,

Noting with concern that Guinea-Bissau continues to experience serious economic and financial difficulties, that the gross national product of Guinea-Bissau has decreased in real terms, that the balance-of-payments deficit continues to rise, that the external debt is imposing a heavy burden on the country's fragile economy and that the budget deficit has also grown substantially,

Noting also that Guinea-Bissau continues to have problems in supplying staple foodstuffs to satisfy the needs of its population,

Noting with satisfaction the main features of the first four-year development plan (1983-1986) of Guinea-Bissau and the implementation of the 1983-1984 economic and financial stabilization programme,

Also noting with satisfaction the prospects for co-operation stemming from the round-table conference of donors for Guinea-Bissau, held at Lisbon in May 1984,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on economic assistance to Guinea-Bissau,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Guinea-Bissau;

2. Draws the attention of the international community to the assistance required for implementing the projects and programmes submitted at the round-table conference;

3. Expresses its gratitude to the Member States and international organizations concerned for the food aid generously provided to Guinea-Bissau;

4. Expresses its gratitude to the States and organizations that have responded to the appeal of Guinea-Bissau and to the appeals of the Secretary-General by providing assistance to Guinea-Bissau;

5. Renews its urgent appeal to Member States, regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Guinea-Bissau to help it overcome its economic and financial difficulties and to permit the implementation of the projects and programmes specified in its first four-year development plan;

6. Urges Member States, United Nations bodies, regional and interregional bodies and governmental financing institutions to respond urgently to the needs of Guinea-Bissau in accordance with the dialogue held between Guinea-Bissau and its partners at the round-table conference of donors;

7. Appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account opened by the Secretary-General at United Nations Headquarters, in accordance with General Assembly resolution 32/100 of 13 December 1977, in order to facilitate the payment of contributions for Guinea-Bissau;

8. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special and pressing needs of Guinea-Bissau and to report the decisions taken in that connection to the Secretary-General;

9. Requests the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to assist Guinea-Bissau;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Guinea-Bissau;

(b) To keep the situation in Guinea-Bissau under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations and the financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the status of the special programme of economic assistance for Guinea-Bissau;

(c) To report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

Lesotho

The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(25)</sup> reported in September 1985<sup>(1)</sup> on the current economic situation of Lesotho and the assistance requirements of the 10 specific projects formulated in response to a 1982 Security Council request.<sup>(51)</sup>

Due to its unique geographical location and limited natural resources, Lesotho continued to depend economically on South Africa. One of the major features of its economy was the large difference between its GNP and its GDP which was accounted for by income from abroad, almost all of which represented remittances from the Basotho miners in South Africa. The implications of the difference reflected one of the principal characteristics of the economy, namely its great dependence on migrant labour and remittance which were the major sources of employment and purchasing power in Lesotho's economy. Recent developments in the labour market of South Africa indicated that there was an urgent need to reduce dependence on the migratory labour system. Recognizing that few job opportunities existed in Lesotho and that the labour force was growing rapidly, the Government had requested the ILO Southern African Team for Employment Promotion to prepare a long-term employment plan to help absorb the growing labour force and prepare contingency and emergency programmes for migrant workers.

Although agricultural production and productivity were very low, agriculture remained the main sector of the economy, providing some 50 per cent of exports. Of agricultural exports, 75 per cent came from livestock, a subsector whose contribution to GDP had grown over the years, surpassing that of crop farming. Industry and water resources-the latter one of the country's major resources-were still at the initial stages of development.

In response to the continuing adverse impact of drought, the Government evolved two kinds of remedial measures to alleviate and overcome its effects: projects addressing the emergency drought relief aspects; and projects aimed at resolving the continuous threat of drought in the medium- and long-term perspective. An appeal was made by Lesotho to the international community to deal with short-term implications of the drought. The emergency projects, totalling some $23 million, were aimed at assisting the country to overcome the devastating effects of the drought cycle. Several projects, or some of their aspects, were also to contribute to long-term measures to ensure against adverse drought effects in the future. In addition, Lesotho presented the international community with essential medium- to long-term structural reform projects totalling $159 million: watershed management, $99 million; destocking project, $33 million; and minor roads construction, $27 million.

In his June 1985 report on the critical economic situation in Africa,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General pointed to facts that had emerged from a country-specific meeting for Lesotho held at Lusaka, Zambia, on 11 April. In its third year of drought, Lesotho had been forced to increase cereal imports, using some of its foreign exchange reserves. Additional food aid for direct emergency purposes had not been requested, but it was indicated that support for supplementary feeding programmes would allow the Government to save foreign exchange reserves and channel more funds to drought-related activities. As a direct result of drought-induced hardships, there had been an increase in tuberculosis among vulnerable groups, and diarrhoeal and other gastro-intestinal diseases were spreading due to the lack of safe drinking-water supplies and basic sanitation. Additional medical supplies were therefore requested to help alleviate the severe health problems.

In another report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General described assistance to Lesotho by the United Nations system. At the March 1985 Conference on the Emergency Situation in Africa, total unmet emergency needs for Lesotho were estimated at $2.1 million-basic agricultural/pastoral inputs, $1.4 million; essential health actions, $0.2 million; and additional logistics (capital inputs), $0.5 million.

Liberia

In response to a 1984 General Assembly request<sup>(52)</sup> that he report on the economic situation in and the special programme of economic assistance for Liberia, the Secretary-General arranged for a mission from 1 to 5 April 1985, led by the Under-Secretary-General for Special Political Questions. The mission's report,<sup>(53)</sup> described the country's economic and financial situation and made some recommendations. It indicated that Liberia was continuing to face economic and financial difficulties and that the situation had deteriorated to a critical point. There had been negative real economic growth, a decline in private consumption and overall savings, heavy external debt payments and problems of arrears, a substantial budget deficit, a weak balance-of-payments position with a large deficit on the current account, a tight liquidity situation which constrained economic activity in the country, and weak planning and implementation capacity.

By December 1984, Liberia's total public external debt was almost $960 million, of which $860.8 million represented national government debt and $98.6 million the recorded debt of public corporations. In 1982/83, debt servicing amounted to $62 million, or over 13 per cent of exports of goods and services in that year; by 1985, it had risen to $110 million and was expected to continue at that level for a few years, imposing a strain on Liberia's financial resources. Of that amount, $50 million was not eligible for rescheduling, representing payments due to multilateral institutions and for other loans not eligible for debt relief. Following the Government's request for debt relief from bilateral donors, four rescheduling agreements were reached under the Paris Club, covering the period 1 January 1980 to 30 June 1985, under which $82.3 million was rescheduled. Under the "London Group" of commercial creditors, $26 million in commercial debt was refinanced in fiscal 1983/84 and further refinancing was under consideration. The mission recommended that the Government make the necessary arrangements for a timely payment of its external debt obligations. However, in view of the heavy burden which debt-service payments imposed on its budget and balance of payments and the Government's commitment to achieve a better balance in its internal and external accounts, financial assistance to Liberia on a grant basis or on highly concessional terms was suggested.

To improve its fiscal balance, the Government implemented measures to increase revenues and reduce outlays. Those measures curtailed its ability not only to provide basic health and other social services, but also to maintain the existing stock of capital and make the investments needed for the future growth of the economy. Increases in revenues were budgeted through the imposition of new taxes and the strengthening of the tax collection system; nevertheless, revenues continued to decline in fiscal year 1984/85.

In consultation with the World Bank, Liberia began in 1985 to implement a structural adjustment programme, supported by a Bank credit. The programme's main objectives were to reduce the size of the public enterprise sector through divestiture and/or restructuring, including partial privatization; improve the efficiency and financial health of enterprises remaining in the public sector through fiscal, financial and managerial reforms; and establish an institutional and policy environment for Government/enterprise relations that would clarify the objectives which enterprises were to pursue. Along those lines, the Government created a Bureau for State Enterprises.

The mission concluded that, although the Government continued to face severe economic and financial difficulties, it had to deal with the country's fundamental, longer-term problems. Despite its economic situation, Liberia had good potential in natural resources (iron ore, rubber, timber and diamonds) and cash crops (coffee, cocoa and oil palm). The mission supported rigorous and sustained implementation of the structural adjustment programme as a first step in addressing Liberia's problems, but stressed that the co-operation of the international community was essential for the programme to succeed.

The Secretary-General reported<sup>(2)</sup> that the United Nations provided to Liberia special economic assistance for: health, water supply and formal education (UNICEF); population statistics and development planning, water resources policy, natural resources development, training and equipment (DTCD); development projects (WFP); plant protection research, agricultural statistics, emergency rinder-pest vaccination, assistance to poultry farms, irrigation and forestry (FAO); agricultural development (IFAD); technical assistance (IMF); population data compilation and processing (UNFPA); maritime training (IMO); the Liberian Institute of Public Administration (UNDP/ILO); fellowships (ITU and UPU); civil aviation training (ICAO) and debt management (UNCTAD)-projects funded by UNDP; and loans for oil exploration and water supply projects (World Bank and IDA).

UNDP provided financial and technical support to several projects to assist Liberia with development planning, improve the managerial skills of various government officials and upgrade the professional capability of planning personnel.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 40/454 of 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, took note of the Secretary-General's report on special economic assistance to Liberia.

Mauritania

By a letter of 25 September 1985 to the Secretary-General,<sup>(54)</sup> Mauritania appealed to the international community for assistance for the reconstruction, recovery, rehabilitation and development of the country and requested that the question be considered at the 1985 General Assembly session. Annexed to the letter was a memorandum proposing that Mauritania be classified as an LDC.

As in the past, the letter explained, Mauritania suffered from drought, desertification, the effects of war in Western Sahara and the international economic crisis. With an estimated annual population growth of 2.5 per cent, the economy employed in the modern sector-based on mining, fishing and administration—60,000 workers (30 per cent in the civil service and 20 per cent in public enterprises), while the majority of the potentially active population (540,000 workers) depended on traditional rural forms of the subsistence economy. The country lacked skilled personnel—some 70 per cent of all employees in small- and medium-scale enterprises had no training, and 50 per cent of them were illiterate.

The economic situation had deteriorated as a result of the cumulative effects of drought; overpopulation of livestock in grazing areas; the proliferation of wells; increasing deforestation to meet the population's firewood needs; the virtual disappearance of rain-fed agriculture and the decline of flood-plain agriculture; and the inadequacy of irrigated agriculture which, at best, was expected to increase from the 10,000 tons currently produced to 40,000 tons in 1990, although the annual demand for grain exceeded 250,000 tons.

Between 1975 and 1984, Mauritania's economy grew at an estimated 2.3 per cent annually, almost the same percentage as its population growth, meaning that real per capita income remained virtually constant. According to April 1985 World Bank figures, per capita GDP averaged $465 in 1982, $475 in 1983 and $430 in 1984. In 1984, the country's balance of payments was characterized by a persistent trade deficit (accounting for 34 per cent of GDP), and the external debt had risen to twice GDP. According to World Bank statistics, per capita GNP stood at $440 in 1983.

In his report on the critical economic situation in Africa,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General provided information on a country-specific meeting for Mauritania (Dakar, Senegal, 2 April), at which Mauritania had presented an emergency plan finalized by the new Government in January. The plan focused on two main actions: immediate relief operations for the population and livestock severely affected by continuing drought; and projects having a rapid development impact in the rural sector (agriculture, livestock development and environment protection), based on the concept of "food for work". The presentation was complemented by individual project data sheets included in four sector documents, relating to equipment for immediate operational needs of the Commission for Food Security, health requirements, water development programmes, and agriculture. Mauritania stressed the severe and profound impact of drought on the socio-economic situation, which included widespread malnutrition, drastic changes in the basic way of life of a largely nomadic population and increasing dependence on external assistance for survival. It emphasized national determination to reduce gradually the country's vulnerability through concurrent actions in water development, agriculture and animal husbandry, as well as by developing and improving the structures for food distribution and health.

At the meeting, donor countries made a number of commitments and firm pledges towards some of the programmes. Unmet needs for Mauritania, totalling $50.2 million, were specified: food aid requirements, including transport ($22.8 million), to which some 11 tons of butter oil and over 8 tons of dried skim milk should be added; basic agricultural/pastoral inputs

($1.1 million); essential health actions ($0.7 million); water projects ($10.2 million); and additional logistic (capital) inputs ($15.4 million), including the Government's project proposal to improve port handling and storage capacity as well as water projects.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/219 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction, recovery, rehabilitation and development of Mauritania
The General Assembly,

Deeply concerned by the enormous devastation caused to woodlands and the serious damage suffered by the economic and social infrastructure of Mauritania over the last fifteen years of drought and desertification,

Deeply disturbed by the great economic and financial imbalances which have found expression in the paucity of overall growth and the magnitude of the budget deficit and the balance-of-payments deficit,

Aware of the fact that the deterioration of the productive economic base is caused by factors over which Mauritania has no control, such as drought, desertification, the current international economic situation and the fall in commodity prices,

Deeply concerned by the adverse consequences of those factors both at the socio-economic level, through a massive rural exodus and growing urban unemployment, and at the level of external indebtedness, which is reaching excessive proportions,

Asserting the urgent need for international action to help the Government of Mauritania in its efforts to overcome and control the effects of these devastating natural disasters,

Acknowledging that Mauritania, one of the countries most affected by drought and desertification, is in need of international assistance in order to overcome the hardships impeding its short-term and long-term development and hindering its efforts for reconstruction, recovery, rehabilitation and development,

Considering the serious social and human problems posed by the settlement and integration in urban centres of many vulnerable persons who, because of the rural exodus and the adverse effects of drought and desertification, are in need of immediate emergency aid,

Concerned by the persistent imbalances in the agricultural structure of the country and the fact that it is to a large extent dependent on food grants and totally dependent on imports in all sectors,

Concerned also that, in real terms, the projected volume of exports of iron ore for 1985 will be virtually two thirds lower than that of 1975, which will particularly hamper the development of the country,

Aware of the need to assist the country with a view to enabling it to develop and to exercise effective control over its fishing resources, its second source of foreign currency,

Noting with concern that, in addition to the country's demographic and geographical disadvantages, its only highway, constructed with outside financing, is constantly being covered by sand, thereby disrupting economic and social life in three quarters of the country,

Concerned further by the difficulties of all kinds encountered by the Government, Member States and international organizations in channelling food and relief to the afflicted population in the interior of the country because of the lack of a road network and of transport and communications,

Noting that the Government of Mauritania, by implementing a policy of economic austerity, devaluing its currency and raising producer prices, expects to succeed in 1985 in reducing the budget deficit that has accumulated over the preceding ten years,

Noting also that, despite the implementation by Mauritania of the harsh adjustment measures proposed by the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, the country remains dependent on external sources for financing public and private investment,

Further noting with concern the deficit in the balance of payments from 1975 to 1984, the modest level of foreign-currency reserves and the accumulation from year to year of arrears in payments,

Beating in mind the concern expressed by Member States and international organizations with regard to the catastrophic economic and social situation created in Mauritania by drought, desertification and war, and the particular interest that they take in the control of desertification with a view to the country's rapid return to normal living conditions and to its reconstruction and development,

Considering with satisfaction that the Government of Mauritania has, for the first time this year, succeeded in inducing several thousands of people to leave the urban centres and to return to their native soil in order to devote themselves to agriculture and stockraising,

Noting the urgent request addressed by the Government of Mauritania to the Secretary-General for the classification of Mauritania as one of the least developed countries,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize humanitarian assistance for the countries affected by drought and desertification in general, and particularly for Mauritania as a country severely affected, and invites the international community to respond generously to the humanitarian needs of Mauritania;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to the countries, organizations of the United Nations system, other international organizations, the community commission, voluntary agencies and individuals whose generous assistance to the stricken population of Mauritania has never failed;

3. Appeals urgently to all Member States, specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies, as well as to international economic and financial institutions, to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, towards meeting Mauritania's reconstruction, recovery, rehabilitation and development needs;

4. Invites the Economic and Social Council to request the Committee for Development Planning to examine, on a priority basis, the socio-economic situation of Mauritania and to consider including it in the list of the least developed countries;

5. Requests Member States, as well as United Nations programmes and organizations, to take special measures for Mauritania for the remainder of the Third United Nations Development Decade, pending examination of its situation by the Committee for Development Planning;

6. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to maintain their current programmes and expand their future programmes of assistance and to report periodically to the Secretary-General on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help Mauritania so that the General Assembly may consider them at its forty-first session;

7. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize international assistance for Mauritania and to ensure that the appropriate arrangements are made in order to establish an effective programme of special assistance;

(b) To open a special account under the United Nations Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes, in order to facilitate payments of contributions for Mauritania, and urges Member States, non-governmental organizations and individuals to contribute generously to this account;

(c) To keep the situation in Mauritania constantly under review, to maintain contact with Member States, specialized agencies, regional and intergovernmental organizations and international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the volume of economic assistance granted to Mauritania;

(d) To report on the progress achieved in remedying the economic situation of Mauritania and on the international assistance granted to the country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

Following approval of the text in the Committee, Belgium particularly welcomed paragraph 4; Mauritania deserved special attention, it believed.

Mozambique

In his September 1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> on special economic assistance to 14 African countries, the Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(55)</sup> reported on such assistance to Mozambique.

During the period under review, the country's economic and financial situation had not improved; if anything, the internal security situation appeared to have deteriorated. On 23 March 1985, the Council of Ministers had announced measures to reinforce national defence and the introduction of a policy of maximum austerity, specifically in respect of fuel consumption, and policies to ensure improvement of economic and financial management.

In addition, Mozambique had continued to suffer from natural disasters. During the first two months of 1985, precipitation had been fair to good throughout most of the country, but the rain pattern had been irregular-heavy downpours had brought floods in the central and southern zones of the country which were expected to improve soil fertility in general, but summer crops had been lost. On 26 March, cyclonic winds with speeds of about 100 kilometres per hour had struck southern Maputo province, cutting off electrical supply to the capital, adversely affecting water supplies, hospitals, industrial activities, port operations, irrigation schemes, communications and public services. In spite of the difficulties, the Government had continued not only to deal with the immediate crises but also to establish a basis for long-term development.

By the end of 1984, the country's outstanding external debt totalled $2.4 billion, including arrears; of that amount, 92 per cent represented bilateral public debt owed to OECD members (36 per cent), centrally planned economies (30 per cent) and countries of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) (16 per cent). At a Paris Club meeting in October 1984, agreement had been reached to provide debt relief on accumulated arrears as at 30 June 1984, as well as debt-service payments due between 1 July 1984 and 30 June 1985, leaving an estimated $550 million in payments due in 1984-1986. In spite of the debt relief, the debt-service ratio at the end of 1984 was equivalent to 174 per cent of the value of exports of goods, not including accumulated arrears.

Mozambique's emergency needs as presented at a country specific meeting (Geneva, 15 March 1985) totalled $88.5 million: food aid ($39.2 million), agricultural inputs ($17 million), essential health action ($10 million), relief survival items ($3.4 million), essential water projects ($10.9 million) and logistic inputs ($3.9 million). Those figures were under constant review and were revised in accordance with changing circumstances.

Even before the current emergency, Mozambique had relied on food aid to supplement domestic production and commercial imports to meet domestic food requirements. The Government reported that in 1984 food aid had totalled 308,451 tons. The country's cereal requirements (maize, wheat and rice) from 1 March to 31 December 1985 was estimated at 678,100 tons. The global supply forecast for that period was 408,400 tons (available stocks, 47,600 tons; planned market production, 103,800; commercial purchases, 103,700; WFP projects, 13,900; and food and commitments, 139,400), leaving a deficit of 269,700 tons.

In addition to emergency and food aid requirements, the Government called for a number of priority rehabilitation projects designed to link emergency assistance with development efforts. Those projects, totalling $84 million, included: rehabilitation of a rural commercial network ($22 million); support for a health network (medicines) ($4 million); water supply and construction ($5.3 million); rehabilitation of rural roads ($1.9 million); and irrigation schemes ($50.8 million).

In his report on the critical economic situation in Africa,<sup>(6)</sup> the Secretary-General gave an overview of the emergency situation in Mozambique as presented at the 15 March country-specific meeting. Government representatives had emphasized the need to give attention to rehabilitation as well as emergency needs, which included questions of food distribution, domestic market mechanisms, security aspects, accessibility of stricken populations in remote areas, structural measures, and relief and/or rehabilitation programmes.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly, on 17 December, adopted resolution 40/232 without vote.

Assistance to Mozambique

The General Assembly,

Recalling Security Council resolution 386(1976) of 17 March 1976, in which the Council appealed to all States to provide financial, technical and material assistance to enable Mozambique to carry out its economic development programme, and requested the Secretary-General, in collaboration with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to organize, with immediate effect, such assistance,

Recalling further its resolution 39/199 of 17 December 1984 and its earlier resolutions, in which it urged the international community to respond effectively and generously with assistance to Mozambique,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to its resolution 38/208, to which was annexed the report of the mission to Mozambique,

Deeply concerned at the loss of life and the destruction of essential infrastructures such as roads, railways, bridges, petroleum facilities, electricity supply, schools and hospitals, as identified in the reports of the Secretary-General,

Further concerned about the present difficult economic situation of Mozambique, as illustrated in the summary report of the Secretary-General, submitted pursuant to its resolution 39/199,

Noting with deep concern that Mozambique has continued to suffer from a prolonged drought causing heavy losses in human lives, food production and livestock and resulting in dislocation of its affected people,

Also noting with deep concern the extensive damage caused by the cyclone "Demosina" at the end of January 1984,

Noting that Mozambique faces an emergency food situation of an exceptional scale and needs imports of 638,000 tonnes of cereals in 1985/1986 to meet its food requirements, according to government estimates,

Recognizing that substantial international assistance is required for the implementation of a number of reconstruction and development projects,

1. Strongly endorses the appeals made by the Security Council and the Secretary-General for international assistance to Mozambique;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the measures he has taken to organize an international economic assistance programme for Mozambique;

3. Also expresses its appreciation for the assistance provided to Mozambique by various States and regional and international organizations and humanitarian institutions;

4. Regrets, however, that the total assistance provided to date falls far short of Mozambique's pressing needs;

5. Appeals to the international community to provide adequate food aid to Mozambique to prevent further starvation and malnutrition;

6. Draws the attention of the international community to the two areas for immediate action--the supply of crude oil and petroleum products and the supply of basic inputs and consumer goods for the agricultural sector--that are critical for the functioning of the economy;

7. Also draws the attention of the international community to the additional financial, economic and material assistance identified in the annex to the report of the Secretary-General as urgently required by Mozambique;

8. Calls upon Member States, regional and inter-regional organizations and other governmental and non-governmental organizations to provide financial, material and technical assistance to Mozambique, wherever possible in the form of grants, and urges them to give priority to the inclusion of Mozambique in their programmes of development assistance;

9. Urges Member States and organizations that are already implementing or negotiating assistance programmes for Mozambique to strengthen them;

10. Strongly appeals to the international community to contribute to the special account for Mozambique established by the Secretary-General for the purpose of facilitating the channelling of contributions to Mozambique;

11. Invites the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system--in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization--to maintain and increase their current and future programmes of assistance to Mozambique, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

12. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary financial, technical and material assistance to Mozambique;

(b) To keep the situation in Mozambique under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, the specialized agencies, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, international financial institutions and other bodies concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Mozambique;

(c) To prepare, on the basis of sustained consultations with the Government of Mozambique, a report on the development of the economic situation and the implementation of the special programme of economic assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without Vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 5 December (meeting 48); 44-nation draft (AC.2/40/L.72), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations: agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Austria, Bangladesh, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Congo, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Egypt, Ethiopia, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guinea Bissau, India, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Portugal, Sao Tome and Principe, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Sweden, United Republic of Tanzania, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Sao Tome and Principe

In September 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General, in response to a 1984 request by the General Assembly,<sup>(56)</sup> reported on economic assistance to Sao Tome and Principe, an archipelagic LDC with a population estimated at 104,000, affected by natural disasters-drought in some parts of the country combined with erratic rainfall in others, resulting in a disruption of the country's staple foods and cocoa production.

As indicated by the Government, the country's basic food requirements for 1985 were an estimated 14,000 tons of rice, sugar, wheat flour, beans, powdered skim milk and vegetable oil, of which some 4,000 tons were requested as food assistance.

The Secretary-General, also in September, reported<sup>(2)</sup> that special economic assistance to Sao Tome and Principe by the United Nations system included help in census analysis by DTCD, financed by UNFPA; port management by UNCTAD, funded by UNDP; health by UNICEF; industrial development by UNIDO; development and emergency operations projects by WFP; forestry, apiculture and crops by FAO, funded by UNDP, as well as equipment and pesticides for plant protection, financed by the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund; and artisanal fisheries by IFAD. In addition, UNDP supported various projects to increase agricultural production.

Sierra Leone

The Secretary-General, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(26)</sup> reported in September 1985<sup>(1)</sup> on special economic assistance to Sierra Leone, an LDC experiencing economic and financial difficulties, owing in part to structural imbalances in its economy and in part to the adverse impact of the slow-down in global economic activity. Average per capita GNP in 1982 was estimated at $390, with great disparities in income distribution.

However, Sierra Leone had the potential to achieve self-sustaining growth; it had natural resources and was suitable for agriculture, which provided employment to some 65 per cent of the work force and accounted for 30 per cent of GDP and 35 per cent of export earnings. The country was also endowed with mineral deposits, including diamonds, bauxite, rutile and iron ore, and there was a modest output of gold. The mining sector accounted for 65 per cent of export earnings. In addition, the country had excellent possibilities for hydropower development.

After growing at the rate of 4 per cent annually during the 1970s, Sierra Leone's economy became affected by the global recession of the early 1980s and had virtually stagnated since then. With an annual population growth rate of 2.7 per cent in 1974-1985, per capita income fell. A macro-economic environment typified by distortions and imbalances that were a disincentive to growth, as well as a decline in exports and export prices and capital outflow, resulted in a balance-of-payments crisis. Gross fiscal imbalance resulted in deficits in excess of 14 per cent of GDP, financed mainly by domestic bank credit, which resulted in the virtual doubling of the money supply between fiscal year 1984 and 1985 and was the principal cause of inflation. The fiscal deficit, due largely to declining revenue collection, affected development projects and project implementation became problematic. In an effort to redress the situation, the Government in December 1985 instituted a number of corrective measures.

The country's debt, amounting to $670 million at the end of 1985, was a question of concern. Discussions were under way between the Government and IMF about the possibility of a stand-by arrangement, and with the World Bank for a structural adjustment credit to support Sierra Leone's adjustment programme.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/220 without vote.

Assistance to Sierra Leone

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/158 of 17 December 1982, 38/205 of 20 December 1983 and 39/192 of 17 December 1984, in which it appealed to all States, the specialized agencies and international development and financial institutions to provide all possible assistance for the development of Sierra Leone,

Further recalling its resolution 37/133 of 17 December 1982, in which it decided to include Sierra Leone in the list of the least developed countries,

Having considered the summary report of the Secretary-General,

Noting with concern that the economy of Sierra Leone is being undermined by severe scarcities of imported raw materials and spare parts for industry, a drying-up of trade and commercial credits, large commercial payment arrears and unmitigated strains on government finances,

Noting that the Government of Sierra Leone, in co-operation with the United Nations Development Programme, embarked upon preparations for a round table of partners in development of Sierra Leone, which was originally to be held early in 1985 but was deferred until early 1986,

Reiterating the need for effective mobilization of international assistance in order to implement fully the programme of development outlined in the report of the multi-agency mission,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Sierra Leone;

2. Urgently reiterates its appeal to the international community, including the specialized agencies and other organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to contribute generously, through bilateral or multilateral channels, to the economic and social development of Sierra Leone;

3. Urges all States and relevant United Nations bodies-in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities-to provide all possible assistance to help the Government of Sierra Leone meet the critical humanitarian needs of the population and to provide, as appropriate, food, medicines and essential equipment for hospitals and schools;

4. Invites the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the World Food Programme, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Bank, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Sierra Leone and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1986;

5. Appeals to all States and international organizations to participate at a high level in the round table of partners in development of Sierra Leone to be held early in 1986, and to contribute generously to the programme of action that will be presented by the Government of Sierra Leone;

6. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Sierra Leone;

(b) To apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the assistance granted to Sierra Leone;

(c) To keep the situation regarding assistance to Sierra Leone under review and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/220

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 47): 13-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.56); agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Algeria, Bangladesh, Chad, Ethiopia, Guinea, Japan, Madagascar, Nepal, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Uganda.

Swaziland

Swaziland, a land-locked developing country with a population of about 600,000 and an estimated per capita income of $880, continued to experience a difficult economic situation as a result of the 1981-1983 drought, the January 1984 cyclone Demoina, reduced investment and the world-wide recession which remained particularly severe in southern Africa, according to a September 1985 report of the Secretary-General.<sup>(1)</sup> Real growth of the economy remained negligible and per capita income fell as the population grew by 3.4 per cent annually. Opportunities existed for productive investment, but the slower growth of revenues and the burden of cyclone rehabilitation on the budget restricted government support of new investments.

The Fourth Development Plan (1984-1988), approved in late 1984, forecast that the economy would grow by 0.7 per cent per year during the remainder of the Plan period, implying a continuing annual fall in per capita income of 2.6 per cent. Government revenue was targeted to grow at 1.5 per cent annually and the trade deficit was expected to widen, mainly owing to poor prospects for the price of the sugar. The targets of the Plan included: greater efficiency and control over the use of public funds; stimulation of private investment; promotion of job creation; and establishment of productive agriculture employment opportunities in rural areas. The Government estimated it would take five years to complete the repair of damage caused by the 1984 cyclone; this was reflected in the 1985/86 budget by a shift in resource allocations from the social sector to the economic sector of some 10 per cent compared with 1984/85.

Although the balance of payments improved compared to previous years, the downward trend remained a matter of concern and indicated the need for overall restraint in public spending, diversification of exports and better promotion of private investment.

Agricultural production showed a marked improvement in the 1983/84 season with record crops in maize, sugar and pineapples. Maize production reached 110,000 tons as compared to 51,000 tons in 1982/83, and sugar production was 380,000 tons in 1983/84 and 402,000 tons in 1984/85. However, the falling price of sugar and the declining proportion of the crop being sold under quota or to protected markets resulted in a reduction in revenue. Pineapple production continued to grow and world prices improved owing to reduced supply from other areas. Citrus production, which had shown a downward trend in recent years, was seriously affected by the 1984 cyclone. Cotton, however, had made some recovery since the 1981-1983 drought, but production was still below earlier years; it was anticipated that a planned textile mill would stimulate production.

The manufacturing industry was dominated by processing local agricultural and forest products. Wood pulp—the second major export after sugar—was produced at a record 180,000 tons in 1984. Improvements were also recorded in the mining and transportation sectors. The Government signed an $8.6 million loan agreement with the World Bank for a road rehabilitation programme following cyclone Demoina. Other assistance came from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) ($1.06 million) and the United Kingdom, which undertook the reconstruction of a principal bridge—Big Bend. The project for expanding Matsapha Airport was expected to be completed in 1986 and the northern rail link was scheduled to be opened late in 1985. The completion of the Luphohlo-Ezulwini hydroelectric scheme allowed Swaziland to become 70 per cent self-sufficient in electric-power generation.

To improve the funding of hospitals, especially in the area of drugs, the health sector budget was increased in 1985. Preventive health programmes continued to focus on the maternal and child health sector and on the control of infectious and water-borne diseases. Potable water supplies reached 80 per cent of the urban and 40 per cent of the rural populations. A recently approved UNDP project, financed from the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund, made available $750,000 to provide potable water to an additional 25,000 people; the project was to focus particularly on the needs of drought-prone areas where surface water supplies had dried up during the 1981-1983 drought.

The special economic assistance programme aimed at repairing and reconstructing Swaziland's infrastructure resulting from cyclone and flood damage: nine projects were for road and bridge rehabilitation; five dealt with agriculture; two related to power; four were for water supply; and three concerned public facilities.

Assistance to Swaziland by United Nations bodies and agencies was summarized by the Secretary-General in another September 1985 report.<sup>(2)</sup> Among them, the World Bank/IDA made new loans totalling $8.6 million in fiscal 1985 for cyclone rehabilitation. Other projects included the repair of cyclone-damaged schools financed by UNESCO and vocational rehabilitation of the disabled by ILO, funded by UNDP.

Uganda

The Secretary-General had been requested in 1984<sup>(27)</sup> to report to the General Assembly in 1985 on the economic situation and on the made in Organizing international assistance to Uganda. In September 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> he indicated that the Government had been asked whether it would wish the report to be based on the findings of a review mission or whether it would prefer to provide information for an interim report. Uganda requested a review mission, but asked that it be postponed.

In 1985, Uganda's economic situation continued to be precarious. Except for a period of recovery in 1981/82 to 1983/84, the country had been in economic decline since the early 1970s. Civil war had brought physical destruction, disruption of economic and social services, large-scale displacement of population within the country and flight of great numbers from it. The Luwera triangle, once among the richest areas in the country, was a wasteland. Transport bottle-necks were hindering the supply of foodstuffs to urban areas and the export of coffee, from which 95 per cent of export revenues were derived.

According to government estimates, Uganda's GDP fell between 1970 and 1985 by 11 per cent in real terms, while agricultural and manufacturing outputs declined by 30 and 50 per cent, respectively; the former exporter of sugar had come to import almost all its sugar requirements and, with the exception of staple foodstuffs, almost every essential commodity had to be imported. By the end of 1985, foreign exchange reserves had dwindled to the equivalent of less than two weeks of 1984/85 imports, and the shortage of raw materials, spare parts and equipment had idled industrial plants.

Assistance to Uganda by the United Nations system<sup>(2)</sup> included assistance in family planning by UNFPA; health and water supplies by UNICEF; development projects by UNIDO and WFP; livestock, dairy production, rehabilitation of national parks, emergency assistance for displaced persons, seeds and animal disease control by FAO; a project funded by UNDP and implemented by ICAO for pilot training and aircraft maintenance; agricultural development by IFAD and IDA; and a labour-intensive employment programme and assistance to a national manpower survey, carried out by ILO and funded by UNDP. In 1985, the World Bank/IDA granted new loans totalling $71.6 million for agricultural development, petroleum exploration and water supply projects.

UNCTAD continued its assistance to Uganda, with financial support from UNDP, as requested by the Trade and Development Board on 29 March 1985.<sup>(57)</sup> In December, UNCTAD reported<sup>(58)</sup> that, apart from its continuing technical support provided under a UNDP-financed project on external sector development, it had identified in Uganda the need for technical assistance in the area of external debt control; a project to be financed by UNDP at a cost of $89,000 was signed in 1985. Uganda also benefited from a regional transit-transport project, funded by UNDP and executed by UNCTAD, which covered the land-locked developing countries of East and Central Africa; assistance provided to Uganda under that project included advisory services in subregional transit-transport legal arrangements, the establishment of dry ports and other inland facilities for the trans-shipment of goods, the co-ordination of road and rail transport, the harmonization of transit-transport policies and the removal of non-physical barriers to transit-transport operations.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, the General Assembly adopted decision 40/453 without vote.

Assistance to Uganda

At its 120th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, having heard the statement of the representative of Uganda on 13 November 1985, and recalling its resolution 39/188 of 17 December 1984 on assistance to Uganda, decided to request the Secretary-General to continue to review the progress made in the economic situation in Uganda and in organizing international assistance for that country, to apprise the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986 of the situation and to report thereon to the Assembly at its forty-first session.

Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 11 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.120), based on informal consultations; agenda item 87.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 34, 50; plenary 120.

In resolution 40/221, the Assembly dealt with relief to drought-stricken areas of East Africa, including Uganda.

Speaking on 13 November before the Second Committee, Uganda regretted that the Secretary-General had not submitted a report to the current Assembly session and that the section of his report<sup>(1)</sup> on special economic assistance dealing with Uganda contained no information on the country's situation in 1985. In view of its unchanged economic situation, Uganda would not submit a draft resolution on special assistance; it wished, however, to have an explicit statement from either the Committee Chairman or the Secretary-General as to whether resolution 39/188 still constituted a valid mandate and a directive to the Secretary-General. After two decades of anguish caused by political and moral decay and abuse of power by the previous authorities, Uganda was engaged in a determined effort to secure peace based on justice, law and order and economic and social prosperity for all Ugandans; the additional external assistance Uganda was requesting would supplement, rather than replace, national efforts.

Countries in other regions

Bolivia

On 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted decision 40/452 on special assistance to Bolivia. The Assembly decided, at the request of Venezuela, that the Secretary-General should transfer all remaining monies from the United Nations Special Fund, which consisted solely of contributions from Venezuela to that Fund, together with the interest accumulated over the years, to the Bolivia account in the Trust Fund for Special Economic Assistance Programmes.

Speaking on 25 November after the Committee's approval of the draft decision, Bolivia thanked Venezuela for its generous contribution to alleviate the effects of the serious economic crisis in Bolivia; the collapse of international prices for tin, which ranked second among Bolivia's export products, had had a negative effect on the Government's economic recovery programme.

Democratic Yemen

In July 1985,<sup>(59)</sup> the Secretary-General, in response to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(60)</sup> reported on international assistance to Democratic Yemen, which had suffered serious damage from consecutive floods in 1981 and 1982, estimated at $950 million. According to the Disaster Relief Committee set up by the Government, the estimated losses were: loss of human life, 482; homeless, 12,000 families (about 50,000 people); houses destroyed, 25,000; and animals killed, 50,000 (sheep, goats, camels and cows).

Immediate action was taken by the international community to alleviate the devastating damages. According to information gathered by the UNDP Resident Representative in Democratic Yemen, assistance for relief operations was provided by 12 countries on a bilateral basis, 17 national or regional members of the Red Cross/Red Crescent and five United Nations organizations (UNDRO, UNICEF, UNDP, WFP and WHO).

Most of the rehabilitation and reconstruction programmes, which totalled $36.2 million in credits and grants, were either completed or nearing completion as of June 1985. For example, the reconstruction of flood-damaged roads in Abyan and Aden, a project funded by the World Bank, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development and the OPEC Fund, had achieved most of its objectives. However, a few projects were delayed, such as flood control of the Wadi Bana'a and the Wadi Hasan (FAO assistance) and Gabion flood protection (Netherlands Trust Fund assistance), which had begun in 1984 and were expected to be completed by mid-1986. A UNCDF-assisted project for the rehabilitation of crop production in the Abyan Delta started in January 1985 and was expected to be completed by the end of 1987. The reconstruction and rehabilitation of the Batais Dam by the USSR resulted in a new request from Democratic Yemen for the same kind of assistance for the Haiya Dam and canals. Operations under that project, also assisted by the USSR, started in January 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly, on 17 December 1985, adopted resolution 40/215 without vote.

Assistance to Democratic Yemen

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/184 of 17 December 1984 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1982/6 of 28 April 1982 and 1982/59 of 30 July 1982 concerning the extensive devastation caused by the heavy floods in Democratic Yemen,

Recalling also resolution 107(IX) of 11 May 1982 of the Economic Commission for Western Asia, in which the Commission called for the urgent establishment of a programme for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the flood-stricken areas of Democratic Yemen,

Having considered the report prepared by the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator on the extent and nature of the damage caused by the floods,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Democratic Yemen,

Recognizing that Democratic Yemen, as one of the least developed countries, is unable to bear the mounting burden of rehabilitation and reconstruction of the affected areas,

Recognizing also the efforts made by Democratic Yemen to alleviate the suffering of the victims of the floods,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken regarding assistance to Democratic Yemen;

2. Expresses its gratitude to those States and international, regional and intergovernmental organizations that have provided assistance to Democratic Yemen;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective, comprehensive programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Democratic Yemen in order to help to mitigate the damage inflicted on it and implement its rehabilitation and reconstruction plans;

4. Appeals to Member States to contribute generously through bilateral or multilateral channels to the reconstruction and development process in Democratic Yemen;

5. Invites the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system—in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the World Food Programme, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization—to maintain and expand their programmes of assistance to Democratic Yemen and to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective programme of assistance to that country;

6. Calls upon regional and interregional organizations and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to continue their assistance to the development requirements of Democratic Yemen;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to keep the situation in Democratic Yemen under review and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/215

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 47); 29-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.45), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, China, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ethiopia, India, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yemen.

Haiti

In response to a 1984 General Assembly request<sup>(*)</sup> that he consult with the Government of Haiti on its special assistance needs: the Secretary-General arranged for a mission to visit the country from 1 to 6 July and from 15 to 18 October 1985. The mission's report<sup>(62)</sup> reviewed the economic situation and key economic and social sectors, assessed development priorities, problems and critical issues, and presented for consideration by the international community priority programmes and projects requiring external assistance.

With a per capita GDP of $300, Haiti was the only country in the Americas to be classified by the United Nations as an LDC. Indications were that some 80 per cent of children under five years of age suffered from malnutrition. Infant mortality was reported at a high 120 per 1,000 live births. Sanitation was inadequate in both urban and rural areas. Under public education, only 17 per cent of children attended school. It was estimated that 77 per cent of the overall population was illiterate, with the percentage as high as 90 per cent in rural areas, where 75 per cent of Haiti's 5.3 million people lived. There was a strong exodus to principal cities, exacerbating unemployment and attendant social problems. Although the estimated population growth rate of 1.4 to 1.5 per cent was relatively low, it still exceeded increases in agricultural production. As a result of population pressure on available land and the general lack of alternative employment prospects, net emigration was high, averaging 25,000 annually in recent years.

It was estimated that only 70 to 80 per cent of the country's food requirements were grown locally. Virtually all requirements for wheat and wheat by-products (some 150,000 tons per annum) had to be imported. The annual deficit of locally produced grains ranged between 50,000 and 100,000 tons as compared to a local production of 400,000 tons. Food products accounted for almost 20 per cent of the value of all imports. The production of export crops (bananas, coffee, rice, maize and sugar cane) stagnated or declined.

Between 1980 and 1984, Haiti's external debt more than doubled, reaching $600 million by September 1984, and capital inflows were insufficient to offset the deficits, resulting in a drawing down of reserves and a chronically deficit government budget.

Following a government reform in 1982 of the educational system, which was to be restructured gradually into a 10-year programme of basic education, the number of students attending classes increased to 56 per cent in 1984/85, compared with 38 per cent in 1979/80.

Haiti benefited over the years from external development aid and technical assistance; Canada, France, Japan, the United States and, more recently, the Federal Republic of Germany had carried out active bilateral programmes. Grant and loan commitments in 1984 totalled some $83 million compared to $46.5 million in 1980.

The Inter-American Development Bank, EEC, the Organization of American States, WFP, IFAD and various United Nations agencies increased their grant commitments from $13.9 million in 1980 to $25.1 million in 1984. Concessional multilateral loan commitments on the other hand fell to $20.3 million in 1984 after reaching a peak of $80.1 million in 1983. The drop was primarily the result of IDA making no loan commitments to Haiti in 1984, reflecting difficulties encountered over the replenishment of its resources. In 1983, a stand-by agreement had been negotiated with IMF to continue stabilization efforts and to continue reducing the public sector deficit financed by Central Bank credit and non-concessional resources. The programme called for further measures to increase revenues and tighten control over public sector expenditure, and emphasis was given to improving tax administration. In September 1984, IMF determined that Haiti's performance had fallen short of the agreed programme and the stand-by agreement was suspended.

Over 300 NGOs or private volunteer agencies also carried out programmes in Haiti, primarily financed externally, which were estimated to have exceeded the $14.8 million recorded by the World Bank in 1984. The Government was negotiating with the Inter-American Development Bank a series of projects to be initiated in 1985-1986, totalling about $145 million; they included rural education, drinking water, transportation infrastructure, rural development, health services and agricultural credit. Several of the projects were to be co-financed with other bilateral or multilateral donors.

The mission concurred in the Government's assessment that, while development efforts must continue in all areas, it must accord the highest priority to overcoming the critical problems of deforestation/soil erosion and illiteracy. The international community was urged to provide the necessary financial and technical assistance.

In addition, Haiti identified specific priority projects requiring external assistance that it wished to be called to the attention of the international community. The projects, amounting to $156 million, dealt with agriculture, industry, energy, potable water, transport, education, health, commerce and other sectors.

In a September 1985 report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General described the activities of United Nations bodies and specialized agencies in Haiti, among them a UNDP-funded project on assistance in planning, carried out by UNCTAD; UNFPA support for the Government's maternal and child health care programme; emergency operations and development projects by WFP; rural development, livestock, crops, fisheries, forestry and fertilizers by FAO; fellowships and a consultancy mission by UPU; and projects to strengthen the national meteorological service and its observing equipment by WMO.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 40/454 on special economic assistance programmes, the General Assembly, on 17 December, took note of the mission's report on Haiti.

Kiribati

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1984 request of the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(63)</sup> arranged for a review mission to Kiribati from 28 January to 6 February 1985 to consult with the Government on priority sectors for development and its needs for external assistance.

Kiribati comprises 33 islands in the central Pacific Ocean. Among the main groups are the Gilbert Islands, which includes Tarawa, the centre of Government; the Line Islands, which include Kiritimati (or Christmas) Island, the largest island in the country; and the Phoenix Islands, of which only Kanton was inhabited in 1985. According to the mission's report, annexed to a report of the Secretary-General,<sup>(64)</sup> the country's population was estimated at 63,000 in 1982; its growth of about 2.2 per cent annually was accompanied by internal migration to the urban area of Bairiki in south Tarawa.

The atoll environment of the islands of Kiribati, with the exception of Banaba (in the Gilbert Islands), limited agricultural production. In addition, local production for inter-island and international trade was hampered by limited and relatively expensive transport. The principal food crops of the country were babai (swamp taro), pandanus and breadfruit, cultivated mainly for subsistence, and coconut palms, grown for both subsistence and trade. Chickens and pigs were raised mostly for subsistence. Ocean, lagoon and reef fishing were important subsistence activities. However, a high proportion of local food consumption, especially in areas of high population density, came from imports.

In its national development plan for 1983-1986, the Government attempted to deal with the critical effects on the economy of the termination of phosphate mining operations on Banaba in 1979, to sustain the survival, health, education and employment of the people, and to evolve towards economic self-sufficiency. Practically all development projects under the plan were financed from external sources. The largest donor, the United Kingdom, contributed some 52 per cent during the first two years of the plan. Other major sources of funding came from Australia, Japan, New Zealand and the European Development Fund. The Government also received substantial non-financial assistance from the same group, of which three fifths consisted of aid-in-kind.

In a September 1985 report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General indicated that United Nations assistance to Kiribati included training fellowships by ICAO, ILO and UPU, all financed by UNDP, as well as financial support by UNFPA to the Tungara National Youth Council.

On 29 June 1985, in a decision on the allocation of resources for the fourth programming cycle (1987-1991),<sup>(65)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council took full account of the problems of island developing countries such as Kiribati and agreed to apply supplementary criteria to the determination of UNDP resources which would be made available to them.

UNDP assisted Kiribati with its Development Co-ordination Meeting of Donors, held in May/June 1985, designed, among other things, to review capital and technical assistance programmes and attract new donors.

On 19 September,<sup>(66)</sup> Papua New Guinea transmitted to the Secretary-General a South Pacific Forum communique of 6 August, which included a statement on smaller island countries, among them Kiribati. The Forum stressed the fact that characteristics of smallness, isolation, lack of resources and vulnerability gave rise to severe problems in terms of limited agricultural and manufacturing potential, diseconomies of scale and weak bargaining power, expensive and irregular transport links and inadequate communications. It recognized that special emphasis on meeting the needs of those countries should be given through support of their national development strategies and preferential treatment in regional programmes. To that end., it considered a series of proposals in the fields of fisheries, transport, tourism, agriculture, external employment, energy, water, culture, minerals, manufacturing, communications and education.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 1985/184 of 25 July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the mission's report on Kiribati,<sup>(64)</sup> and transmitted it to the General Assembly. The Assembly took note of it on 17 December, by decision 40/454.

Nicaragua

In October 1985,<sup>(67)</sup> the Secretary-General reported on assistance to Nicaragua, as requested by the General Assembly in 1984.<sup>(68)</sup> The report was based on information received from Nicaragua, nine Member States (Denmark, France, German Democratic Republic, Federal Republic of Germany, Ireland, Italy, Netherlands, Spain, Sweden), and United Nations bodies and agencies. In 1984, external bilateral assistance pledged to Nicaragua amounted to $341.7 million, bringing the total for the period from 1979 to 1984 to $2,109.5 million (Western Europe, 297.3 million; North America, 88.3 million; Latin America, $803.6 million; Africa and Asia, $139.8 million; and socialist countries, $780.5 million), while resources pledged by multilateral agencies for that period totalled $629.9 million. Non-reimbursable bilateral assistance and assistance from NGOs from 1980 to 1984 totalled $194.8 million; for the period from 1 January to 31 May 1985, that assistance reached $3.2 million. In addition, 201,870 tons of food-over 90 per cent in grain--was provided from January 1984 to July 1985 by 10 countries (Argentina, Austria, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Netherlands, Romania, Sweden, USSR, Yugoslavia), EEC and WFP.

Assistance approved by the United Nations system from 19 July 1979 to 1 April 1984 amounted to over $258.5 million, of which $149.6 million was financial and $108.9 million was technical. According to information provided by the resident co-ordinator of operational activities for development at Managua, co-operation and technical assistance approved between 1 April 1984 and 1 May 1985 totalled some $23.6 million.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/234 without vote.

Assistance to Nicaragua

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 34/8 of 25 October 1979, 35/84 of 5 December 1980, 36/213 of 17 December 1981, 37/157 of 17 December 1982, 38/223 of 20 December 1983 and 39/204 of 17 December 1984 concerning assistance for the reconstruction of Nicaragua,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to Nicaragua,

Noting with satisfaction the support that Member States, the specialized agencies and other organizations of the United Nations system have given to the efforts of the Government of Nicaragua for the reconstruction of the country,

Bearing in mind that, in recent years, the Nicaraguan economy has been adversely affected by various events and natural disasters, such as drought, the intense rains and floods of 1982 and a sequence of natural disasters in June, July, October and November 1985,

Considering that, despite the efforts of the Government and people of Nicaragua, the economic situation has not returned to normal and continues to worsen,

Deeply concerned that Nicaragua is experiencing serious economic difficulties directly affecting its development efforts,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his efforts regarding assistance to Nicaragua;
2. Expresses its appreciation also to the States and organizations that have provided assistance to Nicaragua;
3. Urges all Governments to continue contributing to the reconstruction and development of Nicaragua;
4. Invites the organizations of the United Nations system to continue and to increase their assistance in this endeavour;
5. Recommends that Nicaragua should continue to receive treatment appropriate to the special needs of the country until the economic situation returns to normal;
6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/234

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 47); 66-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.74), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations: agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Benin, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, China, Colombia, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, India, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Romania, Sao Tome and Principe, Seychelles, Spain, Suriname, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Trinidad and Tobago, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zambia.

Tuvalu

The Secretary-General, as requested by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,<sup>(63)</sup> arranged for a review mission to Tuvalu from 21 to 28 January 1985 to consult with the Government. According to the mission's report,<sup>(69)</sup> Tuvalu—consisting of nine widely dispersed coral atoll islands in the South Pacific—had a population of 8,364 in mid-1983, over a thousand more than in 1979. The rapid growth rate during that period, averaging 3.4 per cent annually, was the result of a significant inflow of returning Tuvaluans after the cessation of phosphate mining in 1979 on Banaba Island, Kiribati, and of repatriation from Nauru in 1982. It was accompanied by internal migration to and urbanization of the capital, Funafuti.

The mission reported that Tuvalu's atoll environment imposed serious constraints on its agricultural production, whose principal crops were coconuts, pandanus, swamp taro and toa, grown almost entirely for subsistence consumption. While chickens and pigs were raised, mostly on a subsistence basis, livestock development was limited by the inability to expand local feed production. Lagoon and reef fishing were important subsistence activities, but a high proportion of local food demand was met by imports, particularly in urban areas. Tourism was negligible and prospects for its development were limited owing to the remoteness of the country, infrequent and expensive air services, and limited tourist accommodations.

The mission stated that Tuvalu faced all of the constraints endemic to small island developing countries. The dispersion of islands and the remoteness of the country posed serious problems and costs in relation to both inter-island and international communication and commerce. In addition to unproductive soil which limited progress towards agricultural self-sufficiency, the absence of known mineral resources precluded economic activity in that area. Given its small size and open nature, Tuvalu's economy was highly vulnerable to external pressures whether in the form of commodity price movements (copra and tuna), financial developments, including imported inflation, or the general state of the world economy (demand for philatelic exports, on which Tuvalu's export receipts were dependent). Amid those constraints, the Government was called on to provide the basic services necessary for the welfare of its people.

As stated in its third development plan, for 1984-1987, the country's long-term objectives included strengthening and diversification of the Tuvalu economy as a means of achieving ultimate self-sufficiency, and continued improvement in the standard of living to reasonable levels that would ensure a secure, healthy and productive family life within the traditional social system and customs in all islands. To finance its development programme, Tuvalu was almost completely dependent on external assistance. Donor commitments for capital development programmes in 1985 totalled $3 million (4.5 million Australian dollars), with the United Kingdom and Australia as the main contributors. Other donors included Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, the Republic of Korea, the United States (through Save the Children) and EEC, besides UNDP and other agencies.

A statement on smaller island countries, among them Tuvalu, was adopted by the South Pacific Forum in August. The statement was included in a communiqué transmitted to the Secretary-General on 19 September by Papua New Guinea (see p. 530).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/184, took note of the mission's report and transmitted it to the General Assembly. The Assembly took note of it by decision 40/454 of 17 December.

Vanuatu

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(28)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in September 1985 on special economic and disaster relief assistance to Vanuatu,<sup>(1)</sup> an archipelago with an estimated population of 128,000, which became independent in 1980. About 87 per cent of the indigenous labour force was engaged in agricultural activities, although that sector contributed only 20 per cent to GDP, with government and other services making up 50 per cent of GDP, and offshore banking and tourism accounting for about 10 to 15 per cent of total output. The dualistic nature of Vanuatu's economy, its geographical fragmentation, demographic isolation and vulnerability to cyclones contributed to development problems.

At its April 1985 session (see p. 433), the Committee for Development Planning concluded that Vanuatu qualified for inclusion in the list of LDCs.

Damage from two cyclones in January necessitated unforeseen expenditures on relief and reconstruction. At the same time, reduced world prices caused a 52 per cent reduction in receipts from the country's principal export, copra, to which was added a substantial drop in tourism, the second most important foreign exchange earner. Vanuatu's balance of payments was characterized by a persistent trade deficit which, to a large extent, was offset by surpluses in the services account; in addition, international assistance helped the country maintain a favourable balance of payments. With no income tax, Vanuatu's tax system was heavily dependent on taxes on international trade, namely, commodity exports and imports of luxury items. Import duties remained the largest revenue source, their estimated share in total revenue for 1985 being 41 per cent, while expenditures for general administration, education and health continued to absorb a large share-over 75 per cent.

The Government reported on progress made in 35 special development projects, costing $74.6 million, which it had proposed for financing by the international donor community and which dealt with agriculture, transport, telecommunications, energy, social services, local government and natural disaster preparedness.

In his September report on assistance provided by the United Nations system,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General mentioned assistance to Vanuatu, including a UNDP-financed fisheries project operated by FAO.

The UNDP Administrator reported<sup>(17)</sup> that in 1985 a $30,000 disaster relief allocation had been made to Vanuatu from UNDP special programme resources to assist in clearing vital access roads following the January cyclones.

UNCTAD reported in December<sup>(58)</sup> that it had sent a mission to Port Vila in October for consultations with the Vanuatu authorities, and to the UNDP field office at Suva, Fiji, which also covered Vanuatu. The mission identified a number of areas where UNCTAD could be of assistance: in preparing documentation for a forthcoming meeting of Vanuatu with its development partners; import and distribution policy; review of investment incentives; and inter-island shipping. Subject to availability of resources, UNCTAD technical assistance to Vanuatu was to be provided in close collaboration, or jointly, with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, which had established a Pacific Operations Centre in Port Vila in 1984.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/233 without vote.

Economic assistance to Vanuatu

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/198 of 17 December 1984 on economic-assistance to Vanuatu, in which it requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Vanuatu,

Recalling also its resolutions 31/156 of 21 December 1976, 32/185 of 19 December 1977, 34/205 of 19 December 1979, 35/61 of 5 December 1980, 37/206 of 20 December 1982 and 39/212 of 18 December 1984, relating to the special needs and problems of island developing countries,

Noting the difficult problems faced by island developing countries, owing mainly to their smallness, remoteness, constraints in transport, great distances from market centres, highly limited internal markets, lack of natural resources, heavy dependence on a few commodities, shortage of administrative personnel and heavy financial burdens,

Taking into account the fact that Vanuatu is an island developing country, that it is a geographically remote archipelago with a small population, that it has demographic disadvantages, that its dependence on imports is overwhelming and that it has a scarcity of adequate transportation and communications links, all of which pose special development problems, making the provision of services difficult and entailing very high overhead costs,

Noting that the Committee for Development Planning, as stated in its report on its twenty-first and resumed twenty-first sessions, of which the Economic and Social Council took note in its decision 1985/182 of 25 July 1985, reached the conclusion that Vanuatu qualified for inclusion in the list of the least developed countries on the basis of the existing criteria and in the light of the available data,

Noting further the damage caused by two major cyclones in January 1985 and the resulting additional constraints on the economic development of Vanuatu,

1. Calls the attention of the international community to the summary report of the Secretary-General;

2. Also calls the attention of the international community to the projects listed in the report of the Secretary-General to the General Assembly at its thirty-ninth session, endorsed by the Assembly in resolution 39/198, which still require funding;

3. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance for Vanuatu;

4. Also expresses its appreciation to those States and organizations which have provided assistance to that country;

5. Further calls the attention of the international community to the special problems confronting Vanuatu as an island developing country with a small but rapidly growing and unevenly distributed population, a severe shortage of development capital and declining budgetary support from present donors;

6. Invites the appropriate organizations and programmes of the United Nations system to maintain and expand their current and future programmes of assistance to Vanuatu, to co-operate closely with the Secretary-General in organizing an effective international programme of assistance and to report periodically to him on the steps they have taken and the resources they have made available to help that country;

7. Also invites the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Food Programme, the International Labour Organisation, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations

Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the International Civil Aviation Organization, the World Health Organization, the World Bank, the International Telecommunication Union, the World Meteorological Organization, the International Maritime Organization and the International Fund for Agricultural Development to bring to the attention of their governing bodies, for their consideration, the special needs of Vanuatu and to report the decisions of those bodies to the Secretary-General by 15 July 1986;

8. Decides to include Vanuatu in the list of the least developed countries;

9. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, in the light of the above decision and the desire of the Government of Vanuatu to organize a round-table conference of donors, to give all the necessary assistance to Vanuatu for the preparation and organization of that conference;

10. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts to mobilize the necessary resources for an effective programme of financial, technical and material assistance to Vanuatu;

(b) To keep the situation in Vanuatu under constant review, to maintain close contact with Member States, regional and other intergovernmental organizations, the specialized agencies and the international financial institutions concerned, and to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the current status of the special programme of economic assistance for Vanuatu;

(c) To report on the progress made in the economic situation in Vanuatu and in organizing international assistance for that country in time for the matter to be considered by the General Assembly at its forty-first session,

Disasters

During 1985, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator (UNDRO) was a focal point and clearing-house for information on relief needs arising from natural disasters and other disaster situations, such as drought, floods, storms, earthquakes and civil conflicts. It continued to mobilize and co-ordinate the relief assistance of the various organizations of the United Nations system and co-ordinated that assistance with what was given by others. It also promoted the study, prevention, control and prediction of natural disasters and provided Governments that requested it with assistance in pre-disaster planning.

The General Assembly called for assistance to deal with the special needs of countries afflicted by desertification and drought in certain areas of Africa (see p. 805), particularly East Africa (resolution 40/221) and the Sudano-Sahelian region (40/198 B); drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia (40/228), also addressed by the Economic and Social Council (resolution 1985/1); a cyclone in Bangladesh (40/231); cyclones and floods in Madagascar (40/230); a volcanic eruption in Colombia (40/13); and earthquakes in Mexico (40/1). In addition, the Assembly in resolution 40/205 recommended measures for the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (see p. 434), which included assistance to countries impeded by natural disasters such as the drought in Africa and floods and cyclones in other countries, and man-made disasters such as internal and external conflicts that had considerably increased the number of refugees and displaced persons in a large number of LDCs.

Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator

UNDRO activities

In 1985, as in previous years, UNDRO provided assistance at the request of Governments to reduce the economic and social impact of natural or man-made disasters. Its 1985 activities were described in reports of the Secretary-General of May 1985<sup>(1)</sup> and May 1986.<sup>(2)</sup>

During 1984-1985, UNDRO was involved in 98 disaster situations, including major disasters calling for concerted relief programmes, within the framework of which bilateral donors, the United Nations system and NGOs provided assistance to the stricken populations. Among the major disasters were tropical storms in Bangladesh, Madagascar, Mozambique and the Philippines; armed conflict in Lebanon (see p. 295); displaced persons in western Africa (see p. 1004); epidemics in Mali and Somalia; earthquakes in Mexico; a volcanic eruption in Colombia; and drought in Chad, Ethiopia, Mali, Mauritania, Mozambique, the Niger and the Sudan (see p. 805). All received wide attention and support from the world community.

The years 1984-1985 were marked by an unprecedented famine in Africa. Absence, either partial or complete, of seasonal rainfall, together with the deterioration of the land through years of overgrazing and insufficient capital for agricultural inputs resulted in widespread crop failure and food shortages. Apart from launching united appeals on behalf of the United Nations system for countries where UNDRO was involved, appeals were made also on behalf of OEOA (see above, under "Africa and the critical economic situation"), which was established by the Secretary-General effective 1 January 1985 to co-ordinate and provide assistance to help ensure a broad yet concentrated international response to the continuing drought-related crisis in sub-Saharan Africa. Regular in-depth monitoring of the situation in the emergency-stricken African countries was part of UNDRO's activities, and multisectoral overviews were published regularly to provide donors with a comprehensive picture.

Because of extensive humanitarian efforts that had been called for by the world community, contributions reported by UNDRO during 1984-1985 totalled $2,149 million ($347 million in 1984 and $1,802 million in 1985), as compared to over $700 million in 1982-1983 and under $370 million in 1980-1981.

UNDRO's direct relief assistance in Africa varied widely. For example, in Ethiopia-the most affected country-some $1.9 million received from Governments, intergovernmental organizations and individual donors was used to strengthen the Office of Emergency Operations in that country through field monitors and for operational projects requiring urgent cash payments, such as low-altitude air-dropping of food in inaccessible mountainous areas, local manufacturing of agricultural hand tools and of ovens for relief centres, provision of vehicle spare parts and procurement of fuel for the transportation of relief goods. In land-locked Mali, UNDRO and the Swiss Disaster Relief

Unit purchased and operated for one year a fleet of 18 medium-sized and 20 small-tonnage trucks to reach people in remote areas. Nutritional surveys of vulnerable groups were commissioned in the Niger and Mauritania where UNDR0, under an agreement with the European Communities, arranged for the transport and distribution of 14,000 tons of emergency food. In the wake of cyclone Demoina in Mozambique in January 1984, Italian grants of some $5.8 million enabled UNDR0 to have a vital railway bridge reconstructed, purchase 11,000 tons of cement for dam projects, sub-contract emergency repairs to Maputo's principal electric power transmission line, and ensure the rebuilding of the Moamba-Sabie road as well as a bridge over the Incomati River. To transmit reliable information on developments in the affected regions, radio communications systems were provided to Chad, Mali and the Sudan. Emergency flights, transporting relief goods contributed by several donors, were also organized for Chad and Madagascar.

Other UNDR0 assistance included the transport and installation of seismographic monitoring equipment within 48 hours after the destructive eruption of the Nevada del Ruiz volcano in Colombia in November, as well as cash contributions, including $36,000 collected from United Nations staff in New York and Geneva, to finance the procurement of water pumps for 50 rural localities, provide emergency shelter for the homeless and, in co-operation with the Pan-American Health Organization (PAHO), supply artificial limbs for disabled victims.

For the above and other relief operations, government donors entrusted UNDR0 with the management of cash grants totalling $12.8 million. The latest technical information on disasters and on UNDR0-emergency-related activities was contained in the bimonthly UNDR0 News.

UNDR0 financing

In 1985, the activities of UNDR0 continued to be financed mainly from the United Nations regular budget and voluntary contributions to the UNDR0 Trust Fund. In addition, the United Nations Trust Fund for General Disaster Relief was used as a reserve and a revolving fund to guarantee and, if necessary, advance sums pledged by donors for particular relief operations, bridging the gap between the date of the pledge and actual receipt of the donation. For 1984-1985, the General Assembly by resolution 40/239 A, appropriated $5,176,800, i.e. $151,200 less than the previous biennium.

Expenditures under the Trust Funds totalled $11,271,592 in 1985, which included $10,251,113 as disaster relief assistance to 31 individual countries and the Caribbean. The UNDR0 Trust Fund had sub-accounts for strengthening UNDR0, emergency relief assistance earmarked for certain countries (see tables below), and technical assistance in disaster prevention and pre-disaster planning. Contributions from 22 Governments totalled $10,685,764 in 1985.

Co-ordination in the UN system

In his report covering the activities of UNDRO during 1984-1985,<sup>(2)</sup> the Secretary-General described the action taken on his 1984 recommendations for strengthening the capacity of the United Nations system to respond to natural and other disasters.<sup>(3)</sup>

To assess the emergency situation in affected countries, inter-agency missions were undertaken in 1984 to Benin, Mauritania and Mozambique, in 1985 to Chad and Mali, and in November 1985 a joint mission with OEOA to Mozambique. Major concerted relief programmes were developed for Chad, Colombia, Ethiopia, Mauritania, Nigeria, Somalia and the Sudan, and the respective united appeals were communicated to the international community. Out of a total of 102 appeals made by UNDRO during 1984-1985, 52 were united appeals launched after consultations with other relief agencies.

Concerning the delivery of relief supplies to and within disaster-stricken countries, the Secretary-General, who had proposed that steps be taken to expedite the provision of emergency assistance, reported that a recent agreement between UNDRO and Italy to use the United Nations Supply Depot at Pisa for commonly used relief supplies had gone some way to achieve that goal, and consultations were in progress with various donor Governments to place emergency relief supplies at the depot with an eventual sharing of storage costs.

With regard to the proposal calling on Governments and international relief organizations to transmit to UNDRO the names and specializations of qualified disaster experts who could be sent on assessment missions, a roster was compiled with information on over 200 experts; UNDRO was in contact with Governments and others with a view to increasing that number. Direct access to the system had also been provided to UNICEF and UNHCR.

Among the 1984 recommendations was an appeal to States to help increase the financial resources of the Trust Fund for General Disaster Relief (see p. 535), which provided a guarantee for some of UNDR0's cash advances in relation to disaster relief operations. It was estimated that $4 to $5 million needed to be set aside for that purpose. However, since no substantial contributions were received in response to the General Assembly's 1984 appeal,<sup>(4)</sup> the revolving fund showed a balance of only $970,900 as at 31 December 1985, i.e. $170,900 more than in 1984.

Disaster relief

Drought-stricken areas

In a preliminary June 1985 report<sup>(5)</sup> on countries stricken by desertification and drought (see p. 805), the Secretary-General stressed that the combination of drought and desertification had had far-reaching and disastrous consequences on economic and social life in the countries affected, especially in Africa. He recalled that in late 1983 and early 1984, over 150 million people had faced extreme hunger, malnutrition and in many cases shortages of potable water. Irregular or insufficient rainfall had resulted in major crop and livestock losses, and by April 1985 FAO had identified 21 African countries facing critical food shortages. By that time, massive movements of people within and between countries from drought-stricken to more favourable areas had started, causing additional strains on limited resources and aggravating environmental conditions. In addition to lowering water tables in rivers, lakes and aquifers, the prolonged drought resulted in serious implications for countries that were developing their hydroelectrical potential to lessen dependence on oil imports, and it also affected their productive capacities and basic social services. It was estimated that 30 million people were at risk and that drought-induced population displacements could reach well over 10 million people.

In March 1985, the UNDP Administrator reported<sup>(6)</sup> on UNDP action in favour of nine drought-affected countries-Benin, Cape Verde, the Central African Republic, the Gambia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Lesotho, Uganda and Sierra Leone-and Vanuatu.<sup>(6)</sup> However, UNDP emergency and relief assistance extended beyond its continuing and sizeable activities in Africa. It continued to collaborate with UNDR0 and other agencies in responding to natural disasters in other regions (see below).<sup>(7)</sup>

On 15 October, Yemen, as Chairman of the Organization of the Islamic Conference, transmitted to the Secretary-General a communique of a co-ordination meeting of the organization's Ministers for Foreign Affairs, held in New York on 9 October.<sup>(8)</sup> Addressing the continuing drought and famine in Africa, the meeting called on its members and the international community to increase emergency assistance to alleviate the sufferings of the drought-stricken people and provide long-term project aid to the African countries to prevent the recurrence of such disasters.

In resolution 40/175, the Assembly recommended that high priority be given in the development programmes of affected countries to the problem of desertification and the problems resulting from drought, and that the fight against desertification and drought be granted priority in bilateral and multilateral development aid programmes. Noting the generosity with which the international community had responded to the emergency in Africa, the Assembly appealed to the United Nations system, financial institutions and NGOs to provide full support to the development efforts of countries stricken by desertification and drought.

Sudano-Sahelian region

The United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) continued in 1985 under the supervision of UNDP to assist in medium- and long-term rehabilitation and development programmes of the Sahel's eight drought-stricken countries-Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Chad, the Gambia, Mali, Mauritania, the Niger and Senegal-members of the Permanent Inter-State Committee for Drought Control in the Sahel (CILSS). In 1978, UNSO's original mandate was expanded<sup>(9)</sup> to cover eventually 14 additional African countries-Benin, Cameroon, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Nigeria, Somalia, the Sudan, Togo, Uganda and the United Republic of Tanzania-and the implementation of the 1977 Plan of Action to Combat Desertification (see Chapter XVI of this section).

UNSO's assistance during 1985 was aimed at mitigating the effects of past and future droughts; helping countries concerned in attaining self-sufficiency in staple food production; enhancing socio-economic development in areas subject to drought through sectoral or multisectoral activities geared at restoring or protecting the productive capacity of the land; and arresting and, as far as possible, reversing desertification.

The UNDP Administrator described the activities that UNSO, under its original recovery and rehabilitation mandate, carried out in 1985 in the eight member countries of CILSS.<sup>(10)</sup> It continued to give the highest priority to the construction, improvement and maintenance of a region-wide system of all-weather secondary roads in the Sahel, to permit food and medical supplies to be delivered to otherwise inaccessible areas and to bring the rural areas into effective contact with the socio-economic mainstream in the countries concerned. In 1985, operational construction projects were under way in Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, the Gambia, the Niger and Senegal. New programmes were formulated for the Gambia (83 kilometres) and the Niger (301 kilometres), and there were negotiations to use funds from regional development banks. For example, negotiations were started with the West African Development Bank to finance the construction of rural roads in Senegal, and the African Development Bank provided some $5 million for the construction of new feeder roads in the Niger. Total funds mobilized by UNSO in 1985 amounted to $87.8 million-$80.7 million for national projects and $7.1 million for regional projects.

UNSO provided financial and other support for an International Symposium on Drought and Desertification, held at Howard University (Washington, DC., October 1985), which aimed to promote awareness of the need for long-term solutions to problems in Africa beyond the current emergency assistance. UNSO also contributed to the second ministerial conference for a joint policy to combat desertification and assisted in establishing the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development (see below).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Activities supported in 1984 by UNSO<sup>(11)</sup> were described by the Secretary-General in a May 1985 report.<sup>(12)</sup> The Economic and Social Council took note of the report in decision 1985/184 of 25 July.

In resolution 40/198 B, the General Assembly noted with concern the damage wrought by drought on the countries of Africa south of the Sahara, that insufficient financial resources continued to be a serious constraint in combating desertification, and that the struggle against desertification required financial and human resources beyond the means of the affected countries. It took note of the progress UNSO had made in assisting countries in combating desertification, under a joint UNEP/UNDP venture (see p. 809). The Assembly recommended that the UNEP and UNDP Governing Councils increase their support to UNSO. It drew the attention of the international community to the need for increased efforts to implement the Plan of Action to Combat Desertification in the Sudano-Sahelian region and urged it to contribute through appropriate means, including the United Nations Trust Fund for Sudano-Sahelian Activities.

East Africa

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(13)</sup> the Secretary-General issued in October 1985 a note on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda, in East Africa.<sup>(14)</sup>

During 1984 and 1985, most regions of the East African countries had again experienced severe and extended drought. In response to the continued drought and to a decision by the East African countries to discuss the creation of an intergovernmental body, a ministerial meeting was held at Djibouti from 4 to 6 February 1985. The meeting, which was also attended by representatives of the Secretary-General and UNDP, adopted an agreement creating the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development with headquarters at Djibouti. The agreement was formally signed during a second ministerial meeting at Djibouti on 7 and 8 May 1985. The first heads of State meeting was to take place in early January 1986. For that meeting, two consultants funded by UNSO and UNDP helped prepare a regional plan of action for the medium- and long-term recovery and rehabilitation of the stricken countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/221 without vote.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 35/90 and 35/91 of 5 December 1980, 36/221 of 17 December 1981, 37/147 of 17 December 1982, 38/216 of 20 December 1983 and 39/205 of 17 December 1984 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/46 of 28 July 1983 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda,

Having considered the note by the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of those countries,

Deeply concerned at the serious effects of the prolonged and persistent drought in the region, which precipitated food shortages and famine and hindered the development efforts of the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development,

Stressing the need for practical regional arrangements for co-operation to promote the rehabilitation, recovery, and medium-term to long-term development of the countries of the region,

Bearing in mind the imperative need for the international community to render assistance to Member States in the event of natural disasters,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 35/90, 35/91, 36/221, 37/147, 38/216 and 39/205 on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda;

2. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of those countries;

3. Commends the Governments of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda for their decision to establish, in Djibouti, an Intergovernmental Authority for Drought and Development, as initially recommended by the General Assembly in its resolution 35/90;

4. Notes with satisfaction the decision taken by the Governments of Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Somalia, the Sudan and Uganda to meet in Djibouti at the level of head of State to endorse the agreement on the establishment of the Intergovernmental Authority and to adopt a regional plan of action for the implementation of medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation programmes of the States members of the Authority;

5. Notes with appreciation the assistance provided by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme and by the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office in the effort to establish the Intergovernmental Authority, in line with the recommendations of the Secretary-General and pursuant to the resolutions of the General Assembly mentioned above;

6. Requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 37/147, to make the necessary arrangements to render operational, as soon as possible, the unit within the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office entrusted with the responsibility of assisting the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority and to pay special attention to the unit so as to ensure that its responsibilities are discharged effectively;

7. Appeals to all Governments, organizations of the United Nations system and other intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations to contribute generously in order to provide the resources necessary for funding the operational costs of the unit and for implementing the projects and programmes in the countries members of the Intergovernmental Authority, and requests the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme to intensify his efforts in this regard;

8. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986 on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 11 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.119), based on informal consultations on draft by Bangladesh, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Lebanon, Liberia, Somalia, Sudan and Uganda (A/C.2/40/L.57); agenda item 87.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 42, 50; plenary 120.

Speaking before the resolution's adoption by the Assembly, Djibouti said that successful implementation of the text would enhance the efforts of the countries concerned to overcome and guard themselves against future droughts and other natural disasters. They counted on UNDP to intensify its efforts in mobilizing the necessary financial, material and technical resources in support of the Intergovernmental Authority, which they hoped would enjoy the same status as CILSS. They appealed to the international community to recognize their basic needs and to support their efforts.

Assistance to Ethiopia

In October 1985, the Secretary-General issued a report on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia,<sup>(15)</sup> as requested by the General Assembly in 1984.<sup>(16)</sup> The report described the key supporting role played by OEOA in mobilizing, co-ordinating and delivering international assistance to the country. International relief efforts had begun with the first meeting of donors which the Secretary-General had called on 18 December 1984 in New York. On the basis of a report by the Assistant Secretary-General for Emergency Operations in Ethiopia, the meeting had agreed on the requirements for relief for the period December 1984 to December 1985 for a drought-affected population of about 7.9 million in need of emergency aid. The major targets were: food, 1,330,000 tons, including cereals, supplementary food and edible oil; seeds, 40,000 tons; medical supplies, estimated at $5.4 million; shelter, clothing and other related requirements, $5.2 million; and logistics to transport food and other relief goods of up to 120,000 tons per month, $139.2 million. The international community had responded generously to the appeal.

Pledges to date totalled some 1.3 million tons of food. A total of 26,000 tons of seed was distributed in time for the planting season. Targets for medical supplies, clothing and survival items for 1985 were largely reached. The donor community was slower in responding to the appeal for trucks, spare parts and tyres, resulting in transport problems of a considerable magnitude and affecting unloading at ports and food distribution throughout the country. To supplement transport by truck and in order to reach inaccessible areas, donors had provided the services of 55 aircraft since the beginning of the relief effort.

For the distribution of food, feeding centres, shelters and distribution points were established throughout Ethiopia. It was estimated that between December 1984 and September 1985, some 700,000 tons of grain and supplementary food were distributed. Figures prepared by the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission showed that 53.3 million monthly rations had been provided to 6.2 million beneficiaries per month, reaching at peak times 7.5 million people, with 45.7 per cent of the total food distribution handled by the Commission and the rest by NGOs.

Addressing the Economic and Social Council on 17 May 1985, the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia said that, owing to the goodwill and generosity of peoples and Governments, the emergency situation in Ethiopia appeared to be under control. The daily death tolls had been dramatically reduced and most parts of the country were receiving adequate rainfall; however, because they lacked the necessary agricultural inputs, the Ethiopians were unable to take full advantage of the rain. Therefore, disaster relief assistance was still urgently needed. The Government had taken wide-ranging institutional and financial measures to enhance and augment the relief and rehabilitation efforts. The Commissioner appealed to the international community to provide the resources needed for agricultural production, land reclamation, reforestation and water conservation.

Speaking before the Council on the same date, the OEOA Director said that although the situation regarding food pledges had improved considerably, some 472,800 tons were still needed to reach the target of 1.5 million tons. Referring to the 50,000 tons of food being distributed monthly out of a target of 110,000, the Director explained that the distribution was slow due to inadequate logistic support (trucks and spare parts). However, some improvements were expected since several Governments had made commitments in cash or kind at the bilateral donors meeting earlier in May, and the Ethiopian Government was currently allocating 70 per cent of its national transport capacity to move relief supplies. A new technique of low-altitude air-dropping of emergency food in remote areas had been initiated in January and was to be extended to new locations in southern Wollo where access by road was impossible. Referring to the need for agricultural inputs (seeds, hand tools, draught oxen and veterinary drugs and vaccines), the Director pointed out that the situation was critical and that immediate requirements for 1985 had been estimated at $95 million. In view of the deterioration of health conditions of drought victims and the overcrowding in refugee camps, health needs had been reassessed and were currently estimated at $6 million; a further $4.8 million was needed for sanitation programmes.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council on 24 May adopted without vote resolution 1985/1.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1984/5 of 17 May 1984 and General Assembly resolution 39/201 of 17 December 1984 concerning emergency assistance to the drought victims in Ethiopia, Noting with appreciation the statement made by the Director of the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa.

Having heard the statement made by the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia on the situation in the drought-stricken areas,

Aware of the presence of rain in Ethiopia after many years of prolonged drought,

Recognizing the necessity of sufficient agricultural inputs to take advantage of the good rains,

Disturbed by the lack of sufficient inputs which would help to expedite the rehabilitation of the drought victims and make them self-supporting,

Convinced that long-term solutions are imperative in order to avoid the recurrence of a tragic human drama such as the one that recently unfolded in the disaster-stricken areas,

1. Commends the generous response of the international community to the tragic situation in Ethiopia;

2. Expresses its deep gratitude to all States, governmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have provided emergency humanitarian assistance to Ethiopia;

3. Urges all Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations to assist the Government of Ethiopia in its efforts to provide for the emergency needs of the drought victims and to deal with the problem of medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize resources for relief and rehabilitation, including assistance for the victims of drought who either wish to return to their villages of origin or are willing to settle in areas less prone to drought, and to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session on the response of the international community to those efforts.

Meeting numbers. ESC 16, 17, 20, 21.

After adoption of the text, Ethiopia expressed deep gratitude to the United Nations for its sustained support which had saved millions of lives; Ethiopia was confident that the international community would undertake the needed long-term activities that would allow the Ethiopians to build a better future and never again experience such a disaster.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/228 without vote.

Assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/201 of 17 December 1984 and Economic and Social Council resolutions 1984/5 of 17 May 1984 and 1985/1 of 24 May 1985 on emergency assistance to the drought victims in Ethiopia,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on assistance to the drought-stricken areas of Ethiopia,

Noting with appreciation the unprecedented effort made by the Secretary-General to mobilize international humanitarian assistance for the drought victims in Ethiopia,

Noting further with satisfaction the able manner in which the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa has effectively handled its task of co-ordination and the admirable manner in which the organs and organizations of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, have carried out their roles,

Having heard the statement made by the Commissioner for Relief and Rehabilitation of Ethiopia on 12 November 1985 concerning the current situation in the drought-stricken areas,

Aware that, despite adequate rain, the emergency situation still exists in most parts of the country,

Recognizing that, owing to insufficient agricultural input, full advantage could not be taken of the rain,

Convinced that long-term solutions are imperative in dealing with the root causes of the tragic human drama that has recently unfolded in the disaster-stricken areas,

1. Commends the international community for its compassion, solidarity and generous response to the tragic situation in Ethiopia;

2. Expresses its deep gratitude to all States, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations and individuals that have provided emergency humanitarian assistance to Ethiopia;

3. Commends further the relentless efforts made by the Secretary-General through the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa, in particular those of the Assistant Secretary-General for Emergency Operations in Ethiopia, in mobilizing and co-ordinating emergency humanitarian assistance for the drought victims in Ethiopia;

4. Appreciates fully the unprecedented role played by the organizations and programmes of the United Nations system-in particular, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the World Food Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund, the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, the World Health Organization, the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank and the International Labour Organisation-which they have carried out in a concerted and efficient manner to save the lives of millions of people in Ethiopia;

5. Urges all Member States, organs and organizations of the United Nations system, including the specialized agencies, and non-governmental organizations to assist the Government of Ethiopia in its efforts to provide for the emergency needs of the drought victims and to deal with the problem of medium-term and long-term recovery and rehabilitation;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to continue his efforts to mobilize international assistance for relief and rehabilitation, including assistance to the victims of drought who want either to return to their villages of origin or to settle in areas less prone to drought, and to report to the Economic and Social Council, at its first regular session of 1986, on the response of the international community to these efforts.

Floods and storms

Generous assistance to Bangladesh and Madagascar, which had suffered from cyclones and floods, was called for by the General Assembly in December 1985. For Viet Nam, which had experienced extensive floods brought on by recurring typhoons, UNDP approved three relief efforts (medical supplies and other emergency assistance) and one rehabilitation project (flood control measures) at a total cost of $290,000.<sup>(7)</sup>

Cyclone in Bangladesh

In a 12 November 1985 statement before the General Assembly's Second Committee, Bangladesh said the cyclonic storms which had swept the country in 1985 had not only caused damage to life and property but also seriously impeded economic development. The first cyclone and tidal surge, which had struck the coast of Bangladesh in May had affected over 1.3 million people in a 2,000-square-mile area; the second cyclone, which had hit the same area in October, had destroyed the harvest and property for the second time that year. Bangladesh had been able to handle the situation with the assistance of other nations and regional and international agencies. As a result of the latest calamities, the Government planned to enhance disaster preparedness and create an infrastructure to protect life and property in the event of other natural disasters; in that endeavour, Bangladesh was counting on the assistance of Member States, the United Nations system and other multilateral institutions.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/231 without vote.

Long-term and effective solution of the problems caused by natural disasters in Bangladesh

The General Assembly,

Aware of the grave devastation and substantial loss of life and property caused by the cyclone that struck large areas of Bangladesh on 25 May 1985,

Having heard the statement made on 12 November 1985 by the representative of Bangladesh, in which he enumerated the enormous losses suffered by Bangladesh in the cyclone as well as the adverse consequences of recurring natural disasters, particularly cyclones, tidal waves and floods, for the economic development of that country,

Concerned about the serious damage to infrastructure caused by such natural disasters, which has a far-reaching impact on the implementation of the national development plan in that country,

Considering that Bangladesh is one of the least developed countries, and that its situation has been worsened by the frequent recurrence of natural disasters having devastating consequences,

Aware that the coastal areas of Bangladesh are particularly vulnerable to natural calamity resulting in widespread human and material loss,

Recognizing the relief and rehabilitation efforts of the Government of Bangladesh to alleviate the sufferings of disaster victims, and its programmes for a more permanent solution,

Noting with appreciation the support and solidarity displayed by the countries of the South Asian region in assisting Bangladesh in the immediate aftermath of the cyclone of 25 May 1985,

Recognizing that natural disasters constitute a development problem of great magnitude, the solution of which calls for substantial resources, requiring national efforts to be supplemented by international financial and technical assistance,

Aware that considerable expertise and technical capabilities are available within the organizations of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to strengthen the preparedness and prevention capability of disaster-prone countries through the promotion of a long-term and effective solution of the problems caused by natural disasters,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the international community for its interest in and support to Bangladesh in its relief, rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts following the natural disaster;

2. Also expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for the support provided by him, particularly through the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other operational agencies of the United Nations system in Bangladesh;

3. Appeals to all Member States, specialized agencies, and other organs and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as international economic and financial institutions, to respond urgently and generously to assist Bangladesh in its plans and programmes to secure a long-term and effective solution of the problems caused by natural disasters;

4. Requests the relevant organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and other multilateral organizations to take appropriate measures to provide assistance to Bangladesh for disaster preparedness and prevention programmes, taking into account the existing co-ordinated efforts of Member States;

5. Requests the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to assist, in co-operation with other relevant agencies, the Government of Bangladesh in preparing a time-bound plan in this regard;

6. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/231

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 11 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.121), based on informal consultations on draft by Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Cape Verde, China, Colombia, Comoros, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guyana, Honduras, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Japan, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mauritania, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Panama, Peru, Philippines, Romania, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Thailand, Togo, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States Uruguay, Venezuela and Yugoslavia (A/C.2/40/L.70); agenda-item 87.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 32, 44, 50; plenary 120.

Also on 17 December, by decision 40/446, the Assembly requested the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps for the closure of the Fund of the United Nations Relief Operations in Bangladesh and to transfer its balance remaining as at 31 December as add-on to the UNDP indicative planning figure of Bangladesh. In making that request, the Assembly followed a 29 June recommendation of the UNDP Governing Council (see p. 480).

Cyclones and floods in Madagascar

In the wake of a series of four cyclones and floods between December 1983 and April 1984,<sup>(17)</sup> the United Nations system provided special economic assistance to Madagascar, as reported by the Secretary-General in September 1985.<sup>(18)</sup> The assistance included projects on development planning, transport and cartography by DTCD and debt monitoring by UNCTAD, funded by UNDP; disaster preparedness by UNDRRO/UNDP; demographic and health statistics by UNFPA; health and education by UNICEF; industrial rehabilitation by UNIDO; food development assistance by WFP; civil aviation training by ICAO; vocational training, seminars and advisory services on working conditions and environment, hotel and tourism, and employment promotion by ILO; educational services and materials/equipment by UNESCO; fellowships by IMO, ITU and UPU; and meteorological assistance by WMO. FAO operated six UNDP-financed projects in fisheries, agricultural census and seeds. It also assisted in projects dealing with forestry, crops, fisheries, fertilizers, use of audio-visual media, setting up of school compounds, reconstruction of cyclone-damaged irrigation networks and oceanographic research. In fiscal year 1985, the World Bank/IDA made new loans to Madagascar totalling $67.6 million for irrigation rehabilitation and the industry sector.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/230 without vote, on the recommendation of the Second Committee.

Assistance to Madagascar

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 39/191 of 17 December 1984 on assistance to Madagascar,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/3 of 11 May 1984 on measures to be taken following the cyclones and floods in Madagascar in December 1983 and January and April 1984,

Concerned by the fact that the damage caused by these natural disasters is hampering the development efforts of that country,

Bearing in mind the special economic assistance programme prepared by the inter-agency mission which visited Madagascar from 24 May to 5 June 1984,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General,

Noting the efforts of the people and Government of Madagascar to deal with the emergency and to initiate a reconstruction and rehabilitation programme,

Noting also the emergency relief and assistance provided by several States, international and regional organizations, specialized agencies and voluntary agencies,

Reaffirming the need for concerted international action to assist the people and Government of Madagascar in carrying out the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the stricken regions and sectors,

1. Expresses its gratitude to the States, programmes and organizations of the United Nations system and to other organizations, intergovernmental, non-governmental and voluntary, which provided assistance to Madagascar;

2. Urges all States to participate or continue to participate generously through bilateral or multilateral channels in projects or programmes for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Madagascar;

3. Requests the international and regional organizations, the specialized agencies and voluntary agencies to continue and increase their assistance in response to the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development needs of Madagascar;

4. Invites the programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the United Nations Development Programme, the World Bank, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, and all other international and regional financial institutions concerned, to give sympathetic and urgent consideration to requests for assistance submitted by the Government of Madagascar under its reconstruction, rehabilitation and development programmes;

5. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To continue his efforts, in collaboration with the programmes and organizations of the United Nations system, to mobilize the resources needed for implementing the reconstruction, rehabilitation and development programmes of Madagascar;

(b) To keep the question of assistance for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Madagascar under constant review;

6. Further requests the Secretary-General to apprise the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1986, of the progress made in the implementation of the present resolution and to report thereon to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/230

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 4 December (meeting 471: 52-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.69), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 87.

Sponsors: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Bangladesh, Benin, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, China, Comoros, Congo, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, India, Japan, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Pakistan, Romania, Rwanda, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Sudan, Swaziland, Togo, Tunisia, Vanuatu, Viet Nam, Yugoslavia, Zaire.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 44, 47: plenary 120.

Introducing the text, Mauritius said that very little assistance had been received in response to the Assembly's 1984 appeal;<sup>(19)</sup> the international community was now called on to increase its assistance.

Earthquakes

Earthquakes in Mexico

On 19 and 20 September 1985, Mexico City and surrounding areas were shattered by two major earthquakes, which registered between 8 and 8.4 on the Richter scale, entailed considerable loss of life, damaged or destroyed houses, schools, hospitals and government buildings, and incapacitated the country's main telecommunications installations. The damage caused by the disaster and its repercussions on the country's economy-assessed also by the ECLAC secretariat in collaboration with the Mexican authorities<sup>(20)</sup>-was estimated at $4 billion.

The UNDP Administrator, in his annual report for 1985,<sup>(7)</sup> stated that the earthquakes had inflicted heavy human and material losses in metropolitan areas, affecting also the States of México, Jalisco, Michoacán, Guerrero and Colima. It was estimated that over 4,000 people had died and some 20,000 homes, 3,000 commercial and 200 public buildings had been virtually destroyed. In addition, 761 schools had been damaged, and the capacity of two key social welfare hospitals and the National Medical Centre had been reduced by 5,000 beds. Essential utility services had also been disrupted.

The United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator was immediately sent to Mexico to assess the extent of devastation and identify emergency requirements. UNDP allocated more than $2 million for relief and reconstruction activities. Projects approved or under development for financing from those funds included the buttressing of emergency health facilities at a hospital at Morelia, Michoacán; the reconstruction of health services in Mexico City; advisory services in seismography and reconstruction logistics; and the rebuilding of a damaged public training institution. Two additional projects in telecommunications and urban development were also under preparation.

The Secretary-General reported<sup>(21)</sup> that, following the adoption of General Assembly resolution 40/1 on 24 September (see below), the DTCD Assistant Secretary-General was designated as the focal point at United Nations Headquarters for identification of medium- and long-term needs for the reconstruction of affected areas and the co-ordination of multilateral assistance required, to be channelled through the United Nations system, while the United Nations resident co-ordinator had been named as the focal point in Mexico.

The Assistant Secretary-General went to Mexico (4-12 October) to work out, in consultation with the Mexican authorities, a strategy for the future through a framework of co-ordination within the National Reconstruction Commission set up by the President of Mexico, and to define the various operational stages and forms of assistance that might be expected, as well as the role of the United Nations. Agreement was reached with the authorities that the overall operation should be divided into three stages: an emergency phase; a rehabilitation phase, involving short-term action for the restoration of basic public services; and a reconstruction phase, involving longer-term action, taking into account the Government's decentralization policies. The role of the United Nations system was twofold: direct contribution with its own resources, in the form of financial and technical co-operation; and indirect assistance that might be provided in mobilizing and co-ordinating international co-operation from other sources.

At an informal meeting in New York on 30 October, representatives of 34 countries spoke in support of Mexico and provided information on past and projected assistance, both in cash and in kind.

Assistance by the United Nations system in the reconstruction phase was directed towards the Government's priority sectors for international co-operation: health, education and communications (housing was to be dealt with mainly through national resources). Missions were undertaken and projects drawn up by UNDRO, UNEP, UNCHS, UNICEF, WFP, ILO, FAO, UNESCO, WHO/PAHO, ITU and UNIDO.

The Secretary-General indicated that loans of some $800 million from financial institutions, notably IMF, the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank, had been effected or were under negotiation, and contact had been established and maintained with NGOs, in both New York and Mexico, regarding their assistance. By the end of 1985, permanent missions to the United Nations had received a document prepared by the Mexican Government which provided a list of reconstruction projects eligible for international aid-in the priority sectors-totalling some $414 million, of which $375 million was requested from external sources.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By a letter of 22 September to the Secretary-General,<sup>(22)</sup> Nicaragua requested that the General Assembly include an item on international relief to Mexico in the agenda of its 1985 session, for consideration on a priority basis.

On 24 September, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/1 without vote.

International relief to Mexico

The General Assembly,

Deeply distressed by the loss of lives, the number of afflicted persons and the enormous destruction wrought by the earthquakes which, on 19 and 20 September 1985, struck various regions of Mexico, especially its capital,

Conscious of the efforts of the Government and people of Mexico to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of the cataclysm,

Noting the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster, for which the Government of Mexico has established a National Reconstruction Trust Fund,

Conscious also of the prompt response of Governments, international agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals, which have contributed emergency disaster relief,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the catastrophe and its long-term effects will require, as a complement to the effort being made by the people and Government of Mexico, a demonstration of international solidarity and humanitarian concern to ensure broad multilateral co-operation in order to meet the immediate emergency situation in the affected areas, as well as to undertake the process of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of Mexico;
2. Expresses its appreciation to the States, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and private individuals that are providing emergency relief to that country;
3. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize resources to contribute to the relief and reconstruction task undertaken by the Government of Mexico;
4. Calls upon all States to contribute generously to those relief and reconstruction efforts in the affected areas and, to the extent possible, to channel their assistance through the United Nations system;
5. Requests the Secretary-General to co-ordinate the multilateral assistance and, in consultation with the Government of Mexico, to identify the emergency and medium-term and long-term needs in order to contribute to the reconstruction of the affected areas.

Earthquake in Yemen

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(23)</sup> the Secretary-General reported in July 1985<sup>(24)</sup> on relief efforts and the reconstruction programme of Yemen, following the earthquake which had struck in 1982.<sup>(25)</sup> Preliminary statistics had shown that in addition to the people who had been killed or injured, there were 1,072 villages affected, and 21,000 damaged and 16,000 cracked houses. Survey teams, which collected data and information, formulated three main projects: building new houses by contracts; repairing cracked houses; and building new houses with the help of the affected inhabitants (self-help). Under the first project, the number of cracked and damaged houses was identified and then divided geographically into 17 groups. The number of houses to be constructed that way totalled 11,766 in 584 affected villages. The second project started at Dhamar city, since the type of construction of its houses and the materials used allowed the programme to be executed in a suitable way. It was expected that the experience in Dhamar—which had the largest number of cracked houses—would help in making a final decision on the other parts of the project.

The United Nations Capital Development Fund contributed $2.5 million towards the third project, to carry out work on 280 houses in the north-west

Dawran area with the assistance of UNDP which provided the engineers. A $2.5 million contribution of EEC to that programme was to be used in Maghrib Ans, together with a contribution by the Netherlands of some $8.5 million and a USAID loan of $3 million. A total of 570 houses were to benefit from those contributions. Other contributions to the financing of the reconstruction programme were made by Abu Dhabi, Japan, Kuwait, Oman, Saudi Arabia and Yemen. Aid of $15 million allocated by the Co-operative Council of Gulf States and paid by Saudi Arabia and Qatar was for building 44 schools, 10 medical centres, 30 mosques and roads in the affected areas. In addition, a loan of $145 million from the Council was to be used for road construction, $90 million; electrification of villages, $30 million; and the Dhamar water supply and sewage system, $10 million. The balance of $15 million was to be used to cover the deficit in the financing of houses.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

By decision 40/454 of 17 December, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's report on Yemen.

Volcano eruption in Colombia

In his annual report for 1985,<sup>(7)</sup> the UNDP Administrator recalled that on 13 November, after a period of increased activity in the volcano Nevado del Ruiz during which the temperature of the permanent ice-cap rose, the snow melted and formed a mass of ash, rock and water which descended rapidly along the Lagunilla River, already swollen by heavy rains. On reaching level ground, the mass spread out to form a destructive layer of mud which completely covered the city of Armero and part of Chinchiná.

It was estimated that over 200,000 persons had been affected by the eruption. Out of a total of 67,000 persons living in the cities of Armero and Chinchiná, 22,000 died as a result of the floods that had levelled the former almost completely and destroyed some neighbourhoods of the latter. That figure represented nearly 90 per cent and 4 per cent respectively of the populations of the two cities. Damage to physical, social and economic infrastructure was extensive.

UNDP responded immediately, and the Resident Representative was designated UNDR0 representative. In addition to performing co-ordination tasks, he led a United Nations team working with the Government to assess damage and prepare documentation which was presented to a Special Meeting on International Relief to Colombia, convened by the Secretary-General on 13 December 1985. The Secretary-General subsequently named the UNDP Assistant Administrator and Director of the Regional Bureau for Latin America and the Caribbean as his representative to Colombia..

From its Special Programme Resources, UNDP approved two emergency allocations of $30,000 and $2 million for immediate technical co-operation needs and the provision of emergency salvage tools, medical supplies, water purification materials and transportation. The financing was also to assist the Government to develop and implement a major reconstruction plan for the installation of a permanent national disaster prevention and action system; the provision of new urban infrastructure; the restoration of agricultural productivity; and the creation of employment for resettled communities.

In two December 1985 reports prepared for the Special Meeting by the National Planning Department and the United Nations system,<sup>(26)</sup> it was estimated that the damage caused by the disaster totalled $211.8 million-$92.8 million in the social sectors (education, health, housing, employment and income, and others); $68.5 million in infrastructure services (water supply and sewage systems, transportation, telecommunications, electricity and urban infrastructure); and $50.6 million in production sectors (industry and trade, hydrocarbons, and agriculture and livestock production).

Immediately after the disaster, a day of national and international solidarity was launched, generating a massive flow of financial and material assistance, and teams of disaster-relief specialists, as well as equipment for monitoring seismic activity within the volcano, arrived in Colombia. At the same time, the Government began to study measures designed to facilitate the formulation of a plan for the rehabilitation, reconstruction and recovery of the affected areas.

The plan of action envisaged three phases for reconstruction programmes: after a transitional phase, a phase of infrastructure replacement, economic activity and establishment of prevention systems, and finally a phase of medium-term development and consolidation of prevention systems. An initial estimate of the most urgent and immediately viable reconstruction projects placed the cost at some $112 million-not counting the national counterpart contribution, which represented approximately 30 per cent of that amount-to repair damage and replace and strengthen infrastructure. That amount did not include the resources needed to repair indirect damage and consequences, rehabilitate areas affected by volcanic mud and, above all, create a production infrastructure based on the agricultural sector which would consolidate the economy of the area in question.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

Bolivia, by a letter of 14 November to the Secretary-General,<sup>(27)</sup> requested that an item on international relief to Colombia be included in the agenda of the 1985 General Assembly session, on a priority basis.

On 15 November, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/13 without vote.

International relief to Colombia

The General Assembly,

Deeply distressed by the loss of lives, the number of afflicted persons and the enormous destruction wrought by the volcanic activity of Nevado del Ruiz, affecting areas of the departments of Caldas, Tolima and Valle del Cauca in Colombia,

Noting the efforts of the Government and people of Colombia to save lives and alleviate the sufferings of the victims of this natural disaster,

Considering the enormous effort that will be required to alleviate the grave situation caused by this natural disaster,

Recognizing that the magnitude of the catastrophe and its effects will require, as a complement to the effort being made by the people and Government of Colombia, a demonstration of international solidarity to ensure the necessary multilateral co-operation in order to meet the immediate emergency in the affected areas, as well as to undertake the task of reconstruction,

1. Expresses its solidarity and support to the Government and people of Colombia in this tragedy;

2. Expresses its appreciation to the States, international and regional agencies, non-governmental organizations and individuals providing emergency relief to Colombia;

3. Calls upon the Governments of the Member States to contribute generously to the relief and reconstruction efforts in the affected areas and, to the extent possible, to channel their assistance through the United Nations system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to mobilize resources in order to assist in the relief and reconstruction task of the Government of Colombia;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to co-ordinate the multilateral assistance and, in consultation with the Government of Colombia, to determine the emergency and reconstruction needs of the affected areas.

Disaster preparedness and prevention

The international community was becoming increasingly aware of the relationship between development and two elements of pre-disaster planning-preparedness and prevention. There was an increased interest on the part of disaster-prone countries in including more disaster preparedness and prevention in UNDP projects. UNDRP encouraged that awareness by helping interested countries and regions to establish organizational structures to deal with potential disasters and emergency situations, the legal framework for such structures and training in disaster management.

The work of UNDRO in disaster preparedness and prevention was guided by an inter-branch committee established in February. Its responsibilities included: identification of priorities; development of regional programmes or national programmes that would benefit other countries of the same region; identification of project activities that would attract external funding; general guidance in carrying out projects; and evaluation of their effectiveness.

During 1985, the United Nations Supply Depot at Pisa, Italy, was expanded and UNDRO's warehouse became operational, thus ensuring a suitable pre-positioning of international relief supplies for immediate use.

Preparedness and prevention at the national level

Requests from disaster-prone countries for technical assistance in disaster preparedness had increased steadily since 1980. In 1985, the following requests were received and dealt with: Afghanistan (seismic hazard assessment and forecasting); Algeria (seismic microzoning of Ech Chief (El Asnam)); Argentina (flood prevention in Buenos Aires); Central African Republic (bushfire preparedness and prevention); Madagascar (strengthening of intervention capacity); Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Indonesia, Mali, Nepal, Philippines, Tunisia, Vanuatu, Viet Nam and Zaire (national disaster preparedness and prevention planning).

At the Congo's request, two engineer hydrologists were sent in February to survey flood risks and advise the Government on flood protection and preparedness measures. In response to an urgent request from Argentina in March, UNDRO sent a glaciologist to advise on measures to avert the flood danger of a potential break in a glacier dam that had formed across the Rio Plomo owing to the advance of the glacier Grande del Nevado. In Honduras, a technical assistance mission took place in early March. A physical planning project for Montenegro, Yugoslavia, was completed in 1985.

Preparedness and prevention at the regional and international levels

Increasing emphasis was being put on regional approaches and methods to solve problems related to disaster prevention. Cases in point were the earthquake risk reduction projects in the Balkan region with the subsequent creation in April 1984 of a permanent intergovernmental committee<sup>(28)</sup> to oversee continuation of the work and its extension to the Mediterranean region; the Tropical Cyclone Committee for the South-West Indian Ocean and the WMO/ESCAP Panel on Tropical Cyclones; as well as the pan-Caribbean disaster preparedness and prevention project—a multi-agency project begun in 1981 covering 28 Caribbean island States and territories.

The project for the Mediterranean region as a whole, sponsored by UNEP jointly with UNDRO, UNCHS and UNESCO, was to be submitted to UNDP and the contracting parties to the 1978 Barcelona Convention for the Mediterranean Action Plan.

In co-operation with the Government of Italy, the Regional Authority of Umbria and the Polytechnic Institute of Milan, UNDRO established an international programme designed to train and inform both specialists and the public on measures to reduce earthquake losses in densely built urban areas. The first event of the programme was an international seminar on post-earthquake measures for structural engineering and physical planning (Perugia, Italy, 11-13 April 1985).

Preparedness for industrial accidents was another area of UNDRO activities; co-operation between UNDRO and IAEA was being further strengthened through participation in expert and advisory groups engaged in the preparation of handbooks dealing with various aspects of the effects of possible accidents in land-based nuclear facilities.

Emergency relief and assistance

Trust Fund for Countries Afflicted by Famine and Malnutrition

Following the liquidation of the United Nations Emergency Operation Trust Fund at the end of 1983,<sup>(1)</sup> 70 per cent of the remaining balance, or some $34 million, was transferred to a UNDP-administered Trust Fund to finance urgently needed projects, primarily in the food and agricultural sectors in countries afflicted by famine and malnutrition as a result, particularly, of severe or prolonged drought, with special emphasis on African countries.

In an October 1985 report<sup>(2)</sup> on allocation of the emergency Fund's remaining balance (see p. 481), the Secretary-General said that, as at 23 September, the UNDP Administrator had approved 115 projects in 52 countries totalling $36 million, of which 87 projects, amounting to $28.3 million, were in 34 African countries. While the implementation of some projects would continue beyond 31 December, the Secretary-General said he was confident that a large proportion of the Trust Fund resources would be expended in 1985 for the purposes for which they had been provided. He also indicated that the Administrator would provide a detailed report to that effect to the UNDP Governing Council in 1986.

Lebanon

The lack of security in Lebanon continued to affect the capability of the United Nations system to provide assistance for the reconstruction and development of the country. All aspects of life—especially the social and economic activities—were affected by the lack of security, and the situation worsened from October 1984 onwards, particularly in the Greater Beirut area, in spite of a security plan approved by the Government and the Parliament in June that year. Other security plans and cease-fires, approved in 1985, succeeded only temporarily in bringing some security to Beirut and other affected areas (see p. 295).

As requested by the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(3)</sup> the Secretary-General, in October 1985,<sup>(4)</sup> reported that the general situation in Lebanon had produced extremely trying circumstances for the United Nations to provide assistance to the country in its reconstruction and development plans, as well as to implement relief programmes for those directly affected by hostilities. Most of the remaining international personnel had left Lebanon in 1985 for security reasons, particularly after a spate of kidnappings in March, which had a negative impact on the delivery of programmed United Nations technical assistance. Reconstruction and development would take longer than previously envisaged, as well as much larger resources; urgent steps must be taken to prevent the economy from deteriorating further.

With the increase in military activities, destruction and displacement of the civilian population, emergency humanitarian assistance had become an immediate and major concern. The United Nations co-ordinating Committee at Beirut, established in 1978<sup>(5)</sup> to promote reconstruction and development programmes, had evolved into the field of humanitarian relief assistance, emerging at every crisis as a central mechanism for assessing relief needs and developing co-ordinated response to them; it had become the only forum in Beirut for meetings of United Nations organizations and national as well as international NGOs, such as the International Committee of the Red Cross, donor countries and

EEC. United Nations organizations contributed to the ongoing relief effort in a co-ordinated fashion, according to their mandates and in response to the Secretary-General's appeals for urgent assistance. That assistance was programmed and provided without discrimination towards any of the various Lebanese communities; in all cases it was negotiated in close consultation with the Lebanese Government.

The Trust Fund of the Secretary-General provided its resources, totalling $500,000, for emergency relief to needy displaced persons; $40,000 of that amount was being used to supplement UNICEF's ongoing water supply project for the displaced people of Beirut. The Lebanese High Relief Committee collaborated closely in the distribution of the relief items.

The regional office of UNHCR for the Middle East, located at Beirut, also continued to participate in providing emergency relief, over and above its traditional activities of legal protection and material assistance to refugees. The total amount allocated for those uprooted in Lebanon since 1976 had reached more than $10 million by the end of 1984. Since 1982, emergency aid had been provided in the Syrian Arab Republic to the displaced persons and refugees arriving from Lebanon, as well as to Lebanese in Europe and Africa; nearly $3 million had been obligated so far for that purpose. In April 1985, a contribution of $100,000 was approved for the populations affected in the Sidon area. Since June, the UNHCR Regional Representative had chaired the United Nations co-ordinating Committee, in the temporary absence of the United Nations Co-ordinator and the UNDP Resident Representative.

UNICEF continued to provide water, health and education services, launching a rehabilitation programme which extended the area of operations, covered by a 1980 agreement with the Government,@ beyond south Lebanon and Beirut to include areas affected by the war in the Chouf, the High Metn, Beirut's southern suburbs and the Tripoli region. UNICEF had raised $40.8 million to complement funding by the Lebanese Council for Development and Reconstruction (CDR) for that programme. Although the programme was beset by delays due to the occupation of south Lebanon by foreign military forces and because of civil strife, it was largely successful in helping restore water, education and health services.

Emergency assistance to the local populations was also extended by the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter IX).

In 1985, WFP decided to respond to the emergency needs in Lebanon by transferring from one of its development projects there an amount of $2.5 million for food commodities, which it distributed to the needy people affected by the most recent fighting; WFP commodities were stored and packaged in East and West Beirut and distributed according to the need of the population in all parts of the country, depending on the prevailing security situation.

Throughout the recent hostilities, WHO continued to support and co-ordinate medical and health-related assistance; its assistance to the development and rehabilitation of health services, however, was interrupted by the outbreak of armed conflict. In order to respond to the urgent needs of the population, WHO devised, with the Ministry of Public Health, a reprogramming of the WHO 1984-1985 budget amounting to $1,140,000: $220,000 was allocated to the purchase of essential drugs; $810,000 to technical assistance, through the appointment of national experts for strengthening the epidemiological services, health statistical services, primary health care, health manpower, public information and education, workers' health, and clinical, laboratory and radiological technology for health systems based on primary health care; and $110,000 to the planning unit of the Ministry of Public Health, a project for which USAID funding had stopped.

Apart from helping to implement, in co-operation with CDR, the Lebanon reconstruction programme, UNICEF implemented its own technical assistance projects in the fields of health, water supply, education and community self-help; $4.4 million was devoted to this programme. Other UNICEF activities included a basic services programme, assistance to Palestinians and child-care services.

Technical co-operation activities were also implemented by others, such as UNDP. For 1985, UNDP had authorized expenditure of $2.8 million, but those funds had only been partially used due to the security situation. During the first part of the year, UNDP resident experts ensured the implementation of FAO-executed projects outside Beirut; the remaining projects were supervised by short-term consultants and sub-contractors. By mid-1985, the security risks became extremely severe and the remaining UNDP-funded experts and the Resident Representative had to be withdrawn from Lebanon.

In 1985, some 200,000 families, or 1 million persons, benefited from WFP assistance throughout the country at a cost of $4 million. The following development projects with WFP financial assistance were operational: a basic diet feeding programme for children and youth to reduce malnutrition ($21,940,800); integrated development of the Lebanese mountain areas to improve the economic and social conditions of the rural population, to benefit 109,000 persons ($18,523,200); and rehabilitation of sericulture to revive Lebanon's traditional silk industry, for 7,600 persons ($1,480,000). Total WFP assistance provided to Lebanon over 11 years was $94 million.

FAO made a special effort to support Lebanese agricultural sectors which had also been adversely affected. Until the first part of 1985, four FAO/UNDP projects were still operational: within the FAO regular programme, three projects were finalized during the year, while three new ones were approved. An FAO Trust Fund project providing 6,000 tons fertilizers was completed in February; another project supporting agricultural and rural planning and development was operational, while a third, designed to strengthen the operational and technical capabilities of the Ministry of Agriculture, was suspended because of lack of security.

In July, a representative of the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon gave an oral report to the Economic and Social Council's Third Committee.

Introducing the Secretary-General's report<sup>(4)</sup> in the General Assembly's Second Committee on 12 November, the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs said the increasing number of civilian victims of the hostilities and the physical destruction had led to a redirecting of relief and rehabilitation efforts. The displacement of the population constituted one of the major concerns of the Government, which had requested the international community's support.

Humanitarian assistance needs were constantly increasing and the United Nations had limited resources to meet them. The Secretary-General had dispatched a high-level mission from UNDRO which had visited Lebanon from 31 October to 4 November. According to the mission's findings, there were 500,000 displaced persons whose relief and rehabilitation needs were estimated at $51 million, in addition to health facility needs. The Under-Secretary-General pointed out that his Office, in collaboration with UNDRO in Geneva, had initiated a joint fund-raising effort. He was hoping that, after consideration of the Secretary-General's report on the subject, the Committee would decide to maintain the level of assistance provided in previous years.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, the Economic and Social Council, on the recommendation of its Third Committee, adopted resolution 1985/56 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The Economic and Social Council

1. Takes note with interest of the oral report made on 9 July 1985 by the representative of the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon pursuant to General Assembly resolution 39/197 of 17 December 1984;

2. Appeals to all Member States and to organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to continue and intensify their efforts to mobilize all possible assistance to the Government of Lebanon in its efforts for reconstruction and development, in accordance with the relevant resolutions and decisions of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/56

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by Third Committee (E/1985/139) without vote, 15 July (meeting 12): 7-nation draft (E/1985/C.3/L.4); agenda item 17.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, the General Assembly, acting on the recommendation of the Second Committee, adopted resolution 40/229 without vote.

Assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 33/146 of 20 December 1978, 34/135 of 14 December 1979, 35/85 of 5 December 1980, 36/205 of 17 December 1981, 37/163 of 17 December 1982, 38/220 of 20 December 1983 and 39/197 of 17 December 1984 on assistance for the reconstruction and development of Lebanon,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolutions 1980/15 of 29 April 1980 and 1985/56 of 25 July 1985 and decisions 1983/112 of 17 May 1983 and 1984/174 of 26 July 1984,

Noting with deep concern the continuing heavy loss of life and the additional destruction of property, which have caused further extensive damage to the economic and social structures of Lebanon,

Also noting with concern the serious economic situation in Lebanon,

Welcoming the determined efforts of the Government of Lebanon in undertaking its reconstruction and rehabilitation programme,

Reaffirming the urgent need for further international action to assist the Government of Lebanon in its continuing efforts for reconstruction and development,

Considering that filling the vacant post of United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon would facilitate the normal operations of international assistance to Lebanon,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General and of the statement made on 12 November 1985 by the

Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Secretary-General for his report and for the steps he has taken to mobilize assistance to Lebanon;

2. Commends the Under-Secretary-General for Political and General Assembly Affairs for his co-ordination of system-wide assistance for Lebanon, as well as the staff of the Office of the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon for their invaluable efforts in the discharge of their duties;

3. Expresses its appreciation for the relentless efforts undertaken by the Government of Lebanon in the implementation of the initial phase of reconstruction of the country, despite adverse circumstances, and for the steps it has taken to remedy the economic situation;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue and intensify his efforts to mobilize all possible assistance within the United Nations system to help the Government of Lebanon in its reconstruction and development efforts;

5. Invites the Secretary-General to consider arranging, under the terms of resolution 33/146, for the United Nations Co-ordinator of Assistance for the Reconstruction and Development of Lebanon to resume his functions in Lebanon;

6. Requests the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to intensify their programmes of assistance and to expand them in response to the needs of Lebanon, and to take the necessary steps to ensure that their offices in Beirut are adequately staffed at the senior level;

7. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the progress achieved in the implementation of the present resolution.

17 December 1985 Meeting 120 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1043) without vote, 5 December (meeting 48); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.104), based on informal consultations on Draft by Algeria, Australia, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Belgium, Canada, Cyprus, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, France, India, Iraq, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Morocco, Nicaragua, Oman, Pakistan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Spain, Sudan, Tunisia, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay and Yugoslavia (A/C.2/40/L.67); agenda item 87.

Chapter IV

International trade and finance

In 1985, several United Nations bodies focused on the interdependence of the world economy and the need to address international trade and finance issues in an interrelated manner, particularly in view of the serious debt servicing difficulties of many developing countries and the low price levels of their commodities. A significant part of the debate at both regular sessions in 1985 of the Trade and Development Board (TDB) of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) dealt with the interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system, as did the general discussion at the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council in July. In December, the General Assembly decided to reconvene the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee for one week in early 1986 in order to consider ways in which international co-operation in the fields of money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development could be promoted (decision 40/445).

In his annual report on the work of the Organization (see p. 3), the Secretary-General stated that economic, financial, monetary and trade issues were so interrelated and were of such importance that they could be dealt with effectively only as part of a wider political process. The international debt situation was particularly alarming, with many debtor countries facing very weak export markets and commodity prices lower in real terms than they had been since the 1930s. Interest rates, however, remained high and there seemed to be no tendency for new lending to resume. Although there was a strong mutual interest in resolving the debt crisis and efforts were being made to reschedule debts over long periods, elsewhere protectionist measures were nullifying those efforts. The Secretary-General saw a strong need for a joint, comprehensive and speedy examination of all aspects of the situation, including the political ones.

Following its fourth annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment, TDB recommended that further efforts should be taken to liberalize the international trading system and outlined documentation to be prepared for the 1986 review.

The United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices was held in November. Following consideration of the Conference's report, the General Assembly in December invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General and the Conference President to consult with regional groups and Governments on reconvening the Conference (resolution 40/192). The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its fourth session in April in preparation for the Conference.

During 1985, one additional State adhered to the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities; by year's end it had not entered into force. With regard to individual commodities, the United Nations Cocoa Conference, 1984, and the United Nations Conference on Natural Rubber, 1985, held sessions in 1985. In both cases, progress was made towards preparing successor agreements to earlier agreements on those commodities and it was recommended that both Conferences be reconvened. Both the International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1983, and the International Sugar Agreement, 1984, entered into force in 1985. Meetings were held during the year to consider possible international measures on iron ore, nickel and tungsten.

In April 1985, at its resumed 1984 session, the Assembly adopted guidelines for consumer protection and asked the Secretary-General to disseminate them to Governments and other interested parties. All United Nations organizations were requested to distribute the guidelines to the appropriate bodies of individual States (resolution 39/248).

The serious debt problems of developing countries and development finance were taken up in a number of United Nations bodies, including the Committee for Development Planning (CDP), TDB, the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade, the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. These issues were also addressed in the Organization's major economic reports. A special session of TDB (the fourteenth) centred on the need for a compensatory financing facility to assist developing countries with their export earnings shortfalls. The first part of the 1985 session of Committee on Invisibles and Financing was devoted to insurance questions.

The place, date and duration of the seventh (1987) session of UNCTAD was discussed by TDB in September. In December (resolution 40/189), the Assembly called on Governments and international organizations to commence intensive and thorough preparations for that session.

In November, the Assembly confirmed the appointment of Kenneth K. S. Dadzie as Secretary-General of UNCTAD for a term of three years beginning on 1 January 1986 (decision 40/308).

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief: Africa and the critical economic situation. Transport. Industrial development: manufactures. Regional economic and social activities: international trade and finance-Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, Western Asia. Science and technology: technology transfer. International economic law: international trade law.

International co-operation in trade and finance

The Committee for Development Planning,<sup>(1)</sup> which met in April 1985 (see also Chapter I of this section), stated that it was increasingly recognized that trade issues were closely linked to the financial and monetary issues that loomed so large in the world's current economic disequilibria. Large swings in key currency-exchange rates subjected trading partners to uncertainties about long-run comparative advantage and appropriate investment strategies. To illustrate the close link between trade and finance, CDP observed that when currencies were over-valued, protectionist pressures increased and trade barriers tended to take the form of quantitative restrictions; when they were under-valued, inflationary pressures built up and uncompetitive industries were encouraged; when access to markets was denied them, debtors found difficulty in servicing their debts; when interest rates rose unexpectedly, export earnings were diverted from import demands to debt service with costly effects for both the local and the world economy. The proliferation of trade barriers, therefore, had to be seen in the context of the general need to restore international financial stability and sustained economic development.

The UNTAD Trade and Development Report, 198.<sup>(2)</sup> stated that trade and financial policies needed to be made more supportive of development by fostering the spread of growth from developed to developing countries and meeting the needs of those parts of the developing world, such as sub-Saharan Africa, that would not be touched by faster growth in developed countries. Such policies would include: increasing lending by multilateral institutions; strengthening commodity export earnings beyond what would occur from more rapid growth in industrial countries; moving decisively towards meeting targets for official development assistance; ensuring greater access to markets in developed countries; and improving the functioning of the international monetary system. Policies in the developing countries themselves also required constant attention and improvement.

ACC activities. In its annual overview report to the Economic and Social Council for 1984/85,<sup>(3)</sup> the inter-agency Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) noted that deliberations in various forums of the United Nations system, including the Interim Committee of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the Development Committee of the World Bank and IMF, had recognized the need to address trade, money and finance in an interrelated manner.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

By decision 1985/159 of 31 May, the Economic and Social Council invited delegations at its July 1985 session, during the general discussion of international economic and social policy, to give special focus to international co-operation in the interrelated areas of money, finance, debt and trade.

During the discussion in July,<sup>(4)</sup> most delegations stressed the need for enhanced international co-operation in those areas. Of immediate concern was a prospective deceleration in growth in certain industrialized countries and the concomitant slow-down in world trade that that could entail. Averting a new global recession required sustained non-inflationary growth in industrialized countries, greater monetary stability, enlarged market access for exports of developing countries and a larger flow of resources to those countries. Sustained adjustment efforts by developing countries to redress external and internal imbalances and to improve allocative efficiency in their economies were also required. Concerted efforts were necessary to redress some fundamental inequities and deficiencies in the international monetary, financial and trading systems, including measures to restore the multilateral character of the trading regime, to improve mechanisms for creating and distributing international liquidity, and to ensure an adequate flow of financial resources to developing countries.

Commenting on the Council's general debate on 25 July, the President stated that the debt crisis had illustrated the need for greater insight into the interrelatedness of the issues in money, finance and trade, where policies had to be mutually reinforcing and not conflicting.

By decision 1985/183 of 25 July, the Council decided to transmit the Council President's statement to the 1985 session of the General Assembly.

Report of the Secretary-General. In response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Assembly in October 1985 a report on international co-operation in the fields of money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development.<sup>(6)</sup> A note verbale had been sent to consult all Member States and United Nations organizations and bodies, and a study was carried out of documents, statements, declarations, communiques and reports, which articulated positions held by countries and groups of countries on the issues.

The report comprised two main sections: the first assessed major policy issues arising from the current international economic situation and examined the interrelatedness of those issues in the areas of money, finance, debt and trade in the light of consultations and the general state of international negotiations on those matters; the second detailed responses to the consultations and summarized the proposals raised in them.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted decision 40/445, by recorded vote.

International co-operation in the interrelated areas of money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development

At its 119th plenary meeting, on 17 December 1985, the General Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee:

(a) Decided to reconvene the Second Committee immediately prior to the first regular session of the Economic and Social Council of 1986, for one week, in order to give in-depth consideration to ways in which international co-operation in the interrelated areas of money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development could be promoted effectively and to deal with unfinished business under agenda item 84, namely:

International Conference on Money and Finance for Development (draft resolution A/C.2/40/L.30);

External debt crisis and development (draft resolution A/C.2/40/L.52);

Commodities (draft resolution A/C.2/40/L.81);

Debt and related issues (draft resolution A/C.2/40/L.129);

(b) Requested the Secretary-General to provide all necessary information and documentation to support the work of the Committee, including an update of the report submitted under General Assembly resolution 39/218 of 18 December 1984, with a short summary of the relevant ideas and proposals put forward by the heads of State and Government and ministers for foreign affairs at the fortieth session of the General Assembly;

(c) Also requested the Secretary-General to invite the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to provide the Committee with information on their ongoing activities in the interrelated areas of money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development;

(d) Requested the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to submit a report on the ongoing work of the Conference in the area of interdependence of trade, development, finance and the international monetary system.

General Assembly decision 40/445

133-1-20 (recorded vote)

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.14) by recorded vote (881-19), 14 December (meeting 52); draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.51/Rev.1), orally revised: agenda item 84.

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/40/1062; S-G, A/C.2/40/L.91, A/C.5/40/96. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 31, 41, 45, 52; 5th Committee 68; plenary 119.

Recorded vote in Assembly as follows:

In favour: Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahamas, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belize, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burma, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic Kampuchea, Democratic Yemen, Djibouti, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Finland, Gabon, Gambia, German Democratic Republic, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Qatar, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay, Vanuatu, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Against: United States.

Abstaining: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Federal Republic of, Greece, Grenada, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Portugal, Spain, United Kingdom.

The deferred draft resolutions referred to in the above decision are discussed elsewhere in this chapter. For the draft resolution on an international conference on money and finance for development, see p. 578; for that on commodities, see p. 567; for those on the external debt crisis and development and on debt and related issues, see p. 577.

Speaking in explanation of vote, Finland said it had voted in favour of the text although it considered that the Economic and Social Council would have been better suited to deal with the work envisaged. China regretted that the Committee had not been able to reach a consensus. Venezuela felt that refusal to take a decision on the draft on an international conference on money and finance for development, which it considered the most important draft submitted to the session, did not contribute to improving international co-operation or to the Committee's credibility. The German Democratic Republic was convinced that the draft decision would be implemented in the manner agreed by consensus among delegations before the vote.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the members of the European Community (EC), believed that resuming the Second Committee was not the best method to continue the debate; the Council had the competence to consider the issues.

Canada said it would have preferred an open-ended, deliberative discussion of the issues during the Council's second regular annual session. It saw a certain rigidity of position in regard to the locus for the discussions and wondered why one or another of several alternative proposals would not have been satisfactory.

The United States said it was actively seeking solutions to the problems discussed, but the principal forums for dealing with them were the interested Governments, other institutions within the United Nations family and private financial institutions. The Second Committee should move cautiously and methodically and its deliberations must promote the total effort on international financial problems. It should avoid special or reserved sessions without clearly defined procedures and objectives.

Poland attached special importance to the inter-related problems addressed in the text and considered that further consideration should be given to proposals that had been submitted during the Organization's fortieth anniversary session by heads of State or Government and by foreign ministers on, among other things, establishing an international debt and development research centre.

Yugoslavia, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, said that although the Group had shown a constructive approach and a high degree of flexibility, it had not been possible to reach agreement on the drafts on an international conference on money and finance for development and on external debt because some developed countries insisted on maintaining their position and did not want the Assembly to be involved in the matter.

By decision 40/470 of 18 December, the Assembly decided to resume its 1985 session at a date to be announced to consider a number of agenda items, including development and international economic co-operation, with specific reference to trade and development.

International trade

In several United Nations bodies where international trade issues were discussed during 1985, including TDB and CDP, concern was expressed over the increasing tendency towards protectionism. The main conclusion of an UNCTAD report prepared for the Board's annual review of problems of protectionism and structural adjustment was that immediate action was required to deal with those problems on a simultaneous basis if there was to be any significant progress in expanding the share of developing countries in world production and trade.

In April, the Special Committee on Preferences reviewed the implementation of the generalized system of preferences and technical assistance activities in connection with the system. Governments were urged to make cash contributions to the UNCTAD trust fund so that technical co-operation activities could continue beyond 1985. The establishment of a global system of trade preferences among developing countries was discussed by the Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries in November.

Following discussions on trade relations among countries having different economic and social systems in September, TDB requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene a group of experts to consider prospects for such trade, particularly between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

In the area of trade promotion and facilitation, the International Trade Centre (ITC)-operated jointly by UNCTAD and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT)-continued to serve as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in formulating and implementing trade promotion programmes. A United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices was held in November and, in December, the General Assembly invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult with regional groups and Governments on reconvening the Conference. The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its fourth session in 1985.

Several meetings on commodities were held under UNCTAD auspices during the year, including two special sessions of the Committee on Commodities, one regular session of that Committee, and a meeting of the Permanent Sub-Committee on Commodities. By 31 December, the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had still not been ratified by a sufficient number of countries for it to enter into force.

In April, the Assembly adopted guidelines for consumer protection and requested the Secretary-General to disseminate them to Governments and other interested parties.

Trade policy

Most developing countries participated in the significant improvement in world trade which took place in 1984, according to the UNCTAD Trade and Development Report, 1985.<sup>(1)</sup> Despite the increasing resort to restrictive trade measures, the volume of world exports grew by close to 9 per cent compared with an annual rate of increase of less than 2 per cent in 1983. However, it was not expected to grow at such a pace in 1985. Much of the increase reflected the strong performance of the United States economy supported by recovery in other industrial countries. While it had been instrumental in transmitting a measure of export-led expansion to economic activity in several parts of the developing world, the expansion in demand for traded goods had been very unevenly distributed among the developing countries. Countries with a relatively advanced manufacturing sector were more favoured by developments in trade than countries which relied more heavily on primary commodities, which constituted the majority of developing countries.

Among the developing countries, there were wide differences in the incidence of growth of United States import demand and in their ability to translate increased exports into increased output. A small group of developing countries, mainly in the Pacific basin, had not experienced debt-servicing crises and had seen their exports to the United States rise sharply. However, a large number of developing countries failed to register any appreciable increase in export earnings mainly because of the weakness of commodity markets, stemming largely from the slow rate of growth of demand in Western Europe. The group of countries that had experienced difficulty in servicing their debt—mainly Latin American countries—and that had sharply increased their exports to the United States in 1983 and 1984 could only improve their trade balance at the cost of massive cuts in imports. In 1984, imports rose only slightly. The pre-emption of export earnings by debt service thus prevented them from retransmitting to the rest of the world the demand impulses received from the United States.

Among developed countries, the United States trading partners in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development had by their own policy stances failed to contribute significantly to demand growth, and had even dampened the demand expansion initiated by the United States. At the same time, they captured a sizeable share of the demand so generated.

The Report stated that the world-wide trade régime had been a source of difficulty on two counts: existing trade impediments had hampered the export efforts of developing countries, with over one third of their exports to developed market-economy countries subject to measures which constrained exports; and there was a tendency for impediments to increase in markets where developing countries were particularly successful.

Noting that the prevailing trends in trade imbalances could not continue for long, the Report stated that a unilateral shift by the United States towards a less expansionary fiscal stance would reduce the trade imbalance by reducing the disparity in demand-creation and might also lead to lower interest rates and a cheaper dollar, thereby improving United States competitiveness.

The World Economic Survey 1985<sup>(2)</sup> also devoted a chapter to the uneven international trade performance during 1984, echoing the view expressed in the Trade and Development Report, 1985 that the major beneficiaries of the surge in trade were largely those countries in which manufactures provided a major share of export earnings and those with strong trade ties to the more rapidly growing markets. International commodity prices saw their cyclical recovery cut short in 1984, while the surge in exports in a number of sensitive sectors brought about a stiffening of protectionist barriers.

The Survey said that 1984 had witnessed: a further tightening in restrictions applied to already highly protected sectors, such as textiles, clothing and steel; continued proliferation of orderly market agreements, voluntary export restraints and other bilateral arrangements; a growing number of allegations of unfair trade practices, such as subsidies; increased trade restrictions imposed for balance-of-payments reasons; and escalating tensions surrounding agricultural trade.

To sustain the growth momentum in the world economy, to help reduce external and internal imbalances and, in particular, to improve the prospects of indebted countries, a continuous expansion of trading relations was critical, said the Survey. It was urgent that industrial countries adopt standstill provisions with regard to protectionist actions and start a gradual dismantling of non-tariff barriers and discriminatory restrictions on trade. Additional efforts should be made to carry forward the unfinished programme of work agreed upon at the 1982 GATT ministerial session,<sup>(3)</sup> since progress in its implementation should pave the way for a new round of trade negotiations with the broad-based participation of developed and developing countries.

Noting that bilateral agreements, in particular countertrade, and full use of regional and subregional clearing mechanisms had allowed for a significant increase in trade among developing countries, the Survey said there was a strong case for further enhancement of such mechanisms. Since many bilateral agreements tended to be of an ad hoc and temporary nature, the strengthening of existing arrangements and enactment of more comprehensive ones remained important; that process should take account of policies to encourage interaction among the private sectors of developing countries. In addition, more rapid progress was required in evolving a system of generalized trade preferences among developing countries (see p. 558).

In its 1985 report to the Economic and Social Council,<sup>(4)</sup> CDP stated that the seriousness of the slippage towards trade protectionism and discrimination could not be over-emphasized, as foreign trade and investment were at the core of the international economy. CDP supported the launching of a new round of GATT negotiations directed primarily towards strengthening the multilateral trading system and a further opening of world markets. Expansion of trade in services and exploration of whether multilateral rules could be devised for that sector were also important elements.

International trading system

In line with UNCTAD resolution 159(VI),<sup>(5)</sup> TDB at its September 1985 session discussed the organization of a review and in-depth study of the international trading system. The issue, together with an UNCTAD report on the subject, had also been discussed by the Board in 1984.<sup>(6)</sup>

On 27 September,<sup>(7)</sup> the Board, noting that recent developments had accentuated the need for improvement and strengthening of the international trading system and reversal of dangerous tendencies, decided to review and study, in depth, developments in that system; it requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to submit appropriate documentation to assist the Board at its September 1986 session.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 9 December, a draft resolution on international trade, sponsored by Australia, Canada and New Zealand,<sup>(8)</sup> was introduced in the Second Committee. By that text, the Assembly, welcoming the decision of the Contracting Parties to GATT to establish a preparatory committee to determine the objectives, subject-matter, modalities for and participation in the new round of multilateral trade negotiations (see PART TWO, Chapter XVII), would have urged all countries to oppose protectionist pressures, dismantle trade barriers and strengthen the open multilateral trading system.

At a meeting on 13 December, Yugoslavia, on behalf of the Group of 77 developing countries, submitted amendments<sup>(9)</sup> to replace the operative paragraph by five paragraphs, by which the Assembly would: reaffirm that the principle of preferential and more favourable treatment to developing countries should be fulfilled on a non-reciprocal basis; urge developed countries to implement commitments they undertook at the 1982 ministerial session of GATT and at UNCTAD VI on standstill and rollback of protectionism; recommend that urgent measures be taken to achieve greater stability in exchange rates; urge an end to developed countries' violation of the rules, norms and principles of the international trading system; and stress the need for a comprehensive agreement on safeguard measures to ensure their temporary nature.

At the same meeting, the sponsors withdrew their draft text and, consequently, the amendments were also withdrawn.

Protectionism and structural adjustment

In March 1985, TDB undertook its annual review of protectionism and structural adjustment. As requested by it in 1984,<sup>(10)</sup> the UNCTAD Secretary-General had asked member States to provide information on actions relevant to agreements and commitments in part I of UNCTAD resolution 159(VI)<sup>(11)</sup> and on their experience with structural adjustment, in order to assist the Board's sessional committee in reviewing progress in structural adjustment and in assessing its implications for the trade and development of developing countries and for the world economy.

A secretariat note<sup>(12)</sup> reproduced information received from 18 countries (Australia, Austria, Chile, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Ecuador, Finland, Federal Republic of Germany, Hungary, New Zealand, Norway, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Yugoslavia) and the European Economic Community (EEC); replies from France and the United Kingdom indicated that the information requested from them fell within EEC's competence. It was noted that Peru and the United States had provided information which was available for consultation in the secretariat files.

Also before TDB was a two-part secretariat report on problems of protectionism and structural adjustment. The first part of the report<sup>(13)</sup> discussed the role that a liberal trade régime could play in achieving structural adjustment, the role that effective adjustment could play in achieving a more liberal trade régime, and the connection between structural adjustment, economic growth and development, and a reversal of protectionist trends. Its main conclusion was that immediate action was required on a simultaneous basis to deal not only with protectionism but also with structural adjustment, if there was to be significant progress in expanding developing countries' share of world production and trade.

The second part of the report<sup>(14)</sup> described trends in production, employment and trade in agriculture, manufacturing and services, and some underlying factors in structural change. Its main conclusion was that the structural adjustment problem reached a new dimension as a result of difficulties experienced by the world economy. The 1970s had witnessed a retardation of structural adjustment when the need for such change was greatest because of the increased export competitiveness of a number of developing countries. Sluggish growth in the latter part of the 1970s, followed by prolonged recession, had made adjustment more difficult, particularly for certain major industries. A vicious circle between structural maladjustment and adverse growth conditions gradually emerged. The report stated that greater transparency of production and trade policies and of Governments' intentions would represent a step forward. It would provide guidance to prospective suppliers and remove the uncertainty which made correct investment decisions increasingly difficult. Greater transparency of the real cost involved in protectionist policies might help Governments resist pressure from interest groups and select more appropriate forms of intervention. If consumers were better informed about the indirect costs of protectionism brought about by higher prices, Governments would be in a better position to reconcile trade policies with policies to facilitate structural adjustment.

On 29 March,<sup>(15)</sup> TDB recommended: reaffirmation and full implementation of the commitments in UNCTAD resolution 159(VI);<sup>(11)</sup> liberalization efforts to strengthen the trading system and further expand trade; that developed countries fulfil their commitments on standstill and rollback and work towards eliminating quantitative restrictions and similar measures; and that developed countries provide more favourable treatment to developing countries in international trade and facilitate structural adjustment based on a dynamic pattern of comparative advantage, with special attention being paid to the problems of the least developed countries (LDCs).

To foster greater transparency, work on the UNCTAD Data Base on Trade Measures should continue and the information therein be circulated to UNCTAD member States, whose comments should be taken into account when updating it. An intergovernmental group of experts should be convened to focus on reaching a consensus on definitions and methodology employed in the Data Base. The work should assist the Board in addressing questions of dissemination of the inventory of non-tariff barriers, preferably at the 1986 annual review. For that review, the secretariat should intensify its analysis of structural adjustment, using information available from other organizations and considering the problem in the context of relevant factors, including a liberal trade regime. The need for improved access, especially for products of export interest to developing countries, should be borne in mind.

In preparing documentation for the 1986 review, attention should be given to problems of strengthening the participation of developing countries in agro-industrial production and trade. Special attention should also be given to the difficulties of the African countries and LDCs.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Second Committee had before it a draft resolution<sup>(16)</sup> on protectionism and structural adjustment. The draft, originally submitted in 1980 on behalf of the Group of 77<sup>(17)</sup> and revised by the sponsors in 1981,<sup>(18)</sup> It was considered in 1982,<sup>(19)</sup> 1983<sup>(20)</sup> and 1984,<sup>(21)</sup> then referred to the Assembly's 1985 session.<sup>(22)</sup>

By the draft, the Assembly would have urged the developed countries to limit protectionist policies and facilitate measures to increase the share of developing countries in international trade. A table containing suggestions by some developed countries for changes in the draft was annexed to it.

On 17 December, by decision 40/439 adopted without vote, the Assembly, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, as orally proposed by its Chairman on 9 December, deferred consideration of the draft resolution to its 1986 session.

Services

In accordance with part IV of UNCTAD resolution 159(VI),<sup>(23)</sup> which instructed the UNCTAD Secretary-General to continue studying the issues involved in trade in services and invited TDB to consider appropriate future work, the Board had considered the subject in 1984<sup>(24)</sup> and annexed to its report a draft decision submitted by the Group of 77. That draft was discussed at the Board's March 1985 session, where it was submitted to a contact group for consideration.

On 29 March,<sup>(25)</sup> the Board agreed that UNCTAD's contribution to future work in services should encompass the following four aspects: consideration of the definitional aspects of services; strengthening and refining the data base at the national, regional and international levels, together with methodological improvement; further in-depth studies of the role of services in the development process to enable countries to analyse the role of the services sector in their economies and its contribution to all aspects of development; and assisting interested member States in analysing the role of services in their economies. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to invite the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and other sources to assist in meeting individual and joint requests in implementation of the decision.

In accordance with that decision, the UNCTAD secretariat transmitted to the Board's September 1985 session a report<sup>(26)</sup> describing UNCTAD's ongoing work in the four areas of services in the development process.

Trade preferences

In 1985, the Special Committee on Preferences reviewed changes and improvements in the generalized system of preferences (GSP). It urged Governments to contribute to the UNCTAD trust fund for technical co-operation activities. Discussions continued on a proposed global system of trade preferences among developing countries.

Generalized system of preferences

The Trade and Development Board's Special Committee on Preferences held its thirteenth session at Geneva from 10 to 19 April 1985,<sup>(27)</sup> having before it the UNCTAD secretariat's ninth general report on implementing GSP.<sup>(28)</sup> The report described changes and improvements in the system since the previous review in 1984.<sup>(24)</sup>

Improvements made in 1984 with respect to product coverage and tariff cuts could be characterized as modest, according to the report. Efforts continued towards improving the benefits of the system with respect to LDCs and towards making it more restrictive with respect to other beneficiaries considered to be more competitive—a twin policy aimed at bringing about greater differentiation among developing countries in the application of preferential treatment.

Notable developments in 1984 were the extensions by Canada and the United States of their respective schemes. Thus, all GSP schemes had been renewed beyond their initial 10-year period.

The Special Committee also considered a report<sup>(29)</sup> on technical co-operation activities in connection with GSP during 1984.<sup>(30)</sup>

On 19 April, the Special Committee adopted a set of a reed conclusions which it annexed to its report.<sup>(27)</sup> It recognized the important role of GSP in facilitating exports of developing countries and expanding international trade. The objectives and character of GSP were reaffirmed, but it was noted that the objectives had not been fully achieved. The Committee also recognized the important role of GSP in the development efforts of developing countries and its objectives, i.e. to increase their export earnings, to promote their industrialization and to accelerate their rates of economic growth. In that context, the crucial importance of the expansion of exports of the indebted countries was recognized. The Committee noted the requests of preference-receiving countries that preference-giving countries fully respect the generalized, non-discriminatory and non-reciprocal character of GSP and refrain from excluding beneficiary countries.

The Special Committee, noting that improvements in GSP had been relatively modest, urged the preference-giving countries to improve their schemes significantly. Developed countries should pay special attention to products not adequately covered in the agricultural and industrial sectors and to products of interest to LDCs. The interests of developing countries enjoying special advantages and the need to find ways of protecting their interests should be taken into account.

The Committee reaffirmed that the rules of origin should be further liberalized and harmonized and their operation simplified, and the rules of cumulative origin improved. It was noted that the adoption of the Harmonized Commodity Description and Coding System,<sup>(31)</sup> to be introduced in January 1987, in national tariff systems could lead to changes in tariff rates, product coverage, safeguard limitations and rules of origin. The Committee agreed that in changing to the new nomenclature, the overall level of GSP benefits should be maintained and the change in tariff schedules should not hinder preference-giving countries in examining ways to improve their schemes. Preference-giving countries modifying their schemes should afford an opportunity for prompt consultations; any modifications should take into account the development, financial and trade needs of the developing countries. Preference-giving countries should also provide detailed statistics on GSP imports from preference-receiving countries, in order to increase transparency and improve utilization of the schemes.

Special measures should be taken for LDCs to derive full benefits from GSP.

The Special Committee stressed the importance of continued financial support for GSP technical co-operation activities. It urged Governments, in particular those of preference-giving countries, to make cash contributions to the UNCTAD trust fund so that the multilateral nature of such technical co-operation could be continued beyond 1985. It also urged that future technical assistance be provided to all regions on an equitable basis.

On 27 September, TDB took note of the report of the Special Committee.

Technical co-operation

In 1985, the first full year in which the UNCTAD technical assistance programme on GSP functioned without any direct financial support from UNDP, extrabudgetary trust fund contributions from both developed and developing countries covered the operation of the project and its activities, but were insufficient to cover fully the costs of the Geneva focal point.

During 1985,<sup>(32)</sup> new trust fund contributions were received from Austria, Colombia and Sweden, and funds were pledged by the Netherlands and Norway. The financial position for 1986 was expected 'to be in the range of $173,000.

After three years of in-kind support by the Philippines, the UNDP/UNCTAD regional GSP project for Asia and the Pacific sought a new location for its office. Indonesia accepted to host the regional office at Jakarta for two years starting in July 1985 and donated facilities for the Japanese-financed expert stationed there.

Training activities undertaken under the project for Asia and the Pacific and the UNCTAD inter-regional GSP project included national GSP seminars for the Governments of China, Indonesia and Papua New Guinea, and four regional seminars on GSP and other trade laws for Asian countries, Latin American countries, Pacific basin countries, and member States of the Association of South-East Asian Nations. The seminars trained approximately 293 developing-country government officials who administered GSP as well as private-sector representatives from 34 countries.

During the year, project personnel updated GSP handbooks on the schemes of Austria, Finland, Japan, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States and supervised their translation into French and Spanish.

Rules of origin

In accordance with a 1984 recommendation of the Special Committee on Preferences,<sup>(30)</sup> the Working Group on Rules of Origin convened its tenth session at Geneva from 9 to 13 December 1985,<sup>(33)</sup> its previous session having been held in 1982.<sup>(34)</sup> To continue its consultations on proposals for improvements in the rules of origin, including greater harmonization and simplification, the Working Group had before it a compendium of replies<sup>(35)</sup> by member States to a secretariat questionnaire on their experiences in the use of the current rules and a secretariat study<sup>(36)</sup> on improvement in rules of origin, including harmonization and simplification, which gave a broad overview of the GSP origin systems and examined progress made in their improvement over the years.

On 13 December, the Group adopted a set of agreed conclusions stating that: a request by preference-receiving countries that measures be taken to liberalize the percentage criterion by increasing the permitted proportion of imported inputs could be considered further; preference-giving countries had indicated their willingness further to consider particular difficulties encountered by preference-receiving LDCs; concerning verification and control, it agreed on the continuing need for close administrative co-operation between the authorities of both preference-giving and -receiving countries, on the importance of feedback information within a reasonable time for receiving countries, particularly when the response to the verification request was open to differing interpretations and GSP treatment was refused, and on the importance of prompt and complete replies by preference-receiving countries to verification requests; and, with regard to goods exported from a preference-receiving country which reached a preference-giving country after passing through an intermediate country or being held there for customs control, the Group agreed that the certificate of origin should be accepted, provided that it corresponded to the requirements of the country of destination.

The Group recommended that, since its task had not been completed, it should be reconvened at a date to be decided by the Special Committee on Preferences at its 1986 session.

Global system of trade preferences among developing countries

The UNCTAD Committee on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries fourth session, Geneva, 18-29 November 1985<sup>(37)</sup> (see also p. 426) considered the reports of meetings held in 1984 on the global system of trade preferences among developing countries (GSTP).<sup>(30)</sup> Also before the Committee was a secretariat report on issues bearing on the negotiation and application of tariff and non-tariff preferences under GSTP.<sup>(38)</sup> The report explained and reviewed the diversity of instruments used by developing countries to regulate their imports and their impact on trade, discussed issues relating to negotiation and application of tariff preferences, and addressed some related issues in the area of non-tariff preferences.

In a 29 November resolution, annexed to its report to TDB,<sup>(37)</sup> the Committee called on the UNCTAD Secretary-General to assist developing countries to expand trade among themselves and adopt adequate commercial policy measures at the national, regional and interregional levels by means of GSTP.

Trade among countries having different economic and social systems

In accordance with a 1984 TDB decision,<sup>(39)</sup> the secretariat submitted to the Board's September 1985 session a report<sup>(40)</sup> on trends and policies in trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems, together with a statistical annex. The report outlined the world economic background and recent developments of policies in trade among countries having different economic and social systems, dealt briefly with the main developments in trade and economic relations, described the prospects for trade and economic relations among those countries, and explored policies and measures for the further expansion of trade among them.

The report's principal conclusion with respect to prospects for East-South trade was that it would grow more rapidly during the 1980s than world trade as a whole and, as in the past, significantly faster than the overall trade of the socialist countries of Eastern Europe.

Also in accordance with a 1984 Board decision,<sup>(39)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat submitted a report<sup>(41)</sup> on consultative machinery for bilateral and multilateral consultations among countries having different economic and social systems. The report stated that, within the framework of UNCTAD's consultative machinery established in 1969,<sup>(42)</sup> 360 bilateral and multilateral consultations between interested member States of UNCTAD had been organized. A hundred countries had availed themselves of those consultations to discuss issues pertaining to their mutual trade and economic relations, and a number of intergovernmental organizations had used the machinery for bilateral and/or multilateral consultations. UNCTAD's machinery had been particularly useful in assisting the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and developing countries in establishing trade-creative contacts and identifying possible areas for mutual commercial exchanges and economic co-operation.

Based on replies by UNCTAD member States to a note verbale inviting their suggestions and comments on measures to improve the consultative machinery, the report stated, efforts were required by both Governments and the UNCTAD secretariat to expand the machinery and make it more effective. The Board might wish to take action to make it more efficient and more responsive to countries' needs and to recommend measures for further utilizing the mechanism outside the framework of its sessions.

TDB action. Following discussions in a sessional committee, the Board on 27 September adopted a decision<sup>(43)</sup> by which it reiterated its request to the UNCTAD members and secretariat to implement further UNCTAD resolutions 15(II),<sup>(44)</sup> 53(III)<sup>(45)</sup> and 95(IV).<sup>(46)</sup> It invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to report to it in 1986 on implementation and to prepare proposals for further promotion of trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems, giving particular consideration to the interests of developing countries.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to prepare, prior to the September 1986 Board session, background studies on: modalities of payments arrangements and prospects for trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems, with special consideration given to the interests of the developing countries; and trade and economic co-operation of African developing countries with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe. The Board confirmed its request for case-studies on this topic between LDCs and Eastern European countries.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to convene, before UNCTAD VII, an ad hoc group of experts to consider prospects for trade and economic co-operation among countries having different economic and social systems, particularly between developing and Eastern European countries, including ways to expand the volume and diversify the structure of such trade.

Members and the secretariat were called on to reinforce multilateral and bilateral consultations and to consider the secretariat suggestions on machinery for such consultations among countries having different economic and social systems.<sup>(41)</sup>

The Board requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to ensure adequate support for UNCTAD's technical assistance projects and programmes in promoting trade and economic co-operation of developing countries, particularly the least developed, with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe; it invited him and the UNDP Administrator to hold consultations on their financing, and also invited voluntary contributions.

Also on 27 September, the Board decided<sup>(47)</sup> to remit to its September 1986 session for further negotiations the informal text on trade among countries having different economic and social systems, which was annexed to UNCTAD decision 145(VI).<sup>(48)</sup>

During 1985, the activities of UNCTAD's operational programme of technical assistance for developing trade between developing countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe were financed mainly from a USSR/UNDP trust fund and to a lesser extent from a Bulgaria/UNDP trust fund. Contributions in kind were provided by several other Eastern European countries.

An interregional symposium in Moscow offered government officials and business representatives from 18 LDCs in Africa and Asia an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the foreign trade systems, trade policies, modalities and trading practices of the USSR and other socialist countries of Eastern Europe. In collaboration with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, a regional seminar on trade and economic relations between the countries of the two regions was held in Moscow and Sofia, Bulgaria, financed by the two UNDP-supported trust funds. Trade issues raised included credit, financing and exports of specific manufactured goods from Latin American countries.

Trade promotion and facilitation

During 1985, the United Nations continued to assist developing countries to promote exports and facilitate the movement of goods in international commerce. The main body responsible for technical co-operation projects in the area was ITC. The Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices held its fourth session in April and the United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices met in November.

International Trade Centre

During 1985, the International Trade Centre, under the joint sponsorship of UNCTAD and GATT, continued its technical co-operation activities, serving as the focal point for United Nations assistance to developing countries in the formulation and implementation of trade promotion programmes.<sup>(49)</sup>

ITC recorded a slight increase in its overall technical co-operation programme, despite constraints in financial resources resulting in particular from a decline in dollar values of trust fund contributions. The number of voluntary donors to ITC again increased over the previous year, including several new developing-country contributors.

In Africa, programme implementation dropped slightly from $3.7 million in 1984 to $3.4 million, although the number of national projects rose from 20 to 25 and regional projects from 14 to 16. In Asia and the Pacific, implementation was also down marginally from $4.5 million to $4.4 million while national projects increased from 32 to 36 and regional ones from 7 to 8. In Latin America and the Caribbean, implementation increased to $2 million from $1.8 million, with the number of country projects dropping from 21 to 15 while regional projects remained at 10. In Europe, the Mediterranean and the Middle East, ITC doubled its implementation, reaching $1 million with 14 national projects. Interregional activities declined from $4.5 million to $4.3 million.

ITC activities regarding institutional infrastructure for trade promotion at the national level in 1985 consisted primarily of advisory services, training, and research and development. Advisory missions were undertaken to Paraguay, Turkey and Uruguay to analyse the institutional set-up for export promotion, to Zambia to help prepare a law for creating a new promotional organization, and to Colombia to discuss improving the effectiveness of its five-year export promotion programme. ITC participated in multidisciplinary programming missions to Indonesia and Uganda to facilitate project design and in the organization of seminars in Sweden and Tunisia on a comprehensive approach to national export development programmes. A workshop was held in Ecuador for government officials on the design of a national export strategy and development programme, which had as an objective the dissemination of the results of the 1984 comparative analysis of trade promotion systems in Latin American countries.<sup>(50)</sup> Research on services, operating procedures, planning techniques and sources of finance of trade promotion organizations continued during 1985, and a first workshop was held at Geneva for senior trade promotion officials from developing countries on techniques for evaluating trade promotion programmes.

In 1985, ITC's export market development programme consisted of activities to develop and promote developing countries' exports of products and services through selected export sectors as well as with individual companies. In accordance with UNCTAD resolution 158(VI),<sup>(51)</sup> ITC continued to strengthen export market activities in commodities and in support of UNCTAD's Integrated Programme for Commodities. Proposals were made or being developed on market research, trade information, technical advisory services and training on technical co-operation needs relating to commodities, including cocoa, coconuts, coffee, jute, rubber, tea, tropical timber and vegetable oils. Proposals had also been prepared for silk and pepper products. Advisory services concentrated on selecting markets, planning marketing strategies, adapting products to buyers' requirements, organizing sales missions and planning promotional activities. Major market surveys published related to bicycles and components, builders' woodwork, technical consulting services, and sales possibilities in the Colombian and Hungarian markets. Seminars and consulting sessions were organized in developing countries to disseminate the findings of those and earlier studies.

Within its import-export contact programme, ITC provided trade information to exporters and importers in developing countries; at the end of 1985, the ITC computerized data base, "TRADERS", contained over 23,000 company profiles. Trade information was provided in response to approximately 1,300 requests, an increase of 7 per cent over 1984.

The ITC Market News Service expanded its operations during the year to 152 recipients in 82 developing countries regularly receiving information, such as prices and trends in supply and demand, on product groups of interest to them.

In the area of specialized national trade promotion services, ITC activities included: export packaging; export finance; export costing and pricing; trade information; trade fairs and commercial publicity; export quality control; national trade representation; legal aspects of foreign trade; and export co-operation schemes for small and medium-sized enterprises. During 1985, 60 advisory missions and 39 training events were undertaken in those areas.

In the multinational trade promotion programme, activities were concentrated on projects to strengthen the competitive position of jute and jute products in selected import markets, carried out at the request of the International Jute Organization. Promotional actions were undertaken in Western Europe for selected products, i.e. carpet backing, yarn, wall coverings, bags and jute geotextiles.

ITC's programme of manpower development for trade promotion focused on short- and long-term training activities, including workshops, seminars and individual study awards, organized at the national, subregional, regional and interregional levels. During 1985, ITC continued to strengthen its training activities in co-operation with other training institutions and provided technical staff and training materials to their programmes.

In 1985, ITC established a training materials working group to develop a programme to design new foreign-trade-development training materials in association with institutions in developed and developing countries. A new series of reference materials for administering training activities commenced in 1985 with the publication of: a revised world directory of institutions offering training programmes in export marketing and trade promotion; an index of training materials developed or adapted by training institutions in developing countries in export marketing and trade promotion; a compendium of training programmes; and a manual on organization, presentation and evaluation of training events.

Activities in national import operations and techniques in 1985 included projects in Angola, Burundi, Colombia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Mozambique and Rwanda; integrated country projects with import components were being implemented in Afghanistan, Benin, El Salvador, Lesotho, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritania and Morocco. Continued emphasis was placed on rationalizing import régimes and streamlining procedures, with advisory work concentrating on developing criteria for allocating import licences and guidelines for annual import programming, providing automatic import licences to industry, defining the information base needed within importing enterprises, establishing and monitoring national import programmes, setting up a system for registering-importers, and establishing mechanisms for price monitoring of imported goods.

ITC's special programme of technical co-operation with LDCs included: pre-feasibility studies on potential export products to help diversify the export structure; high-level workshops with national development finance institutions to accelerate the flow of funds to export-oriented investments; joint venture studies to stimulate the flow of external capital and technology to the export sector; and the preparation of operational manuals to strengthen the management capability of small and inexperienced exporting firms in LDCs.

Technical co-operation with national chambers of commerce in 1985 included the organization of three seminars for chamber-of-commerce officials from developing countries: one workshop on computerized trade information services (Geneva), and two training programmes on chamber services in foreign trade matters (Austria and the Federal Republic of Germany). A technical advisory mission took place in Morocco for the federation of Moroccan chambers.

Total ITC expenditure in 1985 was $25.5 million. Of this amount, technical co-operation activities accounted for $15.1 million. Trust fund contributions furnished $8.5 million of the 1985 amount for technical co-operation; the remainder was provided by UNDP. The Centre's 1985 regular budget of $8.1 million, covering operations at its Geneva headquarters, was contributed in equal parts by the United Nations and GATT. As at 31 December, ITC had a headquarters-based staff of 76 Professionals and 129 in the General Service category. It assigned 621 experts to projects during the year.

JAG action. The Joint Advisory Group (JAG) on ITC (eighteenth session, Geneva, 15-22 April)<sup>(52)</sup> recommended that ITC should continue to try to increase both extrabudgetary resources and regular budget allocations and to establish closer collaboration with international organizations dealing with trade development and related fields, including expansion of training opportunities for businesswomen in developing countries, particularly in Africa. Among its other recommendations were that ITC should: assist Governments in evolving sound national institutional infrastructures and a favourable overall export climate; devote greater attention to assisting Governments in implementing export development strategies and generating export earnings through enterprise-level actions; scrutinize all possibilities of expanding and improving the production base, particularly in LDCs; intensify its involvement in marketing and distributing commodities; expand its technical co-operation in LDCs; analyse the feasibility of future action in international physical distribution of goods; and intensify its activities in expanding trade of developing countries with the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and make more use of experts from the latter countries.

On 25 September, TDB took note of the JAG report.

Trade facilitation

During 1985, the UNCTAD Special Programme on Trade Facilitation (FALPRO) continued to provide the focal point in an international network of national trade facilitation bodies and interested international organizations. In the absence of UNDP funding, advisory services in trade facilitation were financed through trust funds contributed by Finland and Sweden through government development agencies. Additional financial support was received from the Netherlands, the World Bank and EC. Advisory missions were carried out in Burundi, Ethiopia, Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Morocco, Nepal, the Sudan, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe. In co-operation with ITC, advisory missions were also carried out in Haiti, Lesotho and Mali, financed from national projects, and in the Ivory Coast, financed from the UNCTAD programme on training development in the field of maritime transport. A mission to Ghana was partly financed by the World Bank.

FALPRO staff conducted or lectured at three seminars financed by the Netherlands: a seminar on the Northern Corridor Transit System (Turin, Italy, February), partly financed by EEC; a port seminar (Barcelona, Spain, October); and a facilitation seminar (Bangkok, Thailand, December).

The Northern Corridor seminar was held as part of the implementation of the Northern Corridor Transit Agreement, signed in Bujumbura, Burundi, in February by Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda. During the year, FALPRO prepared four annexes to the Agreement and participated in the final negotiations which, in November, led to the conclusion of the Agreement and the creation of a Transit Transport Co-ordination Authority, to which FALPRO lent continuing support.

Various manuals, directories and code systems in trade facilitation, established jointly by UNCTAD and the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE), were updated during the year; four issues of Trade Facilitation News were published by ECE and FALPRO.

Restrictive business practices

On 29 March 1985,<sup>(53)</sup> TDB took note of the report of the Intergovernmental Group of Experts on Restrictive Business Practices on its third (1984) session,<sup>(54)</sup> endorsed the resolution adopted at that session, and called on all States to ensure implementation of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, adopted in 1980.<sup>(55)</sup>

At its fourth session (Geneva, 22-30 April 1985),<sup>(56)</sup> the Intergovernmental Group, acting as the preparatory meeting for the United Nations Conference to review the principles and rules, approved the provisional agenda for the Conference. It agreed that the UNCTAD Secretary-General should request States and regional groupings to supply information on steps taken to meet their commitment to the principles and rules and on the adoption and application of legislation, regulations and policies concerning restrictive business practices for submission to the Conference. The Group considered, but could not agree on, proposals by the Group of 77 (developing countries), Group B (developed market economies) and Group D (centrally planned economies) for improving and developing the principles and rules. The proposals concerned their legal nature, establishment of a special committee to replace the Intergovernmental Group, technical assistance, a framework for multilateral consultations, and a further review conference in 1990.

In accordance with a 1983 request by the Intergovernmental Group,<sup>(57)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat issued in June 1985 the 1983-1984 annual report on legislative and other developments in developed and developing countries in the control of restrictive business practices.<sup>(58)</sup> The report, which covered the period from early 1983 to January 1985, was based on information received from Governments and international organizations. It noted that the period under review had witnessed a reduction in the number of countries enacting new or amending existing legislation on restrictive business practices, compared with the period covered in the 1982 report.

United Nations Conference to review principles and rules to control restrictive business practices

In accordance with a 1980 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(59)</sup> a United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices was held under UNCTAD auspices at Geneva from 4 to 15 November 1985.<sup>(60)</sup>

The Conference had before it a note by the UNCTAD secretariat<sup>(61)</sup> reviewing the application and implementation of the principles and rules and making proposals for their improvement and further development. The report concluded that they had not lived up to expectations; since their adoption, restrictive business practices had become an increasingly important component of international trade policy.

The report recommended that the Conference should urge all States to take action to eliminate restrictive business practices from international trade transactions and to avoid entering into arrangements in restraint of trade, and should strengthen control of restrictive practices at all levels by implementing the principles. Steps towards that end could include: establishing national or regional focal points for contacts with enterprises and other States to facilitate consultations on application, and assisting developing countries in establishing such focal points; establishing or improving States' notification procedures for enterprises on the use of restrictive business practices in import and export transactions; strengthening notification procedures among States regarding adverse effects of such practices on international trade; agreeing that, when a State decided to investigate a practice likely to affect adversely international trade and having implications for another State, it should consult that State before initiating judicial or administrative action); inviting States, particularly the developed ones, to contribute to technical assistance and advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices, and to pursue in the UNDP Governing Council resources for implementing work in that area; requesting further studies on the link between restrictive business practice policies and governmental trade policies; establishing a special committee on restrictive business practices in place of the Intergovernmental Group to reflect properly the importance of the issue; and recommending a review conference for 1990.

Another secretariat note<sup>(62)</sup> contained extracts of replies to a request for information received from States and regional groupings on steps taken to meet their commitment to the principles and rules.

On 15 November, the Conference decided to transmit its report<sup>(60)</sup> to the General Assembly, together with proposals made by regional groups, and requested the Assembly, in the light of the positions reflected therein, to decide whether to convene a resumed session of the Conference in 1986.

The proposal of the Group of 77 consisted of a draft declaration by which the Conference would have recommended that: developed countries should ensure a standstill and rollback on the use of restrictive business practices in international trade transactions, especially those affecting imports from developing countries, and should repeal measures permitting or encouraging such practices; States should make available details of all such practices affecting international trade transactions, establish notification procedures on their use by enterprises, including transnational corporations (TNCs), and establish within UNCTAD a registry of such information; States should establish national or regional focal points to strengthen their capacity to control such practices and facilitate contacts with enterprises to ensure full adherence to the principles and rules, and a special committee on restrictive business practices should be established within the UNCTAD framework to monitor their application and implementation; effective use should be made of the consultation procedure provided therein when investigating a practice likely to have adverse effects on international trade, and having implications for another State; multilateral consultations should be held at each session of the special committee to exchange experience on policy issues relating to the control of restrictive business practices in international trade transactions; States, particularly developed ones, should ensure resources for multilateral technical assistance activities; continued work should be directed at establishing a legally binding instrument to control restrictive business practices in international trade; and a further session of the Conference should be held in 1990.

The proposal of Group B comprised draft conclusions by which the Conference would have recommended that: the Intergovernmental Group should provide improved mechanisms for informal discussions and exchanges of views among experts (beginning in 1986 at least two such meetings, each on a subject of practical importance); the Group should develop proposals to further the implementation of technical assistance, advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices in the United Nations system; the UNCTAD Secretary-General should maintain an inventory of such programmes, for assisting national agencies to identify available technical assistance; he should also submit recommendations on priorities for such programmes for the Group's consideration, following which the Group's comments could be transmitted to Governments, international organizations and financing programmes, particularly UNDP, for them to consider providing additional resources; delegations could inform the Group about national and regional developments in restrictive business practices control; and regional groupings of States should be enabled to participate fully in the work of the institutional machinery on the basis of procedures adopted by the Conference.

In draft proposals submitted by Group D, the Conference would have stated that the main cause of the principles' insufficient effectiveness lay in the unwillingness of some States, particularly those in which TNCs were based, to fulfil their obligations, particularly with regard to: improving and enforcing legislation and procedures to control restrictive business practices, including those of TNCs; adopting measures to prevent abuse by dominant corporations to limit access to markets; seeking measures against restrictive business practices adversely affecting international trade and development, particularly that of developing countries; and instituting procedures for obtaining from enterprises information necessary for effective control of restrictive business practices, including details of restrictive agreements, understandings and other arrangements. To increase the effectiveness of action foreseen in the principles, it was necessary to ensure their proper implementation, particularly in connection with the control and elimination of restrictive business practices by TNCs and cartels, which caused serious damage to international trade, and to make wider use of multilateral and bilateral consultations for studying and resolving issues concerning control of those practices. The draft also proposed that the UNCTAD Secretary-General take measures to implement vigorously technical assistance, advisory and training programmes on restrictive business practices and ensure balance in using the experience available in both developed and developing countries. Finally, a further United Nations conference to review the principles should be convened in 1990.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November,<sup>(63)</sup> the United Nations Secretary-General transmitted to the Assembly the texts of the Conference's decision and of the draft proposals submitted by the regional groups.

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/192 without vote.

United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices
The General Assembly,

Having considered the-report of the United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices, held at Geneva from 4 to 15 November 1985, together with the proposals made by regional groups, Invites the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the President of the United Nations Conference to Review All Aspects of the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices to undertake consultations, as appropriate, with regional groups and Governments on the reconvening of the Conference at Geneva and to report thereon to the General Assembly at the earliest opportunity.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.3) without vote, 13 December (meeting 511; draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.127), based on informal consultations on draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.92); agenda item 84(c).

Commodities

The World Economic Survey 1985<sup>(2)</sup> stated that a marked softening of commodity prices, affecting energy prices as well as non-fuel commodities, was a major unexpected development of 1984. Although specific policy and market factors were important determinants of price trends in individual commodities, a number of general factors also accounted for the performance of different groups of commodities. For minerals and non-food agricultural products, the price recovery was aborted in early 1984 by a combination of factors. Suppliers reacted strongly to favourable market conditions after several lean years, contributing to a glut which caused prices to fall, and the stimulus to commodity demand arising from the world recovery was generally weak. In addition, the 1984 rebound in interest rates increased the actual financial cost of carry-over stocks, tending to lower target inventory levels, and the gathering strength of the dollar acted as a damper on import demand in local currencies for several commodities. In 1983, price increases in most food and beverage commodities stemmed less from demand-pull factors linked to the recovery than from supply deficiencies caused mainly by adverse weather. Likewise, the subsequent price decline was largely a reflection of actual and anticipated output gains in 1984/85 associated with improved weather.

The Trade and Development Report, 1985<sup>(1)</sup> noted that the overall outlook for commodities was not encouraging. With the deceleration of economic growth foreseen in Japan and the United States and good crop prospects in many agricultural commodities, prices were expected to decline in 1985. Evidence that monetary factors had become more pronounced in influencing primary-commodity markets did not necessarily mean that short-term reversals in trends of exchange rates and inflation would generate a considerable improvement in prices.

The issue of commodity trade was also addressed during the review and appraisal of the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s) (see p. 418).

The Permanent Sub-Committee on Commodities (fourth session, Geneva, 14-22 January 1985)<sup>(64)</sup> considered studies issued by the UNCTAD secretariat in 1984<sup>(65)</sup> on the processing, marketing and distribution, including transportation, of individual commodities (bauxite/alumina/aluminium, cocoa, coffee, copper, hard fibres (sisal and henequen), iron ore, jute and jute products, manganese, phosphates, sugar, tea and tin). These studies had originally been called for by UNCTAD resolution 124(V).<sup>(66)</sup>

In a personal summary of the Permanent Sub-Committee's work, the Chairman said the debate revealed that a wide range of problems was involved in expanding developing countries' participation in processing, marketing and distribution of commodities and, while many of those problems were common to different commodities, they were often of varying applicability from commodity to commodity.

The debate on a commodity-by-commodity basis allowed a number of speakers to address problems facing developing countries in processing, marketing and distribution, such as redeployment of productive facilities, synthetics and substitutes, market outlets, market transparency, financial and technical assistance, finance, trade liberalization, contractual marketing, unfair competition, transportation and training.

In accordance with UNCTAD resolution 156(VI),<sup>(67)</sup> a special session (the second) of the UNCTAD Committee on Commodities (Geneva, 21-25 January 1985)<sup>(68)</sup> was held to discuss possible frameworks for international co-operation in processing, marketing and distribution, including transportation, of commodities of export interest to developing countries.

In addition to the report of its Permanent Sub-Committee (see above), the special session also had before it secretariat reports outlining possible elements of frameworks for international co-operation in the field of marketing and distribution of commodities of export interest to developing countries<sup>(69)</sup> and in the field of processing commodities<sup>(70)</sup>

On 25 January,<sup>(71)</sup> the Committee decided to establish a sessional committee at its next regular session to continue elaborating the elements of the frameworks, recommending to TDB that that session be held in the second half of 1985. Annexed to the Committee's report were proposals submitted by the Group of 77 and by Group B on negotiating the frameworks.

In accordance with UNCTAD resolution 155(VI),<sup>(67)</sup> a further special session (the third) of the Committee on Commodities (Geneva, 3-7 June)<sup>(72)</sup> met to examine the role of international commodity agreements or arrangements, negotiated or renegotiated within UNCTAD, in attaining the objectives of the Integrated Programme for Commodities (IPC). In addition to a secretariat study on the subject,<sup>(73)</sup> the Committee also examined documents prepared by international commodity organizations on the operation of their respective agreements, i.e. cocoa, coffee, jute, olive oil, rubber, sugar, tin and wheat.

On 13 June,<sup>(74)</sup> the Committee decided to annex to its report proposed agreed recommendations submitted by the Group of 77 and the draft conclusions/summary submitted by Group B, and to resume consideration of those proposals at its next regular session.

By the Group of 77 draft, the Committee would have recommended: flexibility in the design and application of mechanisms over the life-span of a commodity agreement; that provisions on buffer stocks and/or export quotas be carefully formulated during negotiations; the immediate entry into force of the Common Fund for Commodities; the setting of price ranges for commodities compatible with dynamic market conditions; that universal producer and consumer participation be coupled with firm commitment to the objectives of an international commodity agreement by its members; avoidance of disruption in international commodity markets when Governments purchased for, and sold from, national non-commercial reserves and stockpiles; better preparations for negotiations on international commodity agreements; that forthcoming negotiations or renegotiations of agreements include economic price stabilization clauses and other development measures; and improvement of the competitiveness of natural products competing with synthetics and substitutes.

The Group B text would have stated that the Committee identified the following elements as relevant for the success of international commodity agreements: price ranges for an international price stabilization scheme should be realistic and market-related; provisions for adjustment of price ranges in accordance with market-trend shifts should be adequate; where price stabilization measures were deemed feasible and desirable, it was important that economic provisions were effective and seen to be effective by market participants; and commodity agreements should receive the support and participation of as many important producing and consuming countries as possible. Also, when considering individual commodities, attention should be paid to measures other than price stabilization measures, including commodity development measures and those that fostered greater market transparency and improved information exchange, which might serve to improve commodity market conditions and achieve IPC objectives.

On 27 September, TDB took note of the reports of the Committee on Commodities on its second and third special sessions.

The Committee on Commodities held its eleventh regular session at Geneva from 2 to 13 December 1985.<sup>(75)</sup> In addition to the reports of its second and third special sessions, the Committee had before it a commodity survey prepared by the secretariat, covering the years 1980 to 1985.<sup>(76)</sup> The report gave the background to the current commodity crisis, discussed the reasons for the commodity price recession and its impact on developing countries, and explored the outlook for future commodity prices and exports.

On 13 December, the Committee adopted a resolution<sup>(77)</sup> requesting the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consult with producing and consuming countries of commodities included in the IPC indicative list and not covered by international commodity agreements or arrangements, with a view to convening review meetings on those commodities before the Committee's regular session in 1986 or in any event before the seventh session of UNCTAD (1987); he was also requested to include hides and skins in such consultations. The meetings were to: consider the situation in and problems of world markets for each commodity; review the status of intergovernmental work on that commodity within the context of IPC; and consider follow-up action to further international co-operation in conformity with IPC objectives. The Secretary-General was also requested to report to TDB in 1986 on the progress of those consultations, and to consult with the principal and other interested producing and consuming countries on the possibility of convening the Second Preparatory Meeting on Bananas.

Also on 13 December, the Committee decided<sup>(78)</sup> to adopt the following conclusions: where price stabilization measures were deemed feasible and desirable, producers and consumers could choose between measures, such as buffer stocks, export quotas and other supply management measures, to be applied singly or in combination, with the measures being effective and capable of defending both "floor" and "ceiling" prices; where measures included buffer stocks, financial resources for their operation should be assured, possibly through the First Account of the Common Fund for Commodities, when operational; measures that included export quotas or other supply management measures could be effective only if supported by the majority of important producing and consuming countries; in implementing the above measures, agreed price levels should be market-related and compatible with dynamic market conditions; in setting such levels, account should be taken of UNCTAD resolution 93(IV)<sup>(79)</sup> on IPC; price ranges should be structured to include discretionary zones to defend both "floor" and "ceiling" prices and provisions included for adjusting prices to take account of market conditions, including changes in exchange rates; in negotiating agreements, consideration could be given to price stabilization and other measures to attain IPC objectives, possibly including commodity development measures and measures for improving information exchange and market transparency; international commodity agreements should receive the support of as many important producing and consuming countries as possible and a major prerequisite of their functioning was the strict observance by participants of their rights and obligations; to facilitate negotiations on agreements, producing and consuming countries should co-operate fully and explain their objectives and concerns; Governments purchasing for and selling from national non-commercial reserves and stockpiles should avoid disruptions of international commodity markets; the potential importance of the Common Fund for Commodities for implementing IPC and progress in ratifying the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund were noted; and Committee members were urged to take the political decisions for the Agreement's entry into force as quickly as possible.

In an agreed conclusion on implementing IPC in the area of processing, marketing and distribution, including transportation, also adopted on 13

December,<sup>(80)</sup> the Committee agreed that the frameworks for those functions should be mutually acceptable global principles for international co-operation specific to the commodity sector, and should aim at expanding in developing countries the processing of primary commodities and their export and at increasing developing-country participation in their marketing and distribution, including transportation. The question of frameworks should be pursued on the basis of proposals by the regional groups at the Committee's second special session (see above), taking into account the views expressed during its current session. The Committee agreed to recommend establishing a working party to meet before its 1986 regular session, to continue examining technical assistance and human resources development.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

A draft resolution on commodities<sup>(81)</sup> was submitted to the General Assembly's Second Committee on 27 November by Yugoslavia, on behalf of the Group of 77. By the text, the Assembly would have stressed the need for action to address the deteriorating situation of developing countries in the field of commodities, reaffirmed the importance of the Common Fund for Commodities and urged States to ratify the Agreement establishing it. It would have called on developed countries to refrain from raising barriers to the importation of commodities and to eliminate existing ones, as well as subsidies, to permit freer access to their markets of primary, semi-processed and processed commodities. It would also have called on producing and consuming countries facing constraints on the effective operation of international commodity agreements to meet to work out short- and medium-term solutions, including measures to restore prices to levels remunerative to producers and equitable to consumers, and appealed to those countries to promote trade co-operation in accordance with IPC. States would have been called on to co-operate towards greater participation of developing countries in commodity processing, distribution and marketing. The Assembly would have welcomed TDB's June 1985 decision (see p. 579) on compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls and urged States to pursue its implementation. The UNCTAD Secretary-General would have been requested to examine long-term trends and prospects for primary commodities, recommend policy measures to support efforts by producer developing countries to maximize commodity trade in their development, continue monitoring movements in commodity trade and report in 1986 on progress in implementing the resolution.

By decision 40/445, the Assembly decided to reconvene the Second Committee immediately prior to the April/May 1986 session of the Economic and Social Council to consider ways in which international co-operation in money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development could be promoted, and to deal with unfinished business on several draft resolutions, including the one on commodities.

Common Fund for Commodities

During 1985, preparations continued on arrangements for the Common Fund for Commodities, a mechanism intended to stabilize the commodities market by helping to finance buffer stocks of specific commodities as well as commodity development activities such as research and marketing. Although six additional States adhered to the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities,<sup>(82)</sup> by the end of the year it had not received the required 90 ratifications to enter into force.

Signatures and ratifications

As at 31 December 1985, the 1980 Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities had been signed by 113 States and EEC, and 88 States had formally adhered by ratifying, accepting, approving or acceding to it.<sup>(83)</sup> Of these, one State (Barbados) signed the Agreement during 1985 and six (Belgium, Djibouti, Federal Republic of Germany, Guatemala, Jamaica, Luxembourg) adhered to it.

Report of the Secretary-General. For the General Assembly's review of the situation regarding the entry into force of the Agreement establishing the Fund, the Secretary-General submitted in October 1985 a report<sup>(84)</sup> on the status of that Agreement. The report recalled that the Agreement was to enter into force after ratification by at least 90 States, accounting for at least two thirds of the Fund's directly contributed capital of $470 million; and at least half of the $280-million target for pledges of voluntary contributions to the Second Account had been met. While the latter requirement had been met by 31 March 1982, the initial deadline for entry into force, the former had not, and it was not possible for the Fund to begin operations.

The UNCTAD Secretary-General was consulting with the States that had adhered to the Agreement to decide on a new period for fulfilment of requirements for its entry into force, while the process of signature and adherence continued.

On the Second Committee's recommendation, approving an oral proposal by the Chairman, the General Assembly adopted decision 40/440 on 17 December, without vote, taking note of the Secretary-General's report.

Financial implications for the 1986-1987 budget

In a December note<sup>(85)</sup> to the General Assembly on preparatory work for bringing the Common Fund into operation, the Secretary-General stated that no expenditures had been incurred in the 1984-1985 biennium from the advance appropriation of $942,000 made by the Assembly in 1983.<sup>(86)</sup> The Secretary-General anticipated that conditions for the Agreement's entry into force would be met during the 1986-1987 biennium and that the Fund's Preparatory Commission would meet in 1986; to service those meetings, the advance was expected to be fully utilized during that biennium. He recommended approval of a $942,000 appropriation for the biennium, representing the unspent advance approved for 1984-1985, to be fully reimbursed by the Common Fund once it was declared operational. Provision for staff assessment estimated at $49,700 would also be required.

On 9 December, the Assembly's Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee approved without vote the additional appropriations for 1986-1987.

Individual commodities

An UNCTAD secretariat report on international action in relation to commodities not covered by international commodity agreements or arrangements,<sup>(87)</sup> submitted to the December session of the Committee on Commodities (see p. 566), reviewed progress in implementing IPC for 11 commodities on the indicative list of UNCTAD resolution 93(IV),<sup>(88)</sup> which were not the subject of international agreements at the time. Those commodities comprised six agricultural commodities and five minerals and metals: bananas, cotton and cotton yarns, hard fibres and their products, meat, tea, vegetable oils and oilseeds, bauxite, copper, iron ore, manganese and phosphates.

The review showed that results varied from commodity to commodity. For some agricultural products (bananas, meat, some vegetable oils and oilseeds, and to a certain extent some hard fibres), limited progress had been achieved or soon seemed likely. Work was in progress on iron ore with the objective of promoting co-operation among producers and consumers, possibly within a standing body on the commodity. However, for copper, cotton, hard fibres and tea, international discussions had reached a deadlock, and for bauxite, manganese and phosphates, meaningful discussions had not even begun.

The report stated that early entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities would improve the climate for international co-operation in the commodity field. There was urgent need to reactivate intergovernmental work on the reviewed commodities and, given the lapse of time since many of them had been considered, it was suggested that Governments might convene general review meetings before UNCTAD VII (1987) for the seven commodities on which discussions were deadlocked or had not begun. It was suggested that Governments might also consider the case of minerals and metals, on which international co-operative action had been rather limited. While agreements and organizations had been established for eight agricultural commodities, there was only one such organization for a metal, namely tin. In addition, while intergovernmental specialized forums with participating producers and consumers existed for 10 agricultural commodities, there were only two such bodies for minerals and metals, namely the Tungsten Committee within UNCTAD and the International Lead and Zinc Study Group outside UNCTAD. It was suggested that Governments might study the possibility of setting up consultative bodies for individual minerals and metals, possibly linked by common administrative, statistical and meeting services.

Agricultural commodities

Cocoa. In 1985, the third part of the United Nations Cocoa Conference, 1984, was held (Geneva, 19 February-16 March) under the auspices of UNCTAD to negotiate a successor agreement to the 1980 International Cocoa Agreement.<sup>(89)</sup> The first two parts had been held in 1984.<sup>(90)</sup>

On 16 March, the Conference adopted a resolution<sup>(91)</sup> by which, welcoming progress in preparing a successor agreement, it adjourned, requesting the Conference President to consult exporting and importing countries on outstanding issues, particularly the price structure, the annual review and revision of prices, and the withholding scheme, to prepare a basis for successfully concluding the Conference. On the basis of those consultations, he was to make a recommendation to the UNCTAD Secretary-General with regard to resuming the Conference.

Rubber. In 1985, a United Nations Conference on Natural Rubber was held (Geneva, 22 April-8 May) under UNCTAD auspices to negotiate a successor agreement to the International Natural Rubber Agreement, 1979.<sup>(92)</sup> In a note dealing with policy issues,<sup>(93)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat stated that the Conference provided an opportunity to review and improve the 1979 Agreement as an instrument of co-operation between the developing countries as the exporters and the developed countries as the predominant importers of an important raw material. The principal issues for negotiation were expected to be the initial level of the reference price and the provisions governing possible revisions of that level under a new agreement. Price issues, however, were closely related to the means for ensuring that prices were stabilized within the agreed limits. A further issue, therefore, would be whether the existing practice of relying solely on a buffer stock should continue or be supplemented by additional measures to be brought into operation at times of weak prices.

The report concluded that lack of finances for projects had impeded progress in translating the Agreement's developmental objectives into concrete action and suggested that the Conference might wish to consider ways to raise funds for that purpose. If the predominant view of Governments was that a successor agreement should reflect market forces and price trends in order to minimize fluctuations in prices, then the essential features of the existing Agreement, loosened to permit more flexible adjustments in the reference and related prices, would be broadly appropriate. If, on the other hand, the predominant view was that a successor agreement should provide assurances of agreed minimum prices, consideration would have to be given to strengthening the means for effective intervention, including possible inclusion of the mechanism of supply management as a supplement to stocking measures. Since the existing Agreement fell between those two conceptions, although considerably nearer the first, whether there should be a further move in that direction or a change in the Agreement's character to incorporate the supply management concept at source was the key question.

The Conference also had before it a report<sup>(94)</sup> by the secretariat of the International Natural Rubber Organization which gave the historical development, status and operation of the 1979 Agreement.

On 8 May, the Conference adopted a resolution<sup>(95)</sup> by which, noting the progress made in preparing a successor agreement, it decided to adjourn, and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General, in consultation with the Conference President, to arrange to reconvene the Conference for three weeks, preferably early in 1986.

Sugar. The International Sugar Agreement, 1984, the text of which was established by the United Nations Sugar Conference in 1984,<sup>(96)</sup> entered into force provisionally on 1 January 1985 and definitively on 4 April 1985, when the proper instruments of adherence had been deposited on behalf of Governments holding 50 per cent of the votes of the exporting countries and 50 per cent of the votes of the importing countries.

During the year, the International Sugar Council of the International Sugar Organization, the body responsible for administering the Agreement and supervising its operation, three times extended the time-limit for the deposit of instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval: on 21 January, it was extended until 30 June; on 23 May, until 31 December; and on 21 November, until 31 December 1986.

Tropical timber. The International Tropical Timber Agreement, 1983, adopted in 1983<sup>(97)</sup> and opened for signature in January 1984,<sup>(96)</sup> entered into force provisionally on 1 April 1985 when instruments of ratification, acceptance and provisional application were deposited by the required number of producing and consuming countries.

On 24 June, at its first session, the International Tropical Timber Council, the body responsible for administering the Agreement and supervising its operation, decided that the condition of accession for non-signatory Governments would be that they accept all the obligations of the Agreement. It further decided that the time-limit for the deposit of instruments of accession should be the date of the opening of the Council's second session.

Minerals and metals

Iron ore. The Fourth Preparatory Meeting on Iron Ore (Geneva, 21-25 October 1985)<sup>(98)</sup> considered international measures and statistical issues with regard to iron ore, and discussed follow-up action to be recommended. As requested in 1984,<sup>(99)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat prepared a report on alternative forms of co-operation and dialogue between exporting and importing countries.<sup>(100)</sup> The report discussed possible areas of co-operation and institutional options for advancing co-operation and dialogue. Institutional options included: further ad hoc meetings within UNCTAD; regular (perhaps annual) meetings within UNCTAD without establishing a standing body; a standing consultative intergovernmental body as part of the UNCTAD machinery; an autonomous body; or a specialized body on minerals and metals in general as part of the UNCTAD machinery. The report stated that productive specialized intergovernmental consideration of iron ore would depend on the attitudes of the principal Governments concerned and their determination to co-operate.

The secretariat also prepared statistical tables on iron ore<sup>(101)</sup> and, pursuant to a 1984 request,<sup>(99)</sup> a note on possibilities for improvements in the quality and coverage of such statistics.<sup>(102)</sup> Both reports were considered by an expert group on statistical issues (23 and 24 October), which reported to the Preparatory Meeting.

On 25 October, the Meeting recommended that TDB convene an intergovernmental group of experts on iron ore to meet in 1986 and 1987 to review market developments and report thereon to the Fifth Preparatory Meeting. Participation in the group would be open to all UNCTAD member States and to relevant international organizations.

Nickel. Following a request from Australia and Canada on behalf of a number of UNCTAD member States that participated in a 1984 Intergovernmental Exploratory Meeting on Nickel (Geneva, 22-24 October), co-hosted by those two countries, a Preparatory Meeting on Nickel (Geneva, 10-18 April 1985)<sup>(103)</sup> considered further a proposal to establish an intergovernmental nickel discussion group, an international statistical system for nickel, secretariat arrangements, a draft agreement for establishment of such a group and draft rules of procedure.

In agreed conclusions adopted on 18 April, the consensus of the Preparatory Meeting was that: there was scope for improving intergovernmental co-operation on nickel, particularly by improving information on the nickel economy and by providing a forum for discussions; it would be appropriate to seek the agreement of Governments to participate in a negotiating conference aimed at establishing an autonomous international nickel study group; draft terms of reference and draft rules of procedure for such a group, annexed to the Meeting's report,<sup>(103)</sup> were a suitable basis for negotiating the final terms and rules to be agreed by the proposed negotiating conference; TDB should request the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene for two weeks a negotiating conference on the establishment of such a group, if possible after the International Lead and Zinc Study Group session in October 1985; the conference should consider the form of the group's secretariat, the nature of the statistics and system for data collection, analysis and dissemination, as well as its inaugural meeting.

The United Nations Conference on Nickel, 1985 (Geneva, 28 October-7 November), discussed the establishment of the study group. By a 7 November resolution,<sup>(104)</sup> it adopted the terms of reference for an International Nickel Study Group, except those relating to their coming into effect, and recommended the draft rules of procedure, except those concerning finance and the secretariat, for adoption by the Group. The United Nations Secretary-General was requested to reconvene the Conference, preferably from 28 April to 2 May 1986, to: finalize work on the terms of reference and the draft rules of procedure; consider, with the participation of industry advisers, a work programme on statistics for the Group; and confirm arrangements, prepare an agenda and decide on dates for an inaugural meeting of the Group. The International Lead and Zinc Study Group was invited to indicate its willingness to establish a joint secretariat with a Nickel Study Group.

Tungsten. At its seventeenth session (Geneva, 11-15 November 1985),<sup>(105)</sup> the Committee on Tungsten reviewed discussions and proposals on stabilizing the tungsten market with a view to enabling producing and consuming countries to agree on market stabilization measures and the convening of a negotiating conference.

A sessional working group established by the Committee in 1984<sup>(99)</sup> also held meetings at which it reviewed the current market situation and outlook and examined statistics provided by the UNCTAD secretariat. A secretariat note,<sup>(106)</sup> with a statistical compendium, reviewed recent developments in the tungsten market and examined the short-term outlook. Another<sup>(107)</sup> examined structural and technological change in the tungsten industry with reference to scrap recycling in Western Europe.

The producers/exporting countries proposed to the Committee that the secretariat's next customary survey of the market situation should, in particular: refer to the effect of varying currency-exchange rates on each country's tungsten production and consumption; review the world economy and its effect on tungsten production and consumption; update reports on pricing indicators and on trade in intermediate products; assess trade in stocks held by producers, consumers, traders and Governments; and study the markets for other related primary mineral commodities compared to the tungsten market. The Committee decided to discuss the question of stabilization of the tungsten market at its next (1986) session.

Consumer protection

In accordance with a 1984 decision,<sup>(108)</sup> the General Assembly, in April 1985, at its resumed thirty-ninth session, considered a draft resolution deferred from its regular 1984 session, containing guidelines for consumer protection.

On an oral proposal by its President to adopt the 1984 text, the Assembly, on 9 April 1985, adopted, without vote, resolution 39/248, to which were annexed the guidelines.

Consumer protection

The General Assembly,

Recalling Economic and Social Council resolution 1981/62 of 23 July 1981, in which the Council requested the Secretary-General to continue consultations on consumer protection with a view to elaborating a set of general guidelines for consumer protection, taking particularly into account the needs of the developing countries,

Recalling further General Assembly resolution 38/147 of 19 December 1983,

Taking note of Economic and Social Council resolution 1984/63 of 26 July 1984,

1. Decides to adopt the guidelines for consumer protection annexed to the present resolution;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to disseminate the guidelines to Governments and other interested parties;

3. Requests all organizations of the United Nations system that elaborate guidelines and related documents on specific areas relevant to consumer protection to distribute them to the appropriate bodies of individual States.

ANNEX

Guidelines for consumer protection

I. Objectives

1. Taking into account the interests and needs of consumers in all countries, particularly those in developing countries; recognizing that consumers often face imbalances in economic terms, educational levels, and bargaining power; and bearing in mind that consumers should have the right of access to non-hazardous products, as well as the importance of promoting just, equitable and sustainable economic and social development, these guidelines for consumer protection have the following objectives:

(a) To assist countries in achieving or maintaining adequate protection for their population as consumers;

(b) To facilitate production and distribution patterns responsive to the needs and desires of consumers;

(c) To encourage high levels of ethical conduct for those engaged in the production and distribution of goods and services to consumers;

(d) To assist countries in curbing abusive business practices by all enterprises at the national and international levels which adversely affect consumers;

(e) To facilitate the development of independent consumer groups;

(f) To further international co-operation in the field of consumer protection;

(g) To encourage the development of market conditions which provide consumers with greater choice at lower prices.

II. General principles

2. Governments should develop, strengthen or maintain a strong consumer protection policy, taking into account the guidelines set out below. In so doing, each Government must set its own priorities for the protection of consumers in accordance with the economic and social circumstances of the country, and the needs of its population, and bearing in mind the costs and benefits of proposed measures.

3. The legitimate needs which the guidelines are intended to meet are the following:

(a) The protection of consumers from hazards to their health and safety;

(b) The promotion and protection of the economic interests of consumers;

(c) Access of consumers to adequate information to enable them to make informed choices according to individual wishes and needs;

(d) Consumer education;

(e) Availability of effective consumer redress;

(f) Freedom to form consumer and other relevant groups or organizations and the opportunity of such organizations to present their views in decision-making processes affecting them.

4. Governments should provide or maintain adequate infrastructure to develop, implement and monitor consumer protection policies. Special care should be taken to ensure that measures for consumer protection are implemented for the benefit of all sectors of the population, particularly the rural population.

5. All enterprises should obey the relevant laws and regulations of the countries in which they do business. They should also conform to the appropriate provisions of international standards for consumer protection to which the competent authorities of the country in question have agreed. (Hereinafter references to international standards in the guidelines should be viewed in the context of this paragraph.)

6. The potential positive role of universities and public and private enterprises in research should be considered when developing consumer protection policies.

III. Guidelines

7. The following guidelines should apply both to home-produced goods and services and to imports.

8. In applying any procedures or regulations for consumer protection, due regard should be given to ensuring that they do not become barriers to international trade and that they are consistent with international trade obligations.

A. Physical safety

9. Governments should adopt or encourage the adoption of appropriate measures, including legal systems, safety regulations, national or international standards, voluntary standards and the maintenance of safety records to ensure that products are safe for either intended or normally foreseeable use.

10. Appropriate policies should ensure that goods produced by manufacturers are safe for either intended or normally foreseeable use. Those responsible for bringing goods to the market, in particular suppliers, exporters, importers, retailers and the like (hereinafter referred to as "distributors"), should ensure that while in their care these goods are not rendered unsafe through improper handling or storage and that while in their care they do not become hazardous through improper handling or storage. Consumers should be instructed in the proper use of goods and should be informed of the risks involved in intended or normally foreseeable use. Vital safety information should be conveyed to consumers by internationally understandable symbols wherever possible.

11. Appropriate policies should ensure that if manufacturers or distributors become aware of unforeseen hazards after products are placed on the market, they should notify the relevant authorities and, as appropriate, the public without delay. Governments should also consider ways of ensuring that consumers are properly informed of such hazards.

12. Governments should, where appropriate, adopt policies under which, if a product is found to be seriously defective and/or to constitute a substantial and severe hazard even when properly used, manufacturers and/or distributors should recall it and replace or modify it, or substitute another product for it; if it is not possible to do this within a reasonable period of time, the consumer should be adequately compensated.

B. Promotion and protection of consumers' economic interests

13. Government policies should seek to enable consumers to obtain optimum benefit from their economic resources. They should also seek to achieve the goals of satisfactory production and performance standards, adequate distribution methods, fair business practices, informative marketing and effective protection against practices which could adversely affect the economic interests of consumers and the exercise (of choice in the market-place).

14. Governments should intensify their efforts to prevent practices which are damaging to the economic interests of consumers through ensuring that manufacturers, distributors and others involved in the provision of goods and services adhere to established laws and mandatory standards. Consumer organizations should be encouraged to monitor adverse practices, such as the adulteration of foods, false or misleading claims in marketing and service frauds.

15. Governments should develop, strengthen or maintain, as the case may be, measures relating to the control of restrictive and other abusive business practices which may be harmful to consumers, including means for the enforcement of such measures. In this connection, Governments should be guided by their commitment to the Set of Multilaterally Agreed Equitable Principles and Rules for the Control of Restrictive Business Practices adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 35/63 of 5 December 1980.

16. Governments should adopt or maintain policies that make clear the responsibility of the producer to ensure that goods meet reasonable demands of durability, utility and reliability, and are suited to the purpose for which they are intended, and that the seller should see that these requirements are met. Similar policies should apply to the provision of services.

17. Governments should encourage fair and effective competition in order to provide consumers with the greatest range of choice among products and services at the lowest cost.

18. Governments should, where appropriate, see to it that manufacturers and/or retailers ensure adequate availability of reliable after-sales service and spare parts.

19. Consumers should be protected from such contractual abuses as one-sided standard contracts, exclusion of essential rights in contracts, and unconscionable conditions of credit by sellers.

20. Promotional marketing and sales practices should be guided by the principle of fair treatment of consumers and should meet legal requirements. This requires the provision of the information necessary to enable consumers to take informed and independent decisions, as well as measures to ensure that the information provided is accurate.

21. Governments should encourage all concerned to participate in the free flow of accurate information on all aspects of consumer products.

22. Governments should, within their own national context, encourage the formulation and implementation by business, in co-operation with consumer organizations, of codes of marketing and other business practices to ensure adequate consumer protection. Voluntary agreements may also be established jointly by business, consumer organizations and other interested parties. These codes should receive adequate publicity.

23. Governments should regularly review legislation pertaining to weights and measures and assess the adequacy of the machinery for its enforcement.

C. Standards for the safety and quality of consumer goods and services

24. Governments should, as appropriate, formulate or promote the elaboration and implementation of standards, voluntary and other, at the national and international levels for the safety and quality of goods and services and give them appropriate publicity. National standards and regulations for product safety and quality should be reviewed from time to time, in order to ensure that they conform, where possible, to generally accepted international standards.

25. Where a standard lower than the generally accepted international standard is being applied because of local economic conditions, every effort should be made to raise that standard as soon as possible.

26. Governments should encourage and ensure the availability of facilities to test and certify the safety, quality and performance of essential consumer goods and services.

D. Distribution facilities for essential consumer goods and services

27. Governments should, where appropriate, consider:

(a) Adopting or maintaining policies to ensure the efficient distribution of goods and services to consumers; where appropriate, specific policies should be considered to ensure the distribution of essential goods and services where this distribution is endangered, as could be the case particularly in rural areas. Such policies could include assistance for the creation of adequate storage and retail facilities in rural centres, incentives for consumer self-help and better control of the conditions under which essential goods and services are provided in rural areas;

(b) Encouraging the establishment of consumer co-operatives and related trading activities, as well as information about them, especially in rural areas.

E. Measures enabling consumers to obtain redress

28. Governments should establish or maintain legal and/or administrative measures to enable consumers or, as appropriate, relevant organizations to obtain redress through formal or informal procedures that are expeditious, fair, inexpensive and accessible. Such procedures should take particular account of the needs of low-income consumers.

29. Governments should encourage all enterprises to resolve consumer disputes in a fair, expeditious and informal manner, and to establish voluntary mechanisms, including advisory services and informal complaints procedures, which can provide assistance to consumers.

30. Information on available redress and other dispute-resolving procedures should be made available to consumers.

F. Education and information programmes

31. Governments should develop or encourage the development of general consumer education and information programmes, bearing in mind the cultural traditions of the people concerned. The aim of such programmes should be to enable people to act as discriminating consumers, capable of making an informed choice of goods and services, and conscious of their rights and responsibilities. In developing such programmes, special attention should be given to the needs of disadvantaged consumers, in both rural and urban areas, including low-income consumers and those with low or non-existent literacy levels.

32. Consumer education should, where appropriate, become an integral part of the basic curriculum of the educational system, preferably as a component of existing subjects.

33. Consumer education and information programmes should cover such important aspects of consumer protection as the following:

(a) Health, nutrition, prevention of food-borne diseases and food adulteration;

(b) Product hazards;

(c) Product labelling;

(d) Relevant legislation, how to obtain redress, and agencies and organizations for consumer protection;

(e) Information on weights and measures, prices, quality, credit conditions and availability of basic necessities; and

(f) As appropriate, pollution and environment.

34. Governments should encourage consumer organizations and other interested groups, including the media, to undertake education and information programmes, particularly for the benefit of low-income consumer groups in rural and urban areas.

35. Business should, where appropriate, undertake or participate in factual and relevant consumer education and information programmes.

36. Bearing in mind the need to reach rural consumers and illiterate consumers, Governments should, as appropriate, develop or encourage the development of consumer information programmes in the mass media.

37. Governments should organize or encourage training programmes for educators, mass media professionals and consumer advisers, to enable them to participate in carrying out consumer information and education programmes.

G. Measures relating to specific areas

38. In advancing consumer interests, particularly in developing countries, Governments should, where appropriate, give priority to areas of essential concern for the health of the consumer, such as food, water and pharmaceuticals. Policies should be adopted or maintained for product quality control, adequate and secure distribution facilities, standardized international labelling and information, as well as education and research programmes in these areas. Government guidelines in regard to specific areas should be developed in the context of the provisions of this document.

39. Food. When formulating national policies and plans with regard to food, Governments should take into account the need of all consumers for food security and should support and, as far as possible, adopt standards from the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations and the World Health Organization Codex Alimentarius or, in their absence, other generally accepted international food standards. Governments should maintain, develop or improve food safety measures, including, inter alia, safety criteria, food standards and dietary requirements and effective monitoring, inspection and evaluation mechanisms.

40. Water. Governments should, within the goals and targets set for the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade, formulate, maintain or strengthen national policies to improve the supply, distribution and quality of water for drinking. Due regard should be paid to the choice of appropriate levels of service, quality and technology, the need for education programmes and the importance of community participation.

41. Pharmaceuticals. Governments should develop or maintain adequate standards, provisions and appropriate regulatory systems for ensuring the quality and appropriate use of pharmaceuticals through integrated national drug policies which could address, inter alia, procurement, distribution, production, licensing arrangements, registration systems and the availability of reliable information on pharmaceuticals. In so doing, Governments should take special account of the work and recommendations of the World Health Organization on pharmaceuticals. For relevant products, the use of that organization's Certification Scheme on the Quality of Pharmaceutical Products Moving in International Commerce and other international information systems on pharmaceuticals should be encouraged. Measures should also be taken, as appropriate, to promote the use of international non-proprietary names (INNs) for drugs, drawing on the work done by the World Health Organization.

42. In addition to the priority areas indicated above, Governments should adopt appropriate measures in other areas, such as pesticides and chemicals, in regard, where relevant, to their use, production and storage, taking into account such relevant health and environmental information as Governments may require producers to provide and include in the labelling of products.

IV. International co-operation

43. Governments should, especially in a regional or subregional context:

(a) Develop, review, maintain or strengthen, as appropriate, mechanisms for the exchange of information on national policies and measures in the field of consumer protection;

(b) Co-operate or encourage co-operation in the implementation of consumer protection policies to achieve greater results within existing resources. Examples of such co-operation could be collaboration in the setting up or joint use of testing facilities, common testing procedures, exchange of consumer information and education programmes, joint training programmes and joint elaboration of regulations;

(c) Co-operate to improve the conditions under which essential goods are offered to consumers, giving due regard to both price and quality. Such co-operation could include joint procurement of essential goods, exchange of information on different procurement possibilities and agreements on regional product specifications.

44. Governments should develop or strengthen information links regarding products which have been banned, withdrawn or severely restricted in order to enable other importing countries to protect themselves adequately against the harmful effects of such products.

45. Governments should work to ensure that the quality of products, and information relating to such products, does not vary from country to country in a way that would have detrimental effects on consumers.

46. Governments should work to ensure that policies and measures for consumer protection are implemented with due regard to their not becoming barriers to international trade, and that they are consistent with international trade obligations.

General Assembly resolution 39/248

9 April 1985 Meeting 106 Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President to adopt draft referred to resumed session in 1985 by Assembly decision 39/444 of 18 December 1994; agenda item 12.

Finance

During 1985, monetary and financial issues, particularly the debt problems of developing countries, received considerable attention in the United Nations bodies that discussed economic and development matters. The March session of TDB addressed the debt and development problems of poorer developing countries, particularly LDCs, while its September session discussed debt and development problems of developing countries in general. The interdependence of problems of trade, development finance and the international monetary system were considered at both sessions.

The Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade, meeting in a two-part session, devoted the second part, in February/March, to international monetary issues in general, and the debt and development finance problems of developing countries in particular, while the first part of the session (earlier in February) focused on questions of insurance.

In June, at its fourteenth special session, TDB requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to convene in 1986 an intergovernmental group of experts to continue to analyse the need for a new facility for the compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls.

In December, the Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters reviewed the experience of countries in the bilateral application of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries.

Financial policy

The Committee for Development Planning, in the report on its November 1984 and April 1985 meetings,<sup>(1)</sup> noted that the volatility of exchange rates in the international monetary and financial system as currently structured had generated uncertainty and disruption, particularly for the poorest countries which were least able to protect themselves against it. Prolonged exchange-rate misalignments had also impeded the orderly adjustment of international imbalances. CDP supported moves towards greater co-ordination of the macro-economic policies of the key currency countries as long as it was aimed at maintaining high levels of growth and employment. However, the world-wide implications of those countries' economic policies required that such co-ordination should also be a matter for discussions at international bodies. More effective IMF surveillance of industrial countries' policies had long been an important aspiration and the limited effectiveness of previous consultation and surveillance procedures suggested that new IMF arrangements would have to be more forceful. Efforts to manage and improve the supply of international liquidity should also be taken within the framework of the IMF mandate and, in the mean time, its role as a source of liquidity should continue to be reviewed. The aim of the provision of liquidity and of policy conditions should be to pace and structure adjustments so as to minimize the cost in terms of growth, employment and poverty.

The Trade and Development Report, 1985<sup>(2)</sup> stated that disparities in demand expansion and the misalignment of exchange rates resulting from the monetary and fiscal policies of the major developed countries had created an increasingly untenable situation for the world economy at large. Disparities in interest and exchange rates, and in rates of growth of demand and output, could not be resolved through market processes alone or by unilateral policy adjustments. However, unless government policies changed in order to remove the disparities, markets were bound to bring about certain corrections in their own way and at their own pace, with adverse repercussions. Adjustments through that route were likely to involve further recession and increased debt-servicing difficulties.

In conclusions and recommendations for possible action on key issues, the World Economic Survey 1985<sup>(3)</sup> said that a gradual reduction of the United States budget deficit would be an important step towards removing uncertainties in the world economy. However, since a reduction could begin at a time when the United States economy was slowing down and before other industrial economies had started to gather momentum, a substantial deceleration in the growth of the world economy could occur. That situation might be avoided by relaxing cautious fiscal stances in developed countries in a position to do so.

Debt problems of developing countries

Debt and development finance was considered by CDP<sup>(1)</sup> to be a major and immediate challenge to the world community. The Committee recommended establishing a consultative process among debtors and creditors within the context of broader efforts to construct a more orderly long-term basis for providing liquidity and development finance. Multiyear rescheduling of debt repayment, which had been adopted for a few countries, should be broadened and include debt from official sources, with such relief measures being co-ordinated with other policies such as aid and other financial flows. The Committee urged a renewed effort, led by the multilateral banks, to restore levels of external finance and called for reinforcement of the stabilization and financing roles of IMF and the World Bank by providing them with expanded resources.

Debt, development and the world economy was a major focus of the Trade and Development Report, 1985,<sup>(2)</sup> which traced the origins and evolution of the debt crisis, examined the influence exerted by debt on the development process and discussed prospects for the future. Efforts by developing countries to tackle external deficits resulting from various shocks, particularly from the drying-up of financial flows, had involved inordinately large sacrifices, which had only partly been reflected in improved debt positions and had endangered development potential. Indeed, the main casualty of adjustment measures appeared to have been investment and price stability. Problems of debt, growth and development had to be dealt with through a broad strategy which could not be worked out without the full participation of both developed and developing countries or outside a framework which gave due weight to development objectives.

In preparation for the comprehensive review of the debt and development problems of poorer developing countries, particularly LDCs, to be undertaken by TDB in March 1985, those issues were discussed during the second part of the eleventh session (Geneva, 25 February-8 March 1985) of the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade.<sup>(4)</sup> The Committee had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report on official development assistance (ODA) and related debt service, examining the scope for further debt relief in favour of LDCs and other poorer developing countries.<sup>(5)</sup> Despite low debt-service indicators, the report noted, many of those countries had encountered severe difficulties in managing their external accounts. Given the gloomy prospects for export growth and for the volume of gross financial flows from all sources, the capacity of many of those countries to adjust and deal with the projected rise in debt-service payments was likely to deteriorate further. A strong case existed for donors to realign debt-service obligations of those countries to their evolving debt-servicing capacity and to take other measures to strengthen the process of adjustment.

On 8 March, the Committee adopted agreed conclusions in which it noted that many developing countries had adopted adjustment policies, often at great economic and social cost, and had reduced their current-account deficits. In many countries the anticipated rise in debt-service payments could exert further pressure on their debt-service capacity and development prospects. A satisfactory resolution of debt problems related to ODA facing a number of developing countries required measures such as encouraging long-term financial flows and improved access to foreign markets, a process that would be facilitated by lower interest rates in developed countries and by intensified policies supportive of long-term growth and development by developing countries. The Committee noted the efforts by most developed market-economy countries to implement a 1978 TDB resolution on debt<sup>(6)</sup> and urged States to implement commitments undertaken in that resolution; a variety of measures could be taken by developed donor countries, such as cancelling debts, converting loans into grants and paying debt services in local currency. The Board was invited at its next session (see below) to examine the Committee's conclusions.

TDB action. In accordance with a 1984 decision,<sup>(7)</sup> TDB at its March 1985 session reviewed the implementation of its 1978 resolution on the debt and development problems of poorer developing countries, particularly LDCs,<sup>(5)</sup> to be taken into account during preparations for the 1985 mid-term review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs (SNPA) (see p. 434). On 29 March, the Board decided to annex to its report a draft resolution on the subject submitted by the Group of 77 developing countries, by which TDB would have recognized that many poorer developing countries, particularly LDCs, dependent on ODA to finance their economic development, faced serious debt-servicing and development problems and that their capacity to deal with debt-service payments had been under continuing pressure. It would have agreed that developed donor countries should adopt financial measures to lighten the burden of bilateral ODA debt, including the writing-off of debt for LDCs and countries in Africa affected by the unprecedented drought. The Board would have been invited to review the implementation of those recommendations in 1986.

During the mid-term global review of the implementation of SNPA, conclusions and recommendations were made by UNCTAD's Intergovernmental Group on LDCs regarding the debt problems of those countries. Those findings were endorsed by the General Assembly when it adopted resolution 40/205, to which they were annexed.

Using information in the Trade and Development Report, 1985 as a basis for its discussions, TDB considered the debt and development problems of developing countries at its September 1985 session. In a summary of the debate, which was annexed to the TDB report,<sup>(8)</sup> the Board's President said that certain positive trends in world development, such as renewed economic growth, reduced inflation in developed countries, lower interest rates, and resumed growth in world trade, were contributing to a certain easing of the debt situation. However, the sacrifices being made by developing countries under heavy debt burdens were extremely onerous. In many debtor developing countries, debt service was absorbing a significant part of export earnings and gross national product, their social and economic development had suffered a serious set-back, and reduced rates of investment had weakened the capacity for growth and debt service in the future. The framework for debt rescheduling required further attention to ensure that debt servicing was tailored to repayment capacity and development needs, and that adjustment programmes were underpinned by the availability of adequate net inflows of funds. Further consideration should be given to proposals concerning the servicing of ODA and commercial debt, entailing a substantial lengthening of maturities and reduction of interest rates.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In November, a draft resolution<sup>(9)</sup> on the external debt crisis and development was submitted to the General Assembly's Second Committee by Yugoslavia on behalf of the Group of 77. Thereby, the Assembly would have reaffirmed that the development of developing countries was an essential priority for all countries, but was being negatively affected by the external debt crisis. It would have urged creditor developed countries and debtor developing countries, as well as international financial institutions, to find a mutually agreed solution to the debt problem of developing countries, to be sought with the following guidelines: equity and symmetry between developed and developing countries in distributing the costs of economic adjustment; lower and stable interest rates, stretching out of payments, grace and consolidated periods; improved and stable access to markets; standstill and rollback of protectionism; reversing the trend towards disruptive market practices, discrimination and managed trade; stabilization of commodity markets with fair and remunerative prices; reversing the net outflow of financial resources from developing to developed countries; reinitiation of the financial flow of resources for development; limiting debt-service payments to a percentage of export earnings compatible with development needs; easing the conditionality applied by IMF and avoidance of cross-conditionality; and special treatment for the poorer and least developed countries in solving their external debt problems. Creditor developed countries and multilateral financial institutions would have been called on to adopt measures to solve Africa's indebtedness, including action on terms and conditions of the existing debt and the provision of additional resources on concessional terms. The Secretary-General would have been requested to take initiatives towards fulfilling the draft's objectives and to report in 1986 on the evolution of the process.

By a draft resolution on debt and related issues,<sup>(10)</sup> submitted in December to the Second Committee by Luxembourg on behalf of EEC, the Assembly would have urged further strengthening of international economic co-operation aimed at resolving debt problems and ensuring non-inflationary, sustained world economic growth. It would have stressed the need for convergent economic policies, particularly among major industrialized countries. Debtor countries would have been called on to continue their adjustment efforts. The Assembly would also have called for further action to strengthen the open and multilateral trading system, reverse protectionist trends, improve the functioning of the international monetary system and seek greater stability in exchange markets. The need to improve the stability and predictability of earnings from commodities and primary products would have been stressed, as well as the importance of ensuring adequate national and international resource flows to developing countries, and, in that context, the crucial role of IMF and the World Bank. The Assembly would have called for full implementation of TDB resolutions of 1978<sup>(6)</sup> and 1980<sup>(11)</sup> on the debt problems of developing countries and invited multilateral assistance institutions to take into account in their lending programmes for LDCs their overall debt-service burden. It would also have commended the growing spirit of dialogue and co-operation reflected in recent international economic meetings and statements, particularly through the initiatives of IMF and the World Bank to consider debt problems in a broader context.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted decision 40/445 by which it decided to reconvene the Second Committee for one week in 1986 to consider ways in which international co-operation in the interrelated areas of money, finance, debt, resource flows, trade and development could be promoted effectively, and to deal with unfinished business in those areas, including the two aforementioned draft texts.

Development finance

In the report on its November 1984 and April 1985 session,<sup>(1)</sup> CDP stated that in 1983, the last year for which complete information was available, financial flows to developing countries from all sources reached $110.3 billion, down from $138.4 billion in 1981. Concessional flows represented $35.9 billion, down from $39.3 billion in 1981, and non-concessional flows $74.4 billion, down from $99.1 billion. ODA declined by $3.4 billion. Bank lending declined from $52.5 billion to $34 billion in 1983 and preliminary estimates showed that new commercial bank lending to developing countries declined further to $14 billion in 1984; foreign direct investment declined from $17.2 billion in 1981 to $7.8 billion in 1983; and net export credits declined from $13 billion in 1981 to $7.6 billion in 1983. In the light of the uncertainties surrounding the supply of those three main sources of non-concessional flows, the slow-down and virtual stagnation of ODA flows, the major form of external assistance to the low-income countries, were most disturbing.

Based on an overview of the sources of financial flows to developing countries, there was a strong likelihood that those flows would in future be lower in real terms and would grow more slowly. Such lower levels of financial assistance would lead to lower rates of growth and economic advance. CDP urged a renewed effort, led by the multilateral banks, to restore levels of external finance and called for reinforcement of the stabilization and financing roles of IMF and the World Bank by providing them with expanded resources.

The World Economic Survey 1985<sup>(3)</sup> stated that investment in the least developed and other low-income countries remained depressed and their international reserve position was precarious. A larger inflow of bilateral and multilateral ODA, as well as debt relief, was required in the short term to ease some of the most pressing constraints on growth.

The effect of lower levels of development finance on the long-term development prospects of developing countries was discussed in a report of the Secretary-General on the overall socio-economic perspective of the world economy to the year 2000<sup>(12)</sup> (see p. 415). Access to external resources was confirmed as an essential requirement for the accelerated development of developing countries in the conclusions<sup>(13)</sup> of the Committee on the Review and Appraisal of the Implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (see p. 418).

At the second part of its eleventh session,<sup>(4)</sup> the Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade had before it an UNCTAD secretariat report which examined the role of foreign direct investment (FDI) in development finance,<sup>(14)</sup> especially the possibility of its substituting for other forms of financial flows. The report reviewed international proposals for converting existing external debt into FDI and for a multilateral investment insurance scheme, and explored other international policy options. It found that, whereas FDI had been viewed as a proxy for risk capital, the pure equity component of FDI was small and had shrunk in the past several years. It raised the question of whether other investment instruments might be developed that would allow payments by debtor countries to be more closely tailored to their capacity to pay. Another report, on selected policy issues connected with ODA,<sup>(15)</sup> reviewed major trends and prospects in ODA, focused on evolving aid requirements and addressed the questions of aid effectiveness, distribution and co-ordination. The report concluded that the recent ODA performance of developed donor countries had been disquieting and that aid prospects for the remainder of the 1980s were bleak. It identified areas where scope existed for policy action by both donors and recipients to enhance the provision and use of aid.

On 8 March, the Committee adopted agreed conclusions, taking note of the serious economic difficulties facing many developing countries heavily dependent on ODA for financing their economic development, and underscoring the importance of an expanded and sustained flow of ODA in supporting orderly adjustment and growth. Serious concern was expressed that net ODA to developing countries during 1981-1983 had declined in real terms. The Committee noted with satisfaction the efforts by donor countries that had maintained their ODA performance above the international target established in the International Development Strategy and was encouraged by the progress made by a number of others to reach the target by 1990; the remaining donors were urged to redouble their efforts to fulfil their commitments. The Committee expressed disappointment that ODA flows to LDCs would not, as foreseen in SNPA,<sup>(16)</sup> have doubled by 1985 and noted that further attention would be paid to the performance of donors at the mid-term review (see p. 434). The Committee underlined the importance of multilateral development finance institutions and recalled that their funding at an adequate level was essential to provide a sound basis for continuing significant growth in their lending. It stressed that its review and monitoring role could be strengthened by developed donor countries' providing full and transparent information on all aspects of UNCTAD resolution 164(VI).<sup>(17)</sup>

The 1985 session of the General Assembly took no action on a draft decision<sup>(18)</sup> referred to it in 1984<sup>(19)</sup> by which it would have requested the Secretary-General to undertake consultations with Governments on an international conference on money and finance for development and to report thereon.

A draft resolution<sup>(20)</sup> on the subject was introduced in the Second Committee in November 1985 by Yugoslavia on behalf of the Group of 77. By that resolution, the Assembly would have requested the Secretary-General to undertake consultations on the terms of reference, format and time frame of such a conference, with a view to convening an intergovernmental committee to commence preparations by April 1986. He would also have been called on to make available the documentation for the preparatory body and to submit a report on the preparatory process to the Economic and Social Council and subsequently to the Assembly in 1986.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted decision 40/445 by which it decided to reconvene the Second Committee immediately prior to the first regular session of the Economic and Social Council of 1986 to deal with unfinished business on various draft texts, including that on an international conference on money and finance for development.

Mobilization of savings

On 28 May 1985, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote decision 1985/126 on mobilization of personal savings, by which it requested the Secretary-General to prepare and circulate, before the end of June, a brief report on the Third International Symposium on the Mobilization of Personal Savings in Developing Countries (Yaoundé, Cameroon, 10-14 December 1984). The decision, originally proposed in the First (Economic) Committee by France, also on behalf of Cameroon, Jamaica, Malaysia, Pakistan and Sweden,<sup>(21)</sup> was resubmitted in revised form by a Committee Vice-Chairman<sup>(22)</sup> following informal consultations; it was approved without vote on 21 May, and the six-nation text was withdrawn.

In accordance with the Council's request, an informal paper was circulated which contained summaries of the most important points made in the Symposium debate, and conclusions and recommendations concerning: interest rates and mobilization of savings; improving the efficiency of the institutional and the non-institutional sectors; strengthening the link between those sectors; and continuation of the Integrated Programme of International Co-operation for the Mobilization of Personal Savings in Developing Countries, undertaken by the United Nations Department of International Economic and Social Affairs to integrate efforts to promote the mobilization of savings and channel them to investors, and to encourage at the national level the mobilization of each country's financial resources for financing development.

The informal paper was included as Part One of the final report of the Symposium;<sup>(23)</sup> Part Two contained selected papers presented to the Symposium.

Trade-related finance

Export earnings

In accordance with UNCTAD resolution 157(VI),<sup>(24)</sup> the fourteenth special session of TDB (Geneva, 10-15 and 27 June) considered the report of an expert group on the compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls, which had met in 1984.<sup>(25)</sup>

On 27 June,<sup>(26)</sup> the Board noted with concern the instability of export earnings from commodities of the developing countries. It also noted that a large number of countries were convinced of the need for an additional compensatory financing facility, while others considered that Governments needed further information to facilitate continuing intergovernmental discussion of issues raised in the expert group's report, including the need for an additional complementary facility. The Board invited UNCTAD members, its secretariat, the United Nations regional commissions and competent international organizations to comment on the report, including any case-studies. The UNCTAD Secretary-General was requested to convene an intergovernmental group of experts in early 1986 to continue to analyse the need for a new facility, to undertake further work on the rules and modalities of any additional complementary facility, to complete its work by June 1986 and to report to a two-week special session of the Board. The special session would decide on follow-up action, including the possible convening of a negotiating conference on an additional complementary facility.

Insurance

The first part of the eleventh session of the UNCTAD Committee on Invisibles and Financing related to Trade (Geneva, 18-22 February) was devoted exclusively to questions of insurance.

On 22 February, the Committee adopted a resolution<sup>(27)</sup> by which it considered that a secretariat study<sup>(28)</sup> on establishing life insurance tax policy in developing countries provided valuable guidance on the establishment of such policies, invited Governments of those countries to bring the study to the attention of their tax and insurance authorities, and asked the secretariat to continue to study measures that developing countries could adopt to improve the investment performance of life insurers.

By another 22 February resolution,<sup>(29)</sup> on motor insurance in developing countries, the Committee considered that two secretariat studies—one on compensation of victims of motor accidents, with reference to alternative legal systems for developing countries,<sup>(30)</sup> the other on reforming the legal systems governing motor accident victims' compensation in developing countries<sup>(31)</sup>—provided valuable guidance in instituting reforms in those countries' systems of compensating victims of motor vehicle accidents. It endorsed the conclusion of the first-mentioned study that the choice of legal system for compensating accident victims was the responsibility of each State and recommended that developing countries make use of the measures suggested therein to compensate victims without endangering the solvency of insurance companies. Developing countries were urged to compile statistics so as to be able to assess objectively their compensation system and analyse the desirability and feasibility of reforms.

By a further 22 February resolution,<sup>(32)</sup> on risk management in developing countries, the Committee recommended undertaking a study on the applicability of modern risk management techniques, including the prevention, treatment and financing of losses, to commercial and industrial enterprises in developing countries, and the important role that insurance could play in that area.

On the same date, the Committee adopted a resolution<sup>(33)</sup> on reinsurance and local retention in developing countries, by which it considered that two secretariat studies-on insurance in developing countries, reviewing developments in 1982-1983,<sup>(34)</sup> and on the impact of captive insurance companies on the insurance markets of developing countries<sup>(35)</sup>—provided valuable information on contemporary concerns related to providing international reinsurance cover. It urged developing countries to increase local retention and exert maximum efforts to satisfy the insurance requirements of domestic enterprises, including those of local affiliates of foreign-owned corporations, and not become mere vehicles for exporting premiums abroad through unwarranted reinsurance, but not overlooking the possible advantages of using international reinsurance markets. Developing countries should continue to promote regional and interregional co-operation in insurance and reinsurance as a means of increasing their local retention. The Committee requested a study on all the criteria for assessing the security and credibility of reinsurers, seeking the opinion of representatives of the various interests involved and other experts. The secretariat was also asked to continue its studies on the activities of foreign insurance and reinsurance companies, including captive companies, in the developing countries.

In another 22 February resolution,<sup>(36)</sup> on insurance for domestic projects in developing countries, the Committee invited countries involved in projects in developing countries to broaden their co-operation in various forms of insurance by extending their assistance and technical support to the efforts of developing countries so that the involvement of local markets in the insurance of such projects could be encouraged, taking into account the need to ensure adequate security.

Taxation

The Ad Hoc Group of Experts on International Co-operation in Tax Matters held its third meeting at Geneva from 9 to 20 December 1985.<sup>(37)</sup> In accordance with proposals made at its second meeting in 1983<sup>(38)</sup> and approved by the Economic and Social Council in 1984,<sup>(39)</sup> the Ad Hoc Group reviewed the experience of countries in the bilateral application of the United Nations Model Double Taxation Convention between Developed and Developing Countries, adopted by a predecessor Group in 1979.<sup>(40)</sup> The Group's review was based on replies to a questionnaire sent to Member States which asked whether the Model Convention had stimulated negotiations on bilateral tax treaties between developed and developing countries, to what extent it had influenced how such treaties were negotiated, and how useful it was in negotiating them and whether it could be made more useful.

The Group noted that the Model Convention had stimulated the negotiation of many bilateral double taxation treaties during the seven-year period ending on 31 December 1983; 24 respondent countries indicated that they had carried on negotiations for some 250 treaties; of which some 100 had been concluded within the period and almost 100 were in operation. Of the 250, a small number related to treaties between developing countries. Replies also indicated that the Convention had had a substantial influence on the way bilateral treaties were negotiated; all but one of the respondent countries had used the Convention (or the guidelines that had preceded it) to varying degrees. The Group noted that, in general, respondent countries had found it "moderately useful", "useful" or "very useful", and had suggested various ways in which it could be made more useful.

The Ad HOG Group approved a list of topics connected with monitoring the impact of the Convention for possible consideration at its next meeting, and also discussed the possibility of providing for tax administrations a compendium of domestic measures taken by Governments to combat tax evasion.

Programme and finances of UNCTAD

The UNCTAD Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget held two sessions in 1985. In April, it discussed the UNCTAD section of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1986-1987, and in October reviewed UNCTAD's technical assistance activities.

The General Assembly called for the commencement of preparations for the seventh session of UNCTAD, to be held in 1987, and confirmed the appointment of Kenneth K.S. Dadzie as UNCTAD Secretary-General beginning on 1 January 1986.

UNCLAD programme

The Trade and Development Board—the executive body of UNCTAD—held three sessions in 1985, all at Geneva. Its thirtieth session was held from 18 to 29 March and on 2 May; its fourteenth special session, from 10 to 15 and on 27 June to consider compensatory financing of export earnings shortfalls (see p. 579); and its thirty-first session from 16 to 27 September.

The Board adopted four resolutions and 18 decisions during 1985. A resolution adopted in March dealt with technical and operational assistance provided by the Advisory Service on

Transfer of Technology (see p. 717). Three resolutions adopted in September dealt with action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries (see p. 451), the technological transformation of developing countries in the pharmaceutical sector (see p. 717), and the transfer and development of technology, with reference to issues in individual sectors of critical importance to developing countries (see p. 717).

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The Board's 1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> was considered by the General Assembly in November and December. The Economic and Social Council had, without vote, taken note of the first part of the report,<sup>(2)</sup> on its thirtieth session, on 25 July by decision 1985/171, an action recommended by the Council's First Committee, on an oral proposal by its Chairman.

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly adopted resolution 40/189, without vote.

Report of the Trade and Development Board

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 1995(XIX) of 30 December 1964, as amended, on the establishment of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development as an organ of the General Assembly, and its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, the annex to which contains the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,

Mindful of the forthcoming seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, to take place in 1987, which constitutes a major opportunity for progress in key issues in the field of international trade and related areas of international economic co-operation for development,

Noting that the Trade and Development Report, 1985 has made a constructive contribution to the examination by the Trade and Development Board, at its thirty-first session, of the world economic situation and its future prospects,

1. Takes note of the report of the Trade and Development Board on the work of its thirtieth, fourteenth special and thirty-first sessions;

2. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to continue and intensify its important contribution and the role it has been playing in the revitalization and strengthening of international trade and related areas of international economic co-operation for development;

3. Calls upon all Governments and the relevant international organizations to commence intensive and thorough preparations for the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

General Assembly resolution 40/189

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.3) without vote, 9 December (meeting 49); draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.84), orally amended by vice-Chairman based on informal consultations; agenda item 84 (c).

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 31, 36, 41, 45-49; plenary 119.

On 17 December, the Assembly adopted five other resolutions on various aspects of the UNCTAD programme not covered in this chapter; they dealt with: specific action related to the particular needs and problems of land-locked developing countries (resolution 40/183); an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology (40/184); the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships (40/187); the reverse transfer of technology (40/191); and implementation of SNPA (40/205).

Programme policy decisions

At its ninth session, the TDB Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget (Geneva, 15-24 April 1985)<sup>(3)</sup> reviewed the UNCTAD section of the proposed United Nations programme budget for 1986-1987 and discussed programme evaluation and steps taken to effect economies in the 1984-1985 budget. It also addressed the question of the duration and frequency of its sessions.

On 19 April, the Working Party adopted agreed conclusions by which it: noted that adjustments were needed in the UNCTAD section of the 1986-1987 programme budget to take full account of recent decisions and resolutions, as well as of subsequent decisions during implementation of the budget; welcomed the establishment of a Programme Co-ordination and Evaluation Unit within the UNCTAD secretariat and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to keep the Working Party informed of the Unit's work, of economies necessary to implement decisions taken by intergovernmental bodies and conferences, particularly by UNCTAD VI in 1983, and of the outcome of secretariat review processes under way; recommended to TDB that its main committees, particularly the Committees on Manufactures, on Commodities and on Economic Co-operation among Developing Countries, give increased attention to reviewing their work programmes and implementing their decisions, in accordance with a 1981 TDB resolution;<sup>(4)</sup> invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General to consider ways to strengthen the Special Programme for Least Developed, Land-locked and Island Developing Countries and how to meet additional requirements placed on the Manufactures Division as a result of a 1985 TDB decision on services (see p. 557); and recommended that a further session of the Working Party be scheduled later in 1985.

Annexed to the Working Party's report was a position paper on the review of the UNCTAD section of the 1986-1987 budget, submitted on behalf of the Group D members (centrally planned economies) of the Working Party.

At its tenth session (Geneva, 14-18 October),<sup>(5)</sup> the Working Party focused on UNCTAD's technical assistance activities and their financing (see below), and again considered programme evaluation and redeployment of resources.

On 18 October, the Working Party adopted agreed conclusions by which it noted with concern the implications of the continuing decline in resources for technical co-operation, particularly from UNDP, and invited the UNCTAD Secretary-General: periodically to indicate to Governments possible areas of technical assistance activities, expertise required and financing options; to intensify efforts to find additional extrabudgetary resources for such activities and include information in that regard in the next annual report; to review, and involve Governments in updating, the UNCTAD roster of candidates for technical co-operation assignments, ensuring that it was the main source for recruiting experts; and to keep the Working Party informed on the internal evaluation of the secretariat. It decided to consider programme evaluation at a future session, reiterated its recommendation that main committees review their work programmes and implement their decisions, and reiterated its interest in being informed of economies and redeployment in the secretariat.

Other related action. At its twenty-fifth session (New York, 29 April-1 June),<sup>(6)</sup> the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) requested that greater efforts be made to improve the presentation of UNCTAD's proposed programme budget. In the light of its recommendations on the triennial review of the manufactures programme (see p. 598), CPC expressed the view that UNCTAD, to avoid duplication, should strengthen its efforts to co-ordinate its activities with those of other agencies. It welcomed the establishment of the Evaluation Unit, hoped for close collaboration between it and the United Nations Office for Programme Planning and Co-ordination and recommended that two outputs under the international monetary issues programme be combined. With regard to manufactures and semi-manufactures, CPC recommended that highest priority be given to implementation and improvement of GSP and of special and differential treatment for developing countries, cautioned against disproportionate growth in advisory services compared to other areas, and recommended that UNCTAD strengthen co-ordination with other organizations, especially UNDP, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization and the International Labour Organisation.

CPC recommended that the General Assembly approve, with the suggested changes, the UNCTAD section (section 15) of the proposed programme budget (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

Technical co-operation

Total project expenditure incurred by UNCTAD in 1985 for technical co-operation activities amounted to some $7.2 million, a decrease of $2.1 million in comparison with 1984. Allocations from UNDP totalling $5.8 million were still the main source of funds, but had fallen from $7.2 million in 1984. In 1985, the total number of projects implemented was 107, compared to 117 in 1984. Activities remained predominantly intercountry-oriented. By region, compared with 1984, expenditures for the Americas, Europe, the Arab States and interregional activities registered an increase in 1985, whereas those for Africa and Asia declined. Among the regions, however, Africa continued to receive the largest share, with 42.2 per cent of total UNCTAD expenditures.

The main sectors in which UNCTAD provided assistance were: maritime and multimodal transport; economic co-operation among developing countries; assistance to the least developed, land-locked and island developing countries; money, finance and development; manufactures and semi-manufactures; trade in commodities; transfer of technology; insurance and reinsurance; trade among countries having different economic and social systems; and trade facilitation.

In addition to these activities, ITC continued to provide technical assistance for trade promotion (see p. 561).

The UNCTAD secretariat's annual report<sup>(7)</sup> on technical co-operation activities, prepared for the twelfth (October 1986) session of the Working Party on the Medium-term Plan and the Programme Budget, reviewed UNCTAD's activities by region and by programme area, discussed their financing, provided information on evaluations of 1985-1986 technical co-operation activities and noted co-operation between UNCTAD and its partners in the United Nations development system.

Organizational questions

Conferences and meetings

UNCTAD VII

By a 27 September decision,<sup>(8)</sup> the Trade and Development Board took note with interest of an offer by the Government of Cuba, originally made in 1981,<sup>(9)</sup> to host the seventh (1987) session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, but postponed a decision on the question to early 1986. It decided to request the Board's President to hold consultations and to report to the Board at its March 1986 session in order to enable it to recommend to the General Assembly the place, date and duration of the seventh session.

By resolution 40/189, the Assembly called on Governments and international organizations to commence intensive and thorough preparations for UNCTAD VII.

Calendar of UNCTAD meetings

On 29 March,<sup>(10)</sup> TDB approved a calendar of meetings for the remainder of 1985 and for 1986 and a tentative schedule for 1987. On 27 September,<sup>(11)</sup> it approved revisions of those calendars.

An Interim Committee, established in 1984<sup>(12)</sup> to seek agreement on holding a ministerial session of TDB, held meetings and several rounds of consultations at the end of 1984 and in early 1985. On 29 March,<sup>(13)</sup> following an oral report by the Chairman of the Committee, the Board decided to continue the Committee with the mandate to seek agreement on issues where full consensus had not yet emerged. The Committee was to report to the Board at its May or June session with a view to taking a decision to hold the ministerial session later in 1985 and to initiating preparations, with which the UNCTAD Secretary-General was to be fully associated at all stages.

On 27 June, at its fourteenth special session, the Board accepted the understanding that the Committee had completed its work; it had not been able to reach agreement on the matters entrusted to it.

Scheduling of TDB meetings

By a 22 January letter,<sup>(14)</sup> the President of TDB informed the President of the Economic and Social Council that, although the Board had been informed of the Council's 1984 decision<sup>(15)</sup> authorizing consultations between them on scheduling Board sessions, the Board had not considered the matter further. However, the subject had been included in the agenda for its March 1985 session. That session's report could be submitted to the General Assembly through the Council's July 1985 session, while the report on the Board's September session could be submitted directly to the Assembly.

By decision 1985/106 of 8 February 1985-proposed by the Council President on behalf of the Bureau of the Council and adopted without vote-the Council decided: to invite TDB to pursue its efforts to find a flexible and practical approach to resolving the issue; to consider the report of the Board's March session at its own July session; and to request the Secretary-General, without prejudice to future consideration of current arrangements, to transmit the Board's reports on its fourteenth special (June) and thirty-first (September) sessions directly to the Assembly.

On 29 March,<sup>(16)</sup> TDB, noting the Council's invitation to pursue efforts to resolve the issue, established an informal 19-member working group to consider all aspects of scheduling the Board's regular sessions, which was to report to the Board at its September 1985 session.

In its September report,<sup>(17)</sup> the working group stated that it had been proposed that the Board should hold one regular session a year in two parts on a September-to-September cycle: a one-week first part in September of one year and a three-week second part in March/April of the following year. The Board would report to the Assembly on both parts; any matter of particular importance occurring during the first part would be sent to the Assembly that same year in the form of an extract. Some regional groups had indicated that they had not had sufficient time to study the proposal. On 25 September,<sup>(18)</sup> TDB decided that the working group should continue to consider the Subject for report at its March 1986 session.

Servicing of meetings

On 29 March,<sup>(19)</sup> TDB, having heard oral reports by the UNCTAD secretariat in response to a 1984 Board resolution<sup>(20)</sup> on meetings scheduling and document preparation, agreed to revert to the matter at its September 1985 session, and requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to conduct a further monitoring exercise on meetings servicing requests during a major United Nations conference organized under UNCTAD auspices, to hold consultations on the results before the September session and to report to the Board.

A secretariat report on the monitoring exercise<sup>(21)</sup> concluded that interpretation resources provided for the meetings monitored were sufficient to cover all but very occasional requests; the established servicing structure could generally cope with needs. It was suggested that TDB might wish to enjoin the regional groups, which were provided with interpretation services only on an "as available" basis, to make most effective use of those services when they were available. On 25 September, the Board took note of the report.

Appointment of the UNCTAD Secretary-General

At the resumed 1984 session of the General Assembly on 16 September 1985, following a statement by the Assembly President on the United Nations Secretary-General's continuing consultations, begun in 1984,<sup>(22)</sup> regarding the appointment of the Secretary-General of UNCTAD, the Assembly adopted decision 39/324 B without vote.

Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

At its 108th plenary meeting, on 16 September 1985, the General Assembly:

(a) Took note of the statement by which the President of the Assembly indicated that the Secretary-General was continuing his consultations in regard to an appointment to the post of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and hoped to be in a position to appoint the Secretary-General of the Conference at the fortieth session of the Assembly, and that, in the interim, the senior Deputy Secretary-General of the Conference would continue to act as Officer-in-Charge of the Conference;

(b) Decided to include in the draft agenda of its fortieth session the item entitled "Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development".

General Assembly decision 39/324 B

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 17 (i).

In a November note to the Assembly,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General stated that he had completed his consultations with regional groups. He proposed to appoint Kenneth K. S. Dadzie of Ghana as Secretary-General of UNCTAD. On 21 November, the Assembly adopted decision 40/308 without vote.

Confirmation of the appointment of the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development

At its 87th plenary meeting, on 21 November 1985, the General Assembly, on the proposal of the Secretary-General, confirmed the appointment of Mr. Kenneth K. S. Dadzie as Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development for a term of office of three years beginning on 1 January 1986.

General Assembly decision 40/308

Adopted without vote

Oral proposal by President; agenda item 17 (k).

Chapter V

Transport and tourism

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and its subsidiaries continued in 1985 to deal with problems of transport, particularly maritime transport. The UNCTAD secretariat provided training assistance, advisers and consultants.

The second and third parts of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships (Geneva, 28 January-15 February and 8-19 July) considered an international agreement. The General Assembly in April (resolution 39/213 B) decided to convene the third part in July, and in December (resolution 40/187) it decided on a reconvening in 1986.

UNCTAD's Working Group on International Shipping Legislation (eleventh session, Geneva, 14-22 October) took up the lack of international uniformity in the area of maritime liens and mortgages and the inadequacy in the means of their enforcement. The Working Group recommended that the UNCTAD Trade and Development Board convene, jointly with the International Maritime Organization (IMO), an expert group on the subject.

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group to Consider Means of Combating All Aspects of Maritime Fraud, including Piracy, held its second session (Geneva, 23 October-1 November). The Director of the UNCTAD Shipping Division stressed the seriousness and persistence of maritime fraud.

During 1985, seven States became parties to the 1974 Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences, making a total of 66 States parties. The Code was aimed at opening international shipping trade, organized in a system of liner conferences, to more countries, particularly developing ones.

The Group of Rapporteurs and the Group of Experts on Explosives, two subsidiary bodies of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, met at Geneva from 5 to 16 August and from 16 to 20 September, respectively. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1985/9, recommended that, because of increasing concern about the transport of dangerous substances, especially hazardous wastes, the 1984 recommendations of the Committee should be taken into account. The new and amended recommendations served as a basis for the formulation of regulations by Member States and international organizations. Following consideration of a proposal by the Secretary-General to enlarge the Committee's membership, broadening also geographical representation in it, the Council requested the Secretary-General to propose ways of encouraging developing countries' participation in the Committee's work.

Taking note of a report on progress made in implementing the 1980 Manila Declaration on World Tourism and the 1982 Acapulco Document, the General Assembly, by resolution 40/172, invited States, when formulating their travel policies and strategies, to consider the new approach suggested by the World Tourism Organization, in which tourism was seen in the wider context of travel, making a positive contribution to economic development.

Transport

Maritime transport

The total volume of international seaborne trade in 1985 was estimated at 3.33 billion tons, the UNCTAD secretariat stated in its Review of Marine Transport, 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> prepared in accordance with the work programme of the Committee on Shipping.<sup>(2)</sup> The size of the world merchant fleet continued to decline, to 664.8 million deadweight tons (dwt) at mid-1985, 9.7 million dwt or 1.4 per cent less than the previous year. Since the peak of 1982, a decrease of 28.7 million dwt or 4.1 per cent had been recorded.

Four types of vessel-oil tanker, bulk and combined carriers, general cargo and unitized ships-constituted in 1985, as in previous years, the main part of the world fleet. They constituted 637.3 million dwt, representing 94.6 per cent of the world fleet, compared with 94.3 per cent in 1984.

Ownership remained concentrated in the developed market-economy and open-registry countries, with a combined tonnage amounting at mid-1985 to 73.1 per cent of the total world merchant fleet. The share of developing countries increased to 17.1 per cent in 1985, while the socialist countries of Eastern Europe and Asia owned 8.8 per cent; their share of tonnage had remained fairly constant at the level of 1970.

The participation of developing countries in the world merchant fleet continued to be considerably lower than their share of international seaborne trade.

In 1985, they generated 37 per cent of world cargo moving in international seaborne trade (exports and imports combined), while developed market-economy countries, either directly or indirectly through open-registry tonnage, generated 56 per cent.

Supply/demand disequilibrium remained one of the most serious problems in the world shipping industry, although in 1985 the surplus decreased slightly as compared with 1984, partly as a result of higher levels of demolition. Tonnage reported to be sold for scrapping during the year amounted to 41.7 million dwt, which was 43.3 per cent more than in 1984. Nevertheless, surplus tonnage as at 1 July 1985 was still estimated at 161.8 million dwt or 24.3 per cent.

The proportion of freight costs to cost, insurance, freight import values for developing countries continued to be approximately twice as high as that for developed market-economy countries (9.8 per cent against 5.1 per cent). Almost all freight rate indices (except that for vessels engaged in liner shipping and medium-size crude carriers) showed a decline in 1985.

UN Conference on registration of ships

The second and third parts of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships were held at Geneva from 28 January to 15 February 1985<sup>(3)</sup> and from 8 to 19 July,<sup>(4)</sup> respectively (for participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III). The Conference, convened pursuant to a 1982 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(5)</sup> considered an international agreement concerning the conditions under which vessels should be accepted on national shipping registers. The first part of the Conference had been held in 1984.<sup>(6)</sup>

Resumed conference (second part)

On 15 February 1985, at the close of the second part, the Conference decided to resume in July for a two-week period and requested the Secretary-General to seek the General Assembly's approval. The Secretary-General brought that request to the Assembly's attention by a note of 21 March.<sup>(7)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (April)

On 12 April, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 39/213 B.

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/209 of 20 December 1982 and 39/213 A of 18 December 1984,

Recognizing that substantial progress has been achieved at the resumed session, from January to 15 February 1985, of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships,

Recognizing that there is a need for a resumption of the Conference for a further period of two weeks in order to enable it to complete its work,

1. Takes note of the note by the Secretary-General of 21 March 1985;

2. Endorses the resolution of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships adopted on 15 February 1985;

3. Decides to convene a resumed session of the Conference to be held at Geneva for a period of two weeks in July 1985;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to make all the necessary arrangements for holding the resumed session of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships;

5. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report to the General Assembly at its fortieth session.

General Assembly resolution 39/213 B

12 April 1985 Meeting 107

Adopted without vote

Draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (A/39/L.46); agenda item 80 (c).

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/39/886; S-G, A/C.5/39/101.

Meeting numbers. GA 39th session: 5th Committee 57; plenary 107.

Resumed conference (third part)

At the conclusion of the third part on 19 July, the Conference approved a composite text of the proposed agreement as elaborated and amended.<sup>(8)</sup> As a result of negotiations in the Contact Group of the President and in the First Committee, the following articles were agreed on: article 2 on manning of vessels, with one reservation; article 3 on the role of flag States in the management of shipowning companies and vessels, with a few reservations on paragraphs 1 and 3; and article 4 on ownership of vessels, with some reservations, on paragraphs 1 and 2. The articles on maritime administration, management and ownership were transmitted to the Drafting Committee.

The Conference adopted on the same date a resolution<sup>(9)</sup> requesting the General Assembly at its 1985 session to authorize, within its budgetary appropriation for 1986-1987, the resumption of the Conference for three weeks in early 1986 in order to finalize its work; it also requested the UNCTAD Secretary-General to make all the necessary arrangements for the resumed session at Geneva.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION (December)

On 17 December 1985, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/187.

United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/209 of 20 December 1982, 39/213 A of 18 December 1984 and 39/213 B of 12 April 1985,

Recognizing the very substantial progress achieved by the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships during the third part of its session held from 8 to 19 July 1985, in particular with respect to the crucial issues before the Conference,

Recognizing that there is a need to resume once again the Conference, this time for a period of three weeks, in order to enable it to complete its work,

1. Endorses resolution 3 of 19 July 1985 of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships;

2. Decides to reconvene the Conference for the fourth part of its session at Geneva for a period of three weeks from 20 January to 7 February 1986;

3. Requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to make all the necessary arrangements for holding the fourth part of the session of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships;

4. Also requests the Secretary-General of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to report on the outcome of the United Nations Conference on Conditions for Registration of Ships to the General Assembly at its forty-first session.

General Assembly resolution 40/187

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.3) without vote, 5 December (meeting 48); draft by Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.77), based on informal consultations; agenda item 84 (c).

Financial implications. 5th Committee, A/40/1052; S-G, A/C.2/40/L.98, A/C.5/40/85. Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 49; 5th Committee 61; plenary 119.

In the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the Chairman said that, on the basis of the oral recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, adoption of the draft would give rise to conference-servicing requirements of $334,200; additional appropriations that might be required would be considered in the context of a consolidated statement.

Following approval of the draft in the Second Committee, the United States expressed the hope that the consolidated statement would indicate that the servicing costs could be covered from within existing resources, a position endorsed by the United Kingdom.

International shipping legislation

The Working Group on International Shipping Legislation eleventh session, Geneva, 14-22 October 1985,<sup>(10)</sup> took up the subject of maritime liens and mortgages. Referring to an August report<sup>(11)</sup> prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat, the Director of the UNCTAD Shipping Division stated that investigations had established that commercial, political and legal considerations were involved in financing ships, and that registered mortgages were the principal means for securing that financing. However, there was concern at the lack of international uniformity in the area of maritime liens and mortgages and the inadequacy in the means of their enforcement. The report set out a possible methodology of future work on maritime liens, mortgages and arrest of ships. It suggested that a joint UNCTAD/IMO approach would be the most practical and constructive, and the issues were so technical that a group of experts might be the best mechanism. The Working Group might therefore wish to consider establishing such a group.

On 22 October, the Working Group adopted a draft resolution submitted by the Chairman, by which it recommended that the Trade and Development Board (TDB) take steps to provide for the convening, jointly with IMO, of an intergovernmental group of experts which might consider a review of maritime liens and mortgages conventions and related enforcement procedures, such as arrest; preparation of model laws or guidelines; and the feasibility of an international registry of maritime liens and mortgages. The UNCTAD and IMO secretariats were requested to prepare the necessary studies and documentation for the group.

Convention on a code of conduct for liner conferences

As at 31 December 1985, the Convention on a Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences,<sup>(12)</sup> which entered into force in 1983,<sup>(13)</sup> had 66 States parties. (*) Seven States-Denmark, Finland, France, Norway, Saudi Arabia, Sweden and the United Kingdom-became parties during 1985.

Technical assistance and training

During 1985,<sup>(1)</sup> the UNCTAD secretariat executed 50 technical assistance projects financed by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), recipient countries and funds-in-trust (as against 44 the previous year). The projects were mainly concerned with providing advisers and consultants, training (fellowships and group training), and to a lesser degree equipment procurement; 18 projects were initiated and 10 were completed. Eighty-five experts were engaged in the projects and 3,200 fellows/course participants followed training activities. The total budget for UNDP-financed projects was $2.2 million, as against $2 million in 1984.

The secretariat developed and organized training in shipping, ports and multimodal transport and began a programme in maritime legislation. It continued to train senior, middle and junior management in those areas as a high priority, with special attention to the elaboration of complementary training packages, either developed centrally through the Improving Port Performance (IPP) project or through centralized and decentralized development (TRAINMAR).

Under IPP, financed by the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA), the secretariat provided materials for a training course on the management of general cargo operations and prepared a training programme on equipment management and maintenance. A training programme, in the form of materials for a seminar on container terminal development policy, also financed by SIDA, was completed; the seminar was designed for policy makers, such as senior civil servants and port managers; the materials consisted of six video programmes supported by case-studies and exercises.

In 1985, the TRAINMAR programme expanded its role in maritime training; its activities included the establishment of four training centres, the development of three courses and the exchange of pedagogical materials.

Maritime fraud

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Group to Consider Means of Combating All Aspects of Maritime Fraud, including Piracy (second session, Geneva, 23 October-1 November 1985),<sup>(15)</sup> considered five UNCTAD secretariat reports on: ship-related information and information needed to combat maritime fraud;<sup>(16)</sup> shipping agents;<sup>(17)</sup> the feasibility of a bank super-service;<sup>(18)</sup> the feasibility of improving the administrative and legal procedures of prosecuting authorities in cases of maritime fraud;<sup>(19)</sup> and the status of the work of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to combat maritime fraud.<sup>(20)</sup>

Speaking before the Group, the Director of the UNCTAD Shipping Division stressed the seriousness and persistence of maritime fraud, pointing out that one estimate had placed the losses to the shipping industry in excess of $13 billion a year, with developing countries the most frequent victims. He commended the idea of creating an international ship information register as the best means of reducing the opportunities for fraud resulting from ignorance and misinformation. He suggested it might be useful to formulate uniform minimum standards regarding financial and professional qualifications for shipping agents and other intermediaries. He noted the proposals of NGOs concerning precautions which might be taken in the use of bills of lading, but urged their replacement by sea waybills as the most effective means of combating documentary fraud. In addition to those preventive measures, he invited the Group to consider the desirability of an international agreement to combat maritime fraud.

On 1 November, the Group adopted a resolution submitted by its Chairman, requesting TDB to instruct the UNCTAD secretariat to complete its study on preventing documentary fraud, including the possibility of replacing bills of lading with sea waybills; to make a comparative study of the different minimum standards applied by professional associations of shipping agents, national and international, and to prepare a draft set of standards; to elaborate proposals for improving the dissemination of international information relevant to combating maritime fraud; and to contact bankers' associations and submit to the Committee on Shipping a list of those which had accepted the creation of a bank super-service. The Group also requested the Committee to examine ways to increase co-operation in investigating and prosecuting maritime fraud, and called on UNCTAD to continue developing a training programme and educational package on measures to combat maritime fraud.

Transport of dangerous goods

In 1985, work continued on harmonizing codes and regulations relating to the transport of hazardous substances such as liquefied gases, radioactive and toxic materials and explosives. The Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, which did not meet in 1985, published the fourth revised edition of its recommendations.<sup>(21)</sup> New and amended recommendations had been approved by the Committee in 1984.<sup>(22)</sup>

In April 1985, the Secretary-General submitted a report to the Economic and Social Council<sup>(23)</sup> describing the work of the Committee and its subsidiary bodies during 1983-1984.

The Committee's Group of Rapporteurs and Group of Experts on Explosives met at Geneva from 5 to 16 August 1985 (thirty-third session) and from 16 to 20 September (twenty-fifth session), respectively. The Group of Rapporteurs considered such matters as the definition of divisions of classes as pertaining to volatile substances, a revised hazard precedence table, temperature control, test criteria and transport in tanks of organic peroxides, gas cylinders and environmentally hazardous substances.<sup>(24)</sup> The Group of Experts took up, among other things, revision of the official designations of transport for explosive materials and objects and the establishment of a glossary.<sup>(25)</sup>

In a May 1985 note<sup>(26)</sup> to the Council, the Secretary-General reiterated a proposal to enlarge the Committee by, inter alia, converting observers into full members, and to widen its decision-making base through broader geographical representation. The Committee, at its 1980, 1982 and 1984 sessions, had expressed the view that a wider decision-making base was desirable. The Council, in 1983, had requested the Secretary-General to examine the implications of enlarging the membership and widening the Committee's decision-making base.<sup>(27)</sup> Acting on a 22 May recommendation by its First (Economic) Committee, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's note in decision 1985/123 of 28 May.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

Also on 28 May, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/9.

Work of the Committee of Experts on the
Transport of Dangerous Goods

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 468 G (XV) of 15 April 1953, 645 G (XXIII) of 26 April 1957, 994 (XXXVI) of 16 December 1963, 1110 (XL) of 7 March 1966, 1488 (XLVIII) of 22 May 1970, 1744 (LIV) of 4 May 1973, 1973 (LIX) and 1974 (LIX) of 30 July 1975, 2050 (LXII) of 5 May 1977, 1979/42 of 11 May 1979, 1981/3 of 4 May 1981 and 1983/7 of 26 May 1983,

Noting the ever-increasing volume of dangerous goods in world-wide commerce and the rapid expansion of technology and innovation,

Bearing in mind the constant need to meet the growing concern for the protection of life and property through the safe transport of dangerous goods, while at the same time facilitating trade,

Aware that in order to achieve internationally harmonized laws, complete reliance is placed on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods by the specialized agencies and other international organizations and by interested Member States which are committed to taking the recommendations of the Committee as a basis for the formulation of their requirements and regulations,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods in the biennium 1983-1984 and of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee for inclusion in its existing recommendations;

2. Requests the Secretary-General:

(a) To incorporate in the existing recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods all of the new and amended recommendations approved by the Committee at its thirteenth session;

(b) To publish the new and amended recommendations in all the official languages of the United Nations, in the most cost-effective manner, before the end of 1985 at the latest;

(c) To circulate the new and amended recommendations immediately after their publication to the Governments of Member States, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned;

3. Invites all Governments, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and the other international organizations concerned to transmit to the Secretary-General their views on the Committee's work, together with any comments they may wish to make on the amended recommendations;

4. Invites all interested Governments and the international organizations concerned, when developing appropriate codes and regulations, to take full account of the recommendations of the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods;

5. Recommends that, in view of the increasing concern being expressed in many international and regional bodies about environmental considerations in respect of the transport of dangerous substances, in particular hazardous wastes, transport requirements concerning the protection of the environment should take into account, inter alia, the recommendations of the Committee of Experts;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to make available, within existing resources, the staff necessary for the adequate servicing of the Committee of Experts, recalling that the request made by the Council in this regard in resolution 1983/7 has not yet been implemented;

7. Further requests the Secretary-General to prepare a comprehensive report, as requested by the Council in resolution 1983/7, for submission to the Council at its second regular session of 1986, on the participation of Member States, particularly developing countries, in the Committee of Experts on the Transport of Dangerous Goods, taking into account, inter alia, the desirability of appointing observers as full members in view of their active participation in its work over a continuous period and, at the same time, of widening the decision-making base of the Committee through broader geographical representation, and to propose ways and means of encouraging the participation of developing countries in the future work of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/9

28 May 1985 Meeting 22 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/91) without vote, 22 May (meeting 9); draft by Vice-Chairman (E/1985/C.1/L.5), based on informal consultations on draft by Committee of Experts on Transport of Dangerous Goods (E/1985/21 & Corr.1); agenda item 12.

Stating its position after adoption of the text, the United States said the Committee's recommendations served as a basis for the formulation of requirements and regulations by Member States, specialized agencies and international organizations. It expressed support for broadening the geographical distribution of the Committee membership, as did the Federal Republic of Germany, the USSR and the United Kingdom. The United States noted, however, that the live seats allocated to developing countries remained vacant, and it hoped that the report called for in paragraph 7 would address all the reasons behind their non-participation and would provide a basis to encourage their participation. Participation in the Committee should be at an informed and technical level, the United Kingdom added. Through enlarging the membership, especially through participation of developing countries, more substantial and informed input could be provided, the Federal Republic of Germany believed. The United States insisted that the staff necessary for adequate servicing of the Committee should be made available within existing resources. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom also hoped that the Secretariat would frame its proposals in such a way as to keep them within existing resources; the USSR understood that there were no financial implications as no such document had been presented. Argentina considered the transport of dangerous goods to be an issue of far-reaching importance and felt that the thinking of developing countries should be brought to bear on it; the report envisaged in paragraph 7 should take into account the full range of opinions.

Tourism

As requested by the General Assembly in 1983,<sup>(1)</sup> the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization (WTO) reported<sup>(2)</sup> on progress made in implementing the Manila Declaration on World Tourism, adopted in 1980 by the World Tourism Conference,<sup>(3)</sup> and the Acapulco Document, adopted by the World Tourism Meeting at Acapulco, Mexico, in 1982.<sup>(4)</sup>

The holiday market was a new market which had existed in its current form for 35 years at most, and holidays were a vested right only of employees in the industrialized countries, totalling 1 billion people at most, the report stated. For the 3.6 billion people living in the developing countries or in the depressed areas of other countries, the holiday market was still tenuous and insubstantial. To develop that potential market, States should stimulate it by all appropriate means, focusing not exclusively on holiday travel but on movements of persons of all kinds, be it for reasons of business, trade, religion, health or family. The development of movements of persons and travel must be accompanied by development in other production sectors with which there existed an interdependence, and communications networks, travel routes and travel enterprises must be set up. WTO was expanding its aims to ensure that its work was not confined solely to holidays but embraced travel as a whole.

The responses of United Nations bodies and other international or regional intergovernmental organizations and NGOs dealing with tourism to WTO invitations for co-operation had been highly gratifying, the report said; WTO had a working and co-operation arrangement with the Economic Commission for Africa and was negotiating a similar arrangement with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific. Negotiation and co-operation agreements or working arrangements had been concluded with the United Nations, UNDP and a number of other United Nations organizations. By giving the movements of persons, travel and tourism the priority they deserved, they could become a consistent motive force in economic development.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the report in decision 1985/198 of 26 July.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/172.

World Tourism Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 32/156 and 32/157 of 19 December 1977, 33/122 of 19 December 1978, 34/134 of 14 December 1979, 36/41 of 19 November 1981 and 38/146 of 19 December 1983,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization on the progress made in implementing the Manila Declaration and the Acapulco Document on World Tourism, and recognizes that the new approach of the World Tourism Organization, in which tourism is seen in the wider context of travel, can make a positive contribution to economic development;

2. Invites States to take that approach into account when formulating their travel policies and strategies, in accordance with their development plans;

3. Requests the United Nations Development Programme and other bodies of the United Nations system with an interest in this area to co-operate with the World Tourism Organization in accordance with the Manila Declaration and the Acapulco Document on World Tourism;

4. Requests the Secretary-General of the World Tourism Organization to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session, through the Economic and Social Council, a report on the progress made in implementing the present resolution and the relevant resolutions of the World Tourism Organization, particularly on the contribution of world tourism to regional development and the preservation of and respect for the cultural heritage of developing countries.

Chapter VI

Industrial development

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), established by the General Assembly in 1966<sup>(1)</sup> to promote the industrialization of developing countries, was converted into a United Nations specialized agency in 1985, after its Constitution entered into force on 21 June.

In August, the UNIDO General Conference, meeting at Vienna, Austria, as the principal legislative organ of the new agency, approved a draft relationship agreement with the United Nations, as prepared by the Economic and Social Council, and named Domingo L. Siazon, Jr., as UNIDO Director-General.

In December, the Assembly adopted the relationship agreement (resolution 40/180) and endorsed various administrative and financial aspects of the agreement (decision 40/463); it also appropriated a $24 million loan to the new agency to meet the expenses for 1986 (resolution 40/253 A).

As decided by the Assembly in 1979—that the status of UNIDO would change at the end of the year in which the General Conference met in a new capacity—UNIDO ceased to exist as an Assembly organ as at 31 December 1985, prepared to assume its functions fully as a specialized agency beginning on 1 January 1986.

The Industrial Development Board—the principal advisory body of UNIDO—met at Vienna in two different capacities during the year: first as an organ of the Assembly (nineteenth session, May) and later as that of a specialized agency (first session, August, November, December). In May, it adopted a conclusion on the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (see Chapter VIII of this section) as well as 17 other conclusions dealing with, among other things, assistance to the Namibian people (see TRUSTEESHIP AND DE-COLONIZATION, Chapter III) and the South African national liberation movements (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapter V), and integration of women in development (see Chapter XIX of this section).

In its new capacity, the Board adopted live decisions in August and 33 more in November and December dealing with organizational, financial, administrative and legal matters.

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: aid programmes and inter-agency co-operation. Regional economic and social activities: implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa. Energy: energy resources in industry. Science and technology: technology transfer. Environment: environment and industry. Women: women in development.

Conversion of UNIDO to a specialized agency

During 1985, UNIDO was converted in several stages into a specialized agency of the United Nations.<sup>(1)</sup>

A recommendation that the conversion take place was adopted by the Second General Conference of UNIDO in 1975 as part of the Lima Declaration and Plan of Action on Industrial Development and Co-operation.<sup>(2)</sup> Following a 1977 Assembly decision,<sup>(3)</sup> the United Nations Conference on the Establishment of UNIDO as a Specialized Agency adopted in 1979 a UNIDO Constitution, opening it for signature on 8 April 1979.<sup>(4)</sup> Subsequently, the Assembly approved transitional arrangements in 1979,<sup>(5)</sup> and recommended, in 1982,<sup>(6)</sup> the process of consultations among States to determine the date of the Constitution's entry into force.

Those consultations were concluded on 10 June 1985 in New York; the Constitution entered into force, in accordance with its article 25, on 21 June, when 80 States which had deposited instruments of ratification, acceptance or approval agreed on its entry and so notified the Secretary-General as depositary.

As at 31 December 1985, 140 States had signed the UNIDO Constitution as a specialized agency; 138 had ratified, accepted, approved or acceded to it.<sup>(7)</sup>

The following States had adhered to the Constitution (italics indicate 1985 action):

Afghanistan, Algeria, Angola, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bhutan, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Byelorussian SSR, Cameroon; Canada, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chile, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, Democratic People's Republic of Korea, Democratic Yemen, Denmark, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Fiji, Finland, France, Gabon, German Democratic Republic, Germany, Federal Republic of, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau: Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kenya, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mauritius, Mexico, Mongolia, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Oman, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Qatar, Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Syrian Arab Republic, Thailand, Togo, Trinidad and Tobago, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United Arab Emirates, United Kingdom, United Republic of Tanzania, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Viet Nam, Yemen, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Seven States had signed but not formally adhered to the Constitution as at 31 December (italics indicate 1985 action): Antigua and Barbuda, Chad, Costa Rica, Djibouti, El Salvador, Liberia, Papua New Guinea.

Communications. In May and June, the Secretary-General received communications from Bulgaria,<sup>(8)</sup> the Byelorussian SSR,<sup>(9)</sup> the German Democratic Republic,<sup>(10)</sup> Mongolia,<sup>(11)</sup> the Ukrainian SSR<sup>(12)</sup> and the USSR,<sup>(13)</sup> on their ratification or acceptance of the UNIDO Constitution and on what they expected of the new agency.

UN/UNIDO Agreement

In 1985, UNIDO's Industrial Development Board and the General Conference held their first sessions-comprising several segments starting in August-in their new capacity as principal organs of a newly-emerging specialized agency.

The 53-member Board (first session, Vienna, 13-17 August (part one),<sup>(14)</sup> 4-15 November (part two),<sup>(15)</sup> and 10 and 11 December (resumed part two)<sup>(16)</sup>) established a committee, on 17 August, to negotiate with a corresponding body of the Economic and Social Council (see below) a relationship agreement between the United Nations and UNIDO; it also recommended that the UNIDO General Conference authorize the provisional application of the agreement.

The new UNIDO General Conference (first session, Vienna, 12-17 August (part one) and 9-13 December (part two))-open to all UNIDO members-authorized the provisional application of the draft agreement and affirmed the conclusions of the 1983 formal meeting on the conversion of UNIDO,<sup>(17)</sup> particularly concerning the programme of work, financial questions, and secretariat structure and staffing of the new UNIDO. It also took note of a draft relationship agreement between the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UNIDO, prepared by the secretariat, and requested the UNIDO Director-General to establish a final text with the UNDP Administrator.

The Secretary-General transmitted three notes concerning the United Nations/UNIDO relationship agreement to the Economic and Social Council's Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies (New York, 14 and 18-20 November).<sup>(18)</sup> By one, he forwarded the text and an analysis of the draft agreement.<sup>(19)</sup> By another,<sup>(20)</sup> he transmitted a 10 September letter from the Director-General of the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO), in which the latter declared that WIPO was not bound by those provisions in the draft agreement attempting to entrust tasks to UNIDO that affected other specialized agencies. By a third note,<sup>(21)</sup> he transmitted a request by the UNIDO Director-General that the Council Committee consider the agreement as approved by the UNIDO Committee on the Negotiation of a Relationship Agreement with the United Nations, and the texts of two Board decisions relating to the agreement.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In 1985, the Economic and Social Council acted twice on the relationship agreement, authorizing its subsidiary body in July to negotiate with a UNIDO counterpart, and approving the draft text in December.

On 26 July, the Council adopted resolution 1985/74 without vote.

Arrangements for the negotiation of an agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/96 of 13 December 1979, in which the Assembly requested the Council to arrange for the negotiation with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization of an agreement to constitute it as a specialized agency in accordance with Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recalling also Council decision 1983/105 of 4 February 1983, in which it authorized the President of the Council to appoint from among the States members of the Council, in consultation with the Chairmen of the regional groups, the members of the Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies,

1. Takes note of the appointment by the President of the Economic and Social Council of the members of the Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies;

2. Authorizes the Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies to meet at an appropriate time to negotiate with the United Nations Industrial Development Organization a relationship agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit directly to the Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies relevant proposals regarding the relationship agreement;

4. Requests the President of the Council, in consultation with the members of the Bureau, to convene, if necessary, a resumed session of the Economic and Social Council to consider the outcome of the work of the Committee with a view to taking appropriate action;

5. Invites the Committee on Conferences to make appropriate arrangements, within existing resources, for the meetings of the Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies,

At its resumed second regular session of 1985, on 12 December, the Council adopted resolution 1985/81 without vote.

Agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations

Industrial Development Organization

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 34/96 of 13 December 1979, as well as Council decision 1983/105 of 4 February 1983 and resolution 1985/74 of 26 July 1985,

Having considered the text of the draft agreement negotiated by its Committee on Negotiations with Intergovernmental Agencies and the Industrial Development Board Committee on the Negotiation of a Relationship Agreement with the United Nations for the purpose of bringing the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with Article 57 and paragraph 1 of Article 63 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Aware that the text of the draft agreement was approved by the Industrial Development Board on 10 December 1985,

1. Approves the Agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the text of which is set forth in the annex to the present resolution;

2. Recommends to the General Assembly that it approve the Agreement at the earliest opportunity;

3. Decides, in accordance with paragraph 11 of General Assembly resolution 34/96 and article 21, paragraph (b), of the Agreement, that the Agreement shall apply provisionally pending its entry into force upon the approval of the General Assembly and of the General Conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/180 without vote.

Agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations

Industrial Development Organization

The General Assembly,

Recalling paragraph 11 of its resolution 34/96 of 13 December 1979,

Having considered Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/81 of 12 December 1985, and the draft agreement annexed thereto, intended to bring the United Nations Industrial Development Organization into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with Articles 57 and 63 of the Charter of the United Nations,

Approves the Agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization set forth in the annex to the present resolution.

ANNEX

Agreement between the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization

Preamble

In consideration of the provisions of Article 57 of the Charter of the United Nations and of article 18 of the Constitution of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, the United Nations and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization agree as follows:

Article 1

Recognition

The United Nations recognizes the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (hereinafter called the "Organization") as a specialized agency within the United Nations system as defined in its Constitution and as being responsible for taking appropriate action in accordance with its Constitution, as well as with any treaties and agreements administered by it.

Article 2

Co-ordination and co-operation

In its relations with the United Nations, its organs and the agencies of the United Nations system, the Organization recognizes the co-ordinating role, as well as the comprehensive responsibilities in promoting economic and social development, of the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council under the Charter of the United Nations. The Organization, in exercise of its central co-ordinating role in the field of industrial development, recognizes the need for effective co-ordination and co-operation with the United Nations, its organs and the agencies within the United Nations system. Accordingly, the Organization agrees to co-operate with the United Nations in whatever measure may be necessary to effect the required co-ordination of policies and activities. The Organization agrees further to participate in the work of any United Nations bodies which have been established or may be established for the purpose of facilitating such co-operation and co-ordination, in particular through membership in the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination.

Article 3

Reciprocal representation

(a) Representatives of the United Nations shall be invited to attend the sessions of all the bodies of the Organization and all such other meetings convened by the Organization, and to participate, without the right to vote, in the deliberations of such bodies and at such meetings. Written statements presented by the United Nations shall be distributed by the Organization to its members.

(b) Representatives of the Organization shall be invited to attend meetings and to participate, without the right to vote and in accordance with the relevant rules of procedure, in the deliberations of the Economic and Social Council, its commissions and committees, of the Main Committees and other organs of the General Assembly, of the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, and of the conferences and meetings of the United Nations, with respect to items of the agenda relating to industrial development matters within the scope of the activities of the Organization and other matters of mutual interest. Written statements presented by the Organization shall be distributed by the Secretariat of the United Nations to the members of the above-mentioned bodies, in accordance with the relevant rules of procedure.

(c) Representatives of the Organization shall be invited, for purposes of consultation, to attend meetings of the General Assembly when matters as defined in paragraph (b) above are under discussion.

Article 4

Proposal of agenda items

(a) After such preliminary consultation as may be necessary, the United Nations may propose items for consideration by the Organization. The Organization shall arrange for the inclusion of such items in the provisional agenda of its General Conference, Industrial Development Board, Programme and Budget Committee, or any other subsidiary body, as appropriate.

(b) After such preliminary consultation as may be necessary, the Organization may propose items for consideration by the United Nations. The United Nations shall arrange for the inclusion of such items in the provisional agenda of the Economic and Social Council or, as appropriate and in accordance with the relevant rules of procedure, of other organs or bodies of the United Nations.

Article 5

Recommendations of the United Nations

(a) Having regard to the obligation of the United Nations to promote the objectives set forth in Article 55 of the Charter of the United Nations and the function and power of the Economic and Social Council, under Article 62 of the Charter, to make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters and to make recommendations concerning these matters to the specialized agencies concerned, and having regard also to the responsibility of the United Nations, under Articles 58 and 63 of the Charter, to make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of such specialized agencies, the Organization agrees to arrange for the submission, as soon as possible, to the appropriate organ of the Organization, of all formal recommendations which the United Nations may make to it.

(b) The Organization agrees to enter into consultation with the United Nations upon request with respect to such recommendations, and in due course to report to the United Nations on the action taken by the Organization or by its members to give effect to such recommendations, or on the other results of their consideration.

Article 6

Annual report of the Organization, information and documents

(a) The Organization shall submit to the United Nations an annual report on its activities.

(b) Subject to such arrangements as may be necessary for the safeguarding of confidential material, full and prompt exchange of appropriate information and documents shall be made between the United Nations and the Organization.

Article 7

Statistical services

(a) The United Nations and the Organization agree to strive for the maximum co-operation, the elimination of all undesirable duplication between them and the most efficient use of their technical personnel in their respective collection, analysis, publication and dissemination of statistical information. They agree to combine their efforts to secure the greatest possible usefulness and utilization of statistical information and to minimize the burden placed upon Governments and other organizations from which such information may be collected.

(b) The Organization recognizes the United Nations as the central agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics serving the general purposes of international organizations.

(c) The United Nations recognizes the Organization as an appropriate agency for the collection, analysis, publication, standardization and improvement of statistics within its sphere, without prejudice to the right of the United Nations, its organs and other agencies within the United Nations system to concern themselves with such statistics in so far as they may be essential for their own purposes or for the improvement of statistics throughout the world.

(d) The United Nations shall, in consultation with the Organization and other agencies within the United Nations system, develop administrative instruments and procedures through which effective statistical co-operation may be secured between the United Nations, the Organization and other agencies within the United Nations system brought into relationship with it.

(e) It is recognized as desirable that the collection of statistical information should not be duplicated by the United Nations or any of the agencies within the United Nations system whenever it is practicable for any of them to utilize information or materials which another may have available.

(f) In order to collect statistical information for general use, it is agreed that data supplied to the Organization for incorporation in its basic statistical series or special reports should, so far as is practicable, be made available to the United Nations on request.

(g) It is agreed that data supplied to the United Nations for incorporation in its basic statistical series or special reports should, so far as is practicable and appropriate, be made available to the Organization upon request.

Article 8

Assistance to the United Nations

The Organization shall, in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and the Constitution of the Organization, as well as any treaties and agreements administered by it, co-operate with the United Nations by furnishing to it such information, special reports and studies, and by rendering such assistance to it, as the United Nations may request.

Article 9 Technical assistance

The United Nations and the Organization undertake to work together in the provision of technical assistance in the field of industrial development. In particular, they undertake to avoid undesirable duplication of activities and services and agree to take such measures as may be required to achieve effective co-ordination within the framework of existing co-ordinating machinery in the field of technical assistance, taking into account the respective roles and responsibilities of the United Nations and the Organization under their constitutive instruments, as well as those of other organizations participating in technical assistance activities. To this end, the Organization recognizes the overall responsibilities of the resident co-ordinators for operational activities for development, as formulated in the relevant General Assembly resolutions, and agrees to give consideration to the common use of available services as far as is practicable. The United Nations will make available to the Organization its administrative services in this field for use as requested.

Article 10 Transfer of technology

The Organization agrees to co-operate within the field of its competence with the United Nations and its organs, particularly the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and the United Nations Development Programme, as well as the agencies within the United Nations system, in promoting and facilitating the transfer of technology to and among developing countries in such a manner as to assist the Organization in attaining the objectives set forth in the Constitution.

Article 11 Trust, Non-Self-Governing and other Territories

The Organization agrees to co-operate within the field of its competence with the United Nations in giving effect to the principles and obligations set forth in Chapters XI, XII and XIII of the Charter of the United Nations and other internationally recognized principles and obligations regarding colonial countries and peoples, with regard to matters affecting the well-being and development of the peoples of the Trust, Non-Self-Governing and other Territories.

Article 12 International Court of Justice

(a) The Organization agrees to furnish any information which may be requested by the International Court of Justice in pursuance of Article 34 of the Statute of the Court.

(b) The General Assembly of the United Nations authorizes the Organization to request advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice on legal questions arising within the scope of the Organization's activities other than questions concerning the mutual relationships between the Organization and the United Nations or other agencies within the United Nations system.

(c) Such requests may be addressed to the International Court of Justice by the General Conference or by the Industrial Development Board of the Organization.

(d) When requesting the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion, the Organization shall inform the Economic and Social Council of the request.

Article 13 Relations with other agencies within the United Nations system

The Organization shall inform the Economic and Social Council of matters of inter-agency concern within its competence, and of any formal agreement on such matters to be concluded between the Organization and another agency within the United Nations system.

Article 14 Administrative co-operation

(a) The United Nations and the Organization recognize the desirability of co-operation in administrative matters of mutual interest.

(b) Accordingly, the United Nations and the Organization undertake to consult together, and with other agencies concerned within the United Nations system, from time to time concerning these matters, particularly the most efficient and harmonized use of facilities, staff and services and appropriate methods of avoiding the establishment and operation of competitive or overlapping facilities and services with a view to securing as much uniformity in these matters as possible.

(c) The consultations referred to in this article shall be utilized to establish the most equitable manner in which any special services or assistance furnished, on request, by the Organization to the United Nations or by the United Nations to the Organization shall be financed.

(d) The consultations referred to in this article shall also explore the possibility of continuing or establishing common facilities or services in specific areas, including the possibility of one organization providing such facilities or services to one or several other organizations, and establish the most equitable manner in which such facilities or services shall be financed.

Article 15 Regional and branch offices

Any regional or branch offices which the Organization may establish shall closely co-operate with the regional or branch offices which the United Nations has established or may establish, in particular the offices of the regional commissions and of the resident co-ordinators.

Article 16 Personnel arrangements

(a) The United Nations and the Organization agree to develop, in the interests of uniform standards of international employment and to the extent feasible, common personnel standards, methods and arrangements designed to avoid unjustified differences in terms and conditions of employment, to avoid competition in recruitment of personnel, and to facilitate any mutually desirable and beneficial interchange of personnel. For this purpose the Organization agrees to accept the Statute of the International Civil Service Commission.

(b) The United Nations and the Organization agree:

(i) To consult together from time to time concerning matters of mutual interest relating to the terms and conditions of employment of the officers and staff, with a view to securing as much uniformity in these matters as may be feasible;

(ii) To co-operate in the interchange of personnel when desirable, on a temporary or a permanent basis, making due provision for the retention of seniority and pension rights;

- (iii) That the Organization shall participate in the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund in accordance with the Regulations of the Fund and shall accept the jurisdiction of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal in matters involving applications alleging non-observance of these Regulations;
- (iv) To co-operate with the agencies in the United Nations system in the establishment and operation of suitable machinery for the settlement of disputes arising in connection with the employment of personnel and related matters.

(c) The United Nations and the Organization agree to co-operate fully in ensuring that, to the extent possible, all members of the staff of the United Nations who were assigned to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization when it was a United Nations organ should be offered appointments by the Organization that preserve their acquired rights and contractual status.

(d) The terms and conditions under which any facilities or services of the Organization or the United Nations in connection with the matters referred to in this article are to be extended to the other shall, where necessary, be the subject of complementary agreements concluded for this purpose.

Article 17

Budgetary and financial matters

(a) The Organization recognizes the desirability of establishing close budgetary and financial relationships with the United Nations in order that the administrative operations of the United Nations and the agencies within the United Nations system shall be carried out in the most efficient and economical manner possible, and that the maximum measure of co-ordination and uniformity with respect to these operations shall be secured.

(b) The Organization agrees to accept the Statute of the Joint Inspection Unit.

(c) The Organization agrees to conform, as far as may be practicable and appropriate, to standard practices and forms recommended by the United Nations.

(d) Financial and budgetary arrangements entered into between the United Nations and the Organization shall be approved in accordance with their respective constitutive instruments.

(e) In the preparation of the budget of the Organization, the Director-General of the Organization shall consult with the Secretary-General of the United Nations with a view to achieving, in so far as is practicable, uniformity in presentation of the budgets of the United Nations and of the agencies within the United Nations system for the purposes of providing a basis for comparison of the several budgets.

(f) The Organization agrees to transmit its proposed budgets to the United Nations not later than when the said budgets are transmitted to its members so as to enable the General Assembly of the United Nations to examine them and make recommendations, in accordance with paragraph 3 of Article 17 of the Charter of the United Nations.

(g) Representatives of the Organization shall be entitled to participate, without vote, in the deliberations of the General Assembly or any committee thereof established by it, at all times when the budget of the Organization or general administrative or financial questions concerning the Organization are under consideration.

Article 18

United Nations laissez-passer

Officials of the Organization shall be entitled, in accordance with such special arrangements as may be concluded between the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the Organization, to use the laissez-passer of the United Nations.

Article 19

Implementation of the Agreement

The Secretary-General of the United Nations and the Director-General of the Organization may enter into such supplementary arrangements for the implementation of this Agreement as may be found desirable.

Article 20

Amendment and revision

This Agreement may be amended or revised by agreement between the United Nations and the Organization and any such amendment or revision agreed upon between the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations and the Industrial Development Board of the Organization shall come into force on approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the General Conference of the Organization.

Article 21

Entry into force

(a) This Agreement shall enter into force on its approval by the General Assembly of the United Nations and the General Conference of the Organization.

(b) Without prejudice to the provision of paragraph (a) of this article, the present Agreement shall be applied provisionally when it has been approved by the Economic and Social Council upon authorization of the General Assembly and by the Industrial Development Board of the Organization upon authorization of the General Conference of the Organization.

General Assembly resolution 40/180

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009/Add.2) without vote, 13 December (meeting 51); draft orally proposed by Chairman; agenda item 12.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 36, 39,48-51; plenary 119.

Budgetary aspects of the conversion. In a November 1985 report to the Assembly,<sup>(22)</sup> the Secretary-General reviewed the transitional measures contemplated by the Assembly in 1979<sup>(5)</sup> for the UNIDO conversion and their financial implications to the United Nations budget, including the arrangements for the provision of conference and joint services at the Vienna International Centre where a number of United Nations and related offices were located (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter IV). He concluded that the conversion would result in a reduction of $68,850,300 in the 1986-1987 United Nations budget. At the same time, he proposed a $24 million loan to UNIDO, recalling that the Assembly in 1979<sup>(5)</sup> had authorized him, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ), to lend to the new agency, until it received sufficient contributions or advances from its members, an amount not exceeding one half of the appropriations for UNIDO (as an Assembly organ) for the last calendar year of its existence, to meet its initial operations expenses for the calendar year following that in which its General Conference was first convened, and to take the necessary budgetary measures.

Having studied the Secretary-General's report, ACABQ<sup>(23)</sup> informed the Assembly in December that it supported his proposed loan; in addition, its recommendations based on analysis of the Secretary-General's proposals on conference services and new posts would result in increasing by $2,361,800 the overall net reduction proposed by him in the United Nations budget.

On 18 December, the Assembly took two decisions on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee. In one, it approved administrative and financial aspects of the draft Agreement between the United Nations and UNIDO (decision 40/463). In the other, it approved the loan (resolution 40/253 A), following a 10 December recommendation to that effect by the Fifth Committee by a recorded vote of 103 to 9 (Bulgaria, Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, German Democratic Republic, Hungary, Mongolia, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, United States) (see also ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter I).

Austria felt the loan should be seen in the context of the United Nations financial emergency. While agreeing to the loan, Japan questioned whether a loan of that magnitude was justified. The United States declared it unacceptable that countries would be assessed twice for the loan, as United Nations Member States and again as UNIDO members. The United Kingdom asserted that the loan should be repaid in full by the end of 1987.

activities in 1985 included training programmes and fellowships, research and studies, statistics collection and holding Consultations on a number of industries, taking into account the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(1)</sup> and related Assembly decisions and recommendations. In 1985, 126 project evaluation reports were prepared; combined with tripartite reviews-conducted by UNIDO, UNDP and the recipient Government-they provided grounds on which to evaluate the experience gained and facilitate management decisions on projects.

At its nineteenth session (Vienna, 13-31 May),<sup>(2)</sup> the Industrial Development Board recalled a 1984 General Assembly agreement<sup>(3)</sup> on the need for UNIDO to have adequate resources for full implementation of its mandates, and observed that the proposed programme budget for 1986-1987 needed to be readjusted, taking into account the priorities established at the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO<sup>(4)</sup> (see below) and previously. It reaffirmed the following priority areas for UNIDO activities: energy-related and other industrial technology, industrial production, human resources development, special measures for least developed countries (LDCs), the System of Consultations, the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (the 1980s), and industrial co-operation among developing countries. It requested the relevant organs to consider including as priority areas rural development, industrial restructuring and redeployment, and integration of women in industrial development.

In other action, the Board emphasized the need to strengthen and improve the Senior Industrial Development Field Adviser (SIDFA) programme, recommended that UNIDO after its conversion consider evaluating the programme so as to enhance the accruing benefits, and invited the UNDP Governing Council to finance the maximum number of SIDFA posts in 1986-1987. It also adopted the report of its Permanent Committee on the work of its 1984 session,<sup>(5)</sup> which dealt with the proposed programme of work for 1986-1987, the SIDFA programme, co-ordination, evaluation, and control and limitation of documentation.

Under another Board conclusion, preliminary work began on topics for possible future Consultations in 1988-1989 (see also p. 603). Among the industries considered were food processing, building material, capital goods, fertilizer, small- and medium-scale enterprises, electronics, wood and wood products, pesticides, and offshore industry. In that context, a UNIDO expert group meeting was convened (Vienna, 17 and 18 December) with the Development Centre of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development on the mobilization and allocation of domestic financial resources in developing countries.

Programme and finances of UNIDO

Programme policy

In its continuing effort to promote the industrial development of developing countries, UNIDO

The 27-member Programme and Budget Committee—a subsidiary organ of UNIDO as a specialized agency—held its first session at Vienna from 30 September to 11 October and on 9 December.

On 25 July, by decision 1985/169, the Economic and Social Council took note of the report of the Industrial Development Board on its nineteenth session.<sup>(2)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

In 1985, the General Assembly took note of the Secretary-General's note on the implementation of the IDDA programme (decision 40/435) (see Chapter VIII of this section). Other related Assembly action which had bearing on UNIDO activities included: implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs (resolution 40/205); the critical economic situation in Africa (40/40); development of the energy resources of developing countries (40/208); co-ordination in the United Nations system (40/177); operational activities for development (40/211); and administrative and budgetary co-ordination of the United Nations with the specialized agencies and the International Atomic Energy Agency (40/250).

Co-ordination in the UN system

As in previous years, UNIDO maintained programme co-ordination with other United Nations organizations and specialized agencies.

In April 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) (twenty-fifth session, New York, 29 April–1 June), at its 1984 request,<sup>(6)</sup> a report on the co-ordination and rationalization of UNIDO activities,<sup>(7)</sup> in which he concluded that current mechanisms available to UNIDO appeared adequate in avoiding duplication of work and promoting co-operation, both internally and with others in the United Nations system, in programme planning and implementation.

Reviewing the report, CPC<sup>(8)</sup> regretted that the document had failed to present the views of the Office for Programme Planning and Co-ordination on the topic, recommended rationalizing UNIDO's external relations activities so as to release resources for higher priority activities, and suggested better co-ordination of UNIDO activities with those of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) relating to the transfer of technology. It also recommended that a cross-organizational programme analysis of all industrial development activities in the United Nations system should be undertaken at an appropriate time.

Follow-up to the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO

In March 1985, the UNIDO Executive Director reported to the Industrial Development Board on activities undertaken in 1984/85<sup>(9)</sup> as follow-up to the Fourth General Conference, held in 1984.<sup>(4)</sup> The activities focused on human resources development, strengthening of scientific and technological capacities in developing countries, energy and industrialization, domestic industrial processing of raw materials, industrial policies and measures for rural development and self-sufficiency in food supplies, UNIDO's co-ordinating role in the United Nations system on industrial development, assistance to Lebanon for reconstructing its industrial sector, and mobilization of financial resources for industrial development.

Field projects in human resources development in industry included training, and particular attention was given to the needs of African countries within the IDDA programme. In scientific and technological development, two expert meetings were held at Vienna, as pilot activities, on the protein enrichment of cassava (11–13 March) and on the manufacture of improved wood-burning stoves (18–20 March); a roster was being prepared of high-level scientists and technologists in micro-electronics, biotechnology and energy for an international referral system. Assistance in the energy sector was provided for the development of integrated national plans, a programme in Africa, investment promotion in the energy capital goods sector, and the repair and maintenance of those goods. Processing of domestic raw materials was emphasized in agro-based industries, and efforts were made to reduce developing countries' dependency on imported raw materials, for example, by creating opportunities for industries to be interlinked or by introducing mobile facilities to generate industrial skills in rural areas.

The UNIDO secretariat reviewed information regarding industrial development activities in other organizations and agencies of the United Nations system. It continued to participate in meetings of the Inter-Agency Working Group on Assistance to Lebanon; a proposal for creating a feasibility study unit within the Lebanese Ministry of Industry and Petroleum had been elaborated and was being considered for UNDP financing.

In another follow-up report<sup>(10)</sup> to the Conference, the Executive Director discussed the preliminary findings of UNIDO studies on the social aspects of industrialization, based on a set of North-South socioeconomic indicators, reviewed the developing countries' experience, examined the situation in African LDCs, assessed the interaction of industrialization and social development, and presented some hypotheses concerning the role of social development and infrastructure in determining the ability of developing countries to respond positively to external shocks and uncertainty.

Taking note of the reports, the Industrial Development Board, on 31 May, expressed concern at the insufficient rate of growth in the share of developing countries in world industrial production, and requested the Executive Director to continue implementing the Conference decisions and the 1984 General Assembly resolution<sup>(11)</sup> on world industrial restructuring and redeployment. The Board also suggested that international financial organizations consider allocating an adequate share of their resources to industrial development, invited the Assembly to continue consideration of a draft resolution on mobilization of financial resources (see p. 606), and reiterated a request for assistance to Lebanon for reconstruction of its industrial sector.

No action was taken on a proposal made by the Executive Director in 1981<sup>(12)</sup> to establish an international bank for industrial development.

Financial questions

UN Industrial Development Fund

In a March 1985 report to the Industrial Development Board,<sup>(13)</sup> the Executive Director stated that total pledges to the United Nations Industrial Development Fund (UNIDF), since it became operational in 1978, amounted to $91.6 million.

Pledged contributions for 1985 totalled $15.8 million, of which $14.9 million was collected during the year. The number of projects approved was 171 in 1985, valued at $14.5 million. Total expenditures stood at $12.3 million. Pledges for 1986 and 1987 were estimated at $15 million and $16 million, respectively.

Projects amounting to $12.65 million (excluding programme support costs) were approved as follows:<sup>(14)</sup> Africa, including African Arab States, $2.78 million (22 per cent); the Americas, $1.83 million (14.4 per cent); Arab States, excluding African Arab States, $300,000 (2.4 per cent); Asia and the Pacific, $1.21 million (9.5 per cent); and global and interregional, $6.54 million (51.7 per cent). To ensure the maximum impact of the Fund's limited resources, emphasis continued to be placed on innovative projects of a pilot nature which would have a global, interregional or subregional impact.

On 31 May, the Industrial Development Board<sup>(2)</sup> took note of the Executive Director's report, approved the proposed programme for 1986 and plan for 1986-1987, except for the proposal to earmark a small component within the Fund's general-purpose segment for disaster relief assistance, and agreed to continue to delegate authority to the Executive Director to approve projects for financing in 1986 and 1987. The Board called on all countries, particularly the developed ones, to contribute so as to enable the Fund to reach the desirable annual funding level of $50 million, as endorsed by the General Assembly in 1977.<sup>(15)</sup>

The Assembly, in resolution 40/238, accepted the report of the Board of Auditors on the Fund for 1984.<sup>(16)</sup>

NOTE: Since UNIDO was to be converted into a specialized agency on 1 January 1986, it would no longer be included in the annual United Nations Pledging Conference for Development Activities.

Budgetary resources of UNIDO

The UNDP indicative planning figure continued in 1985 to be the largest source from which UNIDO technical co-operation activities were financed. Other sources of financing included the UNDP Special Industrial Services programme and UNIDF.

Activities other than technical co-operation projects were financed from appropriations from the United Nations regular budget for UNIDO.

In March, the UNIDO Executive Director submitted two programme budget and financial reports to the Industrial Development Board. One contained the proposed 1986-1987 programme budget of UNIDO,<sup>(17)</sup> as prepared by the Secretary-General, taking into account the imminent conversion of UNIDO into a specialized agency. In the other,<sup>(18)</sup> the Executive Director proposed tentative allocations for 1986-1987 of the UNIDO regular programme of technical co-operation, based on indications that the appropriation would be $6,610,600.

In April, revised programme budget estimates were submitted by the Secretary-General to the General Assembly.<sup>(19)</sup>

Industrial development activities

Technical co-operation

The UNIDO technical co-operation programme totalled $94.5 million in 1985, compared to $87.2 million in 1984, according to a report of the Secretary-General to the UNDP Governing Council; (a) 1,694 projects were implemented or under implementation. Activities were funded from UNDP main programmes (65 per cent) and UNDP-administered trust funds (2 per cent), from UNIDF and other trust funds (23 per cent) and from the regular programme budget (10 per cent). The increased delivery of technical co-operation projects in 1985 resulted mainly from a higher level of implementation in UNDP-financed projects and from a higher rate of projects financed under the UNIDO regular programme which included an additional $5 million for IDDA.

Approved were 666 new projects with a total value of $72.5 million, compared to 633 valued at $73.5 million in 1984. The total value of new project approvals for LDCs was $16.5 million, compared to $20.4 million in 1984. The main areas of implementation continued to be chemical, engineering, agricultural and metallurgical industries, as well as industrial infrastructure. The focus of technical co-operation according to the Executive Director<sup>(2)</sup> continued to shift towards a higher degree of specialization, including sophisticated technology, as reflected in an increased use of short-term specialized international experts and split missions in UNIDO projects.

Africa, including African Arab States, accounted for 39 per cent of project delivery; Asia and the Pacific, 32 per cent; Arab States, excluding African Arab States, 3 per cent; the Americas, 12 per cent; Europe, 3 per cent; and global and interregional projects, 9 per cent. Of 1,628 newly appointed experts, 31 per cent came from developing countries. A total of 2,815 placement arrangements were made for 1,725 fellowship and study-tour candidates; 26 per cent of those placements were made in developing countries, thus contributing to technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC).

Chemical industries accounted for $24.5 million of technical co-operation activities; engineering industries, $13.9 million; agro-industries, $9.9 million; institutional infrastructure, $9.8 million; industrial planning, $7.3 million; metallurgical industries, $7.2 million; training, $5.8 million; feasibility studies, $5.3 million; and factory establishment, $3.9 million. Some $6.9 million was allotted to other related activities.

By project component, personnel accounted for $44.3 million (46.9 per cent); equipment, $22.6 million (23.9 per cent); fellowships and training, $13.5 million (14.3 per cent); sub-contracts, $11.8 million (12.5 per cent); and miscellaneous, $2.3 million (2.4 per cent).

UNIDO assistance to African countries concentrated on long-range industrial plans and strategies, industry performance, institutional infrastructure, and the development and transfer of technologies; special IDDA projects were integrated closely with regular technical co-operation activities for enhanced effect. In the Americas, Governments saw in industrial planning techniques a way of responding to basic social needs through improved technologies and increased local production; particular attention was paid to modernizing the food-processing, textile, clothing, building materials and construction industries, as well as the energy and transportation sectors, and to developing the capital goods sector aimed at technological improvement. Differing levels of development characterized African Arab and West Asian Arab States due to the effect of prices of mineral oil and its derivative products on the development of oil-exporting and oil-importing countries; major trends in the region included assistance in the preparation and evaluation of feasibility studies, the strengthening of specialized engineering institutions and the introduction of integrated repair, maintenance and inventory control programmes. In Asia and the Pacific, requests increased for advisory services to meet the needs of small- and medium-scale industries which, by using advanced technologies, had good prospects for becoming suppliers to large industries within and outside the respective country. subregion, a programme was initiated with a view to consolidating and optimizing the effectiveness of technical co-operation; assistance was requested in identifying and using local energy resources. The developing countries of Europe, which generally possessed the know-how for industrial progress, requested assistance in specific areas of sophisticated technology and computer application. Issues receiving special attention included the strengthening of institutional infrastructure and industrial energy conservation.

Under the regular programme, UNIDO activities amounted to $4.2 million. The regular programme continued to supplement other resources for industrial manpower development through individual fellowships, group training and the establishment and strengthening of training facilities in developing countries. Other regular programme components included regional advisory services and consultations with Governments. The UNIDO Executive Director provided the Industrial Development Board in March 1985<sup>(3)</sup> with information on UNIDO technical assistance activities during 1982-1984, by country, projects approved and delivered, and the number of expert assignments filled.

On 31 May,<sup>(4)</sup> noting with concern that the real value of resources for the UNIDO regular programme of technical co-operation had been declining steadily since 1980, the Board recommended to the General Assembly that the real value be maintained, and approved the tentative allocations for 1986-1987.

CPC consideration. In April 1985, the Secretary-General submitted to CPC at its request a triennial review<sup>(5)</sup> of the implementation of its 1980 recommendations on United Nations activities in manufactures, carried out primarily by UNCTAD and UNIDO. The Secretary-General had submitted to CPC in 1984<sup>(7)</sup> a comprehensive evaluation of the UNDP-financed UNIDO activities in that sector.

After reviewing the progress achieved and difficulties encountered, the Secretary-General suggested, for improved programme implementation, that UNCTAD continue seeking funds for expanded use of the generalized system of preferences and for the control of restrictive business practices. In addition to the need for both UNCTAD and UNIDO to develop adequate systems of receiving and benefiting from feedback from Governments, industrialists and experts, he suggested, among other things, that the UNIDO Evaluation Unit might expand its activities to cover research, policy analysis and negotiations and follow-up, and that the UNIDO secretariat might ensure circulation of consultation recommendations among all its headquarters and field staff for optimal results.

CPC, at its April-June session,<sup>(8)</sup> stated that the report should have relied less on information from the organizational units concerned and more on an independent assessment, that both UNCTAD and UNIDO should develop procedures for collecting the end-users' opinions for evaluation activities, and that special care should be taken to avoid duplication between the two bodies. CPC deplored the tendency it saw in the review to give priority to the implementation of substantive recommendations in preference to those of a programming, planning or co-ordination nature, and stressed the importance of giving equal treatment to all its recommendations. On 29 May, CPC recommended that the General Assembly approve the proposed regular programme of technical co-operation for 1986-1987.

Training of personnel

In 1985, expenditures for fellowships and training components in technical co-operation projects implemented by UNIDO totalled $13.5 million, compared to $11.7 million in 1984. Of that total, $8.3 million was spent on fellowships and study tours and $5.2 million on group training activities and meetings. A total of 229 projects were completed or being implemented.

The number of individual training programmes (fellowships) initiated in 1985 for managerial and technical personnel of industrial projects in developing countries was 35 per cent higher than in 1984 (1,725 compared to 1,278); placement arrangements by host countries were 30 per cent higher (2,815 compared to 2,166). Of those placements, 727 or 25.8 per cent were arranged in developing countries; 315 (18.2 per cent) of the trainees came from LDCs and 207 (12 per cent) were female.

Following up on the recommendations of the Fourth (1984) General Conference of UNIDO,<sup>(9)</sup> emphasis was placed on accelerating human resource development for industrialization. A training programme in management of human resource development for industry was held in the USSR and a workshop on the role of women in industry was organized in Argentina. A national training scheme, begun in Mozambique with 90 participants, featured a TCDC arrangement, in which Brazil provided consultants and trainers in Mozambique and made training facilities available to Mozambicans in Brazil.

Training activities geared to small- and medium-scale industries included a seminar on financing, organized in Gabon with the Central African Customs and Economic Union (Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon); its recommendations for a subregional programme were endorsed in December by the heads of State and Government of the six countries. A mobile team of trainers visited the Comoros, Madagascar and Mauritius, training managers of such enterprises in overall management techniques. A group training programme in policy and consultancy activities in small-scale industries was held in Italy for the Palestinian people, in co-operation with the International Centre for Advanced Technical and Vocational Training. In the Niger, the training needs of 40 industrial enterprises were surveyed; some 150 participants took part in subsequent training programmes on industrial management.

Training programmes in the food industry included courses on modern packaging techniques in Italy and Morocco, maintenance of refrigerators and deep-freezer equipment in Egypt, France and Ireland, and food-processing topics in China, the German Democratic Republic, Romania, the USSR and Yugoslavia. UNIDO evaluated the training capabilities of the Food Technology Institute in Senegal in the drying and freezing of fish.

Within the framework of IDDA, a seminar was held in the Ivory Coast on training of trainers for financial institutions, and a regional project for the establishment of training facilities in the design and production of agricultural machinery and implements was completed covering Cameroon, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania. An in-plant group training programme on agricultural machinery also took place in China.

Training materials were developed for instructors of seminars on industrial maintenance and the design of a modular approach for courses in maintenance.

The fourteenth issue of the UNIDO Guide to Training Opportunities for Industrial Development and the UNIDO Industrial Training Offer Programme for 1986 were published.

Strengthening the SIDFA programme

Senior Industrial Development Field Advisers continued to assist in 1985 in programming and implementing technical co-operation projects.

On 31 May, the Industrial Development Board<sup>(4)</sup> underlined the need to strengthen the SIDFA programme; stressed that it be maintained at its current level of 30 posts; and reaffirmed that it should continue to take into account the special needs of LDCs. It also endorsed the 1984 recommendations of the Permanent Committee in regard to SIDFAS;<sup>(10)</sup> invited the UNDP Governing Council to finance the maximum number of SIDFA posts in 1986-1987; and recommended that UNIDO after its conversion consider evaluating, and enhancing the benefits of, the programme.

On 29 June,<sup>(11)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council requested the Administrator to make a policy review of the future of the SIDFA programme. UNDP and UNIDO subsequently agreed on a joint review by two senior consultants of the effectiveness of current arrangements and of ways to respond more effectively through the SIDFA programme to the industrialization requirements of developing countries.

The number of Junior Professional Officers (JPOs), who assisted SIDFAs in co-ordinating and monitoring UNIDO activities, increased to 75 during 1985, compared with 65 in 1984. JPO training courses, attended by 30 JPOs and donor country representatives, were held in April and November. As in 1984, the programme was supported by Belgium, Denmark, Finland, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

Special Industrial Services

The Special Industrial Services (SIS) programme enabled UNIDO to meet urgent requests for assistance from developing countries by providing them with short-term, high-level advisory services, under UNDP financing.

A shortage of resources and inflationary factors limited the programme's scope in 1985. Expenditures during the year totalled $2.7 million, covering 263 projects related mainly to chemical industries, agro-industries, and metallurgical and engineering industries.

At the end of 1985, a UNDP mission evaluated the SIS programme-using questionnaires, a review of randomly selected projects, and a field visit by a consultant to live countries-to provide the UNDP Governing Council with a basis on which to decide in 1986 on the continuation and allocation of SIS funds for 1987-1991.

Industrial co-operation

System of Consultations

The Industrial Development Board examined a number of reports in 1985 as it continued the process of appraisal, begun in 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> of the System of Consultations, a mechanism for identifying possible areas for technical co-operation.

The President of the Board's 1984 session reported<sup>(13)</sup> that an open-ended informal working group-meeting on 27 November 1984 and 22 January, 8 February and 16 April 1985-considered the current functioning and future prospects of the System, as well as the Consultations' preparation, implementation and follow-up, and recognized the System's continuing validity in promoting the industrialization of developing countries. It proposed a number of improvements in the operational aspects of the System, among them government involvement at all stages of Consultations, an increase in the number of outside experts and consultants from developing countries, and an emphasis in documents on concrete problems and specific solutions.

The UNIDO secretariat submitted a compilation of the views of member States<sup>(14)</sup> presented during the Board's 1984 session, along with 18 written communications subsequently received on achievements and possible improvements to the System. Many States recognized the System as a useful framework within which specific sectoral problems of industrialization could be examined, leading to concrete results.

In his annual report,<sup>(2)</sup> the Executive Director stated that an extensive examination had generated greater understanding among member States of the System's limitations and potentialities, and that recommendations from previous Consultations had been re-examined with a view to improving implementation and follow-up.

The Executive Director, in a report on the benefits of the System,<sup>(15)</sup> listed among them the identification of problems associated with industrialization in developing countries, the monitoring of trends in world industry, and the promotion of international industrial co-operation. He concluded that the System's success could not be divorced from the world-wide industrial climate and the closely associated policy, economic and financial perspectives, and that the benefits derived from the System depended on the participants and on the use they made of it. In addition to the importance of problem identification and project implementation at the regional level, he considered it desirable to organize the Consultations on a two-tier approach—a global consultation of professionals, followed by the Board's consideration at the intergovernmental level—to meet the views often expressed in the Board in favour of a greater involvement of industry without government interference.

The Executive Director also provided information,<sup>(16)</sup> requested by the Board in 1984, in respect of the sectors proposed for inclusion in the programme of Consultations for 1986-1987 and 1988-1989, and suggested that the Board decide on the inclusion of pesticides in the programme.

Three Consultations were held in 1985: the First Consultation on the Building Materials Industry (Greece, March), organized jointly with the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements; the Second Consultation on the Capital Goods Industry with Special Emphasis on Energy-related Technology and Equipment (Sweden, June); and the Third Consultation on the Petrochemical Industry (Austria, December).

On 31 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Board took note of the report by the 1984 President. It decided that Consultations should be held in 1986-1987 on the fisheries industry, industrial manpower training, agricultural machinery (interregional consultation), non-ferrous metals, iron and steel, and pharmaceuticals.

Also in May, CPC<sup>(8)</sup> considered the Secretary-General's report on United Nations activities in manufactures (see p. 602), in which he suggested that a procedure might be established in the UNIDO secretariat for obtaining regular feedback from the System's users with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of Consultations.

Co-operation among developing countries

In 1985, UNIDO activities to promote economic and technical co-operation among developing countries focused on: organizing solidarity ministerial meetings and round-table ministerial and high-level meetings as well as workshops and training programmes; and identifying new forms and institutional machinery for industrial co-operation, such as multinational production enterprises and enterprise-to-enterprise co-operation.

At a solidarity ministerial meeting (Bujumbura, Burundi, 12-15 March), participants from developing countries and live international organizations and financial institutions agreed on co-operation on most of the 22 projects examined covering agro-industries, chemical and pharmaceutical industries and industrial promotion. Representatives of 18 developing countries considered 109 co-operation projects at a round-table ministerial meeting on co-operation among developing countries in the food-processing industries (Novi Sad, Yugoslavia, 7-11 May) and discussed a practical approach to South-South co-operation for mutual benefits. A high-level intergovernmental meeting on co-operation among developing countries in agro-industry development (Brasilia, Brazil, 18-22 November), attended by representatives of 18 developing countries, resulted in bilateral and multilateral agreements on projects and joint ventures among the participating countries, such as a feasibility study by Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay and Uruguay on the establishment of a co-operative system for the production, processing and marketing of milk and milk products.

The UNIDO programme for the promotion of joint industrial programmes and projects continued to organize study tours and exchanges of experience in industrial free-zones, food research institutes, small-scale cement technologies, solar energy, and light industries. Missions were sent to Nigeria, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe to promote a joint UNIDO/Economic Commission for Africa programme for co-operation among African countries in industrial manpower development.

A technical and economic co-operation programme between China and Nicaragua on mini-plants for the production of basic nitrogen fertilizers was initiated in 1985 for implementation in 1986. An agreement was concluded in December between UNIDO and the National Institute of Industrial Technology of Argentina on establishing a working arrangement for a systematic programme of action to promote TCDC in specific areas of industrial technology.

Expert group meetings were held on enterprise-to-enterprise co-operation within the Latin American plastics industry (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 4-6 November), the establishment of multinational production enterprises in developing countries (Vienna, 25-28 November) and the preparation of guidelines for the establishment of mini-plants on iron and steel with special emphasis on Africa (Vienna, 2-5 December).

On 31 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Industrial Development Board welcomed the call by the Fourth General Conference for strengthening economic co-operation among developing countries,<sup>(17)</sup> and agreed that adequate resources should be provided to UNIDO to that end.

International trade aspects

In April 1985, the UNIDO secretariat submitted to the Board a report,<sup>(18)</sup> prepared in co-ordination with the UNCTAD secretariat, on trade and trade-related aspects of industrial collaboration arrangements at the enterprise level. Based on the conclusions of the Ad Hoc UNCTAD/UNIDO Group of Experts, which had examined the topic in 1979<sup>(19)</sup> and 1981<sup>(20)</sup> the report provided a general descriptive overview of the main trends, the characteristics, modalities and factors influencing the development of collaboration arrangements. It stated that Governments might consider new modes of co-ordination at the macro-economic level, for example through framework agreements, with a view to creating a climate of trust at an intergovernmental level, further laying down conditions for safeguarding the mutual interests of the partners, and facilitating industrial adjustments in the productive systems of the partners. Industrial collaboration, still in its early phase of development, would benefit from flexible, forward-looking, balanced and stable frameworks at the intergovernmental level, the report concluded.

Industrial development of LDCs

Against the background of declining growth rates in the industrial sector of LDCs, UNIDO continued in 1985 to support industrial development projects, giving special attention to rehabilitating factories and increasing industrial efficiency.

Total funding for technical assistance to LDCs reached $17.6 million in 1985-an increase of $3.6 million or 25.8 per cent over that in 1984.

In Nepal, assistance was provided for the manufacturing of ayurvedic drugs from medicinal plants; in Cape Verde, a laboratory was established to improve the quality of pharmaceutical products; and in Lesotho, engineering services were provided for manufacturing agricultural equipment.

The UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs (sixth session, Geneva, 30 September-12 October) carried out a mid-term global review of the progress in implementing the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for LDCs (see p. 434). As part of SNPA monitoring, UNIDO completed industrial development reviews for Bangladesh, Mali, the Sudan and the United Republic of Tanzania; and as part of its advisory services, it organized two investment promotion meetings—one at Khartoum, Sudan (4-8 March), for East African countries, and the other at Libreville, Gabon (5-8 December), for Central African countries.

On 31 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Industrial Development Board expressed concern at the deteriorating socio-economic situation of LDCs, including African countries affected additionally by drought and desertification, and underlined the need for urgent attention and large-scale support by the international community. The Board requested UNIDO to accelerate SNPA implementation in the field of industrialization, and reiterated its call for a strengthening of the LDC section within UNIDO.

On 17 December, the General Assembly stressed that LDCs should continue to give priority in their industrial development to agro-industry and industries based on local raw materials, favour the development of national productive enterprises, and improve the incentives for entrepreneurship and support for local initiatives according to national policies (resolution 40/205). It called on donor countries, among other things, to combine technical and management training with financial assistance and to assist in developing local sources of raw materials to make local industry less vulnerable to balance-of-payments problems.

Redeployment of industrial production to developing countries

The Executive Director, in an April 1985 report<sup>(21)</sup> to the Industrial Development Board, reviewed the concepts and issues relating to industrial restructuring and redeployment in the light of the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO and the latest UNIDO studies on the topic. He observed that developing countries were under pressure to align their industrial structures with an unclear, unpredictable international restructuring pattern and were confronted with several internal dilemmas, such as the problem of reconciling the need for drastic austerity measures in the economy with the need for adjusting the structure of the manufacturing sector. The creation of a dynamic industry presupposed that both Governments and companies had a long-term vision of development prospects and a built-in capability to respond to changing parameters and to seize opportunities. Restructuring and redeployment had to be seen in the context of the efforts by each developing country to pursue industrial development in accordance with its national objectives. In supporting those endeavours—through its programmes of technical assistance, investment promotion, Consultations and others—the UNIDO secretariat intended to direct its studies to identify and help interpret the pertinent trends and issues as a service to policy-makers.

On 31 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Industrial Development Board stressed again the importance of redeploying industry from industrialized to developing countries on the principle of dynamic comparative advantage and in accordance with the national policies and priorities of member States.

Industrial financing

In 1985, UNIDO, and its Investment Co-operative Programme in particular, maintained close links with national, regional and international financing and promotion institutions, while providing advisory services on sources and terms of industrial financing.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, which in 1984<sup>(22)</sup> had referred to its 1985 session consideration of a draft resolution on mobilization of financial resources for industrial development, decided, on 17 December 1985, to defer consideration of the draft until its 1986 session (decision 40/434).

The draft originated in the Fourth General Conference of UNIDO in 1984, where no consensus agreement had been reached. It was subsequently forwarded to the Secretary-General with a request that the Assembly consider it in 1984.<sup>(23)</sup> By the draft, the Conference, in agreed provisions, would have recommended that consideration be given to providing adequate financial support for the developing countries to meet their industrialization needs and that developed countries promote increased investment in the developing countries.

Investment promotion

The network of UNIDO Investment Promotion Services helped facilitate the flow of external financial, technological and managerial resources to developing countries. In addition to the Services currently operating in Cologne, New York, Paris, Tokyo, Vienna, Warsaw and Zurich, UNIDO signed an agreement with Italy in August 1985 to establish a Service at Milan, and pursued discussions on opening a Service at Seoul, Republic of Korea. During the year, the Zurich and Paris Services were extended for five and three years respectively, and an agreement was also signed to extend the Vienna Service until 31 January 1987.

In 1985, the Services launched 93 industrial projects in developing countries for a total investment value of some $628 million (as against 47 projects valued at $165 million in 1984); nine projects totalled $491 million, while the remaining projects averaged between $1 million and $2 million each.

Forty-nine country presentation meetings on investment opportunities were organized for Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, the Bahamas, Burma, Cameroon, China, Colombia, the (Congo, Cuba, Dominica, Ecuador, Grenada, India, Mexico, Panama, Sri Lanka, Saint Christopher and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, the Sudan, Tunisia, the United Republic of Tanzania and Zimbabwe.

Five investment promotion meetings (investors' forums), with some 460 potential partners from their countries participating, were held in the Sudan (Khartoum, 4-8 March), Colombia (Cali, 28-31 October), Ecuador (Quito, 18-21 November), China (Xiamen, 25-29 November) and Gabon (Libreville, 5-8 December). Some 300 industrial investment projects were presented at the Khartoum meeting for Djibouti, Egypt, Somalia, the Sudan, Uganda and Yemen, and resulted in 45 letters of intent. At Cali, the Investment Forum on Agro-Industry and Fishery considered 200 projects. The Investors' Forum for Ecuador considered 60 project proposals and concluded with at least 10 letters of intent. At Xiamen, discussion of 84 project proposals resulted in the signing of 50 letters of intent and conclusion of eight contractual joint venture agreements. The Industrial Forum for Central Africa at Libreville considered 141 projects from Burundi, Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Chad, the Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, and Sao Tome and Principe and concluded with 20 letters of intent.

Industrial management

In 1985, expenditures for technical co-operation activities in factory establishment and management totalled $3.9 million, with 93 per cent coming from UNDP; increased disbursement was noted in subcontracting and equipment components, mainly in computers and energy. Fifty projects were implemented or under implementation during the year.

In response to the continued need for improved management skills, a greater number of seminars—including one each on energy-related matters, industrial consultancy and general management—were carried out, and efforts continued to involve universities in support activities to industry.

Interest continued to grow in using micro-computers as a management tool for improved industrial productivity. In Cuba, the assistance of four experts was provided to introduce computer-aided management tools, including production and quality-control programmes, in a pharmaceutical plant; the project was expected to serve as a case-study for similar problems elsewhere. Based on the model of a Barbados project completed early in 1985, increased activities were expected in the Caribbean region to improve management through computer support.

A regional network for industrial consultancy was being prepared for Asia, and envisaged for Africa. In Egypt, short-term consultancy services focused on the manufacture of electric motors, dry batteries and chemicals, particularly pesticides. In Pakistan, ad hoc consultancy services were provided in finance, marketing, chemicals and mechanical engineering. Under a number of projects aimed at improving efficiency of public sector and other industries, assistance was provided to government ministries in Ethiopia, Malawi, Somalia and the Sudan. In China, a consultancy seminar was held with the help of a UNIDF special-purpose contribution provided by Spain. A seminar, organized jointly by UNIDO and UNDP for the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, dealt with project formulation and management. A large-scale project was begun in India to strengthen a cement research institute and improve the productivity and technological level of cement industry units.

In Europe, a regional co-operation project in energy conservation was launched in July; the first round of discussion on conservation in the most energy-intensive industries of the participating countries was held in Romania (Bucharest, 14-18 October), Czechoslovakia (Pilsen, 10-15 November; Prague, 18-22 November), Hungary (Budapest, 25-30 November) and Yugoslavia (Novi Sad, 9-13 December). Projects in the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Sri Lanka concentrated on strengthening institutions for energy management and conservation; services included energy auditing of industrial enterprises, organization of seminars and workshops and preparation of manuals on energy conservation. Under a UNIDF special-purpose contribution provided by Australia, 11 specialists from nine Asian countries and 16 Australian experts took part in a regional energy management course at Melbourne in October.

Industrial planning

Industrial planning expenditures in 1985 amounted to $7.3 million, with about 80 per cent coming from UNDP. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 63 per cent, the Americas 21 per cent, and Asia and the Pacific 12 per cent. Ninety-one projects were implemented or being implemented.

Owing to economic crisis and debt burden, a large number of developing countries were paying increased attention to medium- and long-term industrial planning. Planning activities included: an assessment of industrial development at sectoral and subsectoral levels; the identification of subsectors with development potential and comparative advantage; formulation of medium- and long-range master plans; restructuring; formulation of policies and policy measures; strengthening of technical and institutional capabilities for planning; and promotion of multinational and regional co-operation.

UNIDO assisted a number of countries in policy formulation. In Cameroon, it assisted in promoting an integrated strategy on optimum use of the country's agricultural potential and natural resources (wood, petroleum, aluminium and iron ores), with a view to contributing to the sixth 5-year plan (1986-1991). Under an inter-agency agreement with the United Nations Department of Technical Co-operation for Development, UNIDO assisted Afghanistan in implementing its annual industrial plans and in formulating its new 5-year plan. A project was completed in 1985 in assisting the Malaysian Industrial Development Authority in preparing an industrial master plan for 1986-1995. UNIDO assisted in preparing the industrial portion of the 1987-1991 national economic development plan of Honduras, and contributed to Venezuela's policy formulation through the recruitment of national and international experts.

In an innovative project that became operational in 1985, the International Institute of Applied Systems Analysis (Laxenburg, Austria), contracted by UNIDO, provided India with the know-how for developing a nation-wide environmental monitoring system; in an additional case-study, industrial pollution was to be investigated.

Developing countries receiving UNIDO assistance in 1985 in establishing or strengthening industrial planning institutions included Sierra Leone, where an industrial development department was set up within the Ministry of Trade and Industry. In Algeria, assistance was given to the Institut supérieur de gestion et de planification in the regulation and management of the industrial public sector. In Ghana, a new planning structure was being considered for the Ministry of Science and Technology.

Within the IDDA framework, national workshops on industrial strategy were held in Uganda (Jinja, 25-30 March), Mauritania (Nouakchott, 21-25 April), Benin (Cotonou, 24-29 June), Burkina Faso (Ouagadougou, 14-18 October), the Niger (Niamey, 26 October-2 November) and Sierra Leone (Freetown, 3-6 December). Further assistance at the subregional level included the strengthening of the industrial planning systems of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries and the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States.

Industrial studies

As in the past, UNIDO continued to carry out global and conceptual, regional and country, sectoral and statistical studies, with a view to assisting in policy-making and in providing the framework for its technical assistance programme.

It prepared short-term forecasts providing industrial policy-makers with a coherent picture of global industrial development on the basis of anticipated levels of demand, changes in technology and competitiveness, and price trends. The UNIDO economic model system, expanded to include a wide range of recent information sources, was used to estimate the level of economic activity in 150 individual countries and to spell out implications for development potential in various industrial sectors, with the expectation that placing national estimates in a global context would contribute to consistent policy-making. A Trade Impact Analysis Model, completed in 1985, described the impact of changed bilateral export structure on production and imports and analysed the potential for intensifying South-South trade. In addition, studies were completed on the mineral trade potential of African LDCs, African external debt problems, and the interaction between agriculture and industry in the development process. The quarterly journal Industry and Development continued to be issued and Industry and Development. Global Report 1985 was published.

Studies at the regional and country levels focused on economic analyses and data on national and international industrial structures, resources, industrialization prospects and policy options. Research support was given to the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States and to the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. Studies were prepared on prospects for co-operation in the textile industry in the Association of South-East Asian Nations, trends in the automotive industry and their implications for Latin America, and prospects and new measures for small-scale industry development in Asia and the Pacific. A review of industrial policy pursued in East Asia was initiated.

Among sectoral studies issued or completed were a typology (first phase) of the fisheries industrial systems of 64 developing countries, world trade of oilseeds and related products, and prospects for petrochemical industries in developing countries; a study of regional co-operation among developing countries in the production of tanning chemicals was started. Research continued on: a decision-making model for the production of pharmaceuticals by organic chemical synthesis; opportunities for mini-fertilizer plants; current conditions of the iron and steel industry in developing countries; and energy use and conservation in selected industrial sectors.

The development of industrial statistics continued to be emphasized, with efforts to enhance international comparability and consistency, data collection for African countries, and data dissemination. Statistical activities financed under the regular budget were complemented by the collection of field statistics funded by a grant from the Ministry of International Trade and Industry of Japan.

Industrial technology

The thrust of the technology programme remained twofold: to assist developing countries in the selection, acquisition and development of technology, and to strengthen their technological capabilities to respond better to changes in the world technological scene (see also Chapter XII of this section). Activities dealt with policies, technological advances, selection and acquisition, and technology for rural and small industries.

In 1985, a regional micro-electronics network was established for Latin America and the Caribbean. An international roster of scientists and technologists in micro-electronics, genetic engineering, biotechnology and renewable energy was completed. The tenth meeting of heads of technology transfer registries (Cairo, Egypt, 8-13 December) reviewed trends in technology transfer flows and contractual arrangements, and the development of a computerized registry information system.

In a March report<sup>(24)</sup> to the Industrial Development Board, the UNIDO Executive Director analysed the 1984 secretariat activities in technology development and transfer-including the role of the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (see below)-against the general background of industrial technology for the 1980s.

On 31 May,<sup>(4)</sup> the Board took note of the report, and requested the Executive Director to present a report on the development and transfer of technology to the next session of the relevant UNIDO organs.

Industrial and Technological Information Bank

During 1985, increased interaction with information sources and users and the use of networking for faster information flow marked the activities of the Industrial and Technological Information Bank (INTIB).

An advisory group of INTIB users, meeting at Vienna (23-27 September), made the first review since 1978 of the work of INTIB, and noted with satisfaction the result of a survey among users in developing countries that INTIB was among the first 10 information services found useful. At the same time, the group emphasized the need for expansion and reorientation of activities and for a medium-term programme for INTIB to keep up with developments in information technology.

The importance of the links between INTIB and external data bases in the region served by the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) was discussed at an ESCAP/FAO/UNIDO Regional Consultation on Computerized Fertilizer Information Handling (Bangkok, Thailand, 18-22 November). A project was implemented, within the framework of IDDA, to provide 10 African countries (Algeria, Cameroon, Egypt, Ivory Coast, Kenya, Nigeria, Senegal, United Republic of Tanzania, Tunisia, Zambia) with access to external sources of information through INTIB and to promote the exchange of industrial information among themselves.

As in previous years, INTIB's Industrial Inquiry Service received about 1,300 inquiries from industrial enterprises, information centres, international organizations, research and development institutions, engineering and consulting firms, government officials, universities, development banks and others. They dealt with chemicals and pharmaceuticals, agro-industries, food processing, capital goods, fabricated metal products, non-metallic minerals, textile and leather goods, pulp and paper and others. The preparation of technological information profiles for mini-cement and mini-lime plants was initiated.

Work continued on a consolidated edition of the Industrial Development Abstracts data base, which contained more than 15,000 entries. Four volumes of the Abstracts were issued in 1985.

Development of specific industries

During 1985, many of UNIDO's technical co-operation activities related to specific industrial sectors or industries. The major sectors were agro-industries, and chemical, engineering, and metallurgical and mineral industries.

Agro-industries

Technical co-operation expenditures under the heading agro-industries amounted to $9.9 million in 1985, with some 45 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of the total, Africa accounted for 23 per cent; the Americas, 30; the Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 4; Asia and the Pacific, 35; Europe, 2; and interregional/global, 6. A total of 172 projects were implemented or being implemented, 14 of them greater than $1 million in value, 53 greater than $150,000 and 105 below $150,000.

Projects covered the subsectors in wood products and wood processing, textile production and garment making, food processing and packaging, leather and leather products, and rubber products.

Clothing and textile industry

Technical assistance in developing the textile and garment production industry continued to be provided in Bangladesh, Egypt, Sri Lanka and the Syrian Arab Republic. At the plant level, assistance continued to be provided in India and the Republic of Korea; projects were completed in Bangladesh, Egypt, Montserrat and Viet Nam. In the United Republic of Tanzania, a three-month training programme in garment manufacture was held for women from the Pan African Congress of Azania.

Preparatory missions to formulate large-scale textile projects were carried out to establish a garment technology centre in China, to strengthen the College of Textile Technology in Bangladesh, and to assist the Indian Jute Industrial Research Associations. Under a project financed by the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women, assistance was given to the Kurasimi Women Tailoring Society in the United Republic of Tanzania in selecting and ordering garment manufacturing equipment.

Fisheries industry

Arrangements were completed with FAO in 1985 to sponsor the first Consultation on the fisheries industry to be held at Gdansk, Poland, in 1987. Organization was begun of a regional preparatory meeting on the fisheries industry in Latin America, to be hosted by Peru and co-sponsored by the Latin American Fishery Development Organization. Preparations also began for a regional meeting for Africa, to be held at Dakar, Senegal, in 1986.

Food industry

During 1985, UNIDO concentrated on implementing the recommendations(1) of the Second (1984) Consultation on the Food-Processing Industry with Special Emphasis on Vegetable Oils and Fats,<sup>(2)</sup> relating to an integrated approach to food processing and the role of co-operatives and small- and medium-scale enterprises in the food-processing industry. A study was undertaken on measures to stimulate co-operation among co-operatives and food-processing industries, in which context a project was initiated among the counterparts in Bulgaria and in selected African countries.

In Peru, UNIDO continued to co-operate with the United Nations Fund for Drug Abuse Control in developing the food industry in support of drug plantation eradication efforts. Installation was completed in Bangladesh of a $3.8 million rice bran oil-extraction plant with a 40 tons/day capacity, financed by the United Nations Capital Development Fund and UNIDF. Consultancy or expert services were provided for the construction, test runs and performance guarantee operations of the Grand Harbour Grain Terminal in Malta, and to the Centre de recherche agro-alimentaire at Lubumbashi, Zaire, where economic evaluations were carried out for various food industries. Among other projects under implementation were those dealing with an industrial bakery in Mozambique, a soya milk-processing plant in El Salvador, demonstration plants for the processing of cassava, onions and tomatoes in the Niger and for cassava processing in Sierra Leone, and processing of sugar-cane by-products in Cuba. UNIDO also analysed the potential of vegetable protein production in developing countries for human consumption, and examined, in co-operation with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and UNCTAD, the impact of tariff and non-tariff barriers on the development of the vegetable oils and fats industry.

Leather industry

As a follow-up to the recommendations<sup>(*)</sup> made in 1984 by the Third Consultation on the Leather and Leather Products Industry,<sup>(3)</sup> a model study was prepared in Africa for the manufacture of footwear components, subsequently examined by the UNIDO Leather and Leather Products Industry Panel (eighth session, Vienna, 20-22 November), and was to constitute the background material for an African regional consultation in 1986. Several other regional studies, begun during the year on regional co-operation in tanning chemicals and footwear auxiliaries, were also expected to be presented to expert group meetings envisaged in the African, Asian and Latin American regions.

Technical co-operation in leather and leather products continued in Brazil, China, Costa Rica, India, Kenya, Pakistan, the Philippines and the United Republic of Tanzania. A quality control laboratory project in Kenya and a tannery effluent treatment project in Brazil entered the second phase of implementation. Preparatory missions were conducted in Burma, Indonesia and Madagascar to formulate large-scale leather products development projects.

Packaging industry

Major projects in Brazil, Cuba, Jamaica and Turkey provided technical assistance in the manufacture and conversion of packaging materials, and in analysis of package performance with regard to contents, markets and distribution systems. Projects were concluded in Jamaica, on infrastructure improvement, and in Mali, on fruit-juice packaging. Under a project sponsored by UNIDO and the Arab Industrial Development Organization for establishing an Arab regional packaging centre, seminars and training courses took place at Dubai (United Arab Emirates), Casablanca (Morocco) and Tunis (Tunisia), and a study tour was organized for participants from Arab countries to a packaging exhibition, advanced packaging industries and research centres in Scandinavia. In addition, UNIDO organized a seminar-cum-study tour of packaging managers from Arab countries to Argentina and Brazil.

Wood-using industry

Following up on the 1983 recommendations of the First Consultation on the Wood and Wood Products Industry,<sup>(*)</sup> activities focused on preparation of training manuals, development of an international strength grouping system for tropical and other timber from developing countries, and promotion of education and training in wood technology and wood-using construction. A second training workshop on production management in public sector mechanical wood-processing industries was held in Yugoslavia, and a training course on the use of coconut wood in construction was held in the Philippines for 16 participants from nine developing countries. Studies on timber bridge construction, computer-aided design and promotion needs in timber construction were submitted as background documents to an expert group meeting on the use of timber in construction (Vienna, 2-6 December!)

Among the 1985 projects., prefabricated wooden bridges were built in Dominica and Ecuador and several bridge projects were begun in Bhutan, Bolivia, Chile, Honduras, Nicaragua and Peru. A congress of furniture manufacturers' federations was established in Latin America. In Asia, a preparatory mission initiated assistance to Viet Nam in the production of textile loom shuttles, while assistance continued to a pilot furniture plant in the Lao People's Democratic Republic.

Chemical industries;

In 1985, technical co-operation expenditures for chemical industries amounted to $24.5 million, with about 53 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 47.5 per cent; the Americas, 6; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 1; Asia and the Pacific, 36; Europe, 4; and interregional/global, 5.5. A total of 347 projects were implemented or under implementation, 32 of them greater than $1 million in value, 105 less than that but greater than $150,000, and 210 less than $150,000.

Activities concentrated on live broad subsectors: building materials and construction industries; petrochemical industries; fertilizers, pesticides and organic chemicals industries; pharmaceutical industries; and basic chemicals, environment, and pulp and paper.

UNIDO participated in organizing the First World Congress on Non-Metallic Minerals (Belgrade, Yugoslavia, 15-19 April). A techno-economic study was completed in the Syrian Arab Republic on establishing a plant for the production of alkyd resins, polyvinyl acetate dispersion paints and adhesives, with up to 50 per cent of domestic raw material. In China, a dyestuffs research and demonstration project continued; two experts were dispatched to examine technology available for recycling plastic waste. A pilot plant for the production of liquid natural rubber became operational in the Ivory Coast.

Research and demonstration programmes received support in developing alternative energy sources, such as those based on coal and agricultural residues. Emphasis was placed on the development of biofuels technology, including ethanol production from lignocellulosic materials in Brazil, India and Romania, and on thermochemical conversion technologies for the production of solid and gaseous fuels from wood waste and agricultural residues in Ethiopia, Paraguay, the Philippines, Somalia, the Sudan, Uruguay and Zimbabwe.

In the Philippines, a project on sucro-based chemicals was approaching a successful conclusion. In the area of basic chemicals, UNIDO activities promoting the manufacture of salt in developing countries expanded further. Activities in the pulp and paper sector concentrated on the use of non-wood fibre material; a technical workshop and a seminar were held at Bangkok on the utilization of waste paper in pulp and paper-making and on comparative pulping processes. Environment-related activities included transfer of low and non-waste technology to developing countries, recycling of waste materials, industrial water development, monitoring and abatement of industrial pollution, management of hazardous wastes and materials, and the elaboration of industrial safety procedures.

Building materials industry

Activities in the building materials and construction industries focused on accelerating the industrial use of non-metallic mineral resources for manufacturing low-cost building materials for housing, as well as their use in the glass, ceramics and chemical industries.

The promotion of brickmaking continued to be significant, especially in Africa; experience gained in soil stabilization during a brick-industry project, completed in the Niger in 1985, was to be applied also in field activities, initiated in late 1985, in Chad, Madagascar and the United Republic of Tanzania. A project on the development of low-cost building materials in Indonesia resulted in several model production units, which were currently demonstrating the production of clay roofing tiles and related products.

A project to assist the marble and stone industry in Ethiopia was completed in 1985; three marble factories in Addis Ababa were rehabilitated and production restarted. Assistance was provided for the modernization of the lime and gypsum industries in Cuba and for the strengthening of a cement development centre in China.

The First Consultation on the Building Materials Industry (Athens, Greece, 26-30 March),<sup>(5)</sup> sponsored by UNIDO and the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, brought together 181 participants—of whom 25 per cent were from industry and 57 per cent from specialized government and non-governmental agencies—to discuss measures for increased production of building materials in developing countries. The Consultation recommended that UNIDO should help developing countries to improve their planning systems for the building materials industry; provide up-to-date information on the technological options for building material production; promote research in domestic raw-material resources and their suitability for the production of building materials; and strengthen training in appraisal of offers, selection of technologies and negotiating skills. It further recommended that international and national banking institutions give priority to the building materials sector commensurate with its importance and that developing countries establish a framework of regulations based on those existing in national, regional or international organizations.

Fertilizer industry

The UNIDO programme in the fertilizer and pesticides sector promoted the use of indigenous materials, such as fertilizer production from low-grade phosphate rock in India and bentonite as a soil conditioner in Ethiopia.

Activities carried out in implementation of the 1984 recommendations of the Fourth Consultation on the Fertilizer Industry<sup>(6)</sup> included preparation of guidelines for fertilizer project management and capital cost control, and the approval of a project for pre-feasibility studies on establishing mini-fertilizer plants in four African countries. An examination began of successful joint venture arrangements between developing countries in the fertilizer sector, with the aim of identifying the requirements related to markets, raw materials, production, technology options and skilled and managerial expertise.

Petrochemical industry

During 1985, UNIDO activities in the petrochemical sector focused on the development of polymer industries-plastics, synthetic fibres and rubbers. The use of plastics in agriculture and water management was encouraged in an effort to assist developing countries to become self-sufficient in food production; a regional project was established to assist African countries in that regard and a workshop on plastics in agriculture was held in Egypt. Projects on major petrochemical complex optimization continued in Egypt and India. Solutions were sought to problems of plant management and operation, energy and raw material utilization, and environment and quality control. Special attention was given to the further development of national plastics centres in Bangladesh and India.

An International Conference on Man-made Fibres (Beijing, 18-22 November), attended by 320 participants from 22 countries, provided China with an opportunity to demonstrate to developing country participants the outcome of its joint efforts with UNIDO and UNDP in establishing a synthetic fibre research centre. Annual training courses—on plastics technology, mould making and synthetic fibres—were held at Vienna in co-operation with the Government of Austria.

The Third Consultation on the Petrochemical Industry (Vienna, 2-6 December) adopted conclusions and recommendations emphasizing the importance of continued efforts to update the UNIDO petrochemical data base and the need for a detailed analysis of the current status and future prospects of polymer industries in developing countries with emphasis on the application of plastics in agriculture.

Pesticides industry

In the pesticides sector, activities included the strengthening of facilities for toxicological evaluation in the Republic of Korea, research and development in new pesticides in China, the formulation of pesticides in India, and the establishment of facilities for the manufacture of intermediate ingredients in Egypt and of solid formulation in Cuba.

Pharmaceutical industry

UNIDO activities to increase pharmaceutical production in developing countries focused on the use of indigenous medicinal plants and petrochemical by-products, the adaptation of technology for local production, production of biologicals to enhance preventive measures and the strengthening of national research and development efforts.

Projects for the industrial utilization of medicinal and aromatic plants continued in Afghanistan, Mali, Nepal, Thailand and Turkey, while a similar project was completed in Cameroon. In Nepal, implementation began of a second UNDP-financed project for the commercial processing of essential oils and herbal preparations; similar pilot plants had been installed in Burkina Faso, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania. A project was initiated in Madagascar for the processing of herbal medicines and preparatory assistance was given to Viet Nam for local medicine production. In Cuba, a multi-purpose plant for the bulk production of essential synthetic drugs was inaugurated in March. Similar projects of an exploratory nature were initiated in Zimbabwe, the Arab region and Morocco.

In Guinea, a pilot plant was being established under IDDA auspices for the production of oral rehydration salts and intravenous fluids, and projects for the local production of those salts in several African countries were under preparation.

The Ad Hoc Panel of Experts on Contractual Arrangements in the Pharmaceutical Industry (third meeting, Vienna, 22-24 April) finalized documents on contractual arrangements relating to the production of bulk drugs and intermediates, licensing arrangements relating to the formulation of pharmaceutical dosage forms, and the transfer of technology. The Panel also considered outlines for further documentation related to the establishment of turnkey plants and arrangements for technical assistance in the formulation of pharmaceuticals. The Advisory Panel on Preventive Medicine (third meeting, Bilthoven, Netherlands, 6 and 7 June) advised UNIDO on its programme on the industrial production of biologicals and discussed a model programme for vaccine production in developing countries. Within the framework of IDDA, a pilot demonstration plant for vaccine production for Africa was established at Garoua, Cameroon. Projects on human plasma fractions and sterile enzyme preparations from animal sources were begun in Mongolia. Preparations were being made for the third Consultation on the pharmaceutical industry to be held in 1987.

The directory of sources of supply for pharmaceuticals, chemicals and their intermediates was expanded from an initial list of 26 essential bulk drugs to 100 included in the World Health Organization model list of essential drugs.

Engineering industries

In 1985, technical co-operation expenditures in engineering industries amounted to $13.9 million, of which some 90 per cent was financed by UNDP. Africa accounted for 19 per cent; the Americas, 9; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 4; Asia and the Pacific, 63; Europe, 4; and interregional/global,

1. A total of 183 projects were implemented or under implementation, of which 29 were greater than $1 million in value, 63 greater than $150,000 but less than $1 million, and 91 less than $150,000.

Activities focused on industrial technology and production, energy-related technology, and development of human resources. The main subsectors receiving assistance were agricultural machinery and implements, electronic and electrical machinery and products, computer equipment, metalworking and machine tools, land-based or water-borne transport equipment, and energy-related equipment.

Agricultural machinery

Activities related to agricultural machinery included two expert group meetings—one on guidelines for the import, assembly and manufacture of agricultural machinery and training (Vienna, 9-12 September) and the other on integrated training programmes in agricultural machinery industries (Rosario, Argentina, 9-14 December). Efforts were made to upgrade physical facilities, technical skills and the work programme in agricultural machinery production, and UNIDO assisted Bangladesh, China, Hungary, India and Poland in strengthening their research and design capabilities. A UNDP-financed project provided assistance to the China Agricultural Machinery Testing Centre.

Within the IDDA programme framework, assistance was given to integrate agricultural machinery with the engineering and capital goods sector, promote rehabilitation and upgrading of multi-purpose plants, develop an engineering design and adaptation capability, apply research and development to manufacturing, develop subregional and regional programme networks, and promote economic and technical co-operation among developing countries.

Haiti, Lesotho, Senegal and Togo received assistance in agricultural machinery production. A project continued in India on the development of microprocessor-based agro- and dairy instruments. In Viet Nam, large-scale projects were being implemented to rehabilitate sugar mills, including local manufacture of spare parts, and to establish a maintenance and repair centre for rice mills.

Preparations were made, in co-operation with FAO, for the third Consultation on the agricultural machinery industry in 1986.

Electronic and electrical machinery

Technical assistance in electronic and electrical machinery concentrated on design and development, testing and quality control, maintenance and repair and extension service to industry. Assistance was given to, among other things: the establishment of an instrument design and development centre and an electronics service and training centre in India, an electrical research facility in Iraq, and a maintenance and repair centre in Viet Nam; expansion of dry batteries production in Egypt; and increasing the efficiency of a radio factory in Rwanda. Other 1985 projects included the manufacture of quality-controlled consumer electronic products in China.

Computer equipment

In Bulgaria, development continued of programmable industrial robots, simple robots for training and software tools for industrial control. Progress was made in a project on the development and application of microcomputer systems in China, and in the design of a process control microcomputer system to improve the efficiency of the Sichuan Medical Factory and control the quality of tetracycline produced there. Assistance was given to establishing a pilot plant in integrated circuits production in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

Metalworking and machine tools

A significant part of the activities carried out in 1985 in the metalworking and machine tools sector involved the batch production of simple metal products with emphasis on rural industrialization. Assistance continued to be provided to small-scale local industries in Cameroon and Madagascar in maintenance and repair services, and progress was achieved in Mali in the manufacture of manual water pumps. A project to develop tool and die production in Trinidad and Tobago was extended for a year, training continued in Tunisia in mould fabrication for the production of plastic articles, and prototypes of incremental encoders were developed to meet a request from Bulgaria for a new measuring technique for machine-tool motions and positions that would save raw materials.

A project began in India to develop micro-precision engineering techniques. A large-scale project to develop numerically controlled machine tools became operational in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, and 28 of its nationals received training in the German Democratic Republic and Poland. Facilities were improved at the National Institute of Design at Ahmedabad, India, where a programme was started for training fellows from Bangladesh, Indonesia, Pakistan, the Philippines and Sri Lanka. A UNIDF-financed project on the establishment of a pump repair section within an existing mechanical workshop and foundry was completed at Mogadiscio, Somalia; a project on maintenance and repair at Conakry, Guinea, was upgraded; and a training centre for the maintenance and repair of bio-medical equipment was established in Hungary.

Transport equipment

Among technical assistance provided in transport engineering and maintenance, the preparatory assistance phase was initiated for a testing and service centre for the automotive ancillary and allied industries in Indonesia. A number of large-scale projects in India dealt with automotive emission control, a fatigue-testing laboratory and data acquisition on road loads. In Hong Kong, a project to control motor vehicle emissions made progress. Expertise and test equipment were provided to the Pakistan Automobile Corporation to assist local manufacturers in producing automobile parts formerly imported. A network of motor vehicle service stations was established in Bhutan.

UNIDO initiated technical discussions with the Union of African Railways and the Railway Union of Arab States as well as with the Association of Engineering Companies in Spain, Belgium and Norway with a view to developing co-operative programmes. ECOWAS received assistance in railway wagons and equipment manufacturing.

UNIDO activities with respect to water-borne transport included: advising Governments on development programmes for their shipbuilding industries; giving technical and managerial advice to shipyards and port authorities; developing new technologies in ship and boat production; and undertaking techno-economic studies or evaluation of existing maritime facilities and of prospects for their rehabilitation or expansion.

A regional expert group meeting in Mauritius (Curepipe, 9-14 December) made recommendations regarding the development of small-scale boat building and repair in East African countries. An interregional project on marine technology for shipbuilding and offshore technology was initiated by UNIDO and Norway.

Within the framework of the United Nations Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988), UNIDO activities emphasized promotion of African industry in transport and communication equipment, upgrading and rehabilitation of existing industries, production of spare parts, maintenance and repair, training and regional co-operation.

Energy-related equipment

Energy-related activities covered energy production equipment, process engineering, energy conservation and hardware improvement for efficient utilization of non-conventional sources of energy. Assistance was given to Chile in applying new computer techniques and strategies to the national electric power system, to Egypt in establishing an industrial energy conservation centre, and to India in developing internal combustion engines using methanol as fuel. A study tour by representatives of the University of Madagascar aimed at obtaining current information on the use of renewable energy sources. In Jordan, progress continued on the design, development and testing of solar water heaters for industrial application. A project in the Asia and Pacific region provided training in the manufacture and use of solar collectors.

Metallurgical and mineral industries

In 1985, technical co-operation expenditures in the metallurgical industries sector amounted to $7.2 million, with some 78 per cent financed from UNDP resources. Of that amount, Africa accounted for 27 per cent; the Americas, 25; Arab States (excluding those in Africa), 2; Asia and the Pacific, 40.5; and Europe, 5.5. A total of 153 projects were implemented or under implementation, 13 of them greater than $1 million in value, 47 less than that but greater than $150,000, and 93 less than $150,000.

Activities continued in extractive, process and physical metallurgy covering the production of light and heavy non-ferrous metals (aluminium, titanium, copper), the iron and steel industry (conventional routes and direct reduction of iron ores), ferrous and non-ferrous foundries and other metal transformation and forming processes (rolling, forging, heat treatment, extruding, welding), and the strengthening and establishment of laboratories, institutes or centres for metallurgical research and development.

Emphasis was given to the planning, establishment or expansion and improved operations of metallurgical plants. The first expert group meeting on computerized maintenance systems in metallurgy was held in Czechoslovakia (Prague, 28 January-1 February). Metallurgical investigations and testing to establish the characteristics of raw materials were being implemented in Chile, China, Cuba, India, Iran, Jamaica, Mozambique, Sri Lanka and Viet Nam.

UNIDO continued to promote the transfer of sophisticated technology, such as the production of de-ironed refractory-grade bauxite in Greece, the bacterial leaching of copper ores in Chile and Peru, the production of super purity aluminium in India, the production of special alloy steels and processing of silica raw materials in Pakistan, the manufacture of magnetic materials for the electronic industry in Viet Nam, surface finishing and anti-corrosion treatment of metals in the Republic of Korea, testing of alternative raw materials for aluminium production in Iran, and the introduction of special heat treatment techniques in China. A project on dynamic testing of coal-mining machines was elaborated in the Republic of Korea.

Iron and steel industry

During 1985, preparations were made for the fourth Consultation on the iron and steel industry to be held in 1986. Studies were completed on the crisis in the iron and steel industry and its impact on developing countries, and on the possibilities of integrated development of the industry with other economic sectors in Latin America and in eastern and southern Africa. An ad hoc expert group (Vienna, 16-18 October) considered the question of integrated development between the iron and steel and capital goods sectors.

Follow-up actions to the 1982 recommendations of the Third Consultation<sup>(7)</sup> focused on mini-steel plant technology, personnel training and financing infrastructure. In a survey on mini-steel technology, data collected for 74 such plants in various developing and developed countries were analysed; an expert group met (Vienna, 2-5 December) to prepare guidelines for the establishment of mini-plants with special emphasis on Africa.

The establishment of a mini-steel plant in Mongolia with annual production capacity of 100,000 tons was recommended, following a techno-economic evaluation project. Assistance was given to the General Pipe Company in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to improve the operation of three steel pipe and tube plants. Scrap collection/processing projects were under implementation in Angola and Mozambique, and the first such plant commissioned in Angola during 1985 provided raw material for the local steelmaking industry.

Technical advisory missions covered, among others, Bolivia, Mongolia, Trinidad and Tobago, Viet Nam and Zambia.

Non-ferrous metals

Preparations continued for the first Consultation on the non-ferrous metals industry to be held in 1987. Within the global perspective based on an analysis of the 1983-1984 survey of the industry, an expert group meeting on the industry's restructuring (Vienna, 18-21 March) was held with the participation of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations and UNCTAD.

Among the projects for developing the light and heavy non-ferrous metals industries, focusing on bauxite/alumina/aluminium, a pilot plant for bauxite processing inaugurated in Jamaica became the first in a developing country for full-range testing of the Bayer alumina production process.

An interim report was completed on the possible utilization of aluminiferous ores (alunites) as raw materials for aluminium production in Iran. Other aluminium production projects were carried out in Hungary, India and Mozambique. A series of tests were conducted on Greek diasporic bauxites with a view to developing a commercial process for reducing iron content and obtaining a better-refined bauxite.

Foundries

Special attention was accorded to strengthening the foundry industry sector, particularly the improvement of foundry operations and overall plant performance. A workshop and demonstration of appropriate technologies and equipment for the metallurgical and metal processing industries for African countries, organized by UNIDO and the Polish Chamber of Foreign Trade, was held at Katowice from 25 to 29 August. A foundry performance improvement programme was conducted for the National Engineering Corporation in the United Republic of Tanzania. In Nicaragua, an assessment was made of the state of the art of the foundry industry, and training started in improved foundry operations. Assistance to modernize the Foundry and Mechanical Workshop in Somalia involved expertise provided by Egypt.

Other industrial categories

Capital goods industry with emphasis on energy-related technology

The Second Consultation on the Capital Goods Industry with Special Emphasis on Energy-related Technology and Equipment (Stockholm, Sweden, 10-14 June 1985), attended by 147 participants, considered such key issues as the obstacles faced by developing countries in entering the sector, strategies for integrated manufacture, and the development of the electric power equipment sector and technology unpackaging. The Consultation urged UNIDO to continue promoting the development of the sector in developing countries through, among other things, the testing and the dissemination of methodologies for production planning and technological project screening. It also asked UNIDO to promote activities for the development of small hydropower plants in view of the importance of rural electrification and potential uses of electric power in agriculture.

Preparatory activities for the Consultation included the Second Regional Expert Group Meeting on Capital Goods in Latin America (Santiago, Chile, 4-6 March).

Chapter VII

Transnational corporations

Transnational corporations (TNCs) continued to play a key role in the world economy, shaping international trade, foreign direct investment and international transfer of financial resources. Questions such as the regulation of their activities and their impact on the economies of host countries, especially developing ones, were ongoing considerations before the international community.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations held its eleventh session in New York from 10 to 19 April 1985 and decided, owing to a divergence of views, to postpone until 1986 its consideration of the question of meeting biennially instead of annually. As in previous years, a special session of the Commission was reconvened (New York, 17-21 June), and examined the outstanding issues in the draft code of conduct on TNCs. The Commission's Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts (third session, New York, 11-22 March) discussed international standards of accounting and reporting.

The United Nations Centre on TNCs conducted extensive research, continued to develop a comprehensive information system, and carried out technical co-operation projects focusing on low-income countries. It continued to monitor, and acted as the secretariat for public hearings on, the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia (see p. 149).

In July, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Commission's report on its 1985 regular session (decision 1985/194) and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for the 1986 session (decision 1985/192).

Topics related to this chapter. Africa: transnational corporations. Development policy and international economic co-operation: International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade. International trade: trade policy; restrictive business practices. Human rights: human rights violations-Africa.

Draft code of conduct

The task of formulating a code of conduct on TNCs, first considered in 1975,<sup>(1)</sup> continued in 1985. At its April session,<sup>(2)</sup> the Commission on TNCs urged that every effort be made to conclude negotiations on the code, and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a study on the outstanding issues, to be circulated to Governments prior to the reconvened special session. The study<sup>(3)</sup> was issued in May.

At its June special session,<sup>(4)</sup> reconvened pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly decision,<sup>(5)</sup> the Commission examined the main outstanding issues, which included the question of international law/obligations, permanent sovereignty, renegotiation of contracts, nationalization and compensation, fair and equitable treatment, national treatment, choice of law and means of dispute settlement, non-interference in internal affairs, non-collaboration by TNCs with South Africa, conflict of jurisdiction, and the transfer by TNCs of payments related to their investments. All delegations expressed willingness to consider the outstanding issues anew and in a flexible way. Many felt that the 1983 Chairmen's proposals<sup>(6)</sup> constituted the most appropriate basis for negotiations. During five formal and a number of informal meetings, various suggestions were made towards a compromise solution aimed at narrowing the differences. The Commission recommended the reconvening of the special session in 1986 to agree on an overall solution to the outstanding issues and to complete the code of conduct. It also suggested that the expert advisers who had attended the 1985 session be invited to the 1986 reconvened session.

The expert advisers attending the 1985 session (see APPENDIX III) submitted a statement<sup>(7)</sup> making suggestions for the resolution of the key outstanding issues. The USSR expert did not participate in formulating the text while the United States expert had reservations on it.

By decision 1985/193 of 26 July, the Economic and Social Council decided to reconvene the Commission's special session from 20 to 31 January 1986 and to invite the expert advisers to participate, and requested the Secretary-General to revise his report on outstanding issues,<sup>(3)</sup> taking into account the suggestions made during the discussions.

Definition of TNC

The problem of defining TNCs continued to be examined by the Commission in 1985, as it had been every year since its first session 10 years previously, and a January 1985 report<sup>(8)</sup> by the Centre's secretariat provided background information on the topic. The question had usually been deferred pending the outcome of negotiations on a code of conduct (see above), in which definition was a major issue. An important point of disagreement related to the nature of the ownership of the enterprise. The key issue was whether the code was applicable to State-owned or public enterprises as well as enterprises of private or mixed ownership. The report summarized the evolution of that definition over the years, outlining a progressive narrowing of differences.

At the Commission's April session,<sup>(2)</sup> delegations reiterated their previously stated views. Some stressed that the code should be a truly universal instrument that applied to all entities with TNCs, and called for flexibility to resolve the outstanding issues. Others emphasized the importance of finding an acceptable solution to the problems of the definition of TNCs and the scope of application of the code in their close interrelationships with other outstanding issues.

At the Commission's June session, the Chairman orally reported on consultations held in February, April and June, which produced a text to which there was no objection, although some expressed a preference for another text not specifying, as the first did, the point of private, public or mixed ownership. It was agreed that the final solution of this issue would depend on the satisfactory settlement of other outstanding issues.

Bilateral, regional and international arrangements relating to TNCs

The Centre on TNCs continued in 1985 to collect, monitor and analyse developments regarding international, regional and bilateral arrangements relating to TNCs. It was preparing technical papers on bilateral investment agreements, the key elements of international and regional arrangements having a bearing on TNC activities, and the experience gained in implementing the Declaration on International Investment and Multinational Enterprises of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

In accordance with a 1984 Commission request,<sup>(9)</sup> the Centre submitted to the Commission's April session a report on developments under international arrangements and agreements on TNC-related matters.<sup>(10)</sup> The report examined the main developments under five international instruments, dealing with guidelines for TNCs, social policy, control of restrictive business practices, transfer of technology, and marketing of breast-milk substitutes. The report concluded that even if those instruments were of a voluntary nature, their adoption had generated impetus for their observance. Much activity was taking place, especially at the national level, to make those instruments more effective, and TNCs themselves had felt the need to apply them. Such instruments had also provided a useful framework for international co-operation, and various international efforts were under way to establish additional standards on aspects of TNC activities.

The Commission requested the Centre to take into account, in its future work on the topic, the views expressed at its April 1985 session.<sup>(2)</sup>

Standards of accounting and reporting

The Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting, established by the Economic and Social Council in 1982,<sup>(1)</sup> held its third session in New York from 11 to 22 March 1985.<sup>(2)</sup> Before it were five studies prepared by the Centre on TNCs on the following topics: review of important current developments in accounting and reporting by TNCs;<sup>(3)</sup> legislative backing and enforcement, prudence and reserve accounting;<sup>(4)</sup> accounting and reporting for transactions denominated in foreign currencies;<sup>(5)</sup> accounting and reporting for research and development activities;<sup>(6)</sup> and ways of developing education, research and practical training in accounting and reporting in Member States.<sup>(7)</sup>

The Group's Chairman pointed out that in the dynamic business environment in which TNCs operated, opportunities for developing international accounting and reporting continued to arise, while there was need to deal with new accounting and reporting issues. In the situation created by the recent global recession, international co-operation was needed to promote economic development in the public and private sectors, where accounting and reporting had an important role to play. To improve the availability of information disclosed by TNCs operating in developing countries, it was important to identify accounting and reporting standards applicable to TNCs. International harmonization was needed, but it did not imply uniformity of accounting standards and practices.

The Group considered legislative backing and enforcement to ensure compliance with standards promulgated by organizations, particularly the accountancy profession. It recalled the importance of each country having an effective legal means of implementing generally accepted standards, but felt that different mechanisms would be appropriate in different countries in view of the diversity of national legal systems and traditions.

Dealing with accounting and reporting for transactions denominated in foreign currencies, the Group agreed that there was a need for disclosure of information on methods of accounting, methods used in translating financial statements, and methods of accounting for unsettled balances. It identified additional items, recommending that they be considered for disclosure.

Considering accounting and reporting for research and development activities, the Group agreed on criteria relating to identification of cost elements, criteria to capitalize costs, and necessary disclosures. On ways of developing education, research and training in Member States, the Group pointed to the growing demand for accountants in developing countries, noted that efforts to increase their number were being restrained by the limited resources available for education programmes, and called for increased development assistance in that respect.

In April, the Commission took note of the Group's report and agreed that it would, after three years, review the Group's mandate, terms of reference and achievements, including the advisability of its continuation.<sup>(8)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/71 without vote.

Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1979/44 of 11 May 1979 and 1982/67 of 27 October 1982,

Having considered the report of the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting on its third session,

Acting upon the recommendation of the Group at its third session concerning its future work,

1. Decides that the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting should continue to meet on the basis of its existing mandate;

2. Agrees that the results of the work of the Group should be brought to the attention of Governments, standard-setting bodies, the accountancy profession, transnational corporations and other interested parties through United Nations publications.

Centre on TNCs

In 1985, the United Nations Centre on TNCs, the principal Secretariat unit for TNC-related matters, carried out research (see p. 621), continued to develop an information system (see p. 619), and conducted and sponsored technical co-operation activities (see p. 622). It assisted the Commission in formulating a code of conduct on TNCs (see p. 616), by preparing reports and by organizing intergovernmental meetings on the code (Baghdad, Iraq, and Buenos Aires, Argentina, November; and Bangkok, Thailand, December). It prepared studies for the Intergovernmental Working Group of Experts on International Standards of Accounting and Reporting (see above), and continued to monitor arrangements relating to TNCs (see p. 617).

As requested by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) in 1983, the Secretary-General submitted to it in March 1985 a report<sup>(1)</sup> on the triennial review of implementation of its 1979 recommendation<sup>(2)</sup> on the programme on TNCs. CPC<sup>(3)</sup> took note of the report's conclusion that the Centre had implemented all recommendations in the areas of programme formulation and the review process, policy analysis (research), the comprehensive information system, the code of conduct for TNCs and advisory services. It endorsed two of the report's proposals for further improvement, namely, that the Centre should intensify its efforts to utilize experience gained in its advisory and training projects as input into the design and orientation of other projects and should improve the feedback system for assessing the impact of the advisory services. CPC could not reach consensus on the other proposals.

In April,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission on TNCs considered the Centre's activities since mid-1984, took note of the Secretary-General's report on them,<sup>(5)</sup> and requested him to report similarly in 1986. It took note of his intention to submit in 1986 a report on the Centre's utilization of resources during 1984-1985.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

In July 1985, the Economic and Social Council, acting on the recommendation of its First Committee, adopted decision 1985/195 by roll-call vote.

Work of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations

At its 52nd plenary meeting, on 26 July 1985, the Council, bearing in mind General Assembly decision 39/443 of 18 December 1984, taking note of the proposals contained in draft resolutions E/1985/C.1/L.14 and E/1985/C.1/L.15, bearing in mind that those draft resolutions related to some important outstanding issues of the negotiations on the code of conduct on transnational corporations, and recognizing the importance of an early and successful completion of the code of conduct in a spirit of co-operation and understanding, decided that the issues raised in those draft resolutions should be considered after the reconvened special session of the Commission on Transnational Corporations in January 1986 at an appropriate occasion.

Economic and Social Council decision 1985/195

33-7 (roll-call vote)

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/146) by roll-call vote (29-7), 24 July (meeting 28); draft by Egypt, for Group of 77 (E/1985/C.1/L.20); agenda item 9.

Roll-call vote in Council as follows:

In favour: Algeria, Argentina, Bangladesh, Brazil, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Ecuador, German Democratic Republic, Guinea, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Mexico, Morocco, Nigeria, Poland, Romania, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Senegal, Somalia, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Thailand, Turkey, Uganda, USSR, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Zaire, Zimbabwe.

Against: Canada, Finland, Iceland, Japan, New Zealand, Sweden, United States.

In the First Committee, Luxembourg, on behalf of the member States of the European Economic Community (EEC), proposed an amendment to the draft decision, by which the Council, bearing in mind that State-owned enterprises from all groups of countries currently conducted transnational operations in many countries, and recognizing the importance of the completion of the code of conduct, would have decided that the above issues should be taken into account by the Centre in carrying out its work. The Committee, by a roll-call vote of 29 to 13, with 1 abstention, decided not to take action on the proposed amendment.

Earlier, Luxembourg, on behalf of EEC, had introduced in the Committee a draft resolution<sup>(6)</sup> by which the Council would have requested the Centre on TNCs to take into account in carrying out its work the fact that State-owned enterprises from all groups of countries currently conducted significant operations in many developing countries and that ownership should not be a determining criterion in defining the Centre's areas of activity. A United States draft with a similar thrust<sup>(7)</sup> added a provision that country of origin should also not be a determining criterion.

Speaking in the Council, Egypt said it had proposed the decision to safeguard the ongoing negotiations on the code of conduct, leaving outstanding issues to be discussed after the January 1986 session of the Commission on TNCs.

The United States said it would vote against the text, mainly because it ensured that the mandate of the Centre would continue to be unbalanced and unfair and that the Centre would lack clear approval to include in its work programme State-owned transnational enterprises from both market and centrally planned economies.

Luxembourg said the EEC members would be unable to participate in the voting; the draft merely delayed any decision on the issue. Spain (which did not participate in the voting) endorsed that statement, and Canada said it would vote against for the reasons explained by Luxembourg.

Speaking for the Eastern European socialist countries and Mongolia, Bulgaria said they had voted in favour in accordance with their general policy in favour of a code of conduct for TNCs.

Information system

During 1985, the Centre's comprehensive information system continued to acquire, process and disseminate information on TNCs and to respond to requests for information from Governments, organizations and others. The system focused on six areas: national laws and regulations related to TNCs; contracts and agreements between TNCs and host country entities; trends in TNC activities; TNC activities in various sectors; individual corporations; and sources of data and information.

The system continued to supply statistical data on flows and stocks of foreign direct investment obtained from intergovernmental organizations and Governments. It collected information on individual corporations (the subject on which the greatest number of requests were received) and began to collect data on the largest corporations in the service sectors. It continued to update its collection of contracts and agreements between TNCs and host country entities. A project was undertaken in 1985 to create a systematic index to the provisions of the Centre's growing collection of petroleum agreements.

The Centre assisted several developing countries in establishing and managing national information systems. It developed its roster of experts, entering the personal histories of more than 1,200 into its data base. It replied to 1,370 requests for information requiring some research, 570 of which were from developing countries. A total of 733 requests came from non-governmental organizations—trade unions, business organizations, academic institutions, public interest groups and the media. In addition, 1,700 short-answer requests were received.

In April,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission on TNCs took note of a February progress report on the information system<sup>(8)</sup> and requested another report in 1986.

Joint units with regional commissions

Joint units established between the Centre on TNCs and the United Nations regional commissions in Africa, Asia and the Pacific, Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean, and Western Asia continued to operate in 1985.<sup>(9)</sup> Each unit's work programme was tailored to the needs of the region and complemented the work of the Centre; it included research on the economic, social and institutional issues of TNCs, information dissemination, and training and advisory services. During 1985, the work programmes of the units and of the Centre were further integrated.

The joint unit of the Centre and the Economic Commission for Africa undertook studies on activities of TNCs in the region, with emphasis on agricultural food and non-food commodities and mineral commodities. Research also concentrated on the flow of capital and other resources through the activities of transnational banks; a study on the role of those banks and financial institutions in Africa's development was completed, and case-studies on the role of TNCs in the banking sector in Nigeria and Liberia were undertaken. Studies were under way on joint ventures, on hotels and tourism, on the social and cultural impact of TNCs, and on the possibility of establishing African-owned multinational enterprises. A policy paper on TNC activities in the production and marketing of Africa's primary commodities and a progress report on the draft code of conduct on TNCs were submitted to the eighth Conference of African Ministers of Trade (Brazzaville, Congo, October), which expressed support for the code and appealed for its early adoption. A regional workshop was held for English-speaking African countries on the role of TNCs in Africa's mining industry (Manzini, Swaziland, July). Advisory and fact-finding missions were undertaken to Burundi, Cameroon, the Congo, the Ivory Coast, Togo and Zambia on the transfer of technology by TNCs in selected economic sectors.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Europe focused its research on two ongoing projects: an interregional project on transnational banks, and the role of developed country-based public development finance corporations and TNCs in enhancing private direct investment in developing countries. The unit assisted the Centre by providing information on technical expertise available in the region and of use to developing countries, and aided it in its technical assistance and advisory projects related to specific industries.

The joint unit with the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean focused on studies designed to enhance the negotiating capacity of the region's countries in their dealings with TNCs. It completed studies on the behaviour of TNCs in the context of the crisis affecting Latin America; on TNCs and Latin America's foreign trade; on computer services and information processing in development; on the behaviour of TNCs and State-owned corporations in the development of mining; on the bargaining capacity of countries in the area of commodities; and on the impact of TNCs in the economies of Argentina and Ecuador.

The unit advised one Government on renegotiating its debt to transnational banks and on company planning methods. In co-operation with Argentina and the Centre, it organized an expert group meeting on the code of conduct (Buenos Aires, November); it also took part in other regional meetings. Studies were under way on the impact of TNCs in the economies of Colombia and Paraguay; on transnational banks in Argentina and Uruguay; and on policies towards and negotiations with TNCs. Case-studies were begun on the comparative behaviour of TNCs, and on the changes in the balance between direct investment and loans in external financing. Work also began on setting up a data bank on the most significant variables relating to external capital, particularly that of TNCs.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) completed studies on export processing zones in selected Asian countries; on TNCs and the external financial flows of developing countries of the region; and on transnational trading corporations and State trading enterprises in India. Research was commenced on the views of host developing countries vis-à-vis TNCs based in those countries. Case-studies were under way for a project on technology acquisition through alternative arrangements with TNCs in selected countries of the region. With the Centre and the State Science and Technology Commission of China, the unit conducted a training workshop on regulating technology transfer through TNCs (Fuzhou, October). In co-operation with the Centre, it organized an expert group meeting on the code of conduct (Bangkok, December), followed by an ad hoc intergovernmental meeting on TNCs. It supported training workshops and advisory missions conducted by the Centre, participated in various meetings and conferences, and continued to establish focal points in several ESCAP member countries to provide direct, two-way communications between the unit and member countries.

The joint unit with the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia prepared a report highlighting the widespread involvement of TNCs in Western Asia and its growing dependence on them. It produced an executive summary highlighting the main issues of the code relevant to Western Asian countries, and held, together with the Centre, a regional intergovernmental meeting on the code (Baghdad, November). Studies were in progress on the transfer of technology through TNCs and on external sovereign lending by transnational banks. Case-studies were under way on transnational banks in Oman and in the United Arab Emirates, and on the impact of TNC operations on development in the Gulf Co-operation Council region.

Research

The Centre's 1985 research activities comprised five broad areas: studies on the code of conduct and other international arrangements and agreements relating to TNCs; overall trends in TNC activities; strengthening of Governments' negotiating capacity in their relations with TNCs; political, social and cultural impact of TNCs; and specific issues and selected sectors.<sup>(10)</sup>

Research continued to concentrate on the activities of TNCs in South Africa and Namibia and in 1985 the Centre focused on the public hearings on TNC activities there (see p. 149) and acted as the secretariat for the hearings.

The Centre continued to analyse the impact of TNCs on the environment, publishing, with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), a technical report on the subject. The Centre initiated a study on TNC environmental management policies and practices, and organized with UNEP an informal seminar (Geneva, December) to further international co-operation for the environmental management of industrial process safety and hazards.

The Centre published studies on international accounting and reporting issues,<sup>(11)</sup> on national legislation and regulations relating to TNCs,<sup>(12)</sup> on trends in foreign direct investment,<sup>(13)</sup> and on TNCs and international trade.<sup>(14)</sup> Two issues of the periodical The CTC Reporter<sup>(15)</sup> (circulation 10,000) were also published. Other studies and reports dealt with the draft code of conduct, the definition of TNCs, technology transfer, engineering and technical assistance consultancy contracts, and data services in Latin America and the Caribbean. An interregional project with some of the joint units was initiated, focusing on the role of transnational banks in the development process.

In April,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission took note of a report on ongoing and future research.<sup>(10)</sup> Some delegations suggested that greater emphasis be attached to the positive effects of TNCs, and one stated that the free play of market forces should be a possibility examined when considering arrangements vis-à-vis TNCs. Others felt that inadequate attention had been given to the negative effects of TNCs, and that future research should examine TNC interference in the internal affairs of States and their adverse impact on host developing countries. Those delegations emphasized the importance of the study of the role of TNCs in the armaments industry and in the transfer of military technology. One delegation reiterated its opposition to such a study. Suggestions were made on possible future research topics. The Commission requested the Centre, in implementing its research programme, to take account of those views.

Transborder data flows

While the importance of transborder data flows was widely recognized, no organization except the Commission on TNCs was currently examining the role that TNCs played in that area, the Centre's Executive Director stated at the Commission's April session.<sup>(4)</sup> Many delegations requested the Centre to intensify its work on the subject, and suggested areas of further work. The Commission took note of a January 1985 report on that role (see below), agreed that work should continue along the same lines as in the past, taking into account the views expressed at the session, and agreed that a stronger link should be sought between the Centre's research on the topic and its technical assistance activities.

The Centre in 1985 continued its study of TNCs in trade and foreign direct investment in data services. Responding to a request by the Economic System for Latin America for a study on data services in Latin America and the Caribbean, the Centre prepared a report reviewing the status of the data-services industry in the region and the relevant policies pursued, focusing on the role of TNCs and discussing policy options available to countries interested in data services. The study was discussed at a workshop co-sponsored by Mexico in June, and the revised study was submitted to a Latin American Council meeting (Caracas, Venezuela, 27 November-8 December).<sup>(9)</sup>

A January 1985 report of the Centre<sup>(16)</sup> reviewed the principal developments relating to transborder data flows in a number of forums, presented a summary of a country case-study on transborder data flows and Poland,<sup>(17)</sup> and contained observations and suggestions on the Commission's future course of action on the subject.

TNCs and international economic relations

Research activities in 1985 also examined recent developments related to TNCs and international economic relations. The Centre submitted to the Commission two complementary reports on the topic, pursuant to a 1984 Commission request.

The first<sup>(18)</sup> examined capital flows to and from developing countries, focusing on the recent marked changes in the nature and magnitude of private sector inflows and outflows, particularly foreign direct investment. International lending by transnational banks, the report said, had increased rapidly during the 1970s and early 1980s, but had fallen abruptly in 1982, remaining thereafter at a comparatively low level. Flows of foreign direct investment by TNCs had also experienced a sharp reduction since their 1981 peak. These tendencies served to increase the debt of developing countries; in several cases, new inflows of private capital were insufficient to cover the various outflows relating to the stock of such capital. General trends in the volume and pattern of capital flows to developing countries since the mid-1970s indicated the debt-oriented nature of most flows, the high interest and related outflows to which they gave rise, and the consequent financing difficulties faced by the borrowing countries. Action suggested by the report included international efforts to ensure a global economic environment more favourable to developing countries; the early adoption of a code of conduct, minimizing the negative effects of foreign investment and giving TNCs assurance of a fair return on such investments; and new forms of co-operation between the public and private sectors in investment for development.

The second report<sup>(19)</sup> dealt with TNCs in international trade and foreign direct investment by TNCs, including capital inflows and outflows. It examined key aspects of the role of TNCs in international trade, with particular reference to policy issues relevant to developing countries. The report concluded by presenting two basic policy issues facing developing and developed countries alike. The first was the role played by TNCs in the continuing shifts of comparative advantage in world production and world trade, and the equally important role of the policy actions of host and home countries in trying to affect these shifts. The second was related to the problem of reverse net transfer of resources from developing countries observed since 1982-1983. While in the past developing countries had been capital importers (to finance the deficit in their balance of payments due to high goods and services imports), beginning in 1983 they had become capital exporters by running a surplus in the balance of trade and non-capital services. Their combined annual current deficit in 1984 and 1985 was estimated at $45 billion, while their net interest and payments and profit remittances were estimated at $54 billion in 1984 and $60 billion in 1985. The problem was ultimately a trade problem, and one in which action by TNCs was critical, due to their essential role in trade. While not necessarily part of the problem, TNCs were certainly part of any eventual solution.

In April,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission requested the Secretary-General to prepare for its 1986 session a report on the existing situation with regard to statistics on foreign direct investment.

Technical co-operation

During 1985, the Centre saw a steady expansion of its technical co-operation activities. Many developing countries turned to the Centre for information and technical assistance in formulating their foreign investment and technology policies or in negotiating with TNCs. Programming missions were undertaken to Africa, Asia and the Pacific, as well as to the headquarters of regional and subregional organizations, resulting in various programmes being drawn up, to be executed mostly with funding from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).<sup>(9)</sup>

As part of its effort to support economic and technical co-operation among developing countries, the Centre continued to maintain close working relationships with over 20 subregional and regional centres and institutions. In 1985 numerous requests were received from those bodies for advisory, information and training services, and assistance was provided to member countries of the organizations in collaboration with their respective secretariats.

The Centre completed or initiated 113 advisory and information projects, 57 of which were in the natural resources sector and 22 in a number of industries in the manufacturing and service sectors. Of the total, 70 were in Africa, 35 in Asia and the Pacific, 6 in Latin America and the Caribbean and 2 in Western Asia.

Particular attention was given to low-income countries. Programming missions assisted them in identifying projects and in strengthening the professional expertise of officials in dealing with TNCs. During 1985, 61 advisory, information and training projects in low-income countries were executed or initiated.

The Centre organized 19 training projects, made up of training workshops/seminars, round tables and study tours, for some 500 government officials, executives of State enterprises, and private sector managers of various developing countries. Nine projects were held in Asia and the Pacific, five in Latin America, three in Africa, and one each in Western Asia and Europe.

Support to management institutes and higher learning institutions continued, with a view to sharpening the professional skills of public officials and private sector managers in TNC-related matters. Assistance to institutions in Asia and the Pacific included a training seminar for lecturers and instructors. Support to management and public administration institutes in selected African countries focused on a round-table meeting for their directors/principals. The meeting reviewed a multidisciplinary curriculum for a training programme on TNCs in Africa, and discussed the Centre's support in implementing the programme in various institutes.

In response to 1984 Commission requests, the Centre submitted two reports to the April 1985 Commission session. One evaluated the Centre's technical co-operation activities,<sup>(20)</sup> while the other examined measures adopted by developing countries in the previous 20 years to strengthen their negotiating capacity in dealing with TNCs, and suggested further international action to enhance their capabilities in that respect.<sup>(21)</sup>

In April,<sup>(4)</sup> the Commission reaffirmed the importance it attached to the Centre's technical co-operation programme.

Financing

The Centre's technical co-operation programme continued to be financed primarily by extrabudgetary resources from the Centre's Trust Fund and allocations from UNDP.<sup>(9)</sup> Total extrabudgetary resources amounted to $2,570,639. Contributions to the Trust Fund were made in 1985 by China ($20,000), Finland ($38,628), the Netherlands ($60,015), Norway ($163,604), the Republic of Korea ($10,172), Sweden ($190,006), Switzerland ($97,314) and Zambia ($2,451). The Fund's opening balance amounted to $921,260, and interest income to $120,000; resources made available by UNDP amounted to $947,189.

Total expenditures amounted to $1,384,915 in 1985, of which the UNDP share was 68.3 per cent, up from 66.3 per cent in 1984. Of this amount, advisory projects took $534,459, while workshops and other training activities took $850,456.

Chapter VIII

Regional economic and social activities

The regional commissions of the United Nations continued to work to increase regional economic and social co-operation during 1985.

Four of the live commissions held their regular intergovernmental sessions: the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) at Bangkok, Thailand (19-29 March); the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE) at Geneva (16-27 April); the Economic Commission for Western Asia (which changed its name in 1985 to the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia (ESCWA)) at Baghdad, Iraq (20-25 April); and the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia (25-29 April). The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC) did not meet in regular session.

Among issues of concern to the regional commissions considered by the General Assembly in 1985 were: a Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States (resolution 40/186), the particular problems facing Zaïre with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets (40/190), co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) (40/195), and questions relating to the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987 (sections V, VI and VIII of resolution 40/252).

The Assembly, in resolution 40/105, invited incorporation of the interests of women in the work programmes of the regional commissions (see ADMINISTRATIVE AND BUDGETARY QUESTIONS, Chapter III).

The Economic and Social Council, in July, took action in support of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (resolution 1985/61), the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (1985/62), the Substantial New Programme of Action (SNPA) for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries (LDCs) in the African LDCs during the second half of the decade (1985/63), the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1985/65), women and development in Africa (1985/67) and the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar (1985/70). The Council, in addition, decided to include Portuguese among the official working languages of ECA (resolution 1985/68), amended the terms of reference of ESCAP (1985/60) in the light of Brunei Darussalam and Tuvalu becoming members, and sought to strengthen the directorships of Multinational Programming and Operational Centres (MULPOCS) (1985/66).

The Council took note of summaries of the annual surveys of current economic and social conditions in each region, prepared by commission secretariats, during its discussion of the world economic situation in July (decision 1985/182).

Topics related to this chapter. Development policy and international economic co-operation: economic and social trends and policy. Operational activities for development. Economic assistance, disasters and emergency relief. Food. Environment. United Nations officials: personnel management-status of women in the Secretariat.

Regional co-operation

The executive secretaries of the five regional commissions met at Addis Ababa on 25 and 26 February and at Geneva on 12 July under the chairmanship of the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. They reviewed the regional economic situation in the context of the global situation, problems facing LDCs, and interregional and multilateral co-operation. The February meeting examined initiatives to promote technical and economic co-operation among the developing countries of the different regions, as called for by the Council in 1983<sup>(1)</sup> and the General Assembly in 1984,<sup>(2)</sup> to identify new proposals to strengthen their co-operation and to establish appropriate consultation and co-ordination mechanisms for carrying out activities. Project proposals to promote interregional technical and economic co-operation in a number of areas were identified and a regional commission was designated to take the lead role in co-ordinating activities for each proposal.

Project outlines prepared by the lead commissions were circulated to other commissions for comment and further examined during the July meeting of the executive secretaries. Draft documents were to be further considered by them in 1986. Funding was to be dealt with when the documents were finalized.

In reports on regional co-operation of June 1985<sup>(3)</sup> and June 1986<sup>(4)</sup> to the Economic and Social Council, covering the periods from mid-year to mid-year for 1984/85 and 1985/86, respectively, the Secretary-General described the work of the regional commissions and the meetings of the executive secretaries and drew attention to issues and decisions of the commissions calling for Council action or attention.

On 26 July, the Council adopted without vote decision 1985/191, taking note of several reports it had considered in connection with the question of regional co-operation, including the Secretary-General's June 1985 report.

Pursuant to a 1982 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(5)</sup> the Secretary-General reported<sup>(6)</sup> to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) in April on progress made in the decentralization of United Nations activities. He stated that, while consultations between regional commissions and global entities continued to take place on the distribution of responsibilities, no specific activities and corresponding resources had been identified for redeployment from global entities to the regional commissions in the programme budget proposals for the 1986-1987 biennium. However, a higher than average growth had been proposed for the commissions, which had been given priority consideration and reinforcement with respect to current programme budget proposals.

Africa

A good 1985 rainy season broke the intensity of the 1983-1985 drought, but that did not mean Africa's economic crisis was over, the ECA Executive Secretary stated in his biennial report for 1984-1985.<sup>(1)</sup> While the food situation improved significantly, the prices of export commodities, including minerals, fell sharply, government expenditures declined due to shortfalls in foreign exchange earnings as well as to adjustments proposed by the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank or undertaken independently of their advice, unemployment increased, official development assistance (ODA) remained stagnant, capital inflows decreased, and external indebtedness rose under unfavourable borrowing terms and a decrease in repayment capacity.

ECA activities. The major activities of the Economic Commission for Africa were aimed at achieving the goals of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa.<sup>(2)</sup> The twentieth session of the Commission (eleventh meeting of its Conference of Ministers) was held from 25 to 29 April at Addis Ababa.<sup>(3)</sup> The Conference, whose main theme was the African economic and social crisis, adopted 31 resolutions on 29 April, on such matters as industrial development, women and development, the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning, measures to implement an action plan for LDCs, social welfare policies and transport and communications.

The Conference, after a mid-term review of progress in implementing the Lagos Plan, adopted a series of recommendations<sup>(4)</sup> for accelerating attainment of its goals, covering all major socio-economic sectors, and it asked<sup>(5)</sup> that they be transmitted to the twenty-first ordinary session of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) (Addis Ababa, 18-20 July). The recommendations constituted a programme for the structural adjustment of the African economies devastated by drought, desertification and natural calamities. While Africa had the primary responsibility for dealing with the crisis, its magnitude called for international assistance. The recommendations covered food and agriculture, industry, natural and human resources, science and technology, transport and communications, trade and finance, economic and technical co-operation, environment and development, LDCs, energy, women and development, development planning, statistics and population. It also outlined a special programme of action for improving the food situation and for rehabilitating agriculture in Africa, and proposed a common platform for action through strengthened or newly created international negotiation and consultation measures and institutions. The Conference of Ministers also adopted the Second Special Memorandum on international action for relaunching the initiative for long-term development and economic growth in Africa<sup>(6)</sup> (see below), for presentation to the Economic and Social Council, and approved a memorandum submitted to it by the Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries in April on the mid-term global review of the implementation of SNPA in Africa, for presentation to the high-level meeting of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) Intergovernmental Group on LDCs (see p. 434).

The recommendations were considered by the OAU Assembly, which adopted a priority programme for economic recovery to be implemented during 1986-1990.

Economic and social trends

Regional output, which in 1983 had grown imperceptibly, stagnated in 1984, according to a summary<sup>(7)</sup> of the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1983-1984, which disclosed that apart from central Africa, where gross domestic product (GDP) increased by 2.8 per cent in 1983 and 4.3 per cent in 1984, there was a recession across the continent. The area most affected was western Africa, where output had declined since 1980. Oil-exporting countries recorded a decline in output, although non-members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), such as Angola, Cameroon, the Congo and Egypt, generally recorded good performances. Among OPEC members, Nigeria was the most seriously hurt by an oil glut; its export revenues were reduced by half during 1980-1983. In contrast, Algeria maintained growth by diversifying its hydrocarbon sector, particularly through the expansion of gas production and exports, and streamlining its industrial sector. Ghana and Uganda achieved growth following currency adjustments.

The African drought was reflected in a 2.6 per cent drop in gross agricultural output during 1983, the downturn reaching 6.6 per cent in western Africa. Lack of rain affected nearly 182 million people in 27 countries, a vast area from the Sahel to eastern and southern Africa. Industrialization stalled, with the average growth of manufacturing output in developing Africa being only 1.5 per cent for 1980-1984. The only subregion with continuous growth was northern Africa, increasing 5.2 per cent in 1984 and averaging 4.5 per cent between 1980 and 1984.

The Economic and Social Council, on 25 July, took note of the summary report, among others, when it adopted decision 1985/182.

Overall prospects were uncertain for 1985. Food shortages were expected to remain a major problem in 21 countries. In the event of further drought, growth would probably fall to 1 per cent.

The ECA Conference approved a resolution<sup>(8)</sup> expressing its gratitude to the countries, organizations and individuals that had provided generous aid to crisis-affected African countries and appealing for continued aid. The General Assembly, in resolution 40/100, noted the critical economic and social situation in Africa and called for full implementation of its 1984 Declaration on the Critical Economic Situation in Africa.<sup>(9)</sup> (See also Chapter III of this section.)

Activities in 1985

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

The ECA Conference of Ministers in April 1985 adopted a Second Special Memorandum,<sup>(6)</sup> dealing with international action for relaunching the initiative for long-term development and economic growth in Africa (the first was adopted in 1984<sup>(10)</sup>). About 70 per cent of Africa's population was currently either destitute or below the poverty line, with per capita annual incomes equivalent to less than $59 and $115 at 1972 prices respectively, the Memorandum said. Approximately half of the labour force was unemployed or underemployed; close to 60 per cent of the population lived in slums or squatter settlements; the availability of water remained a critical problem; child mortality in sub-Saharan Africa was almost double the average of that in other developing countries; and the number of malnourished people was estimated to have increased from 80 million in the early 1970s to more than 100 million in 1984.

At the root of Africa's crisis were the internal structural imbalances of African economies and their excessive outward orientation and overt dependence—a legacy of their colonial past. Post-independence development policies had not brought about significant change in the lopsided production structure, heavily dominated by export-oriented agriculture, a small industrial base, and a mining sector which was dependent on external finance, technology and management and whose output was predominantly exported.

It was beyond the capacity of African Governments to tackle the crisis unaided. International assistance must be directed to supporting Africa's efforts to attack the root causes of the socio-economic crisis and underdevelopment. The ECA Conference reaffirmed its commitment to both the philosophy and objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action, spelling out the long-term measures required for the restructuring of African economies. The Conference outlined international support measures needed in such priority areas as population; food and agricultural, industrial and infrastructural development; trade and finance; natural resources; combating drought and desertification; science and technology; and human resources.

On 29 April, the Conference adopted<sup>(11)</sup> the Second Special Memorandum, asking that it be transmitted, along with the decisions of the OAU Assembly, to the Economic and Social Council for consideration and action in support of the proposals. It appealed to the international community to support the priority areas outlined, and appealed to African member States to intensify their efforts to attack the root causes of the crisis by implementing the measures proposed.

On the same date, it adopted a resolution<sup>(12)</sup> on the subregional, regional and interregional economic and technical co-operation needed to deal with the crisis in Africa, including drought and desertification. It urged ECA member States to co-operate within their respective regional institutions as well as with their subregions, with the assistance of MULPOCs, in tackling the crisis. It called on States to rededicate themselves to implementing each sector of the Lagos Plan of Action.

ECA continued diverse technical co-operation activities in 1985, utilizing United Nations, multilateral and bilateral funds. United Nations funds provided support to 10 regional advisers and to MULPOCs' advisory services, in the areas of economic co-operation, statistics, social and manpower development, energy, public administration and finance, transport and communications, research and administration. United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) funds also supported MULPOCs and financed projects in statistics, industry, national accounts, transport and communications, and integration of women in development. United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) funds supported population activities. Funds made available by the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women and the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development, and direct grants from Governments, supplied training, supported projects and provided experts for a wide variety of programmes.

Implementation of the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action

A report<sup>(13)</sup> on progress in implementing the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action<sup>(2)</sup> was submitted to the Economic and Social Council by the ECA secretariat in April 1985. It covered activities—studies, reports, programmes, advisory services, conferences, workshops, seminars—undertaken in various sectors to implement the Plan, the five main pillars of which were: promotion of national self-sufficiency; acceleration of intra-African economic integration; democratization of the development process; eradication of mass poverty and mass unemployment; and equitable distribution of benefits of development and economic growth.

Also submitted was a report<sup>(14)</sup> on implementation of the Final Act of Lagos, an integral part of the Plan of Action, under which African States committed themselves to set up an African economic community by the year 2000. The report stressed that African countries must realize that as long as they were strongly attached to pre-independence political, economic, social and cultural relations and as long as socio-economic policy was still oriented to the outside world, intra-African co-operation would be extremely difficult to bring about. It was necessary for States to rededicate themselves to sectoral co-operation under the Plan of Action. It was suggested that technical and political preparations be made in phases between 1986 and 1997, through a comprehensive programme of studies and meetings at various levels, for the establishment of the African economic community.

ECA, in addition, presented to the Council an appraisal<sup>(15)</sup> of economic performance in Africa for 1980-1985, in the light of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(16)</sup> (see Chapter I of this section) as well as the Lagos Plan of Action. It reported that the African region had fallen far behind the Strategy's objective of a 7 per cent annual increase in GDP; at 1980 prices, GDP had decreased by 1.3 per cent in 1981, increased by that amount in 1982, stagnated in 1983 and declined by 0.1 per cent in 1984.

After reviewing the progress made in implementing the Plan of Action and the Final Act of Lagos, the ECA Conference adopted recommendations<sup>(4)</sup> to accelerate achievement of the Plan's objectives, and asked<sup>(5)</sup> that they be transmitted to OAU (see p. 802).

UN Trust Fund for African Development

In 1985, according to ECA,<sup>(17)</sup> the United Nations Trust Fund for African Development made available $100,585 for projects in industry, agriculture, natural resources, public administration, trade, economic co-operation and socio-economic research and planning.

Several States and intergovernmental organizations pledged about $2 million at the fifth biennial pledging conference for the Fund, held during the April meeting of the ECA Conference.<sup>(1)</sup> The Conference<sup>(18)</sup> urged States to deposit any unpaid pledges and appealed for generous contributions to the Fund.

Development planning

Action was taken by the ECA Conference on three organizations concerned with development and planning—the Pan-African Documentation and Information System (PADIS), the African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development (ACMAD), and the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning (IDEP).

The exchange of data among member States and their development institutions was promoted through PADIS, whose central co-ordination office was located at Addis Ababa. The PADIS data base on economic and social development literature in Africa currently contained more than 5,000 references.

Other PADIS activities included: publication at regular intervals of DEVINDEX-Africa, an index of literature on African development; publication at regular intervals of the Referral Information System where data bases in support of technical co-operation among developing countries (TCDC) contained personnel skills, research projects, development institutions and training programmes; training personnel of African documentation centres; and assisting member States in establishing national documentation centres.

The Regional Technical Committee for PADIS, set up in 1984,<sup>(19)</sup> at its first meeting (Addis Ababa, 26-28 March 1985)<sup>(20)</sup> discussed and made recommendations on the establishment of a regional co-operative information system and of a data-transmission network, increased assistance to member States and African institutions, the choice of computer technologies for PADIS, and financial implications of and capacity to execute the PADIS programme.

On the Technical Committee's recommendation, the ECA Conference adopted a resolution<sup>(21)</sup> empowering the ECA Executive Secretary to negotiate with development aid agencies for financial assistance to PADIS, with member States on their participation in the technical and financial aspects of PADIS, and with technical bodies on the feasibility of establishing a pan-African data-transmission network. The Executive Secretary was asked to set up a team of technical advisers to help implement the project.

In another action,<sup>(22)</sup> the Conference decided to establish ACMAD to improve the understanding of atmospheric and climatic processes in the continent, collect, analyse and disseminate meteorological and hydrological data as an early warning system, and train scientists and technicians in applying meteorology to development. It appealed to the United Nations Sudano-Sahelian Office (UNSO) and UNDP to provide financial support to ACMAD. Recommendations on the composition of its governing body were made at the third meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (Addis Ababa, 22-26 July); the directors of national meteorological services at the Second Technical Conference on the Management of Meteorological Services in Africa (Bujumbura, Burundi, 13-18 November)<sup>(23)</sup> of the World Meteorological Organization (WMO) set up an ad hoc committee to work with ECA on the preparatory phase.

The Conference also adopted a resolution<sup>(24)</sup> urging the Executive Secretary to mobilize extrabudgetary resources for IDEP through technical assistance programmes, asked countries to pay their arrears and make voluntary contributions, and recommended that UNDP continue its financial support.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted by vote resolution 1985/62.

African Institute for Economic Development and Planning

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolutions 285(XII) of 28 February 1975, 350(XIV) of 27 March 1979, 399(XV) of 12 April 1980 and, particularly, 433(XVII) of 30 April 1982 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, on the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning,

Recalling also Conference of Ministers resolution 526(XIX) of 26 May 1984, in which the Conference expressed concern about the deepening economic and social crisis in Africa and its grave implications for the peoples and economies of the continent, and considering the role and contribution that the Institute can play in alleviating and managing the present economic crisis,

Considering that at its twenty-seventh meeting, held at Addis Ababa on 9 and 10 January 1985, the Governing Council of the Institute requested the Conference of Ministers of the Commission, at its eleventh meeting, to prepare and adopt a resolution urging Member States, the United Nations Development Programme and the General Assembly to assist in the future funding of the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning,

Noting that the Institute should expand its teaching and research activities in line with the objectives of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa and that the major obstacle to its doing so is the inadequacy of financial resources,

Conscious that there is a need to consolidate and strengthen the financial position of the Institute in the medium term,

1. Recommends that the United Nations Development Programme should continue its financial support to the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning in view of the fact that it can serve as a resource institution assisting the Secretary-General and the Programme in their intensified efforts to help Africa alleviate its economic and social crisis;

2. Recommends to the General Assembly the incorporation of four posts for core professional staff for the African Institute for Economic Development and Planning into the United Nations regular budget as a contribution to the long-term financing of the Institute, in the same spirit as it has done for other regional institutions in Africa, such as the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres, and, outside Africa, in the region of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/62

26	July	1985	Meeting	52	28-5-12
----	------	------	---------	----	---------

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145) by roll-call vote (28-5-12), 23 July (meeting 27): draft by ECA (E/1985/106), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Financial implications: S-G. E/1985/C.1/L.11/Rev.1.

Before the vote in both the First Committee and the Council, a separate vote was taken on paragraph 2—at the request of the United Kingdom in the First Committee, where it was adopted by a roll-call vote of 27 to 7, with 10 abstentions, and in the Council by 28 votes to 7, with 8 abstentions.

Explaining its opposition, the United States said the resolution involved totally unjustified financial implications for the regular budget. Luxembourg said the European Economic Community (EEC) member countries had also been unable to support the text: ECA's practice of submitting draft resolutions with financial implications to the Council was not acceptable; moreover, they had been submitted without adequate explanation, and the information provided had come too late for referral to Governments.

Least developed countries

The Intergovernmental Committee of Experts of African Least Developed Countries held its fourth meeting at Addis Ababa (11-13 April)<sup>(25)</sup> and the Conference of Ministers of African LDCs its fifth (23 and 24 April).<sup>(26)</sup>

The Intergovernmental Committee considered four major topics focusing on African LDCs; their economic and social situation; the implementation of SNPA; pricing policies; and ECA activities in 1983 and 1984. It recommended to the Conference of Ministers a resolution on measures to ensure the accelerated implementation of SNPA in African LDCs during the second half of the 1980s, which the Conference adopted<sup>(27)</sup> and which was the basis for resolution 1985/63 adopted by the Economic and Social Council in July.

The fifth meeting reviewed economic and social conditions in the African LDCs in 1981-1984, implementation of SNPA for those years, the impact on LDCs of industrial capacity underutilization, and ECA activities in 1984, its work programme in 1985 and the special operational work programme in favour of LDCs for 1986-1987. It submitted to the ECA Conference of Ministers a memorandum on the mid-term global review of the implementation of SNPA in Africa, for presentation to the high-level meeting of the UNCTAD Intergovernmental Group on LDCs in September/October (see p. 434).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/63.

Measures to ensure the effective and accelerated implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action in the African least developed countries during the second half of the 1980s

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 37/224 of 20 December 1982, 38/195 of 20 December 1983 and 39/174 of 17 December 1984 on the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries,

Recalling also resolution 397(XV) of 12 April 1980 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, by which the Conference of Ministers entrusted the Conference of Ministers of African Least Developed Countries with the responsibility for ensuring the co-ordination of efforts, establishing priorities, monitoring and evaluating progress under the Comprehensive New Programme of Action for the Least Developed Countries in African least developed countries, and Conference of Ministers resolution 503(XIX) of 26 May 1984 on measures for the effective implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action in African least developed countries,

Deeply concerned about the continued serious deterioration in the economic and social conditions of the African least developed countries, exacerbated by the severe drought which has spread across the African region, creating enormous imbalances in food supply and consequently widespread famine in many countries,

Recognizing that there is therefore a need to assist the African least developed countries to effect the necessary structural changes and that they will need increased aid from donors in order to achieve this objective,

Noting with satisfaction the results of the Conference on the Emergency Situation in Africa, convened at Geneva on 11 and 12 March 1985 by the Secretary-General, which was aimed at mobilizing the international community to provide the necessary financial and technical assistance in favour of African countries, especially the least developed among them,

Expressing deep concern and disappointment at the painfully slow pace in the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action in the least developed countries, twenty-six of which are located in Africa, since its adoption in September 1981, and at the negative results of the negotiations on the resolution concerning the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action at the sixth session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, held at Belgrade from 6 June to 2 July 1983,

Recognizing that primary responsibility for their development rests with the least developed countries themselves,

Noting the tremendous efforts made by the African least developed countries in the organization of their respective country review meetings, especially in devising strategies and policies aimed at ensuring the successful implementation of their national development plans and public investment programmes and projects,

1. Strongly urges the African least developed countries to prepare themselves adequately, with the assistance of the Economic Commission for Africa, for the mid-term global review of the implementation of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, to be carried out in September/October 1985, in order to make practical proposals for the readjustment of the Substantial New Programme of Action, as appropriate, to take into consideration their special circumstances and expedite its implementation during the second half of the 1980s;

2. Urges all countries, multilateral financing institutions, United Nations organizations and other concerned intergovernmental, non-governmental and international organizations to be represented at a high level at the meeting on the mid-term global review and to take appropriate measures to put the Substantial New Programme of Action into its proper perspective in order to ensure its effective implementation during the second half of the 1980s;

3. Urges the African least developed countries to intensify their efforts towards increased agricultural production, especially of food, as a means of reducing their ever-increasing dependence on external sources for food, and calls upon the international community to provide the necessary technical and financial assistance for agricultural and rural development in the African least developed countries;

4. Urges:

(a) The developed countries to reaffirm the commitments they undertook under the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade with respect to the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product as official development assistance and to the achievement of that goal by 1985, and in any case not later than in the second half of the Decade;

(b) Donor countries, within the overall context of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries, as adopted, and of progress towards the 0.7 per cent target, to attain 0.15 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance or to double their official development assistance to the least developed countries by 1985 or as soon as possible thereafter;

5. Calls upon the General Assembly to consider increasing the human and financial resources at the disposal of the programme for the African least developed countries of the Economic Commission for Africa so that those countries can be given more effective assistance.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/63

26 July 1985

Meeting 52

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145) without vote, 23 July (meeting 27); draft by ECA (E/1985/106), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

The United States said that, although it had not voted against the text, it had previously reserved its position on the ODA target as well as on SNPA, and did not hold itself committed to reaching those targets. The Federal Republic of Germany and the United Kingdom said they were prepared to accept the target, but not the time scales envisaged. The Federal Republic of Germany added that acceptance of paragraph 4 could not prejudice the outcome of the forthcoming negotiations on the mid-term review of SNPA.

International trade and finance

The Conference of African Ministers of Trade (eighth session, Brazzaville, Congo, 28-31 October)<sup>(28)</sup> considered and made recommendations on recent developments in Africa's international trade relations, domestic and intra-African trade expansion, trade promotion and market research, activities of transnational corporations (TNCs) in Africa and establishment of an African Monetary Fund. It adopted three resolutions, by one of which it decided to convene a preparatory meeting of African experts prior to any future round of multilateral trade negotiations to harmonize the African position, asking the meeting to accord priority to agricultural products, special trade preferences and trade in services. By another, it expressed appreciation of joint ECA International Trade Centre activities for the establishment of trade data banks and a regional trade information system based on use of PADIS, and invited support for those activities. By the third, it expressed support for and urged expeditious conclusion of negotiations for a code of conduct on TNCs.

The ECA Conference in April adopted a resolution<sup>(29)</sup> on the role of trade and finance in alleviating Africa's social and economic crisis. It recommended that African countries develop effective distribution channels in domestic trade and finance and perhaps set up national units to monitor external debt and advise Governments on debt management. It urged them, through subregional and regional institutions, to launch a "Buy African goods" campaign; decided to establish a Conference of African Ministers of Finance to meet at least every two years to assess the impact of the international situation on African economies, assess Africa's external debts, suggest ways to increase resource flows, promote information exchange and devise strategies to strengthen Africa's position in financial negotiations; and appealed to developed countries and lending institutions to increase resource flows to Africa on more concessionary terms.

The secretariat concentrated on three main areas: trade and finance information, trade promotion, and advisory services and training. It gave attention to helping African countries diversify their structural and geographical export and import patterns. Studies were completed of domestic trade structure, mechanisms and distribution channels in the Niger, Senegal and Sierra Leone.

Proposed financing

In a report<sup>(30)</sup> on progress in setting up an African Monetary Fund, submitted to the sixth meeting of the Technical Preparatory Committee of the Whole (Arusha, United Republic of Tanzania, 15-22 April), ECA stated that its advantages could not be over-emphasized. It would provide African countries with access to an autonomous African monetary system, the possibility of having a common unit of accounting, new sources of additional credit tranche and capital resources, exchange-rate surveillance, technical support programmes, balance-of-payment support, an African monetary policy and an African-oriented adjustment programme.

A feasibility study on the Fund was adopted at the second meeting of ECA's Intergovernmental Group of Experts from Ministries of Finance and Central Banks on the establishment of an African Monetary Fund (Addis Ababa, 11-15 April).<sup>(31)</sup> It had been commissioned by the Group in 1982<sup>(32)</sup> and prepared in collaboration with the secretariats of four African organizations.

Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/186. The draft had been deferred from its 1984 session.<sup>(33)</sup>

Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 36/180 of 17 December 1981, in which the international community was invited to apply special measures for the social and economic development of Africa in the 1980s,

Recalling also its resolution 37/139 of 17 December 1982, in which it, inter alia, called upon donor Governments and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to provide substantial resources for promoting the accelerated development of African countries and the effective implementation of the Lagos Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Monrovia Strategy for the Economic Development of Africa, and the Final Act of Lagos,

Appreciating in this regard the establishment of the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States in December 1981,

Noting the progress made in the reduction of tariffs among member States to stimulate growth and development in the area, in the launching of clearance and payments arrangements and in the measures taken to intensify co-operation among member States in the agricultural, industrial, educational, cultural and other sectors, with a view to creating an economic community of the eastern and southern African States by the year 1992,

1. Invites donor Governments to provide substantial financial and technical assistance to the Preferential Trade Area for Eastern and Southern African States to accelerate its development into an economic community;

2. Invites also the United Nations Development Programme to continue to make resources available to the Preferential Trade Area from its regional indicative planning figures on an urgent basis;

3. Calls upon international financial institutions, particularly the World Bank, the International Development Association, the International Fund for Agricultural Development and the African Development Bank, to provide immediate assistance to the Preferential Trade Area;

4. Invites the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system to take into account in their work programmes co-operation with the Preferential Trade Area;

5. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/186

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989Add.3) without vote, 5 December (meeting 48); 12-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L9), orally amended by Vice-Chairman based on informal consultations; agenda item 84 (c).

Sponsors: Burundi, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Rwanda, Somalia, Swaziland, Uganda, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

External debt

The view was unanimously expressed in the ECA Conference of Ministers that Africa's indebtedness was a serious burden, weighing heavily on the debtor countries' scant resources. ECA reports were prepared on the management of Africa's external debt<sup>(34)</sup> and on its balance-of-payments problems.<sup>(35)</sup> The first report outlined specific measures—emergency, medium- and long-term—to deal with Africa's debt crisis. It proposed that Africa call for an international conference on its external indebtedness at which lenders should agree on ways to deal with the debt crisis. It also proposed that a Conference of African Ministers of Finance be constituted as a subsidiary organ of the ECA Conference of Ministers to deal with the crisis and to suggest better policies for resource mobilization and use (see also p. 630). Countries should establish a national committee of external debt management to determine debt policy and external resources use and propose measures to avoid future crises.

The second report stressed that the balance-of-payments problem was basically a structural one, requiring domestically initiated growth and fundamental structural change. There must be a shift in emphasis from the production of a narrow range of primary commodities for export to the use of domestic energies to bring about domestic growth. Available resources must be invested in basic industries that would make for an integrated economy and create internal demand. Africa's physical and service infrastructure—transport, banking, insurance, shipping and other ancillary services—must be reoriented to enhance domestic growth. Full use must be made of regional co-operative arrangements, and intra-African trade and development plans must be drawn up with that end in view.

The second report was introduced at a Round Table of Governors of African Central Banks and Senior Officials of International Finance Institutions (Addis Ababa, 4-7 February),<sup>(36)</sup> which discussed and made recommendations on the balance-of-payments and foreign exchange problems of African countries.

Transport and communications

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa (1978-1988)

The Secretary-General submitted in June 1985 his annual report<sup>(37)</sup> to the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council on the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa, proclaimed by the Assembly in 1977.<sup>(38)</sup> He stated that the report did not include the final results of the first phase of the Decade (1980-1983) because some projects had not been completed and serious information-gathering problems had been encountered.

With respect to the second phase (1984-1988), projects in the transport sector had been classified as follows: maintenance and rehabilitation; training and technical assistance; inter-State links; regional and subregional; and national priority projects. Communications projects were classified somewhat differently, as follows: maintenance and rehabilitation; training; technical assistance; regional, subregional and national, with subregional impact; and other national projects. Reliable data had been obtained (for all or part of their projects) from 28 countries (for transport) and 21 countries (for communications). The data related to 149 projects in transport (out of 581) and to 104 projects in communications (out of 472). The estimated cost of the 149 transport projects, after revision, was $4,472 million; of the 104 communications projects, $543.06 million. Results of the second phase one year after its launching were satisfactory, the Secretary-General said, at least as far as national projects were concerned, although there were indications that the remainder of the programme would be more difficult to finance.

In a further report<sup>(39)</sup> to the Assembly on the Decade, in October, the Secretary-General stated that 91 air transport projects were also envisaged, at a cost of $974.08 million; 84 railway projects at $3,362 million; and 134 postal projects, $528 million.

ECA issued a report<sup>(40)</sup> in April on the need for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of African transport and communications infrastructure, and the ECA Conference of Ministers that month adopted a resolution<sup>(41)</sup> on the Decade. The Conference asked the Secretary-General for resources to organize both the Fifth Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning in 1986 and co-financing meetings for regional projects and projects for land-locked countries. It asked the ECA Executive Secretary to organize at least two co-financing meetings a year to the end of the Decade, and appealed for donor country and financial institution participation in three technical consultative meetings on air transport, railways and postal services scheduled for May, September and November 1985, for financial support for second-phase projects and for transport and communications experts to strengthen the Decade Co-ordination Unit.

JIU report. The Joint Inspection Unit (JIU) presented a report<sup>(42)</sup> in September analysing the conception of the Decade and the validity of the approach adopted, as well as the results of its first phase, and presented a number of recommendations; in transmitting the report to the Assembly, the Secretary-General<sup>(43)</sup> commented on each recommendation. The JIU Inspector felt that a different approach could be considered, i.e. focusing the Decade more on increasing global awareness of African needs, clearly defined, rather than on financing a heterogeneous collection of individual projects and concentrating ECA's role on identifying and executing regional and subregional projects rather than national ones.

Commenting favourably in general on JIU's 10 recommendations, the Secretary-General agreed that the ECA secretariat should assist African Governments in presenting their projects in a format acceptable to financial institutions (recommendation 2), and felt that either of two alternative proposed solutions to the problem of financing regional and subregional projects could be appropriate: either the establishment of an autonomous authority to mobilize finances and implement projects, or, more flexibly, a committee on which States affected by a regional project would be represented (1). ECA should identify by special studies fundamental inter-State projects and facilitate negotiations towards taking follow-up decisions, ensure that projects conformed to Decade objectives, organize fund-raising activities, support and assist African subregional organizations and seek a juridical framework for financing and implementing inter-State projects (5). He suggested that the Conference consider in 1988, rather than in 1986, a suggested medium- and long-term plan to be drawn up defining the role of the Conference of Ministers of Transport and Communications in fund-raising, monitoring, evaluation, etc., and activities to be undertaken by various actors after the end of the Decade (3). JIU recommended (4) a two-year period of reflection and analysis at the end of the Decade to prepare the plan as well as studies called for in recommendation 6 on problems of evaluating the Decade programme, a work programme for an end-of-Decade evaluation and a study of the efficiency of the Decade secretariat; the latter recommendation also suggested that a monitoring and evaluation unit be established at ECA to carry out the activities suggested by JIU, and Governments be assisted in setting up their own evaluation machinery. The Secretary-General said the setting of an institutional framework for co-operation in transport and communications by the regional commissions (recommendation 7) would be discussed by the executive secretaries. He supported arranging in-depth consultations between the ECA and Decade secretariats (8), noted that vacancies in the relevant divisions and units concerned with the Decade had been filled or were under recruitment and early action would be taken to return posts temporarily redeployed (9), and was in general agreement that procedures and central services of ECA provided to the Decade secretariat should be improved (10).

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/191, took note of the Secretary-General's June report<sup>(37)</sup> on the Decade, among others, and adopted by vote resolution 1985/65.

Transport and Communications Decade in Africa
The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 2097(LXIII) of 29 July 1977 and General Assembly resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977, by which the Assembly proclaimed the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa during the years 1978-1988,

Recalling also resolution 464(XVIII) of 2 May 1983 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa, by which the Conference of Ministers requested the Executive Secretary of the Commission to ensure that the programme for the second phase of the Decade would, inter alia, promote harmonization and co-ordination of the various modes of transport and communications, and resolution 487(XIX) of 26 May 1984, by which the Conference of Ministers endorsed the programme for the second phase,

Referring to Council resolution 1984/68 of 27 July 1984 and General Assembly resolutions 38/150 of 19 December 1983 and 39/230 of 18 December 1984,

Noting that financial resources have been allocated by the General Assembly for the activities envisaged in its resolutions 38/150 and 39/230, including the studies on the harmonization and co-ordination of the various modes of transport and communications,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme for his continuing support of the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa through the financing of the Decade Co-ordination Unit and requests him to continue to provide funds to the Economic Commission for Africa during the next programming cycle to enable it to complete the task of monitoring the implementation of the programme for the Decade and to evaluate the results of the whole programme for the Decade;

2. Welcomes the role played by the Inter-Agency Co-ordinating Committee under the Economic Commission for Africa as lead agency in co-ordinating activities and its contribution to realizing the objectives of the Decade;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to provide adequate financial resources to the Economic Commission for Africa to enable it to organize the Fifth Conference of African Ministers of Transport, Communications and Planning in 1986;

4. Requests the Executive Secretary of the Commission:

(a) To organize, in collaboration with other United Nations bodies and African intergovernmental organizations, a co-financing meeting each year until the end of the Decade, for the purpose of submitting specific regional projects and transport corridor projects to appropriate donor countries and financial institutions;

(b) To intensify efforts to contact as many donor countries and financial institutions as possible to promote the programme for the Decade;

5. Also requests the Secretary-General to make available to the Commission sufficient financial resources to enable it to organize co-financing meetings for specific regional projects and projects located in corridors affording access to the sea for land-locked countries;

6. Reiterates the appeals previously made to donor countries and international financial institutions to give increased financial support to the programme for the second phase of the Decade and to accord particular attention to the financing of the regional projects and projects related to the maintenance and rehabilitation of infrastructures, training and technical assistance, and projects in corridors affording access to the sea for land-locked countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/65

26 July 1985

Meeting 52

27-1-16

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145) by roll-call vote (27-1-16), 23 July (meeting 27); draft by ECA (E/1985/106), amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Financial implications. S-G, E/1985/C.1/L.9/Rev.1.

The Secretary-General estimated the resolution's additional budget requirements for 1986-1987 at $140,000.

Both the Committee and the Council voted separately, at the request of the Federal Republic of Germany, on paragraphs 3 to 5 of the resolution, adopting them together, respectively, by a roll-call vote of 27 to 4, with 13 abstentions, and by 26 votes to 7, with 10 abstentions.

Luxembourg stated that the EEC members had been unable to support the draft resolution, whose financial implications had been submitted without adequate explanation. The United States said those implications were substantial and totally unjustified.

Egypt said that if all countries favoured the long-term development of Africa, it saw no reason why some delegations should object to contributing to the Decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the Assembly took note, by decision 40/435, of several documents, including the JIU report and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon, as well as the Secretary-General's June and October reports on the Decade.

Satellite communications and remote sensing

The Inter-Agency Co-ordinating Committee for the establishment of a regional African satellite communications system reached an agreement on the terms of reference and organization of a feasibility study on such system. It secured $600,000 from UNDP, obtained a promise of seed money from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), and sought further financing from the African Development Bank (ADB) and EEC.

The ECA secretariat sent a mission to the headquarters of the African Remote Sensing Council (ARSC) in Bamako, Mali, in September to assess the problems of the Council's secretariat. It found the Council's activities nearly paralysed due mainly to lack of resources. ECA assisted by hosting the sixth meeting of the ARSC Conference of Plenipotentiaries in November.

Strait of Gibraltar (Europe-Africa link)

In an interim report transmitted to the Economic and Social Council in June,<sup>(44)</sup> the executive secretaries of ECA and ECE stated that Morocco and Spain were continuing their technical studies of a Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar. Three options—a tunnel, a floating bridge, a fixed-support bridge—and a combination of those options were being examined. The report noted the importance of legal studies, especially of shipping in the Strait and the legal provisions governing the operation of the structure; given the magnitude of the problems of liability, establishment of an international guarantee fund probably should be considered. The executive secretaries were of the view that the mandate given by the Council<sup>(45)</sup> should be extended, and possibly expanded, and the material means made available for that purpose.

The Economic and Social Council took note of the interim report, among others, on 26 July in decision 1985/191.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/70.

Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1982/57 of 30 July 1982, 1983/62 of 29 July 1983 and 1984/75 of 27 July 1984, concerning the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar,

Referring to the conclusions contained in the interim reports prepared by the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe pursuant to those resolutions and bearing in mind the discussion on this question in the First (Economic) Committee of the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1985,

1. Takes note of the development of studies and work on the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar and the efforts made by Morocco and Spain as co-sponsors of the project, in consultation and co-operation with the Governments of the countries concerned and the international organizations and research institutes of the western Mediterranean region;

2. Invites the Governments of Morocco and Spain to continue to furnish information to Governments, international organizations, research institutes and universities in the Mediterranean area and other regions, as well as to the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa, to continue consultations and co-operation with them and to make concerted efforts with a view to the elaboration of the project;

3. Requests Governments, international organizations and research institutes to continue to co-operate with the Governments of Morocco and Spain and with the Economic Commission for Europe and the Economic Commission for Africa in developing studies and work on the project;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of using extrabudgetary funds to provide the competent commissions with the necessary resources to carry out economic studies on the development of transport in the Mediterranean region in relation to the Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar;

5. Requests the Executive Secretaries of the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic Commission for Europe to submit an interim report on the development of project studies to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1987.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/70

Transport and trade of Zaïre

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/190.

Particular problems facing Zaïre with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets

The General Assembly,

Referring to its resolution 32/160 of 19 December 1977, in which it recalled Economic and Social Council resolution 2097(LXIII) of 29 July 1977 and proclaimed the period 1978-1988 the Transport and Communications Decade in Africa,

Referring also to its resolutions 34/193 of 19 December 1979, 35/59 of 5 December 1980, 36/139 of 16 December 1981, 37/205 of 20 December 1982 and 38/143 of 19 December 1983 on particular problems facing Zaïre with regard to transport, transit and access to foreign markets, and approving the organization in 1985 of a second round-table meeting with donor countries and financing institutions for Zaïre's projects in these three fields,

Recalling resolution 110(V) of 3 June 1979, of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council decision 249(LXIII) of 25 July 1977 and resolution 1981/68 of 24 July 1981, as well as resolution 293(XIII) of 26 February 1977 adopted by the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa,

Bearing in mind the report of the Secretary-General on the outcome of the first round-table meeting on the financing of the transport projects of Zaïre, held at Kinshasa on 28 and 29 June 1983,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take the necessary steps to ensure that the programme submitted to the first round-table meeting on the financing of the transport projects of Zaïre, held in 1983, as updated, is again submitted to donors and financial institutions before the forty-first session of the General Assembly, through a second round-table meeting or any other appropriate mechanism;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to submit to the General Assembly at its forty-first session a report on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/190

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989Add.3) without vote, 11 December (meeting 50); draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.117), based on informal consultations on draft by Argentina, Benin, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Chad, Ecuador, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Madagascar, Mauritania, Morocco, Niger, Peru, Rwanda, Senegal, Uganda, Zaire and Zambia (A/C.2/40/L.49); agenda item 84 Id.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 41, 50; plenary 119.

Industrial development in Africa

Implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa

Activities in support of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (IDDA) (1980-1990), proclaimed by the General Assembly in 1980,<sup>(46)</sup> continued in 1985.

A fourth progress report<sup>(47)</sup> on IDDA, prepared in response to a 1984 Assembly request<sup>(48)</sup> by the Executive Director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO), in co-operation with the ECA Executive Secretary, was considered by the UNIDO Industrial Development Board (IDB) in May 1985 and later submitted by the Secretary-General<sup>(49)</sup> to the Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. The report described co-operation between ECA, OAU and UNIDO during 1984 in respect of IDDA and was prepared by the secretariats of the three organizations, summarizing their activities in accordance with the priorities established within the framework of the Lagos Plan of Action.<sup>(50)</sup> An executive summary<sup>(51)</sup> of the report was prepared by ECA.

On 31 May,<sup>(51)</sup> IDB took note of the progress report, expressed concern at the deteriorating economic situation in Africa, urged Governments, particularly those of developed countries, and organizations to increase their support of IDDA, and called on UNIDO to intensify its efforts to implement the programme for the Decade.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in April,<sup>(52)</sup> called on member States to adjust their IDDA programmes, allocate needed resources and take the necessary measures to implement industrial priority projects. It urged States and intergovernmental organizations to endorse subregional integrated industrial promotion programmes, welcomed the Assembly's decision to increase from $1 million to $5 million the annual allocation from the United Nations regular budget to UNIDO for the Decade, and called on the Assembly to consider allocating $700,000 annually to enable ECA and MULPOCs to conduct negotiations on implementing multinational projects.

An African regional workshop of experts was held (Addis Ababa, 11-13 December) to promote fuller participation of private businesses and parastatals in the implementation of IDDA.

IDDA activities. ECA continued to gear activities in the industrial development sector to support for IDDA. According to the 1984-1985 report<sup>(1)</sup> of the Executive Secretary, activities were organized around four subprogrammes. One was concerned with general policy and institutional matters, reflecting the secretariat's concern with deficiencies in member States' capacity to formulate and promote industrial programmes. The others related to basic, agro- and forest-based, and small-scale industries.

The ECA secretariat provided consultancy services, particularly to the African Regional Centre for Engineering Design and Manufacturing. Small-scale industry development services were provided to countries in West and Central Africa. In the agro- and forest-based industries, a Compendium on Composite Flours was published in English and French, and the secretariat took part in a Seminar on Composite Flours (Lagos, Nigeria, June). Advisory services were provided to the Congo and Zaire on how best to transfer and adapt cassava processing technology from the Ivory Coast. Advisory services were also provided to MULPOCs' member States in the forest industries subsector and, in April/May, to Djibouti, Madagascar and the Comoros in support of work on chemicals and fertilizers. The Eastern and Southern African MULPOC project on traditional medicines was under way; its objectives included the production of essential drugs using local materials and plants.

In the engineering industries, the secretariat undertook field work in the Gambia, Ghana and Sierra Leone during November and December to determine industrial capacities and potentials. Assistance was provided to Burundi and Rwanda to determine ways of upgrading existing foundry, forging, heat treatment and metal forming machine shops, tool rooms and metal coating shops and, in addition, to Kenya, Mauritius, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe to determine needs for the manufacture of spare parts for mining, ore refining, iron and steel, engineering and agricultural and transport equipment.

Technical assistance was provided in collaboration with the West Africa MULPOC to the Mano River Union and the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in identifying metallurgical projects within the IDDA framework; a study on alternative technologies for sponge iron production was prepared and an evaluation of potential iron and steel projects in Preferential Trade Area countries was conducted.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/61.

Industrial Development Decade for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling resolution 491(XIX) of 26 May 1984 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Recalling also General Assembly resolution 39/233 of 18 December 1984, in which the Assembly endorsed the appeal made by the Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry, held at Addis Ababa from 26 to 28 March 1984, for the allocation of at least $5 million, on a permanent annual basis, from the regular budget of the United Nations to enable the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to assist the African countries and the intergovernmental organizations concerned in the implementation of the programme for the Industrial Development Decade for Africa,

Welcoming the declaration on the critical economic situation in Africa made by the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity at its twentieth ordinary session, held at Addis Ababa from 12 to 15 November 1984, in which it endorsed the programme for the Decade and the recommendations of the Seventh Conference of African Ministers of Industry, in particular resolution I(VII) on the implementation of the programme for the Decade,

Conscious of the need to alleviate the effects of the current economic crisis in Africa, particularly in the priority industries which support the rehabilitation and revitalization of the food and agricultural sector,

Recalling resolution 2(VIII) of March 1985 of the Lusaka-based Multinational Programming and Operational Centre and similar resolutions of other such centres on the role that the centres have to play in the effective and speedy implementation of the Decade at the subregional level, particularly with respect to multinational projects,

1. Recognizes, and expresses appreciation for, measures taken or under way in Member States, intergovernmental organizations and the secretariats of the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to implement the programme for and the activities of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa, and urges all concerned to continue and intensify their efforts;

2. Takes note of the decision of the General Assembly to increase to an annual minimum of $5 million the allocation from the regular budget of the United Nations to the United Nations Industrial Development Organization for the Decade;

3. Calls upon the General Assembly to consider the allocation to the Economic Commission for Africa of $700,000, to be absorbed from the $5 million already approved—in Assembly resolution 39/233—in the regular budget for the biennium 1986-1987, to enable the Commission and the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres to conduct consultations and negotiations on ways of implementing multinational projects, including investment promotion;

4. Requests the secretariats of the Organization of African Unity, the Economic Commission for Africa and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization to continue providing their services to enable member States to implement the programme for the Decade effectively.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/61

26 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145) without vote, 23 July (meeting 27); draft by ECA (E/1985/106), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

The Council on 25 July, by decision 1985/170, adopted on the recommendation of the First Committee, took note of the fourth progress report of the UNIDO Executive Director and the ECA Executive Secretary on IDDA.

In a related action, the ECA Conference on 29 April adopted a resolution<sup>(53)</sup> urging countries to ratify the agreement establishing the African Industrial Development Fund, appealing for contributions and requesting ADB to consider the most economical ways of managing the Fund.

Natural resources and energy

During 1985, the ECA programme in mineral resources provided technical and administrative assistance to member States, the Eastern and Southern African Mineral Resources Development Centre at Dodoma, United Republic of Tanzania, and the Central African Mineral Resources Development Centre at Brazzaville.

The Second Regional Conference on the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa (Lusaka, Zambia, 12 and 13 March)<sup>(54)</sup> discussed the latest developments in intra-African mineral trade, development financing, small-scale mining and technical issues covering mineral commodities, and adopted the Lusaka Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of Mineral Resources in Africa,<sup>(55)</sup> which outlined measures to tackle the constraints affecting performance in the mineral sector.

The ECA Conference of Ministers in April adopted a resolution<sup>(56)</sup> endorsing and urging implementation of the recommendations of the Second Regional Conference and urging member States to implement those of the Lusaka Programme of Action. It called on the Economic Community of Central African States, ECOWAS, SADCC and other subregional organs to promote multicountry co-operation in mineral resources development. It asked that the third regional conference be convened in 1987.

Surveys of copper, bauxite, alumina, aluminium, gold, cassiterite and associated minerals as well as building and fertilizer raw materials were conducted in Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Equatorial Guinea, Ghana, Guinea, Mauritania and the Niger.

The data base of records on geological, technical and economic aspects of mineral industries was increased from 5,000 to 7,500 references.

Marine and water resources

The ECA secretariat undertook an advisory mission to Somalia in October/November on the development of human and material resources for exploiting sea resources. It organized the African intergovernmental meeting of experts on aspects of exploration and exploitation of sea-bed resources in the context of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (Addis Ababa, 11-14 November). It carried out a study<sup>(57)</sup> on African capabilities for the exploration, exploitation and development of marine resources.

Advisory missions to Burkina Faso, Ghana, Guinea, the Ivory Coast, Mali, the Niger and Somalia assisted in the assessment, development and management of their water resources. Studies were carried out on the African crisis and water development, preservation and utilization,<sup>(58)</sup> and on progress in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Plan of Action<sup>(59)</sup> in Africa (1978-1984).<sup>(60)</sup>

Energy

The exploration, exploitation and optimum use of hydrocarbons and coal was studied by missions to Botswana, Chad, the Congo, Malawi, Mozambique, Nigeria, Swaziland, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Advisory services on integrated energy policies were rendered to Burundi, Liberia, the Niger, Rwanda and Sierra Leone. A report<sup>(61)</sup> on the possibility of developing ocean energy resources of East African coastal States was submitted to the ECA Conference of Ministers in April.

The Conference adopted a resolution<sup>(62)</sup> requesting the Executive Director of the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, with the ECA Executive Secretary, to study the role of TNCs in the petroleum industry in Africa. Special reference was to be given to price fluctuations vis-a-vis the producer countries and the cost to African countries of oil and oil products.

Food and agriculture

About 150 million people in Africa were currently suffering from malnutrition and hunger, the Secretary-General stated in a June report<sup>(63)</sup> prepared in response to a 1984 General Assembly request,<sup>(64)</sup> in spite of the continent's immense potential to increase production several-fold.

Africa had undergone a drastic decline in food production in 1983-1984, and the food situation had continued to deteriorate. In 1984-1985, 21 African countries experienced exceptional food shortages: cereal production was 14 per cent lower than the 1983 output which had been affected by drought, and 23 per cent below the 1981-1982 average. The total import requirement was estimated at 10.2 million tons. Besides food deliveries, critical needs included seeds, fertilizers, chemicals, water, veterinary medicine, livestock feed and destocking operations compatible with pasture carrying-capacity. Provision of trucks, spare parts and maintenance facilities was extremely important for relief operations. The report also examined trends in agricultural production and trade, causes of the long-term agricultural decline, proposals for recovery, and the production of selected food crops, by subregion.

In a July note<sup>(65)</sup> to the Economic and Social Council, the Secretary-General expressed regret that, because of demands on the Secretariat as a result of the emergency situation in Africa, there had been a delay in elaborating plans for a proposed international year for the mobilization of financial and technological resources to increase food production in Africa, as the Assembly had requested in 1983.<sup>(66)</sup>

In his June report<sup>(67)</sup> on regional co-operation (see p. 624), the Secretary-General stated that the ECA Conference of Ministers had recognized the critical food situation as originating in the unwillingness of African Governments to accept that agriculture was the major engine for economic development and to allocate resources accordingly. Policies in many African countries still bore the signs of the colonial legacy. Many countries still followed urban-biased development, with rural-urban terms of trade skewed against the food and agriculture sector. The situation had been aggravated by drought, pests, desertification and natural disasters and by external factors, including prolonged world economic recession, lack of market access, worsening terms of trade and increased interest rates.

The ECA Conference in April adopted a resolution<sup>(68)</sup> calling on African Governments to design and implement self-sustaining agricultural development policies and to increase domestic investment in agriculture, with emphasis on research, technology, incentive packages geared to small-holder producers, irrigation, and manpower training, and calling for assistance from financial institutions and donors. It also adopted a resolution<sup>(69)</sup> urging donor countries to accelerate the second replenishment process for the International Fund for Agricultural Development, which was evolving a special programme for Africa.

ECA and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) organized an expert consultation (Arusha, 12-14 November) to identify specific food marketing-related activities which could be improved through TCDC and between African countries and discuss establishment of a regional institution for such TCDC activities.

The ECA secretariat prepared a report on planning issues for the development of subsistence farming, discussing deficiencies in planning machineries and ways to remedy the situation, which was presented at the seventh round table of the African Association for Public Administration and Management (Accra, Ghana, 2-7 December). It also prepared a summary report<sup>(70)</sup> on the African food and agriculture crisis—prospects and proposals for 1985 and 1986.

Science and technology

The implementation in the African region of the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development<sup>(71)</sup> was reviewed at the seventh session of the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development (New York, 28 May-7 June). The ECA secretariat hosted the fifth ECA/UNESCO joint meeting (Addis Ababa, 8 and 9 July) to review their collaborative activities, and organized the fourth meeting of the Intergovernmental Committee of Experts for Science and Technology Development (Addis Ababa, 18-22 November),<sup>(72)</sup> which asked ECA to explore establishment of a conference of African ministers responsible for science and technology to harmonize policies.

An advisory mission to Madagascar in July studied the national infrastructure and recommended the establishment of a national science and technology commission.

An ECA Conference of Ministers April resolution<sup>(73)</sup> urged EEC to provide African countries, through the African Institute for Higher Technical Training and Research, with assistance for industrial manpower development.

A Rural Technology Demonstration Centre was established in 1985 at Dakar, Senegal, by ECA and India. The Centre would provide training and facilitate replication and popularization of appropriate rural technologies, with the help of local entrepreneurs.

Human resources and social development

The fourth Conference of African Ministers of Social Affairs (Addis Ababa, 25 and 26 March),<sup>(74)</sup> organized by ECA and OAU, agreed to establish an African Rehabilitation Institute for Disabled Persons.

An expert consultation on the role of rural co-operatives in Africa was organized by the secretariat, in collaboration with FAO, UNIDO, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and the International Co-operative Alliance (Addis Ababa, 7-11 October).

The secretariat prepared reports on the crisis of unemployment and human resources management in Africa<sup>(75)</sup> and human resources management in Africa—an agenda for action.<sup>(76)</sup> Recommendations contained in the reports, as well as the report of the second Conference of Ministers Responsible for Human Resources Planning, Development and Utilization (Addis Ababa, 9 and 10 October 1984),<sup>(77)</sup> were endorsed by the ECA Conference of Ministers.<sup>(78)</sup>

ECA participated in the Seventh United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders (Milan, Italy, 26 August-6 September), which adopted a resolution<sup>(79)</sup> requesting the creation of an African Regional Institute for the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders.

The second Conference of Vice-Chancellors, Rectors and Presidents of Institutions of Higher Learning in Africa (Mbabane, Swaziland, 18-22 February),<sup>(80)</sup> adopted the Mbabane Programme of Action on means of strengthening those institutions' contribution to Africa's socio-economic development. It included recommendations on the revision of education content and research, greater research of development-related topics, general improvement of the education system, improved training for teachers and research workers, and tapping private sources of funds to supplement public funding for education. The ECA Conference of Ministers in April adopted a resolution<sup>(81)</sup> urging African institutions of higher learning to implement the Mbabane Programme and African Governments to assist in its implementation.

Population

Representatives at an ECA/Regional Institute for Population Studies (RIPS) regional training workshop on demographic estimates and projections (Accra, 15-29 July) shared experiences in the use of national population projections in planning and received training in the use of the United Nations computer programme in preparing the projections. The workshop also dealt with sub-national and sectoral projections.

The secretariat provided technical support to RIPS in the organization of a seminar on internal migration and regional African development (Accra, 2-8 August) and organized the first advisory meeting of the Population Information Network for Africa (POPIN-Africa) (Addis Ababa, December).

Population information activities under POPIN-Africa included the publication of the African Population Newsletter, POPINDEX Africa, a population abstract journal; and POPIN-Africa Briefs, a newsletter of the Network.

The ECA Conference of Ministers in April<sup>(82)</sup> urged African Governments to continue their support of the African demographic training institutes, urged the member countries of the Institut de formation et de recherche démographiques at Yaounde, Cameroon, to pay the arrears on their contributions and members of RIPS to pay their contributions, and appealed to UNFPA to restore its funding of the institutes at least to 1983 levels and to continue such funding beyond 1987.

Environment

The ECA Conference of Ministers considered a report<sup>(83)</sup> recommending long-term measures for drought and desertification control in Africa, including the drawing up of a national control plan and national co-ordination and evaluation machinery, the promotion of public participation, vegetation and water resources conservation and protection of common ecosystems, the use of alternative sources of energy to ease deforestation, and manpower and institutional development.

The third meeting of the Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment (Addis Ababa, 22-26 July)<sup>(84)</sup> reviewed progress on environmental matters, including long-term measures to combat drought and desertification; the implementation of an ECA/United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) project on incorporating environmental components into the training programmes of ECA-sponsored institutions; the establishment or improvement of national standards for the protection of the African environment; national environmental legislation and ECA/OAU technical projects on implementing treaties on the environment; and an ECA/WMO feasibility study on establishing an African Centre of Meteorological Applications for Development (see p. 627).

With regard to environmental education and training, the secretariat visited in 1985 various African institutions to assist in the development of a core curriculum. An ECA/UNEP/ADB training workshop was subsequently held (Abidjan, Ivory Coast, 18-23 November) at which lecturers from ECA-sponsored institutions adapted the core curriculum to the training of bankers, development planners, social workers, aerial survey technicians and design engineers.

An African Environmental Conference organized by UNEP (Cairo, Egypt, 16-18 December)<sup>(85)</sup> recommended a joint ECA/UNEP/OAU permanent secretariat to implement the Conference's Cairo Programme for African Co-operation in Environment and Development (see Chapter XVI of this section).

The General Assembly in resolution 40/198 B endorsed a UNEP Governing Council decision to add the United Republic of Tanzania to the list of countries to be assisted by UNSO in their efforts to combat desertification.

Human settlements

The Joint Intergovernmental Regional Committee on Human Settlements and Environment, at its July meeting, in addition to considering drought and desertification (see above), received country reports from member States on human settlements projects aimed at improving housing for low-income groups and the ongoing preparations for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987), human settlements policies, land problems in urban areas and housing programmes for the masses, development of decentralized systems of building materials production, and indicators for revised building codes and regulations.

The Committee declared<sup>(84)</sup> that seven main areas of action with respect to land for low-income housing called for national measures: the constitution of public land reserves; tax policy; credit policy; involvement of the private sector in housing construction; security of tenure for squatters; government intervention in land prices; and increasing government involvement in land development. International action could include the establishment of a data bank, pooling of information and experience, training of manpower and implementation of pilot projects.

Women in development in Africa

ECA focused on the promotion of training opportunities for the participation of women in development activities. Seminars on women and decision-making in the media (Addis Ababa, 11-14 February) and on improving the data base, statistics and indicators for women and development in Africa (Harare, Zimbabwe, 29 April-7 May) were held and two subregional seminars, one for women managers and one on management and development planning for women, were organized at Arusha, in June and September, respectively.

To encourage technical co-operation among women, ECA organized an interregional workshop on women's textile and garment co-operatives (Bamako, 13 October-2 November).

Two training workshops on women in entrepreneurship were held in Kenya (15 April-21 June and 14 October-20 December) for English-speaking Africans and another two in the Ivory Coast (25 February-3 May and 20 May-26 July) for those from French-speaking countries.

The ECA Conference of Ministers, in April, considered the report<sup>(86)</sup> of the 1984 Regional Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting<sup>(87)</sup> for the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace/Third Regional Conference on the Integration of Women in Development (see Chapter XIX of this section). The sixth meeting of the Africa Regional Co-ordinating Committee on the Integration of Women in Development (Addis Ababa, 15-17 April)<sup>(88)</sup> adopted the report of the Third Regional Conference and asked Governments and institutions to begin applying the Arusha Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of African Women beyond the Decade for Women, as contained in that report. It also requested States to sign the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,<sup>(89)</sup> asked for sustained assistance for national integration machinery, and called on African Governments to include women in their delegations to international and regional meetings. It also asked those Governments to allow a satisfactory number of high-level representatives to attend the 1985 World Conference and urged African women to take a united stand to ensure that the interests of the continent were safeguarded. These and other provisions were also included in two resolutions<sup>(90)</sup> of the ECA Conference of Ministers.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/67.

Women and development in Africa

The Economic and Social Council,
Recalling resolution 28 of the World Conference of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace, on the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women,

Bearing in mind resolution 512(XIX) of 26 May 1984 of the Conference of Ministers of the Economic Commission for Africa on the mobilization of human and financial resources for the women's programme of the Commission beyond the end of the United Nations Decade for Women,

Bearing in mind also that women subjected to the policies of apartheid and women in illegally occupied Namibia are still victims of all forms of injustice, violent oppression and atrocities perpetrated by the racist régime of South Africa, and that the status of women in the front-line States has been seriously affected by the aggression and destabilizing policies of South Africa,

1. Requests Governments and international organizations to sustain their assistance for national machineries concerned with the integration of women in development to enable them to formulate and execute national programmes for women's development, taking into account, in particular, the Arusha Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of African Women beyond the United Nations Decade for Women;

2. Urgently requests States which have not yet done so to sign the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and States which have signed it to ratify it and do everything possible to ensure its application;

3. Requests the Secretary-General and the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa to spare no effort to procure regular budget posts and appropriations for the African Training and Research Centre for Women and the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres, through the redeployment of vacant posts and in the context of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1986-1987, in order to ensure the continuity of the United Nations regional and subregional women's programmes.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/67

26 July 1985

Meeting 52

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145Add.1) without vote, 24 July (meeting 28); draft by ECA (E/1985/106), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations and by Zimbabwe; agenda item 8.

Statistics

The fourth meeting of directors of centres participating in the Statistical Training Programme for Africa (STPA) (Addis Ababa, 4-8 November)<sup>(91)</sup> made recommendations on an evaluation of STPA and future work programmes; the impact of training guide syllabuses at STPA and other training centres and statistical offices; the co-operative development of teaching programmes; special assistance to Portuguese-speaking African countries in statistical training; and technical and financial assistance and dissemination of information on training activities.

Other meetings included a seminar on the development of a statistical data base (30 September-4 October) and a Working Group on the Development of Civil Registration Systems and Vital Statistics Collection in Africa (21-26 October), both at Addis Ababa.

Portuguese as a working language

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted by vote resolution 1985/68.

Inclusion of Portuguese among the official working languages of the Economic Commission for Africa

The Economic and Social Council,

Considering the number of States members of the Economic Commission for Africa and the growing numbers of people in those countries that use Portuguese as an official working language,

Noting that basic economic, social and cultural development in any country depends on the transmission of technical and scientific information through the medium of language,

Recognizing that, at various summit meetings in Africa, the question of the Portuguese language has been discussed and has been of concern to the heads of State and Government of five countries that officially use Portuguese,

Realizing that, because of language difficulties, the people of those countries do not derive maximum benefit from the technical assistance, professional training, seminars and other activities that might facilitate their integration into the social and economic programmes being carried out at the subregional and regional levels,

1. Decides that Portuguese should be introduced gradually as an official working language of the Economic Commission for Africa;

2. Requests the General Assembly to make the necessary arrangements to this effect.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/68

26 July 1985

Meeting 52

30-12-5

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145/Add.1) by roll-call vote (28-11-5), 24 July (meeting 28); draft by ECA (E/1985/106), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Financial implications. S-G, E/1985/C.1/L.12/Rev.1.

Luxembourg, on behalf of the EEC member countries, stated that since Portuguese was not an official United Nations language, its introduction into ECA would be an unfortunate precedent. Moreover, further charges on the United Nations regular budget should be avoided, in view of the current financial situation.

Sweden, speaking also on behalf of Finland and Iceland, said they had abstained because resources were limited and they were not convinced that the proposal could be regarded as a priority matter. The United States opposed the text on the grounds of its financial implications and the prospects of much greater costs in the future.

The Secretary-General, in a September report,<sup>(92)</sup> noting the Council's decision, said it would be proposed to the General Assembly, to commence in 1986. Translations of some documents, but no interpretation to and from Portuguese, would be provided to ECA meetings. Additional requirements for 1986-1987 were estimated at $167,400.

The Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (ACABQ) pointed out in October<sup>(93)</sup> that the term "official working language" was new and the question arose as to precisely what services would be required for Portuguese. It believed that the definition of the term should be referred back to ECA and the Council for clarification and, pending Assembly consideration, no action be taken with regard to the resources requested.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote section VIII of resolution 40/252.

Inclusion of Portuguese among the official and/or working languages of the Economic Commission for Africa

[The General Assembly . . .]

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the inclusion of Portuguese among the official and/or working languages of the Economic Commission for Africa and the related report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions,

1. Decides to take no action with regard to the resources requested for the inclusion of Portuguese among the "official working languages" of the Economic Commission for Africa;

2. Further decides to refer the question of the meaning of the expression "official working language" to the Economic Commission for Africa and the Economic and Social Council for clarification in time for consideration by the General Assembly at its forty-first session;

General Assembly resolution 40/252, section VIII

18 December 1985

Meeting 122

Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/40/1069) without objection, 2 December (meeting 52); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 116.

Work programme

The ECA Conference of Ministers in April endorsed<sup>(94)</sup> ECA's proposals for its work programme and priorities for 1986-1987 and urged support for them in CPC, specifically to ensure that adequate resources were made available to ECA, particularly in the priority sectors of food and agriculture, drought and desertification, water development, transport and communications and industrial development.

Sessions

On 8 February, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/109, by which it decided that the twentieth session of ECA and eleventh meeting of the ECA Conference of Ministers, to be held in April, should be held at Addis Ababa. This action was orally proposed by the Council President on behalf of the Bureau, following informal consultations, and was approved without vote.

On 15 March,<sup>(95)</sup> the United Republic of Tanzania offered to host the meetings at Arusha; the Council accepted that offer on 22 March by decision 1985/112, but, on 8 April,<sup>(96)</sup> the Council President advised that the offer had been withdrawn owing to unforeseen events, and that the meetings would be held at Addis Ababa instead.

Cameroon, in a 22 July letter,<sup>(97)</sup> annexed a statement it had made to an informal meeting of the Council's First Committee on 19 July, inviting ECA to hold in April 1986 its twenty-first session and the Conference of Ministers' twelfth meeting at Yaounde, declaring that it would pay the additional required expenditure of $250,100 estimated by the Secretary-General.<sup>(98)</sup> The Council adopted decision 1985/189 on 26 July, accepting Cameroon's offer, on the recommendation of the First Committee.

Expansion and maintenance of ECA conference facilities and buildings

Responding to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(99)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in November 1985 a progress report<sup>(100)</sup> on the construction of ECA conference facilities at Addis Ababa. He stated that it had been decided to hold a competition in 1986 for the design of new construction (one large, one medium and four small conference rooms) and that the completion date for them was approximately five years after General Assembly approval, i.e. December 1989. Construction was to start in the fourth quarter of 1987. Through 31 December 1985, expenditures for the project were estimated at $270,000; the balance of the appropriation for the 1984-1985 biennium ($2,850,000) would be carried over into the 1986-1987 biennium. No new appropriation was, therefore, being requested, since estimated expenditures for 1986-1987 for a quantity surveyor, architectural competition and architect/engineers' fees, construction and other expenses were $2,800,000.

The Secretary-General also submitted<sup>(101)</sup> proposals for limited remodelling and repair of the main conference room in Africa Hall in 1986-1987. The estimated cost was $3,074,500. ACABQ<sup>(102)</sup> believed that the remodelling proposal should be evaluated in the context of the overall construction project and pending the outcome of the design competition. Also it should be deferred in the light of 13 other priority maintenance projects scheduled for 1986-1987. In the same report, the Secretary-General submitted details of the 13 major maintenance projects, part of a 10-year building maintenance programme for ECA. The projects were estimated to cost $1,225,900, reduced by $138,500 previously allocated, plus $115,000 to establish maintenance shops; ACABQ recommended an additional appropriation of $1,202,400 for those purposes.

The Fifth Committee, in approving the 1986-1987 budget estimates under section 32 (construction, alteration, improvement and major maintenance of premises) on 27 November by a recorded vote of 85 to 2, with 15 abstentions, approved an additional appropriation of $1,202,400 for the biennium.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote section VI of resolution 40/252.

Building management, maintenance and alterations at the Headquarters of the Economic Commission for Africa

[The General Assembly . . .]

Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly on the implementation of the building maintenance projects at the headquarters of the Economic Commission for Africa, in the context of his annual progress reports on the construction of conference facilities at Addis Ababa;

General Assembly resolution 40/252, section VI

18 December 1985 Meeting 122 Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/40/1069) without objection, 27 November (meeting 49); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 116.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 5th Committee 48, 49; plenary 122.

ECA-sponsored institutions

The Fifth Conference of Chief Executives of ECA-sponsored Regional and Subregional Institutions (Addis Ababa, 10 and 11 January)<sup>(103)</sup> called on institutions to contribute to the Buffer Fund for the publication of the bulletin of ECA-sponsored institutions, decided that the second such bulletin, The Institutions at Work, should come out during the April meeting of the ECA Conference of Ministers, and also decided that the chief executives should send to ECA their comments on proposals for a group insurance scheme for the institutions.

A consolidated biennial report<sup>(104)</sup> on the activities of ECA-sponsored institutions for 1984-1985 was submitted to the Conference of Ministers. The report covered more than 30 African intergovernmental institutions which, individually, African Governments had found too costly to operate on their own. The institutions were active in such areas as manpower development, management training, trade and transport, natural resources and industrial development, and financial and monetary affairs.

The Ad Hoc Committee on ECA- and OAU-sponsored institutions, established in 1983 by the ECA Conference of Ministers to evaluate and make proposals regarding those institutions, submitted its final report<sup>(105)</sup> in April. The report contained recommendations on harmonization and merger of the institutions; it stressed that African countries should pay their contributions to the institutions to which they belonged or cease to be members.

The Conference approved<sup>(106)</sup> a number of the Ad Hoc Committee's recommendations, among them: to ascertain from the Governments belonging to and those hosting the sponsored institutions whether they were still interested in them and the extent to which they would support them financially; the institutions should explore ways to increase revenues and reduce costs. The Conference of Ministers also adopted a resolution<sup>(107)</sup> urging member States to give high priority to improving their institutions for public administration, management development and public financial management and requesting the ECA Executive Secretary to provide increased assistance to States in those fields.

Multinational Programming and Operational Centres

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted by vote resolution 1985/66. Similar provisions had been included in a Conference of Ministers resolution<sup>(108)</sup> of 29 April.

Appointment of directors of Multinational Programming and Operational Centres

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking note of the fact that most of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres of the Economic Commission for Africa are currently headed by interim rather than by titular directors,

Conscious of the importance of the economic role of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres for subregional co-operation and integration and of the need for them to be appropriately staffed at the highest level, having regard to the sensitive nature of their responsibilities,

Aware of the need to procure the services of persons possessing the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity and to observe United Nations rules concerning the equitable geographical distribution of posts among the Member States,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to take all the necessary steps to ensure that the posts of directors of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres are expeditiously filled;

2. Further requests the Secretary-General to ensure that the directors of the Multinational Programming and Operational Centres are, whenever appropriate, nationals of the States members of the centres, in accordance with the practice followed in the Economic Commission for Africa.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/66

26 July 1985

Meeting 52

34-1-9

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145) by roll-call vote (34-1-9), 23 July (meeting 27); draft by ECA (E/1985/106), orally amended by Secretary following informal consultations; agenda item 8.

Both the First Committee and the Council voted separately on paragraph 2 (in the Committee at the request of Luxembourg), which was adopted in Committee by a roll-call vote of 31 to 10, with 3 abstentions, and in the Council by 33 votes to 10, with 3 abstentions.

Luxembourg declared that although EEC member States favoured strengthening MULPOCs, they were unable to vote in favour since paragraph 2 specified particular nationalities for particular posts, which ran counter to the United Nations principle of universality. The United States said it was not the function of the Council to instruct the Secretary-General to hire individuals of particular nationalities.

Co-operation between the United Nations and SADCC

Pursuant to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(109)</sup> the Secretary-General presented in September 1985 a request<sup>(110)</sup> on co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. The sixth SADCC Conference (Mbabane, 31 January and 1 February) focused on food and agriculture, but working groups were also established to review co-operation in energy, transport and communications, manpower, and industry and mining. In addition to the nine SADCC member States (Angola, Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe), the Conference was attended by representatives of 23 other Governments and 18 international organizations.

The sixth SADCC Summit of heads of State (Arusha, 9 August) welcomed an initiative by the Nordic countries to broaden their involvement with SADCC.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/195.

Co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 37/248 of 21 December 1982, 38/160 of 19 December 1983 and 39/215 of 18 December 1984, by which it, inter alia, requested the Secretary-General to promote co-operation between the organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and urged intensification of contacts in order to accelerate the achievement of the objectives of the Lusaka Declaration of 1 April 1980, by which the Conference was established,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference,

Noting the significant progress made by the Conference in formulating concrete development programmes, and that most of these are at the implementation stage,

Recognizing that successful implementation of these programmes can be achieved only if the Conference has adequate resources at its disposal,

Deeply concerned about the deteriorating economic and security situation in southern Africa and the particularly difficult environment for regional co-operation caused by acts of destabilization by South Africa,

Convinced that increased self-reliance by States members of the Conference would contribute to the struggle against the apartheid policies of South Africa,

Welcoming the progress made by some organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system in formulating and executing co-operation programmes with the Conference,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-operation between the United Nations and the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, which describes the progress made in the implementation of the relevant resolutions of the General Assembly;

2. Commends the Member States and organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system that have established contacts with and extended concrete assistance to the Conference;

3. Appeals to the international community to increase substantially its financial and material support to the Conference;

4. Also appeals to the specialized agencies and other organs and organizations of the United Nations system to co-operate fully in the development programmes of the Conference;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Executive Secretary of the Conference, to continue and intensify contacts aimed at promoting and harmonizing co-operation between the United Nations and the Conference;

6. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its forty-second session on the implementation of the present resolution.

General Assembly resolution 40/195

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.5) without vote, 4 December (meeting 47); 17-nation draft (A/C.2/40/L.40); agenda item 84 (e).

Sponsors: Angola, Botswana, Canada, Comoros, Denmark, Finland, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Netherlands, Norway, Swaziland, Sweden, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, Zimbabwe.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 36, 47; plenary 119.

The Assembly in resolution 40/64 I appealed to States, organizations and institutions to give more assistance to the front-line States and SADCC to increase their economic strength and independence from South Africa.

Asia and the Pacific

The Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific held its forty-first session at Bangkok, Thailand, from 19 to 29 March. In its annual reports for the periods 28 April 1984-29 March 1985(1) and 30 March 1985-2 May 1986,(2) it appraised the implementation of the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade(3) (the 1980s) and the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for the Least Developed Countries.(4) Consideration was given to the implementation of the Tokyo Programme on Technology for Development in Asia and the Pacific—a 1984 Commission resolution adopting the ESCAP Plan of Action on Technology for Development(5)—and to the programmes for the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994),(6) which was formally launched in January at the Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Transport and Communications.

The Commission also considered sectoral issues in various ESCAP fields of activity, endorsed the 1986-1987 draft programme of work and priorities, reviewed the functioning of regional institutions and special projects, and endorsed proposals by the Executive Secretary relating to improvement of the functions of the legislative committees.

ESCAP committees discussed food and agriculture and rural development; transnational corporations; industry, technology and human settlements; the environment; international trade; natural resources and energy; population; shipping, ports and inland waterways; transport, communication and tourism; and statistics. An Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development was held in October in lieu of the fourth session of the Committee on Social Development, originally scheduled for 1984.

Brunei Darussalam and Tuvalu were admitted as full members of ESCAP, which consisted of 38 member and six associate member nations.

The mid-year to mid-year work of the regional commissions, including ESCAP, was summarized in a June report<sup>(7)</sup> of the Secretary-General. The report also reflected the main issues discussed at the meetings of the commissions' executive secretaries at Addis Ababa on 25 and 26 February (see p. 624), and transmitted to the Economic and Social Council issues for its attention or decisions calling for its action.

Economic and social trends

The annual Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific 1985<sup>(8)</sup> stated that economic growth in the developing economies of Asia and the Pacific was generally less robust in 1985 than in 1984, though the region's performance remained stronger than that of other regions. The slow-down was most marked in export-oriented economies hit by protectionism, slipping demand for manufactures and extremely low prices for primary commodities. The island economies of the Pacific, LDCs and several others dependent on commodity markets were severely affected. Some growth was achieved in the region's LDCs but there was no increase in the net inflow of resources from abroad. Progress in reducing unemployment, alleviating poverty and eradicating illiteracy continued to be slow. Generating stronger stimuli for self-sustaining growth remained an important concern. Initiatives to foster healthier international financial conditions and a more stable exchange rate were taken in late 1985, expected to bring about increased inflows of capital at lower interest rates.

The Commission considered the issues related to the integration of population factors into overall socio-economic development. It particularly noted the need for integrated development plans which would slow population growth, use natural resources efficiently, protect the environment and promote economic development. It urged the ESCAP secretariat to study the relationship between population, resources, environment and development with a view to developing practical measures which countries could adopt.

The Economic and Social Council on 25 July, by decision 1985/182, took note of, among other documents, a summary<sup>(9)</sup> of the Economic and Social Survey of Asia and the Pacific

Activities in 1985

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

The Commission, reviewing the implementation of the International Development Strategy, highlighted the issues of international trade, external flows, technology and population. Noting disturbing trends such as high real interest rates and other terms of credit, ESCAP felt that there was considerable scope for expanded trade flows and economic co-operation among countries of the region. It stressed the need to raise their technological capacity, especially in the least developed, land-locked and island countries. It decided that in future reviews of the Strategy, the focus should be on international trade, money and finance, food and agriculture, industrialization and energy.

Development planning activities included a regional seminar on an interlinked country model system (Bangkok, November). The seminar suggested improvements in national models, and discussed technical procedures for operating a model system using trade flows as linkage. An Expert Group on Development Issues and Policies met at Bangkok in October. Two workshops on how LDCs could mobilize domestic savings were conducted (Dhaka, Bangladesh, April; Kathmandu, Nepal, December).

The Asian and Pacific Development Centre expanded its activities to include East Asia and the Pacific island States; previously it had concentrated its efforts in South and South-East Asia.

Publication began of the Development Planning Newsletter, which was to be issued every four months.

Implementation of SNPA for LDCs

The Commission took note of the report<sup>(11)</sup> of the High-level Meeting prior to the Mid-term Global Review of the Implementation of SNPA (Bangkok, 28-31 January), directed towards accelerated implementation of SNPA in the second half of the decade. It expressed concern about the lack of progress and urged speedy implementation. On 29 March, it adopted a resolution<sup>(12)</sup> requesting developed and developing countries, United Nations organizations and bodies, and funding agencies to provide increased financial and technical assistance to the region's LDCs so they might implement their SNPA-related plans and programmes.

Mekong River basin development

The twenty-first session of the Interim Committee for Co-ordination of Investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin, originally scheduled for January at Hanoi, Viet Nam, was held instead at Vientiane, Lao People's Democratic Republic, from 29 July to 3 August. According to the Committee's annual report for 1985,<sup>(13)</sup> transmitted to ESCAP in March,<sup>(14)</sup> the work programme for 1985 comprised 111 projects under six programme sectors—hydrology and meteorology, basin planning, land and water resources development, navigation improvement, agriculture and fisheries, and power, industry and minerals—requiring an initial investment of about $307 million. All were geared to promoting food production, generating hydroelectric power and improving navigation.

Technical co-operation activities

During 1985, the Secretary-General reported<sup>(15)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council, ESCAP had responded to 44 requests for technical and advisory services from 20 countries by means of 37 missions under the United Nations regular programme of technical co-operation. The majority of the requests were from LDCs and island developing countries.

The ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre at Port Vila, Vanuatu, provided short-term advisory services to developing island countries under the United Nations Development Advisory Team for the South Pacific and UNDP.

The Commission reaffirmed the catalytic role that ESCAP could play in supporting technical and economic co-operation among its members and associate members. In that connection, it adopted a resolution<sup>(16)</sup> on 29 March asking the Executive Secretary to give high priority to activities that supported technical and economic co-operation among developing countries (TCDC/ECDC), and requesting developing and associate member countries to strengthen their national focal points for such co-operation for better planning and co-ordination and to provide information on their needs and capabilities; it also invited contributions to the supplementary fund for TCDC.

An intergovernmental meeting of national focal points (Bangkok, 5-10 November)<sup>(17)</sup> recommended a revised methodology for the organization of regional intergovernmental TCDC consultations, preparation of basic guidelines for planning of TCDC activities, measures to strengthen the capacity of TCDC/ECDC focal points, and formulation of TCDC activities in 1986-1987 in agro- and allied industries.

International trade

The fourth Asia-Pacific International Trade Fair (Beijing, 15-30 November)<sup>(18)</sup>—the first in 13 years—promoted trade expansion, economic co-operation and development of industry and technology. Some 1,200 commercial and industrial firms from 20 ESCAP member and six non-member countries participated; about 800,000 visitors from throughout China and 10,000 foreign visitors attended. With UNDP support, ESCAP organized during the Fair a seminar on investment and trade-creating joint ventures and another on transfer of technology.

A regional seminar on import management was held in Beijing, with study tours to Guangzhou and Shenzhen, in April, organized by ESCAP, ITC and the Helsinki School of Economics, Finland.

A regional seminar on the establishment of market information services on jute and jute products (Bangladesh, April) and the third session of the Regional Consultative Group on Silk (Kuala Trengganu, Malaysia, July) reviewed developments in their respective industries.

A meeting of senior trade information officials on the Regional Trade Information Network (Bangkok, September) discussed strengthening trade information services and making them more user-oriented.

Transport and communications

The Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Transport and Communications (Bangkok, 23-25 January)<sup>(19)</sup> considered and made recommendations on roads and road transport, railways, shipping, ports and inland waterways, air transport and telecommunications. To help accelerate the development of transport and communication infrastructure in LDCs, the Meeting stressed the need for more flexibility by donor countries and agencies in applying strict economic viability criteria to projects. To its report the Meeting annexed extracts from the report of the Intergovernmental Meeting of Senior Highway Officials (Bangkok, 16-22 January) detailing the region's road transport problems and offering recommendations.

The ninth session of the Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications (Transport, Communications and Tourism Wing) (Bangkok, 10-16 December)<sup>(20)</sup> considered major issues in general transport planning, railway, road and air cargo transport, containerization, containerization in relation to inland transport, facilitation of international transport, telecommunications, postal services and tourism.

A note by the secretariat<sup>(21)</sup> examined the components of a development strategy for regional railways. It annexed railway project profiles of the Regional Action Programme for the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994).

Seminars, workshops and study tours were conducted on containerization (Lahore, Pakistan, April), excessive rail and wheel wear and derailments (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, September), railway track maintenance and toll roads (Austria and France, September/October), and road accidents and railway electrification (Bangkok, November).

Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994)

The Commission noted the work of its secretariat towards the implementation of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994, in compliance with 1984 General Assembly<sup>(22)</sup> and Economic and Social Council<sup>(23)</sup> resolutions. The preparatory phase of the Decade's work culminated in January 1985 with a series of intergovernmental meetings on highways, railways and shipping, ports and inland waterways. The Commission noted that ECWA had, as requested by the Assembly,<sup>(22)</sup> taken steps to participate. The Commission urged the secretariat to assign priorities for action.

On 25 January,<sup>(19)</sup> the Meeting of Ministers Responsible for Transport and Communications issued a Declaration, the adoption of which was known as "The Launching of the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific, 1985-1994". The Declaration recommended that the Decade's programmes be carried out so as to achieve a framework for decision-making in the transport and communication sectors, an integrated multisectoral and intermodal approach in medium- and long-term planning, improvement in the efficiency of existing transport and communication systems, facilitation of international traffic and communications, energy conservation, enhancement of technology, development of human resources and expertise, and safe and secure international traffic. It reaffirmed the Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications' primary role in reviewing progress of the Decade, and resolved that a conference of ministers responsible for transport and communications would be held from time to time to evaluate progress and provide policy guidance for the programmes.

The ESCAP secretariat<sup>(24)</sup> listed 22 "thrust areas" comprising the strategy for the Decade—nine having high, seven regular and six low priority levels—and 47 project proposals by thrust area for regional action.

Shipping, ports and inland waterways

The eighth session of the Committee on Shipping, and Transport and Communications (Shipping, Ports and Inland Waterways Wing) (Bangkok, 8-14 January)<sup>(25)</sup> considered developments, issues and activities in such areas as manpower development, maritime policy and institutions, merchant marines and shipping services, ports and port management, inland water transport and waterways, and shippers' organizations and co-operation.

A Meeting of Experts on Inland Water Transport (Bangkok, 20-22 November)<sup>(26)</sup> discussed the role of inland waterways in the development of the economies of ESCAP member countries. It recommended the establishment of a regional inland water transport centre in Bangladesh for an initial period of five years (1987-1991) to implement a set of priority projects based mainly on the report of a programming mission which had visited nine countries of the region from February to April, had identified more than 160 inland water transport issues and problems and had recommended 71 projects to deal with them.

Industrial development

The ninth session of the Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment (Bangkok, 10-16 September)<sup>(27)</sup> recommended, among other things, that the secretariat expand pilot project activities on energy management and energy audit training for small- and medium-scale industries to a larger number of member countries. It also urged UNDP to give high funding priority to a proposed programme for investment promotion in the region.

Three training workshops were organized dealing with energy audit and energy conservation in small-scale industry (Kathmandu, September/October; Jinan, China, October; and Bangkok, November).

Transnational corporations

The Ad Hoc Intergovernmental Meeting on Transnational Corporations (Bangkok, 19-23 December)<sup>(28)</sup> considered the status of negotiations and outstanding issues on the draft code of conduct on TNCs (see p. 616) and regional co-operation on TNC matters. The Meeting endorsed recommendations of the United Nations Centre on TNCs/ESCAP Expert Group Meeting on the code of conduct (Bangkok, 17 and 18 December), which underlined the need for an early conclusion of the negotiations.

Natural resources and energy

The Committee on Natural Resources, at its twelfth session (Bangkok, 29 October-4 November)<sup>(29)</sup> noted a growing interest among ESCAP countries in exploring, evaluating and developing their hydrocarbon resources; recommended that the secretariat identify the metals and minerals on which exploration activities could be concentrated in the light of projected demand; strongly supported activity on geology for urban planning; urged the recruitment of experts in various fields relevant to the needs of LDCs; emphasized that conventional energy sources would continue to be major sources of energy supply for development; and endorsed the regional remote sensing programme and a request to UNDP to provide support to the programme from 1987 to 1991.

Workshops, symposia and training courses were listed in a report<sup>(30)</sup> of the Regional Mineral Resources Development Centre, including: a workshop on the environmental impact of mineral development in the humid tropics (Manila, Philippines, 15-18 February); a workshop on geochemistry in mineral exploration (Bandung, 8-13 April); a workshop on applied geophysics related to ground-water exploration (Bandung and Jogjakarta, Indonesia, 7-28 May); a workshop on Kuroko-type mineralization (Tsukuba/Odate, Japan, 1-11 September); a workshop on drilling, sampling and borehole logging (Wuxi, China, 5-16 November); a post-graduate geology training course (India, 15 November 1985-15 October 1986); and a symposium on mineral deposit modelling (Manila, 5-14 December). In addition, five round-table talks on uranium exploration were held (Jakarta, Indonesia, 7-14 July; Kuala Lumpur/Ipoh, 1-10 August; Seoul, Republic of Korea, 23 August-6 September; Dhaka, 20-27 October; Colombo, Sri Lanka, 1-6 December).

Water resources. An inter-agency mission on the establishment of a regional network for training in water resources development was carried out by ESCAP and ILO from 21 July to 9 August, visiting Malaysia, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Republic of Korea and Sri Lanka. All the participating institutes welcomed the proposal to establish the network.

The Inter-agency Task Force on Water for Asia and the Pacific held its fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth sessions (Bangkok; January, July and November); it discussed two projects—the accelerated local manufacture of hand pumps for rural water supply and the proposed regional training network.

A Meeting on the Establishment of a Cyclone Council for the South Pacific (Port Vila, February) recommended that a tropical cyclone committee be established as a working group of WMO within the framework of its Tropical Cyclone Programme. An expert group meeting on the improvement of disaster prevention systems based on risk analysis of natural disasters related to typhoons and heavy rainfall was held (Bangkok, July), and a seminar/study tour on the efficient use of investments in the development of water management was conducted (Tashkent, USSR, September).

To effect global co-ordination in water resources development, ESCAP participated in the sixth session of the Intersecretariat Group for Water (New York, October) of the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, attended by United Nations agencies involved with water.

Energy resources. The Commission, while commending the work of the secretariat on new and renewable energy sources, particularly solar photovoltaic power-generation, biomass and biogas, solar, wind and small hydropower, expressed the view that conventional sources of energy, such as oil, coal and natural gas, would continue to play an important role in economic and social development in the foreseeable future. It emphasized the importance of a balanced mix of diverse energy resources, both conventional and alternative. The Commission also took note of a regional expert group meeting (Bangkok, January) for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy (see p. 684); the meeting identified constraints in the uses of nuclear isotope techniques in food and agriculture, health and medicine, hydrology, geophysics and industry, as well as in the wider use of nuclear power, and suggested regional measures to help overcome them.

A number of other meetings were held at Bangkok, including: a regional expert seminar on solar photovoltaic technology (June); a training course on renewable energy planning (August); an expert group meeting on natural gas production and use (September); and an ESCAP/Asian Institute of Technology training course on solar hot-water systems (December).

Three major regional co-operative programmes were financed by extrabudgetary resources: the Regional Energy Development Programme and the Pacific Energy Development Programme, both funded by UNDP, and the Regional Network on Biomass, Solar and Wind Energy, funded by Japan and Australia. The secretariat reported on the implementation of the Pacific Energy Development Programme during 1985<sup>(31)</sup> and on the activities of the second phase of the Regional Energy Development Programme (1984-1986).<sup>(32)</sup>

Food and agriculture

The sixth session of the Committee on Agricultural Development (Bangkok, 1-7 October<sup>(33)</sup>) endorsed the recommendations of an expert group meeting (Bangkok, 7-9 May) on the development of fertilizer use in the ESCAP region. It emphasized that the ESCAP/FAO/UNIDO Fertilizer Advisory, Development and Information Network for Asia and the Pacific should foster regional co-operation in fertilizer production, procurement, marketing, distribution and use. The Committee also considered such matters as agricultural development planning, the responsibility system in agriculture in China, farm broadcasting, the agro-climatic drought early warning programme, fisheries and aquaculture, use of agricultural residues as an energy source, promotion of non-farm employment and income among rural workers, and the role of women in agriculture.

A March progress report<sup>(34)</sup> on co-operation between FAO and ESCAP in food and agricultural activities was submitted by the Secretary-General to the April/May session of CPC. In its report<sup>(35)</sup> to the Assembly, CPC expressed satisfaction with the progress made in the past two years in furthering co-operation; it encouraged FAO and ESCAP to continue their efforts and report to it if they encountered any difficulties.

The Governing Board of the Regional Co-ordination Centre for Research and Development of Coarse Grains, Pulses, Roots and Tuber Crops in the Humid Tropics of Asia and the Pacific held its third session at Denpasar, Indonesia, from 22 to 25 January.<sup>(36)</sup> The Board reviewed studies conducted by the Centre in 1984 of those crops in East Asia; of soybean production in Indonesia; of the potential of cassava; and of socio-economic constraints to increased production of food legumes and coarse grains. In a report<sup>(37)</sup> on the Centre's 1985 activities, the Board stated that the Centre's efforts that year focused mainly on soybean and maize in South-East Asia and selected grain legumes in South Asia.

Science and technology

On 29 March, the Commission adopted a resolution<sup>(38)</sup> calling on members and associate members to improve their national institutes for science and technology and consider making them available to other members, and urging developed members and the United Nations system to give priority to developing members' efforts to enhance their technological capabilities. It asked the Executive Secretary to facilitate the exchange of experience among members.

By another resolution,<sup>(39)</sup> it adopted the statute of the Asian and Pacific Centre for Transfer of Technology, changing the name of the Regional Centre for Technology Transfer inaugurated in 1977. The statute laid down the Centre's objectives, functions and organization, as well as the composition and functions of the Governing Board and Technical Advisory Committee of Experts; it also stipulated the resources required for the Centre's functioning. The Centre was located in Bangalore, India, and its major objectives were to assist ESCAP members and associate members by strengthening their capabilities to develop, transfer, adapt and apply technology, to improve the terms of transfer of technology and identify and promote the development and transfer of technologies relevant to the region. With UNDP funding, the Centre began implementing three programmes: facilitating technology transfer through information services, promoting transfer and utilization of selected technologies, and strengthening technology policies and planning infrastructure. The Technical Advisory Committee held its first session at Bangalore in September.

In September, the Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment<sup>(27)</sup> (see p. 647) emphasized that, in addition to projects on solar photovoltaic power systems, research, development and demonstration, the Tokyo Programme on Technology for Development in Asia and the Pacific<sup>(5)</sup> should be extended to cover such areas as biotechnology and genetic engineering, metallurgy, new industrial materials and laser technology. It endorsed a proposal to convene the first session of the Technical Advisory Group on Industry and Technology in 1986.

Expert group meetings on the technological dimensions of human resources development and on the Technology Atlas for Asia and the Pacific were convened in Bangkok in October.

Social and cultural development

The Third Asian and Pacific Ministerial Conference on Social Welfare and Social Development (Bangkok, 9-15 October)<sup>(40)</sup> reviewed the regional socio-economic situation, considered the social effects of development and examined planning, resources and administration needs in socio-economic development; it also adopted recommendations addressing those issues for action at the national, regional and international levels.

The Commission called for full implementation of the Programme of Action<sup>(41)</sup> for the Second Half of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985). It noted that the deliberations of a 1984 Regional Intergovernmental Preparatory Meeting for the 1985 World Conference to appraise the Decade's achievements (see Chapter XIX of this section) and the ESCAP/South Pacific Commission Subregional Pacific Meeting on Women (Rarotonga, Cook Islands, March) could provide valuable inputs to the World Conference. With respect to International Youth Year (1985) in the region, the Commission reiterated its support for the secretariat's youth development activities and its efforts to promote youth participation in national development (see Chapter XX of this section).

Workshops on prevention and rehabilitation schemes for young women in prostitution and related occupations (Bangkok, June) and on the role of youth organizations in the prevention of crime among youth (Tokyo, July) were held in 1985.

Population

The growth rate of the 2.7 billion people who lived in the ESCAP region fell from about 2.5 per cent annually in the late 1960s to about 1.7 per cent in 1984, ESCAP reported.<sup>(42)</sup> In the 1950s, 16 per cent of the region's children died before their first birthday; currently the figure was about 8 per cent (compared with about 1 per cent in the developed countries). The decline in fertility was attributed to investments in disease control, health facilities, education and family planning programmes.

Population issues and activities in the ESCAP region were considered by the Committee on Population at its fourth session (Bangkok, 13-19 August).<sup>(43)</sup> The Committee recalled the target of a minimum of 55 years of life expectancy at birth by the end of the 1980s, set by the Asia-Pacific Call for Action on Population and Development in 1982.<sup>(44)</sup> It conducted a number of training courses in 1985, most of them concerned with the use of microcomputers for demographic information-handling and data analysis.

Environment

A Declaration and Framework for Action Plans for the Management of the Asian Environment, 1985, was adopted by a Ministerial-level Conference on the Environment in Asia (Bangkok, 11 and 12 February).<sup>(45)</sup> The Framework was intended to provide general guidance for developing environmental programmes; it directed attention to the management of terrestrial ecosystems, protection of the marine environment, environmental health and natural and cultural heritages, planning and management of the urban environment, human settlements, promotion of environmental awareness, institutional and legislative structures, and recommendations for implementation.

The Commission expressed concern that vast tracts of land in the ESCAP region were afflicted or threatened by desertification. It agreed that the 1977 United Nations Plan of Action to Combat Desertification<sup>(46)</sup> was a good basis for initiating action, urging countries to assign priorities to control programmes and projects and establish national committees. The secretariat submitted a report<sup>(47)</sup> on the regional and country status of desertification, stating that what stood out most was the inability thus far to mobilize the funds to implement the Plan of Action.

The Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment in September<sup>(27)</sup> asked the secretariat to support efforts to implement the Framework, stating that integration of environmental considerations into the development process and the sectoral activities of ESCAP were of the utmost importance. Environmental impact analysis should be promoted and desertification control measures should receive high priority, including convening of an intergovernmental meeting on a proposed regional network of training and research centres for desertification control. The Committee urged extrabudgetary support for the Asian Forum of Environmental Journalists, established at the Regional Media Conference on Environment and Development (New Delhi, India, February) to promote regional environmental awareness.

Typhoons

The Typhoon Committee (eighteenth session, Beijing, 8-14 October)<sup>(48)</sup> reported that members had made considerable progress in typhoon forecasting and warning services, especially with the operation of the Geostationary Meteorological Satellite by Japan and the establishment of additional radar and upgrading of telecommunication facilities.

The Committee endorsed the concept for regional co-operation among Committee members proposed by an expert meeting in planning regional co-operation for the typhoon area (Tokyo, August).

Human settlements

The Commission expressed satisfaction that, pursuant to a 1983 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(49)</sup> 21 countries of the ESCAP region had established national focal points for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987) (see p. 827) and identified 30 projects for the Year in nine countries.

The Committee on Industry, Technology, Human Settlements and the Environment<sup>(27)</sup> emphasized the importance of national action to solve the shelter problem through new ways and means and stressed the need to give shelter higher priority in economic development plans. It recommended that member countries examine a 1984 proposal<sup>(50)</sup> for a financial and advisory institution for human settlements in the region (see p. 823). It also recommended that special assistance be given to LDCs in pursuance of the objectives of the International Year, for whose programme countries were urged to provide generous support, and SNPA. The secretariat was urged to help countries adopt suitable standards for low-income shelter. The Committee endorsed a proposal to establish a network of local authorities for the management of human settlements. There was also a need for a regional network to promote information-sharing and a need for increased community participation in planning and development.

Statistics

The sixth session of the Committee on Statistics (Bangkok, 19-25 November)<sup>(51)</sup> reviewed statistical activities in the region and discussed the development of overall national statistical capabilities, including the National Household Survey Capability Programme and statistical training, the development of economic and social statistics, and publication policy for regional statistics.

The Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific reported<sup>(52)</sup> that it had conducted training programmes in general statistics, automatic data processing, indicators for economic and social development, and economic censuses, as well as given courses for training trainers, awarded fellowships to test statistical software packages and helped organize an expert group meeting on developing statistics of household economic activities (Bangkok, 23-28 September).

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

Amendment of terms of reference

On 29 March, noting that Brunei Darussalam and Tuvalu had become members of ESCAP, the Commission approved a draft resolution for action by the Economic and Social Council to amend those paragraphs of the Commission's terms of reference which listed full and associate members.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/60.

Amendment of the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific: membership of Brunei Darussalam and Tuvalu

The Economic and Social Council,

Noting that Brunei Darussalam and Tuvalu have become members of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific in accordance with paragraph 3 of the terms of reference of the Commission, Decides to amend paragraphs 3 and 4 of the terms of reference of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific accordingly.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/60

26 July 1985                      Meeting 52                      Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145) without vote, 23 July (meeting 27); draft by ESCAP (E/1985/106); agenda item 8.

Activities in the Pacific

The Commission welcomed the establishment on 1 July 1984 of the ESCAP Pacific Operations Centre at Port Vila, combining the ESCAP Pacific Liaison Office, located in Nauru, and the United Nations Development Advisory Team for the Pacific, located in Fiji. The Centre focused on providing advisory services through staff advisers or consultants, facilitating training and maintaining liaison with island Governments. The Commission requested<sup>(53)</sup> the ESCAP Executive Secretary to take steps, within the United Nations programme planning and budgeting cycle, to incorporate a new subprogramme on "Special measures in favour of island developing countries" within the programme on development issues and policies, to assist Pacific island countries to make better use of the services of multilateral organizations by identifying the avenues of assistance, and to ensure that the Centre was in a position to assist those countries in drafting project proposals for presenting to those organizations.

During 1985, it was noted<sup>(54)</sup> that the Centre undertook 40 of ESCAP's 109 advisory missions, provided consultancy services, offered training activities, and disseminated information and reports to Pacific island countries and territories.

Work programme for 1986-1987

In considering the draft programme of work and priorities for 1986-1987, the Commission stressed that primary responsibility for programming should be at the regional level, where problems were better understood, so that revisions could be avoided and resources used more effectively. In that context, the Commission urged that the sectoral legislative committees and the Advisory Committee of Permanent Representatives and Other Representatives Designated by Members of the Commission (ACPR) play a larger role in formulating the work programme. It reaffirmed the importance of priority-setting at the programme-element level. It decided that the activities addressed to specific problems of LDCs and the developing land-locked and island countries should be given special priority. The Commission endorsed, with some changes, the work programme and priorities for 1986-1987;<sup>(55)</sup> included was a new programme on marine resources.

Recognizing the uncertainties surrounding the current international economic situation and the declining global resources available for development, the Commission adopted a resolution<sup>(56)</sup> on mobilization of resources for TCDC/ECDC, by which it requested the Economic and Social Council to recommend to the General Assembly that it should continue to provide appropriate resources to enable the Commission to utilize fully its potential.

JIU reports

In May,<sup>(56)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to the General Assembly and Economic and Social Council a report by the Joint Inspection Unit on ESCAP, the first such report in 15 years.<sup>(57)</sup> The new report discussed ESCAP's mandate, its structure, functions and work as a regional multidisciplinary centre for social and economic development, its technical co-operation activities, and issues common to all regional commissions.

It also presented recommendations, on which the Secretary-General commented:<sup>(58)</sup> ESCAP members should ensure that programmes conformed to Commission criteria, that they were commensurate with expected resources and over-programming discouraged, and that meetings were reduced to a manageable number; and they should consider establishing a programme preparation and review committee to formalize some of ACPR's functions and make viability a decisive criterion for regulating institutions (recommendations 1 and 3). The Secretary-General agreed with recommendation 1 but observed that, since over-programming was linked to the provision of extrabudgetary contributions, the size of such contributions should be estimated more realistically when formulating the programme budget. In principle, he accepted the establishment of the new committee, but since it would have budgetary implications the matter should be further examined.

Addressing recommendation 2, that the secretariat should analyse the impact of meetings and improve the quality of documents, the Secretary-General felt a comparative analysis of the impact of all ESCAP activities should be made to determine their importance and for rationalizing and improving its work as a whole. The Executive Secretary should examine the feasibility of combining the Programme Co-ordination and Monitoring Office and the Technical Co-operation Division (recommendation 4) and ensure that the contributions of donor Governments were in keeping with and promoted Commission criteria (6). The Secretary-General felt that the units' approaches and type of personnel were so different that amalgamation would not improve performance, but agreed with the recommendation on contributions and took note of recommendation 5, that he should review the grade level of the deputy executive secretaries of the regional commissions.

On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/191 by which it took note of, among other things, the JIU report and the Secretary-General's comments. By the same decision, it took note of a 1984 JIU report<sup>(5)</sup> on the contribution of the United Nations system to conservation and management of cultural and natural heritage in Asia and the Pacific, and comments of the Secretary-General thereon.

Improving the functions of the legislative committees

The Commission conducted its 1985 session under a new structure of the plenary session and two Committees of the Whole, in which the functions of the former Technical Drafting Committee and the Informal Working Group on Draft

Resolutions had been subsumed under those of the two Committees. The Commission considered proposals by the Executive Secretary dealing with such complex questions as the functions of the legislative committees, the documentation provided to them, scrutiny of the work programme, issue-oriented agendas and the possible establishment of a programme co-ordination committee. The Commission, while endorsing the proposals pertaining to the improved functioning of the legislative committees, decided that the question of the establishment of a programme co-ordination committee should be examined further by the Executive Secretary and ACPR.

UN accommodation at Bangkok

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(59)</sup> submitted in October 1985 a progress report<sup>(60)</sup> on the expansion of the conference facilities of ESCAP. He stated that a supplementary agreement to the 1954 Headquarters Agreement between the United Nations and Thailand had been signed on 26 January 1985 in Bangkok. It provided that the United Nations would have the right to occupy and use an expanded headquarters site for as long as it remained at Bangkok and would own the building constructed thereon. Construction was expected to begin in 1986 and the new facilities were expected to be in full operation by early 1989. An appropriation of $18,313,100 was requested for the 1986-1987 biennium under section 32 (Construction, alterations, improvements and major maintenance of premises) of the programme budget; the amount was approved by ACABQ.<sup>(61)</sup>

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 18 December, on the recommendation of the Fifth Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote section V of resolution 40/252.

United Nations accommodation at Bangkok

[ The General Assembly . . . ]

Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the United Nations accommodation at Bangkok;

General Assembly resolution 40/252, section V

18 December 1985      Meeting 122      Adopted without vote

Approved by Fifth Committee (A/40/1069) without objection, 27 November (meeting 49); oral proposal by Chairman; agenda item 116.

Financial implications. ACABQ, A/40/7/Add.11; S-G, A/C.5/40/29.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: 5th Committee 48, 49; plenary 122.

On 27 November, the Fifth Committee approved, by a recorded vote of 85 to 2, with 15 abstentions, the requested additional appropriation of $18,313,100. The United States said it voted against the appropriation because the expansion of the ESCAP conference facilities was not currently justified. The USSR said it had abstained because the estimates were too high. The United Kingdom voted against and Canada abstained, saying they opposed the ESCAP project. France abstained, believing that construction work should not receive priority at the current time.

Europe

The Economic Commission for Europe held its fortieth session at Geneva from 16 to 27 April 1985. In its annual reports covering the periods 15 April 1984-27 April 1985<sup>(1)</sup> and 28 April 1985-27 April 1986<sup>(2)</sup> it reviewed the economic situation in Europe, its activities and those of its subsidiary bodies, and set out future work programmes. On 27 April, it adopted a resolution and 14 decisions pertaining to various aspects of its work.

By the resolution,<sup>(3)</sup> ECE called on member Governments to continue to take full advantage of its potential as an instrument for dialogue and for strengthening economic relations and multilateral co-operation in the region. It considered that full respect for the principles guiding relations set out in the Final Act of the 1975 Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE)<sup>(4)</sup> and in the Concluding Document of the Madrid meeting of representatives of the participating States of CSCE (11 November 1980-9 September 1983) was an essential basis for the development of economic co-operation among them. It called on ECE members to contribute to the work of other economic organs of the United Nations system which aimed at stimulating international trade and recovery of the world economy.

A summary of the work of ECE for the year preceding April 1985 and of the other regional commissions was contained in a June 1985 report<sup>(5)</sup> of the Secretary-General which also discussed the February meetings of the executive secretaries of the commissions (see p. 684).

Economic trends

The annual growth rate of total output in the ECE region declined from more than 4 per cent in 1984 to about 2.5 per cent in 1985. The drop, according to a summary<sup>(6)</sup> of the Economic Survey of Europe in 1985-1986, reflected a slow-down in the United States and to a lesser extent in the centrally planned economies; in Western Europe, the growth rate was little changed.

Recovery in output growth in ECE market economies faltered in the first half of 1985. In Western Europe, GDP in the four largest economies fell in the first quarter, mainly because of the harsh winter which depressed output in the construction industry (particularly in France and the Federal Republic of Germany). After a modest recovery in the second quarter, Western European output strengthened in the second half of the year; Western European growth for the year as a whole was about 2.25 per cent. In the United States, GNP growth was sluggish in the first half of 1985 (at around 2.3 per cent), but then picked up, partly as a result of financial incentives to boost automobile sales.

Inflation rates continued to fall in 1985. The anti-inflationary stance of monetary and fiscal policies in most countries was reinforced by the continued fall in world commodity prices. In Western Europe, those favourable influences were amplified by the appreciation of exchange rates against the dollar. Consumer prices fell from an average year-on-year increase of 5.5 per cent in Western Europe in the second quarter of 1985 to about 4.5 per cent in the last quarter. In southern Europe, inflation rates continued higher than in the region's other market economies. In the United States, inflation remained about 3.5 per cent.

Employment rose in the market economies, though less than half a percentage point, and was concentrated in North America. In Western Europe, the average increase was about 0.6 per cent, compared with 2 per cent in the United States. By mid-1985, the number of persons unemployed in the market economies (excluding southern Europe) was about 22.5 million, about 57 per cent of them in Western Europe. In southern Europe, unemployment rates were very high (more than 20 per cent in Spain and Turkey) and generally worsened during the year.

In six countries of Eastern Europe and the USSR, the acceleration in the overall pace of economic growth, which had begun in 1982-1983, did not continue in 1985. Net material product (NMP)—national income originating in sectors of the material sphere—grew by 4.1 per cent in 1983, easing to 3.8 per cent in 1984 and to an estimated 3.2 per cent in 1985. In the USSR, where stagnating agricultural output had pulled down the NMP-produced growth rate to 3.2 per cent in 1984 from 4.2 per cent in 1983, the level of agricultural production was unchanged in 1985; however, industrial production continued to expand at about the same rate as in 1984 (by 3.9 per cent, compared with 4.1 per cent). Throughout the area in 1985, supply and demand factors shaped economic developments. On the supply side, an unusually harsh winter had a considerable impact, with coal and electricity production adversely affected in most Eastern European countries and the USSR. All countries except Czechoslovakia and the German Democratic Republic experienced energy shortages, which affected output in other sectors, particularly industry. In addition, a prolonged drought which had lasted for several years in Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania affected agricultural output and exports.

On the demand side, the slow-down in world trade and, in particular, in demand from the developed market economies, combined with increasing competition from both developed and developing countries, depressed the exports of most Eastern European countries and the USSR.

The growth of world trade slowed to less than 4 per cent in 1985, after an increase of about 8 per cent in 1984. Among the developed market economies, exports increased 5 to 6 per cent in Western Europe and Japan but remained virtually unchanged in the United States. Imports into North America continued to grow substantially faster than exports. Exports from the European centrally planned economies fell for the first time since 1960, while imports accelerated at a rate of more than 5 per cent.

East-West trade developed unevenly. Western exports to Eastern Europe picked up, but the pace of exports to the USSR slackened. By contrast, there was a fall in Western imports from Eastern Europe and in particular from the USSR.

The Economic and Social Council, by decision 1985/182 of 25 July, took note of a summary<sup>(7)</sup> of the Economic Survey of Europe in 1984-1985,<sup>(8)</sup> among other documents.

Activities in 1985

Regional economic co-operation

The twenty-first session of the Senior Economic Advisers to ECE Governments (Geneva, 18-22 February) gave a central place to work on preparation of an overall economic perspective (OEP) to the year 2000. Ad hoc working groups examined in depth selected key problems, with the participation of national experts and rapporteurs appointed by Governments. In October the Bureau prepared an interim version of the core document.

ECE in April adopted a decision<sup>(9)</sup> welcoming the decisions taken by the Senior Advisers with respect to OEP and expressing the hope that they would focus, in their information exchange and joint consideration of economic trends and prospects in the region, on the long-term implications of national economic policies. It stressed the significance to OEP of the Seminar on the Inter-relationships between Structural Changes and Investment Policies (Kiev, Ukrainian SSR, 23-27 September), the findings of which were to form the basis for a chapter in OEP.

Co-operation among Mediterranean countries

ECE requested<sup>(10)</sup> the Executive Secretary to continue his co-operation with the secretariats of ECWA and ECA and with non-ECE Mediterranean countries on subjects within the competence of ECE of common interest to those countries. It requested its subsidiary bodies to continue their efforts to identify areas of interest for economic co-operation in the Mediterranean.

The Executive Secretaries of ECE and ECA in June submitted an interim report<sup>(11)</sup> on a proposed Europe-Africa permanent link through the Strait of Gibraltar. The Economic and Social Council took note of the report on 26 July by decision 1985/191. The Council, by resolution 1985/70, invited Morocco and Spain to continue consultations and asked the Secretary-General to explore the possibility of using extrabudgetary funds to provide the two commissions with resources to carry out related economic studies.

International trade

The thirty-fourth session of the Committee on the Development of Trade (Geneva, 2-6 December 1985)<sup>(12)</sup> adopted its programme of work for 1986-1990. Its work during the year had been directed especially towards encouraging trade and co-operation between countries of the region, particularly those with different economic and social systems, and aiding them in their trade promotion and marketing efforts. A special meeting of experts on industrial co-operation (Geneva, 8-10 July), under the Committee's auspices, identified major areas for future co-operation and proposals for further developing East-West industrial development. Two sessions each of the Working Party on Facilitation of International Trade Procedures (Geneva, 7 and 8 March; 19 and 20 September) and the Group of Experts on International Contract Practices in Industry (Geneva, 15-17 July; 9-11 December) furthered the Committee's work.

ECE in April<sup>(13)</sup> called on its member Governments to increase their efforts to expand trade and economic co-operation in the region, taking into account the provisions of the Final Act of CSCE and of the Madrid Concluding Document (see p. 653).

Transport

Among the developments in transport during 1985 were the opening for signature in September of the European Agreement on Main International Railway Lines (concluded at Geneva on 31 May); work on the Trans-European North-South Motorway; the entry into force on 15 October of the 1982 International Convention on the Harmonization of Frontier Controls of Goods;<sup>(14)</sup> the completion of the revised "E-road network"; and work on amending the 1957 European Agreement concerning the International Carriage of Dangerous Goods by Road.<sup>(15)</sup>

The Commission noted<sup>(10)</sup> the decisions of the 1984 meeting on transport development in the Mediterranean<sup>(16)</sup> and considered that they could contribute to a better understanding of the transport situation in the region. It requested the Inland Transport Committee and the Executive Secretary to study the definition of the status of the transport centres established at that meeting, with a view to recommending that the Economic and Social Council grant them United Nations status.

The forty-sixth session of the Inland Transport Committee (Geneva, 28 January-1 February)<sup>(17)</sup> considered the application of international transport agreements, transport development trends, the forecasting of international traffic, international transport infrastructure investments, the development of a European railway network, facilitation of the international transport of goods by road, inland navigation questions, urban transport, transport statistics, international harmonization of technical requirements for the construction of motor vehicles, facilitating the movement of disabled and elderly persons, customs questions and the transport of dangerous goods and of perishable foodstuffs. The Committee recommended preliminary technical and operating requirements for thin-walled vehicles used for the international carriage of perishable foodstuffs under high-temperature conditions.

The secretariat reproduced<sup>(18)</sup> a note submitted to the Committee by the Chairman of the Group of Experts on Track Costs, outlining some studies on the attribution of road track costs.

Groups of experts met on construction of vehicles (March, June and October), customs questions affecting transport (March, July and October), the transport of dangerous goods (May and October), the transport of dangerous goods by rail (March and September/October), the standardization of rules of the road and signs and signals in inland navigation (May and September), combined transport (June), road traffic safety (June and October), the standardization of technical requirements for vessels and of ships' papers (August), transport statistics (September), the transport of perishable foodstuffs (September/October), transport economics (October) and transport trends and policy (November).

Industry

The eighteenth session of the Chemical Industry Committee (Geneva, 2-4 October)<sup>(19)</sup> reviewed projects in the chemical industry and endorsed the report of the twelfth session of the Group of Experts on the Periodic Survey of the Chemical Industry (Geneva, 30 September and 1 October) which recommended, among other things, continuation of the Committee's statistical activities. The Committee agreed on a list of possible topics for future studies or seminars: automation and robotics; application of lasers and radiation; the effects of chemical production on environment and health; trends in energy requirements; standardization of packaging and labelling; the importance of the fertilizer sector; possibilities of chemical technology transfer; chemical household products; and East-West trade in chemical products. It adopted its programme of work for 1986-1990. A Seminar on Trends and Development in the Fertilizer Industry was held at Istanbul, Turkey, in May.

ECE approved<sup>(20)</sup> the work programme and meeting calendar of the Working Party on Engineering Industries and Automation, and decided to consider in 1986 a possible change in the status of the Working Party to that of a principal subsidiary body. The Working Party (fifth session, Geneva, 27 February-1 March) decided to study the role of engineering industries in national, regional and global economies. A Seminar on the Development and Use of Powder Metallurgy in Engineering Industries was held at Minsk, Byelorussian SSR, from 25 to 29 March.

The Steel Committee (fifty-third session, 23-25 October)<sup>(21)</sup> considered trends in the steel market and its prospects, structural changes in the international steel trade, and steel statistics, and adopted a work programme for 1986-1990. The Committee convened a Seminar on Steel Tubes and Their Raw-Material Quality Requirements (Helsinki, 13-17 May). A study tour of changes in production capacities and processes took place in the USSR (2-8 June). The Committee endorsed the report of the Working Party on Steel Statistics (fourteenth session, 21 and 22 October) and included in its programme of work a project on the revision of the steel statistical system.

Energy resources

In April, ECE decided<sup>(22)</sup> to convene the fifth session of the Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Energy from 23 to 27 September. In their report,<sup>(23)</sup> the Senior Advisers reviewed activities since their fourth session in 1981<sup>(24)</sup> and heard statements on the energy situation in the ECE region by various countries. The Executive Secretary declared that issues giving rise to concern included energy efficiency, unsatisfactory levels of oil dependence for most countries, uncertainty about world energy prices and the absence of new and renewable energy sources from national energy programmes.

The Coal Committee (eighty-first session, 7-10 October)<sup>(25)</sup> considered the coal situation and its prospects in the ECE region, world coal trade up to the year 2000 and the activities of the Working Party on Coal Trade (twenty-sixth session, 1-3 July) as well as the activities of the groups of experts on productivity and management problems in the coal industry (June), on the utilization and preparation of solid fuels (June), on coal statistics (July) and on open-cast mines (Gyongyos, Hungary, 8-11 October 1984).

The Committee on Electric Power (forty-third session, 14-18 January)<sup>(26)</sup> reviewed the electric power situation, its medium- and long-term prospects, regional energy problems, such as problems of improving efficiency of electric power transmission systems and environmental problems, and statistics and standardization. A Seminar on High Voltage Direct Current Techniques was held at Stockholm, Sweden, from 6 to 8 May. Groups of experts met at Geneva on problems of planning and operating large power systems (April) and on the relationship between electricity and the environment (November), and at Istanbul on electric power stations (September/October).

The Committee on Gas (thirty-first session, 21-25 January)<sup>(27)</sup> discussed general energy problems, the gas situation and markets in the region, developments, prospects and statistics. Preparations were discussed for the symposium on the liquefied petroleum gas situation in the ECE region during 1985-2000 (Madrid, Spain, 23-25 October). Groups of experts met on gas statistics and forecasting problems (June), the use and distribution of gas (May), the transport and storage of gas (May) and natural gas resources (October).

Water

The Committee on Water Problems (seventeenth session, 25-29 November)<sup>(28)</sup> entrusted the Group of Experts on Aspects of Water Quality and Quantity (which had met in May) with elaboration of a second revision of draft principles on co-operation in transboundary waters, and entrusted government rapporteurs with preparing a second revision of draft principles on ground-water management. ECE recognized<sup>(29)</sup> the significance of strengthening co-operation among member countries in water pollution control matters. A Seminar on the Rational Use of Water in Industrial Processes (Paris, 21-25 October) highlighted the use of water-saving techniques such as recycling and dry processes and adopted recommendations to ECE Governments.

A declaration on co-operation among the Danube States in relation to problems of water management in the River Danube, particularly the protection of its waters against pollution, adopted by the Conference of Danube States (Bucharest, Romania, 10-13 December) was later transmitted by Romania to the Secretary-General.<sup>(30)</sup> The Danube States declared that they would act to reduce and prevent pollution of the river, especially by dangerous and radioactive substances, would systematically monitor effluents discharged into it, would monitor the water at sampling stations where the river crossed borders and would exchange information.

Agriculture and timber

The Committee on Agricultural Problems (thirty-sixth session, 11-15 March)<sup>(31)</sup> reviewed agricultural developments, including developments in trade, in the region in 1984. The Committee also discussed the annual market reviews for the major agricultural commodities in Europe—grains, livestock and meat, milk and dairy products, and eggs.

The Commission in April<sup>(32)</sup> drew the Committee's attention to such important topics as agrarian structure and farm rationalization, agricultural mechanization, technological and economic issues of land use, soil quality and fertility, fertilizers, pollution problems and efficient energy use, and rational use of water resources.

Groups of experts met at Geneva on standardization of dry and dried produce (April), of poultry meat (July), of cut flowers (September), of perishable produce (October), and of seed potatoes (November); and at Warsaw, Poland, in May on co-ordination of standardization of fresh fruit and vegetables. A symposium on optimizing animal production from high-roughage rations was held at Geneva from 21 to 25 January.

The Timber Committee (forty-third session, 14-18 October)<sup>(33)</sup> conducted an analysis of the forest products market situation, noting the strong competition in Europe, with a resultant weakening tendency in prices for some forest products. It drew up tables of estimates for 1985 and 1986 of domestic requirements, production, imports and exports of sawn softwood and softwood logs, sawn hardwood and hardwood logs (temperate-zone and tropical), particle board, plywood, fibreboard and pulpwood. Seminars were held on occupational health and rehabilitation of forest workers (Kuopio, Finland, 3-7 June), on the technology and mechanization of logging operations in mountainous regions and related environmental problems (Krasnodar, USSR, 5-7 September), and, jointly with FAO, on the practical application of remote sensing in forestry (Jönköping, Sweden, 28-31 May).

Science and technology

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Science and Technology (thirteenth session, 16-20 September)<sup>(34)</sup> considered current developments in science and technology policies, including changes in overall policies, a review of bilateral agreements, national policies aimed at increasing the effectiveness of research and development activities, and policy issues associated with the introduction of electronics in some industries. The Senior Advisers requested the secretariat to undertake a consultation with users on the structure and content of the Manual of Licensing Procedures in Member Countries of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, and held a Symposium on the Importance of Biotechnology for Future Economic Development (Szeged, Hungary, 3-7 June).

Environment

ECE, in April 1985,<sup>(35)</sup> appealed to all contracting parties to the 1979 Convention on Long-range Transboundary Air Pollution<sup>(36)</sup> to sign the Protocol on the Financing of the Co-operative Programme on Monitoring and Evaluation of the Long-range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe<sup>(37)</sup> as soon as possible, and the Protocol on the Reduction of Sulphur Emissions or Their Transboundary Fluxes, to be opened for signature during the third session of the Convention's Executive Body (Helsinki, Finland, 8-12 July) (see Chapter XVI of this section). The Commission also appealed to Governments to implement a decision of the Executive Body on reducing total annual national emissions of nitrogen oxides, and called on them to consider providing sufficient unleaded petrol of appropriate quality for introducing low-emission technologies in motor vehicles.

The Executive Body established a Working Group on Nitrogen Oxides to prepare the necessary substantiation for measures aimed at reducing nitrogen oxide emissions. It also launched programmes aimed at determining the effects of the emissions on materials, including historic and cultural monuments, assessing and monitoring the acidification of rivers and lakes, and assessing air pollution effects on forests.

The Senior Advisers to ECE Governments on Environmental Problems were invited by the Commission<sup>(38)</sup> to continue their work on implementing the 1979 Declaration on Low- and Non-Waste Technology and Reutilization and Recycling of Wastes,<sup>(39)</sup> on protection of flora, fauna and their habitats, and on environmental impact assessment. The Advisers (thirteenth session, 5-8 March)<sup>(39)</sup> had agreed on an outline for the elaboration of a long-term regional strategy for environmental protection and rational use of natural resources. They also endorsed the recommendations of a Seminar on Low-Waste Technology (Tashkent, USSR, 15-19 October 1984).

The Working Party on Low- and Non-Waste Technology and Reutilization and Recycling of Wastes (fifth session, 9-11 January) added 13 new contributions to the Compendium on Low- and Non-Waste Technology, bringing to 127 the number of descriptions of environmentally sound manufacturing technologies. The Group of Experts on Environmental Impact Assessment held its third session from 16 to 18 January.

Human settlements

The Committee on Housing, Building and Planning (forty-sixth session, 9-13 September)<sup>(40)</sup> reviewed human settlements trends and policies in the region, integrated settlements policies and strategies, urban regional planning, housing and building policies and statistics, and considered its possible contributions to the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (1987).

Projects discussed by the Working Party on Building (sixteenth session, 26-29 March) included environmental problems arising from construction, building technology, energy conservation, promotion of trade in building and building products, the ECE Compendium of Model Provisions for Building Regulations, approval and control rules, renovation and modernization, and building pathology and prevention of disorders.

Participants in a Seminar on Modern Building Technologies (Warsaw, 7-11 October) exchanged information and studied technological developments in the building materials and construction industries.

The Working Party on Housing (thirteenth session, 22-25 October) discussed long-term perspectives for regional human settlements development, and considered housing financing, forecasting and programming, and methodologies for evaluating the quality and use value of dwellings.

The Group of Experts on Human Settlements Problems in Southern Europe (Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, 5-8 November) discussed macro-economic aspects of tourism and their impact on town planning and housing policies.

A Seminar on Financing of Housing (Copenhagen, Denmark, 10-14 June) adopted recommendations on raising and allocating funds for housing investment, on housing subsidy systems and on new trends in the financing of housing investments.

Statistics

The Conference of European Statisticians (thirty-third session, 17-21 June)<sup>(41)</sup> continued work on the development and harmonization of statistical concepts, classifications and nomenclatures in the region. It devoted particular attention to international comparisons of main economic aggregates, to environment statistics and to the use of computers in statistical offices, and discussed the problems of publication, dissemination and interpretation of data.

ECE invited<sup>(42)</sup> the Conference to continue to offer members methodological assistance to overcome problems in providing official statistics and continue work towards harmonizing statistical nomenclatures and standards.

The joint FAO/ECE Study Group on Food and Agricultural Statistics in Europe (sixteenth session, Geneva, 15-18 July) amended the existing guidelines and recommendations regarding statistics on area, yield, production and utilization of crops and on livestock numbers and products in ECE member countries.

The first joint ECE/International Research and Training Institute for the Advancement of Women Meeting on Statistics and Indicators on the Role and Situation of Women (Geneva, 11-14 March) stressed the importance of associating both producers and users in the development of new types of statistics on women.

A series of meetings were held on specific aspects of environment statistics to finalize ECE standard international classifications of water use and quality (Geneva, 14-17 January), fauna and flora (24-26 September), solid wastes (25 and 26 November) and environmental indicators (17-29 November), as well as a meeting on frameworks for environment statistics (2-6 December). A Seminar on Methodological Questions relating to Farm Book-keeping Data was held at Voorburg, Netherlands, from 21 to 25 October.

Standardization

The Group of Experts on Standardization Policies (twelfth session, Geneva, 21-23 January;<sup>(43)</sup> thirteenth, Piestany, Czechoslovakia, 28 October-1 November<sup>(44)</sup>) continued its review of an ECE Standardization List of sectors in which ECE Governments felt that a lack of mutual recognition of certain international classifications and tests raised barriers to trade and co-operation.

In April, ECE approved<sup>(45)</sup> the work programme on standardization and related areas proposed by the Group, and decided to convene the Ninth Meeting of Government Officials Responsible for Standardization Policies in 1986.

Programme of work

The Commission requested its Executive Secretary in April<sup>(46)</sup> to collaborate with UNFPA in implementing recommendations of the Regional Meeting on Population and the 1984 International Conference on Population<sup>(47)</sup> and in periodically convening a regional meeting of experts on population. It also requested<sup>(48)</sup> him, taking into account the results of the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (see Chapter XIX of this section), to continue assessing developments concerning the economic role of women in the region in conjunction with other research activities.

The Commission<sup>(49)</sup> approved a new format for work programmes of its principal subsidiary bodies and instructed them, in drafting those programmes, to proceed with an eye to securing better results, efficiency, rational utilization of resources and the removal of overlaps. It decided to select for detailed consideration at annual sessions activities in one major area, from the viewpoint of concentration, integration and co-ordination.

A report<sup>(50)</sup> by the Executive Secretary on the integration of the Commission's work programme contained recommendations concerning management training, telematics, standardization, processing of agricultural products, hazardous wastes, land-use planning, international financing for road infrastructure networks, a special micro-circuit ("smart") card for international transport of goods by road, woodpulp, paper and paperboard, and financing of intra-regional trade.

Latin America and the Caribbean

The Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean did not hold a formal session during 1985, in accordance with its biennial calendar of meetings. On 26 July, the Economic and Social Council decided, by decision 1985/188, that ECLAC's next (twenty-first) session should be held at Mexico City in 1986.

The ECLAC Committee of the Whole (eighteenth session, Buenos Aires, Argentina, 21-23 August 1985) examined aspects of long-term social and economic development policies that could provide guidelines to meet the current crisis in the region and the transformations which the international economy had made necessary. Resolutions were adopted on the implications of and prospects for Latin American external debt on the economic problems peculiar to Caribbean island developing countries and on a change of name of the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning to the Latin American and Caribbean Institute for Economic and Social Planning.

The Committee of High-Level Government Experts (CEGAN) (tenth session, Buenos Aires, 19 and 20 August)<sup>(1)</sup> considered regional socio-economic development policies. It adopted by consensus a position paper on the options open to Latin America and the Caribbean to meet the current crisis and the long-term economic and social development policies which could apply in the light of the changes in the international economy. It also adopted two resolutions: one affirmed that the international community had a responsibility to support the development and structural adjustment efforts of the Caribbean countries, whose development assistance needs were urgent, and supported the World Bank's efforts to reconsider the issue of graduation, by which some Caribbean countries, by virtue of their per capita income levels, were being graduated out of eligibility for concessionary financial resources; the other asked the Executive Secretary to prepare for the 1986 sessions of CEGAN and ECLAC a study on the implications of the Latin American and Caribbean external debt for their economies and the likely prospects.

A meeting of experts (Santiago, Chile, 29 April-3 May)<sup>(c)</sup> analysed the nature, depth and scope of the crisis in Latin America, as well as ways of making adjustment and stabilization consistent with reactivation of the economies and medium- and long-term options of Latin American countries in the face of technological changes in the international economy. Some 100 experts from Latin America and other regions attended.

A summary of the activities from mid-1984 to mid-1985 of the ECLAC Committee of the Whole and of auxiliary bodies and special committees, as well as an account of the February meetings of the executive secretaries of the regional commissions (see p. 684) and a listing of issues calling for action by the Economic and Social Council, were given by the Secretary-General in a June 1985 report.<sup>(3)</sup>

Economic trends

The year 1984 had witnessed an interruption of the sharp downward trend that the rate of growth in the economic activity of Latin America had been showing since 1979, according to the Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 1984.<sup>(4)</sup> The Economic and Social Council took note of a summary of the Survey,<sup>(5)</sup> among other documents, in its decision 1985/182 of 25 July 1985. The rate of inflation rose in half the Latin American economies and, in the region as a whole, reached a new all-time high. The simple average rate of increase of consumer prices rose from 66 per cent in 1983 to 164 per cent in 1984 and the rate weighted by population jumped in the same period from 130 to 185 per cent.

In 1985, according to an advance summary of the 1985 Economic Survey,<sup>(6)</sup> feeble growth in economic activity, concentrated in only a few countries, the generalization and accentuation of inflation (with, however, progress in Argentina, Bolivia and Peru where inflation had reached extraordinarily high levels), and the deterioration of the external sector were the main features of economic evolution in Latin America.

Preliminary figures indicated that GDP increased by 2.7 per cent, compared with 3.2 per cent the year before, permitting an increase in the per capita product of barely 0.4 per cent, a level almost 9 per cent below 1980, about equal to 1977. Further, the economic expansion was due to the activity in a few countries; if Brazil (which grew by 8.2 per cent) was excluded, overall output stagnated, while the per capita product fell 2 per cent. The per capita product went down in 12 of the 20 economies for which data were available.

Inflation continued to increase and became more widespread. The simple average rate of consumer price increases rose to 440 per cent in 1985, while the population-weighted rate rose to 275 per cent. Consumer prices grew by less than 10 per cent in only five of the 22 countries for which data were available, while rising rapidly in many economies where inflation traditionally had been low.

Because of the loss of dynamism in world trade, whose volume grew by less than 3 per cent compared to 9 per cent in 1984, and marked declines in the international prices of basic commodities, the value of Latin American exports dropped by nearly 5 per cent. The terms of trade fell somewhat more than 3 per cent—a total deterioration of more than 17 per cent in the five-year period 1981-1985.

As a result of the decline in exports, the merchandise trade surplus went down in 1985, despite a 1 per cent reduction in imports. After having increased more than fourfold between 1982 and 1984 to a record level of $38.7 billion, the surplus dropped to $34.9 billion in 1985. The current account deficit, which had fallen spectacularly from $41 billion in 1982 to $1 billion in 1984, rose to $3.9 billion in 1985. Since there was simultaneously a drop in the net inflow of capital, the balance of payments closed with a surplus of about $700 million, after having registered more than a $9 billion surplus the year before.

Latin America's external debt was estimated at $368 billion at the end of 1985, having increased by a little more than 2 per cent. While there was a slight reduction in the external indebtedness of Brazil and Venezuela, and that of Mexico increased only slightly, the indebtedness of Bolivia, Colombia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua and Paraguay grew rapidly. Interest rates declined on the main international financial markets, with Latin American interest payments going down by about 4 per cent.

A publication, Panorama Económico de América Latina, issued for the first time in October 1985, described the basic economic characteristics of the main countries of the region during the first half of the year.

Activities in 1985

The 1985 activities of ECLAC were detailed in its biennial report<sup>(7)</sup> covering the period 7 April 1984 to 25 April 1986.

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

Uruguay transmitted to the Secretary-General, in a letter of 18 March,<sup>(8)</sup> the Final Communiqué of the Third Ministerial Meeting of the Consultation and Follow-up Machinery of the Cartagena Consensus (Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, 7 and 8 February 1985). The meeting was attended by the ministers responsible for the financial affairs of the countries signatories to the 1984 Cartagena Consensus<sup>(9)</sup> on the economic and social situation of Latin America—Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Mexico, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The Communiqué stated that in recent months some Latin American countries had concluded with the international financial community programmes for restructuring their external debts and that the terms in those restructurings must be extended to countries which were currently renegotiating their debts. Nevertheless, those debt restructurings merely postponed the problem, since negotiations with commercial banks provided no opportunity to take up questions such as the joint responsibility of debtors and creditors, balanced adjustment, the implications for the debtor countries and the evolution of international trade and finance, which would make a permanent solution to the debt problem possible. There could be no stable solution to the problem unless the debtor and creditor countries agreed on a political framework for those questions as a whole and engaged in a political dialogue. The ministers decided to present their position to meetings of IMF and the World Bank-IMF Development Committee in April.

The Fifth Conference of Ministers and Heads of Planning of Latin America and the Caribbean (Mexico City, 15-17 April) examined the external crisis and revival programmes in future economic and social policies. In addition, a working party considered centralization and decentralization in the public-sector decision-making process, employment, income and social programmes in the second half of the 1980s.

The Technical Committee of the Latin American Institute for Economic and Social Planning (ILPES) held its sixth meeting during the Conference (16 April). The meeting approved bringing up to date the new institutional project (1984-1986), originally adopted in 1983, and gave its support to a policy of decentralization; the new institutional project restructured ILPES's relations with member Governments, inaugurated a different level of activities and established a new system of intergovernmental financial support linked with UNDP backing. The meeting also adopted a name change for ILPES to include the Caribbean countries in its title, although retaining the acronym ILPES; the change was subsequently ratified by the ECLAC Committee of the Whole (see p. 659). The Joint ECLAC/ILPES Planning Unit for the Caribbean was set up and began operating at Port of Spain, Trinidad, in September.

During 1985, ILPES carried out training, research and advisory programmes. Advisory services for planning bodies were provided to Argentina, Belize, Brazil, Colombia, Costa Rica, Chile, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Guyana, Honduras, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay, covering such areas as economic policy, municipal and regional planning, and information systems. Training activities were highlighted by the twenty-sixth international course on development, planning and public policies (Santiago, 24 June-6 December); the third course-seminar on foreign trade policies (Asuncion, Paraguay, 10-28 June); the third course-workshop on current problems and development strategy options (Mexico City, 9 September-29 November); the inter-American course-workshop in construction of indexes of foreign trade (Santiago, 2 September-31 October); and seminars on national economic management issues in the Caribbean (Barbados, 11-15 February), current problems and challenges in Latin American education (Santiago, third week of March), and the environmental dimension in development planning (Buenos Aires, 17-19 June). Research was conducted in various countries in planning, economic and social policies and regional development.

Caribbean area

The Caribbean Development and Co-operation Committee (CDCC) (ninth session, Port of Spain: technical stage, 29-31 May; ministerial stage, 3 and 4 June)<sup>(10)</sup> considered technical co-operation among Caribbean countries, agriculture, social development, transport and communications, international trade and financial issues, energy and natural resources, and population questions. It adopted resolutions setting out a programme of support for small island developing countries,<sup>(11)</sup> preparing future CDCC areas of action<sup>(12)</sup> and establishing a CDCC committee for review, co-ordination and evaluation of its work.<sup>(13)</sup>

International trade and finance

With regard to international trade and financing, efforts were made to form closer relations with economic actors in both the public and private sectors through the Second Meeting of Officials Responsible for External Trade in Latin America (Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, 28-30 January) and the Meeting of Entrepreneurs of the Member Countries of the Latin American Integration Association on Trade and Financing (Montevideo, Uruguay, 26-28 August), at which subjects relating to international and regional co-operation and integration of Latin America were discussed and analysed.

Technical co-operation

The Secretary-General transmitted to the Economic and Social Council in October 1985<sup>(14)</sup> the second volume of a two-part report by JIU on United Nations technical co-operation. Volume II covered the Caribbean; the first part, volume I, on Central America,<sup>(15)</sup> had been conveyed in 1984. The Council, without vote on 26 July, took note of volume I and the comments of the Secretary-General thereon; they were among several documents of which the Council took note in decision 1985/191.

Volume II covered 22 island countries plus Guyana and Suriname. Most were small with limited resources, had serious soil erosion problems, were net importers of food, were highly dependent on traditional cash crops and light industrial products, and had exports subject to price fluctuations in international markets.

Serious attempts had been made to establish institutions and joint programmes and activities in areas of mutual interest; these institutions provided a basic framework and mechanisms for channeling assistance, but their influence in many countries was weak and they were often unable to respond to national needs.

Among recommendations were: (1) the United Nations development system and Governments should give more attention to the institution-building process; (2) basic agreements on creating human resources pools should be initiated, with training as one of the highest priorities in projects where the need was identified; and (4) Governments should place more emphasis on employing young professionals emerging from universities and regional institutes. UNDP and DTCD should ensure through project agreements with Governments that trainees were given the opportunity to use their newly acquired skills (3), should adopt more projects on a regional basis, especially for problems common to all, such as soil erosion and conservation (6), and, to ensure objectivity, should use independent teams of experts to evaluate projects (10). UNDP should review methods used in determining indicative planning figures, and take into consideration unemployment and other socio-economic factors (9). Long-term projects should be well-monitored with regard to preparation of counterparts for future take-over (7); projects concerned with energy, exploration in hydrocarbons and hydroelectric plants should be approached with extreme caution as to costs, debt servicing and priority (8); and optimum and long-term use should be taken into account in all equipment purchases (5).

Commenting on the report, the Secretary-General observed<sup>(16)</sup> that the United Nations supported recommendations 1, 2, 3, 5, 7 and 8. The validity of regional projects for smaller countries was recognized (recommendation 6) but there was also a need for flexibility within such projects to cater to specific needs of individual countries which might be at a different level of development. Recommendations 2, 3 and 4 called for actions which were already being undertaken by regional institutions, with UNDP and DTCD's help, and recommendation 9 would be brought to UNDP's attention, which had already taken steps to increase availability to Governments of independent advice in project evaluation and assessment as proposed in recommendation 10.

Transport

During 1985, a meeting was held by ECLAC on the bicycle as a suitable transport technology for Latin America (Santiago, 12 August).

Other meetings included a Meeting of High-Level Government Experts on Maritime Transport, organized by the secretariat of the Latin American Economic System (SELA) (Caracas, Venezuela, 25 February-1 March), an Ad Hoc Expert Meeting on Maritime Transport (Caracas, 16-22 June), and a Second Meeting of the Operational Regional Co-operation Network between Maritime Authorities (Lima, Peru, 2-6 September). Seminars on customs transit were held at Bogota, Colombia, and at Caracas, and a seminar on transport in the southern region, at Coyhaique, Chile, all in April.

ECLAC maintained close collaboration with the Statistical Office of DIESA for the development of a Uniform System of Maritime Transport Statistics.

Industrial development

ECLAC continued to support co-operative efforts among producers of capital goods. Also, some research was initiated on industrial restructuring and new strategies for industrialization. The second meeting of the working party on industrial reorganization (Bogota, September) considered the reorganization of the Latin American automotive sector.

The Second Meeting of Experts on Capital Goods Industries in Latin America and the Caribbean (4-6 March) and the Fourth Meeting of Latin American Entrepreneurs on Capital Goods (20-22 May) were held at Santiago.

The first issue of a periodic report on industrialization and technological developments, disseminating information on the industrial reorganization and industrialization process in Latin America, was published in December 1985, setting out a number of short studies of both a global and a sectoral nature.

Natural resources, energy and environment

ECLAC carried out various activities during the year relating to the development of water resources, to ocean resources and to new and renewable sources of energy.

It convened a meeting of experts from Latin America and the Caribbean (Santiago, 15-18 April) as part of the preparations for the 1986 United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy (see p. 695).

The first meeting of industrial mining entrepreneurs of Latin America (9-11 September) and the first regular General Assembly of the Latin American Mining Agency (12 and 13 September) were convened at Buenos Aires.

A Regional Seminar on the Environmental Dimension in Development Planning (Buenos Aires, 17-19 June) discussed crisis, planning and the environment; the environmental dimension in global, sectoral and regional planning; science, technology and the environment; natural resources and environmental impact evaluations; public and legal institutions; and horizontal co-operation and the environment.

Food and agriculture

An ECLAC/FAO workshop on agricultural policy and rural development (Santiago, 26-30 August) considered the role of the State in technological change and production growth, ways in which peasants and labourers were brought into new production structures, changes in social composition as a result of the expansion of agriculture, and the social impact of those changes.

Two ECLAC/FAO workshops were held on the analysis and design of economic policy in the agro-food sector. The first (Lima, 6-9 August) examined the formulation of economic policy for the sector and the main features and problems of the food systems of the Andean countries. It also analysed the processes of primary production, agro-industrial processing, and food distribution and consumption, towards formulating food security strategies. The second workshop (Port of Spain, 16-18 December) focused on the food systems and policies of the English-speaking Caribbean countries. Another workshop (Mexico City, 4-8 March) was held on problems and programmes for increasing the production of peasant farming in Latin America and two seminars were held on changes in the agriculture of Latin America, Spain and Portugal (Lisbon, Portugal, 3-6 June) and on food security in Latin America (Santiago, 28 and 29 November).

Science and technology

A Regional Microelectronics Network for Latin America and the Caribbean was established by a UNIDO/ECLAC/SELAMEETING (Caracas, 3-7 June). Its objective was to strengthen technological capabilities in microelectronics through information exchange, establishment of national design centres, regional co-operation, joint manufacture of semiconductors, the application of microelectronics in certain industries, and training.

The Fifth Latin American Seminar on Food Sciences and Technology was held at Viña del Mar, Chile, from 13 to 16 October.

Social and cultural development

ECLAC continued to give priority to activities related to the International Youth Year (1985) (IYY) (see Chapter XX of this section) and to research on women's participation in development and the social structures of society (see Chapter XIX).

The second Latin American and Caribbean regional meeting for IYY (Montevideo, 26-29 August)<sup>(17)</sup> considered youth in a time of change and crisis and approved policies to complement a regional IYY plan of action<sup>(18)</sup>

Seminars were held: on problems and prospects of the university and on the co-operative movement (Montevideo, August and November), on alternatives in social concertation (São Paulo, Brazil, April), on regional social changes (Quito, Ecuador, November), on primary education in areas of rapid urbanization (Santiago, December), to draw up a comparative analysis of the situation of Latin American youth and on policies and strategies for the participation of youth in Latin America (Buenos Aires, June and August), on youth policies in Andean countries (Bogota, September), on youth and the future of Chile (Santiago, November), and on the role of women in the use of new and renewable sources of energy (Santo Domingo, February), statistical analysis of women on the labour market using household surveys (Montevideo, June), and young women in Latin America (Madrid, Spain, November).

Population

A Demography Unit was established by ECLAC and the Latin American Demographic Centre (CELADE) at Port of Spain in January 1985 to broaden CELADE's sphere of action within the population field in the English-speaking Caribbean.

Activities relating to demographic statistics and population trends, population and development, education and training, and documentation and data processing continued to be carried out by CELADE.<sup>(19)</sup>

Statistics

In 1985, ECLAC's Division of Statistics and Quantitative Analysis continued activities under three subprogrammes—a regional framework of statistical information, studies in methods and quantitative analysis, and statistical development and regional statistical co-operation—publishing documents, holding seminars, meetings and conferences, and providing technical assistance.

Seminars on basic statistics for social and economic planning (Mar del Plata, Argentina, March) and information systems for employment (Santiago, August) were organized.

Programme, organizational and administrative questions

Venue of the 1986 session

The Economic and Social Council, in decision 1985/188, adopted by 34 votes to 8, with 4 abstentions, on 26 July, decided that the twenty-first session of ECLAC should be held at Mexico City in early 1986 rather than at ECLAC headquarters in Santiago. The decision had been orally proposed by Ecuador in the First Committee, which approved it on 23 July by 32 votes to 8, with 5 abstentions.

The Secretary-General estimated that the change of venue would result in additional expenses totalling $108,800.<sup>(20)</sup>

The United States objected to the decision, not only because it considered that there was a discrepancy between the amount needed and that requested in the programme budget for meeting at the established headquarters, but also because the decision did not adhere to the principle, enunciated by the Assembly in 1976,<sup>(21)</sup> that a host country should be responsible for the additional costs of a meeting away from commission headquarters; Mexico's proposed contribution did not cover all additional costs, it said. Luxembourg said the EEC members could not support the decision as it conflicted with the Assembly's 1976 resolution, a view shared by Canada. Expressing concern about the Organization's financial situation, Japan said sessions should in principle be held at ECLAC headquarters.

Rules of procedure on venue

In decision 1985/190 of 26 July, the Council requested ECLAC to analyse rule 2 of its rules of procedure at its 1986 session, taking into account the Assembly's 1976 resolution<sup>(22)</sup> containing general principles for meetings of United Nations bodies away from their headquarters, and report thereon to the Council at its second regular session, in July 1986. Rule 2<sup>(22)</sup> stated that ECLAC's recommendation regarding the place of meeting for its sessions should be taken with due consideration for the principle that the countries of Latin America be chosen in rotation. The text was orally proposed in the First Committee by Mexico, on 23 July, and adopted without vote the next day.

1984 resolution on El Salvador

By a letter of 11 January<sup>(23)</sup> to the President of the Economic and Social Council, El Salvador asked the Council to take note of and possibly endorse a 1984 resolution<sup>(24)</sup> of the ECLAC Committee of the Whole adopted in response to the emergency situation in that country. The second paragraph of the resolution had recommended that, although El Salvador was not officially on the list of LDCs approved by the General Assembly in 1971,<sup>(25)</sup> it be accorded to the maximum extent possible, until the situation returned to normal, a treatment equivalent to that given to LDCs.

The Council noted, in decision 1985/110 adopted without vote on 8 February—orally proposed by the President on behalf of the Bureau following informal consultations—that the Committee of the Whole had adopted the resolution concerning assistance to El Salvador without signifying any agreement by the Council with paragraph 2 regarding the treatment of countries as LDCs. It emphasized that as a general practice the existing procedures for the inclusion of countries in the list should be followed by all bodies of the United Nations system.

Western Asia

The Economic Commission for Western Asia, which held its twelfth session, at the ministerial level, at Baghdad, Iraq, on 24 and 25 April,<sup>(1)</sup> considered progress made in the implementation of its work programme, follow-up action at the regional level on United Nations world conferences, co-operation among developing countries and regional organizations, and issues and problems facing the countries of the region. The chief issues discussed were food security and agricultural development, technology and its ramifications, and the role of joint ventures in promoting economic co-operation.

The Commission endorsed its work programme and priorities for 1986-1987 and recommendations thereon by its Technical Committee;<sup>(2)</sup> asked the Executive Secretary, in his report to the 1986 session, to give details on the implementation of changes in the programme, amounts allocated and spent, elements scheduled and carried out, and problems encountered, with proposed solutions;<sup>(3)</sup> asked him to expedite the filling of vacancies in the ECWA secretariat;<sup>(4)</sup> called on him to include all available data on the occupied Palestinian territories in all Commission studies and statistical abstracts, and include studies in the work programme for 1986-1987 on economic and social conditions in those territories, including studies on population, the Israeli settlement policy and the industrial sector;<sup>(5)</sup> and asked for revision of a 1983 study<sup>(6)</sup> of the economic and social situation of the Palestinian Arab people, with the assistance of a sub-committee it had set up earlier to help with the text, whose work was to be completed by August 1985 for approval by an intergovernmental meeting of the Commission by the end of October<sup>(7)</sup> (see also p. 344).

Other resolutions concerned science and technology, technical co-operation activities, and transport and communications (see under subject headings below).

The Commission's Technical Committee, its only subsidiary body, held its third session at Baghdad from 20 to 23 April.<sup>(8)</sup> It discussed ECWA'S work programme and priorities for 1986-1987, and recommended to it resolutions on that programme, on the economic and social conditions of the Palestinian Arab people under occupation, on the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific (1985-1994) proclaimed in 1984,<sup>(9)</sup> which included Western Asia, and on the name change of the Commission (see below). Attention centred on the priority programmes of social development, new and renewable sources of energy, science and technology, and statistics.

A summary of the Commission's activities from mid-1984 to mid-1985 and an account of the February meetings of the executive secretaries of the regional commissions (see p. 684), as well as issues and resolutions calling for action by the Economic and Social Council, were transmitted by the Secretary-General in a June 1985 report.<sup>(10)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted, without vote, resolution 1985/69.

Amendment of the terms of reference of the Economic Commission for Western Asia: change of name of the Commission

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1818(LV) of 9 August 1973, by which it established the Economic Commission for Western Asia and laid down its terms of reference,

Recalling paragraph 1 (f) of those terms of reference,

Aware of the extreme importance of social development in the context of the overall development of the economies of Member States, and with the aim of achieving congruence between the subject-matter of the major activities undertaken by the Commission in the economic and social domains and its designation,

Recalling resolution 133(XII) of 24 April 1985 of the Economic Commission for Western Asia on the designation of the Commission,

1. Decides to change the name of the Economic Commission for Western Asia to "Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia";

2. Also decides to amend the terms of reference of the Commission as contained in Council resolution 1818(LV) to reflect the new name.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/69

26 July 1985

Meeting 52

Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/145/Add.1) without vote, 24 July (meeting 28); draft by ECWA (E/1986/106); agenda item 8.

Economic and social trends

Two major factors—the decline of the United States dollar since February 1985 and the continued decline of oil prices which had begun in 1983—had a negative impact on the nations of Western Asia during 1985. Since oil payments were made primarily in dollars, the declining value of the dollar further reduced the purchasing power of the already shrinking oil revenues of Western Asia oil exporters, according to the Survey of Economic and Social Developments in the ESCWA Region.<sup>(11)</sup> The Economic and Social Council took note on 25 July in decision 1985/182 of a summary<sup>(12)</sup> of the Survey, among other documents. The summary was updated in 1986.<sup>(13)</sup>

Another negative effect of the decline in the dollar's value on the countries of Western Asia was that the value of their international reserves and foreign assets fell in terms of other currencies. Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates were the most affected.

Since the late 1970s and early 1980s, Western Asia members of OPEC had suffered from a double squeeze, the growth of non-oil energy supplies and the expansion of production of non-OPEC oil producers. Moreover, market economies' demand for oil declined in 1985 to 45.6 million barrels per day, from 46.1 million barrels in 1984, and ESCWA countries' share in world oil production fell to 15.76 per cent from the 1984 level of 17.39 per cent.

With the slow-down in world economic growth and trade, protectionism among developed countries increased in 1985. In particular, Western Asia was affected by EEC's imposition of a tariff on Saudi Arabia's petrochemical products. Together with other Gulf countries, Saudi Arabia had invested billions of dollars in the petrochemical industry in an effort to diversify its economy and exports. At the same time, other major exports such as textiles and clothes continued to suffer from restrictions on their access to the markets of developed countries.

Development policy and regional economic co-operation

The Commission held various meetings and undertook a number of activities intensifying its co-operation with specialized agencies and other organs, such as the United Nations Centre for Science and Technology for Development (UNCSTD), the Voluntary Fund for the United Nations Decade for Women (subsequently to become the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM)), FAO, the United Nations Centre for Human Settlements, UNDP, UNEP, UNFPA and UNIDO, examples of which are given below.

Current issues in economic co-operation and integration in Western Asia, in the context of progress made in implementing the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade (the 1980s)<sup>(14)</sup> (see Chapter I of this section), were considered in a January report<sup>(15)</sup> to the Commission. Among the issues were subregional co-operation, joint ventures, trade promotion and economic co-operation agreements, private sector involvement, institutional developments, resource transfers and labour movements.

A report on the role of joint ventures in promoting economic co-operation and integration in Western Asia was submitted in March.<sup>(16)</sup> The report examined the implications of the differences between inter-Arab and developing-country multinational joint ventures, some achievements of the inter-Arab ventures, their benefits and costs, policy issues, and new areas for joint ventures.

Technical co-operation

The Commission continued to undertake technical co-operation activities in the region during 1985, providing short-term advisory services and monitoring and backstopping technical assistance projects. In a report to UNDP,<sup>(17)</sup> the Secretary-General noted that, within the framework of its regular programme of regional advisory services, ECWA rendered assistance to member States in development planning, electronics and information processing, human resources development, industrial project identification, formulation and appraisal, household surveys, transport and communications, and new and renewable sources of energy.

Under UNFPA-funded regional advisory services, assistance was provided to two countries in demography and to four countries in population statistics. Advice was provided to three countries through UNIDO-sponsored regional advisory services in industrial and mechanical engineering.

Other activities included the development of statistical services in Yemen, assistance to the Arab Planning Institute in Kuwait, and UNIFEM-funded work related to the role of women in national development.

On 25 April,<sup>(18)</sup> ECWA requested the Executive Secretary to increase the elements of the technical co-operation and assistance programme in accordance with members' needs, to specify in that programme advisory services to be provided and the projects to be financed from extrabudgetary resources, and to submit an outline of the main features of the next programme.

International trade and finance

A report on recent developments in international trade and payments in the countries of Western Asia<sup>(19)</sup> and a mid-term (1980-1984) review and analysis of progress in achieving objectives of the International Development Strategy on regional monetary and financial issues and developments<sup>(20)</sup> were submitted to the Commission. In addition, a review of fiscal and monetary issues and developments in the region, 1984, was issued in July 1985.<sup>(21)</sup> In December,<sup>(22)</sup> a consultant's report on the implications of external debt problems for the debtor and creditor countries of Western Asia was presented to the Commission.

Transport and communications

The Commission's activities concentrated on the development of integrated transport and formulation of a regional transport strategy in Western Asia. Reports and studies were published on transport harmonization and standardization, on inter- and intraregional land transport links, on the development of bulk shipping fleets, and on the Transport and Communications Decade for Asia and the Pacific.

On 24 April,<sup>(23)</sup> the Commission invited member States and urged international and regional organizations, particularly Arab organizations and funds, to contribute to the implementation of the Decade's programme of action.

Recommendations to facilitate border crossings, including the simplification and standardization of transport documents and the improvement of administrative measures and terminal facilities, were submitted to the Commission in February<sup>(24)</sup> with a secretarial suggestion that draft procedures on a draft convention on the subject might be prepared.

The first issue of the ESCWA Transport Bulletin was published in December.

Industrial development

Industrial pollution control in Western Asia—in particular, the environmental stresses of industrialization, waste control practices, environmentally sound technology, institutional organization for pollution control, regulatory policy and enforcement, incentives for abatement of industrial wastes and recommendations for an action programme—was examined in a Commission report.<sup>(25)</sup>

Other reports covered regional industrial trends, the iron and steel industry and automotive industries. A framework for a master plan was completed in the area of oil refining, petrochemicals and fertilizers, outlining the technological capabilities in engineering and design of countries in the region.

An Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on Capital Goods Industries (Amman, Jordan, 27 and 28 November) reviewed pre-feasibility and pre-investment studies on telephone exchanges and instruments, electric power turbines and generators, transformers, telephone and power cables, equipment for chemical industries, construction, agricultural machinery and automotive manufacturing.

Transnational corporations

A regional intergovernmental meeting of the countries of Western Asia on the United Nations draft code of conduct on TNCs (Baghdad, 18 and 19 November) reviewed the status of the negotiations on the code and examined outstanding issues (see Chapter VII of this section).

Reports were completed on the scope of activities of TNCs in Western Asia, highlighting the region's growing dependence on the international market for its petrochemicals and other manufactures, and on the operations of TNCs in the industrial sector in Bahrain.

Environment, natural resources and energy

A report was issued on the environmental consequences of urbanization in Western Asia, highlighting the status and trends of urbanization, major environmental problems, environmental services in metropolitan centres, a proposed institutional structure for urban environmental management and a plan for environmental monitoring.

A survey of recent activities in water resources development in the region was completed in 1985.

Work on formulating energy planning methodologies for Jordan, Kuwait and the Syrian Arab Republic was completed, and an Expert Group Meeting on Integrated Energy Planning met at Amman from 30 November to 3 December.

A technical meeting for participating institutions in the regional New and Renewable Sources of Energy Information Network (Baghdad, 2 and 3 September)<sup>(26)</sup> examined the current use and supply of information and the role and obligations of the participants and secretariat, and suggested terms of reference for national focal points.

A joint ESCWA/FAO/UNEP mission identified a desertification control project in Yemen.

Food and agriculture

An expert consultation on agrarian systems and the socio-economic implications of fragmented holdings in the Near East was convened by the joint ESCWA/FAO Agriculture Division in December. An expert group meeting on critical factors in wheat production and distribution was also organized by the Commission and FAO in December.

A training workshop on the use of computers for analysis of agricultural and rural development projects was held in November at ESCWA headquarters, in co-operation with FAO and the National Institute for Planning of Iraq.

Science and technology

The Commission co-operated with UNCSTD in promoting subregional and regional co-operation for the strengthening of national scientific and technological capabilities.

The Ad Hoc Expert Group Meeting on the Mid-Decade Review of the Implementation of the 1979 Vienna Programme of Action on Science and Technology for Development<sup>(27)</sup> (Baghdad, 17-20 February) submitted a report<sup>(28)</sup> to the Commission, which, on 25 April,<sup>(29)</sup> requested the Executive Secretary to review the implementation of the Programme for 1986-1987 and up to the end of the decade.

Social development

UNIFEM supported technical assistance projects on women and development through research, seminars, training and studies.

The Commission convened a workshop (Baghdad, 25 June-2 July), in co-operation with the Federation of Arab Women, to acquaint delegations with the procedures and issues of the 1985 World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women (1976-1985) (see Chapter XIX of this section).

Formulation of an Arab strategy for social development was the focus of a United Nations/League of Arab States sectoral meeting (Amman, 19-21 August) and a Symposium on Contemporary Problems of the Arab Gulf Societies (Baghdad, November).

Thirteen publications were produced by the Commission in its series on Arab women in development, covering such subjects as national planning, mass media and community self-help activities.

Population

Implementing its population programme, the Commission co-operated closely with UNFPA, which financed subprogrammes on demographic data collection and analysis, population and development policy, and population education and information.

An expert group meeting was held with the Arab Planning Institute (Kuwait, 25-28 November), which discussed characteristics, prospects and employment and migration policies of the Arab labour force.

A report<sup>(30)</sup> on the status of statistics dealing with international migration in the region was submitted by the ECWA Statistics Division in March. It included proposals designed to establish statistical methods better suited to the region, to standardize its statistical concepts, definitions and classification methods, and to enhance co-operation between the countries of the region in statistics.

A technical paper on population projections for nationals in Bahrain, Kuwait, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, 1980-2005, was published. Issues of the Population Bulletin of ESCWA were published in Arabic and English in June and December, respectively.

Human settlements

Human settlements country studies on Democratic Yemen, Iraq and Jordan were completed in 1985. The studies analytically reviewed human settlements issues relating to population, housing, the construction industry, infrastructure services, environment, financial resources for housing development and human settlements policies, intended to serve as a basis for the preparation of settlement policies and strategies. A study on the Syrian Arab Republic was initiated.

In addition, a preliminary study for the establishment of a brick-making plant in Democratic Yemen and a report on the feasibility of a brick factory in Yemen were completed.

Urban environmental management in Alexandria, Egypt, and Amman was assessed by the Commission and UNEP, which also financed a training workshop on the integrated planning of human settlements, sanitation and waste management.

Statistics

Various statistical projects were supported by UNDP, mainly in connection with national household surveys to provide information required for development planning, policies and programmes, and the development of statistical services.

The first meeting of the heads of central statistical organizations in the ESCWA region (Baghdad, 3-5 December) considered the ESCWA statistical programme for 1986-1987; endorsed a draft agreement between the secretariats of ESCWA and the League of Arab States containing projects on statistics; called for more financial support and participation in the National Household Survey Capability Programme; called on ESCWA members to participate in the fifth phase of the International Comparison Programme, having examined a study on the methodology of real income comparison in States of the region, and reviewed agricultural, environmental, income distribution, migration and national accounts statistics.

The eighth issue of Statistical Abstract of the Region of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia was published, covering 1974 to 1983 and presenting data on population, social statistics, national accounts, agriculture, forestry and fisheries, transport, communications and tourism.

Chapter IX

Natural resources and cartography

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration, administered by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), continued to assist developing countries during 1985. For the third consecutive year, however, the Fund's expenditures declined, and its financial situation was rapidly reaching a critical stage, according to the UNDP Administrator. The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1985/51, recognized the urgent need for increased financial support.

The Committee on Natural Resources held its ninth session in New York from 8 to 17 April. Acting on the Committee's recommendations, the Council adopted resolutions on mineral resources (1985/48), small-scale mining (1985/47), electronic data processing in mineral exploration (1985/50), permanent sovereignty over natural resources (1985/52), co-ordinating United Nations natural resources programmes (1985/53), water resources development (1985/49 A and B) and rationalizing the Committee's work (1985/54). The Council also adopted resolutions on improving secretariat support for the Committee (1985/55) and on marine affairs (1985/75).

In December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/171 on drinking water supply and sanitation services.

The Third United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas was held in New York from 19 February to 1 March.

Topics related to this chapter. Law of the sea: sea-bed mining code. Middle East: occupied territories-permanent sovereignty over national resources. Development policy and international economic co-operation: special economic areas-least developed countries. Operational activities for development. Regional economic and social activities. Energy resources-general aspects. Environment: environmental activities-ecosystems.

for Natural Resources Exploration

Activities

The United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration (UNRFNRE), a financing source for developing countries in natural resources exploration and development, continued its activities during 1985, its eleventh year of operation. Its 1985 activities were summarized in a March 1986 report of the UNDP Administrator.(*)

The overriding priority of the Fund in 1985 was to seek increased donor support in view of a financial situation rapidly becoming critical. Virtually all the Fund's financial resources available for new programming had been allocated, emphasizing the need for new and higher levels of contributions. Consequently, the Fund had tried to make itself better known among Member States, but the results had been limited.

The Fund intensified its efforts to promote investment. It collaborated with Argentina in a call for international tenders to include feasibility work and development/exploitation options on the Huemules gold discovery. Ecuador and a small international mining group agreed to promote investment interest in the San Bartolomé silver deposit discovered by the Fund; however, with the continued depressed price of silver, the economic viability of exploiting that resource remained uncertain.

A kaolin-exploration drilling programme in Benin resulted in the Fund's discovery of a second mineral deposit; it was hoped that the discovery would lead to investment in domestic industrial facilities.

In a continuing exploration programme in Haiti, the Fund and the Government took a new approach to interest mining groups in a gold vein system discovered in the Faille B area near Cap-Haïtien. At the Fund's suggestion, the Government began discussions with the international mining sector for further evaluation and exploration of its gold properties; the aim was to interest the private sector in a take-over of activities, eliminating the gap between the reporting of a successful Fund project and investment follow-up. Meanwhile, the Fund continued its work in Haiti to define the mineralization.

In 1985, the Fund reached major co-financing arrangements for the first time with bilateral donors in consultation with host Governments: with the United States Agency for International Development for a geothermal exploration project in Saint Lucia, and with France on a feasibility study as follow-up to an offshore phosphate discovery near Pointe Noire in the Congo, parallel to a financing arrangement. In a third co-financing arrangement, Belgium assisted in the financing of beneficiation tests on a bulk-silver sample from the San Bartolomé, Ecuador, discovery.

The Fund's co-financing initiatives for specific projects with donor Governments were important particularly in the short term, allowing the Fund to extend its limited resources to more countries. Without co-financing, it would have been impossible to consider relatively more expensive projects, particularly for geothermal exploration.

The UNDP Governing Council, on 28 June,<sup>(2)</sup> approved projects for gold exploration in Rwanda and geothermal exploration drilling at Las Planillas, Jalisco State, Mexico. The Council noted the approval by the Administrator of supplementary short-term funding for mineral exploration in the Migori area of Kenya, and his successful efforts to obtain co-financing for the project in Saint Lucia. The Council also endorsed the appointment of Shigeaki Tomita as the new UNRPNRE Director.

Subsequent to the Council's June meeting, the Administrator approved allocations for geothermal exploration in the Qualibou Caldera, Saint Lucia, as well as for exploration for precious and base metals in Honduras and the Ivory Coast.

Approving the 1986 budget, the Council, on 29 June,<sup>(3)</sup> appropriated $1,486,600 for the Fund.

Contributions and expenditures

UNRPNRE project expenditures declined for the third consecutive year, from $3.6 million in 1984<sup>(4)</sup> to $2.6 million in 1985. To finance seven projects at a value of $18.2 million, the Fund allocated all of its cumulative financial resources ($12.7 million) available for programming in 1985; an additional allocation of $2.2 million was requested from the UNDP Governing Council. In addition, the Fund obtained for the first time substantial third-party co-financing of projects, amounting to $3.3 million. Government contributions in 1985 totalled $4.4 million.

In his March 1985 annual report on the Fund,<sup>(5)</sup> the UNDP Administrator stated that the degree to which UNRPNRE could carry out its mandate rested on voluntary and eventual replenishment contributions, supplemented by co-financing; in the long run, however, success would be achieved only through sustained core programme financing.

The UNDP Governing Council in June<sup>(2)</sup> noted with concern the depletion of Fund resources and renewed its appeal to Member States to contribute to the Fund in order for it to fulfil its mandate.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1985, on the recommendation of its First (Economic) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/51.

United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 3167(XXVIII) of 17 December 1973 and Economic and Social Council resolution 1762(LIV) of 18 May 1973, concerning the establishment of the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration,

1. Takes note of the report of the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme on the United Nations Revolving Fund for Natural Resources Exploration and requests the Administrator to provide, in his next report, detailed information on deposits discovered;

2. Welcomes the efforts of the Fund to promote pre-investment follow-up to its successful mineral discoveries, in close co-operation with the recipient Governments;

3. Also welcomes the new activities of the Fund in geothermal exploration;

4. Recognizes the urgent requirement to increase financial support to the Fund by means of voluntary contributions;

5. Welcomes the efforts made by the Fund to seek co-financing partners as a means of expanding its immediate funding capacity to meet the demands for projects.

Electronic data processing in natural resources exploration and development

A report on electronic data processing in mineral exploration, development and production was submitted by the Secretary-General in March 1985<sup>(6)</sup> to the Committee on Natural Resources, in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution.<sup>(7)</sup>

The report, a follow-up to one submitted in 1983 on new exploration techniques,<sup>(8)</sup> reflected the conclusions of a group convened by the Secretary-General in 1984.<sup>(9)</sup> It stated that electronic data processing methods had made valuable contributions to mineral exploration, development and operation, but warned against applying computers to tasks that were better done manually. As the use of electronic methods in developing countries varied widely, some countries having little or no experience, the support required for activities needed to be correctly identified. Areas yielding demonstrable economic returns were production reporting, maintenance scheduling, spare parts inventory control, process control and mine planning, and data-intensive activities such as financial analysis, geological modelling and ore reserve estimation had been established areas for many years. Applications to other areas might not be uneconomic, but their viability had to be established.

The development of computer applications should depend on the satisfaction of several conditions: the prospect of real benefit from introduction of the computer; user understanding of the application; availability of suitable software and hardware; and adequate training of operators and users. It was recommended that, where possible, emphasis be placed on providing training programmes in developing countries for executives, professionals and data preparation staff.

The United Nations should continue to expand the application of computer techniques in its technical co-operation projects and should develop guidelines for hardware and software application in those projects; its Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (DTCD) planned to increase substantially its activities in that area.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1985, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/50.

Application of microcomputer technology in the development of water, energy and mineral resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the rapid growth and the development potential of computer technology, in particular the advent of inexpensive and reliable microcomputers and the need of developing countries for information on hardware, software and training materials,

Bearing in mind the advantages that developing countries could derive from a wider application of such techniques in the implementation of natural resources development policy,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on the application of computer technology in mineral exploration and development and of the information provided on the current activities of the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the United Nations Secretariat in this field,

Taking note also of the progress made in the application of computer technology for the assessment and development of energy and water resources in the developing countries through various technical co-operation activities,

Mindful of the importance of the transfer of technology, in particular appropriate new technology, that will strengthen the capabilities of developing countries,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to continue activities related to the application of microcomputer technology in the assessment, development and planning of natural resources-water, energy and mineral resources-in such areas as the development and dissemination of appropriate software technology;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Committee on Natural Resources at its tenth and subsequent sessions on the progress made in the application of the technology referred to in paragraph 1 above.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(10)</sup> the latest in a series since 1977,<sup>(11)</sup> submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in February 1985 a report<sup>(12)</sup> on the exercise of control by developing countries over their natural resources. The report reviewed such issues as strengthening of national capabilities to finance and manage exploration, exploitation and processing of natural resources; investment promotion; possibilities for economic and technical co-operation; and issues related to the conservation of natural resources and environment protection. It also dealt with new developments regarding arbitration and renegotiation as they related to the principles of permanent sovereignty, and briefly summarized DTCD technical co-operation activities in the natural resources field.

The report saw an acute need for specific technical co-operation activities related to natural resources in developing countries. In the past, attention had focused on the development by Governments and international companies of export-oriented large-scale projects; the current situation, however, warranted a measure of re-orientation to domestic efforts, small-scale mining and mineral production for national or regional consumption. Institutional arrangements in developing countries for mineral sector development might also be reviewed; such arrangements included the organization of respective ministries, geological and mining agencies, State mineral enterprises and financing arrangements.

Another issue was how to find and agree on a neutral body to recommend mining and petroleum law experts with experience in developing countries, who could act as arbitrator when the parties themselves could not agree on either institutional international arbitration bodies or on a third arbitrator. DTCD maintained a computerized roster of experts, a service available to Governments at their request.

From experience with rehabilitation of run-down mines, it was evident that many could be rehabilitated relatively easily, given a more favourable economic environment, efficient project management and financial support. Governments might wish to examine closed mines and mines in decline, with United Nations technical co-operation, to determine their rehabilitation potential; it might also be useful for them to review all mineral development opportunities and examine strategies for investment follow-up.

The Commission on Transnational Corporations (TNCs) took up at a special session in June (see p. 616) the principal outstanding issues, including respect for national sovereignty, in a draft code of conduct on TNCs. It was proposed that a provision in the code declare that TNCs respect the right of each State to exercise permanent sovereignty over its natural resources and wealth.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council, without vote, adopted resolution 1985/52.

Permanent sovereignty over natural resources The Economic and Social Council,

Recognizing the problems caused by the present international economic situation to most countries, in particular the developing countries,

Noting the importance for all countries, in particular the developing countries, to maximize the benefits from the exploration for, and the exploitation and processing of, their natural resources in order to strengthen their economic development,

Having taken note of the report of the Secretary-General on permanent sovereignty over natural resources and of the comments made thereon by the Committee on Natural Resources at its ninth session,

Taking into account the work done in mother forums of the United Nations system regarding permanent sovereignty over natural resources,

1. Requests the Committee on Natural Resources to continue, at its tenth session, its consideration of the item entitled "Permanent sovereignty over natural resources", including:

(a) Strengthening of national capabilities to explore for, exploit and process natural resources for the national benefit;

(b) National experience of different countries in developing natural resources;

(c) Impact of the international economic situation on the exploitation of natural resources, particularly in the developing countries;

(d) Promotion of investments in natural resources to meet basic priorities in the developing countries, taking into account, inter alia, the perspectives of national and world markets;

(e) Creation of new industries in developing countries, based on an integrated transformation and industrialization of their natural resources;

(f) Technical and technological developments related to natural resources in developing countries;

(g) Conservation of natural resources;

(h) Environment and natural resources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a report on the question of permanent sovereignty over natural resources, taking into account the matters referred to in paragraph 1 above and the comments made by the Committee at its ninth session;

3. Reaffirms, in this context, the importance of the ongoing work of the Commission on Transnational Corporations on a code of conduct on transnational corporations, as it relates to natural resources.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/52

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/148) without vote. 15 July (meeting 21); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1985/27); agenda item 11.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

The General Assembly, in resolution 40/56, requested Member States, as well as organizations of the United Nations system, to ensure that the permanent sovereignty of colonial Territories over their natural resources was fully respected and safeguarded.

Committee on Natural Resources

The Committee on Natural Resources held its ninth session in New York from 8 to 17 April 1985.<sup>(13)</sup> It discussed mineral, energy, and water resources; new techniques, including remote sensing, for exploring natural resources; activities and financing of UNRFRRE; permanent sovereignty over natural resources; utilization of subsurface space; co-ordination of United Nations natural resources programmes; and the provisional agenda for its tenth (1987) session. The Committee recommended to the Economic and Social Council for adoption eight draft resolutions and one draft decision. By another decision, it recommended that the Council transmit to the General Assembly a draft resolution on the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (see p. 680); three other decisions were brought to the Council's attention.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/54.

Rationalization of the work of the Committee on Natural Resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Reiterating the need to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the work of the Committee on Natural Resources,

Reiterating that a timely distribution of documents is essential to an improvement of the efficiency of the work of the Committee,

Reiterating that the Committee could make recommendations on appropriate priorities and programme emphasis to the Economic and Social Council and through the Council to Governments and other bodies, such as the United Nations Development Programme,

Reaffirming the terms of reference of the Committee set out in Council resolution 1535(XLIX) of 27 July 1970,

Recalling its resolution 1982/50 of 28 July 1982 on the revitalization of the Council and the views expressed on that subject by the Committee at its eighth session,

1. Reiterates that the documents for each session of the Committee on Natural Resources should be distributed in the appropriate languages at least six weeks before the commencement of the session;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to report on the programme activities of the United Nations system, in particular of the appropriate divisions of the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs and the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development of the United Nations Secretariat, in the field of natural resources, particularly with regard to mineral resources, energy and water; this information will assist the Committee in fulfilling its analytical and advisory role in the field of natural resources, outlined in its terms of reference;

3. Decides that, as an experiment, the Committee shall give priority at each of its sessions, on a cyclical basis, to the examination of one of the main subjects of natural resources set out in paragraph 4 (a) of Council resolution 1535(XLIX); in this connection, with due respect for the concept of the sovereignty of every State, attention shall also be paid to the other main subjects, as well as to other subjects within the terms of reference of the Committee;

4. Also decides that the Committee, at its tenth session, shall give priority consideration to the subject of water resources;

5. Requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the appropriate organizations of the United Nations system, to pay special attention to the priority subject of water resources in preparing the documents for the tenth session of the Committee.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/54

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/148) without vote, 15 July (meeting 21); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1985/27); agenda item 11.

On the same date, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/55.

Improvement of secretariat servicing and substantive support services for the Committee on Natural Resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Taking into account the concerns expressed at the ninth session of the Committee on Natural Resources and at the second regular session of 1985 of the Economic and Social Council regarding the need to improve secretariat servicing and substantive support services for future sessions of the Committee on Natural Resources,

Recalling the recommendation made by the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination at its twenty-fifth session concerning the early issuance of the Secretary-General's bulletin and the sections of the organizational manual for the relevant United Nations offices and departments in the economic and social field,

1. Requests the Secretary-General to make the necessary arrangements, within existing resources and existing secretariat machinery, to assign secretariat responsibility which would ensure, on an ongoing basis, adequate and timely preparations, including documentation, for future sessions of the Committee on Natural Resources;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to report to the Economic and Social Council at its organizational session for 1986 on the action taken in this regard.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/55

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/148) without vote, 15 July (meeting 21): 7-nation draft (E/1985/C.1/L.7); agenda item 11.

Sponsors: Argentina, Canada, India, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, United States

Also on 25 July, the Council, by decision 1985/166, took note of the report of the Committee on Natural Resources on its 1985 session and approved the provisional agenda and documentation for its 1987 session. The decision originated in the Committee on Natural Resources.

Co-ordination of UN activities

The Secretary-General, pursuant to a 1983 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(14)</sup> submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in March 1985 a report<sup>(15)</sup> on programme co-ordination, describing co-ordination arrangements as well as inter-agency co-operation in water resources development (see p. 679). A report on mineral resources had been submitted to the Committee in 1983.<sup>(16)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1985, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/53.

Co-ordination of programmes within the United Nations system in the field of natural resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1535(XLIX) of 27 July 1970, by which it decided to establish the Committee on Natural Resources and set out its terms of reference, specifically charging the Committee to maintain liaison between the activities in the field of natural resources of the regional commissions, the specialized agencies, the International Atomic Energy Agency and other bodies doing relevant work, with a view to ensuring the utmost efficiency and co-operation,

Mindful of the vital contribution made by bilateral and multilateral technical co-operation programmes in enhancing national capabilities in developing countries effectively to explore for, manage and develop their natural resources, Concerned that the Committee should effectively advise the Council in order to ensure maximum co-ordination, and thus the effectiveness and economy of the activities of the United Nations.

Recognizing that co-ordination of technical assistance activities within the United Nations system has significant potential for increasing the efficiency and expanding the results of United Nations and other resource development activities within existing funding constraints,

Observing that available information on United Nations and related activities in natural resources co-operation should be taken into consideration by the Committee in preparing its recommendations,

Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and co-operation in water resources development,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on co-ordination and co-operation in water resources development and requests the Secretary-General to update that report for the tenth session of the Committee on Natural Resources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to submit to the Committee at its eleventh session a report based, inter alia, on information made available by Governments, documenting United Nations and related activities in mineral resources directed at:

(a) Strengthening national institutions in developing countries for the conduct of exploration, development and planning activities;

(b) Conducting surveys and studies to assist in the identification of mineral resources and the encouragement of their development;

(c) Enhancing national technical capabilities through the transfer and application of necessary technology for the development of basic resource information, and for the exploration for, assessment and development of natural resources, including the training of both technical and managerial personnel;

3. Requests the Committee on Natural Resources, at its eleventh session, on the basis of the report requested in paragraph 2 above, to make recommendations to the Economic and Social Council on way:: to ensure and improve co-operation and the overall efficiency of all the aforementioned activities;

4. Invites Governments to take that report into account in their activities directed at co-operation in mineral resources.

Other aspects

Utilization of subsurface space

In response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(17)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted in February 1985 to the Committee on Natural Resources a report on the development and utilization of subsurface space.<sup>(18)</sup> The report dealt with steps to strengthen support mechanisms relating to the use of subsurface space as well as progress made in the development and use of such space in various countries. It included a summary of activities by various United Nations organizations in that sector and recommendations concerning steps to bring the potential uses of subsurface space more effectively to the attention of developing countries.

Only limited resources had been made available to strengthen support mechanisms, the report concluded. Since the use of subsurface space could make a significant impact on development activity in developing countries, Governments might wish to consider ways of placing greater emphasis on it. Subsurface space offered opportunities for improving transport facilities, food storage and public utilities, for storage of water, oil, gas and certain wastes, and for alleviating space problems in crowded urban areas. It was important that experience in utilizing subsurface space was shared with and among developing countries, and that the availability of qualified national professionals was increased. Basic issues in the use and development of such space needed to be identified, and the establishment of criteria for underground structures could be given greater priority.

To create awareness of the uses of subsurface space, the report recommended that the United Nations provide expert advisory services to developing countries and that information on subsurface space be identified with a view to preparing a publication for use by Member States.

The Committee took note of the report on 16 April.<sup>(19)</sup>

Mineral resources

Technical co-operation

During 1985, DTCD, in addition to UNRFNRE, continued to provide developing countries with assistance in mineral exploration, institution building and strengthening, project design, mineral sector planning, mine development and rehabilitation, mining legislation and contract negotiations, advanced technology transfer, the application of computer techniques in mineral exploration, and training.

A total of 61 technical assistance projects were operational in 43 countries, with expenditures of $12.5 million. The projects were described in an addendum to a report of the Secretary-General on United Nations technical co-operation activities.<sup>(*)</sup>

Fifteen projects were concerned mainly with strengthening government institutions (universities, geological survey departments, State corporations), central laboratories and pilot plants. They included training for mineral exploration in Ethiopia, training support to the Geological Survey of India, strengthening of the Mozambique Ministry of Mineral Resources and similar endeavours in Bhutan, China, the Dominican Republic, Gabon, Guinea, Guyana, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Somalia and Turkey.

Large-scale mineral exploration programmes continued in Burkina Faso, Burundi, Haiti, Rwanda and the United Republic of Tanzania.

Work was carried forward in Mali evaluating newly-discovered gold deposits. Operational assistance to the Ghana State Gold Mining Corporation continued, together with rehabilitation of its mines.

A geophysical survey of Malawi was launched in 1985, aimed at improving knowledge of its geological structure and mineral potential. Exploration for tin in the Andaman Sea (Thailand) continued, utilizing offshore shallow seismic techniques and drilling. Interest was evident in non-metallic minerals-potash in China, lignite in Greece and gemstones in Pakistan.

A major regional programme-involving remote sensing, airborne geophysical surveying and training of geoscientists-continued in Democratic Yemen and Yemen. A major regional mineral exploration project was concluded in Egypt/Sudan.

Training-fellowships, lecturing, on-the-job instruction, seminars and technology transfer-was a major component of most projects. More than 100 missions were undertaken by DTCD inter-regional and technical advisers to assist in mining legislation, contract negotiations and mineral sector planning, electronic data processing, mining engineering, geology, geochemistry and geophysics.

Exploitation and processing

The Secretary-General, responding to a 1983 Economic and Social Council decision,<sup>(2)</sup> submitted in March 1985 to the Committee on Natural Resources a report<sup>(3)</sup> on trends and salient issues in the development of mineral resources. The recent growth of the world economy had not led to substantial price increases for most minerals and metals, he stated; the prices of several of them in real terms were at or near record low levels, and nearly all mineral and metal producing companies had responded by reducing production or closing mines, at least temporarily. The low prices affected the economies of producing countries, most of which were developing countries. Long-term developments, such as increased recycling and substitution, decline in rates of growth of consumption and reluctance in many countries to reduce production also resulted in pressure on prices. Marketing and investment problems had increased with the nationalization and breakup of the vertical integration of many international mining companies, and the use of long-term contracts to provide collateral for long-term financing and a reliable market had declined.

Counter-trade in the form of barter, counter-purchase, buy-back, compensation agreements, bilateral co-operation agreements or switch-trading was increasingly used by developing countries to develop new projects and secure markets in a situation characterized by overcapacity and a decline in demand for mineral raw materials.

New mining projects, in both developed and developing countries, were likely to be based on the development of small, high-grade deposits of high-value minerals produced in a relatively short time with low capital budgets so as to minimize interest cost. For most developing countries with established mines, the immediate outlook appeared to require increased mining efficiency and reduced costs, if mining was to continue without adverse economic consequences.

A report on prospects for the development of non-metallic mineral raw materials, with special reference to bentonite, mica, magnesite, feldspar, fluor spar and baryte, was presented by the Secretary-General to the Committee in February 1985,<sup>(4)</sup> in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution.<sup>(5)</sup>

Prospects for production in developing countries of those raw materials depended not only on their availability and quality but on the size of the market, the legislative framework, location of deposits and transportation costs, the report concluded. Measures should be taken to accelerate their exploration and development; to begin with, increased attention could be paid to those minerals during general mapping programmes of a country. As many developing countries did not have the means to prepare an inventory of resources, the Committee might wish to recommend that surveys be undertaken to enable them to prepare such inventories with DTCD assistance.

The Committee, on 17 April,<sup>(6)</sup> took note of the February report.<sup>(4)</sup>

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/48.

Mineral resources

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation,

Recalling the guidelines for action in the development of natural resources adopted by the Committee on Natural Resources at its second session,

Taking note of the report of the Secretary-General on trends and salient issues in the development of mineral resources,

Recognizing the difficult situation of raw material exporting countries and the negative implications of that situation, particularly for the developing countries,

1. Requests the Committee on Natural Resources to consider at its tenth session the question of short-term and long-term trends and salient issues in the field of mineral resources;

2. Also requests the Committee to consider ways of increasing the efficiency of the mining sector, inter alia, by expanding the exploitation and processing of co-products and by-products.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/48

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/148) without vote, 15 July (meeting 21); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1985/27); agenda item 11.

Small-scale mining

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/47.

Small-scale mining

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolution 1535(XLIX) of 27 July 1970 setting out the terms of reference of the Committee on Natural Resources, in particular paragraph 4 (g) thereof,

Recognizing the effective contribution of small-scale mining and quarrying to the economic and social development of some countries, in particular as a source of employment and regional development,

Taking note of the fact that in some developing countries much mining is accomplished by small-scale operations, and that many of these operations face special problems, including lack of mechanized equipment, absence of expertise in the exploration for and operation of small mines, legal frameworks that, in some countries, differ from those of large-scale mining, and different marketing circumstances,

Taking note also of the fact that developing countries might benefit from an exchange of information on all aspects of exploration for, assessment of, development and operation of small mines and that continued studies on the problems of infrastructure, equipment and exploitation constitute an important step in finding an optimal scale for mining,

Taking into account the discussions in the Committee on Natural Resources at its last three sessions on fertilizer raw materials and non-metallic mineral resources,

1. Recommends that the Committee on Natural Resources, at its eleventh session, should consider small-scale mining in the context of its deliberations on mineral resources;

2. Requests the Secretary-General to take small-scale mining into account when preparing reports for the eleventh session of the Committee; those reports should include an overview of small-scale mining and an evaluation of experience gained through technical co-operation projects;

3. Also requests the Secretary-General to examine whether there exist small-scale mining operations that could serve as demonstration projects for training and for developing new approaches to small-scale mining, in accordance with national development plans and priorities, and to report thereon to the Committee on Natural Resources at its eleventh session;

4. Urges Governments to submit to the Secretary-General at an early date information and reports on small-scale mining in their countries.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/47

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/148) without vote, 15 July (meeting 21); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1985/27); agenda item 11.

Evaluation

In March 1985,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee for Programme and Co-ordination (CPC) a triennial review of the implementation of CPC's 1982 recommendations on the United Nations mineral resources programme.<sup>(*)</sup> The report was based on the responses to questionnaires of nine United Nations entities involved in mineral resources development: the Department of International Economic and Social Affairs, DTCD, three regional commissions, the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), UNDP and UNRFFRE. Its major recommendations concerned the organization of in-depth evaluations and formulation of recommendations, co-ordination at the intergovernmental and organizational levels, assessment of technical advisory services, modalities for post-exploration assistance, improving project implementation and programme planning and design, and expanding and monitoring the distribution of documents.

Owing to time constraints, CPC decided on 25 May 1985<sup>(9)</sup> to defer consideration of the Secretary-General's report to its 1986 session.

Water and marine resources

Water resources development

Implementation of the 1977 Mar del Plata Action Plan

In response to a 1979 General Assembly resolution,<sup>(*)</sup> the Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in April 1985 a report<sup>(2)</sup> on progress in implementing the Mar del Plata Action Plan for the development of water resources, adopted by the 1977 United Nations Water Conference at Mar del Plata, Argentina.<sup>(3)</sup> The report was prepared on the basis of information from 91 Governments, and dealt with, among other subjects, policy, planning, legislation and institutional arrangements; development of shared water resources; assessment of water resources; and flood-loss management.

Three quarters of the developing countries and two thirds of the industrialized countries responding had formulated national policy statements for water resources. A very high proportion of countries had legislation regulating the ownership, use and protection of both surface and ground waters.

Most developing countries (73 per cent) had established central co-ordinating mechanisms or national bodies for water interests. The highest percentage of them reporting those mechanisms was in Latin America and the Caribbean (87 per cent); the lowest in Western Asia (50 per cent). A large proportion of industrialized countries (61 per cent) also indicated that they had set up national co-ordinating mechanisms.

Since the 1977 Water Conference, a number of significant agreements had been concluded on shared water resources: in Africa, a 1977 agreement to establish an organization for the development of the Kagera Basin, a 1978 convention relating to the River Gambia, and a 1980 convention creating the Niger Basin Authority; in Latin America, a 1977 treaty on co-operation in utilizing the natural resources and the development of the Mirin Lagoon Basin, the 1978 treaty for Amazonian co-operation and development, and a 1979 agreement for harmonizing separate binational hydro-development projects on the Paraná River.

Far from a strengthening of water resources assessment, as called for by the 1977 Conference, activities in that sector had been barely maintained, if not actually reduced, because of scarcity of capital and lack of manpower and equipment. That was particularly the case in drought-stricken Africa, where national agencies had great difficulties maintaining even minimum ability to supply basic information.

Many countries suffering from floods had established policy and institutional arrangements to deal with them, but weakness persisted in regard to their adequacy and reliability. Of 66 developing countries, 33 indicated that floods were a major characteristic of their hydrological régime. Flood forecasting and warning systems appeared to be adequate in 25 per cent of developing countries, compared to 83 per cent in developed countries; flood plain zoning and flood risk mapping appeared to be adequate in 19 per cent of the former, compared to 63 per cent of the latter. Catchment areas for flood prevention were deemed adequate by 39 per cent of developing countries, compared to 61 per cent of developed countries; the differences with regard to dikes, retention reservoirs and river channel improvement were about the same. Shortage of financial resources and lack of equipment were reported to be the most serious constraints in efforts to mitigate losses from floods.

Other subjects covered in the report were drinking water supply and sanitation (see p. 680); water resources for agriculture; education and training (see p. 679); public information and participation; research and development; and technical co-operation among developing Countries (XDC).

In another report to the Committee, on United Nations co-ordination in water resources development (see p. 679), the Secretary-General also described inter-agency co-operation in specific areas of the Action Plan, such as water resources assessment, management, policy, legislation and administration; development of ground-water resources; mitigation of flood and drought losses; water use; education and training; hydropower and inland transport; TCDC; and technical co-operation activities.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/49 A.

Progress in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 34/191 of 18 December 1979, in which the Assembly requested the Committee on Natural Resources, at its regular biennial sessions during the 1980s, to review the progress made by Governments in the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Recalling also Council resolutions 1979/67, 1979/68 and 1979/70 of 3 August 1979, 1981/80 and 1981/81 of 24 July 1981 and 1983/57 of 28 July 1983, concerning the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Recalling further its resolution 1984/73 of 27 July 1984,

1. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the progress achieved and prospects in the implementation by Governments of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, and on education and training in the field of water resources in developing countries;

2. Reaffirms the importance of the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Mar del Plata Action Plan;

3. Expresses once again its Concern that, notwithstanding the progress achieved with regard to some aspects of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, far greater efforts need to be made, particularly in the African region in view of the present drought;

4. Urges Governments to intensify their efforts to develop their water resources, to assign high priority thereto, and to formulate or revise, as appropriate, national policies for the development and rational and environmentally sound utilization of water resources, in the context of their overall development plans, and to translate those policies into specific plans and programmes;

5. Also urges Governments to take steps, in the framework of national water plans and policies, to implement the recommendations contained in the Mar del

Plata Action Plan concerning the assessment of water resources, for which increased efforts are urgently needed in many parts of the world;

6. Requests the Economic Commission for Africa to undertake a thorough review of the situation with regard to the development of water resources in the drought-stricken countries of the region, with a view to formulating short-term, medium-term and long-term frameworks for action at the national and international levels, and to report thereon to the Committee on Natural Resources at its tenth session;

7. Invites the international conference on hydrology which is to be convened by the World Meteorological Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at Geneva in March 1987 to formulate recommendations and develop programmes designed to assist Governments in the acceleration of their efforts to attain the objectives established by the United Nations Water Conference in the area of water resource assessment;

8. Urges Governments to develop public information programmes designed to make planners and decision makers aware of the role of water resources in socio-economic development, and to enhance the participation of the populations concerned in the resolution of major issues related to water;

9. Also urges Governments to continue their efforts to formulate or revise their water legislation, in the context of national social and economic objectives, placing emphasis on the conservation of surface and ground water and the protection of water quality;

10. Calls upon Governments to investigate, formulate and apply measures for the development of irrigated agriculture which incorporate lower-cost solutions and accelerated returns, including the greater involvement of local populations and institutions, phased investments in a complementary mix of small and large schemes and extensive training programmes, and to draw heavily on a transfer of experience on a regional and, where appropriate, interregional scale;

11. Appeals to Governments to strengthen mechanisms for co-ordination among national, regional and local agencies dealing with water resources in order to improve the formulation and implementation of policies and the effective planning, development, management and utilization of water resources;

12. Draws attention to the risk of degradation of water and soil resources as a result of increased intensification of land use for agriculture, and stresses the need for associated conservation measures to ensure sustained production and the protection of natural resources and the environment;

13. Reiterates the importance of carrying out the recommendations contained in the Mar del Plata Action Plan with regard to the assessment of manpower and training needs, and of strengthening, as needed, educational and training programmes and facilities;

14. Takes note of the activities of the organizations of the United Nations system for the development of integrated and comprehensive approaches and programmes concerning education and training, and requests the Secretary-General, in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination, to continue his efforts in this regard;

15. Requests Governments and the United Nations organizations concerned, other support agencies and non-governmental organizations to intensify their technical and financial co-operation with developing countries, in particular the least developed countries and the drought-stricken countries of Africa, with a view to improving the assessment, development, utilization and management of water resources.

Proposed high-level meeting

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July, on the recommendation of its First Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted without vote resolution 1985/49 B.

High-level meeting of experts on the implementation of the Mar de Plata Action Plan

The Economic and Social Council,

Mindful of the fact that 1987 represents the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

Bearing in mind that some specialized agencies will organize technical meetings in 1987 geared to the discussion of water-related issues stemming from the Mar del Plata Action Plan,

1. Takes note with appreciation of the proposal made by the Government of Argentina to sponsor a high-level meeting of experts to propose possible solutions in a number of key problem areas to facilitate the implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan, and requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary assistance in the preparations for and the organization of the meeting, within existing budgetary resources;

2. Invites the regional commissions and the specialized agencies to co-operate with the Secretary-General in preparing for the meeting;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to inform the Committee on Natural Resources at its tenth session of the results of the high-level meeting.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/49 B

25 July 1985 Meeting 52 Adopted without vote

Approved by First Committee (E/1985/148) without vote, 15 July (meeting 21); draft by Committee on Natural Resources (E/1985/27); agenda item 11.

Education and training

Pursuant to a 1981 Economic and Social Council request,<sup>(4)</sup> the Secretary-General presented to the Committee on Natural Resources in February 1985 a report<sup>(5)</sup> on water resources education and training in developing countries. The report gave an account of the activities of three regional commissions—ECA, ESCAP and ECWA—and other international organizations regarding the establishment of regional networks for training in water resources development. ILO, for instance, was training managers, supervisors, technicians and workers on drinking water supply, while FAO organized workshops and seminars on irrigation, provided support to the International Institute for Advanced Mediterranean Agronomic Studies (Italy), and initiated a programme for improved land and water management in Africa. UNESCO was publishing teaching guides for training technicians, sponsored an international network of post-graduate courses in hydrology, engineering and management, and assisted Governments in organizing training courses on water resources assessment and development. Training courses on related general and specialized subjects were organized also by IAEA, UNEP, WHO and WMO. A training component was also included in the World Bank's lending programme in water resources; through the Economic Development Institute, the Bank also conducted regional training courses.

In addition, the report described the efforts of the United Nations system to develop integrated programmes for education and training in water resources, including manpower surveys, on-the-job training, and a review of education and training materials.

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1985/49 A, took note of the activities related to water resources development, and requested the Secretary-General to continue his efforts, in consultation with the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC).

Inter-agency co-ordination

In a March 1985 report<sup>(6)</sup> to the Committee on Natural Resources submitted in accordance with a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(7)</sup> the Secretary-General described inter-agency co-ordination in water resources development. The main inter-agency mechanism for such co-ordination at the global level was the ACC Intersecretariat Group for Water Resources, which held its annual meeting from 21 to 25 October 1985. The Group continued to monitor the progress achieved and to promote co-operation among United Nations organizations in implementation of the Mar del Plata Action Plan.

At the regional level, ECE, ESCAP and ECLAC had mechanisms for intersecretariat consultations which dealt with all aspects of the Action Plan. Annual consultations between the regional commissions and Headquarters units were held to ensure complementarity of programmes and avoid duplication. In addition to the formal global and regional mechanisms, there were numerous agreements between two or three United Nations organizations on specific aspects of water resources development and utilization.

Water resources management, policy, legislation and administration, including shared water resources and environmental aspects, involved most United Nations organizations, either from an overall point of view, as in the case of DTCD, or with regard to the sectoral aspects of water resources development, such as drinking water supply and sanitation or water for agriculture, as, for example, in the case of WHO and FAO.

The existing network of co-ordination mechanisms provided a range of possibilities for effective co-operation, the report concluded. The global and regional intersecretariat mechanisms played an important role in identifying areas where further efforts were needed, while implementation of co-operative approaches was often facilitated by formal or informal agreements between the organizations concerned.

The report considered it essential for those organizations to participate in the various inter-agency meetings; in particular, the role assigned to the regional commissions in implementing the Action Plan made it necessary for them to participate actively in the Intersecretariat Group meetings and to consult regularly with Headquarters units.

The Intersecretariat Group was initiating a review designed to bring about a better integration of approaches to water resources management, policy, legislation and administration, and particularly to the development of shared water resources. Especially needed was greater interaction among United Nations organizations in the development of both short- and long-term programmes for water resources development in Africa.

Co-ordination and co-operation were particularly important in relation to field projects, which involved both executing and funding agencies; interdisciplinary aspects had to be taken into account at the early stages of project formulation. The guidelines for joint action, agreed upon by the Intersecretariat Group, were a useful tool in ensuring that projects were executed as effectively and efficiently as possible.

By resolution 1985/53, the Economic and Social Council took note of the Secretary-General's report and requested him to update it for the 1987 session of the Committee on Natural Resources.

International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

The basic principle underlying the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade (1981-1990) was that access to safe drinking water and sanitation facilities was a human right. The effects of contaminated drinking water and poor sanitation had been well documented; it was estimated that some 15 million children under the age of five died each year in developing countries, mainly because of water-borne diseases. The same diseases exacted a heavy toll of mortality and morbidity among adults.

The Secretary-General, pursuant to the 1980 General Assembly resolution proclaiming the Decade(s) submitted in March 1985 a report on progress made towards its goals.<sup>(9)</sup> The number of countries with plans for the Decade had grown from 9 in 1981 to 59 in 1983, and an additional 31 reported that they were preparing such plans. Some Governments strengthened institutional arrangements for Decade planning, management and co-ordination, but only limited progress was made. Shortages of trained manpower continued to be a major problem.

Proportions of national budgets allocated to drinking water supply and sanitation remained relatively stable, in the range of 1 to 6 per cent. However, some countries-Djibouti, Ethiopia, Lesotho, Malawi, Uganda, Zambia-reported proportions exceeding 10 per cent. Governments were becoming more aware of the importance of using least-cost technologies; costs might be cut by installing simpler technologies, reducing water losses in piped systems and using locally supplied or manufactured materials. New types of easily maintained water supply handpumps were being installed in rural Ghana, India, the Ivory Coast, Kenya and the United Republic of Tanzania. India and several countries in East Africa were also installing thousands of improved latrines.

Despite such progress, most of the enormous task of providing water supply and sanitation services lay ahead, the Secretary-General concluded. It was estimated that some 1.2 billion people needed safe drinking water and that some 1.9 billion did not have adequate sanitation. The Secretary-General offered recommendations to the Committee on Natural Resources for possible government and United Nations action. The United Nations might wish, for example, to focus resources on the poorest countries; give special attention to the long-term needs of African countries south of the Sahara; continue to support UNDP resident representatives as focal points for the Decade; and continue efforts to increase external assistance.

On 28 June,<sup>(10)</sup> the UNDP Governing Council approved an allocation of $319,200 for information and communication support for the Decade in 1986.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 25 July 1985, the Economic and Social Council adopted decision 1985/168, taking note of the Secretary-General's report, and decision 1985/167, transmitting a draft resolution on the Decade, which originated in the Committee on Natural Resources, to the General Assembly (see below).

In the Council's First Committee, the Netherlands introduced and then withdrew a draft resolution,<sup>(11)</sup> by which the Council would have welcomed the Secretary-General's recommendations and conclusions, and recommended that the Assembly take into account proposals to enhance the effectiveness of activities at the country level, i.e., that Governments ensure that safe drinking water supply and sanitation systems were brought to the poorest urban and rural populations and were properly maintained; ensure that equitable cost-recovery policies were implemented; organize consultative meetings or other co-ordinating processes with major donor agencies; and review plans and develop mechanisms to increase collaboration with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) in planning and implementing Decade activities.

After adoption of decision 1985/167, the Netherlands stated its regret that the Council had been unable to hold a substantive discussion on its text; it hoped that the Assembly would be able to adopt a resolution that took the expressions of support for the Netherlands proposals fully into account and did justice to efforts made to strengthen implementation of the goals of the Decade.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/171.

International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolution 32/158 of 19 December 1977, in which it approved the Mar del Plata Action Plan adopted by the United Nations Water Conference,

Recalling also its resolution 35/18 of 10 November 1980, by which it proclaimed the period 1981-1990 as the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade,

Recalling further Economic and Social Council resolution 1983/57 of 28 July 1983, in which the Council urged Governments of developing countries to adopt national targets for drinking water supply and sanitation services, commensurate with resource availability, absorptive capacity and ability, and to formulate action plans and programmes for reaching the targets set,

Mindful of the fact that significant progress towards meeting the objectives of the Decade by 1990 will require a much greater sense of urgency and priority on the part of Governments and the continued support of the international community,

1. Welcomes the recommendations and conclusions contained in the report of the Secretary-General on progress in the attainment of the goals of the International Drinking Water Supply and Sanitation Decade;

2. Encourages Governments to seek to implement the recommendations for action contained in the report, in particular:

(a) To strengthen national capabilities for policy formulation and for the preparation, implementation and monitoring of water supply and sanitation programmes and projects;

(b) To prepare and implement national strategies to meet and develop both present and longer-term needs for skilled human resources;

(c) To intensify efforts to improve the mobilization and utilization of national financial resources;

(d) To increase the attention devoted to health education and community participation and to the need for close operational linkages between health and water supply agencies;

(e) To formulate and implement strategies that will enhance the participation of women in the planning, operation and assessment of water and sanitation programmes and projects;

3. Calls upon organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, as well as other multilateral, bilateral and non-governmental organizations, to continue and, where possible, increase their assistance to Governments in support of national plans and programmes for the Decade as well as in support of efforts to implement the above-mentioned recommendations for action;

4. Urges the international community to take note of the need to enhance co-ordination of technical co-operation activities at the global and national levels and, in this regard, supports the role of the resident representatives of the United Nations Development Programme as focal points for the Decade at the country level;

5. Takes note of the need to focus efforts and resources on the least developed countries where requirements for drinking water and sanitation are the greatest, and of the need to give special consideration to the countries of sub-Saharan Africa;

6. Requests the Secretary-General, at the end of the Decade, in 1990, to prepare a report on the progress achieved during the Decade, providing a detailed comparative analysis based as much as possible on quantitative data, as well as recommendations for future and follow-up action that may be required, for submission to the General Assembly at its forty-fifth session.

General Assembly resolution 40/171

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/1009Add.1) without vote, 25 November (meeting 43); draft transmitted by Economic and Social Council decision 1985/167 (A/C.2/40/L.5); agenda item 12.

In the Committee, the Netherlands expressed disappointment at the rather limited willingness to consider some amendments to the draft resolution which had been submitted in the Economic and Social Council; the Netherlands intended to resubmit those amendments to the next session of the Committee on Natural Resources.

Marine resources

Following up on a 1984 report,<sup>(12)</sup> the Secretary-General transmitted to CPC in February 1985 a joint report by the International Maritime Organization (IMO) and UNCTAD<sup>(13)</sup> outlining consultations between the two organizations on future arrangements for co-operation in marine affairs. They reported having reached agreement on a method of dealing with maritime liens and mortgages which would avoid duplication of work and facilitate co-operation; the agreement was appended to the report. In addition, their secretariats were considering arrangements for assisting developing countries in maritime transport and for involving the regional commissions in those arrangements.

Taking note of the information provided,<sup>(14)</sup> CPC recommended that IMO and UNCTAD should continue to strengthen co-ordination and co-operation to avoid overlapping and duplication of work.

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1983 Economic and Social Council resolution,<sup>(15)</sup> submitted in June 1985 a report<sup>(16)</sup> on economic and technical trends and developments in marine affairs, covering the development of marine resources (living, mineral and energy) and of economic infrastructure (marine industries and technologies, communications, transport and offshore structures); marine research; protection of the marine environment; support activities and services (meteorology, safety and labour); and regional trends. The first phase of a conference on economic, scientific and technical co-operation in the Indian Ocean in marine affairs was held (Colombo, Sri Lanka, 15-20 July 1985); the second phase was scheduled for 1987.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

On 26 July 1985, on the recommendation of its Third (Programme and Co-ordination) Committee, the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1985/75 by vote.

Economic and technical aspects of marine affairs

The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling its resolutions 1980/68 of 25 July 1980 on co-operation in the uses of the sea and coastal area development and 1983/48 of 28 July 1983 on marine affairs, in response to which the Secretary-General has submitted to the Council, at its second regular session of 1985, a report on economic and technical trends and developments in marine affairs,

Convinced that the resources of the ocean represent an important existing and potential contribution to the development process,

Noting that an increasing number of Member States, especially developing countries, have embarked on activities designed to make full, rational use of the resources of the ocean, in particular in their exclusive economic zones,

Noting also that, in accordance with the programme on economic and technical aspects of marine affairs contained in chapter 25 of the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989, the Secretary-General has directed his efforts specifically towards assisting Member States in developing and managing ocean resources in their exclusive economic zones,

1. Endorses the efforts of the Secretary-General to make the programme on economic and technical aspects of marine affairs responsive to the growing needs of Member States;

2. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on economic and technical trends and developments in marine affairs;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to pursue, in close co-operation with all the competent organizations of the United Nations system, activities relating to the economic and technical aspects of marine affairs, and to report on new developments in this area to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1989;

4. Further requests the Secretary-General, within the mandate and terms of reference of the United Nations regarding the economic and technical aspects of marine affairs, to submit to the Council at its second regular session of 1987 a report identifying specific and practical needs and problems encountered by countries, in particular developing countries, in the management of their exclusive economic zones and the development of resources therein, as well as the types of activities and approaches to their implementation required for countries, with the support of the United Nations, to respond most effectively to those needs and problems, and to transmit to the General Assembly at its forty-second session the conclusions and recommendations of the Council.

Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/75

----	------	------	---------	----	--------

Approved by Third Committee (E/1985/141) without vote, 19 July (meeting 20); 14-nation draft (E/1985/C.3/L.5), orally revised: agenda item 19.

Sponsors: Algeria, Botswana, Canada, Colombia, France, Ghana, Liberia, Madagascar, Morocco, Netherlands Sri Lanka, United Republic of Tanzania, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe.

The Council, by 13 votes to 9, with 16 abstentions, rejected an amendment<sup>(17)</sup> to paragraph 4 by the USSR, by which the words "in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea" would have been inserted after "in the management of their exclusive economic zones and the development of resources therein". The USSR explained that the purpose of the amendment was to ensure that, in preparing the requested report, the Secretary-General would be guided by the Convention's provisions; the addition was in keeping with previous Council resolutions. In the Committee, the USSR expressed regret that the sponsors, insisted on immediate action on the draft, thus preventing some Council members from participating in the formulation of the text and its adoption by consensus.

Speaking on behalf of the sponsors, Madagascar stated that the Convention had been ratified by only about 20 States and no one could say when it would enter into force; the sponsors had sought to request that technical assistance be provided to developing countries without delay to help them introduce the dimension of the resources of the sea into their development. Finland, which abstained on the text, declared that the amendment did not create any difficulty for it from the standpoint of substance. Colombia associated itself with Finland's position.

Living marine resources

Public concern about the threatened status of many marine mammals had provided the impetus for positive action, the UNEP Executive Director declared in his annual report for 1985.<sup>(18)</sup> Under a joint FAO/UNEP Global Plan of Action for the Conservation, Management and Utilization of Marine Mammals, endorsed by the FAO Committee on Fisheries in 1983 and by the UNEP Governing Council in 1984,<sup>(12)</sup> nine projects were approved by UNEP during 1985; they covered seals, dolphins and sea-cows, as well as public awareness activities. Two consultative meetings on the Plan of Action were held in 1985 (Geneva, 7 and 8 March; Gland, Switzerland, 28-30 October); the United Nations agencies, intergovernmental organizations and NGOs participating in the meetings agreed to co-ordinate their activities to implement the Plan.

Cartography

Third UN Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas

The Third United Nations Regional Cartographic Conference for the Americas was held in New York from 19 February to 1 March 1985. It was attended by 126 representatives or observers from 45 countries, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, three specialized agencies, six intergovernmental and international scientific organizations and the Palestine Liberation Organization (for participating States and officers, see APPENDIX III). The Secretary-General submitted his report on the Conference to the Economic and Social Council in April.<sup>(1)</sup>

The Conference reviewed the latest technology and its relationship to policy, economy and development in the following areas: cartographic data acquisition, manipulation and depiction, and policies and management of national mapping and charting programmes. Four technical committees were established to consider those questions. The Conference also considered matters of technical assistance and transfer of technology in cartography, and the suitability and feasibility of holding United Nations interregional cartographic conferences.

The Conference adopted 19 resolutions. It recognized, in particular, the importance of the regional cartographic conference, the general desire to increase its effectiveness, and the need to involve countries of the region in preparing its agenda. The Conference noted the increasing importance of systematic management and presentation of geographic information and the role of the United Nations Secretariat in that matter. It recognized further potential applications of satellite remote sensing and digital mapping technologies, as well as of land information systems, and a need for extended financial, advisory and training assistance in those areas. The establishment or strengthening of capabilities of national authorities dealing with hydrographic and nautical charting and geographical names was recommended. Slow progress in the production of revised sheets of the International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale was noted; it was recommended that a United Nations study on the question be undertaken. In addition, the Conference recommended that every effort be made by Member States to expedite the revision of national map coverages. It recognized the urgent need to generate thematic mapping and recommended that training be organized to inform high-level personnel of possibilities of mapping for planning and management.

On 28 May, the Economic and Social Council, in decision 1985/124, approved the Conference's recommendation to convene a fourth regional conference for the Americas in 1989 and requested the Secretary-General to take measures, where appropriate, to implement its other recommendations. In decision 1985/125, also of 28 May, the Council took note of the Secretary-General's report on the Conference.

The Secretary-General, in an addendum to his report,<sup>(2)</sup> estimated that, should the Council decide to convene a fourth conference, servicing costs would total $270,800.

Both decisions were approved by the Council's First Committee on 22 May. In Committee, the draft that became decision 1985/124 was orally amended by the USSR to the effect that implementation of the Conference recommendations would take fully into account the views expressed in the Council.

Chapter X

Energy resources

During 1985, a number of United Nations bodies continued to focus attention on the energy problems of developing countries, whose ability to carry out energy programmes was hampered by financial constraint as well as by the complexities of energy planning, by rapidly changing technology and by environmental factors.

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the World Bank co-operated in energy development projects and an assessment of energy options. Since 1981, the UNDP Energy Account had allocated $20.3 million to about 50 energy projects; $1.9 million had been earmarked by the end of 1985 for new projects. The United Nations University (UNU) carried out research on specific energy problems and designed energy-related training programmes and curricula. Activities encouraging the transfer of energy technology to developing countries, the dissemination of technical know-how and the training of skilled manpower were continued by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Secretariat's Department of Technical Co-operation for Development (MCD). The General Assembly, in resolution 40/184, noted progress in negotiations for an international code of conduct on the transfer of technology, although there were still important problems outstanding (see Chapter XII of this section).

By resolution 40/208, the Assembly called on Member States, in co-operation with the United Nations system, to examine ways to support developing countries' efforts to develop their energy resources, and requested the Secretary-General to continue to undertake studies and analyses of trends in energy exploration and development.

After considering the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), the Assembly adopted resolution 40/8, affirming its confidence in IAEA's role in applying nuclear energy for peaceful purposes and urging States to co-operate in carrying out its work, which included the promotion of nuclear safety. The Assembly noted that the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy had decided that the Conference should be held at Geneva in March/April 1987, rather than in 1986 (resolution 40/95).

Topics related to this chapter. Disarmament: nuclear weapons. Peaceful uses of outer space. Regional economic and social activities: energy resources-Africa; Asia and the Pacific; Europe; Latin America; Western Asia. Statistics: energy statistics.

General aspects

The Secretary-General submitted to the Committee on Natural Resources in March 1985 a report<sup>(1)</sup> dealing with trends and salient issues in the development of energy resources. He stated that since the early 1980s energy prices and interest rates had tended to dampen investment in energy development. Prices had been generally weak, as demand fell. Energy consumption in the market economy area, after peaking in 1979 at 87.2 million barrels of oil per day equivalent, had declined steadily until 1983, when it reached a level of 80.3 million barrels. From 1979 to 1984, long-term interest rates averaged about 11 per cent, compared to an average of about 8 per cent over the preceding five years. The rise of nearly 40 per cent in rates had had a deleterious effect on investment and on energy resource development.

In market economy countries, coal development had been slowed by excess production capacity. The slow rate of growth in coal demand meant that their coal reserves could last at least another 225 years. In the centrally planned economies, lignite development had become very important. From a developmental viewpoint, a great deal would depend on the exploitation of the solid fuel resources of the USSR, particularly lignite deposits in the Kazakhstan region and the deposits of solid fuels in Siberia.

Nuclear power capacity had been found to exceed estimated market-economy electricity demand, resulting in cancellation of orders and a stretch-out of construction schedules. About one third of world-wide nuclear power capacity currently existed in the United States, but there had been no new orders for reactors in that country since 1978; moreover, 75 reactors had been cancelled since that year, including 28 already under construction. Sweden had chosen to phase out nuclear power by 2010, while moratoria existed in several other western European countries. On the other hand, nuclear power capacity in the centrally planned economies had grown rapidly (see p. 693).

Some issues that arose during energy resource development, such as domestic energy pricing policy, rural electrification and most environmental constraints, were amenable to national solutions. Others—technology transfer and augmenting the flow of external capital to developing countries—called for an international approach. A problem which had recently become more acute in market economy countries was excess production capacity in the “downstream” phase (crude oil distillation and subsequent cracking processes) of petroleum production. The problem had become of greater interest with the opening of large new refining facilities in the developing world, a situation that might stimulate protectionist sentiments. Over the period 1984–1986, three new refineries were to come on stream in Saudi Arabia and one in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya. Later, other developing countries were expected to join the ranks of those exporting petroleum products.

Certain possibilities of resolving the issues were discerned. At the national level, renewed attention needed to be given to energy pricing so as to provide incentives to resource development. For countries developing their energy resources with the aid of foreign direct investment, policies that generated detailed national geologic data and a legal structure that defined foreign participation in resource development were advantageous. All countries could usefully pursue policies of energy conservation, and joint development of shared energy resources should not be overlooked. Finally, bilateral and multilateral assistance to developing countries in energy resource development needed to be expanded.

Energy resources development

Reports of the Secretary-General. The Secretary-General presented reports to the General Assembly in August<sup>(2)</sup> and September<sup>(3)</sup> on the development of energy resources in developing countries.

Pursuant to Assembly resolutions of 1982,<sup>(4)</sup> 1983<sup>(5)</sup> and 1984,<sup>(6)</sup> the August report discussed prospects for the development of energy resources, constraints on their development, and the role of different national and international policies. Energy sources were considered in terms of their estimated availability. For example, with regard to oil and natural gas deposits, of the 600 sedimentary basins thought to represent the prospective areas for hydrocarbons in the world, excluding deep offshore basins, 160 had been fairly intensively explored and were currently producing oil and gas, 240 had been partially explored and were not producing, and 200 remained essentially unexplored. Of the total prospective area, 47 per cent was located in developing countries. Further, it was estimated that in developing countries not members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), more than 40 per cent of the prospective area was located in 55 countries where only initial or fragmentary exploration had taken place.

Of the estimated 2,670 billion barrels of ultimately recoverable oil resources of the world, 1,583 billion barrels, or 59 per cent, were located in developing countries, and of the 672 billion barrels of proved recoverable resources of the world, 78 per cent were located in those countries.

Total commercial energy consumption was expected to increase from 16.8 million barrels of oil per day equivalent in 1980 to 53 million in the year 2000, at an average annual rate of 5.9 per cent. To bring about production increases, it had been projected that an average annual investment of $92 billion (1982 values) was required. Of that sum, $78 billion would have to be invested by domestic enterprises and $14 billion by foreign companies. It was believed that foreign energy companies would be able to arrange the required financing of $14 billion annually and that domestic enterprises could mobilize $51 billion annually, leaving an annual shortfall of $27 billion. But that figure should be used only as a crude indication of the magnitude of the financing gap.

Significantly larger financial resources needed to be mobilized by developing countries for energy development. One very important instrument was price policy. In countries where domestic energy prices could be raised, the higher prices could be used to generate surpluses for investment. However, raising energy prices had political and social implications; in those cases, the increases could perhaps be done through a series of systematic adjustments over a period of time. Credit policy could be deployed not so much for increasing as for channelling capital. Institutions could be established within the credit framework of the country in order to finance small energy projects, as had been done in Mexico and Brazil, where institutions had been established to provide credit and technical assistance to small-scale mining.

Given the limitations of some of the existing multilateral financial institutions, new arrangements could be explored. The establishment of an energy affiliate of the World Bank had been suggested—a legal entity separate from the World Bank but linked administratively to it, with an initial capitalization of $10 billion to $15 billion.

Developing countries, meanwhile, faced other constraints which reduced their capacity to implement energy programmes. Energy planning and management were complex because the resource base was uncertain, the technology was often new, rapidly changing and risky to adopt, investments were highly discontinuous and costly with long gestation periods, energy demand was difficult to project, and environmental considerations needed to be incorporated into the programmes.

The September report<sup>(3)</sup> responded to a 1984 Assembly resolution<sup>(6)</sup> asking for a report on developing countries' efforts to develop energy resources, which included in 1985 a symposium on financing petroleum exploration and development in developing countries (Athens, Greece, 22-26 April). The report said that active discussion of an energy affiliate of the World Bank seemed to have waned and that there had been little progress in achieving a consensus on the need for new institutional arrangements to channel financial resources to the developing countries for energy resource development. The symposium had been attended by 180 participants from 63 countries and 15 United Nations bodies and international organizations. Among the subjects taken up were oil consumption and potential, exploration strategies, cost of exploration and production, financing requirements and methods, exploration and development agreements, financial and technical assistance, and co-operation among developing countries.

UNDP action. The energy sector assessment programme, introduced by UNDP and the World Bank in 1980, had assisted 70 developing countries faced with high fuel costs and heavy debt-service requirements to develop their energy options, the UNDP Administrator stated in his 1985 report on project results.<sup>(7)</sup> With substantial support from donor countries, the programme had helped decision-makers to frame coherent overviews of the energy sector, focus on key policy and investment decisions, and establish priorities. All scheduled assessments were expected to be completed at the end of 1986. Field work had been concluded in 61 of the 70 countries receiving assistance, and 50 final reports had been issued; slightly more than half the countries covered were in sub-Saharan Africa. The assessments had had substantial impact in three major areas: energy policy and strategy, institutional improvements, and key energy issues.

Significant policy changes had been promoted by choices identified through energy assessments. Examples included: the rationalization of petroleum and electricity prices in Sri Lanka; the creation of a more orderly financing mechanism for petroleum imports in the Sudan; the reduction of import duties on coal to encourage fuel-oil substitution in Kenya; major increases in the price of kerosene to remove cross-subsidies in Indonesia; and the lowering of disproportionately high gasoline taxation in Thailand to forestall an uneconomic shift to diesel in the transport sector. The assessments had also aided Governments to reorient energy-sector strategies by identifying new investment options, such as the greater use of geothermal energy in Saint Lucia and natural gas in the Syrian Arab Republic.

Institutional, managerial, training and staffing arrangements in several countries had been strengthened in the light of energy assessment recommendations. Better co-ordinated decision-making had been achieved through more coherent energy planning. In Indonesia, an interministerial energy commission had been established, while in Malawi an energy planning unit had been organized. In Burundi and Rwanda, emphasis had been laid on individual subsectoral strategies as a basis for overall sectoral planning, and Thailand's energy assessment report had been featured as a background document at an energy planning conference in October 1985.

In many countries, critical problems, such as the low efficiency of energy-producing and -consuming facilities, had been identified and measures taken to resolve them. High economic returns and foreign exchange savings were possible through conservation measures and modest investment in the rehabilitation and maintenance of existing facilities. That was particularly true of electric power generation, where the benefits that accrued from reduced power system losses far outweighed the required investments. In Bangladesh, for example, a $50 million investment in six projects to promote energy efficiency was expected to yield economic benefits of $36 million a year.

The UNDP/World Bank Energy Sector Management Assistance Programme (ESMAP), initiated in 1983,<sup>(8)</sup> helped developing and donor countries to implement recommendations contained in individual energy assessment reports. ESMAP had established itself as a follow-up vehicle for accelerating the preparation and implementation of priority technical assistance and investment projects. By 1985, 54 such projects in 27 developing countries had been evaluated or were under preparation, the total cost of which was expected to be about $500 million; $250 million in financing had either been committed or was being reviewed by multilateral and bilateral agencies. ESMAP had already aided Sri Lanka to define steps for achieving more efficient and reliable electric power generation; Uganda to begin a feasibility study for an integrated fuelwood/forestry project; Mauritius to develop a comprehensive, least-cost energy programme based on surplus bagasse; and the Sudan to prepare an action plan for solar water-heating technology. Assistance was also provided to the least developed countries (LDCs) in preparing energy-related documentation and proposals for their UNDP-sponsored round-table consultations and for World Bank-supported consultative group meetings.

The UNDP Energy Account, established in 1980,<sup>(9)</sup> continued to play a catalytic role in attracting the participation of bilateral and multilateral partners in energy activities in developing countries. The Administrator reported<sup>(10)</sup> that the Djibouti geothermal exploration and development project, initiated by the Energy Account with a $1 million contribution, resulted in the mobilization of an additional $15.5 million from the World Bank, the African Development Bank, the OPEC Fund for International Development, and Italy. A small-scale hydropower project in the Dominican Republic, also started up by the Energy Account with $65,000, had led to the mobilization of $435,000 from a donor institution and the equivalent of $2 million from local resources.

The total resources made available by donors to the Energy Account since 1981, including estimated income for 1986 and future years, amounted to $22.2 million, the UNDP Administrator reported in an April 1986 overview report of Energy Account activities.<sup>(4)</sup> Of the total available resources, $20.3 million had been allocated to about 50 energy projects by the end of 1985, and the balance of $1.9 million earmarked to new projects to be undertaken shortly. Activities covered such areas as energy assessment and planning, energy management and conservation, development of specific sources of new and renewable energies, training and information flows.

The UNDP Governing Council, in a 29 June decision,<sup>(12)</sup> authorized the Administrator to continue the Energy Account as long as it received adequate donor support, and called on Governments in a position to do so to increase their contributions. It noted the progress achieved in assisting the countries of the South Pacific through the Regional Energy Development Programme, including financing of the services of energy planners from the Energy Account, and requested the Administrator to continue supporting the priority energy requirements of the Pacific and other regions. The Council also requested him to report in 1986 on the results of activities financed by the Energy Account, particularly the extent to which it helped to mobilize additional funds to implement the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy (see p. 691).

UNU activities. The need for affordable, appropriate sources of energy was addressed by the Council of the United Nations University<sup>(13)</sup> within its programme area on energy systems and policy. The first phase of an energy planning and management project concentrated research on specific problems in developing countries and on developing curricula and training programmes in energy planning and modelling. Work was carried out by institutions in Argentina, Brazil, Chile (with the support of a Canadian institute), France, India and European centres sponsored by the European Economic Community (EEC). A workshop was held at the UNU centre in Tokyo in April 1985 to present the results of the first phase, which stressed the need for management of demand rather than optimization of energy production.

The Integrated Rural Energy Systems Association undertook a series of small-scale projects to promote the development and testing of new energy technologies and monitoring systems and a handbook on integrated rural energy systems. A solar water-purification technique, a wind desalination unit, fuel briquettes made from agricultural waste, and fuelwood-efficient stoves were being developed or tested.

The UNU Energy Research Group, which was assisted by the International Development Research Centre in Canada, ended its work in 1985. Of the papers commissioned by the Group, 103 had been completed and would be used as input to a synthesis report of the Group. As at December 1985, 11 fellows and one special fellow had completed training and 27 fellows were in training. The Abstracts of Selected Solar Energy Technology network published its monthly journal ASSET in 1985.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee, the General Assembly adopted without vote resolution 40/208.

Development of the energy resources of developing countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order contained in its resolutions 3201(S-VI) and 3202(S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in its resolution 3281(XXIX) of 12 December 1974, its resolution 3362(S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade contained in the annex to its resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980,

Recalling also its resolutions 37/251 of 21 December 1982, 38/151 of 19 December 1983 and 39/176 of 17 December 1984 on the development of the energy resources of developing countries,

Reaffirming the importance of the development of the energy resources of developing countries and the need for measures by the international community to assist and support the efforts of the developing countries, in particular the energy-deficient among them, for developing their energy resources, in order to meet their needs through co-operation, assistance and investment in the field of conventional and of new and renewable sources of energy, consistent with their national plans and priorities,

1. Reaffirms its resolutions 38/151 and 39/176 and calls for the effective implementation of all their provisions;

2. Takes note of the reports of the Secretary-General on the development of the energy resources of developing countries;

3. Welcomes the convening of symposia and other similar undertakings called for in resolutions 38/151 and 39/176 and calls upon interested Member States, in co-operation with the appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, to continue to explore ways and means to support the efforts of developing countries in the exploration and development of their energy resources;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to continue to undertake appropriate studies and analyses of trends in energy exploration and development, taking into account the activities of relevant organizations of the United Nations system in this field, including the results of the joint United Nations Development Programme/World Bank energy sector assessment programme and the suggestions resulting from the symposia held, as called for in resolutions 38/151 and 39/176, and to report to the General Assembly at its forty-first session, through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1986.

17 December 1985 Meeting 119 Adopted without vote

Approved by Second Committee (A/40/989/Add.13) without vote, 4 December (meeting 471; draft by Vice-Chairman (A/C.2/40/L.100), based on informal consultations on draft by Yugoslavia, for Group of 77 (A/C.2/40/L.80); agenda item 84 (o).

Meeting numbers GA 40th session: 2nd Committee 45, 47; plenary 119.

The Assembly, in resolution 40/205, endorsed the conclusion that the natural resources and energy targets of the Substantial New Programme of Action for the 1980s for LDCs<sup>(14)</sup> remained valid, although they had not yet been achieved (see Chapter I of this section). The energy deficit experienced by most LDCs often led to their balances of payments being heavily mortgaged, as well as to destructive environmental consequences. Most LDCs lacked the means to assess and plan their energy resources in a sufficiently comprehensive manner, thus impeding their rational exploitation. LDCs were called on to include energy conservation measures in their energy development plans and to assess the consumption pattern of energy sources, including fuelwood, and its impact on the environment. Donor countries were asked to assist LDCs in planning and implementing those measures and to support steps to ensure energy supply and conservation, particularly through the development of renewable sources of energy and reforestation.

Technology transfer

The Secretary-General, in his March report on trends and salient issues in the development of energy resources,<sup>(1)</sup> stated that the acceleration of technology transfer from developed to developing countries was a perennial United Nations concern. Energy resource development offered many well-developed channels for the transfer of know-how. In current practice, contracts governing large energy projects to be designed and constructed by foreign firms contained detailed provisions relating to the training of local nationals in the operation of the facilities constructed. A number of such projects, in fact, were joint ventures between developed and developing countries that provided for joint financing, management, and interest in the disposition of the products produced. Scientific co-operation among developing countries had also evolved over the past decade or so, and offered the prospect of even wider dissemination of technical knowledge.

As for policy prescription, there was no cut-and-dried solution to the technology transfer question. Guidelines had been laid down at a 1982 meeting of governmental experts on technology transfer in energy,<sup>(15)</sup> convened by UNCTAD.

A Meeting of Governmental Experts on Co-operative Exchange of Skills among Developing Countries (Geneva, 6-15 February 1985) considered ways of systematically promoting such exchange of skills as an instrument for promoting economic co-operation and general development. Reaffirming the important role of technical co-operation among developing countries, it recommended that the UNCTAD Secretary-General undertake an in-depth study on a broad geographical basis on the role of technical co-operation and exchange of skills, assessing their current contribution in the technological transformation of developing countries and proposing measures for the transfer of technology.

The sixth session of the United Nations Conference on an International Code of Conduct on the Transfer of Technology was convened at Geneva in May/June (see Chapter XII of this section). In December, the General Assembly adopted resolution 40/184 inviting consultations to identify solutions to outstanding issues in the code.

UNCTAD activities. Three reports on energy technology issues in developing countries were prepared by the UNCTAD secretariat during 1985 as follow-up to the recommendations of the 1982 Meeting of Governmental Experts on the Transfer, Application and Development of Technology in the Energy Sector<sup>(15)</sup> and in response to a 1983 General Assembly request.<sup>(5)</sup>

One report<sup>(16)</sup> discussed biomass-ethanol technology in relation to developing countries, new developments in that market, and the role of the public sector; in addition, it presented case-studies of biomass programmes in Brazil and the United States. It concluded that for a country where feedstock costs were relatively low, where there was an excess of food production and where a technology chosen was not too capital-intensive, it was likely that the production of ethanol would have a positive influence on the balance of payments. The technology itself was in a tremendous state of flux. Research and development efforts were resulting in advanced biomass-to-ethanol conversion technologies with much higher overall efficiencies, although they were more capital-intensive and automated than conventional processes and not necessarily best suited to developing countries. Thus, the advanced-technology ethanol plants would probably remain in the highly industrialized countries in the foreseeable future.

Power alcohol programmes in Kenya and Zimbabwe were reviewed in another report.<sup>(17)</sup> The historical background, feedstock, technical aspects, economics and investment strategy were considered in each case. Based on the experience of the two countries, it was concluded that alcohol fuel production could be attractive in certain situations but that decisions to proceed were highly case-specific. Strategies called for to enhance the technology's viability included: further research and development, based on constraints commonly encountered in developing countries, to increase feedstock yields and plant efficiency and reduce energy and chemical requirements; the establishment of "honest brokers" to evaluate the technical choices available and advise countries of their technological capabilities; the development of cohesive government energy policies; and the provision of untied multilateral or bilateral finance.

Technology "unpackaging" (disaggregation of an investment project with a view to undertaking some activities using domestic enterprises) in the Republic of Korea was considered in a report on that country's experience in the power-plant sector—the development of the sector, procurement and indigenization policy, and the domestic technological capacity for plant engineering and manufacture of plant equipment.<sup>(18)</sup> Concluding that the country's policy in that sector had been successful, the report observed that the policy had been devised as part of the country's much broader industrial development strategy, and that the institutional arrangements created by the Government for policy formulation and implementation had brought together in a co-operative effort the main agents on both the demand and the supply side of power projects.

The conclusions of a 1983 meeting<sup>(19)</sup> of the Expert Group on Energy Co-operation among Economic Co-operation and Integration Organizations were approved by the Working Party on Trade Expansion and Regional Economic Integration among Developing Countries (third session, Geneva, 28 January-1 February). The Working Party requested that the Expert Group's report<sup>(20)</sup> be issued and circulated to all economic co-operation and integration groupings, specialized energy organizations and research institutions for their comments.

DTCD activities. Energy-related technical co-operation provided by the Department of Technical Co-operation for Development was concentrated in three main areas: conventional energy, electric power, and new and renewable energy. During 1985, 142 energy projects were under execution, with $18.1 million expended against $24.7 million budgeted for the sector, according to a 1986 report of the Secretary-General<sup>(21)</sup> to the UNDP Governing Council.

Despite a decline in the price of imported energy, interest in the production and management of domestic energy supplies continued to be strong in developing countries. A user-friendly microcomputer software package was developed by DTCD for energy planners. Called ENERPLAN, the software assisted in national energy planning by preparing national energy balances, simulating various energy supply and demand scenarios, and preparing hypothetical energy balances on the basis of selected parameters. Draft versions of the programme were tested in Thailand and Costa Rica.

Coal and oil projects continued. In Romania, assistance was given in enhanced oil recovery, reservoir engineering and simulation techniques to further a Black Sea drilling programme. Similar assistance was provided to China and India.

Development of new and renewable sources also continued. Geothermal energy projects were carried out in 10 countries and work in solar, wind and biogas energy, as well as in energy conservation and rural energy supply, in 12 countries. A programme to survey small hydropower sources progressed, with 11 countries identified for coverage in 1986 and 1987; the survey was to be followed by a second phase, during which feasibility and design studies would be implemented in 12 countries. DTCD also provided development assistance to the Energy Secretariat of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. In Pakistan, feasibility studies were planned in a project to harness sophisticated technology to resources development.

Electricity supply projects focused on the introduction of computerized utility management, application of new technologies in thermal power-plant fuel cycles and use of computerized training simulators. A thermal power-plant operator training centre continued in China. A training simulator in India facilitated the study of the management of high-voltage electric power systems. A data base for the planning of the Egyptian electricity supply system was strengthened through provision of a computer centre. Two interregional studies on the use of solid fuels for power generation went ahead, one examining energy sources and the other the handling and disposal of ash. DTCD also helped to establish centres to test power-plant components in Bhutan and Iran.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL ACTION

The Economic and Social Council, in resolution 1985/50, noted the progress made in applying computer technology to the assessment and development of energy resources in developing countries through various technical co-operation activities. It requested the Secretary-General to continue activities related to its application.

Energy resources in industry

In recognition of energy's important role in industrialization, the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) had since 1980 steadily increased its energy-related technical assistance projects. In 1985, according to its annual report,<sup>(22)</sup> 113 energy projects (compared to 90 in 1984) were being implemented, with an expenditure of some $10.5 million ($8.4 million in 1984). Technical co-operation projects in the Asian and Pacific region accounted for about 45 per cent of energy-related expenditures in 1985, followed by Africa with some 25 per cent.

Priority areas were: development of locally available energy resources; improved industrial energy efficiency; local manufacturing of energy equipment; and small hydropower for rural electrification. (See also p. 615.)

The first European regional co-operation project in industrial energy conservation was formulated at a regional technical meeting (Vienna, Austria, 1-4 July) and initiated in October. The project demonstrated the role of UNIDO in improving the exchange of information on increased energy use in manufacturing, on enhancing energy efficiency through good housekeeping practices and on improved energy utilization in industrial processes. Seven European countries—Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Poland, Portugal, Romania and Yugoslavia—participated, with additional input from other European countries provided through a sub-contract with the Economic Commission for Europe (ECE).

As follow-up to the recommendations of the Second Consultation on the Capital Goods Industry, with Special Emphasis on Energy-related Technology and Equipment (Stockholm, Sweden, 10-14 June), a project was started on developing standardized small hydropower plants from design stage to manufacture. The project's main objectives were to elaborate engineering parameters for standardized hydropower plants with different capacities and to prepare a study of the local or regional manufacturing of small hydropower plants or equipment. Its general aim was the increased use of hydraulic resources for decentralized electricity generation to facilitate rural industrial development.

An information survey was completed in 1985 on the current and future African energy situation. It identified priority areas for more detailed studies towards strengthening UNIDO's technical co-operation programme on energy and industrialization within the framework of the Industrial Development Decade for Africa (the 1980s) (see p. 635). It also was expected to provide guidance to African Governments in establishing their long-term energy-industry development policies and to initiate co-operative programmes with other international, regional and national organizations.

Energy-related topics were also the subject of discussions with the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation, the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), the Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) and ECE. A memorandum of understanding was signed with the Latin American Energy Organization on co-operation on energy-related matters, supplementing aspects of already established co-operation in small hydropower.

New and renewable energy sources

Implementation of the 1981
Nairobi Programme of Action

The Secretary-General, in response to a 1984 General Assembly resolution,(1) submitted in August 1985, a report(2)) on the implementation of the 1981 Nairobi Programme of Action for the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy.(3) He pointed out that the Programme of Action placed great emphasis on resource mobilization for the development of new and renewable energy sources. Various ways to mobilize financial resources had been considered by the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy in 1983.(4) In line with its recommendations, the process of convening a World Bank consultative group and UNDP round-table meetings was continued and a number of such national consultative meetings were held. A global consultative meeting (New York, 13-15 March) was convened by the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation. Donor countries and organizations, several developing countries, United Nations bodies and other intergovernmental organizations expressed support for the implementation of a number of projects. Many national focal points had been designated by Governments to provide information about new and renewable sources of energy. A computerized data base on activities, projects and programmes was being developed within the Unit on New and Renewable Sources of Energy of the United Nations Secretariat.

The development of new and renewable energy sources was considered by the Secretary-General in two other reports. In a March report,(5) prepared for the Committee on Natural Resources, the Secretary-General discussed the trends and salient issues in the development of energy resources, including new and renewable sources. Those sources had been affected by the adverse resource developmental climate. Specific projects had been completed, but the further elaboration of energy technologies in their infancies had been deferred, often indefinitely. Schemes had been developed, for example, to enhance the overall management of forest resources; fuelwood plantations had been planned and thought given to the efficient distribution of fuelwood; improved kilns for charcoal preparation had been designed; and several new cooking-stove designs had been advanced, some claiming improvements of 30 per cent in efficiency. Most of those developments had not attained full fruition because of the absence of a training infrastructure and the lack of financial resources.

The expansion of use of two new energy sources-oil shale and tar sands-had been similarly held back. Both materials offered developing countries the possibility of local production of liquid fuels, the most critical aspect of those countries' energy situation. However, in the past three years, the competitive position of synthetic crude-oil production had eroded markedly, and the few still active projects were being supported by substantial government subsidies. Finally, while work on several new and renewable energy sources in the conceptual or early pilot-plant stage had not stopped, the effort devoted to them had been cut.

Pursuant to a 1984 Assembly resolution,(6) the Secretary-General, in an August report,(7) surveyed the prospects for the development in developing countries of hydropower, traditional energy sources such as fuelwood and organic residues, biomass energy, oil shale and tar sands, and geothermal, solar, wind, and ocean energy.

A number of papers were prepared by UNCTAD during 1985 on the transfer, application and development of energy technology (see p. 689).

ACC action. In its annual overview report for 1984/85,(8) the Administrative Committee on Co-ordination (ACC) noted that the Inter-Agency Group on New and Renewable Sources of Energy, established in 1983(4) to increase United Nations responsiveness to the Nairobi Programme of Action,(3) considered at its fourth session (New York, 11 and 12 March 1985),(9) progress in implementing the 1984 recommendations(10) of the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy. It reviewed the implementation of the Nairobi Programme of Action, information collected on activities, resource mobilization and the co-ordination of activities.

The Group took up the Committee's request for a report by the Secretary-General on proposals made by ACC in 1982(11) for carrying out the Nairobi Programme. It agreed to make an inventory of activities corresponding to such projects and to prepare a co-ordinated package on the basis of planned activities in need of funding for submission to the Committee.

The Group noted the progress so far in the collection of information, and agreed on measures to be taken in the preparation of the Secretary-General's report on monitoring the Nairobi Programme's implementation. It reviewed the progress in convening consultative meetings on resource mobilization and agreed to co-operate with ECA in preparations for a regional consultative meeting. Considering the Committee's request for an assessment of the Group's performance and achievements, it was agreed that a draft would be circulated to participants for comments.

The Group also provided a forum for the preparation and co-ordination of project packages submitted recently to two regional and two global consultative meetings on projects in new and renewable sources of energy.

In October,<sup>(12)</sup> ACC's Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) took note of the Group's report.<sup>(9)</sup>

UNDP activities. The UNDP Administrator described in an April 1985 report<sup>(13)</sup> a number of projects related to new and renewable energy sources. With the World Bank and other institutions, UNDP supported a programme to develop and promote investment in biomass gasifiers. The project monitored 11 power gasifier installations in countries such as Brazil, Burundi, Kenya, Mali and the Philippines; it also co-operated with EEC on projects in the South Pacific. In two or three years, at the end of the programme, it was expected that it would have contributed to newly emerging heat gasifier technology and to improvement in the operation of the increasing number of gasifier systems.

A project on promotion and strengthening of energy information networks was attempting to create an awareness in developing countries of existing sources of information about the economic and technical status of new and renewable energy sources, and stimulate use of the information. The concept was being developed in the following areas: gasifiers, fuelwood and stoves, windpumping and rural energy technology.

Small-scale hydropower benefited from the support of many bilateral and multilateral donors. However, the experience of many UNDP- and World Bank-supported projects in that area showed that their implementation could be more efficient. A prerequisite was for officials to be aware of recent technical developments. With that in mind, UNDP, DTCD and UNIDO organized a workshop (Klaekken, Norway, 10-18 June) for developing countries' representatives on available electro-mechanical equipment, how to conduct small-scale hydropower feasibility assessments and the problems of the construction cycle.

On 29 June, the UNDP Governing Council adopted a decision on energy development programmes (see p. 687).

Five hundred experts from throughout the world attended the Third International Conference on Heavy Crude and Tar Sands, organized by UNDP and the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) (Long Beach, California, United States, 22-31 July) and reported by the Executive Director of UNITAR.<sup>(14)</sup> Among the subjects considered were: new geological aspects for heavy crude and tar sands; experience with new exploration and assessment methods; new knowledge on resources; new chemical and geochemical research and results; biotechnology and microbiology research and results in heavy crude exploration and production; drilling and production of heavy crude on land; offshore drilling and production of heavy crude; and refining of heavy crude.

The UNITAR/UNDP Centre on Small Energy Resources—a clearing-house for the development of small energy resources which serves as a bridge for improved collaboration between donor Governments, the private sector and developing countries—established in 1984 at Rome, Italy, became operational in 1985. In April, a meeting of energy experts from governmental bodies and the private sector agreed on the Centre's terms of reference and its planned activities.

UNU activities. UNU provided research support for renewable energy research networks, according to the report of the UNU Council covering its 1985 activities.<sup>(15)</sup> For example, biogas digesters had been built in Guyana, modelled on the Chinese biogas system at the Xinbu commune. A video tape of the Chinese model, which had been used to demonstrate the advantages of biogas systems to rural Guyanese, was made available to other developing countries in local languages. UNU also continued to assist biofuel research at the Guangzhou Institute of Energy Conversion in China, which included: disposal of soluble industrial organic wastewater using continuous up-flow digesters; biogas systems for a new energy village; new anaerobic digestion techniques; the ecology of micro-organisms involved in anaerobic digestion; gasification technology for solid biomass; and monofuel biogas internal-combustion engines for electric power generation.

UNIDO activities. In the area of biofuels, UNIDO gave support to research and demonstration programmes for the development of alternative sources of energy.<sup>(16)</sup> Examples of such assistance included a biofuel demonstration programme in Ethiopia on the utilization of agricultural residues and a project in Zimbabwe on the development of technologies for the use of agricultural and food-processing residues as fuels and of efficient charcoal-making techniques in order to reduce deforestation.

UNEP action. UNEP continued to collect, study and disseminate information on the environmental impact of all energy sources, and to support energy conservation development and environmentally appropriate sources of energy in developing countries.

According to the 1985 annual report of the Executive Director,(17) a field demonstration project on the planting and efficient use of fuelwood in Kenya's rural areas was concluded in August. Local people were taught how to produce fuel-efficient stoves and plant fast-growing trees, resulting in the substantial lowering of the fuelwood consumption of some 15,000 Kenyans. Work continued on similar projects in Brazil and Bolivia.

In co-operation with a Finnish film company, UNEP produced three films on the main areas of its energy programme-environmental impacts of energy sources, harnessing new and renewable energy sources, and energy conservation.

The Executive Director was requested by the UNEP Governing Council on 23 May(18) to sharpen the focus of the energy programme in 1986-1987, giving high priority to: the environmental impacts of the production and use of renewable sources of energy, particularly biomass energy; support for studies on the environmental aspects of new energy technologies, especially the exploitation of oil shales and tar sands and coal liquefaction and gasification; and training in energy management and conservation for developing countries.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 17 December, on the recommendation of the Second Committee, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, decision 40/444, by which it took note of the Secretary-General's report on new and renewable energy sources(2) and decided that the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy should hold its third session from 21 April to 2 May 1986.

The Second Committee had approved the draft,(19) submitted by a Vice-Chairman, without vote on 5 December.

Nuclear energy

Nuclear power had expanded impressively in the 1980s, the Secretary-General stated in a March report(1) on trends and salient issues in the development of energy resources. Between 1980 and 1983, the number of nuclear power reactors in operation had grown from 202 to 246 in developed market economies, 9 to 16 in developing countries, and 42 to 55 in centrally planned economies. In 12 countries (10 developed market economies and two centrally planned economies), nuclear-generated electricity constituted more than 10 per cent of electricity produced in 1982; in six of these, nuclear power represented more than 25 per cent of all power generated.

When current prospects were considered, however, the nuclear power picture appeared less bright. The number of reactors under construction had fallen each year since 1980 in the developed market economies, and since 1981 in the developing countries; only in the centrally planned economies had construction steadily increased. Reactors under construction had declined between 1980 and 1983 from 179 to 130 in developed market economies, from 22 to 20 in developing countries and from 230 to 209 world-wide; however, their numbers had increased from 29 to 59 in centrally planned economies.

United Nations technical work relating to nuclear energy continued to be dealt with mainly by IAEA. (For information on IAEA activities in 1985, see PART II, Chapter I.)

IAEA report

The IAEA report for 1984 was transmitted to the General Assembly by the Secretary-General in September 1985,(2)

Presenting the report in the Assembly on 31 October, the IAEA Director General said that, during 1984, total nuclear power capacity world-wide had increased by 17 per cent, the largest annual increase since large-scale introduction of nuclear power began in the early 1970s. Nuclear power currently accounted for some 13 per cent of the world's electricity and by the year 2000 it was expected to generate about 20 to 25 per cent. He felt that in a world where economic development and growth were resuming and where fossil fuels posed environmental problems in the form of acid rain and carbon dioxide, nuclear power would be viewed increasingly as an indispensable option. New types of more efficient nuclear fuel and longer operation cycles were making nuclear power more attractive economically. In most places, nuclear power had a clear economic edge over coal. Standardized plant design, streamlined regulatory procedures and rigid management controls were ways to keep costs down.

Nevertheless, financing nuclear plants had become a major constraint because of the high initial capital investment required. Total capital cost, including interest during construction, was about $1.5 billion to $2 billion for a plant in the 600-700 megawatt (MW) range. The use of small and medium-sized reactors would bring nuclear power within the reach of a larger number of developing countries. Some 23 designs for plants with an electrical output below 600 MW were available.

With regard to nuclear safety, the Director General said that the world had accumulated experience of some 3,600 reactor years without a fatal radiation accident in a commercial nuclear plant. Accidents and incidents occurred, but better maintenance and operation had reduced their number and limited their consequences. The IAEA safety programme had been expanded in the past few years through an incident reporting system, radiation protection advisory teams and an International Nuclear Safety Advisory Group, established in 1985.

Experts were convinced that no scientific or technological breakthroughs were needed for safe disposal of high-level nuclear waste. However, fears about nuclear waste were behind much of the opposition to nuclear power. The construction of storage installations for high-level waste and the dissemination of more factual information about the waste issue could be expected to influence public opinion favourably. Pursuant to the 1975 Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes and Other Matter, IAEA had revised the definition of high-level wastes unsuitable for sea disposal. At a September meeting of the contracting parties to the Convention, the majority had agreed to a suspension of dumping at sea of radioactive wastes until further studies had been made.

In a 19 September letter to the Secretary-General(3) Papua New Guinea transmitted a 6 August communique of the South Pacific Forum (Rarotonga, Cook Islands, 5 and 6 August). The Forum had reaffirmed its opposition to the dumping of radioactive waste in the region's oceans. Forum members hoped for the early conclusion of the convention and protocols being negotiated under the auspices of the South Pacific Regional Environment Programme which would preclude such dumping.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY ACTION

On 8 November, the General Assembly adopted, without vote, resolution 40/8.

Report of the International Atomic Energy Agency
The General Assembly,

Having received the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency to the General Assembly for the year 1984,

Taking note of the statement of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency of 31 October 1985, which provides additional information on the main development of the Agency's activities during 1985,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency to promote further the application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, as envisaged in its Statute,

Also recognizing the special needs of the developing countries for technical assistance by the Agency in order to enlarge the contribution of nuclear energy and its applications to their economic development,

Conscious of the importance of the work of the Agency in the implementation of the safeguards provisions of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and other international treaties, conventions and agreements designed to achieve similar objectives, as well as ensuring, as far as it is able, that the assistance provided by the Agency or at its request or under its supervision or control is not used in such a way as to further any military purposes, as stated in article II of its Statute,

Recognizing the importance of the work of the Agency on nuclear power, nuclear safety, radioactive waste management, radiological protection and, in particular, of its work directed towards assisting developing countries in planning for the introduction of nuclear power in accordance with their needs,

Noting that the General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its twenty-ninth regular session approved the reappointment by the Board of Governors of the Agency of Mr. Hans Blix as Director General of the Agency for a further term of four years, commencing on 1 December 1985,

Bearing in mind resolutions GC(XXIX)/RES/442, GC(XXIX)/RES/443 and GC(XXIX)/RES/444, adopted on 27 September 1985 by the General Conference of the Agency at its twenty-ninth, regular session,

1. Takes note of the report of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

2. Affirms its confidence in the role of the International Atomic Energy Agency in the: application of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes;

3. Urges all States to strive for effective and harmonious international co-operation in carrying out the work of the International Atomic Energy Agency, pursuant to its Statute, in promoting the use of nuclear energy and the application of nuclear science and technology for peaceful purposes; in strengthening technical assistance and co-operation for developing countries; and in ensuring the effectiveness and efficiency of the Agency's safeguards system;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to transmit to the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency the records of the fortieth session of the General Assembly relating to the Agency's activities.

General Assembly resolution 40/8

8 November 1985 Meeting 69 Adopted without vote

3-nation draft (A/40/L.8); agenda item 14.

Sponsors: Indonesia. Poland. Sweden.

Meeting numbers. GA 40th session: plenary 56, 68, 69.

Several other resolutions were adopted by the Assembly in 1985 on the related subjects of nuclear disarmament and nuclear power sources (see POLITICAL AND SECURITY QUESTIONS, Chapters I and II).

Preparations for the Conference on nuclear energy

Preparatory Committee activities. Established by the General Assembly in 1980,(4) the Preparatory Committee for the United Nations Conference for the Promotion of International Co-operation in the Peaceful Uses of Nuclear Energy convened its sixth session at Vienna from 21 October to 1 November 1985.(5) The Committee had before it the reports of four of the five regional expert group meetings held during 1985 as part of the preparations for the Conference-Asian and Pacific region (Bangkok, Thailand, 14-17 January);(6) Latin American and Caribbean region (Santiago, Chile, 15-18 April);(7) Western Asian region (Baghdad, Iraq, 13-16 May);(8) and African region (Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, 1-4 July).(9) (The fifth regional meeting, for Europe, the United States and Canada, was held at Vienna from 4 to 6 November,(10) following the Committee's session.) The Committee, which had previously agreed that the Conference should meet in 1986,(11) reconsidered the matter and decided that it should be held from 23 March to 10 April 1987 at Geneva, unless Yugoslavia offered Belgrade as the venue for the same dates. It further decided that its seventh session should be held at Vienna from 10 to 21 November 1986, and approved a provisional agenda.

The Committee established an inter-sessional intergovernmental Working Group to decide on its programme of work, to assess the current situation regarding international co-operation in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy and formulate options for the enhancement of such co-operation, and to develop an outline of the Conference's final document(s). It was to meet in 1986.
